HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIRST SESSION—TWENTY EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

17 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME III, 1968

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE FIRST DAY OF NOVEMBER, 1968,
TO THE SECOND DAY OF DECEMBER, 1968, INCLUSIVE.

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER, OTTAWA, 1969

29180—145½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 1, 1968

The house met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MR. DIEFENBAKER—FAILURE TO VOTE ON FARM CREDIT ACT AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, lest there be any misunderstanding regarding my absence during the votes yesterday on the Farm Credit Act amendments I should like to point out that in my private office the bell does not sound. Hence I was unable to be present, not knowing the votes were being taken.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SPEAKER—RULING ON QUESTION RAISED BY MEMBER FOR GREENWOOD

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday, after due notice to the Chair, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) rose on a question of privilege alleging that the minister for external affairs was directly or indirectly disputing the accuracy of a statement made by the hon. member reporting on a statement made outside the House of Commons.

After hearing the hon. member and the minister, the Chair reminded hon. members of the well established rule that hon. members are bound to accept the word of another member. May I refer on this point to citation 145 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

• (11:10 a.m.)

It has been formally ruled by Speakers in the Canadian commons that a statement by an honourable member respecting himself and peculiarly within his own knowledge must be accepted, but it is not unparliamentary to temperately criticize statements made by a member as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. A statement made by a member in his place, is considered as made upon honour and cannot be questioned in the house or out of it.

The Chair would like also to refer hon. members to citation 105, subsection 3, which reads as follows:

A dispute arising between two honourable members as to allegations of facts hardly fulfills the conditions of a privilege question—

Then I should like to refer to citation 113, which reads in part:

But a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfill the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

The motion proposed by the hon. member based on his question of privilege is that this matter should be referred to the standing committee on external affairs and national defence. It seems to me that all aspects of the Nigeria and Biafra situation have been referred specifically by the House of Commons to this committee. If the hon. member considers that the discussion should be pursued further, this could be done in committee without the special reference proposed by the hon. member's motion.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN PEACE KEEPING EFFORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of reports that the Department of External Affairs or the Department of National Defence has a contingency plan to facilitate Canada's participation in Viet Nam peace keeping efforts. Would the Prime Minister indicate in general terms what this plan involves, and especially what is contemplated in terms of Canadian forces personnel? What contribution does the Prime Minister think would be made by Canada?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not in a position to answer that question now. The plans are too vague to make any definitive statement. We take the position that if we are requested to participate in any peace keeping activities we will have to ascertain in advance, before answering, what they entail and under what conditions we would participate in such activities.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask a supplementary question. This proposal that has been made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs is conditional and limited by something which may seem to be appropriate to the government of Canada under the circumstances?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Trudeau: Well, this position is being taken only in very general terms and indicates that we did, in the past, pursue certain peace keeping or surveillance roles in the Vietnamese conflict. We do not reject the idea in advance. We would be prepared to contribute anything that would be possible and desirable.

Mr. Stanfield: Would it be accurate to say the policy of the government of Canada would be to consider a possible role for Canada in peace keeping operations?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, that would be a good expression of our position.

Mr. Stanfield: I have just one further question, Mr. Speaker. Have there been consultations between the United States or the Secretary General of the United Nations and the government of Canada with regard to such a possible role for Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Certainly none of which I am aware. If any have taken place they must be only in very general terms, because we have not discussed this as a matter of policy yet. We have just taken the general line I indicated, that we would consider any such request.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In connection with the momentous decision made last night by the President of the United States to discontinue the bombing of North Viet Nam, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether there was any prior consultation with Canada before the announcement was made. Second, I should like to ask whether there was consultation with Australia, New Zealand and the United States concerning what action Canada might take in connection with providing not only an inspection corps in Viet Nam but also forces to preserve the peace in the event that agreement is arrived at in Paris.

Mr. Trudeau: In answer to the first part of the question, there was no consultation. This is a decision which the United States government has made without our overt help. In respect of the second part of the question I can only repeat what I said previously. We have not been the subject of any specific request yet. Until such a request is made I do not know what position we will take.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I note that the Prime Minister accentuated the words "specific request". Has there been any general request that Canadians should be made available as a force to maintain the peace?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. There has been none that I know of, but like the readers of the press we surmise that something might develop on this front. We have been considering what we would do if such a request were made. But as I say there has been no specific request or no general assertion by any one country that they would want to see us in there. There has been nothing that has come to us in the form of a request.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the hon. Prime Minister. Would Canada consider making a contribution to peace in Viet Nam by ending Canadian complicity in this war?

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister arising out of the information he gave the house some time ago that he expected to meet with members of the royal commission on security. I think he said this would happen yesterday. Did the right hon. gentleman meet with them, and did he receive their report yesterday?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, I did meet with the members of the commission, I think it was Wednesday. I thanked the commissioners very much for the work they had done, very important work for the future of democracy in this country.

Hon. members will understand that the report is a classified document and contains information the publication of which would be detrimental to the security of Canada. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, only after careful study of the report will we decide what sections of it can be published. Until that time it would not be our intention to comment in any way on the report itself.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand, then, that the report has been received; and do I understand from the Prime Minister that, subject to those parts of the report which in the government's opinion it would be detrimental to publish, the government will consider publishing the parts which should be brought to the attention of parliament?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is a correct interpretation of our intention. It was received only on Wednesday evening, and I sent it to the Governor General the next day. It is too soon to take a final position on the matter, but I can tell the house that what I hope will result is that we will be able to publish very substantial parts of it. I would hope that whatever expurgated version we did publish would have the certification of the commissioners themselves that they consider the deletions to be deletions that are made in the interest of national security only and for no other reason. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I should like this authority from them, but that of course will depend upon their own decision.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary if I may, Mr. Speaker. The point the Prime Minister alluded to is one I had in mind, and I should like to put this question to him. Do I understand that the decision as to which parts are to be omitted when the report is published will be a decision of the government rather than a decision of the commission, although the commission will be consulted about it? Is that a fair summary of the Prime Minister's statement?

Mr. Trudeau: That is a fair summary, Mr. Speaker. This is because the commissioners are taking the position—I think it is the correct one to take—that their report is a whole report and they should not be asked to abridge it themselves. The report as submitted by them is their report to the government. Therefore we will have to take the initiative in making any abridgement. We will do it, of course, in consultation with any of the officials of the commission who can help us, but we will have to take the responsibility for making these abridgements. I hope that such abridgements, as I say, will carry some kind of authorization or statement of opinion by the commissioners, that the abridgements were made only in areas that affect national security, but of course I cannot speak for them. This is what I will seek.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the direct responsibility for national security rests at all times primarily on the Prime Minister of the country, and in view of the fact that for six years I held the position of prime minister, as did Mr. St. Laurent from 1948 to 1957, will the expurgated portions of that report be made available to former prime ministers as privy councillors? Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, if they are not matters may be contained therein that should be subject to challenge. No former prime minister should be in the position of having only a selective or abridged report on matters connected with security during his period of administration. I ask the Prime Minister to make available to former prime ministers those portions of the report that deal in any way with their period of the prime ministership.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot make that commitment now, not having read the report. I do not know if there are any such portions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not, either.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not know if there are any such portions which would cover such a situation. I know, and of course the right hon. gentleman knows, that there are a number of precedents in the United Kingdom for not publishing reports when they affect national security. I hope it will be apparent from any authorization or approval of the abridgement I may obtain from the commissioners that no deletions such as the right hon. gentleman suggests have been made. If there is no such approval I shall perhaps look at other ways to cover the point raised by the right hon. member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not in any way criticizing the necessity for portions of the report being kept secret. I am referring to possibilities which, in years to come, could have a detrimental effect against any one prime minister with respect to matters of security.

Mr. Trudeau: I understand the concern of the right hon. gentleman. His concern I think is justified, and I shall try to meet that point as best I can.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I presume the report contains recommendations for parliament and the government. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether those portions, at any rate, will be made public?

Mr. Trudeau: In the same sense, Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer this because, not having read it, it is purely a hypothetical matter so far as I am concerned. I would hope any portions which might be concerned with parliament will be dealt with in the way I suggested any portions that are of concern to any former prime minister might be dealt with.

EXTERNAL AID

NIGERIA—DEPARTURE OF SHIPLOAD OF SUPPLIES FROM HALIFAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right honourable Prime Minister.

We know that a ship in the port of Halifax was loaded with food intended for the civilian population of Nigeria; can he tell us whether that ship has reached its destination, and what is its home port?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prmie Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not have that information.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—REPRESENTATIONS AS TO DISPUTE WITH TAXI DRIVERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the honourable Minister of Transport.

Can he tell us whether he received a telegram from the Montreal Taxi Drivers Brotherhood, copy of which was supposed to have been sent to him, so as to offer a compromise in the situation which opposes Murray Hill and the brotherhood? If so, can he tell us whether he intends to revise the contract of Murray Hill Company with Dorval airport?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand a telegram has been received. I will be glad to look at it and advise my hon. friend after a reply has been made.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED SHORTAGE OF COLONEL McCRAE MEMORIAL STAMPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. Since Remembrance day is but ten days away and the Colonel John McCrae memorial stamp has been oversubscribed in many post offices in Canada, many post offices being out of these stamps, will the minister make certain that more of these stamps are made available to the Canadian people?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into this.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Defence Production. I believe on October 22 he said that either he or the Minister of Transport would make a statement to the house on the government's shipbuilding policy. Could either of these hon. gentlemen advise us when such a statement on this most important matter will be made here?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, this was a double barrelled request. Talks with elements in the shipbuilding industry, including some of the major construction concerns, are continuing. It is anticipated there will be several meetings, and we are listening to suggestions now. As soon as these have been resolved we will make a statement, but I cannot put a definite date on it in view of the way discussions are proceeding.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF PUBLIC ADVISORY BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I wish to ask the Minister of Transport a question. It has to do with the continual rise in traffic accidents on our highways and in our cities. I should like to know what is the situation in connection with the establishment of the long awaited public board to deal with all matters affecting traffic safety, an idea which was announced five thousand lives ago in this house.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The establishment of the board referred to by the hon. member has been delayed because it requires co-operation and participation by the provinces and their responsible ministers. The provincial ministers are meeting in Saskatchewan next week, I think, and I understand they have an item on their agenda which contemplates the initiation of a further conference involving the federal minister, at which time I hope we can agree on the composition of the board and get on with this important work.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING OVERHAUL BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Transport. It is an urgent question, Mr. Speaker, because it could prevent an unnecessary expenditure of about $10 million.

Can the minister assure this house that the government will take note of the reports of experts and fully respect the collective agreements concerning the gradual closing down, between now and 1973, of the Air Canada maintenance base at Winnipeg?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member cannot ask the hon. minister to make a rather general statement about his views and intentions. I do not think the question can be put in those terms. The hon. member might perhaps try to word it differently.

Mr. Dumont: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I will therefore ask the hon. minister to tell us if his department has refused to attend a meeting of the members of the Q.F.L. and to participate in the discussion I mentioned earlier?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I do not think we have refused to meet with anyone on the subject. I am speaking from memory; I am not sure, because not all these requests come to my attention. This is a current problem of considerable importance. The previous prime minister made a commitment to the people of Winnipeg that the base there would continue in operation until the end of 1972 or that an equivalent solution would be found which would employ approximately the same work force and approximately the same skills presently being used in Winnipeg. A study is currently being undertaken to see whether some satisfactory solution can be reached.

With respect to reports of experts, there is the usual problem of getting information in the form which is intelligible to the layman—

An hon. Member: And to you.

Mr. Hellyer: I was including myself in that class—and in a form which would provide a basis of judgment satisfactory to the people involved.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether I might direct it to the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Winnipeg South. In view of charges that the minister and others are making efforts to maintain the overhaul and maintenance base at Winnipeg, can the hon. gentleman say what progress he is making toward this end?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure the question is properly directed to the Minister without Portfolio. I have some doubts about this.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then may I direct the question to his superior, the Minister of Transport, and ask whether he can reply to these charges.

Mr. Hellyer: I think the Minister without Portfolio could answer the question much more effectively than I can. But since I have been called upon to reply, I can say that the Minister without Portfolio as well as all the other members from the Winnipeg area are taking a very real interest in this question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How are we doing?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the minister taking an unreal interest?

Mr. Hellyer: All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that they are still in the game, but it is a very complicated and difficult question, as my hon. friend will appreciate. It is one of the problems receiving most active attention at the present time because we do want to get some acceptable solution and discuss it with the workmen directly involved, and hopefully to gain the maximum co-operation from all the diverse interests represented.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport.

When does he intend to make a statement in the house so that we may be clearly informed as to the intentions of the government in that respect?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Just as soon as a definitive decision has been taken, Mr. Speaker. I think my hon. friend will appreciate, however, that there are certain aspects which are completely within the control of the company and there are others of direct concern to the government. As soon as we can reconcile all the interests I will be able to make a statement.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Would the minister give an assurance to the people of Winnipeg, as well as to the employees in question, that the pledge given by Right Hon. Lester Pearson, then prime minister of Canada, is going to be carried out?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That commitment which was given by the former prime minister, and which was subsequently reiterated by me in Winnipeg, still stands.

[Translation]

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport.

Could he tell us when the president of Air Canada will be appointed?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Not precisely, Mr. Speaker.

FREIGHT RATES

STUDY OF LESS THAN CARLOAD RATES IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I gave him notice of it yesterday. Can the hon. gentleman advise as to the progress in the studies of the Canadian Transportation Commission dealing with less than carload rates for Atlantic Canada, and when we may expect action on such studies in parliament?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): We have been doing some internal studies on this question, Mr. Speaker, but in addition, as my hon. friend will recall, last year I asked the Atlantic premiers to put their heads together and come up with some recommendations which they felt would be useful to the Atlantic region. The reason I suggested this is that the criticism is often made that Ottawa is remote from the problems of the area, and the people living there are more intimately aware of the problems and as a result might suggest more effective solutions.

Up to this point I have not received any report from the Atlantic premiers. I hope this will be forthcoming soon, so that whatever input they have can be considered with our own studies in the very real hope that we can get some policy which will be both reasonably economical in broad terms and more effective to maritime transportation.

Mr. McCleave: As a supplementary question, do I understand from the minister's answer that the Canadian Transportation Commission has completed its side of the studies?

Mr. Hellyer: I did not say completed, Mr. Speaker, but I understand that an internal paper has been forwarded for consideration by our department. Just how extensive it is I cannot say, because I have not yet seen it.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, could the minister indicate whether it is the intention of the government to continue the rate freeze until such time as a transportation policy is produced for the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think this would be a good morning for speculation on that point, Mr. Speaker. I would really prefer to give the government a chance to look at the over-all problem and decide what is the best solution compared with some others that might be offered.

Mr. Coates: Would the minister not agree that while a transportation policy is being considered it would be unfair for that area—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's supplementary question is argumentative.

HOUSING

TORONTO—RECOMMENDATIONS OF WELFARE COUNCIL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport, who is in charge of housing. Has the minister received the report and recommendations of the housing conference held recently in Toronto, sponsored by the Canadian Welfare Council? If so, what steps is the government going to take to implement those recommendations in order to solve the serious housing crisis?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say whether all the recommendations have been received, but I know if they have not they will be. A member of the federal task force, Dr. James Gillies of Toronto, was in attendance at most of the conference meetings and is to make a report to the task force. I might add that many of the suggestions received are similar to those made by other bodies across the country. They will, of course, be studied in the context of our larger inquiry.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Would he consider setting up a separate ministry of housing and urban development because of the difficulty that the Minister of Transport has in handling the heavy portfolios of both transport and housing?

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

REQUIREMENT FOR KNOWLEDGE OF FRENCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, has the government considered insisting upon an adequate knowledge of French for immigrants going to Quebec and applying for Canadian citizenship?

[Later:]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister why he did not answer my question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member can ask a question but he cannot, under the guise of a supplementary question, ask why no reply was given to his question. However, the Prime Minister might want to answer it now.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member, but I did not know he was putting his question to me. Only when he resumed his seat did I realize that he had not put it to anyone in particular, and I had not been listening.

Mr. Matte: Could I ask my question again, Mr. Speaker?

Could the right hon. Prime Minister tell us whether the government has considered requiring that immigrants to Quebec who apply for Canadian citizenship have an adequate knowledge of French?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this matter more specifically concerns the minister responsible for immigration but, with regard to the general policy of the government, I may say that we have not made a decision to this effect.

The hon. member can, if he wishes, put that question to the minister at the proper time.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—APOLOGY FOR REMARKS ABOUT OBSERVER TEAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Will the right hon. gentleman arrange to have tabled a copy of the apology made by the head of state of Nigeria to Canada and other countries making up the observer team, for the intemperate remarks about the team made by Colonel Benjamin Adekunle?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall consult with the Secretary of State for External Affairs on what the practice is in this regard, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): At the same time, Mr. Speaker, would the right hon. gentleman discuss with the Secretary of State for External Affairs the possibility of tabling the report which no doubt the department has received from General Milroy or the junior Canadian observer?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall consult with him about this also.

FISHERIES

REPORTED PAYMENT OF SALT SUBSIDY TO PROCESSORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister say whether his department is going to continue the payment of the salt subsidy to fish processors even though it has been discontinued to Atlantic fishermen?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the payment of the salt subsidy has been discontinued to all parties, the processors as well as the individual fishermen.

DRUGS

PROTECTION AGAINST COUNTERFEIT PRODUCTS—CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can he shed a little more light on the action being taken by his department and the food and drug directorate on the question of counterfeit drugs? I would bring to his attention, although I suspect that he already knows, that there have been further major seizures from firms involved in placing counterfeit drugs on the Canadian market.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the hon. member that the department has this latest incident under consideration at the present time, and I hope to be in a position to answer the question more fully next week.

Mr. Forrestall: In considering it I wonder would the minister urge his colleagues in the department to consider seriously early court action about this whole situation. It is now seven or eight months since it started.

Mr. Munro: I would advise the hon. member that the department did take prompt action with respect to the previous incidents. All the counterfeit drugs were immediately removed from the market to our satisfaction. With respect to the latest incident—

Mr. Forrestall: Nobody has been charged.

Mr. Munro: —the basis of the evidence is being assessed to determine whether a charge can be maintained. That is the only reason for the delay.

INDUSTRY

HAMILTON—REPORTED MOVE OF STEEL COMPANY HEAD OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I have been advised that the Steel Company of Canada is moving its head office from Hamilton to Toronto. Can the minister enlighten us in respect of this matter, has he any information on this?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I fail to see the immediate urgency of the question. If there is urgency the hon. member might give me notice concerning such urgency; then it could be debated at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the reason there were so many shouts of "order" is that this does not come under the Department of National Health and Welfare.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Speaker: That is also a good point. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre knows that when notice is given to the Chair the question is not necessarily accepted. It must be viewed in the light of the application of the rules generally.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is it true that the government has reconsidered its social development tax and decided to lift the $120 ceiling, and further has decided to introduce a capital gains tax so that some approach to taxation based on even Liberal criteria for taxation justice—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: —will be made in 1968?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that the house is currently engaged in discussion of the budget. This is the type of question which the hon. member might well ask when he makes his contribution to the debate.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General a question on this particular day in his life when several million people are interested in stamp designs. Has the minister given any thought to changing the existing design of the new stamp and having it edged with black to commemorate increased postal rates and the budget?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—LOANS TO INDIANS FOR VESSEL CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. Does the recent proposal to make loans and grants available to B.C. Indians for the construction of fishing vessels conflict with the decision to reduce subsidies on wooden ships?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the question asked is in order. It would seem to be an argumentative type of question which cannot be accepted.

THE MINISTRY

FURTHER REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY TRANSPORT MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nova Scotia.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask the minister what was the basis for his statement outside the house, when he made a blanket charge of smear against members of this house?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt whether the question as asked by the hon. member for Cape Breton is acceptable. I apologize for calling the wrong name a moment ago. Certainly the hon. member cannot ask questions in this way about statements made outside the house.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I would appreciate, and I am sure the Minister of Manpower and Immigration would also appreciate, narrowing down Nova Scotia to Cape Breton and then to Cape Breton-East Richmond. I do not say this in a facetious way.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he would care to enunciate the government's position with regard to the code of ethics originally introduced into the house by the former prime minister.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The question is very general. I have no particular—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is rather general. If the Prime Minister wishes to make this kind of a statement it should be made on motions.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Continuing on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think we are entitled to ask, in view of recent developments, whether this code of ethics is still in effect. It was brought in by a former prime minister, and we want to know whether it is government policy today and whether the Prime Minister has investigated recent developments to see whether they come under that code of ethics.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is attempting to ask a question which the Chair could not accept yesterday. I do not think he would want to do indirectly what has been ruled out of order directly.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Does it not follow that when a minister of the crown makes remarks outside the house which reflect on all members of this house, this constitutes a question of privilege? If the Minister of Transport or any other minister has the intestinal fortitude to name names it could be cleared up.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SASKATCHEWAN—PROVISION OF MEDICAL CARE FOR INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I should like to direct to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister received a communication from the Saskatchewan Medical Association requesting immediate action to ensure adequate medical care for Saskatchewan Indians, and warning that a failure to act may force doctors to leave areas which have a large Indian population and completely deprive some Saskatchewan Indians of medical service.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I should like to take the question as notice.

Mr. Southam: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister takes the question as notice will he take action to meet the emergency in this province which has the highest ratio of Indian population in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think the supplementary question is acceptable.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

AGREEMENTS RESPECTING COLLECTION AND PAYMENT OF TAXES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): This question is directed to the Minister of Finance. At the meeting which I believe is to take place on Monday with provincial ministers of finance and provincial treasurers, is it the intention of the government of Canada to propose new agreements regarding the collection of taxes and payment of taxes that have been collected, or to simply extend the existing agreements?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): As my hon. friend knows, the tax collection agreements run out at the end of December. We would be willing to continue with the tax collection agreements if the provinces so wished.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the intention of the Minister of Finance to propose a continuation of these agreements and, if so, is there an intention to propose any changes with regard to them?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend will have to wait until Monday to find out.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the intention of the Minister of Finance to make any concrete proposals to the provincial ministers with regard to establishing ceilings on shared cost programs?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, my intentions will be made known next week when I meet with the provincial ministers of finance.

GRAIN

MOOSE JAW—REQUEST FOR EXTENDED WORK HOURS TO FACILITATE DRYING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to possibly the Minister without Portfolio. In view of the expected arrival of 1,500,000 bushels of wheat at the Canadian government's elevator at Moose Jaw, starting today, would the minister give some indication to this house as to whether 24 hour, seven days a week shifts will be used to handle this grain drying, in order to expedite the movement of this damp grain?

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—PROTESTS AGAINST EXPANSION OF FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct this question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the angry and justified protests of the residents of the Mississagua area to the expansion of the airport facilities at Toronto, would the minister reconsider the plans for extension of the airport?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is of a very general nature, and I think it should be placed on the order paper.

[Mr. Benson.]

EXTERNAL AID

NIGERIA—GROUND CONTROL EQUIPMENT FOR CANADIAN AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman advise the house if the fourth Hercules aircraft that left for Nigeria in fact carried certain navigational equipment and aids; and in particular does the right hon. gentleman know whether it contained radar ground control equipment?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question was asked last week, and answered.

Mr. Forrestall: It was not answered last week.

Mr. Trudeau: But it was not asked of me.

Mr. Forrestall: Aren't the people of Canada entitled to know? You talk about the safety of our pilots.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Has the government considered the shipment of salt fish or other fish products to needy countries such as Biafra?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

USE OF NEW DRUG CONTAINER TO PROTECT CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the recent dramatic drop in the number of child poisonings in the two control areas where the new type of plastic container has been used, would the minister investigate the possibility of requiring the use of this safety container for poisons and other noxious household products?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the department does have that particular matter under consideration at the present time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Canadian National Railway to make capital expenditures including investment in securities of affiliated companies in the calendar year 1968 not exceeding in the aggregate $264,400,000, to make capital expenditures in the first six months of the calendar year 1969 not exceeding in the aggregate $75,000,000 for discharging obligations incurred prior to the 1st day of January, 1969, to enter into contracts prior to the 1st day of July, 1969, for equipment, additions and conversions requiring payments after the calendar year 1968 not exceeding $90,000,000, to borrow either from Her Majesty or by means of issues of securities guaranteed by Her Majesty an amount not exceeding $75,000,000 for investing in securities of Air Canada and a further amount not exceeding $16,000,000 for construction of branch lines; to authorize Her Majesty to make loans directly to Air Canada or to guarantee issues of securities of Air Canada not exceeding $130,000,000 for discharging obligations of the airline that become due and payable prior to the 1st day of July 1969; to authorize Her Majesty to continue to purchase until December 31st, 1969, Canadian National Railway Company 4 per cent preferred stock in an annual amount not exceeding 3 per cent of the gross revenues of the Company; to extend until December 31, 1969, the moratorium on interest on the loan of $100,000,000 to the Company authorized by the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act of 1952; to authorize Her Majesty to make loans to the Canadian National Railway Company and Air Canada to meet deficiencies in operating revenues to June 30, 1969, any such loans to be repaid from revenues of the Railway Company and Air Canada or, if revenues prove insufficient, by subsequent deficit appropriation by Parliament.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Chairman, this resolution is similar to those which have in the past preceded the introduction of Canadian National Railways' financing and guarantee bills. These bills, including the present one, have been introduced annually with the exception of the 1963 bill which covered 1962 and 1963, and the 1966 bill which covered 1965 and 1966.

[Translation]

The present bill has seven main objectives, most of which had a similar form in previous legislation.

[English]

First, the bill would authorize capital expenditures by Canadian National Railways not exceeding $264,400,000 during the 1968 calendar year, including $75 million for investment in Air Canada, This level of expenditures compares with $264,800,000 authorized previously for 1967, with $67 million included therein for investment in Air Canada. The bill also contains technical provisions authorizing Canadian National Railways to make expenditures not exceeding $75 million between January 1 and July 1, 1969, for obligations incurred prior to 1968, and to enter into contracts before July 1, 1969, for capital expenditures not exceeding $90 million for which payment will not come due until after 1968.

Second, the bill contains a new provision authorizing Canadian National Railways to borrow $16 million for financing all branch line construction. Up to the present each special statute for construction of a branch line has included authority for financing its construction, and branch lines not requiring special legislation have been financed out of self-generated funds. In addition to covering all branch lines, the provision in the resolution and the bill based upon it are consistent with the intent of reflecting in the financing and guarantee bill all the financing authorities which Canadian National Railways require.

Third, the bill would provide for the continued purchase by the Minister of Finance of Canadian National Railways' 4 per cent preferred stock through to the end of the calendar year 1969. This continues the practice of previous financing and guarantee acts. The 1967 financing and guarantee act extended to December 31, 1968, the expiry date of the authority granted by Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act of 1952 for the purchase of such stock equivalent to 3 per cent of the company's gross revenue.

Fourth, and for the same reasons, the bill would extend until the end of 1969 the moratorium on interest on the government loan of $100 million to the railway company authorized by the capital revision act of 1952.

Fifth, as in previous years the bill would provide authority for the government to make temporary loans to Canadian National Railways and Air Canada to meet deficiencies in operating revenues up to June 30, 1969. Any such loan is repaid later from revenues of Canadian National Railways and Air Canada or, if these prove insufficient, the loans are written off through parliamentary appropriation.

Sixth, the bill contains an option not previously included in financing and guarantee bills which would enable Air Canada to borrow $130 million either directly from Her Majesty or by means of a guaranteed public issue. The amount subject to this option does not include the amount of $75 million which it would borrow from Canadian National Railways.

Seventh, the bill would provide for the appointment of the firm of Touche, Ross, Bailey and Smart of the cities of Toronto and Montreal, chartered accountants, as auditor of Canadian National Railways for the calendar year 1969.

Finally, I would point out that the present bill makes no provision for enlargement of Canadian National Railways authority to refinance, which at present stands at $680 million and is considered adequate for the period covered by the bill. I would commend to the members of the committee the passage of this resolution.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, when this resolution is presented to the house it gives hon. members on all sides the opportunity to deal with very many aspects of railroading and air transportation. At this time I would like to touch very briefly on two problems which I think come under the purview of this bill. I will leave other matters to a more appropriate occasion when the estimates are before the house.

I am glad that one or two ministers other than the minister responsible are in the house, because some of my remarks will of necessity relate to the administration of other departments, particularly the Department of National Revenue. In this regard I am glad to see the Minister of National Revenue in the house.

Perhaps I might digress briefly. It is the understanding of hon. members that the minister will be hospitalized in the near future to undergo an operation. May I take this opportunity on behalf of all hon. members, I am sure, of wishing him well.

The first of the two items I want to deal with at this time during the general discussion at the resolution stage of the proposed bill relates to the presidency of Air Canada. The resolution before us outlines the large sums of money being requested by Air Canada; yet at the present time this corporation has no president. Air Canada has been operating for quite some time without a president, and the rumour factory in this regard around Ottawa and elsewhere has been exceptionally busy. We hear on the one hand that this job is going to be divided into two parts or, like Gaul, into three parts, or maybe even four. I do not like to mention names so I shall not do so but we hear rumours that certain backroom politicians from Toronto will get preferment. We also hear that another from Montreal will get one of the positions in this divided presidency.

Mr. Baldwin: Are there still some who have not got jobs?

Mr. Nesbitt: As my house leader suggests, are there still some who have not got jobs? Perhaps that is what the government intends to correct. In any event I wish the government would decide what it is going to do and appoint somebody. Air Canada is facing a number of important long range decisions which have to be made soon, but the corporation at present is much like a large aircraft circling over Kennedy airport, not able to land. The government must make some decision.

The most often heard rumour is that the presidency of Air Canada is to be divided into two parts. Apparently there is to be a chairman of the board and a president. It is rumoured that the chairman of the board will be that prominent and able man from the city of Montreal, Mr. Saulnier. He is a man with great capacity and capability. We also hear that the executive vice president of Air Canada, Mr. Seagrim, is being considered for the position of president. Whatever the government is going to do apparently has not been decided.

There are two things I am sure the government must be considering. If someone is to be parachuted in as head of Air Canada the government must remember that the individual might be very capable in another field but not able to deal with many of the technical problems that face the administration of Air Canada. We have seen far too many examples of this type of thing. Many people are very successful in certain fields but when they are elected to this house it becomes obvious they are not capable here. We have seen people do very well here in the house but when they left they have not done so well in other positions.

It must be very discouraging for those people who are making a lifetime career with Air Canada to observe a practice of appointing politicians or friends of politicians to the top positions in Air Canada. These people may perhaps be eminent executives from other fields, but it must be very demoralizing to people in Air Canada when they are put in over their heads. Many of the people now in Air Canada are very promising and have a great deal of ability. If they feel the government is going to engage in policies which prevent them from getting to the top they may very well leave. I hope the government will give some consideration to this aspect of the situation.

The most important thing is that the government make some decision. This situation has existed for some months and the rumours that have been circulating have not helped Air Canada's situation. The people of this country are entitled to know who is to be the head of Air Canada. If the government should decide to have a two-headed presidency, so to speak, we should know where buck-passing is to stop. I assume there are to be two heads of Air Canada, someone parachuted in from outside plus the executive vice president. Who will make the final decisions? The division of authority in this regard must be made very clear when the appointments are made.

Many decisions will have to be made by the new head or heads of Air Canada. The men who must accept the final responsibility must be made aware of that fact. An example of some of the things that the new presidency of Air Canada will face is the question of air freight and facilities. Most authorities on air transport agree that in the next ten years the amount of air freight will increase by 600 per cent. There must be very careful planning in relation to terminal facilities to allow for this tremendous increase, not to mention the increase in passenger traffic.

In this regard we must also consider container freight. This is a very important matter so far as railroads and shipping companies are concerned. It is also of importance in relation to air freight. About a year ago the use of containers for air freight commenced. In the last year this use has increased enormously and it is estimated that it will accelerate in the next year or two. With this increase there will be an increase in the number of problems the corporation will have to solve.

I have in mind customs clearance for international air freight. Various departments such as the Department of National Revenue will have to be consulted by the officials of Air Canada in order to speed up customs clearance of freight coming in by air. This in turn raises other matters, for instance, the use of computers to facilitate domestic as well as international air freight. We must also consider the type of bills of lading which will be used and handled by computers. This whole situation requires a great deal of planning and careful study.

We must also consider the type of aircraft to be used. In the past Air Canada has had certain types of aircraft on order but by the time they were received they had virtually become outmoded. I refer particularly to the Vanguard. It is a good aircraft, although I understand it is not as economical as some others. I have been informed that Air Canada would have purchased more jet aircraft had they been available rather than Vanguards. I know that Air Canada has already taken an option on certain types of aircraft that are being developed. A decision will have to be made in this regard.

We must also consider the question of jumbo jet aircraft and their ability to carry standardized containers. There are some 200 containers registered for use on aircraft. This number may have to be reduced to about 17 under I.A.T.A. regulations. Consideration must be given to this fact. This is the kind of problem the new head of Air Canada will have to solve.

Consideration must be given to the size of airstrips in order that jumbo jet aircraft and perhaps the new supersonic jets which are in the testing stage will be able to land. How are these aircraft going to be landed in cities like Montreal and Toronto where there are residential sections in the areas of the air terminals? Perhaps consideration should be given to establishing terminals near the ocean where these new jets can land, and the use of smaller aircraft to transfer the passengers from such terminals to the major cities. These are the problems that are going to be faced by the new head of Air Canada, and the sooner an appointment is made the better.

The next question concerns passenger service on the Canadian National. Unlike the Canadian Pacific which has done everything possible to get out of passenger service to the detriment of the Canadian people, the Canadian National has not adopted this attitude. Canadian National has removed a number of passenger facilities, and I shall deal with that shortly. On the other hand, the Canadian National, to its credit, has made every effort to increase the frequency and speed of passenger service in the heavily populated areas. I could refer to the new Rapido between Toronto and

Montreal, as well as trains in other areas. This attitude is very commendable and will be a big help in future years when perhaps, because of crowded terminal facilities, railways may provide better service between major cities a few hundred miles apart than the airways will.

Some of the other activities of Canadian National in the field of passenger service are not so commendable. We have seen branch lines, not only in the area of passenger service but freight as well, and particularly in western Canada, abandoned. The most drastic action, of course, occurred in Newfoundland and I will be dealing with that in more detail later as will a number of my colleagues. I think the management of Canadian National, and even Canadian Pacific, must remember that railway transport in this country should not be provided merely on the basis of whether or not it pays. Railway service in Canada, particularly passenger service, is a service that is provided for Canadians just as the postal service and other means of communication such as radio and television are provided. In view of the peculiar geographical qualities of our country, I understand it has always been the policy of all Canadian governments to try to ensure to the best of their ability that Canadians shall not be penalized because of the part of Canada in which they live. A great many Canadians live in the area between Toronto and Windsor, around the city of Montreal and in the lower mainland of British Columbia. However, there are numbers of Canadians thinly spread out between those areas.

No branch of government, or indeed no quasi-branch of government such as a crown corporation, should try to deliberately discriminate against Canadians because of their geographical location. This is part of the price we have to pay for living in a country the size of Canada with such a small population. If we wish to maintain our independence and our identity, we have to pay for that. We have to subsidize communication services in this great country of ours. This applies not only to railway passenger service but to freight service and the like. One other thing should be remembered in connection with these branch lines which are being discontinued and that is that in many cases they would have helped to open up our country to a greater extent than has been done so far. I feel the most careful consideration will have to be given in the future before we permit any more branch lines to be removed.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Passenger service, I believe, falls into three categories from a financial point of view. First of all, there are those lines that do pay. It must be admitted that a great many passenger services do not pay. For reasons I have pointed out, most of these services must be maintained in order that Canadians may not be penalized and so the new parts of Canada will be opened up. It should not be the policy of this government, the Canadian National or anybody else to discriminate against those people living in the thinly populated areas; otherwise we will have a greater concentration of population in a few areas such as Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. We would also lose the advantage of opening up our resources.

The second category of passenger traffic is that which is in the lucrative passenger areas. I have no doubt at all that even with the rather peculiar accounting and costing methods used by the Canadian National, some areas of passenger service such as Montreal to Toronto, Toronto to Hamilton, Toronto to London and Windsor, do pay a handsome profit. Then there is a third group of passenger service areas. Those are the areas where costs are met but more money could be made if the equipment were used for freight or other purposes. My understanding is that many passenger services, both on the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, have been abandoned not because they have been losing money but because they did not make as much money as they would if the equipment were used in freight service.

I should like to make one specific observation. Recently the passenger service between the city of Toronto and the city of New York was discontinued. I do not believe there is any need to point out to members of this house the great deal of essential commerce that goes on between these two great cities. While we know that it was the Canadian Pacific that provided the passenger service to New York, I believe that the Minister of Transport could perhaps pass on to the president of the Canadian National suggestions made by members here. We feel that steps should be taken immediately to restore some sort of passenger service between Toronto and New York.

As most hon. members are aware, particularly in the spring, fall and winter months Kennedy airport in New York, which is used by both major air lines connecting Toronto and New York, is fogged in. This is true of both Kennedy and Laguardia airports. Air travel, therefore, is not possible sometimes for several days at a time. In addition, there are a great many administrative problems that have arisen in connection with Kennedy airport. These make air travel very difficult and cause delays. For these reasons alone, there should be some means of travelling between these two great metropolitan areas when so much business is done between them. It would seem to me that some form of rail transportation, perhaps only one train a day, should be provided. I suggest that the Canadian National, if the Canadian Pacific is unable or unwilling, should take steps immediately to try to restore passenger service between these two great metropolitan areas.

I come now to the question of passenger service elsewhere. We have seen, of course, the discontinuance of many branch lines in the rural areas of Ontario, western Canada and other areas. Perhaps the part of Canada that has received the biggest kick in the teeth in this connection has been the province of Newfoundland. The decision to remove the passenger service in Newfoundland was made prior to the last election. Perhaps this had something to do with the results in Newfoundland, I do not know. Certainly, however, it seems very strange treatment of the people of Newfoundland, especially in view of the fact that ever since that province joined confederation the Liberal members from the area have always been ready, are ready, to act on behalf of the party. It seems strange indeed that both the present administration and the previous administration would give Newfoundland such rough treatment.

I know it has been said that Canadian National Railways will provide bus service in Newfoundland. Well, Mr. Chairman, any hon. member who has had the pleasure of visiting that great province will know that the central part is not heavily populated. In addition, since Newfoundland is an Atlantic province, it receives heavy snowfalls in the winter. All I can say is that I would hope the president of the Canadian National and some of his officials who are responsible for this decision will take a ride on a bus during the winter. Perhaps they would then find out what it was like. I cannot see why the people of Newfoundland should be given such poor and inadequate service.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that I do not think it necessarily matters in this country that in every case the costs of communication and travel be met, but I think we would all agree that the costs should be met as much as possible. Even the Postmaster General agreed the other day that there should be some sort of subsidy for such services. The Postmaster General was trying to cut down the amount of subsidy required for the post office. The same case applies to the railways. Although it depends on the kind of accounting we use, the claim is nevertheless made that a passenger service cannot make money. My point is that it is not necessary that it should. As I have said several times, the C.N.R. should provide a service to Canadians in view of the peculiar geographic qualities of our country.

Before I resume my seat, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make one last appeal on behalf of the people of Newfoundland in view of the treatment that they are presently expecting to receive. It has been rumoured—I realize there are always rumours circulating around this place—that some sort of deal has been made between the government, the C.N.R. and, I understand, the government of Newfoundland whereby, if the trans-Canada highway costs are met, railway passenger service would be discontinued in Newfoundland. If some kind of agreement or deal has been made, then I am sure that the present government is not bound by it and could withdraw from the position taken. It seems a sad thing that the people of Newfoundland who have recently joined Canada should be given such rough and unenviable treatment by the very government that brought them in.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, in reading last year's resolution in connection with this same capital expenditure, issue of securities and so on, I find the following introduction:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Canadian National Railway Company to make capital expenditures and to supply the financial requirements of affiliated companies—

The resolution before us, Mr. Chairman, reads as follows:

> That it is expedient ... to make capital expenditures including investment in securities of affiliated companies—

There is a slight change of wording. The question I should like to put to the minister, and through him to those responsible for this resolution, is: Why is there a change in wording? It suggests to me that separate entities are being established as such. It will be much more difficult to secure the necessary information to enable the committee on transport and communications to discuss intelligently the aspects of each in light of the change in wording of this resolution.

Personally, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to see the creation of an empire with the public of Canada supplying the necessary capital for investment in securities of affiliated companies without an opportunity being provided to the standing committee to scrutinize the financial statements of each. I concur with the remarks of the hon. member who preceded me when he suggested that the system of cost accounting used should be taken into consideration. We all know that it is most difficult to try to keep up with this particular system. I do not necessarily disagree that the required capital may have to be supplied for affiliated companies, but to invest in securities in these affiliated companies is a proposition that leaves me somewhat in doubt.

Another point with which I have been concerned for a long time is the outstanding bonds issued by the Canadian National Railways. I have asked in an inquiry of the ministry for certain information concerning these bonds, and possibly during the resolution stage the minister will be prepared to answer my questions. One of the questions dealt with who holds the existing C.N.R. bonds and where they are located. Another asked whether the C.N.R. has made any effort to get the bonds back and, if so, what action has been taken in this regard. The third question asked how many bonds the C.N.R. has bought back and how many are now held by the company. It has already been stated that many rumours circulate around this institution, but I understand that at the present time some people are attempting to buy old, outstanding bonds. I should like clarification in this regard.

It is completely ridiculous, in my opinion, that the taxpayers of Canada should provide a pleasant income for so many people, perhaps in all parts of the world, by permitting them to hold old bonds. It would be interesting to note the amount of interest return received by each bondholder. It is my opinion that these bonds should be bought back at the earliest possible date in order that the C.N.R. can clearly show its actual inputs and outputs in its operating budget without having to include interest paid on outstanding bonds. It is my thought that the C.N.R. itself would be most pleased if this were brought about.

I am pleased, in looking at the annual report of the C.N.R. for 1967, to note an improved picture under the heading of passenger services as related to the use of facilities, and also to note the reasons given for this picture that appears in the annual report. For example, at page 5 of one of the annual reports an important part of this improvement is attributed to a positive, market-oriented approach to the passenger business. On page 11 of the same report the statement is made that the provision and effective promotion of new and improved train services in certain areas was also an important factor. I realize that Expo could have had something to do with the improved picture suggested in the report, but I must congratulate the management of the C.N.R. for their approach to the passenger market, other than the passenger market in Newfoundland.

I am certain that Canadians as a whole agree that with growing congestion on our highways and the increasing difficulty of obtaining air travel accommodations, rail passenger travel is both desirable and urgently needed at this time and particularly in the future. It is an absolute must that in the financing of the C.N.R. adequate provision be made to ensure that all parts of Canada will be serviced by rail passenger traffic. While I appreciate that there is a great push to get rid of uneconomic passenger services, I think it would be a disservice to the country if such services were discontinued. Certainly this is a problem with which the house should concern itself immediately, instead of waiting till it is too late.

I should like to quote a paragraph dealing with federal government payments to be found at page 6 of the annual report for 1967:

> Provision is made for the railways to withdraw uneconomic passenger services or branch lines subject to the approval of the new Canadian Transportation Commission set up under the act. If the commission decides that an uneconomic passenger service or branch line should be maintained in the public interest, the railways will be compensated, in whole or in part, for losses in respect of each specific operation.

On page 11 of the report, under the heading "passenger services" the following paragraph appears:

> The company continued to pursue a positive policy of concentrating on the provision of such passenger services as may be required in areas of profit or potential profit. Steps have been taken and will be taken to seek withdrawal from, or obtain public monetary support for, those unprofitable services which do not fit into that pattern; the objective being to eliminate the deficit in passenger operations.

No matter how one may wish to rationalize, when rail lines and services are eliminated an immediate added cost is put on the public in the form of providing highways that are capable of handling the increased traffic load. Also, additional aircraft flights are required. I submit that it is absolutely unrealistic to compare the number of people who can be handled efficiently by air with the number who can be transported at this particular time along our roads and rail lines.

I have had experience of applications made to the railway commission when so-called uneconomic passenger line abandonments are up for consideration. I am sure that everyone in this house realizes that the slide rule artists are quite capable of changing a profit into a loss. Sometimes even a royal commission is unable to controvert the statements of these experts. I listened to a statement made by one expert in this field who told me that whether I wanted to show a profit or a loss he could give me what I wanted with the same set of figures. I am sure that anyone who has attended this sort of hearing appreciates the situation when he tries to figure out cost equations for this particular segment of the economy.

The communities of this nation are being hard hit to maintain viable economic units. We have recently seen many post office facilities closed down because of the stated policy that there should be a minimum of 30 families to warrant revenue post offices. No consideration appears to be given to the social elimination of post offices, just as it is true that no consideration is being given to the impact of the abandonment of passenger services and branch lines.

During the post office debate the question was raised whether the railways had asked to be relieved of the handling of revenue postal mail had the government itself suggested that the railways change their facilities and methods of transportation. The answer given was that, naturally, the railways had not asked to be relieved of the handling of that mail. Yet there must be a relationship between the social and economic needs of a community.

In C.N.R. financing matters and problems such as these must be given priority as it is our responsibility in this house to ensure that communities, which mean people, are given prior consideration. I am given to understand that at this very time a large staff is employed in preparing applications for the abandonment of branch lines and passenger services throughout Canada.

I refer now to page 49 of the annual report of the Department of Transport for 1966-1967, "Transportation Policy and Research":

> It was formed to undertake economic and technical research into all modes and forms of transportation; to assist in the development and formulation of transportation policies; and to advise on legislation in all fields of transportation. The branch is staffed by a group of professionals with training in the fields of economics, statistics, commerce, geography, business administration and engineering, with experience in railway, shipping, trucking, and air line companies.

I wonder whether any sociologists have been engaged by the department for this in depth study of the resultant consequence of any passenger train abandonment and/or branch line abandonment. I am certain we realize that an economist concerns himself with the best means of attaining a given end. He cannot concern himself with the social problems, nor with the end results of what effects abandonments will have on the people themselves.

A good example of this situation exists at the present time in the province of Newfoundland. No one needs to remind the house that it is the intention of the railway company to abandon the only passenger service in Newfoundland, trains 101 and 102. We have a responsibility to ensure that this passenger service is not eliminated. Surely, in the financing of this railway company and its affiliates, money must be allocated for necessary services. I do not know where else in Canada it is as absolutely necessary to retain and maintain a passenger service adequate to serve the needs of our citizens as in Newfoundland. This government will stand accused in the eyes of every man, woman and child in that province if they allow this cancellation of rail service to go through, and I think it is past time for this crown agency to accept its responsibility and to stop acting as a free swinging, corporate elite.

Another point of some concern to me is the discharging of obligations incurred by the C.N.R. I am certain that the minister must be aware of the claims made against the C.N.R. by certain contractors who were involved in the construction phase of the Great Slave Lake railway. It is a fact that the hon. member for Selkirk has made attempts to have this matter cleared up. He suggested that no additional sums of money should be allocated for any new branch line until some answers are received as to the manner in which C.N.R. engineers enforced contract provisions which resulted in many contractors being forced into bankruptcy on the construction phase of the Great Slave Lake railway. It would appear to me that this is a matter of urgency as this crown agency has an obligation to lead the way in proper contract supervision. It is expected that the minister will have a statement to make on the fair and just settlement with the contractors engaged in the construction of the Great Slave Lake railway.

I think it is only right at this time to remind the minister that he should be particularly cautious in his desire to save money when such saving can have the effect of creating hazardous conditions in rail operations. I refer specifically at this time to the elimination of maintenance of way employees and the cutting back of car inspections on through passenger and freight trains. No one needs to remind the minister that the first line of defence in the operation of the railroad is the section man who is required to keep track and roadbed conditions at their best at all times. I do not like hearing of failures because of washouts, broken rails, cave-ins, just to mention a few examples, as it invariably follows that these can all be chalked up to a lack of people to do the job necessary in coping with the high speed trains of today. It can be said that one can expect an act of God in some of these situations, but there have been far too many of these incidents to use that excuse in every failure that has occurred.

My second concern is the decreasing amount of car inspection that is being carried on at terminals by qualified car staff or carmen. I submit that there is far too great a desire on the part of company officers to decrease the work force and pay no attention to the dangers that are being created by such reduction. Trains today are travelling at speeds of 70 to 75 miles per hour in freight service and higher than that in passenger service, and even though the equipment has improved in the past number of years the need for frequent car inspections is an absolute necessity. I, personally, can relate many experiences where wrecks were averted because carmen found defects at intermediate terminals and the necessary repairs were made. I can assure you this is not idle talk, Mr. Chairman. These are true facts and evidence is easily available to substantiate them.

I now wish to say a brief word about the air lines, and I agree with my hon. friend's position with regard to the presidency of Air Canada. I will not repeat what he said. I can only say that the congestion at some of our airports makes one wonder how much needs to be done to keep up with the ever-increasing air travel. The staff at these airports are doing an excellent job but too often the work load and the so-called automated system leave people stranded at airports without accommodation. This is happening, and when it does our image in so far as Air Canada is concerned is not improved. When one is in a service industry every effort must be made to serve and please the paying customer. I am sure hon. members agree with that concept.

A further and most important point to be drawn to the minister's attention concerns employees of the C.N.R. who are now on pension. It is well known that a pension which years ago would have seemed adequate to meet a bare standard of living is so inadequate today that these pensioners are living on a bare subsistence. Most hon. members know that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been waging an unsuccessful fight for people on fixed low pensions and everyone will accept the premise that his attempts are entirely justified.

In the resolution before us it should be recognized and accepted by the government that provisions must be included to expend moneys for the express purpose of alleviating the degrading situation of these pensioners. Surely we cannot continue to ignore one of the greatest problems before us today. People on fixed income or low wages deserve our sincere, immediate attention in raising their incomes to a level that will allow them to appreciate a few of the good things of our modern day living. After all, these are the pioneers of our country and the C.N.R. pensioners are the very people who made it possible for this crown corporation to be the success it is today. These C.N.R. pensioners, and in effect all pensioners, are entitled to due recognition. This party implores the government to take immediate steps now to rectify this deplorable situation.

We will have more to say on the various clauses of the bill when it is introduced. At this time may I say that I agree with the statements some hon. members have made with regard to millions of dollars being spent for purposes of rail improvement and air traffic. At the same time the government across the line is becoming interested in making large investments in the most economic method of transport and is looking increasingly toward a greater use of rail passenger service. I implore the government not to abandon rail passenger traffic but to support the most efficient system of transportation, which I am sure we can do in this case.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on this resolution. Like other honourable members, we are quite happy to see the government introduce in the house at this time the legislation which reads as follows:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Canadian National Railway to make capital expenditures including investment in securities of affiliated companies in the calendar year 1968 not exceeding in the aggregate $264,400,000, to make capital expenditures in the first six months of the calendar year 1969 not exceeding in the aggregate $75,000,000 for discharging obligations incurred prior to the 1st day of January, 1969, to enter into contracts prior to the 1st day of July, 1969, for equipment, additions and conversions requiring payments after the calendar year 1968 not exceeding $90,000,000, to borrow either from Her Majesty or by means of issues of securities guaranteed by Her Majesty an amount not exceeding $75,000,000 for investing in securities of Air Canada—

Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to ask the minister whether he could not, when introducing this legislation, tell us what are the various affiliated companies to which he referred. Furthermore, we should like to know the nominal value of the holdings of each of these companies and, in particular, whether some of them are in the trucking business.

I think that most of the citizens in our area, as those in all Canada of course, would be extremely interested to know these details, so that we may appreciate better the importance of these companies, and mainly the services they can provide all across Canada, without any discrimination with regard to some areas.

Upon reading the sums of money which are mentioned in this resolution, and I quote:

—including investments not exceeding in the aggregate $264,400,000—

I think, of course, of my area, the Lac Saint-Jean area which is called Saguenay-Lac Saint-Jean where, according to the general opinion of the people we are certainly not assisted in the field of transportation in view of the fact that the Canadian National Railway Company certainly does not do everything it can to provide an adequate service.

We propose to try, when this legislation is introduced, to explain to the minister the needs of the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, because we find that the railways made it possible for our region to grow. But if the present situation continues, the railways will also be responsible for its economic slowdown. In fact, year after year, services are discontinued. Last year, for instance, the postal rail service was abandoned and replaced by the delivery by truck. I fail to see the advantage of that measure or the saving it represents, because it is much more expensive to deliver mail by truck than by rail.

I think that was done in a deliberate effort to take every possible source of income away from the railways in our region in order finally to abolish the freight service, and today there is talk of discontinuing the passenger service.

Even freight services were cancelled to be replaced by one train only. I have no objection, since this certainly means savings, but I think, Mr. Chairman, that besides the economic factor, we should take into consideration the service aspect of the matter. In fact, the railway service is first and foremost a service that has to be administered as economically as possible, but in our areas, consideration must also be given to the services given.

I especially draw the attention of the minister to our area where next year, even the passenger train between Chambord and Dolbeau might be cancelled.

If the Canadian National does that, it will be a retrograde step that will bring our people thirty years behind. It is alleged that such a cancellation is due to a slowdown in the transportation industry. I am not ready to admit that, Mr. Chairman. In my opinion, it is merely a lack of good will and reflection which may lead to the cancellation of this train.

I travel every week on that train. When we hear criticisms, Mr. Chairman, we realize that the lack of passengers is due to bad service. For example, we often hear a passenger from Montreal arriving in Dolbeau say: I have taken the train once, but I will never take it again, because the service is too poor, it takes 14 hours to come to Montreal from Dolbeau. I think that if the authorities of the C.N.R. had tried to improve the service—especially their railway service—the public would travel by the Canadian National Railways much more often than at the present time.

One can also read in the resolution and I quote:

—to borrow either from Her Majesty or by means of issues of securities guaranteed by Her Majesty an amount not exceeding $75,000,000 for investing in securities of Air Canada—

Canadian National Railways

Mr. Chairman, since Air Canada is part of the Canadian National Railways or affiliated to that company and since it will also benefit from this money—which I am quite happy about—I should like the minister to consider the possibility of Air Canada also serving our region. Up until now, our part of the country has been served by private companies, Quebec Air or Nordair, but in view of all the taxes we pay to the federal government, Air Canada should consider the possibility of running a service between, for example, Montreal and Quebec, Roberval, Bagotville and Seven Islands.

We are also entitled to benefit from the services provided by state owned companies. Private companies provide the best service they can but, since they do not have the advantages of the crown corporations, they naturally cannot serve our part of the country the way Air Canada could.

If we discontinue the railway service, we will have to get another means of transportation. In my opinion, transport by air would be much more efficient. We have in Roberval an airport which has been abandoned for more than two years and which is now used only by a few private planes; when this measure is introduced, that will be the ideal time to consider the possibility of investing a few millions in our region, in air services.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw the minister's attention on that point before giving the last touch to the measure, in order to try to give the people of Lac-Saint-Jean and Saguenay a better service, first through the C.N.R. then, through Air Canada, as requested by the whole people of the region.

[English]

Mr. Peddle: May I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we call it one o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: With the unanimous consent of the committee is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: It being 1 p.m. I do now leave the chair until 2.30 p.m.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Mr. Peddle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you also for finally getting the correct name of my constituency. My first comment is that I wish very much that the measure before the committee this afternoon, the financing of the C.N.R., could be one that required unanimous consent in order to be passed by the committee because I assure you if such were the case there would not be unanimous consent. Further, I should like to say to all members on both sides of the house that if they had any idea of the real meaning of the concept of confederation, passage of this resolution would be denied by both sides of the house. Of course I am referring to the discontinuance of rail passenger service in the province of Newfoundland.

I think there is no better way for me to commence my remarks than to refer to the very first item in the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada. Item 1 says that on, from, and after the coming into force of these terms, hereinafter referred to as the date of the union, Newfoundland shall form part of Canada and shall be a province thereof to be called and known as the province of Newfoundland. In the decision of the so-called rail transport committee to approve of the discontinuance of passenger service I maintain there is a direct violation of the terms of union. The province of Newfoundland is being set up as the single province in Canada that does not need a rail passenger service.

As a result of a question asked of the Minister of Transport in this house by one of my colleagues the Minister of Transport said, mind you, that he regrets the inconvenience to Newfoundlanders because of the planned cancellation of the C.N.R.'s rail passenger service. One would not know but that he had rubbed against you coming off the elevator and had said, "Very sorry about that, buddy". He mentioned that some other small branch lines are being discontinued. But to the people of Newfoundland he says, "We are sorry to cause you inconvenience". He forgets that the province of Newfoundland has had this service for some 70, 80 or 90 years, long before confederation.

I should like to refer to another of the terms of union. It probably is not explicit enough. One could find loopholes in it. Naturally the C.N.R. is noted for finding loopholes. They are the most professional loophole finders in the country. Item 31 says that at the time of union or as soon as possible thereafter Canada shall take over the following services and will, from the date of union, relieve the province of Newfoundland of the public cost incurred in respect of each service taken over. Then the services are listed. The very first one is the Newfoundland railway, including steamships and other marine services.

In their national advertising Canadian National Railways refer to it as the escape route. They are certainly adopting an escape route in the province of Newfoundland and they are doing so with the approval of this government. With the approval of the Minister of Transport Newfoundland has been stabbed in the back by the present government and by that self-appointed so-called friend of Newfoundland, that $50,000 a year friend of Newfoundland, Jack Pickersgill, the chairman of the transport commission. As I say, we are being stabbed in the back.

The 1966 figures which accompany the application for the discontinuance of this service show that some 90,000 Newfoundlanders have used this service in the years up to 1966. One in every five Newfoundlanders has made use of this service. The railway very cleverly took the year 1966 as the year to make their application because, following the completion of the trans-Canada highway, a lot of people decided, naturally, because of the novelty alone, that they would travel by highway. We had never had a highway so they decided the novelty was too much to resist. The year following the completion of the highway Canadian National Railways brought forward their application for discontinuance of the rail passenger service.

The hon. member for St. John's East placed a question before the Minister of Transport just a few days ago and, as a matter of fact, on October 30 the answer was forthcoming. I refer to page 2201 of Hansard. The hon. member asked for some of the figures accompanying the C.N.R.'s application to discontinue the service. The answer by the Minister of Transport was that such figures did accompany the application but they were of a highly confidential nature and could not be disclosed. Regardless of that, I have come upon the figures that the hon. member requested and could not get because they were confidential. I have those figures before me.

Presumably Canadian National Railways suffered a deficit of some $900,000 in 1966. I say without any hesitation—and I have this very confidential report before me—that the analysis of variable expenses as they call them, whatever that means, which the railway provided with their application is most definitely padded. There are in this analysis of variable expenses such things as depreciation. Good Lord, those facilities were depreciated 100 years ago. They have been depreciated six times over. But we have an item for the depreciation of cars in the amount of $97,697, and for depreciation on locomotives, $66,173.

We must bear in mind that the total deficit was $918,000. The next item in the financial report which accompanied the application of the railway is inside expenses, whatever that means, which amount to almost half the total deficit. The figure for inside expenses is $429,-765. These figures are included in the financial report which the C.N.R. submitted to the transport commission in order to back up their request to discontinue the passenger service.

I suggest that the members of the transport commission, including Jack Pickersgill, still do not know what inside expenses are. I do not know what this expression means; it is a very vague term. However, inside expenses amount to almost half the total deficit of the railway. I do not think there is any need to repeat that when the chairman of the transport commission, refused, for personal reasons, to chair the meeting in St. John's he knew what he was doing. He did not want to come out in public and stab us in the back; he wanted to do it behind the curtains.

I remember that when I first came to the house just after the opening of the session an hon. member referred to a book that the Prime Minister had written, in which he said that Canada had paid dearly for Newfoundland's entry into confederation. It would seem to me, and to all Newfoundlanders, that he and his government now want their money back.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peddle: Ninety thousand Newfoundlanders made use of this service in 1966, and this should not be used as a criterion for the action the railway has taken. I have noticed since coming to Ottawa that while the decision was made to discontinue the Newfoundland passenger service, when applications have been made to discontinue similar services—I refer to small branch lines on the mainland—there have been great meetings of the board in order to establish costs and criteria. Apparently none of this was needed in connection with Newfoundland. Apparently the attitude was: These are the natives; use them as guinea pigs.

I do not need to read the very first item of the terms of union, and I do not think Newfoundland wants to be considered as a foreign country that is asking for foreign aid. But I would remind hon. members of this house that we are part of Canada; we became part of Canada in 1949 and we are to be considered as a province of Canada.

What is the proposal of this benevolent transport commission? They say there was a deficit of $918,000. I say that the figures they submitted to support their case were definitely padded.

There is one train in Newfoundland to which one passenger car is coupled. They hook on one car at the end of a long freight train. The railway, in the expenses set out in this financial report, even includes a proportion of the fuel used to pull that one, solitary car. They did not bring into the picture any part of the money they made on the 99 freight cars that went ahead of it but proportioned the expenses in connection with fuel used on that twice a week service. It is very easy to make any line in Canada a candidate for abandonment if you use supporting figures such as were used in this case.

In the report of the railway commission which sat in St. John's they say that one of the reasons they are discontinuing our passenger service is that the gauge is so narrow. The gauge is no narrower than it was in 1949. The commission also says there are curves, grades and so on in the line. There is not one single curve or grade that was not there in 1949, and the gauge is the same.

When we started to make a fuss about this matter, and only then, we were told the intention was to provide a fleet of 16 buses. Since we began to be heard on this matter we have been told the railway will provide, in addition, four super buses. We stopped reading comic books years ago. We do not care about super buses. This is almost like an advertisement for soap or a super detergent. They will provide Newfoundland with 16 buses and four super buses. I call this to the attention of the committee. God knows, we in Newfoundland should thank everybody for our blessings. Each bus will seat 39 passengers, will be air conditioned and equipped with a lavatory.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peddle: I hope the air conditioning is working some stormy morning next February when the bus starts to slide across Crooked Bog. Hon. members might not know what Crooked Bog is or where it is, but I hope the air conditioning is working. As somebody suggested this morning, I hope the general manager of the C.N.R. is on the bus at that time. Then it is said that the buses will be equipped with lavatories. Big deal! Perhaps they should not have spent the money because we have a very wooded country and the bus should just slow down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peddle: This is very magnanimous of the railway; it is wonderful. They have told us this in the newspapers and every news medium that I have read or heard. They will provide these buses with reclining seats, air conditioning and a lavatory. Thanks be to God, to Jack Pickersgill, Canadian National Railways and this government which promised us a just society. What do they offer the people of Canada? This is what they offer a part of Canada that needs aid. What do they offer to the rest of Canada? I have here some of the very colourful brochures put out by the railway. I think the committee would be interested to hear what these brochures say. In one brochure it states:

> The case for CN "traveliving"! It's the most relaxing, most enjoyable and most rewarding way to travel. Comfort and pleasure all the way. Tempting meals. Tip-top service. On longer distance trains, hospitality hours, kiddies' hours, even bingo!
> Scenic . . . sophisticated . . . satisfying. CN "traveliving"—the only way to go.

This is all for Canadians, but for Newfoundlanders we have 39 passenger buses with air conditioning, which we do not need, and lavatories, which we probably will not need. That is not all.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Peddle: That is not all, Mr. Chairman. We have two kinds of Canadians; Newfoundland-Canadians and Canadians. Here is a little booklet which was so kindly provided to me by the C.N.R. and it covers the train section by section. It states:

> Deep spring seats by day, lower and upper berths with foam mattresses by night. Dormette accommodation is very similar.

That is very interesting. Then it states:

> Roomette: Lots of room for one; foldaway bed and all facilities.

Then they have it in French, and while I am taking French now I will not risk reading

it. It then deals with a duplex roomette and states:

> Compact comfort with bed and all facilities.

The next one states:

> Bedroom: Another type featuring full length day-sofa, folding armchair, upper and lower beds and all facilities.

It also states that the bedrooms have folding armchairs replaced by upper and lower beds at night, with all facilities. Then it refers to the club car and states:

> Privacy or conversation—in comfort.

Apparently you can read all the latest magazines in deep-seated comfort. They have carpeting up to your ankles; you name it and they have it. Then the booklet refers to the cafe lounge and says:

> A pleasant setting for hearty meals, snacks and refreshments.

Then we have the livingroom and the booklet speaks of lounging in sophisticated ease. It refers to the lounge—"soft lights and luxury in a modern mood." This is beautiful for Canadians. We then go to the diner where it speaks of fine meals, gleaming silver and impeccable service. That is the end of that one. Most Canadians enjoy these things, but these people spend our money to promote this stuff and at the same time deprive us of our comfortable travelling accommodation.

We then come to another pamphlet which starts off by saying "Why be a prisoner of the road"? It goes on to say:

> There's no need to sentence yourself to hours of tension behind the wheel when you can travel relaxed on CN "traveliving" comfort and have the use of your own car at destination.

The brochure mentions all-weather reliability. This is something they should have taken into consideration in Newfoundland. I suggest the buses will not have all-weather reliability. The brochure also states, "No eating on the run". How in the name of heaven are you going to sleep and eat, play bingo and snakes and ladders and do these other things on a bus? This is fine for the rest of Canada. This is just my way of speaking but I am serious. Canadians nest in deep-seated comfort; they can sleep the miles away. They can go into the lounge and enjoy the friendship of their friends and can even meet new friends.

Another brochure suggests that one should not be bashful. You are not supposed to be bashful; you are supposed to speak to people and make new friends while enjoying carpets up to your ankles. You are supposed to have a drink and make new friends with somebody in the lounge car, I suppose, while you play bingo. This is all for Canadians.

What do these people tell the Newfoundlanders? What do they offer to the people there? They offer a 39-seat bus with air conditioning, which we do not need, and a lavatory.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peddle: Hon. members over there sound as though they approve of this. Maybe they were not here when I made my earlier remarks. They do not have any idea what confederation means.

An hon. Member: Speak up, we are listening.

Mr. Peddle: They should try to understand. We are supposed to be equal partners in confederation. The name of the outfit I am criticizing today is Canadian National Railways. That suggests to me that it is a national service rather than one available to nine provinces of Canada but not to the tenth. This is the point I am trying to make.

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peddle: I should like to thank you, Mr. Chairman, and those hon. members who have been so gracious. I hope they do not regard this as entertainment because it is not intended as such.

Mr. Mongrain: Think about the amusement tax.

Mr. Peddle: I have another pamphlet here from the C.N.R. which states:

> CN "traveliving" is travel fun. Whether you're going to the next town or across Canada, you can relax, sit back in comfortable, friendly surroundings and enjoy traveliving "the way of the worry free"—by CN.
> "Traveliving" means dollar-saving fares, fine food, good service, convenient schedules and hospitality . . . and the most beautiful scenery Canada has to offer right outside your picture window.

I might mention at this point that I took a ride on a train in Newfoundland recently.

They talk about looking out through the picture window. You could not look out the windows of that train because they have not been cleaned since confederation. You cannot see through the windows. This outfit from the day of confederation, when they whipped the linen off the tables and replaced it with little paper placemats, has deliberately downgraded the service. Now they are making a final move to withdraw it. I suggest that the people of Canada and the members of this house should not let them withdraw it.

Here is another little pamphlet entitled "Traveliving tips for milady from CN". It states:

> Have a wonderful trip, milady. CN hopes you will enjoy traveliving—"the way of the worry free".

This outfit will even take you to Paris, the Paris of North America, Montreal. This article suggests that Montreal is the second largest French speaking city in the world and then states:

> Not bad for a place that's just a few dollars away by CN. You'll enjoy getting there too.

I should like to point out that Newfoundlanders would like to go to Montreal too. We believe in biculturalism and bilingualism and everything else that will make this country one country, but we do not believe in moves like this which will divide this country in two.

Here is another clipping from a newspaper which says you can sleep overnight to Toronto. For the benefit of Hansard, it has six "z's". I do not know what that means but probably it means sleep. It then states:

> Take the Cavalier any night to Toronto and leave the "rest" to CN. Don't worry about hotel accommodation.

One article suggests that C.N. is the escape route. That is the route that this company has taken in Newfoundland. It is trying to escape.

I am not alone in my criticism, Mr. Chairman. Let me refer to the remarks made by Mr. J. A. McDonald who is the vice president, production, of the C.N.R., whatever that means. In a speech he made a few weeks ago he said he could not possibly concede the superiority of air transport over intermediate distances, 125 to 750 miles, and that anyone who has experienced the miseries of peak congestion on the most modern 12-lane highway would recognize that road transport is not capable of providing adequately for all the needs of the travelling public. That is what a top man in the C.N.R. said. I do not know what we in Newfoundland are supposed to accept but apparently we are supposed to accept almost anything. I have a picture of this 39-passenger bus with air conditioning and a lavatory.

However, Mr. Chairman, apparently there is not much that we can do about this situation. As I stand here today, I realize that the government of this country has the last say in a matter such as this. I appeal, sir, to the government and to every member of this house. I suggest that if they have any idea as to the meaning of confederation they will keep Canadian National Railways as Canadian National Railways and not as a railway that serves nine provinces in Canada while disregarding the needs of the tenth.

Mr. Carter: My main purpose in speaking on this resolution, Mr. Chairman, is to add my support to those of my colleagues who have already spoken. I should like to point out again to the house, and indeed to Canadian National, the terrible injustice that is being perpetrated by the government, by Canadian National Railways and by the Canadian Transport Commission in abandoning the rail passenger service in my province of Newfoundland. I regret that the Minister of Transport is not here, nor is his colleague the Minister of Defence Production. I hope this is not indicative of their lack of interest in this very important subject because in my province it is a very important subject.

In my maiden speech before this house I referred to the actions on the part of the three bodies I have just mentioned as being the great train robbery. I believe I pointed out that the recent great train robbery in Great Britain, which was given so much publicity, was designed and planned by a bunch of kindergarten children compared to the scheme that was prepared by Canadian National and others to rob Newfoundland of its passenger train service. I say "rob", Mr. Chairman, because this is exactly what has happened. Newfoundland has been robbed of one of its rights; it is being robbed of its rail passenger service.

The Newfoundland railway, as my colleague mentioned, was built some 70 or 80 years ago by the proverbial blood, sweat and tears of the people of Newfoundland. It was built, sir, at great sacrifice by the people of our province, at that time a colony. Since that time it has served our people well. It was built because it was to give our people an opportunity to communicate and to move about more freely in the colony. The railway was a very important facility. I am alarmed that 70 or 80 years later, when we have become a part of this great Canadian nation, a decision has been made and has been upheld by this government and by the Canadian Transport Commission to abandon this vital rail passenger service in Newfoundland. Our province, as most hon. members will recall, is sparsely populated. We have a very severe climate and, I might say, lots of snow. I make this point because the Canadian National intends, as my colleague pointed out, to replace the passenger train service with buses.

I must say that my colleague, the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, did an excellent job of describing the type of bus, the air conditioning, etc. Can you imagine, though, buses travelling right across Newfoundland, a distance of some 600 miles, under the most severe conditions imaginable and sometimes through a barren wilderness stretching in excess of 100 miles where in many places you see no sign of human life. There would be 39 passengers, men, women and children, crammed in that bus plowing its way along the trans-Canada highway in Newfoundland. It must be recalled that our trains have been blocked by snow in that area for as long as 70 hours. This is not too bad on a train where you can move around, where you have a dining car and so on. However, can you imagine people being stranded on an ordinary passenger bus for that length of time? I am suggesting that this will happen as sure as we are in this house today. It might not happen this winter but it certainly will happen, and it will happen on many occasions.

God forgive me for saying this, and I do not wish anything ill for anybody, but I should like to see the president of Canadian National and the former member of this house, Jack Pickersgill, come to Newfoundland and take a ride on that bus. Again, God forgive me, but I would not mind seeing them stuck for a few hours. I know such a thing should not happen to anybody, but if there is anybody in Canada who deserves that to happen I would highly recommend to the man above that these two or three men should be given top priority.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Jack would not freeze; he jumps around too much.

Mr. Carter: Well, at $40,000 a year he can afford to jump around. I will give him credit for one thing; he knew when to leave Bonavista-Twillingate.

Getting back on a serious note, Mr. Chairman, I point out that while there may not be—this is debatable—a constitutional obligation on the part of the government to maintain our passenger service, in my opinion there is most definitely a moral obligation. In recent years in Newfoundland we have had a number of commissions set up to investigate transportation problems. There was the MacPherson commission on transport as well as the Newfoundland transportation commission. Both—I repeat both—recommended the upgrading of the rail service. It might be of interest to note, and I hope hon. members opposite will do so, that neither report recommended abandonment. I repeat that these two commissions, headed by highly qualified people, were well aware and quite familiar with the conditions that exist in Newfoundland and they recommended that the rail service be upgraded. They did not recommend that it be abandoned.

The irony of the situation is that, despite these royal commissions, the Canadian National has adopted the opposite policy. Some years ago the Canadian National deliberately set about downgrading the Newfoundland rail passenger service in order to discourage its use by the travelling public. Naturally this policy resulted in yearly losses, substantial losses some years. Of course, this fact was used to strengthen the argument of Canadian National in favour of abandoning the rail passenger service. The argument Canadian National is using is based on the fact that in 1966, I believe it was, Canadian National lost $916,000. This was a deliberate loss. If this is going to be the yard-stick C.N.R. will use in the future, then how many rail services will be allowed to continue? If I am wrong, I stand to be corrected, but I do not know of any service that is really making money. I am sure the loss of $916,000 on the Newfoundland service is not as heavy as other losses incurred on other rail services.

Canadian National's plan to steal our passenger service from us was a very well calculated one. Several years ago they commenced to downgrade the service, to take away from the Newfoundland people things to which we were accustomed. For example, we had a reasonably good dining car and, as my hon. friend has mentioned, they replaced the linen with paper mats. This, I charge, was part of their over-all plan to incur losses with a view eventually to eliminating the service completely.

Canadian National's plan has been opposed by almost every Newfoundlander, with one or two exceptions. As I have already stated, the proposed action is contrary to the recommendations of two royal commissions on transport in Newfoundland. Almost every organized body in Newfoundland has objected to it. Our unions and our municipal councils have all voiced strong objection to the action of Canadian National.

The people of Newfoundland too are opposed to the withdrawal of rail passenger service, but their wishes are being completely ignored both by Canadian National and by the present government. I might inform this committee that dozens, even hundreds, of communities will be condemned to virtual isolation by this bureaucratic decision that has been taken in Ottawa. Let me inform the committee, the Minister of Transport and any other minister who is interested that, having removed itself from under the umbrella of colonial government, Newfoundland does not intend to become a colony of the bureaucrats in Ottawa.

I believe an hon. member has already remarked that rumours are rife here, but I heard a rumour that I am inclined to think has some foundation. It has been stated both publicly and privately that there was prior agreement between the present president of the Canadian Transport Commission and the Newfoundland government to discontinue our passenger train service. It has been alleged by a large number of people that in return for the federal government undertaking to assist substantially the Newfoundland government to complete the trans-Canada highway, our provincial government would not object to the elimination of the train passenger service. To the best of my knowledge, at no time has any member of the Newfoundland government, the chairman of the transportation commission, the Minister of Transport or indeed any member of the federal government denied this charge. Indeed, I will go a step further and here and now challenge the president of the Canadian Transport Commission, the premier of Newfoundland or any member of his government to answer the charge publicly by either admitting or denying it.

[Mr. Carter.]

In recent months the Prime Minister has paid lip service to the so-called just society and the elimination of regional disparities. I would therefore urge him and his colleagues to join the people of Newfoundland in their desperate fight to obtain justice and equal rights in the matter of our rail passenger service. I suppose I should not say this, Mr. Chairman, because my colleagues might not approve, but if the Prime Minister of Canada and his colleagues were to join the people of Newfoundland and were to restore to us that which is ours, they would become heroes in Newfoundland. I ask him and his colleagues to join us in our fight to retain that which is rightly and traditionally ours.

In view of the remarks of the Prime Minister in connection with regional disparity and a just society, I would ask him and his government this afternoon to take whatever steps are necessary to set aside the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission and to instruct Canadian National that, while they may be allowed to keep their buses running along the roads, they are not going to be allowed to discontinue their rail passenger service.

For the benefit of other members who perhaps are not too familiar with the terms and conditions under which Canadian National is allowed to abandon rail services, let me inform them that 39 passenger buses were introduced into service. These buses are to operate in conjunction with the rail passenger service until April next year. If the service is successful then the C.N. has the right to discontinue its trains and to operate with buses.

In all sincerity and honesty, Mr. Chairman, I ask whether this is a fair trial. Can we take the winter of 1969 as a forerunner of the sort of winter that we will have in 1970, in 1971, in 1972 and thereafter? It has even been the case in Newfoundland that there has been a mild winter with not too much snow. In those conditions it is quite possible that a bus service would be reasonably successful, that the buses would not get stuck on the trans-Canada highway for 70 hours, thereby sparing the president of the Canadian National and president of the Canadian Transport Commission the inconvenience and bother of being stranded.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, if the Prime Minister is sincere in his aim and desire to create a just society, to put an end to regional disparity, then I plead with him to instruct the Canadian National to run their buses and also to keep their trains running for another ten years. Let us have a ten year trial. Over that period we would be able to form a pretty good idea how successful buses will be on that long stretch of the Newfoundland highway, a large part of which, as I have said before, is barren wilderness.

I beg the Prime Minister and his government to heed what I am saying and to listen to the Newfoundland people. Surely to God the Newfoundland people have some right to be heard in this respect. They built the railway with their own money long before Newfoundland decided to join Canada. Why should they not be allowed to keep it?

I am sorry that our Newfoundland minister, who has expressed such concern for the Newfoundland people on this question, has not shown his interest by being in the house this afternoon to take part in this debate. I am also sorry that the Minister of Transport, under whose department the Canadian National falls, is not here. I hope this is not indicative of their lack of interest in this very important and serious question that is confronting Newfoundlanders today.

I close, Mr. Chairman, by asking the government and the Prime Minister, consistent with what he has said about the just society, to take whatever steps are necessary to set aside the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission and to give Newfoundland the train service to which it is entitled. May I say that the tourist industry is extremely important to Newfoundland and is becoming more important. Between Newfoundland and the rest of Canada is a 90-mile stretch of water which, so to speak, is very expensive. There is a ferry service from North Sydney to Port aux Basques and Argentia and I might cite some figures in relation to it. A male tourist with his wife and two children wishing to travel from North Sydney to Argentia and back must pay $262. The fare for the same family to Port aux Basques is, I believe, in excess of $100. I seriously recommend to the government that it consider abolishing that fare or reducing it substantially. Why should Newfoundland be penalized because it is separated from the rest of Canada by this 90-mile stretch of water?

The Chairman: Order, please. I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Carter: I thank the committee. I reiterate my request that the minister seriously consider reducing the ferry fare from North Sydney to Port aux Basques and Argentia. This would help our tourist industry which is most important to Newfoundland's future.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, the things I should like to say on this resolution are not necessarily related to each other but they are all related to the general subject we are discussing this afternoon. Before this resolution carries I hope the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance will answer some questions that are bothering me which have to do with the slight differences in wording that we find in this resolution compared with the wording of similar resolutions introduced on previous occasions.

The phrases in this resolution that give me cause for concern are those that refer to securities guaranteed by Her Majesty, to loans obtained in the capital markets, and so on. I notice that these references seem to apply with respect to assistance both to Canadian National Railways and to Air Canada.

Bearing in mind the information that has been given to us that a cabinet committee under the direction of the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Winnipeg South, in studying the whole question of the ownership and operation of air lines in this country, I cannot but wonder whether these differences in the resolution forecast a change, the die for which may already be cast. I hope that is not the case and I hope the parliamentary secretary to Minister of Finance will say something to assure us on this point.

It is well known that some of us in this house have long been strong supporters of Air Canada, formerly Trans-Canada Air Lines, as a crown corporation owned by the people of Canada and operated for the service of our people. We do not like the suggestion that a change in the ownership of this corporation is even to be considered. I might as well be frank and say that we do not like the idea that a man with the connections the hon. member for Winnipeg South has had in the past has been given this assignment. He may have divested himself of his long string of directorships, but his statements in the past would not suggest impartiality on his part as between Canadian Pacific Airlines and Air

Canada, and I plead strongly that we not be presented one of these days with a fait accompli under which the people of Canada may have lost their complete and exclusive ownership of this important and valuable air line.

In the early days when we were setting up what was then Trans-Canada Air Lines and were trying to make sure that it would be given the oportunity to become the company it is today, I remember the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe entering the debate at one point, and although his remarks were directed at some of us in this group his words none the less are appropriate today. He said that he hoped to make Trans-Canada Air Lines, as it was then, strong enough to withstand the attacks of its enemies and the support of its friends. I hope the present Air Canada is strong enough to withstand the attentions, or intentions—if you please—of some of its friends in the Liberal party.

Because of these differences in the wording of the resolution I hope the parliamentary secretary to Minister of Finance will give us a statement. Indeed, I think the Minister of Transport and the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Winnipeg South, ought to have been here today to speak on this resolution and on this aspect of the matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I welcome the applause which I take it applies not only to the wish that these minister were here but to the idea that public ownership of this air line should continue. I regret that there did not seem to be any applause from the Liberal side of the house.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am glad to see that the hon. member for St. Boniface and a few others have broken the spell and indicated they take the same position.

Mr. Mackasey: Perhaps the hon. member wants to know why I did not applaud his remarks. I did not particularly like his implication that the Minister without Portfolio from Winnipeg South could not act in an impartial manner with regard to any responsibilities given to him by the government. The words were not characteristic of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I do not think that type of implication ought to go unnoticed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for Winnipeg South and I are personal friends and what I said was not easy to say. But I think that when a man has had long connections with a privately owned air line business certain things ought to be said. Let me put it this way. A better choice could have been made of a man to conduct an impartial survey of the question as to what should be the ownership structure of the air lines industries in this country.

My second point relates to a matter which was again the subject of questions and answers on orders of the day this morning, that is, the position of the maintenance and overhaul base of Air Canada in the City of Winnipeg. The statement the Minister of Transport made this morning had a certain ring of reassurance about it. He told us on his own initiative that the former prime minister, Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, had made certain commitments to the City of Winnipeg and that those commitments still stand. But how long will they stand before they are implemented? This is a serious matter for Winnipeg, both in terms of the economy of the area and in terms of the employment of those who work at the base.

Negotiations seem to be going on. There appear to be talks about selling the operation there to some private company. The unions are concerned, but I find it is difficult for them to get into consultation with respect to this matter. To me, it is a shame that this kind of thing can be dragged on for so long, while in the meantime employees are forced to move or take other jobs. It has reached the point now where, when some of us ask that the maintenance and overhaul base be retained in Winnipeg, our friends in Montreal get up and suggest we are trying to take something away from Montreal which they think belongs to Montreal. I thought it was our base, and I think the government ought to move more quickly to get this issue settled on a satisfactory basis.

I join with others in expressing the hope that the question of the presidency of Air Canada will soon be settled. The delay is unfair to those who are concerned. It cannot but affect the morale of those who are running Air Canada that this long delay should take place with regard to filling the post which was occupied for so many years by Mr. Gordon McGregor, and I hope action will be taken soon.

There is another subject to which I should like to make reference, while we are dealing with this resolution. I have already said that I think the Minister of Transport and the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Winnipeg South, should be here. But at this point I wish the Minister of Finance were here too. I do not place any blame on the parliamentary secretary for piloting this resolution; it is one of the things he was asked to do, and it is one of the duties for which parliamentary secretaries are paid. But the reason I wish the Minister of Finance were here is because he wears several hats. As Minister of Finance he is responsible for policy related to the question of the pensions paid to retired civl servants. Hon. members know the many altercations and exchanges I have had with him over this matter.

The resolution before us is also in the name of the Minister of Finance and it relates, among other things, to the C.N.R. The same problem arises there, namely that there are thousands of retired employees of the C.N.R., a company to which we are constantly voting or lending money, who are on pensions which are utterly inadequate to meet today's living costs, utterly inadequate in the light of today's living standards. Hon. members need not be surprised if I find my way back to this subject under various headings time and time again, because I think it is just about the most important question we face in the whole pension field. Unless we do something to make sure that people who go on pensions will have their standard of living protected throughout the years they are living on those pensions, our whole pensions system will fall into jeopardy.

Answering some questions of mine in this area on October 7, as reported on pages 846 and 847 of Hansard, the Minister of Transport indicated that there are still 388 retired employees of the C.N.R. whose pensions are less than $25 a month; still 2,241 on pensions of $25 a month, and another 3,002 whose pensions range from $25 to $50 a month.

This makes a grand total of 5,651 retired employees of the Canadian National whose pensions are less than $50 a month. Yet despite the fact that these pensions are so low, nothing has been done in the years since these men went on pension to effect any adjustment in the amount paid to them. We have accepted the principle of pension escalation, in part, in the adjustment which is made under the old age security legislation and under the Canada Pension Plan. Several provinces have accepted it and other jurisdictions as well have done so. Quite a few private companies have done so—in most cases, it is true, when these matters are subject to collective bargaining, but not in all cases. Quite a few companies have accepted the principle that escalation has to be built into pensions so that the pensions might have some value in the years after those who draw them have retired. In the old days, when people retired at 65 or 70 and did not live very long afterwards, this problem was not so acute. Today, people are living longer and retiring earlier; costs and prices are rising more rapidly and thousands of people are left helpless as they watch the standard of living they enjoyed on retirement going down and down.

I submit that this is one of the most serious problems facing us in the pension field. We must start dealing with it somewhere, and that is why I wish the Minister of Finance were here today. There are two places where he can make a start. One is with respect to retired civil servants and the other is with respect to retired employees of the C.N.R.

The Chairman: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. gentleman, who is an acknowledged expert on the rules, but standing order 59(2) does say that speeches in committee of the whole house must be directly related to the subject under consideration. Possibly I missed the hon. member's point of connection during his remarks about this resolution, which is essentially a financing resolution, and if I have, I apologize. In case I have not, I would appreciate it if the hon. member would return to the substance of the resolution.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Well, Mr. Chairman, I had just about finished making my plea on this occasion. But I would not want to be out of order. It is bad enough trying to get a response, without finding oneself out of order, and I do not believe I am. May I point out that the resolution relates to the financing of the C.N.R., and that in this connection you have permitted discussion about running trains all over Newfoundland—or not doing so—the question of bus services, and so on. It seems to me the debate has ranged very far from the question of direct capital expenditure. This is a resolution by which we are making money available to the Canadian National Railways and if, at such a time, we can call upon the company to run trains in Newfoundland, or to redress other grievances, surely I have the right to appeal to the government to take up with the C.N.R. this question of pensions paid to retired employees.

If you are satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that I am in order, I am prepared to leave the matter there in the hope that the Minister of Finance, his parliamentary secretary and others will take this matter up with the C.N.R. I still have the promise of the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Winnipeg South, on this point. His last sentence in an adjournment debate on September 24, 1968, as reported in Hansard at page 441, was this:

> I can assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the government will continue to consult officials of the railways concerning the position of pensioners.

• (3:40 p.m.)

All the things we propose to do under this resolution are important—the business of financing the C.N.R. and Air Canada, the business of capital expansion, the business of construction. But, Mr. Chairman, so are people important. They are important not only while working for the C.N.R. but afterwards, and I think something must be done for the pension position of these people.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few general remarks on the resolution put before us this afternoon preceding a bill which doubtless will be passed by the house.

I shall not dwell on the operations of the Canadian National but instead I will turn to the fact that we are being asked to vote a total amount of almost half a billion dollars to finance the Canadian National Railways. I notice that this resolution comes back almost every year to provide the funds required for the operation of our railway transportation system.

Mr. Chairman, I fully agree that we need a public transportation system in Canada, but I must express my disapproval of the way in which we are financing our own transportation system. I shall not criticize this afternoon the administration of the C.N.R., because, from the report we get each year from the company, I see that on the whole it is well run since, for the past few years, or at least since 1962, the company has managed to accumulate an operational surplus. However, a careful study of these reports, shows a rather substantial deficit for each year, in spite of that surplus.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Chairman, this is due to the enormous debt of the C.N.R., which, in 1967, reached $1,800,000,000. In fact, in spite of a surplus of $29,200,000, the Canadian National still has a deficit of $35,900,000 after having paid $65,-100,000 in interest on its debt.

Mr. Chairman, I say that if Canadian National has to present us with a report showing a debit balance, this in part is not due to its operation or administration, but rather to the poor administration of the government which has not been able to finance or to set up its own railway company on a sound and profitable basis.

In the annual report of the Canadian National for 1967, we can read at page 23, just at the beginning of the comments, and I quote:

> For Canadian National, as for Canada as a whole, 1967 was a year of pride in past and current achievement and of strengthened confidence in the future.

Mr. Chairman, we can be proud of that judgment concerning our railway system, but I think that we cannot be proud of the way in which it is administered and of the expenses it involves for the government.

If I look at the page concerning grants, I note that during 1967, we have paid $63,100,-000, that is the estimated cost of interest on the debt of the Canadian National Railways. This is what I am driving at, Mr. Chairman. I wish to urge the government to find another method of financing that crown corporation. By so doing, it would not be compelled each year to return with such a motion asking us to vote the necessary estimates. For example, a sum of $75 million is mentioned to pay certain bonds; in fact, a loan is being asked to pay a debt which is due and I feel that will not settle anything.

One of the suggestions which I want to make at this stage of the consideration of the resolution is to ask the government to consider another method of financing that crown corporation which, in short, belongs to Canadians, so that it will not show a deficit on account of its financing system. I am suggesting to the government to study carefully the proposals the Ralliement Créditiste has been making in this house since 1935 and I am sure that they will give him the solution which will enable Canadians to be proud of having a transportation system which is making money and serving all of Canada. When that happens we will no longer hear complaints such as those made this afternoon by the hon. members from Newfoundland who were right to complain. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the whole problem of our public transportation system is due to poor financing by the government.

I do not think it is too late to solve this problem even though we paid, in interests only, during the last 25 years almost the present amount of the debt. In the last 25 years, we paid, according to the report presented to us, an amount of $1,275,499,000 in interests. If the Canadian National had been financed according to the method advocated by the Ralliement Créditiste, the debt would be almost paid up. The government would not have to come back every year, as I said earlier, with resolutions as the one now before us. I think that the government should seriously consider other methods of finding a solution to this problem.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, without saying another word it is quite obvious what the sentiments of the committee are as to the adoption of the resolution. This resolution relates to the financing of the Canadian National Railway, and reads in part:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Canadian National Railway to make capital expenditures including investment in securities of affiliated companies in the calendar year 1968 not exceeding in the aggregate $264,400,000—

And it goes on to refer to more millions of dollars, and more millions of dollars.

It is my understanding that this annual resolution is not usually debated. I issue notice right now that, from this time on, until there is rectification of the present injustice in relation to an eastern railway, we will see plenty of debate on anything which comes before the house that relates to the C.N.R. in any way, or indeed to the whole area of transport. We are all aware that we need hundreds of millions of dollars to keep the C.N.R. going. Therefore parliament needs to give consent. Through the Department of Transport we have allocated quite a bit of money to keep Jack Pickersgill and the boys alive. We understand they are experiencing great difficulty.

I think Mr. Jack Pickersgill might be able to get through this winter on the $40,000, or perhaps that figure has increased. I rise on this resolution because I think we have an oxymoronic situation. I see that the hon. member for Gamelin is leaving when I make this statement. It is not a nasty word: The emphasis is not on "moronic"; it is on the fact that it is a great contradiction that we are debating here today. This is a resolution which means that the Canadian government will have to appropriate several hundred million dollars for the operation of the Canadian National Railways. We are here today with the knowledge that the C.N.R. experienced a deficit of $35.9 million in 1967. We are here today with the awareness that one of the provinces of Canada is to lose its railway, the cost of which, even with all the padding referred to by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, are less than $1 million. To me this seems to be a very contradictory situation. With this kind of logic, God knows we are for hard years ahead in the Canadian economy as a whole.

Not too many weeks ago, in supporting a question asked by the hon. member for St. John's East, I posed a question to the Minister of Transport asking him why we were going to lose our railway. I asked why the rail service was not being abandoned in British Columbia, Ontario, Nova Scotia, or in any other province of Canada. As has been reported already today, the minister said that he was very sorry about what was happening. The reason for the abandonment, he explained, was the increased cost of transportation by rail. I then asked him when we would get plans from the Canadian Transport Commission, to be ratified by the Canadian government, for the abandonment of rail passenger service throughout the whole of the country. In Newfoundland last year, even with the padding, we experienced a deficit of less than $1 million and in Canada the deficit was $35.9 million. Using this logic, there is absolutely no place in the Canadian nation for the Canadian National Railways services.

It is not an argument but rather a logical question to ask why the Canadian National Railways should not be abandoned right across Canada. Naturally we do not subscribe to this kind of thinking. I do not believe any hon. members would subscribe to this kind of thinking, because we know there is a need for this great service across the country. When we specify service, I think the Postmaster General is aware that by the very nature of the term there is an implication that it will cost the Canadian taxpayers some money.

There have been two significant developments in the field of transportation and communications in the last two years. I have in mind the abandonment of the Canadian National Railways passenger service in Newfoundland and the appointment of Jack Pickersgill to the Canadian Transport Commission at a salary of $40,000. I contend that there is a high degree of correlation between the abandonment of the rail passenger service and the salary of one of the highest paid civil servants in North America.

I should like to point out two or three reasons for my rising to speak here today on this resolution. I feel the government is increasing the geographical malnutrition that is being suffered by the people of the Atlantic region. The general principle of having the rail passenger service abandoned in Newfoundland is to me sufficient to take exception to, in the circumstances. The idea would seem to be that if there is something to be experimented with it should be tried on the east coast. Only this morning we sat in this chamber and heard the Minister of Transport say that he was awaiting some briefs from the people of the Atlantic region because the government of Canada was not as aware of many of the problems of the Atlantic region as are the people down in that region. I hope the minister did not mean to imply that the government of Canada is not as sensitive to the needs and problems of the area as it is to those of other parts of Canada. I am sure he did not mean that.

I believe it would be to the benefit of both the minister and the government of Canada if the minister were here today to hear some of the arguments presented by the members of this house in an attempt to enlighten the people of Canada and the members of the house concerning some of the problems that are faced by the people in the Atlantic region. We have certain problems and we know that the governments and the people in these areas perhaps have more awareness of them. Therefore, I think the sentiments of the people of Newfoundland should be borne in mind when decisions of the nature of the decision in respect of the C.N.R. are taken. Briefs have been presented, people have testified. People have demonstrated throughout the whole of Newfoundland in protest against the abandonment of the C.N.R. To my knowledge there has not been one dissenting voice in the whole of Newfoundland to our stand that the C.N.R. should retain the rail passenger service. We have not heard from the person who used to be a great premier of Newfoundland; we have not heard from him at all. There must be something radically wrong when an agreement which obviously has been made is not brought to the attention of the house.

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

The economy of Newfoundland will suffer because of the abandonment of the C.N.R. The rail passenger service not only stimulates the economy but, especially if it were upgraded, would greatly boost the economy through a tremendous increase in tourist and trade development. There in the community of Bishop Falls, in my district with 2,000 people, this is the only source of income. This community will disappear off the face of Newfoundland and off the map unless the C.N.R. assumes its responsibility and takes issue with this particular stand. It is not the C.N.R., perhaps, but rather the government of Canada that would have to take such a stand.

As my friend, the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador mentioned, there obviously is some kind of a scheme between the "Joe" and the "Jack" of Newfoundland. There is obviously some kind of agreement of which the Canadian people are not aware. Is it not amazing that just at the time when Jack Pickersgill is getting his $40,000 we are to lose our rail passenger service? It would seem to me that there is no reason for this other than to try to justify the "in-pocket", the income, of Jack Pickersgill. If we are to create this kind of bureaucracy, then it becomes necessary to curtail services somewhere in Canada and it would appear the thinking is that the best place to do this is on the Atlantic coast. There obviously is something wrong.

Pressure has been put on the premier of Newfoundland, who hung a black flag from the confederation building not too many years ago when an issue was at stake. Then he came to Ottawa. Our friend Mr. Gwyn, now the executive assistant to the Postmaster General, will remember the conversation he had with the premier when Joe Smallwood travelled to Ottawa. Black flags were flown and the citizens of Newfoundland wore black at that time. But we have not heard one word from the premier of Newfoundland about this present kind of action. Also we still see the gracious person proceeding through the halls of this House of Commons sporting his $40,000; but we do not hear a single word from him about the great injustice.

All hon. members who have been here for some years are aware of what sometimes happens in politics, and that political plans sometimes result in making decisions which affect the economies of areas. I contend that there has been one great scheme that we do not know much about, although we can suspect the nature of it, which has resulted in our losing our rail passenger service. Across Canada there has been tremendous expansion in many ways with regard to rail passenger service. There is the Alberta Resources Railway, the Great Slave Lake Railway, the Ontario commuter service, and in a bill which will come before the house there is an item for the expenditure of more than $50 million in respect of rail lines. This expenditure of Canadian National Railways has been financed jointly by the federal and provincial governments, mainly by the federal government; yet we have to suffer the loss of a vital service on the basis of less than $1 million.

We do not have a Canadian Pacific Railway to fall back on. We do not have the commuter service that they have in and out of Toronto. We do not have the large, luxurious railiners that the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador mentioned today. We have one lonely, little piece of rail going across 500 miles of bog, barren land, forest and field in Newfoundland. We have one little railway which transports a considerable number of people and is not doing much damage to the Canadian economy. As a matter of fact, it is a great stimulus to our provincial economy. Our rail passenger service has been allowed to go downhill so much in the last year that Oliver Goldsmith would have been reluctant to include it in his Deserted Village.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lundrigan: Conditions in some of the way stations and stations generally across Newfoundland would not compare favourably with conditions during the Alaska gold rush, because the rail service in Newfoundland has been allowed to really go downhill. An hon. Liberal member is interrupting me again. Obviously he has not a railway in his constituency. I would like the hon. member and a good many other Liberal members in the house to stand up and speak on this issue, because they will be faced with the same kind of decision making if they are not careful. I believe a number of hon. members of the Liberal party are prepared to speak on this issue, and we hope they are given the opportunity to support us in our endeavour.

Mr. Bell: They have not realized it yet.

Mr. Lundrigan: We have way stations, bystations and transportation conditions acrosss Newfoundland that are unbelievable. In the last two years things have been allowed to deteriorate and go downhill. It is amazing that people have used the service at all. I have been writing letters for months on this subject and have received very little response from people with responsible positions in the Canadian National Railways.

The amazing thing is that Canadian National has tried to kill the service; but with regard to every little station across the island one could, if you presented the statistics—which I would if I had time today—prove that the service is being used more than ever. Despite the fact that the service has been allowed to go downhill, people on the island, and tourists, are using the service. Despite the lack of service, it is being used to a greater extent than in the past. Last year for example it was used to a great extent. If one reads the annual report of the C.N.R. he sees that the contention is that the service was used more last year because it was centennial year. But the service has been used to an even greater extent this year, and this is not centennial year. I have never in my life heard an argument presented by a group of individuals representing a company such as that presented by the railway in support of its contention.

It is unfortunate that the Minister of Transport is not with us today. However I beg his colleagues to bring this debate to the attention of the minister. I hope he will make a statement in the house on this question and will check up on what is happening in Canada with regard to rail transportation. A commission on railway costing conducted a study in the province of Manitoba and considered presentations of 3,000 pages. If one were to read in detail excerpts from the report it would be difficult to realize how an agency responsible for providing a basic service could still exist in Canada, with our present code of ethics and attitude toward providing these services.

A member of the Manitoba branch line retention association indicated that, with the present rail costing method used by Canadian National Railways, almost any line could be made a candidate for abandonment. There is no trouble justifying this statement if one is able to go into detail. I beg hon. members opposite and colleagues of the Minister of Transport to implore the minister to take issue with what has been happening in respect of transportation and communications in Canada.

We have great faith in the Minister of Transport. We have little faith in other people connected with transportion. I have heard a number of people referring to Jack Pickersgill as still being the minister of transport. It is my understanding that Jack Pickersgill created a position which would rid him of the responsibility of that portfolio. I hope the Minister of Transport will take issue with the situation and will not allow "Sir" Jack to exercise the kind of authority he is noted as having exercised through the years.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I say for God's sake let the Minister of Transport stand up and play his part as a great Canadian in dealing with this issue. Let him use the power given him in section 53 of the Railway Act, which empowers the minister and his colleagues to set aside or rescind a decision of any body with delegated power, such as the Canadian Transport Commission. For God's sake let the Minister of Transport take issue in this regard, set aside this decision and rectify the injustice perpetrated upon the people of Newfoundland.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I think the resolution we are considering, item No. 24 on the order paper, should be passed by the house. These two great Canadian corporations require money and should be given it by the house. By and large they serve the Canadian people well. I have been very much interested to hear the regional beefs of the Newfoundland members. We in western Canada have somewhat similar beefs with regard to regional situations about railways of both denominations, as it were. However, I do not wish to speak about that matter today.

As the member for Winnipeg South Centre, I am convinced that my constituents would not want me to try to block the passage of this legislation. We are good Canadians; I believe we should do things to improve Canada's future. Obviously, as I say, the two corporations covered by the resolution need this money.

I do not think this afternoon should pass without reference being made to the second part of the resolution, which deals with Air Canada. Air Canada needs a considerable amount of money, $130 million and $75 million. I suggest to the government that while it might be fine for Air Canada to keep their aeroplanes in the air as much as they can, the appointment of the president of Air Canada should not be kept in the air any longer than it has to be. Major policy decisions, such as the one that bothers me and the people in my constituency, should not be left in the air either. Basically, we have had in Winnipeg an air base that is employing approximately 700 people at the moment. One can multiply that figure by two, because most of these employees have wives, and by two or three more because most of them have children. Therefore one could say that a great number of people are being kept in the air each hour of every day and night. Some of them are getting ulcers. Some of them are becoming worried and depressed because of this situation. I can vouch for this, Mr. Chairman, because I have spoken to them about the problem.

There was some suggestion that an effort be made to maintain the overhaul base at Winnipeg, but that it was economically impossible to do so. I do not believe in parliamentarians meddling in the affairs of crown corporations to the detriment of the efficient service they provide the general public. However, I do think it is a shocking thing that Air Canada has been allowed to say one thing and do another, and this is exactly what is happening today.

Air Canada has an overhaul base in Winnipeg that is being bled to death. The 700 people employed there are not working full days. They know this and so does everyone else. At the same time in Montreal there is a situation where the employees are working overtime and much of the work is being subcontracted. It does not make sense that in Winnipeg the workmen are not given the dignity of being allowed to put in an honest day's work, so the country as a whole can get an honest dollar's worth of work when their is work to be done.

If this base at Winnipeg is really not of any use, for God's sake why does not Air Canada say so, and shut it down? I have seen no factual figures that would indicate this, but I challenge Air Canada to do this and the government of Canada to accept its reasoning. I am a member of the government party and I will vote for the bill which will follow this resolution, because we in Winnipeg are not small minded about the needs of this country.

This government has been saddled with the Pearson pledge, and I warn members that the unions are going to put up placards and bills all over the city repeating that pledge, if the government reneges on it. Mr. Pearson said that this base would be used until at least 1973, and that the government had no intention of allowing the airport itself to be diminished in any way. Obviously, if it is not to be diminished either Air Canada or a substantial substitute, such as Douglas or Lockheed—some company that knows what it is doing—will have to take the place of Air Canada. From what I have seen, nothing is happening. I do not blame the Liberals any more than the Conservatives, because this has been a festering sore since 1948. I cannot allow the opportunity to pass without bringing the fact to the attention of the government that this is a festering sore for which 90,000 people in my constituency will blame the government, if it is not healed.

Now that Air Canada has come with hat in hand asking for $130 million, and another $75 million, politicians have a justification for meddling in the affairs of this crown corporation. I think it should be made abundantly clear to Air Canada that it has a duty to Canada as a whole, within the context of an air policy. It should be made clear that Air Canada cannot ignore Mr. Pearson's pledge, and that pledge has not been changed by any government or by the dirty infiltration that is taking place daily. This is the time for the government to speak up to Air Canada.

I will vote for this measure on the assumption that the government will have the good sense to do something now about this situation.

Mr. McGrath: First of all I want to say how grateful the Newfoundland members of parliament are for the very kind and generous remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Oxford. Notwithstanding the words we have said in the house today, which have been met with a certain amount of derision, laughter and humour, this does not in any way take away from the seriousness of the problem we are trying to outline to the house, at least so far as it affects the province of Newfoundland.

In that context, I consider it a matter of personal regret, as I am sure do the people of Newfoundland, to note the absence of the Minister of Defence Production who is our minister and our representative in the government of Canada. It is a matter of great disappointment to my colleagues that he did not show enough interest in this subject, which is on the lips of everybody in our province, to be in the house this afternoon.

I also note with regret the absence of the Minister of Transport. We had hoped he would be in his place today and that he would pay some attention to our plea. Obviously he must have anticipated this because we have been in constant touch with him since the election of June 25, by way of written communication, verbal communication and questions in the house.

The second day of the sitting of this parliament I directed one of the first questions to the government, specifically to the Minister of Transport, and it related to this subject. My colleagues have referred at some length to the terms of the union, and the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador quoted from term 31, which is what we might call the railway term. I should like to quote briefly from an order in council passed on April 1, 1949, P.C. —1514, which was a result of the terms of union. As a result of this order in council the governor general in council entrusted to the Canadian National Railway the operation and management of the Newfoundland railway. This order in council reads in part:

> Therefore His Excellency the Governor General in Council under recommendation of the Minister of Transport is pleased to order that effective April 1st, 1949, the Newfoundland Railway including rights of way, wharves, drydocks and other real property, rolling stock, equipment, ships and other personal property the title to which is vested in His Majesty, be and they are hereby entrusted in respect of management and operation thereof to the company on the terms in the Canadian National Railways Act expressly specified, namely that such management and operation shall continue during the pleasure of the governor in council.

Both terms 29 and 31 leave no doubt in the mind of any objective observer as to what was intended. It was intended that the Canadian National Railways was being handed the Newfoundland railway in trust for the government of Canada to be operated by the C.N.R. for the people of Newfoundland and the people of Canada.

It is rather interesting to note that at the time of the hearing of the Canadian Transport Commission in St. John's there were a number of briefs presented on behalf of those who opposed this intention—the application of Canadian National Railways to discontinue the rail passenger service in Newfoundland. Among those who appeared before the commission was a cabinet minister representing the government of Newfoundland. He stated at that time that it was the opinion of the government of Newfoundland that the Canadian National Railways should continue to provide rail passenger service, that they should only be permitted to operate a bus service simultaneously with the rail passenger service, and that a trial period of several years should be permitted. The minister representing the Newfoundland government—the minister of justice, a senior member of the cabinet—suggested at that time that any alternative service inaugurated by the railway, a bus service, should be one that would discharge properly its responsibility or those of Canada to the people of Newfoundland as contemplated by the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada.

There is no doubt what the minister had in mind. He was referring to the terms of union which have been referred to by my colleagues and to which I have briefly alluded. The minister was advocating, on behalf of the Newfoundland government, that neither Canadian National Railways nor the government of Canada had the right to discontinue rail passenger service. However, we wanted to be fair about it; we did not want to hang our rights on a legalistic argument. We were prepared, as reasonable people, to allow the railway to prove to us conclusively that a bus service would be more efficient and would, in fact, be accepted by the people of Newfoundland.

In order to do this, the Newfoundland government suggested to the commission that between the time of the inauguration of the bus service and the fall of 1970 the railway should maintain regular train passenger service. The minister, in summing up his evidence before the commission, stated that the province of Newfoundland feels it should not be required to accept, and these are his words, "a pig in a poke". In other words, the province of Newfoundland should not be required to accept some vague suggestion on the part of Canadian National, using it as a form of subterfuge to get out of their responsibility as the agency of the government of Canada at the time the railway was taken over in 1949.

I find very interesting this particular brief presented to the commission by the six Newfoundland members of parliament who were sitting in the last parliament. The new Minister of Defence Production, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, was included amongst the six. This brief was presented by the then member for St. John's West, Mr. Richard Cashin. The brief stated that Canadian National Railways should demonstrate by experience rather than by opinion—I subscribe to these submissions—that the bus service is workable and does, in fact, constitute a definite improvement over the existing train service. Mr. Cashin felt, and he was speaking for his colleagues at the time, including the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, that this could only be accomplished by operating the two schemes concurrently for a period of five years. He felt that only in that way could you prove the merits of the one over the other, and only in that way would the railway have the opportunity of gaining the necessary experience in operating a bus service across Newfoundland.

At the time, he also made the suggestion that the railway give consideration to operating a diesel rail dayliner. This suggestion was dismissed out of hand by the railway as being too expensive because of the large capital outlay involved. Mr. Cashin presented his brief to the commission with his usual eloquence, and was speaking for himself and his five colleagues. He felt that the trial period was essential in order to ensure that Canadian National Railways would provide what, in essence, was a more effective service and prove they could maintain this service under the weather and highway conditions which would prevail in Newfoundland.

I was rather interested to find, Mr. Chairman, and I am sure my colleagues were, that the Minister of Defence Production, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, sang a different tune when he joined the treasury benches and became a member of this government. I am referring to his remarks during the throne speech debate, which can be found at page 282 of Hansard. At that time he supported the abandonment of rail passenger service in Newfoundland, and supported it with the type of eloquence for which he is famous.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what happened to make him change his mind? Well, that is subject to opinion. Apparently the Minister of Defence Production now sees the situation quite differently, from the treasury benches, than he did when he was a private member of this house. I find it difficult to understand why the Canadian Transport Commission, with a haste that is certainly not characteristic of a tribunal hearing such an important brief, should make this decision. After all, we are not dealing with a spur line or a branch line; we are dealing with a provincial railway covering the province of Newfoundland. Why was there such haste in handing down a decision? It is rather interesting to note that the decision was handed down only after the election on June 25.

A great deal has been made of the operating deficit Canadian National incurred in maintaining the passenger service in Newfoundland. My colleague referred to this. The Canadian Transport Commission, during the course of its hearing, and in its report, referred to this deficit, but referred to it for only one year. I find this rather intriguing, rather interesting. The commission only referred to the year 1966; this is the only year for which we have any statistics. The deficit in that particular year was $900,000.

My colleague, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, has referred to this. I am not going to repeat his argument because I do not believe $900,000 is that much, especially in view of the fact that the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador said the railway carried 90,000 passengers that year. We are denied, however, the same type of statistical information for the years 1949 to 1966 inclusive. I should like to know, if we are to have the figures for 1966, why we could not have them for 1964, 1965 and so on.

While we are on the subject, I should like to see a comparison of that deficit with the deficit of Canadian National Railways in the province of Prince Edward Island. Surely it is reasonable to suggest that the Canadian National does not operate at a profit, and certainly not the rail passenger service in the province of Prince Edward Island. I should like to know also about the deficit in Nova Scotia in respect of providing rail passenger service. How much was the deficit incurred by Canadian National in operating rail service in the province of New Brunswick? I could go right across the country. How many rail passenger services in this country operate at a profit? Why single out the province of Newfoundland?

Well, Mr. Chairman, I suspect a little bit of skulduggery; I suspect a little collusion. This has been referred to by my colleagues. The government acted in this way in the province of Newfoundland because they thought they could get away with it. Indeed they felt it was politically expedient for them to do so. I submit to the Canadian National, through you Mr. Chairman and whatever minister in the house is answering for Canadian National, that this railway would not dare abandon the rail passenger service in Prince Edward Island because they know the government of Prince Edward Island would object so strenuously they would not get away with it. I further submit the government would not dare abandon the rail passenger service in the province of Nova Scotia for the same reason, or the province of New Brunswick for the same reason. However, the same criteria could be used, the same argument could apply. Anyone who looks at the map of Prince Edward Island will be able to see readily that the Canadian National rail line carrying passengers across that island parallels the highway. However, we did not hear of Canadian National abandoning their passenger service in favour of a bus service in Prince Edward Island.

They know they could not get away with it. The same argument would apply in Nova Scotia. Anyone who has travelled from Yarmouth to Sydney knows that the trans-Canada highway parallels the railway all along. Do we hear of the Canadian National Railways applying to the transportation commission to abandon their rail passenger service in the province of Nova Scotia and to substitute for it a bus service? No. The same applies in the province of New Brunswick. I am not too familiar with western Canada, Mr. Chairman, but I would suggest that the same argument applies to the western provinces as well.

Therefore I come back to my question: Why pick on Newfoundland? Why deprive us of what is the right of every other Canadian? I do not think it unreasonable to say—and this is the sum total of our argument—that until the government and its agency brings in a general policy of abandoning rail passenger service right across the country, we in Newfoundland will oppose this measure with all the strength that we can muster.

I also hope, Mr. Chairman, that we will have an opportunity to question the officials of the C.N.R. about this matter. I would not want to be unreasonable; we genuinely want answers to our questions. I should like to question the Minister of Transport about the suggestion that there was a deal between the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland, which was on a political hook in that it was committed to completing the trans-Canada highway in two years but did not have the wherewithal to complete it in ten years. It is said that the government of Newfoundland told the federal government that if it would get them off that hook and agree to complete the trans-Canada in Newfoundland, the Newfoundland government would acquiesce in any move the federal government might make to discontinue the railway in Newfoundland, as a result of which it would probably save $1 million a year.

We should like answers to these questions, Mr. Chairman. Newfoundland became a province of Canada in 1949. The parliamentary secretary need not smile at that; I am not talking about ancient history but about 20 years ago. Perhaps he will remember that. When Newfoundland became a province of Canada in 1949 it had a first class railway system, albeit a narrow gauge railway but one which at least provided service to our people. The railway was taken over by the Canadian National, as was their responsibility to do, whereupon they embarked upon a deliberate policy of downgrading the service. This was because they looked upon the people of Newfoundland as one big "Newfie" joke. It is a big Newfie joke, Mr. Chairman, because in actual fact that laugh is on us at this particular time.

Although we cannot present statistical facts to support our argument, we nevertheless contend that from 1949 onwards Canadian National set out upon a deliberate policy of downgrading our passenger service and discouraging people from using it, as a result of which it was able to present arguments to the effect that the service was no longer justifiable.

There is one difficulty, Mr. Chairman, about this alleged deal to complete the trans-Canada highway; the highway in Newfoundland does not measure up to trans-Canada standards. The road goes from one end of Newfoundland to the other, 600 miles of narrow highway which I submit is one of the most hazardous highways in the world. As my hon. friend from Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador said so eloquently, there are stretches on the highway where you can drive for 100 miles and not even find a logger's shack; where there is no sign of human habitation; where the winter conditions are the most severe in the world; conditions in which even the Canadian National Railways have experienced trains being stuck in the snow for days, 70 or 80 hours not being unusual.

I hope the president of the C.N.R. accepts the invitation put forward by the hon. member for Oxford and takes a trip across Newfoundland on a bus in January. I should like to see him joined by Mr. Pickersgill, the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission. I should like to see the Minister of Transport, who is not in his seat today, also take that journey. I say the same of the Minister of Defence Production. And just for kicks, Mr. Chairman, I also include the premier of Newfoundland. Can you conceive in your mind's eye, Mr. Chairman, that motley group being stuck in the wilds of Newfoundland in the midst of a January blizzard! Words fail me to describe to you what might possibly come out of such an incident. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, if that were to happen—and I say this in all sincerity—they would not be so anxious to proceed with this plan to deprive us of what we feel is our right as Canadian citizens.

[Mr. McGrath.]

The position of the province of Newfoundland has been stated by a senior member of the Newfoundland government, a man billed as the major rival of the Minister of Defence Production to take the throne and wear the mantle of Joey. What did this man say to the commission, Mr. Chairman? His position was to the effect that any alternative service inaugurated by the railway should be one that would properly discharge its responsibilities. In effect, he said that until such time as the railway could conclusively prove that a bus service would discharge the responsibility that was assumed under the terms of union, the government of Newfoundland was opposed to the submission made by the C.N.R.

I should also like to quote the words of Mr. C. Woodward in the report of the commission, in which it handed down its just judgment. These can be found at page 13 of the report, where Mr. Woodward said:

> To sum up in a few words the feelings expressed in these briefs—

Here he is referring to the brief submitted in opposition to the railway's application.

> —it would seem to be: Do not treat us, the people of Newfoundland, as second class citizens of Canada by forcing upon us a second class system of passenger service.

I subscribe to those words, Mr. Chairman, and I only regret that the Canadian Transport Commission did not subscribe to them.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired, unless it is the will of the committee that he continue his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: The hon. gentleman must have unanimous consent to continue his remarks. Has he unanimous consent? The hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. McGrath: Might I suggest to those who hesitate to give me unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that there but for the grace of God go they. Their province might be next.

The Canadian Transport Commission, in summing up their report, also summed up the essence of the opposition that was presented by the people of Newfoundland. I should like to quote the words of the acting chairman of the commission and these are his words, not mine:

> We as the youngest province in the confederation are entitled to treatment equal to that given the other provinces.

Second class citizens we will continue to be, Mr. Chairman, if we settle for less than equal treatment. As I said at the outset, Mr. Chairman, if we permit Canadian National Railways to embark piecemeal upon a program of abandoning their rail passenger services, and thereby the responsibilities of the government under the terms of union to provide such service to Newfoundland, then we are allowing ourselves to be treated as second class citizens. I repeat that I hope I will have the chance to direct questions to the officials of the Canadian National. After all, perhaps this is the beginning of a five year program, even a ten year program, to abandon rail passenger services all across Canada. I say to the committee that until it becomes the general policy of the government to permit Canadian National Railways to abandon passenger services all across the country we in Newfoundland will not—I repeat—will not permit ourselves to be used as second class citizens in this matter or in any other matter before this house.

Before resuming my seat I ask the President of the Treasury Board to give hon. members of this committee who are vitally interested in the subject an undertaking that when the estimates of the railway are being considered we shall have a chance to examine officials of the Canadian National with respect to this matter and other matters which vitally interest us. The absence of the Minister of Transport, the Minister without Portfolio who is responsible for the Minister of Transport, and the Minister of Defence Production, from Newfoundland, have been noted. Under the circumstances I do not think it unreasonable to ask for this undertaking.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps I might say a word on this matter, Mr. Chairman. There has been quite a bit of talk this afternoon about the Canadian Transport Commission. I point out to the hon. gentleman that the estimates of that particular board have already been referred to the transport committee. The estimates of the Department of Transport were not referred, at the request of the opposition, and are still before the house. I will give an undertaking on behalf of the Minister of Transport that, by way of reference of the estimates of the forthcoming financial year or by way of reference of the financial report of the Canadian National, the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to consider these questions in the committee, and an opportunity to examine senior officials of the railway.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, the topic I shall stick to closely has to do with the erosion of passenger service in British Columbia. I listened with interest to hon. members from Newfoundland and the Atlantic provinces who complained about the erosion of transport facilities in their provinces. Our problems seem common. The problems of British Columbia to a greater or lesser extent are found in every province of this country.

I know the railways can always come before the Board of Transport Commissioners and present a pretty good case. I have engaged in several protests to the board and government over the abandonment of services, since it seems that over the years there has been a deliberate erosion of the service and the accommodation offered by various companies in this field of transport. This erosion is continuing.

It is simple for one of our national railways to make out a good case for the abandonment of a certain line. We saw that happen in the case of the Kettle Valley line in the Kootenay country. I will not spend much time on this.

Mr. McIntosh: We have already heard a great deal about the Kettle Valley Railway.

Mr. Harding: I'll bet you have. Passenger service has been eliminated because the company in question greatly reduced the services which the public could obtain. First the sleeping accommodation went. I ask, who wants to travel for a day and a half without some kind of sleeping accommodation? Then the dining car service was taken off. Then, at stopovers, passengers had to get off the train and go to a hotel.

What was the result? After one or two years of this sort of thing the company went to the Board of Transport Commissioners with a bleak revenue picture saying, "Look, we can't make any money on this line. This is what's happening." I submit such a policy has been deliberately followed, and is continuing.

I will now protest the quality of service we are obtaining on our trans-Canada lines. The worst offender is the Canadian Pacific. The Canadian National has at least made an attempt to modernize and upgrade its service. But anyone seeking to go out west on one of the national lines will have great difficulty in obtaining sleeping accommodation. Reservations must be made two or three weeks in advance. Often you are turned down and, in desperation, you seek some other mode of travel. Neither the Board of Transport Commissioners nor this government apparently realizes what is going on when companies ask to have services discontinued. I know of instances where people who could not obtain accommodation on train had as a last resort to take an airplane, a bus or their own car. I can therefore understand the complaints which have been raised, since it seems that other provinces are having the troubles our own province suffers from.

I suggest that rail passenger service has a future in this country. Many people like to travel in a leisurely way and see this great country. If they were assured of reliable service, and accommodation at all times I am sure we should see a sharp upward trend in the number of passengers using trains. The people of British Columbia have never been too happy with this country's national transport policies. Nothing needs to be overhauled so much in this country as our national transport policies, which direct our various systems of transportation. Perhaps I might be permitted to speak of freight rates. The people of British Columbia feel that in the matter of freight rates they are grossly disciminated against. The tendency has been for British Columbia trade to be driven north or south, and particularly south, rather than to the east. Many Canadian markets are barred to products from British Columbia because of the excessively high freight rates charged.

It seems to me this is one of the first markets which any government should look to and encourage. I know that the province has gone to the federal government and to the Board of Transport Commissioners on numerous occasions with good cases for freight rate assistance, and the need for changes in the old freight rate structure. This is a field in which the house should be keenly interested.

I want to point out that once passenger service lines are abandoned, abandonment of the freight lines is often the next step. This has happened in the area from which I come. Passenger service is discontinued, then comes an application to discontinue freight services to the rural areas. The first thing we know is that a number of small rural industries go out of business. Here we are talking about an incentive program to build up the regions where there is a low level of income and employment, without fully realizing that one of the keys to the whole situation is transportation. If we are to build up industry in some of our rural sections, transportation is one of the keys to a successful program.

I urge the government to take another look at transportation as it affects the rural areas, because this has been overlooked in the past and it is bound to affect our efforts to encourage industry to locate in some of these less favoured areas, in order to bring a higher standard of living to those who live and work there.

Time is drifting on, and there is one more point I should like to make before I sit down. It concerns the air service to the Kootenay country. This is another example of the erosion of transportation services in some sectors of this nation. C.P.A. presently serves the Kootenay area and there is talk of withdrawing service from the Castlegar district. I presume this will apply to the Okanagan, and perhaps, to the east Kootenays, too. If such action is taken, smaller companies will no doubt move into the district; but in the overall picture our transportation facilities are gradually being reduced and this reduction is bound to have detrimental effects on the area. I suggest to the house that this whole question of air transport, rail transport and road transport be looked into with a view to modernizing the system. These services can be integrated to a far greater extent than they are today.

It seems a tragic thing to me that Canada should have two transcontinental railways, each having trouble getting a sufficient volume of traffic to make its operations pay. Often we see the companies operating fleets of trucks in direct competition with their own rail lines. Often we see highways clogged with trucks carrying goods which could, quite possibly, be carried by railway waggons which are operating only at half capacity. This subject should be explored fully by the department, by the government and by this house. Surely we can improve on what we have.

There are a number of separate questions I should like to ask later, when another opportunity arises. I certainly sympathize with hon. members from Newfoundland and elsewhere who have spoken about the problems they are experiencing in connection with transportation. The government should do something about it.

Mr. Baldwin: I intend to make a few observations to back up what my hon. friend from Newfoundland has had to say, but before I do so I want to put a proposition before the committee, if this committee is capable of being propositioned. It may well be that before six o'clock arrives we can dispose of the resolution and then, by agreement if necessary, dispose of second reading and get into committee in order that the hon. member who has just spoken, and others, may be able to ask questions on the individual clauses. I am putting this forward as a suggestion. Possibly hon. members might give it some thought.

I support in every respect what hon. members from the province of Newfoundland have said. I come from a country where the railroads have been essential. It is through the construction of the railroads that the breath of life was injected into a new land. The tapestry of our country was brought together by the threads of the narrow bands of steel which came from Edmonton into the north. But within the last year and a half an application had been made to close the rail passenger service on about 500 miles of our system. So I appreciate the difficulties encountered by my hon. friends.

I might add that this service has not been operated by the C.N.R. alone; it is a joint operation between the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. They are lying down in the same bed, and I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will think that it is not to the advantage of the C.N.R. to do so—that the C.N.R. will not rise as pure as it was before it lay down with the C.P.R.

I first went into my part of the country almost 40 years ago, and what hon. members from Newfoundland have said about the quality of the railway there reminds me of the experiences we had. I remember taking a trip almost 40 years ago—getting up after the train had left Edmonton and looking out from the back of the train. As I did so, I saw the track and the ties spring upward as they were released from the weight of the train. So much for the type of construction. I remember, too, that when the waters of the Lesser Slave lake were in flood they had to tie the track to the telegraph poles to prevent its floating away.

I remember the type of construction, the grades, the curves. There is an interesting story told about those days. At one time members of the railway unions operating in the north were intent to secure positions on the railway going into Fort McMurray. Positions on this line were sought almost as eagerly as was the job of toll operator on the Jacques Cartier bridge some years ago. The reason was that the grades were of such a nature that approaching these curves in the wilderness it was possible for the engineer to get out, lay a trap line across the neck of the curves and meet the train coming out the other side. Then on the return journey the fireman would get off, pick up the pelts caught in the traps and rejoin the train. It meant a very lucrative job, so much so that some of the running trades did not need the pensions about which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been talking.

I wish to support in every way I can the very reasonable, logical and impassioned pleas made by the hon. members from Newfoundland who, in an honest and impartial way, outlined the conditions which prevail in that province, and the great need to have the railway service sustained. If they speak as eloquently to the committee which will be examining both the estimates and the C.N.R. officials, I am sure and hope the government will give effect to their request that this service be maintained. I am sure I speak on behalf of all members in this party in assuring unanimous support to the Newfoundland members in their reasonable plea that this particular railway passenger service be sustained until a fair opportunity has been given for a try-out.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee have raised a number of very important matters linked with the transportation policy of the country. Coming from a part of Canada which is often considered somewhat remote I can understand the concern expressed by some members with respect to changes in operations of our railway system. Concern about such changes has been expressed in my area in the past. On a number of occasions I myself have expressed concern in this chamber about some of the freight rate policies of our railways.

I am glad to echo the words of the government house leader when he pointed out that further opportunities will be available to continue this discussion on the issues that have been raised in perhaps a more focussed and meaningful way, particularly the discussion with respect to the abandonment or elimination of passenger service in Newfoundland. I refer to the reference that will be made to the transportation committee of the annual report of the C.N.R., or something analogous to that. I also refer to the reference already made by the house of the estimates of the transportation commission to this standing committee, and I refer also to the opportunity that will be made available to hon. members when the estimates of the Department of Transport will be before us in committee of the whole.

While there has been some latitude in today's discussion, actually we have been looking at a resolution designed to permit the house to give first reading to a bill similar to other bills of the same nature introduced in preceding years, to give authorization to the government to guarantee certain obligations of the Canadian National Railway and Air Canada and to authorize them to carry out certain types of capital expenditures, and so on.

Some questions have been raised relating more strictly to the terms of the resolution itself. Making use of the offer made by the house leader of the official opposition I suggest that we might pass this resolution, so that we can move on to first and second reading of the bill based on it. Thus, when we get into committee of the whole on that bill, we will be able to examine its clauses in detail, and I shall attempt to the best of my ability to deal with these questions raised with reference to the resolution and the bill.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gleave: I am sorry to bore the people opposite, but then you know I too am sometimes bored by them. One of the members from Newfoundland has asked what about western Canada. The member from British Columbia who spoke gave some indication of what is happening in western Canada. A similar pattern of curtailment of service is evident on the prairies.

Agents are being removed from stations, and the result is poorer service. We are faced with proposed rail line abandonments. In my constituency one concerns a railroad which runs 70 miles north from Biggar to the town of North Battleford. Another concerns a line running about the same distance from east to west along the North Saskatchewan river. If these abandonment plans are carried out, that whole triangle will eventually be left without rail transportation.

Farmers will have to haul their produce anywhere from 30 to 35 or 40 miles. One may say that might not be any great hardship on them, but it means that municipal roads will have to be built and maintained to a standard that can stand the movement of heavy duty trucks. Ordinarily municipal roads can stand the movement of comparatively light farm trucks, but when one thinks in terms of trucks carrying upwards of 20 tons, then better road beds will have to be built. This means that local residents who pay the property taxes will have to bear the cost of building the extra roads.

When we argue against the abandonment of rail lines we are told that it is not economic to maintain the rail service. In the name of plain common sense is it good economy to abandon a railroad which can move bulk produce out of an area, and be forced to build roads to a standard that will move the same bulk produce? Yet this is the kind of economics which it is suggested we should accept in a great area of western Canada.

A question was raised in the house more than a couple of weeks ago about the managers of a potash plant in east central Saskatchewan who want to hire a fleet of trucks to move potash, a bulk product, south a distance of 200 miles across the United States border to a point where United States trains would start to haul it. How absurd can we get, as a country, when these sorts of things are proposed? Some of us talked to people at the potash company and they informed us that the rail freight on potash is $9 a ton. I have no way of knowing whether or not this is profitable to the railroads, but I suspect it is profitable because this is the rate they have set for the potash companies. The railroads move potash out of Saskatchewan to tidewater on the west coast, or alternatively a great deal of it goes south into the United States which is a large customer for Canadian potash. So, we have the situation where a main potash producer, one of the first to get into production in western Canada, is now proposing to move a bulk product like that by truck. Therefore I believe we should seriously consider not only the balance sheet but also the matter of how well we are serving the industries and the people who live in this region. After all, this is the reason the railroads were built. They were built to serve Canada as a nation, and of course to make a profit for those who invested their money in the railroads. Surely these two reasons still exist. I do not believe that the need to make money has become the only end we should keep in mind.

Surely the type of service that was needed at the beginning to make us effective and competitive in the markets of the world is as important now as it was then. In the beginning, at least in western Canada, the whole basic design was to maintain an east-west flow of traffic. In fact in the original plans for the prairies there was a definite decision that we would not allow the building of any more north-south lines leading into the United States, but rather that the traffic would be east-west to move manufactured goods into western Canada and to move out whatever was produced there. In other words the considerations were profit, a sound economy, service to the people and a service for the industries and the things the people produced. I believe we should still have these things in mind if we are to have a viable economy, and if the railroads are to serve the people.

I do not intend to talk about passenger service, that has been well covered. I do want to make a plea, however, for a rational transportation system that will move the potash, the grain and the other things we produce efficiently and cheaply to where they are to be sold.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale (for Mr. Benson) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-124, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1968, to the 30th day of June, 1969, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and by Air Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Richard in the chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): House in committee of the whole on clause 2.

On clause 2—Définitions.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, you surprised me by calling clause 2. I suppose that is correct. I had intended earlier this afternoon to speak along the lines followed by other hon. members, but when I saw the mood of the house and an indication that we would make progress I thought I would hold back my remarks until we reached the committee stage.

Of course, this is a routine financing bill. It is similar to those of other years, although there certainly is a great deal of new money being requested and some new ideas contained in it. I believe we should have some indication concerning the position of Air Canada. I am not necessarily speaking about the new appointments that may be made. I realize it probably would be proper to do so, but I do not believe this is the moment to go into that. At this stage I should like to ask what is happening in respect of the particular survey that was conducted into the possibility of Air Canada being made a public company. Also I would be interested to hear what the investment people who were consulted had to say about this possibility.

Without becoming involved in all the problems of Air Canada, I think I am in order in asking just what may be expected in so far as Air Canada is concerned. I realize the hon. member for Oxford had something to say about this this afternoon, and I believe he said it very well. I would like to have some indication of what can be expected so far as the financing of Air Canada is concerned, and whether it is to go public. What did the investment people who were consulted have to say about this; were they optimistic? I have been a member of the committee on transport and communications for a number of years. I am also one of those who believe that Air Canada should be given an opportunity to stand on its own two feet and be a separate entity, and that it should not be attached to the C.N.R. in the way it is, in respect of financial matters I would be grateful for a reply in this regard.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, all I can say in this regard is that if the bill is adopted by the house, in addition to authority for Air Canada to borrow $75 million from the C.N.R., Air Canada will have authority either to go to the market for an amount up to $130 million or borrow this amount indirectly from Her Majesty. This bill will give that option to Air Canada. I am not in a position, however, to say exactly how and to what extent this will be used.

Canadian National Railways

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, since I understand that the authority that is being given to Air Canada to borrow money in the market is new, can the parliamentary secretary say whether there is any relationship between this new authority and the study that is being made by a special committee under the chairmanship of the minister without portfolio.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position to say that. This bill merely extends the flexibility of Air Canada with respect to its financing. I am informed that if any change is to be made in the status of Air Canada, it must be done through parliament with parliamentary approval.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, could we be told whether this is the precursor of a change?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I understand the interest of the hon. member in this question but I am afraid I cannot assist him by saying that, or anything further than I have said.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I realize the limitation that may face the hon. member because he is only a parliamentary secretary; but could we receive an assurance about this at some point, even if it is on third reading, by a minister? It seems to me it is not without reason that I ask for this kind of assurance.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I will be happy to look into the possibility as to what, if anything, can be done with regard to the hon. member's request. At the moment I can only repeat what I have said, that the changes in the ownership status of Air Canada would require, I am informed, parliamentary approval, and that the authorization being asked for in this bill is with respect to a broader and more flexible means of financing for Air Canada—I may add, more flexible financing for Air Canada in the corporate structure which it now has.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): The hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, my question is not related to this subject, so if another hon. member has a question on the subject perhaps he should be given the floor.

[Mr. Gray.]

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I should like to pose a question to the parliamentary secretary. Could he elaborate on the $75 million required by Air Canada, and the use that will be made of it? It is my understanding that Air Canada is today rather frustrated because of the way the 1966 Pickersgill aviation policy has worked out internationally. I believe the company feels it has been frozen out of all international growth and it has been planning a major push to try to convince Ottawa that it must change the rules in order to allow it to fly into the Middle East, Africa, India, the coast of South America to Rio, and in due course around the world.

This is certainly desirable, and I am somewhat concerned that to date the government has not been able to appoint a president of this organization. This of course has resulted in corporate morale tumbling, if you will, to perhaps the lowest level within the corporation. This is not desirable in an organization of that size. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary can elaborate just a little more on the future of Air Canada.

I agree with the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster that Air Canada should stand on its own two feet. There is no reason, in my view, why it could not be a separate corporate entity and in this way make an even greater contribution to development in this country. But as long as we have this impasse wherein the Minister without Portfolio has been asked by the Prime Minister to determine whether there can be a corporate growth plan in which Canadian Pacific Airlines and Air Canada can be amalgamated, we are bound to continue having these frustrations within the management of Air Canada. I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary could throw a little more light on this subject and give us a better idea of exactly what is happening in this very important section of our transportation industry.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member first of all asked what use will be made of the $75 million. Basically, it is for capital expenditure to supplement the self-generated funds arising out of the operations of the corporation. I believe the capital budget of Air Canada has been tabled in the house in the form of an order in council and is therefore publicly available. I would also say that the request in the bill to parliament to authorize this type of capital expenditure, and so on, should not, I think, really create any concern one way or another. While one cannot say that this request will not preclude the possibility of further change, the bill is not making any change in the capital structure, form of ownership or management of Air Canada.

Basically, the bill is for the purpose of providing funds for capital expenditures, and if necessary for current operating expenditures of Air Canada in its present form, so that it may carry on what most people consider to be a very effective job in the interests of Canada.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, would the parliamentary secretary be good enough to indicate to the committee whether the authority we will be approving has in way been used to date? In other words, have moneys been raised on the private market through the issue of debentures, securities or whatever other instruments Air Canada might choose?

Mr. Gray: I am informed that Air Canada has not before this had recourse to the private market. It has not had the authority to do so. It will have that authority only if the bill obtains the approval of the house.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that the parliamentary secretary has said he cannot give us a complete answer as to what is planned for Air Canada with regard to it becoming public. However, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary can give us any information—I notice that the President of the Treasury Board is present—as to whether any studies which have been held into this question, about which we are all concerned, show optimism in so far as concerns Air Canada being able to go its own way as a separate entity. Is it not a fact that some of the investment experts who have been involved in this question have said pointedly, in a pessimistic way, that there would have to be a considerable time lapse before the company would be in a position to put forward a complete balance sheet and the like?

I ask this question without going into the matter of the bond market in Canada having a problem at the present time, for reasons that will be unfolded next week. Can any of the ministers present, or the parliamentary secretary, tell us what in general terms has been the thinking about Air Canada going its own, separate way?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member will appreciate that this is a rather complicated question with a great deal of importance given to value judgments. A number of opinions have been expressed, not all unanimously. Indeed, had the view been simple and unanimous, the answer would have been revealed a considerable time ago. It is because there is a lack of unanimity and the problem is a difficult one to resolve satisfactorily that the necessary time is having to be taken to make sure we get the right answer.

I do not think it would be helpful if I were at this juncture to try to, in effect, produce a graph of temperature changes of these studies. I hope the hon. member will be patient and wait until the final assessment is made.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for giving us at least that information. I ask the minister whether he can say that the general intention is to carry forward with a plan of bringing Air Canada into a fully competitive position with Canadian Pacific Airlines, and allowing it to have some sort of public image. While the details are difficult and the time may not be appropriate, certainly there is some agreement that we should proceed in an attempt to modernize Air Canada and give this company an even break. We should assist the officers of this corporation, regardless of who becomes president, who want to stand on their own feet and look to the future in a proper way. Perhaps this can be done by adopting an appropriate accounting and research system. I do not mean to imply that there is not a proper accounting system, but I am sure the minister will admit that there has been a particular type of operation.

If the minister made such a statement or assurance this might place those of us who have fought for many years to see that Air Canada gets an even break in a good frame of mind. This is particularly important in view of the inroads made by Canadian Pacific into the air business in Canada. Will the minister say that he personally favours Air Canada going public, or does he share the general feeling that this should be attained at some time in the near future?

Mr. Drury: The hon. member has very considerable knowledge of the problems facing Air Canada. In the space of a couple of minutes he has reorganized this corporation from top to bottom and has asked me whether I agree with all the steps of his reorganization. I can only say that his statement is a little too comprehensive for me to agree with completely. I would hesitate to express a personal view now as to whether Air Canada should, to use his terms, go public. If a view was given it might be an uninformed one. The purpose of the studies now being made is to obtain an informed opinion. I am sure the hon. member would not want me to put forward something off the top of my head. This would serve no useful purpose other than to communicate my prejudices.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I hope my question will be in order. It has relation to a question I placed on the order paper and an answer which was given on October 30, to be found at page 2201 of Hansard. My question was:

> What was the cost to Canadian National Railways for providing rail passenger service in Newfoundland for each year from 1949 to 1967 inclusive?

I will not read the minister's answer in its entirety, but in essence he refused to answer the question. The company took protection from the Railway Act, section 314 (3). I must confess that I have not read that, but I find it difficult to understand why this information should not be made available to members of the house. The government pulled one statistic for one year only, 1966, and the minister referred to that in his answer. He referred to an operating deficit of $918,000. My question is, why is this information not available to members of parliament.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I can understand how this information is considered to be of some importance by the hon. gentleman. Let me suggest that the most effective vehicle for him to pursue this matter is the standing committee on transport and communications, which will take up the annual report of the C.N.R. The senior officials of the C.N.R. are customarily present at that time. I am sure this is a very effective way of raising these matters. At that time the hon. member will be in a very good position, I hope, to get satisfaction.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, I understand that this financial measure in respect of Air Canada is an interim one. It is not a proposal to re-capitalize the corporation or anything like that. If the government decides that Air Canada should go public at some time in the future, will we have an opportunity to look at this matter again?

Mr. Gray: Yes, that is certainly correct. This bill does not involve anything in the way of recapitalization. It is designed to permit something that is done annually; that is to say, the authorization of steps required to provide Air Canada with the capital funds and if necessary amounts for operating deficits. I believe these have not been necessary recently.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): There has been some discussion in the house in respect of the Roberts Bank situation, having regard to Canadian and United States transportation in Canada. Some suggestions have been made as to whether we should haul potash in Canada by Canadian or United States railroad companies. There has also been a great deal of coverage in the press about container shipping. Does the government have an over-all transportation policy which might cover this matter? Does it have any one plan or idea, or does it intend to deal with each issue at it arises?

Mr. Gray: The hon. member has raised a very important topic. May I suggest that this bill is not designed to afford an opportunity for general discussion on transportation policy. If I were in the hon. member's position I would take advantage of the opportunity provided by a debate on the estimates of the Department of Transport. This will take place in this house in the committee of the whole and they will be piloted by the Minister of Transport. The hon. member will have the opportunity then to go into this matter in detail. Perhaps he will want to pursue this topic when the estimates of the transport Commission are referred to the standing committee, or when the committee is considering the annual report of the C.N.R.

While I am not in any way trying to imply that the point raised by the hon. member is not important—because it is—at the moment we are looking at something more limited in respect of the transportation question, and that is the financing of the operations of the C.N.R. by the Canadian government.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I accept the minister's statement. I should like to raise another matter dealt with in the following question placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Moose Jaw:

1. Who holds the existing C.N.R. bonds and where are they located?

This is question No. 542 on the order paper.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, let me refer the hon. member to the annual report of the Canadian National Railways for 1967. He will see there a rather detailed table under the heading "Long term debt". This gives the various issues of bonds, their rates, maturity, currency in which they are payable, the amount outstanding, transactions in the year 1967 and the amount outstanding at December 31, 1967. I do not know whether he really want me to put all this detail on record or prefers to look at it himself, together with the hon. member who raised the question. In any event, the detail as to who holds these bonds is very difficult to give specifically, since they are so widely held. I think the detail which would be responsive to the question asked can be found at page 34 of this annual report.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman I have a very simple question for the parliamentary secretary in relation to securities that may well be issued in respect of Air Canada and the C.N.R. Will he give an undertaking respectively, individually or collectively that the same degree of accuracy would prevail in a prospectus about securities sold as in connection with government issues sold earlier this year.

Mr. Drury: I think I can give the assurance that the usual high degree of accuracy in prospectuses will obtain.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the parliamentary secretary knows of our interest in this matter of the annual report. Can he indicate more precisely whether he is referring to the 1967 annual report being referred to the committee? Would he indicate when it will be referred, because the committee on transport and communications at the present moment has nothing referred to it. That committee would like to proceed with this matter as soon as possible.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If the hon. member will look at today's order paper commencing at page 8, he will find there a list of the referrals to the various committees. In particular, on page 9, there is a reference to the fact that the estimates of the transport commission have been referred to the standing committee on transport and communications. I point out, as I pointed out a few minutes ago, that it would have been the government's intention to have referred the estimates of the Department of Transport to the standing committee on transport and communications. However we did not do so, at the request of the opposition, who asked that these estimates be left in the house.

As to the explicit time and which of the annual reports, the past one or the one to come forward in the immediate future, will be referred to the standing committee, I can perhaps only say that this can be and will be a matter for discussion with the house leaders of the other groups. But I can say that I have given my undertaking a reference will be made or, if hon. members prefer, perhaps the estimates could be the vehicle to carry such discussion.

Mr. McGrath: May I just say, Mr. Chairman, that I stand corrected by the house leader, although I am half correct in assuming that to date nothing has been sent to the committee. Although I am not a member of the committee, I have been watching it carefully. I should like to say that, in so far as the specific area in which I am interested is concerned, the abandonment of the rail passenger service in Newfoundland, it is said that this is scheduled to take place on April 1 of next year. Conceivably, unless we get some specific time allotted for an examination of the Canadian National on this matter, we could be talking about referring the annual report to the committee some time next summer. This is the reason I am specifically interested in the time, because the matter is an urgent one so far as we are concerned.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In answer to the hon. gentleman, I may say that the committee has met and set dates by arrangement with the co-ordinating committee. I would think the proper course would be for the committee to deal with the present order of reference, that is the revised estimates 1968-69. After that time, which will certainly be some considerable time before April next, the appropriate order of reference could be worked out with hon. gentlemen opposite. Then, as I have said, the senior officials of the company could appear and be examined.

Mr. Lundrigan: I have a very simple question. Has the Canadian National, to the knowledge of the parliamentary secretary, abandoned any rail passenger branch lines in Canada this year? This is a beginning question.

Mr. Gray: Perhaps the hon. member would pose his other question while I inform myself.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps I could add to my previous answer at this point. I understand that the estimates of the Canadian Transport Commission have been referred to the standing committee, and of course they will have to be dealt with before the end of this part of the session. At that time of course the chairman and other individuals on the commission will be appearing before the standing committee. While I do not know the Transport Act too well, I think it would then be germane to raise all aspects of this rail line abandonment question.

Mr. Bell: There is some doubt in my mind as to a previous answer given by the parliamentary secretary. Am I right in understanding the parliamentary secretary to say that if there are new plans for Air Canada in the ways we have been talking about, then new legislation would come before parliament? However, in so far as the bill with which we are now dealing is concerned, there are some new sections as compared with the bill in other years.

Mr. Gray: It is, I suggest, a matter of interpretation whether or not you consider the changes in the bill in respect of Air Canada, considerable or new, as the hon. member has said. It is my understanding of the bill that no changes whatever will arise out of it with regard to the corporate structure, management and so on, that Air Canada basically has. The bill enables Air Canada, in its present structure, without prejudice to what, if anything, may come forward in the future, to go directly to the market or borrow directly from Her Majesty in the right of Canada for its financing needs. I hope I have clarified the matter sufficiently for my hon. friend.

Mr. Bell: As I understand it, every year we have had what we have called the Canadian National financing bill. I admit that in other years it has gone through in a routine way. I recall one or two occasions when the opportunity was taken to bring forward current matters, such as has been done today and done very well by hon. members from Newfoundland. I merely want to be assured that this bill is, in every respect, the same bill as the one which has been brought forward in other years for this financing. If it is not, I want to know what sections are different, what extra authority is being requested. It is quite simple.

If the bill is the same as last year, then I am happy and I will sit down. I have made my point about my hopes for the future, and the new plans that may be made for Air Canada. I merely want to know if the bill is even slightly different from previous years, and if the parliamentary secretary will tell me the clauses that are different and why they are different.

Mr. Gray: I would say it is exactly the same, Mr. Chairman, as in preceding years, except that there are two changes to which I alluded in my remarks at the resolution stage. First, the bill would authorize Air Canada to go either directly to the market or to borrow directly from Her Majesty a sum up to $130 million. Second, it provides for a blanket authorization to the Canadian National to spend for the construction of branch lines up to $16 million. If the hon. member wants the exact clauses, perhaps we could wait until we come to them in our consideration and I would be happy to accommodate him.

Mr. Bell: In other words, the parliamentary secretary confirms the fact that there is in this bill a step toward some independence for Air Canada, at least in so far as financing is concerned. However, if a giant new move for a separate Air Canada were to take place, then new legislation would be forthcoming.

Mr. Gray: It is my understanding that if the changes contemplated in the remarks of the hon. member were to be decided upon, new legislation would be necessary. I am not sure whether I am in a position to confirm or indeed comment upon a step to be taken. It is a matter of interpretation. I am not saying I agree or disagree with the interpretation.

Mr. Bell: Has the parliamentary secretary not said that this year Air Canada can go separately to the money market, which as I understand it they have not been able to do?

Mr. Gray: Perhaps I could just deal with the point made by the hon. member. This authorization would only be until June 30, 1969 and would cover a total of $130 million. So, I perhaps could say in the terms suggested by the hon. member, that there is a broadening of the way Air Canada can operate, since it can now go directly to the money market.

Mr. Lundrigan: The question I asked the parliamentary secretary was, in effect, whether any rail passenger lines have been abandoned. Perhaps the question would be much easier to answer if I had asked whether any complete trans-provincial passenger lines have been abandoned in Canada?

Mr. Gray: The information I have available to me, Mr. Chairman, is that there has not been such an abandonment. Perhaps my hon. friend would really know more about this than I would, directly, being from the province concerned. Applications have been made with respect to abandonment, but it is my understanding of the law under which the transport commission operates that until the commission disposes of an application the rail line continues to operate.

Mr. Lundrigan: Obviously the answer is that there has been no abandonment of any trans-provincial rail line in Canada. My next question is, does the Canadian National, the knowledge of the parliamentary secretary, plan to abandon any complete trans-provincial passenger rail line?

Mr. Gray: Not so far as I have knowledge of the matter. Again I suggest the hon. member might want to place this question directly to the officials of the Canadian National when they are before the transport committee, when that committee considers the annual report of the company.

Mr. O'Connell: I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary the size of the equity presumably held by Canadian National in Air Canada? How much common stock is owned by the government? I have a second and related question: What is the nature of the $75 million invested in Air Canada? Is it in the nature of bonds or debentures or is it, in fact, in additional common stock?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, to deal with the second part of the question first, I believe the nature of the investment of the $75 million is in the form of bonds and debentures. In answer to the first part of the hon. member's question, a perusal of the annual report shows that the equity of shareholders in Air Canada is in the amount of $5 million and is completely held, I am informed, by the C.N.R.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether he is prepared to make a statement to the house at some time, perhaps now, as to the cost of operating rail passenger services in the various provinces of Canada. We are already aware in a general way of the $35 million odd deficit of the C.N.R. on its rail passenger services, and it would be interesting to find out what is the situation across the nation, with a breakdown province by province.

We have already seen a very good argument presented by the transportation commission for the abandonment of one rail passenger service in Canada. We are anxious to find out what it costs the Canadian people in the various provinces so that we have some understanding of the decisions being taken in this regard.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I regret I am not in a position to give such an undertaking and I strongly recommend to the hon. member that he make use of the several other means of parliamentary inquiry, such as the standing committee, which we have already discussed earlier in these proceedings.

Mr. Lundrigan: Could the parliamentary secretary through his officials give some indication of the revenue of the C.N.R. in the matter of passenger service this year? Last year, it appears from the little document of which we all have a copy, general revenue was up by $16.4 million. There is an indication throughout the annual report of the C.N.R. for 1967 that the reason for this increase was largely centennial year. We are not able to get statistics, but it is our feeling as a result of many conversations had with railway personnel in particular parts of Canada that there has been a great increase this year in rail passenger travel.

The auditor's report and the annual report both admit that one of the major reasons for the increased revenue was promotion by the C.N. of improved services in all parts of the country. Consequently one would think that if this policy is adhered to across the whole dominion an increase in revenue in every part of Canada could be anticipated. Could we have some reaction as to revenue from rail passenger services for the current year?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I understand it will not be possible to make such information available until it is provided to the government in the annual report which will be presented by the C.N.R. However, it may well be that when the senior officials of the C.N.R. appear before the committee the hon. member could ask them whether they could give him some indication as to what is likely to be in their annual report.

Mr. Lundrigan: One last question, Mr. Chairman. We are a little disappointed that the personnel is not available to assist us in answering our questions today, but we have to compliment the parliamentary secretary for his very brave efforts in trying to deal with these questions.

I should like to quote a statement that appears at page 6 of the annual report of the C.N.R. for 1967:

> If the commission decides that an uneconomic passenger service or branch line should be maintained in the public interest, the railways will be compensated, in whole or in part, for losses in respect of each specific operation.

Is this Canadian National policy, and is it reflected in the decisions of Canadian National Railways throughout Canada?

Mr. Gray: I might inform my hon. friend that this statement appears to be a summary of the provisions of a law that was passed by this parliament, the National Transportation Act. Therefore it would be the obligation of the government to carry out the provisions of the act in the terms set forth in the C.N.R. annual report from which the hon. member quoted. The quotation is a summary, by whoever drafted the report, of the provisions in the National Transportation Act that was passed by this parliament.

Mr. Lundrigan: Would my hon. friend agree that the government of Canada ought to take issue with decisions which have been reached by the Canadian Transportation Commission in violation of this particular principle?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I think it is the obligation of the government of Canada to carry out the responsibilities imposed upon it by this parliament under the terms of the National Transportation Act. I am confident that this has been, and will continue to be, the obligation of the government. One must recall the C.N.R. is not a department of government but a separate entity, a crown corporation with all that that means with respect to method of operation. Perhaps we can continue this further when the matter is next before the house.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

[Mr. Gray.]

On clause 7—Loans to Air Canada out of C.R.F.

Mr. Bell: May I just confirm, Mr. Chairman, that subclause (3) of this clause is new?

Mr. Gray: That is right.

Mr. Forrestall: I was wondering what the necessity was for making this particular clause of the financing bill operative from January 1, 1968 inasmuch as we are now into November of 1968, some ten months later. Has Air Canada taken steps during the current year, in anticipation of this authority, to raise money for any particular purposes. I had in the back of my mind, for example, money required for expansion of operation in the Caribbean, or something like that.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I am informed that there has certainly been no borrowing by the C.N.R. up to the present time under this type of provision.

Mr. Forrestall: Then what is the explanation for dating the bill January 1, 1968, or is this normal practice? We are now in November 1968.

Mr. Gray: I gather, Mr. Chairman, that this is a relatively normal way to draft such a measure. At the time the bill was being drafted I gather there was no clear indication when this type of authority might need to be used.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 8 to 14 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 15—Auditors.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On this clause, Mr. Chairman, I simply ask: Why not have the Auditor General of Canada do this work?

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the Canadian National Railways Act states that the C.N.R. auditor shall be an independent auditor appointed by parliament. Section 38(1) of the Canadian National Railways Act reads as follows:

> A continuous audit of the accounts of National Railways shall be made by independent auditors appointed annually by Parliament who shall annually report to Parliament in respect of their audit.

I think I summarized the matter correctly.

Mr. Baldwin: Is the firm auditing these books the firm that audited the books of the Company of Young Canadians?

Clause agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Baldwin: At the next sitting of the house.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING NIGERIA AND DISCUSSIONS WITH U THANT

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to report on certain initiatives taken within the last few days by the Canadian government in the international field.

[English]

Some two weeks ago discussions commenced in my office and in the Department of External Affairs about the desirability of sending to Lagos a personal representative of the Prime Minister of Canada for the purpose of furthering Canadian assistance efforts to that country. As a result of the decision reached in those discussions I instructed Mr. Ivan Head, my legislative assistant, to travel to Nigeria to speak on my behalf to Major General Yakubu Gowon, the head of the Nigerian federal military government.

Mr. Head left Canada on Saturday, October 26. He met with General Gowon in Lagos on Tuesday of last week. They talked at some length with respect to the unfortunate hostilities now raging in Nigeria. On my behalf Mr. Head expressed to General Gowon the deep sympathy of all Canadians for the people's suffering as a result of the civil war. These sentiments were understood and welcomed by General Gowon. Discussed as well was the means by which the desire of Canadians to assist in the alleviation of that suffering could be made more effective.

As an immediate result of the Lagos talks, I am happy to be able to report the following. First, General Gowon has agreed to assist in every way possible and to guarantee the safety of daylight Red Cross flights into Uli airstrip from either or both of Lagos and Fernando Po. This means that the daily volume of relief supplies which could be carried into the rebel area could be multiplied several fold. This statement by General Gowon is, I suggest, both significant and laudatory. It illustrates clearly the sincerity of the federal military government in its declarations of good faith toward the Ibo peoples.

General Gowon has placed a single condition on this guarantee, one which I regard and which I am sure all Canadians will regard as eminently reasonable. It is that Colonel Ojukwu will undertake not to employ the Uli airstrip during daylight hours for arms flights. In this regard it should be borne in mind that such an undertaking would in no respect reduce the present level of arms shipments to the rebels. Uli airstrip is not now being used for any purpose during daylight hours. Under the agreement now reached it would be used, but only for civilian relief purposes.

I therefore now address a public and urgent appeal to Colonel Ojukwu to seize this opportunity to open up his airport to daylight relief flights and so permit the Red Cross to increase substantially food shipments to those civilians in the rebel held areas needing help.

A second point emerging from the Lagos talks was the useful information exchanged with respect to the most effective form of assistance which Canada might offer to Nigeria respecting distribution of relief supplies in federal territory. These discussions are continuing at an official level and I hope to be able to make a further announcement in this respect at an early date.

Third, the talks proved useful as an occasion for discussing Canada's participation in the international observer team. General Gowon repeated his assurances that the team will continue to enjoy freedom of movement and access.

I should like to report as well, Mr. Speaker, that on Saturday afternoon I met in New York with His Excellency U Thant, the Secretary General of the United Nations. We employed that opportunity to exchange views on a number of issues of interest to Canada and to the United Nations. This was the second occasion since assuming the office of Prime Minister that I have engaged in lengthy and useful talks with the Secretary General, the first being in Edmonton in May. We have agreed to continue this practice from time to time.

I draw these recent activities to the attention of the house, Mr. Speaker, as an indication of the continuing initiatives of the government to ensure that Canadian foreign policies are both effective and appropriate.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the Prime Minister will be received with pleasure, I am sure, by all those who have felt that the government was somewhat slow in initiating an imaginative policy in so far as the humanitarian and political aspects of the Nigeria-Biafra war are concerned. As one who has been following some of the concepts of the Prime Minister's office about communications and the need to improve them, I am interested to see how this example of public attitude to foreign affairs has somewhat surprised the Prime Minister and his government in that they have found they cannot turn the public on and off like a tap. This they tried to do in the case of Nigeria and Biafra.

Certainly I welcome the initiative that the government has at least taken in sending one of its emissary, a senior person in the Prime Minister's office, to Lagos. I hope the gentleman concerned took the opportunity to make his appeal while he was in West Africa, not only to General Gowon but also to Colonel Ojukwu. Perhaps this would have avoided the necessity of the appeal of the Prime Minister. I think this very satisfactory, since the observer team, which has been under some rather restrictive prohibitions, about which it commented in its report; and has been guaranteed freedom of movement and access by the government of Nigeria. It will be a useful change if the observer team is enlarged and is also able to visit Biafra.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am sure every member of this house who represents the Canadian people is happy to see that the deep concern of the Canadian public in relation to the situation in Biafra is reflected in the statement the Prime Minister has made. It was quite a long statement covering a number of complex matters.

I would simply welcome the proposal that daylight flights are to be made, perhaps thereby enabling the delivery of needed food and medical supplies to be doubled.

However, Mr. Speaker, I note once again that the Prime Minister referred to Lagos and Fernando Po. May I remind the Prime Minister that there is another highly successful operation going on, one that has been going on for several months, from Sao Tomé. I appreciate there is difficulty here unless the operation is also carried out under the International Red Cross. If instead of ignoring that operation the government of Canada were to do its best to see that the Red Cross and the churches entered into an arrangement satisfactory to the Nigerian government for the inspection of flights from Sao Tomé, then I suggest supplies would not only be doubled but quadrupled, or perhaps even better.

I am glad the question of the observer team was taken up but I did not notice in the Prime Minister's statement any sort of undertaking by the Nigerian government that they would change the terms of reference. I remind the Prime Minister that it was made absolutely clear in the report of the observers that the future efficacy of the operation depended upon there being some change in the terms of reference.

I also suggest that their future efficacy depends on their having an opportunity to go into the Biafran occupied areas in order to hear complaints that may be made. This would make the observer team infinitely more useful than it is now.

I must say that I still regret in this statement, much though we welcome it, the complete absence of any reference to the overriding necessity of bringing about a cease fire and stopping the importation of arms by either side in the conflict. It seems to me this is something which in the interests of humanity and under the rules of international law cannot be disregarded by the international community. We shall continue to express our regrets until Canada takes the lead we think she could take in this respect.

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, allow me on behalf of the Ralliement Créditiste, to congratulate most sincerely the right hon. Prime Minister for his initiative in helping the people of Biafra, who seem to be threatened by inevitable suicide because the federal troops have tried to keep the province from obtaining its liberty.

We, on this side of the house, are always too pleased to support legislation or any government initiative to help a people in need. But, if poor legislation or an unacceptable project is introduced, we will be equally pleased to expose our views.

I congratulate you, Mr. Prime Minister, on that government initiative which will be appreciated by all the countries of the world. However, I am sorry that 34 days were needed to take the initiative—which I myself requested 34 days ago—especially if we take into account the fact that 6,000 people were dying every day and that the government could have avoided a great number of killings by acting sooner.

Mr. Prime Minister, your work is only starting, since this morning we read in the newspapers that 200 Nigerians had been killed. Furthermore, a press release from the Biafran army indicates that the battle was fierce, that an impressive number of soldiers were killed and that the Biafrans also seized hundreds of English-made rifles and a substantial quantity of ammunition.

If a country such as Great Britain, supported by Canada, on the one hand, can pretend to render service to these people while, on the other hand, it ships arms, I say that this is mass-killing, and therefore, Mr. Prime Minister, you are fully responsible for rescuing a province which wanted to protect its oil wells.

Mr. Speaker: Now that the honourable member has ended his remarks, I would remind him that they should normally be directed to the Chair.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

POSSIBLE CHANGE OF AIR CANADA TO PRIVATE COMPANY

Question No. 51—Mr. Fortin:

1. Have the federal government and/or Air Canada studied, or are they studying, or will they study the possibility of changing Air Canada into a private company or into a company with mixed ownership and, if so (a) what is the result of these studies (b) will these studies be submitted to Parliament?

2. Has the federal government given instructions concerning this problem to Air Canada and, if so, what was the nature of these instructions?

3. Will the directors of Air Canada appear before the Crown Corporation committees to explain their policy on this matter?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. The government is studying all possible options of corporate structure for Air Canada. This is a general study, however, and because of the broad policy issues involved will require considerable time to complete. No immediate policy change is contemplated and it is therefore premature to consider what action, if any, should result from the studies.

2. The federal government has not given any instructions to Air Canada concerning the question raised in Item 1.

3. As there is no new policy on this subject, it is not contemplated that the directors of Air Canada would appear before the crown corporations committee to discuss this matter.

APPOINTMENTS OF FORMER LIBERAL MEMBERS AND CANDIDATES

Question No. 57—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many Liberal Members of the last Parliament and Liberal Candidates in the last election have been appointed to positions in Government, Civil Service, or to Government Boards since 25th June?

2. What are the names of such persons, and to what positions were they respectively appointed?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1 and 2. Neither candidates for election to the House of Commons nor members of the house are required to declare a party affiliation. Consequently, there is no record under the administrative responsibility of the government of Canada from which an answer to this question can be drawn.

APPOINTMENTS OF FORMER MEMBERS AND CANDIDATES

Question No. 71—Mr. Coates:

1. How many former Members of Parliament, either retired or defeated in the general election of June 25, 1968, have been appointed to positions with the Government of Canada, what are the names of the individuals in question, to what positions were they appointed and in each instance what was the annual salary involved with each appointment?

2. How many individuals who were unsuccessful candidates in the general election of June 25, 1968, have been appointed to positions with the Government of Canada, what are the names of the individuals in question, to what positions were they appointed and in each instance what was the annual salary involved with each appointment?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The following information has been supplied to me: (a) Mr. James A. Byrne, member, immigration appeal board, $19,000. (b) Mr. Andrew Chatwood; executive assistant to the Minister of Defence Production; $15,000. (c) Mr. Joseph A. 2. See the reply provided today to question No. 155.

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS AND CANDIDATES

Question No. 155—Mr. Reid:

What are the names of all individuals who had been Members of Parliament or who were federal candidates in the elections of 1957, 1958, 1962 or 1963 and who were appointed to the Senate, the Bench, any federal government Board, Commission, Agency, Enquiry, Study or Advisory Group or to any Civil Service position or who were employed in any capacity by the Government of Canada, giving (a) the position to which each was appointed (b) the date of any such appointment and the duration of the appointment (c) the amount paid to each such individual in each year, for all purposes, including salary, expenses and allowances?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Since persons appointed to the Senate, the bench, federal boards, commissions, agencies, etc. are not required to declare whether or not they have ever been candidates in federal elections, there is no record under the administrative responsibility of the government of Canada from which an answer to this question can be drawn.

ORIGIN OF C.B.C. PROGRAMS

Question No. 178—Mr. McCleave:

1. Which programs to be shown on the national television network of the C.B.C. this fall and winter originate from: Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Ottawa, Halifax, Vancouver, St. John's and other centres?

2. Is consideration being given to the origination of more of such national programs from centres other than Toronto or Montreal and, if so, with what expected result?

[Mr. Forest.]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. The attached list reflects the prominence of Toronto as the English T.V. network headquarters and main network origination point. However, it must be taken into account that many program items not apparent from a listing of program titles are contributed by other centres. Also, many regionally produced programs are exchanged among regions for local scheduling on C.B.C. stations in non-network time periods.

2. Yes. The corporation is seeking ways to increase regional contributions to the network to effect an improvement in the flow and exchange of cultural and regional information and entertainment between the different parts of Canada.

C.N.R. STEVEDORE PAYROLL, NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.

Question No. 235—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys):

What was the annual payroll of Canadian National Railways at North Sydney, Nova Scotia, for stevedores and other employees at the Terminal Wharf in each of the years from 1960 to the present?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: Information for the years 1960 to 1964 is not readily available as the payroll register has been destroyed and to extract the figures from other sources would involve considerable time and expense. In addition, prior to 1967 employees at the terminal wharves of North Sydney and Mulgrave were paid on the same payroll. The following figures for the years indicated include employees at both North Sydney and Mulgrave: 1965, $3,955,113; 1966, $4,393,239; 1967, $4,878,353.

4. What was the total amount of imported corn stored in each of these facilities for the years 1966, 1967 and 1968 to date?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and the Department of Agriculture as follows:
1. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics does not maintain a list of names and addresses of companies or firms importing goods into Canada.

2. The total amount of corn imported into Canada in the following years was:

CYPRIOT SHIP "TAMACHUSTA"

Question No. 300—Mr. Dumont:

Did the Department of Transport allow the Cypriot ship, registered at Tamachusta and chartered by "Clarke Steamship", to sail between Montreal and Newfoundland and, if so, under what authority?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Under section 671 of the Canada Shipping Act a ship registered in Cyprus, being a British ship, may be used in the coasting trade of Canada except for voyages wholly within the great lakes and St. Lawrence river as far seaward as Anticosti island without any special permit being given.

MAIL SERVICE REDUCTION—LAY-OFFS AND PAYROLL REDUCTIONS

Question No. 313—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. As a result of the withdrawal of Saturday mail service on February 1, 1969, how many lay-offs are envisaged?

2. What reduction in payroll is expected?

3. Will new contracts be negotiated with rural carriers or will the contracts be reduced by one-sixth?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): 1. It is expected that relatively few lay-offs, if any, will be necessary. Positions becoming vacant through normal attrition and new positions being authorized by increased work load are not being filled at present, so that they can be used for those employees becoming redundant. These positions will permit rearrangement of staffs as of February 1, 1969. Furthermore, where necessary, maximum use will be made of the manpower centres for retraining and reassignment.

2. The net reduction in cost to the department will be about $13 million per annum.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. In all cases.

2. Fraser river: Federal government, 37½ per cent; Provincial government, 37½ per cent; Municipality or district through tax levy, 25 per cent. St. Clair river: Federal government, 50 per cent; Private owner, 50 per cent. Detroit river: Federal government, 100 per cent; St. Lawrence river: Federal government, 100 per cent.

3. All properties were privately owned.

TERRAPLANE TEST RESULTS

Question No. 577—Mr. Blouin:

1. What were the results of the testing of the Terraplane at Orleans, Ont. as referred to in a Department of Transport Press Release issued June 21, 1968?

2. Does the government intend to submit this vehicle to further tests in other regions of the country, especially where there are no roads?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. The results were inconclusive due to the development of several component defects which precluded testing the vehicle in northern Canada.

2. Not unless engineering modifications are undertaken by the manufacturer. The subject is, however, still under correspondence.

APPOINTMENTS OF FORMER CANDIDATES

Question No. 613—Mr. Muir (Lisgar):

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): See the reply made this day to question No. 155.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I would like to make representations to the hon. Secretary of State and ask that questions numbers 40, 41, 43 and 44 be answered as soon as possible. These questions were partly placed on the order paper during the last session and the Civil Service Commission could answer them more quickly.

[English]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Perhaps I could deal with that question. My information is that most of the material from the departments concerned is now at hand and I expect to be in a position to reply to Nos. 40 and 41 on Wednesday next.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PROPOSED TRANSFER TO PROVINCES OF FISCAL POINTS IN RELATION TO SHARED COST PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is a fact that his government has resurrected the proposal which was turned down by the provinces several years ago, to offer an additional 17 points of personal income tax to those provinces which would take over the hospital plan, the Canada assistance plan and the program of health care; and would the Prime Minister say whether this is the only proposal of substance, rather than of detail, which the government of Canada has made to the federal-provincial conference of finance ministers?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not want to comment in too great detail on these talks which are beginning today and which will continue tomorrow. The Minister of Finance will be here to reveal any part of the discussions on which there is agreement, or agreement to disclose; but in a general way I can say that the government of Canada has renewed, with slight modifications, the offers which were made in the fall of 1966.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Stanfield: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, arising out of the reported remarks of Prime Minister Bertrand this morning concerning the 2 per cent social development surcharge and the remarks of the provincial treasurer of Ontario concerning the futility of the federal-provincial conference as a result of the timing of the budget, will the Prime Minister say whether the 2 per cent surcharge in particular is subject to any review by the government?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, because we think it is erroneous on the part of the provinces to submit that this 2 per cent tax is linked specifically to medicare, as they do in their briefs. It is a general tax for social development purposes, and has been imposed to meet the escalation of costs in many areas of expenditure.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the Prime Minister advise the house whether this renewed offer of 17 points on the income tax bears the characteristics of the previous offer, that these would be subject to refunds from the provinces if the yields in this field of taxation were in excess of the costs of the programs for which they were being turned over to the provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the offer made in 1966 was perhaps slightly different from that which I understand the hon. member to be saying. It was 17 per cent as a transfer of fiscal points plus a supplementary to equalize total receipts, so it would cover the expenditures which are variable. Seventeen per cent did not mean the same thing for all provinces because of the differences in size and so on. It was 17 per cent plus a supplementary amount which was meant as an equalization amount.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the Prime Minister say whether his government is making specific proposals to the provinces, either at the finance minister' meeting or at the meeting of the minister of health, with regard to a ceiling or some other formula for the control of the shared cost programs? Will there be such specific proposals and, if so, will they be communicated to this house as they are presented to the provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: During the discussions there will arise certain suggestions on our part as to ways in which expenditures might be limited, but we are making them only by way of suggestions. As the Leader of the Opposition knows, the expenditures themselves are controlled by the provinces and we are not in a position to force them or to suggest that they do anything in particular that they do not want to do themselves. We are exploring with them certain ways in which savings might be achieved if they so desire.

Mr. Stanfield: The government of Canada is not proposing any specific ceiling for these expenditures to the provinces, nor any departure from the existing agreements except such new agreements as may be reached with the approval of the provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: Generally speaking that is correct, Mr. Speaker. We are not proposing any unilateral cessation of agreements which have been reached by both parties at the present time. We are suggesting that they either be phased out, if we have the right to phase them out, or that they be allowed to expire in certain cases and perhaps not renewed. We are taking the position that both parties together should look now for a decrease in expenditures before any renewal period or expiration period is reached.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the concern, particularly in Manitoba, which has been created by reports that the federal government would like to get out of medicare in 1972, can the Prime Minister assure the house and the country that as far as the federal government is concerned medicare is here to stay?

Mr. Trudeau: I think there is perhaps a misunderstanding on the part of the right hon. member. As he well knows—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Merci beaucoup.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to honour the hon. member.

[English]

As the hon. member should know—let me put it that way—the law is made for a period of five years, and after the five years it is the intention of the federal government to transfer tax points to the provinces so they can continue with the medicare program. In other words we, the federal government, are raising taxes now and giving the produce to the provinces. After five years when the program is well established we suggest that the provinces raise the taxes themselves, and the federal government will evacuate that tax room to an equivalent amount.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is it not clearly understood that any change at the end of the five year period would have to be by agreement between the federal government and the provinces, and not by unilateral action of the federal government?

Mr. Trudeau: My reading of the law—and perhaps we should not here be arguing the law—is that after five years, at the end of the scheme as it now exists whereby the federal government taxes for the provinces—it is a five year period in which the federal government will be helping the provinces meet the costs—there will be a straight transfer of the tax room.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps I should not have asked the question.

Mr. Fairweather: Is the just society of five years' duration?

Mr. Stanfield: Since the federal government is to vacate its responsibility for financing medicare at the end of five years, is it also the intention of the government of Canada to vacate the social insurance plan on its own if this is legally possible under existing agreements?

Mr. Trudeau: I am afraid the hon. member over there is showing his ignorance, but there is nothing new about that. The five years is not something I have invented today. It is something which has been set out in the law and which was discussed with the provinces at the time medicare was being set up. So there is nothing surprising about it.

On the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition, I might say in a general way that we indicated in 1966 and repeat now that it is our intention to get out of a lot of these areas of social services and let the provinces assume them. We will give them the tax room which goes along with these expenditures. We decided in 1966, and are following the policy now, to have all the provinces follow the precedent set with regard to the province of Quebec, whereby that province has much more tax room than the other provinces but also has much greater responsibility for the spending. This is nothing new. It was announced a full two years ago.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister not agree that this is new; was there not two years ago a proposal that the provinces might elect, whereas the Prime Minister is now indicating that the federal government will exercise its option to vacate these fields voluntarily and compel the provinces to assume full responsibility for carrying the costs of these programs, with the help of whatever points of taxation the federal government gives them?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the questions and answers are now developing into a debate. I wonder if we might go on to another subject.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I just ask one more supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not a fact that the Minister of Finance did say the other day that the federal government would not get out of medicare unilaterally?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is not acceptable. The hon. member is asking whether it is or is not a fact that a statement was made. The question seems to be argumentative.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the question in this manner, Mr. Speaker. Was the Minister of Finance stating government policy the other day when he said the government would not get out of medicare on a unilateral basis?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker; but he was stating government policy under the law. The hon. member should realize that the law says in five years we will get out of it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You will get out of more than that in five years.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, to follow the same line of thought, and since the Prime Minister says that, in five years, the federal government will be obliged by law to hand over to the provinces full jurisdiction in that field, can he tell us, since the joint programs—and this is truly a joint program, just as there are many others in the fields of hospitalization, social welfare, etc.—represent a double expenditure—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member ask his question?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Caouette: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am getting to it.

Since the joint programs result in double expenditures for the population, could the Prime Minister tell us whether the government intends withdrawing from these joint programs and grant financial equivalence to the provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is the policy which the government has been following for at least two years. That is the policy which has been established for the province of Quebec and which we suggest the other provinces should adopt also.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has prepared five year projections of the cost of these programs, particularly medicare, and whether these projections will be made known to the provincial governments and to this house.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have some projections, but I am not sure that the computers are as accurate as the hon. member would like them to be.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because I believe the Prime Minister has misinterpreted section 8 of the Medical Care Act. Therefore I should like to give notice that I will ask my question again at the first opportunity on an adjournment debate.

NATIONAL SECURITY

JAMES EARL RAY—CHARGE RESPECTING FORGED PASSPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Since the Ottawa civil servant in the James Earl Ray case has been identified as Mrs. Claire Keating, could the minister now tell the house whether his investigation is under way and whether a charge is contemplated?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Nothing has been placed before me that would warrant instituting criminal proceedings against any person arising out of dealings with James Earl Ray, other than a person who has been charged in Toronto for violation of sections 10 and 12 of the Ontario Commissioners for Taking Affidavits Act. That person is Henry Moos, manager of the Kennedy Travel Bureau in Toronto.

PUBLICATION OF GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS IN RECENT BOOK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): My question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of the suggestion by the Prime Minister that recent stories which appeared in La Presse might involve a question of theft, and the undertaking to have the Solicitor General investigate that possibility, does the Prime Minister propose to similarly refer to the Solicitor General the case of the publication in the book "The Distemper of Our Times" of the full texts of various cabinet and government documents?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not read that book, Mr. Speaker, but I will ask the Solicitor General whether there is anything in it which requires such action.

IMMIGRATION

ENGLISH LANGUAGE COURSES FOR CZECHOSLOVAKIAN REFUGEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I apologize for not having given him notice, but I imagine he knows the answer. Is it correct that the government is financing a one week long or some other type of English course for Czechoslovakian refugees who have recently emigrated to Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I find it difficult to determine whether this involves a matter of urgency. If it does not, the question might be placed on the order paper.

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Prime Minister. Further to questions asked in this house on September 18 and October 23—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: —I have been rather preoccupied with certain proceedings back in my riding. Further to questions asked in this house on September 18 and October 23, will the Prime Minister tell the house whether the federal government has communicated to the provinces the federal proposal concerning offshore mineral rights?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not yet, Mr. Speaker. I realize that the anniversary of the opinion of the Supreme Court will be coming up pretty soon, and I hope that on or around that anniversary certain proposals will have been made to the provinces.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the Prime Minister state whether the matter of offshore mineral rights will be on the agenda at the government's meetings with the premiers of the provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: Not specifically. The general area of division of power is on the agenda, but it is rather low on the agenda. For that reason we do not think this discussion will be held at this particular conference. We will be making certain proposals to the provinces which are not necessarily related to constitutional amendments. Therefore there will perhaps be no need to discuss them at this conference.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—VISIT BY REPRESENTATIVE OF PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister tell the house why he found it necessary to send what might be called a personal presidential emissary to Lagos instead of using the legal channels of the federal government through its high commissioner there? Did Mr. Head see any member of the Biafran administration while he was in west Africa?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In respect of the first point, Mr. Speaker, I asked Professor Head to go there as my personal representative because I could not go myself as I had been urged to do by many hon. members. I felt that Mr. Head would do an excellent job of communicating my feelings to the government at Lagos and bring back first hand information as to their feelings. Mr. Head has had quite a lot of experience in African affairs and in international law.

Inquiries of the Ministry

On the second point, Mr. Head was not instructed to communicate with any of the Biafran authorities which, as the hon. member knows, are not recognized by the Canadian government.

VIET NAM—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN PEACE KEEPING EFFORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, on Friday in replying to a question by the Leader of the Opposition, asking whether Canada had a contingency plan with a view to supplying peace keeping forces that might be required in Viet Nam, the Prime Minister advised the house that he was not in a position at that time to answer the question. May I again ask whether Canada has a contingency plan outlining the forces that might be required for preserving a peace settlement in that country?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, my position today is the same as it was on Friday. We have received no specific request, and it is very difficult at this stage to know what might be requested of us. It is obvious that we cannot undertake any kind of policing action over the whole of the territory. It is also our position that any action we would contemplate taking would have to follow an agreement between the so-called parties to the peace talks or arise out of the Geneva machinery. If the agreement is under the present I.C.S.C., this action would have to be taken after an agreement had been reached by the three members of the I.C.S.C.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether I can assume from his reply that to date there have been no discussions whatsoever about a contingency plan which Canada may or may not have or need in the future.

Mr. Trudeau: There have been no discussions with any foreign power, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

FURTHER REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING 12 MILE LIMIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Fisheries whether renewed representations have been received from the Fisheries Council of Canada urging that Canada declare a 12-mile Canadian fishing limit, spelling out its powers, and if so, what consideration will be given to this?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is now in a position to announce who has been appointed the new director of the company of young Canadians.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe this matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State, and I see that he is here today.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Company of Young Canadians sent us the name of a candidate for this position, and this application will be considered as soon as possible by the cabinet.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, in the light of the uncertainty surrounding the operations of the Company of Young Canadians as well as the abnormal change in its internal personnel and the confusion in the public mind as to the objectives of the C.Y.C., will the Secretary of State or the Prime Minister be prepared soon to make a statement on motions outlining the direction of the C.Y.C.?

Mr. Pelletier: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, but I did not catch the last part of the hon. member's question.

Mr. Nystrom: Would the Secretary of State or the Prime Minister be prepared to make a statement soon on motions outlining the objectives of the Company of Young Canadians?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I will be happy to consider this suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, would the Secretary of State mind including in that statement an analysis of the last audit of the affairs of that Company of Young Canadians?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, would the Secretary of State indicate whether it is his or the government's intention to replace the provisional advisory council to the C.Y.C. by a permanent advisory council?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I think I was asked two questions, Mr. Speaker. I could not answer the first because the second one came too soon after.

In answer to the first question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to say that, as in the case of all companies of that sort, the estimates of the Company of Young Canadians will be presented to a committee and that all the hon. members will have the opportunity to put questions directly to those in charge of the company.

As regards the second questions, I do not remember. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. If I am not mistaken, under the act this temporary council will, after a certain time, become permanent.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Is he considering the possibility of replacing the Company of Young Canadians by instituting a draft for social service?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, the two subjects—and I believe I already said this in answering another question—the two subjects are not related in my mind.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. I would like to know whether or not the rumour that the minister intends to commit political suicide by becoming head of the Liberal party in British Columbia is founded?

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

COMPENSATION FOR INNOCENT VICTIMS OF CRIMINAL ACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. In view of the rejection by the law enforcement board of Ontario of a claim for compensation by the dependant mother and survivors of Larry Botrie, the Toronto cab driver who was killed by a criminal recently, is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation during this session to compensate innocent victims of criminal acts?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, for the moment I think the definitive word on that subject was pronounced by my colleague, the Solicitor General, before the committee on justice and legal affairs.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct the question I asked the Minister of Justice to the Solicitor General. Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation to compensate innocent victims of criminal acts?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Not at this session, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACTION TO GIVE STRATEGIC MOBILITY TO MOBILE COMMAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, on October 29 the Minister of National Defence indicated in an answer he gave at that time that no decision had been taken as to whether the government would purchase tanker aircraft to give the CF-5 strategic mobility. Will the minister state now or at an early date what action the government is taking to give mobile command strategic mobility?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member is not asking for information from the minister of a type which should normally be given on motions? The minister might indicate whether he proposes to make such a statement.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I did not make myself clear. I asked whether the minister would be prepared to make such a statement now or at an early time, perhaps on motions if that is suitable.

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can say that mobile command has strategic mobility now, because it has access to something like 24 Hercules aircraft.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO CODE OF ETHICS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the code of ethics issued by the former prime minister to his colleagues on November 30, 1964, is still a matter of government policy?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to refresh my memory to see what the code of ethics then was. I was not a member of the ministry in those days, but I suggest there is no particular urgency to this question.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the Prime Minister when examining this could also consider whether the code might be amended to give it the required degree of flexibility.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATION OF YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in view of the inquiries which have been directed to the Prime Minister by the elected council representatives in the northern territories in respect of representation at the federal-provincial conference now under way, I should like to ask whether any representative of those elected members of either council is at the conference and, if not, whether it is the intention of the government to provide some representation in this regard.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question will be answered by the adoption of the procedure followed last February, according to which members of the councils could sit as part of the federal delegation.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which is supplementary to the answer he gave a moment ago concerning representation at the federal-provincial conference of the elected representatives of the two northern territories. Can the Prime Minister through this house assure the councils of those territories that he will immediately dispatch an invitation to them to attend the meetings in the manner he has described, since no such invitation has yet been received by any of the representatives of the Yukon?

[Mr. Cadieux (Labelle).]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the federal delegation has not yet been composed, so it is a matter of seeing who is to be a member of the delegation and who will perhaps be invited as observer for the federal government. As soon as this is decided I will dispatch invitations.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT PLAN FOR ATLANTIC PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Could the minister say whether he is prepared to make a statement, which he promised several days ago, regarding departmental expenditures with respect to the Atlantic development area?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I undertook to give my hon. friend the information which he sought on that occasion, and I will be happy to give it to him now in one or two sentences. I mentioned to my hon. friend, in connection with his question on the municipal winter works and our replacement program, that we were increasing our training funds in the Atlantic provinces. In these provinces we have increased our funds from $18 million last year to almost $27 million for the current fiscal year.

Most of this money will be spent in training workers who are unemployed in the winter months. It will be seen how significant this expenditure is in comparison with the total expenditure for municipal winter works in the Atlantic provinces, which last winter reached the figure of $1½ million.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In light of the rising and very serious unemployment situation in the Atlantic provinces, could the minister tell the house where these trained people will find employment?

Mr. Coates: In Ontario and Quebec, of course.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I say—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Could the minister take the time of the house at the next sitting to give us a breakdown of the extra expenditure of $8 million as it relates to each province, and also as it reflects on the general employment situation?

Mr. MacEachen: The information requested would be largely statistical, and I will be happy to produce it on the order paper in answer to a written question.

CANADIAN YOUTH PARLIAMENT

REQUEST FOR RECONVENING OF AD HOC COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. It arises out of the government's continuing emphasis on the participation of youth in governmental processes, and on the basis of assurances given by the Prime Minister on October 1 and October 21 in this house. Has the Prime Minister reached a decision with respect to the reconvening of the ad hoc committee on the proposed Canadian youth parliament?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have given consideration to this matter together with some of my advisers and with the President of the Privy Council. We do not feel that at this time the kind of expenditure this would involve would be justified. We do not feel this is the best way of ensuring that kind of participation. This is the decision I have reached at this time. I may want to reconsider it at a later date.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government contemplates substituting the youth service program or cultural conscription program, which has been proposed by the Secretary of State, for the youth parliament?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the hon. member is repeating a question which was asked a moment ago.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a supplementary question. I wonder if the Prime Minister, at this time or some time soon, can tell the house what alternative uses he is planning for this money which could have been used for the Canadian youth parliament.

Mr. Trudeau: It is not as though we had money which could have been used for the Canadian youth parliament. This is money which we would have had to take from the taxpayer.

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO CHARGES RESPECTING COUNTERFEIT PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Solicitor General in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who I trust was not injured in his car accident over the week end. Can the Solicitor General advise the house when the government will be laying charges in connection with counterfeit drugs on the Canadian market?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as acting minister, I would like to say that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) has left me a note saying that the answer to the hon. member's question is in the mail, as is the answer to another member I cannot mention, because I only have his name and I do not know what riding he represents.

I do not know whether the minister intends to answer orally in the house when he comes back, but the two members who asked those questions last week and who were promised an answer this week will get their personal written replies.

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I must apologize, but I thought the Solicitor General was in the house. May I redirect my question in his absence.

An hon. Member: He is here.

Mr. Forrestall: Then why did the acting minister answer?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Because he is not the acting minister.

Mr. Forrestall: But, Mr. Speaker, I directed my question to the Solicitor General, not the acting solicitor general.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a little confusing.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding the same subject I have raised many times, that is to whom members are entitled to put questions. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East made it clear he was asking a question regarding prosecutions under the Department of National Health and Welfare Act, which he directed specifically to the Solicitor General. If the Prime Minister would look up his roster I am sure he would find that the Solicitor General is here today, and if he would look to his right he would see him in his place.

An hon. Member: He is here every day.

FISHERIES

PURCHASE OF SALT COD FOR SHIPMENT TO BIAFRA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries, which I will pose to his parliamentary secretary in the event that he is willing to attempt an answer. He may want to take it as notice, in which case I will wait until tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might ask his question.

Mr. Lundrigan: I wish to ask the parliamentary secretary if the presently planned purchase of five million pounds or 50,000 quintals of Atlantic salt cod fish by the government for Biafra will mean an upward revision in the price of fish to Atlantic fishermen?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the question as notice.

Mr. Lundrigan: Then I withdraw the question.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: House again in committee of supply on the revised estimates of the department of supply and services for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969. These estimates can be found on page 482 of the blue-book, and the details thereof are listed on page 484.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES

1. General administration, $4,973,100.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): The estimates which we are considering today, Mr. Chairman, reflect the changes that have either been undertaken in the new department of supply and services or those which are contemplated in the immediate future. In introducing these estimates there are just a few comments I should like to make so new members in particular may be better informed on just how this department functioned in the past.

Quite frankly, since this is my first responsibility in this regard it will give me an opportunity as well to set the picture, as it were, in proper perspective. The Department of Defence Production, as you know, has been in existence since 1951. The primary purpose of the department up to now has been to act as the procurement agency for the Department of National Defence. I believe it was generally agreed, and I think the record has tended to support this assessment, that it was in the best interests of public expenditures and of the nation generally to have a civilian oriented department undertake the job of procurement of the many and varied needs of the Department of National Defence. More recently, as a result of the general recommendations of the Glassco commission and since approximately 1963 or thereabouts, additional responsibilities have been assigned to the Department of Defence Production giving it the responsibility for purchasing on behalf of a number of civilian departments. Members will be interested to know that to date the amount of work in this connection that has been done embraces between 35 and 40 civilian departments or agencies. We are now responsible, in the department, for approximately 60 per cent of the expenditures on purchases by civilian departments.

As the transition continues and transfer of this purchasing authority continues to be brought over into our area of responsibility, it is expected that we will, within a comparatively short time, reach a point where we are doing a very substantial amount of, if not all, the purchasing for civilian departments. I think the record of the department is an indication that the concept of combined buying is equally as defensible and effective as has been the concept of a civilian department buying for the armed forces. We are planning now to continue to extend this consolidation and, as members will know, in July of this year it was announced that we are to establish a new department of supply and services.

Very briefly, this department will embrace those activities which I have already outlined to members, that is, purchasing for the armed forces and a continuation of purchasing on behalf of civilian organizations. It will embrace these and a number of other very important functions. On the supply side, the department of supply and services is to undertake the major portion of what were, up to now, the shipbuilding responsibilities of the Department of Transport. In this way we will assume most of the things which the Department of Transport has been doing for itself in terms of design, procurement, the issuance of contracts and the general follow-up operations on shipbuilding projects to meet D.O.T.'s needs.

It is intended also that there will be an extension of the responsibilities which up to now have belonged to the Department of Defence Production with regard to the Queen's printer and the Canadian government printing bureau.

On the services side of the new department, and the estimates are presented in such a way that hon. members will have an opportunity to deal with both supply and services functions more or less simultaneously, the central element that will be brought over into the new department will be the comptroller of the treasury which up to now has been the responsibility of the Department of Finance. As you know, the comptroller of the treasury has a great many important responsibilities. These include, of course, the duty and function which, I suppose if one wished to oversimplify, could be called bookkeeper to the Canadian government. There are a variety of other services that are performed by the comptroller of the treasury, and some of these and the extension of them that we propose I will deal with in just a moment.

The second function which is to be assumed by my new department will be responsibility for the central data process service bureau. A third responsibility will be for the bureau of management and consulting services. If members will permit me, I should like to spend a few moments outlining the specific ideas that we have and the specific responsibilities which will be exercised under these headings.

The central data process service bureau is a reflection of an important change which is evident not only in government but in industry, with regard to the greater use of computers and other data processing equipment of one kind or another. The establishment of this bureau would mean that we would employ these new techniques in the best and most efficient way possible. I want to emphasize that it is not intended we will create a single unit that will do all the data processing for all departments of government. There will be specific responsibilities and specific jobs each department will continue to do for itself, but by and large the objective is to establish a new, central data process bureau as a facility which will be available to all departments that require it. In addition, we will thereby build up a bank of experts on computers and the like so all departments will have the capacity to draw on these and gain the benefits of the experience and knowledge these authorities possess.

The bureau of management and consulting services is, I think, also a most useful part of government structure. It is one which I believe will be employed more and more in the future. Essentially, the function of this bureau is to provide for any government department or agency expert advice to review procedures within a given department, to analyse the techniques that are being employed and to make recommendations or provide other help which will enable these departments to perform in a more efficient manner.

The department has achieved quite an impressive record in the past year. There have been some 60-odd studies which have been made at the request of specific departments and the results of these have, generally speaking, been very productive. They have brought about improvements in the functioning of these departments and agencies.

Returning for a moment, if I may, to some of the responsibilities on the supply side of the department of supply and services, I have outlined what its functions are. In this current year we have a number of special projects, most of which I believe are listed in the estimates. There are one or two, however, to which I should like to call particular attention as they represent some of the major areas for which we are now responsible in the defence production field. There is, for example, a construction program for the CF-5 aircraft centred in Montreal but with benefits in other regions as well. Under this program we are the responsible agency for the contract which will result in the construction of 115 of these CF-5 aircraft. There is at the same time, within the production facility where these are being built a similar order, not necessarily in size but for that type of aircraft, for the government of the Netherlands. These two projects are going forward simultaneously. My main reason for mentioning the Netherlands order is to give an indication of the international co-operation which my department, in co-operation with others, has been able to achieve and which I believe has resulted in very substantial benefits not only in terms of government orders but in terms of our assistance to Canadian industry, particularly industry that is oriented to the defence field.

The second major project that is now under way and in which hon. members will be interested concerns the contracts already issued for the construction of D.D.H. destroyers. I confess that I have had a great deal of trouble within my department trying to keep all the initials correct, but I think I am right in saying that this is the official designation at the moment of these four vessels. Two of them are being built at Sorel in Quebec and two at Lauzon in Quebec. This is probably the single major defence construction project under way at the present time.

In addition to the shipbuilding work on these four vessels there is an enormous amount of what I choose to call complementary work, that is to say, work on the various equipment needs of these vessels, and these items are being constructed and designed in many different parts of Canada. If hon. members so desire I would be pleased to outline where these contracts have been placed and their nature.

In addition to these two major projects, as I describe them, the Department of Defence Production is also very directly engaged in a number of other projects of a defence nature. It has, as well, been participating in a number of international programs which have resulted either through direct involvement by government, or, in an indirect way, through the initiatives that we have taken, in considerable foreign sales of one kind or another. I have mentioned the Netherlands air force as one example. Another is that just recently some 15 of our Buffalo aircraft which originated as the result of a D.N.D. requirement have been sold in South America.

In addition to the new construction of the magnitude I have outlined, Mr. Chairman, there is a continuing repair and overhaul requirement. This amounts to many millions of dollars annually. It is one of the more difficult areas, as some hon. members will know, because of the need to try at least to ensure that most of the facilities in Canada do have a capability in this regard. We try to see that each gets a portion of this work.

This is not always easy, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, I would go so far as to say that it is extremely difficult to bring into line, to rationalize, if you like, the needs of individual plants with the other and fundamental requirement which I suggest rests on my department, namely, that of getting the best value possible for our defence dollars, as well as for our purchasing dollar generally.

Our total purchasing in the department in the current year is in excess of $1 billion. This is a very sizeable sum of public money and I am deeply conscious of the responsibilities that are ours in ensuring, as I said, that our money is spent to best advantage. Of this $1 billion plus, about $500 million or slightly more than half that amount is for the Department of National Defence. These are direct and specific requirements of the Department of National Defence and we, as the procurement agency, follow through on their demands. In addition to these expenditures on behalf of the Department of National Defence, the remainder, or about 45 per cent, of the expenditures are included under a general heading: for example, purchases on behalf of foreign governments in Canada as a result of various international agreements of one type or another.

We have also undertaken some expenditures on behalf of external aid programs when it has appeared that the use of the expertise that we possess has been desirable in order to obtain the best kind of arrangement. This is not, I should add, a total involvement on our part. It is not one of the agencies that has been completely transferred to the Department of Defence Production in terms of its purchasing needs. Where we have demonstrated or it is obvious that we can be of assistance, we have made certain external aid purchases.

Then there is the money that is spent on behalf of civilian or civil departments. When the total transfer of these civil departments is completed, which I anticipate will be over the next year to two years, we will then be adding to the total procurement value for which my department is responsible an extra $100 million, or an amount in that neighbourhood. That is our general assessment.

There are some interesting statistics in relation to the service side of the department in which I think hon. members may be interested. As most hon. members know, we are the cheque issuing agency for the federal government. All payments go through the comptroller of the treasury. In the present year the government will issue in the neighbourhood of 78.5 million cheques. This number of cheques will go out from various government agencies and departments.

It is also interesting to note that of this total of 78.5 million cheques, about 53.5 million are taken care of under about three headings. These include, for example, family allowance payments, old age security, family assistance and the like. So in total 78.5 million cheques are issued, with 53.5 million of these cheques being issued under various social programs.

I should also add that in the consultation process in which we are engaged, which was going on long before I was responsible for the department and is now being accelerated in view of our intentions in this matter, we have in operation the central travel service which, from all accounts and from what I have been able to determine in my short time in the department, is a very useful and productive new operation. This is the centralization of all travel requirements and various related needs of government departments, and it is working out extremely well.

We have also introduced the vehicle fleet management information service. Related to this—and I suspect this will interest hon. members—we have in this year undertaken a consolidated vehicle purchase program. This means that we will adopt a sort of master contract approach which gives us the chance to take the best advantage of our purchases in terms of price, quality and the like. With the exception of external affairs, where there are a variety of unique problems inasmuch as vehicles are being exported overseas and we have not yet ironed out all the technicalities, we are now purchasing all the vehicles for civilian departments.

I believe this represents in capsule form some of the developments that are under way. The only other matter to which I should like to refer specifically concerns the Department of Public Printing and Stationery. As hon. members know—and I suppose this is the most familiar of all its activities—the Canadian government printing bureau is responsible for the publication of statutes and for the preparation and publication of the myriad documents—indeed, I am sure hon. members sometimes feel there are far too many—which are required in connection with the House of Commons and the general activities of government.

In addition, the Queen's printer has a special responsibility in terms of acting as adviser and the giving of expert assistance with regard to the best, most efficient and least costly way of preparing various government documents and the like. Perhaps hon. members will be interested to learn that in the run of a year through the printing bureau and the Queen's printer we produce—the figure will vary, of course, from one year to the next—several thousand documents. I was going to call your special attention, Mr. Chairman, to the increase during centennial year when, as you know, a number of very special books and the like were produced which gained international recognition. Indeed, in one case the book, "The Year of the Land," won an international award as well.

The result of this kind of activity—it was mainly attributable to centennial year—was an increase last year of 47 per cent in the sale of various documents, of the total available output of the Queen's printer, if you wish. Normally the increase in sales is approximately 10 per cent annually.

We have also been going through the process of providing outlets in at least each one of the major regions of Canada. In these centres we have a sales facility so that interested parties can obtain any government document in which they are interested. By and large these book stores have been very successful and have provided what appears from all the evidence that reaches us a most worthwhile service.

Before I conclude what I was going to say there is one other point that I should mention in connection with the supply side. Another of our assignments is to consolidate the purchasing and the warehousing of the needs and supplies of the department. This is the commodity approach to purchasing. We now have a pilot plant under study in the capital region under which we will bring together the known needs of a common nature of all departments and supply those departments directly from this type of centralized warehouse. This pilot project has only advanced to perhaps 10 per cent of its ultimate effectiveness but already we are satisfied that it represents real savings. For example, the best assessment I obtained as of today is that in the capital region, adopting this commodity approach and the centralized warehousing idea, our savings will probably be approximately $3 million annually. We suspect, on the basis of what is known so far, that we can look for savings of 10 per cent to 20 per cent over all in our purchasing requirements generally when this system is fully functional.

I believe that is as much as I can tell hon. members at the moment about the background of the department and the plans we have. All this is, I think, evidence that we are moving in a most complex and difficult field to bring the most modern management and control techniques available to the service of government. When the job is finished we hope to have a very substantial pool of experience and expertise, as I have described it, available to all departments. We hope to remove from those departments responsibilities which more properly can be undertaken by a more central agency, which will leave them free to pursue their main assignments and responsibilities.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to note the ready grasp the minister has of his department and its objectives. Obviously the minister has had experience in operating concern of substance. He is capable of running this department efficiently and in a manner that will truly benefit the taxpayers of this nation.

The minister touched on most of the Glassco commission's recommendations and I am pleased to note that substantial savings have already been made as a result of the central warehousing pilot plant that has been established in this area. This indicates how great the benefits to the taxpayers will be if all those suggestions are implemented on a national basis.

I am also pleased to note that in many areas manpower is to be cut down, as recommended by the Glassco commission. Those who are concerned about the proliferation of jobs in our public service will be especially pleased with this. I assure the minister that he will receive every consideration from the official opposition in his endeavours to eliminate red tape and streamline and modernize the government's purchasing program.

Since I represent a constituency containing an aircraft plant I am probably more closely associated with that part of the former department of defence production having to do with aircraft matters than with other parts of the department which have fallen under the minister's responsibilities. In dealing with officials of the department on matters pertaining to the government's aircraft program I have become aware of their keen awareness and helpfulness and their desire to do everything humanly possible to facilitate the well-being of industries that are located in the Atlantic area. Unfortunately the officials have had their hands tied by government policy.

Knowing the very real ability the minister has shown in private life and in his brief stint so far as a minister of the crown, I hope he will develop a policy with regional implications that will recognize the special problems of the Atlantic provinces, much though the mandarins abhor the suggestion that there are such special problems, and provide additional employment to an area that desperately needs it. I believe the minister can do this. As his personality gradually makes itself felt in this administration I look forward with anticipation to a time when he will put forward regional policies that will be truly valuable not only to the people of the Atlantic area but to all the people of Canada. Certainly any benefits that accrue to the people of the Atlantic provinces must at the same time accrue to all the people of Canada.

Mr. Coates: There are some matters that are of concern not only to me but to other hon. members, as well as to the people of our nation generally. Recently I placed on the order paper a question concerning a firm known as Executive Consultants Limited. In that firm are two individuals who have had a close association with the Liberal party for a substantial period of time. The setting up of this type of firm specifically to do business with and for the government is in my view dangerous to the public interest. I will give my reasons for that statement.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Executive positions which are available in the offices of the various cabinet ministers could well become a training ground for lobbyists, influence peddlers, or whatever one might wish to call them, people who try to establish themselves in the good graces of the hon. gentlemen selected to be cabinet ministers. After they have accomplished their immediate task, that of ingratiating themselves with the minister concerned and the party in power, they set themselves up as consultants of one kind or another and secure retainers from large corporate structures whose business with the government is in many cases done by negotiation rather than by bidding on contracts to supply equipment of various sorts.

It is often the case that competitive bidding is not wholly satisfactory from the government point of view. Because of their personal association with members of the government of the day, persons such as I have described are able to convince the federal authorities that the groups they represent can offer the people of Canada the best that is available in a certain field of supply. As a result of these activities the taxpayers end up purchasing goods or equipment which may well not be the best available. It is considered the best, though, because it has been promoted by friends of the government.

This is a dangerous type of development of which every Canadian and, indeed, the government itself should be leary. I would not like to think that a certain firm employed officers who could write letters to people in Canada saying: I am having difficulty getting office space but until I am settled you can always contact me by telephoning the office of the Prime Minister or the office of the Minister of Transport. A persons getting a letter of that kind might well feel: I do not know whether my product is as good as others are but if I have the help of that individual, I am half way there so far as selling to the government is concerned.

I do not suggest for one minute that any cabinet minister or any government would consciously and deliberately favour a certain product simply because a particular group or individual was promoting it. But I do say there are many unconscious considerations, of which a partisan association over a period of time is certainly one, which a man is bound to look at more than once before he can obliterate them from his mind. I like to think there are many reasons why young men should be attracted to the many positions very close to the top which are available in the government service. I like to think these positions are a training ground for political scientists, for budding politicians. But I do not like to think that certain individuals in this country are endeavouring to take advantage of those with whom they become associated by the kind of thing which I fear is indicated by the establishment of the firm to which I have referred.

Something else concerns me. I do not know whether it comes strictly within the purview of the minister; it may be the responsibility of the Department of Public Works. I hope that eventually, however, this matter will come under the minister's jurisdiction if it does not do so at present. I have in mind the kind of activity in which some of the hon. gentleman's colleagues have been engaged recently in respect of office space and office furnishings. I realize that the government is in office for at least four years; there is no argument about that. But I do not think the style of an office should depend upon whether parliament is in a minority or a majority situation. This should make no difference to the amount of space in an office, the kind of furnishings, and so on.

When we seek election to this chamber and have the good fortune not only to succeed but to be selected as cabinet ministers, it does not mean we should surround ouselves with opulence as has been the case, it would appear, in too many instances since the last general election. We are not maharajahs; even India does not have them any more. And there is no reason why we should be acting like maharajahs. To behave in this way is to tell the people of Canada how cynical we are and how cynical they ought to be about politicians. When we present ourselves to the people of a constituency we ask them for their support in order that we may assist them. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that it makes no difference whether one of the people's representatives has a dollar wastepaper basket or a $35 wastepaper basket, whether he sits in a $30 chair or a $300 chair. This has nothing to do with what one may accomplish for the people of Canada. I suggest that the minister take a close look at some of the activities of certain of his associates. While he may be a junior minister from the point of view of service I am sure he is not a junior minister from any other standpoint. I am sure he will guard the taxpayers' dollars as closely as possible. I am also sure he will find examples of waste and extravagance for which some of his own cabinet colleagues are responsible. If waste and extravagance are to be found there, what kind of example are they setting for individuals in the public service?

I have no doubt that in the days ahead the minister will do an outstanding job and will be a credit to our area. I have told him previously, and I do not hesitate to tell him again, that I am quite willing to give him any assistance he may seek from me at any time because I believe that at all times he has the problems of our area very much in mind.

However, I believe that some of the developments that have taken place and are continuing to take place since the last federal election are disturbing Canadians. He has some control over certain developments and I would like him to use his ability to correct anything which might be damaging to the nation's taxpayers. After all, we are all protectors of the taxpayers, and each day we spend their dollars.

I shall not comment on the shipbuilding program. My colleague from Central Nova will do so. On more than one occasion he has questioned the minister about it. I also know that the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East will be asking certain questions of specific concern to him dealing with Fairey Aviation and other matters. I congratulate the minister for the effort he has made to adopt as many of the recommendations of the Glassco commission as possible. I am pleased to see the grasp he has already acquired of this department. It is not a small department. Any department that spends $1 billion per year is a mighty big one and one that is bound to weigh heavily on the shoulders of the individual in charge of it. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will give serious consideration to the concern I have expressed about a number of specific things, and I wish him well in the days ahead.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to join the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North in wishing the minister well in his new portfolio and in congratulating him on his maiden speech. It seems to me that about the only speeches we have heard from him so far have been maiden speeches. It was not so long ago that he addressed the house as a very brilliant backbencher and we congratulated him on his forthrightness. I do not know how much farther he can go because the room at the top is getting smaller all the time.

As a sign of the affection in which I hold the minister I shall refrain from making a speech to him today. However, I would like to ask him a number of questions. The first is in reference to a section of the Watkins report on foreign ownership and the structure of Canadian industry, prepared for the Privy Council office. This is the section dealing with extra territoriality, and if I may refresh the minister's memory I shall quote from paragraph 2 on page 407:

> It is recommended that, with respect to United States restrictions on the freedom of its Canadian subsidiaries to export, a government export trade agency be created with the necessary powers to ensure that export orders are filled when they conform with Canadian law and Canadian foreign policy. State trading organizations of communist countries could register orders placed with Canadian firms with the agency. Where an American subsidiary refused to fill a bona fide order placed with it, the agency would assist in having the order placed with a Canadian-owned firm or a firm owned overseas. Where no such firm could fill the order, the American subsidiary would be require to show cause to the agency. If the agency judges the sole inhibition to be American foreign assets control regulations, the agency would purchase the item on its account for resale to the state trading organization, with supporting legislation making it a criminal offence for a firm to refuse to sell to the agency at existing market prices.

Having read the annual report of the Canadian Commercial Corporation it seems to me that in effect we have such an agency in Canada that would fulfil the requirements mentioned and would consider the dangers pointed out in the Watkins report. I read from page 5 of the annual report of the Canadian Commercial Corporation:

> The principal purpose of the corporation is to act on behalf of the Canadian government as the contracting agency when other countries and international agencies wish to purchase defence and other supplies and services from Canada on a government to government basis.

Does the minister see the Canadian Commercial Corporation as a suitable agency to fulfil the recommendation of the Watkins report and, if so, is it his intention to see that that agency carries out the Watkins report recommendation? I shall give the minister a chance to reply before asking him further questions.

Mr. Jamieson: As you know, Mr. Chairman, and as the hon. member knows, the Watkins report is being considered by the government and to date no decision has been made on what portion or whether all of it is going to be implemented. In a sense, and with deference to my good friend, I could say that his question therefore is hypothetical in regard to whether the Canadian Commercial Corporation could be used for this purpose. I am not at all sure that my answer will be satisfactory on this ground, that I am not in a position to say whether we could use the Canadian Commercial Corporation to implement something which is not yet government policy.

I believe the Canadian Commercial Corporation illustrates the positive way in which this kind of international relationship can function as opposed to the idea of providing prohibitions, penalties, or something of that nature. Certainly in the field within which the corporation functions—and it is not only in relation to the United States but to some European countries as well—its effect has been very salutary in terms of getting additional business for Canada.

From my limited experience, which I hope the hon. gentleman will appreciate, I do not recall any case where a Canadian subsidiary refused to produce anything we wanted. Generally speaking it is the other way around. They have been most anxious and have cooperated fully, whether they have been wholly Canadian owned companies or subsidiary companies, in the manufacture of those items which, as a result of the activities of the corporation of my department, have been offered to them. The chief example, and the one which I used in my opening remarks, concerning the Netherlands air force is the most immediate one I can cite in support of this position. I would like to look further into the question to discover whether a case has arisen such as outlined by the hon. gentleman. I would be very surprised if that were so. I think its functions are in the reverse order. On this basis it has been useful in getting business for Canada, both in respect of wholly Canadian companies and subsidiaries. I shall be pleased to amplify if I have not adequately answered the question. I am sure the hon. member can appreciate the difficulty in view of the fact that the Watkins report has not been declared government policy.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I hope you will provide me with some latitude for clarification of this question. The passage I read from the Watkins report, where the recommendations to the government are stated, seems to me in some ways to be covered by the terms of reference of the Canadian Commercial Corporation. There does not seem to be any difficulty so far as the Canadian Commercial Corporation carrying out the intent of the Watkins report is concerned.

I should like to ask the minister whether his department has been asked to examine the Watkins recommendations with a view to stating his position to the government. I believe the minister stated something along the line of the information I am seeking in my second question. However, I should like to have clarification. At any time has the Canadian Commercial Corporation been refused goods that it ordered? Then I have a third question. At any time has a country like Cuba tried to place an order through the Canadian Commercial Corporation? If so, the minister might give me some indication what the response of the corporation has been to such a request. A few years ago there was considerable publicity over the fact that some United States corporations felt they were not in a position to mill flour for the Cuban government. I should like some information concerning the position of the department at that time.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to find this out, but if the hon. member would permit me I should like to take a few moments to do so. This was before my time of responsibility. In answer to the second part of the question with regard to whether or not we were ever refused, while I do not know the answer the information conveyed to me is that the answer is no. However, I shall arrange to obtain the answer for the hon. member.

In so far as the operations of the Canadian Commercial Corporation are concerned I should like to examine the terms of reference to determine whether there is some expanded role for this corporation which would be profitable and useful. As things stand at the moment its fundamental and almost exclusive function is to deal with foreign governments and provide the financing needed to bridge, as it were, the financing between the Canadian industry involved and a foreign government until such time as payment has been made by that foreign government. It has largely restricted itself to that area. However, I most certainly will take note of the hon. member's observations on this point. I will see whether there is an ability to do this. I shall also endeavour to obtain an answer to the other two questions.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that the minister will require some time and that he will wish to consult with his departmental officials before giving an answer. I wonder whether he would also consider this request? Would his department consider a somewhat more aggressive and enlarged policy in terms of informing foreign countries of their services? Perhaps there is such a policy; I do not know. If there is, I have not heard of it. I should like to know from the minister, first of all, whether his department does pursue such a policy aggressively in the sense that it has liaison with other countries whereby it tells them of the services it has to offer and indicates the willingness of the department to purchase on their behalf. Would the minister give us a report in this regard, first of all, in respect of the present policy and, second, in respect of the future work of the department?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, in outlining the summary of the activities of the department at the beginning of my remarks there were so many headings that I neglected to inform hon. members of one of the elements which has been taken out of the Department of Defence Production or its progeny, I suppose, the department of supply and services. I am referring to the international programs branch. Up until the transfer of duties was promulgated, if that is the correct term, in July the international programs branch was under the direction of the Minister of Defence Production and did precisely what the hon. member has outlined. It was considered, and I believe it was a wise consideration, that this branch more properly belonged in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The international programs branch has now been transferred. Its objectives are precisely what the hon. member mentioned.

This branch maintains a liaison with the various world capitals and with other centres of commerce and industry. The representatives of this branch aggressively search out opportunities for sales of Canadian produced materials and items of a variety of types. As a department of supply and services we will still be involved in this in some degree through the Canadian Commercial Corporation in the manner I outlined in providing a degree of financial help and of course in our fairly considerable program with other countries in research development and related matters. So in a sense it will be a conglomerate in that there will be portions of responsibility which will be vested in my department and some which will be vested in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In addition, some will indirectly be the responsibility of my colleague the Minister of National Defence.

It is very difficult to divide the line here. But I suspect that as the amount of fall-out—this is how it is described, although it may be an unfortunate term—benefits increase from a civilian point of view as a result of the developmental projects in which we engage, it will become more a matter for industry than for the supply and services department of which I will be the head. Perhaps I might illustrate this by giving a couple of examples. The twin-engine Otter aircraft which had its essential beginning in relation to the Department of National Defence now has emerged as a very successful type of aircraft for civilian use throughout the world. Similarly, there is the Buffalo aircraft. From the results of our development work there has emerged, for example, a water bomber and so on. As these things involve largely a civilian function I think the hon. member's question would get a more thorough answer from the Minister of Industry than from me. I assure him, however, that we are pursuing a most aggressive sales policy in both the departments I have mentioned.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I shall leave this question for the moment, although I intend to pursue it at another time. I see the difficulty in terms of turning this publicity agency over to the trade and commerce group which I think is essentially oriented toward trade between private individuals and the encouragement of trade between private corporations and governments.

Mr. Jamieson: May I interrupt to say that the Canadian Commercial Corporation is involved in a government to government kind of operation and in that context we must keep up the kind of liaison mentioned.

Mr. Saltsman: Yes, and in view of the fact that such a large part of the world has established state trading corporations, it would seem there would be a real need for the department to have an aggressive policy of maintaining contact with the state trading corporations with a view to assisting them in their purchasing. However, we will leave that for the moment.

Mr. Jamieson: If I may interrupt, I have been advised—I knew this but I had forgotten—that the estimates of the Canadian Commercial Corporation have been referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. So there will be an opportunity in committee to explore these questions in detail.

Mr. Saltsman: I should like to direct a question to the minister regarding the change-over from military to non-military work in some of the agencies connected with his department. Hopefully, it looks as though the war in Viet Nam may be drawing to a close, and military orders in respect of cost sharing programs may be undergoing a change. We have built very substantial facilities in this country geared to military sharing and the provision of aircraft and other types of equipment. Can the minister give us some indication, first of all, as to what plans his department has for this change-over and, second, to what extent difficulties will arise from this change?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, like my hon. friend, I am relieved to know that at least from all appearances the Viet Nam situation is cooling off and, God willing, it will no longer be the threat it has been for so long.

For my own part, and I have stated this on many occasions since assuming this responsibility, it is my opinion that our Canadian defence oriented industries should be making a maximum effort to reduce their reliance on defence spending. I happen to feel philosophically, apart from all other considerations, that the faster we can beat our swords into plowshares the better it will be for all concerned. This is the philosophical approach to the matter but there is a very practical one as well.

As hon. members will know, a review is under way of our defence posture, but even if the situation were not to change at all—I assume, as I hope we all will, that there is going to be a lessening of world tenisons—the fact of the matter is that defence oriented industry as such in Canada cannot be supported to the degree it will need in respect of production and income by defence oriented contracts.

There are a variety of reasons for this, and my hon. friend will understand if I do not go into them in detail because this would to some degree waste the time of the house. There have been things which are prolonging the life of more and more of our armed forces units. For example, the need for repair and overhaul is to some degree reduced by new methods and techniques. Similarly, if our budgetary position or decision, conscious and deliberate, was inevitably to reduce the amount of activity in which these industries are engaged there would not be the same need for repair, overhaul or replacement.

We have to concern ourselves, and I think the primary responsibility is on industry, with taking the knowledge, first of all, that we have acquired through all these affairs of defence production and, second, utilizing the very substantial amount of equipment and plant, a very large percentage of which was provided by public moneys, and find uses which are civilian oriented and will fill what I have suggested to industry on a number of occasions are vacuums in the needs of industry or the civilian community which are not now being filled in Canada. I believe there is a good deal that can be done in this direction and I have accorded this top priority within my department in order to encourage the maximum amount of creativity on our part so we may make the proper kind of suggestions to these people for new uses of equipment and the like and, second, for a maximum amount of creativity on the part of the industry concerned so it too can have a more dependable base than it can ever hope to have as a war oriented industry.

I am happy to be able to tell the hon. member in this regard that there have been extremely satisfying results in some areas. He may have noted from the newspapers and other news reports in recent days an indication of the development of the DC-10 program, the Douglas aircraft program. As a result of a co-operative effort on various intergovernmental activities with the United States a very large subcontract has come to us. If the DC-10 is as successful as it now appears likely to be, there will be a benefit in this regard not only to one plant in Canada but to several other plants because there will be other subcontracts. This is a commercial type aircraft. I mentioned earlier, and I hope I will be forgiven for repeating myself in this regard, that the Canadair facilities and the expertise and knowhow which they have developed largely, although not entirely, with our help, have now enabled them to design a water bomber which I understand has a potential market throughout the world.

These are the ways in which we are moving and I assure you, sir, that for our part we will keep trying to find these new ways and we will keep urging industry to do so. I could relate this matter, but I will keep my answer to the question asked by the hon. member, to the questions asked by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North. He raised a matter in relation to the regional problems that this has created, but generally speaking we are moving in the right direction.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to note that the minister is aware of the necessity for placing top priority on his operation "plowshare", if we may call it that. This is necessary for a number of obvious reasons. First of all, this is a difficult problem which will require advance planning. Second, it might happen that this situation will develop very quickly, and the government should not be caught with its trousers in the half-mast position. I use that term in speaking to a man from the maritimes. Third, having accepted these plans we must realize that these industries are located in various parts of the country where there are very few alternative sources of employment. It is vitally necessary for the department to have very firm and convincing plans about what it intends to do.

I do not wish to press the minister further, but I should like him to make a statement in the very near future indicating, first of all, the priority his department is giving to this matter and, second, what it intends to do, It is not good enough to say that he is aware of the problem and is giving it top priority. We hear this from every minister. We must know what kind of people the minister has at his disposal, how qualified they are to do this job, the size of this group and what tentative plans they have reached. This is very important and those of us who are in the house today do not want to have to get up some day and say to the government that we pointed out the urgency of the matter. It is vitally important that the minister anticipate the difficulties and do some very substantial planning.

Let me move on to a question in relation to drugs. I presume the department of supply purchases drugs for various government agencies including the armed forces and hospitals. Is that correct?

Mr. Jamieson: I do not know to what extent we have assumed this function, but I did say earlier that there is a transitory period under way at the moment. We have taken on certain responsibilities from certain departments. If the hon. member will give me a little time I think I can get an answer for him. My recollection is that we do but I do not wish to deceive the hon. member.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, when the minister is pursuing that question will he check with the officials of his department to find out whether they would be amenable to purchasing drugs on behalf of provincial agencies and provincial hospitals? Perhaps this is a matter of government policy, but I understand that the federal government makes substantial purchases of drugs and is able to obtain excellent prices and services from drug manufacturers. Perhaps it would also be willing to do this kind of purchasing on behalf of provincial agencies if such a request were made to it.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, as did the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North I also wish to make to the minister a few representations regarding the shipbuilding industry. I commend the minister's appointment to the cabinet. May I say that since he comes from the Atlantic area where shipbuilding is most important and where the sea is at our gates I look to him for great things in the cabinet in regard to this most important industry.

I should like to refer to the debates which have already taken place in the house during this session. I will not repeat what some of my colleagues have said. For instance, the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster presented a notice of motion during private members' hour regarding a marine policy and he pointed out at that time how the ship owners and the shipbuilding authorities were in agreement on the fact that a policy must be forthcoming at an early date.

In answer to a question I asked the minister last Friday he stated that he was meeting with officials of the shipbuilding industry. Like his predecessor twice removed, Mr. Pickersgill who has gone to fairer fields, he would not give a date on which he thought a statement would be made. I asked the former minister at one time whether he could give us a date when a statement would be made but he said he was not going to be caught on a date limit. I do not blame the minister for that but may I say that I believe it should be done at an early date.

The minister said in his statement that his department would be assuming the shipbuilding role of the Department of Transport. In answer to questions which I put to him in the house in the last few weeks he stated that he, the Minister of Transport, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce had met with the officials of the shipbuilders association. He stated at the time that probably the Minister of Transport would be the one to make a statement on shipbuilding policy. However, in view of the new role assumed by the department I hope the minister will be the one to undertake this important task.

If my memory serves me correctly, it was about the year 1961 that a shipbuilding subsidy program was introduced. I remember it well because it was nurtured and initiated by the former head of the Canadian maritime commission, Mr. Alex Watson, who is now with the Canadian Transport Commission.

This program was a creature of his, one on which he worked hard. I remember being in his office a number of times and discussing it with him. He had a black book in which the beginning of that policy was written down. He liked to show hon. members, especially those from the Atlantic area and those from other parts of Canada where the shipbuilding industry is important, what this policy would be. Finally it was brought forward. It did a great deal to encourage Canadian shipbuilders. Before that program was established they were competing with shipbuilding firms in other countries and we were losing a great deal of our shipbuilding business to them.

The initiation of this policy, not only for commercial vessels but also for fishing vessels, meant a lot to our shipbuilders and enabled them to compete with shipbuilders of other countries. This subsidy has been cut back to 25 per cent and by 1970 or 1971 it will be further lowered to about 17½ per cent. Of course we know that subsidies for the fishing trawler program have been cut back from 50 per cent to 35 per cent. It is most important that there be a marine policy coupled with a policy in regard to our shipbuilders at an early date.

I am thinking now of the unemployment in shipyards throughout this country, on the west coast and in the great lakes area where a shipyard was closed not long ago. I am also thinking of the shipyard which is the main industry in the town of Pictou in my constituency. Until July or August of this summer it employed about 400 men but has now cut back employment to 100 or 150 men. I point out to the minister that this industry is a most important one. In this connection may I draw to his attention an article which I believe appeared in June of this year in the Chronicle-Herald, written by Mr. John Meyer, a well known financial critic in Montreal. This is what he wrote concerning the George T. Davie yard:

> The decision to close down Geo. T. Davie followed by an offer from Davieship for the useful physical assets of the yard, became inevitably a political issue. The minister of manpower has since sought to resolve it by having the frigate New Liskeard and a smaller vessel diverted to Lauzon for refit. The New Liskeard, at least, was to have refitted at Pictou, N.S., which—only incidentally, of course—is located in a riding held by a Conservative.

Pictou is in my constituency, and I was most interested in this article. The yard in Quebec has not seen this ship; neither has the Pictou yard. I want to ask the minister where the New Liskeard is and whether she will be refitted. I think tenders were up on October 10. I know the New Liskeard is not in Pictou, nor is she up the river. She is a ghost ship. At one time a ghost ship used to appear at Pictou and my wife's people as well as an old sea captain used to tell me stories about the phantom ship. Now the New Liskeard has become a phantom ship. I know why it has not been refitted but I would like to find out what the minister has to say about it.

To go back to the article I was reading which, by the way, is entitled "Political Play No Answer For Stricken Shipyards", may I say that Mr. Meyer had some interesting things to say. The article continues:

> There is probably a valid case to be made for rationalization of the Canadian yards. There is not the volume of business now available, or likely to be made available by increased subsidies or other forms of assistance to the industry, to support capacity operations in more than the major yards on the two coasts, the St. Lawrence and possibly on the great lakes. One yard has already closed on the west coast and another on lake Ontario, in addition to Geo. T. Davie.
> To what extent closing the marginal yards has been accelerated by the progressive reduction in subsidies to builders, currently 25 per cent and to be lowered over the next three years to 17½ per cent, is difficult to say. Certainly, it has done nothing to slow the process. The fact remains that with the slowdown in naval and other government construction and with commercial contracts originating in the coastal and fishing traffic, the business just isn't enough to keep all yards active.

Then Mr. Meyer points out, and the minister also suggested it, that in various types of industry, such as the aircraft industry which is important to the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North and the shipping industry with reference to which I can point to the yard in my own area, there has been some diversification so that various components such as drums for oil companies and so on are now being made. I certainly agree with the minister that one cannot expect the government to do everything. There must be diversification. At the same time some assistance must be given to this important industry.

I should like to continue quoting from the article written by Mr. Meyer. He goes on to say:

> Underlying these considerations, is the absence of a consistent and constructive maritime policy which extends to both builders and operators. It is all very well to establish a frame of reference for rationalization through reduction of subsidies and adoption of competitive bidding for government contracts but with rationalization now progressed to the extent it has, the time has come to assure the continued existence of the remaining yards.

I should like to emphasize the last sentence in particular, that the time has come to assure the continued existence of the remaining yards.

I do not intend at this time to go into the matter of naval contracts. I know that the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East will wish to speak on that subject. However, I wish to point out that according to the latest statistics employment in Canadian shipyards has dropped from 17,000 to 9,000 men.

Mr. Jamieson: Over what period?

Mr. MacEwan: During the last year or two, I believe. I can give the figures to the minister later. Right now I do not wish to delay my colleague. Perhaps the minister could advise us whether or not these figures are right. They are the latest figures, and I believe they cover a period of two years.

• (4:50 p.m.)

In any event, suggestions have been put forward by various representatives of the shipbuilding association and various shipbuilding companies. I believe this article, of which the minister is well aware, by Mr. Axelson, the editor of Canadian Shipping and Marine Engineering News, contains some suggestions which have been used quite effectively in other countries. I was interested in the table appended to the article, which points out the assistance given in other countries. One suggestion which has been made, of course, is the continuation of subsidies. In this regard I should like to mention subsidies to fishing trawlers. The minister may say that the fishing industry is in such bad shape that it does not need new trawlers. However, industries have been set up in this country which have been given generous subsidies, up to 50 per cent. I can see that the brake should be put on the shipbuilding subsidy program. I believe the minister should consider the possibility of granting subsidies for the modernization of trawlers, for instance, from a side trawler to the stern trawler type. This would relate to existing companies. When the minister is attempting to arrive at a policy he should consider the fact that it is most important that we have modern trawlers. I can think of several established companies that could benefit from such a program.

[Mr. MacEwan.]

Another aspect to be considered is tax concessions. I know this is done in other countries. Consideration could be given to long term financing and depreciation allowances. I believe that when the hon. member for South Shore spoke in the throne speech debate he made some suggestions concerning what he called investment allowances which are used in the United Kingdom. When these suggestions are all tied together they form a most important element in the consideration of this matter. A policy decision by the government in this regard is urgent.

I noted with interest an article, and I do not intend to go into it, by Mr. Papachristidis of Montreal, who is one of the leading shipowners in this country. He made some very interesting suggestions for helping not only our marine policy but the establishment of a Canadian merchant marine and assistance to Canadian shipbuilders.

I believe that is all I wish to say at this time except that I should like to stress again the necessity of arriving at a policy at an early date which will assist the Canadian merchant marine and also our important shipbuilding industry. I was interested to note that the brief from Montreal quotes the words that are imprinted over the doors of the House of Commons, "The wholesome sea is at her gates, her gates both east and west". Now, is it strange that we should love this land, our land, the best? I hope the minister will not forget that we are a maritime nation and that shipbuilding concerns are of importance to the economic life of Canada. They are vital to us as a coastal country. I hope there will be a revitalization of our subsidy program or that some of the other suggestions I have made earlier will be put into effect. We will be waiting with some anticipation outstanding results from the minister.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, among the multitudinous activities of this department which were outlined rather interestingly, I thought, by the minister, there was one of special interest to me and I believe to a great many Canadians who drive cars or trucks. I refer to that branch of his department which I believe is known as the Canadian Specifications Board. Among the responsibilities of this board is the setting of standards of safety for the construction and operation of vehicles. Those of us who were members of the last parliament recall the number of bills put forward by members on the subject of automotive safety. These bills were referred to the justice and legal affairs committee and we had the benefit and counsel of some of the officers of the specifications board. I think I can speak for all members of that committee when I say that we benefited from their advice.

The work of the specifications board is of extreme importance to almost all Canadians. Every year about 5,000 Canadians are killed on the highways of the country, 150,000 are injured and some $600 million or $700 million per year is the economic loss resulting from traffic accidents. It can be seen, therefore, that the specifications board carried a very heavy responsibility on its shoulders because this toll is really warlike.

About a year ago, Mr. Chairman, following the report of the justice and legal affairs committee, the government announced that it intended to set up a new program under which a public safety board, would be established. This board would encourage and expand the work of the specifications people in the interests of Canadian safety. We applauded that decision, but actually very little has been done toward implementing the government's announced program. The performance of the government in this regard reminds me of the performance of some of the sports cars one sees throughout the country, not much speed but a great deal of noise.

I realize that the minister concerned with the safety program is the Minister of Transport. Every few weeks we ask him what is being done about setting up the public safety board as well as encouraging the work of the specifications people with regard to the components of the vehicles. We get very little in the way of a satisfactory reply.

I have received complaints from an automobile dealer in Ottawa to the effect he does not wish to sell a car which he is importing because there are no standards set for the safety of a three point seat belt. This car is equipped with such a seat belt but he does not want to sell it because he does not want to take the responsibility for marketing an article for which there is no specified standard of quality in Canada. This is his complaint to me. I urge the Minister of Defence Production, who has responsibility for the specifications board, to do all he can to speed up the activities of that body. If possible, perhaps he could go beyond that and encourage the Minister of Transport to spare some time from looking after harbours in Vancouver and housing across the country to get some action in establishing the very necessary public safety board to deal with matters of automotive safety in Canada. I find it difficult to imagine anything that is more important or would save more lives than a better policy for traffic safety.

Mr. Jamieson: May I answer a question that was asked earlier? I do not know whether the hon. member is in the house at the moment but I am sure he will get news of the answer. I said I was not sure what our involvement was with regard to the purchase of drugs. I am told we do buy all drugs for the Department of National Defence, Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of National Health and Welfare. In addition, we are quite prepared to discuss with other agencies, including provincial agencies, possible joint purchasing programs. This is a matter that is under review, and I gather some initial discussions in this regard are taking place.

My hon. friend who asked about the New Liskeard is no longer in the chamber so I will keep the answer to his question until later.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I have a series of questions more than anything else at this stage of the minister's estimates. May I join with previous speakers in congratulating the minister on his new role and I wish him well. Many of us will be looking to him on a continuing basis as time goes by for answers to our questions.

The minister mentioned drugs, and I must not let the opportunity go by to ask those who purchase drugs not to get involved with counterfeit drugs about which I have been harping in this chamber for the last few weeks. I have indicated to the minister that there is sufficient of a contraband substance, which is the constituent of a very popular brand of drug made in Canada, in the hands, I understand, of the Mafia to produce some 10 million tablets. To date about 500,000 tablets have been recovered. I simply indicate that there are 9,500,000 of these tablets made from counterfeit drugs on the market. Whether this substance has all been converted to tablet form yet really does not matter because the conversion is very easy. However, I would ask the minister, in the interest of our veterans and hospitals across Canada, to exercise caution in this matter. The department purchases its supplies in bulk and it is very easy to slide in a few hundred thousand tablets of counterfeit drugs.

The questions I want to ask today are fairly varied. I need not elaborate on them because I think the minister is familiar with at least one of the areas I am concerned about. I refer to the relationship between the government's defence purchasing agency and the plant of Fairey Aviation of Canada which is located at Eastern Passage, just outside the city of Dartmouth. I would ask the minister, at some later point in the discussion of his estimates, to bring the house up to date on a number of questions that were asked by representatives of the international association of machinists and aerospace workers. Members of the House of Commons were also present at the time in the minister's office. In this connection I am pleased to see the Minister of National Defence with us in the house.

There is one way in which these workers can receive assistance. I refer to working-out parties at the Canadian Forces base, Shearwater. I might point out that Fairey Aviation is a highly sophisticated and key industry within the metropolitan area of Halifax and Dartmouth, and must be sustained over what is going to be a rough period for the next two or three years.

Up to about two years ago a substantial number of workers not only from Fairey Aviation but from other related firms, such as electronics and radar manufacturers, in order to facilitate the work of the maintenance people within the armed forces at the naval air station were permitted to do technical jobs at the base. At times, this outside work force numbered, if my memory serves me correctly, in the order of 65 to 70 men. However, as a result of the cut-backs that were made during the last two years at Shearwater the situation has changed. In 1960, just eight years ago, 811 shopmen, that is to say, men working in the shop using tools and instruments—sheet metal workers, airframe and engine mechanics, painters and so on—worked at the base. Today there are 317 and actually that figure has been reduced further as of last Friday, though I do not have the exact number.

On the other hand, in the same year, 1960, there were 187 people employed in the management branch. Today there are 221. So we have the number employed on the management side growing and that on the workshop side reducing. I am not in any way suggesting that the company is in error here. Perhaps it is simply the result of the company endeavouring to build up a competent engineering and sales staff so that it can diversify its production. As the minister is aware, the workers realize the necessity for the company moving away from total reliance on military purchases to the area of commercial production—to diversification, which I think is the word most commonly used today.

As I say, I should like the minister to bring me up to date on this situation. I also hope the Minister of National Defence is in a benevolent mood in this regard and will see fit to reintroduce work contracts, if only on a from time to time or interim basis. This will be one of the most useful and readily accessible tools to enable the Minister of Defence Production to assist the plant in sustaining itself over this most difficult two year period. It seems to me that two or three weeks ago an order did emanate from maritime command to employ a small working-out party composed of 12 or 14 men for a specific project at Shearwater.

The policy that has been in effect for, I imagine, about 18 of the 20 years in which Fairey Aviation has been located in this area seems a not unreasonable one, particularly in light of the alternatives. These are pretty straightforward: either close the plant down, or both management and union make an appeal to the government for work under a regional development program. This would involve a department not yet formed and assume policies not yet enunciated or, I suspect, completely thought out. I suggest that the first alternative is unthinkable in terms of its effect on the economy of the Dartmouth and Halifax county area. Its impact on the tax assessment rolls and on the corner store would be the same as anywhere else in Canada. Perhaps the minister would throw some light on this situation.

I would also be grateful if the minister would tell me whether or not he was successful in diverting any contracts for the Yukon aircraft from Canadair in Montreal. Certainly they would be very useful to Fairey Aviation.

The matter to which I now refer may not fall directly within the minister's purview but I would ask him to give me some explanation why competent aircraft inspection teams are finding that roughly 50 per cent of the recommended overhaul, repair and maintenance work is not being carried out by the air force at this time, particularly work on Argus aircraft. Is the reason simply shortage of money? Perhaps there are some specific modification programs that can be deferred without danger to the safety of the aircraft, the air frame, the engines or any of the radio-navigational aids on board.

It is important that the Fairey matter be dealt with quickly. If it cannot be dealt with quickly we should be informed.

I want to know the present status of the general purpose DX program in the United States, as this has some relation to our participation under defence production sharing arrangements with regard to the bear trap or haul-down device for rotary winged aircraft. Perhaps the matter is classified and I shall therefore understand if it cannot be dealt with now. Perhaps the minister might tell us the present disposition of the bear trap program as it relates to our own four destroyer escorts. When may our plants anticipate receiving the benefits of this additional work? Is there a contract for it? Is there any competition? Also, will the addition of this instrument have any great impact on operations?

An earlier speaker touched on the McDonnell-Douglas DC-10 program. I think the minister and Canadian industry generally are to be congratulated for the way in which the matter has been handled. This program is probably the largest single acquisition that has come our way for a long time. That is true, certainly, in the field of commercial aircraft. The dollar benefits are almost unpredictable. Engineers of the Canadian aircraft industry and individuals who took a leading role in this matter are to be congratulated for creating a proper atmosphere which was conducive to the favourable negotiations with the McDonnell-Douglas people. Though the Fairey people have a small part of this contract I wonder whether the minister could make sure that they receive some additional work under the program. I apologize for rambling on about Fairey aviation. Generally the aircraft industry in Canada is in a healthy state. Companies have diversified and are keeping busy. Most of them are expanding rapidly in the field of aircraft and aircraft components and allied fields. Unfortunately Fairey aviation appears to be the one company in Canada that is encountering trouble.

May I also ask the minister to bring us up to date on our four new DDH's—the words stand, I think, for destroyer and helicopter deployment. I have had trouble pronouncing them though we all know what they mean. On February 21 of this year I placed on the order paper the following question which I shall read in part:

1. What is the present total estimated cost for construction of the four new destroyers, including the equipment costs of these ships?

2. When will the review of the bids for the construction of these ships be completed?

And so on. The minister replied that the estimated cost of construction is between $220 million and $225 million. I ask the minister whether that figure has changed since February 21, 1968. If so, in what quantity? Perhaps I should ask, what is the quality of the change? Have components been changed or have they become more expensive? If they have been changed, are the changes substantial? Have the minister's colleagues asked him to buy bigger and better equipment for the ships? An elementary question is, what type of propulsion unit is to power these ships? One type of unit was contemplated and a hull designed for it. Then the unit was changed, the one finally chosen being a gas turbine, I understand.

Mr. Jamieson: If the hon. member wishes perhaps I might resolve that matter quickly at this time. The hon. member quoted the figure that was given in answer to his question, between $220 million and $225 million for the four vessels, and that figure still stands. I am sure my hon. friend will not ask me to differentiate between a DDH-280 and a DDH-283. It is anticipated that two will be delivered in 1971, one in June and one in November, and the other two in 1972, one in June and the other in September. The propulsion units are gas turbines. I hope the hon. member will not ask me to go too deeply into the technical aspect. I know they are approved types of gas turbines to be supplied by United Aircraft of Canada Limited, in Quebec. The estimated price of the propulsion units is about $44.2 million.

Mr. Forrestall: Is that $44.2 million for the four vessels?

Mr. Jamieson: That is the total contract.

Mr. Forrestall: Has the minister been alerted to possible increases in the cost of this program?

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Chairman. For once in our lives the estimate that was provided over one year ago is hanging pretty firm. I am advised that the total amount, as contained in the answer, is to be between $220 and $225 million or in that neighbourhood.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister ought to quit while he is ahead.

Mr. Forrestall: If he can keep the cost to those figures I shall apologize for any unkind remarks I may have made. I had anticipated the cost rising to the neighbourhood of $400 million for the four vessels. I hope I am wrong. I congratulate the minister on his ability in keeping this type of program within the confines of budgetary commitments. Perhaps it is too early to ask this question but perhaps the minister could tell us what policies are to be followed with regard to purchasing the equipment for these ships, particularly with regard to components having to do with automated fire control systems and so on? Are these specially designed things for which research grants are made available to industry in the hope that industry can develop a special program, or are we simply going into the market and inviting submissions on such equipment? Can the minister answer this question now?

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Jamieson: Not in the detail which the hon. member has suggested. However, in connection with the major items, about 167 contracts have been let for these four destroyers. The main contracts, of course, relate to the propulsion machinery. There is also the Sea Sparrow missile system which is being developed by Raytheon, Canada, Limited, and the five-inch gun—

Mr. Forrestall: The minister need not trouble to go over the whole list. Would he simply tell me how they were purchased?

Mr. Jamieson: It was all in line with the normal kind of purchasing we do. In some cases there was a special requirement and it was obviously necessary to order from a supplier who was exclusively able to provide it, but wherever there was a possibility of competitive tenders being called—and this was in the vast majority of instances—this was done.

Mr. Forrestall: I thank the minister for that information. There are other detailed questions I should like to ask but I shall wait until we get off the generalities of item one. For example, I should like to ask the minister to tell us in some detail what his projected spending on the fleet will be after his present program is completed. I will ask this question in the light of Admiral O'Brien's remarks in Halifax over the week end when he expressed concern about our present ability to meet our commitments. I should also like to ask the minister later about the hydrofoil program, and whether or not the hon. gentleman and his colleague, the Minister of National Defence, are any closer to a decision about the refueling tanker, or the role of the CF-5. What order of expenditure is the minister budgeting for through the next four or five years? But I will wait until we reach a more appropriate point—items in connection with which we can be given information in some detail. Again, I wish the minister all the best in his undertakings.

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Chairman, allow me to make a few remarks about the estimates under consideration this afternoon.

The study of that department's estimates reminds me of a question I asked last Friday. I was wondering if any attention was paid to the reports of the experts who stated that a saving of $10 million was possible should the maintenance base for jet airplanes in Winnipeg be closed and transferred to Montreal. I hope that this needless expenditure which would be incurred if the base were maintained will be considered because it has been asked that it be phased out gradually until 1973.

I hope that the department representatives will accept to meet the members of the Q.F.L. to discuss the recommendations made by the committees of experts. We receive at our offices reports and studies of all kinds and if, after the statements by the experts, the need to make those studies over again is felt, there will be no end to all that, and I feel that the fact that a saving of $10 million can be made by moving the base from Winnipeg to Montreal will weigh heavily in favour of that move.

Like the member who spoke before me, I should also like to draw the attenton of the house to the Lauzon shipyard. I know it well, for several of my friends and relatives work there. We were not indifferent to the human tragedy that occurred there in 1967-68. We kept hoping that the member for Lévis (Mr. Guay), would mention to the house the disaster which left over 1,000 workers unemployed. The situation is odd for two miles further up the river from the shipyard known as "le petit chantier"—since the Davie Shipbuilding yard is still in operation—which belonged to Canadian Vickers and was sold to Davie Shipbuilding, there is the Lévis ferry-boat crossing. Ferry-boats would be needed there to transport cars between the two shores without some cars having to wait, as long as two hours sometimes, on the Quebec side as well as on the Lévis side.

Now, while workers at Lauzon are looking for work because they refused to go to Newfoundland—after having lived there for 20, 25 years, with their families, their friends, their common heritage, they did not want to leave Lauzon—there is a shortage of boats nearby, and subsidies are not even made available to provide for larger and faster ferry-boats between Lévis and Quebec. Some of the ferry-boats now being used were built in 1927 and in winter they cannot take more than 25 cars at one time when, in fact, 1,000 cars per hour should cross from one side of the river to the other.

Here is an example of what goes on in that part of the province: last Friday, it took me one hour and ten minutes to fly from Ottawa to the airport at L'Ancienne Lorette; it took me exactly one hour and fifteen minutes to cross the Quebec bridge, on my way from the airport at L'Ancienne Lorette to Saint-Nicholas. We put up with that because the ferry-boats between Quebec and Lévis cannot take cars for lack of space. Everyone uses the Quebec bridge and the situation is deplorable.

There are anomalies, such as stupid statements of which, amongst others, that were made last week by the member for Quebec East (Mr. Duquet) who spoke instead of the Grande Hermine. He did not know where the Grande Hermine was hiding. He went to Montreal then to Quebec, to be told by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) that instead of giving work to the labourers at the Lauzon shipyard, the Grande Hermine would finally be taken to Lauzon, and winter there. They are trying to save face by talking about the many advantages of the proposed Cartier-Brébeuf park, but nothing is done to diminish the unemployment which affects many families on the south shore.

Unfortunately, the hon. member for Lévis has not yet expressed his views. We, on this side of the house, expected him to mention this deplorable situation. I see that he is not in the house today—incidentally, he is not here very often—and the people of his riding must often think that they might as well not have a representative in parliament. Unfortunately, my friends believe that silence should be kept concerning situations of this sort.

Mr. Chairman, in concluding my remarks, I would like to say that we support the idea of a merchant marine, since our workers want to work and are ready to give the best of themselves, but we do not want to see sacrificed for nothing these ships which have cost millions of dollars.

For example, a Greek, Mr. Onassis, who recently married Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, once bought a Canadian ship for only $70,000. Today, that ship is apparently worth $500,000. If we already had ships which cost millions of dollars to build, I cannot understand how one man was allowed to make such a huge profit—they say he is worth $500 million—while we in Canada, thanks to the St. Lawrence which is open to ships of all nations could have built up a merchant marine of our own which we would still have and which would prevent a few individuals from getting rich at Canada's expense.

In closing, after these few remarks, I ask a question to which I hope I shall get an answer. How can we explain the transfer to Newfoundland of the Lauzon shipyards in an attempt to force our Lauzon workers to go and work in Newfoundland which, for us Quebecers, almost means a deportation.

We, on the south shore, judge as abnormal such a deportation of workers to Newfoundland. We would rather ask that shipyards such as those in Lauzon continue to be prosperous as they were during the war.

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I hope that in his native tongue the hon. gentleman was not using the word that came through in translation. I am sure he did not mean to suggest that people from Lauzon are being deported to Newfoundland. We are a little removed yet from the category of Devil's Island.

[Translation]

Mr. Dumont: The minister might wait until tomorrow to read my statement to the effect that the Lauzon workers who were forced to go and earn their living in Newfoundland on account of the subsidies granted to that province thought they were deported.

[English]

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, on rising to speak on the estimates of the new department of supply and services I also offer congratulations and best wishes to the minister, but as a new member and a comparatively modest businessman I am a wee bit suspicious of the words he used today in explaining how he will go about operating his department, taken in conjunction with words he used recently in Newfoundland.

The operation of his department, as he pointed out, is a heavy responsibility. The minister is charged with the duty of spending $1 billion for purchases for various departments. I wonder how he can reconcile his statement today with a statement he made recently in Newfoundland defending the waste in spending by the premier of that province. In Newfoundland he said:

> Unless we are prepared to gamble with the future we will find that in 50 years we are a sorry duplicate of the maritime provinces.

He went on to say:

> If it comes down to good hard logical and taking chances then there is no question as to which side of the argument I am on.

I sincerely hope that he does not apply this gambling technique, which has been so harmful to the financial situation of Newfoundland, in carrying out the heavy responsibility involved in spending the vast sums of money over which he has charge.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I hope he will give sympathetic consideration to a petition forwarded by the citizens of Stephenville who are facing the disposal of the Air Canada terminal building there by the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. When he receives their brief I hope he will decide not to dispose of the terminal building to anyone but the citizens of Stephenville.

Mr. Jamieson: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member would like to qualify his opening gambit. For the record, what he quoted was probably essentially correct but to some extent it was lifted out of context. However, that is beside the point. I am not aware of any petition which has reached my office yet, but I can assure him that it will receive every consideration. May I ask the hon. member whether it is due to arrive shortly?

Mr. Marshall: I have a copy in my hand. It was given to me as I left to return to Ottawa. I think the minister's copy is on the way but if it would help I am willing to lend him the copy I have.

Mr. Jamieson: If it does not reach me within the next day or so I shall let the hon. member know.

Mr. Coates: In a general way the Glassco commission was fairly critical of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation in its present form. The minister did not mention the corporation in his opening statement and I would like him to enlighten the committee on his intentions with regard to this agency.

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I guess I ought to apologize for not referring to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. The reason I did not is that there is not a particular vote with regard to it, and I was merely looking at the different headings in the estimates. A number of suggestions put forward from time to time with regard to the corporation, including suggestions by the Glassco commission, have been implemented. I am satisfied that present procedures are an improvement on what they were previously. We have a very aggressive general manager in crown assets today. He, along with the president of the board, has been reviewing their techniques and procedures. A good deal has been done. For myself I am not entirely happy that we have got the optimum situation yet. I have begun a series of reviews with crown assets on their methods and practices with a view to increasing the corporation's productivity and its returns to the Canadian taxpayer.

The hon. member for Central Nova asked me a question about the New Liskeard. This vessel was to be phased out and there was a time lag between the time she would no longer be serviceable and the time when her replacement, The Quest, now under construction, would be ready. It was determined in the first instance that the amount of work intended to be done on her was really too costly in reference to the length of time she would be in service. Therefore the decision was made not to proceed with her repair and overhaul.

Subsequently it was suggested that there might be a period during which she would have to be employed before The Quest was ready, and so absolutely minimal repair and overhaul proposals were made. Again in a third phase, as The Quest program was stepped up and it became evident that this vessel would be available more quickly, it was decided not to proceed with any expensive repairs.

The hon. member for Frontenac made reference to Mrs. Kennedy purchasing a vessel from us previously. Mr. Chairman, I would be only too glad to enter into negotiations with her about the New Liskeard in a few months.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to get in a question all afternoon. I had not realized that my hon. friends were so adept in presenting their viewpoints, and I had figured that these estimates would have been passed quite some time ago.

We were all impressed by the minister's opening statement. He showed by his attitude that he is very capable of running his department. We are also happy that the Minister of National Defence has the attitude he has toward the eastern part of Canada. He has been very co-operative with my colleagues on several matters. The question I wish to ask is not directly related to the minister's department. I am thinking of the national defence training base in the most easterly Canadian province. Some time ago questions were asked of the minister about Russian activities off the east coast of Canada. These aroused quite a bit of interest in the eastern part of Canada. We on the east coast are always a little leary of Russian activity and we recognize a need to step up defence activity on the eastern seaboard.

Second, we perhaps are a little bit—how should I put it—unhappy about the fact that despite the billion dollars which is being spent in Canada annually under the Department of Defence Production and I suppose the Department of National Defence very little of this money actually is being channelled into the easterly province to which I am referring. I wonder whether the Minister of Defence Production or the Minister of National Defence would ract to the reasonable suggestion that a national defence training base be established in the province of Newfoundland in view of the recent activities by Russia—and in view of the fact that it would stimulate the economy of that area.

The Department of Defence Production has been stepping up activities one way or another in the area of Gander, Newfoundland. I know there have been some discussions concerning the provision of housing in that area involving about 100 units. Could the minister enlighten me on the degree to which that program has been adopted by the government and the extent to which we will have these housing units which are badly needed? I think the people of the town of Gander would be very happy to have some clarification concerning this matter.

Mr. Jamieson: I congratulate the hon. member for his ingenuity in getting in a representation in respect of a defence base. Under the circumstances it is a good effort. As a Newfoundlander, apart from my ministerial functions, this has my full support. This is under review in respect of the whole defence program.

With regard to the housing project the information I have is that a number of alternative plans are being examined and a number of submissions have been made. I would hope that in a comparatively short time a decision will be made concerning which of the proposals made by a number of firms will be accepted.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question on the subject of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. Could the minister tell the house how much was realized from the sale of the centennial caravan, if in fact the centennial caravan has been disposed of? While he is answering that question could he tell the house how much the caravan cost the government of Canada and how much was realized from its sale? What I have in mind—and the minister is quite familiar with this—is the interest that was expressed in the centennial caravan by the government of Newfoundland. The premier of Newfoundland or someone in the government made a statement to the effect that the government of Newfoundland expected to get the centennial caravan for a nominal sum after centennial year. We hear reports now that the caravan is to be disposed of through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. I am wondering whether in fact it has been disposed of and how much was realized in the sale. I should also like to know why the caravan was not turned over to the government of Newfoundland.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I cannot be specific in my answers to all these questions without consulting with the officials of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. My information, to the best of my knowledge, is that the fisheries college in Newfoundland has expressed an interest in obtaining, I believe, three of these caravans. Initially they were interested in one and subsequently they were interested in two others. As far as I am aware the arrangements have been completed. I do not have in my head the detailed information concerning how much was paid or the basis of the sale, but I shall be pleased to obtain the information for my hon. friend and see that it is provided to him at the first opportunity.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, earlier in the debate I quoted some figures concerning employment in the Canadian shipbuilding industry. At that time I believe I stated that the figure fell from 17,000 to 9,000. I believe the minister is aware of the publication from which I took this information. It is a chart of the Canadian shipbuilding and ship repair association. The figure of 17,000 was in the year 1952. This has not been the average figure for years. I know that the figure for 1961 was 10,000. In the last two years it was 12,893, nearly 13,000. As of July of this year it was 9,603. Furthermore, I have figures from the association which show that as of August this year the average employment in Canadian shipyards was 8,995. So there would appear to be quite a decline. I just wanted to straighten out the figures for the record.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question concerning the sale of the centennial caravans through the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. Is the previous practice of putting materials up for tender still in effect?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Chairman. This is one of the matters which I suggested I would investigate further in order to determine whether or not we could improve this method. There is no deviation from the tender process. As the hon. member knows, certain agencies, first of all the federal government, the provincial governments and the municipalities, have priority. This system is in effect, but there may be room for improvement and we are examining it. It may be that the bulk system is the best way to do it or it might be that there could be some improvement whereby smaller firms, if not individuals, might have access to some of these materiels. But the basic program and policy are as the hon. member stated.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, my purpose is not to follow the minister in his quest for the New Liskeard, but I should like to wish him well in his negotiations to sell the New Liskeard to Mrs. Onassis when it has served its purpose in the naval environment of the Canadian armed forces. As members perhaps know, Mr. Onassis bought a Canadian warship previously and transformed it into a yacht. If the minister is successful in selling the New Liskeard to the former Jackie Kennedy, Mr. Onassis would simply have to paint out the name on his yacht and they could be marked "his" and "hers" in order to differentiate.

There would seem to be a fair maritime flavour about the debate. Like my colleagues I wish to join in wishing the minister well. I do not think too many people realize this, but I believe it should be on record that he was the one candidate for his party in that province who put himself forward to a nominating convention. He was also the one candidate who escaped the avalanche of common sense which otherwise swept over Newfoundland. So I suggest we have here a figure to be reckoned with. Probably the most powerful Newfoundland Liberal is the one who now sits in this chamber. I do not know whether he has pretensions about going back home but in any event we wish him well.

My purpose in rising is to support the request of my colleague the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East with regard to the Fairey Aviation Company and also to utter a bit of a caveat to the minister with regard to his plowshare philosophy. Generally speaking I think this is a fine philosophy, but it has its hazards and pitfalls. After all, defence spending is one of the weapons available to our society as it exists now for spreading out economic benefits to the less developed parts of Canada. I believe it is a useful weapon in the war on regional disparity.

The idea behind our thinking in respect of the Fairey Aviation Company is that we might be able to provide the greater Halifax-Dartmouth area with technicians and people of other skills. Besides being of help to an area where there is regional disparity this would be a useful equalizer so that everything does not wind up in the Montreal-Ottawa-Toronto golden triangle. Therefore, as the minister adopts his plowshare philosophy I hope he will hold something in reserve until new and different programs or approaches appear as alternatives to the decentralized spending of the defence dollar. I hope he will not advance his theory too far but if he can bring it into being, more power to him.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister one or two questions. To what countries does Canada sell war materials?

Mr. Jamieson: I will have to take notice of that question in view of its importance rather than dash off an answer at this time. I will be glad to provide an answer as soon as I can.

Mr. Nystrom: Would the minister indicate what type of war materials Canada is selling to the United States?

Mr. Jamieson: Once again, I would have to give a very general type of answer. By and large my recollection is that it is aircraft and that kind of thing from the aircraft industry. In fairness to the hon. member it would be better if I obtained a list for him. I will be glad to do that to the extent it is possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Chairman, am I allowed to make a simple comment? I do not object either to ships being sold to Mr. Onassis, but I would prefer it if they were sold at cost price plus 10 per cent profit for Canada.

My question deals with the repair work on the New Liskeard. Reference has been made to the ghost shop in Lauzon and the minister replied that it had been decided not to repair her, because she had been replaced.

Was the decision to repair the New Liskeard taken before June 25?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Speaker, I think there were three different decisions as I mentioned earlier. The first was to renovate the vessel to the minimum extent possible. This was subsequently decided against on the ground that the cost would be too great. There was then a need for the continuation of this vessel in service for a minimum period, so minimal improvements were necessary. Subsequent to that it was discovered that The Quest would be ready in time and therefore the whole renovation program was withdrawn or cancelled.

[Translation]

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell us on what date the final decision to postpone the repairs was taken?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: I do not recall the exact date but it seems to me it was some time within the last month or six weeks. I believe it was some time in September, as I recall it.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the minister would like to get his estimates through but I want to refer to a subsequent item. If there are no other hon. members who wish to discuss the first item we could let it pass. My question has reference to the printing bureau.

Mr. Jamieson: I am at the disposal of the committee.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask whether the minister will produce a table showing the increase in the sales of weapons by Canada to foreign countries between 1965 and 1968, with an indication as to what particular countries we sold more of this type of supply.

Mr. Jamieson: This is related to the question asked earlier and I indicated I will do my very best to get the maximum amount of information possible.

Mr. Nystrom: When can we expect answers to these question? Can we expect them right after the supper hour?

Mr. Jamieson: I would expect that it will require a good deal of research. The hon. member asked about all countries. I do not know how far back he wishes me to go. If the hon. member wishes something fairly current I believe I can provide that information after the dinner break. Perhaps I can at least make a partial answer to the question within the context of the current situation.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, the minister will probably have his officials in front of him on the floor tonight. In the event perhaps we could ask our detailed questions then.

Mr. Jamieson: That is correct, but the question asked by the hon. member seeks information which I would think no one would have in his head. I think it will require some research and it may take a little time to get an answer.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I should like to join with other hon. members in congratulating the minister on the very knowledgeable and usual eloquent way in which he has presented his estimates to the committee. I should like to ask him to bear one thing in mind, although I am not sure it is relevant to the subject.

The minister is aware of the difficulties that have been encountered at the C.N.R. drydock in St. John's in trying to get work. There have been a number of lay-offs which have now become almost of an annual nature. Perhaps steps can be taken to anticipate these lay-offs. The minister might use his considerable influence in the government to divert Canadian naval vessels or any other type of vessel to that drydock in St. John's for refitting.

Mr. Jamieson: I will do my best, Mr. Chairman. I am sure the hon. member will run into enormous pressure from his own colleagues, the hon. members for Dartmouth-Halifax East, Halifax and so on.

Mr. Bell: How about the New Liskeard?

Mr. Jamieson: I have some information for my hon. friend about the situation in respect of the St. John's drydock. I will be glad to provide it for him at any time.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty, pursuant to provisional order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. Grace MacInnis)—Consumer affairs—Edmonton—the weight of fudgeicles; the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert)—Airports—Toronto—Expansion of facilities being contested; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Federal government medical plan in 1972.

[English]

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

• (6:00 p.m.)

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS BOARD

SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF AUTHORITY TO SECRETARY OF STATE—EXPANSION OF RESPONSIBILITY

On the order:

Private members notices of motions—Mr. Roberts—That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of transferring the authority over the Historic Sites and Monuments Board to the Secretary of State and of expanding the responsibility of this board from concern for buildings and monuments of unique historical interest to general assistance in the preservation of towns, villages and landmarks of artistic, cultural or historical interest.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Roberts) deposited this notice of motion. He has been away on government business and is supposed to return shortly. Would the house agree to standing this motion in order that it may keep its place on the order paper? I am informed the hon. member will be ready to proceed at the next opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

WATER RESOURCES

CHIGNECTO COMPLEX—SUGGESTED CONSTRUCTION OF DAMS AND CANAL

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give immediate consideration to the construction of the Chignecto complex, with the construction of dams on the Minas Basin, Cumberland Basin and Shepody Bay and the construction of the Chignecto Canal.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is often said that it never rains but it pours, and certainly this would apply today so far as this subject is concerned. I never miss an opportunity to place before members of this house the problems which we face in the Atlantic provinces and some of the ways in which I feel we might be able to find solutions to them.

It is my belief that in this session we have often spent a great deal of time talking about things over which we have little or no control, such as the civil war in Nigeria, and all too little time facing up to the problems over which we do have control if we would only do something about them. I witnessed with a great deal of interest the federal-provincial conference held in February in which the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took such an active part. I listened to his comments about regional economic dispartity in Canada. I heard him repeat them when he sought the leadership of his party last April. I listened once again to discussion of the problems created by regional economic disparity during the election campaign. Yet I come to this house and I am still waiting for the government and the ministers responsible to take some obvious action which will help to eliminate these problems which everyone seems to recognize but which unfortunately no one in the present government appears really to be determined to do anything about.

One of the things that shocked me as a member from the Atlantic provinces was the fact that the Prime Minister would not give special priority to the establishment of a special department about which he talked so much. I am sure that the people of the Atlantic region are becoming more and more disillusioned as each day passes with no indication from the government that it is ready to move forward in the fashion which we had anticipated from the statements of the Prime Minister.

The motion before us, if adopted, would eliminate many of the arguments which I anticipate will be put forward when the final studies are completed on the engineering feasibility of the construction of dams to harness the tides to produce power in the bay of Fundy. I do not think there is any doubt that the project in question must be feasible for it is obvious that in France they have harnessed the tides and as a result they are now the beneficiaries of the power which is available from this source.

I have learned from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of Saturday, October 26, that the Severn river tidal power plant project in Great Britain is being seriously considered, for they too realize the value of harnessing the tides to obtain power.

For a long period of time I pressed the former Liberal administration to try to get them to initiate studies, but it was only after a great deal of procrastination on their part that a body was finally established in co-operation with the governments of the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I understand that the project for the construction of the dams is going forward as fast as possible, but what concerns me is that as soon as the study is completed we will begin hearing arguments about the economic feasibility of the project and about whether or not money of the government of Canada should be invested in a project in the Atlantic provinces. This concerns me because we are the afterthought area of Canada. After everything is done that is required in the other six provinces of Canada the crumbs are brushed off the table for the four Atlantic provinces and we are told: this is good enough for you fellows down there.

This has been the philosophy for 100 years, and in this regard the present government does not appear to be different from the last government. When they were talking about cutting down expenditures, one of the first big cuts of which we became aware was the New Brunswick-Prince Edward Island causeway. In other words, when projects are put on the cutting table they look at the Atlantic provinces first to see what they can take away from them because there are fewer of them and therefore they need not worry about the mess, especially these days when most of the members from that area belong to another political party. This is the sad fact.

As a matter of fact, the premier of Prince Edward Island came here with his 15 cabinet ministers to make representations to the Prime Minister, and it is my understanding that the Prime Minister had only six minutes available in which to hear the premier on this very important transportation link in our area. But this is not something new; it is the old philosophy which has been in existence ever since confederation. It is the kind of philosophy that will do damage to the possibilities we have available in the Atlantic provinces with the harnessing of the Fundy tides.

With these Fundy tides there is another logical project that should follow and that is the Chignecto canal. At the time the St. Lawrence seaway was being built for central Canada we told the people of Canada that we should have the natural extension of the St. Lawrence seaway, the Chignecto canal. The St. Lawrence seaway was built but we are still waiting for the Chignecto canal. Last session I wanted to ascertain just what the people of Canada were asked to invest in the St. Lawrence seaway. Since we are part of Canada, some of our tax dollars went to provide this more efficient method for shipping into central Canada. The figure with which I was provided indicated that the people of Canada expended a total of $541,940,000, or 80 per cent of the total cost. The United States invested $131,054,000. The total cost of the project was $672,994,000. The important factor is not that we spent that kind of money to build the St. Lawrence seaway but that prior to its construction we were told of the great benefits that were going to accrue to Canada, that it would be a paying proposition and there would be no difficulty in getting a return of the invetment that we made as taxpayers of this nation.

In the same question I asked how the principal was being retired. I was told that payments have been made only to the extent of a portion of the interest accrued and therefore there were arrears. In other words, not only is the principal not being retired on the St. Lawrence seaway debt but we are not even getting enough from the tolls to pay the interest. We were led to believe that there was no doubt this would be a paying proposition and that the people of Canda had no need to fear about their tax dollars because they would be returned. I have no argument about the building of the St. Lawrence seaway. I think it was a valuable thing for this nation to have this modern form of transportation available. What I say is, should not we in the Atlantic provinces have a right to expect similar treatment of the kind of projects we have available?

[Mr. Coates.]

Certainly the New Brunswick-Prince Edward Island causeway is one of those projects we should expect to be constructed because it will be of benefit to the people of Canada. For one thing, the completion of this project would eliminate the huge deficits the taxpayers of this nation are required to meet each year to provide transportation facilities for the people in this area.

One of the really serious things this government should consider when it is talking about regional disparity, when it is talking about equality of opportunity, when it is talking about the just society, is that we in the Atlantic provinces should be provided with the same opportunities as everyone else. One of the suggestions that concerns me most in the submission made by Premier G. I. Smith of Nova Scotia to the federal-provincial conference in February is the suggestion that while we move ahead we move backwards at the same time. These are the figures that are so frightening from the Atlantic provinces' point of view. Mr. Smith is talking about regional economic disparity and he says:

> The chief available statistical measure that shows the economic disparity between Nova Scotia and the rest of the nation is per capita personal income. To illustrate the seriousness of this gap we wish to draw the conference's attention to the following examples: In 1961 Nova Scotia's per capita income was $1,097 or 76.5 per cent of the Canadian average. In 1966 per capita income had risen in Nova Scotia to $1,583, 74.2 per cent of the Canadian average.

The important figure is not the amount of money but the percentage. The percentage of the Canadian average was 76.5 per cent in 1961 and 74.2 per cent in 1966. In other words, in those five years we fell farther behind while having more money in our pockets. We fell farther behind by 2.3 per cent. If this trends continues, God knows what is going to happen to the area. There is no hope for the Atlantic provinces of Canada unless we have from the federal government the kind of policies that will eliminate regional economic disparity. Up to the moment there has been little indication from the government that it is taking the problem as seriously as one would have expected from the statements made by the Prime Minister during the period of time he was running for office. What we have to do now is get on with the job, get these projects under way.

While the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) can tell us the amount of money being spent for training and retraining the people in that part of Canada, there is not much value in the training from an area point of view if as soon as the people become trained they go to other parts of Canada for employment. We are not interested in becoming the training ground for workers for the remainder of this nation. But that, Mr. Speaker, is the sad situation today. There just is no choice for our workers. We have to have projects that will go along with the training. Then we will be happy; then we will know we can live wherever we wish to live and have equality of opportunity. This is what this government has not produced and I hope that in the days ahead there will be more indication of action, more indication that it is endeavouring to do something about some of the things over which we have control and less talk about what is going to be available in the just society 15 years hence. We are interested in what the government is going to do today, not what it is going to produce for us 15 years from now. We are waiting for this government to move.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): The hon. member who put this motion on the order paper, Mr. Speaker, has used it as a narrow base from which to deal in a broad fashion with the subject of regional development. I think this is a proper matter for us to talk about in this chamber this evening. I am not suggesting it was not in order to do so; I think it was quite in order that he should broaden his remarks as he did. I am very pleased that he did so because it gives me, and I hope my colleagues on this side of the house, the opportunity to deal for a few minutes with some of the projects and plans of the government in the field of regional development.

Before I do this, Mr. Speaker, let me comment for a moment or two about the launching pad for our debate this evening, if I may call it such, the motion that is specifically before Your Honour for debate. The hon. member who put the motion on the order paper seems to suggest that this house should ask the government to proceed with a project without really taking the opportunity to assess the feasibility and financial consequences thereof.

I do not think my hon. friend would want the government of Canada or indeed, as he properly pointed out, the governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, all three of whom are engaged in a study that is being carried out by the tidal powers programming board, to embark upon such a project now. As the house knows, this board is investigating the physical and economic potential of the development of electric power from the tides of the bay of Fundy and the transmission of this power to markets in Canada and the United States.

This is an investigation that is, as I say, being carried on by all three governments and will provide a realistic assessment of the feasibility of tidal power development in the Atlantic region and its potential effect on other aspects of area development, including among other things the Chignecto canal. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, putting the matter on that rather narrow base, I think we should reasonably and realistically wait until this investigation has been concluded and we have the board's report.

I say this, Mr. Speaker, because all hon. members will agree that we cannot do everything we want to do as quickly as we would like. By "we", I mean those of us at the federal and provincial levels who are concerned with regional disparity. Therefore some priorities have to be established, and it is important that the governments concerned wait for the board's report. In the meantime, and indeed after the report has been received and assessed, we should try to establish priorities so that the not inexhaustible amount of money involved can best be spent in correcting regional disparities particularly in the Atlantic provinces.

I think my hon. friend has probably read the remarks made by the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) in Halifax a week ago tomorrow night when he spoke to the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. I think it would be timely for us to talk of regional development at this time because we can do so in the context of the minister's remarks about the sort of broad area of operation that he foresees for his department.

With respect, Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend was being a little unduly critical in suggesting that nothing was being done by the department in this regard. I should like to take a minute or two to refer to some of the things the minister said in Halifax last week, and also to mention that although the legislation has not been presented to the house yet—again, it is a question of priorities; we have been dealing with other very important legislation—the minister did say the other day that it would be presented as quickly as possible, or at least pretty soon. It is, as I say, a question of priorities.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, the department is not at a standstill. Under the other legislative authority that we have, the Government Organization Act, the minister and his officials have been putting together this new department, and since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) expressed his intention of setting up this new department a good deal has been done.

I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, the question of priorities in determining the projects about which we should be thinking for the Atlantic provinces, as well as the necessity for waiting for the report of the board. May I refer for a few moments to the minister's speech which he delivered at Halifax. In dealing with the question of priorities in regional development he had this to say:

> That realization has brought us to phase three in the history of regional development, represented at the federal level by the decision to set up a new department with comprehensive responsibility for planning and co-ordinating action for regional development.
> That involves much more than the federation of existing programs, in order to eliminate duplication and improve government efficiency. I don't undervalue that. But there is much more to our objectives.
> The new department is being created essentially because regional development is a matter of top priority for the federal government.
> "If the under-development of the Atlantic provinces is not corrected—not by charitty or subsidies but by helping them become areas of economic growth—then the unity of the country is almost as surely destroyed as it would be by the French-English confrontation."

The minister then went on to say:

> Those are the words of the Prime Minister, and there are many more to the same effect.

That indicates, Mr. Speaker, the importance of priorities and indeed the importance placed by the Prime Minister on the work of this department.

In dealing with the task before the department, in his speech to APEC in Halifax last week the minister had this to say:

> We have to see that the forces of economic demand operate more consistently across the country. Or, to put it in another way, our job is to see that economic growth is dispersed widely enough across the country to provide equal access to opportunities of productive employment for Canadians everywhere.
> That is what I mean by a regional development policy. I mean that the federal government is prepared to take special action where it is needed to bring opportunities up to standard. Broad national policies for employment are not enough. And it is not sufficient just to add to them a variety of area plans and agencies. There has to be a comprehensive structuring of government action to regional needs.

[Mr. Honey.]

I was with the minister on his visit to the Atlantic provinces last week, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to put this proposition to the hon. member who sponsored this motion. I suggest there would not be anything like majority agreement in the Atlantic provinces with some of the suggestions he made in his remarks a few minutes ago. I had the opportunity of talking to the people there and I do not think that they would agree with his appellation of them as "have-not" provinces. All of us who are responsible for trying to even out opportunities and incentives in this country are doing the best we can. We may not all be perfect, of course, and other governments prior to this government have tried to do their best. Nevertheless there is always room for criticism. The general impression that I gathered from spending two days in the Atlantic provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia—and I believe the minister to whom I am responsible shares this view—is that the provincial governments and the federal government are working well together.

• (6:30 p.m.)

There was, indeed, a great concentration of effort to assist the Atlantic provinces, and perhaps I might be permitted to indicate some of the things this government and its immediate predecessor have done in that direction. I do not want to be overly critical of my hon. friend who sponsored the motion, but his remarks leave the implication that little has been done.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Honey: I want to put certain information on the record and then, if there is time, I shall gladly answer my hon. friend's questions. Let me deal first with the Atlantic Development Board and some of the expenditures it has made in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am in a difficult position, not having heard the presentation of the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates). I therefore cannot determine whether the remarks of the parliamentary secretary are about to fall within the confines of the resolution now before the house. On the other hand, if there is no objection, perhaps the parliamentary secretary might be allowed to continue.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, since my remarks were pretty far ranging I think it only fair to allow the hon. member wide latitude in his remarks.

Mr. Honey: I thank my hon. friend who sponsored the motion. I think it is fair to have a wide ranging debate. I was referring to approved expenditures of the Atlantic Development Board as of September 30, 1968. Those expenditures can be summarized as follows: Newfoundland, $41,879,008; Nova Scotia, $40,392,260; New Brunswick, $37,818,470 and Prince Edward Island $7,022,000.

In addition there are projects of a regional nature which cover more than one province, and here I refer to pollution abatement equipment and that sort of thing. The total amount committed for those projects is $2,025,000.

In addition, the trunk highway programs have total approvals in the second agreement for the four provinces of $30 million; in the third agreement the approvals for the four provinces are $25 million. In addition, special assistance to Bell Island stands at $1,750,000. That is the approved amount, since I am only referring to approved amounts. In the case of Bell Island $357,331 has been spent so far. Then, of course, the expenditures with respect to the operating expenses of Dosco are $2 million.

These figures are with regard to the Atlantic Development Board, and in the few minutes that remain to me I should like to refer to the cumulative expenditures in the four Atlantic provinces with regard to various other regional programs undertaken between April 1, 1965 and March 31, 1968. I will give the totals, Mr. Speaker, and I ask leave of the house to have this table appended to Hansard since this will save much time. The table was prepared by officials in the Department of Forestry and Rural Development. Under the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act total expenditures for the four provinces stand at $2,852,473. Under the ARDA program the expenditures total $7,971,345. Under the FRED program in New Brunswick only the figure is $4,284,207, and under the area development agency programs the total is $5,357,543. Grand totals are shown in the table. I ask leave of the house to have it appended to my remarks in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table referred to above is as follows:]

CUMULATIVE EXPENDITURES FOR PROJECTS

Period: April 1, 1965 to March 31, 1968

Province	Rural Development Programs				Area Development Agency Programs	Grand Total
	M.M.R.A.	A.R.D.A.	F.R.E.D.	Total
	$	$	$	$	$	$
Newfoundland	—	1,133,814	—	1,133,814	114,587	1,248,401
Prince Edward Island	336	1,208,057	—	1,208,393	196,532	1,404,925
Nova Scotia	1,385,798	3,359,920	—	4,745,718	1,827,993	6,573,711
New Brunswick	1,466,339	2,269,554	4,284,207	8,020,100	3,218,431	11,238,531
Total	2,852,473	7,971,345	4,284,207	15,108,025	5,357,543	20,465,568

I think that is all I can usefully say. Again I thank my hon. friend who sponsored this matter for the opportunity afforded to have a wide ranging debate. If we are to achieve our great potential in this country we must, in the Atlantic provinces and in the rest of Canada, put our shoulder to the wheel and make these programs work in co-operation with provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has a question to ask.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): My question has little relevance now, Mr. Speaker. I was hoping the parliamentary secretary would compare developments in tidal power and the St. Lawrence seaway project. Programs are only good, bad or indifferent when compared with other programs, and I think it unfair of the hon. member to tell us only what the government has done without also telling us about some other matters.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thought the hon. member was to ask a question.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): My question is of little value now, Mr. Speaker. I think, for a just comparison to be made, the parliamentary secretary ought to tell us not only of amounts expended on programs in the Atlantic provinces but of amounts expended on like programs in the rest of Canada. Does he not know that the Sydney operation has been kept going only because of the efforts of the provincial government? The refusal of the federal government to act in that area is well known.

Mr. Honey: I do not want to take much time to answer that question. I understood that the sponsor of the motion referred to the St. Lawrence seaway project in passing. I did not think from his remarks that he was critical of that program. Perhaps we ought to return to the substance of the debate.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Does the parliamentary secretary know why the St. Lawrence seaway was developed?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): As a seconder of the motion I wish to indicate my support for it. The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North deserves credit for bringing forward this question again. He has been persistent and consistent over the years, both when he was in the government party and out of it. He has supported the subject matter of this motion and has put his thoughts on the record in a clearcut way.

I was pleased to hear that the parliamentary secretary attended with the minister the recent meeting of APEX in Halifax, but I am sorry he did not display more enthusiasm. He seems to reflect an attitude that has been prevalent for the short time this government has been in power, that of stalling on reports, looking into this and that, and trying to break promises. We would have been more pleased had the parliamentary secretary returned from his trip to the maritimes and said in this house: I am sorry about conditions in the maritimes; I am sympathetic; I will do all I can; I do not know the details, perhaps, but I am in favour of doing something to bring the just society to the maritimes. Instead, he tells us that the government needs to wait for another report. He says: We must look into this; we have to know where we are going. It is the same story; it goes on and on.

I want to say there have been many reports on this Chignecto project and every one of them to my knowledge has been favourable. As a matter of fact, in 1891 there was a full communications system built up over this canal; the remains of the old Chignecto railway are still there today. We realize that it takes a long time for projects to sink in. Even the Prince Edward Island causeway idea took a long time before the government accepted it, and started to work on it. Now that the causeway is almost completed we think hon. gentlemen opposite should turn their minds to another project.

I know there are many other hon. members who wish to speak; this is one of the most enthusiastic private members hours I have seen for a long while. I hope that members other than maritimers will support this motion. In conclusion, I voice once again my support for the canal project, and the power project which in itself is bigger then even the Churchill falls scheme. With nine million horsepower at three mills it is better than Churchill falls. I hope the government will stand up for its principles, abide by its election promises and get right on with this tomorrow. Let us not find these pre-election promises turning into post-election corpses.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to the motion of the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates), first of all, because it deals with a project now under study for the Atlantic region and, secondly, because area development interests me very much.

[English]

I should like to congratulate one hon. member of this house—he is sitting in the chamber now—who was instrumental in getting this study going when he was premier of the province of New Brunswick. I refer to the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. Flemming). Back in 1966 a board, known as The Atlantic Power Tidal Program Board was set up to study the feasibility of using the tidal power of the Chignecto complex. I do not think it would be wise for the federal government to accept the motion before us until the report of this board is received. We must remember that the board includes representatives not only from the federal government, in particular the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, but of the governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I do not take this attitude because of any failure to support the project: I think it is a viable one, and I support it entirely. But the government has to plan its affairs; there must be some timing in this program, and I cannot agree with the hon. member from Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) that the federal government should, starting tomorrow, spend large sums of money in the absence of further study.

I agree entirely that any further expenditure of money in the Atlantic provinces must be well thought out. There have been programs in the past, not without value, which did not really keep pace with changing conditions. Some of the programs were good at the time, but experience of industrial changes and new developments proved that they needed to be changed. I was happy to read a speech the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) made in Halifax last week, in the course of which he said his department would be concerned mainly with planification, and that they were thinking in terms of 15 years. I believe this is a serious approach. Quick efforts to find speedy solutions to a big problem are not the answer. The government must study and co-ordinate programs to be brought into being in the years ahead. If the same is done by governments which follow it, we from the Atlantic provinces can hope that some day we shall enter the mainstream of Canadian economic life.

I do not agree with some members that as soon as a need is seen we should try to kill it with $50 million or $100 million. After all, this money comes from the pockets of Canadian taxpayers, and anything done in the Atlantic provinces should be done for the good of Canada as a whole. In my view there is a need for Canada to develop the Atlantic provinces. I support what the parliamentary secretary had to say about any further programs being the result of serious studies and good planning. This is what is needed. However, I should like to go on record as supporting the motion of the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North, because the project referred to is a good one. It is important that the Atlantic provinces should use their resources to sell services or tidal power to the rest of this country and to the United States. However I do not think it would be proper for the government to accept the motion at this time.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I want to stick my neck out a bit this evening, as the former senior member for Halifax said on one occasion. Coming from Halifax it is perhaps unseemly for me to support a project which in its execution and development might have a detrimental effect on Halifax. But this opinion was expressed in the late 1800s; I do not think it has much validity in 1968.

In any event, we are not talking this evening about unimaginative projects which require continuing study forever and a day. This is a concept which has been examined by study groups since before the turn of the century. Its engineering aspects are well known to everybody likely to be interested. The possibilities of the development of tidal power are also well known. As my hon. friend who moved this motion told us, tidal power is now being generated in Europe, for example in France, and in England on the Severn river. Tests on a limited scale have been carried out in the lower areas of the Annapolis river and at the head of the Annapolis basin. From an engineering point of view we know that this is feasible. From the studies done by the tidal power study authority we know there will be no detrimental effect caused to the phenomena of the tremendous tides in the Minas basin by the establishment of baffles, because in effect this is what the dams would be. We know that these things are possible.

We want to see the government move ahead effectively. That is what my motion, No. 28 on the order paper, seeks. We want to see some action. The only thing that stands in the way is finding the appropriate time to move into the money market. We all know that. To play games with the matter for four or five years more is absolute nonsense.

The development of the tidal power would be the type of project that would stem the outflow of 20,000 people a year from our area. At this date its magnitude in terms of the economy of our area is beyond comprehension. Those who have taken a cursory glance at the potential of the project, or at the studies that have been done, will understand me when I say that the potential energy to be derived from this project would be greater than of any other hydro project in the world.

It would mean much to us in terms of a simple servicing industry. It would call for plants that would do nothing but build giant turbines, because turbines would quickly wear out in this type of project and would need to be replaced. The energy developed would enable us to attract some of the reduction industries to our deep, natural harbours. These would provide more employment and build up the marketing potential of the area. There would be a continuing demand for secondary industry.

The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Honey) has said that we cannot jump into these things, and that we must study them. Of course we must study them, but we have been studying them for 100 years. How much longer must we wait until we get some action? A Liberal government has been in control of our destiny for some 28 of the last 35 years. Maritimers are on the doorstep of one of the most critical periods in their history. Quite frankly, sometimes I think we would be a lot better off if we looked a little more to the south.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Forrestall: You live somewhere else in Canada, where you enjoy some of the benefits of this country; but we don't get the same benefits. The answer given to the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) was that we cannot go willy-nilly into these things. But nobody is suggesting that we should go into these things with our eyes closed. What we are urging is that the government do something about this matter now, not in 10 or 15 years time.

Hon. members may talk about the Atlantic Development Board's plan for attacking the over-all problems of regional disparity. Such a program was called for six years ago. Where is it? We are still waiting for it. I am not sure that it is not because it has not been produced. I am not at all sure that perhaps it has not been suppressed. A quick procedure that would realize the potential economic benefits of this scheme would portray the government in the light that many Canadians had hoped for, and which many of them still hope for; and I may say to hon. members on the other side that I number myself among those Canadians. But if members of the government continue to talk and do not do anything about it, nothing will be achieved.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) upon his initiative in once again bringing this matter before the house. He has spoken correctly of the disadvantages which the Atlantic area suffers within Canada. Net average income in the Atlantic area is normally two thirds to three quarters that of the rest of the country, and its rate of unemployment is quite often double that which exists elsewhere. In recent years there has been a net migration from the area of almost 20,000 people a year. Mr. Speaker, I speak as one of those migrants, and I accept the invitation of the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) to indicate the interest of another part of the country, a non-Atlantic region, in this subject.

The parliamentary secretary has outlined what the federal government has been doing in this area, and has spoken of the priorities which exist. I wish he had been in a position to speak also of the priority which the government would be prepared to give to the Northumberland causeway to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret very much that I have to interrupt the hon. member, but the hour assigned for the consideration of private members business has now expired. It being seven o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: The house again in committee of supply on the revised estimates of the Department of Public Works for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969. Vote No. 1 will be found at page 392 of the blue book. The details thereof will be found at page 394.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1. General Administration, including grants as included in the estimates, $31,015,000.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, this is the first occasion upon which I have had the responsibility of bringing before the house the estimates of the Department of Public Works. I want to thank members in advance for the kind consideration I know they are going to give me. I say this in lively anticipation of further favours to come.

I think it would be well if I were to say a few words about the general reasoning behind the estimates of the Department of Public Works in this current year. It has been the desire of the government to cool somewhat the inflationary tendencies that we have found in the economy, and probably particularly in the construction industry. At the same time we are fully aware that we cannot cool inflationary tendencies to the point where unemployment is aggravated or to the point where we fail to supply the requirements either directly on our own initiative or on behalf of other departments. I do not think we have done that in the current year.

It would be false economy, for example, to suspend completely the construction of office accommodation. In the long run this could only add an additional burden on the taxpayers, because the ultimate result would be to force up rentals to an exorbitant level. The office accommodation problem is always with us. No matter what we do, its solution usually seems to be a good long jump ahead of us. Populations in the nation grow and governments grow. Buildings become obsolete in some instances, and new types of accommodation such as buildings with strengthened floors to support the weight of the paper needed to feed data processing systems are required. We find a new situation in respect of the employees of the government. At every level of government we find the situation where employees no longer want to work in gloomy or airless accommodation or in surroundings that were typical of office buildings a half century ago. There has been a very marked upgrading of accommodation in the Public Service of Canada.

There are several approaches to the accommodation problem, all of which are reflected in the current estimates. One is to bring existing accommodation up to modern standards by introducing air conditioning and up to date lighting and generally refurbishing the office workers' surroundings. The other three ways, in increasing order of costs, are to build our own office accommodation, as we are doing in respect of the general purpose office building now rising at Tunney's Pasture, to enter into build-lease arrangements with the construction industry or to rent existing accommodation.

It is hoped that substantial economies in crown construction will result from the adoption of modular co-ordination, which involves the use of standardized units in planning and standardized measurements in the production of building material. I should like to pay a tribute to the department, in that I think it has taken a very commendable leadership in the development of modular co-ordination in the last couple of years.

You will have observed from the estimates that the amount we are spending on harbour and river development has shown a decrease. Some very desirable projects have had to be postponed, but we have been able to retain other important works such as the St. Charles river control structure, Matane harbour, the development of Long Harbour, Newfoundland, and the New Westminster trifurcation project. No interruption has taken place in respect of those very important public works. In the case of the New Westminster trifurcation project, this project should be completed during the coming fiscal year and should result in significant long term savings in the form of reduced annual dredging costs.

The house is aware that a major harbour, capable of handling giant tankers, is being developed at Point Tupper, Nova Scotia. The work will be carried out by the Department of Public Works. This year the engineering plant is well under way in preparation for tender calls in the new year. This, in addition to the already mentioned Long Harbour project, is following a relatively new pattern in the assistance by the Department of Public Works of the development of major resources. These and certain other large harbour projects are subject to capital recapture from the main beneficiaries. This is a trend we have been following in recent years whereby a public works project gives advantage, or contributes in a major way, to the economy of the country. The government has, in other words, advanced for the companies involved the amount of capital required to build docks and wharves. As I have said, this capital requirement in the first instance is recoverable.

The fast developing program of mineral exploration in the north, particularly with reference to oil and gas, accents the role of the Mackenzie river as a main transportation route. The department's dredging fleet in the Mackenzie basin is being used to maximum advantage and such major obstacles to river transportation as the Sans Sault rapids are being eliminated.

Along the northwest highway system, many of the bridges built around the end of the second world war are being replaced under a program costing about $2 million a year. I am speaking of the Alaska highway. In some cases these bridges have reached the end of their useful lives, and in others they were under designed to handle modern traffic. Additionally, a dust abatement assessment program is being carried out in the vicinity of towns through which the Alaska highway passes.

About the time I was appointed Minister of Public Works it was announced that the Canadian government exhibition commission would be transferred to this department. The transfer was completed in September and accounts for an increase of some $5 million in our estimates for the current year.

In line with the recommendations of the Glassco commission and following a survey of departmental functions and operations by a management consultant group, a new organizational structure was devised for the department. Since a year ago last April the department has been operating under a decentralized system, with much of the authority formerly concentrated in headquarters delegated to six regions and 18 districts across the country.

I want to pay a compliment to my predecessor in this post. I think this decentralization aspect and the presence of the government of Canada in these regions and the districts of Canada is a very forward movement. I should like to compliment my predecessor the present Solicitor General for taking this action. A great number of our clients and contractors in the country, and probably a considerable number of members of parliament, are still not aware that the authority granted to these various districts is almost equal to that which could be obtained from our headquarters in Ottawa.

It is my hope that members of parliament will use these district heads from now on in respect of the work going on in the various districts, because the authority granted to these district heads is almost equivalent to that which exists here in Ottawa.

The advantages of decentralization have already become obvious to the department. In placing more authority closer to where the action is taking place our reactions have become faster and there is an increased awareness of local needs. Our performance will continue to improve as the remaining problems in respect of the reorganization are solved.

What I have said gives the committee in the most general terms some of the objectives and problems of the department in the current year. I shall endeavour to see that hon. members are provided with complete and accurate answers to any questions which might arise from a study of the estimates now before the committee.

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have the opportunity to comment on the estimates of the Department of Public Works now before us. I welcome the minister to this post and I hope that his department under his direction will be in a position to do more planning and exercise more foresight than has been the case in the past.

I have already suggested, in my maiden speech, that we should have long term planning. There appears to have been a lack of planning in this and other departments, and perhaps there is also a lack of co-operation. Let me give a good example of what I have in mind.

The National Arts Centre was first estimated to cost about $9 million. This cost was re-estimated at $18 million, but it will now reach something in the order of $46 million. Something must have gone wrong somewhere. I am not against an arts centre but I am against extravagance at a time when this sort of money could be put to much better and more practical uses. It could have been spent to improve the marine facilities for fishermen. I do not blame the minister in this regard, since he is new to this department, but I hope such things can be avoided in the future.

Let me give another example. According to reports I received today the town of Rock Island in Quebec is to have a new post office, despite the fact there have been many objections raised. It has been suggested that the present post office is perfectly adequate and that the reason for building is to provide cafeteria facilities for the four people employed by the post office. Apparently the government is desperate to build a post office at this location.

It has also been brought to my attention today that 26 post offices in Nova Scotia will be closed beginning Ocotober 21, 1968 and carrying on into 1969. Four of those post offices are in my constituency, and I am wondering whether this is justified. I should like to suggest to the department that a new post office be constructed at Parkers Cove. Perhaps the money allotted for the construction of the project at Rock Island could be devoted to some other use.

There obviously is a lack of planning and I hope the new minister will correct this situation. Many large fishing boats have been constructed in the past few years, particularly following the introduction a few years ago of subsidies in respect of wooden ships. These ships have been constructed, but wharves have not been improved or constructed to cope with the increased number and size of the ships. Perhaps there has been a lack of co-operation between the two departments concerned.

In my part of the country we do not have one good deep water harbour. Many fishing boats have been constructed in this area, but why has no major improvement in wharf and dock facilities taken place? The government has paid subsidies on the construction of these boats, yet facilities capable of accommodating them have not been provided. There appears again to have been no planning in this regard.

It is not my suggestion to the minister, as I said in my maiden speech, that every little village should be provided with a new wharf or breakwater. I do suggest in respect of southwestern Nova Scotia that we should maintain and preserve present wharves and breakwaters, while at the same time developing deep water harbours perhaps every 50 miles.

For example, in Annapolis county in Nova Scotia there is a need for at least one deep water harbour. There has been some talk along these lines for many years, and fishermen in the Parkers Cove area have asked for one deep water harbour for many years. The policy seems to have been not to do anything to improve some of these facilities and finally to say that it costs too much to repair them. I think the fishermen would be content if we were to maintain and preserve the present structures that we have, and every so often make any necessary improvements. The same applies to the town of Annapolis which has a large export business of lumber, and pulpwood. The government told one area in my riding that they cannot have a wharf in every little village. I am referring mainly to wharves simply because about 95 per cent of my constituents depend on fisheries. The government told these people that they should try to get together to plan their action, and that when they do so the government will be prepared to go ahead with it.

This has happened in one instance in the Cape Sable Island area. The people got together and decided it was necessary to go ahead with the construction of a wharf at West Head, but the position of the government was that they had no money and could not do this work. Yet the people followed the advice of the government and did what was asked of them. This is another example of what I say is lack of planning on the part of the government.

In my constituency we have 63 breakwaters and 80 wharves, or 25 per cent of all the wharves and breakwaters in Nova Scotia. One good deep water port is required every 50 miles along the coastline of the constituency. There is a need for a deep water port in Pubnico and the Wedgeport area, since the Yarmouth port is not adequate. I will have more to say on this when we come to the details of the vote. For example, Wedgeport has been promised a wharf for many years. We hear the same story in every election, but no action is taken. Last year a wharf broke down in my constituency in Pinkney's Point. This year we find nothing in the estimates to cover the cost of rebuilding it, yet last year it was considered essential. This is what I mean by lack of planning.

In another instance, money was voted last year for a wharf in my constituency, yet no work was done. I could go on to mention every little village and town in my constituency where a wharf is needed but no work is being done. I know the minister is aware of the situation in the Digby area. I am sure he knows there is need for action with regard to a combination regional harbour for an efficient fleet, and there is also need for a permanent crossing. This has been recommended in a report.

During the last election the Liberal candidate in my riding said that the federal government was ready to go ahead with this, but that the provincial government did not want to take any action in this respect. However, my information is different. The one place in which the Prime Minister made a promise during the election campaign was in my constituency respecting the port of Digby. I refer to the $17 million project to improve ferry facilities between Digby and Saint John. The project was to include $7 million for the construction of a new vessel and $10 million for docking and other facilities.

On looking through the estimates I found that half a million dollars was allocated for Digby and $475,000 for Saint John. At this rate it will take ten years for this project to be completed, and yet it has been promised. It has been said many times in the house that there is a need for improved facilities here, and that we will get them soon; yet nothing is being done now, and work will not be started for another couple of years.

This is another example of lack of planning. People are promised things and the promises are not kept. Quite a number of people are employed in the handling of freight at Digby and Saint John. What will happen to these people when the new vessel is constructed? I imagine that many will be out of work, so let us provide an alternative for them.

Let me remind the government of some of their promises given at a meeting in Digby, at which one of the speakers said there is a need for improved transportation facilities and larger wharves, and stressed the need for more adequate harbourage. According to what Dr. Stewart, the Liberal candidate in my riding, told the audience, if the government of Nova Scotia decides there is a necessity for a deep water crossing it should participate in the design work so that any project for marine harbour facilities will be as useful as possible. Again, at another meeting it was said that marine facilities are the backbone of the economy in our area. We must strive for continual improvement of these facilities if we are to have a fair share of the ocean resources available to us. This was stressed not by myself but by my opponent who was then parliamentary secretary to the minister. I wish that some of the funds could be reallocated or divided in a fair way. We have been told there would be a ferry in a few months time. The few months have gone by, but the tenders are not out yet, although I understand they will be any day.

I hope the minister will consider some of my proposals and, in co-operation with other departments, will do some long term planning to solve the problems facing the fishermen. We are not asking that everything be done this year, but we would like to know the plans for next year.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to congratulate the minister on his appointment, and to say that I hope he will last the full four years and that he has no intention of moving to the other place, because his department is a very important one requiring the direction of a senior cabinet minister like himself.

In his opening remarks he mentioned the cooling of inflation tendencies in the construction industry. This is in direct contrast to what the former minister said in his opening remarks last year, when he presented the estimates to the standing committee, upon which occasion he said:

> We expect that this increase in our construction activities for 1967-68 will provide some relief to the construction industry which has been experiencing a decline in its activities.

I should like to point that out to the minister. Here we have a former minister talking about a decline in construction activities while the present minister wants to cool the inflationary tendencies in the construction industry. He also mentioned the improvement in buildings, when putting in more paper. This appears to be the paper generation. I am just wondering if he is the minister amongst the cabinet ministers who wants to be the most Xeroxed. I hope that does not apply to the Minister of Public Works. The minister used the phrase—and it is quite popular these days: This is modular co-ordination. Perhaps he could tell us in more precise terms what he meant by modular co-ordination.

I thought these estimates would have gone to the standing committee on national resources and public works, because of the necessity for a detailed study which would require the officials of the department to give answers to some of the problems that face us. I can recall that when we had those officials before the standing committee last year there was quite an array of them. I notice that tonight there are very few officials in the gallery and it would be nice to know that we could have them available to answer any questions that come up.

The other important aspect is that I thought we could examine the new departmental organization which should be examined on the basis of the functioning of the various branches. As you know, the reorganization was based on the theme of decentralization of authority to 6 regions and 18 districts. The headquarters organization was changed from one based on functions to be performed to one based on the sequence of operations applying to projects. There are three different branches: one, programs and planning; two, design and, three, construction and operation.

Then, there was to be a program evaluation directorate, as well as three separate directorates which would provide financial, personnel and administrative support services. There was also to be a change in procedures between programs and projects. It would have been very nice to have before the committee the full array of officials who are responsible for these different changes and organizations, to give us their reactions to the changes in organization.

One feels, Mr. Chairman, that the minister must be the leader of this department and not the follower. We have found in the past that many civil servants lead the minister to the point where he is just like a marionette. This particular minister, during his period with Indian Affairs and Northern Development, was a leader. I would hope he would lead this department and not be a marionette at the behest of senior officials.

Last year during the consideration of the estimates we were supplied not only with a chart setting for the reorganization but a pamphlet with regard to tendering procedures. If I read this pamphlet correctly, there is a main principle with regard to tendering which is set forth in government contract regulations. This principle is, in effect, that before any construction contract is entered into the contracting authority shall invite tenders. There are three exceptions set forth. The first is where the contract is for less than $15,000. The second is where the contract is one related to a pressing emergency in which a delay would be injurious to the public interest. The third is that the work can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the employees of the appropriate contracting authority.

Now, you can state the general rule that there must be tenders, with three exceptions. This rule applies to four main types of contracts dealing with public works. There are construction contracts, purchase contracts, service contracts and leases. We find this pamphlet also contains a description of tendering, which reads:

> "tender" means,
> (i) with respect to a construction contract, a tender invited by public advertisement, and
> (ii) with respect to a purchase or service contract, a tender invited by public advertisement or from a representative list or representative lists of suppliers.

So, Mr. Chairman, there is the general rule with regard to tendering. It means that with regard to any construction contract treasury approval is necessary unless the contract is less than $15,000. If it is more than $15,000 and not more than $1 million, two tenders are necessary. I should like to ask the minister or his officials just what the breakdown is with regard to the different types of tenders for the different types of contracts. For instance, I should like to know how many construction contracts we had which were between $15,000 and $1 million. How many tenders were made with regard to those contracts? I should like to know also just how many contracts we had over a million dollars where treasury approval was necessary, and just how many tenders we received for them.

The reason for my request, Mr. Chairman, is that I feel the Canadian public have been milked by many contractors on government contracts. The sophistication in contracting firms today is something of which Canadians should be aware. I am advised that some of them have the same ownership but different names. For instance, in the province of Ontario we have about six major contractors, and even though the names are different the ownership is the same. When a tender is given on a government contract, in truth and in fact one and the same contractor is bidding on the job. It does not matter whether you have one, two or five of these particular contractors because, in reality, you have the same owner. They agree amongst themselves who will take the particular government job. Having agreed, the bids are then presented and are slanted to the position where the one that is selected obtains the job. If this is so, I would think the only way to look into the matter would be to get the owners of these different contracting firms before a committee, and make a thorough study of the ownership situation. As I say, the ownership is very sophisticated and is difficult to determine.

As an example, let me cite the Mannix Construction Company in the west. Mannix Construction was a privately owned contracting firm but was sold to a particular group of contractors. Mr. Mannix remained as president, so you can see that the public would believe he was still the owner of the firm. But he is not the true owner. These are some of the things that we, as a committee, should be studying. If we are overpaying on contracts, then we should know to whom we are overpaying. We should know who are the true owners of these contracting firms, because these firms do make contributions to political parties. If this is so, then we should know who is making the contribution. The least the government could do is to have some type of clause in their contracts prohibiting the firm involved from making a contribution to any political party.

These are some of the matters on which I should like the minister to dwell when he deals with tendering on some of the contracts let by the government. This particular department, Mr. Chairman, is going to spend $306 million, which is an increase over last year's $294 million. That is a lot of money and I think we should have full value for it. We should also have answers to our questions.

I should now like to direct my mind to the third aspect of the operations of the minister's department, namely the question of waterfront lots. I am sure the minister remembers the heated debates that took place last session on the subject of waterfront lots in the Toronto area, more especially those in which the former member for York-Humber engaged. During those debates the hon. member obtained a legal opinion from the former minister of public works, and I should just like to make reference to the former minister's remarks on the subject of this legal opinion as they are reported at page 3367 of Hansard for March 29, 1966, where he said:

> Mr. Chairman, last Friday when these estimates were being discussed some questions were raised about the problem created by the practice of fill being put in waterlots along a long stretch of the shore of lake Ontario. The same matter was raised again today. I think I should explain where the responsibility of this parliament lies and how the situation is somewhat complicated by a division of jurisdiction.

Now comes the legal opinion, Mr. Chairman.

> The provinces own the land under the water, in other words, these waterlots, and it can be transferred by them to private owners, as is the case in the situation presently under discussion. When private owners acquire the waterlots the federal government cannot interfere with that in any way. Then the municipal affairs department of the province and the governments of the municipalities have jurisdiction in the ordinary way over building permits and that sort of thing. The federal authority has jurisdiction over the subject of navigation, and it is only in that connection that it is able to have any legislative responsibility and can take legislative action as set out in the Navigable Waters Protection Act. The difficulty in this particular case—and I am very quick to admit it is a real difficulty—is that of a person owning the lot getting a building permit from the municipality in the usual way.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

So from the former minister of public works, Mr. Chairman, you get the legal opinion that this waterfront property is owned by the province, but that there is a divided jurisdiction between the federal authority and the provincial authority.

You might ask, Mr. Chairman, just why I am inquiring about this matter. I should like to ask the minister as to the position of the federal government in regard to the Roberts Bank property in British Columbia. If the position is that the province owns the land under the water, then all that the provincial premier has to do is to convey it to the proper authority, and then the proper authority has full control and jurisdiction over the property. The present minister has taken a very active part in the Roberts Bank dispute and has said that the federal authority has full responsibility. If we were to apply the legal opinion and the reasoning used by the former minister of works, then we may find, Mr. Chairman, that it is the province that has full authority. We are going to spend a great deal of money on the Roberts Bank project, Mr. Chairman, so I think we should clear up once and for all who it is has authority over the waterfront lot on which the harbour is going to be built. We would not want to invest so much money unless we had full control over the property.

The last item I should like to discuss is the co-ordination of his department with others. What co-ordination exists between the minister's department and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. If ever a problem was plaguing Canadians these days, it is that of pollution. I think the Department of Public Works should work hand in hand with whatever department of the federal government has responsibility for that problem. I should like a statement from the minister concerning the co-ordination that is necessary to solve this problem. Whether we like it or not, Mr. Chairman, there is a feeling among Canadians that this problem of pollution appears to be just lying in state at the moment, with the federal authority taking no real initiative to find a solution, trying to rest its case on the argument that the responsibility lies with the provinces.

One can readily say, Mr. Chairman, that there is dual responsibility for this problem on the part of the provinces and the federal government. I should like a clear statement from the minister that his department is taking active steps to meet the problem of pollution by co-ordinating its activities with those of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, while we are dealing with the estimates of the Department of Public Works, I would blame myself if I did not point out to the minister how essential it is not to spend all his budget in some ridings which seem favoured by the government, at the expense of other ridings.

For instance, in my own riding, for a long time we have been asking for repairs to the post-office or for a new building, and it is precisely the Department of Public Works which should look after that. A few years ago, the old post office is Rouyn was repaired and an annex was added which, strangely enough, looks a lot like any hen-house we can see many in various parts of the country. A hen-house which is called the post office, right in the middle of the town of Rouyn, is certainly not very aesthetic.

When I mentioned the fact to the minister—not this minister but the previous Conservative minister—everyone wondered what had happened. Did the government architects lack judgment or did the government not know who to hire as a qualified architect to draw the plans so that our post office would look like one.

We still have that post office in the city of Rouyn which is in the last analysis the metropolis of northwestern Quebec. Beautiful post offices were built in Noranda, Val-d'Or, Malartic. But in Rouyn, it seemed good enough to build an addition to the existing post office dating back to 1928, I think, and it is a sorry sight as far as public buildings are concerned.

Many requests have been made over the years to the present Minister of Public Works and to his predecessors. For instance, there is in Notre-Dame-du-Nord an old bridge which must date back to the time when the Oblate Fathers were living in the old fort at Ville-Marie and there were only vehicles drawn by animals. In those days two ox-drawn carts could meet on that bridge but today, it would be nice if two cars could do the same, but it is rather difficult. Quite often, one car has to wait until the other has crossed the bridge, which is rather a long one. Such a state of affairs in 1968, in a region like Témiscamingue, does not make drivers very happy. Even if those who use horses or oxen today can quite easily cross that bridge, cars and especially trucks have a hard time getting across.

I am told that the department is trying to negotiate the sale of that bridge to the provincial authorities. I cannot recall for how many years there has been talk of that alleged intention of selling the bridge at Notre-Dame-du-Nord to the provincial authorities, but it belongs to the federal government at the present time. We have been waiting to hear about it for a long time. I understand that the budgets are not generous enough to allow the Minister of Public Works to authorize such constructions at the present time, but a start must be made. People have been asking for a new bridge at Notre-Dame-du-Nord for over 10, 15 or 20 years and the money has never been found to build one. Even when the riding was represented by a Liberal member, under a Liberal government, or by a Conservative member, under a Conservative Government, no way was found to improve that situation.

There is another problem, which is serious enough for the farmers of Temiscamingue: Lake Temiscamingue, one of the most beautiful lakes in Canada, is eroding its shores. For years now the government has been asked to build retaining walls to keep the waters from eroding the land of farmers who have been settled along the shores for several years. There again, we are told that the budget does not allow it. Still, during the election campaign, some time in May, a Mr. Bédard, a civil servant of the Department of Public Works, went over to grant small contracts in the riding of Temiscamingue to repair the wharves or, for instance, to put up $125 or $150's worth of rubber along a ramp. An amount of $125, $150 or $200 was spent per parish and people were told: See how generous the government is towards the people in these parishes.

They were given suckers just like that, at a cost of $125, to the extent where some contractor in a small parish came to see me at one point with a paper signed by Mr. Bédard authorizing him to do $225 worth of work. He said: The government does not want to pay me right away. You know, Mr. Caouette, I am a Liberal but could you not help me to get an advance of $225 from the bank at Rouyn? I then told him: Go to the Imperial Bank of Commerce in Rouyn tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock with your little paper signed by Mr. Bédard, and the manager will probably lend you the $225. If he refuses, tell him to call me. When the man told the bank manager to call me, the latter said that there was no need to call me, and that he would lend the man $225 on the strength of the note signed by Mr. Bédard.

That, Mr. Chairman, happens during election campaigns. I see the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry shaking his head.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Laniel: Just Beauharnois.

Mr. Caouette: Just Beauharnois. That is a lovely riding, but the hon. member is not quite as handsome as his riding.

Mr. Chairman, I will be told that that is but a slight case of political patronage. It is indeed. Why send a junior officer of the Department of Public Works? I sometimes call on senior officials in the department and I am treated very pleasantly. I get very good replies, for which I thank those who run the department. However, why send Mr. Bédard? Why, first of all, was he sent to give out small sums of $125 or $150 for slight repairs to be made to a wharf? These people are wasting their time with such money-tricks, trying to win votes and train organizers paid for the duration of the election campaign.

Mr. Chairman, this is a method which I would not use. I do not sit on the government side of the house; I could do such things, but I do not. People are free. But when important works must be done in a constituency, Mr. Bédard should be there and make appraisals. It is in such circumstances that Mr. Bédard should render a service not only to a political friend of the government, but to the public as a whole.

Now, with respect to the Department of Public Works, I have nothing else to say this evening, because I do not want to delay the consideration of the estimates. However, I insist that the minister and the officials should seriously consider the logical requests, whether they come from a Liberal, a Conservative, a Créditiste or a New Democratic constituency. It does not matter. All Canadian citizens, whatever their allegiance, pay taxes to the federal government and they are entitled to be treated on the same footing and with fairness. If we want to establish social justice and the just society, it is time to restrict petty political patronage during election campaigns and to act intelligently in the best interests of the people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister to consider the possibility of acceding to my requests for the constituency of Témiscamingue. Since other members are making requests for their constituency, I am doing the same for mine.

In the first place, as for the Rouyn post office, let us demolish the hen-house and build a post office.

Then, as for the bridge at Notre-Dame-du-Nord, it is essential to rebuild it. In addition, the shores of Lake Témiscamingue should be developed so as to protect the land. In fact, we have wonderful land in the constituency of Témiscamingue, but if we permit erosion by the waters of lake Témiscamingue, later on, we will have problems other than those which we now have.

Therefore, I call the attention of the minister to the immediate needs of the constituency of Témiscamingue.

[English]

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for South Western Nova alluded to the cost of the arts centre. Before going further could the minister tell us whether it is proper to discuss the estimates of that building at this time? This matter, as hon. members know, is before the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, and we were told in that committee that it might be dealt with in the public works estimates. Is it to be dealt with in detail this evening or is it to be left to another committee?

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): Mr. Chairman, I can probably shorten this discussion by saying that the National Arts Centre is to be dealt with in the estimates of the Secretary of State and should not be discussed under the present vote. In any case, as the hon. member knows, the matter is now before a standing committee of the house.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Chairman, I wish to bring to the minister's attention a serious situation in my riding, in which he may be helpful. In my riding of Cochrane is the town of Kapuskasing in which is a landmark known for many years as the Kapuskasing Inn. This is a solid brick and steel building worth about $750,000. It was erected some years ago by the Spruce Falls Power and Paper Company and was used as a hotel until recently. A few weeks ago the building was closed because it represented a liability; the company is not in the hotel business. I happen to know that the company in question would be interested in making this building available for community use, provided some good use would be served by it. The provincial government has looked into this, and is still considering it.

I have asked two departments of government whether they would be interested in this building. I asked the Department of Manpower and Immigration whether the building might not be used as a training school for the forest industry—the most important industry in our region. I asked another department whether it could not be used as a cultural centre, because there is none in existence in northern Ontario at the present time. I happen to know that this building which is worth, as I say, $750,000, could probably be purchased for a nominal sum, perhaps even for a token amount of one dollar. It is true that a few thousand dollars would need to be spent on its renovation.

So far these efforts have been futile. Various departments have replied with quotations from the rule books. I think this is a special case, one which is not covered by the rule books. It is not every day one can buy a beautiful building for next to nothing for the people's use. But not one of the departments of government appears to be interested, so I ask the minister whether he will take special note of this project—whether some means could not be worked out whereby this fine building would remain where it is and be used for community purposes. Otherwise, next spring it will be torn down, and this would be a tragedy to happen to the skyline of Kapuskasing.

There is another point I should like to mention. Many members of parliament have been concerned about office accommodation in their ridings. I know governments are hesitant to make any pronouncement on this question because it is not popular politically, perhaps, to announce that the government is willing to establish offices for members of parliament in their ridings. At the same time, there are a number of ways in which something could be done. For example, when there is a public building belonging to the federal government within a riding it seems to me space could be made available in it for the use of the member of parliament, at least when he is seeing people in his riding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I see by the estimates that improvements and alterations are going on to the federal building—it is a post office—in the town of Cochrane. I know for a fact that room could be made available in that building, or that at least a small corner could be provided for a member to take his messages and see people, at least when he goes to his riding at the week ends. I do not think anyone in the house would be against using public buildings in this way, so I would ask the minister to consider carefully whether this privilege could not be extended to members wherever no additional expense would be involved. I do not think this is unreasonable.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, first of all I wish to echo the last words of my friend for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) who asked that premises be found in public buildings to accommodate the members, so that they might have a place to meet their electors. Indeed, I believe I speak for the official opposition in saying that if the government were willing to build such premises to make it easier for members to meet their electors, we would agree with the party in power.

If my colleague would kindly stop speaking with the minister, I would continue my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, the minister should take note—I believe he has done so already—of the unanimous request of the house. Though it may be said in certain quarters that the minister may only be temporarily assigned to that department, were he to provide each member with an office in his riding, I would say that he is a great Minister of Public Works. That is a necessity.

Most of the members do professional work which often requires them to see their clients as well as their electors. If the government in power, through the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing), decided to provide in each riding, in public buildings, premises where the members, not only the members of the government, but also the members of the opposition could meet their electors and discuss their needs. I say, in advance, to the minister that such a decision would certainly be welcomed by the members of the official opposition.

Often, there is a tendency to minimize the importance of public works; yet, to my mind, they constitute a refund, a dividend to all the taxpayers. This department is important, especially in the ridings located along the St. Lawrence river, and I also wish to emphasize at this point, the particular geographic location of the riding I have the honour to represent.

Supply—Public Works

Mr. Chairman, if we study the estimates of the hon. Minister of Public Works, we can say that once again Quebec is discriminated against with regard to the amounts allocated by the Department of Public Works to projects which should be carried out in Quebec.

• (9:10 p.m.)

If we refer to page 397 of the Blue Book, we find that in relation to other provinces, we receive lesser amounts and are not treated on an equal footing as far as concerns our needs and services that the Department of Public Works should provide. This gap could be filled now by the appointment as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works of the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Langlois), to whom I have not yet had the opportunity of extending my congratulations. I therefore congratulate him now for his appointment but, at the same time, I assign him a task, that is to watch over the amounts allotted to Quebec with respect to large scale projects that Quebec municipalities claim from the federal government and that come under the Department of Public Works. This is the task which the member for Chicoutimi, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works will have to accomplish during his term. Considering his interest and affection for Quebec, I am sure that he will succeed.

Mr. Chairman, since the Liberal government has taken office, that is since 1963, the policy regarding the building of retaining walls along the St. Lawrence river has changed. When our party was in power, we built several such walls. However, the municipalities or the water-lot owners had to prove that the erosion was due to navigation and the Department of Public Works sent engineers to complete a survey. If there were sufficient grounds for the complaint, the municipality or the water-lot owners received the funds required to build a retaining wall. This happened along the St. Lawrence river, in Saint-Joseph-de-la-Rive and Saint-Irénée in my riding.

However, I am told that, for the past two years, the policy of the Department of Public Works has changed completely. Therefore, the time has come for the minister, during consideration of his estimates, to clearly define the policy of his government with regard to the construction of retaining walls along the St. Lawrence river. I made several requests in this regard lately to the department; it seems impossible, under the new policy of the minister to find out for sure whether the erosion is due to navigation. If the land has been eroded and if the properties located along the St. Lawrence are in danger, it is because the department has not built, in due to time, the necessary retaining walls.

I should also like to deal tonight with the dredging and the building of marinas.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that the provincial Department of Fish and Game, in co-operation with the Department of Rural Development, has prepared plans for the construction of marinas, in various ridings in the country.

As far as marinas are concerned, for the last three years I have been asking the federal Department of Public Works to tell us whether it is really interested in dredging in places where marinas could be constructed in my district, as well as at Pointe-au-Pic, Tadoussac, all holiday resorts where dozens of sailing boats are coming every day from Quebec, along the St. Lawrence. Those sail boats and others need shelter so as to be able to continue their trip towards the Saguenay, up to the beautiful constituency of the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Langlois).

I would also like to know whether the minister has a policy to announce as far as the building of marinas along the St. Lawrence is concerned, especially at Pointe-au-Pic, in my own constituency, and at Tadoussac.

Mr. Chairman, before the election, a committee was set up in Quebec for the purpose of inquiring into the possibility of using fully Beauport sand bars. I know that members from the Quebec area looked into the matter and that city councils also met to study, in co-operation with experts, the possibility of using Beauport sand bars as an extension to Quebec harbour facilities. I am aware of the fact that both municipalities and chambers of commerce of the Quebec region were presented with a brief and reports. However, from the time this government was returned to power on June 25, nothing has been said about it.

Mayors of the Beaupré shore asked me lately to raise the matter in the house.

Mr. Duquet: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Asselin: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Duquet: I would not like to embarrass the hon. member—

Mr. Asselin: No, this would not embarrass me at all.

Mr. Duquet: The hon. member is not unaware of the fact that a 1,000-foot-long wharf is being built at a cost of $2 million, the second one to be erected on the Beauport sand bars at the mouth of the St. Charles river. Another wharf of the same size was constructed last year. This is something worth mentioning.

Mr. Asselin: That is a small beginning. I shall revert later on to the matter of the St. Charles river.

In 1965, the government and government members from the Quebec area publicized widely, in conjunction with the chambers of commerce and the municipalities, that they were to launch a huge project for the development of some of the Beauport and Beaupré sand bars.

I am very happy to have this information and I thank the hon. member for Quebec East. Of course, I cannot get this information as I do not sit on the government side of the house, but all the same I thank the hon. member for Quebec East. But if this is all, we are no longer dealing with the project of the Liberal members as well as the municipalities and the chambers of commerce concerning the use of the Beauport sand bars. If it is a beginning, so much the better. I hope the hon. member for Quebec East and those of the province of Quebec will do their utmost to convince the Minister of Public Works to go ahead. And if the hon. member for Quebec East needs the humble contribution of the member for Charlevoix, I am at his disposal.

There is also the much debated question of the St. Charles river. But, Mr. Chairman, here I am praising the hon. members opposite.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Langlois: Keep it up, you are doing fine.

Mr. Asselin: When the mayor of Quebec City states publicly that the matter of the St. Charles river does not concern the hon. member for Quebec East, he is making a big mistake. That matter concerns not only the hon. member for Quebec East but also all hon. members from the Quebec area because it should have been settled a long time ago. And if the hon. member for Quebec East is entitled to political thanks, he should get them all. If he has worked, as he seems to have, on the St. Charles river project, he should be free to state publicly that this matter concerns him as much as the mayor of Quebec City and as much as hon. members from the Quebec area.

The hon. member for Quebec East should continue his efforts, so that those of Quebec City as well as the agreements concluded by the federal government and the provincial government may result in practical and concrete action. The inhabitants of that area have endured unacceptable conditions for a long time. I think it is time that Quebec City as well as the provincial government, with the co-operation of the federal government, take definite steps to end the pollution of the St. Charles river. It is a terrible thing for Quebecers to admire such a beautiful river which is polluted and, in my opinion, represents a real danger for the owners of riverside properties who live there.

Mr. Duquet: It has been settled.

Mr. Asselin: So much the better, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Quebec East tells me that the matter has been settled. He is justified in keeping his political merit, because he needs it. If the mayor of Quebec City tells him to mind his own business, he is wrong. For once, I agree with the member of Quebec East. I congratulate him for his work; indeed, I suggest that he should continue to settle the important sanitation problem in that magnificent part of Quebec City which if it were developed according to the wishes of the public, would perhaps become the most charming site of Quebec City.

Mr. Chairman, since 1963, my constituency has not been spoiled by the Department of Public Works. From 1958 to 1963, $4 million were spent there. Almost all the wharves in the constituency of Charlevoix had been constructed or rebuilt. I was unable to build a few others, because I was defeated in 1963. I would like to draw the attention of the minister on the wharf of Ile-aux-Coudres, in my district. This wharf is deteriorating and it is very useful to tourists who use the ferry between Saint-Joseph-de-la-Rive et Ile-aux-Coudres. I have made representations in this regard to the Minister of Public Works. I have even asked the engineers of the department whether blueprints had been submitted to the department in order to try and repair the wharf of Ile-aux-Coudres or to add thereto a cage 200 feet long so as to allow year-round navigation. I wish the minister would consider this. I understand Quebec engineers have submitted to Ottawa blueprints for the repair, reconstruction and addition of a cage to the wharf at Ile-aux-Coudres. But no amount has been allotted yet in this year's estimates for improvement.

The minister may not be aware of it—but the members of the Quebec area know it—that for the last few years, Ile-Aux-Coudres has pre-eminently become a touristic ground. During the last four months, the provincial government has made available a ferryboat for tourists who come to visit the fine riding of Charlevoix. This ferryboat has been completely full during the tourist season in spite of all kinds of difficulties she has had to face to moor alongside the wharf of Ile-Aux-Coudres. I shall pester the minister until I know what happened to the plans and specifications that were prepared by the engineers of his department for the reconstruction of that wharf, which I feel is urgently needed for navigation.

The hon. minister must be aware that Charlevoix is a seamen's riding. There are numerous boat owners who need harbour facilities to carry on with their work. Since 1965, it seems that the seamen of my riding, my constituents, are being penalized for having voted conservative. We are in the dark ages! The necessary maintenance work is not even done to keep the wharfs in proper condition.

Therefore, I am giving the minister fair warning: until I obtain the required information regarding the Ile-aux-Coudres wharf—I know the minister will seek that information—I shall keep at him about it.

The department seemed to indicate that since l'Ile-aux-Coudres and Saint-Joseph-de-la-Rive were a continuation of the highway, it was the responsibility of the province to build and maintain the wharf. However, if this is the policy of the Minister of Public Works, I should like him to tell the house about it. Therefore, I ask him, if he has time, to make enquiries in order to provide me with the information I requested during this debate.

Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, the Department of Public Works is an important department, since it is responsible for the distribution of the taxpayers' money in the ridings along the Saint-Lawrence River, where navigation takes place.

For some years now, as I have said before, the province of Quebec has been discriminated against with regard to the appropriations to that province for the purpose of improving our harbour facilities.

[Mr. Asselin.]

I hope that the honorable minister will take notice of my remarks and I am expecting his answer.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I shall try to act like the good Conservative I am by being conservative in respect of debating time, because I know there are quite a few hon. members who wish to take part in the debate.

First of all I should like to say that the minister's statement was impressive for its brevity. I wish also to pay a compliment to the officials of the minister's department in St. John's, Newfoundland. I listened with great attention to the minister's reference to the decentralization of the Department of Public Works. This is a step in the right direction. When I say this, you can rest assured that the work of the department, at least in St. John's, Newfoundland, is in very good hands in the persons of Messrs. Knight, Whelan and Butler. I have had occasion to talk to these gentlemen, and I may say that I hope the kind of attitude I found prevalent in talking to them is also the attitude of the new minister. I am sure it is. I hope the minister will enhance the very good relations we already have.

The estimates of this department, of course, are always of great interest to parts of Canada such as the Atlantic region because, as my colleague pointed out a minute ago, this is one area where the taxpayer gets little return from his heavy taxation. Quite a change is taking place in the various departments in areas such as regional development, fisheries, post offices, and so on. I am aware that many of these programs, which will be co-ordinated by the Minister of Public Works, must be co-ordinated in co-operation with the various other government departments. We would not like to see tabled in the interim the projects which we hope will materialize in the Atlantic region, before the necessary formal restructuring takes place.

Sometimes governments are apt to become so taken up in the restructuring or setting up of the framework of departments that they forget to govern at all. I hope this will not be an accusation which can be made about this department. I have noticed with some dismay the reductions in the expenditures under the Department of Public Works specifically as they relate to the province of Newfoundland. I notice, for example, that in the fiscal year

1967-68 there were expenditures of $4.8 million under the harbours and rivers engineering services on construction, acquisition, major repairs, improvements, plans and such for harbour and river works and so on. This year the expenditure is down almost $2 million to just over $3 million. In other words, it is almost cut by one half from what it was last year.

I notice too with a little reservation the minister's statement about the cooling off of inflationary tendencies. This has already been mentioned by a number of hon. members. I have one great reservation in this regard, because it seems to me rather contradictory to be talking about regional development on the one hand, thereby suggesting some special arrangement and programs, while on the other hand talking about the curtailement of the operational programs and expendiures.

The minister who is responsible for regional development made a statement to the Atlantic provinces economic council last week in which he referred to the great problems the government has in coming to grips with the necessity for stimulating regional development. On the one hand there is a problem in respect of stimulation of growth, while on the other hand there is apparently a need to cool off inflationary tendencies in areas such as central Canada.

There is a great challenge in this regard because any government program which is adopted on a national basis without regard for regional programs will have an adverse effect on areas such as the Atlantic region. The minister responsible for regional development is quite aware of this. I am sure the Minister of Public Works is equally aware of the fact that we cannot accept national policies and a curtailment of programs and expenditures at the risk of a lack of regional development.

The minister of regional development mentioned that there is difficulty in trying to curtail inflationary tendencies in Canada, while at the same time providing employment for the Atlantic region. Surely this necessitates a broadening of programs and government expenditure. This is one of the great contradictions in the various operations of government departments.

I have noticed in the last two weeks that almost every statement emanating from the government benches has had reference to curtailment and balanced budgets. They have referred to cutting down on expenditures. The estimates we have before us now indicate a cut in expenditures in one small area by almost one half. This is contradictory to the philosophy of the present government that it will provide for regional development.

As I stand here today I am almost tempted to go into great detail, and I would do so if time permitted, to give the house a panoramic tour of my constituency. I am sure I would not be criticized because I believe it was Sailor Jack who was very adept at giving hon. members a panoramic tour of his district. I happen to represent almost the same area. I suppose hon. members are quite aware of the district that is now Gander-Twillingate which includes part of Green Bay provincial district, Notre Dame bay and Bonavista bay.

I could mention the various needs of the larger and smaller communities in this area and would like to do so, but I shall honour the commitment I made earlier to curtail my remarks. This will give other hon. members the opportunity to bring some of their problems to the attention of the minister. I hope that as a result of not giving a panoramic tour the minister will give a little extra consideration to my requests, which are reaching his desk every day. Time does not permit me to go into detail to point out the many and varying needs of these fishing communities along Notre Dame Bay and the Bonavista north region.

I represent three islands in Notre Dame Bay with a population of 15,000 people, who survive almost solely by fishing. This is one area in respect of which the minister can show me, as I am sure he will, that the just society will result in something tangible, and that we will receive consideration regarding the very modest requests we have made. We are not looking for great multimillion dollar expenditures, but we are looking for a variety of construction which will result in stimulating the fishing activity in the Atlantic region.

Surely the minister would be happy to recommend to his district and regional officials the implementation of many of the things I will and have directed to his attention. Let me express one grave reservation I have about one particular thing that has been brought to the attention of the minister's department. I represent the great town of Gander, Newfoundland, where the international airport is situated. This is one of the finest towns in the whole of Canada, and if it were given the least bit of government support and encouragement I am sure it would become the capital of the east coast of Newfoundland, and might easily become the capital in many ways of the east coast of Canada. Hon. members are aware of the facts inherent in that statement.

For several years the town of Gander has been in need, but not lobbying for, a new public building. Before I came to Ottawa, some time during the election campaign, my opponent made reference to the need for this public building. I believe there was some preliminary statement about the construction of such a building in 1970. Since I came to Ottawa I have been in continuous correspondence with the Postmaster General about this need to house postal facilities as well as other facilities. About a month ago I obtained a commitment that the new building would be started in 1970. I very happily communicated this information to my constituency, where it was well received.

I was delighted that the government had finally realized an obligation in this regard to provide a necessary structure. Several weeks later I received notification from the minister that, on the basis of information he had, these plans had temporarily been set aside. I am not sure he used the word "temporarily", but he informed me that the plans had been set aside and that postal facilities would be extended in the community and the other people occupying the building, like the R.C.M.P., customs and excise and various other government officials would be farmed out to a number of offices in the community of Gander.

I was hoping that this would not come to pass. In the past few years this has been one of the busiest small towns in Canada. Right now we have a very inadequate public building. What this new plan will provide is modest post office facilities and accommodation for various government department officials in various new offices throughout the town. This is certainly not the way to achieve some of those ends indicated by the minister in his preliminary statement.

The minister said we could not afford to curtail office accommodation. We cannot afford this kind of activity because in the long run it will result in an increased burden on the taxpayer. I urge the minister to take heed of this particular plea. It is not often I get the opportunity to stand in this house and make reference to specific points such as the one I bring to the minister's attention now. I hope he will at least give consideration to investigating this situation and, like the Minister of Transport, I hope he will heed the advice of the people from these areas, because they know all too well the problems facing these communities. I say to the minister that we do need this building and I assume he will take note of what I am saying and have his officials investigate the matter and remedy these present inadequate public facilities in the town of Gander.

I could go on for quite some time outlining a number of problems, but there are other hon. members who have problems of equal importance.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak on the estimates of the Department of Public Works, I hope we can all accomplish as much as we did this afternoon in the debate on the estimates of the department of supply and services. There was such a spirit of camaraderie prevalent this afternoon and there were so many bouquets flying around that one might have thought the government and the opposition had declared a truce.

In the short time allotted I wish only to make one plea, and my request deals with the harbour development in the city of Corner Brook, Newfoundland. I cannot stress enough the vital importance to the future economy of the whole of western Newfoundland of the completion of this project. The port of Corner Brook serves the city of some 30,000 people and it is rapidly becoming the main distributing centre of goods and supplies for western and northwestern Newfoundland and Labrador, an area with a population of over 130,000 people.

The development of new roads and bridges has made this port an essential transportation link and the gateway to the whole new and exciting area of Newfoundland. The central section of the existing Corner Brook waterfront consists of docks of Bowater and Western Terminals and the C.N.R. wharf. These docks which were built on timber piles in 1920 and should have collapsed years ago are inadequate for the volume of cargo passing through them. It was predicted that these wharves would not last beyond 1967. However, at great expense they were planked and stitched together last year, and are in such bad shape that the main carriers threaten they will abandon their service after this season. Trucking concerns will not let their heavy trucks over the wharves for fear of collapse. Last year Western Terminals handled over 74,000 tons of cargo. This could have been much more but for the danger of landing cargoes in excess of the minimum tonnage.

The payroll of the casual workers is around a half million dollars, and some 200 workers are employed. Representations have been made mainly by the chamber of commerce of Corner Brook since 1964 to all levels of government, outlining the critical condition of the wharves and the effect on the economy of the city, and indeed of the whole western part of Newfoundland.

It is noted in the estimate that only $200,000 is allocated toward the provision of new wharving and dock facilities for 1968-1969. However, this money is provided, as I understand, from the Public Works Department for pile testing, designs and other preliminary work. It follows therefore that with this amount of money it will not be possible to start construction in the same year. If this construction is not started next year I should like to point out to the minister that some 200 men will be put out of work and some half million dollars will be lost in pay to these employees. Further, the loss of this service will have far reaching effects on the provision of goods and services to the whole of the great northern peninsula.

If the minister responsible for regional development is sincere in this planned outline for all parts of the Atlantic region, and since the Minister of Public Works will no doubt be working closely with that department, I urge him to heed my request, which is offered with sincerity, to adopt emergency measures so that moneys will be provided to complete the harbour development project in Corner Brook and to save the government serious repercussions which would otherwise arise if this project is not completed next year.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister for some information on several points. Coming from the Vancouver area I wonder what projects are planned to replace those that would have been possible with the winter works program. I have in mind the fact that unemployment figures were very much higher last winter in the months of November and December than they had been in the previous year in those two months, and that there is every indication that they will be going up higher again in these same two months. I wonder what program the minister is planning to supply as an alternative program to the winter works, because I am sure it will be necessary.

He will remember that before we came here at the beginning of this year we attended a meeting of a number of workers from various trades in the North Vancouver shipyards in connection with shipbuilding, construction work and manufacturing. We were impressed by the large percentage of people who were laid off when the winter months came on. I have been looking at the estimates of the department and I just cannot find any project which I believe would be sufficient to care for the number of unemployed people there will be in this winter period.

The second point to which I should like to refer briefly relates to Roberts Bank. My colleague, the hon. member for Broadview, spoke about the recent opinion given by the former minister of public works, that the land comprised by the waterlots is within provincial jurisdiction. I am wondering how this will apply to the harbour and other attendant facilities at Roberts Bank. In other words, I wonder if the minister could let us know how the jurisdiction will be divided between the provincial and federal governments in connection with Roberts Bank, what facilities the federal government intends to build there and what will be left to the province—or perhaps I should say, what the province will leave to the federal government. It seems to me that we would be doing very well if we could get the legal opinion which the Minister of Transport assured us was being sought as to jurisdiction in the matter of Roberts Bank. I should like to ask the minister to enlighten the house as to the jurisdiction of his department in connection with the harbour facilities.

When I was on the west coast recently I heard that the provincial government was planning to take upon itself the building of quite a number of the facilities and that it might even lease them out to foreign companies. I would certainly like to hear what the minister has to say with regard to harbour facilities at Roberts Bank.

There is another matter I would like to bring up. Early this year I received letters from the building service employees union on the coast in connection with a cleaning contract they had with the Vancouver post office. They were complaining that the federal government did not adopt the policy of awarding contracts only to union firms, that it insisted on pursuing the policy of letting contracts to the lowest bidder without any particular concern for what it meant in terms of working conditions for the workers involved.

I took this up with the then minister of public works and he told me that this had indeed been the policy, that it was not necessarily union firms which received these cleaning contracts. I would like to impress upon the minister that in awarding contracts to cleaning and other firms a policy should be adopted of dealing strictly with union firms, because it seems to me to be improper for the federal government to set such a poor example of dealing with non-union firms in awarding these contracts.

There are a number of other matters that I would like to raise but I think I had better confine myself to these three specific points. The first question is, what are the major works planned by the minister as a substitute for the winter works program which will be adequate to handle this problem, one which is always complicated in the sea of unemployment.

The second matter is Roberts Bank. How is the division of facilities going to be made between the federal and provincial authorities and what facilities has the federal government clear authority to build? The third question is this: Will the government consider revising its policy to one of dealing strictly with union firms in awarding cleaning and other contracts in public buildings?

Mr. McGrath: I listened with interest to the minister's statement, Mr. Chairman. I was rather intrigued by his suggestion that members of parliament could refer their requests for various constituency public works projects to the regional head offices. Perhaps he may be able to report on this, because in our particular case I understand that the Newfoundland regional head office is located in Halifax. In many instances I would suggest—and certainly it has been our experience in other areas when we have regional head offices located in the maritime provinces—that they are not fully conversant with the peculiar problems of the province of Newfoundland. I understand that perhaps the minister was referring to what could be considered miscellaneous public works, that is works under a value of $50,000.

I share with other hon. members a certain amount of disappointment over the fact that the estimates have not been referred to the committee. There are a number of questions of a detailed nature which we would like to direct to the officials of the department, and naturally many of us are reluctant to take up the time of the committee with probing questions of a detailed nature. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate referred to the vote under harbours, rivers and engineering services and compared that to the vote last year for Newfoundland. He referred to the substantial reduction. I should like to hear the minister comment on this reduction, because I think our problems in this particular area of public works, which is so important to Newfoundland, far from diminishing are increasing yearly. If anything, we would have expected the estimates under this particular vote, which as I have said is so important to Newfoundland, would have increased substantially. It is interesting to note the comparison of this vote under harbours, rivers and engineering services with the New Brunswick vote.

Even though it, too, has been reduced as compared with last year, nevertheless it is still in excess of the vote for Newfoundland. I do not feel it is unfair of me to point out that in Newfoundland our problems are much more substantial, much more numerous. We have many more harbours, many more marine facilities because of the vast coastline of the province of Newfoundland, taking in as it does the coast of Labrador.

In connection with these estimates, Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer briefly to the St. John's harbour development. I note that the vote for this year for St. John's harbour is merely $100,000. I should like to know, for example, what this covers because we have been hearing now for a number of years suggestions that the Department of Public Works of the government of Canada would be extending the St. John's harbour development to include the eastern end of the harbour. Since some of the harbour development has been completed, there has been a quite unexpected increase in the amount of traffic flowing into the harbour of St. John's. Obviously, this is a direct result of the improved facilities that we now have in that very important port. For example, I should like the minister to tell us if there are plans to proceed with the extension of St. John's harbour. We had hoped there would be some word in this particular direction this year because, as I say, the need is great and is growing steadily.

In so far as accommodation is concerned, I should like to endorse the comments of the hon. member for Cochrane. I, too, am of the opinion that members of parliament, in constituencies where there are public buildings, should be provided with accommodation so they can properly discharge their duties while the House of Commons is not sitting, or indeed while it is sitting. There are many occasions upon which we have to go to our constituencies to attend to constituency public business. Many of us are at a disadvantage because we have no place from which to operate. We have no place in which to receive our constituents, no place in which to correlate our activities in relation to our responsibilities as members of parliament.

In the general area of accommodation, there is an acute shortage in the city of St. John's. I do not believe anyone will quarrel with that statement. We are experiencing overcrowding in our various government of Canada buildings. Many of our departments are housed in temporary quarters which were acquired as a result of the United States vacating military establishment in St. John's. These temporary accommodations are inadequate to serve the needs and various important functions of the federal government.

I feel it is about time the government of Canada gave serious consideration to the construction of a new public building to house these various departments that are now in temporary quarters. This would alleviate the acute overcrowding that exists in the main public building which is now most inadequate to the needs of the government in my province. There is one other important question which I should like to have answered, because I am a little confused about the relationship between the Department of Public Works and the Department of Fisheries. Many of us who come from the maritime areas are continually made aware of this problem.

For example, we go to the Department of Public Works to request a new, modern facility for a small fishing activity in a particular area. The Department of Public Works will tell us this matter has to be referred to the Department of Fisheries. We go to the Department of Fisheries and we are told by the Department of Fisheries that they cannot justify this expenditure because there is not sufficient fishing activity being conducted in that particular area. It evolves down to the old question, then, of which comes first, the chicken or the egg.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, shall I rise and report progress?

Progress reported.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, before we begin the adjournment debate I should like to announce that the business for tomorrow will be as announced last Thursday, namely continuation of the budget debate.

• (10:00 p.m.)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—EDMONTON—REPORTED SHORT WEIGHT OF ICE CREAM BARS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand an Ontario version of an Alberta fudgsicle, a frozen confection on a stick. I have brought it here tonight because there was so much merriment at the word "fudgsicle" the other day I felt sure that a number of members did not know what was meant by the word. I thought I had better give them some general idea.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, the matter is quite serious from the standpoint of the consumer. On July 16 a man in Calgary bought some fudgsicles made by Woodland Dairy Limited of Edmonton. The package advertised that the contents amounted to three fluid ounces. He became suspicious of the weight and volume, made tests, and found that these fudgsicles contained only 2½ fluid ounces. He then became convinced that the public was being cheated one half ounce on each fudgsicle. Not very impressive, I admit, to a lot of members in the House of Commons, but much more so to a mother whose children are continually being given money to buy these things.

This man then took up with the Calgary federal weights and measures office on or about July 17 this matter of the defrauding of the public as a result of this underweight. He wrote to the chief inspector of the Calgary office of weights and measures on July 22, and also wrote the minister in Ottawa two letters dated August 12 and August 19 asking for action to protect the public. On August 28 he was assured by the minister's office that the Calgary office had the matter in hand and would get in touch with the complainant when the report was finalized. In the letter was this sentence:

> The dairy products division will work with the dairy to ensure that all future production is up to declared quantity.

The Calgary complainant decided to employ the independent services of a chemical laboratory to make dead sure of his facts. From the yellow pages of the telephone book he took the name of Chemical and Geological Laboratories Limited and asked them to buy Woodland Dairy fudgsicles wherever they liked, and to give a written report on the fluid ounce measure found. The report disclosed that the average fluid measure, taking all tests and results, amounted to 2.516 fluid ounces.

This is my point, Mr. Speaker. These tests were made two and a half months after the complaint was made to the weights and measures office. As far as I am aware, no final report has yet been given to the man in Calgary who first complained. In fact he has received no information of any kind following the letter from the minister's office on August 28.

The results, Mr. Speaker, are these: First of all, Woodland Dairy fudgsicles continue to be sold at an advertised weight of three fluid ounces when actually they contain only two and a half. There are four other competitors, I might point out, who sell a similar product at the full advertised weight of three ounces per fudgsicle.

In the second place, the public continues to be defrauded by Woodland Dairy Limited.

In the third place, this dairy is piling up profits. It is an affiliate of Palm Dairies Limited, which itself in turn is an affiliate of Burns Foods Limited.

What I want to ask the minister, Mr. Speaker, is why no action has yet been taken which has resulted in the making of a report in this matter. This minister has made good efforts to streamline his department, and I am anxious that he start off on the right foot. I cannot understand for the life of me why after three months no investigation has been made of this small matter—small for an investigation of this kind but a very large matter for the consumers of Calgary and area. It is also a very bad reflection on the credit of a government department which is aiming to protect the consumers of this country. I want to find the reason for the delay in this matter.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in reply to the question raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway I wish to state that the complainant in Calgary was informed on August 28 that preliminary checks had been made on the fudgsicles sold by this dairy company. While shortages in volume of fluid ounces were found to be smaller than those reported to the department, fudgsicles checked by the displacement method had volume content somewhat below declared value. The complainant was assured that the dairy products division of the Canada Department of Agriculture would work with the dairy company to ensure that all future production would be up to declared quantity.

I was also informed, Mr. Speaker, that in subsequent checks by the dairy products division on production of this company, no shortages were found in fudgsicles, and overmeasure in all novelty lines averaged 7 per cent.

In a letter from the complainant received last week he again reports shortages of approximately one half fluid ounce on fudgsicles purchased from retail stores. I am advised that the dairy products division will again make special checks, in addition to its normal program of control, in order to determine whether the reported shortages are indicative of a current production problem or are limited to a small stock from older production.

AIRPORTS—TORONTO—PROTESTS AGAINST EXPANSION OF FACILITIES

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, on November 1 I directed a question to the Minister of Transport which is reported as follows on page 2302 of Hansard:

> In view of the angry and justified protests of the residents of the Mississagua area to the expansion of the airport facilities at Toronto, would the minister reconsider the plans for extension of the airport?

I asked this question because on Wednesday, October 30, 700 persons of Applewood Hills in Mississaugua attended a public meeting at Burnhamthorpe school to study the question, or to protest the expansion of facilities at Malton, at the Toronto International Airport. Two hundred people were turned away from that meeting, between members of the homeowners association and members of the Society for Aircraft Noise Abatement. All there protested the expansion of airport facilities.

Toronto International Airport at Malton comes within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport, and those at the meeting had two main objections to the expansion of the facilities. The first dealt with the question of noise and the second with the question of pollution. Persons at that meeting listened to the recorded sound of a jet taking off, amplified to a maximum 100 decibel tolerance level. They were told that by 1980 jets taking off would be twice as loud as the loudspeaker sound they heard that night. When one considers that 50 decibels constitutes ordinary office background noise, he can appreciate the concern of those who attended that meeting.

Forecasters have indicated that, though Toronto International Airport will handle 4 million passengers this year, by 1980 it will handle 14 million, and 19 million by 1985.

Also, those at the meeting were told that one jet engine while taking off spews out an amount of pollution that is the equivalent of the pollution generated by 225 motorcars starting up. Four jet engines spew out pollution equivalent to that of 900 cars starting up. This causes a tremendous amount of pollution, and one can understand the concern these people feel, especially when this is coupled with the problem caused by fantastic noice. Their homes will depreciate in value, and this is a further cause for concern. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) is in an awkward position, because though he has stated he would like to see an extension to the airport he has to take into account a development in the area which would provide 43,900 housing units—3,900 in the area of Etobicoke and 40,000 at Mississauga. So he has to decide whether he should extend the airport facilities at the expense of 43,900 housing units, or whether to forgo his plans. It has been stated that no decision is expected on the future of Malton until early next year. Insiders say however, there is no alternative to the plan which the minister has set forth. Nevertheless the Ontario department of municipal affairs has issued a booklet which sets out three plans. Two of them would not require further land acquisition, and the third—the one proposed by the minister—would.

It is understandable that the province, and those directly affected, would like to hear about these alternative plans, and have them examined. They would like to hear more about the effects of noise and the extent to which studies in this field have developed. They would like to know how the department proposes to take care of this tremendous noise problem. This is why the minister should hold public meetings, set out the policy of the department, and listen to the objections raised by residents in the area before making his decision. This is why 700 people assembled at Burnhamthorpe school last night to register their protest in connection with a development about which they had not been consulted, and with regard to which there has been none of the participatory democracy the government talks about. The people of this area would like to hear the minister set forth his policy at a public meeting, and listen to the objections.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has received many representations from residents of the Mississauga area regarding the expansion of Toronto International Airport.

For the past few weeks there have been numerous meetings between officials of the Department of Transport and representatives of the province of Ontario, and municipalities involved in the area of the airport. Important considerations such as land use, noise, associated ground transportation systems and trends in the growth of major population areas are all considered at these meetings. It is the hope of the department that from these joint conferences a mutually satisfactory plan for the final stages of the airport expansion will be decided upon.

Immediate interim measures must be taken however, to alleviate the serious overcrowding of Toronto International Airport, which is operating at 135 per cent of capacity. This means the construction of an addition to the terminal facilities now at the airport. Once this addition is completed it hopefully should be able to maintain adequate terminal services until the final expansion is ready for use.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—MEDICARE—PARTICIPATION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon on orders of the day I put a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the answer to which I had hoped would be one of reassurance. I regret it did not work out that way and I hope that tonight there may be a clarification which will be better than we got this afternoon. I asked the Prime Minister in view of disturbing reports in Winnipeg if he would assure the house and the country that it was not the intention of the federal government to get out of medicare in 1972, but rather that as far as the federal government was concerned medicare was here to stay. In his reply the Prime Minister, after a few introductory words, said to me that the law was such that at the end of five years there would be a straight transfer of tax room. I believe I am quoting him verbatim.

This concerned me for reasons that I may have time to give in a moment, and so I put a supplementary question to him in which I asked that he give the assurance that the federal government would not get out of medicare at the end of the five year period on a unilateral basis—that it would not do so without consulting the provinces.

To my astonishment the Prime Minister's reply was that I should study the act, that I should know what was in it, and that I should realize—and I shall quote him directly—that the law says in five years we will get out of it. As hon. members are aware, I posted this question for the earliest possible late show and I am glad that that opportunity has come tonight because that is not my reading of the law and, with all respect to the Prime Minister, I think his reading is incorrect.

The section in question is section 8 of the Medical Care Act. I was very much involved in every stage of that legislation. Indeed Hansard records that I took part in the discussion on section 8, which provides that at roughly the end of a five year period.

> —the Government of Canada shall review the provisions of this act respecting the amount and manner of payment of the contributions payable by Canada pursuant to section 3 with a view to formulating proposals for any changes therein that appear then to be necessary or desirable—

There is more to the section. It is a long one but I have read the heart of it. The heart of it is that at the end of five years, or six months before the end of five years, there shall be a review with a view to formulating proposals for change, if they then seem necessary or desirable. But the Prime Minister said this afternoon that the hon. member should realize that the law says in five years we will get out of it.

There is an alarming difference between a provision in the law which says there shall be a review and proposals made, and the view stated this afternoon that it is automatic, that it is in the law, that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) was simply operating within the law when he made his recent comments on this matter. I know that, when it comes to the interpretation of the law, courts pay no attention to what is in Hansard; but hon. members of this house will be interested to note that when section 8 of the act was under debate in the house on December 6, 1966, it was spoken to not by the then minister of health but by the then minister of finance, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). He referred to some questions I had put to him and admitted my contention that this section was not legislative in effect, that it was merely the statement of an intention. However, he went on to make it clear that the government wanted it in the act, that it was the government's intention at the end of the five years—let me quote him exactly—to—> —put forward proposals to the provinces for a change in the method of compensation—

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that a commitment to put forward proposals to the provinces implies consultation; it implies bringing the matter before parliament; it implies consideration. But this afternoon the Prime Minister did not say that. He simply said that the hon. member should realize that the law says in five years we will get out of it.

I was concerned about section 8 when it was before the house, and it does not say that. On December 6, 1966, I asked the then minister of finance certain questions in an effort to find out from him what would happen in five years time. I draw attention to these words of the then minister of finance:

> This clause is intended to require the government—

I admit the strength of the word "require"; but what was required?

> —five years from now to make such a review and to make proposals.

Please note that two or three minutes earlier he had said, "proposals to the provinces". Now listen to this from the then finance minister:

> But it does not in any way, as far as I understand the intent of the bill, place any limitation upon the scope of the act or upon the longevity of the payments themselves.

I suggest that the Liberal members of this house were as astounded as I was to learn this afternoon the Prime Minister's interpretation of the medicare legislation is that it was guaranteed for only five years. I am not fighting with the government about this legislation. I fought too hard to get it. The country spent nearly 50 years trying to get it. We thought we got it as a permanent piece of legislation in this country. I suggest it is very alarming to hear now that at the end of five years the federal government is to get out.

It is not good enough to tell us that what the Prime Minister was saying is simply that tax room will be made for the provinces. That is a very wide open statement. Surely it is clear that once the federal government withdraws its contribution to the medicare programs in the provinces it throws the provinces back to the pre Rowell-Sirois days and prevents us from having uniform standards of hospital and medical care across this country.

I stand here tonight, not in an argumentative mood. I do not stand here haranguing the government. I stand here pleading with the Liberal government, bearing in mind the years it took to get this legislation on the books, not to let it go down the drain because of an interpretation of the act which I say is incorrect. I am prepared to stand by and accept the words in the act and in Hansard which say that what is to be done at the end of five years is that there will be a review and proposals if necessary, but let us not give the country the impression that at the end of five years medicare is out so far as the federal government is concerned. I am sure this is not the impression which was intended to be given. I hope there will be a proper clarification at this time.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the question of the interpretation of the words of the Prime Minister in the light of the provisions of section 8 of the act, and the question of the interpretation of section 8 of the act in the light of the words of the Prime Minister are questions of interpretation which I do not think can be dealt with fully in an adjournment debate of this type. It seems to me there is nothing basically inconsistent with what I understand the Prime Minister to have said. May I suggest that his words could be taken as referring to a change in the amount and manner of payment under the act in lieu of the contributions specified thereby.

Let me go on to say that the national medicare act has been passed by parliament; it is the law of the land and obviously the federal government is obligated to live up to its terms. I think we should recall that the creation of a national program for medical care, through the passage of this act, was the achievement of a Liberal government. It was a Liberal government that presented the medicare law to parliament. I for one am proud to be among those who supported this measure. This measure did not come within 50 years of the Pearson Liberal government taking office; it came within less than four years. It came as a result of a Liberal government supported by members such as myself, along with others on this side of the house.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So where do we stand now?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to provisional standing order 39A the motion to adjourn the house is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this house stands adjourned until two thirty o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SPEAKER—STATEMENT ON SHORTAGE OF STAFF AND FACILITIES FOR COMMITTEE WORK

Mr. Speaker: Last Thursday, the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) on a question of privilege protested against the lack of personnel and facilities in committees of the house. The hon. member complained more particularly about the lack of interpreters available to those committees. Since then, in co-operation with the officials of the house, I have studied seriously the problem mentioned by the hon. member.

I wish to say that, in general, the hon. member is fully justified. All hon. members will recognize, I am sure, that the committees should sit only when the interpretation services requested by hon. members, whether they are French or English-speaking, are available for the proceedings of the committees.

During the last few days, several committees have been sitting at the same time, thus putting to a hard test the services the house can provide. Special arrangements will have to be made to prevent a recurrence of the situation about which the hon. member complained. Steps will soon be taken with a view to improving both the interpretation and the translation of the proceedings of the committees of the house. Still, I doubt that we would contribute to solving the problem by suspending the work of all the committees as was suggested rather radically by the hon. member for Abitibi in this motion.

The fact remains that the member did his colleagues a good turn by calling the attention of the house to this problem.

TRANSPORT

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NEWFOUNDLAND TUNNEL AUTHORITY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-125, to establish a Newfoundland tunnel authority.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of this bill to establish a Newfoundland tunnel authority with a view to promoting a multipurpose connection between the mainland portions of the province of Newfoundland and Labrador. The objects of the authority would be to undertake all preparatory steps necessary with a view to the ultimate construction of a tunnel for the purpose of transporting goods and persons between Newfoundland and Labrador and, to the best of its endeavours, to ensure the necessary supporting facilities such as highways, connecting roads, rail lines, power lines, waterfront installations and other similar developments as ancillary works. In some respects our province has been an overlooked part of this land—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PROSPECTIVE FEDERAL WITHDRAWAL FROM JOINT SOCIAL PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that he indicated yesterday that the federal government would, within the next few years, withdraw from shared-cost programs and that medicare would be handed over to the provinces, I should like to know whether he intends to adopt the same attitude with regard to the whole field of social security? Does the present government intend to hand back to the provinces their jurisdiction in this field?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government's position in this regard was announced two years ago. It is a policy that is continuing. In most of the fields concerning social security governed by cost-sharing programs, we have already allowed the province of Quebec to take a fiscal equivalent, and we have suggested to the other provinces to follow the same policy, in order that the province that levies taxes shall be also called upon to use and administer the amounts collected.

Once again I say that this is part of the government policy and that this has been the subject of proposals not only in 1966 but also during the federal-provincial conference of finance ministers that is now taking place.

Mr. Asselin: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Marshall.]

Would the right hon. Prime Minister tell the house at what time his government will completely hand over the field of social welfare to all the provinces? Will it be on the occasion of the federal-provincial conference to be held here next December? Have there already been consultations with the provincial delegates to pursue the line of action of the government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, while not repeating my previous answer, I could perhaps refer to the word "completely" used by the hon. member.

In our opinion, social security falls completely under provincial jurisdiction, but we should be able give a definition of what is meant by "social security". We have never thought, for example, that the federal government does not have complete jurisdiction with regard to family allowances. I therefore do not understand what the hon. member means by the word "completely". As for our general policy, I outlined it earlier.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a complementary question.

Does the right hon. Prime Minister not agree that his statements on social security are slightly contradictory?

On the one hand, the right hon. Prime Minister says that the federal government will eventually give back to the provinces their rights in the field of social legislation. On the other hand, he says that the new 2 per cent tax is a social development tax intended to help social legislation in Canada, and he takes the attitude of not paying to the provinces the amounts of money—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Caouette: —they are requesting.

Does the right hon. Prime Minister not see a contradiction in this attitude?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is no contradiction, because in all these fields—as I would remind the hon. member—we have not passed any legislation. We have not tried to say how, for example, the joint programs should be administered by the provinces; we have been satisfied with imposing taxes and transferring the proceeds to them. That is exactly what we are doing with the 2 per cent tax. We just tell the provinces that this way of administering is not consistent with our long term policy and that, in the long run, we want, as much as possible, to request all the other provinces to follow more or less the example of the province of Quebec, that is, collect their own taxes and administer their own programs.

It is clear that the federal government will need tax sources from other areas which come under its jurisdiction. It is for this reason, of course, that we levy taxes.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have both a supplementary and a related question. First, would the right hon. gentleman inform the house whether, in view of the difficulties which seem to have emerged during the conferences now in progress, the government is giving consideration to setting up permanent machinery to enable continual consultation between the federal and provincial governments in the fields of fiscal matters, social welfare and old age security?

Mr. Trudeau: Such machinery presently exists in the form of a tax structure committee. I believe more could be done. We stated to the federal-provincial conference in February that we were prepared to examine such questions, but this will be a matter to be debated at the federal-provincial conference. For the time being the tax structure committee exists, as it has existed for several years.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the Prime Minister's statements yesterday and earlier today that the federal government intends to vacate all the shared program fields, may I ask whether he has an alternative plan to ensure equal and national standards for Canadians in every region in these fields of social services and social security?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes. This plan was stated by the then minister of finance in 1966 at a meeting of ministers of finance of the federal government and the provinces. I repeat, it is an indication that we are prepared to withdraw in a general way from the kind of programs followed now, which is a joint program consisting largely of the federal government transferring some of the revenues of its taxation to the provinces. This is the general approach, and it was explained quite thoroughly in 1966. It is still our approach today.

I do not say quite as blandly as did the hon. member that we shall vacate every area of social security. As I told the other hon. member a few moments ago, it depends on what you mean by social security, but in general our approach to joint programs is that the taxation for and administration of them should be in the hands of the provincial governments.

Mr. Lewis: Before asking a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say I was not bland about it. I hadn't the right under the rules as presently constituted to express my indignation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask his question.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the right hon. gentleman to explain to the house how vacating certain tax points, 17 or whatever it may be, can be of help to poorer provinces who do not have the base to raise revenues?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think this supplementary is clearly argumentative.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary to the Prime Minister is, does this include programs devised and proposed by the federal government and imposed upon the provinces without prior consultation?

Mr. Trudeau: This question, Mr. Speaker, is surely argumentative—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about your answer?

Mr. Speaker: In view of the Prime Minister's ruling I shall recognize the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the comments made by provincial finance ministers, would the Prime Minister not agree it is highly desirable to improve immediately the consultative machinery which presently exists between the federal government and the provincial governments?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are always prepared to improve the machinery. As the hon. member knows there is a great deal, in fact a tremendous amount, of federal-provincial consultation going on at all levels. There are literally hundreds of meetings every year between federal and provincial officials on all aspects of law which involve both levels of government. There are dozens of meetings at the ministerial level, and prime ministerial meetings occur fairly frequently. This is all part of the machinery. There is also the tax structure committee, which is composed of federal and provincial officials, and the question of a secretariat, asked about a few minutes ago, which is a subject that has been discussed at federal-provincial conferences for many years.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister refers to the transferring of shared cost programs to the provinces is it clear that he is talking only about shared cost programs; that is, that there is no intention to transfer such programs as old age security and family allowances?

Mr. Trudeau: That is right, Mr. Speaker. That is what I indicated in answer to one of the earlier questions. I was not talking about all areas of social security. Indeed, I would not say that I was talking about all shared cost programs. There may be some I do not have in mind, but I do include those which were the subject of suggestions or propositions of the then minister of finance in 1966, and the suggestions made today and yesterday by the present Minister of Finance. They concern certain shared cost programs and not all areas of social security.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In the light of the exchange we had yesterday concerning medicare, and in view of the fact the Prime Minister was not able to be here for the late show last night, may I ask him whether he has had an opportunity to review the Medical Care Act, and would he not now agree that that act provides for a review at the end of the five years, not for an automatic change?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, I did review the act, Mr. Speaker. I reviewed also the statements and the context in which the statements were made. It is still my reading of the act that after five years there is a presumed intention of the government that there will be in respect of medicare what is intended in respect of the other joint schemes which were discussed earlier today, a transfer to the provinces of the fiscal resources to permit them to carry on with this form of social assistance, as it is the intention to have them do in other areas where there will be a transfer of resources.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question. Was it not clear that this was to be made in the form of proposals and not a fait accompli?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is. The act says, I believe, as it was quoted by the hon. member, that after five years there will be a review and that proposals of a specific nature will be made, the specific nature being that to which I referred, the transfer of tax room or other means. It seems to be quite clear that this act states the intention of the government as I have stated it.

Mr. Baldwin: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to remind hon. members that it is somewhat irregular to be debating the interpretation of a statute at this time. I know a number of questions have been asked and because of the importance of the subject I allowed the questions to be answered. Perhaps we should not pursue the debate much further.

Mr. Baldwin: I am not going to ask for an interpretation. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to ensure, no matter what scheme is followed, that the provinces will be provided with the equivalent of 50 per cent of the cost of this program, pursuant to the statute?

Mr. Trudeau: It is the general approach which was presented in 1966, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government would withdraw and provide tax room and supplementary benefits of an equalization nature which would be the equivalent of the federal government's participation before withdrawal.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING PRIVILEGES OF BRITISH IMMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister advise the house whether the Secretary of State was announcing government policy in stating his support for the view that privileges enjoyed by what he called British immigrants should be withdrawn? In particular would the Prime Minister say whether these privileges are to be withdrawn from immigrants to Canada from all Commonwealth countries who presently enjoy them?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to look at what the Secretary of State said. I am not aware of the statement. I do not know exactly what he said. I would be prepared to look at it and decide whether it is government policy or not.

Mr. Dinsdale: As a supplementary question, inasmuch as some of these privileges are reciprocal and are offered by other Commonwealth countries, would the Prime Minister, in the course of his examination of this matter, consider the advisability of placing it on the agenda of the next Commonwealth conference with a view to abolishing these reciprocal arrangements?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the agenda of the next Commonwealth conference, to take place in London in January, has already been set after a great deal of consultation with all the attending members. It probably would be too late at this date to add another item. However, I could only answer this question after having seen what the Secretary of State really said, and even then it would perhaps not give rise to putting it on the agenda in some future year. I do not really know.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Could the right hon. Prime Minister assure the house that if privileges are—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Trois-Rivières is rising on a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member for Brandon-Souris to tell the house when and where the Secretary of State mentioned what he was just talking about?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt if that is a question of privilege. It is a very simple question, but the hon. member cannot ask it at this time.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member for Brandon-Souris isn't on the roster today, so he cannot answer questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Can he assure us that he will ask the Secretary of State to grant immigrants of French origin the same privileges enjoyed by immigrants from the British Commonwealth?

Mr. Trudeau: In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is going in a direction quite contrary to that of one of his party colleagues. The question is not to take away privileges from the British or to give some to the French but rather to put all Canadians on an equal footing.

Therefore, I think that it is to that end that we should work rather than trying to extend privileges to a few preferred groups; whether they are of British or French origin, we should put all Canadians on an equal footing.

As the hon. member knows, there are still a few discriminations. The government of which I am honored to be a member abolished last year a large number of discriminations against those who have acquired Canadian citizenship, but some voting privileges still exist in the case of British subjects.

[English]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): With regard to the same question and with reference to the remarks allegedly made, may I ask the right hon. gentleman whether all ministers of the crown are free to express personal opinions on matters of government policy, or whether this privilege is reserved only for the Prime Minister's cronies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, this question is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Charlevoix. Inasmuch as the Prime Minister's additional statement on this matter indicates that the government is advanced in its thinking and policy making, could the Prime Minister give the house some indication of when the white paper on citizenship will be presented to the house so we can all share in these matters?

Mr. Trudeau: I believe the question might be asked of the Secretary of State. I am not aware of the timing on this.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROVINCIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR HEALTH SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the announcement by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the government intends to turn the Indian health services over to the provinces, as reported in today's Globe and Mail, will the Prime Minister say whether his colleagues who have responsibility for Indian affairs have consulted with the Indian people on this matter?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Here again I am not quite sure of the particular reference that is made to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am not aware of his exact declaration in this regard.

Mr. Simpson: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must remember that he can ask questions relating to statements made outside the house only by asking the Prime Minister whether such statements represent the policy of the government. I am not sure whether the statement to which the hon. member refers was made outside the house, in the house or in committee. If it was made in committee I do not think the question can be asked.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, might I rephrase the question. Was the Minister of National Health and Welfare stating government policy when, as recorded in the Toronto Globe and Mail, he announced to the provincial finance ministers that the government intends to turn over the Indian health services to the provinces.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, once again I would have to see exactly what he said. There is a long term intention on the part of the government—and this is to be debated, I suppose, as part of our Indian policy—to arrive eventually at a situation where Indians will be treated like other Canadian citizens of the particular province in which they happen to be. It may have been something along this line to which the minister was referring.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, this question is a supplementary and is directed to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as the case may be. Is it the intention of the federal government to provide the necessary funds for the medical care of Indians?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when we do embark upon this kind of transfer of responsibility we generally accompany it by an equivalent transfer of funds, either by way of fiscal points or by way of other grants. When we do it by way of fiscal points it is generally supplemented by supplementary payments which have an equalization effect.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the Indian people have been consulted in respect of this announced intention of the government to transfer responsibility for their care to the provincial governments.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am just stating the general orientation of the present government. We talked about this a great deal during the election. It is not the object of any precise policy as yet. As I stated earlier, the policy regarding Indians will be presented by the minister at a later date and will be subject to debate. I am sure before the minister does so he will continue the very intense consultations that he and the Minister without Portfolio have been conducting.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a further supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can he say whether the Indian people have been consulted on this matter?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister said, we consult with the Indians on all policies which concern them. At the present time, we are holding consultations with all the provinces, and this is the first time that the Canadian government has ever undertaken such consultations. The Indians will be consulted on each one of the policies which may affect them. However, as the Prime Minister said, what we want—and the Indians are in agreement—is that they should become equal citizens in Canada.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. About two weeks ago I had a question on the order paper with regard to turning Indian health services over to the provinces, and at that time the health minister stated that if they were turned over to the provinces the provinces would be responsible for paying the costs. Today the Prime Minister stated that the provinces would be compensated. I am wondering who is stating the policy of the government.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PUBLICATION OF NAMES OF WELFARE RECIPIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister of Indian affairs. Did the Indian affairs branch in British Columbia recently publish and distribute the names of Indian recipients of welfare in that province?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about this problem; I shall look into it and report to the house tomorrow.

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring a question to the attention of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in view of a statement issued today by the department to the effect that the lung cancer epidemic is worsening in Canada. The statement also suggested that most lung cancer deaths are attributable to cigarette smoking. Could this whole matter of cigarette advertising be referred to the standing committee on health and welfare?

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall take this question as notice and advise the minister accordingly.

[English]

SPRINGHILL, N.S.—POLLUTION FROM FIRE IN MINE DUMP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which should be directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that he is out of the country I will direct it to the Prime Minister. What action does the government intend to take to either eliminate or curtail a fire raging in a mine dump in the town of Springfield which now covers over 50 acres and is estimated to be 40 feet in depth? This is polluting the whole town and is a very serious matter for the 8,000 people who live there.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As the hon. member has stated, Mr. Speaker, the minister is on a mission to South America. Perhaps the question can be answered on a day which is one assigned to departmental affairs of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, in connection with this roster business does the Prime Minister know that four ministers who should be here today are absent? I refer to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the President of the Treasury Board, the minister for Indian affairs has just arrived; the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Will the Prime Minister explain how his system is working to the great advantage he suggests when ministers are not even here when they should be?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will explain again that the system does not require the physical presence of the ministers.

Mr. Fairweather: Does the government require their physical presence?

Mr. Trudeau: No, the government does not require their physical presence either.

An hon. Member: Then get rid of them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Here we go again, Mr. Speaker. On certain days certain departmental areas will be answered by the minister or by the acting minister. In looking at the names mentioned by the hon. member in his question, I should state that the President of the Treasury Board is at the federal-provincial conference now taking place.

An hon. Member: Who is the acting minister?

Mr. Trudeau: His acting minister is the Postmaster General, who will be delighted to answer any questions that come within his concern. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is also attending a federal-provincial conference, and his parliamentary secretary has just indicated that he is answering for him. The Minister of Veterans Affairs is unfortunately ill. I see that quite a few members of the opposition are apparently ill as well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member feels that this matter should be pursued further?

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for answering my question. I should like to ask him whether we should conclude from his answer that this indicates a situation with a one man government, or that the ministers are afraid to stand up in this house and answer in respect of their responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it the right hon. Prime Minister would like to reply.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour would like to ask a supplementary question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that we might easily go on to another subject.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council, in view of the fact that the Leader of the Opposition and the right hon. member for Prince Albert are not in the house today, whether the minister can advise if to his knowledge a duty day roster has now been established by the official opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question posed by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North, and I should like to direct it to the right hon. gentleman across the way. In view of the fact that the question deals with air pollution and noxious gases which are spread through the air, sometimes causing death by asphyxiation, would the Prime Minister not say whether an investigation could be carried out through the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will raise the matter with the departmental officials.

FISHERIES

PURCHASE OF SALT COD FOR SHIPMENT TO BIAFRA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take the Prime Minister off the hook. He seems to be getting tired. We are getting a little tired as well. Is the Minister of Fisheries prepared to respond to the question which was taken as notice yesterday by his parliamentary secretary, as to whether the purchase of five million pounds of fish from the Atlantic region will result in an increased price to Atlantic fishermen?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the federal government has taken and is now taking out of the hands of these fishermen about 20 per cent of one year's production. That is a sizeable quantity of fish. Current purchases are at market prices. I do not know what will happen to the market price in the immediate future, but I hope the government's action will have the effect of firming up the price generally and on a world wide basis.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, is this fish being purchased by the Canadian government for transport to Biafra, or by the Atlantic trade?

Mr. Davis: The fish is being purchased by the Canadian government through various agencies in Newfoundland; for instance, the Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited, the Canadian Atlantic Salt Fish Exporters Association, and numerous other groups and individual firms in the trade.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have another question arising out of federal-provincial relations. Would the right hon. Prime Minister inform the house whether it is the government's intention to cease or change the method of providing assistance to the provinces in relation to post-secondary educational institutions such as universities?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is the subject of an agreement between the federal and provincial governments. It is something that was embarked upon in previous years, and it is continuing at the present.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO COST OF SHORT TERM BORROWING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General as Acting President of the Treasury Board. How much did it cost the government to borrow $100 million for 11 days?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member is asking for statistical information, and I would think this type of information cannot be requested at this time.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State. In view of the important event in the United States today, can he advise whether the Canadian Radio-Television Commission has received complaints about the Sunday night program, "The Way It Is", dividing Americans into three classes, rioters, policemen tackling rioters, and flower children running around without petals on them?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

PUBLIC SERVICE

RESPONSIBILITIES OF REGIONAL OFFICERS NOW BEING RECRUITED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. According to a recent newspaper report the Prime Minister's office is busy recruiting regional officers for the maritimes, Quebec, Ontario and western Canada. Would the Prime Minister please inform the house as to the general nature of the responsibilities of these officers?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question should be placed on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING ADOPTION OF BIAFRAN ORPHANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister is a follow-up of the question dealing with the return flights of the Hercules planes from Biafra. I raised this question last week. Has the Prime Minister received any representations from private agencies or the Canadian public with regard to the adoption of Biafran war orphans by Canadians?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know of only one letter—there perhaps have been more—from one person telling me that he was interested in such adoption. I indicated that he should have referred the matter either to his local church or charity organization. When we discussed this question in the house, I indicated this would be a proper avenue for solving this problem.

Mr. Rose: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Prime Minister has invited private agencies such as churches to deal with matters of adoption, medical supplies and personnel, does the Prime Minister not think that government leadership might be provided in this area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION RESPECTING CRIMINAL RECORDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government renounced its avowed intention of bringing in legislation to remove criminal records, as announced in the house by the Solicitor General on March 26 last?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am told that the Solicitor General did not make such an announcement.

Mr. Bigg: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I refer to Hansard of March 26. It is in the record.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if this statement was made on March 26 it obviously was not made by the present Solicitor General. I will have to look up the record.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, directed to the Solicitor General. Is it government policy to renounce the previously announced policy of abolishing criminal records?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for a statement of government policy and I would think the question as asked is not in order.

Mr. Nielsen: Surely, Mr. Speaker, the minister is responsible for answering to the house on questions concerning government policy. This is all I am asking.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: It is possible to answer questions which are accepted by the Chair as being in order. The hon. member's question is not in order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, following up the question asked by my seatmate, I ask the Solicitor General whether in committee he made a statement supporting the statement made by the former solicitor general with respect to vacating criminal records, and whether this is not now government policy?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am glad of the opportunity to clear up this matter. In the committee dealing with the estimates of the department a question was asked about a private member's bill entitled "The expunging of criminal records", and I said that I did not think legislation in that form would be brought forward; I was not prepared to bring it forward in that form. But I went on to say that there were other methods of dealing with this subject, and I referred to the question of general pardons and the incidental striking off or limiting of the use of criminal records in connection therewith and said that I would bring before the committee at a later hearing full information as to the government's position on the matter. Regrettably, in the meantime hon. members, without having before them the committee evidence which is not yet available, have jumped to conclusions and misinterpreted what has been said. When the statement is made I would be very glad to have it widely distributed.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the minister whether he supports the contention outlined in a memorandum to the previous cabinet, of which he was a member, in which the then solicitor general referred to the matter in this way:

—yesterday I affixed my signature to a memorandum to my cabinet colleagues—

That was a memorandum in connection with vacating criminal records. The then solicitor general went on to say that he hoped to introduce a government bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the hon. member and the minister are getting into a debate and I suggest that the matter cannot be continued much further.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Prime Minister, are we still dealing with the idiots of the past?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, we are.

An hon. Member: How do you know where they are?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): We know where they are.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I was the member who asked the Solicitor General a question in the standing committee on justice and legal affairs with regard to the expunging of criminal records. Although I did refer to the bill sponsored by a member of the government, the then hon. member for Welland, I more particularly referred to the memorandum of the then solicitor general who said he had presented a memorandum to the cabinet for consideration and action.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what question is involved in that statement, but as I indicated a few moments—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

FEDERAL GRANTS TO PROVINCES WITH PATIENT PARTICIPATION IN WELFARE PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to remove the discrimination in the matter of federal grants to those provinces which have patient participation in various social welfare programs?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I was talking to the Solicitor General and did not get the question.

Mr. Ritchie: Does the government intend to remove the discrimination in the matter of federal grants to those provinces which have patient participation in various social welfare programs?

Mr. Trudeau: I am not aware of the discrimination that the hon. member is talking about, Mr. Speaker.

AIR CANADA

EDMONTON—COMPLAINTS RESPECTING REVISED WINTER SCHEDULE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): In the absence of the Minister of Transport,

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to one of the other ministers who may take it as notice. Will the minister take up with the officials of Air Canada the very serious problem being caused in Edmonton by the revised Air Canada winter schedule, which has the effect of reducing that important metropolis to a state of semi-isolation?

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Thursday, October 31, consideration of the motion (page 1677) of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (page 2262), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Saltsman (page 2276).

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, when the budget debate was adjourned last Thursday, I was saying that the Bank of Canada puts up about $3 billion in money and bank notes as the basis of a money supply that can be handled and seen in part.

As far as financial credit is concerned, it is made up by the figures entered in bank accounts and really made up by the bankers for a loan or a bond issue for trade, industry and public institutions. Those amounts of bank credit—financial credit, banking entries—add up now to $24 billion, in addition to the $3 billion in bank notes of the Bank of Canada, and that means eight times more bank credit than visible credit.

Visible credit, Mr. Speaker, is made up of the $3 billion in capital really created by the Bank of Canada and put in circulation through the chartered banks.

When the amendments to the Bank Act were considered by the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, the then minister of finance of Canada (Mr. Sharp) did say that the chartered banks issued credit money in that way in considerable amounts to meet the economic needs of the country.

When I asked him if the Bank of Canada or the government could issue that credit money totalling $24 billion as well as the first $3 billion in bank notes that can be seen and handled, he answered in the affirmative but added that the present method was deemed more satisfactory, namely letting the chartered banks issue that additional credit money according to the procedures legalized by the government of 264 members elected by the people of Canada.

That very exchange between the former minister of finance and myself can be read on page 1732 of the proceedings of that committee.

When one is aware, Mr. Speaker, of the importance of currency, money, credit and capital in the administration and control of the economic life in Canada, when one is aware of the fact that the same chartered banks can issue eight times more money credit than the Bank of Canada, that is about $24 billion against $3 billion, it is easy to understand why in the current business life, the 300 chairmen and directors of the eight chartered banks in Canada are also directors of the 800 largest companies, corporations and millionaire institutions in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in view of those facts and evidences, there are only two things we can do with the present system: either borrow from a bank and get into debt in the process, or impede progress by restricting economic activity. These are the only solutions for the government as well as for individuals.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, municipalities, school boards, federal and provincial governments are always short of money or get heavily into debt with exorbitant interest rates.

I have on hand a few examples of exorbitant interest rates requested from cities, municipalities, school boards, provincial and federal governments. Indeed, I read this in the newspaper La Presse of October 30, 1968.

The town of Saint-Jean sold a bond issue worth $480,000 at 7½ per cent for ten years to an investment company. However, the town only receives 96 per cent of the amount on which it pays interest, or about $460,000. The actual interest rate on this loan therefore amounts to about 8.4 per cent. In ten years, the town pays $360,000 in interest, or 75 per cent of the full amount of the $480,000 loan.

Capital	$480,000	Amount received (96%): $460,000
Interest	$360,000
Total	$840,000	paid back in capital plus interest.

That, Mr. Speaker, is ridiculous. That is why we have no choice in Canada but to go into debt and to pass on the burden to the school boards, municipalities, provinces and even to the federal government. It will never change, because we accept these exorbitant interest rates and because we allow municipalities, school boards and provinces to be exploited in that way. That is one of the reasons why provincial representatives are now meeting in Ottawa.

Incidentally, when provincial representatives meet here in Ottawa, it is not to discuss social, humanitarian or language problems, but to talk exclusively about money. In my opinion, the federal government should assume its responsibilities in order to be able to give the provinces the money they need for their own administration at a social and reasonable interest rate and not at the usurious rate of 8¼ per cent which the authorities of the town of Saint-Jean have just paid on $480,000 loan.

That is an abominable absurdity which is respected and accepted even by our administrators. The government cannot raise taxes any more, Mr. Speaker, because people do not have enough money to ensure a decent standard of living for their families. Houses, land and properties are sold to pay taxes. Agricultural products are difficult to sell or cannot be sold at all, just like manufacturers' products, not because they are not good, but because those who would need them have no money to buy them. They have no money to buy them because there are too many taxes, too many duties, in short, because the prices and the cost of living are too high.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member to tell him that the time allotted to him has unfortunately expired.

The hon. member might obtain the consent of the house to continue his remarks for a brief time. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately, there is no unanimity.

[English]

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, in this my first speech to the house I should like to draw your attention to the fact that Etobicoke is a new riding. It forms a large part of the old riding of York West which was represented with such distinction in this house by Mr. Robert Winters.

The lands, rivers and people of this area played an important role in the early development of our nation. Over three centuries ago it was the place for commerce, exploration and discovery. Its people looked to the future rather than to the past. They looked for and sought a future better than they had. They sought the good life for themselves and for others.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

And so it is today, Mr. Speaker. Our concern for the future must be based on the same principles; and it is in this context that I should like to talk about some of the conditions that we have to create in Canada for our future development. In particular I want to refer to creating conditions for investment, for fostering a strong Canadian point of view, and for sustaining confidence in our institutions, starting with the need to reform this house and its procedures.

The case against inflation has been made so many times and so cogently, Mr. Speaker, that I do not propose to repeat the arguments here except to draw your attention to the problems of government financing and of financing our future economic growth in the private sector.

There are some who say that full employment and inflation go hand in hand, that one cannot enjoy the benefits of the one without paying the price of the other. They would promote the idea that a little inflation is a good thing, that it is good for business, that it promotes prosperity and keeps things going. In my view, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be more dangerous. This is the most corrupting philosophy of them all—short term euphoria, like the pathetic rationalization of the addict in the early period of his addiction protesting the wisdom of his own foolishness. Over a period of 15 years a 1 per cent deterioration per year in the value of our money amounts to a discount of 15 per cent. What man is going to lend $100 now, Mr. Speaker, if he can expect in return only $85?

The funds that are used to finance government deficits and extra budgetary needs, to purchase government bonds, federal, provincial or municipal, are mostly the collective savings of millions of Canadians. They are the premiums that are paid on life insurance policies and the deductions made from the weekly pay cheque for future pension benefits. Yet there has been a tendency in many quarters to identify those who purchase bonds with the "haves", as if the beneficiaries of the borrowings were the "have nots". Surely it is time to recognize that they are one and the same person.

The point to be made is this. Federal government extra budgetary needs plus provincial and municipal government spending are going to require enormous sums each and every year. Little of this development can take place unless we show the lenders that we can control inflation. And for the same reasons, Mr. Speaker, corporate expansion will be curtailed unless we prove to those who would finance corporate borrowings that we are serious about controlling inflation. Obviously the uninterrupted series of budgetary deficits over the past ten years does not build confidence. That is why the minister's program for a budgetary balance by the end of the next fiscal year is so important.

Federal government policy must be designed to bring about and preserve an orderly capital market. This requires not only the management of its own debt and its own budgetary requirements; it requires on the part of the federal government a full appreciation of the capital needs of the provinces and municipalities and also the needs of the private sector. Just as in the tax fields arrangements must be worked out with the provinces so, too, is it important that there be collaboration on capital needs. There is, after all, a limited supply of money.

Nor can Canada rely solely on domestic sources of capital. Indeed, in recent years Canadian borrowings abroad have averaged close to $1 billion a year. Our ability to go to the United States market or to European markets will depend on the confidence we earn abroad, on confidence in our competitive position which must not be eroded by inflation at home, on their confidence that the risks of devaluation are negligible and that we are not always just about to change the rules.

Canada cannot insulate itself from world economic conditions and there is no use pretending that we can. This is all the more reason, therefore, to examine our vulnerability in areas which we ourselves do not control.

Within the last year there were three major international developments which seriously damaged confidence in the world's monetary system and in the Canadian dollar. I refer to the devaluation of sterling, to the United States guide lines and to French efforts to force devaluation of the United States dollar in terms of gold. Fortunately, after a rather uncertain period the value of the Canadian dollar has strengthened. This is not a time for complacency. There are many uncertainties facing the world monetary system today. Let us not forget that Canada is more vulnerable than most countries because of the large part, the enormous part, proportionately four times that of the United States, that foreign trade plays in our gross national product. Let us recognize that we rely at the present time on foreign capital flows to finance our balance of payments. For these reasons we are vulnerable. For these reasons, too, I hope it will be possible to negotiate with United States authorities the removal of the upper limit of $2.6 billion on our foreign exchange reserves. We need this flexibility.

These truths, the need to establish confidence in our capital markets, the need to recognize the dangers of inflation, are central to the whole question of the future development of Canada. Yet in this area the two main opposition parties seem to me to be peculiarly inconsistent, though consistently ambiguous. They appear to have turned their backs on both monetary and fiscal measures. They seem to have discarded completely the idea that interest rates are an effective tool of monetary policy. Equally, they appear to ignore fiscal measures. They have been curiously silent on the desirability of a balanced budget. They deplore the effects of inflation but deplore even more doing anything about it. They profess, but they do not inform. Is this Progressive Conservatism at its modern best?

The N.D.P., on the other hand, seem to regard deficit spending as a way of life. They remind me of a man who would write a cheque for his favourite charity on a bank account that did not exist. Yet they talk of the eroding effects of inflation like the convivial roustabout who, anticipating his own overindulgence, lectures others on the predictable after-effects. When, for instance, has a spokesman for the New Democratic party publicly taken a position against wage increases which exceed productivity increases? When has a spokesman of the New Democratic party stated publicly that wage increases which exceed productivity increases are inflationary and therefore have to be paid for by every other wage earner in Canada—indeed by all Canadians? The N.D.P. behave as if cost-push inflation never existed.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to turn now to the question of entrepreneurial spirit, initiative and enterprise from the Canadian point of view. As Canadians we need to concentrate on doing what we are best equipped to do. We can stimulate entrepreneurship through leadership by government, by insisting on a more efficient use of our research and development efforts and by insisting on a more selective effort. We have too often tried to cover too broad a spectrum and we have not concentrated on certain unique opportunities. Somehow or other we seem to have got caught up in a share the wealth approach to investment in research, a something for everyone philosophy. I think the time has come to apply a very much more selective approach to research expenditures, and I think this approach should be tied directly to the idea of originality, to sponsoring Canadian originality.

We need to give our investment a Canadian slant. The character of a nation, the distinguishing quality of its people, is to be found in how it comes to terms with its environment, how it responds to the land, to the weather, to climate, to nature, to its natural resources, what it builds its houses out of, what it eats, how it works to sustain life above the subsistence level, how it plays, what it writes, sings and paints—in a word, in its capacity for originality.

We should realize that our originality has been subverted by our ability to obtain the benefits of foreign innovation. The Watkins report focuses on one aspect of this, the prevalence of the manufacturing licence, of the royalty agreement and of the engineering agreement. In return for a royalty on sales and, usually, an undertaking not to export, a Canadian company obtains the benefits of foreign research and development for its exclusive use in the Canadian market. This is the easy way; it takes the risk out of research because it requires none. In my view this particular device for obtaining foreign know-how has had a more serious effect on Canadian entrepreneurial attitudes than any other single factor. The effect has been far greater, for example, than that of foreign ownership.

At the same time we must continue to concern ourselves with the development of our resources with Canadian ownership. That is not to say that we will be able to do the job alone. We must provide an hospitable climate for foreign investors, but we must also insist that future Canadian resource development will be undertaken in partnership with Canadians.

In this connection I think it most significant that the recent study completed by York University for the Toronto Stock Exchange indicated that there would be a serious lack of Canadian equities within five years. More particularly, the demand on the part of Canadians for equities will outrun supply in a ratio of approximately two to one. This has serious and far reaching economic implications in terms of foreign ownership and balance of payments difficulties.

One does not have to argue the case for efficiency in industry, nor does one have to argue the case for efficiency with the Canadian public. How curious, Mr. Speaker, that one should have to argue the case for efficiency in this house with hon. members opposite.

At a time when man can contemplate the surface of the moon from a transmitter he has planted there, when he can watch in the comfort of his livingroom the carnage of war as it happens on the other side of the earth, when jumbo jets and supersonics will shortly revolutionize his mobility in the air and shatter his tranquility on the ground—

Mr. Winch: But you cannot even balance the budget.

Mr. Gillespie: —when man can destroy himself with the bomb and depopulate with the pill, when the sexual revolution can rock the very foundations of great religions, when the gap between the rich nations and the poor nations grows wider and when, against this background, even the most tentative steps in the direction of parliamentary reform are resisted in the name of freedom, is it any wonder that people ask how contemporary is the parliament of Canada today and, worse still, how relevant?

This sovereign body, it has been emphasized, protects our freedoms and the personal liberty of all Canadians as no other agency or institution does. Its ritual, its procedure, its symbols all emphasize that it won its freedom from executive power. Yes, Mr. Speaker, but the pace of events has quickened. What is needed now is a realization that the freedom to change is the most important freedom of all. What is needed now is the power to engineer change. I say to the opposition, do you not recognize change when you see it?

We operate as if television had never been invented, with no apparent awareness that a two-minute interview on the national network is more effective than an hour's debate. Let us recognize the importance of the electronic media. And let us be thankful that it can inform the people in a way that we cannot.

There is an enormous credibility gap in connection with the question of government efficiency, and it will remain a yawning chasm until such time as we place first priority on the efficiency of our own operations in this house. How can we criticize waste and poor productivity in the government service if we do not first of all raise the level of our own productivity? If we fail to convert this house into an effective instrument of change we shall have failed ourselves, we shall have failed to understand democracy, we shall have failed to understand the mood of our country, we shall have failed the people of Canada.

[Translation]

We must, Mr. Speaker, make the most of the opportunity to build a stronger country with a greater culture by having a truly bilingual government. Both here and abroad, Canada will be recognized as a country in the lead.

[English]

Let us, as Canadians, welcome change for the opportunities it provides. Let us build our country with a distinctively Canadian entrepreneurial spirit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to make any remarks in connection with the budget I should like to congratulate the hon. gentleman who has just delivered his maiden speech in this chamber. I agreed so much with such a great deal of what he had to say that I thought he was perhaps sitting on the wrong side of the house.

I shall discuss the budget this afternoon under three general headings: the plight of the Canadian taxpayer, the plight of the Canadian government, and the plight of the provinces, with special emphasis on the Atlantic provinces and special attention to my own province of New Brunswick. At the outset I wish to make some comments on the minister's own speech and on the budget he presented, a budget which has been aptly referred to by my hon. friend from Edmonton West as a "chickens coming home to roost" budget. The minister mentioned in the course of his speech that economic conditions in Canada began to improve in 1961. In other words, he acknowledged that the previous government, the government led by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), had brought the country out of the mess in which they found it in 1957. Here are the minister's words as reported on page 1678 of Hansard:

> The Canadian economy continues the expansion which began in 1961, which ran to excess in 1965 and 1966, which slowed down in adjusting for these excesses in 1967, and which has accelerated moderately again this year.

The minister did not elaborate on his reference to excesses in 1965 or 1966, nor mention that he was a member of the government of Canada in those two years. Neither did he mention the fact that the government apparently made no attempt to set its financial house in order during those two years so as to prevent those runaway excesses. He did not tell us about the sixty days of decision subsequent to the 1963 election which turned out to be sixty days of blundering. And now, after more than five years of blundering, the minister reported to this house in his speech on October 22, under the heading "Resisting Inflation":

> It makes people, and the institutions through which they invest their money, increasingly reluctant to lend money except at high interest rates and in decreasing amounts.

In other words, you cannot have as much and you have to pay more. This is the result of the excesses. This is chickens coming home to roost with a vengeance, and without mercy. The people concerned are the ordinary people who buy the necessities of life. There is no other classification for it than to call it financial stupidity.

I acknowledge I may properly be asked this question at this moment: What should the government have done? During the years 1965 and 1966 when the economists reported extraordinary economic activity, government spending should have been reduced, by elimination in some instances, by postponement in others, by phasing out in others, so as to keep the economic temperature at the right level instead of contributing to heating it up to such a level that prices skyrocketed and the cost of living soared to an unparalleled degree. That is what happened under a government of which the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) was a member, a government of which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was a member. Instead of acting as I have suggested they went on a spending spree. They competed with private business for management, for labour, for materials growing ever scarcer, for money in the financial markets.

Now, according to the Minister of Finance, the spree is over. But the after-effects are still with us. The hangover is with us and the headaches are being suffered by all the people of Canada. As I say, the Minister of Finance did not mention the cause of the present situation. For the appropriate adjective I quote the Winnipeg Free Press, which called it a dismal mess. Before leaving the subject of inflation—and nothing could be more important, since it accelerates and pyramids the cost of living of everyone in this country—I want the house to realize that the end is not yet. In support of this statement I quote the words of the governor of the Bank of Canada as found on page 5 of his speech delivered in Victoria on October 17:

> Taking the whole period since, say, 1960, our record with regard to costs and prices looked relatively good by comparison with other countries, but in 1966 and 1967 costs had been rising more rapidly than those of most of our major trading partners, including the United States. Indeed, by the autumn of last year we seemed to have developed an inflation psychology in this country. I tried to draw attention to this problem in a speech in Winnipeg last November. At that time I expressed the view that it was essential to break inflationary expectations by making it clear beyond doubt that inflation would not be accepted as a way of life in Canada and that this was the most urgent task of public policy. I am still strongly of this view, and my conviction is not lessened by the fact that Canada has been fortunate enough in recent months to have experienced a very strong international demand for many of its principal exports, or by the evidence that the deterioration in our cost and price structure has not gone so far as to undermine our international competitive position.

I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the words of the governor when he said he tried to draw attention to this problem in a speech at Winnipeg last November. Surely the government must have been aware of it. I think it is natural and proper to assume that the government is very conscious of the views of the governor of the Bank of Canada.

We in Canada are fortunate in having the monetary system and its guiding principles in such good hands. However, I think that money supply is an important feature of monetary policy, and in this connection it cannot be other than alarming to have the figures concerning it brought to the attention of the house. From 1958 to 1962 there was a 5.6 per cent increase in the money supply. From 1963 to 1967 there was a 9.5 per cent increase. In 1967-68 there was a 14 per cent increase, and in June, July and August, 1968, an increase of 21 per cent.

It is obvious that the rate by which the increase in money supply exceeds the increase in productivity on a properly comparable basis qualifies under the old definition of too many dollars chasing too few goods. Since increased production is one way of dealing with the problem I quote again from governor Rasminsky's speech in Victoria on October 17, because there are two ways of dealing with the problem, stop the spending or increase production. Personally I favour increasing production if this can be done. I am a positive rather than a negative person. I know it is not always possible to increase production, but here is what the governor of the Bank of Canada said in this regard:

> Now that the problems connected with maintaining a sound external financial position have eased it is possible to concentrate once again on our other economic problems. I am afraid that none of them has gone away. Prices and costs are still rising too rapidly despite the emergence of considerable unemployment and unused capacity. The growth of the economy has been well within our potential for more than two years but so long as the strong upward trend in prices and costs continues, there are real risks in taking steps to accelerate the expansion of total spending in the economy. Our recent trade performance has demonstrated that Canada is still competitive internationally but it is also true that our recent exchange problems have shown how important it is to avoid any undermining of confidence by a further extended period of poor cost and price performance.

In other words, poor productivity.

> It is plain that in addition to following sound fiscal and monetary policies we need to do everything we can to increase the efficiency of the economy and to bring about more realistic attitudes toward the size of the increase in the incomes, all forms of income, which we can really afford to pay ourselves. There has been a good deal of discussion in recent times about guide lines for increases in incomes and other aspects of incomes policy and I have made it clear that I favour action in this area. I am not going into that matter further today except to say that the basic limit for the non-inflationary increase in incomes in any economy is not set by the authorities. It is set by our actual performance. The basic limit is the increase in real output per person employed. If we ignore that limit and settle for larger increases in money incomes—

Money supply, in other words.

> —all we are doing is guaranteeing that prices will rise.

I come now to my topic which I announced at the beginning of these remarks, the plight of the taxpayer. In this connection I refer to the tables inserted in Hansard by the minister in the course of his budget speech, and particularly his statement relative to the 2 per cent social development tax. I immediately wish to challenge the label "social development." Since when has an additional tax become social development? Moreover, since when has it become possible to differentiate in the taxing of a country as to where the money is going to be spent? Where will it go? It simply goes into the consolidated revenue fund and then goes out to pay the bills. That is what happens to it.

The minister metaphorically puts his hands into the pockets of the people of Canada. He extracts $55 million between now and the end of next March and then he takes out another $440 million before March 31, 1970. Then he soothes the poor taxpayer by saying, "This may hurt some. You may be obliged to go without things you and your family need. You may be obliged to borrow money from the finance companies but in the long run it will do you good because of the label on the bottle"—the label being social development. Did anyone ever hear anything more ridiculous? We have other soothing syrup labels also. We have the "just society" and we have "equal opportunity," all intended as tranquilizers.

In connection with the 2 per cent tax let us examine the table found on page 1692 of Hansard. A married man with two dependants, earning $100 per week and now paying roughly $7.50 per week in taxes, will have his taxes increased by $46 a year, which is roughly $1 per week or approximately 12 per cent. Let us compare this with the tax to be paid by the taxpayer with a salary of $25,000 a year, or $500 per week. His tax is increased by $120. His total tax was a little less than $8,000 and so the tax increase is roughly 1½ per cent for him. The fellow with $25,000 a year pays an increase of 1½ per cent but the fellow with $5,000 a year pays an increase of 12 per cent. That is the just society.

This, I remind the house, is in addition to the 3 per cent surtax announced by the previous minister of finance on November 30, 1967. It was supposed to be temporary. That was the adjective applied to it, Mr. Speaker, but it is still with us. I have encountered much opposition to this 2 per cent tax increase and I am sure all hon. members have. I challenge the right of the minister to label it a social development tax unless the funds are kept in a separate account and earmarked for social development purposes only.

I now wish to comment on the taxpayer's interest in the tax on life insurance companies. When we decide to impose a tax on life insurance companies, a tax that has not existed previously, does anyone within sound of my voice think for one moment that this tax will not increase the cost of doing business for the insurance companies? Does not everyone know that it is going to mean larger premiums for insurance protection that people need, particularly when their families are small and before their education has been completed? There is no question about that.

I also view with some alarm the fact that the dividend payments on an insurance policy are going to be taxed. This is really a tax on thrift. Individuals as a rule buy so-called participating life insurance policies as a means of sharing in the earnings of an insurance company by having small amounts credited to their policies. Generally speaking these have not been taxed in the past but they are going to be taxed in the future and this, I repeat, is really a tax on thrift. Some people blame this on computers but I blame the government. Computers are not making policy. They are merely mechanisms by which tax is collected.

The same principle is going to be followed in the case of interest payments by banks on savings. The banks now will be obliged to report any interest payment over $10. I believe that previously the amount was $100. Again we have a tax on thrift, and again the poor taxpayer gets it in the neck.

Insurance as a protection is a must in our society. It contributes to the improvement and strengthening of the morale of people. Encouragement to people to make provision for their own future and to provide individual protection for wife and family should be given by governments at all levels.

The minister further announced a reduction in permitted reserves of banks and trust companies, which he estimates will provide additional revenue of $45 million in 1969-70. This may properly be described as scraping the bottom of the barrel for revenue. For a long time we have bragged about our banking system. We have announced with pride that we went through the worst crisis in the world's history in the early 1930's with no bank failures. Now, in the affluent society period, we say to the banks: You do not need such large reserves any more; we are going to tax them away from you, and if you run into hard times again you may go broke. What kind of policy is this?

Before I leave the subject of the taxpayer I wish to mention an announcement by the minister that funds for the 1969-70 fiscal period will be secured by moving ahead the dates of payment of corporate income tax. This sounds great. The minister tries to convey the impression that every corporation is like International Nickel, a huge corporation with millions of dollars lying around, and that all the government has to do is move the money to the credit of the Bank of Canada. I say there are many small corporations carried on by people as family businesses. They incorporate these businesses because they want to have them continued after the death of the founder, probably by his son or sons. This happens in every part of our country. Everybody knows it. So I say that the stepping up of the payment of the corporation tax by two or three months, when in many instances the taxpayer has made no credit arrangements, will impose a real hardship on corporations which are really family businesses. I fail to see how the minister can derive much satisfaction from stepping up the payment of this tax.

All these points add up to one fact only, that this government is making it more and more difficult for the businesses of this country to be carried on. People are becoming more and more discouraged. They may be driven out of business. They are the revenue producers for the government. In many instances 50 cents on every dollar they produce goes toward the grinding away of this great big machine here in the city of Ottawa. Yet it appears that the government is gradually killing the goose that lays the golden egg when by ordinary business foresight it could keep it alive in a healthy condition to continue contributing to the general activity of the country.

Speaking once more on behalf of the taxpayer I refer the house to the forecast of the former minister of finance on November 30, 1967, when he introduced a 3 per cent income tax surcharge, raised alcohol and tobacco taxes, speeded up corporation tax payments and forecast an $80 million deficit for the fiscal year April 1, 1968 to March 31, 1969. Less than a year later his successor rose from his seat on the front benches and made an announcement. He said that the deficit which was estimated to be $80 million will be $730 million. He plastered on a 2 per cent tax for the last three months of the fiscal year for a net deficit of $675 million. This adds up to a difference in the figures in less than a year of approximately $650 million. I submit that this suggests incompetence. It suggests an incompetent, incapable and even inept government. That is what we have.

The question might be asked: have they learned their lesson; are they going to do better? The answer appears to be no. The finance minister says that spending will be restrained, but almost in the same breath he announces that in the next year they will spend an additional $890 million. I do not propose to examine the reasons for this extra expenditure. That will come up later. But I do wish to bring to the attention of the house the fact that the general financial situation in this country is still represented as being particularly good. The present government campaigned for election last June on the basis of saying: "We have it good; just give us a majority and we will show what we can do." So they got the majority. They have shown what they can do within six months by acknowledgeing that they made an error in forecasting of more than $600 million. That is the number one accomplishment so far. Then they say that they anticipate increased expenditures next year of nearly another billion dollars. They also gave a guarantee to the investment people in New York that expenditures would not exceed $10,300 million, but if you examine the minister's figures you will see that the figure is shown as $10,780 million. This is a difference of $480 million.

I wonder what the Canadian taxpayer thinks of this. I think I know. He thinks the government is incapable of handling the business of the country. I agree with him. On the basis of performance the government should be condemned by this house. That is what the amendment and subamendment do. I suggest to the government that there is no easy or painless solution to the financial problem facing this nation. I note that a conference will be held with the provinces in December and that the finance ministers of Canada are meeting at this moment. If you read the newspapers you know what happened at the conference yesterday and what is happening today. Everybody wants the 2 per cent tax. Everybody wants the $440 million. They all want it. There is one thing I hope they will discuss at this conference, the question of the duplication of administrative agencies as between the provincial governments and the federal government, including crown corporations and the general proliferation of bureaucracy. What this country needs is less government in business and more business in government. That is what is needed. Unless this principle is established and carried out, I fear for the future of our country. The will of the people to be self-reliant is in jeopardy. The desire of our people to produce is meeting with discouragement.

At this point I think we should examine the minister's speech in the light of, to use the phrase of the Winnipeg Free Press, the grievous financial miscalculation and to see whether we can have any confidence in the projected figures. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the speech of the governor of the Bank of Canada delivered at Victoria on October 17 be re-examined, because at the bottom of page 3 we find this sentence: "The exchange problem of last winter was above all a crisis in confidence". I ask this question which I bring to the attention of the house: If a lack of confidence can result in a run on the Canadian dollar, though it proved and demonstrated the strength of the dollar, then what might happen if a similar lack of confidence should develop based on the government's record of fiscal mismanagement and miscalculation? It seems to me that a lack of confidence by the United States market or, for that matter, by any market, could have very serious effects on our whole economy.

The financial plight of the government, therefore, is a serious one. It will take courage and determination to put into effect the measures necessary to cope with it in a proper way. But an ancillary financial problem of the government of Canada is the budgetary position of the provinces. The tax structure committee, composed of the finance ministers of all the provinces and the federal minister of finance, met two years ago and concluded that the financial problems of the provinces over the next five years would be substantially greater than those of the federal government. It was considered that the federal government would be in a surplus position and the provinces would be in a deficit position. Now it seems to me that the difficulties are greatly increased when both levels are in a position of deficit. In this connection we need only read the morning paper and the report of the provincial finance ministers meeting to which I referred a moment ago.

In concluding the portion of my remarks relative to the financial plight of the government, let me take a look at what is said by experts and by papers which certainly do not favour the Conservative party and certainly are not enemies of the Liberal party. The Winnipeg Free Press calls the budget of the Minister of Finance dismal. The Financial Times of October 28, which is not unfriendly to the present administration, says that whether or not one feels the optimism about the next few years that came through in the forecast of Mr. Arthur Smith of the Economic Council, one must also agree with Professor E. P. Neufeld of the University of Toronto that the federal government's accounts are basically out of control.

Professor Neufeld claims that the trade-off point between inflation and unemployment in Canada is much higher than in the United States. He said it would take a 7 per cent unemployment rate to bring the rate of inflation down by 1 per cent. He said that because our governments are in such a tight financial box there is no way they can now cope with the problem. Any assessment of the outlook from now on should be made with this fact in mind.

Professor Neufeld also had some realistic things to say about Canada's external standing. He noted that our rate of increase in prices and wages has been very much faster than that in the United States ever since 1958. Although he does not expect a balance of payments problem next year he said:

> I would think that policy-making officials would ask themselves whether Canada can digest another period when its cost and price increases exceed those of the United States.

He then said: "Obviously Canada cannot".

The Financial Times of October 28 had this to say on the editorial page:

> Last week's budget displayed the Trudeau government in the guise of a bewildered little man, up to his neck in debts, who devotes all his ingenuity to juggling the due dates of payment. The diagnosis of Canada's financial problem was incoherent and sometimes self-contradictory. The prognosis was so partial and incomplete as to be incredible.

This is a pretty serious editorial from a journal friendly to the administration. It then states:

> The loss of credibility is a very serious matter, because credibility is inseparable from confidence. Without confidence, Mr. Benson can kiss goodbye to all his broad fronts and high priorities. And confidence in the government of Canada is weaker than it was a week ago.

Now, Mr. Speaker let me say a few words about regional disparity. The Atlantic provinces naturally are the area closest to my heart so far as this matter is concerned. It was my responsibility and great privilege to deal with and endeavour to improve during the years 1952 to 1960 the affairs of the province of New Brunswick. We struggled during the first portion of those years and gradually improved our position. During that time we made frequent trips to Ottawa in an attempt to bring our special situation to the attention of the then federal government. We pointed out our difficulties and our disabilities. We asked for special consideration in view of commitments dating back to confederation. We were always told that there must be uniformity of action and each province must be treated on the same basis. We were unable to accomplish anything of a special nature until after June 10, 1957 when a new federal government assumed office, and then what was impossible for the old became possible for the new. From then on it was different.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but according to the rules his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Flemming: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members. I assure you I will only be a few minutes.

I said we could not accomplish anything with the old government and did not accomplish anything until we got a new government on June 10, 1957. From then on things were different. The government sponsored a bill to assist in obtaining cheaper power for our industries. On the financial side the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants came into existence.

At this point I wish to pay tribute to the prime minister of those days who was the best friend of the Atlantic provinces ever to occupy that position. I refer to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). He initiated the Atlantic provinces special adjustment grants which added $25 million per year to the revenue side of the four provincial budgets for the period 1958-62, a total of $100 million over four years. Then provision was made for an annual increase of $10 million and for $35 million annually for the next five years. A total of $175 million was approved. The division among the Atlantic provinces was on a 3-3-3-1 basis.

The second period was 1962-67. Then came the Atlantic Development Board, the legislation being finalized late in January, 1963. I do not know whether hon. members realize what special adjustment grants meant to the budgets of these small provinces, but I speak with great knowledge when I say that it was a tremendous shot in the arm.

The concept of the Atlantic Development Board was to assist in examination and research of hitherto undeveloped resources in the Atlantic provinces. No special amount of money was voted. The Liberal opposition of that day made a lot of fuss about that, but the reason was that the total resources of the country were to be available for development of any duly qualified underdeveloped resources. Subsequent to research and examination, and if approved by the board, application would be made to the government of Canada for assistance in developing the same. It is under this heading that the development of the tidal power of the Fundy tides should come.

Last evening a resolution was presented by my friend, the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates), asking for government consideration of this tremendous project under which it is proposed to harness the Fundy tides, the greatest in the world, which ebb and flow twice every 24 hours and have a great potential through the use of reversible turbines. This is the type of thing the Atlantic Development Board was to investigate.

We also have low grade manganese in my area around Woodstock. We also have the tin of Charlotte county, the only known deposit of tin in Canada, but apparently not rich enough to justify development without some help. That is what the Atlantic Development Board was in my opinion set up to do.

In the initial stages both these developments might need government assistance. That type of thing was the concept of the Atlantic Development Board. It was likewise the concept that the board would operate in conjunction with provincial governments and private industry. This is the type of co-operative action which has brought about the establishment of the largest food processing plant in Canada, McCain Foods, located at Florenceville in the county of Carleton. We all take pride in their accomplishments and activities which are now world wide. This has taken place although it was not supposed to take place on account of its location. This is the result of the principals being private industry which could see a vision for the future.

We have heard a report that the board may be advisory only in the future. I hope this is inaccurate, but should it be deemed to be advisable by the government I for one would be glad and prepared to co-operate with the minister of regional development in whatever he may consider to be necessary to stimulate the economy of the Atlantic region or any other region, for that matter. I have read the minister's speech delivered to the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council at Halifax on November 29. It is my suggestion that he did not emphasize private industry enough in that speech. The Atlantic Provinces Economic Council never had any public funds to any extent. This is a private industry or enterprise instrument which could be used to ensure good value for every dollar. The foundation for development is in the hands of private business and all they need is encouragement from the government.

At this point I want to express my appreciation to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand). I am sure the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) will keep this same matter in mind. I refer to saving the forests of New Brunswick by participating in a spraying program next year. I should like to thank that minister in advance for his utmost consideration because this means a lot to New Brunswick and a great deal to the revenues of the federal government.

Perhaps I may take two or three minutes more. On May 18, 1967, I spoke during the debate on the throne speech. My remarks are recorded at pages 351 to 356 of Hansard. I especially drew the attention of the house and the then minister of energy, mines and resources and the then secretary of state for external affairs to the serious question of pollution in the upper St. John river and its tributaries which rise in the state of Maine. I urged these ministers to obtain information relative to the matter and to take action with provincial authorities and the governments of Maine and the United States.

A very serious situation developed this summer on a tributary of the St. John river, the Big Presque Isle river which rises in the state of Maine, flows through the communities of Easton, Mars Hill, and Bridgewater in Maine, then through the village of Centreville, New Brunswick, and finally empties into the St. John river below Florenceville. There is a starch factory located at Easton, Maine, which dumps its waste into this river. This summer, with low water, the pollution became so bad that fish could not live in it and the river became filled with dead fish to such an extent that people living along the river could not stand the offensive odour and were obliged to close their windows. The citizens of the village of Centreville could only live inside their houses with every door and window closed.

A committee was formed to deal, on behalf of the community, with all levels of government in an attempt to have the situation corrected, but they received so little satisfaction that they decided to dam the river at the state of Maine boundary and let the water back up across the boundary into the state of Maine. This action had a very quick and beneficial effect. Very soon they received notice that the industry causing the pollution was taking care of it in some way, and within a few days they voluntarily removed the dam they had built. My point is that law-abiding citizens should not be obliged to take the law into their own hands, as the citizens of this area were obliged to do.

I ask the ministers within sound of my voice this afternoon to give this message to the appropriate ministers so that this matter will be investigated and something done to correct it. I will not elaborate on the situation. We know that the problem concerns the state of Maine. The Saint John river is an international river and there are small rivers flowing into it. I realize that all these things are difficult, but I know the Minister of Fisheries will undertake to carry the message to his colleagues and I hope that remedial measures will be put into effect.

In concluding these remarks I wish to say that productivity is becoming more and more difficult. I have some experience in this regard. In the speech of the Minister of Finance and in any discussions I have heard on this budget, I have never heard the fact referred to that literally thousands of Canadians are making no contribution to the productivity of this country. Why are they not making any contribution? In many cases it is because the Canadian government, and often provincial governments, are making social assistance possible to such an extent that even third and fourth generations are now being affected. The result is a deterioration of productivity and a lessening of the ability of people to produce.

I say to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and every member of the government who is new to his office that the people who elected them expect them to deal with this depressing and potentially disruptive situation. I think the Canadian people expect this government to replace handouts with productive jobs and to put back into Canadian life pride, independence and a desire to work and accomplish what their forefathers did, who had these qualities and worked together to make this country great.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in the budget debate I do so with a great deal of regret and a certain degree of despair because of the lack of appropriate action based on the statements made by the former minister of finance and the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) prior to the election campaign, during the debate on the original budget and the mini-budget last year and during the election campaign itself. We constantly heard remarks then that led us to think this government really intended to return the country to a policy of fiscal responsibility.

The Budget—Mr. R. N. Thompson

Unfortunately the budget introduced in this house on October 22 is stark evidence that Liberal governments since 1963 have insisted and continue to insist on adopting fiscal policies that can only be described as irresponsible. The credibility gap in government fiscal programming is very wide indeed and continues to widen. These are not idle words, they are not at variance with the facts, nor do they differ from comments I have made in this house in regard to the policies of Liberal governments since 1963.

The tragedy of it all is that the government does not learn from its errors. In fact, it seems determined to perpetuate them even in defiance of what its own members must know is a wrong financial policy. It is little wonder that Hon. Robert Winters, former minister of trade and commerce, said last January when announcing his candidature for the Liberal leadership that the Liberal party, the Liberal government, must return to fiscal responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): I would have thought the present Minister of Finance might have learned from the errors of his predecessors and from the advice of such men as the hon. Robert Winters, but apparently he has not. Government expenditure has increased to $10,780 million, bringing with it a deficit of $675 million. On December 7 last the Minister of Finance said, as recorded on page 5180 of Hansard, that government expenditures would be held to $10.3 billion. He said the same thing the next day. On February 13 this year the Minister of Finance said, as found on page 6663 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to guarantee to the house that after the supplementary estimates are introduced during the year... we will hit our $10.3 billion ceiling and will balance the budget this year.

He was speaking then as minister of national revenue. What has happened in the intervening months? Is it any wonder that the Canadian people see the credibility gap growing wider and wider? Is it any wonder that financial and economic authorities in this country almost unanimously say that this budget is a tragedy for the nation?

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), who used to be minister of finance, said the same thing. In fact, I believe the Minister of Finance was merely repeating statements that the then minister of finance had made. The then minister of finance said on November 10 last year, as recorded on page 4124 of Hansard, that budgetary expenditures in 1968-69 would be held to $10.3 billion. He said the same thing later that month on November 30, as found on page 4900 of Hansard. He also said the same thing on a number of other occasions. It is little wonder that a well known journalist, Peter Newman, who is usually rather lenient in his criticism of the government, said on budget night that not since world war II have the national accounts been in such a mess. I say to hon. members opposite and to the new members of parliament, because I am sure they share this concern, that this is just not idle talk from the opposition; these are facts.

Where do we go so far as the finances of our country are concerned? Let us look at what has happened during the last year. The deficit is now estimated at $675 million, but the government informed us last February that it had cut back the planned expenditures for the current year by $800 million. In addition, new taxes imposed in this budget are going to raise the tax load on the taxpayers of this country by $440 million. Then, the increase in postal charges will cost the Canadian people another $100 million. We must consider this because it is really a new levy as well. When these figures are added together we find that there has been an increase in expenditures of more than $2 billion. To be exact, it is $2,015 million. This is the increase in government expenditures since 1966-67. The situation can only be described as fantastic, sheer fiscal irresponsibility.

The present Minister of Finance has said that he will balance the budget next year. I cannot believe it, and I do not think anybody else can believe it. Where has the credibility of this government gone? It has been said that a good economy, in one respect, resembles a sponge. A sponge can soak up a lot of mess but when the sponge becomes saturated then the sponge itself becomes a mess. This is exactly the point this government has reached. This is why I am concerned. I am concerned about the well-being of our country. If the sponge is going to become useful again, I believe the only way will be for the mess the sponge has taken unto itself to be wrung out, and the government is unable to do this.

One of the unexpected increases in government expenditures, we were told by the Minister of Finance, was the increase in the cost of servicing the national debt. This has gone up some $67 million more than had been expected. Why? Obviously it results from the previous government's policy of insisting on lifting the ceiling on interest rates. I can recall listening to the former minister of finance in the committee on finance and economic affairs when he said that lifting the ceiling on interest rates would not substantially increase the cost of money but would instead make more money available. Not only has the cost of servicing the national debt increased by $67 million more than had been expected, but the total cost of servicing the national debt has risen to $1.47 billion.

By the way, it is interesting to note that the national debt itself has reached the astronomical figure of $32,926,300,000. Now, the cost of servicing that debt this year, being $1.47 billion, represents an increase in interest this year of $370 million. How much farther can this kind of policy go without bankrupting the nation? In fact, the interest cost on the national debt takes 14 cents out of every tax dollar we pay. This is one-seventh of the entire 1968 budget. Is this good housekeeping? Is this responsible fiscal policy? How long can it continue?

So, Mr. Speaker, I can only say that I am concerned about where the government's financial policy is taking us. I am also concerned about the smugness and arrogance which the government shows to the public with regard to these policies. I can only go back again to what the Minister of Finance said a short time ago when he boasted that the government had cut expenditures by some $800 million. In fact, it was the present Minister of Finance who said on December 7, as reported in Hansard, page 5180:

> —that the estimates which were brought in amounted to $11.5 billion and we are going to keep them to $10.3 billion.

Is it any wonder that the credibility of the Minister of Finance is being questioned? During his budget speech the minister said that this was a budget to ensure a sound economic and financial base from which to move forward through a new period of balanced expansion and social progress. Can we accept such a statement in view of his record? We cannot, and so the credibility of these statements is in question. In addition, the reliability and capability of the government to supply a sound financial administration are also in question. The ultimate result of all this is a crippling tax burden which becomes more than the taxpayer can bear.

We are the most overgoverned people in the world. When the cost of municipal government, provincial government and federal government is added up the astounding total is that nearly 47 cents out of every dollar Canadians earn, regardless of how they earn it, is being taken back by government to meet the cost of government. Historically and economically we know we are fast reaching the breaking point. We placate our consciences by comparing our federal budget with the tax load imposed by countries such as Sweden and Great Britain, but we fail to mention the fact that we have three levels of government whereas they have two. We do not add up the total tax load as it must be added, because in the end there is only one taxpayer. It is the taxpayer who gets the rap in this budget.

My honourable colleague who spoke just before me mentioned the social development tax of 2 per cent. This is one of the most vicious taxes that has ever been imposed on the Canadian taxpayer because it hits the small wage earner who cannot afford it and, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said, it relieves the tax load on the rich. Not having been in that fortunate or unfortunate position, perhaps I do not understand. Perhaps the Prime Minister does. It is not only the members of the opposition who are protesting. I was most interested the other day to pick up a comment by the treasurer of Saskatchewan, Mr. Stewart, who happens to belong to the same party as the Minister of Finance. According to this article he said:

> —the 2 per cent social development tax in the budget could bring about a totally different relationship between federal and provincial governments and "could work a real hardship on the provinces."
> He said the tax will not be shared with the provinces and will merely aggravate a growing inequity between the provinces' constitutional responsibilities and their revenue resources.
> "The federal tax structure committee two years ago pointed out this condition to Ottawa," Mr. Stewart said. "Had the federal government shown more fiscal responsibility then, and resisted the temptation to introduce new programs, funds would have been available to alleviate this imbalance."

I wonder what the same Mr. Stewart is saying today in the conference of finance ministers about some of the other policies of the government such as the opting out of shared programs as announced by the Prime Minister only yesterday? I am sure that his feeling on the matter is shared by every other provincial treasurer, just as it is by every thoughtful member of this house if he considers the tax loan imposed in this country.

There is another interesting fact which relates to the government bonds being offered at the present time. The government has boasted a great deal about the current issue of government bonds. We hear advertising on the news media and read advertisements in the newspapers every day about what a profitable investment these government bonds are. They yield an average interest of 6¾ per cent for a period of 14 years. It is staggering if you understand just what this means. It means that those who buy this new series of Canada savings bonds will receive two and a half times their original investment in 14 years. The government's goal is $1 billion for the sale of these savings bonds. The advertisements point out they are a good investment. I am concerned about the taxpayer who is the one who is going to have to pay the interest on these bonds. A $1,000 bond will bring an investor $2,500 in 14 years. The federal government never pays its debts. What it does is to borrow more money to pay off existing debts, thus incurring new debts at higher rates of interest.

The reason the government is selling $1 billion worth of Canada savings bonds at this time is simply that it must pay off previous issues which are now falling due. In 14 years' time the investor who has turned his $1,000 investment into $2,500 will cost the taxpayers of this country $1,500. If he reinvests that money, do you know what will happen to our young people who are just starting to work today? In 28 years they will have to pay $6,250 for the original $1,000 investment. That is the tragedy of this kind of financial policy. How long can it continue? We do not know, but we are concerned about it, and this is why it is necessary to speak in this vein.

We are all very much aware that in Ottawa today a conference is being held of federal-provincial finance ministers. I have stated that the impact of this budget on the individual taxpayer will be very serious indeed. However, what I am even more fearful about is the relationship between the federal and provincial governments. I believe that this budget will bring about open warfare between the provincial governments and the federal government. This can lead us nowhere except into a tax jungle from which it will be very difficult to find our way out. Not only is this going to happen but the whole process of confederation will be weakened as a result of the bitterness that will be generated between these two levels of government in this country.

[Mr. Thompson (Red Deer).]

Yesterday the federal government blandly announced that it will get out of shared cost programs five years from now. But it is the federal government that fashioned these programs. Take, for example, medicare. Not only did the federal government design the medicare program, which today is being held out by the federal government on a take it or leave it basis, but it did so in the face of opposition from practically every provincial government except Saskatchewan, and it is quite understandable why the province of Saskatchewan was in no position to oppose it.

Most of the shared cost programs have been the product of federal government policy. Most of them have been forced upon the provinces in the same way that medicare is being forced on the provinces today. The province of Alberta has a reasonably satisfactory health program and so has the province of Ontario. They are not perfect but they are improving each year as the provinces gain experience with their plans. These programs are aimed at helping those who are unable to help themselves. Both programs have as their objective helping those who need help, which after all is the responsibility of government. But this objective should not be carried to the extent that programs and policies are imposed upon people who are not in need of them and who in most cases do not want them. Provincial governments which have not yet participated in medicare are being forced, politics being what they are, to participate. The federal government now states that it is going to opt out of these programs in five years. Not only is the medicare program involved but other shared cost programs as well.

What disturbs me about the whole federal-provincial relationship, this so-called co-operative federalism that we have heard so much about during the last five years, is that the federal government, behind closed doors, works out a policy about which it does not even inform its own backbenchers. That policy is proposed to successive provincial conferences, again behind closed doors, and then the federal government, because of the very nature and method of its approach, forces the provincial governments to go along with that policy, in many cases even before the representatives of the provincial governments can return home and consult their own legislative assemblies. Now this founder of the "just society" has stated the government will opt out of such programs in five years.

Yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that his announcement was but a clear statement of what was previous government policy in 1966. It might have been previous stated policy in 1966, but the provinces did not agree with that policy. The provinces expressed very strong objection to the policies that the federal government was enacting. Their concern about the situation is simply this: Where are they going to get the required money?

According to the budget the medicare program is estimated to cost in the coming year $335 million. What consideration has been given to the provinces which are supposed to collect a like amount of $335 million? And medicare costs are just beginning. It seems to me that here again is sheer irresponsibility in the matter of federal policy. This kind of policy will make it increasingly difficult for provincial governments to carry out their legitimate responsibilities—after all, there is only one taxpayer—and besides it will weaken the whole process of federalism in this country.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned, as I think we all are. If many of the backbenchers across the way were able to express their opinions I think they would say so too. This budget strikes at something that is of great importance to the whole process of government, to our whole taxation structure, in fact, to the whole financial situation facing the country.

We realize that government must increase in size because governments have increasing responsibility in the affairs of our nation and our people. But we cannot allow government to increase to the extent that it destroys individual rights. We cannot allow it to increase so that it destroys the whole base of taxation and financial policy as it relates to the provinces. We cannot let it increase in size to the extent that the tax load becomes too heavy for the taxpayer to bear. We must hold back government spending. We must call a halt to present inflationary policies—and I mean call a halt, Mr. Speaker, not just talk about it and then turn round and do the opposite—in order to allow the economy to grow so that it will be able to bear the increased load that is being placed upon it.

At the same time that we call a halt to present policies we must be searching for new policies which will permit of fiscal results different from the present ones. Today we are actually taking away the very incentive that is required in our business community, in the private sector of the economy. We need to give greater encouragement to individual Canadians engaged in business and in industry in order to help them establish and grow, to help them provide employment and increase productivity, instead of penalizing them for doing this. This is the only way we will have a healthy, Canadian-owned business economy.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we do not encourage individual enterprise, we penalize it. Not only do we do this but we destroy the confidence of our own people to invest their savings in the economy. The savings of the Canadian people during the past year have been estimated to amount to approximately $1,300 million. In fact, the amount of savings in the chartered banks and in the savings banks in Canada is over $10 billion. However, from this amount of $1,300 million $600 million will be transferred abroad for the purchase of securities on the U.S. market, mainly on the New York and Chicago stock exchanges. All too often these investments are in questionable stocks. Do Canadians realize this, Mr. Speaker? I do not think they do.

We desperately need capital so that our economy can grow. For five years we have talked about setting up a Canadian development corporation; yet we continue to ship out increasingly large amounts of Canadian savings. If such large amounts are available to be exported from this country why have the Laura Secord candy company, MacIntyre mines, various petroleum companies and the potash industry of Saskatchewan been taken over by United States capital during the last year or two? For about $400 million Canadians sold $15 billion worth of potash reserves because it was said we did not have capital. Yet we ship out of the country far more capital than would be necessary to hold these companies under Canadian ownership.

Someone has suggested that our tax dollars should be used to subsidize new development in industries which are usually foreign owned. I doubt that this is a sound policy. Certainly the government ought to do everything it can to restore the confidence of Canadians in their own economy so that they may invest their own savings in Canadian resources development and industry.

It has been said that there is not enough Canadian money to finance Canadian development. That is not true. Canadians are conservative investors; we are a nation of bond buyers and insurance investors. Yet Canadians do not put their money where I submit they ought to put it. I am convinced that the reason is that Canadian investors who put out their life savings have insufficient confidence that they are making a sound and reasonable investment. As a result they invest across the border to the south.

Repeatedly it is said that our industries are being taken over by United States capital, while at the same time our savings go to the United States. Let us be frank and recognize that the United States has done something that we ourselves refuse to do. Let us understand too that we cannot criticize others unless we put our own house in order. Until then we ought to go easy about condemning the other fellow.

Let me illustrate my point. The other day I talked with a senior executive of a major company. He needed the services of a middle class executive but could not find anyone in Canada experienced for the particular job. An application came in from the United States from a man who earned $30,000. He was qualified for the job and wanted to come here. He did not ask for an increase in salary; he merely wanted in his new job the same amount of take-home pay he had before. The executive told me that in order to give the man from the United States the take-home pay he had enjoyed it would be necessary to pay him $57,000 a year here.

It is said by some across the way that our taxing policies are reasonable and responsible. I fail to understand that assertion. We are suffering from a credibility gap. The present Minister of Finance and the former minister have both told us that by using our available computer systems and our technical knowledge it is possible to project the growth needs of our economy as well as the tax patterns of this country for five years ahead, to 1971 or 1972. Well, Mr. Speaker, something went wrong with the computer system because the Minister of Finance has been grossly inconsistent.

I suggest that this country needs a new breed of pioneer entrepreneurs, new managerial developers, who will create confidence and provide the know-how to develop our industries through Canadian investment. We lack vision. We are certainly in a grave financial crisis and I am deeply concerned about it. There seems to be no alternative to our presently developing financial pattern.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

[Mr. Thompson (Red Deer).]

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the popularity of the Ralliement Créditiste and its financial theory are not on the wane, for I notice that none of the colleagues of the member are now in the house.

[English]

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): May I inform the new member of the house who has just spoken that if he were to go to Hansard for the last six years and read the speeches I have made during budget debates he would find that what I said previously is absolutely consistent with everything I have said today.

I have just realized that I did not hear the first part of the hon. member's remarks and thus did not understand his intent. I apologize to the hon. member.

May I say before I sit down that in the last few days I have realized that one group in our population will suffer extreme hardship as the result of the government's taxing policies. If the government's taxing policies had been directed to relieving areas of genuine need in the economy I think we might have had a different budget. I am now speaking of those who are more than 70 years old. Over one million Canadians are in this age group. About 400,000 of these people do not pay any taxes. In other words their income is so low that they depend on the old age pension and the supplementary allowance. About 600,000 of this age group earn between $2,500 and $3,000 a year. If the government were to adjust its tax exemptions to enable these citizens to earn $3,000 a year without tax the cost would be very little. In this way the living standards of senior citizens who can no longer do productive work would be raised—and a genuine need would be met. The 2 per cent tax will hit these 600,000 people and take away some of the little they already have.

Time does not permit me to go on and give other illustrations. Not only do we need policies which will encourage incentive, the use of our own dollars and the development of our own resources along the broadest lines, not only do we need financial policies which will hold the expenditures of government steady until our productivity increases to the extent necessary to carry the extra load, but we must also devise ways by which to ease the increasing pressures of government so far as the tax resource dollar is concerned. We cannot afford to aggravate further the situation which is developing between the federal government and the provincial governments. The outcome of the tax conference now being held, the outcome of the policies announced in the budget and since, will simply be that contention and dissatisfaction between the two major levels of government will increase, and this at a time when we have probably made some gains in the direction of greater understanding of the need for constitutional reform.

We must also adjust the tax load so as to relieve some of the pressure points which exist for certain segments of our people such as the senior age groups. Again, the credibility gap grows. Present financial policies are inadequate. The responsible policies which we expect are not there. The picture is not hopeful and I can only trust the government will wake up before it is too late.

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, too often we are inclined to forget that in spite of everything, the Canadian economy is one of the most dynamic in the world. Our living standard is quite high compared to what other people enjoy throughout the world. We owe this standard of living, on the one hand, to the initiative and work of the Canadian people and, on the other hand, to the management of the federal government and to the economic measures it has taken in the last six years or so.

I believe that even now we have all the elements necessary to continued vigorous and sound economic progress. Following the financial statement of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), we see that the new Liberal government is taking the means, at times with the required firmness, to promote actively the stability and growth of our economy, by planning the overall and full development, for the short and the long term, of our natural and industrial resources, and especially our human resources.

Economic, financial and fiscal problems are becoming more and more complex; now, no one would dream that so complex an economy could progress and improve without encountering difficult problems. There is no easy solution to complex problems. Faithful to its program, faithful also to the principles stated in the speech from the throne at the beginning of this session, the present government wishes sincerely and strongly to study and solve those problems and to use its authority, its power and the knowledge of its members so that our fellow-citizens can enjoy true and increased freedom which will enable them to demonstrate efficiently their initiative while trying to achieve sound economic objectives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian society is dynamic and prosperous.

However, social disparities do exist but through the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) who will soon become, if I am not mistaken, the Minister of Regional Development, the government has taken serious steps, in co-operation with the provinces, to eliminate such disparities. Within five years or less, we will certainly be in a position to note the results of certain programs, for example the five-year plan which was the object of the co-operative agreement to carry out the development program in the lower St. Lawrence area, the Gaspé peninsula and the Îles-de-la-Madeleine signed in Rimouski on May 26, 1968 by the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development at that time (Mr. Sauvé) and Quebec Premier (Mr. Johnson).

By the way, allow me to point out that we hope that the officials of the various federal departments will get used to that program or will continue getting acquainted with it, in order to facilitate the interdepartmental co-operation one one hand and, on the other, the federal-provincial co-operation in the best interests of our fellow-citizens living in that pilot area.

The Canadian society is concerned about the fate of the underprivileged, the oppressed, the sick, the disabled and the poor all over the world. All honourable members, to whatever political party they belong, are deeply concerned about the welfare of the Canadian people and our brothers in the world.

I have in mind now legislation such as the Canada pension plan, the Canada assistance plan, the supplement to the old age security pension, the youth allowances, the loans to students of which, unfortunately, the Quebec students could not take advantage.

I am also thinking of the increasingly substantial assistance given to universities, regional development—to which I referred a few moments ago—manpower mobility and retraining, incentives to industry and, in spite of the criticisms of the member who just spoke before me, I shall mention medical care, as well as numerous beneficial legislation we have adopted here.

Let us not forget either, since they are evidence and symbols of the progressive development of our country, legislation which has given us our national flag, the commemoration of the centennial of confederation, Montreal Expo and the acknowledgment of the rights and privileges of the groups which have built Canada and are still living together on Canadian soil.

All the achievements of the past years have been carried out by a Liberal government headed by a prime minister who is no longer in this house, by a prime minister who was our pride both outside and inside the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, we now extend our confidence to our new Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who has shown to date, whatever some may say, great mastery, a brilliant intelligence and a remarkable efficiency.

With respect to budget stability, I believe he is adhering to the program that had been brought before the people of Canada.

We were told hardly a few months ago that Canada apparently was in the midst of an economic upsurge and that therefore the government was considering a balanced budget by cutting down somewhat public expenditures.

As we can see in the budget speech, the present economic situation, the intermediate and short term outlook, the present financial situation, the taxation outlook for 1969-70, the control of public expenses, discussions with the provinces—as are taking place at present—the pattern of political economy, the battle against inflation, the present taxation policy, taxation recommendations, estate tax and gift tax, the case of life insurance companies, financial institution reserves and all other measures are facets of our financial problem which were faced squarely, with full knowledge of the facts and, in the light of the contemplated goal, financial and budgetary stability in this country.

We think it is a responsible and honest financial statement, outlining all the aspects of the problem.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski).]

In the present state of our financial obligations and in view of the financial and economic development not only in Canada, but as we see it, throughout the world, an honest, just and sincere Minister of Finance must show great courage. Such courage is shown I think at present by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). In order to prevent any further inflation, the minister had to plan a very substantial increase in revenue for the next fiscal year.

However, the first elements of a fiscal reform are given in that statement. In spite of it all, it does seem that the taxation system is more equitable. The reforms will affect mainly the corporate tax, the income tax and their allotment between the federal and provincial governments.

A stable budget should enable us to strengthen and develop our economy. However, under the item: expenditures, it should not be forgotten that the federal government is not solely responsible; if we want Canada to progress toward an ever more vigorous economy, the provincial and municipal governments must also assume their share of responsibilities. Together, we must strive to decrease the tax rates and expand the tax basis, that is the wealth of Canada.

We are told that the time has come to be frank. There is no magic formula to guarantee our evolution, to achieve our ideal of justice in Canada; we cannot expect the path to be strewn with flowers. We must choose the way of realistic, functional and efficient solutions and so, that way will surely lead us to a well-organized environment for the greater good of those of our citizens who will inhabit it.

[English]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, for me this is a frightening budget. It is frightening because the people who prepared it seem to have lost their ability to see reality. From this budget it appears as though they see only a part of the Canadian people, the affluent part, the part that is best able to struggle for itself. It appears that they have closed their eyes, minds and hearts to the existence of the others.

Fortunately, while a Liberal government might have wanted to do such a thing during the last few years it was impossible for it to do so because it had a very narrow majority. Now members of the government do not have to care. They have a big majority, and this budget shows that so far as the masses of the ordinary people of this country are concerned they just do not care.

References have been made to the modern technology with which we live. I have a feeling that we are up in a great DC-9 or DC-8 airplane and that somehow the pilot's instruments are not working and he has lost contact with the ground. We are headed for no place in particular except in the general direction of the great peaks of the Rocky mountains, and this in rough weather. The pilot is nonchalantly saying to us that our destiny is the just society, but all of us have the very uncomfortable feeling that we are heading for the big peaks and that it is only a short ride to Kingdom Come.

This may be unduly pessimistic. In spite of the way the government has constructed this budget I would hope there are members in all sections of this house who have the right feeling for the large masses, the large majority of the Canadian people who are out there and who are waiting. They are still hoping for something from this government, but for the large majority of the Canadian people in the lower income groups there is nothing in this budget.

I feel sure that there are members in the government ranks who know history, who know that you just cannot get away with legislating for only a section of the people. Daily I pass the west door in the central arch of the parliament buildings and see the words carved in stone, "Where there is no vision the people perish." I believe this to be profoundly true. And I believe this is a budget without vision, that does not look into the future.

Failure to reckon with the well-being of all the Canadian people is simply going to bring trouble for this country before very long. In my opinion the blindness in this budget, the lack of vision, is compounded by the announcements we have heard during the last couple of days. People in this country who have watched the long, slow struggle to try to get Canadian standards of well-being for the whole population from coast to coast must feel pretty disturbed and disconsolate at what they have heard. It has taken us 50 years to get into medicare. Now we hear that within the next five years the whole federal structure of medicare will be broken. It has taken many, many years to bring the tissue of social security legislation to the point where we have it now, a point that is still not too favourable compared with some enlightened countries, in particular some of the European countries. Now we are told that this government intends to get out of a number of these shared programs. The only analogy I can think of is the very pious handwashing of Pontius Pilate on the occasion when he indicated he was having no more to do with a certain matter, that it was not his business anyway and that other people should carry on and do as they saw fit.

In my view it is a very strange thing to see this Prime Minister doing what he is doing at the present time. I believe he has been doing an excellent thing in trying to get linguistic and cultural equality for Canadians of the two large language groups in this country. I gave him full credit for this when I spoke in the house not long ago. I believe very profoundly that no matter what may be best for the people of Canada in the various parts of this country the Prime Minister is on the right track when he is working toward equality of opportunity and a feeling of being comfortable in one's language and one's culture in any part of the country.

But I must say that I find it very strange to see him then strike out blindly at those pieces of legislation which have gone some way toward giving Canadians equality in respect of their well-being regardless of which part of the country they live in. This is what he is destroying bit by bit. Even if the provinces were evenly matched in their ability to provide standards of social security for their people, there would not be that over-all Canada-wide standard which should enable our people, with the mobility we have, to move about with a feeling of being at home in a social security way in every part of the country. But our provinces are not equal. What this government is doing is saying to them that they must get out and sink or swim with their own taxes. It is saying that they will be given some handouts, of course, but the bulk of their taxes that are necessary for their social security programs they must raise themselves. I suggest that this is not the mark of a statesman. I regret to see one who stands first in one field so lacking in another.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit me a question?

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I need all the time I am allowed, I think, Mr. Speaker, but when I have finished, I shall be happy to answer the hon. member's question.

[English]

The people put this government in power because they were in trouble and needed desperately to believe in Santa Claus. This is a streamlined version in modern dress of Santa Claus with Superman under the hood. The problems which exist for the people across this country, problems of unemployment, training, rising prices, housing, social security and so on, all boil down to one burning problem: how to get enough income to live on in the world of 1968. Please do not think that the majority of the Canadian people are waiting for government handouts to achieve the desired end. One speaker said exactly what I believe. I believe the majority of the Canadian people want productive work. They do not want handouts. A great many of the people who are receiving handouts now would never have been put in that position if governments in the past had been able to provide them with productive work. These people should be taken off handouts at the earliest possible moment and given productive work.

I am not talking about the few extremely poor people who are located in unfortunate pockets of poverty across Canada. No; I am talking in the language of the Economic Council of Canada which, in its review of September, 1968, said:

> The statement that at least one Canadian in every five suffers from poverty does not appear to be a wild exaggeration. It is almost certainly close enough to the truth to be taken as one of the most serious challenges facing economic and social policy over the next few years.

Four million people, Mr. Speaker, is a lot of Canadians—four million people suffering from poverty. These are not just those whom we consider as the destitute and no-good. This budget, in my opinion, is a continuation of the policy which this government began from its inception. It is the same policy that cancelled the winter works program; there is a production stoppage right there. It is the policy by which we will not have any increase in family allowances, the policy that there will be no increase in the basic old age security pension, the policy that there will be no legislation this year to increase the allowances of veterans and their dependants, the policy that keeps the poor hardpressed superannuates of the public service hanging on desperately in the hope that those of them who built up their pensions in the years when a dollar was worth a dollar will now be able to get enough to live on in these days of inflation. It is the same policy all along the line.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

It is true that there is a segment of the Canadian people living in affluence. These people might like the budget but their satisfaction will be very restricted because their time for enjoyment cannot be long with this sort of thing. I believe it was Abraham Lincoln who said that a nation cannot long survive if half its people are slaves and half are free. Neither can a nation live long if half its people live in affluence and half in poverty.

I feel that this budget fails the majority of Canadians on two counts. First, it places the new tax burdens unfairly on the shoulders of moderate and low income citizens and allows the wealthy to get away with a relatively much lighter load. I need not go into the ways in which this has been done. We have heard these outlined since this debate began. Second, it outlines no new policies for stepping up production and the jobs and wages that go with production nor does it propose any way of providing more income for pensioners and others who have no means of earning for themselves.

What do I think should have been in the budget? I think one is bound to give one's own ideas if one is to criticize this budget. In the time that one has one can give only a very brief outline and cannot make an in-depth study. First, I believe there should have been definite plans for economic growth and development. It is all very well, as some members have done this afternoon, to get up and talk about how marvelous Canada's productive capacity is and how great our attainments in production and so on are. I would go back to the figures quoted by my colleague from Waterloo the other day when he pointed out that of the 14 western nations in O.E.C.D., Canada's production output per man is the lowest of all. I do not think that is a record of which we should be proud. Furthermore, it frightens me, because if we cannot get better production than this we will not be able to keep these social security programs whether they are under federal, provincial or any other auspices.

I am not one of those people who think that all the social welfare schemes are satisfactory. But I believe that at the present time the taxpayers are squeezed dry because there are not enough taxpayers with enough income to pay properly and the little fellows are being squeezed out of proportion to those on higher incomes. I believe what we need badly are productive jobs.

You may ask, how are we going to do this? My memory goes back to world war II. I have heard many objections to war, but never have I heard it said that one should not be engaged in war because it is too expensive. When world war II came the decision was made in this country that the war had to be won. The government of the day—it was a Liberal government at that time too—took the decision that we must win the war and that we must have the necessary massive production to make total war. That government realized private business would never be able to do the job alone. Private business has never been able to produce enough to go around in this country. The government then took a hand and set up crown corporations and enterprises under public direction and got the war effort going. That was necessary in order to do our full part during world was II.

Let me suggest that if this government is serious about winning the war on poverty at the present time and equally serious about helping those people who are trying to win their particular wars against insecurity, the government should give them the jobs and incomes necessary to succeed. I hope the government will make that kind of decision. I know this is amusing to the cabinet ministers over there. Perhaps I should put that in the singular as they are not in the plural, at the moment. Perhaps it is singularly amusing to him that I should suggest a war effort now. But we need a war effort in peacetime if we are going to obtain the kind of production we must have to support a proper tax base and those services required by the people of this country.

No one suggests that we should get rid of so-called free enterprise. It is not free and it is not enterprising enough. Free enterprise alone cannot provide plenty. So far it has been only able to produce scarcity. The government should adopt programs to extend production.

Second, the income tax exemption should have been increased by this budget so as to give the low income groups an opportunity to pay their own way and avoid falling into the pit of poverty. It has been suggested by this party before that the income tax exemption should be raised to $2,000 for single people and $4,000 for a married couple, with an appropriate allowance for each child.

Third there should have been something in this budget about pensions and allowances such as family allowances, old age security pensions, veterans allowances and pensions to retired public servants. These should be brought into line with two things, today's cost of living and today's standard of living. Pensions in this country have never been set in accordance with what it costs to live on anybody's standard of living. They have been set in accordance with political pressures. Governments of the day have always figured that they should set pensions as low as they could possibly get away with and still remain on the government benches.

For the first time in history we should examine and overhaul these pensions and allowances. We should determine how much it costs people to live at a reasonable and modest standard of living and set these pensions on that basis. The economic council has pointed out that poverty is relative. Poverty of a century ago is not poverty today. People today might have something which could have been considered affluence a century ago but today they are on a different level because they observe other people who enjoy modern affluence. The standards of pensions and allowances today must be related to what it costs to live moderately or even modestly.

Let me refer for a moment to the so-called social development tax. Do you know why the government calls it a social development tax? I can only find one reason. It is called a social development tax in order to keep this money out of the hands of the provinces. If the government had really meant this to be a social development tax the budget would have contained some indication of social development programs. There is not one single snip of a program for social development in this budget.

There was an indication yesterday and today of what I might term social going-backwardness. This is taking place in a big way and is in prospect for the next few years. I am not at all sure that if this government were not protected by immunities of various kinds—a big majority and perhaps a parliamentary immunity—it could not be sued for fraud for calling this a social development tax. It is no such thing. It is a tax with a fence around it to keep it out of the hands of the provinces. By the looks of things we will not get any social development as a result of this tax.

My next point is, I think, point number four. I do not like to criticize the government without some suggestion as to what should be done alternatively. Let me make another suggestion now. I am sure this will cause great amusement. It always has caused amusement in the past. If we are going to protect the homes in this country, until such time as we have decent allowances for families, we should make available to mothers who make a full time career of raising their children a decent allowance to enable them to do so. France has been able to do this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I am glad there are one or two people who applaud. France has found this to be one way of protecting homes there. We badly need protection for our Canadian homes. If a woman could go out and earn another pay cheque to enable the family to live with a moderate standard of living but deliberately stays at home and puts her effort and energy into raising fine citizens from the standpoint of physical, mental and moral development, then in my opinion she deserves a salary as much as the woman who goes out and sells soap and shoes and sealing wax at some store or other establishment. I think the time is ripe for this.

My next point is number five. It is my last point, my royal george. This is a long range plan. While we are overhauling these pensions and giving these allowances we should realize that all these things are like a crazy patchwork quilt which should be placed in the museums with the lanterns, side boots, ox carts and those other things that belong to the 19th century. We do not need these things now.

If I had a little more faith in the Prime Minister than I have I might hope that he had one more card up his sleeve. I might hope he would clear the ground by stating that the government is getting out of medicare and other cost sharing programs in order that it can adopt a real program whereby the federal government could control the finances and know whether it was building up deficits. I would hope the Prime Minister could say that he is clearing away this patchwork quilt legislation in order that we here in Ottawa can build a good guaranteed annual income program for Canadians.

Perhaps I am doing the Prime Minister an injustice by thinking that he does not have this in mind. I hope he will come here tomorrow afternoon and tell us this is what he had in mind all the time. Since the election last June it has become fashionable to declare that such a thing as a guaranteed annual income is impossible. I have heard estimates of between $2 billion and $3 billion as the cost. It has been said that it would bankrupt the country and is quite impossible. But it was only a few months before the election last summer that several hon. gentlemen who are now occupying the government benches were pushing for a guaranteed annual income. I should like to read from the Globe and Mail of August 13, 1966. It indicates that western Liberals meeting in Saskatoon called for full government study of a guaranteed annual income program. The article then states:

> The resolution said a guaranteed annual income program would be a substitute for Canada's current maze of welfare and assistance programs. Liberal M.P. Ronald Basford (Vancouver-Burrard), a member of the British Columbia delegation, urged adoption of the resolution, saying the concept is new but promising.
> "We want to see if this will be a way to break the cycle of dependency which nowadays often keeps people on welfare all their lives."

• (5:50 p.m.)

I agree. I think that is good sense. I hope he will echo those sentiments now. I daresay I shall find out in a little while whether he will. He was not the only one to push for this. The then minister of national health and welfare, the minister of agriculture, the minister of justice, the leader of the opposition and quite a few others were pushing for a guaranteed annual income. I think the arguments for it are every bit as good now as they ever were.

If and when we get a guaranteed annual income, I ask hon. members to remember that tremendous savings will be made in other social security programs. These savings can be made whether at the federal or provincial level. Please do not forget that it is the same John and Mary Doe who put up the dough when it comes to taxation, no matter which government does the collecting. A guaranteed annual income is not all financial loss. The economic council at page 105 of its annual review says:

> It has been estimated in the United States that one poor man can cost the public purse as much as $140,000 between the ages of 17 and 57.

I would add that he never does get out of his poverty. So we are putting out thousands of dollars of the taxpayers' money recklessly to try to rehabilitate people who have fallen into the trap of poverty; and no matter how much we rehabilitate them they will never be in as good a situation as they would have been had we kept them out of the mess in the first place. The things I have proposed should be done now through wisdom about the future of our country and care for the people of our country. If we do not do them now for these motives, we will do them later for other motives.

I attended the national conference on housing last week in Toronto. At that conference an American house builder who has been involved in housing programs said something like this: I hope you Canadians will be wise enough to tackle the housing problem on a broad enough scale now, while there is yet time. We delayed too long in the United States; we waited until the ghettoes rose higher and higher, grew thicker and thicker, and the antagonisms mounted more and more. Today we are doing through fear what we should have done through justice and common sense years ago. I hope we shall have the wisdom to do these things now, Mr. Speaker.

I know my time is almost up and I wish to cite only one more illustration. Other hon. members had a little more time allowed them, except for one hon. member across the way. What kind of people and what kind of country do we want? I hope we will not everlastingly be grubbing along in this country satisfied with people just getting enough to eat, wear and provide a roof over their heads and a car in which to go places. That is not enough. We should be looking forward to making conditions such that people can have what used to be called the finer things of life, such as music, books, travel and a chance to meet and talk with people and do interesting things. We in this house can all do that but large sections of the Canadian public cannot.

Last fall the Canadian magazine gave the example of three citizens of Canada, one with a wife and four children and an income of $8,000 a year, another with a wife and three children earning $16,000 a year, and the third with a wife and grown son earning over $50,000 a year. I could point out that the smaller the income the larger the number of children, but I will leave that side of it alone. But this is what I want to emphasize. The man with the income of $8,000 a year can afford only 1.2 per cent of his income for books, entertainment, special hobbies, club memberships and vacations. The man who earns $16,000 a year can afford 7.84 per cent of his income for these extra things, and the man earning over $50,000 a year can afford 36.8 per cent of his income for what we call the finer things of life, above and beyond the creature needs of human beings.

I wish this budget had contained one little hint that we are aiming for this kind of society, because that is the just society. I say to the government: You have raised people's expectations in the country. You have lit the fire under people's hopes and aspirations and that fire, in spite of this damp squib of a budget, will not go out.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. lady and I apologize again for interrupting her. Of all the interesting comments she made this afternoon there was one that struck me as being somewhat inconsistent. I would therefore appreciate being told how the hon. lady links her present attitude of blaming the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for promising the provinces that in the next five years they will have their autonomy and administer social services such as medicare, with the expressed concern of her party for the policies of my province which they themselves call "le statut particulier".

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would have no objection to the provinces having a great deal of leeway to carry out their own programs. As a matter of fact, I want that; but I want it along with a framework of national planning so that Canadians may move from the hon. member's province to mine and feel quite at home. It is for that reason that I deplore very much the destruction of a national framework of social security, including medicare.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Brant.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, could I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brant): I should like to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, in order to deal with several important matters, one or two affecting my constituency and the others being of urgent national consequence. I will divide my remarks into two parts. The first part deals with the dangers to individual Canadians from the growing bureaucracy of government agencies, particularly as they relate to the position of individual members of parliament who represent the population of Canada in this house.

I could commence with a matter involving the Department of Labour, and which is related to the effort of this department to effect a savings in its estimates. The department closed the unemployment insurance offices in various parts of the country. In spite of my strong opposition, Mr. Speaker, taken with the predecessor to the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey), who did not or would not listen to me but listened instead to his over-zealous officials, all of whom may have been more interested in preserving salary increases to themselves instead of being interested in the people of the country, the unemployment insurance office at Brantford, Ontario was closed, and was removed to Hamilton, Ontario. I need not remind members of the house that Brantford is a community of some 60,000 individuals, hard working, serious minded people who have lost the services of an office of the government of Canada which was vital to each of them. At the moment there is no office in Brantford to deal with unemployment insurance problems. The hard working people of Brantford have to go to Hamilton to discuss with officials there the individual problems they have. These problems pile up, particularly when the department rules against the claims made, and this is not infrequent. I can assure you that the claimants necessarily appeal and have to provide evidence. They write letters to Hamilton which go unanswered. Then they go over to Hamilton at considerable expense.

In the alternative, they make telephone calls to Hamilton, thereby running up considerable expense in telephone bills. Some people have reported to me at my house in Brantford that their telephone bills are running very high right now because of calls to Hamilton. First of all, they have to try to find the proper official who can deal with them, and then when they do find him they have to discuss their problem. By providing no service at all to the working people of Brantford in connection with unemployment insurance the government, inadvertently of course, is raising their taxes considerably.

The unemployment insurance authorities will not even send an official to Brantford for a minimum of two or three days a week to interview people and hear their complaints. As a matter of fact, the Unemployment Insurance Commission will not even instal a telephone service for Brantford residents so that a person would only have to dial the word "Zenith" to call the officials in Hamilton.

The result of this is that these people communicate with their member of parliament. I am therefore spending a large portion of my time, week in and week out during the sessions of parliament, answering people and promising to take up their complaints with these officials. I am becoming, as it were, a many-armed ombudsman for the people of the county of Brant. I do not mind giving this service. After all, it is my duty to assist them and I am ready to devote a large portion of each week to the performance of this duty when I should in fact be sitting in my seat listening to the debates, studying government estimates and generally acting as the true representative of the people of the county of Brant in the House of Commons. Let me warn the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey), that kind and understanding gentleman who happens to be a dear friend of mine—

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: You won't get any office that way.

Mr. Brown: I know, but I want to tell him that because I believe it—that he can expect to hear a good deal more from me in the next few weeks and months on the matter I have raised.

I should also like to say one or two words about hospital employees, Mr. Speaker. There are some 255,000 permanent and about 36,000 part time hospital employees in this country. You may not know, Mr. Speaker, that these people cannot qualify for unemployment insurance, but that is the case. They can qualify only if the hospital board that employs them permits them to apply as a group. Unfortunately, hospital boards are very often composed of active businessmen who, perhaps, suffer from a lack of social understanding. As a result they are frequently lax in seeing to it that their hospital employees are allowed to register for unemployment insurance. Under the law at present, unless the hospital board sanctions it, hospital employees cannot qualify for unemployment insurance.

It seems rather shocking to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Unemployment Insurance Act fails to provide for these people, and I fail to see the reason for their exemption from the provisions of the act. I suggest that an amendment to the act to correct this situation would mean a great deal to this large cross section of workers. After all, Mr. Speaker, what group does more in life than that which helps their fellowmen in hospital?

I should like to spend just a moment or two discussing the Canada assistance plan and how it operates in this day of top heavy bureaucracy. This plan is administered by the provincial authorities, and I want to give the house one or two examples of how it operates. I should like to refer to two cases that recently came to my attention, each involving a man who had been disabled.

When the plan was put through the house, Mr. Speaker, I understood that a new day was dawning in Canada for those suffering from various degrees of disability. The era of old fashioned welfare programs was said to be gone forever; a new approach was going to be made to ensure that nobody would be left destitute as a result of physical disability which prevented him or her from working. I understood that was the clear intention of the plan when it passed through parliament.

One man in my constituency, Mr. Speaker—and a finer person you could never meet—had to undergo brain surgery. Since undergoing the operation he has been unable to return to his former employment. However, he is not totally disabled. I had understood that the day when you had to be totally and permanently disabled before you could apply for a disability pension had gone forever; but no, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case: Far from it. At my suggestion this gentleman applied for a disability pension.

What happened? Local officials employed by provincial authorities called on him and said, "We have discovered that your wife has been working, and unfortunately you are unable to draw the disability pension because too much money is coming into your house." I thought that means tests in matters involving subjects like this had been done away with, but that is not so. The officials called and said, "Your wife is working and you cannot qualify." But she is not in good health and really cannot work. Nevertheless she goes out to work. Why? The answer is that she does not want to apply on behalf of her husband and herself to the local relief office of the municipality of Brantford, Ontario. That is why; and because she earned money that claim was rejected by the officials.

I know another case concerning a man who is a year or two over 60 and who suffered two strokes. It was clear to me that he positively cannot work. This man came to see me during the last general election and I told him to come back after the election and I would speak to him. He did that, and I advised him to apply for a disability pension because I felt he was entitled to it. What happened? Some officials went to his house; they were very sympathetic and courteous but they said to him, "Why, we have discovered your wife has been working. Too much money is coming into your house and you are not entitled to a disability pension." That man's wife is beyond the age when she should be working hard; yet she is working hard and earning a mere pittance. She must do so, in order to sustain their home and to avoid, if at all possible, having to apply for relief to the local municipal relief authorities. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that at Brantford, Ontario, as elsewhere, people dread having to apply for relief, because such an application humiliates one.

In both cases the couples were told, "You are not entitled to a pension, as too much money is coming into the house." In the latter case, on top of all the troubles that couple had, in the midst of their sorrow they were informed by local officials that the husband was not eligible for a pension because his wife had dared to work, the implication being that they had discovered something terrible. Here was a woman going out and earning a little money. I think she should be honoured for so doing, but that disqualified them from receiving a disability pension. Surely, this sort of thing is far from what hon. members of this house expected when fairly recently the Canada assistance plan passed through this house.

Now I wish to say a word about student loans. I thought a new day had dawned when legislation permitting student loans was passed by this house. But, again, for various reasons the administration of these loans was left to provincial authorities. What has happened? A student is interviewed at his university or other place of learning by officials, and is asked, "What do you want?". The student answers, "Well, I want a student loan." The official asks, "Yes, but how much do you want?". The student answers, "Well, give me $1,000". The student figures that $1,000 together with the money he has earned during the summer months will see him through the year. The official answers, "You want $1,000, do you? Well, you will be given half, and the rest you must get wherever you can". This is going on, and I have had many complaints. People call me up night and day, and I sincerely try to do the best job I can as a member of parliament for my constituency.

What kind of operation is this, Mr. Speaker. When this legislation was passed I do not think it was the intention of the house that students applying for loans should receive only a fraction of the amount they applied for. When a student applies for a loan in good faith I think he is entitled to receive his full loan from the department administrating this legislation. So, Mr. Speaker, bureaucracy grinds out its work in contemptuous disregard of parliament and the members thereof.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: Tell us more.

Mr. Brown: I really dislike raising grievances like these on behalf of my constituents, but I must do so if I am to continue sitting in this house and representing them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brown: And now, hon. members, and particularly hon. members of the government, I want to talk about a matter that affects our whole population. I refer to the subject of rents of real estate and the tremendous increases in rent which landlords have been imposing on their tenants right across the country. Mr. Speaker, the persistent upward spiral in rents will have to be curbed. Rents will have to be brought into line almost immediately. In other words a system of rent controls should be introduced. A bill providing for these controls, together with a request to the provinces to pass enabling legislation to deal with this matter, which is admittedly of national urgency, should be brought in. Coupled with this, or perhaps in place of it, I should like also to see a capital gains tax instituted to deal only with sales of real estate other then private, owner occupied residences.

Mr. Brewin: What party are you in?

Mr. Brown: I feel that this matter ought to receive the early attention of the government. This might of course cause certain economic difficulties, but such a tax and such rent controls constitute a moral necessity at this time. The taxing of profits on real estate transactions will, in itself, help to curb the activities of many unscrupulous persons. Rent controls ought to curb the activities of landlords who do not consider for a moment the position, economic and otherwise, of their tenants. I raise these last matters in the face of what appears to me to be truly a national emergency.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brown: This emergency is of great importance in its ramifications in that it is shaking the stability and peace of the country. Its challenge constitutes a danger to our entire economy and it threatens the very existence of our democratic process as evidenced by this house and the Senate.

An hon. Member: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Brown: I will deal with it when I have finished; I am almost through.

I appeal to the government to do something in this field of rent control, perhaps by imposing a sharp capital gains tax on real estate profits only. I think the people of Canada are looking to us to protect them. I believe that a fundamental right of every Canadian is to shelter, particularly in a climate like ours, and unless this is obtainable by our people we shall be unable to work toward that just society which is so much spoken of by our highly revered Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and which is sought not only by him but, I know, by every hon. member of this house and of the Senate.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, before resuming my seat, I would like to say a few words in French, our second official language.

I would like to explain to hon. members that in the riding of Brant, which I have the honour to represent in this house, the great majority of the people speak English. Nevertheless, since I was a child, I have always been fully conscious of the important contribution made by our French-speaking compatriots to the development of our country.

If I remember correctly, fifteen years ago already I made in this house a speech in which I said to hon. members that a new trend was emerging in Brantford. Among other things I told them that several distinguished women in Brantford, particularly the members of the University Women's Club were beginning to take French courses and were holding some of their meetings in French.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member in his very worthy efforts in our second tongue, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the member have the consent of the house–

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank my colleagues for allowing me to say a few more words.

The trend about which I spoke continued to grow through the years. Today, we often hear French spoken on the street. Indeed, the French language has become so popular that during the last election campaign, my Conservative opponent used the argument that he was bilingual, or at least, that is what he said. Later on, I myself made a speech in French over the radio. I felt that if a Conservative gave a speech in French, it was high time for me to do better.

Mr. Speaker, we are all working toward building a new Canada, a bilingual Canada, a more prestigious Canada, a Canada whose people can use two beautiful languages recognized as such by the nations of the world under the able guidance of our bilingual Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): The complaints of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat are legitimate but the allegations as to paternity are not. There are literally dozens of members of this house who have the same complaint concerning the removal of unemployment insurance offices across the country, but it should be remembered that it was the hon. gentleman who is now the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia who was the creator of that policy, as a member of the government which the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Brown) now supports. In view of the remarks the hon. member has made, it will be interesting to see how he votes when the motion of non-confidence is dealt with this evening.

We are approaching the anniversary of another 60 days, 60 days which some might compare with those famous but ill-conceived 60 days of a previous administration after it had been given the somewhat marginal confidence of the Canadian electorate in 1963. It is a vastly different 60 days, though, 60 days which seem to be titillating the timid, terrifying the bold and dazzling the daring with their footwork.

We have had a budget that has been produced by a Minister of Finance who makes his predecessor look like an expert. To contemplate the spectacle of the government's financial manipulations is to contemplate chaos in command. They have now revealed their financial incompetence, their intellectual bankruptcy, and we have had the Prime Minister's proposal yesterday to cast the provinces aside in what will amount to a sea of debt.

For five years under successive Liberal administrations we have had plan after plan, program after program; wars on poverty which have been discontinued without a shot being fired. We have had the Canada Assistance Plan, the Canada Pension Plan, task force No. 1, task force Nos. 2 and 3, literally dozens of task forces travelling across the country to the extent, as I said before, we should be introducing a bill to unify all these task forces running around the country. Nothing has been achieved, except higher and higher costs, and higher and higher taxes, costs and taxes imposed by the government on the provinces because of the actions of the government.

Mr. Groos: And smaller oppositions.

Mr. Nielsen: But that situation won't prevail very long I can assure the hon. member. The people of this country can be fooled some of the time by some of the people, but not all of the time by people across the way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Groos: Author?

Mr. Nielsen: Well, it certainly wasn't the hon. gentleman. Medicare was a tragic example of social justice being sacrificed to political expediency. It was a field that was already occupied by the provinces. Ontario had a plan. Several provinces had signified their intention of setting up medicare. Saskatchewan was already in business, and Ottawa decided to break into the field, not for reasons of social equity, not for the general good of the greatest number of people in this country but for reasons of headline hunting political expediency, and there lies the truth of the medicare mess that the government finds itself in now.

That this was so, and is so, is shown by the formulation of the criteria which the provinces cannot meet and have made clear now they cannot meet, to say nothing of the two northern territories. I know there is not too much concern displayed on the opposite side of the house for the two northern territories because of lack of knowledge in connection with them. But here we have the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) saying that in five years the federal government is going to get out of this plan. We in the north will then still be trying to get into it. I can see it now.

This gave to Ottawa pre-emption of the medicare field while at the same time making it difficult for the provinces to get into the field at all. It had the effect of putting off medicare for millions of Canadians.

An hon. Member: They will all need it after this speech.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure the hon. member will have his opportunity later and I hope he will rise and enter the debate. Let him tell us when his province will be getting into the plan under the present formula of the government.

Having secured the credit for medicare in two elections the government has now squeezed out all the political mileage it can from medicare and is opting out. It is not surprising that the so-called opting out proposal from the Liberal government to the provinces is now being taken over at the federal level. We have had an example of the federal government inaugurating programs it could not pay for, knowing it could not pay for them, and now leaving the provinces to hold the baby.

Mr. Woolliams: What a baby!

Mr. Nielsen: And what a baby it is! Faced with a situation of financial chaos the federal government is in effect declaring bankruptcy and leaving the provinces to face the creditors. There has seldom been an instance of federal government irresponsibility to parallel this one. However the Prime Minister will find that the government is bound by the undertakings of its predecessors.

Medicare was brought in in its present form by his government. They took the Saskatchewan scheme, which Saskatchewan is now trying to modify because it is in deep trouble with it, and forced it down the throats or tried to force it down the throats of all provinces. The former minister of finance saw where they were going and he said it would cost $500 million annually. He was not very wrong. That was for the federal end of it. He said that in 1969 that would be the bill, presuming all the provinces were in the scheme. Although the former finance minister warned them, they persisted. All the time they had in mind to leave the provinces to pay the bill. There has seldom been such an example of conscienceless manipulation of the people. The big Liberal party is over and we are now being handed the bill.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Canadians, Mr. Speaker, are not any longer going to put up with this kind of fast and loose juggling of fiscal accounts that we have had from the government. We were given a set of estimates in March, and they were revised in October with an additional $400 million added to the account. The fact is that the government has completely lost control. National accounts are out of control. The Prime Minister knows this, and so does the Minister of Finance. The 2 per cent surcharge on income tax, up to a ceiling of $120, has got to be viewed as a desperate last ditch grab by the government for revenues. In order to get those revenues they are putting their hands in the pockets of the provinces, and that is what the complaint was the day before yesterday at the finance ministers meeting.

I will have something to say about the poor people, and about rule by the rich over there in a moment, but that is what the complaint was yesterday and today at the meetings of the finance ministers. In ordinary circles that kind of action is known as robbery, or at the very least larceny. Having over five years amassed a huge bill for uncontrolled extravagance and unworkable but very costly schemes, the government got together and said, "What are we going to do"? The answer was the easiest way out—send the bill to the provinces.

Ontario's provincial treasurer said yesterday they were embarking on a policy of fiscal balkanization. The simple fact of the matter is that the government's finances are in a state of chaos. I am making every allowance I can for the situation in which they find themselves but I cannot come to any other conclusion. I am sure hon. members in the rump to my right and across the way feel the same way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: They are agreeing. Let us examine the course of events. It is an almost incredible story of patching and papering, a story of borrowing from Peter to pay Paul, or perhaps it is borrowing from Mitch to pay Edgar. It is a story of blundering compounded, of half-hearted measures where bold and imaginative decisions were required. It is a story of a light that failed, of a ship that foundered, of a crew that has been overcome by its own incompetence. I am sure the rump can see that as well. These are the people across the way who railed and ranted and complained.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, may I ask my—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is the hon. member for Laval rising on a point of order?

Mr. Roy (Laval): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As a member of the rump, as this corner of the house is called, could I ask my hon. colleague, if he has read the statement of the president of the Chamber of Commerce of Canada, Mr. Lynch, about the budget?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Well, I cannot blame my hon. friend, because his confusion and his lack of knowledge is just about the size of that which exists in the minister and government that presented this budget. Here we have these people who not too many years ago thought the nation was on the edge of fiscal disaster, on the edge of a great precipice.

Mr. Roy (Laval): The Diefenbaker years.

Mr. Nielsen: Quite right. Every one of those people criticized those years and the deficit financing. This year we are going into the hole deeper and deeper. What do we have now?—the greatest deficit in the nation's history. They are making records. They are making records every day now. They now have established the record for running up a deficit of $790 million. This is far greater than the Diefenbaker years ever accounted for. At the same time we have the highest cost of living and the highest taxes in the country's history. Real good times! They should be in the Olympics because they would get a gold medal for this kind of thing. And the deficit of $790 million does not include the Expo's deficit, or the medicare deficit which has now been swept under the rug.

In the coming year we are budgeting for another deficit which will run up to $600 million or $700 million by the time all the figures are in, because again they have not taken into account the full cost of medicare or the full Expo deficit. We have seen and are seeing every day weird and wonderful procedures of a kind that would bring about the disbarment of professional accountants, as the government frantically uses every device to cover up the real story of its fiscal malaccounting, the real size of the largest deficit in the history of this nation, and its misleading quotations in the estimates which have been the subject of national condemnation in the press.

In the meantime the government, with its cap in hand, ran to the market every other day for cash loans through short term treasury bills, forcing interest rates to unprecedented and dangerous levels.

Mr. Roy (Laval): That is ridiculous.

Mr. Nielsen: Ridiculous?

An hon. Member: The Viet Nam war.

Mr. Nielsen: There is an example of the fiscal knowledge of our friends in the rump over there.

Mr. Hees: He is going to be Benson's executive assistant.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. gentleman should be immediately promoted because he would probably be an improvement over the existing minister.

They kept the iniquitous tax on homes, locking out young couples from that privilege which is rightfully theirs, the privilege of every young Canadian couple of having a home of their own. We have the sales tax on building materials, and in addition to having the highest cost of living I forgot to add that we have the highest interest rates. Another gold medal. What has happened is that this government, because of the rug that has been pulled from under the housing industry in this country—and the hon. gentlemen should crawl under that rug because that is where they belong—has forced young Canadian couples in this country to take up housekeeping in the back seats of automobiles. And the way the cost of automobiles is going up, as a result of the new automobile pact, even they are going to find themselves cramped for space. It would be humorous if it were not so serious and such a tragedy. That is the tragedy of their policies.

I heard my hon. friend who just sat down a moment ago talk about rent controls. We in the north would like to have something to control. These tragedies do not take into account the rights of young Canadians, and particularly those younger people who have a right to look forward to owning their own homes. I think this is the most serious tragedy of all as a result of this government's policies.

And we all expected so much. My friend who just sat down a few moments ago spoke of the octopus—he did not use that term but I do—of the bureaucracy encroaching hon. members' rights. Yet he supports a government that directs our young people into some king of bureaucratic outlet. I will say a thing or two in a moment about the C.Y.C., because the young people of this nation are the most serious tragedy of all. The young people look to the government for guidance, and get none at all. This government will go down in history as the government that refused to recognize the problems of the youth, or failed to do anything about these problems if they did recognize them.

An hon. Member: Local papers—

Mr. Nielsen: Who worries about local papers, when I rise in this house to speak? In my riding we have one weekly newspaper and it has to travel 207 square miles to get around, so by the time my remarks get around by newspaper they are pretty old.

We have had an offer by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) to draft youth into the public administration. That does not meet the problem. No plan, no policy, no programs, no goals, no targets, no objectives for our young people. And this is a government that was elected on the youth swing. They set up the Company of Young Canadians and then they proceeded to find something for it to do. I think it would have been a great deal more beneficial and constructive had they determined the needs, set out the policies and objectives, and then set up the organization to pursue those objectives. Where is the great society; where are the plans, policies and programs that the people of this country expected from the government when they elected it?

Never has there been an order paper so bare, if I may use the term, or so bereft of inspiration as the present government's order paper.

Mr. Roy (Laval): I thought you were reading that in.

Mr. Nielsen: It makes Mother Hubbard's cupboard look like a well stocked patchwork. Let us have a look at these fresh new policies and find out what has been going on for almost 60 days. We have a bill here that is to concern itself with the status of official languages in Canada, a bill which I fear will be setting up bilingual ghettos in this country. Perhaps this is better than unilingual ghettos. We have a bill to amend the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Roy (Laval): What do you say about it; were you here when the vote was taken?

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member asked me what I have to say about this bill. Because of the government's attitude toward agriculture in the Yukon and in the north generally, we do not have to worry about agricultural matters there because we are not going to get anything from this government.

• (9:00 p.m.)

We have a bill to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act; we have a bill to amend the Veterans Land Act, with the specific purpose of raising the interest rates on V.L.A. loans; we have a measure to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act; we have a measure to amend the Historic Sites and Monuments Act to provide for membership on the board of an officer of the national museums of Canada; we have an act or a resolution to introduce a measure to prevent the introduction or spreading of pests.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: That is what I am going to be here to vote on. That measure refers to pests that are injurious to plants. We have a measure to provide compensation to farmers whose agricultural products are contaminated by pesticide residues; we have another measure to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. This is to remove from the act the amounts of compensation specifically laid down for horses and cattle.

An hon. Member: For horses, what?

Mr. Nielsen: This is in respect of horses and cattle.

And so it goes. There is nothing on the order paper of consequence. Where is the imagination of this new era that is to come about as the result of the election of this fresh, new, vibrant, exciting government? Where is it?

Mr. Baldwin: It is still off to the rump.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps we might find it in the freshwater fish marketing board. The last government ran out of ideas after five years and this government is intellectually bankrupt from the start. They let the Company of Young Canadians flounder in danger of drowning. There is nothing for youth.

Mr. Perrault: You are not an optimist.

Mr. Nielsen: Can the hon. member blame me for not being an optimist? I am an incurable cynic now, having looked across the way since 1963.

What about all this vibrant legislation? What has the government been doing? They have been pushing up the interest rates for farmers, for fishermen and for veterans. They have locked out the young people from their right to suitable homes. The minister, by his fiscal policies, aided and abetted by millionaires row over there—and those who are not in that class hope to join those ranks—and by his confiscatory taxes and his refusal to deal with the housing problem has acted as some kind of an anti-cupid, making it difficult if not impossible for the young people in this country to get married. Does the Minister of Finance or his counterpart in Transport deny that one of the requirements for a happy marriage is a home; a place wherein to lay one's head?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: This government has callously denied this right to young Canadians by the iniquitous 12 per cent tax on homes, which is a tax on the happiness of the young people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nielsen: This is a tax which has over and over again been piously defended in this house by the pharisaical pronouncements of both the present and the former ministers of finance, and which is embedded as a policy of a callous and heartless government.

I say to the minister, who unfortunately I do not see in the house—perhaps he is not on the roster—and the Prime Minister. Let these young people have homes. Take off the tax on happiness and give the young people a break. Come down off your high horse and out of your ivory tower and remove the iniquitous tax on building materials. I implore you people over there and in the rump to do these things.

I suppose we may as well try to get blood out of a stone as sympathy out of this government. The government's next move, having authorized a $50 million arts centre of which 99.9 per cent of Canadians will never see the inside—

Mr. Woolliams: That is George's house.

Mr. Nielsen: —and having spent $50 million on a hydrofoil of which nothing has been heard for three years—it may be in orbit—and having squandered money on task forces and wars on this and that all over the country, is to cut back on Indian health payments and services. This is perhaps the most iniquitous move in a sordid series of incompetent blunders by this government. Imagine having squandered money for five years—not like drunken sailors because no drunken sailor ever had that much—and having them now come along and say, that, apart from the average poor people, the Indians must pay! Who could be more poor in this country than that group of citizens?

The Indian has been getting too much, they say. We cannot afford to have these Indians getting sick and asking for medicines. We made them wards of the state. We took away their independence and we placed them under the almighty department of Indian affairs. We have made them bureaucratic pawns but we refuse to allow them to get ill, hungry or jobless because we will no longer pay. This is the all-seeing wisdom of the most heartless government in our history; and they talk about compassion. What a hollow ring that word has coming from this government. We are now going to soak the Indians.

Of course, we are already soaking the poor with the $120 cutoff, which must not be allowed to inconvenience the rich. We had the 5 per cent surcharge last session which was rejected by parliament. Then we had the 3 per cent surcharge, and now we have a 2 per cent surcharge. We had a budget in the spring and one in the fall. Then we had no budget for 14 months. Now we have another budget in the fall, which means we will have another budget in the spring. In spite of this the government attempt to pass themselves off as fiscal experts. Let me say this government is fiscally unfit.

An hon. Member: How do you spell that?

Mr. Nielsen: I do not know how to spell it, but I know what I would give to cure it.

We have rural poverty with new frontiers of science in the space age. We should be opening up the north and we should have a clear cut and intelligent defence policy. We should have a policy stimulating national development. These are matters the government has failed to recognize. It has written off the needs of our major cities and industries.

This government has sent the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) on a junketing charade from coast to coast. He is now in the Yukon. This is taking place when he has not been busy at home watching himself on his home video set.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I have to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house give its unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the hon. member have the consent of the house?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Nielsen: I promise that I will not be long, and I thank the house for its tolerance. I promise to be amusing, but if hon. gentlemen will read what I have had to say they will find it is very serious indeed.

When the Minister of Transport was not at home watching his home video set, they sent Captain Video around the country. Some people saw him: Now you see him; now you don't. That was their answer to housing: Canadians asked for housing and the government gave them Hellyer.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: The housing situation was a mess created by the government's policies. They added 25 per cent to the price of a house, with a 12 per cent tax on every item of construction. They raised the interest rate. They priced homes out of the reach of any Canadian in the under $15,000 income bracket. Then, to make sure those people had nothing left, they brought in the 3 per cent surtax, followed by the 2 per cent surtax with the cut-off at $120. It is this government which has placed housing out of reach by unrealistic, destructive and heartless interference all along the line.

Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for permitting me to finish my speech.

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make my first address to this chamber I had intended to make a few remarks about my constituency, particularly as they relate to the budget proposals which are before us. Until I heard my friend the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) I thought perhaps I might be called to order because of straying from the point.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blair: Let me immediately assure all hon. members that I do not intend to re-read the order paper to them.

Mr. Nielsen: You don't dare.

Mr. Woolliams: There is nothing to read.

Mr. Blair: My constituency, like many others, was newly created by the recent redistribution. It embraces the western suburbs of Ottawa and extends south to the St. Lawrence river. It includes all of Grenville county, a large part of Carleton county and half of Dundas county. The prevailing political tone in these three historic counties has been rather blue in almost all the years since confederation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): More than ever now.

Mr. Blair: While the voters in this election chose a livelier colour and a new party, I have found they are accustomed to excellent representation in this house by both of my distinguished predecessors, Mrs. Jean Wadds and Hon. Dick Bell. As I embark upon my first term in this house I am conscious that I have a high standard of representation to maintain.

The budget we are discussing is one which in my opinion the Canadian people expected. With far greater insight than many optimistic political leaders, the people generally realized that the rapid expansion of government spending and the continual accumulation of deficits at all levels of government could not continue indefinitely. In the recent election the people resisted the blandishments of those who promised new and costly programs of expenditure. They responded to the appeal of this party, which was for a proper national stocktaking, the stabilization of government spending and was in no sense at all based on the promise that somehow governments could increase their expenditures and good works without cost to the taxpayers.

All of us who were elected to this parliament must have known that it did not face an easy task. Apart from the major decisions it will have to make toward the reshaping of this country for the future, one of its major concerns will be always the stabilization of the nation's finances. Although increased taxes will never be greeted with enthusiasm, it is my belief that this budget will be accepted by the Canadian people as an obvious and essential first step in our country's march forward in the next four years. It is but the first step.

The restoring of financial stability and balance is necessary to lay the basis for necessary and important tax reforms based on the recommendations of the Carter royal commission, which the government intends to place before the house early in the new year. In a new context of stabilized government finance, which I suggest will have to be parallelled by similar action by provincial governments, who with the municipalities now account for the far greater proportion of total government expenditure in Canada, the nation and this parliament can address itself to the important question of tax reform. The aim of this reform must be, as stated by the Carter report, to achieve greater equity in Canada's taxation system.

In a much broader sense this budget will provide the stable base required to ensure the expansion and continued growth of the Canadian economy. It is only through the growth of our capacity to produce goods that we can enjoy a greater prosperity. Through this growth the present level of government expenditures in all jurisdictions can be more easily absorbed, and as our economy expands new and necessary programs can be undertaken. This budget, therefore, provides the essential foundation for the nation's expansion during the life of this parliament.

It is about the immediate future of this nation that I wish to speak. My constituency is in many respects like a miniature Canada. It presents the challenges and the problems which are faced by many areas across this country. It includes the rapidly expanding suburbs of Ottawa, industrial towns on the St. Lawrence such as Prescott, Maitland, Iroquois and Cardinal, and the farming areas in between. But tonight I can speak of only a few of the concerns of my constituency as they relate to the major problems faced by this nation and this parliament.

A recent special report in an Ottawa paper indicated that the Ottawa area was the most rapidly expanding urban area in Canada. It is expected that its population will exceed one million people by 1985. A very large part of this expansion will occur in Nepean township, which forms part of my riding. Urban expansion in any part of Canada presents a major problem, but in this region it presents particular problems which must be the special concern of this parliament.

The federal government is the largest landowner and by far the largest employer in the metropolitan Ottawa area. It must be involved in the proper development of the area. Hon. members will be aware of the controversy which is now taking place about the planning of the development of downtown Ottawa concerning restrictions on building heights. What this controversy and problem clearly indicate is that there is an over-all defect in the planning and governmental structure in the capital area.

The emergence of a new regional government in this area on January 1, 1969, is a forward step; but it is not enough. The premier of Ontario, speaking recently in Ottawa, pointed out that the structure of the new regional government permitted participation by the federal government in the planning and development of the Ottawa region. Officials of the three governments of Canada, Ontario and Quebec, are now studying in detail the co-operative action which must be taken by them to govern and develop this capital area in the future. A proposal made in the last parliament for the creation of a special joint parliamentary committee to study the operations of the National Capital Commission is also an important step. I hope that this committee will be appointed and commence its work at an early date.

The final result of all of these deliberations, in my judgment, should be the creation of an effective but not domineering federal presence in the governmental structure of the Ottawa area. This will enable the federal government to play a positive and definitive role in the planning and development of this area. This role should not be limited, as it has been in the past, mainly to the creation of great national assets, such as buildings, parks and driveways, but it should be positively directed toward the improvement of the quality of life for all residents.

The task should not be undertaken to create a national capital as a great national monument, but rather as a metropolitan area which will stand forth as an example to all of Canada and will enhance the pleasure of living here for the people for whom the federal government should have a special concern, namely its own employees. In my opinion, we have in this parliament a magnificent opportunity to develop in this capital area all that is best in the new concepts of urban living, including the creation of satellite towns and the reassessment of the concept of the greenbelt for the use and benefit of all people in the region.

A most essential part of the planning and development in which the federal government must become involved is that of urban transportation. The lack of a fully integrated urban transportation system in the suburbs which I represent is not only a great inconvenience to the people living there but a positive hindrance to their life and livelihood. Recently, a lady living in one of the suburban developments in my constituency was disqualified by the local office of the Unemployment Insurance Commission because her area of work was said to be restricted through lack of proper transportation to the area where there were reasonable opportunities for her to obtain employment. This is a condition which should not and must not prevail.

The solution to the urban and suburban transportation problem in the metropolitan Ottawa area is one which is beyond the present capacity of local municipalities. It can only be undertaken with strong leadership and financial support by senior governments. All of us here recognize that a solution to the problems of urban transportation provides one of the greatest challenges of our time. This government has committed itself to make a positive contribution to this solution, including among other things the institution of pilot projects. There is no place where this solution can be attempted to greater effect, and no place which would benefit more from such a pilot project than the metropolitan Ottawa area, which is within constant view of the federal government.

On other occasions, I intend to speak about the concerns of people living in my constituency, and particularly the public servants who constitute a large part of the population of suburban Ottawa. By the nature of their employment they are denied the same voice in public affairs which is the privilege of other citizens. This is the more so in relation to the activities and decisions of the federal government, which is their employer. The position of the public servant is one of great importance to all of us, and we who are members in this house bear a special responsibility, if not a trust, to protect the special interests of the public service.

In my view, the position of one important group requires special comment tonight and early attention by this parliament. I speak of the retired public servants.

[Mr. Blair.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear.

Mr. Blair: As a result of inflation, many retired civil servants have been deprived of dignity and security in old age, which they believed would be theirs during all their years of service to the public. In terms of simple justice and equity, the case of retired public servants cries out for relief, and that relief in my judgment should come immediately. Most hon. members will know that the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons studying the public service of Canada made the following recommendation in its final report on May 8, 1967:

> The government should do what it reasonably can to protect and preserve, or failing that, to restore in some measure the original purchasing power of the contributory pensions which, under the Public Service Superannuation Act, and similar enactments, it has provided for its retired employees.

The conditions, the house will realize, which existed when this report was made almost a year and a half ago have worsened from the standpoint of retired civil servants. Although I appreciate all the claims and stringencies which press on the government at this time, I believe that the highest priority should be given to the implementation of this recommendation of the joint committee, and that consideration of the relief of public servants should be undertaken with the least possible delay.

In my opinion, the future of this country and of my constituency cannot be adequately realized without greater effort in thinking and planning than we have seen heretofore. The industrial towns along the St. Lawrence have not experienced growth and development comparable to that which has occurred in the greater metropolitan centres of this province. Their development has been retarded, notwithstanding the fact that they are located along the St. Lawrence seaway and connected by rail and highway with all the main centres of this province of Ontario. They are progressive communities, well developed and able to absorb new industrial activity and larger populations. While not experiencing the great boom and prosperity of other centres, they are by no means depressed; and it is my view that communities such as these—and they are found in every part of this country—should become a special concern of this parliament.

All of us have to recognize that there are at present two major trends in national development and planning. On the one hand, there is an obvious rush by industry and commerce to the larger centres, creating major problems of urban living. If this trend continues some experts estimate that at the end of this century the great bulk of Canada's population will be concentrated in a few large urban complexes. On the other hand, areas which have not been fortunate enough to develop economically, or which have become depressed because of industrial movements and changes, have become the special concern of all governments, and major efforts are being made with the support of all of us to restore hope, vitality and life in these communities.

There is a great gap in public thinking and in public policy regarding the future of this country. We appear to stand aside almost mesmerized as great urban complexes grow larger and larger. We do what we can to alleviate obvious cases of area distress, but until now we must recognize that governments, whether provincial or federal, have not established solid goals for future planning, and certainly have in no way developed effective techniques to divert and direct the development of industry to many pleasant and admirably situated smaller places and towns in Canada.

The failure to properly address ourselves now to this problem will have the gravest possible consequences for our future. No one can view with complacency the rush of population and industry to great centres. All of us must be alarmed by the relative depopulation of smaller places which has occurred and will continue unless positive steps are taken to counteract it. All of us must be concerned about the effect on the quality of life and living in Canada if smaller centres, such as the towns along the St. Lawrence, are not encouraged to grow and to develop.

I began, Mr. Speaker, by describing this budget as part of a great national stocktaking, leading to the provision of a sound basis for future growth and expansion. Those of us who have the privilege of being here must be concerned not only with growth and expansion for its own sake, but for the better welfare of all Canadians. To accomplish this there must be much more thought given to what this country will be like 25 or 50 years from now. There must be greater co-operation and co-ordination of effort between all levels of government, to ensure that this nation not only continues to prosper, but will do so in an environment which will be pleasant and agreeable for all its citizen. I believe the adoption of this budget is a positive step towards building a better Canada.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I see that there has been given to me the somewhat doubtful honour of talking out the budget. If I had time I should have liked to dwell on some of the iniquities of the government in regard to the fiscal irresponsibility they have shown in connection with the financial mismanagement of the affairs of this country. While the government was steadily pushing the economy up the inflationary spiral, at the same time it was making soft noises telling the people of Canada that things were well and that it would balance the budget.

Finance minister Gordon on June 13, 1963, as reported at page 999 of Hansard, in his budget speech said this:

> It is important that we begin to put our national house in order: that we begin to move toward balancing our federal budget under conditions of high employment. We must take the first step in this direction now.

On April 26, 1965 finance minister Gordon, again during the course of his budget speech, had this to say, as reported at page 433 of Hansard:

> In practical terms it seems fair to say that after a long period of troublesome deficits the nation's finances are now under firm control.

Then finance minister Sharp in the course of his budget speech on March 29, 1966, as reported at page 3380 of Hansard, said:

> To all intents and purposes therefore the budget was in balance this year.

Again finance minister Sharp in his budget speech on December 19, 1966, as reported at page 11331 of Hansard, said:

> I want to repeat what I said in this house on September 8 and on other occasions, that we must moderate the rate of increase in new public expenditures. Neither the capacity nor the willingness of Canadians to pay higher taxes should be taken for granted.

And so it goes, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friends on this side of the house have pointed to what was said by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), then president of Treasury Board, and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) last fall and this spring. In the face of those statements we find that since the government first took office there has been an aggregate of accumulated deficits totalling approximately $1,800 million. This does not take into account some $3 billion of loans and investments, so-called, which are in reality disguised expenditures of the crown, and which are not taken into calculation in working out what is the financial position of the government.

During the last few weeks, Mr. Speaker, a rash of books have been published. People have been coming out from underneath rocks and from behind fences to write books about the political situation and the political affairs of this country. I suggest that the title of a good book at the present time might well be "The Great Swindle, or How to Wreck the Economy in Five Easy Budgets".

In the short time that is left to me I want to concentrate on the very iniquitous situation which has been brought about by this government in its relations with the provincial administrations. The Liberal party took upon itself the role of the guardian of the principles enunciated in the Rowell-Sirois report. They have constantly taken the position that a duty is cast upon them to strengthen and to centralize the financial position of the federal government and to redistribute the tax wealth of the country by providing provincial governments with fiscal equivalents and other funds in order to carry out certain joint shared programs. Time will not permit me to quote the statements of the ministers of this government to indicate that this is so.

When we refer to medicare, the hospital plan, the old age security plan, the pension plan, the Canada Assistance Plan and so on, we are not discussing here the merits of these plans. They are the law of the country, as we have been reminded by the government time and again. Considering that the federal government pushed the provinces into these various schemes it is late in the day for it to say, "We are going to withdraw."

I have no doubt about what happened, Mr. Speaker, The Minister of Finance and officials of the federal department took a look at a five year projection of the costs of these plans and they drew certain conclusions. It is obvious that they said to themselves, "We have started this; we think the provinces will be hooked in the habit. Now we will back out and leave them to it." There is no doubt, on my reading of section 8 of the Medical Care Act, that the federal government made an unequivocal commitment, or guarantee in one form or another, to pay 50 per cent of the cost of this particular program.

Replying to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) yesterday, the Prime Minister made this unconditional statement, which is found on page 2362 of Hansard in the left hand column:

> The hon. member should realize that the law says in five years we will get out of it.

That is an unequivocal, categorical statement. There is no indication that the fiscal points which will be passed to the provinces will in fact cover this 50 per cent. I think this is most unconscionable and inequitable treatment by a government which insisted that the provinces enter into these schemes. Indeed, it made it difficult or almost impossible for the provinces to exercise the financial self determination which provinces ought to exercise. Now the federal government proposes to withdraw from the schemes. If I had no other reason, that reason alone would prompt me to vote for the amendment and the subamendment before this house. I fail to see how any intelligent and reasonable member in the house who has the interest of his country at heart can fail to do anything other than vote against the budget which this government has brought down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The time being 9:45 o'clock p.m. it is my duty pursuant to section 4 of standing order 58 to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on the amendment to the amendment.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Saltsman), which was negatived on the following division.

Pursuant to standing orders this house stands adjourned until 2.30 tomorrow afternoon.

It being ten minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 6, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE—PROVISION FOR DISCUSSION

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the second report of the standing committee on external affairs and national defence.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the report presented by the chairman of the standing committee on external affairs and national defence, there has been some discussion by way of the usual channels as to some means of disposing of it. I think it might be in order if I gave the house some views on the matter which might be acceptable.

As this matter came from the house, it has been suggested that the house give consideration to making an order that one supply day, not to include a Wednesday or Friday, be set aside to debate this report of the standing committee on a motion to concur in the said report; that on such motion all standing orders and precedents applicable be waived to the extent necessary to permit an amendment to be moved, as would be the case on a motion to amend a supply motion under standing order 56; and, at 15 minutes before the ordinary time of daily adjournment on such day, Mr. Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put all questions in order to dispose of the said motion and any amendments then before the house.

There have been some discussions on this matter and the house may feel disposed to giving unanimous consent to the suggestion that has just been made. I understand there must be unanimous consent to dispose of the matter in this way.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Peace River has said, there have been discussions in the vein of the proposed order he has suggested. We would be quite agreeable to an order being made in that regard and would look forward to bringing this matter forward, subject to that order, upon the return of the Secretary of State for External Affairs from his Latin American trip. We would be agreeable to having an order made in those terms.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I know my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has been discussing this matter with other house leaders, and this was agreed to. Perhaps I misheard the hon. member for Peace River, but I thought he said something about not excluding a Wednesday or Friday. Or were his words "not including Wednesday or Friday"?

Mr. Baldwin: It is one sitting day but excluding Wednesday or Friday, since sometimes that is less than one sitting day.

Mr. Lewis: Now it makes sense. That is what I hoped was meant.

Mr. Speaker: Is this proposal approved by the house and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX

TABLING OF STATEMENT RESPECTING HUTTERIAN BRETHREN COLONIES

Hon. Jean-Pierre Coté (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table a statement, in English and in French, concerning the application of the Income Tax Act to Hutterian Brethren colonies in Canada, as promised in reply to the questions raised in this house concerning that matter.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HUMAN RIGHTS

STATEMENT ON NON-DISCRIMINATION POLICY IN NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): On October 2 the hon. member for

Statement on Non-Discrimination Policy

Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) asked if the minister would undertake an investigation for the purpose of determining whether the government was guilty of having condoned discriminatory practices against Eskimos in the Panarctic project; second, whether the minister would ascertain the benefits or otherwise derived by Eskimos from the Panarctic project, and whether such persons have been affected by discriminatory practices.

The investigation of the possibility of discrimination against Eskimos by Panarctic was undertaken as promised by the fair employment practices branch of the Department of Labour.

The branch could find no evidence of discrimination against Eskimos practised by Panarctic Oils Limited. It is important to note that no Eskimo lives on Melville Island where the exploratory seismic survey work to find likely drilling sites was being carried on this summer, almost 600 miles north of the Arctic circle. Furthermore, this particular highly technical exploratory work is carried on by United Geophysical, and only highly skilled technicians and personnel can be used.

The government has a commitment from Mr. Godfrey, vice president of Panarctic Oils Limited, that Panarctic will employ as much native help as possible as this project develops. This point was stressed on several occasions by the former minister of Indian affairs and northern development in negotiations resulting in the setting up of this company, and only recently the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development sought and received assurance from Panarctic on this particular commitment.

As proof of Panarctic's co-operation with the government, arrangements have been made for six Eskimos to be brought south to undergo training this fall and winter for work on the crew of the first oil drilling rig which is scheduled to commence operations around February 25, 1969. It should be noted that a drilling crew normally consists of about 20 men, of which at least half must be men with many years' experience.

The training course, in a drilling industry school, will be conducted under the auspices of the Alberta Petroleum Industries. It will commence on November 25 and will continue until Christmas. Arrangements are being made for further on the job training with actual drilling crews until the drilling company hired by Panarctic begins operations with one drilling rig late in February.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Mr. Godfrey also informs us:

> In 1969 it is likely that a further geophysical program will be conducted and we are presently discussing with the geophysical company the possibility of training some Eskimos this winter for work in the Arctic in 1969. As the tempo of Panaractic's program increases, we sincerely hope to employ as many local inhabitants as we are able to qualify for employment.

I wish to assure the hon. member that I have instructed the fair employment practices branch to continue to investigate the situation in the far north in the coming months, in co-operation with all other appropriate government agencies. We must ensure that discrimination in any form against the native population, in employment or in training, whether studied or merely due to negligence, shall not take place.

The affirmative action to which the Panarctic Oils Limited group is now committed is commendable, and a model for employers in the north.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I am pleased the minister has seen fit to give me a reply to the question which was asked of him. I should just like to put this house on notice that we must at all times be concerned about the grievances which are now coming to light every day among the different segments of this vast community. At no time can we afford to let these grievances lie dormant, because while lying dormant they can become aggravated and when it becomes necessary to find solutions the task is much more difficult, if indeed it is possible to find solutions.

I am pleased also to hear the government reaffirm the policy under the northern development program which was instituted during the Diefenbaker régime. One must keep in mind that the Eskimo has proven himself adaptable; he has shown evidence of this at Rankin Inlet. We must continue to encourage his acquisition of further mechanical skills, because the Eskimo is adaptable by nature and capable of becoming a great productive force. I therefore trust the minister will see to it that this program continues to be of benefit to the Eskimo population, and that the Eskimos take advantage of it to the greatest possible extent since in the long run this will be to the advantage of all Canadians.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am certain all members of the house will greet with satisfaction the statement of the minister following his inquiries, to the effect that no discrimination exists in the new oil exploration program just beginning in the far north. I suggest to him we should not have to make such inquiries every time a new project is entertained or begun in the northern part of Canada. I suggest that he discuss with his colleagues the advisability of writing a clause into any contract or concession which the government concludes with companies that intend to work in the northern parts of the country, spelling out clearly that it is government policy that there shall be no discrimination based on race, colour or creed.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, we will be more successful with the new projects than the government apparently has been with the power company which it owns and operates in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, which employs very few Indians and Eskimos. I would like to mention one more thing before I finish. I hope the government will take steps to see that the kind of discrimination in the field of social relations which occurred on the Dew Line project, in the Whitfield case with the Marconi Company, cannot happen again. In other words companies should know it is government policy that there be no discrimination on the job, or in any other way, in northern Canada.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say very briefly how pleased I was to hear the statement of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) on the steps taken by Panarctic Oil Limited which had at least ten Eskimos come south to take training courses during the fall and winter to better prepare them for the jobs the company can offer them in that area of the Arctic.

Having had the opportunity of visiting a few Eskimo centres a few years ago, I saw how easily the Eskimos learned to handle the mechanical equipment the white people use in the performance of certain jobs.

I therefore feel that the Panarctic Oil Limited decision is wise and should be followed by all the other companies operating up north.

BOOK "CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS"

Question No. 121—Mr. Fortin:

1. What amount did Colonel Stevens receive for writing the book, "Canadian National Railways"?

2. Was this book published in the French language and, if not, has the C.N.R. taken steps to publish this book in French?

3. When will this book be published in French?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1, 2 and 3. Colonel Stevens was employed by the company to supervise the research into and the collection of historical material related to the company and its predecessor companies dating back to 1832. This material, which is kept in the company's library, is made available to and is frequently consulted by outside railway and transport researchers. Following the collation of the historical data Colonel Stevens, on his own, and with the permission of the company, wrote two books covering the company's history. The publication of these two books was solely the undertaking and the responsibility of the author who made arrangements with publishers. (It is our understanding that the books have not as yet been published in French.) The specific arrangements concerning the publication were between the author and the publisher. In so far as the historical data is concerned, the company is continuing to collect and collate historical material which, together with that already assembled, is available to researchers. When the collection of material is completed and placed on a current basis and the company decides to make any publications, then these will be in both languages.

VISITS BY FRENCH GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

Question No. 273—Mr. Coates:

1. How many officials of the Government of France have made special visits to Canada since April 1, 1963?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. French citizens who are admissible to Canada and who do not fall within the immigrant category may enter this country without a visa provided they hold a valid passport. For this reason, even though the receiving country should normally be advised of official visits planned by foreign officials, the Canadian government does not keep a list of French government officials who have come to Canada on special visits since 1963.

2. Not applicable.

ANALYSIS OF ABORTION PILLS

Question No. 434—Mr. Yewchuk:

Has the Department of National Health and Welfare refused a request to analyse in its laboratories various abortion pills feared dangerous?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Department of National Health and Welfare receives each year a number of requests from individuals asking that an analysis be carried out on a specific product. Since no action can be taken on the results of such analysis, the individuals are informed that the Department of National Health and Welfare is not in a position to perform such a service. However, if there appears to have been a violation of the Food and Drugs Act or regulations, an investigation is initiated and any official samples obtained during such investigations are, of course, analyzed in departmental laboratories.

In February, 1968, the president of the Association for the Modernization of Canadian Abortion Laws, wrote to the Department of National Health and Welfare indicating that she had in her possession three types of pills "which are being given to women in the Ottawa-Hull area in conjunction with certain injections to induce abortions." The association requested that the pills be analyzed.

On the basis of all the information available, there did not appear to be any violation of the Food and Drugs Act or regulations.

Accordingly, no analysis of these pills were carried out in the laboratory of the food and drug directorate.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, that suggestion might be acceptable were it not for the fact that the minister has already produced one of the interdepartmental documents pursuant to a previous motion for papers. I do not think I can accede to the request; therefore I must ask that the question be put.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the hon. member that the matter be transferred for debate or that the question be put at this time?

Mr. Howard: Question.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howard, Skeena) which was negatived on the following division:

ARDA REPORT ON POVERTY AMONG INDIANS

Motion No. 27—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Report prepared by ARDA dealing with poverty among the Indians of Canada.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, there is no report as referred to in this notice of motion. The reference may be to a working paper designed for interdepartmental purposes which is confidential and not for publication.

I have spoken to the hon. member for Winnipeg North this morning, and I understand that in view of this information he will consent to the removal of the notice of motion from the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

PASSPORT APPLICATION, JAMES EARL RAY

Motion No. 31—Mr. Woolliams:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all applications and/or other documents leading up to the granting of a passport and/or passports to Mr. James Earl Ray, the alleged assassin of Martin Luther King.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has already informed the house that this case, involving a passport application to which my hon. friend has referred, is now before the courts. The matter is therefore sub judice at this time, but we expect that the documents in question will become public knowledge in the course of judicial process during the trial. Therefore, with great respect, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to accommodate the minister but I do not think the matter has anything to do with court proceedings. I would therefore ask him to produce the documents, and ask that the matter be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

PROSPECTIVE FEDERAL WITHDRAWAL FROM JOINT SOCIAL PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of replies given by the right hon. gentleman on Monday and yesterday concerning the intention of the government to withdraw from a number of shared cost programs and turn over additional tax points to the provinces. Is the government now giving notice to the provinces required by law to terminate the existing agreement on the hospital insurance plan?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question with respect to the intended withdrawal of the federal government from the medicare program after five years. Does the five year period date from the entry of each province into the medicare plan, or from the date of the federal legislation coming into force?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the five years is counted from the date when the legislation came into force.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. When the federal government withdraws from any of these shared cost programs and taxation points are turned over to the province, will the province, in order to continue to receive fiscal transfers, have to meet from time to time standards established and set under these programs by the government of Canada?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the provinces have to have the standard established in order to get into the programs. It is our intention, I should like to make it clear to my hon. friend, to work out a formula that provides the provinces with at least half the continuing cost of the program involved. It should also be emphasized I believe, that if the provinces run the programs as efficiently as possible from that point onward, the formula might even give them a surplus.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. I will repeat a question that I asked of the Prime Minister yesterday. Does this include programs devised or proposed by the federal government and imposed upon the provinces without prior consultation, such as was the post-secondary education program?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, nothing was imposed upon the provinces in the post-secondary education program. We simply recognized the great priority of post-secondary education in Canada and transferred to the provinces amounts far beyond anything that was advocated even in the Bladen report.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. For the purpose of clarification, would the Minister of Finance indicate how his proposal is different from the existing arrangement, since the federal government is going to continue beyond 1972, 1973 and 1974 to meet half the costs of shared cost programs?

Mr. Benson: This is the fact, Mr. Speaker. It would take a long explanation, so I would refer my hon. friend to Hansard for December 6, 1966, at pages 10773 and 10774, where a rather full explanation was given by the then minister of finance.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the question I was going to direct to the Prime Minister now seems to me even more relevant than it was before the orders of the day were called. In view of the importance of the subject that has been discussed on orders of the day, does the Prime Minister not feel that a full statement should be made by the government on which programs are in view, and exactly how the transfer will be made, so that this house can debate a matter so basic to the welfare of Canadians?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this basic matter, as the hon. member puts it, is at least two years old. At that time the then minister of finance made a very lengthy statement in explanation of our whole position. I suggest that the hon. member refer to it.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since a statement made two years ago about a general situation and a statement about matters which are being discussed in a concrete way with the provinces are obviously different, may I ask the Minister of Finance first, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare second, whether they would undertake to make a statement to the house as to the discussions that have taken place with their counterparts in the provinces in connection with this matter?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I think that the proposal I made to the provinces was basically the same as that made in 1966 by the minister of finance.

Mr. Lewis: But we ought to hear it.

Mr. Benson: I did not materially change the proposal. I referred the Leader of the Opposition to some pages in Hansard and I would also refer this hon. member to them. They outline the programs involved. In addition to this, I would refer him to the Medical Care Act and what is contained therein.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question. In order that the government and the provinces may at all times have careful and precise knowledge of the cost of these programs, would the minister lend them his computers?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to if they need them.

FINANCE

QUEBEC—LOANS FOR HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Since the Canadian government has made a $32 million loan to the Newfoundland Hydro-Electric Commission at 5¼ and 5⅞ per cent interest per year, as recorded at page 2201 of Hansard, and since Hydro Quebec has just floated a $50 million bond issue, does the Canadian government intend to grant the same facilities to Hydro Quebec at the same rate as Newfoundland?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe the loans to Newfoundland—though I should like to check this first—are made under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, which is a specific act passed by parliament setting out the conditions under which loans can be made to the Atlantic provinces for this particular kind of development. It is, of course, part of the development program to encourage expansion in the Atlantic provinces and to overcome regional disparities.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

CONDITIONS RESPECTING PRIVILEGES TO BRITISH IMMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Would the minister make a statement to clear up the widespread misunderstandings and confusion which have been created by statements reportedly made by the minister, and particularly by his parliamentary secretary, concerning the alleged preferment presently granted Commonwealth citizens in relation to the conditions which must be met prior to their obtaining Canadian citizenship? I ask this question because of the statement attributed to the minister and his parliamentary secretary to the effect that British subjects pay—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked his question; I believe it is that a statement be made by the minister on motions.

Mr. Nesbitt: With great respect, Your Honour, unless I explain in a sentence the basis for my question it would be very difficult for the minister to know to which statement I have reference.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question was asked on a number of occasions yesterday so I am sure the minister knows what it is about.

Mr. Nesbitt: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, the statement attributed to the minister was that citizenship would cost British subjects $5 whereas in fact it costs $10.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE ECONOMIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In view of the government's straitened financial position and the resultant economies in the distribution of printed media of communication, as represented by the recent Post Office Act amendments, is it the intention of the government to effect similar economies in the electronic media of communication, such as the C.B.C.?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the government wants to make all the savings possible and reasonable. However, I am not aware of a particular study being conducted at the present time on the particular and specific problem of electronic communications within the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question that I would direct to the President of the Treasury Board. Has Treasury Board approved an order in council authorizing the expenditure of $66 million odd on the C.B.C. building in Montreal, construction to begin in December, as set out in a return made to this house on October 16?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would have to have reference to the particular return to check this.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to rise on a point of order.

I wanted to put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport but, since he is not in the house, I shall keep my question for another day.

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING CONTRACEPTION

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the different dates given by the President of the Privy Council and the Minister of National Health and Welfare for the introduction of legislation to take contraception out of the Criminal Code, would the Prime Minister resolve the contradiction by telling us the actual date of the introduction of this legislation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could respond to that question best by pointing out to the hon. lady that the bill was introduced in the other place last week.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

EXTENSION OF TAX COLLECTION ARRANGEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the fact that the minister has obtained the consent of the provincial delegates, during the last federal-provincial conference, to collect income tax for another five year period, could he tell the house whether that was a unanimous decision on the part of all the provinces?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe my hon. friend is talking about the tax collection agreements that apply to provinces other than Quebec, which carriers on its own tax collection. Mind you, it does not apply to all taxes in all provinces. For example, Ontario collects its own corporate tax. The provinces of Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia collect their own succession duties as well.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. minister has answered the question, for we all know that all the provinces impose taxes. We would like to know if the decision was taken unanimously during the discussion at the federal-provincial conference.

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, no one disagreed.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SPRINGHILL, N.S.—POLLUTION FROM FIRE IN MINE DUMP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the minister in a position to indicate what action the department is taking to eliminate or contain the fire that rages on in a mine dump in the town of Springhill. Smoke is polluting the whole town of Springhill. I directed a similar question to the Prime Minister yesterday.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, all matters relating to the safety and control of mining operations and abandoned mine workings come under the jurisdiction of the province concerned. The fire in the coal mine dump at Springhill, Nova Scotia, has been burning for a number of years and the department of mines of that province is actively continuing its investigation of ways and means of controlling the burning and the smoke pollution. The federal government stands ready to provide technical advice relative to this provincial responsibility, should it be requested.

Mr. Coates: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If federal officials have no jurisdiction in the area, why have officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources gone to Springhill to study the matter? On what basis has that been done, and why?

Mr. Orange: Mr. Speaker, I assume they have gone at the invitation of the provincial department of mines.

Mr. Coates: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the acting minister inform the house whether air pollution is a responsibility of the federal government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXPO '67

INQUIRY AS TO SALE OF EXPO EXPRESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce may I direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt. Some ten days ago I asked the minister to advise the house what steps were being taken to protect the city of Edmonton with regard to the disposal of the Expo express. Some time has passed. Can the minister tell us just what steps have been taken. Just what is the decision with regard to the public sale of equipment forming part of Expo express?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, nothing really has changed in the time that has passed. Discussions between interested parties are going on and I assure the hon. member that the proper interests of all parties will be taken into consideration.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In this case is the highest bid for the Expo express to be accepted?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): The high bid in fact was accepted in the case of the Expo express.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): For which tender?

AIR TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INSTALLATION OF HOMING DEVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bruce Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Acting Minister of Transport. In view of the recent loss of another aircraft, bringing the total to 45 lost in southern British Columbia in the last ten years, is the minister considering the compulsory installation of homing beacon devices on aircraft operating in southern British Columbia?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the concern that is expressed about this matter. Generally speaking, the department is in favour of safety devices of this kind, but the kind of search and rescue device that is being spoken of has not had wide acceptance, and it is expensive. For those reasons it has not been made compulsory.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the acting minister aware that this device can be purchased for less than $200?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to that asked by the hon. member who has just sat down. Can the minister take this house into his confidence and say whether the report to the effect that the Minister of Transport is to change servicing procedures at Dorval and Malton airports represents official government policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot ask a minister to confirm or deny reports of this nature.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PUBLICATION OF NAMES OF WELFARE RECIPIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development can answer the question I asked of him yesterday. He said he would reply today.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am ready to answer. I have made an investigation regarding the question of the hon. member and no employee of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has issued a list of people who receive welfare payments in the province of British Columbia.

[English]

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can he advise the house if his department is continuing to circulate among drugstores in British Columbia lists of Indians receiving welfare and entitled to free drugs?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that question arose yesterday, We are checking into the matter at present. I do not believe that is the situation, but I shall try to give a more adequate reply tomorrow.

Mr. Simpson: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister is looking into this matter will he ascertain whether old age pension recipients are being included on lists that are being circulated?

NATIONAL SECURITY

POSSIBLE CHARGES RESPECTING PASSPORT APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and arises out of starred question No. 642. Has the Solicitor General consulted with the Attorney General of Ontario or any other province, or with any other authority, with respect to charges being brought against certain persons with regard to perjury in connection with false declarations in two applications for passports?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take that question as notice.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

TRADE

GRAIN—REPORT OF SCIENTISTS RESPECTING EXPORTS TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. On October 23 the minister took as notice a question concerning results achieved by a committee of two senior scientists sent to Japan by the Board of Grain Commissioners, as to the export and processing of Canadian grains. Does the minister now have a report to make to the house?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker. I undertook to make a report when these two gentlemen returned to Canada. I thought that would be on October 23. They were not then back in Canada and I will check to see if they are back now.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development which arises from questions asked in the house on September 19 and 23 and October 21. Has a decision been reached with regard to a committee of the house to deal with matters concerning the national capital?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

FINANCE

MONTREAL—ACCREDITATION OF NEW CHARTERED BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Does the minister intend to recommend granting a new charter to the Montreal District and City Savings Bank which applied recently for a commercial bank charter?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me this question could be placed on the order paper.

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

EDMONTON—ADDITIONAL FLIGHTS DURING WINTER MONTHS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Transport is not here may I direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. Is there any intention of allowing Canadian Pacific Airlines, Western Airlines or Pacific Western Air Lines additional flights in and out of Edmonton to compensate for those which were deleted from Air Canada's winter schedule for that capital city?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, decisions of that kind come under the Canadian Transport Commission and will be reviewed by that body.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

UNION DISPUTE RESPECTING REPORTING OF OTTAWA CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is for either of two ministers who are seatmates—the Minister of Labour or the Secretary of State. Has either been advised that a group of C.B.C. newsmen belonging to a C.L.C. union had prevented a C.B.C. newsman from a C.N.T.U union from reporting the dominion-provincial conference this week in Ottawa on national networks, and what action is contemplated?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Could that question not be placed on the order paper?

Mr. McCleave: Since this involves the freedom of the press, Mr. Speaker, I will ask that it be debated at ten o'clock.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION ON GRAIN DRYING EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): My question is for the Minister of Finance. Is the minister now able to inform the house whether or not he will propose accelerated depreciation allowances for farm grain dryers similar to those for farm grain storage equipment?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I have asked the Minister of Agriculture to look into the feasibility of doing this. We intend to have a consultation on the matter in the near future and when a decision has been reached an announcement may be made.

USE AND OPERATION OF GRAIN DRYERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the large quantities of out-of-condition grain on the prairies, is the Department of Agriculture, through the Board of Grain Commissioners, giving any assistance or advice to farmers on the use and operation of farm grain dryers?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I had a report yesterday from the minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan. He advised me they had made a survey and found there are more than 800 on-farm grain dryers in that province, having a capacity of something like 800,000 bushels a day. This is so far in excess of anything which has been available in other years that we think the situation is well in hand.

As far as advice is concerned, pamphlets have been put out by the Board of Grain Commissioners giving both advice and caution, I might add, so that some of the milling qualities of the grain should not be adversely affected.

Mr. Gleave: Is the Board of Grain Commissioners making spot checks on the quality of grain as it is going through local dryers?

Mr. Olson: I do not know whether they are making any special effort of that kind this year. The hon. member is aware that the Board of Grain Commissioners does this as a normal practice, but I will inquire to find out whether any special arrangements have been made to meet the exceptional conditions this year, and, if not, I will ask whether the board does not think it advisable that additional checks should be made.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Moores (Bonavista-Trinity-Conception): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Does the minister intend to pay deficiency payments to the east coast fishing industry up to the end of October, as he announced on October 16 in this house, or only until the end of September as he advised the industry on October 18?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): This matter is now under active consideration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH VIET NAM—ATTENDANCE AT PARIS PEACE TALKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): My question is for the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman assure the house that Canada has lived up to its international image as a peace keeper by actively encouraging the government of South Viet Nam to attend the Paris peace talks which are set to begin as soon as South Vietnamese representatives attend?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will take that question as notice.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO MODIFICATION OF CEILING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Finance.

Can he tell the house whether he intends to change or to cancel the $120 ceiling on the new tax increase?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that he should put his proposal during the budget debate which will, I believe, be resumed within the next few minutes.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR BEETS—PHASING OUT OF SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mac. T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture further to the one I asked him in October relative to the phasing out payment of $60 an acre to sugar beet growers. When can farmers expect to receive these cheques? Can the minister give us an approximate date.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I do not think I can give an approximate date for the arrival of those cheques, but I can advise the hon. member that we now have the data, or the statistical information we need in order that the necessary proceedings can go forward.

[Mr. Moores.]

Mr. McCutcheon: Would it be safe to assume that this would be in the year 1968?

Mr. Olson: I think it would be safe to assume that the minister will give a more detailed reply tomorrow.

[Translation]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ST. LÉONARD, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO SURVEILLANCE ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, a week ago the member for Charlevoix asked the Minister of Justice why the house of the chairman of the school integration movement at Saint-Léonard is kept under guard by the R.C.M.P. The minister replied, in the absence of the Solicitor General, that when the latter was in the house, he would give us that information. Can the Solicitor General of Canada give us that information today?

[English]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The R.C.M.P. were in Saint-Léonard, but on a matter which had no connection with the school integration activities going on there. They were there in connection with an entirely unrelated matter.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

CRITERIA USED IN PHASING OUT PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether it is the intention of his department to circulate the criteria being used by the department in connection with the phasing out of rural post offices.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): I think we discussed this matter at considerable length during the passage of the post office bill. There are approximately 2,500 post offices from which the revenue is less than $445 a year. We are comparing this with the cost of operating those offices, and we are making a number of decisions about closing them. But I think the basic consideration is the economics of the situation.

Mr. Peters: Is it the intention of the department to use criteria additional to the one the hon. gentleman has mentioned, and would he be prepared to provide details to members who are keenly concerned about the future of rural post offices?

Mr. Kierans: I would be prepared to do so. There are no political considerations in mind, if that is what the hon. member is suggesting.

Mr. Peters: On a question of privilege, I did not suggest there were political considerations involved. I said there were perhaps other considerations, such as the population in the rural areas concerned. We would like to have this material.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONGRATULATIONS EXTENDED TO U.S. PRESIDENT-ELECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): May I direct this question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the house whether in the interests of good neighbourly relations he has sent a telegram of congratulations to the new President-elect?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did send a telegram. It said: "Warmest congratulations and good wishes on your electoral success yesterday." That is the beginning of the telegram.

An hon. Member: To whom was it sent?

Mr. Trudeau: I believe it was sent to—

An hon. Member: A fellow by the name of Nixon?

Mr. Trudeau: I can tell the hon. member that the electronic devices of the CBC have been working well. It was sent to President-elect Nixon.

The message went on to suggest that there be warm co-operation between our two governments, and that the objectives and aspirations which Canadians share with our friends and neighbours in the United States would be pursued by our government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, or at least on a question of order, and I should like to direct my remarks to the President of the Privy Council.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Before I do so, however, perhaps I might be permitted to echo the sentiments expressed the other day by the hon. member for Oxford, and extend the best wishes of the house to the Minister of National Revenue on the occasion of the surgery he is to undergo tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My question to the President of the Privy Council relates to the hour between five and six o'clock today. In view of the fact that there are so many members anxious to speak in the budget debate could we have unanimous consent to waive that as private members hour, not losing the Wednesday, so that we can get in a couple more speeches on the budget?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would be quite agreeable to that, subject to the usual reservations with respect to the rights of private members. Perhaps we could make that an order of the house now.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this be made an order of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for his good wishes, and I would just like to say that the operation will not take place tomorrow. I am going into hospital tomorrow and the operation will be next week.

Mr. Lewis: Good luck anyway.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Tuesday, November 5, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (page 2262).

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in discussing this budget one must begin with the question of credibility. Nearly a year ago when speaking in the previous budget debate I said that in the circumstances of that time the credibility of the government was at stake. Since then I think it is clear that the credibility of the government has been destroyed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: There is now such wide agreement on this point that I do not propose to spend very much time today discussing this aspect of the matter. But one day I had some things to say on the subject when the minister happened to be absent from the house, and he thought it was not very sporting of me to say those things while he was away. Therefore I shall touch briefly on the matter today.

I would remind the house of the assurances given by the former minister of finance, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) last autumn and through the winter, and of the assurances given by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), who was then the president of the treasury board. I will not weary the house with the extensive remarks of the Minister of Finance about the sophisticated methods he and his associates had to forecast expenditures for five years, and how he went on to say that his methods had become so sophisticated that there would be no need for supplementary estimates or anything of that sort any more.

The Minister of Finance gave his personal guarantee that expenditures would not exceed $10,300,000,000 in the current fiscal year and that the budget would be balanced. I would admit that one can be wrong in estimates. Everybody having any responsibility in connection with government matters has sometimes made a mistake in estimates; but this is much more than an error in estimating because one has to recall the context with respect to the question of the estimates at the time, and the firm assurances and personal guarantee of the minister to that effect. One has also to consider in this context the crisis that developed through the winter and into February, the crisis in confidence. It was partly a matter of external confidence but was also very much a matter of confidence in Canada, involving doubts about our fiscal position and about the determination of the government of Canada to fight inflation.

It was in this context that new and even firmer assurances were given by spokesmen for the government. The ceiling on expenditures would be reduced by a further $75 million so as not to exceed $10,225,000,000, excluding medicare and the costs of adjusting Expo, a saving clause put in by the then minister of finance. But at that very time, during that very month officials of the government were being informed by officials of the government of Ontario that their expenditure and forecasts under the shared cost programs were very much out of line.

Yet despite this knowledge, and continuing on beyond the time that provincial governments were tabling their estimates in the provincial legislatures, assurances from the present Minister of Finance and indeed from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) continued. They continued through the spring. They continued through the election campaign. They were incorporated in a prospectus filed with the S.E.C. in the United States in which the government of Canada, through the agency of the Minister of Finance, gave an assurance that the government of Canada intended to maintain a ceiling of $10,225,000,000 on estimates. There were no exceptions in that assurance at all and it was said that this would bring the budget close to balance.

What explanation has the Minister of Finance given for the solemn assurance in that prospectus, as compared with the actuality first indicated in the revised estimates tabled in the house and more recently in his own budget speech? All he has been able to say in this house is that he, realizing at that time that the expenditures on shared cost programs and certain other statutory forms of expenditure were exceeding estimates, hoped to be able to offset this by reductions in programs he could control. The only mention of any savings in programs that could be controlled last winter, last spring and even more recently, was the figure of $75 million to $80 million. How the Minister of Finance can pretend he had any reasonable justification for hoping that the increased expenditures on shared cost programs, which we now know will amount to some $400 million, would be offset by possible reductions of $75 million is beyond anybody's comprehension, and I think it must be regarded as one of the lamest excuses ever given by a minister of finance in this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: As a matter of fact what disturbs me as much as anything else in this whole incident is the fact that the government has not felt it necessary to give the people of Canada any explanation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Its attitude is so completely cynical that it is not even bothering to go through the motions to give this house or the people of Canada any explanation.

Mr. Benson: I have given the explanation, but you won't listen.

Mr. Stanfield: What is the actuality as contrasted with the personal guarantee given last February by the Minister of Finance? It is a deficit on the basis of the then existing taxation of some $700 million, as contrasted with the balanced budget he personally guaranteed in this house last February after assurances, under pressure, relating to the accuracy of his estimates, after assurances given by him that his estimates were so sophisticated that he would not need to present any supplementary estimates.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: To supplement the heavy water plant in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Stanfield: I wish my hon. friends would do as much to help in the Cape Breton area as did the group that saved the Sydney steel industry which the government so casually abandoned. I have every confidence that the same group of men could do a good job in other areas, including the heavy water industry. My hon. friend and his associates assured the house last winter that they would hold the increased expenditures to 4 per cent. They started off at 4 per cent and under the pressure of the crisis it went up to 4½ per cent. The actual expenses this year are some 8 per cent to 9 per cent higher than a year ago. That is not bad for this government; only 100 per cent wrong in what it said.

Having experienced all that, what did the minister do in his present budget? He brought forward a budget forecast based on a ceiling of 5½ per cent next year. His forecasts now are based on not exceeding an increase of 5½ per cent next year, again excluding medicare. Even the phraseology is reminiscent of last year when the former minister of finance said that expenditures would not increase by more than 4½ per cent. Actually they went up to 8 per cent or 9 per cent. Despite this experience the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is basing his forecasts of expenditures on assurances, and says that the expenditures will not increase by more than 5½ per cent. He says that this, plus his increased taxation, will produce a balanced budget. My hon. friend ought to be selling patent medicine rather than trying to run the finances of this country. He guaranteed that expenditures would not increase by more than 4 per cent this year. He now admits they will be up 8 per cent to 9 per cent after heroic efforts to control them. Yet he now solemnly assures us that next year he will hold them to an increase of under 5½ per cent.

After the fiasco of last year and the current year one would think that a man in his position should have felt some responsibility to exercise special care so that he would not pour more scorn upon the credibility and confidence that anybody might have in the government of Canada. Surely he ought to have learned to exercise some caution. This is the reason people in this country, including the press, are in fact saying, "Nuts to him". He admits it is only a guess. Gone is all the talk about sophisticated method for estimating expenditures. He admits it is only a guess, and is not based on any actual estimate of detailed costs. There is no suggestion of how he will succeed in holding his expenditures under an increase of not more than 5½ per cent next year. There is not the slightest indication. After an 8 per cent to 9 per cent increase this year with the most rigid exercise of controls, how does he propose to hold these expenditures below a 5½ per cent increase, apart from medicare. I say that he does not have the slightest idea and nobody takes him seriously, Mr. Speaker.

Let us consider the methods the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have mentioned, so far, that might be used to control the costs of the shared cost programs. When the Prime Minister spoke in Calgary he gave us a couple of examples of how changes might be made in the administration of those shared cost programs. He suggested that people who are now in hospitals could in some instances be taken care of adequately in convalescent hospitals. This is something which has been discussed in Canada and in the provinces for years and years. It has been discussed for about as long as the hospital plan has been talked about. It has some advantages to the extent that it could be done. It also involves some increased expenditures. I agree, however, that it should be explored and that there might be some savings effected there.

The other suggestion made by the Prime Minister was that universities and educational plants should be used the year round. This is another thing that has been bandied around as long as I have been in politics, and possibly for a long time before that. Some people believe economies could be effected there. I am very much in favour of this being fully explored. Now the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) are talking about the use of modern business methods and controls in connection with the administration of the hospital plan. If this is all these gentlemen have to suggest in respect of controlling the growth of the expenditures in these programs, then they really are only indicating that they do not understand what is causing the costs of these programs to escalate as rapidly as they are. I find it difficult to believe that these gentlemen could expect anybody to take them very seriously, when this is all they have to suggest in the way of saving costs in respect of the shared cost programs.

How do the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance really expect to control the costs of these programs? The answer is clear. They intend to get out of them as fast as they can, and transfer so many tax points to the provinces in this connection. The poor provinces will then merrily try to meet the escalated costs from the revenue transferred to them. The Minister of Finance referred me to a certain statement made in 1966 by the then minister of finance, who made it very clear that the administration payment would not be escalated—

Mr. Benson: In the final settlement.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, certainly. Now, now! The Minister of Finance cannot help himself. Under the terms of the agreement he has to meet half the costs of these programs so long as the agreements are in effect, but once he can get out from under, if the people of Canada leave him there long enough to do it, he and this government hope to transfer so many taxation points that will not necessarily escalate revenue in proportion to the escalation of the cost of the programs.

When the Minister of Finance suggested, in answer to me here this afternoon, that the government of Canada would provide the provinces with at least half of the costs of the programs I was going to say he was not being very frank, but I will be a little more tactful and say that perhaps he did not understand my question. In any event this is the government's ultimate method to control federal expenditures under the shared cost programs. It is going to get out of them. But how does the government propose to control them in the meantime? Surely not in the rather minor ways the minister and the Prime Minister have talked about, because the Minister of Finance, if he had a cavity in his eye tooth, could not pay to get it filled with the money they would have next year by any of the methods they have talked about so far.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

The only thing I can say is the government believes the provinces will have to cut back on their educational and cost-sharing programs, because it is not going to allow the provinces any bigger share of revenue or any share of the increase in income tax it is imposing. The provinces will have to spend more money to support the new programs the federal government is adopting. For this reason and because of the general financial situation of the provinces they will have to cut back on these other programs. That is the only way I can see that the minister could have in mind actually reducing the rate of acceleration of these share cost programs. He is giving the provinces no option but to cut back on these programs. He is reinforcing this, in effect, by forcing the provinces to join the federal government in the new program. This message is very clear.

The provincial position is quite clear. Provinces need revenue to meet the existing costs of their programs. The minister can take a hard line against the provinces, with the hope that they will have to cut back in one way or another on all their programs, especially because they are going to be virtually compelled to join him and his colleagues in this new program. There is absolutely no other method of control indicated by the government. Any other suggestion which has been made is comparatively insignificant.

One might ask what is wrong with this method upon which the Minister of Finance is relying? I suggest it is obviously wrong for the federal government to hold the line on tax sharing while compelling the provinces to adopt the new program involving substantial new expenditures on the part of the provinces.

I am not talking now about the merits of the program. There are lots of desirable programs that might be adopted in Canada. It is clear to me that if the federal government is hard up, and it surely is, and if provinces are hard up, as they surely are, it is poor behaviour for a central government in a federal country to decide unilaterally that the provinces must adopt a new program. I say with all sincerity that in the present context of financial difficulties at all levels of government such a decision should be a joint decision. It is improper and dangerous conduct for the minister and his colleagues to decide on their own that this is a program the country should proceed with, even though the minister says this is a good program. In the present circumstances he and his colleagues have no right to decide on their own, regardless of the views of the provinces, that this program should have top priority in this country today.

Mr. Benson: The government decides.

Mr. Stanfield: I suggest this is wrong, without consultation with the present parliament in this context. The minister is trying to hide behind parliament. I suggest he has a responsibility in respect of the leadership in this parliament. This decision was taken without consultation and without regard to priority. This is bound further to embitter federal-provincial relations. This is bound to compel the provinces to spend money in this field and less money elsewhere, for example on education.

The provinces have made their positions clear, and the province of Ontario has done so at some length. We know of the fiscal difficulties that face the provinces. The federal government suggests the provinces will get no more money and instead of discussing ways and means with the provinces of solving the problems by co-operation, the minister says he is going to tax more for the federal government programs, but the provinces will get nothing from this additional taxation and will have to tax more, themselves, to raise equal amounts of money to support the program the federal government wants to proceed with now.

In the present context it is wrong for this government to make this unilateral decision, which will involve the provinces in large new expenditures, regardless of the merits of the program. It is doubly wrong to ask the provinces to match federal expenditures in this regard. What are the priorities? The Minister of Finance obviously thinks this should have top priority. I happen to be one who agrees with the Economic Council of Canada, that education is of top priority in this country. Education together with growth related programs and expenditures should have top priority.

I am not trying to impose my views on the country, as I am not in a position to do so. If I were I would be prepared to join in consultation with the provinces in an attempt to work out a system of priorities important to the future growth of this country. This is essential not only for national growth but for individual Canadians. If the policies and attitudes of the present Minister of Finance and his colleagues result in young men and women in Canada being denied an educational opportunity at the appropriate age, these individuals may never have another equal opportunity. This matter is important nationally, as well as to the individual.

Educational and social policies are important for other than economic reasons. Many aspects are involved in this matter. There is a trend toward automation and more leisure, and the importance of education relates to the quality of life. This is obviously of importance to the individual and the country as a whole, and is one reason, among many, why this and other programs are essential to the national development of the country. This matter must be included in any consideration of priorities.

The minister's budget indicates he is proceeding on the basis of his own judgment and opinion. Let the others get along as best they can. It is important that we have some concensus in this country about national priorities in respect of programs administered federally and provincially. Let me suggest to the minister that I am pleased someone suggested at the conference that the tax structure committee be used as the basis for this kind of consideration. This should have been done long ago, because that committee lends itself to this kind of study. Unfortunately the tax structure committee was ignored for a long time. It is being used now, but only after the government of Canada has made a decision to move unilaterally. This committee will now have to do whatever can be done on the basis of the decision taken by the Minister of Finance, without consultation. What will be the results? I suggest there will be many. Bitterness in respect of federal-provincial relations will develop, perhaps beyond precedent and beyond anything we have known. The minister is running the risk of creating chaos in tax collections methods, which federal and provincial governments have laboriously worked out over the years in order to avoid such chaos. He seems quite prepared to run the risk of compelling some provinces to run their own shows and challenge the minister. It is pretty clear that by his methods he is increasing the disparity in governmental services throughout the country; I will come to that in a moment. His policies are neglecting the basic services essential to growth, as emphasized by the Economic Council of Canada.

Some provinces may be able to get along on their own under this kind of régime, over which the Minister of Finance is presiding.

Possibly the great province of Ontario is economically strong enough to do so; but where does this leave the less fortunate provinces? I hope the Minister of Finance does not stand in his place when the time comes and tell us that the equalization formula will take care of this; because it will not. There are provinces now struggling to provide adequate services, not only important to them and their people but important nationally. The course upon which the minister has embarked may very well lead to the effective destruction of the equalization concept.

So as far as the elimination of regional disparity is concerned, not only did the budget fail to produce anything positive but it provided for a potential increase in economic disparity in this country. All in all the minister is risking the gains of some 20 years in curbing double taxation, providing equalization and progress toward a national standard of essential services. He is creating a danger of a reversal in this trend, and in the middle of the whole picture is the poor bloody taxpayer who is certainly going to get it in the neck again.

So the government is endangering national unity and national growth. It has embarked upon a policy of confrontation. It simply says: We are taking a hard line. You do it our way, or else! The minister and his colleagues have already done what most people thought was impossible; they have succeeded in uniting the various separatist parties in Quebec. They may well now succeed in destroying the tax agreements and the principle of equalization and set afoot great, new disruptive forces in Canada.

I can only say that this budget is a product—I do not want to put it too strongly—of a myopic partisan who does not really comprehend the needs of this country and the forces at work within it. The needs of the people, through their provinces and municipalities, are pressing. I am not here to defend the provinces, because they can speak for themselves; but I am concerned about the people who depend upon provincial and municipal services. For the federal government to pretend to discuss, when actually it has taken a position before discussion, a position that affects not only the provinces but compels them to take certain actions in turn, is wrong. Any such Minister of Finance and any government associated with such a Minister of Finance and such a budget is asking for serious trouble.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Surely it is absurd for a government to complain about shared cost programs, and at the same time impose new shared cost programs on the provinces whether they want them or not. Surely it is absurd to talk about controlling the expenditures of shared cost programs while insisting upon going ahead with new shared cost programs. I think it might be difficult to find language too strong to describe a government such as that. Would words like hypocritical and arrogant be too strong to apply to a government that insists upon this course of action? I do not think so.

Mr. Woolliams: They are too mild.

Mr. Stanfield: So here we are now, after probably the longest period of economic growth in our history, induced largely by a continued growth and expansion in the United States. In other words, after one of the longest periods of favourable economic circumstances in our history, where do we find ourselves? We find ourselves with a rate of employment of about the same order as when the Liberal government took office in 1963, an annual rate of over 5 per cent.

Mr. Benson: Of employment?

Mr. Stanfield: Of unemployment. Unemployment is at about the same rate as when this long period of growth was under way.

Mr. Benson: It has never been as high as when tories were in power.

Mr. Stanfield: Second, we have had an unacceptable rate of inflation for a number of years, and we still have it despite two years of considerable and unacceptable unemployment in our country. Despite the two years of slackness, we have historically high interest rates in our country. These have gone up further since my hon. friend's budget.

Mr. Benson: Not much.

Mr. Stanfield: The Minister of Finance says, "Not much." They were so high before that there was not much room for them to go up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: We have an inadequate rate of growth, and steadily mounting taxes. Despite that, we have a weak fiscal position with a deficit of some $600 million this year and next year—I do not want to be profane, but God alone knows how far it will go, and I am sure the Minister of Finance does not. Then there is the lack of confidence in the credibility of this government. On top of this there is threatened bitter dissension with the provinces not only through the stubborn stand of this government but also the bullying of the government leading to bitterness between itself and the provinces and, not far off, bitterness between those provinces which can look after themselves somewhat and those which will not be able to do so. All of this is leading to a distortion in government spending in this country, possibly to double taxation, certainly to greater disparity in government services to the provinces, and therefore to increased economic disparity.

What are the reasons for the financial problems of this government? One is the well below average rate of growth of the past two or three years, which has reduced potential tax revenue both for this government and the provinces. This has been necessary, I suppose, because of the menace of inflation and the actual inflation which has occurred. But nothing has been done by the government to fight inflation, except talk. A year ago the then minister of finance talked about policies to encourage restraint. In the very depth of the crisis last winter the then prime minister produced a proposal for an authority to study costs, prices, and this sort of thing. What has happened to it? Months and months and months have gone by and nothing has yet been done.

Inflation has, of course, pushed up the costs of provincial programs and added to the financial problems of the government in two ways; first of all by bringing about the necessity of a slowdown, which in turn has reduced government revenues as well as creating unemployment and, on the other hand, by pushing up the cost of those things on which the government has to spend money. Second, the government has imposed on the provinces through the years, and continues to do so, shared cost programs without adequate forecasting. I had a little experience with the forecasting of the government a couple of years ago with respect to medicare. I do not think they are sticking to the figures they were using then. But the disturbing thing is that there is a continuing process still going on.

Here we have a budget that confronts the taxpayers and the provinces but does not purport to deal with the problems of the country. We have higher taxes. We have the 2 per cent social development tax which is so unfair. When I say it is unfair in this connection, I am not speaking of the provinces, although they regard it as unfair to them. I mean it is so unfair to the people with lower and moderate incomes.

What are the problems? First of all there is the problem of the restoration of confidence in the government. The only thing this government has done to help anybody form a better opinion of it is with regard to those who have been impressed by its readiness to impose additional taxation, and particularly its courage in imposing it on the relatively poor and unfortunate. This, I suppose, has created an impression of a certain steely characteristic which some people like to see; but certainly they have not created any more confidence in the accuracy of their forecasting or the effectiveness of their control. So, when I ask myself: Does this budget do anything to restore confidence, the answer is no.

The second question concerns inflation, which is one of our great problems. Does the budget do anything to fight inflation? No, it adds to the thrust of rising costs because these higher taxes will create pressure and a natural desire to take home at least as much pay as before. After all, what we are being confronted with is the greatest increase by way of tax hikes in the history of our country. So the budget does nothing to help us fight inflation.

Another thing we need is faster growth and more employment. What does the budget do in this area? It does absolutely nothing. As a matter of fact, it has reduced the freedom of action of the government to move in case there is a further downturn in employment. Just imagine the difficulties this government and this parliament would face if there were a downturn of business in the United States. Think what this would do to the rate of unemployment in this country and to our fiscal position. But because of inflation and the failure of the government to deal with it, and because of the lack of confidence that exists, increased expenditures by this government to stimulate employment in the economy would create more and new difficulties for this government. I do not regard a balanced budget as sacrosanct, but I do believe that confidence is essential. Last winter we saw the importance of confidence and what happens when people lose confidence in Canada. The United Kingdom has experienced what happens when confidence disappears. I presume this is the reason why we have this pretence from the Minister of Finance that we are going to have a balanced budget next year. I suppose this is an effort on his part to create some confidence in this regard; but unfortunately for him nobody believes it.

Another problem in the country is the control of the growth of expenditure and the co-ordination of government expenditures to meet the most urgent priorities, particularly the adequate support of growth related services such as have been recommended by the Economic Council of Canada. What does the budget do in this area? It makes the problems worse than ever.

Then there is the problem of regional disparity, which the minister's colleagues went around the country talking about some months ago. What does the budget do to help that problem? Not only does it fail to do anything positive, it worsens it. So it is quite fair and accurate to say about this budget that it confronts the taxpayers and the provinces, but not the problems in the country. The government has boxed itself further in, and it has further reduced its ability to adopt fiscal programs related to the economic needs of the country. Certainly we have excessive unemployment in Canada today, and certainly we have an inadequate rate of growth in Canada today. All this aggravates the fiscal problem. Because of the failure of the government to deal with inflation and to create some confidence because of the fiscal mess in which it finds itself, it is in fact unable to stimulate economic growth and employment. Faster growth not only would create employment but would also produce more revenues.

I have been speaking for a long time, Mr. Speaker, but there is one more topic on which I would like to spend a few more minutes. It is frequently said by many people that we have many short term problems but that the long term future of the country is great. We hear expressions of confidence in the fundamental strength of the Canadian economy. I agree that the potential is there, but besides these immediate problems I have referred to this afternoon there are longer term problems which cause me great concern. I have already mentioned one or two of them. There is our failure to implement the recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada to give adequate support to education and to other growth related policies. If we fail even more than we have already, if, as a result of the attitude of the Minister of Finance and the policies that he is pursuing in association with the provinces, we fall even farther behind the United States, for example in education and in training, this might not have any immediate effects on our economy but it would certainly affect our ability to compete and to grow in the years ahead. Yet, the government's attitude is certainly not one of giving any recognition to any need for priorities. I say to the Minister of Finance through you, Mr. Speaker, that if we get further behind in this area than we are now it could possibly be disastrous for us.

I say that the attitude of the minister to pay no attention at all to any of the priorities except his own is very short-sighted. There is the related question of a science policy. The government does not seem to have any science policy that anyone can see. This again may not produce any very detrimental effects immediately, except for some scientists leaving the country, but the long term effects could be disastrous. There is the question of skilled personnel, such as doctors and others needed to support an adequate medical plan. It takes years to train such people. You cannot get immediate results, and your failures may not produce immediate results, but certainly they will have a long term effect on the future of the country.

Mr. Benson: May I ask the Leader of the Opposition a question? Does he not realize that the federal government's contribution to post-secondary education has gone up from $40 million to $500 million in the last few years?

Mr. Stanfield: I realize that the federal government changed this program of its own volition two or three years ago, again without consulting the provinces. When my hon. friend says it has gone up from $40 million to the present figure he is comparing expenditures under the previous program with expenditures under the adjustments program. I would like my hon. friend to be completely frank with the Canadian people when he quotes figures, because I know he understands figures and he should use them in such a way as not to mislead the people of Canada.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I should simply like to ask the Leader of the Opposition whether or not he disagrees with the figures I just put forward.

Mr. Stanfield: I disagree with the implication left by my hon. friend and I do not accept it. I further say to him that if he does not already realize that there are inadequate public funds in this country being devoted to the training of medical personnel, then one of his colleagues should take him aside and inform him of this. That, in terms of long term growth, is the whole question of the restructuring of industry. We have to bear in mind that we are probably the only country in the world with a population of less than 25 million people which is seriously trying to develop an effective and efficient industrial economy. We are the only country that is trying to do this without having access to a free market with a vastly greater population than that to which we have access. We have to ask ourselves seriously whether we can build an effective and efficient industrial system in this manner. Can we rely entirely upon multilateral arrangements, or are we not going to become subjected to the same kinds of pressures and influences that have, for example, compelled Britain and Sweden to decide that they have to enter into a larger common market? I think we must start looking ahead, not only the government but more people in the country as a whole. We have to ask ourselves whether we do not have to begin to explore alternatives or whether, if we do not do so, we may not wake up one of these days before too long and find there is only one possible opening for us, only one possible course that we can follow if we want to maintain a high standard of living, and that is to become part of the economy of the United States.

We are already tied very closely to the United States economy. We are already dependent on the U.S. for investment and very largely for technology. We have already lost most of our economy in terms of monetary policy, and we have very little freedom of action left to exercise monetary policy of our own. A number of years ago we imposed restrictions on ourselves so as to obtain access to U.S. money markets and borrow money. Last winter we further restricted our freedom of action in the matter of monetary policy in order to get ourselves out of another crisis.

I do not want to dwell further on this today, Mr. Speaker; I merely call the attention of the house to the fact that we are just drifting. Over the years we have been yielding our autonomy step by step, to the point where a Canadian financial analyst who was interviewed by Barrons described his own country as an economic satellite of the United States.

Although the GATT situation is fine, it did not result from Canadian initiative and I suggest does not really solve Canadian problems. Far from tackling our problems, Mr. Speaker, we are drifting. Far from reducing the number of our problems the budget has added to them in that it is increasing the cost of doing business. It is ignoring the importance of expenditure priorities in the country, and in effect is distorting the pattern of government expenditure. Certainly the budget has increased the difficulty of providing adequate support in this country for education.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what should the Minister of Finance have done in his budget? I should like to make a few suggestions to him. First, he should have begun by telling the truth quite frankly, Mr. Speaker. He should have done that last winter; he should have done it last spring; he should have done it last summer and he should have done it in his budget speech. After all, this is the first essential in the establishment of confidence. He should have been frank and told the people the truth, about the difficulty of controlling shared cost programs, instead of pretending that through the use of two or three methods suggested by himself and the Prime Minister something effective could be done. Those methods will not make any real difference, Mr. Speaker. They are just about as phoney as all my hon. friend's talk about the forecasted sophistication of the methods available to the government last winter. The only real plan that the government has to control these expenditures is to get out of these programs as fast as it can.

Second, Mr. Speaker, in addition to being frank with the people of this country he should have recognized the patent hypocrisy of talking of restraint and control while adopting a new program and forcing the provinces, in effect, to go along with it and to spend more money. He ought to have set an example in restraint.

Third, Mr. Speaker, he ought to have recognized the folly of the federal government by itself determining expenditure priorities in the present financial context in this country. Further, he should have recognized that the provinces must also spend money on new federal programs. He ought to have recognized the extreme urgency of adequate services in education and other important services rendered by the provinces for the people of Canada. He ought to have recognized the essential nature of these services to the nation.

To hold the tax sharing line while increasing provincial expenditures, Mr. Speaker, is inflammatory. It creates distortions, is asking for trouble, and is certainly causing plenty of trouble for the Canadian taxpayers.

Fourth, Mr. Speaker, the minister ought long since to have recognized that before he himself took decisions, the need for improved consulting machinery to determine priorities and establish needs should have been satisfied. As I say, I am pleased to see the tax structure committee is now being called for this purpose. It should have been called before the minister slammed the door shut by making his own decisions. The minister ought not to have been arbitrary; he ought not to have been dictatorial. The minister ought to have shown more concern and understanding for the people of this country. His aim should have been to restore confidence through restraint, and a demonstrated readiness to discuss priorities with the provinces before taking any position, moving quickly into a position of fiscal strength, where fiscal action would become practical, to stimulate growth and employment in our economy.

However, Mr. Speaker, with this budget the government has no freedom of action. There was more freedom before the budget was brought down. It is difficult to say what the government would do if it were confronted with a downward movement in the economy. Certainly it does not have available to it methods to prevent such a downturn. The war on poverty, Mr. Speaker, is farther off than ever. I say, may God help the poor, because certainly the government will not.

With regard to the Prime Minister's worry about taxing the rich, there may be something in this, Mr. Speaker. However, they are not the only people who are being over-taxed. Certainly there is not very much indication of that kind of compassion that is expected of a government of a country that has the degree of unemployment that exists in Canada today.

This government ought to have avoided unnecessary strains on confederation. It has created a climate for progress in constitutional and taxation reform. However, the provinces, I am sure, will have to be in a very pleasant mood to regard any proposals of the federal government from here on as reasonable and realistic.

I think it is fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance has poisoned the atmosphere in this country in the matter of federal-provincial relations. Certainly the government has to show firmness; certainly it has to show its ability to chart a course and to follow it within reason. But this government has not done that. It has not shown self-discipline. It has behaved in the way typical "tough guys" behave—not exercising any self-control but trying to push other people around. It is almost like the gangsters we see in old western movies and, Mr. Speaker, just as crooked. Just as confidence is essential to a nation, so is good will and co-operation necessary in federal-provincial financial relations. I say, Mr. Speaker, that this government is risking the future of this country in order to try to save its own skin.

Co-operative federalism has gone down the drain. What is taking its place?

Mr. Perrault: It won't be the Conservative party.

Mr. Stanfield: My hon. friend says it will not be the Conservative party. I say that co-operative federalism has given way to confrontation, and very little else.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that those of us not in the government should pray as hard as we can for continued and growing prosperity in the United States so that this will overflow into our country and maintain a good standard of prosperity here. Because after this budget, Mr. Speaker, certainly this government will be unable to do anything to help the Canadian people.

We pray that this will happen so that perhaps the government will at least have second thoughts, so that perhaps other ministers in the government will have the wit to see the dangerous course upon which the government has embarked, will have the courage to speak frankly to the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister and will warn them of the dangerous course upon which they have launched the ship of state of Canada.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, shortly before the last election an old rancher in the Chilcotin country got in touch with me and said, "Paul, if you are to run for parliament, for God's sake don't promise me anything. I can't afford half the promises I now have." I wonder how much of that is the story of this budget. Here we have another budget with a sickening deficit, a frightening deficit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. St. Pierre: It is astonishing to hear applause from people who inaugurated this type of deficit budgeting. They led us into this morass. This has gone on for too long, Mr. Speaker, but for the moment I will leave this government out of it—for the moment.

Not since the government of Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent has a government in Canada had the courage to tell the people that they are not getting anything except what they pay for. The principle of governments for the past decade, Conservative and Liberal, has been, first, that we look at something and say, "It would be nice to have it." Then, egged on by the irresponsible splinter parties we do what we want and then wonder where the money is to come from. If we cannot find it, we are surprised. This time, again, the money is not there.

Before I speak specifically about the budget there are one or two other matters I want to raise. For a moment I want to speak of myself. I am quite ignorant of the operations of this house, though I might be a little wiser when I sit down tonight. That does not worry me too much because a very wise man said once that to know your own shortcomings is the beginning of wisdom. I also remember the advice of a senior British Columbia politician who said, "When you are a young member you will lose some fights you should have won; when you are an old member you will win some fights you should have lost; and in the balance the country will have been served." I do not know whether he was right, but his words give me some comfort at this time.

Also, I wish to speak about Coast Chilcotin. I realize that a remark like that will be greeted with a certain amount of cynicism in this house. Some will think that I am talking about my constituency, for the benefit of my constituents. I do not have to talk about Coast Chilcotin for my constituents; they know their own country. It is important that people from the east should know about Coast Chilcotin and British Columbia to a greater extent than they now do. So, if I may, I will talk about my own country of Coast Chilcotin. In area it is about 50,000 square miles. That is about the same area as all three maritime provinces combined, and it is by no means as easy to get around in. Why? Because we have rain forests. We still have a few Douglas firs which reach to over 300 feet in height, higher than the peace tower here. We have some coastal fiords that are over 100 miles long.

One section of the riding, the Sunshine Coast on the Georgia strait, has a climate approximating that of the Mediterranean shores of Turkey. Then, within sight of that same coastline are a mountain range and perpetual snows, where the climate is Arctic.

On the interior plateau we have jackpine, sagebrush, cactus and grassland, tens of thousands of square miles which are one of the last areas of this continent where open range ranching is still conducted. So far as I am aware one of the last cattle drives of the north American continent north of the Mexican states moves through my riding of Coast Chilcotin. Pan Philips of the frontier cattle country still drives east across the plateau of Quesnel, because there are no roads. This is a great, empty, dusty country. An old friend of mine said to me one day. "You know, I was almost a man before I found out there was anything else to eat."

In between the high plateau and the coastland are mountains that go up to 13,000 feet. It is splendid, isolated mountain country. Yet, Mr. Speaker, even while I use these words I realize how difficult it is to talk about my country in words, because I realize that we are all at some disadvantage in Canada in maintaining a dialogue between the eastern and the western parts of our country.

We often talk about the same things in different terms, one example being in sports fishing. In the Coast Chilcotin country, Mr. Speaker, we consider ourselves good sports fishermen and think our country contains excellent salmon and trout. In my part of the country, Mr. Speaker, we do not hesitate to take a six inch fish; an eight inch fish is a good size to take and a 12 inch fish you really talk about. You can just imagine my feelings when I heard easterners discussing casually 18 inch, 24 inch and 30 inch fish. I found it hard to believe what I heard. But, as in so many other ways, Mr. Speaker, we have here a mere difference of standards. In the east you measure a fish from the fork of the tail to the nose; in Chilcotin we measure between the eyes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. St. Pierre: There are a few other matters I ought to bring up at this time, too. You easterners seem to be obsessed about who was first in this country. I say to hon. members here that the first men in this country were Indians, who comprise 10 per cent of the population of my riding. They deserve a far better approach and better treatment from the lordly whites than they have had for a century or more. Yet this is not the time to discuss Indians, since there will be other, more appropriate occasions for that discussion.

I want to say to eastern Canadians that if you are weary sometimes of the bickering that seems to beset many parts of eastern Canada, there is still room for you in the west. The people there do not give a tinker's damn about who you were, what your religion is, what your race is or was, or anything like that. They are only interested in where you are going.

I brought a letter with me from an old friend of mine in Chilcotin. He has retired from his ranch and has a little more time to read, sit, and think, and occasionally he pulls out his stubby old pen and writes to me. I wish to read these two paragraphs from his letter:

> Let us pray that the Government will be granted great wisdom in dealing with Quebec and that Canada will come out of it and not two rival cultures geared to past wrongs.
> All I can remember about the capture of Quebec is that Wolf was reciting "Grey's Elegy" and I would offer to forget it, but probably can't.

• (5:00 p.m.)

We have different attitudes on the west coast and, in beginning with the first of my two or three specific examples, I want to talk about Bella Coola. As hon. members probably know Bella Coola is down on the saltchuck below the Chilcotin plateau, on the salt water. It was settled by Norwegians from Minnesota in 1894 or 1895. That was just one century after Sir Alexander Mackenzie reached that place—the first white man north of Mexico to cross the north American continent by land. Even today there are only a couple of thousand people in Bella Coola. I ask hon. members to consider what these couple of thousand people have done. They had no telephone system years ago, so they built their own telephone system. They called it the Bella Coola telephone system, but they shortened that to "B.C. telephone" which was very handy because the British Columbia Telephone Company had the same initials. Naturally, Bella Coola refused to change the shortened name although the British Columbia Telephone Company occasionally felt a little irritated, I am told.

Bella Coola had no road connection with the outside until very recent years, indeed in the 'fifties. So the townspeople built their own road. It went 6,000 feet up the face of the coast mountain range to the crest and then connected with another road in the interior plateau. As happened in the case of the telephone system, which was later taken over by the federal government telephone system, and eventually by the larger British Columbia telephone system, the road has been taken over by the provincial government. But the people themselves built it. They built it with their own money, not with government money.

Recently they wanted television in this valley, so they applied to the C.B.C. Of course, the abominable no-men of the C.B.C. gave a number of reasons for not supplying such a service. So Bella Coola is putting in its own system. So far, these people have raised $12,000. They have placed a receiver on a 5,000-foot peak on King island which is catching a signal from a transmitter near Ocean Falls. This signal will then be bounced into the valley by another station. And the homes will be covered.

Of course, word of all this has finally reached whichever government board is concerned about such matters, and the people of Bella Coola have now been given 450 linear feet of forms to fill out to ask permission so that they may do this. I would suggest that permission be given very quickly, because if they send an inspector in there somebody is liable to take a shot at him. The letter, of course, is similar to all government letters written in our great democratic society. I wonder how many hon. gentlemen in this chamber can recall an occasion when the democratic government which they support ever wrote them a letter which did not contain a threat, open or implied? This is the way in which government communicates with its citizens. Again, I say it would be a good plan if the people of Bella Coola got their licence very quickly for the service they have built.

There is one other thing. They lacked an airport. They built a small one near the townsite, but it was too short. Then they scraped another one up—just an airstrip but encountered some difficulty with regard to land ownership. During the last couple of years they have built a 5,000-foot gravel runway which is used on a regular basis by British Columbia air lines flying jet-prop twin-engine planes once a week.

I am sure hon. members would be interested to know how large a part the federal government played in this operation. I am happy to say I can give them this information.

Ottawa's help in building this airstrip almost a mile long was—not one cent. Not one red cent. This is not good enough, Mr. Speaker, for the west. It is not good enough for Bella Coola. It is not good enough for Coast Chilcotin. It is not good enough for British Columbia. We are a little weary of paying our taxes for high tariffs, for subsidies, for subventions. Sometimes it seems to us, perhaps a little unfairly, that we do nothing but build in the east with the federal taxes we pay, while we ourselves have an older idea, one which still works, that we should go out and do the job ourselves.

There is the case of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway, an extremely important link in British Columbia, running north and south. How much money did we provide for the C.N.R. the other day? I forget how many millions it was, because millions come and go here in such a hurry. But there were no such millions set aside for the extension of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway in British Columbia. For one short section we got the magnificent construction subsidy of $25,000 a mile. For most of it, again, we got nothing.

Along the coast of the Coast Chilcotin riding we find federal docks. But the commercial fishermen of my riding pay, and pay heavily, to moor at these docks. It is only recently I learned that on the Atlantic coast such charges are seldom heard of; a federal dock is considered to be free to commercial fishermen.

Mr. Crouse: If I may interrupt the hon. gentleman, that is not correct. Fishermen on the east coast do pay for the use of public works. We resent paying these charges, but nevertheless they are made.

Mr. St. Pierre: I thank the hon. member for his correction; I will end my speech a wiser man, and check my facts a little more carefully before I speak again.

My time is running out. I should like to say a few words about the budget. Frankly, I feel sorry for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), because it seems to me that all he has been offered is, really, a choice of which colour hair shirt he wants to wear. I am convinced that he and the government must bring our fiscal affairs into far better balance than they have been for the past ten years. The question is: Is he doing it? Rather than complain about taxes I think it is fair for hon. members of this house to ask themselves: Is the tax high enough?

I heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) say a while ago that there is nothing sacrosanct about a balanced budget. And of course, predictably, while this debate was going on I heard one of the members of the New Democratic party speak of the "utterly irrelevant concept" of a balanced budget. I find this a little difficult to believe.

It is true I am not an economist. On the other hand, it is also true I have never made an error of $400 million in a forecast. But I do find it hard to believe we can go on, recording deficit after deficit, year after year, without experiencing inflation which robs the poor, the old, people living on pensions, the unorganized and the helpless. Inflation is robbing these people, and no matter what the economists say I do not believe this country can survive a continuous deficit.

I don't have to go to Niagara Falls to know that water runs downhill. So I say government should have courage. It should have the courage to take the hard line. The Leader of the Opposition spoke of the hard line as being somehow reprehensible. I believe this country needs a government which has the courage to face hard facts and do the hard things that need to be done. I say to this government that in all apparent probability they have a full four years to operate here, and in that four years the people of Canada expect them to put the fiscal house in order. If they fail to do so I do not believe they will be forgiven for it.

As to the budget, does it show the necessary courage in facing the true facts of what we are spending and what we are taking in? I can only offer one man's opinion, Mr. Speaker, and at this time mine would be the old Scottish verdict: not proven.

In this connection and in closing, sir, I would like to quote a passage well known to members of the house, Lord Acton's "Power tends to corrupt, and absolute power corrupts absolutely." But usually, Mr. Speaker, this is the extent of the passage quoted. Lord Acton said more and I wish to add the rest, "Power tends to corrupt, and absolute power corrupts absolutely. Great men are almost always bad men. There can be no greater heresy than that the office sanctifies the holder of it." I think we should all, large or small in this chamber, think of this. It is of course a generality, and no more accurate than any generality ever is. But I think there is a modern paraphrasing of it that fits. I would say, "Big government always tends to be bad government. There can be no more sorry error for government, or for unions or for business, than to think that bigness is its own justification".

Bigness does not necessarily mean efficiency. It does not necessarily mean fairness. Bigness is a burden. The bigness of this government is a burden to the efficiency of it, and a burden in many ways to the very people it is supposed to be serving.

Some hon. members might very well say to me that I should be constructive, that it is all very well to criticize bigness in government, and ask what I propose to do about it? It is fair that they should ask this question. A man should be constructive in his criticisms.

So, do I want to see Canada return to a village economy? Well of course I don't, Mr. Speaker. Do I want to abandon all the social legislation that is giving some protection, however inefficient in some cases to those who are poor? No, I do not. What is my solution? Well, Mr. Speaker, I did not come to this house bearing any magic formula to solve all men's ailments. I am not a member of the New Democratic party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. St. Pierre: Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be wonderful to be as certain and self-righteous about anything as the N.D.P. are about everything. But to return to my hypothetical question, what solution is there to the curse of big government? I say that I do not know; but I say also, Mr. Speaker, let us realize that bigness is a threat and that bigness is a burden. Let us recognize it is a continuing burden on the nation. If we recognize this we will have ground on which to stand.

If we are conscious of big government's frequent unconscious tyranny, then we may be able to find a path to the better life which the nation expects this parliament to find. At least we will have recognized our own weakness and that, as I said at the beginning of these remarks, might be the beginning of wisdom. I thank the hon. members of the house for their courteous attention.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, the government's estimates covering spending for the current fiscal year, the frequent public statements of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), his devious and deceptive explanations and apologies for our present deplorable financial situation and, finally, the budget he presented to us last month all combine to present a picture that is both pathetic and frightening. The plain fact seems to be that we are broke: The federal till is empty. With all our tremendous resources and potential wealth we are short of money to pay necessary undertakings.

It seems incredible, but nevertheless true, that in the midst of plenty we are in want. A nation that is among the richest in the world, that enjoys a standard of living among the highest to be found anywhere, is teetering on the verge of bankruptcy. If anyone believes this to be too extreme a statement, let him read the statements of members of the government, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance, over recent months. Let him study the figures placed before this house by the minister, and try to interpret the minister's many deliberately complex and involved statements on the state of our national business operation.

What these all boil down to is that we are spending more than we are taking in, that we have lost control of expenditure and have little hope of acquiring new income without resort to dangerous and undesirable methods of financing. To keep out of receivership we have had to cut off vitally necessary national projects. We have had to refuse to embark on any equally vital expansion and development plans, and resort to finding petty cash by desperate and distasteful means.

We are like any business that is over-committed. We may have vast potential and great assets but we are desperately short of operating cash. Small businesses in such circumstances try to stave off the inevitable bankruptcy by juggling the books, high interest borrowing and other methods that are not considered good business practice. The federal government is squeezing the taxpayer wherever possible and borrowing from the Canadian public at high cost. It cannot undertake any new expenditures, no matter how sensible or urgent, and is content to live hand to mouth, day to day, on the cash it can pick up by resort to any expedient.

It is interesting to try to find out how they got themselves and the country in such a sorry state. I believe that the greatest offenders in bringing us to the edge of the financial cliff have been the open-ended, shared cost programs that have been instituted and expanded in the recent years of Liberal government. There are several factors that have made what should have been, and could have been, great national assets into a crushing burden on the Canadian taxpayer and the Canadian economy. One factor was the failure of the federal government to provide controls on these programs, permitting them to turn into runaway give-aways. Another was the abysmal failure of the minister and his officials to forecast properly the rate of increase in the cost of the programs.

Those glaring failures have turned these programs into sinks down which our tax dollars flow uncontrolled, and at an ever faster rate. Provision of health services, expanded educational facilities and more effective welfare programs are worthy aims. My criticism is of the manner in which the federal government approached the problem of extending assistance to the provinces in achieving these aims. They took an unrealistic and irresponsible approach. They followed a blank cheque philosophy that encouraged effort to be squandered and expenditures to run amuck.

The result today is that the Canadian people are not receiving anywhere near a dollar's return on a dollar spent. Before these schemes were embarked upon a decision should have been made concerning what our objective is in the field of health and education, what our national goals should be, and what standards we wish to work to. It seems to me that common sense and good management require that a decision first should be made concerning what is desired, what one can afford to spend to get what is desired, how much should be spent and how it should be spent. This should be the case whether it is the head of a family, the operator of a business, the prime minister or the finance minister of a government.

This budget is a desperation budget. It is not sufficient to cover more than the pocket money needs of the minister's colleagues. It does not begin to meet the demands of this government's insatiable spending appetite. To offset some of the uncontrolled and skyrocketing costs the minister will have to borrow. He will be able to cover petty cash by gouging the taxpayer.

There is nothing for the provinces. Indeed, the minister has effectively appropriated all reasonable areas of increased taxation, sealing them off from the provinces when at the same time he has said that they must not look to Ottawa for revenue but must raise revenue by new taxes. The provinces will be left with federally inspired bills to pay, but no means of paying them. The present minister has merely echoed the sad cry of his predecessor to the provinces by saying, "Look after yourselves; raise your own money". It is a case of every man for himself, with a vengeance.

I should like to turn now to the main factor in the government's present trouble; that is, the federal-provincial shared cost programs. The minister has admitted that unforeseen costs in connection with these programs led to the present critical financial situation. He admitted this casually, without any sign of guilt. I believe such laxity and such slipshod careless work in connection with something so important falls little short of criminal negligence. What assurance have members of this house or the Canadian taxpayers that the figures with which the minister is now dealing have any basis in fact or bear any relation to the true figures. On the minister's record and on the record of his experts I would think it might be a good bet that they are miles out.

Let us take a look at just one example of this financial forecasting. In the September 26 issue of the Winnipeg Free Press Maurice Western made some observations on the minister's situation. At one place he wrote:

> The essential trouble was that Mr. Benson fell into error last spring, permitting himself excessively optimistic forecasts on the basis of intelligence gleaned from his computers or crystal balls or, perhaps, reading of the entrails of migratory birds. So little control does the government possess over some of the programs into which it has entered that in one case—post secondary education payments—it was out last spring in its ultra refined calculations by no less than 100 per cent, representing $137,500,000.

One of the problems in calculating cost increases, of course, is that the federal government had only vague and ill defined goals in each field of assistance and failed to impose any ground rules and basic figuring on prices, wages and other costs that immediately became obsolete when the programs went into effect on a scale and at a level that bore no relation to previous conditions in the fields of health, education and welfare.

Not only did the federal government operate on a "blank cheque" philosophy but it ordered everyone to go "first class" all the way. No provision was made for a ceiling, for supervision or for administrative or operating standards. It was just a case of, here it is, spend it.

The Prime Minister has forecast that the federal share of these programs will grow to more than $7 billion in the next four years. He made this forecast with an air of hopeless inevitability that makes one wonder why he and his government are resigned to this uncontrolled growth rate. The federal share of shared cost programs has tripled over the past seven years to $1.8 billion. We are not dealing with small potatoes when we get into that bracket. There is worse to come. No one knows what amount medicare will add to the stupendous spiralling costs, because as yet it has barely made an impact upon the economy. Post secondary education costs are leaping ahead of federal forecasts. The cost per pupil for education at all levels is up 28 per cent this year to $1,000 per head, compared to $777.

University operating costs per student stood at $1,600 in the year 1960-61. By the year 1965-66 this figure had risen to $2,100 and this year it is $2,900. The estimate for next year is a per student cost of $3,500. In other words, the rate has accelerated from an average increase of $100 per head to $600 per head per year today. When we talk about uncontrolled and accelerating increases this must be a record of some kind. It is interesting to note that the chief forecast in this area, that of the Bladen report of three years ago, predicted the $3,500 per student level would not be reached until 1975. In the Winnipeg Tribune of October 10 Michael Cassidy of the Financial Times wrote:

> The reasons for the shared cost nightmare are difficult to piece out in detail. But there has been uncritical acceptance of rising costs and little zeal in challenging the sacred cows of education and medicine.

This "uncritical acceptance" sticks out all over every explanation the government makes concerning the inevitability of increase. Mr. Cassidy wrote further:

> Politicians have brought universities, hospitals and doctors into the public sector but have behaved as though they were still in the private sector. Now every taxpayer is paying the price.

This unrealistic approach, this failure to lay down ground rules and set bounds, has made accurate forecasting difficult if not impossible. We are obviously seven to eight years off in our cost predictions. What such an error can do to national financing is demonstrated by the necessity for repeated apologies and corrections by successive ministers of finance, and the empty tills at Ottawa and at every provincial capital.

The federal growth rate in the cost of the three principal shared cost sinkholes is 20 per cent a year for post secondary education, 15 per cent a year for hospital care and a probable 15 per cent for medicare. These are only estimates and the real rate may be much higher. What this amounts to is negligence and irresponsibility on the part of the federal government. The government has originated plans, sold them to the provinces on the basis of political popularity and easy money, and then has neglected to limit them in any way. I should like to quote Mr. Cassidy once more:

> It seems clear that Ottawa has turned the provinces' heads by lavishing 50 cent dollars for them to spend.

The result of this prodigal approach has been to condition the provinces to look to Ottawa for ever larger amounts of fuel to stoke their spending furnaces. This sloppy thinking has brought the inevitable result of Ottawa having to tell the provinces the fuel dump is exhausted. The federal government's only recourse has been to tell the provinces to raise their own money from their own resources. On the one hand it has lured the provinces into high sounding enterprises with the bait of easy money and, on the other hand, it has failed to take steps to ensure that the money would be forthcoming when most needed. The government has been delinquent too in urging upon the provinces the most expensive forms of operation. It should be said however that the blame rests in part on the provinces. They have been irresponsible in looking only for higher and ever higher federal handouts, and new areas in which to tax, rather than tackling the basic problem of controlling costs of operating the various schemes.

The fact remains that the provinces were conned by the federal government. Every better business bureau across Canada periodically warns the public to read the fine print in contracts, to "read before you sign". I am afraid the federal government must shoulder the blame for plunging the provinces into too many politically popular programs too fast, and too carelessly.

According to the Montreal Gazette of October 1 the director of the Canadian Tax Foundation 10 years ago, in 1958, predicted that federal spending would increase this year to a figure of at least $7¾ billion. The actual figure is 10.8 billion. The Gazette commented:

> The consequences are plain enough: If spending remains out of control, taxes will be out of control. Who wants that?

The record of the minister and the Department of Finance in estimating future costs, and rates of cost increases, is woeful. It could be very damaging. Reasonably accurate forecasting is the necessary basis for orderly budgeting. We all recall the Minister of Finance guaranteeing forecast figures. He said, "We will hit our $10.3 billion ceiling and will balance our budget this year". Events have shown how worthless such ministerial guarantees and forecasts are. His long record of explanations, revelations and predictions on financial matters has been, to use the words of Maurice Western of the Winnipeg Free Press, "one part blood and many parts political whitewash."

Canada deserves something better. We should have a complete reassessment of all federal-provincial shared cost, open-ended programs to determine what we want and just where and how far we want to go in each area. There is a gaping self-inflicted wound in the national economy. In financial terms, we are gradually bleeding to death. Someone must apply a tourniquet quickly and then set about healing the wound.

There are many areas covered by this budget with which I would have liked to deal. However, I have chosen to concentrate on this one important aspect because I believe it to be most crucial. A little common sense and a few basic business principles applied to the vitally important task of providing effective and efficient health, educational and welfare services to our people are necessary. These form such a gigantic part of our national expenditure that we cannot afford to be careless or wasteful. Nor, I believe, can we afford luxuries beyond our means and income. Let us decide therefore what we must have and what we can afford, and then set about spending toward these in a sensible and businesslike way. If we continue to live beyond our means the inevitable end is national bankruptcy and the international dole.

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I propose to base my remarks on certain tax changes and new taxes appearing in the budget, and I intend to venture a few proposals for tax reforms. I should like at the same time to take the opportunity hopefully of staying within the broad confines of the budget, and say something of the special problems faced by post-secondary students in their efforts to finance post-secondary education. I think this whole subject fits into some of the aspects of the budget.

May I say first that I agree with and expect there will be broad acceptance, and even welcome, in respect of certain tax changes and reforms brought forward in this budget. I refer particularly to changes in the estate taxes, a reduction by one half in tax-free reserves in the banking system and the new taxes at a moderate level on investment income by life insurance companies. I refer also to the regulations insuring that depletion allowances for mining, oil and gas companies henceforth will be taken only on a net position after deducting all exploration and development expenses of a group of related companies. These are reforms that make for greater equity, as well as for an increase in necessary revenue. They are in accord at least in these areas with the Carter commission proposals.

Let me refer at greater length to the 2 per cent social development tax and the associated $120 ceiling. I cannot welcome this tax with anything like the same degree I welcome other sections of the budget. I understand the need for the 2 per cent social development tax, and in principle I do not oppose this kind of user tax or premium, as it is described. I want to refer to it in relation to other similar taxes—flat rate taxes with ceilings already in the personal income tax area.

When we relate these to other areas we can see them in a different perspective. I think we have to question the equity of these taxes at this time, even though we know we are on the threshold of tax reforms which may change the whole picture. We hope to see these tax reforms in the next four to six months.

In order to point out my objections, if I may call them that, to this social development tax, I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to certain trends in personal income tax in the four year period ending with the next fiscal year, 1969-70. This means necessarily that I will be making some estimates, which I have based as closely as possible on the budget papers and my own estimation for the coming year.

When we look at the four year period we find a rapidly growing reliance on personal income tax to fund the budget and the old age security fund, which I think we should take into consideration when we talk about income tax and the new social development tax. Let me refer to personal income tax in terms of the budget and the old age security fund, as well as the new social development tax, in order that we may have a total picture of the uses being made of personal income tax in this four year period ending the next fiscal year.

When you look at that you find personal income taxes will increase from $3 billion in round figures at the beginning of this four year period—that is 1966-67—to $5 billion. The exact figure for the first period is $3,051 million. I am calling that $3 billion because I do not want to make my remarks tedious by quoting exact statistics. My estimate of the figure for the final fiscal year is $5,060 million. Taking these figures we see that personal income taxes will increase by roughly $2 billion, or two thirds in the four year period. These taxes will then be contributing close to 40 per cent of the total requirements of the budget, the old age security fund and these new social development programs. This will mean an increase of from about 31 per cent at the beginning of the period, to 40 per cent.

This burden of personal income tax is growing or increasing in respect of one of the smallest labour forces in the western world, representing roughly 37 per cent of the total population compared with from 40 to 48 per cent in other countries like the United Kingdom, the United States, France, Italy and Germany. We have a relatively small labour force on which we are now placing an increasing burden through personal income tax. We have to be concerned with the equity of this tax and the distribution of that burden throughout the population on the basis of personal income tax.

What do we find when we look at this question of equity? We find that while the income tax is growing at this rate, so also is growing even more rapidly that portion of the personal income tax which is now subject to a ceiling. I am using the same four year period for this discussion and I want to make it clear that these figures include estimates for the current fiscal year.

The personal income tax subject to a ceiling will increase from $577 million to $1,360 million or by 134 per cent. What we find therefore is that personal income tax is growing by about two thirds of the total, but that the portion of that which is subject to an upper cutoff is growing by 134 per cent, or at twice the rate of growth of total taxes.

This portion of the total tax that is subject to the ceiling has risen from 19 per cent of total income tax to 26 per cent or 27 per cent when the period ends next fiscal year; or to put it another way, something over one-quarter of the personal income tax is now subject to flat rates and associated ceilings. I think this represents a loading of the personal income tax in the middle and lower income areas, and it represents a protection against escalation of income tax at the upper income levels or at those levels that begin perhaps at $9,000 gross income or $6,000 taxable income, just to use approximate figures.

This loading at the middle and lower income end, as we seek to finance programs, intensifies the inequity in the personal income tax, and I think it makes it ever more urgent that the reforms expected to be shown to us in the next four to six months have something to say about the personal income tax in the way of greater equity, and will indicate the character that some of those reforms will take. I would like to refer to those later. I think, too, this build-up at the lower and middle income area suggests that the whole notion of flat rate and ceilings, now that the proportion is so high, should be challenged as to its usefulness. Perhaps it is an obsolete technique in the personal income tax.

Mr. Gilbert: When are you going to join us?

Mr. O'Connell: I want to say again, Mr. Speaker, as I began, that I think this kind of tax may have a useful place if used in small doses and with particular reference to certain programs; but I point out that we now have four percentage points and a ceiling of $240 as related to old age security, and on top of that we have now put two percentage points into the tax total. I think we have to think of it in this total package, and the inequity it brings with it.

I would like to suggest some alternatives, rather than simply criticize personal income taxation. The first is that if we do continue this kind of tax, would it not make sense to incorporate the 2 per cent social development tax with the 4 per cent old age security tax attributed to personal incomes and call it a social security and social development tax, if you like? The point would be that then we would have an opportunity, looking at the 6 per cent that would apply, to graduate the tax, perhaps starting with four percentage points, going to five, six and perhaps seven; then also to graduate the ceiling in order to accommodate it to various income tax brackets. I think that if we kept the tax we could apply more equity to it and reduce the loading which currently applies at the middle and lower income area.

People would still in fact be kept in this tax, but the proportions they would pay would vary more closely with incomes. This would not be so good, in my view, as dispensing with the technique entirely and incorporating the tax into the personal income tax in the tax reforms that are to come, and doing it in a manner that will spread the burden more equitably.

I also want to draw attention to the fact that corporations have not been asked to share in the social development tax. I think that is perhaps an oversight. I appreciate the difficulties faced by the Minister of Finance and I appreciate his reasoning in not increasing corporation and sales taxes, since this might well add to costs and prices. However, I point out that corporations contribute to the old age security tax, which is a similar kind of tax, and in fact they are going to contribute something like $190 million this fiscal year, which represents 11 per cent to 12 per cent of the total old age security tax this year.

I think it would have been appropriate to have required some contribution from the corporations to the social development tax. I think this is all the more appropriate in that the corporations did not share in the increase in the old age security tax of January 1, 1967, when personal income tax contributions were doubled from 2 per cent to 4 per cent and the ceiling was raised from $120 to $240. I would like to make that point and to make these suggestions to the Minister of Finance in the hope that he will consider them as useful. I couple these suggestions with the comment that in the coming tax reforms—if I might be bold enough to make a few suggestions in view of these remarks—some attention ought to be given to raising the basic exemption and the allowances for dependents, if this loading is going to be left at what I think is the middle and lower income area.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I want to state publicly here that I think it would be only in the direction of equity to impose a capital gains tax in the tax reforms, so that if indeed this protection against escalating personal income taxes is to continue, higher incomes which frequently take much of their incomes in non-taxable forms will make a contribution through a capital gains tax.

I would like to move to the second aspect of my remarks this evening. This is in the area of post secondary education. The Minister of Finance has drawn our attention to the rapidly escalating costs in federal contributions. We know now that the estimate of $137 million is doubled to $275 million this year. I would like to draw attention to another aspect, however, of financing post secondary education. I refer to the part played by the students themselves. I know that this government has now guaranteed the loans of private lenders to students in the amount of about $180 million.

This means of course that students are undertaking that amount of financing of their own education; at least that amount, and indeed much more since they do not borrow entirely. I have grave reservations about putting students so deeply in debt for post secondary education. I do not want to get into that aspect of the subject this evening, but only to draw attention to the fact that students are making a significant contribution to post secondary education.

I wish to go from that point to a question which I think should interest the house, and that is to the provision of summer employment opportunities for students. I wish to do this because I recognize, as I think we all do, that large numbers of students seek entry into the labour force from mid-May to mid-September, that is, in a four months period. In the past summer many students found it very difficult to obtain employment, with the result that unknown numbers may not have continued their education, and higher numbers than otherwise will be obliged to go further into debt in order to finance their education.

These results may well repeat themselves not only because of the growing numbers of students, but because whenever the economy is in a slow growth phase coinciding with the summer months this situation occurs. Hon. members may be interested in certain trends which help to measure the problem to which I am alluding, and which suggest the need for this government, in collaboration with the provinces, taking some remedial steps.

Let me indicate some indices of growth in the post secondary school population. I draw these figures largely from the reports and special studies of the Economic Council of Canada. The present student enrolment in post-secondary institutions stands at about 300,000 persons. It is expected to reach 383,000 in two years and approximately 540,000 by 1975, a short seven years away. The rapid rate of increase of almost a quarter of a million students in the next seven years is due not only to the growth in the 18 to 24 years age group, which supplies students to the post secondary field, but to an even more rapid rise in the enrolment ratios in universities and other institutions.

Let me illustrate it in this way. The size of the 18 to 24 year age group in the decade from 1965 to 1975 will grow from 2 million to 3 million persons, that is to say by 50 per cent, whereas the number of students from that group who will be enrolled in the post-secondary institutions, according to the estimates, will grow from 206,000 to 540,000, that is to say by 160 per cent. Now, the age group grows by 50 per cent, the student enrolment by 160 per cent and, to come back to my point, by a quarter of a million people between now and 1975 or an additional 30,000 to 35,000 students every year.

I want to relate these facts to the labour force, since there are problems students will find in pressing their way into that labour force. That difficulty leads me to make some suggestions to this government. I am sorry to give these figures to the house but I think they illustrate the dimensions of the problem. In the same decade, from 1965 to 1975, the labour force in Canada is estimated to grow from roughly 7 million to 9½ million persons, or by 34 per cent. At the same time, because of the more rapid rate of growth in the student population, the number of post secondary students in relation to the labour force will increase from just under 2 per cent in 1960 to just under 3 per cent in 1965, to 4½ per cent of the labour force in 1970 and 5¾ per cent of the labour force in 1975. I am trying to say that the post secondary students will form an increasing proportion of the potential labour force in the decade ahead of us, roughly from 3 per cent to 5¾ per cent of the labour force.

It could be said therefore that the post secondary students seeking job opportunities in Canada are going to find that they are seeking these opportunities at the very time that our labour force will be growing at its most rapid pace in our history, at a substantially higher rate than any other industrial country. It is going to be extremely difficult for these students therefore to find places when the labour force itself is struggling to find places for its members in an expanding economy.

To illustrate the dimensions of the growth of our labour force, and to highlight this problem, may I say that the Economic Council of Canada has pointed out that between 1965 and 1980, a 15 year period, the actual growth in the Canadian labour force of some 3½ million people will more than equal the growth in the labour force of the United Kingdom, West Germany and Italy combined. I think this illustrates the real pressure of growth in the labour force of our country. I will not pause to comment on the enormous burden this lays on the economic and fiscal policies.

I want to say, in contrast to some speakers on the other side, that I have absolute confidence in the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the leadership he has already shown in this budget in the fiscal and economic policies to meet these problems of growth and of job opportunities. But I want to come back to the point that no policies will be more important than the ones we pursue in education, in the post secondary field in particular. In order to assist these students to find their place in the rapidly growing labour force, I would like to make a few suggestions. I think we will need to take a special approach to a special situation. It is an historically unique situation which may not repeat itself, at least in our generation, when there will be a great surge forward not only in the labour force but in the number of students.

Among these special efforts several, I suggest, are open to the federal government through its concern and interest in employment. I will not mention the fact of our contributions to financing education, but on employment grounds alone I would like to suggest that, perhaps through the Department of Manpower and Immigration, some federal-provincial discussions concerning job opportunities for students might take place not only in traditional areas but perhaps in areas especially designed to suit their needs, such as part time employment which they would require. Surely there are job opportunities that would not only contribute to their financing problems but would also contribute to the public assets in various ways. One need only mention the anti-poverty program, and development in our north, as just two of those areas. I think we should have a survey of the number of students who, say, last summer sought jobs, what kind of jobs they sought, how many were successful and how many were turned away. I think also we should go to the young people themselves, particularly the students, and seek their help in finding ways in which they could be gainfully employed in the summer months. I may say also in this connection that I would like to express a very strong interest in the idea advanced by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) when he suggested a youth service on a voluntary basis. I think this might well be applied to the special problems of post secondary students.

I should also like to suggest that perhaps we should look at the winter works incentive program, which we have now discontinued, to see whether we should not consider a summer works incentive program on a trial basis and apply it to the financial needs of post secondary students.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being six o'clock this house stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 2.30 p.m.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 7, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MRS. MACINNIS—APPOINTMENTS TO CANADIAN CONSUMER COUNCIL

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a question of privilege to raise. It arises out of the announcement yesterday by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs of the personnel of the new Canadian Consumer Council. Among those named is Mr. A. J. E. Child, president of Burns Foods Limited of Calgary. To my mind this raises a question of privilege.

A few days ago I drew to the attention of this house a complaint from Calgary about a frozen confection known as fudgsicles, manufactured by the Woodland Dairy of Edmonton. On the wrapper it states that these fudgsicles contain three fluid ounces. Numerous checks, both before and after the complaint was made, have established that these fudgsicles contain only two and one half ounces. A written report dated October 25 from the Chemical and Geological Laboratories Limited of Calgary stated that their actual average fluid measure was found to be 2.516 ounces.

It is now more than three months since the complaint was lodged. Although the complainant was assured by the minister's office on August 28 that the matter was in hand and that the complainant would be notified when the report was finalized, to the best of my knowledge he has had no further word, either of the progress of the investigation or of the finalization of the report. Meanwhile, if the evidence is correct, the public is still being defrauded by the sale of these Woodland Dairy fudgsicles; and it would seem there is substance to the complaint.

When I outlined the matter in the house last Monday night the minister's parliamentary secretary stated:

> While shortages in volume of fluid ounces were found to be smaller than those reported to the department, fudgsicles checked by the displacement method had volume content somewhat below declared value.

And again:

> I am advised that the dairy products division will again make special checks in addition to its normal program of control, in order to determine whether the reported shortages are indicative of a current production problem or are limited to a small stock from older production.

Mr. Speaker, if the public is being defrauded it is being defrauded, whether by current production or older production matters not a scrap. Surely if rotten potatoes or bad meat were found in circulation they would be withdrawn, certainly within a period of more than three months. If these fudgsicles were found by the department to be under advertised content they should have been withdrawn from sale immediately. Instead, it is apparent that the department is allowing the Woodland Dairy ample time to sell them to an unsuspecting public.

Now, Mr. Speaker—and this is my question of privilege—the minister has appointed the president of Burns Foods Limited, the firm of which Woodland Dairy is an affiliated subsidiary, to serve on the Canadian Consumer Council, the body which is just now being established to protect consumers.

It is needless for me to labour the point. Until this whole matter has been thoroughly investigated and the complainant notified of the result, I feel strongly that the appointment of Mr. Child to the Canadian Consumer Council should be held in abeyance. If Your Honour agrees with me that this is a prima facie question of privilege, I am prepared to make a motion that consideration of Mr. Child's appointment be referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): On the question of privilege, with respect to these appointments to the Canadian Consumer Council, I wish to object to the absence of an appointment from the well known province of New Brunswick.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Having heard both hon. members on the question of privilege I feel I can give a ruling immediately. I have very serious doubts as to whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. The hon. member must realize that the privilege with which we are concerned is parliamentary privilege, which has been defined on a number of occasions. I fail to see how the parliamentary privilege of any individual member or of the members collectively is being affected adversely by the proposed appointment to which the hon. member has referred.

There may be a genuine, valid grievance by the member against the minister, against the department or the government, but I suggest with great respect to the hon. member that this does not qualify the matter to the extent that it can be considered a question of privilege which would require the suspension of the work of the house for the purpose of considering the motion which the hon. member wants me to put to the house.

In view of the circumstances I would rule that it is not a prima facie case of parliamentary privilege.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS—CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River) moved that the second report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, presented to the house on Tuesday, November 5, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North) moved that the first report of the standing committee on national resources and public works, presented to the house on Tuesday, November 5, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE VAGRANCY SECTIONS

Mr. Kenneth Robinson (Lakeshore) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-126, to amend the Criminal Code (vagrancy).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity of presenting this private bill to amend the Criminal Code with regard to the section dealing with vagrancy. I am prompted in part by an article which appeared in the Toronto Telegram of October 24, 1968—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot make his speech now in support of the bill. The standing orders allow him to make only a very brief comment.

Mr. Robinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Section 164 of the code reads:

> Every one commits vagrancy who
> (a) not having any apparent means of support is found wandering abroad or trespassing and does not, when required, justify his presence in the place where he is found;
> (b) begs from door to door or in a public place;

The proposal is that both these subsections be removed. The purpose of the bill is to remove from the Criminal Code the offence of vagrancy where no moral turpitude is involved, in order to restrict it to the field of social justice, its rightful place.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF MISSISQUOI CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council) moves to introduce Bill No. C-127 entitled: "An Act to amend the electoral boundaries readjustment Act".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides simply for a change in the name of the electoral riding of Missisquoi to that of Brome-Missisquoi.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TRADE

WHEAT—ABILITY TO MEET EXPORT COMMITMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister assure the house that the Canadian Wheat Board is filling its export commitments on schedule and that the board is not in fact falling behind in any commitments by reason of any delay in moving the wheat to a forward position.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think this question should be directed to the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt, who is acting for the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps the Minister without Portfolio would be kind enough to answer my question.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): I shall be very pleased to check again into this matter. I certainly have no knowledge of any such problem, but I shall be glad to look into it for the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: If the minister should find that in fact there are any delays, would he made certain that the authorities or he himself gets in touch with the railways concerning the provision of box cars or supplementary methods for this purpose? Also, in view of the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce from the house, the minister might give some indication whether the U.S.S.R. will exercise its option to purchase 150 million bushels of wheat.

Mr. Speaker: The first supplementary appears to be hypothetical. The minister may wish to answer the second supplementary.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that I would be glad to give the assurance to the hon. gentleman about the hypothetical supposition. With regard to the latter part, may I say that it remains the position of this department that these matters are not appropriately discussed in the house. This is not the proper place for this.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Due to the fact that 60 per cent of the grain in western Canada has been harvested either as damp or tough, is there any arrangement to market that grain earlier than other grain?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): The Canadian Wheat Board has established a three bushel advance quota for damp wheat, which on the basis of the information we have concerning the stocks on hand should go a long way toward solving the basic part of this problem.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, to what does the minister refer when he says this is information which is not given in the house? On the basis of past practice I have asked a question as to whether a nation is going to take up its option. I repeat the question to him because I am sure he could not have been clear when he answered it the way he did. Does the U.S.S.R. intend to exercise its option and accept the wheat it has undertaken to accept under the open option that exists?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, it will be apparent to hon. members that to some extent the question involves states of mind to which I may not have immediate access. The whole point of the question has to do with the issue of how negotiations in fact are going. I really suggest it is not in the interests of the Canadian farmer that this be discussed in this house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the state of mind of the minister is such that he has no information on this subject that is one thing. Is that what he means regarding the state of mind?

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, since it is understood that two directors of the Canadian Wheat Board are in the U.S.S.R. at the present time under rather special circumstances, I should like to ask the Minister without Portfolio whether a statement will be made to the house this week, or very soon.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I can only say to the hon. member that when it is possible to make a statement which will not in any way have an adverse effect on the negotiations going on, that statement will be made.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether the government is considering any other measures to meet the very serious problems of the grain growers in western Canada, as the present programs outlined in the legislation which have been discussed are quite inadequate.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister without Portfolio what amount of grain will be dried at terminal elevators during the winter months, and to what extent the wheat board will be prepared to make additional or supplementary quotas available prior to the spring weather.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member not agree that his first question asks for detailed statistical information?

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I was suggesting to the minister that he make this information available to the house and the country.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister without Portfolio or the Minister of Trade and Commerce had any discussion with railroad officials as to their ability to supply an adequate number of box cars to facilitate the movement of tough and damp grain as the Canadian Wheat Board opens quotas for that purpose?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the question as to exactly what stage these discussions have reached, and provide an answer.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether the report of the Saskatchewan minister of agriculture in respect of the condition of the grain, referred to by the minister in the house yesterday, concludes that grain drying facilities in Saskatchewan are adequate; and is the minister prepared to make this report available to interested members?

Mr. Speaker: The first question inquires about conclusions in respect of a report. I doubt whether this is in order. Perhaps the second part of the question might be answered by the minister.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. As far as making the report available in the house is concerned, let me say that this report was in the form of a telephone conversation I had with the minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan. I am not prepared to say whether the capacity of these dryers is adequate, but simply that it is far in excess of anything that was available in any other year.

In answer to the other part of the question I should say that the Board of Grain Commissioners has all inland drying terminal facilities on a 24 hour, five day a week basis. As soon as sufficient quantities of tough and damp grain have been moved into these terminals they will operate on a 24 hour, seven day a week basis.

BARLEY—REPORTED SALE BY AUSTRALIA TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce but in his absence I direct it to the Minister without Portfolio. What action will the minister take to prevent further erosion of our traditional Japanese barley market, in view of the sale by Australia yesterday of enough barley to supply Japan for several months, reportedly due to our inflexible pricing system?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the question asked by the hon. member is of a very general nature, and that he is now asking the minister to make a statement which normally should be made on motions.

IMMIGRATION

DISTRIBUTION OF PAMPHLET AS TO AVAILABILITY OF HOUSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, since the prices of rental housing accommodation and privately owned homes have been rising steadily, does the Minister of Manpower and Immigration believe his department should be distributing to prospective immigrants to Canada a pamphlet which tells them that "The shortage of accommodation...particularly in the form of rental—" should improve shortly?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member might ask a new question. His first question as asked is clearly argumentative, but I will allow him to ask another one.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, does the minister know that his department is distributing a pamphlet which tells prospective immigrants housing both for rent and purchase at reasonable prices is available to them if they come to Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that the table has already received written notice of a similar question, and I believe this question is properly one for the order paper.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

QUEBEC—COVERAGE GIVEN TO POLITICAL PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Secretary of State.

In view of the reply he gave yesterday to my question No. 513, as given on page 2476 of the Hansard, according to which the C.B.C. allotted the Parti québécois five hours and forty-one minutes on the French network, and three hours and five minutes on the English network, for a total of eight hours and forty-six minutes, from October 10 to October 15, 1968—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should put a question and not make a speech.

Mr. Rondeau: —while, during that is the same period, only an hour and thirty-seven minutes were allotted to the Ralliement Créditiste, can the hon. Secretary of State explain that attitude on the part of the C.B.C.?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member should put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member must put a different question, since the question of the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) was considered out of order, under the circumstances.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my question before the house at ten o'clock tonight.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Secretary of State.

What are the norms applied by the C.B.C. concerning the use and allottment of broadcasting time to political, non-political or other movements?

I know that the minister can answer my question, Mr. Speaker, for he told us the other day that he would inquire into the matter.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I can give no specific information on this matter today, Mr. Speaker, but I shall be glad to inquire into it.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the hon. Secretary of State, to follow the answer he made a moment ago.

Can he, at this time, give us the assurance that a complete report on the general policy of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation with regard to the use and allottment of its broadcasting time to all political, non-political or other movements will be tabled soon?

Inquiries of the Ministry

MONTREAL—CONSTRUCTION OF PLACE RADIO-CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State.

In view of a statement he made yesterday or a few days ago, concerning the construction of Place Radio-Canada in Montreal, can the minister tell us whether the work will start as scheduled on December 1 or does he expect further delays?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I have no information, Mr. Speaker, which would indicate that further delays are expected.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RUSSIA—REPORTED BOYCOTT OF CELEBRATIONS BY CANADIAN DIPLOMATS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It relates to the reported boycott yesterday by Canada's diplomats, or the dean of the diplomatic corps in Moscow, of the celebrations relating to the October 1917 revolution in the Soviet union. I ask the right hon. gentleman whether his government and party intend to carry out the same sort of boycott with respect to the reception this evening at the Soviet embassy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the question is in order, but in view of the fact that there are doubts in my mind I am prepared to give the hon. member the benefit of the doubt and allow the Prime Minister to answer.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no list of members of our party or our cabinet who might or might not be going, or who might have been invited to that reception.

Mr. Woolliams: Are you going?

Mr. Trudeau: Personally I am not going. I just want to tell the hon. member that if he goes, I hope he will get some caviar.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The type of caviar I enjoy is that which comes from a west coast salmon. It is much more delightful—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Having heard the reply and the hon. member's comments, I am satisfied that perhaps I should not have allowed the question in the first place.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the cancellation on Monday by the Hellyer task force on housing of a scheduled inspection of slum housing in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories, so the task force could attend a party instead, and thus the inspection was never held, would the Prime Minister advise his minister in charge of housing that the primary purpose of this task force is to better acquaint itself with housing conditions in Canada and not to attend parties?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, since I have not received an answer to that question—

An hon. Member: It is a silly question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but since he is not here today I will delay it until tomorrow.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—SUSPENSION OF RELIEF FLIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the report that Canadian relief flights have been grounded since Monday by reason of the failure to get a positive answer from Colonel Ojukwu to the Prime Minister's appeal, announced in the house on Monday, that he should consent to daylight flights to Uli for civilian relief purposes only, through what means of communication has this appeal to Colonel Ojukwu been made and what answer, if any, has been received?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I should like to say, based on the premise of the question, that the grounding did not result from the suggestion made to Colonel Ojukwu, but rather took place for other reasons. It took place apparently as the result of an attack damaging aircraft under Caritas and under Red Cross charter on the ground at Uli. I believe that as a result of that attack the Red Cross has suspended all flights to Uli, at least until yesterday. Therefore the suspension was not linked in our minds to what we had requested of Colonel Ojukwu.

I have been asked what means we took to inform Colonel Ojukwu of our position. It has been our experience in the past that any statement made in Canada, particularly in the House of Commons, is known by him very quickly, but for greater certainty we asked the Red Cross to convey to him the substance of our message.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Has the Prime Minister received any answer from Colonel Ojukwu, and if not would he consider telephoning New York 212-687-5280, where he can get a response within two minutes?

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether our government has made any representations to the government of Nigeria about the strafing of this field, in view of the fact that the possibility of our own planes being hit are very great; and would he tell us also whether arrangements are being made for flights to be resumed to Biafra in this very necessary relief effort?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we did make representations to be conveyed to the authorities at Lagos to the effect that we hoped they would not embark on these activities until we had an answer from Colonel Ojukwu.

I suggest that if my hon. friend can telephone the person in New York to convey this information I will give him 10 cents to make this call.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister would also like to answer the last part of my question about when we can expect to see these flights resumed. Does he have any idea how long we will have to wait?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I regret as much as anyone in this house that there has not yet been a response from the Biafran authorities. Until there is such a response we will of course not be able to make day flights. With regard to the night flights, it was the decision of the Red Cross to ground the planes, and I cannot speak for them with regard to when they will resume these flights.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood who has a question of privilege has precedence.

Mr. Brewin: The right hon. Prime Minister offered me 10 cents to put in a call to New York. Let me tell him that I already have the information he wants, and I will give it to him for nothing.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the purpose of the question period is to get information, why did the hon. member ask me a question if he already has the information?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the Prime Minister's comment that the Red Cross is unable at present to send planes into Biafra, he and his government might reconsider making arrangements with the churches for the use of our Hercules aircraft, as two flights took place last night from Sao Thomé under the auspices of the churches.

Mr. Trudeau: The position of the government has been quite clear on this. We would not let any of our official governmental planes fly over Nigerian territory without their authority. The Nigerian government told us they would give authority for the flights if we chartered our planes to the Red Cross but would not do so if we chartered them to the churches. There is an additional reason, which was mentioned by the Secretary of State for External Affairs last week. It is that flights from Sao Thomé are carrying a great deal of arms, and the Nigerians have some suspicions as to what might be flown from there.

HOUSING

URBAN RENEWAL APPLICATIONS FROM SMALLER COMMUNITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which in his absence I presume will be taken by the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Winnipeg South. The question is whether Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been ordered or asked to delay or to cease granting approval to urban renewal applications, particularly those from smaller communities.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, there are urban renewal schemes under way in municipalities, both large and small, throughout Canada subject to agreements with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Under these agreements moneys are and will continue to be paid out. The amount committed but not yet billed for is $114 million. New applications, however, are being deferred until the task force on housing completes its studies and reports early in the new year.

Mr. Harkness: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand from the minister's answer that the intention is not to grant any more applications for urban renewal once this $114 million has been expended?

Mr. Richardson: As I explained, Mr. Speaker, there is no intention not to grant more money, but grants will simply be deferred until the task force has completed its studies.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a supplementary question for the Minister without Portfolio. I should like to ask him whether he has either been assigned or has made application for the portfolio designed to handle housing, inasmuch as the minister responsible for that task is never here.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister without Portfolio whether C.M.H.C. generally is marking time and is reluctant to approve applications until such time as the report with regard to housing is received from the task force.

Mr. Richardson: No, Mr. Speaker. I think the figures I have revealed would indicate they are not marking time. There simply is a deferment in this one area.

AIR TRANSPORT

EDMONTON—COMPENSATION FOR WINTER SERVICE REDUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): In view of the answer given yesterday by the Minister without Portfolio to my question regarding the reduction of service to Edmonton by Air Canada on its winter schedule, namely that decisions concerning compensation for flight service reduction come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Transport Commission whereas scheduling appears to be the prerogative of the airline involved, is the minister now in a position to clarify the role of the commission in compensating Edmonton for this reduction of service by Air Canada?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as I explained in my answer yesterday the allocation of routes is a responsibility of the Canadian Transport Commission. These routes are constantly being reviewed. I have no specific information about any application with regard to Edmonton at the present time.

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister say what authority the Canadian Transport Commission has with regard to approving schedule changes such as this?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt if the supplementary question is in order. The hon. member is asking for an interpretation of the law and I doubt whether, in the circumstances, the question could be answered.

Mr. Paproski: I will take it up at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

POSSIBLE FEDERAL WITHDRAWAL FROM HEALTH INSURANCE PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to withdraw from medicare in the near future, and let the provinces be solely responsible for it?

Are we to expect a statement to that effect shortly?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I said the other day, the act provides for a 5-year period before this matter comes up for study, and that is the reply to the hon. member.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO MISSION TO RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I was going to direct my question to the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan, but he is out of the chamber at the moment. He just left a moment ago. I should like to put it to the Minister of Agriculture, who I am sure has the information. Is there at the present time a mission in red China on behalf of the wheat board for the purpose of endeavouring to increase sales of wheat to that country, or at least to find additional markets there? If the mission has returned, has it been able to give an optimistic report which would give western farmers a sense of assurance that the vast amount of the wheat that is piled up will have markets found for it?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I am sure the right hon. gentleman realizes that the answer to this question is the same as the Minister without Portfolio gave, that it is not in the best interests of the farmers to advise where we are trying to sell wheat.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask the minister, in view of that answer, must members of parliament secure their information from the press rather than from ministers? That information was in the press as the result of a press release which came from the department itself.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he has received communications from municipal councils and other organizations in the Red river valley of Manitoba asking him to declare that area a disaster area, and have there been any replies.

Mr. Olson: Replies have been sent, Mr. Speaker, to all communications that have come to my office from municipal councils in Manitoba.

FARM MACHINERY

REQUEST FOR REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister inform the house when the Barber commission on farm machinery will report; and is the commission investigating the wide discrepancy reported to exist between the list prices of identical farm tractors in the United Kingdom and Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I have asked Dr. Barber for an interim report. In so far as the other specific inquiry is concerned, I can convey the interest of my hon. friend to the commission.

YUKON QUARTZ MINING ACT

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING BILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and ask him whether the bill to amend the Yukon Quartz Mining Act is ready for introduction, and if so when it is the intention of the government to introduce it? While the minister is answering perhaps he could say when he intends to table the Carr commission report, in view of the widespread distribution it has already received.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as far as the first part of the question is concerned, I hope to be able to introduce the bill on the Yukon mining resources very shortly. It is a fairly bulky bill consideration of which, we expect, will be completed soon, so that it can be tabled in the next few weeks. I apologize; I thought it could be tabled before, but it has been impossible for me to do so.

Now, for the second part of the question, I must say that the problem is one of French translation of the report. I expect that this will be completed shortly and that it can be tabled within a few weeks.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, on the Carr commission report. In view of the fact that the English version has received widespread public distribution, could the minister at least table that version for the benefit of members of the house?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of principle. With a view to helping out the members, I myself prepared a summary of the conclusions of the report and sent it to all the members. However, I feel that the reports should be tabled in both languages. When the French version of the report is ready, we will table both versions in the house. I shall do my utmost to have it done in the very near future.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF RAIL SERVICE, TORONTO-NEW YORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, but in his absence I shall direct it to the Minister without Portfolio. My question is, have steps been taken as yet to restore railway passenger service between the city of Toronto and the city of New York?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to look into that matter, but I really do not understand the reference to restoring rail service.

Mr. Nesbitt: The matter has been brought before the house on various occasions by myself. There is no railway passenger service between the city of New York and the city of Toronto. I thought since I have asked the question previously the minister, who has certain responsibilities in the field of transport, would probably be aware of it.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CONSIDERATION OF DRUG DISTRIBUTION AND PRICING PRACTICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can the minister tell us whether, as promised in his remarks of October 17 to be found at page 1511 of Hansard, the question of drug distribution and pricing practices was on the agenda of the recently convened federal-provincial conference?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): This was a closed conference, Mr. Speaker. My officials and those of the Department of National Health and Welfare did outline to provincial officials our plans with regard to our program to try to reduce drug prices. I do intend, as I outlined in those remarks to which the hon. member referred, at a later date after Bill No. C-102 has been dealt with in this house, to meet with provincial officials and authorities with specific reference to distribution at the retail level.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will he advise the house when he will bring forth the white paper on prices and costs which was promised the house some time ago?

Mr. Basford: I intend to have something to say in this regard tomorrow during the course of the budget debate.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It arises out of a speech the minister gave to a seminar of the Montreal board of trade at which he outlined in some detail the government's plans with regard to an overhaul of the present corporation laws. Will the minister tell the house when we may expect to hear his statement on this matter so this house may be in the same position as the Montreal board of trade?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member must admit that is not a supplementary question. It may be related, but in any event he cannot ask a question in those terms relating to statements made outside the house.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPORTED INSTRUCTION IN RIOT TECHNIQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We were recently informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's Indian magazine that our Canadian Indians are being taught riot techniques. Will the minister advise the house what action he is taking in this regard?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice. I will answer the hon. member tomorrow or Tuesday.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONSIDERATION OF COMMITTEE REPORT RESPECTING PENSIONS OF SUPERANNUATED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Prime Minister, or the Minister of Finance, or the government house leader. In view of the addition of the strong voice of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) to those pleading for an increase in the pensions of retired civil servants, and in view of the many references that are made to the report of the joint committee tabled on May 8, 1967, will the government provide an opportunity for the house to concur in that report so it will be aware of the support of this house for its recommendations.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to my previous answers to this question. In any case, I think there would be a technical difficulty in having the house concur in a report of this committee to a previous parliament.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct my supplementary question to the government house leader. I can assure him that before I prepared my question I studied my procedure. I am asking him whether he will consider providing time for the house to consider the report that was tabled last year, so the house may express its opinion on that report.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the answer given by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether increases of pensions for retired civil servants are still under consideration.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to add to the answer I gave my hon. friend a week or so ago.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

PROPOSED CENTRALIZATION OF ATLANTIC REGION PEOPLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister who ultimately will be responsible for regional development. In view of the cultural and economic euthanasia resulting from the government's centralization of the people of the Atlantic region, can the minister say whether this centralization is based on economic and sociological studies?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the question asked by the hon. member is too wide in scope, and ought to be answered by way of a general statement.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement by the Minister of Fisheries that the population of the Atlantic region is to be mobilized and moved to more productive areas, so to speak, could the question not be answered?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to make a speech.

Mr. Speaker: This is what I am afraid of. The hon. member must realize that this type of question can only be answered by a lengthy statement, and that would give rise to the legitimate opposition and objection of hon. members on both sides of the house. That is why I think his question ought not to be asked at this time, and ought not to be answered.

Mr. Lundrigan: Then may I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. Is there any truth in statements coming from colleagues of the minister that people of the Atlantic region are to be centralized in a suburban region outside Toronto?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that question is out of order.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR BEETS—PHASING OUT OF SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of Agriculture. He said it would be safe to assume that he could give a more detailed reply tomorrow, that being today. I wonder if we may hear that reply.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): With regard to the inquiry of the hon. member yesterday about transitional adjustment grants to Ontario sugar beet growers, I have been advised that it will be necessary for us to request approval of parliament for the provision of the necessary funds to make these payments. It is our intention to bring forward a supplementary estimate for this purpose at the first opportunity, as soon as the calculations are finished.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROPOSED JOINT COMMITTEE AND INDEPENDENT AGENCY TO STUDY ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has now reached a decision regarding the repeated recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada that the government ought to establish a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on economic affairs and also an independent agency on economic studies.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have given consideration to this and feel there is nothing to be gained by setting up a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate. The House of Commons determines its own procedures and it can, in its present economic committees, hear witnesses who are members of the economic council and thus achieve the same end. We feel therefore it is not necessary to set up such a joint committee.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister answer the second part of my question, which relates to the recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada that an independent institute should be established for economic studies?

Mr. Trudeau: I beg your pardon. An independent what?

Mr. Stanfield: That an independent institute for economic studies ought to be established. That explicit recommendation has been contained in successive reports of the Economic Council of Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition knows, we announced in the speech from the throne that there will be consideration given to setting up an institute for domestic studies, that is domestic research on administrative problems in Canada. This project is being advanced and I will be announcing later in the day the nomination of a man from the private sector of the economy to advise us of ways we might approach such an institute. But on the other aspect of the question, we are not proceeding.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, might I ask the government house leader to advise us of the government intentions with regard to next week's program?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Today, tomorrow and next Tuesday, November 12, we will continue with the remaining days of the budget debate, so long as the debate continues. If it should not run its allotted time we would then deal with the budget resolution. As hon. members know on Monday, November 11, the house will not be sitting. On Wednesday we would call third reading of Bill C-124, with respect to the financing of the Canadian National Railways, being item No. 24 on today's order paper. After that has been dealt with we will call the resolution preceding the bill to establish a freshwater fish marketing corporation, which is item No. 30 on today's order paper. It would not be the government's intention to proceed with that bill at this stage of the session beyond the resolution stage, but we shall be calling it for the purpose of enabling the resolution to pass so the bill could be made available for study by those interested in its proposals.

On Thursday next we shall proceed to the budget resolutions, and in dealing with those resolutions we would commence with that amending the Customs Tariff and then follow with the others. On Friday next we will call committee of supply.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the government house leader. Can he say when the government will be in a position to bring in legislation dealing with the fisheries price support board?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We will be dealing with that but I cannot advise the hon. member when. Certainly it will not be within the next week.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, November 6, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (page 2262).

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, a colleague in my party has described this budget as a colossal fraud which has the full support and blessing of the chamber of commerce. I wish to underline that statement. The Minister of Finance has taken an approach that is typical of an accountant. It is obvious that he is more interested in figures and balances than in people, human problems and human resources.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The best example of this is the imposition of the 2 per cent social development tax with an upper limit of $120, which indicates the minister's concern for the upper income group compared with the majority of Canadians. The speech of the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) last evening indicated his concern about the decision of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to lessen the impact of this tax on the middle and upper income groups. In this connection I recall the statement made recently by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in Halifax to the effect that he intends to reduce the amount of income tax payable by those in the higher income brackets. He attempted to show that people in the higher income groups already pay tax at the rate of 80 per cent and that it would be unfair to impose an additional 2 per cent tax without modification.

The approach taken by this government is a simple one. It is its duty, it says, to raise taxes in order to pay for government expenditure, and since the government has increased its spending, which may have contributed to inflation, the best thing it can do is to impose taxes and create a slack in the economy. It calls this taking the fire out of inflation.

We have taken the position that there is nothing sacrosanct about balanced budgets. I recall that the late President Kennedy used deficit financing in the early sixties to get the United States economy out of the doldrums. We believe that balanced budgets are not the answer to the problems which face Canada today. The action taken by the Minister of Finance was taken in the face of a report which according to the minister's own economic white paper, showed that the rise in prices reached a peak in 1966, declined a little in 1967, and declined further in the first half of 1968. For example, there was a 4.5 per cent rise in prices in 1966, a 3.9 per cent rise in 1967 and a 3.3 per cent rise in the first half of 1968 compared with the first half of 1967.

Thus, contrary to the inflation psychosis of the Minister of Finance and the chamber of commerce, the rate at which prices have been rising has moderated over the last year and a half.

It is clear that the minister, without stating any specific policies, has opted for price stability to the detriment of full employment. The minister shows no concern for the 500,000 or more unemployed in Canada. It is true that full employment is an elastic concept and one to be achieved at the risk of some price inflation and some marginal trade-off of one for the other. But for obvious social reasons most Canadians prefer to accept a little inflation in order to obtain the full employment of men and resources, putting us in a better position to assist those groups which are most seriously affected by the rise in the cost of living, for example, pensioners, the old and the handicapped. The budget does nothing to obtain full employment or to assist the poor and elderly people of Canada.

We in the New Democratic party put people first, and this is why we would direct the economy to the attainment of full employment and increased productivity. By attaining these goals we can fulfil the basic needs of all groups in society and give people a pride and dignity worthy of achievement. This is why we in the New Democratic party support the principles and proposals set forth in the report of the Carter Commission. We do so because of the tax equity which would be achieved by following those recommendations. And this is why our monetary policies would be directed to full employment. Again, it is with this in mind that we have advocated a prices review board to prevent unwarranted and unjustified price increases such as are being imposed on Canadians today.

Tinkering with the economy by making the insurance companies pay their fair share of taxes, by making the banks, mortgage lenders and institutional lenders reduce their tax deductible reserves from 3 per cent to 1½ per cent and by making the corporations accelerate their tax payments, as the government proposes, are steps in the right direction. But the refusal of the government to use fiscal and monetary policies in order to obtain the goals set out by the Economic Council of Canada, namely, full employment, a high rate of economic growth, and the equitable distribution of rising incomes, makes this a disappointing and disheartening approach to the so-called just society, especially when it is coupled with the almost total rejection of the proposals of the Carter commission on taxation and complete lack of attention to the Watkins report on foreign ownership in Canada. I am reminded of a saying which is going the rounds in the cocktail circle today when people discuss political matters. Many people are saying: Don't blame me; I didn't put him in. This is an attitude which is quickly developing among Canadians today.

I should like to address the main burden of my remarks to Canada's most serious social problem today, the crisis in housing. There was no reference to this serious subject in the Speech from the Throne, and the only reference to housing conditions in Canada in the minister's budget statement was to the effect that the capital budget of the C.M.H.C. next year would reflect the conclusions of the government after it had received the views of the special task force on housing. Mr. Speaker, this travelling circus called a task force should be summoned home at once. It should be made to present an interim report and the government should act on that interim report immediately. To wait until the task force makes a final report will mean that no action can be taken until spring. In this connection I think we heed the slogan which the minister of labour used in his advertisements: Don't wait 'til spring, do it now!

The federal government must accept the major blame for the housing crisis in Canada today. The economic council in its fourth annual report placed emphasis on the shortage of housing and recommended an annual target of 200,000 homes a year—190,000 new homes and 10,000 replacements for older homes. This figure does not take account of the shortfall in housing during previous years as evidenced by the number provided—165,000 in 1965, 134,000 in 1966 and 160,000 in 1967. Looking at these figures one can understand the shortage of housing which Canada is experiencing today.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who is in charge of housing, proudly boasted in September that housing starts would reach a seasonally adjusted rate of 187,000 units based on the housing statistics of C.M.H.C. in its monthly supplement for August. However, the September supplement indicated a seasonally adjusted rate of only 155,000 housing starts, and the Minister of Transport then had to draw $170 million from the capital moneys allocated by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for public, low rental and senior citizens housing to finance direct loans and loans on condominium housing to increase the housing stock. This action by the minister indicates the failure of the government to take a leadership role in solving Canada's housing crisis.

Why has there been a housing crisis, Mr. Speaker? Why is there a shortage of housing and why are homes so expensive? The shortage in housing has been caused because this nation has not made up its mind that it wants decent housing for all its citizens. Housing should be regarded as a right and not a privilege, in the same way as we regard education. If we regarded education in the same way as we regard housing the majority of Canadian children would have a hard time getting inside a classroom.

We have also regarded housing with an almost complete dependence on private enterprise and the rules of private profit. This is why only 65 per cent of the people in Canada can take care of themselves in the matter of housing accommodation.

The solution lies in some form of social housing that is not for the benefit of investors, for the regulation of the economy, or for the purpose of making profit, but which has no other purpose than to provide homes for people. It is obvious that probably about 35 per cent of our people cannot go it alone in housing. That is why, if we had 20 per cent of our housing starts in some form of public housing and about 15 per cent in some form of co-operative housing, we would probably be the best housed people in the world. Of the 164,000 homes that were built last year only 10,000 were public and co-operative units.

The philosophy of the government, as reflected in C.M.H.C., has been a policy of letting the private institutions, the private lenders, take care of most of the home building. The corporation assumes the responsibility of providing the moneys for public and low income housing. C.M.H.C. set aside $500 million to take care of this sector but just last month we found out that these moneys were not taken up for public and low income housing and in fact the minister had to transfer $170 million out of this fund to initiate more homes and housing starts. This indicates that the policy of having the private institutions provide the money for private homes and having the government take the responsibility for public and low cost housing has not succeeded.

Why are homes so expensive, Mr. Speaker? The two main reasons are the high cost of land and the high interest rates. The cost of land has reached prohibitive prices. In the city of Toronto the average lot ranges between $8,000 and $10,000, and this is indicative of the high price of land throughout the country. In the city of Toronto the average cost of a home is between $29,000 and $30,000. One wonders why the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) would publish a booklet indicating that the cost of homes in Canada averages $19,000 for a new home and $12,000 for an old home. I would like to ask the Minister of Transport how immigrants in Toronto, or in fact any other person, could buy homes at those prices?

Interest rates are the highest in the history of Canada—8¾ per cent on N.H.A. loans and 9 to 9½ per cent on conventional loans. At these rates most Canadians cannot afford the high cost of mortgages. In fact, an $18,000 mortgage at the conventional rate of 9 per cent works out at approximately $50,000 over a 25-year period.

What is the short term answer to the housing crisis? I feel certain that the Minister of Transport knows the answer. It is not necessary to await the report of the task force on housing. In the Minister of Transport we have a man who has had wide experience in housing. In fact he became a millionaire as a result of his enterprises in housing. We have in him a man of concern. I am sure he is very anxious to solve Canada's housing problems, and I feel doubly certain he could take immediate action right now.

No speech should be completely destructive, Mr. Speaker. We in the New Democratic Party tend to be more constructive than destructive. This is why I am going to suggest certain answers to the housing problem which the Minister of Transport could adopt immediately.

First, the sum of $1½ billion should be set aside in the capital budget of C.M.H.C. to increase the stock of public, low rental, co-operative and senior citizens housing units and to provide subsidies to certain projects. This compares with the $500 million that was set aside by C.M.H.C. We need a massive infusion of money to take care of this problem if our goal is to have 20 per cent of our program directed to public and co-operative units.

Second would be a federal plan or target of 250,000 housing starts in 1969, made up of a mix of 65 per cent private family housing, 25 per cent public, low rental and senior citizens homes, and 10 per cent co-operative housing and shell housing. The figure of 250,000 is 50,000 over the number projected by the Economic Council of Canada. When we take into account the shortfall of housing that we have had in the last few years 250,000 would only begin to take care of the present shortage.

Third, there should be an amendment to section 35A of the National Housing Act, which contains the provisions with regard to public housing. The capital costs of land acquisition and construction of housing should be changed from the present governing formula of 75-25 per cent to 90-10 per cent.

The best illustration I can give in this respect is the report from C.M.H.C. within the last few days that the city of Brandon has embarked on the purchase of land, to the amount of $400,000, in co-operation with C.M.H.C. On the basis of the present formula the federal government will pay 75 per cent of the cost of acquisition of land and the city of Brandon 25 per cent. That city is fortunate to be able to meet 25 per cent of the cost of land acquisition.

Last year the federal-provincial conference on housing recommended, in particular the provincial representatives, that the formula be changed from 75-25 per cent to 90-10 per cent. This would mean that the operating costs for these public housing projects should also be changed from the present formula of 75-25 per cent to 90-10 per cent. When one thinks of the burden municipalities bear with regard to these public housing projects in having to provide schools, fire and recreational facilities, it would not seem to be too much to ask that the federal government contribute 90 per cent of the operating costs of public housing in Canada. This is known as the cost sharing formula under section 35(e) of the National Housing Act. Subsidies in respect of low income rentals should be changed from the present 50-50 relationship to a subsidy tied in with the income of the tenants. Again this is one of the recommendations of the provincial representatives at the federal-provincial conference on housing last year.

As a fourth recommendation we would ask that the government, if necessary by amendment to the Bank Act and the Insurance Act, direct the investment of private capital to meet the shortage of private family units. The reason we ask this is that the experience of the Minister of Transport is that the insurance companies are not playing their full role in lending money to solve the housing crisis in Canada. In the month of August he summoned to Ottawa representatives of the banking and insurance institutions and pleaded with them to put more money into housing. He also spoke to them about condominium housing. The answer by the banks and insurance companies was that this field had not been tested and therefore they were not prepared to invest in it. This has resulted in the Minister of Transport having to use part of the $170 million to finance condominium housing in Canada. Condominium housing provides part of the answer to the crisis because it not only creates more housing units but also gives the people an opportunity to have ownership in an apartment building and a share in all the other facilities. Many people who rent apartments and who pay high prices for them have no feeling about them and no right of ownership in the building.

Fifth, we ask the government to establish immediately a land bank for the acquisition by the federal, provincial and municipal governments of land and for the provision of services. There is nothing new about this; the city of Toronto and many other cities now purchase lands for industrial purposes. By so doing they get the money back in the form of taxes at a later date. I should like to see the immediate establishment of a land bank so that the provincial and federal governments could participate in land acquisition.

As I look across the way I think of the hon. member who represents one of the Yorks and who is a former mayor of the city of Toronto. I also think of the hon. gentleman from Davenport who at present is a councillor of the city of Toronto. If these gentlemen were to take an active role with the city of Toronto to have the city acquire land in co-operation with the federal government, then the Toronto Daily Star could not criticize the members from Toronto for their lack of initiative and lack of ideas concerning the housing shortage in Toronto.

In order to reduce the high cost of homes we also ask that the government implement the recommendation of the Carter report with regard to imposing a capital gains tax on real estate speculation. This has been needed for many months. When one thinks of the profits that are creamed off by the speculators, is it any wonder that people are becoming annoyed at the lazy attitude of the government with regard to implementing a capital gains tax? I was most happy when the hon. member for Scarborough East scorched his government and urged it to impose a form of capital gains tax.

The next recommendation is that the interest rate be fixed at 6 per cent. We should realize that the interest rates are determined by the flow of money. Many spokesmen on behalf of the government say that we cannot fix interest rates at 6 per cent because it is necessary to go to the market to borrow money and that in this regard it is necessary to go to the United States. I should like the Minister of Transport to tell the house how much money we get from the United States for the construction of homes in Canada. We get very little. The flow of money is determined by the lending institutions. They hold back until they can obtain the highest interest rate possible. They also invest in luxury apartments and shopping centres to the detriment of public and private housing in Canada.

It has been suggested many times that a further recommendation should be the removal of the federal sales tax of 11 per cent on building materials. We in the New Democratic party would add the stipulation that the removal of the federal sales tax should apply only to homes costing less than $25,000. It could also be suggested that this might be connected with the idea used in the province of British Columbia where they use their sales tax as part of the down payment by a purchaser of a new home. It is very easy to assess the amount of sales tax that goes into a building. The combined provincial and federal grants would provide many Canadians, especially young people, with the required down payment for a new home today.

We would also recommend the imposition of rent controls where a city or town requests rent controls. In Ottawa the board of control passed a resolution that rent control be imposed in the city. There has been no action in this regard by the provincial government. No assistance has been given by the federal government. The federal government has had wide experience in implementing rent controls. Yesterday we heard the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Brown) recommend that rent controls be imposed in Brantford. I ask that rent controls be implemented with regard to Toronto. Toronto has one of the highest rental rates in Canada. There the landlords through associations agree among themselves on the rents they will apply to their apartments while the tenants are left to the four winds of heaven in negotiating with the landlords. It is high time the city of Toronto, with the assistance of the federal government, imposed rent controls.

The problem of implementing a national building code is very important because if housing is to get off the ground there is need for such a code to cut through the red tape that prevents many municipalities embarking on a housing program.

These are the short term recommendations of the New Democratic party. We have long term proposals with regard to satellite towns, transportation problems, the location of industry, recreational facilities, land use control and the ever present problem of pollution. I recommend that the task force on housing direct its attention to these long term problems and that the government take action on the short term.

Canadians are demanding action on housing now. Two weeks ago I attended a conference on housing sponsored by the Canadian Welfare Council at which 550 representatives from across the country expressed a concern about housing that can only be met by action. Perhaps the Minister of Transport should adopt the dictum of the late President Kennedy and think of what we as Canadians can give to Canada rather than what we as Canadians can take from our country. The minister has taken from Canada the privilege of becoming a millionaire—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Gilbert: I have just one more sentence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gilbert: My sentence is this. The late President Kennedy said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. There is not unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, Jean Rostand said that one should neither be respectful of old errors nor get tired of old truths. If one applies this French saying to the budget presented a week ago by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), one must admit that the same old errors endure and that some are afraid to face the economic truth.

Mr. Speaker, before coming to the heart of the matter, I should like to draw the attention of the house on the answer I received to question No. 513 I put on the order paper some time ago, and which reads as follows:

For the period October 10 to 15, 1968, inclusive, how much time was alloted by the CBC to (a) the Parti Québécois (b) the Ralliement Créditiste, during information programs and during free programs?

The period October 10 to 15 is the one during which the Parti Québécois held its convention in Quebec City while the Ralliement Créditiste was holding one in Sherbrooke.

Now, a Montreal newspaper, the Journal de Montréal—it is its name—wrote that we got twice as much broadcasting time as the Parti Québécois, while gathering five times fewer people; I do not know what inspired journalist of his Montreal newspaper.

An hon. Member: It is Gilles Grégoire.

Mr. Caouette: It may be Gilles Grégoire; I do not know.

At all events, I have before me the answer given by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) who informs me that the Parti Québécois got approximately five hours and forty-one minutes on the French networks—not only forty minutes, but five hours and forty-one minutes—and approximately three hours and five minutes on the English networks.

The Ralliement Créditiste, which held its convention in Sherbrooke at the same time, was given about one and a half hours on the C.B.C. French network, or four hours and eleven minutes less than the Lévesque group. We were given about seven minutes on the English network, as compared to the three hours and five minutes given to the Parti Québécois. In other words, the Parti Québécois was given three hours more than we were, in order to make itself known.

Mr. Speaker, I see nothing wrong with the C.B.C. giving five hours and again three hours and five minutes of broadcasting time to the Parti Québécois. But I do object to the fact that it only gave one hour and thirty minutes on the French network and seven minutes on the English network to the Ralliement Créditiste, a national movement with 14 representatives in the House of Commons. Our members are here this afternoon. They won their seats fairly, and the C.B.C. does not seem to take this fact into account.

It is said that Mr. Lévesque's Parti Québécois is new. And so, we spend millions of dollars in order to practice partisanship in the backrooms and perhaps in the offices of the C.B.C., a crown corporation which asks us to vote fabulous sums each year to maintain its impartial services for the benefit of the population.

Mr. Speaker, I have said for some years now and I will repeat that there exists notorious discrimination in the C.B.C. and the authorities should see to it that the situation is rectified. I repeat that we have no objection to periods of time being allotted, but we must not forget that they are paid by all the Canadian citizens. We French Canadians pay our share just like English Canadians, and at our national convention, where there were representatives from four Canadian provinces, the C.B.C. granted us one hour and thirty minutes on the French network, and seven minutes on the English. That is discrimination.

I wanted to discuss the matter in the house this afternoon, to call the attention of C.B.C. authorities on those conditions. The C.B.C. officials do not support us, but we do support them and these people—as I have said and repeated on several occasions—like to encourage those who want to destroy Canada instead of stating, in all fairness, the situation and position of those who aspire to comprehension and mutual understanding in Canada. I note that the C.B.C. is not only destroying national unity but the whole foundations of Canada.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Caouette: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pelletier: I wish to ask him a question and I am not trying to contradict him. I would like to know if, according to him, the following view should be taken into account, to wit, that news are important or are not, whether they are good or bad, but that there are some criteria to judge the importance of news or events. Such is the meaning of my question to the hon. member.

Since one case dealt with the creation of a new party and the other with a routine meeting of an existing party, would the hon. member take such facts into consideration in his representations?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I will say yes to the Secretary of State. However, if we consider the past actions of the C.B.C., we can ask ourselves why it did not do the same when the Ralliement créditiste was founded, for example. Was it not a new party? Why did the C.B.C. ignore the fact that, six months before the convention of the Ralliement Créditiste, we phoned their officials from my office to tell them that some delegates from all the provinces were expected in Sherbrooke in order to expand our structures. It was something new, was it not, but the C.B.C. did not take that into account. How much time have we been granted by the C.B.C. when the Ralliement Créditiste was founded? Just about fifteen minutes in Quebec. Under these circumstances, I say that the C.B.C. is practising discrimination.

Although I did say that I do not object to Mr. Lévesque's movement being granted some television time, we had heard about his new party for the last six months. Incidentally, over the past six months, the Secretary of State had almost every evening seen Mr. Lévesque on both the French and the English networks of the C.B.C.

At the time of the amalgamation of Mr. Lévesque's and Mr. Grégoire's groups, it was reported that few Créditistes from the other provinces were present at the Sherbrooke convention. Did the Secretary of State not read in the newspapers and hear that, on the occasion of the founding of the Parti Québécois, there were only 70 members of the Grégoire group attending? Why then is the C.B.C. treating the Ralliement Créditiste differently from the Lévesque separatist movement? The Secretary of State is aware of this situation. This is discrimination.

Again, I repeat that I do not object to the covering of conventions. In the case of Lévesque, the C.B.C had three cameras, one in colour, circulating around the hall of the small Quebec Coliseum that were accompanied by a crowd of C.B.C. employees. Who is paying for it? Everybody. I submit to the Secretary of State that this is not helping Canada nor is it contributing to national unity to see constantly on TV people who are aiming at the destruction of Canada instead of trying to unite it.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: It is all very well to report news, but it should not take three hours or five hours and fifty one minutes. At one time, it lasted three hours and five minutes in English.

I will now leave that subject, but I want to remind the Secretary of State, who is now in the house, that he is the minister responsible for the C.BC., and it is not the C.B.C. which is responsible to the Secretary of State.

When I appealed to the Secretary of State, he answered somewhat on the same lines as a while ago: Does the member not accept the fact that an event may be considered by C.B.C. experts as suitable for producing a program? The experts, they are the ones who decide whether it is logical not that mention be made of the founding of a new party—that is only logical—but I do not think that millions of dollars of our tax money should be spent by the C.B.C. for the sole pleasure of having our mind poisoned through our national television and radio network.

Mr. Speaker, I think things will change one day, and that more importance will be given to those who advocate understanding and cooperation between the various elements in Canada rather than to those who only seek to divide, destroy, break up and crush, as is now the case.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some remarks on another point, which does not concern the Secretary of State and on which I would like to draw the attention of the government. It is about the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, another federal agency. I wish to point out that there also, there is discrimination against the province of Quebec.

We made a great many requests. There are at the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation people who spare no trouble in order to study every request and give an answer.

However, let us take question No. 427 which I put on the order paper and which reads as follows:

1. How many loans were requested from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, by province during 1967?

How many loans were subsequently granted in each province?

What is the total amount, for each province, of the loans thus granted?

Mr. Speaker, although the other provinces filed some applications, I will only speak about Quebec and Ontario, the two neighbouring and largest provinces of Canada.

Quebec filed 11,108 applications and Ontario 10,274. Loans granted by the C.M.H.C. amounted to 8,149 in Quebec to 9,653 in Ontario, that is a difference of about 500 additional loans granted to Ontario. But this is not the point.

The amount of those loans was $148,619,000 for Quebec compared with $301,725,000 for Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I do not object, because loans amounting to $300 million have been granted to Ontario. However, I object, because it is so difficult in Quebec to have loans approved by the C.M.H.C.

When assessments are asked, not much enthusiasm is shown. When a large loan is asked in Quebec, there is a certain hesitation, while in Ontario the amount of the loans are twice higher than in Quebec.

I am therefore drawing the attention of the minister responsible for the C.M.H.C. on that situation, so that the officials may be advised to be slightly more tolerant and speedy when loans of the corporation are to be granted in the province of Quebec. I do not ask that Quebecers be favoured to the detriment of others, but that they be treated on the same footing as the people of other provinces, especially Ontario.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I should now like to talk about the part of the budget dealing with social development.

Nowadays, when the government invents a new tax, it does not call it a federal tax, but a social development tax. It sounds better. People complain a bit at first, but they soon become accustomed to it.

That is what I tried to illustrate when I told the house one day about the reactions of a frog. When a frog is thrown into a pail of boiling water, it cannot stand the heat and tries to jump out. You have to be canny and put the frog in a pail of cold water, then slowly allow the water to come to the boiling point. The frog, by that time, is so used to the temperature that it is completely cooked and does not even have time to think of jumping out of the boiling water. The same goes for the Canadian people.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, a letter from a labourer living in Drummondville. Any labourer could have written the same thing and there are many more across the country who share the same opinion. This letter is addressed to the right honourable Prime Minister, Parliament of Canada, Ottawa and it is dated October 25, 1968. This man is not afraid to sign his name: A. Lafontaine, 570, 105th avenue, Drummondville. This is in the constituency of the hon. Minister of Industry and Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). I quote.

I am writing about this new so-called "social development" 2 per cent tax. I was deeply interested in your election campaign and I had thought that a newly elected government would endeavour to straighten out the injustices that have prevailed for a number of years in the income tax system.

I am referring in particular to the income tax rates affecting those families with dependants, where there is only one wage-earner. At present, my monthly salary is $440 and I have been an employee of the Canadian Pacific for 20 years. Nevertheless, sometime within the next three months, I will have to move to another locality that is unknown to me at the present time, because of technological changes by the Canadian Pacific (CSC) with the approval of the Transport Commission—

I do not know where he is moving.

This amounts to saying that this year, besides disruption in my work, your government is putting another 2 per cent increase in my income tax, which means I will have to pay $44 more. It would appear that in my case and that of others—

Every working man.

—we are a cause of inflation in the country. Did you or your Mr. Benson ever figure out the minimum of money required to raise and educate three growing children? And how about the money left over at the end of the year after earning an inflationary monthly salary of $440? The answer to this is that for some years my savings amount to a large ZERO even with driving to work in a 1959 Volkswagen.

Can you explain how the so-called experts in your government arrive at the conclusion that I am a cause of inflation across the country, as I can hardly make ends meet, and that a limit of $120 should be established on all earnings, whatever may be the amount, in the case of the additional 2 per cent tax.

Mr. Prime Minister, is this your "just society" and is it in agreement with the Carter commission report?

Mr. Trudeau, I would like you to refer to Le Devoir of October 23, 1968, on page 15, where it is reported that Imperial Oil has realized net profits of $70 million over nine months.

Kindly let me know what surtax those corporations will have to pay. And why I am, at $440 per month, a cause of inflation in this country, and why should I pay a surtax?

Thanks for having read me.

I do not know whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has read this letter, but I read it to the house to make sure that people would know. All Quebec workers could write the same thing.

During the election campaign, the right hon. Prime Minister said nothing about increasing the taxes of Canadians. No minister ever mentioned that taxes would be increased. In addition, the Prime Minister always said that in the achievement of a just society in Canada, there would be no tax increases.

Mr. Speaker, social development means, first of all, that an attempt will be made to decrease, or avoid, or eliminate the estimated deficit of $675 million, and here I should like to point out to the house that the interest on the national debt, for this year only, will cost $1.5 billion, that means $75 per citizen. That means that a family of five, husband and wife and three children, will pay $375 in interest on the national debt.

That is why we ask the government to change not only its tax policy, but the fundamental policy, the financial policy.

The financial system is wrong. It is a system of indebtedness and this year, the government carved into the interest on the debt. Do you know that if we did not have to pay that interest, there would be a surplus of almost $1 billion, instead of a deficit of $675 million? When we suggest that the government use the services of the Bank of Canada to finance the development of our natural resources, when we suggest that on the national, provincial, municipal and school levels, everything be financed through the Bank of Canada, without interest, for periods of time varying according to the things that are being created or build, there are some who fear inflation.

Mr. Speaker, has anyone ever heard a Liberal or a Conservative member say, when the government goes to the United States to borrow $500 or $700 million that this is not Canadian money but American credit? It is not a question of American dollars or printed bills being sent to Canada. No. These are cheques sent to us by Americans, new figures entering Canada. In exchange, we have contracted obligations or undertaken to reimburse capital and interest after a certain time.

Did you ever consider that those amounts coming from the United States represent money newly created and as such responsible for inflation? No. We do not hear a single economist on the government side referring to inflation on that occasion. Neither do we hear a single economist on the opposition side referring to inflation when we are contracting debts in the United States. However, as soon as someone suggests resorting to the services of the Bank of Canada, at once inflation is mentioned. If the Bank of Canada should make available the same amount of credit, this would be inflation. When credit is made available in Canada, we speak of inflation, but it is not when we get it in the United States in order to bring it into Canada. And the national administration of this country is said to be intelligent. Yet, what is the role of the Bank of Canada? According to page 1032 of the 1965 Canada Year Book,

> The Bank may make loans or advances for periods not exceeding six months to chartered banks, or to banks to which the Quebec Savings Bank Act applies, on the pledge or hypothecation of certain classes of securities.

The Bank of Canada—

> —may make loans or advances on the pledge or hypothecation of readily marketable securities issued or guaranteed by Canada or any province to the Government of Canada or the government of any province for periods not exceeding six months. Other loans may be made to the Government of Canada or the government of any province in amounts not exceeding a fixed proportion of such government's revenue; such loans must be repaid before the end of the first quarter after the end of the fiscal year of the borrower.

We should never have amended the Bank Act last year in order to enable the banks to lend another $4 billion without having a single cent more in the reserves of the Bank of Canada.

Why did the government not suggest to amend this paragraph of the Bank of Canada Act by deleting the words "six months" so that the Bank of Canada could grant advances and loans to provinces, municipalities, school boards, to set up a branch of the Bank of Canada in each of the Canadian provinces, formally instructed to grant the necessary credit for the development of these provinces, municipalities and school boards. However, an inflationary danger would be involved. Then we say to Quebec: "Go and borrow in Washington, in France, anywhere in the world." And the same thing is said to Ontario. That is why—the Minister of Finance was made aware of this fact a few days ago—the provinces are dissatisfied with the central government. It is because of the monetary question, not the fiscal question. The taxation of the Minister of Finance is the crowning achievement of the tax system which is ours.

We levy taxes then we distribute them by paying the bureaucracy and all the Grits in the administration. We take away $10, we put back $8, and one considers oneself generous. Mr. Speaker, these are the facts.

Before my time expires, on behalf of the Ralliement Créditiste, seconded by the hon.

member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), I should like to move the following sub-amendment:

That the period following the word "country" be replaced by a comma and that the following words be included:
"and the House regrets that, in particular; 2% increase for income tax be imposed and moreover, that the Government had not made any provision to replace this income tax with a 20% discount on the retail prices, compensated by the Bank of Canada, in view to fight against the inflation and taxes, and restore the economy so that the production will attain its proper function: the consumer".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I must point out to the hon. member and to this House that, under our standing orders it is not permitted at this stage of the debate on the budget to move another subamendment. I ask the hon. members to refer to standing order No. 45 which reads as follows:

Only one amendment and one subamendment may be made to a motion for Mr. Speaker to leave the chair for the House to go into committee of supply or ways and means.

Therefore, I must declare this subamendment out of order.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, we will move the subamendment as an amendment if we have the opportunity, after others have spoken and the amendment is put to a vote this evening.

I therefore thank you for having enlightened us on this matter to which we will come back anyway.

Mr. Speaker, using the Bank of Canada in the public sector of the Canadian economy would be a reform, not only fiscal but monetary; it would be fundamental, and this is what we need. A while ago, I said the provinces were displeased with the offers made by Ottawa. Yes, because Ottawa has nothing to offer. Ottawa tells them: Go ahead and levy taxes. That is a good way of getting rid of someone.

Mr. Speaker, if the provinces are not satisfied, they will have to increase their taxes within their respective jurisdictions and we will witness tax increases at the provincial level. That will lead in turn to increases at the municipal level, at the school level, in short on every level.

Still, the Canadian people cannot pay more. They cannot pay more than now. I feel the time has come for the government to act according to the needs of the Canadian people if, economically speaking, it wants to save what we can save and achieve what we can achieve.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has now expired unless the house agrees to have him continue his remarks. Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is no unanimous agreement.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Trois-Rivières on a point of order.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I would not object to the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) continuing, as he is a party leader, provided he does not take another 30 or 45 minutes or even an hour, to the detriment of other members who will participate in the debate, which is limited. I have no objection to his continuing, not in the least.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. When I asked if there was unanimous agreement, I heard some "nos", unfortunately for the hon. member for Témiscamingue. That is why I recognized another member. Does the house wish to allow the hon. member for Témiscamingue to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Abitibi on a point of order.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to the attention of the house that, at the beginning of the debate on the budget, we agreed to let other members of the Conservative party as well as from the Liberal party to continue their remarks after the time allowed to them had expired. I want to let the house know that we will remember this in the future.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Lotbinière on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, to return to the unkind remarks of the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), I find that it is not at all boring when the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste (Mr. Caouette) speaks—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There are no grounds for a question of privilege.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Trois-Rivières on a question of privilege.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague to withdraw what he has just said. I do not think I said anything disrespectful about his leader; to the contrary, I said I agreed entirely to let him go on with his speech. Therefore, I think he did not mean what he said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is no question of privilege in either case.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I did not wish to interrupt again the member who has just spoken and what I want to say has nothing to do with whether he should be entitled to conclude his speech, but I would like to correct a fact.

The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) said that the C.B.C. was responsible to the Secretary of State and it is not true. If he studies the Broadcasting Act, he will realize that the C.B.C. is not responsible to the Secretary of State but to parliament.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that this speech has been worth waiting for because there seems to be a great deal of difficulty in proceeding with it. Apparently there are a few traditions here which I should follow, I suppose, one of which seems to have fallen into disuse. I refer to the practice of congratulating Your Honour on your elevation to your high office. I should like to join in those felicitations. Another tradition seems to be that of saying a few words in French. Unfortunately my mastery of that language is rather limited to "l'addition s'il vous plait" and such other phrases as permit me to get by in the restaurants of Montreal. I can only say that I shall count myself a failure if four years from now I cannot do better.

It is also, customary, I believe, on the occasion of one's maiden speech to eulogize one's riding, particularly if there is some hope of the home press printing the remarks verbatim and with approbation. Fortunately for all present, I can forgo that pleasant exercise since nothing I could say here, even though I were speaking from the treasury benches rather than this lofty perch, could significantly enhance the existing renown of the city of Calgary. We have our majestic mountains to the west, our rolling foothills and our prolific grain fields which cause so much heartburn to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). We also have clear running water or had, at least, until pollution. There is one aspect of our life which is unique and bears comment. I refer to the meteorological phenomenon known as the Chinook. This is an unseasonably hot west wind. Its visitations have been associated by the unscientific with sittings of the British Columbia legislature.

I feel I must also take this opportunity to set the record straight with regard to the speech in this house on October 24 by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). I must hasten to assure the house that I am not deliberately associating the hon. member and the unseasonably hot west winds. The proximity of the two subjects is purely coincidental. The comment, "You already have the facts", attributed to me at page 2016 of Hansard, and which was taken by the hon. member for Calgary North to have been made by me was, in fact, made by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) who sits immediately in front of me. I had considered asking that the record be corrected, but listening to the balance of the hon. member's speech made me realize that such correction would, in the eyes of posterity at least, destroy much of the cogency, pertinence and indeed beauty of his oratorical pyrotechnics. Since much of what is said by hon. members opposite is evidently for posterity, as it relates but little to the present, I decided, with characteristic charity, not to ask for a correction. I do hope, though, that future generations perusing the Hansard volumes in whose authorship we are all at present collaborating will not be so emotionally drained by the eloquence of the hon. member that all else seems anti-climatic and this correction is never noted.

Canada's petroleum industry, based in Calgary, is of vital importance to out country measured by any standard. It is at present subject to a number of very serious pressures which are giving rise to grave and legitimate concern in the industry.

One of the parameters relative to which the industry has operated since 1960 has been the national oil policy—a voluntary policy agreed to by the industry and sanctified by government. The basic provision is that petroleum products marketed west of the Ottawa river shall be manufactured from domestic crude oil, while products marketed east of the Ottawa river may be manufactured from imported crude oil. It is a voluntary policy enforced by persuasion by the National Energy Board. The board has no sanctions available if it is breached.

One of the pressures on the policy has been the recent expansion of refinery facilities east of the Ottawa at a rate far in excess of market requirements, coupled with a practical hiatus in refinery expansion west of the Ottawa. A second pressure has been the request of the United States oil administrators, disclosed on September 28, that United States importers of Canadian crude cut back their purchases during the last quarter of this year. There is apprehension that this cut-back may be extended into 1969.

A third pressure is the implication of the Prudhoe bay strike in Alaska. Bearing in mind recent policies enforced by the Securities and Exchange Commission in the United States relative to public companies, for example, the Texas Gulf Sulphur and Douglas Aircraft cases, it is probable that the extent of the Alaska discovery has been understated by the companies concerned. Nevertheless, the announcement indicates a discovery which could well be larger than east Texas, now the biggest field on this continent, and larger than present total reserves of all the known oil fields in Canada, excepting only the Athabasca tar sands.

The concern of our petroleum industry is real and it is well founded. It is, therefore, gratifying to note that clause 15 of the income tax resolution will assist significantly in eliminating the unfair competition implicit in certain prospective artificial crown corporation arrangements between provincial authorities and promoters. Clauses 13 and 14 will also be welcomed by everyone with a bona fide concern about the well-being of Canada, the Canadian petroleum industry, and the people employed in it.

The Alaska discovery gives rise to another matter which I would urge the government to regard as top priority. It is only a matter of hours, days, perhaps months but certainly not years, until a major oil strike will occur in the Canadian Arctic. The Canadian government will find itself, overnight, in the oil business in a very big way. By the very nature of the business initial decisions and policies will have very long range effects. It is imperative that they be right. Let us formulate these policies now. Let us formulate them in consultation with every element of the industry and not merely in consultation with the public service. The right hon. Prime Minister is on record as wanting to recruit talent from business and other environments for special assignments in government. This is an opportunity; indeed, I might suggest, a necessity.

A third consequence of the Prudhoe bay discovery is the necessity of transporting this oil to its markets in the United States. An all-United States routing would probably traverse by pipeline the Brooks range, which separates the north slope from the rest of Alaska, to the vicinity of Anchorage and then involve shipment by tanker to various ports on the Pacific Coast. In addition to extremely difficult construction problems through the Brooks range, this route offers serious seasonal shipping hazards in the north Pacific and a rather obvious strategic exposure. A more desirable all-pipeline route may be found along the Arctic shore to the Mackenzie delta and then south to connect with existing Canadian systems. The strategic and climatic problems would be eliminated by such a routing.

I would urge that the government actively press for the second routing; it is most desirable from the United States point of view and they should be prepared to pay a fair price for it, including elimination of present duties on Canadian crude oil, establishment of fair prorations of the Canadian and Alaskan crude to be transported through such system and a substantial Canadian share in its ownership.

Speaking in this debate a few days ago then hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Gillespie) read the following words from the study commissioned by the Toronto Stock Exchange on the supply of, and demand for, Canadian equities:

> The total average annual demand for additional equities in Canada in the immediate years ahead is likely to be almost double the supply provided through net new Canadian issues.

It has been proven in the case of Alberta Gas Trunk Line Company Limited, Great Canadian Oil Sands Company Limited and companies of this nature that Canadian investors wish to participate in the establishment of a Canadian route, I urge the government to give our investors an opportunity to participate.

From Canada's own point of view, the first alternative, the trans-Alaska line coupled with tanker shipment, does nothing to prepare for the marketing of our own anticipated Arctic production. The Arctic Coast-Mackenzie river route would provide a basic part of the system we will need some day soon in any case.

The rejection in the budget speech of the basic premise of the Carter report that "a buck is a buck is a buck" must be greeted with relief by all thinking Canadians. While acknowledging the desirability of further, even extensive, tax reforms we cannot afford the luxury of a tax system which, however appealing to the theorist, is totally incompatible with those of our trading partners in the free world.

As long as Canada finds it desirable to develop its resources and productive capacity at a rate faster than its own savings permit—and this is a situation likely to exist for the foreseeable future—Canada must maintain fiscal policies calculated to attract foreign investment. If we are to reduce the need for foreign investment in the foreseeable future while still providing a standard of living acceptable to Canadians we must maintain fiscal policies calculated to encourage the formation of investment capital within Canada. Carter ignored these realities; the budget accepts them.

The Company of Young Canadians is a controversial creation of parliament. It is probably the target of as many brickbats from editorial writers and provincial premiers as any federal agency. Yet it is a noble and, I submit, successful experiment. The Company of Young Canadians was created not to supplant existing social agencies but rather to catalyse social change. It is precisely for its success that it is criticized.

The community of Faust on Lesser Slave lake in northern Alberta is populated mainly by Métis, Indians, and white mink ranchers. There are five homes in the community with running water—the rectory, the school principal's home and three homes owned by mink ranchers. Various public agencies working in the community were at odds. For example, the school nurse and the public health nurse were engaged in a jurisdictional dispute over who was responsible for delousing the children. School children were missing as much as 20 per cent of their class time because they were lousy.

Volunteers of the Company of Young Canadians moved in among them and taught them to use the democratic processes available to them—taught them, in fact, that those democratic processes existed. The mink ranchers were furious. They called for withdrawal of the Company of Young Canadians. The full provincial cabinet met with representatives of the Métis and Indians. The Company of Young Canadians did not withdraw and there are now seven volunteers working in a number of communities on the lake. Today these people are benefiting from programs under ARDA and two provincial agencies, the human resources development commission and department of youth. There are still only five houses with running water, but the Indians and Métis see hope for change, and the louse count is down. All this was accomplished without disorder or riot, the frustration gap was bridged by the C.Y.C. and the Indians and Métis of the Lesser Slave Lake area are progressing via the democratic process.

The self-assertion of the Indians at Armstrong, Ontario, is another conspicuous success of the C.Y.C. Never mind the embarrassment occasioned to this government, the Ontario government, the Armstrong school board, or any other authority. These are irrelevant considerations. Think rather of what the Armstrong Indians are accomplishing for themselves. That is the test. The day the C.Y.C. stops embarrassing public authorities and stops jolting the status quo will be the day it will have exhausted its usefulness.

In my own riding there is a district known as Victoria Park. A C.Y.C. volunteer, Bernie Muzeen, worked for two years in the south half of this area. The results of his efforts and, more important, the attitudes which were cultivated among the residents, are a dramatic tribute to the work of the C.Y.C. Crossing 12th Avenue is, in some ways, like passing through Checkpoint Charlie. In the north part of the district blinds are down, the residents withdrawn and apathetic. In the south they are articulate and confident, ready to take on city hall. They will have a brief for the housing task force and any other instrument of authority which presents itself. Their community leaders are among the most effective in Calgary.

The C.Y.C. is to operate on a budget of $1.9 million, some 25 per cent less than its first budget. There are 16 people in its head office and 17 field supervisors. One hundred and eighty-five volunteers in seven of the ten provinces are engaged in 34 projects. These volunteers are living with the negroes of Halifax and the Indians on the tip of Vancouver Island, as well as the hippies of Yorkville.

These young people are fulfilling a vital function in our society—the function of bridging the gap existing between the mainstream of our society and some of its alienated elements. They are doing it for the munificent remuneration of $185 per month, found. And notwithstanding that meagre reward, applications are coming in from young people anxious to serve, at the rate of five a day. There are at present over 500 approved applications for service on file, but they cannot be activated because the company's budget will not permit expansion of its services.

The function of the C.Y.C. is to hook people up with society's mainstream, to show them that a useful democratic process exists and how to use it and then leave them alone to use it themselves. The measure of its success in a given project is the amount of ongoing community leadership it leaves behind. It is, within the limits we have permitted, attacking with success the same festering problem, the alienation gap, as is exploding into riot, pillage and tragedy in other parts of the free world. The government should give serious consideration to whether simply from a dollar and cents point of view the C.Y.C. should not, in fact, be more generously supported. It may very well find that a dime spent on preventive maintenance will save a dollar in repairs.

We are engaged in our regular quadrennial self-reproach at our lack of athletic prowess in international competition. We are also awaiting the report of a task force on amateur sport. We have again underwhelmed the world at the Olympics, trailing not only the obvious giants of international competition such as Russia and the U.S. but some of the less obvious such as Bulgaria and Kenya.

We are, as a nation, at the point where we must decide whether or not we really care. As a matter of fact, we have been at that point for several decades, and we have known it. As another matter of fact, it may not much matter whether we make the decision. Perhaps the exercise of self-reproach and embarrassment on a periodic basis is something to be preserved as character-building and in consequence we should continue to avoid the issue.

We do have some bona fide problems which many other nations do not share. For example, the climate in most parts of the country simply does not permit year-round training in many sports, particularly the track and field events which comprise such an important part of the summer Olympics program. This is not an insoluble problem. Many of the most outstanding American track and field performers come from the northern states. But, of course, they have fieldhouses—large, simple, hangar-like structures—usually with dirt floors where most outdoor activities can be continued in bad weather.

Today there are more than 60 universities and colleges in Canada. Only one, the University of Alberta at Edmonton, has a fieldhouse. That university also has the only full faculty of physical education in Canada. It may be a pure coincidence that the University of Alberta is currently national intercollegiate champion in both hockey and football. It may also be a pure coincidence that the University of Alberta is an institution very little troubled with student unrest. Then, again, it may not be.

Another problem is the very subsidiary position in which competitive sports are generally placed in our public school systems. I am prepared to admit that there may be conspicuous exceptions to this generalization, but it is largely true.

No program which starts working with athletes in their late teens will produce any significant number of medal winners. Such a program is bound to fail unless it is founded on a broad participation in competitive athletics at the elementary school level. Considering the other demands on our educational systems it is appropriate to inquire: what relative priority do we give athletics in terms not only of dollars but of time? From the point of view of national prestige, it should unquestionably be given a high priority. So the question really becomes: what priority should be given by Canadians to measures which will give each of us individually, and the nation as a whole, great pride and satisfaction?

One of the primary objectives of the Olympic movement is to substitute competition on the playing fields for competition on the battlefield. It is an objective in which we can readily concur. But can we expect the concurrence of persons immediately affected in the proposition that athletic facilities and participation be given a priority ranking with student parking facilities and participation in a good healthy riot?

I am tremendously impressed by the public statements recently made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) on the reorientation of programs within the purview of his department. A brief passage from his speech on October 24 to the national seminar on the planning and construction of health sciences centres merits repetition:

> This is the value basic to our way of life, that society exists to foster the growth of the individual person.

This is the end to which our policies must be directed. This is the objective which the C.Y.C. is helping to achieve in many areas. It is the end which achievement in international athletic competition would serve. It is also an objective which is becoming harder to achieve in an increasingly urban environment.

Calgarians share, sometimes to a greater and sometimes to a lesser extent, the problems of all the great cities of this country, this continent and, indeed, this planet. After all, while it is estimated that Calgary's population will reach a million by the turn of the century, Bombay's will reach 30 million. We share the good and the bad. New buildings are going up at a record rate, and so are traffic fatalities. The population which was responsible for the country's greatest relative participation in "Miles for Millions"—34,118 took part last Sunday and over $400,000 was earned—also contains the sick minds which on Hallowe'en hand out apples with razor blades inside, and licorice sticks with needles concealed in them. We also share much of the self-delusion to be found among Canadians. For instance, we have a beautiful neon sign over our airport which proclaims it as an international airport. But it is not an international airport at all.

The fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada, published just over a year ago, points up forcefully the inevitable trend to urbanization. It would not be useful to recite the report's conclusions. They boil down to increasing urban affluence, increasing urban population. It would be tragic not to recognize the report's implications. Within a generation four out of every five Canadians will live in a major city. This knowledge establishes the terms of reference within which all our major domestic problems, economic, social and constitutional, must be solved.

Within the next generation our cities will have to be rebuilt almost completely, twice as big and, I hope, twice as good. Within the next generation we will have to build and find the money for more new homes, business buildings and other urban facilities than we have built and paid for since Jacques Cartier set foot in Canada.

One of the greatest handicaps to the possibility of our successfully meeting this challenge is the very simple truth that we are on our own. We have no precedents because, unfortunately, no one alive today has ever experienced a really good city, a city that comes even close to measuring up to the potential of today's technology, a city, for example, whose busy streets are not clogged with parked and moving cars, whose air is fit to breathe, and whose water is fit to swim in.

The malaise of our cities could be cured a lot faster if the public could be given a better understanding, a clearer vision, of what kind of city to demand. We must close the communications gap between the planners whose eyes are fixed on the future and the public whose understanding is fixed in the past. What we need and what the government can give is a fresh vision of what tomorrow's city and tomorrow's city living can and should be. The announcement yesterday by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) of the establishment of an urban transportation and development unit in his department is an example of the things that can be done at this level to encourage this vision.

The challenge is not merely one of getting a necessary job done. By the end of the century our large city population will have doubled. Hence, one way or another we are going to have to build new cities and rebuild old ones. The real challenge is not whether but how we build. We may build well or we may build carelessly, but one way or another we will build.

I do not subscribe to the theory that Canada can solve all the world's problems. I do suggest that we can solve our own problems in a way that will serve as a worth-while example to the world.

Mr. Barney Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, since coming to parliament I have been engaged in numerous discussions concerning welfare problems. Like all members I have become involved in the problems of my constituents relating to inadequate, unjust, or seemingly unjust, treatment of welfare recipients. At the same time I have become increasingly aware of the enormous economic pressures on this and other levels of government, much of it due to the proliferation of welfare programs. Many, if not most, of these are good and necessary. Most were implemented to meet genuine needs. Some were simply election bait or sops to pressure groups. Many were well intentioned and well designed for their particular purpose and time. Times, however, have changed. The welfare needs of today are not the needs of a decade or more ago.

Our problems today are largely problems of affluence. We have developed a society where the luxuries of yesterday are the necessities of today. At the same time we are saddled with programs which provide services to those who do not require them, while at the same time inadequately serving those who need them desperately. And we are doing this voluntarily, at enormous cost and with tragic inefficiency. The bills are coming in for payment and the overdraft can be crippling—crippling to the taxpayer, crippling to the economy, and crippling to those in genuine need, particularly the physically handicapped and the aged, the aged without resources and those on fixed incomes. We cannot and dare not let this situation continue. It is both stupid and inhumane.

In seeking alternatives I cannot help but be attracted by what I choose to call a guaranteed incentive income. My initial instincts, Mr. Speaker, oppose a guaranteed annual wage. I have not found that things come easily in life and I believe it unrealistic to expect something for nothing. I consider it downright immoral to expect those willing to work to support those who will not.

On the other hand we do have an obligation to those who, for quite legitimate reasons, cannot support themselves. Because we, as Canadians, accept our obligations to this latter group we have built up a system of social welfare that is wasteful, inefficient, inconsistent, discourages initiative and is often demeaning. We have an ever-expanding bureaucracy and we end up, in many cases, paying money to those who do not need it, while frequently not adequately helping those who do.

It is apparent to me that our entire welfare system needs close examination and revision. In this process we should explore every approach, including the negative income tax which in effect is what some call a guaranteed minimum income or guaranteed annual wage. Properly structured it can save the taxpayers tens of millions of dollars. One recent estimate indicated the amount would be $200 million yearly in Canada today. This does not include the vast savings in administrative costs and the massive reduction in our bureaucracy.

At this juncture I should like to say that I am not criticizing the civil servants who form the bureaucracy, but the expanding bureaucracy itself. Since coming here I have gained a renewed respect for our public servants. There is a wealth of talented and dedicated men and women who do this nation proud and, incidentally, keep it operating on an ethical level unsurpassed anywhere. I am impressed and we should be grateful even if at times they speak in a jargon that is forcing many of the uninitiated to become trilingual rather than simply seeking the enrichment of bilingualism. Certainly there are exceptions, and the vast majority of skilled and devoted civil servants are the first to spot and acknowledge them, but the same applies to any big business and, unlikely as it may seem, to politicians. The same applies also to welfare recipients.

To get back to my basic theme, Mr. Speaker, I believe we should determine what income is necessary to provide the fundamental necessities of food, clothing and shelter. To this we should add the cost of health insurance and education, and enough discretionary money to maintain one's dignity. This would have to be scaled according to the size of the family unit.

Let us for now assume that for a married couple with two school age children this worked ut to $3,000 yearly or roughly $60 per week—hardly a princely sum. With an income of $3,000 they would not pay income tax. As the family produced additional income they would pay income tax on a graduated scale so that they would have the incentive to work and better their lot. This tax would therefore have to be quite small on the initial income increases. Should their income fall below $3,000 they would receive payments to make it up.

Certainly there will always be those who would be satisfied to live on the minimum income, just as there are those who are content to live off our existing welfare programs. These people are not unemployed but are kept busy running from office to office filling out forms in quadruplicate. The difference is that much of our present welfare discourages those who want to work and are capable of supplementing their income. In many cases it encourages people to lie and cheat, and requires a large force of civil servants to administer and police it.

With the negative income tax combined with the guaranteed base we could eliminate all or most of our existing systems—unemployment insurance, family allowances, old age pensions, mothers' allowances, rent subsidies and a myriad of other benefits available from federal, provincial, municipal and some private agencies. We would in effect eliminate the means test while actually making need the only criterion.

Of necessity this is an oversimplified version of the scheme. We would have to utilize our existing computer technology to react quickly to immediate needs. A man suddenly out of work cannot wait until tax time to get the money to feed and clothe his family. This might be done by interim loans repayable at tax time if his yearly income exceeds the base. This might be done also through special arrangements with our banks, with the government guaranteeing the loans. The base itself, and the tax on the income above it, would have to be sensitively gauged.

There is the further question of regional disparities in living costs, but under present federal schemes payments are equal in all parts of the country, as are federal taxes. Rather than present a problem, this scheme could solve many. Currently welfare recipients are inclined to relocate in the provinces or municipalities with the most generous welfare schemes, placing an undue burden on those jurisdictions and their taxpayers. If these people remained in their own localities they would create consumer markets in depressed areas which would then require business and industry to service them. This plan could help solve part of our problems in regional development and prevent the uprooting of family units.

With these potential advantages we should not reject the minimum income principle out of hand, while still exploring all other avenues. It could be the greatest true social and economic reform in our country's history. It could give greater equality, opportunity, prosperity and dignity, while at the same time saving taxpayers untold millions of dollars. In my view this might well be the ultimate rationalization of our present outdated welfare programs and it should be acceptable to the whole range of our political spectrum, as well as all levels of government.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I had intended to give a serious discourse on the report of the task force on the structure of Canadian industry, commonly known as the Watkins report. The subject is a serious one but it also is detailed and I have decided not to bore you or other hon. members with it at this time, not because it is unimportant—on the contrary, it is extremely important—but because I shall save it for another occasion, probably before the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. I put it aside at this time because of a 15½ year old girl named Deb Shallhorn from Markham, Ontario. Deb wrote to me because I am her member of parliament, not her father's member of parliament, not her mother's nor her neighbour's, but hers. She makes me proud to be so.

Deb had heard about the speech by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) in Montreal a week ago Monday in which he suggested the concept of a non-military draft as a way in which our youth can truly be part of this country and its future. This year she is going on a student exchange to Quebec, and that is great; but Deb is doing that for herself and I commend her for it. She also wants to do things for other people and for her country. Are we to deny her that opportunity? Deb's letter is typical of many letters I received prior to the Secretary of State's speech and reflects the response I have seen in the letters to the editor columns of newspapers across this country. It reflects the aspirations which were apparent by the participation of our youth in the June election—happy, enthusiastic, a little mad, but stimulating to us all.

If we dampen that spirit, that idealism, that outrageous and at the same time delightful naïvety, we will be doing a tragic disservice to all the Deb Shallhorns and their brothers across this land. If we overconcern ourselves with our problems and neglect them, if we neglect to look into their hearts and minds and fail to see the beauty and the truths that are their hopes, we will see their disillusionment, and even bitterness, that will not be without justification.

You might ask what this has to do with the budget. In my opinion it has a good deal to do with the budget because it will cost us money, not in expenditure but in investment. If we are able to achieve the basic welfare structure I have just outlined or, perhaps better, if we can determine our true national needs and national goals, the real ones, the ones that really count, we can go ahead with a spirit and purpose that befit this great nation, a nation we all love deeply and a nation which offers opportunities that make most of the world respectfully envious.

We sometimes become so preoccupied with our problems that we fail to see what we really have going for us. Certainly we have problems which we must attack immediately, intelligently and vigorously. But we will not solve them all, and when some are solved there will be new ones we never suspected, with or without computers, which would appear. But that is the way life is and it is not going to change. Without making light of these problems, let us also look at the bright side because it is just as real as the dark side, and much more hopeful.

I suspect, and my mail tends to confirm this, that is it not really taxes people are complaining about, but rather stupid taxing methods and stupid expenditures. If we tell people we intend to balance budgets and do not, or do not honestly explain the errors which we make because we happen to be human, they will not trust us. If we were to tell people that we intend to spend less, provide more services and lower taxes, we would be bigger fools than the few gullible people who would believe us.

On the other hand, if we do those things that, to a reasonable degree, fulfill the needs of our people and do those things that help fulfil the potential of this land and of the Canadian people, I am confident that the people will go along or, perhaps more accurately, join with us and pay their share, if not happily at least with understanding and even satisfaction. We should not do things to excite; we should do exciting things. We need not capture the imagination of others but should use our imagination to do imaginative things. If we do not do this, then we will be away behind the vast majority of Canadians, and light years behind our youth with whom we will never be able to communicate.

I should like to offer a challenge. It is a challenge to all the Deb Shallhorns across Canada. I want them to talk to their parents about a year's service to their country, or perhaps a series of three or four summers' service, not necessarily on a compulsory basis but even on a voluntary basis. It need not necessarily be on a non-military basis either, because I would think there might even be many young men who would want to spend part of their service in our armed services so that they could get some insight into the possibility of serving in what is our likely role, that of a peacekeeping nation, or perhaps in our coastguard or the R.C.M.P., all very challenging careers. I suggest that they talk to their parents and then write to me indicating that they have their parents' approval even though they know it will cost them more in taxes. I challenge their parents to explain what this means in cost and perhaps encourage their children to take paper routes, become baby sitters, or engage in any other job that will produce money which they must save in order to help their parents pay these extra taxes, because with opportunity goes responsibility. If they respond responsibly we will find ways to make certain that they will indeed have the opportunity, including the opportunity to have all the education they can absorb.

I tell these youth that if they do these things and if they and their parents write to me, I will go to the Secretary of State and to my Prime Minister and fight for these things on their behalf. I am sure I will receive a sympathetic response. But that is not the end of my challenge. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I challenge all hon. members of this house to react to the challenge of our times, to the challenge of our youth whom we are here to serve. We do not dare let them down. I do not mean by that that we will fulfil all their dreams, but they will know we are working in their interest and that of our country's future. We must not look only at the difficulties because that route would stop us cold. We must not be afraid of failure, for there is no disgrace in failure. The disgrace is in not trying.

Mr. Frank Moores (Bonavista-Trinity-Conception): I realize, Mr. Speaker, that in a member's initial speech to this house it is customary to take his fellow members on somewhat of a tour of his constituency. I do not intend to do this because the constituency of Bonavista-Trinity-Conception was represented in this house for some 20 years by well known Liberal members. While I am sure they eulogized on many occasions the rugged beauty of Bonavista-Trinity-Conception, at the same time they were leading its people up the garden path.

After listening to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) outline the terms of his budget many people in Newfoundland must have questioned whether Ottawa has really ever admitted that our province was taken into the Canadian federation in 1949. Certainly the philosophy and policies of this government as revealed so starkly in this budget give no indication of any concern for the special problems of Newfoundland or any intention to do anything to solve them.

Like Canadians in every part of our country, Newfoundlanders are being squeezed to the brink and in many cases over the brink of poverty by the pincers of taxation and inflation. It has been estimated that almost 40 per cent of the people of Newfoundland receive some government aid in some form. On this basis it may be argued that not too many people in my province will be affected by a tax increase for the simple reason that most of them do not make enough income to be taxed. But even those who are on direct relief will experience the pinch exerted by the Minister of Finance here in Ottawa. His budgetary measures will affect the lives and prospects of every Canadian whether he pays direct taxes or not.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The trouble is that everything is multiplied in shock effect in Newfoundland. The economy is more basic than in any other province; the wages are lower, the opportunities fewer and prices higher. Living is tough in Newfoundland and getting tougher. This budget is just one more blow below the belt. One of the shortest and best descriptions of it that I have read appeared in that staunch Liberal mouthpiece, the Winnipeg Free Press. On October 23 an editorial appeared headed simply "Dismal". Naturally it was a comment on the Minister's budget. I quote in part:

> Finance Minister Benson's budget is a confession of grievous financial miscalculation on the part of the federal government, coupled with a pious promise to do better next year. There is in it little cause for cheer.

Later it goes on to say:

> It is beyond comprehension how Mr. Benson can in one breath be warning people that his government intends to increase its spending by more than $1 billion, and in another be expressing anxiety about the continuation of an inflationary upward spiral of prices and costs. A substantial factor in present inflationary pressures is the amount of money being spent by government at all levels.

[Mr. Moores.]

This strikes at the very heart of Atlantic Canada's problem and the current disillusionment of Atlantic Canadians with the present government. This government is squandering money on a wide variety of inconsequential things, money desperately needed by the provinces of Atlantic Canada. One has only to think of the thousands of dollars being poured into the redecoration of ministerial offices and the building up of personal retinues, including that of the Prime Minister. One cannot help but think too of the expensive ministerial junket to South American countries which has just been embarked upon by a considerable segment of the cabinet.

There are many other expensive items such as the millions being sunk in commissions and task forces that could be curtailed and the money used for critical development work in the battle to overcome regional disparity and poverty. This government appears to be able to find ample funds for its own hobbies and enjoyment. The minister pours tax dollars into his colleagues' spending plans as though they came from an inexhaustible cornucopia.

The federal government does not realize that the most important obligation it had and has to its newest and tenth province. Rather than providing the people with opportunities to get ahead, rather than creating a long term plan whereby Newfoundlanders could earn a decent living, it takes the attitude that handouts will suffice.

The federal government has disbursed funds on a basis that could be compared to the well known concept of the American foreign aid program whereby if enough money is given, even at the cost of human decency and self-respect the recipients should still be thankful. A great deal of federal money has come to Newfoundland since 1949. Most of it has been spent at the whim of a fiscally irresponsible provincial leader, completely unused to economic planning. The victims of this irresponsibility have been the people of Newfoundland, who today enjoy the lowest per capita income and the highest cost of living, resulting in the lowest standard of living in Canada.

After 20 years of squandering, the result is only now being fully realized. Since confederation, the premier of Newfoundland should be commended for advances in health, education and social services. However, he should be brought to task for his completely irresponsible fiscal policies. A gentleman who likes to be referred to as the only living father of confederation, with his proven ability to squander money on grandiose deals, to cook up promotions with people of the Doyle, Shaheen ilk, should not be referred to as the only living father of confederation but rather as the only living "Daddy-O" of confederation.

At the same time as personal ministerial kingdoms are being financed, the Prime Minister tells the provinces bluntly: The till is empty, look after yourselves; you cannot have any of my 2 per cent surtax because it is not really an income tax but a social development tax. I only wish this statement were true. There would then be some hope that the urgent social needs of my province would get support here in Ottawa.

The tragic part of the budgetary policies of this government is that they are seeking to give the impression of economizing, not by cutting down frivolous and unnecessary spending but by cutting out vital and necessary programs of national and regional development. The time has come when the federal government must make positive long term plans whereby the fishery sector of our economy will be developed. When one realizes how important the fish industry is to eastern Canada one must also realize how important this industry could be if properly developed. At the present time fish and fish products represent close to 3 per cent of Canada's gross export value. In Newfoundland at the present time there are approximately 30,000 people involved in the fish industry; together with their dependants they represent some 120,000 people, which in turn represents approximately one-quarter of our population.

This industry today, through neglect and lack of planning, is very near collapse and, Mr. Speaker, this is not an exaggeration. Many fishing companies in Newfoundland have been family affairs, and with the limited resources and fluctuations in managerial ability, which are factors in hereditary businesses, the industry has failed to keep up with international marketing techniques and the technological advances that are so necessary in today's world. To survive, the industry needs federal development funds on the scale provided by European countries to their fisheries.

When one considers that Newfoundland has the nearest proximity to the greatest ground fish resources in the world, it is very upsetting to see the huge government sponsored developments, of European countries in particular, fishing in what are commonly referred to as Canadian waters while we in Canada are neglecting this industry.

When one realizes that the Canadian deep sea fleet consists of approximately 40,000 tons of shipping while the European fleet fishing in the northwest Atlantic represents in excess of 2,800,000 tons, it makes one stop to think. I will repeat the ratio in a slightly different manner. For every ton of deep sea fishing craft leaving Canada's ports there are approximately 80 tons of deep sea fishing craft from Europe operating off our coast. If all the fish presently caught in the northwest Atlantic were processed in Canada the value would be several times the total contribution of all agricultural products combined.

The fishing industry off the east coast of Canada should be playing a much more prominent part than is the case today. However, if we are going to bridge the disparity which is so prevalent in eastern Canada we must come up with a long term plan for fishery development, together with a short term plan to make sure that there is an industry left when all the task forces and study groups have finally reached their conclusions. I have repeatedly mentioned that the fishing industry has been neglected in Newfoundland. There is danger of it becoming extinct. This must not be allowed to happen.

Yet our government is cutting expenditure, cutting in the wrong places, cutting out a just society rather than creating one. Every member of the government from the Prime Minister down has served notice on the provinces that these are lean years and they should expect nothing but cut-backs. What this means to Atlantic Canada literally, Mr. Speaker, is disaster. This government has made a big thing of regional disparity. They have even set up a new department to administer its affairs. But nowhere, least of all in this budget, is there any sign that the government knows the dimensions of regional disparity or where in fact it exists, let alone that it has any answers to the problem.

Let me say right now that the worst area of regional disparity in the provinces and territories that make up Canada is in the province of Newfoundland. If it were not so pathetic one could laugh at recent statements made by a Newfoundlander, the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Jamieson), speaking last month at Grand Falls. He referred to the 20 years of notorious mistakes on the part of the provincial government as merely "mistakes of the heart". He said that "slide-rule theorists" and "hard-hearted administrators" would not raise the standard of living in Newfoundland. I agree with him entirely, but I wonder whether he was thinking of his cabinet colleagues or some of the senior civil servants he ostensibly controls as a minister of the crown.

He advocated that we "abandon the conventional kind of approach to our problems" and use "a sound head and reasonable approach". With all this I agree wholeheartedly, and the minister undoubtedly would have been listened to closely if he had not made one further statement to the effect that the Prime Minister recognized Newfoundland's problems and endorsed unconventional methods of solving them. This is just too much to swallow. If the Prime Minister felt this way about Newfoundland and her problems, he would never have had placed before us such a despairing and barren document as this budget.

The truth of the matter is that no purposeful, co-ordinated attack has been mounted on Newfoundland's problems. I might suggest to our new government that even though the premier of Newfoundland was so obviously friendly to the right hon. Prime Minister at the Liberal leadership convention, it would be wise for the government of Canada, when making funds available to Newfoundland, to have the terms well thought out, to have well planned economic policies which will have a lasting effect on our people, and not provide funds for merely political reasons to continue the one-man distribution system that has been in vogue for the last 20 years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Moores: One would hope the observations of one columnist will not have any resemblance to the truth when he referred to some of the premier's comments, wherein that gentleman described himself as having very much in common with the Prime Minister and said they were knee to knee, heart to heart, brain to brain—they were spiritually united. As the columnist so succinctly said:

> What we cannot afford is to see these two spiritually united gentlemen walk over the Newfoundland countryside into the sunset, knee to knee, heart to heart, brain to brain, hand in hand, with God walking a respectful ten paces behind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Moores: Because of its centuries of isolation, its rugged and detached geography and its dependence upon one or two basic resource industries, Newfoundland has been in a special category and has presented a special challenge. Let me stress right here, Mr. Speaker, that solving this problem, meeting this challenge, is not a question of charity to the needy or helping the less fortunate in society. This is a truly national problem and a truly national emergency.

The halfhearted imposition of the 12-mile limit is another example of too little too late. It is now imperative that the government come to the defence of our east coast fishery in a positive and courageous manner, not in the pussyfooting manner in which the Biafran situation was handled but with the firm purpose that is mandatory when a part of the Canadian body is withering away.

Nothing short of taking over the management of our marine resources on the continental shelf, and taking that step now, will save our offshore fishery from going into the decline that the delay in the implementation of the 12-mile limit effected in our inshore fishery. I know all about the delicate international feelings this government is so longwindedly careful not to ruffle; but if Peru can make a unilateral definition of its territorial waters, surely the great nation of Canada can do no less. No nation such as Canada can afford to let any part of its economy atrophy without endangering the whole body. Newfoundland's prosperity is as much in the interest of the other provinces as it is of the people of Newfoundland.

This brings me to the main failure of this budget as seen through the eyes of Newfoundlanders. The federal government has overspent recklessly and thoughtlessly. It now tells the provinces of Canada to cut spending, to live tight. It is high time the federal authorities realized that Canada is composed of regions vastly different in their economic life, moving at varying economic speeds and requiring different and often opposed economic policies.

The old expression, "What is good for General Motors is good for the United States," does not apply to Ottawa and the ten provinces. What may be good at this moment for Newfoundland may not necessarily be what is good for Ontario, for British Columbia or even Ottawa. In a confederation such as ours it is a question of to each his own when we are looking at the disparate regional economies. Today Ottawa is like the spendthrift heir of the Victorian novels who dissipated his inheritance in riotous living. The Atlantic region and, again, Newfoundland in particular, are like the poverty-stricken nineteenth century coal miner trying to get on his feet and find enough food and clothing for his children. Ottawa's plight is not Newfoundland's plight. Ottawa's needs are not Newfoundland's needs. The answers to Ottawa's current problems are quite different from the answers that must be found for those of Newfoundland.

I have said that the basic need of Newfoundland is to bring her economy in balance up to a respectable level. To do this we must start at the bottom. We must provide large scale, long term development of such things as power facilities, highways, resources and education as the foundation for an integrated and co-ordinated economy capable of steady and orderly expansion and capable, too, of providing the standard of living, social amenities and opportunities that are our people's due. We need this foundation upon which to build the secondary and service industries that are so necessary to a well-rounded and healthy regional economy. We need all this to provide the new wealth and the new tax base that alone can ensure that Newfoundland can cease to be a national economic liability and play its rightful role as an equal partner in the community of provinces that is Canada.

To undertake even the preliminary steps in this great enterprise will require federal and provincial government spending on a large scale. It will be necessary at any time, but in times such as these even more so. That is why I say that this budget, the pleas for cut-backs and economy by the Minister of Finance, the whole direction of Liberal policy, are out of step with Newfoundland's and Canada's true needs.

The minister has said the provinces cannot expect any portion of his social development tax revenue. He has said, in effect: the federal till is empty, the federal establishment is near bankruptcy. This is bad for all provinces. It will be a disaster for Newfoundland. The brutal economic fact of Newfoundland life today is that the provincial government is broke too. The provincial debt has almost doubled since 1965. In that year it stood at $502 per capita; today it stands at nearly $1,000 per capita.

Newfoundland cannot do what it must for itself without outside help. The only source for such help is the federal government. But the terms of this budget and the attitude of the minister have given in advance a callous and unfeeling "no" to any request for financial assistance. The economic crisis in the life of my province has been made more acute by developments in the only two great resource industries already developed to a reasonable degree of productivity, those of fisheries and forestry. Both these basic industries face tougher competition and lower prices in the world market.

The old established inshore fisheries are dwindling both in the number engaged and the revenue taken in. The offshore fisheries have increased in number and volume, but here lower world prices have all but destroyed the advance in productivity. With her few traditional industries in a chaotic state, and new industrial and commercial complexes not yet established, this is a year of desperate prospects for Newfoundlanders.

Last January Mr. Ewart Pratt, president of the Newfoundland board of trade and a member of the advisory board of the institute of social and economic research of Memorial University, stated that Newfoundland needed special incentives and special attention if it was ever to reach economic parity with the rest of the nation. "We all realize that the federal, as well as the provincial government, must exercise a much greater degree of restraint in its spending," he said in the Globe and Mail of January 3. Then he said:

> But we do feel that in the Atlantic provinces, and particularly in Newfoundland, we have so far to go to catch up with the rest of Canada that any restraint imposed by the federal government should not apply to us. In Newfoundland we are still well below prevailing economic standards in the other maritime provinces, to say nothing of the wealthier parts of the country.
> In times of financial restraint, the emphasis should be on productive projects, enterprises which will benefit the economy of a region and create wealth. To do this, area incentives already exist. But they will have to be further expanded.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Here in a nutshell is our problem. Here in a nutshell is the great failing of this budget. What kind of a business is our Minister of Finance running anyway? In May he forecast a budgetary deficit of $40 million or less. Today the projected deficit stands at an appalling $675 million. I can easily understand the minister being wrong, but what about his army of expert advisers? How long could a man in private business avoid bankruptcy if he ran an operation on that basis? This is the government and this the minister who have the colossal gall to counsel belt tightening and the practice of economy.

Estimated federal spending now stands at $10.76 billion or $480 million more than they said they would spend last spring and $190 million more than they thought they would spend as late as last month. If a private concern had a comptroller who was as wide of the mark in his forecasts they would fire him on the spot. The Prime Minister claims he is running a business-like government, and he may take that as some kind of hint or advice.

On October 24 the Montreal Gazette referred to the "grim" budget. This is a mild term to use. The Gazette at that time said:

> How serious the situation is may be seen in Mr. Benson's admission that the budget could not be balanced for the current fiscal year, whether the government wished to do so or not... This is a grave admission for it amounts to saying that the rate of government spending is now so far out of control that a balanced budget is also out of the government's reach, even supposing that a balanced budget had been its aim.

In other words, this government is floundering out of its economic depth, with no prospect of finding bottom in the next few years.

This is tragic for Canada, and it is doubly tragic for Newfoundland. I can only express the hope that in the months ahead, the time still remaining before federal and provincial governments sit down to discuss shared cost programs, tax apportionment and other similar subjects, the Minister of Finance and his colleagues will give some thought to the special needs of Newfoundland.

I hope this government will recall the pledges made in 1949 at the time of confederation. I hope they will acknowledge the political and moral obligations assumed by Ottawa at that time. I hope they will abandon the makeshift emergency approach to Newfoundland's problem and tackle the question at its roots. It has been mentioned ad nauseam that we are going to have a just society with fair sharing, a society that will look after the regional disparity which Newfoundland, I would think, typifies.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we want a just society. I will support a just society. The one thing I will not support, the one thing I will fight, will be the attitude of the previous administration and this administration of the past three months of a just a little longer society. The people of Atlantic Canada require action and not philosophical platitudes. They want a plan with the objectives clearly defined. They want to make the rest of Canada proud not only of their being fellow Canadians but of their being contributing Canadians.

The popular conception of Newfoundland today is that it is a liability to the rest of Canada. But I would ask the rest of Canada to give Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders the opportunity to be an asset to this great country of which we are all so justly proud.

Mr. Richard J. J. Durante (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in the budget debate I take cognizance of the fact that this is my first major address in these very auspicious surroundings. There is, however, one other first related to my rising here this afternoon, and I am very conscious of it. I am very proud to be able to draw it to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and to the attention of this house. This first I refer to is that I have the privilege of being the first Liberal member of parliament to represent Comox-Alberni in this House of Commons.

Although I am the first Liberal member of parliament from my riding, we of Comox-Alberni have been fortunate in having been represented by independent liberals for many years, and at this time I would like to pay tribute to one of those members, the late Mr. A. W. Neill who for many years served his country and his constitutents exceedingly well by his admirable contributions in this house. I hope that my representation on behalf of my constituents will be as effective as Mr. Neill's.

May I now pay tribute and offer my congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on the contents and presentation of his first budget. His budget is realistic and objective and is directed toward relating the trends of the past to those of the future. Close scrutiny by rational individuals of the budget will result in an appreciation of what the finance minister expects to achieve now and in the year 1969-70. The confidence he exuded in his presentation is reflected in his budget after objective perusal of it by rational individuals.

I am confident that the Canadian people have accepted this budget because they are rational and appreciate the necessity for measures taken in this budget. The public is rational, which is more than can be said for many honourable members on the opposite side of the house, excluding the rump section, of course. The Canadian people realize that services provided by this or any other government must be paid for by the public through one means of taxation or another.

There are those opposite me who would, on the one hand, offer all Canadians a guaranteed annual income, would build a tunnel to Newfoundland, and in brief would create a Utopia for all Canadians, while on the other hand they would decrease the present rate of taxation. These two positions are simply not compatible, and those who take such a stand must surely be classified as irrational and irresponsible, and must have reconciled themselves to accepting the fact that their cries and pleas are going unheard and that they will not be in the position for many, many years to incorporate their absurd, contradictory policies.

As individuals, certainly we begrudge tax increases. I know I do and so do my constituents, but when a government is faced with the necessity of raising substantial additional revenues, as this government is, in order to place its accounts in good order, as Canadians we must endeavour to accept the methods used to raise those revenues.

I must confess I would have preferred, and I know my constituents would have preferred, the 2 per cent social development tax to be graded or graduated with a much higher ceiling so that a much higher proportion of revenues received would have come from individuals in the higher income brackets. As an alternative it may well have been more acceptable, in order to achieve the same purpose, to have had a smaller basic percentage without gradations and limitations.

Tax increase amounts, as well as the amount of taxes we pay, are relative. They are relative to whatever amount is left and to what can be accomplished with the amount that is left. Let me illustrate by reiterating what I as a Canadian taxpayer have often maintained, that under our present tax structure I would have no reluctance in paying $100,000 annual tax because in paying that amount I would be assured of putting a sizeable amount in my pocket. In other words, the amount of tax I pay is of no significance; it is the amount I have left after paying my taxes that is relevant.

I am concerned about the old age pensioner who must pay tax if he has a superannuation supplement because a $20 tax increase related to his net income places him in a much more difficult position than the individual who must pay a $120 tax increase or, if there were no limits on the 2 per cent social development tax, a $240 or a $480 tax increase. I do not sympathize with those who are paying high income taxes nearly as much as I do with those who are paying little or no income tax.

May I now turn to the howling, screaming provincial finance ministers, of whom my own is certainly no exception. These same provincial ministers of finance grope toward Ottawa with long reaching arms seeking handouts from this government. If I may diverge and draw an analogy for a moment, let me say that they remind me of young pre-school age children at the local fair reaching out for a grab bag that only costs a pittance but which may contain a prize of inestimable value. These ministers are prepared to take any offering from the federal government, utilize it to their political advantage, pat themselves on the back and, rather than give Ottawa the credit which is due, retaliate by criticizing our fiscal policies.

I should like now to refer to the province of British Columbia and to its finance minister who has gathered together a fleet of ferries of which he is extremely proud, and rightly so. But does he tell the people of his province or the people of Comox-Alberni who must use his ferries in travelling between their homes on Vancouver Island and the mainland of British Columbia, that a good portion of the capital cost of those ferries was paid by this government? I should say he does not. They are his ferries and yet as my colleague, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), has repeatedly said, if you were to remove the federal plates from Mr. Bennett's ferries they would sink like stone. Not one would remain afloat.

I do not, however, completely exonerate the federal government from all blame for failing to draw their financial contributions to the provinces to the attention of the Canadian public. A much more thorough job of informing our people of our participation in federal-provincial programs is essential. For example, federal contributions to the province of British Columbia to assist in the construction of the ferries to which I have just referred amounted to $38,486,920.99 from 1961 to 1967. Contributions to technical and vocational training in 1967 to the province of British Columbia amounted to $16,560,000. In the same year, just under $2 million was paid for highways and transportation. Contributions and payments to universities and the National Research Council amounted to $14,450,000 in 1967. I could elaborate further, but suffice to say at this time that the grand total for the year 1967 of federal contributions to British Columbia provincial and municipal governments and of payments to universities, other institutions and individuals amounts to $399,640,000.

From the amounts to which I have referred, Mr. Speaker, I am confident that my constituents in Comox-Alberni received fair consideration, and so they should. May I now take this opportunity to indicate to the house the value of my constituency to the economy of the province in which it is situated and to our country.

Comox-Alberni is an area rich in natural resources. We have lumbering of a nature unprecedented anywhere in our country, commercial fishing with productive fishing grounds on both its west and east coasts, untapped mineral resources in the northern regions, pockets of ideal agricultural land and tourist enticement in every corner. Each of these industries, major in scope, is a vital cog in the Canadian economy and must not be underestimated. As a matter of fact, I accept as my responsibility the importance of keeping this area of our country, Comox-Alberni, well in the minds of our government. In recent years especially there has been a feeling that we in Comox-Alberni have been overlooked by the federal government and its development programs. I serve notice that now and in the future I will expect this government to give special consideration to the development of Comox-Alberni, and other areas of Vancouver Island, and to the development of its resources, including tourism, so that it will progress as rapidly as its potential would indicate.

The development of a west coast national marine park in the Tofino-Ucluelet-Barkley Sound area is a necessity and is to receive my highest priority as well, I hope, as the highest priority of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien). In excess of ten miles of white sandy beach which makes Long Beach, California, look like the beach here on the Ottawa river—it is not too appealing to me—will be the focus of attention along with the beautiful islands, bays, fjords and inlets of Barkley Sound. An abundance of marine life of every description is prevalent throughout the area. Tourism within the park will be of inestimable value. One half of Vancouver island lies north of the Gold river extending into Port Alice, Alert Bay and Port Hardy. This area abounds in natural resources. Its development is curtailed only because of the lack of an access road. A road must be constructed to provide access to the present 10,000 residents and to make the resources of the north island available to corporations and individuals prepared to develop them. This road to resources must be constructed, and it must be constructed as soon as possible. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Durante: Mr. Speaker, just prior to the supper recess I was expounding on the many attributes of my riding, Comox-Alberni, and unfortunately sufficient time does not remain to me to allow me to expound further on the attributes of my riding. I had referred to the Tofino-Ucluelet-Barkley Sound area where, high on the list of priorities, is the proposal for a national marine park. Then I had referred to part of the Vancouver Island area, and I should like to continue with my references to that same area.

Although this area lies as close as 150 to 200 miles from the heavily populated lower mainland of British Columbia, it does not receive benefits from our own Canadian Broadcasting Corporation relay, and transmitter stations must be provided to give the people of the area the service they deserve, the service for which they are paying and not receiving. I make reference to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation intentionally at this time.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, with the premise that we need a more meaningful accounting of our economy; that we need to bring expenditures more in line with revenues; that we need to tie benefits to costs. I repeat, we must tie benefits to our costs at a reasonable ratio. Are the benefits we receive from the C.B.C. worth the costs? According to the estimates for the current year, C.B.C. expenditures will be in the neighbourhood of $140,147,000, an increase of $28½ million over 1966-67. Is the benefit we are receiving from this corporation worth this expenditure? The answer is no—certainly not to those people in Comox-Alberni who can receive it, and certainly not to those people who receive it with such poor reception that it makes the production even worse than it was in its original form. In my opinion this large corporation is wasteful, reckless and not conversant with the desires of its listening or viewing audience. What did it cost the C.B.C. to cover the recent Olympic games, and where were the personnel responsible when our winning equestrian team received their gold medal?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Durante: To my constituents in the north island, a few of the million dollars budgeted for this corporation could well be used in developing an access road, so that they and the rest of Canada could derive benefits related to costs. On the east coast of Comox-Alberni two major centres, Campbell River and the three cities of Courtenay, Comox and Cumberland are to be found. Campbell River, the sports fishing capital of British Columbia and Canada, is one of the fastest growing cities in the riding and in the country. Courtenay, Comox and Cumberland lack the industrial development they should have, and ought to receive, with the assistance of this government. Cumberland, in its earlier days, was a thriving mining community, but now there is little progress in that area. I am of the firm opinion it should become a designated area so as to receive federal assistance.

The Courtenay-Comox area is too dependent on the Department of National Defence air base situated in Comox. The department, by the way, has title to valuable recreational land which it uses very infrequently; yet the use of the land is forbidden to the residents of the Comox valley. I refer to the Comox Goose Spit, a natural recreational area which is presently retained for naval cadet training during the two summer months. This is a most worth-while project, but I am convinced that cadets and residents should be able to use this natural park together.

Port Alberni, in the centre of my riding, is a progressive industrial seaport city, the only city of its size without a public airfield, and the only port which must transport much of its product to another seaport on the opposite coast of the island, for export by vessels. This latter condition exists because Port Alberni's harbour and wharfing facilities have grown obsolete and too small to cope with the exports of paper, plywood and lumber which are increasing at an encouraging rate annually. The proposed new and enlarged wharfing and storing facilities must be approved by the Department of Transport so that once again benefits will be tied to and supersede costs. This is a progressive community, and in fact a progressive constituency, and its progress cannot be hindered or prevented; rather it should be complemented by our federal government.

I have reviewed my constituency in this fashion, Mr. Speaker, to indicate that there are sections of this country that, while productive, are not as productive as their potential in resources would permit. I hope the government will include in its programs adjustment assistance to help presently established industries, and help the employees in those industries by creating new and additional jobs.

There is a danger, a very real danger, in Comox-Alberni, and in fact throughout the whole of Canada, that we tend to be obsessed with today, and not with tomorrow and the future. We tend not to plan programs, not to establish guide lines, not to project social outcomes which will result from present trends. The budget indicates some insight into the future; the rate of inflation must be curtailed.

Although I tend to agree with a one or two per cent inflationary annual economy, certainly the astronomically high rate of inflation which has existed in recent years must be corrected. Yet it must not be corrected to the extent that unemployment figures will soar. We must strive for a median between the two. Which is the lesser of the two evils? I am not sure, and would therefore take a mugwump's position in this regard and advocate a happy medium, if one exists.

Our lack of foresight is indicated in Canada today by the way in which the three levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal, are tossing a major problem back and forth. I refer of course to our problem of pollution. While our governments expediently relay this problem from one to another, the pollution of our water and air continues at an alarming rate. We are permitting this pollution to continue because we are procrastinating; and while we procrastinate our lakes, rivers and streams are being destroyed because industrial, commercial and domestic effluence continues to be poured into our water systems. If this continues in the future the inevitable will not be pleasant.

This government, this senior government, must lead the way in solving the problem. We must increase expenditures on scientific research, we must co-ordinate the research being conducted by industrial corporations, and tax concessions must be permitted if cost is the only deterrent to the correction of air and water pollution. Whatever the solution may be, let this government indicate immediately that it intends to correct the appalling destruction of our water resources, even if other levels of government are content to sit back and permit this atrocity to continue.

I look forward to a taxation reform bill which will provide greater equity in taxation. As things stand, certain people are permitted to make tax deductions in some categories which, I submit, amount to getting away with murder, while too many people in the low income bracket, including pensioners and the disabled, are being murdered by taxation.

In conclusion, I support this budget, which appears to be a first step in setting our accounts straight. I hope it will be the precursor of tax reforms which are so essential.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be repetitious of the compliments which have been paid to Your Honour, but like all other members of this house, I wish to take this opportunity on my first occasion of rising in this chamber to congratulate you on your election to your present high office. I would also like to congratulate Mr. Deputy Speaker, and the staff who are always so very cordial with their assistance.

Upon my arrival here in Ottawa, I took a stroll on Parliament Hill and, viewing the historic statues and gracious buildings, I felt what I am sure many other visitors to this great capital feel—that it is a privilege to live in a free country, a country free from the thought of tanks being flown in and parked on Sparks Street, a country free from bombings, a country free from the anguish and pain of hunger, a country in which all citizens are free to practise their religion. As one born in Poland, who emigrated to Canada with his Polish father and Ukrainian mother, I wish to thank the people of Canada and the people of Edmonton Centre for this great opportunity.

I am glad to be part of a society called Canadian and am glad that it is run by Canadians—by wheat farmers, cattle breeders, oil producers, fishermen, contractors, businessmen big and small. It has its defects, but if you think the brand the Kremlin has is any better, go ask the Czechs.

I felt, Your Honour, on hearing that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had taken off for Spain after the election, that he had consulted with his guru and would start immediately, bubbling with enthusiasm, to work out new approaches and new programs which would concentrate on regional development in order to end regional disparities. All that has really happened is what I told people in my constituency: You will see increases in taxes, you will see unemployment, you will see more cutbacks of construction jobs; but you will not see national policies and programs implemented to counteract our national problems, because the group on the other side is too busy programming this new just age, and listening to McLuhanism. Hon. gentlemen opposite have no time for war veterans who are looking for long-overdue pension increases. They have no time to amend legislation by bringing in an escalation clause so that the pensions of the old could be increased in proportion to the cost of living.

The federal government has been allocated a substantial role in programming and meeting the costs of urban renewal. As Canada's fourth largest city, Edmonton is faced with this major problem. The major portion of the money required to carry out the urbanization program will be spent in the city centre, the part of Edmonton most affected. But what can we do, if the task force keeps rolling along? We require the relocation of housing complexes and the development of new ones as a necessary and integral part of plans to modify and revitalize our downtown urban complex. And this applies not only to my great city but to all the major cities in Canada. We on this side of the house do not require a task force to tell us that before feasible and immediate step can be taken to implement our urban renewal program, certain features are essential, among them the availability of money to encourage relocation of housing with due regard to the need for multiple housing units. Money must be made available at reasonable rates of interest and there must be confidence in the value of the dollar in order that property may be acquired at a proper price, and that property owners may receive real value for what they sell.

A revitalized housing program can only be produced when housing, urban renewal and pollution have been placed within the responsibility of a full time minister. Such a minister would have time to lower interest rates, phase out the current sales tax on building materials and bring in other attractive and essential features which are required in the remaking of urban Canada. We can no longer neglect young couples who lack housing, nor farmers who have to pay higher interest rates, nor the effect of our postal rates. When the Southam Press spends more than $3.50 to send its member of parliament a telegram complaining about what it will have to do in order to meet the rising postal rates, I suggest that hon. members on the other side had better start looking very carefully at the type of legislation they are trying to ram through.

An hon. Member: We are.

Mr. Paproski: I say this because people like the friendly publisher and editor of the Edmonton Journal do not forget easily.

As one who has played professional football, I feel the latest budget has to be the greatest squeeze play of all time, as far as the taxpayer is concerned. The latest budget performance is a source of disappointment to Canadians, who were subjected to a 10 per cent tax increase in 1966 and a 3 per cent surcharge in 1968. Now they are faced with a further 2 per cent increase called a social development tax, in addition to the raising of the old age security ceiling to $240, and increased taxes on cigarettes and liquor.

Western Canada, already suffering economically as a result of failure to dispose of a large wheat surplus, will be hurt further by the move to restrict the depletion allowances granted to petroleum and mining companies. It should be remembered that these companies are risking their shareholders' money to bring in new resource development, and that if they are hamstrung by restrictive regulations they will, naturally, be less inclined to take risks. This will mean that a development which benefits every Canadian is slowed down.

Apart from the higher income tax bite, and the restrictions on development, the only new feature in the budget is the inclusion of life insurance companies in the corporation tax area.

Removal of the exemption in connection with medical bills paid by provincial plans exposes the individual taxpayer to a further hike in personal payments. The government has now revealed that medicare could go as high as $370 million. Last year we were promised a balanced budget. Now we are told it will be next year. The budget reveals a seasonal unemployment rate above 5 per cent during the summer months, a mild recession in 1967, with rising inventories and overcapacity in some manufacturing industries, in spite of the stimulating effect of Expo and high tourist spending, which have now largely worn off. Inflation has gone on unchecked.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Recessive factors have remained in the economy and the government has done little to deal with them. We can look forward to growing economic uncertainty and increased unemployment, at least on a regional basis.

The government produced one set of estimates last spring and followed them with a revised set of estimates in the fall, the only difference being an increase of $400 million. It is spending $10.7 billion with revenues of $10 billion, leaving a deficit between income and outgo of nearly $700 million.

If a businessman or corporate manager were to run his business in the same way I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, he would not be in the president's chair for long. The government has engaged in massive commitments through the Canada Pension Plan, the Canada Assistance Plan, and now medicare, while at the same time regrettably falling short in stimulating the expansive and productive sector of the economy at a rate sufficient to support the social welfare expansion.

Let us look at defence. It is interesting to note that defence expenditures have gone up 18 per cent over 1967, and on that ground the economic argument for unification is a complete failure.

The budget fails to cope with high and growing interest rates, high taxes and growing inflation. It does not cope with the problem of increasing real per capita output at a rate to ensure full realization of economic potential. Instead of moving to reduce interest rates, the government created the situation in the first place by removing the ceiling on interest rates. The recent action in amending farm credit and fishermen's credit legislation, to remove the limitation on interest rates, has added to the problem.

In the past two years prices and costs in Canada have risen more rapidly than prices and costs in the United States, in spite of the fact that Canada has not had to contend with the inflationary impact of Viet Nam. There has been no indication, in the way the government has managed its finances, of a real capacity to manage the economic growth of the nation. We had a 10 per cent tax increase in 1966, an increase in sales and indirect taxes in 1967, and a further 3 per cent surtax on incomes in 1968. In its latest budget the government had to grapple with the problem of closing the $700 million gap between spending and revenues. It had the choice of making a serious attempt to control its spending or come back to the people once again for further revenues. It chose the latter, like the pitcher that went once too often to the well.

In his minibudget a year ago the former finance minister promised to keep the increase within a range of 4.5 per cent, or a total of $10.3 billion. This the government did not succeed in doing. A continuing rate of increases in both costs and consumer prices of approximately 4 per cent has added to our economic problems. The Economic Council report describes the increase in real per capita output in 1967 as only about 1 per cent, well below potential.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the government, although in office only a short time, already stands indicted by its own record. Canadians are being asked to pay higher and higher taxes to support a record of extravagance unequalled in peacetime history.

Where are the great plans and schemes of the just society? There is nothing in the budget for young Canadians, nothing offering them a challenge, nor is there any outline of the goals and objectives they seek. What of the great frontiers of science, the challenge of the north, the untapped resources of Canada? There is nothing here to challenge the imagination, nothing to inspire, to stimulate or to give hope.

It is evident, Mr. Speaker, that the throne speech, in the uninspired pedestrianism of its prose, was a true reflection of the government's lack of policy, lack of planning and lack of imagination. The budget is an expression of failure; it expresses the government's lack of confidence in itself. It is a vote of non-confidence by the government in its own policies. The government, having so expressed itself, how can this house do less?

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, the present debate on the budget gives us the opportunity to discuss many things which would normally be discussed only when we study the estimates of each department.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to make tonight a prelimary remark which has little to do with the present budget debate, but which I think is necessary because it has some importance with regard to the Canadian declaration of human rights which, I think, all hon. members hold in high respect.

I have twice intervened in this house, Mr. Speaker. Once I rose on a question of privilege, and another time, during the debate on the estimates of a department, I pointed out that there was a time when certain members of this house had taken a sort of pleasure in digging up scandals, in making unfounded accusations right and left. This had led certain people outside the house to take pleasure in insinuating that certain members of the House of Commons could engage in activities that are dishonest and in violation of their oath of office.

Mr. Speaker, we witnessed a whole series of scandals concerning furniture and all sorts of other things. However, at one point a former member of the legislature of the province of Quebec, a former federal minister and member of the Privy Council, was accused of wrongdoing and dishonest dealings with regard to a race track. This lasted for some two or three years, Mr. Speaker. The representative in question appeared before the court of appeal and was unanimously acquitted. He then appeared before the superior court and was again acquitted.

It is not for me to judge the conscience of everyone, but in our democracy, if the human rights exist, our courts should also exist and—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I am moved by the sympathy of the honourable member, but I think that he should confine his remarks to the present discussion, which is quite broad, and I do not think that it is time in this debate to dwell upon certain things which happened outside the house.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I abide by your ruling with great deference. I would be embarrassed to be a member of a Liberal party if what you have just said really was not in order. It seems to me that when discussing the budget, this has an incidence on this basic concern which is called "human rights".

If we have a budget and if each member of the community is assured of getting what it needs, in short if public taxes are levied upon him, it is also because we are conscious of the existence of human rights. If the rights of the hon. members or the ministers of Her Majesty cannot be claimed on this occasion, I wonder how it can be done. I am tempted to rise on a question of privilege, because when I mentioned it the first time, Mr. Speaker, the opposition objected and did not let me finish my remarks.

I raised the matter another time and I was able to complete my remarks; however, I have not exhausted the subject. To-night—and I need hardly three or four seconds—I want to blame the press, which is not represented here to-night, despite the fact that its 135 members should be in the house, for having made head-lines which might have been written for any member of any party. If an irresponsible person charged them with anything, they would make the head-lines in the whole country; however, when the victim and his family who suffered from the head-lines are exonerated, they still are not exonerated by the press.

I conclude my remarks on that matter, Mr. Speaker. It is more important tonight to speak of the budget than to say that the press does not play its part as it should and that it is ill-advised to tell members of parliament that their attendance and their objectiveness are not always as they should be.

Mr. Speaker, we are speaking about the budget, and I am coming to that. I have listened to the speeches made since the beginning of the budget debate probably more carefully than most members.

Certain members have taken pleasure in attacking the government. It was a perfect opportunity to criticize the government, because we can talk about anything at all during the budget debate. However, I must say one becomes used to these things, just as one becomes used to someone who is always shouting "fire" or crying "wolf". There comes a time when one no longer believes that there is a fire or that wolves are coming.

We are often told that the role of the opposition is to oppose, to criticize, and I see my hon. friends on the other side of the house who are extremely intelligent men and extremely honest from the intellectual point of view—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mongrain: I take pleasure in repeating that they are extremely intelligent. They look intelligent, honest, but they strike me as being shy at times about making certain assertions, because they have been told repeatedly that they must oppose, because they are in the opposition. They do so to the extent where their features sometimes express obvious displeasure.

The opposition did not muff this opportunity; besides, it was quite an opportunity, in that the government having just been elected with a majority that has not been seen for quite some time, it decided to take its responsibilities with frankness, which also had not been seen for quite some time. This government did not make empty promises. On the contrary, it decided to assume its responsibilities and with unusual frankness to tell us that we are going through an international financial crisis which our own finances reflect. And that, of course, hurts the whole opposition. Obviously, some sympathy goes to the members of the opposition, because they are still numb from the monumental threshing they got during the last elections. That is no fun, and I sympathize with them because I too have known cruel defeats. I know that nobody is happy the morning after a defeat. So, I understand why they have this kind of complex that compels them to blame the government for all human ills. It is as good a way as any to let off steam. This is only natural, Mr. Speaker, since they have been under pressure since June 24. It is only normal, and we expect that sort of thing.

People in the gallery who are unaccustomed to follow our debates must think, after having listened to the members of the opposition—who are about the only ones to participate in this debate—that the end of the world is at hand, that the government and Canada are bankrupt. Well, no. It is merely misrepresentation.

I heard the members of the opposition say, for instance, that the budget was a catastrophe, that it was made for the rich against the poor, in brief that it demonstrated poor administration and waste. The just society, Mr. Speaker, has been derided. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who has the knack for make-believe and scandal, went so far as to say that the government was robbing the taxpayers.

Some said that the government was unfair to the provinces, that it had failed to provide anything for the eastern areas and that it was misleading the people.

My hon. friend from Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. Flemming) said, and I quote him in English to make sure I am accurate:

• (8:30 p.m.)

[English]

"Inflationary result of inflation is excesses of the government."

[Translation]

And the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) said, and I quote:

[English]

"The federal government must return to fiscal responsibility."

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is easy, when it is raining in one's house, to say that it is raining everywhere else. But this does not prove at all that it is actually raining everywhere. I understand that the opposition should be carping at government's faults. This is only normal. Ever since there are opposition parties, things have always been done that way. Nevertheless, you will not make the Canadian people believe that the moon is made of green cheese. Proof of what has been said does not lie only in the fact that the opposition said so. We know that its role is to object and to try to find all kinds of reasons for doing so. It is even its function to find fictional reasons and to cover up the facts under an appearance of scandal so that the Canadian people may rise against the government—for election purposes, of course—and favour the opposition.

But the opposition should keep in mind that the Canadian people gave an unequivocal confidence vote to the party now in office and that this party should be given the opportunity to prove itself.

The just society has been ridiculed, Mr. Speaker. It is easy to make fun of the most sacred things, but we should recognize that even the Creator of this universe in which we live does not really require a just society. He could have it immediately if He wanted. He could see to it that no human being should suffer from illness, physical disability, poverty or any other evil. He decided to leave a measure of freedom to human initiatives and rulers.

We cannot expect two, three or four months after the election, with the filibusters of the hon. members opposite which prevent us from passing the necessary legislation, that we will soon be in a position to establish the just society. I know that my hon. friends opposite understand that.

Indeed, when they rise to intervene, I look at them and I realize that several among them are embarrassed because they have to object in some fields where they know that a certain period of time must elapse before the suggested formulas can be applied.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; would the hon. member be so kind as to define "just society"? What is it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is no point of order.

Mr. Nesbitt: There is no just society.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I will try to explain my point to my hon. friend. I hope to goodness my friend does not expect me to allow my speech to be inspired by the opposition. I have a speech here that has been prepared. If my hon. friend does not understand the just society now he will never understand it, because it has been explained many times. Another proof of what I am asserting now is that most Canadians understood it, because they voted for 155 members of this house.

• (8:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is true that we have an austerity budget, and that I dislike the $120 social development tax. I admit quite frankly that I do not understand the reasons for it, if only to prove to my hon. friend the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste (Mr. Caouette) that we are not really sheep in this house. However, I will say that in view of the international financial crisis which we are going through, we needed an austerity budget, and we had to accept some unsavoury measures. The Progressive Conservatives or any other party in power would also have to accept them, because this is an international crisis. Therefore, I say it is better to accept what the government asks us to accept than whatever an irresponsible opposition could suggest.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said that IBM computers can make mistakes; then, one can readily imagine how much human beings are liable to be wrong, which is normal. Can the opposition tell me that, being in office, it would have avoided such mistakes? Besides, past experience shows that it made mistakes far more serious. It is only too human to make mistakes, but the clever human being has enough courage to correct them, to take bold and honest steps to establish an economy preventing more evil.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this budget is courageous and not an election budget. It aims mainly at consolidating the Canadian dollar and at strengthening confidence among those who would invest in Canadian enterprise.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) mentioned the credibility gap at one time. He and the hon. member for Yukon have both said the same thing, that there is a credibility gap. I am trying hard, because I am French-speaking and I may get mixed up in my English words. The Leader of the Opposition spoke about the credibility gap. I have a great deal of respect for him. In fact, I respect him so much that I have a notion to advise him not to listen to some of his back-benchers who are leading him along paths he is not used to following, because he is so much of a statesman and an honest man. I, for one, believe this.

He spoke about this credibility gap, but he forgot to say this credibility gap does not concern the government but rather the Canadian dollar. He also said that the Canadian dollar was facing a credibility gap, on account of international circumstances and, Mr. Speaker, I can show you evidence of that. I have here the speech delivered by Mr. Louis Rasminsky, Governor of the Bank of Canada in Victoria, before a joint meeting of the Canadian Club of Victoria and the Federated Council of Sales Finance Companies. Now, Mr. Rasminsky is not, after all, a man to play politics, and here is what he said:

My last public review of the activities of the Bank was on February 29—

The pressure on the Canadian dollar that developed last winter was still very severe. The turning point in the defence of our currency, which was in serious danger, had not yet been reached—

That particular episode, I am glad to say, has had a happy ending.

Fortunately, it is Mr. Rasminsky who says this. And that speech, Mr. Speaker, was delivered on October 17, not six months ago, it is quite recent.

I continue:

—now that it is possible to breathe easier—

Mr. Rasminsky is saying this, not me.

Now that it is possible to breathe easier—and I can assure you that we passed through some anxious moments—I would like to take time to look back on that period . . . Some explanation is appropriate since the defence, although very much worthwhile, was by no means easy or without cost for the Canadian economy.

And so, I should like to remind our friends who are complaining about this budget that—precisely because it is a crisis budget—the international financial situation must bring to mind the devaluation of the pound sterling in England, the 10 per cent surcharge on income tax the President of the United States had an awful time levying, the crisis of the gold standard in France when General de Gaulle felt all powerful to control gold, as well as the steps taken by other countries of lesser importance. Canada managed to go through the crisis, to strengthen the dollar. If there is any doubt about it, once again I shall call upon Mr. Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada. What he said about it proves—and I suggest my friends read what they probably all received, that is a summary of his speech on October 17 last with supporting figures—that the situation of the Canadian dollar has been strengthened and that it was imperative that the confidence in the Canadian dollar be strengthened. That is not the confidence in the Canadian government; if it were, I could quote Mr. Rasminsky again when he said that the Canadian policy fortunately helped to strengthen the Canadian dollar.

In this area the skies are brighter now.

The skies are brighter; this is no prophet of gloom and doom who speaks, no spokesman of the opposition. "The skies are brighter now." Nor is Mr. Rasminsky a politician.

I have recently returned from the annual meeting of the International Monetary fund where I was encouraged by the evidence of much greater international financial stability—

Mr. Speaker, what does all this criticism from the opposition amount to, if not merely to the normal complaints of a team that was beaten in the last election and is trying to restore the fortune of its house by launching all sorts of attacks, justified and unjustified, hither and thither, to discredit this government.

Rather, we would need to form a sacred union, because the crisis is not essentially Canadian. There is no lack of confidence in the government, but this is an international crisis, and it is suggested to each taxpayer to ask himself what he can do for his country and not what the country can do for him in order to overcome the difficulties, because if the Canadian dollar is devaluated for lack of confidence of foreign countries, this would entail the ruin of a lot of Canadian enterprises and would bring unemployment for thousands of taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, this is no mystery and all the economists will tell you so.

Some hon. Members: We doubt it.

Mr. Mongrain: You doubt it? I have here before me—and I think my hon. friends have it also—the report of a press conference given the the Minister of Finance when he made his budget speech.

Mr. Muhn, an economist, wrote this, and I quote:

[English]

Today Mr. Benson has presented a budget which would be balanced next year by raising the taxes notably. If we consider the importance of inflation in the economy, I think that this budget is reasonable—

He did not say remarkable, but reasonable. To continue:

—it's a good step to put some better order in federal finance.

[Translation]

We must put better order in federal finance. I know what my hon. friends will say: if we must put order, it means that there was none. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there was a little disorder, because our hon. friends required the government to make investments of millions or billions of dollars, and the government wanted to do its share, following the requests of the opposition, to try to maintain the economy. At one point, it realized that things were going too far—because we cannot spend more than we can reasonably collect—and the government decided to adopt a healthy financial policy, inspired by the best economists and financial experts, not only in Canada but also abroad. It dared face the electorate and say: This is what we will do. We shall increase taxes. Such an increase hurts, obviously. And it hurts me probably more than some of my colleagues in a better position to afford it. However, if each and every one in a country such as ours is not prepared to make the sacrifices that sometimes prove necessary, we are on the way to bankruptcy. The opposition utters shallow and irresponsible criticism, since it has no concern but to blame. It could eventually lead this country to bankruptcy, were it not for the intervention, at a given time, of someone with a sense of responsibility.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) touched on various subjects which I do not wish to cover again, because other members will have an opportunity to do so.

I would have liked at a certain time to challenge some statements made by the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste (Mr. Caouette) who travels throughout the province condemning the financial policy of this government. I will speak with a little more restraint than I had thought I would. In fact, I feel that this afternoon he was the object of some unintentional discourtesy, if you like, but he was probably slightly to blame because he exceeded the time allotted to him, but he should have been granted a few minutes more to continue. By travelling throughout the province of Quebec to criticize the financial policy of the government the leader of the Ralliement Creditiste acts in an irresponsible way.

He should realize that he makes statements—and I am pleased to see him coming in—which he knows are inaccurate, because he is intelligent.

This afternoon, however, I approved him when he protested against the C.B.C., because he was right. His delegate at the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts will tell him that I was the first one to suggest that the authorities of the C.B.C. be questioned and to say that I did not approve of the kind of discrimination referred to by the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste.

Moreover, I agree with the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste on many things, but I do not approve of his going around the poor areas of the province where he says to those who benefit from the social legislation of the federal government that the latter discharging its responsibilities towards them. He promises them some illusive things, he promises them—to use his own language—air-blown balloons with vivid colours, if you like, because our poor—

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Témiscamingue on a point of order.

Mr. Caouette: I just wanted to tell the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) that in my own constituency there are not less poor people than in his own constituency, but I want to defend them and he wants to sell them; that is not the same thing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. There is no point of order.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I would tell the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste that in my own constituency, there are people who benefit from disability pensions, from family allowances, from unemployment insurance, free hospitalization, the Canada assistance plan, old age pensions, guaranteed minimum income, manpower retraining programs, war veterans' allowances, urban renewal programs, programs providing special services to municipalities, student loans, special grants for sports programs, research and marina installations. All these social measures were passed by my party and not by that of the hon. member. Moreover, these people have benefited from various projects commemorating the Canadian centennial. Those achievements, Mr. Speaker, are not vague promises or mirages, but dollars which have been paid to the Canadian people out of the taxes paid by the Canadian people.

In fact, my hon. friend is trying to make the Canadian people believe that they can get by while doing nothing and benefit from those advantages which are provided out of inexistent funds. But I say to my hon. friend that he is making false representations, that he is smarter than he wants to show. Either he knows what he is talking about or he does not. If he knows what he is talking about, he is not honest and if he does not know, he should shut up. Because we cannot have colour dreams nowadays. We live with dollars and we must pay for everything in this world.

I have studied his financial system very carefully and I know that I am not as intelligent as my hon. friend, but I have noted a few of the statements he has been spreading around for the last 35 years. As far as I know, his philosophy has never been actually applied. This shows perhaps that it is not practical. But nevertheless, even if it is practical, Mr. Speaker, if it took another 100 years to succeed, the poor people in my constituency will have to eat to-morrow morning and they cannot wait. They will be able to manage because of the legislation passed here and not because of promises such as those my hon. friend makes here in the house or elsewhere. They cannot live on balloons any better than they can live on promises, Mr. Speaker.

We should, therefore, be realistic and I know my hon. friend is aware of that. Unfortunately, he has to sustain his reputation as the leader of this—

An hon. Member: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I am afraid, I should remind all the hon. members of this house, especially the senior members, of the ruling forbidding any hon. member to interrupt a colleague once the latter has the floor.

Mr. Mongrain: May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how much time I still have?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member has two minutes left.

Mr. Mongrain: I thank, you Mr. Speaker.

I have a great deal of respect for my honourable friend, the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste for reasons which I do not have the time to list, because my time is running out.

He is so intelligent and I respect him so much that I would not want to let him go astray, as he does now, following courses which solve nothing for his voters in matters which are deceptive and totally imaginary. I should like to point out to him that, with his intelligence and energies, he is quite able, to do much better than that, to do realistic things for people who live today, not for those who will live a hundred years after his death.

To come back to the budget, Mr. Speaker, I will say that it is a realistic budget, a courageous budget, a budget which hurts.

I will agree with all my honourable colleagues, that it is a budget which hurts. There are some things which I would not have done in that way, and I confess it. But if the opposition party had proposed another budget, I would have probably objected to two or three things. We have to arrive at a solution and it is that which is suggested by the honourable Minister of Finance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the honourable member but his time has expired.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I was considerably amused by some of the words uttered by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain). I do not want to comment in detail on what the hon. member said, but he intimated that the opposition seemed embarrassed in criticizing the budget. I think it is only fair to say that in the 15 years I have been in this House of Commons I do not believe I have ever known a budget that could be more readily criticized. The hon. member also had some entertaining things to say about the just society. I suggest that this budget is a poor excuse for a just society. I think the hon. member called it an austerity but courageous budget. I know he is a very amusing and entertaining speaker, and I enjoy listening to him. As a consequence, I can only assume that he was joking when he said those words.

There has been a singular lack of front bench, government members speaking in support of this budget. I cannot quite understand this. Several of the new private members have spoken, and I know this is an excellent time for them to speak; but I would have thought that when we were discussing a budget as lacking in substance for the people of Canada as this one, surely it would have received some support from the government benches.

I know that trying to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear is always a fascinating exercise, and the minister's performance in the house on the night of October 22 last was certainly fascinating. Even more fascinating was his performance on television later that night when he was interviewed by Mr. Lynch and Mr. Collister. In that interview the minister was very quick to blame the provinces for the highest federal expenditures in our history. However, he did admit that he had been $600 million out in his calculations last year, because of a refusal to accept the warnings given to the federal government by the provincial governments.

One of the astonishing things in the minister's television performance on the night of October 22 was the revelation as to his taxation philosophy. It had to be seen to be believed. Referring to young Canadian married couples in the income class of $10,000 and over per year, he stated his philosophy in these words: You put as much as the traffic will bear on these people. That is the minister's philosophy, enunciated not once but twice on the national television, and he had the gall to blame the provinces for high levels of taxation. We all recall when the policy was to soak the rich. The present policy is to soak everybody. He went on to say:

I do not think this is an easy budget at all and it is not the kind of budget I like to bring in as a new Minister of Finance.

Well, such frankness is always welcome and commendable, but I think most Canadians would agree wholeheartedly with that statement. They just do not like any part of the budget.

The minister went on to proclaim an impassioned justification of the completely indefensible 12 per cent sales tax on building materials, when he said:

If you have to pay 11 per cent sales tax, or 12 per cent, it is, I believe, for clothing for your children, for household furniture, for everything you buy, why should housing be exempted from that? ... Well, if you want to subsidize housing, subsidize housing.

The fact that the government's 12 per cent tax has, more than any other factor, placed housing out of the reach of a whole generation of young Canadians, the same people the minister wants to soak as much as the traffic will bear, disturbs him not in the least. With a philosophy as destructive and antisocial as this is it any wonder we have a budget—

Mr. Benson: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question? Does he realize that almost half of the tax revenue from taxes on building materials comes from commercial operations rather than from housing?

Mr. Monteith: That is perfectly all right, Mr. Speaker. I mentioned when this was brought in what it was going to do to the cost of living, and my prediction came true. It put housing beyond the reach of the average person.

The minister made one statement worth looking into when he said:

I said a little earlier tonight that, you know, if we go through another year and we're out six per cent which is very good for business, we'll probably end up with a new Minister of Finance.

Coming from a minister who guaranteed parliament that he would remain within an expenditure ceiling of $10.3 billion and that we would have a balanced budget this year, I think that suggestion merits active consideration by the government. The ceiling has become the floor, and the balanced budget another Liberal vanishing act.

The only really new feature in the budget is the inclusion of life insurance companies in the corporation tax area. The minister even included fraternal and benevolent societies. These are mainly non-profit organizations and many perform charitable functions for those members who are in dire need. Still they are included. I am going to suggest when we get to the budget resolutions that we examine this particular item very closely with a view possibly to amending it. About all that can be said in general about the budget is that it represents another tightening of the Liberal screw. The economy is being squeezed by the government for all the traffic will bear, and the taxpayer is being wrung dry.

The 2 per cent surcharge is described as a social development tax. It could as easily have been described as a medicare tax. Primarily it hits the little man below the belt. The minister now reveals what medicare is going to cost; but what about the previous minister's prediction of $1 billion for all of Canada? It appears to me there is a great credibility gap with regard to what medicare is going to cost. They have been wrong before and could easily be wrong again.

Now we have a $675 million deficit on top of last year's $792 million deficit. Once again we have the tired old Liberal ploy: Next year will be better. The government cannot go on living off next year's income. Last year we were promised a balanced budget this year; now we are told it will be next year. It is not only the budget which is unbalanced, it is the government.

In this connection, it is interesting to refer to the firm and high sounding declaration of intention made on February 13, 1968 by the minister, when he not only promised but guaranteed a balanced budget. This has been referred to before but I am going to repeat it. His words on that occasion could well be imprinted, if not on the walls of this chamber in letters of fire, at least on his brain. The following are his words as reported at page 6663 of Hansard for that date:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to guarantee to the house that after the supplementary estimates are introduced during the year and the year has ended, with the normal lapses that always occur, we will hit our $10.3 billion ceiling and will balance the budget this year.

What I am particularly interested in is this next line in Hansard:

> Mr. Ricard: You are whistling in the dark.

Nothing could have been truer; that statement is one of the classic misstatements of all time. The more it is analysed, the more it reveals the weaknesses of the present Minister of Finance, who was then president of the treasury board, but who was speaking as a member of the government responsible for keeping expenditures in line. He guaranteed, first, a ceiling of $10.3 billion and, second, a balanced budget, and he was 100 per cent out on both predictions. I should emphasize that they were more than predictions; he used the word "guarantee" and obviously was speaking as a responsible minister giving a commitment to parliament.

The $10.3 billion ceiling was shot to pieces long ago. Expenditures are now at $10.780 billion. The minister's successor in the Treasury Board portfolio tried to blame the provinces. Then we found that the provinces had warned the government, whose computorized brains were apparently only capable of ignoring what they learned.

I saw a headline in one of the papers the other day which read: Next Stop The Moon. I thought they were referring to the budget, but apparently it was a reference to the United States space program. These fiscal astronauts opposite, however, are in a class by themselves. I am only wondering what will happen when they try to get back into the earth's atmosphere. I am seriously worried that they will simply burn up, and take the economy with them.

This budget is a confession of the government's abysmal failure to keep expenses in line. On December 6, 1967, I spoke in this chamber on the minibudget which was presented that autumn, and I dealt in some detail with the government's expenditures since they assumed office in 1963. I set out the complete picture from the time they took office until the time when I spoke, pointing out that the expenditures had continued to increase, not too tremendously, in the first few years. Now, I want to emphasize what happened the last three or four years during that period.

For instance, in 1966-67 expenditures rose 13.7 per cent. In 1967-68 they rose 12 per cent. The year in which we are now, and about which the minister so glibly said last winter he was going to hold the increase to 4.5 per cent, shows an increase of 9.5 per cent. The final supplementary estimates are not in yet. We heard today about a supplementary that will have to be added. The estimates for 1969-70 indicate a still further increase of slightly more than 8 per cent. When and where is this government going to call a halt to these escalating expenses? I claim they have been gradually developing these spendthrift ways since their very first days in power in 1963. There was a change of atmosphere in the last three years, and there has been a series of gross miscalculations. We recall how the government tried to fool the public during the discussion of the estimates last spring. The government rarely even mentions the need for restraining expenditures now. They have found a wonderful new method: We will do it next year.

Apparently this is the new approach: stick around a little longer and you will see that next year will be the big year of the balanced budget. This is known as the wait a little longer theory or, I would suggest, the Benson backward budget balancing plan. Prior to the turn of this century there was a man named Blondin who developed a balancing act over Niagara Falls. The present minister could give Blondin cards and spades, I suggest. Blondin won world acclaim when he walked over a yawning gulf with a man on his back, but the other night the minister walked over a yawning gulf with a whole government on his back.

What about the ordinary Canadian? I trust that it will not be considered a breach of etiquette if I mention the ordinary taxpayer in this chamber, or bring his plight to the attention of the government. Let us look at the tax tables to see what the government has done in two short years to a married taxpayer with two dependants. Let us remember that within two short years, plus a few months, the tax of the average married taxpayer with two dependants and an income of $4,000 has increased from $97 to $210; with a $5,000 income, from $205 to $422; with a $10,000 income, from $987 to $1,764; with $15,000 income, from $2,141 to $3,415.

I can say that if the government continues in this fashion they will be getting the Nobel prize for physics because they will be the first people in history to squeeze blood out of a stone. What they are doing to the taxpayer is unbelievable. We have seen the cost of living increase considerably in the last two years. In December, 1965 the cost of living based on 1949 equalling 100 was 140.8. The last report I saw indicated it was 156.4, an increase of 15.6 points. This actually represents an increase of 11 per cent since December, 1965. During this same period personal income taxes have increased by the percentages I indicated. Where is the average person going to end up under this government? What consideration is the average older citizen receiving, who is living on a fixed income?

This budget has ended the suspense of how the government was going to raise its money. The question the taxpayer is asking now is, where is the money coming from? I suggest the unanswered question is, where is the money going? So far as taxes, direct and indirect are concerned, Canadians have about reached the end of the rope. Income taxes have never been higher. Indirect taxes have added to prices and costs, and the most evil indirect tax of all, inflation, has been fired by uncontrolled government spending. The minister has now given his prescription for how the government is going to go about raising its money in the coming fiscal year. I suggest that for many Canadians it will be bad medicine.

In the last two years we have had a succession of tax increases. As I mentioned, we had a 10 per cent tax increase in 1966; an increase in sales and indirect taxes in 1967 and a further 3 per cent surtax on income in 1968. Now, in the present budget, the government had to grapple with the problem of closing a $600 million gap between spending and revenues.

Mr. Stanfield: They are increasing taxes twice a year now.

Mr. Monteith: It is a good average; they have done it before. The government had a choice of making a serious attempt at controlling spending or coming back to the people for further revenues. In his minibudget of a year ago, the former minister of finance promised to keep the increase in expenditures within the range of 4-5 per cent or a total of $10.3 billion. This government came far from doing that. It is worth remembering also that the present minister, shortly after assuming the portfolio in May, said in Quebec City that inflation was the most serious problem facing the Canadian economy. He proposed a wage and prices review board. This promise has remained in the limbo of forgotten Liberal promises.

At that meeting, according to the Globe and Mail for May 21, 1968, the minister said:

> We hope to have a balanced budget—

Let us remember this was before the election.

> —and we should be able to attain this with minor fiscal adjustments.

I should like to recall also to the minister and the government the recent speech by the Governor of the Bank of Canada on October 17, in which he warned of the effects of the present high rate of federal spending. He called for prices and wages guide lines which have not been forthcoming. This is what he said:

> Our recent exchange problems have shown how important it is to avoid any undermining of confidence by a further extended period of poor cost and price performance.

This warning will no doubt be put in the same category as the repeated warnings of Ontario officials that the government had seriously underestimated the cost of shared programs. As it turned out, they were right, but the warnings were ignored. Yesterday my leader spoke in this debate, paying particular attention to how this budget and the recent assertions by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) are going to affect the provinces and federal-provincial relations generally. He dealt with the future of such relations from long years of experience; consequently, I will not go into the field of shared-cost programs tonight. I would say, however, that never have relations between the federal government and the provinces been at a lower ebb. On top of this the government is forcing its medicare plan on the provinces, with every intention of backing away from it in five years.

• (9:20 p.m.)

This budget, sir, has stunned people across Canada in every walk of life. The credibility gap has continued to widen. Before sitting down, Mr. Speaker, I wish to read the amendment we shall vote on this evening. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) moved that——this House regrets that the government has repeatedly deceived this House and the Canadian Public as to the extent and gravity of the 1968-69 budgetary deficit and has destroyed its own credibility and that of the 1969-70 budgetary forecasts notwithstanding the heaviest peace time tax increases and consequently rejects the government's statement of the country's financial position.

Many hon. members on the government side have deplored the tax increases in this budget. Quite obviously they have spoken the way they have because they will not feel comfortable about the budget when they speak to the constituents in their ridings. I say that if one believes in what he says, how can he fail to support the amendment tonight, along with everybody else on this side of the house.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (London West): Mr. Speaker, there are three or four areas in the broad field of our financial affairs about which I would like to make some brief comments.

The first area concerns family allowances. When the original legislation pertaining to family allowances was first enacted almost 25 years ago, Canada had very little other social welfare legislation. We did not have old age security, the Canada Assistance Plan, the guaranteed income supplement, provincial hospitalization schemes, the Canada Pension Plan or many other municipal, provincial and federal programs which we now consider basic to the physical and financial well-being of Canadians. It is my submission, Mr. Speaker, that the universal family allowance system as it is now constituted has in some ways outlived its usefulness, and that part of the funds which are now being expended on family allowance could be used more directly and significantly to help certain people in our society to whom we owe a greater measure of assistance. During the fiscal year, 1966-67, we spent more than $600 million on family and youth allowances. If these allowances were not paid for the first child in each family, we would save approximately $250 million each year.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that most families in our present economy can bear the burden of raising their first child without assistance from the government. This figure of $250 million is approximately the same amount as was spent upon the guaranteed income supplement last year. I would suggest that we would be filling a far greater need and discharging a more pressing responsibility to our Canadian citizens if we ceased paying for the first child in each family and instead doubled the guaranteed income supplement. This would mean that all single Canadians who are receiving the old age security pension would be guaranteed a minimum income of approximately $140 per month and that all couples would have a minimum income of $280 per month if they qualified for this supplement. These figures certainly do not provide for luxury living today, but they should much improve the present situation and guarantee our senior citizens a minimum level of dignity in their retirement years.

One nice thing about recommending a program of this type is that it is not a program where we are going to have constantly increasing costs since, over the next eight years, as the Canada and Quebec pension plans come to full maturity the requirement for the guaranteed income supplement may well be eliminated for a large percentage of our retirees.

If this line of thought seems reasonable, Mr. Speaker, and we also discontinued the payment for the second child, when there were only two children in the family, we would realize an additional $75 million. This would mean that in families which had only one or two children there would not be any family allowance paid. But all families which had three children or more would receive payment for all children but the first. Having found the funds, I would like to suggest a method whereby we could now dispose of them.

The fifth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada laid great emphasis on the fact that in Canada's second century the main basis for economic prosperity would be the maximum educational development of our people.

I believe there is one group of young men and young women in our society against whom our government-assisted universities unintentionally discriminate. Maybe this is an unhappy choice of words—I do not mean that they actually discriminate against them but, because of the physical location of our universities, the potential students who live beyond commuting distance from these universities have a far greater financial burden to bear in attending university than do the potential students who live in or near university towns or cities. I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we should have some system whereby these potential students who live beyond commuting distance are given a subsistance allowance if they are qualified and wish to attend university. Canada has a total population of approximately 20 million people. Of this figure, roughly 12 million Canadians live within commuting distance of universities. In other words 40 per cent live beyond commuting distance.

Applying these same figures to our present enrolment at universities we find that there would be roughly 100,000 out of a total university population of 250,000 whom we would have to assist. Assuming an average subsistance allowance of $100 per month for the 7½ months at university, this would involve a total annual outlay of $75 million.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if we are genuine in our talk about equality of opportunity this is a mandatory step we should be taking to try to make certain that the young men and the young women who live in Goose Bay, or Peace River, or Owen Sound, are put on an equal footing with the students who live in Toronto, Vancouver, Halifax or Edmonton.

The third area on which I would like to make a few comments, Mr. Speaker, concerns the question of shared cost programs. A great deal of concern has been expressed by hon. members opposite about the unbalanced budget which we are going to have this year. I would like to quote from an editorial in last Tuesday's Montreal Gazette:

> The disturbing fact is not that the federal government has unbalanced its own budget; it has had its budget unbalanced for it.
> The main trouble has come from the shared-cost agreements it made with the provinces in such fields as hospital insurance and post-secondary education. These agreements were not for fixed amounts, such as would have made budgetary prediction possible. They were open-ended, with Ottawa paying a percentage of whatever the provinces spent. This has meant that the federal government has had to meet costs over which it had no direct control. It signed something not unlike blank cheques.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The whole system of shared cost programs violates a basic concept in a democratic system, which is that the government responsible for spending funds should also be the government responsible for raising these funds. This is how the elected representatives are made accountable to their electors and how, to a large degree, their electors measure their performance. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this whole business of shared cost programs flies right in the face of this fundamental democratic principle and I think we should be doing our utmost to eliminate the shared cost programs in which we are presently participating. Mr. Speaker, I realize that this principle cannot operate to its theoretical perfection in a federal system such as ours where we have accepted the idea of striving to achieve equality amongst various regions. Because of this, the federal government must raise funds from the more prosperous regions and give them as grants to the less prosperous regions.

It is also argued that in order to maintain an adequate degree of control over fiscal policies it is necessary for the central government to raise a significant portion of the tax dollars so that the economy can, to some extent, be stimulated or cooled off. However, even if the federal government were to opt out of the shared cost programs, and turn over a certain number of equalized tax points to the provinces, it would still maintain and control approximately 80 per cent of its present tax levying and spending capacity. Therefore I would suggest the basic premise still applies. The government which is spending the money should be the government which is responsible to its electors for raising the money.

Prior to being elected to parliament I was a member of the board of education in my riding. Even there, Mr. Speaker, I discovered that the great concern, understandably, of the elected representatives was for the dollars for which they were directly accountable to their electors. The money that came from the other levels of governments, primarily in that case from the provincial governments, and to a very minor degree from the federal government, was "found money" from an unending horn of plenty. In our calculations, these funds did not concern us at all—we just calculated, assumed they were there and went on to worry and fuss about the dollars we had to raise from our own municipality, and the impact these would have on the mill rate. I was encouraged, Mr. Speaker, to note that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) have in the past few days made comments supporting this point of view.

A couple of days ago the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) made reference to the final report of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons studying the public service of Canada which was made on May 8, 1967. He gave his wholehearted support to its proposal that we should be increasing the pensions paid to our retired civil servants. I would like to add my strong support to his plea. My reasoning here, Mr. Speaker, is precisely the same as it was when I earlier recommended the doubling of the guaranteed income supplement. Our retired citizens worked diligently during their more active years, when economic circumstances were far less attractive than they are today, to build the prosperous society which we all now enjoy. The least we can do now is make certain that these retired Canadians are able to participate fully in the society which they did so much to create.

My final area of comment concerns our athletic endeavours. In the last few weeks all of us have watched with great interest the efforts of our own and other athletes at the Olympics. We are proud of the achievement of our medal winners, but all of us, Mr. Speaker, have a feeling of malaise. We should have done better. Many countries far less well off than ourselves and far smaller in population, such as Czechoslovakia and Kenya, were far more successful. We know that our young athletes are dedicated and competent young people and I think all of us subconsciously feel that we have to dig deeper into the situation to find where we went wrong. Our training facilities are inadequate, we do not possess sufficiently qualified trainers and possibly our athletes did not train hard enough. There are many reasons for our lack of greater success, Mr. Speaker, but it seems to me one area where we could be doing something which would encourage more support of amateur athletics is the relatively minor one of tax relief.

It is my understanding that the encouragement of a particular sport is not considered charitable within the meaning of the Income Tax Act. In my riding we have a vigorous amateur hockey organization and swim club. These groups are faced with fairly substantial on-going expenses for equipment, ice rental, transportation and the many other commitments which are incurred in keeping activities such as these going. We have all watched with admiration the outstanding performance of the United States in the swimming events. If our young swimmers are going to develop competitively they must get over the border and compete against these young American athletes. There are many interested citizens who are willing to give generously of their time and funds to assist these efforts. I believe the least we can do is to grant tax relief on the funds which they donate for the support of athletics. I have suggested to some of my friends in these groups that they organize themselves into bodies called "ice worshippers" or "water worshippers", and that part of their religious observances would be to stand around the rink or swimming pool watching their children participate. At least they might then be able to qualify for charitable exemption as a religious organization.

It is absolutely ridiculous that we should decry the lack of athletic achievement when we are not even prepared to permit the people who are willing and eager to support athletic endeavours to deduct their contributions for tax purposes. I urge that the appropriate section of the Income Tax Act be altered as quickly as possible to make such contributions eligible for deduction from taxable income.

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Time this evening being limited, I intend to cover only a few points which I think should be dealt with. First of all, I wish to take the opportunity to commend some of the new members of this house who in my opinion have contributed some of the finest speeches we have heard in a long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Skoreyko: I do not wish to put a list of names on record, but I do wish to commend the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) who spoke yesterday evening in this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Skoreyko: That man had a great deal of courage, in my opinion. Some of his remarks were indeed constructive. They were critical of the government as they were critical of other areas of the administration, and I commend the hon. gentleman for what he said in this house.

Talking about constructive speeches, it amused me this afternoon to listen to the hon. member for Three Rivers.

Mr. Mongrain: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to remind the hon. member that there is no city in my province which is called Three Rivers. In the English version of its incorporation it is called Trois-Rivières.

The Budget—Mr. Skoreyko

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Skoreyko: Be that as it may, Mr Speaker, at least I was able to identify the hon. member who so eloquently talked about credibility—credibility of the opposition as he said. I wonder if I might be permitted to remind him of a credibility gap in a political party this summer. May I remind him one of the greatest hoaxes ever perpetrated on the Canadian people was engineered this summer on June 25 last. They said nothing to the Canadian people; they promised nothing. In my riding all I heard was "Go Trudeau, go Shewchuk", who was my opponent. This went on all across the country; but indeed when I go back to my riding now I find that an awful lot of people wish he had gone.

I have only two or three minutes left tonight to talk about the budget, Mr. Speaker. I cannot even begin to criticize it and do an adequate job in that time, and so I hope I have another opportunity to participate in this debate. I want to ask the Minister of Finance how he can justify a 2 per cent increase in personal income tax with a limit of $120? I suggest to him—and he is an accountant—that if he did a little mathematics on his own he could have achieved and indeed exceeded the goal he tried to achieve by charging everybody on earned income, every taxpayer and every wage earner in Canada, one quarter of 1 per cent on total earnings. He would get a lot more money if he had done so. In fact he would have more money than he needed.

I do not understand what justification there is in his concept of fairness or of a just society, when he taxes people who cannot afford to pay 2 per cent on earned income, and at the same time sets a limit of $120. This is something that he thinks fits into this new just society, but it is something that I as a Conservative think is not just. This spring the government promised the Canadian people that it was going to balance the budget in the fall of 1968. To come up with a budget like this is to me tantamount to outright, blatant dishonesty.

I happen to come from the west, Mr. Speaker, where considerable oil development has taken place. I think the minister should take another look at the depletion allowance factor in his budget. Has he realized what the depletion allowance, or the refusal to recognize the depletion allowance against write-offs before the costs of production are completely written off—

[Mr. Mongrain.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It being 9.45 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section (5) of standing order 58 to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on any amendment before the house.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

This house stands adjourned until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

It being fourteen minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 8, 1968

The house met at 11 a.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed the following bills without any amendment: Bill C-111, an act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act; Bill C-113, an act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

ANNIVERSARY OF CONCLUSION OF FIRST WORLD WAR

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before this house meets again the world will have marked the fiftieth anniversary of the conclusion of world war I, the war intended to end all wars. It is therefore appropriate, I suggest, that we pause a moment this morning to reflect on the sacrifices made by Canadians in that holocaust, and reflect as well on the minute distance which man has advanced in the past half century toward the goal of a warless world.

[Translation]

Monday next will be dedicated to the mémory of the sacrifices and the assistance offered generously by Canadians during the war of 1914-1918 and other conflicts in which we have participated since then. Let us not forget, however, that this contribution also provides a lesson: that war is a poor solution and that it proves mainly the refusal of peoples to solve their conflicts with their intelligence. And let us not forget that war, in this atomic age, constitutes in the words of Albert Schweitzer "the height of absurdity".

[English]

When on Monday we pause in silent tribute to those who fell and those who served in the first world war I suggest, Mr. Speaker, we should remember that among them were members of the parliament of Canada. Their sacrifice will not be in vain if we here accept their challenge and strive to avoid the need for further sacrifices in the name of war.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Canadians will join with the Prime Minister in the tribute he has paid today on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the ending of the first world war. I think perhaps my deskmate the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is the only veteran of that conflict who is still serving in this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (11:10 a.m.)

Mr. MacLean: I am sure all veterans will appreciate the recognition the Prime Minister has given today to their contribution, and to the contribution of those of their comrades who are not here to acknowledge that recognition on their own behalf.

While Remembrance day originally was set aside to honour the memory of those who fought and especially those who fell during the first world war, it equally commemorates those Canadians who made the supreme sacrifice for their country in the second world war and in the Korean conflict.

The Prime Minister in his statement has referred to the futility of war as a means to resolving disputes. Certainly in recent months we have been reminded that to resort to force is not a thing of the past but is still with us. In this imperfect world the choice men face is not always, or even very often, between good and evil but rather is a choice between two evils. The wars of this century in which Canadians and men of other countries gave their lives for freedom may be regarded by some as futile, but we owe even the imperfect order and peace we have today to their sacrifice. Their sacrifice at the very least gave mankind a further chance to seek the rational solution to which the Prime Minister referred.

In these days, when many Canadians are rightly concerned about the unity of our country, it is well to remind ourselves of those who gave their lives for its survival. I speak for Her Majesty's loyal opposition in seconding the remarks of the Prime Minister, and I am sure I can also presume to speak for the veterans of two world wars and of the Korean war in acknowledging the recognition paid to them this morning by the Prime Minister.

Remembrance Day

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, obviously no one can say enough about the bravery and sacrifices of Canadian men and women in the first world war which ended 50 years ago, and their sacrifices in the war which ended 23 years ago. Our tribute to them is deep and humble.

I want to suggest that it is not enough merely to recognize that war is the ultimate in folly. If I may make a personal reference, I was five years old when the first world war broke out. I was living in a little village in eastern Europe. During that war it was sufficient for my family and others to avoid the consequences of the fighting by hiding in a cellar. That was no longer sufficient in the second world holocaust, and if another war should come there will be no place which will be safe for any human being.

I suggest that when we as parliamentarians pay heartfelt deep tribute for the sacrifice of the men and women in the wars of this century which enables us to continue to live in democratic freedom, we as parliamentarians should remember that war is not something that happens; war is the result of imperfect political action, and of the failure of political leaders. The first world war was the result of political and economic rivalry. The second was a result of the failure of the world to understand the dangers of nazism and the fact that Hitler received support from high places in many parts of the world.

I urge, Mr. Speaker, that as we pay tribute to our dead in the world wars of this century we look carefully at the political international situation today, in which we have pursued policies which may well lead not merely to another war but to the total destruction of humanity.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the right hon. Prime Minister for having sent me, this morning, a copy of the statement he has just made. However, I regret one thing: that I received an English copy while I should have preferred a copy of the French version.

In any event, I echo the words of the right hon. Prime Minister to the effect that wars have never solved anything and constitute "The height of absurdity". If only peoples and their leaders could convince themselves of this. Let us pay tribute to all those Canadians who sacrificed themselves for their country and let us hope that wars will forever be banished by all the peoples of the world. The atomic age can destroy the universe or enable it to grow and prosper. Everyone wants peace, and it is our duty, as responsible parliamentarians, to achieve a just and lasting peace, within our country as well as abroad.

Mr. Gérard Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege merely to point out that the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) forgot to mention that the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) is also a veteran of the first world war and that he is now representing the parliament of Canada at the ceremonies taking place in Mons, Belgium, to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the first world war.

[English]

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I am greatly indebted to the hon. member for bringing this to the attention of the house, and I very much regret the oversight.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUSPENSION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR THIS DAY

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, because of the continued interest of hon. members in the budget debate, and in view of the fact that but for another arrangement we would have a private members' hour this day from five o'clock to six o'clock, I wonder whether there might be a general disposition in the house to waive the private members' hour today. Perhaps the house might be agreeable to an order to that effect at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

EXTERNAL AID

NIGERIA—PROVISION OF CARIBOU AIRCRAFT FOR RELIEF FLIGHTS

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I stated in the house on Monday of this week that one of the subjects which Professor Head had discussed with General Gowon was the most effective form of assistance which Canada might offer Nigeria respecting the distribution of relief supplies in federal territory. I said these discussions were being pursued on an official level and that I hoped to make a further statement shortly.

I wish to say today that we have now concluded an agreement to make two Canadian Caribou aircraft available through the Canadian Red Cross to the Nigerian Red Cross for the distribution of relief supplies in federal territory. Because of the short range of the Caribou and navigational problems encountered in ferrying them the great distance involved, this operation is a complicated one, and I am informed they cannot be on the ground in Lagos for some 14 days.

It is the intention of the government to recall the Hercules aircraft now at Lagos which has been unable to operate because of the poor condition of the forward airstrips, a condition which will not hinder the operation of the lighter Caribou aircraft.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONSIDERATION OF COMMITTEE REPORT RESPECTING PENSIONS OF SUPERANNUATED CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of standing order 42 to ask the house to agree to a motion to take care of a technical point. Perhaps I might read standing order 42, which is as follows:

A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the house without notice having been given under standing order 41.

• (11:20 a.m.)

Because my motion relates to the technicality of making it possible to deal in this session of parliament with a report presented in a previous session, indeed in a previous parliament, may I draw the attention of Your Honour and the house to citation 320, subparagraph 3, of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

As to the report of a committee presented during a previous session, motion must first be made that it be considered during the current session, and, if such a motion is carried, the house may appoint a day for consideration of the report.

I should also like to draw Your Honour's attention to a Speaker's decision on this point which is to be found on page 694 of Beauchesne's third edition, which was a decision given on March 3, 1938, that it was in order to move a motion for the house at its current session to deal with a report that had been presented in an earlier session.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) suggested that there was a technical problem in dealing in this session with the report of the special joint committee on the public service of Canada which had to do with the pensions of retired civil servants and which was presented to the House of Commons on May 8, 1967. I therefore ask the consent of the house to move a purely procedural motion. It is not my intention to debate it. It seeks consideration at a later time in the session, and the question of when that will be done can be negotiated. But it would seem to me that all members of the house would be willing to take care of this technicality so that some time during this session we could deal with the ninth report of the special joint committee which was made on May 8, 1967.

I may say that my leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), is of course prepared to second this motion, but he would be quite happy to give way if the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) or the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) would like to be associated with it. Therefore I ask leave to move:

That the ninth report of the special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the public service of Canada, presented to the House of Commons on May 8, 1967, be considered by this house during the present session of parliament.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would take issue with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that there have not been and will not be opportunities to deal with this report during the current session. There are, in fact, opportunities to deal with it at the present time under the budget debate. Therefore I would indicate there would not be unanimous consent this morning.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How kind you are to the retired civil servants.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege may I be permitted to ask the President of the Privy Council whether he understands the situation. Is he not aware that yesterday the Minister of Finance said there was a technical difficulty in concurring in this session in a report that was presented in a previous session? This motion does not seek that concurrence; we cannot do both things in one step. My motion merely asks that we cover the point raised yesterday by the Minister of Finance, and that we make sure that we have the right to consider in this session a report that was presented in a previous session. In other words I am seeking to overcome the technical difficulty raised by the Minister of Finance, and I urge the President of the Privy Council not to press his objection.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is really a question of there being any technical difficulty in the way of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre dealing with this question, because obviously there are plenty of opportunities for doing so. I do not concur in his suggestion that we follow this procedure.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask whether hon. members realize that under standing order 42, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, we require unanimous consent. As there is not unanimity at the moment, we cannot proceed further and there should be no debate on the question.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—INCOMPLETE REPLY TO MOTION FOR PAPERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I dislike doing so, but the recent trend in the answering of questions by the government with a cavalier disregard of the rights of parliament demands that I refer to the return which was brought in the other day to question No. 174 (a) in connection with the Company of Young Canadians.

I asked therein for the names, addresses and amounts paid to each of the recipients of such payments. Several pages of information were given on the amounts and the names of the individuals, but strangely enough the addresses were not given, only the names of the cities, towns or villages where these particular recipients live. When it is realized that according to the return some $30,000 was paid to chartered accountants to examine the accounts of the Young Canadians, it is obvious that it is an imperative necessity that the addresses be given, otherwise this is simply a hodgepodge of names, and it would take an eternity to find out whether these people in fact received the amounts which they allegedly received, and I have no information in that connection.

We are entitled to addresses of recipients. The motion was passed by the house, and to provide a document like this with a list of names of recipients, giving cities and towns without giving the addresses is a flagrant abuse of the rights of the house.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the rather colourful language of the hon. gentleman in referring to this matter. Every effort is made to provide the information requested. If the addresses are available they will certainly be provided. I would be prepared to inquire from my colleague the Secretary of State to see whether he can provide the information. But obviously if the information is not available or not available in any systematic form, then it cannot be provided.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I say in answer to the hon. gentleman that I am sure the addresses must have been available; otherwise the cheques in payment could not have been sent to the recipients.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps the hon. member should bear in mind the nature of the operations of some of these young volunteers, and the fact that in many of the communities they worked on a transient basis. All I can say is that perhaps the addresses are available. I am prepared to make inquiries, but I do not accept the hon. gentleman's epithets.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I point out that we are not in the question period at this time. I understand the hon. member wishes to ask a supplementary question concerning the matter raised by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. However, I understand from the President of the Privy Council that he is making inquiries to give effect to the request made by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. Perhaps the matter should be allowed to rest there.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege following the question of privilege put by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council if he would consult the Minister of National Revenue.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN POSITION AS TO ADMISSION OF RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Was Canada one of the 15 member states of the United Nations which sought acceptance of the credentials of the People's Republic of China rather than the nationalist government of China as a member of the security council yesterday?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would have to take that question as notice. I am not quite sure I understood. Was Canada one of the nations which—?

Mr. Fairweather: I am not trilingual, but I will try again. Was Canada one of the 15 states of the United Nations which sought acceptance of the credentials of the People's Republic of China rather than the nationalist Chinese government as a member of the security council?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot answer that, Mr. Speaker, but I can inquire. I can also tell the hon. member that our position on the admission of the People's Republic of China to the United Nations has not changed. We are pursuing our studies toward seeking a way in which we might establish relations with the government of Peking, and until I have reported to the house on that we do not contemplate changing our position in the United Nations.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the government to abstain from voting on the acceptance of the credentials of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations or to vote against acceptance of those credentials?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the general resolution which comes before the United Nations we will take the usual position of abstaining. This, I believe, is what is called the Albanian resolution which links the admission of the People's Republic of China with the exclusion of Taiwan in ways which we do not approve at this stage. There are other resolutions on which we will take a position which will indicate we are not hostile toward seeking a solution whereby eventually the People's Republic of China can be admitted to the United Nations. Our concern is that the government of Taiwan not be disregarded in the process.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): I have a question, Mr. Speaker, which is actually a related question. I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if it is true that wheat board delegates are present today in Canton, China.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Egmont.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Since the Prime Minister is enunciating government policy with regard to mainland China, will he say whether definite contacts have been made with that government with regard to their recognition in the United Nations and our own diplomatic relationship with them?

Mr. Trudeau: This question of whether we should or could establish diplomatic relations with Peking is a complex and difficult one. I would rather not report on the various stages of progress or lack of progress until a more definite stage has been reached by the government.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): The Prime Minister has given a rather clear statement today regarding the attitude of the government in this connection. I should like to ask him whether it is the intention of the government, providing it gives recognition to communist China, to assure that the nationalist government of Taiwan shall continue to be a member of the United Nations and shall be protected against any aggressive action on the part of the communist régime of Peking.

Mr. Trudeau: As I said in my previous answer, Mr. Speaker, we do want to take into account the fact that there is a separate government in Taiwan, one with which we have enjoyed good relations in the past. The procedure which will be followed in the United Nations is, of course, one which can only be determined by a majority of the members there. It is our intention, as I indicated earlier, to further our study to establish relations with Peking. I can only report the outcome of that at a later stage. Of course our conduct in the United Nations will be dependent on the progress of our bilateral endeavours.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the Prime Minister answer one question that he did not answer? Will any action be predicated upon preserving the nationalist government of Taiwan, which has stood for freedom throughout the years, to assure that it shall not be placed in jeopardy as a result of action taken by the government of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: I should say that the intentions of the Canadian government toward the government of Taiwan are in no sense hostile; they are friendly.

[Later:]

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of his observations a few moments ago in regard to the good relations enjoyed between Canada and the government of Taiwan, is it now the intention of the government to set up some form of diplomatic representation in Taiwan?

Mr. Trudeau: We do have diplomatic representation with the government in Taiwan, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Forrestall: Why don't you brush up and find out what is going on in the world?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO PROTESTS RESPECTING RECLASSIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): If I may change the subject, Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Has he received protests from the various public service organizations over the continuation of the widespread reclassification of public servants, resulting in the red circling of thousands of positions which deprives the holders of those positions of increases which have been negotiated? If he has received such protests, what are the intentions of the government with regard to the continuation of this practice?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I think the house is aware, Mr. Speaker, that this process of reclassification has been going on for almost three years now. It has resulted in a great many changes in a very complex system and is now largely completed. It would be a mistake at this juncture, I think, to try to reverse the process. I can assure the hon. gentleman that sympathetic consideration is being given to the difficulties, the anachronisms and in some cases the injustices which arise in this process.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that this continuing reclassification has eaten into the bargaining units which have been established by the public service staff relations board, and in view of the fact that the result is in conflict with decisions made in negotiations for a collective agreement, will Treasury Board reconsider the application of red circling to employees covered by collective agreements and since red circled?

Mr. Drury: I am not quite sure of the significance of the hon. gentleman's question. Red circling and the transfer from one bargaining unit to another as a consequence of reclassification I do not think are necessarily connected. I will try to make inquiries so that I understand better what the hon. gentleman is driving at.

[Translation]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

EFFECTIVENESS OF NORTH AMERICAN RADAR DEFENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention yesterday to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, but as the schedule of attendance showed that he would be absent, I put it aside until taday. Now, I note that the minister is probably attending to very important matters, so I will have to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. I also wonder whether it would not be appropriate to rectify the attendance roster of ministers, as it seems we cannot rely on it.

My question relates to a photograph of a soviet bomb in orbit, taken by the Cold Lake observation centre. Can the minister assure the house that the North American radar defence system is still efficient?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, following the remarks made by the hon. member, I must point out to him that the Minister of National Defence was not scheduled to be in the house yesterday or today, but that he will be here next week.

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Speaker, according to our information, the minister was supposed to be here this morning.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Dumont: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Is the government not afraid that bombs coming from the south might not be detected by our long radar network in the north?

Mr. Trudeau: The list is not up to date.

[English]

FINANCE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON COMMONWEALTH COMPANY GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister please inquire into and then make a statement to the house on the financial operations of the Commonwealth group of companies in British Columbia, and the possible loss by certificate holders and other investors in this particular group?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already made inquiries in this connection. The Commonwealth Trust Company in Vancouver is not, I believe, subject to the receiving order. The Commonwealth Trust Company is covered by the C.D.I.C., so its depositors are quite safe. The other companies involved are provincially incorporated companies that are not covered by the C.D.I.C. I have asked for further information as to what is happening in this regard, though I might mention that it is not the responsibility of the federal government.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While admitting that particular aspect of the matter, I wonder whether, in the light of reports that investigations may have originated in February and May 1968, the minister would advise the house if the Superintendent of Insurance acted under his authority under the deposit insurance act and carried out investigations in the interval.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the insurance department has been looking at this particular matter. As a matter of fact the superintendent reported to me, at the time the receiving order was issued in connection with the other companies, that the company in which we had an interest since it is insured by the C.D.I.C. was not involved.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should take this opportunity to point out that the Commonwealth Trust Company in Vancouver is not related to companies in other parts of Canada operating under the same name. I say that just so there will not be any misunderstanding.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A further supplementary question. The minister has referred to the receiving order. Was this the receiving order that was passed at the same time the order in council was passed, either in February or May, or was it passed during the last few days?

Mr. Benson: This was a recent action, Mr. Speaker, taken in British Columbia. A receiving order was issued against a group of companies related to the Commonwealth Trust Company. No receiving order was issued against Commonwealth Trust, the company in which we had a prime interest, because its depositors are insured under C.D.I.C.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the absence of the Solicitor General perhaps the Minister of Finance could inform the house whether the regional office of the bankruptcy division in Vancouver is inquiring into this matter.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I really am not informed as to this matter, but I will take it up with my colleague and answer later.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

REPORTED STATEMENTS RESPECTING CANADIAN IMMIGRATION POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It arises from a statement made at the current Commonwealth Parliamentary Association conference to the effect that Canada's immigration policy is wicked and disgraceful and that Canadians accept only skilled and talented immigrants and practise colour discrimination.

Could the Prime Minister say whether the government has forwarded any instructions to the leader of the Canadian delegation at the conference to assure the conference that Canada will not allow such a policy as described by the attorney general of Jamaica? If the government has not sent any instructions to the head of our delegation, Mr. Speaker, is it intending to do so?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will make inquiries, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the statement made at the Commonwealth conference would the government reconsider its plans to remove the reciprocal privileges extended to Commonwealth immigrants, a step that would increase discrimination against immigrants from the West Indies?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Trudeau: I will make inquiries about that too, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO MISSION TO RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who normally undertakes to be present in the house this day. In his absence I would direct it to the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, who is acting minister of trade and commerce and who also normally undertakes to be present in the house this day. However, in his absence I will direct it to the President of the Treasury Board who is second acting minister of trade and commerce, as shown in Hansard for October 21.

Will the minister investigate statements made by the trade commissioner in Hong Kong and wheat board officials that a mission is negotiating a wheat sale to China, in view of statements made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister without Portfolio in this house to the effect that it would not be in the public interest to make comments respecting what negotiations are in progress? When will the house be given access to information about what is happening?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. gentleman for his somewhat lengthy recital of the procedures of the house. However, I would draw to his attention that the practice does not provide for ministers to be present but for departments to account for themselves.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Drury: In reply to the hon. gentleman's question, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister without Portfolio have both said that it would not be in the public interest to disclose negotiations in progress. I think this is still true. Indeed, the published reports do not relate to the conduct or content of the negotiations but merely to the fact that they are in progress and who is participating. I repeat that two commissioners of the wheat board are currently in mainland China conducting such negotiations.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Mr. Burton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the President of the Treasury Board aware that some of the inquiries made previously in this house were exactly on the subject referred to by the officials, as stated in my question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROVISION OF SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): My question is for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Is the government considering the establishment of a national program for summer employment of university students, as recommended at the meeting of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada this week?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe this matter would come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Perhaps the hon. member would want to ask him.

Mr. Yewchuk: A supplementary question. In view of the prediction by the president of the university and college planning association that Canadian university students face another very bleak employment situation next summer, has the government launched any special studies of the student employment problem?

Mr. Trudeau: The same answer, Mr. Speaker, but even more so.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

QUEBEC—COVERAGE GIVEN TO POLITICAL PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell us whether he will invite the C.B.C. to set up a fair policy concerning the use and allotment of broadcasting time to political, non-political or other movements?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a question for the Secretary of State.

[Later:]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In reply to a question I put to him a while ago concerning the C.B.C., the right hon. Prime Minister said that it came under the Secretary of State. On the other hand, yesterday, as reported on page 2532 of Hansard, the Secretary of State said that this matter did not come within his jurisdiction.

I wonder, therefore, who is answerable for this matter and whether we stand a chance of getting a reply?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING ADOPTION OF BIAFRAN ORPHANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is directed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask, further to questions asked on October 28 and November 5 by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East, if he could indicate to the house whether he has had any correspondence, in particular from associations, regarding orphans in Biafra.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there has been some correspondence, and I am replying in a general way to the effect that adoption is, of course, a matter under provincial jurisdiction and that we are in no position to infringe upon that jurisdiction but would be prepared, if adoption is arranged through the proper channels, to make space vacant in our aircraft available to anyone who might be adopted in these circumstances.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): The arrival of children from Biafra does not necessarily depend on their being adopted legally under provincial jurisdiction. May I ask the Prime Minister what if anything the government is doing to encourage the bringing of such children to Canada, whether or not they are being legally adopted under provincial laws.

Mr. Trudeau: The government is not doing anything to bring children to Canada. The federal government is not equipped to look after children after they come to Canada. If they came to Canada they would have to be adopted or cared for by institutions or by families under provincial laws. What the government intends doing in this event is to cooperate with provincial authorities or private individuals who may wish to seek our assistance in providing transportation.

Mr. Lewis: I am trying to avoid an argument, but I might say to the Prime Minister briefly that I am drawing his attention to the fact that it is possible—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member ask his question, if he has one?

Mr. Lewis: —for people or organizations to bring children here without adoption. I am asking whether such persons who desire to bring children to Canada and take care of them—and this does not come under any particular jurisdiction—are being given any encouragement by the government.

Mr. Trudeau: I answered the question in the context of adoption because that is how it was asked. If institutions or families want to take care of children from Biafra, and if we can assist in any way through our immigration department we shall do so. But I want to make it clear that the initiative does not lie with the federal government but with the organizations, groups or families which would want to take into their homes, houses or institutions, children from Biafra.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Are we to understand that the government is now prepared to relax the immigration laws in order that admittance may be expedited as far as refugees from Biafra are concerned?

Mr. Trudeau: I will take this up with the minister. I am sure that in circumstances where this would be necessary we would consider doing it.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether any contacts have been made with Biafran authorities with regard to the bringing of children or others from that country to this?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. We have not had, nor do we intend to have, any contact with the Biafran authorities.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): My question is for the Prime Minister. Will officials of the Department of Public Works and of the National Capital Commission be acting as technical advisers to a parliamentary caucus being established by Liberal members from eastern Ontario, as announced by the Minister of Justice?

May I ask the question in another way. Would the Prime Minister assure the house that no public servants will be suborned to the use of any private group such as a parliamentary caucus of the kind announced?

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question. It may be easier on the Prime Minister if he would check the statement emanating from the Minister of Justice and then inform the house just who is in charge of patronage in Ottawa.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. Having in mind the fact that last week the minister found it impossible to give the house the number of defeated Liberal candidates who had been appointed to the judiciary or to other offices, would he not find it easier to give us the number of defeated Liberal candidates who have not been so appointed?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED INTENTION TO ESTABLISH OUTSIDE ADVISORY GROUPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My question is to the Prime Minister. In view of the potentially serious effect on our system of parliamentary government of the right hon. gentleman's decision to establish a series of regional offices and a body of 150 extraparliamentary advisers, would the Prime Minister at an early date make a statement on motions as to the duties and responsibilities of these new groups? More specifically, how would their existence affect the traditional functions of the Prime Minister and members of parliament?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will inquire into this, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES OPTING OUT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance with reference to the province of Alberta. Has Dr. Rose, Minister of Health, objected to the federal government opting out of the medicare arrangements, and has the provincial government asked that when the federal government does opt out, the amount of money contributed by the federal government should be compensated for by way of equalization payments?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I do not think there has been any such direct representation to me at this point.

Mr. Woolliams: Is there any agreement with Alberta that when the federal government does opt out, the amount which was being paid by the federal government would then be assigned to the province of Alberta to help pay for the service?

Mr. Benson: The province of Alberta is not in medicare at the present time; I do not know why the hon. member is talking about getting out. In any case, the general conditions under which we would turn the service over have been made quite clear in the house, I believe. If the hon. member requires further clarification I would be pleased to send him a copy of the statement I made to the federal-provincial meeting in this regard and a copy of the statement to the house of the minister of finance in 1966.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate that Alberta is not in the scheme. The question I should like to put is this. Is it not a condition that provided the federal government would take over financial responsibility as agreed, the provinces, including Alberta, would come into the plan? Is Alberta being promised that if the province comes in, when the federal government opts out the amount of the federal contribution would then be assigned to the province?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is repeating the question he asked in the first instance. If he is not, I would have to rule that the first supplementary question, asking for an interpretation of a statute, is out of order, and that the second is hypothetical.

Mr. Woolliams: It is not a repetition of what I asked earlier.

Mr. Speaker: I accept the hon. member's statement. Order. Would the hon. member resume his seat? I accept the hon. member's statement that it is not a repetition but I have to rule that the question as asked is not in order.

Mr. Woolliams: May I rephrase the question, then. Is there a suggested agreement with Alberta that if the province of Alberta comes into medicare, when the federal government opts out the amount of money which would be paid by the federal government in reference to the plan would then be assigned to the province of Alberta?

Mr. Benson: There is no agreement with individual provinces, but if the hon. member looks at the medicare legislation and the speech made by the minister of finance when the measure was before the house he will find the general conditions under which, ultimately, we would turn medicare over to the provinces.

It has been made quite clear that we would continue to fulfil the obligation we have to the provinces, first through the transferring of taxation powers, by making up the differential in their cost during a transitional period, and then by means of an ultimate settlement when the provinces take over. So it is quite wrong to say we shall have pulled the rug out from under the provinces, as some have said. There is no intention of doing that. If the hon. member will look at the offer of 17 tax points made in the statement, a copy of which I will send to him, he will see that we are not pulling any rugs out. We want to pay full compensation to the provinces, but we think ultimately it is better for people to administer programs directly rather than having to deal, as it were, with 50 cent dollars. The people who have control over a program should have the taxing power to cover it.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): As a supplementary question arising out of that answer, Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to say whether the federal government can get away with paying anything less than 50 per cent of the cost of medicare to any one province without having to change the act.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, we have no intention of paying less than 50 per cent of the cost of medicare to the provinces. I think we have made that quite clear. The ultimate settlement would make clear that we are simply transferring taxing power to the provincial jurisdictions under whose control the programs are so that they can have better control of the programs and yet not lose anything they formally received from the federal government.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the answer to this question will be very simple. As there are still Canadians who believe there should not be taxation without representation I would ask the government to say whether in respect of the 2 per cent surtax being imposed on the people of a province that does not enter medicare there will be a refund to the taxpayers of that province.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I have quite clearly said that this tax has been imposed, along with a great many other taxes in the budget—

An hon. Member: You can say that again.

Mr. Benson: —including the tax on insurance companies and banks and various other charges, in order to meet the financial requirements of the federal government. The social development tax was needed in order to cover the increasing cost of several programs. For example, we are now putting $650 million a year—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: —into hospitalization.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that we are now getting into the budget debate, which I understand the house will resume in just a few moments.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to those dealing with medicare to direct to the Minister of Finance. Has the government any plans to bring Canadians living in the Yukon and Northwest Territories into the scheme and, if so, can he assure the house that they will be in the scheme before the federal government gets out of it?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, it is our hope that all the people of Canada will be taken care of under this scheme, and this of course would include the people of the Northwest and Yukon Territories, whom we consider very valuable citizens of Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: I thank the minister for his kind reference, but can he say when it is the government's intention to bring the citizens of these territories into the scheme?

Mr. Benson: I would have to take up this question with the Minister of National Health and Welfare who looks after the coming into the program of the various parts of Canada. I will raise my hon. friend's question with him and obtain an answer to it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DRUGS—REPORT BY QUEBEC HEALTH MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the various acting ministers of national health and welfare and in order to give the parliamentary secretary something to do may I direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Was the expected report from the minister of health of the province of Quebec relating to drug abuses, which was to have been provided to the recent federal-provincial conference of health ministers, received and, if so, will it be made public or tabled in this house?

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

VANCOUVER—REPORTED SALES OF SWEDISH ABORTION PILL

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of press reports that a Swedish-made abortion pill is now being sold in Vancouver, is the minister investigating this reported illegal traffic?

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will also take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

EFFECT OF INCREASED AGRICULTURAL IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson).

In view of the fact that the changes in the tariffs on certain goods exported to the United States have led them in turn to announce larger exports of meat products of all kinds to Canada, can the minister tell us what steps his department is contemplating to cope with the probable economic effects of the American exports?

[Mr. Benson.]

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would give me specific details of which products he has in mind I would be prepared to give him an answer in regard to those products.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO DEFERMENT OF URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio. Was the decision to defer urban renewal projects reached after consultation with the provinces and municipalities, or without consultation?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into that and report later. I do not have the answer at the moment.

UNITED NATIONS

PROPOSED COMMITTEE ON REGULATION OF OCEAN FLOORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether the hon. member for Don Valley, when speaking at the United Nations, was stating government policy when he said that Canada favoured setting up a standing UN committee on the problem of regulation of the ocean floors?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think the rules allow the form of question asked by the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Perhaps I could rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask not only whether it is the intention of the government to support a measure setting up a UN committee on the regulation of ocean floors, but whether the government has taken a position with regard to the sovereignty that is involved and whether certain benefits might accrue to the United Nations itself.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The question is under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONSIDERATION OF COMMITTEE REPORT RESPECTING PENSIONS OF SUPERANNUATED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as government house leader. In view of the minister's statement earlier today that there will be opportunities at this session to consider the report of the joint committee that had to do with the pensions of retired civil servants, will he discuss with those of us who are house leaders the arranging of one of those opportunities at an early date?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I would be glad to discuss this, Mr. Speaker, along with the general forward movement of government business.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): As a supplementary question, would the government house leader take note of the fact that if his hard heart would soften this party would be agreeable to give unanimous consent to the request of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the same spirit of co-operation from the hon. member's party on all matters.

AIRPORTS

STUDY OF REPORTED SHORTAGE OF HANGAR SPACE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question has to do with civil aviation and is directed to the Minister without Portfolio. Is a study under way at the present time or will a study be made soon into the problem of shortage of hangar space at most airports in Canada, particularly at Winnipeg?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think this question should be placed on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH VIET NAM—ATTENDANCE AT PARIS PEACE TALKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, a couple of days ago I asked a question of the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the giving of encouragement to South Viet Nam to participate in the Paris peace talks. Is he prepared to make a statement at this time?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Not at this time, Mr. Speaker, but next week.

GRAIN

REPORTED SALES NOT UNDER WHEAT BOARD REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of recent reports that grain in large amounts, reportedly as much as 2 million bushels, has been moving illegally and contrary to wheat board regulations across interprovincial boundaries, has the minister taken any action to investigate these allegations or is any action proposed in the near future?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the wheat board has been looking into this matter and as soon as we get a report from them I will be glad to make a report to the house.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Thursday, November 7, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying, "Would that mine enemy would write a book." I do not consider that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is mine enemy because I have rather a strong liking for him—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winch: —except for his politics, and I mean his present politics.

The Prime Minister has either written or collaborated in the writing of a number of books. I desire to refer to one in which he collaborated. I do so because of what we have read and heard about the recent dominion-provincial conferences involving the premiers, the Prime Minister, and other ministers of the crown. It seems completely obvious, as a result of the presentation made at those conferences by ministers of the federal government, that there has not been a feeling of consultation, co-operation or compromise, with the result that the provincial premiers and ministers have returned to their homes and their legislative halls with strong feelings of disappointment, disillusionment and heartbreak. I think that is fairly obvious. The result is that the first conferences held by this new government and its ministers under the leadership of the new Prime Minister have perhaps done more in the past few days and weeks to destroy any growth and understanding of federalism and national unity than what has occurred over a period of years.

I am interested in this particular phase of the development and appearance of the federal government at these conferences because of the different approach, views and ideology of the present Prime Minister from those he held when he was not a member of this house and did not hold the high office of Prime Minister. I refer to the years 1958-61 when the present Prime Minister, myself, David Lewis, Professor Frank Scott, Professor Michael Oliver of McGill University, Professor Grube of Toronto, Professor Jamieson of the University of British Columbia and Dr. Eugene Forsey, research director of the Canadian Labour Congress, were members of an editorial board charged with the drafting of a book "The Socialist Analysis of the Future of Canada". The book was published in 1961 and was called "Social Purpose For Canada". In this book—and this is marvellously coincidental with the approach of this government at the recent conferences in Ottawa—there is a chapter headed "Practice and Theory of Federalism". The author is Pierre-Elliott Trudeau.

I think the house would be most interested in the views and the ideology of the federalism that is Canada in the written word and in the government's attitude and actions in doing everything possible to break real federalism by means of the presentation of a fait accompli to the provincial premiers and their other ministers just a few days ago. I believe Hansard should have on record what the present Prime Minister wrote when he was jointly responsible with these other socialists for preparing a work on what is required for national unity and federalism in Canada. Just in case some hon. members might think I would take quotations out of context I will give the page numbers so that they will be able to find them. They are indeed interesting, Mr. Speaker. As found on page 381, Pierre-Elliott Trudeau said:

> From the foregoing analysis of the B.N.A. Act it is obvious that intergovernmental co-operation is not only possible but that it is in many ways constitutionally indispensable.

At page 385 we find these words:

> And since the future of Canadian federalism lies clearly in the direction of co-operation, the wise socialist will turn his thoughts in that direction, keeping in mind the importance of establishing buffer zones of joint sovereignty and co-operative zones of joint administration between the two levels of government.

Again, at page 389:

> Consequently the economic aspects of socialist theory might be a guide towards a more efficient distribution of powers under the constitution.

At page 389 we find the following:

> Consequently, in such matters—

Oh, this is a honey when we recall the meetings of these past few days and the government's presentation of hard of heart fait accompli—"This is it; take it or lump it."

> —there is no reason to presume that the federal government will be more enlightened than the sum of the provincial governments, or even than one provincial government acting alone.

This most important view of Pierre-Elliott Trudeau was completely negated when ministers of the government of which he is Prime Minister met with the provinces a few days ago. I should like to refer to one more quotation which appears at page 392:

> The basis of a socialist critique is to state clearly what the provincial governments can do and fail to do, and what the federal government can do and does not do, each within its respective jurisdiction.

• (12:20 p.m.)

We are being forced, in view of the policies and attitudes of this present government and in view of the budget now before us, to place on the record not what the Prime Minister of Canada has said but what Pierre-Elliott Trudeau has put down in writing about the basic fundamentals required for co-operative federalism and Canadian unity. There can be no doubt that a fait accompli was presented to the provinces.

We have had provincial conferences in the past and undoubtedly we will have more in the future. Let me say that as useful and as necessary as these conferences are, no matter how many are held they will not resolve the basic problems, difficulties and differences which exist in respect of the provincial and federal authorities. My opinion is that if we are to have a reasonable and sensible approach to these problems and differences there can and should be an understanding reached in the interests of the future of Canada, and we should convene a meeting of the representatives of federal, municipal and provincial governments as soon as possible. These representatives should meet as often as required in order to resolve these problems in the only conceivable way.

This can only be accomplished by a revision of the constitution whereby there is a clear line of demarcation between federal, provincial and municipal authority. As brilliant as the Fathers of Confederation were 101 years ago they could not foresee the problems of government and the demands of the people 101 years later. Nor could they possibly foresee that Canada would not have two levels of government but three—federal, provincial and municipal.

Temporary solutions may be found as a result of conferences. I should like to say it is my strong feeling that if we are realistic and sensible in our desire to resolve these problems we will exercise all the pressure we can on the government to adhere to the principle of bringing all levels of government together for as long as necessary to reach an understanding and a degree of co-operation in relation to the division of responsibility of the three levels of government, as well as fiscal jurisdiction. It is only when that has been accomplished that we will be in the position of knowing who is responsible in legislation and for taxation. Once this has been accomplished people will know which government is responsible for supplying necessary things. They will know the taxing powers of each level of government and which government must impose an extra tax to provide for certain demands. I feel this is a most important matter which has not been given proper consideration.

It is also my belief that if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is correct and there will be an over-all policy and change in federal fiscal arrangements and a balanced budget, which many of us doubt, then consideration should be given to at least making a step in that direction. I know the government is in grave fiscal difficulty now, and I think it will be next year, but it has long been my thought that this present generation as well as generations in the past have and are acting completely unethically. On a great many occasions we have passed on the responsibility for repayment to future generations not yet born. If I had the ability and the time I should like to make a study to see whether we have as yet paid for the Boer war.

What has been our fiscal policy? In the main it has been to borrow for 20, 25 or 40 years and then pass on the refunding responsibilities to an unborn generation. On an ethical basis, as far as it is possible, when we borrow under our authority we should not only make provisions for paying the interest but should accept a responsibility for setting aside annually an amount of money so that at the end of the borrowing period we can pay off that debt.

I realize there is a serious problem involved in this regard and we might have to be very tough and hard, but I honestly believe that if we are to be reasonable, ethical and moral parliamentarians it is time we made a start in this direction. We should accept our responsibility to repay the principal as well as the interest rather than carrying these debts for 25, 40 or 100 years hence. We should avoid building up this debt of interest and principal. This is a difficult problem but some thought should be given to taking at least a token step in this direction.

It was interesting to hear the Minister of Finance describe his difficulties during his speech the other night. He referred to the $600 million deficit this year and promised to have a balanced budget next year. He indicated that in this regard members of the House of Commons will not have very much success in respect of constituency or provincial matters which require money. He made it very clear that we can talk all we want but we will not get action. I can understand that coming from the minister but it seems to me it was not and is not necessary for him to say so.

This is perhaps the case because of the lack of planning on the part of the previous government and because of inefficiency in the past and present. The present and past governments have thrown millions of dollars down the drain instead of using this money for useful purposes. Several years ago the government decided to spend $32 million for the construction of a new airport terminal at Vancouver. The top echelon or top brass must have been aware of the transportation problem which would occur. If they did not know they were told by the members of parliament. We asked the government to do something about this but it did nothing. This wonderful $32 million airport terminal was opened. Nothing was done in respect of transportation facilities. What is to be done now? Within one year a two lane approach will have to be built over an arm of the Fraser River. By the end of 1972 we will require a four lane main artery highway from Vancouver to the airport. The government knew of this situation years ago but it did nothing about it. So now the citizens of Vancouver and others who travel will have to put up with the inconvenience and problem involved. In addition, it will cost the government 100 per cent more to do in the next three years what it should have planned three or four years ago.

This is a waste of public money. It is plain stupidity. This type of thing has been done many times. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not all. Let us consider another matter. This government cannot help members of the house to obtain those things which are of immediate necessity to their constituents, because they cost money. The money should be available with which to meet reasonable requests. It would be available if the government cleaned out its administrative house. What do I mean by that? I would love to see the public accounts committee really look into these questions.

There is supposed to be co-operation between departments. When equipment is not needed by one department but is needed by another, arrangements should be made so that the department needing it will have the use of it. Does the government do that? No, it does not. If a department no longer has need of a heavy piece of expensive equipment it is declared surplus, but until it is declared surplus another department that needs this piece of equipment should have the use of it. I could, if I had the time, give the house illustrations of what I mean. What does the government do in this situation? Because it has been declared surplus by one department the government takes the equipment away from the department that needs it and is using it, and sells it at a give-away price through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. I can give an example of this occurring in the Northwest Territories in the last month. Thousands of dollars went down the drain because of lack of co-operation between departments.

Then there is the question of alterations to buildings. Ye gods, the money the government has thrown down the drain in this way! If it happens in Vancouver, I guess it happens everywhere else. A building in Vancouver will be torn down in four of five years' time. The government makes alterations to a building, builds partitions and instals new lighting. Then one day, before anybody was moved in, it is decided that this is not what was wanted, so contractors, or government's staffs move in, tear down the partitions and lighting and do it all over again.

How many millions of dollars is the government pouring down the drain in this way? I wish the government would check the architects it uses. I know the construction industry and have a great many friends in that industry. I have many friends not just among the workers but also among the contractors. On most occasions the specifications call for a certain thing. Usually it is American; usually it costs twice as much as it could be purchased for in Canada, and the Canadian equipment would be just as efficient. But no, the architect specifies by name a certain piece of equipment, and Canadian taxpayers pay through the nose unnecessarily. This happens time after time.

I wish to bring another interesting matter to the attention of the house. It is right that cabinet ministers should travel across the country and examine departments and buildings under their control. This is very important if you are a new minister in a new government. But why is it, when a minister gives three weeks', four weeks' or two months' notice that he will be paying a visit to the departmental facilities across Canada that come under his jurisdiction, that overnight money is spent in painting and cleaning up buildings whether they need it or not. This is done to make everything just wonderful when the minister arrives.

About five weeks ago the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Jamieson) gave notice that he was going to pay a visit to the one and a half floors occupied by his department in the Queen's printer's building over in Hull. For the last three weeks—and this is not rumour; I have checked it—the painters have been working at night and on Saturdays, on overtime pay, to have it freshly painted for the minister when he arrives there next week, the week after or whenever it is.

An hon. Member: Look at the money the workers have to spend.

Mr. Winch: Look at the money the government is spending on a paint job that was not necessary. In addition, this is a comparatively new building. The air conditioning system was not working properly, so the government spent $1 million to fix it. Every year the government is building new departments, new floors or having new alignments made to floors. Every time a new office or department is required they put in not only new partitions but lower the ceilings. Why in the name of heaven does the ceiling have to be lowered every time a change is made? When you consider these matters you realize the money that is being wasted by the government and the millions of dollars that could be used to carry out necessary works now if the money had not been wasted.

A proper job should be carried out in respect of the interior harbour of Vancouver. The harbour commissioners know exactly what is the ultimate development of the inner harbour of Vancouver. It extends from Lion's Gate bridge all the way down to the city of Port Moody and takes in not only my riding but five others. The harbour commissioners know what is the largest ship that can use the channel; they know the dredging that has to be done, the private companies involved and what their problems are. They know what it will cost to develop the inner harbour at Vancouver. What is this government going to do? They will spend $1.5 million next year through public works to start the dredging, which will take two, three, four or five years, and the cost involved will be far greater than it would if the work were done today. What we need is planned action, not talk. The government should clean its administrative house.

An hon. Member: We haven't the money.

Mr. Winch: You can get it. Do not sell expensive equipment at give-away prices when another department needs it. Do not let a tenderer get this equipment from Crown Assets Disposal Corporation at give-away prices. Do not carry out unnecessary alterations, that is, do not make alterations until you know what is required. Do not spend thousands of dollars of the people's money—I put this figure at the minimum—because a minister is going to visit a building and it has to be painted before he arrives. This is the taxpayers' money that is being wasted. It should be used wisely and efficiently. If money were not wasted in this way, it would be available for all those things members require immediately in their constituencies.

The attitude of the Prime Minister and the cabinet as reflected in the budget should be changed. This budget is not based upon ability to pay but upon making the rich richer and the poor poorer. If reasonableness and common sense were applied to the problem, these things could be done. The Prime Minister should, with reasonableness and common sense, apply the principles he agreed upon as a socialist. If he were, as Prime Minister, to do this we could build greater national unity instead of the present disruption and destruction that are being caused by the policies of the government. Disruption and destruction are indicated in the planning and talk of this government. I wish, Mr. Speaker, I had longer to speak because I could take up another 30 minutes on this subject, but I see I have only 30 seconds left.

An hon. Member: Carry on.

Mr. Winch: If the house would allow me a further 30 minutes I would love to finish my speech. However, I know there will be further opportunities when I can give evidence of the injustices perpetrated in a so-called just society. I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, because my time is up, by saying to the Prime Minister and members of his party that we welcome his call for a just society. We believe in a just society. But we say, not with humility but with conviction, that you will never achieve a just society by talk. You will never achieve a just society by following unjust policies and practices. When this government demonstrates to the house that it means what it says it will receive 100 per cent support of all members of the New Democratic party.

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, in view of the budget speech of October 24 last, like Maurice Chevalier, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) could have sung the song so well interpreted by this artist: "Pay your debts". But today, this public debt singer tells us: "Pay your taxes". Therefore, a song entitled "Pay your taxes" will have to be written.

I remember this song by Madame Bolduc which could be heard so often in Quebec during the depression, and I shall quote a few sentences which I remember.

Ma chère, la vie est chère,
Pour s'régaler, qu'est-ce qu'on va faire?
La viande, c'est tout ce qu'on demande;
Le beurre et le riz sont hors de prix.
Taxes sur les allumettes,
Taxes sur les cigarettes,
Taxes sur les suçons et même
Sur les vieux garçons.

I think that, even in 1968, it would be timely to sing this song from the depression.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dumont: Everyone is looking at this financial magician who is going to perform a spectacular sleight-of-hand by making an egg come out of a hat. We are not told what kind of egg it will be, it may be good, it may be bad, it may be poor, it may be round or square, but you can rest assured that it will be an egg. That is it the trick is played right under our very eyes and the magician takes back his hat.

Mr. Speaker, our Minister of Finance makes beautiful speeches in an attempt to win the friendship of the Canadian people, but very seldom does he put himself in their place in order to better understand their problems. He is a foxy one who ignores the seriousness of the taxpayers' situation and who makes remarks in a loud voice.

Before I carry on with my remarks—since we are told that a speech cannot last more than thirty minutes—I should like to challenge a few remarks made by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain).

Yesterday, in his speech, he launched an attack against the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste (Mr. Caouette). First, I want to point out to him that he does not come up to the garter of the hon. member for Témiscamingue and he has not done a quarter of the work which the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste has done in Canada.

Mr. André Ouellet (Papineau): I do not think that the hon. member for Frontenac should talk about the most private underclothing of the hon. member for Témiscamingue by referring to his garters.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I was trying to check that myself. The hon. member has to address the house from his own seat.

[Translation]

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that the hon. member for Papineau misunderstood me; I was speaking of the garter of the hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

The hon. member also said: "I studied Social Credit and did not understand a thing".

Mr. Caouette: Yes; he is not bright enough for that.

[Mr. Dumont.]

Mr. Dumont: I am not surprised.

I shall never forget the words the late Maurice Duplessis—Mr. Duplessis came from Trois-Rivières, and doubtless the hon. member for that riding knew him—took pleasure in quoting: "Education is like liquor; some people cannot digest it." I feel those words apply very well to the member for Trois-Rivières. Besides, in the next elections, he will sing: "I only passed through that riding".

At this stage, I should like to stress another point which leaves 40-year old people quite puzzled. Those are the thoughts that came to my mind when looking at pages 1327 and 1328 of the 1950 House of Commons Debates. We are puzzled when we hear the high-sounding statements of the Minister of Finance because of the short-sightedness which really existed at that time, and still today I wonder whether the Minister of Finance does not behave in the same way.

As can be seen on pages 1327 and 1328 of the 1950 House of Commons Debates, the Canadian government was granting loans of $98.5 million to provincial and municipal governments, while granting interest-free loans of $2,028 million to the United Kingdom and other governments.

We can read the followng on page 1328:

Loan to the United Kingdom,

In 1950.

Loan to the United Kingdom under The United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946, $1,165.0 million.

—That is an increase of 120 per cent.

Advances under The Export Credits Insurance Act, Part II, $523.5 million.

In short, loans amounting to $2,028 million were granted in 1949-50, and everyone knows that afterwards, the government under the right hon. Louis St. Laurent even exempted the United Kingdom from the obligation of repaying its debts.

Because of this want of foresight on the part of our administrators in the 1950s, those whose responsibility it is to govern the country today have to live with those past mistakes. However, the lesson those years taught us leads us to think that the same mistakes are being made today and that is why, at our age, we are asking ourselves whether Canada is taking the direction it should.

I should also like to point out that we, in this corner of the house, have repeated time and again, and the leader of the Ralliement

Créditiste (Mr. Caouette) said it again last night, that we want to see the end of the debt system whereby the banks create all the credit by fixing the interest rate for the country.

I ask the Minister of Finance to consider carefully the example I shall now give him. A few years ago, the Minister of Finance of the comparatively small country of New Zealand, through the national bank of that country, created 50 million pounds sterling free of debt or interest for use by the government. As Minister of Finance, he found a way of lending the farmers of his country money at an annual interest rate of 1 per cent.

If the Minister of Finance would follow that example today, these same loans could help all Canadian citizens who want to have their own home, their own house and their own heritage. Instead, everything is continually being taken away from them through excessive interest rates.

That article said that one of the worst things that can happen to a farmer or to a home owner is to have to buy a quantity of goods on time or to build a house and have to pay an excessive interest rate.

If we really want to help our people, those are sectors where we could be useful. What was good for New Zealand can surely be good for Canada, for this prosperous Canada of ours, at the present time, is certainly not short of production.

I have here an article published recently in a newspaper; it is entitled: "Crisis: too much wheat"

What are the Créditistes asking? That money be based on production. The wheat is there and the slip of paper should be made out to correspond to the production: $68 billion worth of production, $68 billion in money. Then the Minister of Finance would be able to find the money needed to manage the country properly.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Speaking of "Crisis: too much wheat" here are the figures, and I quote textually:

> We are stuck, so to speak,—
>
> For the year 1968
> —with 664 million bushels.

And so, in spite of such abundance, Canada is heading for disaster because there is too much wheat. And the article continues:

> But there is worse. India and Pakistan have managed, this year, through some miracle or other, to have bumper crops. The enthusiasm is such that the leaders have gone as far as to say that in the near future their country will no longer import wheat. Australia and France are offering wheat at a lower price than we are, and for a long time now Argentina has had a foothold in just about all the markets of the world. Our customers, China and Russia, have not made a move yet but, as we know, our competitors are going out of their way to tear those two markets away from us.

I find it inconceivable that in 1968, when far-away places can be reached in record time, that it has not yet been possible to establish a financial system which would make that wealth available to the needy by converting it into the sums of money required. And this is exactly what is tremendously wrong with a system which the Minister of Finance continues to uphold. The system is outdated in this era of progress of 1968 and some means must be found at all costs to distribute that wealth to everyone.

Another example which I would like to give in this criticism of the budget speech deals with the taxes levied, especially on life insurance companies. The newspaper Le Droit pointed out that the raise amounted to 3,000 per cent.

I would not object to the taxation of some companies with head offices in England, in the United States or in some other countries and which opened branches here in Canada. I am talking in particular of British insurance companies who, because we are members of the Commonwealth, did not have to pay taxes in Canada. I would not object to the taxation of those companies in order to put an end to their illegal competition with our own companies. The main point I wish to make is that by attacking our insurance cooperatives and our French-Canadian mutual insurance companies in Quebec the minister is going against our aim in Quebec, which is to become more and more the masters of our own economy.

For eighteen years, I personally have helped to establish a French-Canadian mutual insurance company, by making sacrifices, fighting against the magnates of finance, namely the Prudential Company of London and the Standard Life Company. By making sacrifices, we managed to establish cooperative organizations which allow for the distribution of profits.

Thus, profits go back to the individual. Besides, I have in my hand an article which establishes who buys life insurance. I will quote it word for word in order to show that in fact it is not the companies which are taxed but rather the individual. Here it is:

> Who buys life insurance? Studies undertaken in these last few years have established that Ontario and Quebec hold first place among the Canadian provinces for the amount of insurance in force per capita. The Canadian average, late in 1966, was about $2,400 of life insurance per person, while the same average reached $2,750 for Ontario and $2,500 for Quebec. On a family basis the same situation prevailed.

The average amount of life insurance held by each family was about $16,100 for the whole country; however, it varied considerably from one area to the next.

It would be necessary for individuals and large families to buy life insurance and take advantage of the new taxation formula; this affects mainly co-operatives which had found a way to distribute their profits. The Minister of Finance is going to put some of them out in business in Quebec; I dare predict that over 25 companies which appeared in the last twenty years, will fold up.

If it is not, once again, a decision to destroy organizations which have become a little more powerful in Quebec, on behalf of those who disagree, I will accuse the Minister of Finance of being a great separatist, because it is through finance that he will choke us up systematically. A Quebec where people cannot get their economic freedom cannot survive.

Besides, since the Minister of Finance does not seem to know what is a co-operative, I shall make now a brief comparison. What is a co-operative? It is a group of people who organize themselves in order to provide themselves with goods and services. What is a private company? It is a group of businessmen who organize themselves in order to make profits out of capital. There is a world of difference between the two terms of this comparison.

Where do the goods of co-operatives go? They go to their members to the extent of their purchases from their co-operative. Therefore, the goods are obtained at cost; since people get them at cost, that 15 per cent surcharge should not be considered.

What do private companies want and what do they get? Their profits are distributed among shareholders according to the number of shares they have. They are trying to get a profit on every item sold.

I have no objection against private firms going on making profits, because in a well-organized society, where private enterprise is successful we only have to set up cooperatives if we want to prevent the abuses of capitalism.

So, long live private enterprise. I think we all agree on that. However, as the head of the Ralliement Créditiste said yesterday when a company is making too much profit as in the case of Imperial Oil, which has made a profit of $70 million in nine months, one cannot help but wonder why the Minister of Finance did not tax them earlier as they are a tangible evidence of the abuses of a kind of capitalism which is out of place in 1968.

Furthermore, I wonder why the Minister of Finance did not tax mutual funds companies, like Investors Syndicate, a foreign company with profits running to millions. Trust companies and banks make enormous profits. Why then did he not draw from them the taxes he claims to need, in a system we do not accept because we feel it is outmoded.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

At one o'clock the house took recess.

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment I was saying that Canada now has a surplus of 664 million bushels of wheat. I hope that the Minister of Finance who has enjoyed his good bread at lunch, will think of those who go without it and will allow that dollar which the Ralliement Créditiste is requesting to reflect that production, so that it will reach those who are in need.

The Ralliement Créditiste is in favour of private enterprise but wherever there is abuse—I am speaking of the abuse of capitalism which adds to the wealth of a few millionnaires—we come with an alternative, namely the co-operation made possible today by co-operatives.

As evidenced on page 204 of the official report of the House of Commons Debates, the Minister of Finance said and I quote:

That with effect January 1, 1969, a life insurance corporation (including a mutual corporation or a fraternal benefit society) shall be required to pay an investment income tax at the rate of 15% upon its taxable investment income—

If that measure, and particularly that tax of 15 per cent on investment income are passed, many mutual corporations and many fraternal benefit societies, mostly French-Canadian, will disappear. Those companies will be forced to merge in order to compete with the almighty companies. Last spring, when Canada lived through a certain experience that was almost disastrous—I am referring to rush on gold—the Metropolitan Life

Insurance Company transferred $10 billion of assets to the United States, and in the magazine Le monde des affaires, it was said that if ten companies had done likewise, the Canadian economy would have been lost.

In view of the disastrous economy we have, in view of an economy which is no longer correctly oriented, in 1968, the hon. Minister of Finances should nevertheless give particular consideration to what we say, because the fraternal benefit societies and the co-operatives are almost all we have left in Quebec.

I shall refer particularly, among other societies, to l'Industrielle, of which Mr. Jean-Louis Lévesque was once the president. Recently, he sold the company to Americans who now control 53 per cent of the capital.

We have a Canadian invention which is due to the snow. In our "thirty acres of snow", we have invented something called a "Ski-Doo", a snowmobile. The "Snow-Jet" company, in Thetford Mines, the "Boa-Ski" company and the "Moto-Ski" company in Sainte-Anne-de-la-Pocatière were set up. All of them as well as the "Sno-Prince" company in Princeville have been sold to Americans. From the economic point of view, however we could count on our co-operative associations. Then, by what I call a low trick, a 15 per cent tax on profits which do not really exist was established. I made a comparison earlier. Unlike certain other organisations, a co-operative association should not have a tendency to become a capitalist concern. The aim of a co-operative association is simply to provide services.

That is why the ministers who work with the Minister of Finance and hon. members from Quebec should act immediately, as they did, for example, in order to restore the distribution of mail on Saturdays in rural areas, for the very survival of the institutions which we built with so many sacrifices is involved. Quebec and Quebecers will never, at a time when they are gaining strength, accept the disappearance of those organizations which are about the only property they have left.

Aside from the Desjardins movement, the Société des Artisans—a life insurance company—and some other organisations such as the Laurentienne or the Catholic Farmers Union, what else really belongs to us, from the economic point of view? Why should we fight to defend this idea of the Minister of Finance whose aim is simply to destroy co-operative institutions?

The enemies of co-operatives often complain that the rate of taxation the government of Canada is imposing on company profits sometimes reaches up to 52 per cent. This is one way of deceiving the public at large. They keep repeating that companies are burdened by taxes and, that, in this respect, co-operatives are a greatly favoured economic sector.

I have on hand a document supported by figures which established that it is just the contrary which is the case. As it would take too much time to quote at length this 10-page document, I shall request the house to let me table this document to be included in Hansard so as to allow the Canadian people to know the amount of taxes private companies have paid comparatively to the amount paid by co-operatives. With the permission of the house, this document could be added in the appendix.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree to have the said document printed in this day's Hansard as an appendix?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The document referred to above reads as follows:]

SOURCE: Fiscal statistics 1962, pages 113–114.

(Published by the Retail Merchants Association)

Corporate dividends, when added to personal incomes (salaries, wages, etc.), are not taxable at the rate of 23 per cent of their value. From the amount of 22 per cent of dividends, one can deduct 20 per cent of the net value of dividends received (see Exhibit "B").

For example, our shareholder should pay, apparently, $3,827 of the $17,394 received as dividends. But he may claim 20 per cent of that amount, that is $3,479; therefore, he has to pay only $348.

Therefore, the Crown levies $5,196 in income tax from an average company and $348 from the average shareholder, that is $5,544 altogether. If this amount is applied to the average net profits ($23,089) of the 10,819 companies, it can be seen that the Crown receives 24 per cent of those profits.

Companies and Co-operatives

Please note one thing before going further. If the company keep its profits, instead of paying dividends to its shareholders, taxes paid to the Crown decrease by $348 (amount of personal income tax) to approximately 22.5 per cent of the average net profits.

On the other hand, the same profits can be paid out by a co-operative to farmers, as a rebate. Therefore, the farmer with a taxable income of $4,000 (exclusive of rebates) pays income tax at the rate of 22 per cent of the rebate based on his purchases at the co-operative; it does not matter whether the rebate is cashed or left with the co-operative.

Capital gains

When an economic business does not pay dividends to shareholders, a time comes when its shares increase in value. When a shareholder sells his shares at a higher price than he paid for them, the difference between both prices is called a capital gain, which is tax-free.

To have an idea of the advantages to investors (and to economic companies, but not to co-operatives or to their members), let us take the example of an elevator factory.

In 1957, the shares of that company were selling for $23; now, quite recently, they had reached $96. One who bought some eleven years ago is now making a profit by selling them at $73 per share which is entirely tax-free.

PRIVATE OWNERS

The second table in the report of the Retailers' Association indicates that Ontario then had some 77,773 taxpayers and owners of retailing businesses not legally constituted. Together, they received an income (profits) of $420 million and paid $45.4 million in taxes (see exhibit "C").

In other words, the income of the average owner of such businesses was taxed at the real rate of 11 per cent, that is less than the rate applied to the rebates for purchases of farming implements granted to the farmer whose taxable income varies between $4,000 and $5,999.

Any accurate comparison is difficult

The statistical data quoted do not include the 5,420 retailing companies nor the 30,563 individual owners who did not pay any income tax in 1960, because the business was showing a deficit or its income was lower than the taxable level.

The statistical data and the examples quoted in this article are quite general, let us admit it, not because our information is inaccurate, but because we must stick to averages. In addition, a great number of variable factors come into account as to the incidence of the various regulations on corporate and personal income tax.

NON TAXABLE REBATES

We have not taken in consideration up to now, it is true, the fact that an increasing proportion of the volume of consumers co-operatives take the form of personal and household assets and their rebates are not taxable.

This is the time to repeat it: it is not the purpose of the co-operative to increase the income of its members, but to reduce their expenses. It succeeds in doing so by refunding the difference between the cost price and the real cost of services provided.

COMPANIES STATISTICS

The statistical data are based on 10,819 retail companies having paid taxes in 1960. On the whole, the profits of those companies reached $249.8 million, and their net taxable income (after deduction of the previous year's losses), $244.4 million. They paid altogether $86.8 million income tax (see Exhibit "A").

By dividing the total net profits ($249.8 million) by the number of companies (10,819), we see that each one has realized an average profit of $23,089 and that its net taxable income was $22,590.

The corporate income tax applies at the rate of 23 per cent on the first $35,000 of taxable income and at the rate of 52 per cent on the exceeding amount. Which would mean that an average company would pay 23 per cent (minimum rate) on its taxable income, namely $5,196.

It would therefore be left with an amount of $17,394 ($22,590—$5,196) to be split between its shareholders as dividends.

Shareholders' contribution

Of course, shareholders must enter all income in their personal income tax forms including dividends from companies, salaries, earnings, and so on.

Let us say that the balance of our company's profits, amounting to $17,394, are divided among a large number of shareholders whose personal salary or pay is $4,000 before they receive any dividends (which is quite a reasonable assumption, as can be seen from Exhibit "E").

According to the rates shown on the personal income tax form, our shareholder will have to pay $610 on the first $4,000 of his taxable income (which represents a rate of 15½ per cent), and 22 per cent on the balance up to $5,999.

Abatement for dividends: If your income includes dividends from "taxable Canadian companies", you are entitled to an abatement for dividends. The amount of the abatement corresponds to 20% of NET dividends from such companies. (NET means gross dividends received or granted less any deduction, such as depletion and service costs). However, the amount of the abatement should not exceed the "total income tax".

Whether they are cashed immediately or later, rebates increase the purchasing power of the members. It would be worthwhile to establish the usefulness of every measure that allows the consumers to purchase more of the goods which are becoming increasingly abundant thanks to automation. For the time being, however, it is sufficient to note that co-operatives, through their rebate policy increase the purchasing power of their members.

As consumers well know, it is almost impossible to purchase anything without paying taxes directly or indirectly. Exhibit "D" shows clearly that the consumers, not the corporations, are the most important taxpayers in Canada.

It is true that this table lacks accurateness to the extent where it classifies taxes and other government revenues according to whether they are paid by individuals or corporations. Nevertheless, its figures come from a reliable source.

It is noted that general sales tax provides the government with revenues of almost $1 billion. Those taxes are levied at the manufacturer level, so that they are included in the prices to the consumers. Excise duties bring in $619 million, customs and import duty, $526 million, for a total of $2.15 billion, that is, a revenue by far superior to the total corporations tax, which amounts to $1.2 billion for the same period.

If we add to this the $1.75 billion paid in income tax by Canadians, we see that, in fact, the consumer contributes the most to the tax revenue.

Of course, co-operative members, as consumers, pay the same taxes. The rebate they receive from the co-operatives, by increasing their purchasing power, also makes them pay more taxes.

But—to the taxes paid by co-operative members, as they progressively are able to spend more, must be added the taxes paid by the co-operatives themselves. The rate of 23 per cent on the first $35,000 in taxable income, and that of 52 per cent on the balance, apply as well to co-operatives as to other types of undertakings.

*The classes mentioned here are of a very general character and probably somewhat inaccurate. For instance, corporations pay excise duties on the cost of automobiles they buy. On the other hand, estate duties and estate tax concern chiefly individuals.

Sales taxes are established at the manufacturer level and are included in the cost price of products, which is paid in the final analysis by the consumer. It is to be noted that sales tax rates have increased since 1960 from 10 to 11 per cent of the cost price, so that the burden on the consumer has increased accordingly.

The Budget—Mr. Dumont

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Dumont: As I said, if the budget carries as it is, it is obvious that the most heavily taxed will be the insurance companies as compared with trust companies, mutual fund companies and banks. Why should the minister not tax these institutions? He could get from them all the money he needs to satisfy his ever growing need for new funds.

At the same time, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) wants to levy income tax on these companies. This represents an amount almost equivalent to the tax levied on investment income. Still not satisfied, the Minister of Finance, when the policy holder redeems his policy or receives a gift or transfers his policy to another person, taxes the gain on the insurance policy. Here is how this works out: Redeemable value of the policy minus the net premiums paid or, in other words, the premiums paid after deduction of the accrued dividends. If this tax is not one on capital gains, I wonder what is. In a mutual fund company, for instance, there is admittedly an annual dividend and it is normally calculated on a rather low interest of 3 or 4 per cent. The true profit is obtained from the sale of the mutual fund policies. For example, if I were the owner of a mutual fund policy of $500 and, after a number of years, I sold it for $1,000, I would not be required to pay any tax on the capital gain accrued on this fund. In fact, this profit results solely or almost from interest which I should have been receiving during those years.

In my estimation, the whole thing is ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. A life insurance company is not a capitalistic institution whose aim is profits. On the contrary, these companies, especially the one belonging to Quebec or Canada are the property of the policy holders. I am speaking about most of the existing mutual and fraternal societies. Therefore, those companies belong in part at least to their policy holders. It is well known that most of the insurance policies are of the participating type. Also, the law provides that for companies of this type, the insured have a right to elect as beneficiaries a certain number of administrators in order to protect their interests. Therefore, even if the Minister of Finance includes the life insurance companies for taxation purposes, he is not in fact levying taxes from those companies but rather from the public generally, since undoubtedly the effect of this taxation reduces refunds or dividends on existing insurance policies which in turn will result in higher premiums for new policies. Who is paying? It is surely the public generally. It is not a matter of taxing the corporations, but it involves the public generally and, certainly, the little people are the losers.

I wish to emphasize that I do not want the insurance companies to be state-owned. I want them to remain on a co-operative basis as they are at the present time, for we have in the province of Quebec the best example of what socialism will do. The nationalization of the hydro companies has simply resulted in increasing the electricity rates. This is a case where co-operative hydros would have been of great help, whereas nationalization has not produced any results. In other words, it is only through co-operation that results would have been obtained.

This morning I had begun to give an example of the difference between co-operatives and private enterprise in order to demonstrate the abuses by capitalism wherever there is a concentration of profits.

Encyclicals have been written in this respect. Only a co-operative is able to check those organizations which, too often, are bent on making profits but, as we always say, have no heart unlike co-operatives which can make people benefit from the profits they make. I said earlier today that for 18 years I have helped to set up co-operative organizations of this kind, because I found that money had a soul in those organizations. In a capitalist company where exploitation of people is carried to its maximum, we do not meet people who are thinking in terms of human beings, they are only thinking in terms of the profits they are making. This is the reason why, when there is concentration of wealth on a large scale, in addition to small enterprises which are successful—and we recognize their usefulness—we must set up co-operatives such as the ones we have established in Quebec over the last 25 years.

Let us go on with the comparison: in the co-operative organisations, savings remain within the consumer's community and his money keeps going around so that in the long run, everybody benefits by it. It happens only too often in some private companies who exploit people that their profits end up in the hands of businessmen abroad, as for instance in the case of Snow-Jet Company, at Thetford Mines, a company which is making a motor-ski specially designed, prepared, oriented and organized to be sold in the province of Québec. This company, however, is now owned by Americans. Thus, wealth is concentrated in the hands of some capitalists who, later on, come and drain the economic blood of our people leaving us with little choice but to be water carriers or lumberjacks.

I want to carry further my comparison: The co-operative is owned by the members under a democratic process, since every member has an equal say on the elaboration of policies. The co-operative belongs to the people. "One man, one vote." Everybody remember that truth. In private companies, the control belongs to the shareholder or shareholders who have the largest number of shares. The ownership of 51 per cent of shares represents a controlling interest, but money is the deciding factor in private companies. This is why co-operatives require that money be used in a more human way.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

An hon. Member: Continue.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member the unanimous consent of the house to continue.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let us give him 2 more minutes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I regret, there is not unanimous consent.

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, during the course of the budget debate my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) said I would be intervening, and I do so now. I rise to speak today because of my particular interest in the performance of the Canadian economy from the point of view of the consumer whom it is my statutory obligation to represent.

The consumer interest lies in an economic system which makes available an increasing abundance and variety of goods that are dependable in quality and reasonable in price. Similarly, consumers who rely on the use of credit—and their numbers are ever-increasing—are concerned about interest rates and borrowing terms.

During the past three years we have seen an almost uninterrupted increase in Canadian prices. And in the past two years, as the Economic Council of Canada said in its fifth annual review:

> Prices have been marching forward against consumers across a broader front than at any time in the past 15 years.

This has occurred despite the fact that over-all demands on our economy have eased somewhat since the middle of 1966 and despite the fact that unemployment has been running at higher levels than in 1965 and 1966.

In the last couple of years the consumer price index has been going up at approximately 4 per cent per annum. These price pressures have been accompanied by corresponding upward pressures in costs, including wage costs, salaries, interest rates and rents. I know there is a good deal of argument as to which is the cause and which is the effect. The businessman is inclined to put most of the blame on wage increases. The trade unionist tends to blame business for raising prices and thus reducing the real value of existing wages. I believe these are sterile arguments. The process is essentially a circular one; rising prices give rise to increasing cost pressures and higher costs in turn give rise to still higher prices. Moreover, there are many other sources of income and cost pressures in our economy—rents, professional services, interest, stock options, to cite a few examples.

In any event, the effects are no mystery to the victims of inflationary forces. These victims are the Canadians who are old, who are poor, who have no means of adapting their circumstances to the rapid change. They are not organized to insist that their incomes reflect rising price levels. They have no power to insist on a fair share. Citizens who enjoy no bargaining power cannot bargain for a better deal. A fixed income should not mean a fixed injustice. There is always a danger that those whose market power is strong will be somewhat complacent about inflation. They are in a position to protect themselves, and those with little or no bargaining power are left to take the strain. The major instruments that governments must rely upon to keep the economic system in reasonable balance and to maintain reasonable price stability are fiscal and monetary policy. In the budget speech last week the Minister of Finance explained how this budget is intended to contribute to these purposes, and I shall not attempt to add to what he has said on this aspect of the matter.

Without getting involved in conflicting schools of economic thought or theory, Mr. Speaker, it is generally accepted among economists that the basic influence on price performance and employment levels is aggregate demand in the economy. This is reflected in expenditure by consumers, by businesses, by governments, and by foreigners who buy our exports. The key to our performance lies in demand management as expressed in fiscal and monetary policies.

These have to be based on the best available judgment as to what businesses are likely to spend on their investment programs, what governments are likely to spend, and what our exports are likely to be. If the economic system were free from friction, rigidities, and time lags, and if we could foretell the future with more safety, the determination of the correct economic policies would be greatly simplified. The rudder, if we could set the rudder, would be set in the right position and, subject to occasional corrections for changes in the wind, the ship would remain steady on her course.

But we do not live, Mr. Speaker, in such a perfect world. Because of lags in the movement of impulses through the economy, responses to changes in the general economic environment take some time to develop. And what is more, changing expectations about future economic developments can have a perverse affect on the decisions of today. To put the matter more concretely, I think we are faced today with a situation in which a long period of expansion, the longest in our history, has created unusual expectations about future price increases and about continuing economic growth. These expectations are leading our businessmen and our trade unions to regard as normal rates of increase in prices, wages and other costs that are not consistent with reasonable price stability and are probably not sustainable. There is no doubt that these trends could be substantially slowed down, if not eliminated, by a very restrictive fiscal policy, but no one can say what level of unemployment and loss of potential output would be the result. We must consider other approaches.

Many industrial countries have been attempting in recent years to find ways of supplementing the major traditional instruments, fiscal and monetary policy. They have sought other measures to influence the movement of prices and incomes. Most hon. members will be aware of the efforts the British government has been making over a number of years in this regard with the aid of a prices and incomes board, and the adoption of a set of fairly rigid guidelines.

The United States government has also tried programs in this field, first by setting voluntary guideposts, as they called them, for price and income behavior and more recently by creating a cabinet committee on price stability. This committee is charged with the task of looking into special situations such as supply bottlenecks in the economy and the like. A number of European countries have also experimented with various and different approaches to the same problem.

I wish I could tell the house, Mr. Speaker, that all these approaches have been successful, but the fact is that the results seem to have varied from country to country and from time to time. I do not think anyone would claim that these programs can do more than supplement and assist, in a modest way, fiscal and monetary policies. These policies remain the major influence on price and cost performance but there is a strong body of opinion that if the supplementary programs are judged by modest and realistic standards they have had some success.

As hon. members are well aware, the government has, over a number of months, been considering the introduction of a supplementary price stability program in Canada. This subject was studied by the Economic Council of Canada in 1965-66 at the request of the government. The council noted that a formal incomes policy was usually understood to comprise a set of general guidelines for incomes and prices in the whole economy, a means of making these guidelines relevant for individual price and wage decisions, and a means of inducing conformity with the guidelines. The Economic Council of Canada, concluded that a formal incomes policy would not be an effective way of bringing about an improved reconciliation of high employment and reasonable price stability in Canada under normal peacetime conditions.

I agree with the council's view that a formal incomes policy, so defined, would not be suitable in Canadian conditions. The question we have been studying is whether a less formal price stability program could make a contribution, a program which would involve the creation of machinery to provide better information about current trends in prices, costs and productivity, and to encourage greater restraint on the part of those responsible for price and income decisions. Such a program could clarify for all of us the forces underlying our unsatisfactory price and cost performance, and could analyse special problem areas in our economy to see where improvements could be achieved. We have concluded that a program of this kind should be initiated.

A central element in this approach will be the creation of an independent public agency to study, investigate and report on problems of rising costs and prices. Its functions would include research and the issuing of periodic public reports on current developments in this field. There will need to be arrangements for parliamentary review of the reports of this agency. This role could be assumed by a parliamentary committee, perhaps the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. We believe, Mr. Speaker, that this machinery, working together, could make a valuable contribution to greater understanding of the forces affecting our prices and costs, and bring home to all of us the need for social responsibility in price, cost and income decisions.

We have had some initial informal consultations about some of these ideas with provincial governments and with some business and trade union leaders. The government is now working on a white paper or policy statement which will contain some proposals and which will suggest possible means of implementation of this machinery. The white paper, which is being worked on now, will be available later this year. We shall be undertaking further, more formal consultations with interested parties. A program of this kind, however, will be only fully successful with broad support from business and labour or trade union groups. This support is crucial. This is why full consultation is essential before final decisions are taken as to the exact scope and nature of the program. The government will also wish to see the report of the task force on labour relations, or the Woods task force, before making final decisions, since this is one of the subjects the task force has had under consideration.

I know that some people, both in labour and in management, are less than enthusiastic about a program of this kind in Canada. Some, I believe, are inclined to judge it in advance on the assumption that it is the British program or the American program, or some other imported program. We have, however, to design a program that suits Canada's business and labour structure, that suits Canada's economy, open as it is to international forces, and that suits Canada's federal and parliamentary system of government. I hope people will refrain from pinning labels on this program, labels from other countries. There is no doubt at all in my mind that the public generally are strongly in favour of action by the government in this field of stabilization. I would urge members of interested groups to remain open-minded while we prepare our white paper and prepare for our consultations with them.

The success of this program will depend heavily on the quality of those who serve on this new agency. We will be appealing, in the course of working out the policy, to able and experienced people from the universities and elsewhere, to come and give of their time by way of public service in support of a worthwhile cause.

I want to make it perfectly clear that this program will not involve any attempt to introduce price controls or controls on incomes. One merit of our mixed market economy is the way allocation of resources among all kinds of competing requirements is determined by a flexible price and income system. When consumers choose to buy more and more of a particular product their intervention in the market sets in motion price effects which draw more resources into the production and distribution of that product. Similarly a successful, efficient business is able to outbid less efficient businesses for skilled labour and other resources. Price and wage flexibility within the market economy must be maintained if we want, as we do, a dynamic and efficient economic system capable of producing steadily rising standards of living for Canadians, and capable of maintaining and expanding our position in world markets.

This is not to deny that there are special cases where some form of price regulation is desirable. Certain services and utilities, such as railroads and telephone companies, by their nature are more efficient as monopolies, at least for part of their operations. In these cases there is no alternative to the application of statutory rate controls, and where these services are within its jurisdiction parliament has acted to provide for the regulation of rates.

The remarks I have made about the role of the price system are based on the assumption that the system is reasonably competitive. To the extent that there is monopolistic market behaviour, including collusion and other restrictive trade practices, the role of the market in allocating resources to their best uses is impaired. Moreover, prices that purchasers have to pay may be unreasonably high. The government must be concerned not only with maintaining a reasonable degree of price stability, but also with maintaining competitive market conditions, so that prices to consumers and other buyers will not be higher than they need be. This is the role of the Combines Investigation Act and of the small but dedicated group of officials who administer the act.

I have heard a number of allegations in this house to the effect that the combines act is not being enforced vigorously enough or broadly enough. The fact is that, within the limits of their resources and within the limits of the present statute, the director and his staff are doing a remarkably good job. Those who are not aware of the extent of activity in this field would do well to read the latest annual report of the director of investigation and research which I tabled in this house on October 15 last.

Perhaps I should remind the house that the director of investigation and research is in a very real sense the watchdog of parliament and the public in the matter of competition policy. He has a statutory duty to undertake an inquiry whenever he has reason to believe that the Combines Investigation Act has been, or is about to be, violated. In this role he has a high degree of independence.

If there are hon. members who feel that the resources of the branch are inadequate, I would have to agree. I would have to say the same about some of the other branches in my department, and no doubt most other ministers would feel the same about the resources available for some of their programs. As a member of the government I support fully the severe measures that have had to be adopted to limit the growth of government expenditure, but we have to recognize that these economies cannot be achieved without some cost in terms of the services we can offer to the Canadian people.

We do not find in the Canadian market, or in any other market, one category of companies that are absolute monopolies, with all the rest operating under conditions of perfect competition. The vast majority of businesses in Canada are found between these two extremes. They operate in varying degrees of monopolistic competition from one end of the spectrum to the other. While perfect competition may be the ideal, it is rarely attained in practice outside of certain commodity markets where the numbers of buyers and sellers are very large. Our objective has to be to maintain workably competitive situations, to prevent price-fixing and other forms of collusion, and to prevent unfair trading practices likely to reduce the degree of competition by driving firms out of the market.

The fact that many of our manufacturing industries consist of a small number of dominant firms often means that there is a pattern of price leaders and price followers. The price leader establishes a new price and the others follow. Sometimes this takes place within a matter of days or even hours. This does not necessarily mean that there is collusion. The combines staff watch all such situations carefully and consider them against the background of the particular industry as they know it.

A common criticism of the Combines Investigation Act is that it stands in the way of mergers or other arrangements that could lead to increased efficiency through economies of large scale production. This matter is not so simple as some critics imply. An important question is whether in each case the benefits of increased efficiency will be passed on to the public.

Another question is whether the firm concerned is in fact operating at less than the optimum scale. There is a good deal of loose talk about scale in the absence of evidence as to the ideal scale for a particular industry. Fortunately we are beginning to see an increasing flow of economic studies of scale and specialization in Canadian industry, stimulated by the work of the Economic Council of Canada on this subject. Under the present act, when the director examines a merger he is obliged to consider whether competition is, or is likely to be, lessened "to the detriment or against the interests of the public." In his annual reports the director has outlined a number of economic factors and questions he takes into account. These demonstrate that he does not limit himself to a narrow legalistic approach. Moreover, he is always prepared to listen to any proposals and give his opinion as to whether a particular course of action would be likely to necessitate an inquiry under the act.

I hope no one will take these remarks to reflect complacency about the present state of the law. Competition needs to be enforced more effectively in Canada, and the present act is imperfect. Its coverage is not broad enough; many important services are outside its ambit. Based as it is on criminal law, it involves elaborate and lengthy court procedures with a heavy burden of proof resting on the crown. When a case is tried the court must either find that there is a criminal offence or else acquit the accused. The court is not entitled, nor qualified, to temper justice with a judgment about the economic impact of a restrictive practice on the community. The problem of dealing realistically with mergers is related in part to this element of rigidity. Needless to say, my officials and I have our own views about a number of ways in which the act should be improved. We are awaiting with interest the report of the Economic Council of Canada on this subject. We hope and expect it will deal constructively with the areas of weakness in the present act. I am in any case determined to propose a series of major reforms in this legislation after we receive the council's report.

Another major influence on competition and efficiency in Canadian industry is the tariff. Tariff reduction is one of the economic remedies provided in the Combines Investigation Act. Historically our relatively high protective tariff contributed to many of the weaknesses that still exist in our manufacturing industries. It encouraged the development of a branch-plant pattern in manufacturing, with the Canadian plant typically emulating its parent by attempting to produce a full range of that company's products. The inevitable outcome has been too many small scale operations and unduly high costs. There is a good deal of evidence that the height of the tariff has also contributed to the emergence of monopolistic conditions in Canadian industry. It is clear that the use of the Combines Investigation Act to enforce competition has to be related to and supported by complementary tariff policies.

The subjects I have touched upon today, Mr. Speaker, are all interrelated. They are by no means the only factors that affect our competitive position and our price performance. Many other policies must also come into the picture—our programs for manpower training and mobility, our grants to encourage research and development, for example. The house is familiar with these and I do not propose to review them. I have concentrated on two main elements, price stability and competition policy. The main point I want to make is that we must not only do what we can to encourage restraint in regard to increases in prices and costs we must also ensure consistent and vigorous use of all programs that can contribute to a more dynamic, competitive and efficient economy.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the budget debate I intend to deal positively in an approach to one of our major industries in western Canada. Before doing so I should like to comment on a question I asked this morning. I feel that it would be expedient for me to do so at this time. I have in mind the answer of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in reference to medicare.

We in this house remember when the Liberal party brought in their medicare program. We well remember that at that time Miss LaMarsh said it would be something like the castor oil treatment: open your mouth, you are going to get the treatment whether you like it or not. We were under the impression at that time, rightly or wrongly, that the federal government would pay 50 per cent of the cost and 50 per cent of the cost would be paid by the provinces. Even on that basis I raised an objection because I have always taken the position that the government of Canada cannot legislate programs and thrust them on the provinces, particularly when the province must pay 50 per cent of the cost. The situation is even worse when the federal government turns around and not only requires the provinces to pay their 50 per cent of the cost but also the other 50 per cent.

The new formula announced at the conference between the federal and provincial governments was a real shocker. The federal government probably had it in mind all the time. We are now informed that the federal government intends to opt out of this program. At one time the provinces used to opt out, but on this occasion the federal government is opting out. It has handed the provinces a package and the provinces are not only going to have to pay their 50 per cent but the federal government's 50 per cent. The minister said this earlier in a sophisticated manner. This supports my feeling that we should always accept his words as having two meanings.

Having regard to the 2 per cent tax, or whatever it may be, in relation to medicare, the minister has said that he will look at it to see that whatever the government's share of the cost is it will be passed on in the form of revenue to the provinces. What he is really saying is that he will probably take 17 per cent or 20 per cent of the tax collected for this particular purpose and suggest that is the allowance for the provinces and if they cannot live within that amount they will have to put up the balance.

The minister shakes his head. I want the record to show that he has shaken his head because I know the provinces are shaking in their boots and provincial treasurers throughout the country are very worried about this plan. It is too bad but I think the time may come—I do not encourage this—when the provinces will join together and say to the federal government, we are not going to accept this type of plan. The federal government is now thrusting a plan upon them much like the plan that was thrust on them in relation to property and civil rights which are under their jurisdiction. The government said it would pick up the tab for 50 per cent but it now says that the provinces must handle the whole thing and pay 100 per cent. That is not good enough, and it is not acceptable just because the Minister of Finance was not able to calculate within reason how he would manage a balanced budget.

I should like to hear from him on this point at some time. Perhaps he will give us an explanation, assuring the provinces. He may shake his head, but I hope he will say categorically without any of these sophistical reservations that the federal government will pay 50 per cent of the cost and will not come crying here about it being the cause of deficits. Surely he cannot blame the provinces for this fact when it is the government's own grandiose scheme that is responsible.

Before I comment about the petroleum industry I should like to say I listened with great interest to one of the most able lectures that has been delivered outside a law school, that delivered by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). It was just a lecture and it was read quietly. He broke the frozen silence of his department and gave us a summary of what has been put under one roof. The minister knows that this department has had no effect in controlling the cost of living in this nation. Nor did he indicate any solution his department or any other department has in relation to controlling costs, whether they are the result of high interest rates or high costs of living.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

In any event these high costs are having a serious effect on the old age pensioners and others who are tied to that type of income today. The government has forgotten these people; they are the forgotten people. I cannot remember what the increase is in relation to the increased cost of living that these pensioners are allowed, but the minister certainly knows that the old age pensioner today is chained to an economic system within which he cannot live.

We have heard a great deal about poverty in Biafra. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) is at this time conducting a task force tour across the nation. He must be receiving many shocks as a result of the poverty which exists in Canada. The people who are existing in poverty, living in low class housing and suffering this terrible and horrible standard of living, are the old age pensioners, our senior citizens, who are chained to the inflationary economic programs of the government.

The minister can talk as much as he wants about his sources of revenue, but he is perhaps forgetting a most important principle. If you increase trade you increase demand, and when you increase demand you obtain greater supply because production can accelerate. In this way you obtain greater revenue and do not have to bring in a high taxation system. That was the philosophy of this government during the election campaign. Many of the candidates said the government was going to pay as it goes. What they really meant was that the people of Canada would pay and the government would go. That is really the government's philosophy.

Mr. Forrestall: They have not got the courage to raise taxes to pay their own bills.

Mr. Woolliams: That may be true. I have made reference earlier to the grain industry. We warned this government for months about what was happening to grain trade. The government just sat in silence. The minister is now leaving. Of course he must leave, because he cannot stand the heat. Whenever it gets hot he has to get out of the chamber.

Canada is an anomally in the world today. We are currently producing over 200 per cent of its consumption of crude petroleum; yet we have a net deficit in this country of over $200 million per year. There is need for a new oil policy, and that need is essential. Let me pause here for a moment to indicate that in 1960 and 1961 the government of that day established a national oil policy. There has not been any change since that time. The circumstances have changed and economies have changed not only in Canada—I have in mind development, consumption and other factors—but throughout the world. This government leans on the fact that we have a national oil policy, but it never really admits it was the government of this party that implemented that policy. That policy now requires upgrading and change.

On October 1, I directed a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Green) regarding oil policy. I asked him whether there had been a cut-back and he said, as reported at page 625 of Hansard:

—the national oil policy is a matter of continuing negotiation—

There is no question in my mind that there has been a unilateral decision by the United States in reference to cut-backs on the importation of crude petroleum from Canada. This government will not admit that there were no negotiations or no attempt on their part to negotiate.

In this regard I should like to read the following from the Calgary Herald of September 28, 1968:

• (3:20 p.m.)

United States action which could cost Alberta export sales totalling close to ten million barrels of crude oil in the next three months, has created new tensions in Ottawa, Washington and the oil centres of North America.

U.S. companies which import Canadian crude have been "requested" by the U.S. oil import administration to cut back their purchases during the fourth quarter of 1968—

The United States made the request; Canada danced to their tune. There has been no suggestion anywhere, either in the answers to questions by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene), that there have been any negotiations with the United States, and there has been no suggestion of any protest to that country in respect of the cut-back in our exports of crude petroleum. The article continues:

Bonner H. Templeton, New York, manager of Mobil Oil Corporation's crude oil department, told the board his company has been subject to restraints on importation of Canadian crude since 1963, and had already been asked by the authorities to reduce its purchases "substantially" during the last quarter of 1968.

This was stated before the conservation board in the city of Calgary; yet when I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce about it I was given the wishy-washy answer that it has always been subject to negotiation under the national oil policy. The fact is that the government never negotiated in this respect and has never protested what has occurred. It has just stood back and lost the petroleum market, in the same way as it stood back and lost the grain market for western Canada. And these are both billion dollar industries.

I have never been one to stand in my place and criticize without offering a solution. We need a new, dynamic oil policy now. We need a policy that takes into consideration recent developments in the industry and changes that can be expected in the future. What is the situation today? We have a problem in the Near East which affects the oil supply of the world. We see scientific development taking place with respect to the Alberta tar sands. We see a tremendous development taking place in Alaska. Yet no consideration is given by the government to the situation that exists, and it has nothing to say about how the problem can be solved. All we have had is a stupid lecture given by the minister—I have used an adjective I should not have used—such as is given in law school.

The minister talks about controlling prices but he offers no solutions to the problem. We are given quiet little lectures which are written by quiet little people in the department. This is the kind of speech to which we have been subjected. We must increase our exports in this area before we can arrive at any solution to the problem. The average daily production for 1967 was 1,098,000 barrels. The average daily consumption during 1967 was 1,294,000 barrels. At the end of 1967 the estimated potential productive capacity was 2,650,000 barrels per day. During 1967 Canada imported an average of 200,000 barrels per day more crude oil and products than it exported. At an approximate laid down price of $2.90 per barrel, this contributed a net annual deficit of approximately $200 million to Canada's trade imbalance. For every thousand barrels per day of Canadian crude produced and sold, there is an approximate saving of $1 million per year in the trade deficit.

If the $200 million were spent in Canada for Canadian crude oil it would have a total effect on the Canadian economy, through secondary and tertiary industries, of approximately $700 million annually. Therefore we would increase the gross national product and obtain more tax revenue. Instead of increasing rates, we could have a bigger share of the market and keep the rates at the same level. As I have said, if the $200 million for imports were spent in Canada for Canadian crude oil, it would have a total effect on the Canadian economy, through secondary and tertiary industries, of approximately $700 million annually.

Two major Canadian banking institutions have calculated that the multiplier effect of money generated in the natural resources sector of our economy is approximately 3.3. Canada loses on every barrel of imported crude oil, not only through the foreign production profits that remain offshore but mainly because each barrel of Canadian crude oil pays over $1 per barrel in the form of taxes and payments to the Canadian government. Therefore, to the extent of Canada's crude oil imports payments are received in foreign countries, and if these imports were replaced by Canadian oil it would result in such benefits being received directly by the citizens of Canada. This industry would go a long way to make up our deficits. Canada loses, on the importation of oil, the production costs and $1 in the form of taxes and payments to the Canadian government on every barrel of crude petroleum.

This is the situation. When the national oil policy was developed there were negotiations by the then Conservative government which stepped into the field because at that time, as a result of the Suez crisis, our exports of crude petroleum and other oil products had fallen off. The then minister of trade and commerce, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), and others worked out a plan with the United States so that we would export this commodity to the northwest United States and permit crude petroleum to come into this country from Venezuela, which market is financed by American interests. It was agreed that they would have the eastern market and would export to the northeast United States.

As I pointed out to the minister in the late show on October 1, our exports of crude petroleum, have been reduced by at least 10,000 barrels per day because of the unilateral decision of the United States. While their imports into Canada from that country are increasing, our exports to the United States are growing smaller. The Minister of Finance should walk up and down and think about this situation.

In this connection the government should take a positive step and do something to solve the problem. The government should face the fact that the United States made a unilateral decision in this respect and has cut back our exports. Then it should say: We will send a negotiating team to Washington to arrive at a solution to the problem. The government should send a negotiating team to Washington, rather than sending ministers to South America which means they are never here to answer questions in the house.

The minister should discuss this problem with other members of the cabinet and make certain that our petroleum industry is protected. It is a pretty sad state of affairs if we in Canada cannot protect this most important industry. Even with our exports to the United States, without the cut-back and with the greatest domestic consumption in Canada, our industry is operating today at a production level of only 40 per cent. In other words, we could produce another 60 per cent in this industry and stay within the rules of conservation in the provinces. Now we are bringing into Canada millions of dollars worth of crude petroleum, $200 million a year, which aggravates our balance of trade situation.

What would the grain growers of this country think if we, as a wheat exporting nation, were to import $200 million worth of wheat? I know that the argument put forward is whether we can economically bring the crude or refined petroleum from western Canada into the Montreal area, but the experts point out that we could transport oil to the eastern market and compete with oil coming into this country from Venezuela. If this is true, the government should surely do something to correct the situation, and it should do it now. This should be done, rather than giving wishy-washy answers and trying to sweep the problem under the carpet.

There is nothing wrong, politically, in getting up and saying that the United States has unilaterally cut back our exports and that the government is pleased the opposition has brought the matter to its attention. Then the government should say: We will send a negotiating team to Washington and work out an arrangement. This is the kind of government I thought the Canadian people might be electing under a young man in the last election. However, I have seen no sign of this happening. Mr. Speaker, I hear the hon. member across the way saying something. I do not know what he is muttering about; he is all greased up.

The western Canadian petroleum industry, exclusive of refining and marketing, currently spends approximately $1 billion a year, over 85 per cent of which is spent in Canada, for goods, services and payments to government. Of the major expenditures made for oil and gas pipe lines, gas plants, fittings, pressure vessels, pumps, etc., over 80 per cent was spent in eastern Canada, a large part of which was in the province of Quebec. The majority of these capital expenditures were made in Canada as a result of tariff protection. With that we have no quarrel, because some of our secondary industry needs protection.

• (3:30 p.m.)

At least 75 per cent of the capital expenditures on the $235 million tar sand plant was spent in Canada, a major portion of which was spent in Quebec. Eighty five per cent of the capital expenditure of a typical western Canadian gas plant—Homeglen Rimbey, which costs $18 million—was spent in Canada, of which the substantial portion represented purchases in eastern Canada. So this industry not only means a lot to western Canada, it means a lot to eastern Canada and to the Canadian economy generally.

The royalties paid to Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan benefit Canadian taxpayers in savings to the federal government in federal-provincial equalization payments, in the words of the minister.

Today Saskatchewan is a have province, but only a short time ago it was a have not province. Alberta is a have province. These are have provinces because they have now developed a philosophy with regard to the development of our industries and the increase of our gross national product. It is only then that the nation will have the kind of revenue that it needs so that its citizens can live in dignity, and then perhaps the word "justice" might have some meaning.

What about the taxes received from federal and corporate profits? That in itself is substantial. The direct result of oil, gas and associated mineral development in western Canada has removed both Saskatchewan and Alberta from the provinces currently receiving equalization payments.

The national oil policy resulted in an agreement whereby we would export to the northwestern United States, while we would permit imports of crude from Venezuela. How did this come about? It has come about because, as my good friend knows, in the course of negotiations the United States said: "If we cut off imports of crude petroleum from Venezuela we would be fostering communism in that area and the financial interests of the western world would suffer. If you allow us to import crude petroleum into the eastern market, we will give you markets in western and central United States". So let us follow through the negotiations with the United States. I am not complaining about the United States; they are good, sound businessmen and they will listen to us because Canada is their best customer. This is the plea I make to the government, and it is not made in the form of criticism. It is the kind of positive approach which I thought I would hear in this debate from the government, either with regard to wheat, to industry or to petroleum. However, that is all forgotten.

I suggest the government is permeated with socialistic thinking, so that all they can see are grandiose programs paid by grandiose taxation. What I say may sound like conservatism, but let me say that I listened to a very fine conservative speech from another member from Calgary, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) who spoke last evening, and I want to congratulate him on his maiden speech. I advise everyone to read that speech. I hope that what he said in the house he also said in caucus, but I hope he said it there more forcibly to those ministers who are socializing with socialists.

An hon. Member: Oh, do stop it.

Mr. Woolliams: My friends say stop it. They can never stand this, but they are better off in the opposition than they were on the government side because you know what happened when we tried this experiment in the province of Saskatchewan when it was a have not province under the government of Thatcher, who, I am glad to say, is a Liberal premier. Now that province is a have province because capital came in there to develop the province's industry as a result of the confidence of investors, as was the case in the province of Alberta.

I always say to my socialist friends that I can never understand them because surely after the experience in Great Britain the people can consider they have suffered enough.

Mr. Gilbert: What about Sweden?

Mr. Woolliams: I have been to Sweden. If we were to compare Sweden's gross national product and their standard of living with ours, I would put Canada ahead of Sweden any day. That is my answer so far as this is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, in the short time that I have left I should like to make several recommendations. The government must get off its butt right now and review the national oil policy, in the light of the changing circumstances which I have mentioned. It should renegotiate a deal with the United States or else tell the United States: Look, you may be worried about Venezuela or about a similar uprising to the one that took place in Peru, and we are also worried about it, but we are concerned about our own economy and we are prepared to allow a certain amount of imports into this country provided you will fulfil the terms of the national oil policy and let us put more into the Toledo, Detroit and Chicago area. I congratulated the government last year when they reversed their previous decision on the pipe line. Now I say they have to renegotiate the national oil policy.

The second recommendation I would make to the government is this. The National Energy Board officials must never be questioned, according to some people. As soon as an administrative board is established in this country, whether it is provincial or federal, it is considered to be a sacred cow. I suggest that the officials of the National Energy Board and the officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce should be carefully examined by a standing committee of the House of Commons with regard to what took place between the United States and Canada, and what is taking place now so far as the petroleum industry is concerned, because the ministers will not divulge the facts. I do not know why they do not want to do it.

My third suggestion is that I would like to see the Senate go to work. It should initiate a special economic study of the petroleum industry. It should get experts of all types from the independent petroleum association, from independent companies, from U.S. companies and from the Canadian subsidiaries that may be left. Facts should be set down, after which the committee should come up with a sound basic policy to increase our trade. Why do we need this investigation? We have to find out what effect the new Alaska production has on the national oil policy. The hon. member for Calgary South mentioned it in his speech, and I agree with him 100 per cent. It will have a dynamic effect. These are the factors we must consider, and I am glad the hon. member is in accord with me in that regard. What effect does the Alaska production have on the Puget Sound area, particularly now when the largest cut-backs by the United States are taking place? This is dealt with in the September, 1968 edition of the Calgary Herald.

Will we be able to make up our loss of exports because of the Alaska production, by increasing exports to the Detroit, Toledo and Chicago area? These are the things that should be looked into immediately. A review of the national oil policy is of utmost importance to the economic welfare of Canada, and more important than considering the burdening of the industry with the Carter tax proposals, which sound good in theory and are quoted glibly for vote getting but could and might at this time hamper Canadian production, development and trade expansion. I can never understand those people who talk about taxing Canadian capital, here there and everywhere, these socialist thinkers who are not only on one side of this chamber. We are always talking about U.S. capital. If the government is going to tax Canadians to death, and that is what it is doing, and if it is now going to start taxing capital, because that is what it recommends, it will sap all the capital from Canadians, and how are we ever going to invest in our own country? That is the problem.

I do not know what kind of campaign the Liberals ran across the rest of the country but I have listened to their candidates in Alberta and found them to be the most Goldwater type of people I have ever met. I am not being critical of the hon. member for Calgary South, and I complimented him on his speech, but I thought that if some of these candidates were elected they might have had some power to direct this government into sound business thinking and to cut out the socialist trends which are ruining the welfare schemes, such as medicare which the provinces already had, and imposing a new plan on the provinces which will cost the taxpayers many more thousands of dollars and will sap more capital from Canadians so they will be unable to invest in their own industry. We have had the Watkins report and we have heard Walter Gordon talking about it, but the same people came in with a budget which is taxing capital, so that Canadians do not have the necessary capital to invest in their own industry. I think we need a new policy with regard to the petroleum industry.

My time is nearly up but I should like to end on this note. Although trade is most important, it seems to be forgotten today because we are so busy designing plans on taxation. I should like the members of the government to come clean before parliament, so far as the wheat markets of this nation are concerned, because they mean a billion dollars to be spent in the industrial centres of Quebec and Ontario. I hope the government will come clean with the opposition, because it is good government when it does, and that is their function. If the government sat on this side of the house, they would be doing the same thing—trying to get the information out. We want to see where we are going with regard to the petroleum industry.

Instead, they misrepresent the facts, as one of the ministers did back on October 1, when he said there was a cut-back but they were going to negotiate. They were going to meet with the industry itself and work out a plan that would give the industry another 10 per cent. Then we could at least say we had 50 per cent production. These are the two major industries. I do not know where your government is going with the Kennedy round, and other deals that were made. I do not know what impact this is having on industry in eastern Canada, but we hear many repercussions so far as that is concerned. We have never been able to debate that situation; it is always kept quiet.

The situation in those three major areas, wheat, petroleum and the industries of eastern Canada, under that kind of dictation, under that kind of control, with that kind of taxation and that kind of socialization, is that things are stymied and no development is taking place. You know, when you look at your budget, and considering the estate tax situation alone, this is what you find. It is all right to pass on your estate to your widow but, under the government's philosophy, you cannot pass on the estate to your children.

I do not know what the rates of taxation are going to be, and will not know until we get the resolution. However, this is what is going to happen. The small farmer who generally passes the farm on to his son, who in turn passes it on to his son, the little man who means a lot to Canada, is going to find that upon his death the family will have to borrow so much money at Liberal high rates of interest they will have to sell the farm to United States interests. Then the government will have another Watkins study, another Watkins report. I say to the minister, let us get on with the job of developing the resources of Canada, let us have some real vision.

Mr. Benson: I should like to rise to a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member said I was leaving the house, but actually I did not leave. I listened with great interest to everything he said. The only thing I did was to get some curtains between myself and the hon. member to protect my eardrums.

Mr. Woolliams: Speaking to the point of privilege quite seriously, I want to apologize if I left the impression the minister did not listen. He did listen very carefully to what I said and I appreciate that very much. When the minister did leave I thought he just could not stand it, so I withdraw any suggestion that he did not listen to my speech. He went back of the curtain to get a message, but he did stay and I appreciate that very much.

Mr. R. L. Whiting (Halton): In speaking today in this budget debate, Mr. Speaker, I rise with a feeling of concern regarding housing and its relation to the welfare of the people of Canada. There is another matter which concerns me also, and it relates directly to the economic welfare of the country. I am referring to the ever increasing number of railway stations which are being closed in many communities, and in many cases those communities depend upon railway service.

Before I proceed, because this is my maiden speech, I should like to take advantage of this first opportunity I have had to pay tribute to some of my predecessors who represented Halton county in this house. I refer to Dr. Harry Harley, who represented Halton so well during the years 1962 to 1968. It gives me great pleasure to mention the name of Mr. Hughes Cleaver, who sat in this house as the member for Halton from 1935 to 1953. The late Miss Sybil Bennett, the niece of the former prime minister, the late Viscount R. B. Bennett, represented Halton as did Dr. Alexander Best, the son of Dr. Charles Best, the co-discoverer of insulin. I am indeed honoured to be the successor to these former members who contributed so much. I look forward to representing the people of Halton in the great tradition of my parliamentary predecessors.

However, I should point out that Halton county, as such, is no longer a constituency.

The Halton riding came into being as a result of redistribution prior to the last federal election. Halton riding now includes the town of Erin in the north, but no longer includes the town of Burlington. I should like to take this opportunity of welcoming the people of Erin to the constituency of Halton. Erin is in Wellington county. I might add that this area is one of the oldest settled sections of the province of Ontario. It is also one of the most scenic as well as being a fine agricultural district. Halton riding now extends from the shores of lake Ontario some 37 miles north.

I should like to turn to housing and its relation to the budget. According to the annual report of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, last year over a million dollars in federal funds were earmarked for housing and directly related programs, such as urban renewal and sewage treatment plants. In view of the over-all size of our total budget, it is obvious there is a limit upon how much in the way of federal funds can be allocated to housing. We need more houses. We need more money in order to build those houses if we are to meet the goal set by the Economic Council of Canada.

We must therefore find new sources of money. In addition, we must bring down the per unit cost of housing by a considerable amount. This can be accomplished in part by standardizing building codes and construction standards across Canada. We must also encourage the use of new building materials. Housing therefore is a matter of social welfare, and the federal government has never failed to show leadership but has, in fact, taken the initiative in practically every housing program. The time has come for a reappraisal of federal, provincial and municipal responsibilities for housing. We must decide, along with other levels of government, how the ever increasing demands for housing upon the federal purse are to be met.

I submit that a first step would be the establishment of a national building code. It would be basic in a revised program of housing development, and any expenditure of N.H.A. funds would be contingent upon adherence to this code. The result of such a procedure would be very simple, very strong and very direct. For example, the National Research Council could approve new building materials and they would be immediately acceptable everywhere in Canada. This procedure would relieve municipal officials from the onus of personal decisions. The situation today is that these officials often avoid taking responsibility for allowing new methods or new materials to be used.

A comprehensive national building code would allow many companies to increase their research and construction of prefab houses which could be sold in all provinces. It would enable them also to deal with only one agency, the National Research Council, to get their new ideas and innovations approved. This would immediately decrease the cost of new houses in Canada. This is one positive step which would receive considerable public approval and would further emphasize the government's sincere desire to solve the housing problem. This problem is a complex one. There are many contributing factors which include land costs, construction costs, the cost of mortgages and so on.

Let us put the problem in a somewhat different perspective, Mr. Speaker. Consider a detached house costing approximately $28,500 in Oakville, which is located 25 miles from downtown Toronto. In order to buy one of these houses the purchaser must have a down payment of $10,000 and earn an income of over $8,000 per year to qualify for an N.H.A. mortgage. However, the average family income in Oakville is $6,235, the highest in Canada. Only 15 per cent of Canadians make over $8,000 per year.

This shows us, Mr. Speaker, that very few people have $10,000 cash. Financial institutions apply the rule that the applicant cannot afford more than 27 per cent of his income for mortgage interest, principal and taxes. A man earning $5,000 a year can therefore afford $110 per month toward his house payments if he were fortunate enough to live in an area where taxes were $300 a year, at $25 per month. He could afford $85 a month to pay interest and principal at 8½ per cent with a 25 year mortgage of $10,000. If he saved 10 per cent of his gross income for five years, he should have $2,500 for a down payment, and the total price that he could then afford for a home would be $12,500.

This, Mr. Speaker, poses the question: How many families earning $5,000 can afford to save 10 per cent per year, and where can you buy a house in an urban or semi-urban area for $12,500? A man earning $5,000 must pay considerably more than 27 per cent of his income for shelter if he is to live by Canadian standards. He must pay a proportionately high rent for an apartment or town house, or for a dwelling where they will accept children, or he is driven to buying a more expensive house on a resale basis by taking a second mortgage, with the likelihood of spending 45 to 50 per cent of his income on shelter.

Such mortgage payments and rents, Mr. Speaker, are a major cause of family breakdown because they take the milk from the baby's mouth and shoes from his feet. They deprive him of proper care, and frequently of the loving care of his mother, who often has to work in order to pay the rent or the mortgage.

The problem as far as housing is concerned is how to provide for or accommodate people in the lower income brackets. This problem must be solved by government action, which must be critical of obsolete methods of land assembly, construction and financing. A broad and enlightened attack on the problem is required. The government must not wait until all the contingencies are considered; the time to act is now.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I regret that action did not begin with this budget, in the form of a land speculation tax on the resale of undeveloped prime land. Such a tax would be a deterrent to persons who buy and sell land without contributing to the development of the country.

I look forward, Mr. Speaker, to the result of the task force under the leadership of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), which is now studying the problem across Canada. As soon as the housing task force was announced, a group of Halton citizens prepared a brief, which was presented to the task force in September. Some of my remarks today, Mr. Speaker, are taken from that brief.

I should like to discuss a situation, Mr. Speaker, that is not peculiar to my riding alone, but common to many constituencies across Canada. This relates to the railroads. I specifically refer to the policy of the Canadian National Railways of removing the agent operators from certain stations and incorporating these stations into what they refer to as the master agency plan. This is being done under the guise of economy, and is supposed to provide a more efficient service for the user.

I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that what the C.N.R. is proposing in these communities is not always in the best interest of the people the railway has served. Neither do I believe that it will appreciably improve the financial position of the railroad. Nor does the proposal provide a very efficient service to the public.

I should like to give you a case in point, Mr. Speaker. The C.N.R. is presently making application to the Canadian Transport Commission to remove the agent operator at Acton, Ontario. If this application is successful it will mean the virtual loss of railway service to this community. Acton is a progressive community of 6,000 people located 40 miles from metropolitan Toronto. It is a community that should receive increased railway service, not less. If, for example, the C.N.R. would give this community commuter service, undoubtedly people would move to the community from the congested areas of metropolitan Toronto but would continue to work in the city.

The removal of railway service would have an adverse effect on the future industrial growth of this town, because in many cases industry requires the facilities that are provided by the railway. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that Acton is one of the very few communities which has a favourable assessment ratio of 60 per cent industrial to 40 per cent residential.

I can find no justifiable grounds to abolish railway service in this community, Mr. Speaker. I take strong objection to the cavalier methods used by the C.N.R. prior to making formal application to the board of transport commissioners. It was just over a year ago—on October 13, 1967 to be exact—that Mr. R. T. Vaughan, a vice president of Canadian National Railways, wrote to Dr. Harry Harley, who at that time was federal member of parliament for Halton county, advising him that the first stages of implementation of what the railway call the master agency plan would be put into effect on November 6 of that year. The first stage, Mr. Vaughan pointed out, involved taking away certain work from the station and placing it in the hands of the master agency in Guelph. This included express, freight and telegraph service. The agent would remain on the premises but would not carry out any work. It would be very difficult for the agent to carry out too much work, because in this process they also disconnected his telephone.

This was to be in the nature, Mr. Speaker, of an experimental period which would probably last until mid-January or early February of this year. Further, the railway stated that following this trial period the whole matter would be reviewed and looked at in the light of whether an application should be made to the Canadian Transport Commission for approval to institute the master agency plan in this area.

Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the matter was reviewed by the railway and a decision made in the light of its effect on railway operations alone. No users of the railway were asked to make any application or express their views on the effect of this re-arrangement of service. Quite understandably, Mr. Speaker, the people of Acton wanted their side of the story to be heard before the application reached the Canadian Transport Commission and the commission agreed to hold a meeting. This meeting was held on October 17, 1968 in the Acton town hall and was presided over by Mr. W. J. Rupert, district inspector of the railway transport committee, and six representatives of the C.N.R.

I will not go into the details of what took place at that meeting, Mr. Speaker. Suffice it for me to say that the railway officials were grilled, admonished and lectured by the people in attendance. Mr. Rupert heard such descriptive adjectives as "shocking", "rotten" and "costly" to describe the service that the railway was giving the citizens of this community. He stated that his report of this meeting would not be made public but would go directly to the rail transport committee.

I submit that this procedure is not democratic and I challenge the right of the committee to keep this matter secret since it affects the future of a town and its people. I suggest that this meeting should have been held long before the phasing out process began. Talking to many of the people who attended the meeting I found it was the unanimous opinion that the decision had been made by the C.N.R. to go ahead with its application regardless, and in spite of, what transpired at the meeting. Its decision had in effect been reached before going to Acton. In other words, the public be damned. I sincerely hope this does not reflect the attitude of the C.N.R. in its activities throughout Canada.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to have the opportunity of participating in the consideration of the budget. During those few minutes, I shall try to be as objective as possible, even though some of my remarks or criticisms may not be too agreeable to our friends opposite.

I shall dispense with a full review of the promises and sharp criticisms directed against the ministers in the Diefenbaker government when we were in office, but it is difficult to remain silent about the election campaigns and the destructive criticisms the Liberals directed against the Minister of Finance of that day for showing a deficit in his budget. They promised to the people that as soon as they were in office, the Canadian people would not have any deficit in their budget, that it would be brought back to a more normal size and that, instead of showing deficits, we would have surpluses.

The facts are quite different from the promises made to us during the 1962 and 1963 elections in particular. In fact, since our friends opposite came to power in 1963, they certainly have had plenty of time to implement their promises and to show their ability to manage our country's business. However, today the cost of living is the highest in the whole history of Canada. In fact, according to the most recent statistics, the cost of living reaches 156.6 per cent. This means that a number of small investors and low income citizens have a hard time meeting their expenses at the end of the year.

Furthermore, we are faced with the largest deficit ever known in all our history. At the present time, 4.7 per cent of our labour force is unemployed and, out of this number, 99,000 are in the province of Quebec. Taxes of all kinds are the highest since confederation. The debt per capita is the highest ever known. For the second time in less than a year, personal income tax has been raised. It is the second time that this happens since the Liberals came to power. Postal rates have been increased too and, in some cases, the increase was in the order of 375 per cent.

It is also known that without any previous notice, this government has cancelled the winter works program that enabled municipalities to undertake, during the winter months, very useful works to lessen the evils of unemployment. Is it also to promote the building industry that this government maintains the 12 per cent tax on building materials? On several occasions, we on this side of the house tried to persuade the government of the benefit that would be derived from the removal of this 12 per cent tax, as it would enable small investors to build themselves a home, but every time we ran into objections on the part of government members.

Everybody knows that this government has always encroached upon fields of provincial jurisdiction. This government will not grant the provinces their fair share of the tax revenue. As a result of such a position, Mr. Speaker, there remains a certain mistrust between the parties concerned; the government and the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) should take a new stand.

Mr. Speaker, as I have but little time at my disposal this afternoon, I should like to talk about something that concerns the riding I have the honour to represent in this house, namely the textile industry.

This is one of the oldest industries in the province of Quebec. In that province, the textile industry provides employment for 52,000 Quebecers. There are plants in all or almost all the cities of the province and it is to be noted that those plants are mostly located in small or medium-sized towns.

This is to say that the textile industry has played along the years a very important part in the economy of our cities. We find a great number of textile workers in towns with a population of 5,000, 10,000 or 25,000 people, and they are the strength of our municipalities. They are home owners, people who have succeeded in saving enough money to build themselves a decent home for their family.

During the years 1960, 1961 and 1962, through the imaginative measures of the then minister of trade and commerce, (Mr. Hees), the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, the textile industry has taken a new lease on life, whereas it was declining before 1960. Thanks to the measures taken by the minister of trade and commerce at that time, this industry found new foreign markets. We were surely entitled to expect that those would be continued. However, conditions today have forced us to realize that the present situation is exactly the opposite of what it was in 1960-62.

The textile industry is now going through a period of uncertainty which is worrying not only the owners of our textile factories, but even more the workers. Mr. Speaker, those are the results of the unconcern shown by the present government towards the textile industry.

A few weeks ago I had the opportunity of meeting the owner of a textile factory in my region who had asked me to his office to discuss the matter.

Since it is always a delicate subject to mention names in the house without being authorized to do so, I asked that plant manager whether he objected to my giving names and figures about his own business. He said: I do not object at all because it is a matter of life or death for my own industry and for that of others also.

That industry is the Yamaska Shirts located in St. Hyacinthe. It has been operating in that city since 1929. Until recently, it had 350 employees on a yearly basis. However, since August last, due to a lack of orders, the management has been compelled to reduce its number of employees by about one half. Should the situation continue there will have to be further cuts in the number of employees according to Mr. Yvon Bolduc, the manager of this firm.

Mr. Speaker, the employees and their families are affected adversely by those conditions which are detrimental also to the well-being of many other Canadians who are entitled to expect from the government more protection than they have been given until now.

If you look for the basic reasons for this lack of work not only in that particular plant but and in many others, you will find that it is due mainly to excessive imports from foreign countries, particularly from communist and Asiatic countries.

I have before me, Mr. Speaker, the findings of a survey by the Canadian Textile Institute which gives not only very interesting information but shows to what extent imports are hurting the Canadian industry.

I would like to quote a few figures from the pamphlet I have in hand.

Canadian imports of large fabrics: cotton, synthetic fibres and wool have increased, since 1963, from 409,663,000 square yards to 478,376,000 square yards in 1967.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that as far as cotton or wool fabrics, are concerned, Canada is in an unfavourable position to compete with foreign products as, in both cases, we do not produce the raw material.

However, as far as synthetic fibres are concerned, Canada is certainly well equipped to maintain a flourishing industry which is undoubtedly to the advantage of the Canadian people.

As for imports of synthetic fabrics, are concerned, I will quote again from that publication. In 1963, we received 97,725,000 square yards of material from all countries compared with a total of 123,017,000 square yards in 1967. From Hong Kong especially, we imported in 1963, 1,215,000 square yards of material, while those imports reached 11,290,000 square yards in 1967. From Japan, in 1963, we received 24,188,000 square yards of material compared with 42,612,000 square yards in 1967.

How, Mr. Speaker, can one logically claim that by accepting such huge quantities of products on our market, we can hope to maintain especially in the field of synthetic fibres, a textile industry which can meet foreign competition? What are the immediate consequences of those imports? Several plants have shut down already. To mention only one plant which I know quite well, since I worked there several years, the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company is compelled to lay off 170 of its employees; I have been told that the Victoria Shirt in Arthabaska—and I got the information to me by the manager of the Yamaska Shirt plant in Saint-Hyacinthe—which has some 75 employees—will quite probably be forced to shut down before November 20. The same applies to several other plants throughout the province and to convince hon. members I would like to read part of a letter which I received from the director of the Textile Labour Unions of America. This letter dated November 5, 1968 was written in English and I quote it textually.

• (4:20 p.m.)

[English]

Recently we learned with great shock that at least four textile plants located in St. Hyacinthe, St. Jean and Coaticook were liquidating, forcing hundreds of employees into astoundingly growing joblessness.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is the situation in the textile industry.

There is one measure that the government could take; it could protect our workers because according to my information, Canadian tradesmen can get boys' shirts from Thailand at $14.50 a dozen, federal tax included. In Canada it would cost a Canadian manufacturer $26.55 to make a dozen shirts of similar quality. As far as men's shirt are concerned, an importer or a tradesman can get foreign shirts for $18.50, federal tax included, whilst the same product or a similar product manufactured in Canada, will cost him $34.50 a dozen.

[Mr. Ricard.]

It seems to me that the government of Canada has an obligation to give the Canadian workers and taxpayers the protection to which they are entitled and to guarantee that they will be able to continue working in the factories where they gained their experience and where their skills are still needed. If the present trend continues, the textile industry will completely disappear a few years from now, and we will all be sorry to see the end of an industry which, until now, has greatly contributed to the success and development of our municipalities.

It seems to me that the government should adopt anti-dumping legislation which would give our workers the protection they need. In my opinion, this legislation should prevent the entry into Canada of foreign products which compete with Canadian products.

If our Canadian factories can manufacture 24,000 or 30,000 dozen of shirts a year, we should not allow the entry into the country of 24,000 or 30,000 dozens of shirts, or whatever the figure, unless they are appraised at the same price as the shirts manufactured in Canada. That would put Canadian and foreign manufacturers on an equal footing. Unless such steps are taken, I am afraid our industry will sooner or later go bankrupt.

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to make a few comments on the first budget introduced by the Minister of Finance. I do not direct my remarks exclusively to him, because to my mind he is merely the tool of the government. I do not want the minister to think that I am criticizing him personally, but rather the policy he is implementing.

I should like to point out to the hon. minister what same journalists think of his first budget. For instance, I have here an article written by Roland Gagné, which appeared in La Voix de l'Est, on October 25, 1968 in which he gives his impressions on the budget of the hon. minister.

In our opinion, it is an injustice, because it is not the average wage earner, who always gets the beating, but the higher wage earner who has the means to pay higher income tax when the financial situation of the state requires it. The least that can be said is that Mr. Benson could have strained his grey matter to a greater extent to find less onerous sources of revenue for the people in the low and moderate income groups.

Further on, Roland Gagné adds:

Mr. Benson should have taken into consideration the high cost of living, the ever increasing prices, as well as the difficulties Canadians face daily in trying to make ends meet. Their income is by no means inexhaustible. The income that remains, once taxes have been paid, is barely sufficient to provide them with a decent standard of living.

And Mr. Gagné concludes by saying:

> Why can the Minister of Finance not be reasonable, why can his tax measures not be fair and equitable for all Canadians?

In an editorial published in the newspaper Le Droit of October 23 last, having concurred with the stand taken by the minister towards insurance companies, Marcel Gingras adds this:

> That satisfying measure unfortunately is matched by a mean action which will affect again the small wage earners who are urged to save while invited to subscribe generously to the latest issue of Canada savings bonds. As of now, nothing will be left to the small investors who could hardly save enough money to receive meagre bank interests and others. Every interest amounting to ten dollars or more in the future will be taxed while up to now at least, $100 in interests was protected from the greedy taxation people.

The just society, at that price, becomes extremely expensive and we shall regret having ever wished for it.

Now, here is the opinion of a labour leader whose every day work brings him in continuous contact with the workers who let him know about their needs. This is what Mr. Laberge, president of the Q.F.L. said with regard to the first budget presented by the Minister of Finance and I quote:

> —the two per cent increase in personal income tax, with its $120 ceiling, is a real hold-up against low income people by a government which managed fraudulently to be elected on the basis of a just society.

That is the opinion of newspapermen and a labour leader about the first budget of our good friend, the Minister of Finance.

A lot more could be said about this budget, but since the time allotted to me is nearly over, I would simply appeal to the fair-mindedness of the minister and tell him that many today are the citizens who got fooled by the promise of a just society as proposed by this government.

They even have regrets and are just waiting for the next opportunity to show in a tangible manner their dissatisfaction towards this government.

The Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the present Liberal government would be well advised to remember that and to act accordingly. The government should remember that its first duty is to build a society which protects the weak and not the rich and the powerful, because the budget which we will be called upon to pass or reject bears all signs of a measure which, once again, falls on the low income people to the advantage of those who could withstand a tax increase much better than they can.

I ask the honourable minister if he is perfectly convinced that it is in the best interest of the population to tax $108 the married citizen who gets an annual income of $7,000 or $8,000 and to impose an increase of a few more dollars only to those who get an income of $10,000 $15,000 $25,000 or more.

I think that in his inner self, the honourable minister realizes that this is an injustice and I hope that he will use the next opportunity to correct it in order to bring about the just society which was promised during the last election campaign.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. John Roberts (York Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I know it is traditional for a member speaking for the first time in the house to say a few words about his constituency. I would not wish to break with such a tradition.

York Simcoe is a new constituency, I am a new member, and I am relatively new to the area I represent. It is now my home and I have come to know it well. Those members who have visited York Simcoe know that it is a rural area lying between Barrie and Toronto. They will also know that it contains some of the loveliest land in Canada, from rolling hills to the Holland Marsh. They should know something of its roots in our history; the Scottish and British settlers and the French speaking pioneers, and the Quakers who first inhabited the area. Hon. members will know that more recently it has attracted people from many lands, who have also made their contribution. Its people are warm and hospitable, and it is an honour for me to have been accepted by them, as well as a privilege to represent these Canadians in the House of Commons.

In some ways my previous experience might have led me to attempt to enter political life. As a university teacher of political science I knew the frustration of lecturing about political problems without having to do anything about them. When I entered public service, first as a diplomat, and later as a ministerial assistant, I had some opportunity to deal with the problems facing this country. But I doubt that I would have attempted political office had it not been for the personality and the policies of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

The concept of government, which the Prime Minister espouses, which seeks the active participation of the public in decisions which affect them—a government of involvement—is a vision of Canada which attracts me. This led me to enter public life to give what support I could to the person who I believe understands best the country that, ideally, Canada can be.

Today I should like to speak on the problems and prospects which face regional development in this country. It has become clear that Canada is moving out of an era of welfare politics into a period in which a primary concern will be the programs and politics of economic development. The whole emphasis on the implementation of welfare programs since the second world war—the establishment of a national system of social security—useful and important as these programs have been, has not moved us very far in eradicating the disparities of regional development which exist in this country. After a century of growth almost one quarter of our families in Canada are living at or under the poverty level.

Our past programs have treated the symptoms of poverty rather than the disease. The key to combatting the poverty problem is the channelling of more funds to realize the untapped potential of underdeveloped regions of our country. Their function must not be to provide a permanent crutch, or support, for lagging sectors, but to give temporary infusions of capital which will bring these regions to a level at which they can sustain their own growth and contribute to our national prosperity.

The proposed department of regional development will fail in this task unless it is conceived, not simply as a department of regional development but as a department which is concerned with general economic planning for the whole of Canada. Such a role opens up a whole nest of problems both within the structure of federalism and within the framework of interdepartmental relations within the government. The department of regional development, if it is to succeed, must take on this larger role simply because of the extent of interdependence within our society and our economy.

The whole history of the rural development program, for instance the agricultural and rural development administration, and the fund for rural economic development, is instructive from this point of view. ARDA was originally conceived as a program to deal with specific, ad hoc, one shot agricultural programs. An analysis soon indicated that over half the people living in rural areas were not engaged in agriculture. As a result, a program directed simply toward agricultural problems could not deal with the underdevelopment of rural areas. The emphasis of programs shifted from agricultural projects to general projects in rural areas. We then found that even concentration on individual and specific projects was not enough. We cannot rely upon piecemeal plans. You have to look for programs in rural areas as a whole. Therefore we moved to a comprehensive development approach, and this led us to the creation of the $300 million FRED.

At the same time we found that one basic problem in lagging areas was the lack of potential employment opportunities. Consequently, the programs which were designed to improve labour mobility and enhance occupational skills have necessarily resulted in the migration of people from rural to urban areas. We were in danger of solving the problems of rural areas simply by compounding the problems of urban areas. So in the rural development program we have been led step by step to the necessity of regional economic development because we have found that development problems cannot be efficiently dealt with outside this framework.

I suggest that regional economic planning does not make much sense unless it is related to some over-all conception of economic objectives for the country as a whole. Only through such a conception can one keep regional developments operating harmoniously with each other rather than at cross purposes. But of course there are enormous problems in developing a useful system of economic planning in Canada, problems posed by the nature of federalism, by our economic traditions and by our strong interdependence as a trading nation within the North American economy.

Obviously whatever economic planning we have, it must involve close co-operation with the provincial and municipal governments. But one danger of this co-operation may be to remove the planning process from the effective scrutiny of the political process. Planning agreements hammered out in consultation with the provinces would become rigid documents. The House of Commons on the one hand, and the provincial legislatures on the other, will be told that nothing can be changed since changes would restart the whole process of consultation and negotiation. In other words, there is a real danger that planning for regional development will become, in an exact literal sense, an irresponsible process. Positions will be taken with the provinces by planners and technocrats. For parliaments and legislatures to bring effective scrutiny and control to such a process will be extremely difficult.

We have seen how difficult it is for the public to ascertain governmental responsibility for the implementation of shared cost programs with the provinces. Indeed, the fudging of the lines of responsibility is one reason they are brought into discredit. Many members of this house have indicated their concern at the erosion of parliamentary control which has resulted from delegated legislation. There is a real danger that planning decisions, too, will, in effect, be delegated to organs of federal and provincial co-operation which it will be difficult for the House to control.

The process of planning is not simply a technocratic function. Any planning process, since it allocates scarce resources, involves a choice of means and ends which embody political preferences. Through planning certain groups are helped and encouraged, others are limited in their activity. We cannot avoid political judgments in this process.

It is for this reason that I am hopeful the minister responsible for regional development will engage the parliamentary committee fully in the regional planning process. Political choices—I am not speaking of partisan politics—must inform technocratic judgment.

A second important factor will be the engagement of the people to be affected by planning, in the planning process. The French have had considerable success in this "animation sociale" and it might be that we could well adapt their use of regional and sector commissions to involve labour, industry, consumers, experts and others in the planning process. This public involvement is vital if planning is to succeed. People must be consulted and their judgments must carry weight.

The French government achieves this through 23 sector commissions. These commissions work on preliminary growth estimates prepared in a five-year basis by the "Commissariat au Plan". Since the commission include representatives of administration, business leaders, experts, people from universities and wage earners, they are able to thrash out different opinions and obtain wide agreement on development prospects. The process both overcomes the isolation of government departments, which tend to work in water-tight compartments, and engages public support for planning objectives. We in Canada have to go further, I believe, in involving the parliamentary committee in this kind of work.

Administrators like a quiet life. Civil servants involved in regional planning are not exempt from this general principle. Yet the objective of social participation in planning is to make their life unquiet. It is to ensure that the results of the planning process really do embody a consensus of the views of the groups affected by change. I hope that the minister responsible for this department will ensure that his civil servants will lead unquiet lives in this regard.

The second major problem area for a department of economic development is that of interdepartmental relations.

In most countries—Great Britain and France are good examples—the government departments responsible for economic development sooner or later run headlong into the policies of ministries of finance. The concern of ministers of finance is, after all, fiscal policy and their immediate concern is the short term view of the next 12 months. The view of economic planners is on the five, 10 or 20 year scale. In government, as we know, the urgent often takes precedence over the important. The problem is how to ensure that the planning voice is heard strongly in government councils which are markedly oriented to immediate budgetary and fiscal concerns. To attach economic planning responsibility to the head of government precludes the kind of attention the planning process requires. To attach it to the Department of Finance is to entrust a tender child to a notorious cannibal.

The best solution would appear to be to attach it to a strong minister with easy and influential access to the head of government. This I hope, and I am sure, happily, is the situation now in Canada. What is also required is to make budget making open to the increasing need of public involvement with the budgeting process. A whole mythology surrounds the present budgetary process. A delicious sense of mystery tantalizes those who wonder what the Minister of Finance will do. Obviously some economic decisions being considered by a government cannot be discussed publicly, since public discussion would in itself have the effect of limiting the government's free decision. Devaluation is a perfect example.

But I believe it would be useful to have in a general way more information than we now receive in respect of the various economic measures the government is considering. The United States, for instance, is able to discuss budgetary proposals in congressional committees without an enormously disruptive effect. It seems to me that we possibly might be able to do the same thing.

At the moment, advice which is too narrowly channelled through one small group of people—and this is what happens at the present time—no matter how able those people are, is likely to prove inadequate. This is one reason I welcome the announcement of the recent appointment of an economic adviser to the Prime Minister, and I hope that one of his jobs will be to provide an assessment of Canada's economic policy apart from the views of the Department of Finance.

It would also be helpful if the forecasting services of the Department of Finance were improved, and eventually that the government reveal the long term forecasts on which it is working. These forecasts should be treated not as fixed goals which it is the determination of a government to achieve; they should be looked at as "best estimates," and it should be recognized that policies will change as circumstances change and as estimates prove to be more accurate. Such forecasts and policies tentatively framed in relation to them, will give us a much better assessment of a government's performance. At the moment it is too easy to justify economic success and failure as a result of the imponderable factors in unrealized forecasts.

Regardless of the difficulties of the forecasting process, government must obviously come to some view of what the performance of the economy is likely to be over a five-year period as a context for the yearly budgetary program. Indeed, in terms of the allocation of governmental program priorities the government must look at the life of a parliament as a planning period. Government program priorities are linked to budgetary allocation. A budget can only properly be assessed when viewed in the context of the longer period of government legislation and spending plans. I very much hope that the Minister of Finance will take steps—perhaps others than those I have suggested—to open up the budgetary and planning process to greater public involvement.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as I speak in this house for the first time, I should like to address a few words to my French Canadian colleagues.

I must say that my concept of Canada is that of a country founded on the equalitarian principles of North America, a country with two languages, two cultures, rich from a material point of view, richer still from the spiritual point of view.

I am convinced that such a concept of our country requires the full participation of French Canada. I wish French Canada the role of an equal partner in the management of this country, and French Canadians actual and not merely symbolical power in the management of governmental, administrative and economic affairs of our country.

To all the members, on both sides of the house, I want to say that I am extremely proud to be their colleague, to sit with them, to have the honour of participating, even in a minor capacity, in the management of the affairs of our country.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I respectfully request your tolerance and understanding in bearing with me during my first speech in the house. Indeed, while to me it must be a very important phase of my political life, I realize only too well that to you it is but one of many speeches you have heard in your illustrious term of office.

I hope too, Mr. Speaker, that all members of the house will bear with me in what I have to say, as I know that every one of the 264 members who occupy seats here in this chamber have been or will be charged with the duty and honour of giving his first speech in the House of Commons.

It is with a great sense of pride and humility that I stand here and with a weight of responsibility in the knowledge that I represent over 70,000 men, women and children in the riding of Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe in the province of Newfoundland. But I realize too, Mr. Speaker, that whilst my immediate duty is to my constituents, I am also responsible to the half million people of my province and indeed to the many millions of Canadians across our great dominion.

I hope that I may be forgiven if I do not deal specifically with the issue at hand, that is the budget, but what I intend to do is to deal generally with the spending of moneys, as it applies to the nation, by the federal government, and its application in its contributions to the province which I represent, together with my six other colleagues.

If I am critical, it is with respect to those I criticize, not for the sake of criticism alone. I wish to point out what I believe have been very grave errors of judgment, and I hope that some of the criticisms will leave a small mark of recognition on those who are responsible for spending, so that these errors will not be repeated in the future, to bring about the suffering of those who can least afford to suffer.

Due to my somewhat modest military background, in assessing the capabilities of the present government I cannot for the life of me understand their approach to the administration of our country, and I was immediately struck with the fancy military cliches reflected in the government's plan of operation. I refer to cliches like the war on poverty, task forces, training and mobility, strategy, and many other military terms. I would not be surprised if any day now we were to see a platoon of 29 ministers march into the house in the new green uniforms. If indeed the government intends to use military strategy in their attack on the country's problems, may I remind them of the fundamental military term, "appreciation of the situation". May I also remind them of such fundamental terms, which they seem to have forgotten, as basic training, common sense, sincerity, fundamental planning, and the important term, leadership.

With the change in the high command, they have started a change in departments. Let me remind them that if they are going to start playing soldier they are not going to fight the war on poverty by creating new departments. They are not going to overcome neglect, regional disparity, unemployment or the lack of housing by attacking these problems with task forces or by overstaffing their offices with research experts, psychologists or sociologists, by computers, or by looking at maps or reading statistics. They can only find the solutions by using their basic training knowledge or by looking over the ground.

You cannot solve the problem of housing in Newfoundland by sending task forces to the capital of the province and asking questions of the very people who caused the problem, that is the provincial government. You can only solve the problem by visiting the village, the settlement, the town or the community where the problem exists, and has existed for 20 years, due to ineptitude and political waste. You cannot talk training and mobility to Newfoundlanders who have been deprived of an education, due to apathy and complacency of government. You cannot talk centralization and reorganization to people who have been discriminated against, and who have never been afforded the common everyday basic services which should be their basic right. You cannot solve problems by thinkers' conferences and seminars and by preparing fancy reports; you can only solve them by getting to the grass roots of the problem and using a bit of common sense. You can only solve them by getting your hands a little dirty and your feet a little wet.

No, Mr. Speaker, our government has created a Frankenstein and has become so absorbed in creating royal commissions to tackle problems, royal commissions which after years of time and millions of dollars only tell them in the end what they knew when they started, that there is a problem. And nine times out of ten the government disregards the report, anyway.

I like the report on poverty of the Economic Council of Canada. After hundreds of pages, five annual reviews, 32 staff studies, five conferences, after presenting seven papers and nine other reports, they came up with the statement that poverty is real. What a stroke of genius! Is there anybody in this house, in the press gallery or in the visitors gallery who did not know that poverty is real? Do not the five million poverty stricken Canadians know that poverty is real?

I liked reading a couple of months ago of the grand celebration the government had here in Ottawa when, with great fanfare and publicity, the Prime Minister by the mere pressing of a button launched a new machine that tells us how many children are born each day. How much did this wonderful invention cost? But let me suggest to the government that they invent some new attachments for that machine which will tell them what happens to the babies born in depressed areas who will be deprived of an education. Let them find an attachment that will tell them what happens to those children who grow up without an education and cannot find jobs. Let them attach something to this machine to prepare these babies for the neglect they will find in the fishing settlements of Newfoundland, where people do not have such bare necessities as water and sewerage, lights and telephones, doctors and nurses. Let the machine tell these babies how they can learn to understand the look of disillusionment and despair in the faces of their parents, when they are old enough to understand.

What is the purpose of all these royal commissions? Let us consider first the commission on the status of women. Why are thousands of dollars wasted to investigate the status of women? Why the waste of time and money when everyone in the country knows that any woman can become anything a man can aspire to become? Are there not women doctors, lawyers, professors, scientists and mayors? Are there not women members of parliament and senators who help govern the country? I would even go farther and admit that women can achieve what no man can: They can produce the children that we hope will grow up to become better clothed and fed and educated, and to become better leaders of our country. But let them also be reminded that they are mothers and that they should bring up our children by example and, before it is too late, prevent the diseases that are infesting our youth with glue sniffing, hippie-ism and rioting which I feel is getting out of hand and, if we are not careful, will result in the decay of our youth of the future.

Here we are in a state of financial chaos. The other day I read in Time magazine about the general and his lieutenants going off on junkets to Latin American countries. They are going on a month long mission to Latin America, on a belated voyage of exploration, to look into the all important aspects of our relations with Venezuela, Colombia, Peru, Chile, Argentina and Brazil, and other Latin American countries. They are going to have a shuttle service between Ottawa and Latin America.

Did anyone ever hear of anything so absurd? They are making a mess of running their own country and here they go looking for trouble in other countries. They cannot solve their own basic problems and they go looking for new ones. I say to them in all sincerity, let us clean out our own backyard before we go trying to solve someone else's problems. If the Prime Minister wants to go on a voyage of exploration, let me take him on a voyage to my district in Newfoundland to look into the all important relations with the most neglected part of Canada. I will take his cabinet on a voyage which will make them hang their heads in shame.

• (5:00 p.m.)

First, let me take the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on a junket. I will show him waste in spending which results from his and his predecessors' neglect by pouring millions of dollars into the hands of an incompetent administration. This waste resulted from neglecting to exercise control of spending. Let me show him a 500 page report by the royal commission on the economic state and prospects of Newfoundland. If I may quote from this financial report, we find that the consultants said:

> In this study on the Newfoundland government the consultant had the greatest difficulty arriving at a complete picture of the current financial picture of the government.

The report continues, Mr. Speaker:

> In examining past budgets of the government of Newfoundland, one cannot fail to note the incomplete and extreme confused nature of their contents.

Then, later, we find this:

> Government expenditures have been allocated without any formal reference to a measured economic situation or to anything but the most vaguely and inadequately defined prospects . . . No attempt has been made to performance budget nor to relate expenditure over the years with their effects on development.

This should be worth while reading for the finance minister. In addition, I can show him a debt of $509 million, and a projected debt of $1 billion within the next four years. We don't know the meaning of the word thousands any more in Newfoundland; we speak only of millions and millions. Within a short time, it is going to be billions and billions. The finance minister says he will balance his budget next year. Does he want to make a bet? What portion of this debt will this government have to pay when financial oblivion is evident?

Then, Mr. Speaker, I should like to take the minister responsible for housing on a junket across my district. I would show him the need for homes. I would show him nine, 10 and 11 children sleeping in one or two bedrooms. I would show him a home described by a Newfoundland newspaper which the minister of supply and services (Mr. Jamieson) should know well, the Newfoundland Herald.

This situation was described in the newspaper with the following headline, "Family Discovered in Shocking State". Nine people in that city were existing in Biafra-like conditions. While we are flying over the wild blue fog in our Air Canada plane or travelling on the Newfoundland railway bullet, or in one of the new buses, the minister can read about this family in a tiny, fusty smelling kitchen with a dirt floor, and a stove condemned by the fire inspectors. If he does not believe what he reads in the newspapers, then I will show him an official letter from the department of health to a landlord. This letter resulted from my request that the department inspect a home I visited, where I saw an infant with rat bite marks. I will quote one paragraph of the letter for all to hear:

> It was reported to us that the apartment, and indeed the whole building was crawling with cockroaches. We had an inspector visit the premises right away and he found a cockroach infestation far worse than anything any of us had ever seen before. There is also evidence of rats infesting the premises.

Then, Mr. Speaker, after I shuttle these two ministers back to Ottawa for their turn on the question period, I will take the minister responsible for regional development on a trip because I want to show him a part of the Atlantic region he overlooked when he made his speech in Halifax last week. I want Newfoundland to get in on this great 15 year development plan to overcome regional disparity and create new industry. I want to show him a district that has been neglected for 20 years. Newfoundland is part of the Atlantic region, too. I want Newfoundland to share in what he says economic development is all about. The minister likes to refer to regional economic expansion. I should like to find out what he means when he says that the points at which development takes place are widely spread across all regions of Canada. We want to be a part of that dynamic economy; we want to be part of this movement and change. Our concern, too, is that movement and change should occur within the Atlantic region, and not as a result of the attrition of the region.

I want the minister to meet some of the good, hardy industrious Newfoundlanders who want to become a part of his planning to attract new industries; to stimulate and aid the modernization and expansion of existing industries; to find customers outside the region; to structure transportation to aid marketing; to improve productivity and earnings; and to share in the utilities and services that are essential to healthy industrial growth. However, Newfoundlanders might not believe in this wonderful plan because this is what they have been promised for 20 years. They have become suspicious and disillusioned. They have been fooled for 20 years, and the Liberal government reaped the results of that when the island failed to return the guaranteed seven seats. I hope the minister's failure to refer to Newfoundland in his speech was only an oversight. Newfoundland still wants to be part of Canada and we can make a contribution with good planning and leadership.

Then, I should like to take a special trip with my friend, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis). We will have to spend a little longer, though, because we will have to look into every little fishing village in order to study the complex problems of the inshore fishery. We will have to drive about 600 miles over dirt roads. This is a good time to do so, because the minister will see a depressed group of people who wonder why the greatest brains in the country cannot solve the problems of the fishing industry. I will show him why these hardy people do not want to know about upgrading and retraining methods. All they know is what was handed down to them by their forefathers, that is to take from the sea a God-given natural resource, fish, and try to provide a living for their families. They want someone to help them keep foreign draggers away from their shores and from interfering with their rights. They wonder why we do not have the guts to create fishing limits, why we let these draggers ruin their means of livelihood. They don't want handouts or disguised welfare; they want assistance and leadership in becoming good Canadians.

In order that we will not have to bother some of the other ministers who might not want to go on this junket, I will take the Minister of Fisheries to visit one fishing plant along a 300 mile coast of fishing villages. I will let him see the employees in this plant working for wages far below the minimum wage scale so that he can report to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey). Then we can visit the post offices and investigate the salaries paid to postmasters and postmistresses, which are ridiculously below anything that is fair and decent. A report can then be made to the responsible minister. Perhaps the minister will believe him, because he would not believe me when I asked a question of him in the house.

Finally, we will investigate the need for wharves and break-waters which have been promised to Newfoundland fishermen for years, and then ignored. Perhaps a report could be made to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing). The minister of supply and services accused the Newfoundland members of being isolationist in their thinking toward this country. Let me say that if I am being accused of isolationism, then the same reasoning can be applied to national unity, which has been such a touchy subject for many years. You are not going to solve cultural problems by means of round table conferences, thinkers conferences, royal commissions or by sensationalizing through the news media.

Leave the people of Canada alone, I say. We have lived together in unity for 100 years by applying the common sense laws created by the Fathers of Confederation. National unity will result from the feeling we have in our hearts, the way we help our neighbours, regardless of race, creed or colour. We had examples of this during world war II, Mr. Speaker. No one told the French, the Italians, the Ukrainians, the Jews or the many other nationalities that they had to fight for Canada against German tyranny. They did so because they were Canadians.

What better examples of unity do you have than those which we have in this House of Commons? No one told the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) that he could not represent all the people of his district because of his colour. He will represent them with determination, dedication and pride. No one told the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) that he could only represent the Indian people in his district. Nothing prevented the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) from reaching the highest goal in the Dominion of Canada, that of leading all the people of Canada, because he is French.

The needs of our country are very basic, and the best way I can describe them is to apply the words of the late John F. Kennedy to what I want for Canada. I want a country where every family can live in a decent home, in a decent neighbourhood; where children can play in the parks and playgrounds and not in the streets and slums; where no home is unsafe or unsanitary; where a good doctor and a good hospital are neither too far away nor too expensive; where the water is clean and the air is pure and the streets are safe at night; where every child is educated, not according to his means but according to his capacity. Let us achieve these goals by co-operation and understanding, by determination and leadership. We, as a government, must decide what course we will follow. Let us pray that this course will lead to a great Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal for a few moments with regional disparities in Canada. This gay cavalier that we have for a finance minister shrugged his shoulders and made casual references to disparities among the provinces when he introduced his budget. It did not seem to matter whether these disparities were social, geographic or occupational. He did not offer the germ of an idea for solving the problems of some of the people in this country. He treated Canada as if its population were members of a large affluent club. This club, Mr. Speaker, had suffered some additional expenses, so the minister had decided to raise the dues. It did not matter that these dues fell a little hard on some people. I would suggest to the minister that these dues were particularly unfair to some people who cannot ever hope to become members of this club. The budget should have had some solutions to put forward for those who are faced with problems.

I should like to deal briefly, Mr. Speaker, with the problem facing our fisheries. For 20 years all our fishermen have heard are excuses; their problems still remain to be solved. It does not matter whether these problems relate to freshwater or saltwater fishing. Government solutions have in fact been inept and the budget contains no fresh ideas for tackling these problems. Certainly there have been no ideas on the part of the Department of Fisheries. I suggest that if an official in the Department of Fisheries were given an order book and told to go out and get orders for fish, he would not know what to do with the book. It is high time the government and the Department of Fisheries took the initiative and acted imaginatively to solve the problems facing our fishermen in Canada, whether those problems be geographic or occupational.

For example, Mr. Speaker, the fishing industry needs a Colonel Sanders to do for fish what he has done for chicken. I think it is high time we took a different look at our problems from the one taken hitherto.

Let me give another example, Mr. Speaker, which is really an association of words. If a housewife sees a newspaper headline that reads: "New government budget has a fishy look", and she goes to market, naturally she will not buy any fish; she will probably buy beef or chicken or some other foodstuff. The businessman, already worried about increased taxation, is not going to eat fish when he goes to a restaurant; he will eat something else.

The hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather) had a good idea, Mr. Speaker, and I should just like to quote from a newspaper report I have which set forward this idea:

> Instead of "fish", Barry Mather has tipped Jack Davis, sell it with some "flair and imagination—give it a little supermarket sex appeal."
> Call it anything, says Barry Mather, but don't call it "fish".
> Call it what it is: Boundary Bay Crab, B.C. Red Spring Salmon, West Coast Cohoe, Gaspe Salmon, New Brunswick Sardines, Nova Scotia Lobster, Athabaska Salmon Trout—

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that what is required here is a different approach. In effect, we should use modern methods of merchandizing in the fisheries. Fish should be advertised as something that people want to eat. Salesmen in the Department of Fisheries should actually think, eat, sleep and dream fish. They should advertise this commodity so that people want to eat it. Therefore what is required is imagination and initiative, and it is time that something was done.

May I now turn for a moment, Mr. Speaker, to the grains industry in western Canada. This is a highly efficient industry, or could be made into such, but our grain producer is on the horns of a dilemna. If he spends more money on fertilizers, on new machinery or on improving the production of grain, he only adds to the surplus problem now facing our farmers. If he enlarges his input of money and output of production, and then finds he cannot sell that production, then all he is left with are "put-puts" and no money.

Last year, Mr. Speaker, since the international grains agreement had expired the government lost sales to Japan and other countries. The United States and France took them away from us. The government woke up too late, realized that the market had gone, and our farmers now have a surplus of grain on their hands. For all that the Canadian government has done to sell grain, Mr. Speaker, you might suppose that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) were praying for drought in China. The situation was bad enough last year; this year there is an additional surplus on the prairies. What are the government doing about it now?

We lost some sales last year, Mr. Speaker, and I suggest that we are going to lose more this year unless our Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce gets busy and shows some imagination and initiative in this area as well. We have sent abroad salesmen from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce who admittedly have sold a lot of wheat. These people deal with governments and with international trading agreements, and that is fine. But what have they or the government done to sell wheat in the modern merchandizing sense?

Let me give another example, Mr. Speaker. I have been told that the people of India and some other Asian countries do not have a taste for wheat or wheat products in the sense that we in the western world have. Perhaps this product should be prepared in some other way in which they would eat it. For instance, corn could be turned into corn syrup or corn liquor. We might have to use different methods of preparing wheat for sale.

I should also like to suggest that to promote trade with these people we change the form of a product. Let us look for what the market demands, not at what we have for sale. We might also do a little research in other countries and be able to show them whether it is economical for them to buy wheat or to sell rice, or whether it is in their interest to purchase a high protein grain which could be used to more advantage in their country. I doubt whether we have done much in this area. We should actually search the market for ways to enlarge the sale of our products.

We in western Canada, Mr. Speaker, realize that you cannot hope always to sell the total crop that you have on hand. We must be prepared as farmers to carry some stocks in our own granaries as part of our business, if you like. Grain is a important commodity to Canada, and as a nation we might well consider establishing a national food bank, call it a strategic reserve, or what you will.

We might also explore the possibility of selling grain to the sterling areas, or to the Japanese, taking Japanese yen or sterling in return. I will give the house an illustration of what I have in mind. If we were to sell 100 million bushels of wheat, roughly $200 million worth, to Japan and we took the equivalent in yen, then the wheat could be paid for by using some of our supply of gold or U.S. dollars that we have on hand. We could pay the farmers out of this money, and it would not cost the Canadian taxpayer a cent. Admittedly, Mr. Speaker, it might reduce our manoeuverability economically on the markets of the world, but my suggestion is that it is not in our best interest as a nation to be tied to any one market. If we were wise we would spread our trade among several countries. This is particularly so in view of the internal problems in the United States, with whom a large proportion of our business is done.

Very soon, Mr. Speaker, the Japanese will be holding a world trade fair. What better way could we honour them than by selling to them some of our products, taking yen in return? I have a yen to go to Japan to see that trade fair, and I should like some yen on hand to pay my way when I get there.

I should like to deal for a few moments with the effects agriculture has on the economy of Canada as a whole. Agriculture accounts, I think, for approximately 7 per cent of the gross national product, but believe me there are some sections of the economy which have a great deal more influence on the rest than dollars would suggest. Back in the 'fifties when we had a national surplus of wheat, the first industries in the east which felt the impact were those which were related to western agriculture—industries manufacturing farm machinery and the like. One week end when I was home I went around and asked a number of businessmen what the situation was, at that time, as far as business was concerned. They said: It has been slow this fall and unless larger grain sales are in prospect it will be slower still. When one sees dozens of high priced tractors or combines standing on an implement dealer's lot, it will not be too long before the problem is back in Ontario, or Quebec.

Let me suggest in closing that as we try to solve the problems of our neighbours, as we try to solve the problems of different regions in Canada, we frequently solve other problems as well. But if we are selfish and self-centered, tending to look after a particular area only, the other problems are likely to grow. By helping to solve the problems of other people we can frequently solve our own.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour, as the member for the riding of Lotbinière, to participate in the debate on the budget which, in this instance, is the first budget brought down by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in order to add to what the members of the Ralliement Créditiste have already said in the house on what we think of the budget and its effects.

Mr. Speaker, our country must reorganize itself in the light of the past and the present. We live in a young country, but after 100 years of attempts, successes and failures, we must lay the foundation for a modern country, keeping what has served it well and improving what has failed.

For several years now, in the face of great difficulties and an alert and alarmed public opinion, our governments set up royal commissions on various topics, which commissions, headed by experts, heard the grievances, collected evidence, accumulated statistics, with a view to delineating each specific problem. In the light of those facts, the commissioners produced recommendations to enlighten our legislators in the heavy responsibility of drafting laws.

For instance, we know of reports equally famous and modernistic, such as the Glassco report on the administration of the government which was intended to make that organization more functional, more streamlined, according to modern standards.

We have had the Carter report on taxation, which aimed at redefining and altering the structure of our obsolete taxation system, tax-sharing formulas, and so on.

We have had—and there is still more to come, for it is not yet completed—the report on bilingualism and biculturalism, which deals with the problem of languages, races, cultures and minorities in Canada with a view to presenting solutions which will allow each individual and the whole Canadian people to develop fully, each according to his own means of expression.

We have had the report on foreign ownership and the structure of the Canadian industry. We have had the report on the Canadian banking system.

Mr. Speaker, we do not necessarily have to support all the recommendations found in each one of those reports. Nevertheless, the fact remains that these studies have been made at great expense to the Canadian people and should be used for a concrete purpose, helping us to build a modern country for a dynamic people.

I am clearly under the impression that those studies which cost millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money were only effected to calm down a storm, to suppress a tendency and to justify the inaction of the government.

Private industry, Mr. Speaker, is constantly reviewing its organization, its structures, its means and objects. It is not afraid of development, competition and modernization, otherwise it would run the risk of being left behind.

A private enterprise which would stop developing—as everybody knows and recognizes—could not remain in existence. The same applies, in my opinion, with a few exceptions, to the government.

That is the reason why, it is unthinkable that such serious studies made on such basic subjects should be consigned to oblivion or put off indefinitely.

In the meantime, the government is losing valuable time which could be better used for the progress of Canada. The government is gathering tools, but he remains passive, stagnant. That is not the way to progress, but to lose ground, and the last budget is the best proof of what I am saying. In order to convince ourselves of this, let us scrutinize this famous budget.

A few days ago the Minister of Finance tabled for the information of Parliament the 1968 White Paper on the Canadian economy: review and outlook, and his budget.

It is always an ardous task to read a budget, or a White Paper, because it is highly technical and mathematical. However it always makes for interesting reading since it analyzes a situation which otherwise would be difficult to grasp fully in all its details.

I wish first of all to thank the minister who with the help of his officials has so well depicted the economic situation prevailing in Canada today.

Secondly, I wish to blame him for his lack of solutions to the problems which are at the root of that economic situation.

As in every budget speech—and this one is not any different—no short or long term solution is offered to correct such and such a situation. This is what I regret. In order to find one or more solutions, we must inevitably refer, for instance, to the various reports of the Economic Council of Canada which sets forth the situation in a concise but specific manner, and which puts more emphasis on the solutions.

I shall first refer to the main points of the budget, on which are based the minister's contentions, in order to shed some light on the flagrant contradictions to be found in the present and past administrations.

On the one hand, hourly rates of salary keep on increasing and, on the other hand, unemployment keeps increasing. This trend, Mr. Speaker, has been sustained for twenty years or more. The main feature of our modern economy is the gradual taking over of labour by the machines.

Under our present monetary system, the purchasing power is nearly all distributed in the form of wages, salaries and other means of paying for work done in production or distribution firms. Meanwhile, the purchasing power is necessarily reduced, as manual labour is being replaced by machinery and payrolls are cut down, in spite of an increase in production capacity.

Our economy is subjected to tremendous pressures through unavoidable price increases caused by higher salaries. And these are just as unavoidable, as every worker wants naturally and normally more security for himself and his family, because this security is threatened by automation. As a result, what must come is what learned economists call the higher cost of living—higher unemployment relationship.

• (5:30 p.m.)

When you have a higher cost of living on the one hand, Mr. Speaker, and on the other hand a lower income because the work done by man—not the work done by machines—is reduced, the inevitable mathematical result is more poverty and less buying power. Such is the shame of our economy: "Want in the midst of plenty" as the Créditistes put it.

The former Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) said in the August, 1965 issue of the Labour Gazette, and I quote:

> Poverty, wherever it exists, is a threat to everyone's prosperity.

He was right, Mr. Speaker. What a pity that we should be satisfied with just saying so, satisfied with the lure of mere words!

What emerges from this government from the economic viewpoint can be summarized in this very short and accurate expression: "A sea of words, a desert of ideas and achievements".

The guideline of the International Labour Organization set forth by the Minister of Labour of that time must also apply to Canada.

In spite of the fact that most of our fellow citizens are comfortably off, we shall not truly be able to call Canada a prosperous country as long as poverty will exist within its borders. Such poverty, no doubt, exists. In fact, there are people in our country who have been left behind by progress and who, without assistance, will never get back on their feet. Paradoxically those people can barely survive and the government takes away once more, their purchasing power, under the pretence of social progress, which I fail to understand.

Our governments, for more than a hundred years, have been fooling themselves if they believe as they give evidence of it every day, that an increase in productivity will solve the problem of people being replaced by machines.

It is not a question of protesting against the machine, but rather of making each individual participate in the productivity by giving him his share of production which the machine has developed for him on his behalf.

We have the social responsibility to give the opportunity to each and every one, without exception, of enjoying an honest comfortable living. It is then only that we shall experience the benefits of a just society.

Experts agree that, in order to live, a family must earn at least $3,000 a year. According to the 1961 census, 23 per cent of Canadian families did not earn that amount. On the other hand, the same experts say that, in Canada, more than 4,200,000 persons live in poverty. These figures are provided by the Economic Council of Canada.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, it is illogical and inconceivable to take off another $120 by way of a social development tax which is an added burden on individual budget and the people in the low income brackets. The modern poor is not only cast off by the present system, but he is made to pay the ransom of modern development of automation. To be poor today is not only to lack essential goods, but also to be unable to take part in social activities. Now, if we deprive the poor of his income, how can he take part in the life of our society?

Mr. Speaker, our government had a deficit of $422 million in 1966-67, and another of $792 million in 1967-68. The deficit will be approximately $675 million in 1968-69, but we were told it would be almost $700 million.

Mr. Speaker, government expenditures keep rising year after year. When calculating where each dollar collected by the federal government comes from, we find that the part which is the income tax collected from the little man, from the middle income people, from the one who can hardly make ends meet, also keeps rising.

[Mr. Fortin.]

To make sure, let us look at the following figures: in 1966-67, the federal government was collecting 28.5 cents as personal income tax. In 1967-68, for the same tax, the federal government asked for 31 cents, an increase of 3 cents. In 1968-69, the same tax continues to increase up to 32 cents.

We could make the same comparison with several other taxes: corporation income tax, sales tax, custom duties, taxes on alcohol, tobacco and so on. However, the more money the government takes out of the taxpayer's pocket, the more expenditures increase.

On one hand, Mr. Speaker, production is increasing, on the other hand, poverty and distress increase steadily, which proves that even the increase in productivity will not necessarily solve the problem of poverty and injustice in our society. In fact, that is where we find injustice: the figures quoted are rather eloquent.

Mr. Speaker, in the chapter on perspectives for the period from June 1968 to June 1969, it is said and I quote:

> The economic growth of Canada, in the next twelve months will depend in part on the economic conditions in the United States and certain overseas countries.

Yet an official study was made on behalf of the federal government. It is known as the Watkins Report, tabled by Mr. Walter Gordon, former Liberal minister of finance, who was dismissed and boycotted as his views did not agree with those held by big finance.

> Our Canadian governments are puppet governments. They do not hold the purse-strings.

They have but one power, that of getting more and more into debt, for the benefit of the financial sharks and to the prejudice of the individual. For instance, on page 132 of this same budget document, one can read the following as to the operations concerning the unmatured debt:

> Unmatured debt transactions in 1967-68 reflected an increase of $788 million in unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public.
> In 1966-67, the increase was of $711 million, which means, less the net book credit, an increase of $792 million of our net debt, for a bewildering total of $16,757 billion.

A deficit of $792 million is a record in rashness and improvidence. Canada is not its own master any more; we are accountants in the pay of a big finance that controls us, controls our life and our economy.

In such circumstances, in the face of the enormous and inexhaustible need for money, slavery can but increase at the service of the god of big finance.

Mr. Speaker, we are in an extremely critical situation and we must find a solution. For us, the members of the Ralliement Créditiste, that solution exists already, if only our hon. friends of the other side of the house would open their eyes.

The Bank of Canada, at the present time, is playing a shadowy role. It mends broken pots and gives the government more rope with which to hang itself, since it is but the toy of high finance.

The Creditistes want the Bank of Canada to be an economic instrument at the service of the Canadian people.

The Bank of Canada must have exclusive control over the money supply. For example, when the interest rates on long term and short term securities fell sharply and the discount rate, after having already been lowered to 5¼ per cent, was fixed at 4½ per cent last April 7, the Bank of Canada, in order to avoid an excessive tightening of credit, for internal as well as external reasons, made possible a rapid increase in the money supply from the middle of 1966 onwards, which led to a marked increase in the liquidities of the chartered banks at the beginning of 1967.

Here is the question we must ask ourselves: Was the money supply increased by the Bank of Canada on the basis of production, taking into consideration the imbalance between production and consumption? I would say, no.

That is why the bond market became less attractive last April, and why the government had to face high, excessive rates of interest for the better part of the remaining period.

Mr. Speaker, my time has almost expired and I shall therefore close on this: Last April, had the Bank of Canada increased the money supply bearing in mind the constant balance between production and consumption, and were the Minister of Finance to turn today to the Bank of Canada as the Créditistes suggest, he would not have had to levy another surtax of 2 per cent to finish off, so to speak, the small taxpayer. That tax is anything but a social development tax; we claim it will help to set off an economic recession.

[English]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, with the time remaining to me—and before I am through you will wish it were six o'clock—my approach will more or less have to be in a shotgun manner. I do not wish in any way to relate this to the gunboat philosophy adopted by the Pearson government not too long ago. It is a well known fact that parliament for a number of years now has been severely criticized. Never before has that criticism been more justified than it has been under this present government. The scheduled absence of ministers, the shuffling about and passing of the buck, as well as other performances here are things which the Canadian people could do without. It is regrettable that in this house members, whose first duty when coming to parliament was to take the oath of office, which includes an oath of allegiance to the Queen, go around speaking critically of the monarch.

We have a Prime Minister who on a public television show said that so far as he is concerned he doesn't care. This is the approach and the attitude of the Prime Minister and members of this government, who have taken an oath of allegiance to their Queen. They go out and try to undermine the very structure of this parliament. We speak of images and hear a good deal about codes of ethics, while at the same time we have the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who has made charges of smear outside this house, failing to appear here to make them. I see no reason why he should not be here. He is the master of the art of smearing admirals in our navy, but he does not have the courage to come to this house and back up what he has said outside the house. Why is this minister not held responsible and why is he allowed to make these charges outside the house, when he lacks the courage to make them in the house? If he were to do so it would be necessary for him to stand up to the opposition members, who mean to make available to the Canadian people the developments behind the unusual business transaction in which he was involved. This was an image making transaction, as is very noticeable even by his own press report.

The equipment, so-called borrowed equipment, was made available to him long before the Prime Minister indicated any intention to resign. What was this for? It was to build up his image. After all this, what was that image? We saw the Minister of Transport running around at a national convention holding up the hand of his favourite minister and shouting "Go, Bob, go." That is all the equipment did for him. At the same time he pleaded that a Liberal leader be elected. I wonder how the Prime Minister can sit with him. I wonder how members of the opposition, considering the smear tactics he used on admirals and servicemen in this country, can consider that what he has brought upon himself is something he should be allowed to get away with. I am not smearing the minister; I am demanding that he come to the house and give a responsible account of the transaction which took place at that time. What is curious about this is that from information available it would appear that the person who lent the equipment never had it, but bought it and had it sent directly from where he purchased it to the home of the minister.

During the unification debate the same minister sat in his seat and allowed his viewpoint to be put across, with the support of a lie brought directly into the house from the committee. This is all in black and white for any members of this house to see. If any member wishes, he may take exception to this; but it is on the record and it will stay on the record. He allowed the unification problem to be solved with the support of lies coming from the committee. This is the type of man who today says attempts are being made to smear him. This is the master of the art. This is the man who tried to smear the servicemen while he jumped around with the unification problem.

It is odd that the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) is setting up a French speaking regiment and is setting up on shipboard all French speaking crews. This is a great record in respect of unification in the armed forces! It is segregation, the direct opposite of unification. Yet, this is the way this government operates. We talk about unification and ethics. Never more were these needed in this house, and never before have they been so lacking as they are in this particular government today. If one wants to know what kind of impression this government is making all he needs to do is read the speeches made by the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) or the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Whiting).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Certainly. See me after six o'clock and I will give you the answer.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond).]

Mr. Allmand: Would the hon. member explain why the military vote was so overwhelmingly in favour of the Liberal party in the past election?

An hon. Member: It was not.

Another hon. Member: Smarten up; that shows what you know about it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): We are all aware of the undemocratic way in which the people in the forces are being treated with regard to their voting privileges in Canada.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the hon. member getting up in this house today and making reference to the way in which the people in the armed forces voted. This is a democratic country and they have their rights. The hon. member has no right to stand up here and make such a statement. It was a very undemocratic statement.

Mr. Allmand: I have been accused by the hon. member from Newfoundland of not having the right—

Mr. Lundrigan: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member from Newfoundland accused me of asking a question which I had no right to ask. I say I do have the right to ask it because 70 per cent of the military vote was in favour of the Liberal party.

Mr. Forrestall: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, and it is a very simple one. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) has pointed out that there is sufficient evidence, after all, in Canada today to make us as legislators a little ashamed of the position in which we are placing the servicemen of this country. The service vote is identifiable. I think that is sufficient, and this matter should be left to those who are interested, and should not be raised in the house. It transcends—

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Blair: Who raised the matter?

Mr. Deachman: It was raised over on your side.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I wish the snake pit would quieten down and let me put my question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I do not think there is a question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), I should like to state to that hon. member and his colleagues on that side of the house that at no time did I say anything about the service vote. If hon. members over there want to make accusations, they had better make them about one another, because it was an hon. member on that side who brought up the question about the vote.

Let me also say to the hon. member that it is odd, in this house, to hear him asking questions of me about the service vote. Only a few days ago he asked a question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) about what was being done in his own province for his own people. The question he asked at that time involved a matter which was common knowledge to everyone else in the house.

Mr. Anderson: The hon. member was talking a moment ago about whom to accuse of asking the question about the service vote. I suggest that if he waits until he sees Hansard he will realize who that was. He himself has made many accusations about the Minister of Transport, for one, and has suggested—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks I suggested that hon. members on the opposite side would be sorry it was not already six o'clock. Judging from the activity over there they are sorry it was not six o'clock before I began.

If this government wants to know what kind of impression it is making on the country, and for that matter on members of their own party, they should read the speeches of the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Whiting). They both had some uncomplimentary things to say about this government.

Perhaps I should also make reference to the former Liberal leader from British Columbia, who found it necessary at the first opportunity to debate a question on the adjournment motion at ten o'clock. This is a time set aside for discussion of answers from the treasury benches which are unsatisfactory to hon. members. In this case we had the former Liberal leader in the province of British Columbia showing dissatisfaction with an answer. That is exactly why the period between 10 and 10.30 is set aside. Surely his participation during this period is an acknowledgement that he was dissatisfied with an answer from the government.

I could range far and wide in speaking about the spending of this government, because there are many places where it has gone wrong. Perhaps the best and easiest example to give is the construction of a doorway in the back of this building next to the freight entrance. Apparently somebody on the Liberal side of this house did not like using the freight entrance which has been used for many years by hon. members. What did this government do? It decided to cut another hole in the wall right alongside a very big door, at a cost of $13,000 or $14,000.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) sees something funny about this wasteful project. It cost $13,000 or more of the taxpayers money to put a door in the back of this building, where already there is a door which has been used probably since the construction of this building. Apparently it was beneath the dignity of some hon. members to walk out through the freight door, so the government wasted this money.

I should hate to let this opportunity pass without making a reference to the Liberal leader of Nova Scotia who has been running off at the mouth. In case he is not identified easily, he is the childish member for Halifax in the legislature. Those are not my words, but the words of an occupant of Your Honour's chair at an earlier date. Mr. Regan is still acting childish. Every day he has something to say about the expenditures brought about by the development of the heavy water plant at Glace Bay, completely ignoring the fact that the cost of this particular project tripled—which is a pretty good record compared to the increased cost of the arts centre here in Ottawa, which has multiplied by five times.

We never hear from Mr. Regan about wasteful projects supported by this government in Ottawa. This arts centre is a non-productive investment. All we hear from Mr. Regan is reference to the wasteful extravagances of the Nova Scotia government, particularly in respect of the heavy water plant in Glace Bay; completely ignoring the fact that there have been millions of dollars poured into Glace Bay as a result of the construction of this plant.

Let me say here and now, for the benefit of Mr. Regan and those people he works so closely with, that the development of the heavy water plant in Glace Bay is something the minister of industry of that time, and other organizations, considered. Apparently they were anxious to have it established at a location other than Glace Bay. If it is such a bad thing, as far as Mr. Regan is concerned, why is it that practically every other area where it could possibly be developed wanted it at that time?

The minister of industry of that day stated, and he is here in the house now—and it is an oddity to have a minister in the house—that the federal government had nothing whatsoever to do with placing the heavy water plant in Glace Bay. Mr. Regan also overlooks the fact that since that time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill No. S-14, an act to amend the Aeronautics Act, to which concurrence of this house is desired.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS—PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Bernard Pilon (Chambly) moved:

That the special committee on statutory instruments appointed on September 30, 1968, be composed of the following members: Messrs. Baldwin, Brewin, Forest, Gibson, Hogarth, MacGuigan, Marceau, McIntosh, Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys), Murphy, Stafford and Tétrault.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could just confirm that the first order of business on Tuesday will be the continuation of the budget debate, to its conclusion. If there is any time left we will commence the Customs Tariff resolution. On Wednesday we will call as the first order of business the third reading of the C.N.R. finance bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being six o'clock p.m. this house stands adjourned until Tuesday next at two thirty o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to standing order 2(4).

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 12, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF ESSAY AND POETRY CONTEST WINNERS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the house through you, sir, on behalf of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle) and myself to call to the attention of hon. members the presence in the Speaker's gallery of two distinguished young Canadians, Robert Andrews from Morien, Nova Scotia and Timothy Matthews from Grand Falls, Newfoundland.

Mr. Andrews led the nation in an essay contest sponsored by the Royal Canadian Legion. Mr. Matthews led the nation in a poetry contest also sponsored by the Royal Canadian Legion.

I am sure the house will recognize the value of what these young men have accomplished and will join with the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador and myself in our desire to pay tribute to them and to their achievements.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

LABOUR, MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Second report of standing committee on labour, manpower and immigration—Mr. Caccia.

[Note: Text of above report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CLAIMS COMMISSION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the disposition of Indian claims, and in relation thereto to provide for the establishment of an Indian claims commission; to provide for the duties of the commission, its decisions and awards; to provide for appeals from the decisions and awards of the commission to an Indian claims appeal court; to provide assistance to Indian bands in preparing and pursuing claims; and to enact such financial provisions as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of the act.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE RESULTS OF FOREIGN POLICY REVIEW

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether we should conclude from his remarks at Kingston over the week end that the objective of the current foreign policy review is to find ways of diverting resources now committed to our international role for use in respect of domestic purposes, such as anti-poverty measures and efforts to improve the conditions of underprivileged groups in Canada.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This is, of course, one of the elements of our overall study of these questions, Mr. Speaker. We will have to weigh our foreign commitments with our commitments in Canada. We will have to weigh our foreign commitments in terms of what we want to spend on assistance through foreign aid, national development and in the military sphere. These are all elements which we are weighing together.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, are we to conclude that the view of the government is that Canada fundamentally faces a choice between an active international role and an effective attack on social problems here at home?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition concluded that, he would be reaching a conclusion before we have done so. We are still in the process of review. I do not think the Leader of the Opposition or anyone should conclude that before we are in a position to make a conclusion ourselves.

Mr. Stanfield: Am I to conclude, then, that the government has not made any such decision as yet?

Mr. Trudeau: That is correct.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the intention of the government, however, to implement the recommendations of the economic council in respect of reviving the war on poverty and, specifically, reviving or replacing in a more durable and effective form the special planning secretariat of the Privy Council office?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we were conscious of the need to wage war on poverty before the economic council report which brought the opposition's attention to this problem. We are continuing in every way we can to seek means to alleviate this problem.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the responsibility for making decisions on this foreign policy review will rest with the government, but can the Prime Minister tell the house who is advising the government in respect of this review, if not in detail—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is not in order.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, has the Prime Minister concluded that the civil war which might spill over into Canada from the United States is inevitable and forms the basis of his conclusion?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is not really supplementary although it is related. I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman what instructions have been given to the representatives at the ministerial conference of NATO in respect of Canada's commitments to NATO at the present time.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, because we are in the process of this review, as I said to the Leader of the Opposition, the instructions given to our delegation, in general terms, are that as much as possible they should avoid any commitments now which would prejudge the results of the review on which we have embarked.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker ,during th estudy whic the government has been carrying on regarding our future role in Europe, have any factors come to light which would indicate to the Prime Minister and the government that Canada should in any way reduce its military role in Europe?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Trudeau: This is the question we hope to be able to answer when our review is completed, but it is not yet completed.

Mr. Hees: I did not hear the end of the Prime Minister's answer. Do I take it that nothing has come to light that would indicate we should reduce our role—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is simply reiterating the question he asked in the first instance. The hon. member for York South on a supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to pursue the question I asked the Prime Minister. He said the instructions were that as far as possible our delegation should make no commitment. Can we have from the Prime Minister an assurance—this is from a different angle than some of the questions that have been asked—that at this conference in Brussels there will be no commitment to increase Canada's military part in NATO, in view of the fact that pressures in that direction have come forward as a result of the invasion of Czechoslovakia?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, our position at the NATO meetings will be taken after we have shown our point of view to our allies and after we have listened to their points of view. I would not tell our partners in NATO that we are going in there with a closed mind; that we are not prepared to listen to anything they might have to say. I might just inform the house of the present government's position. It is one of review of NATO. We are not led to the immediate reaction, after the Czechoslovakian events, to conclude that we should necessarily escalate in NATO. This is our position. I repeat, however, that we will listen to the position of the other members of NATO and make up our minds then.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would it be a fair statement to say that the representatives of Canada at the NATO conference are being instructed to indicate that Canada would like to reduce its commitments to NATO, but that it is prepared to hear what the NATO allies might have to say on this subject?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it would be fair to say that the latter part of the statement of the Leader of the Opposition is correct, that we are prepared to listen. On the first part, our reaction is that the Czechoslovakian events do not necessarily call for an escalation of forces, and therefore—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: —our delegation to NATO is not going in there in order to achieve escalation, but on the contrary to argue as much as possible that we in Canada are embarked upon a review of our NATO policy and to say that we would not like to take decisions now which would prejudge the result of that review.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the importance of this foreign policy review presently being conducted by the government, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would be willing to table very soon the terms of reference of this review, as well as the personnel involved in it.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the Prime Minister is waiting to explain the answer he gave at Queen's University that has caused quite an uproar in the United States, to the effect that in five years civil war may take place in the United States and swoop over into Canada, and that in effect the demonstrations of civil disobedience pose a greater danger than communism does in regard to the Berlin wall. Is that the view of the Prime Minister? If there is any doubt as to what he said, would he mind tabling the tape, which everybody apparently has, on which his statements are recorded?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is in order to table a tape. I do not think I would attach too much importance to tapes. I have a verbatim report of what I said. I am prepared to read it to the house, if the house is interested in hearing it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: No; we want the tape.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As long as the Prime Minister does not read the whole speech—

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house would like to give the Prime Minister that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has recognized the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I did not think you would take me up on this.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it a true copy of the tape?

An hon. Member: Is this on motions?

Mr. Trudeau: It is excerpts from the Prime Minister's statement in the question and answer period. So far as I know it is a verbatim report.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Trudeau: No good?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: The tape, the whole tape.

Mr. Hees: And nothing but the tape.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, since all these questions relate to international policy and particularly the review of Canada's role in NATO, and in view of the rapid way in which developments are taking place as well as considerations with regard to NATO's role in Europe, can the Prime Minister indicate when the review of foreign policy is likely to be concluded and when we can hear from the government what are the results of that review?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I share the hon. member's impatience. At this time I cannot say when the review will be concluded. I can just say that it is under active study. There are committees working on it now and I am not in a position yet to say when the report will be completed.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): As a supplementary question I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister, in order to save confusion in the future, whether he would undertake to restrain his tendency to make hasty and off the cuff remarks before he has received the report of this committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to some of the questions asked earlier of the Prime Minister in regard to his very active week end of speech making. In view of the remarks of the Prime Minister regarding disorders in the great cities of the United States and—and I quote—the "great riots and the beginnings of civil wars in the United States of America", would the Prime Minister say whether these observations constitute an expression of hostility to a friendly state as serious as that of sending food to Biafra?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question similar to that asked by the hon. member from Annapolis. In view of the remarks of the Prime Minister to the effect that relief supplies sent to Biafra could constitute an act of war, and to the effect that Canada did not want to involve itself in the internal problems of another country, does the Prime Minister not consider his statements in Kingston an intrusion into the domestic policies of the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this question is slightly argumentative.

Mr. Trudeau: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Prime Minister is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I want to correct the premise of that question. I wish the hon. member would not say I said that to send relief supplies to Biafra could constitute an act of war. We have never taken this position. We have said it would constitute an act of war if it were done against the will and permission of the Nigerian government.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Apparently the Prime Minister is not only misunderstanding his own statement but he is misunderstanding mine.

Mr. Benson: That is not very difficult.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I referred to the fact that the Prime Minister had indicated that the sending of relief supplies could be interpreted as an act of war, and I put no qualification on that statement. Therefore, if the Prime Minister cannot understand himself, I can well understand why he cannot understand me.

Mr. Trudeau: I apologize to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that hon. members might go on to another question.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

POSSIBLE ENTRY INTO ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister which is still in the area of international affairs. I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman if a change in our relations with Cuba is being contemplated as a means of seeking Canada's entrance into the Organization of American States.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

VIET NAM—ADMISSION OF DELEGATES TO MONTREAL PEACE CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman inform the house whether he has received protests from the director of police in Montreal regarding the admission by the Department of Manpower and Immigration of agitators and trouble makers, at the same time accusing the department of being unable to distinguish between proponents of ideas and ideals and rebel-rousing malcontents? If he has, what action does the government intend to take in this respect.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not received any such representation. I did read some reports in the newspaper this morning that the chief of police in Montreal had some complaint, but I do not believe he said he had made any complaint to me.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if, at the same time the Prime Minister is discussing the matter with his colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, he would look into the fact that many people in Canada who 30 or 40 years ago were denied Canadian citizenship because of alleged relationships with some red line organizations, are still denied their citizenship because of that old relationship.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I wonder if the Prime Minister, in discussing this matter with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, will point out that it is customary in Canada to allow political visitors into this country without questioning from the police.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making representations rather than asking a question.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, I shall direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

My question concerns a statement made by the chief of police in Montreal according to whom there are so many undesirables in Montreal because the Department of Immigration does not exercise adequate supervision. Could the right hon. Prime Minister tell us whether this Department will exercise tighter supervision in the future?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, could the hon. member put his question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration when he appears in the house?

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PROPORTION OF SENIOR POSITIONS HELD BY FRENCH-CANADIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, since the percentage of the French-Canadian representation on the board of directors in federal public enterprises is 14.7 per cent and that of the English speaking directors is 85.3 per cent—I am coming now to my question, Mr. Speaker—and since also no legislation at the present time provides for an equitable representation—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must ask a question.

Mr. Fortin: I am coming to it, Mr. Speaker, but sometimes one has to make speeches in order to be understood.

Could the right hon. Prime Minister tell the house whether specific measures will be taken, in the very near future, in order to ensure fairness to the French-Canadian representation in public enterprise since the present situation reveals a gross injustice?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as you did not allow all the statistics, which I understand, I shall merely indicate that I disagree with the facts as stated by the hon. member.

French-Canadians now have, in the Civil Service in Ottawa as well as in all parliamentary institutions and the cabinet, a representation the like of which they have never had before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the replies to the questions I put on the order paper indicate that—and I am not the one to say so, the government is—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member must put a question.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I am coming to that.

The figures prove, beyond a doubt, that the right hon. Prime Minister is misleading the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair recognized the member so that he might put his question.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, if I sent the right hon. Prime Minister the statistical data his cabinet supplied me with, I wonder whether he would be willing to study them and report to the house, so that we might see whether his comments would still be the same?

TRADE

JAPAN—REPORTED AGREEMENT ON QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Could he tell the house if it is true that the Canadian government is ready to sign with Japan a trade agreement retroactive to January 1, 1968 to set up quotas on various imports from Japan, and particularly on textile products, as announced by some Japanese officials this morning?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware of such an agreement, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. member might put his question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question.

Before putting my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he agrees with me that this matter is as important as that of Biafra, because of the adverse effects which an increase in imports from

Japan and Asian countries could have on the Canadian economy—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put his question?

Mr. Laniel: —and that it should be referred to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, where representatives of the textile and other industries concerned could be heard?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, annually we discuss voluntary quotas with the Japanese government. These quotas, when determined, are usually announced in the house by the Minister of Finance. We have been working on these voluntary quotas, and we have received representations from the textile industry. We have a long range study under way on imports from low cost countries, which I hope will be coming to the attention of the government in the very near future. When this report is received perhaps it would be the best document to refer to the committee referred to by the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Even if the minister has consulted with the representatives of the textile industry, I would like to know whether the negotiators listen, nevertheless, to the representations made by the representatives of the Canadian textile industry, because these people come later to see the members of parliament and are not always satisfied with the arrangements?

[English]

Mr. Benson: I should like to indicate, Mr. Speaker, that these representations go on continuously. As a matter of fact the Prime Minister and several members of the cabinet met with members of the textile manufacturing industry as well as labour representatives in the textile industry a few weeks ago.

DRUGS

MARIJUANA—JUDGMENT OF MANITOBA APPEAL COURT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare which arises from his recent statement on marijuana. Has he taken cognizance of the judgment of the Manitoba court of appeal to the effect that leniency in dealing with this drug problem is not the answer?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): May I ask a supplementary question. The other day I directed a question to the parliamentary secretary to the minister referring to a report about drug abuse that was expected to be presented to the federal-provincial conference of health ministers. I asked whether that report from the province of Quebec, if received, would be tabled. The parliamentary secretary, I believe, said he would take the question as notice. I wonder if there is an answer available now.

Mr. Munro: The report we have now is a preliminary report, Mr. Speaker, and when we do receive a full report from Quebec we will give that suggestion consideration.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED PROCEDURAL CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I had thought, Mr. Speaker, of raising this matter as a question of privilege, but on second thought I decided a question to the Prime Minister might be just as satisfactory.

Mr. Mather: Just as unsatisfactory.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My colleague says "just as unsatisfactory", but I would not want to be that unkind.

In his Sunday night speech at Montreal the Prime Minister said that in December, after the procedure committee has made its report, the government will propose the adoption of new rules. Can the Prime Minister tell the house what he meant by that statement? Did he mean the government has its own set of rules that it is going to bring in, or did he mean the government would move the adoption of the report of the special committee on procedure?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think we indicated earlier—indeed I believe this is part of the agreement that all parties in the house entered into—that the committee would bring in its report by the beginning of December. It is this report that we hope to debate in the house.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is it that report, Mr. Speaker, the adoption of which the government will support, or does the government plan to bring in its own set of rules?

Mr. Trudeau: We do hope, Mr. Speaker, the report will be such that we will want to support it. We also hope that that is the expectation of hon. members of the opposition.

AGRICULTURE

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS—INQUIRY AS TO INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It is now a month since the house dealt with the farm improvement loans legislation, and I am wondering whether the minister can indicate the rate of interest the government has now established in relation to that legislation.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this legislation will be receiving royal assent soon. I believe it moved through the other place just last week, and it will be receiving royal assent this week. I have been in contact with the banks with respect to the rate of interest that will be acceptable under this legislation. It has to be a rate of interest that is fair to the farmers, yet one sufficiently attractive for the banks to promote use of the legislation. I hope I will be able to announce this rate very soon after the bill has received royal assent.

PAYMENT OF CASH ADVANCE ON FARM STORED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the acting minister of agriculture; that is, if we have one. Can the minister advise whether the Canadian Wheat Board has yet issued authority to country elevator agents to issue the full $6,000 cash advance on farm stored grain? If not, then can he advise the house when such authority will be issued?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO RETROACTIVE PAY INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board, who looks neglected over there, being deeply engrossed in his mail. May I ask the minister whether the recent retroactive pay increases to national defence employees in Canada will be made prior to Christmas; and failing that, whether it is possible to give an assurance, if not on the part of the minister then on the part of the Minister of Finance, that the increases will not be subject to the 2 per cent social service tax which will come into effect at the end of the year.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will give sympathetic consideration to that representation.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether in all fairness the minister would comment on the second part of the question, which dealt with the increase being subject to the 2 per cent tax; that is to say, if the department is not able to make these payments prior to the end of the year.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think the tax will have to be imposed according to the terms of the law. The question really relates to what period the pay is attributable to.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO MAINTENANCE OF DOMICILIARY CARE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the domiciliary care program under the veterans charter been phased out as part of the process of turning veterans hospitals over to civilian authorities?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dube (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. This policy was made known by my predecessor, and it has not changed. The policy of the government is to continue to give the best possible care to our veterans.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I take it from the minister's answer that domiciliary care, a greatly needed service for our older veterans, is still available to our veterans and that there has been no change whatever?

Mr. Dube: There is no change, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Could the right hon. gentleman advise this house how soon the government may expect to appoint a new head or new heads for Air Canada?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the house can expect an announcement within, I think, the next fortnight at the most.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NORTH VIET NAM—REACTION TO CESSATION OF BOMBING ATTACKS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is in a position to advise the house whether there has been any favourable reaction on the part of Hanoi since the cessation of bombing by the United States. Is he able to tell the house, naturally within the limitations by which matters such as this are circumscribed, whether there has been any advance along the road to a hoped-for peace between North and South Viet Nam?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Canada is not a party to these negotiations, and I do not have any inside information which would permit me to enlighten the right hon. member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister give consideration to sending over there the one man who I think he will agree knows more about this situation than anybody else, Chester Ronning, so he may be able to find out what is the situation; for apparently the officials of the Department of External Affairs have not been able to do so.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Should the United States resume the bombing of North Viet Nam, would the Canadian government give consideration to sending relief supplies to the people of North Viet Nam?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to rule that the question is hypothetical.

[Mr. Dubé.]

NATIONAL PARKS

QUEBEC—NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The honourable minister promised, on September 24 last, to make an announcement about national parks. Can he make it now?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make an announcement now, but we have submitted a project to the government of Quebec and we expect an answer soon.

EXTERNAL AID

NIGERIA—AGREEMENT WITH RED CROSS ON MERCY FLIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Since there is considerable uncertainty about the disposition of aircraft from Canada under the control of the Red Cross, will the Prime Minister undertake to find out for the house whether a clear agreement has been reached between the Lagos government and the Red Cross concerning our mercy flights to Nigerian-Biafra?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to answer that question would require a fairly long repetition of what has been said many times before.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Then would the Prime Minister be prepared to make a statement on motions?

Mr. Trudeau: There is nothing new to indicate here. We have indicated in past weeks what agreements we have achieved through the government in Lagos with regard to daylight flights. We made sure that our representations were transmitted by the International Red Cross to Colonel Ojukwu. We are still awaiting a reply from Colonel Ojukwu to the Red Cross, or possibly for word in some other way which would indicate his agreement for such daylight flights.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In order to clarify the situation and the considerable uncertainty surrounding the most recent proposal about Caribou aircraft, would the Prime Minister make a statement in the house or table in the house the terms of the actual agreement between the Red Cross and the government in Lagos, so we may have an accurate idea of what that agreement involves?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is no agreement in a form that might be tabled in this house. It was General Gowon who unilaterally indicated to Professor Head, who was there on my behalf, that he would permit daylight flights on the condition that Colonel Ojukwu would not use the airstrip in the day time for arms deliveries. This is not an agreement as such. This is a statement by the Nigerian government, and it is hoped that the authorities in Biafra will agree to it. In that case it would be up to the International Red Cross, under whose control the aircraft are, to decide what hours they will be flying and so on.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the problems that have arisen about the use of Hercules aircraft, have officials of the government given consideration to using those aircraft to begin air drop procedures, should that become necessary?

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister say whether current information about a substantial increase in arms being supplied to Nigeria and Biafra by several of the large powers leads this government to conclude that the time has come for a new Canadian effort to be made to persuade those countries not to supply any more arms to this area?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have stated publicly on several occasions that it was the hope of the Canadian government that its friends and other countries would desist from supplying arms to this area. I have no reason to believe, however, that any further form of representation would lead to any results. The foreign policies of those countries which are supplying arms are under the control of their own governments and not under the control of the Canadian government.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Prime Minister was prepared to answer my previous question about the use of Hercules aircraft in air drop procedures. I think the country is anxious to know the merits of this proposal.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I was not clear about the hon. gentleman's meaning; that is why there was a moment's hesitation in rising. I was not clear whether the hon. member was referring to air drops within Biafran held territory.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Within Nigeria.

Mr. Trudeau: Within Nigeria? There is no active consideration of that because that is not the way the problem was presented to us by the Lagos government. They said to us that the airstrips could not hold Hercules aircraft and therefore they could not be used. We discussed that with them both through Mr. Head and later through our high commissioner in Lagos. We wanted to know in what way we could assist them; was it by sending trucks or Caribou aircraft. After some consideration they asked for Caribou aircraft, and that is why we made this decision.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is it the view of the Prime Minister in conducting Canadian foreign policy that Canadian representations can never influence the foreign policies of other countries?

HUMAN RIGHTS

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL INTEREST IN TORONTO CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. We understand that in three weeks a large conference is to be held in Toronto having to do with cultural and human rights. Has this conference the sponsorship or benediction of the government?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this conference.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR DRAFT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATIVE CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. For the edification of native Indian people, particularly, who are attending the current round of consultative conferences, is the minister prepared to make public the draft changes to the Indian Act which exist in his department?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I must point out to the hon. member that there is no bill on the Indian Act, because we are now consulting with the Indians and we intend to wait until the end of consultations before starting to draft the legislation in question.

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the hon. gentleman misunderstood my question. I asked whether he would make public a document which exists within the Department of Indian Affairs. It is a draft of proposed changes to the Indian Act. I ask this so that our Indian people may know the government's thinking on this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I must disagree with the hon. member. I am not aware of the preparation of any such legislation concerning the Indian Act and I do not see how I could table something that does not exist.

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SASKATCHEWAN—PROVISION OF MEDICAL CARE FOR INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare which relates to a question I asked on November 1. The minister said he would take it as notice. I asked whether the minister received a communication from the Saskatchewan Medical Association requesting immediate action to ensure adequate medical care for Saskatchewan Indians, and warning that a failure to act may force doctors to leave areas which have a large Indian population and completely deprive some Saskatchewan Indians of medical service. Can the minister now answer that question?

Hon. J. C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This whole subject matter came up at the meeting of health ministers last week. At that time it was indicated that Indian health services at the federal level would be improved and that more resources would be put into them to correct a situation such as the hon. member has referred to.

Mr. Southam: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister indicate whether remuneration for service provided to Indians will be commensurate with that provided to white citizens?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and I direct it to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Was the minister quoted accurately when, following a visit to the Indian reserves and Métis communities in Manitoba, he stated he found medical services there quite adequate?

Mr. Munro: No, Mr. Speaker, I was not.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not acceptable.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF INTENTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. When will the government be in a position to make a definitive statement about its decision regarding the causeway to Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister indicated that a statement might be possible early in November. I would expect it within the next two or three weeks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): I would think within the next two or three weeks a complete survey will be completed in respect of this matter, and a statement might be made.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the considerable interest this project has generated both in Prince Edward Island and within the rest of Canada I wonder whether the government might be willing to table the report of the Stanford Institute dealing with the more crucial issues of the construction and the cost of this important project.

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): I think, Mr. Speaker, some material which has been produced might be made public after a decision is taken, but I would think it is better to retain it within the department till then.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Would the decision have to be that it would not be politically harmful to the government?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I was referring specifically to one document which is already available to more than the officials of the federal government. Therefore I think it would be quite useful if it were made available to members of the house.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Friday, November 8, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, during the past week of this debate we have heard many opposition members rise in this house and declare that they were not at all satisfied with the 2 per cent tax with a $120 limit. I must say that when I first heard the minister announce this tax I had the same reaction. Like some other members I felt that this tax would bear more heavily on the middle income groups and favour more the upper income groups. As a result of my first reaction to the announcement I saw the minister and, with some others, I suggested that maybe a 1 per cent or a less than 1 per cent tax, without limit, would be preferable.

However, Mr. Speaker, having studied these alternatives and worked them out mathematically I have become less warm to my original proposals. I have found that if we were to raise through a percentage tax without any limit, the same amount of money as we now wish to raise, the tax would come to approximately 1.65 per cent, which is not too much different from 2 per cent. If we apply it to a married man earning $5,000 a year, with two children, we find the difference in his tax is only $8 per year. In other words, if the tax were 1.65 per cent without any limit rather than 2 per cent with a limit, the man earning $5,000 per year, with two children, would pay only $8 less a year.

On the other hand, balanced against this we would have a system whereby those in the upper tax bracket would pay a greatly increased rate of tax, and this is a group already paying tax under a rapidly increasing progressive tax system. I would like to remind the house what those progressive rates of taxes are. A person who has a taxable income of $4,000 a year, that is, taxable income after exemptions and so forth, pays $610 per year plus 22 per cent on the next $2,000. A person with $8,000 taxable income per year pays at least a basic $1,570 tax plus 30 per cent on the next $2,000. If we move up to $12,000 taxable income a person pays $2,870 basic tax, plus 40 per cent on the next $3,000. Jumping up to $25,000 a year taxable income a person pays a basic $8,570 tax, plus 50 per cent on the remaining $15,000, and if we go to $60,000 a year taxable income a person pays a basic $27,000 tax, plus 60 per cent on the next $30,000. We note, Mr. Speaker, that the rates of taxation increase by a very progressive measure.

Comparing the rates of taxation in Canada for different groups with the rates of taxation in the United States the Carter commission noted that a married taxpayer in Canada making more than $10,000 per year paid higher rates of taxes than his counterpart in the United States, and a married taxpayer in Canada earning less than $10,000 per year paid a smaller rate of tax than his counterpart in the United States. It was suggested that the rates of tax in Canada for the managerial and entrepreneurial classes should not be such that they would be an additional factor in luring Canadians to other countries.

We know how easy it is for skilled Canadians, for Canadian graduates, to go to the United States. Most of them speak the same language as the people of the United States. Basically in many respects they have the same culture and it is easy for them to migrate to the United States and make a living there. It was suggested that for the managerial income groups the rates of tax in Canada should be somewhat similar to the rates of tax in the United States and that in the long run this would be in the general economic interests of Canada.

When doing research in preparation for this debate I noticed another very interesting point. In recent days when the opposition has talked about the government we have heard much about a credibility gap. I would like to suggest there are even greater credibility gaps with respect to the opposition parties, comparing what they say and what they in fact do.

If we look at the record of the C.C.F.-New Democratic party in Saskatchewan when it introduced a medical insurance program in the early 1960's and joined it with the hospitalization program, the New Democratic party decided that the program should be paid for by a flat rate premium which was to be the same for the lower income group, the middle income group and the upper income group. I believe that premium is now $36 per year for an individual and $72 per year for a family. If it is unfair and unjust to the middle income group to have a 2 per cent tax with a limit of $120 then I submit it is much more unfair and unjust to have a flat rate premium which is a much greater percentage of income for the lower income group than it is for the middle and upper income groups.

It so happens that the leader of the New Democratic party was the premier of Saskatchewan when that flat rate premium was introduced, and it is of note that he is at present campaigning in British Columbia to get a seat in this house. No doubt he will be attacking this 2 per cent tax and saying it is unjust and unfair. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the candidate for my party, the Liberal party, should bring to the attention of the voters in the British Columbia constituency that what he introduced as payment for a similar program in Saskatchewan was much more arduous on the lower income groups than it was on the middle and upper income groups.

The opposition parties may say that that premium did not cover and was not intended to cover the entire cost of the hospitalization and medical care program. They would be correct in saying that, but the 2 per cent tax that we are applying, with a limit of $120, is also not meant to cover the entire cost of the hospitalization program, the medical care program and the supplements provided for the post-secondary educational system. So, Mr. Speaker, I submit that there is a credibility gap so far as the opposition parties are concerned, particularly the N.D.P., in the way they attack this particular tax because they say one thing but when they are in charge of government they do another thing.

Let us look at the taxes which other countries in the world pay for similar programs. In England, under the national health service there is a flat rate premium system. In Sweden 50 per cent of their program is paid by a flat rate premium system. Some other countries, however, have a progressive tax to pay for their hospitalization, medicare and social welfare programs. In every one I examined there is a limit. I can give examples. In West Germany there is a special tax premium ranging from 5 per cent to 10 per cent of wages per month for the health program. They have a limit on that of 660 Deutsch marks per month. In France the tax for the hospitalization and medicare program is 6 per cent of wages and they have a ceiling of 700 new francs per month. In making a study of these programs it became apparent that in every case there was either a flat rate premium program or a percentage or graduated premium program, but there was no case in which there was not a limit. In respect of Sweden I have an article entitled "Socialized Medicine In Sweden"—

Mr. Harding: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Allmand: Yes.

Mr. Harding: Is the hon. member suggesting that the so-called social development tax of 2 per cent is connected with a specific government program, for example, medicare?

Mr. Allmand: The minister stated that the social development tax which was introduced was to pay for large deficits in the shared cost programs, especially post-secondary education and hospitalization and the medicare program which was to be introduced. That was my understanding of it. It is called a social development tax.

I was about to quote from an article entitled "Socialized Medicine In Sweden", to be found in the publication Current History, January, 1963, at page 336. It reads as follows:

> The general health insurance costs are not fully met by public outlay, national or local. Since 1955, when the present compulsory insurance law went into effect, approximately 50 per cent of the cost has been covered by individual premium payments, 25 per cent by contributions coming from the employer and 25 per cent by the public treasury which means, obviously, by taxpayers. Referring to this distribution of costs, Karl J. Hojer, former director of Sweden's Royal Social Board, started in 1959 that by the early 1950's it had become clear "that direct taxes in Sweden had become so high, especially on upper incomes, that any attempt to apply further pressure would have dangerous effects." A situation "had been reached where a transfer by taxation of money from the higher income groups to the lower income groups, in the form of social benefits for the latter, could not be pursued any further."

I know that in Sweden the rate of taxation in the higher income groups is greater than it is in Canada, but I cite that article to point out that in all the countries in western Europe that I have studied which have these programs they have seen fit to have a limit where they have a progressive rate of taxation in addition to specialized taxes. That is the main point of my referring to these articles.

I also should like to refer to some of the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). In his speech last week he made the statement that there is a great credibility gap with regard to the government and its predictions concerning the estimates and so on. I submit that there is an even greater credibility gap with regard to the opposition, especially since it has been led by the present Leader of the Opposition.

In the period of approximately one year since the Leader of the Opposition came here he has consistently criticized the government for not properly controlling costs and for not properly controlling spending programs. Yet, whenever the government has brought forward proposals to control those costs and cut down on the spending program, either the Leader of the Opposition or members of his party have risen in this house and criticized these cuts. When the minister of finance brought forward proposals last spring in respect of certain cuts in costs, immediately there were complaints from the Conservative opposition about cuts in shipbuilding subsidies, in the subsidies to the cheese industry and about the review of the Prince Edward Island causeway program which was brought up again today. This fall we have had criticism about the cut in the observatory program in British Columbia, about the winter works program and about the cut in the atomic energy program. I am not saying that these are not good programs and perhaps have merit, but I am trying to point out that there is a real inconsistency in the approach of the opposition and a real credibility gap. They cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Allmand: Yes.

Mr. Lundrigan: The hon. member indicated there is a greater credibility gap on the part of the official opposition. Is he, therefore, admitting there is a substantial credibility gap on the part of the government?

Mr. Allmand: No, I am not. I appreciate the quickness of the hon. gentleman. I am merely saying that if there is a credibility gap I believe it lies with the opposition.

When the public accounts committee met last year a recommendation was made which was fully supported by the Conservative members of that committee. The recommendation was with regard to second class mail. In its recommendation the committee said:

It considers it essential that the Post Office Department or parliament immediately find ways and means of covering the loss of the Post Office Department in handling second class mail—

The members of the Conservative party are always so happy to support the recommendations of the Auditor General and the public accounts committee, and they did so on that occasion when the committee recommended an increase in the rates on second class mail. Yet, when the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) brought forward this fall a bill to increase the rates on second class mail they opposed the bill and voted against it. Again I think there is a great credibility gap between what the opposition says at one time and does at another time.

Mr. Nowlan: I know the hon. gentleman would not want the record to go unchallenged in respect of the statement he has just made, which may or may not be relative to the budget. I am sure he would agree with me that the recommendation set out in the report of the Auditor General—we were both in the same room and present at the same committee—was that if the Post Office Department has a deficit that deficit should be brought into the house and met by a special vote so that the people of Canada will know if the Post Office Department is in effect operating at a profit or a loss. It was recommended that if there were a loss it should be covered by a vote, in effect, of this house. This is different from the postal bill which in effect said there was no deficit.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fairness, I believe that the hon. member should be allowed to continue his speech. He has 30 minutes and his time is running out very quickly.

Mr. Allmand: I disagree with the hon. member. I have the reference before me. It says that parliament should immediately find ways and means of covering the loss of the Post Office Department in handling second class mail. That recommendation was supported by the Conservatives; yet when the government brought forward a proposal many of the opposition members voted against that proposal.

Mr. Nowlan: Would the hon. member read the remainder of the recommendation?

Mr. Allmand: Many things have been said by members of the opposition in this debate with which I disagree. Time does not permit me to go into all of them, but there are many inconsistencies.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I should like to refer also to some of the remarks of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), the chief critic for the New Democratic party in the present debate. He criticized the government in his speech, as found on page 2275 of Hansard and said that a balanced budget should not be an end in itself but that the budget should have certain social and economic goals. I agree with that, and I think the minister would agree. The minister said in introducing the budget that in trying to achieve a balanced budget his goal was to counteract inflation and bring about a stable price system in Canada. The Economic Council of Canada had pointed out very strongly in its report this year that this still is an outstanding economic problem in Canada.

The hon. member for Waterloo went on to say on the same page in Hansard:

> This budget explicitly rejects the Keynesian revolution of government fiscal policy used in promoting full employment of the labour force.

It seems to me that the theories of Mr. Keynes no longer find the same acceptance they had in the past. I have here a reprint from the New York Times dated November 7, 1968, which comments on an article which appeared in the Economist a week before. The headline is "Keynes Taking A Back Seat". The article in part states:

> In England, the land of his birth, they have suddenly discovered that John Maynard Keynes is dead.

It then continues:

> The obituary was written last week by the British weekly, the Economist. It recalled that at the end of his great work, "The General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money", Keynes observed:
>
> "Practical men, who believe themselves to be quite exempt from any intellectual influences, are usually the slaves of some defunct economist."

> And then, not without a certain amount of cruelty, the Economist concluded:
> "The piquant situation today is that Keynes himself is now a defunct economist."

The situation is that the analysis Mr. Keynes made was of a situation in which unemployment and deflation existed together. The situation in the last few years and today is one in which we have unemployment with inflation. The recommendations he made in respect of correcting the situation are no longer acceptable to most economists who are working today. Hon. members in the opposition seem to put forward these theories as though they were pills, with the suggestion that after taking them certain countries would automatically be cured of unemployment, and so on and so forth. That is not so.

I see that my time is almost up. I wanted to enter this debate particularly to contradict some of the arguments put forward by the opposition and the statement that there was a credibility gap in the government. If there is any credibility gap at all it is in respect of the opposition and specifically the N.D.P. That party implemented a program in Saskatchewan which involved a more arduous tax for social welfare benefits than this tax now before the house. The official opposition say one thing at one time and ask us to do something different at another time.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, as this is the first occasion I have had to speak in this house since my election to represent the riding of Palliser, may I take this opportunity of congratulating you on your re-election as the presiding officer of the house. I should also like to congratulate your deputy, the chairman of committees, and the deputy chairman of committees on their accession to those offices and to say that they are proving to be happy choices for those positions.

The Palliser electoral district is situated in that part of the province of Alberta which lies to the west, north and east of the city of Calgary. The riding also includes a large portion of the city of Calgary and the Indian reserve of the Sarcee tribe. As a result, in the Palliser constituency can be found examples of most kinds of agricultural enterprise ranging from ranching, dairy farming and mixed farming through to some of the most productive grain farms to be found in this country. This is an area that has produced several world wheat kings in recent years.

In this my first contribution to the debates of this house I had hoped to be as helpful and as uncritical as possible. I still hope I can be helpful, but I can no longer be uncritical. In the face of the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), Pollyanna would be driven into an acute state of depression and Anne of Green Gables would be moved to profanity. It is, in my view, the most negative, defeatist and depressing statement made to the Canadian people in recent times.

It is defeatist because it admits nothing can be done to correct the shameful state into which federal finances have been allowed to fall in five years of Liberal rule. It is negative because it inhibits any progressive legislation in the field of national development and effectively prevents the creation of any new national wealth or the formation of a wider and stronger tax base. It is depressing because it seeks to give the philsophy of doom and gloom the sanction of the Canadian parliament, and squeezes the tax collar tighter around the necks of the already choking taxpayer, particularly those in the lower and middle income areas. It is a sorry day when, in the midst of unparalleled affluence, our Minister of Finance can offer nothing but rising debt and taxes.

This budget clearly mirrors the blind gropings of a minister driven by the compulsion to find some way out of the mess and stave off bankruptcy. There is something reminiscent today of the period immediately prior to the outbreak of the French revolution. You may recall that the great banker, Jacques Necker, was called back to bring order out of the chaos of Louis XVI's financial world. He failed and the revolution followed. Necker was exiled and the king lost his head. I am not suggesting that we will shortly face a violent revolution in this country, but actions such as those of this government, as reflected in this barren budget, could bring on a revolution of a milder sort.

Aside from the bitter disappointment created by this budget, apart from the sudden death it brought to the promises and hopes of a just society, of new national goals and a new spirit of national purpose, its most unpleasant aspect is the financial bumbling and inadequacy demonstrated by the minister's explanation of its provisions.

The greatest irony is his repeated plea for cut-backs in spending, for economy at all levels and for belt tightening and austerity. It is ironic because those who cry loudest for austerity are the very ones guilty of the most extravagant spending. If only one of his colleagues practised what the Minister of Finance preaches we could save a considerable bag of tax dollars. The cabinet's taste for high living is well known and has been frequently mentioned in this house already, but there are many other areas of expenditure where lack of common sense and restraint make a mockery of the minister's plea for economy and the painful provisions of this budget.

Recently the Minister of Finance sent the representatives of the provinces packing without even carfare home. He denied them any extra money to help them in the discharge of their responsibilities. He shut them out from any share in the harvest of tax dollars that this new budget is designed to scoop up. He particularly slammed the door on the provinces' sharing in the 2 per cent social development tax, although most of the measures he claimed came under social development. These had been foisted on the ill-prepared and financially strapped provinces by the federal government by what amounts to fiscal blackmail.

The Minister of Finance is Canada's most outspoken advocate of austerity, but what is happening in his own backyard? While he is in the pulpit preaching, his colleagues are robbing the poor box. There is no trouble finding funds for the pet projects of various ministers. There is lots of money to finance the B and B commission and to set up an expensive new bureaucracy under a language commissar. But scientific and research projects vital to the development of the nation are ruthlessly lopped off. Last year HARP, the high altitude research project, was killed, and this year the Queen Elizabeth telescope and ING, the intense neutron generator project, were scrapped in the name of economy in government spending.

But there has been no change in the blank cheque policy of financing the National Arts Centre, which has been characterized by one of the members of the treasury benches as a "$47 million dance hall". There are ample funds for the lavish redecoration of ministerial offices. There is plenty of cash to build up the personal staff of cabinet members, including the largest prime ministerial staff in history. What happened to the freeze on the civil service? Is this just another gap in the minister's credibility?

There is no money for the provinces of Canada, no money for development of the nation's human and natural resources, no money for fighting regional disparity or attacking unemployment and underemployment. There is no money for any of these vital undertakings but lots of money for federal ministers' housekeeping expenses.

When the government was busy cutting and hacking at potentially productive programs, why was no mention made of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation? To my mind this is one of the greatest sink-holes in the whole fabric of the government of Canada. It is a drain down which tax dollars pour unchecked, uncontrolled, and apparently uncontrollable. If the minister had been sincere in his plans for greater economy and reduced spending at all levels, he should have started with a dramatic example by demanding and ensuring a responsible business operation of the C.B.C.

Earlier this year, as has been pointed out many times, the minister guaranteed a balanced budget. We now find that the government expects to spend $480 million more than it thought it would spend in May, and $190 million more than it thought it would spend last month. Such figures make a mockery of the minister's professions of concern over spending. His failure to tackle such notorious tax-wasters as the C.B.C. simply reinforces this fact. On August 15 last, the Windsor Star in an editorial commented:

> A large part of the ever-increasing deficit of the C.B.C. is due simply to extravagance. Anyone who has ever watched C.B.C. crews in operation at home or abroad knows exactly what we mean. They spend money like water and often to no good purpose.

It would be interesting to learn the cost to us of the film "Listen, America" commissioned by the corporation and shown on the November 3 edition of "The Way It is". If one is to judge by the list of credits accompanying this piece of subversive garbage, its cost will amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Schumacher: This film preached the philosophy of anarchy and destruction, having no connection with Canada or Canadians, without any notable creative merit and in the most sordid terms. It was a particularly glaring example of a type of program which is becoming more and more prevalent.

To cancel great scientific projects and then permit such senseless excesses by the C.B.C. is, to me, incomprehensible. The C.B.C. now costs each and every Canadian almost $8 per year. Its estimated expenditures this year are in excess of $151 million. This is an increase of more than $7 million from the very high spending level that the C.B.C. attempted to justify because of centennial year and Expo 67's extraordinary demands. And this does not include a $25 million "loan" for capital purposes.

The fact that the C.B.C. is a part of the government and nominally must report to parliament is the chief reason, I believe, why it is uncontrolled and uncontrollable. As long as it is connected with government, its defenders, the pseudo-intellectuals and bleeding hearts of all parties, will be able to come to its rescue whenever it is criticized by crying "politics". This is an absurd argument but one that is difficult to offset. By making the C.B.C. something sacrosanct and untouchable we have permitted the setting up within it of autonomous enclaves, little principalities running their own show, acknowledging no other authority than their own and living off the abundant flow of tax dollars ensured by a helpless government.

As a new member of this house, Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to me that the government has never deigned to recognize, let alone act upon, the strictures laid upon the C.B.C. by the nation's Auditor General, Mr. Maxwell Henderson. The Auditor General has pointed out that on the eve of the retirement of one of its vice-presidents the directors increased his salary by 67 per cent to $25,000 so that he could receive a pension equivalent to that of our former prime ministers, and then gave him a retiring allowance of $25,000. This is what the Auditor General said of this generosity with the taxpayers' money:

> This was not within the competence of the directors of the C.B.C. and payment of the retiring allowance was not within the powers of the corporation under the Broadcasting Act.

The Auditor General said, in other words, that the C.B.C. authorized and paid out large sums of tax dollars without justification, and illegally. To add insult to injury the C.B.C., in spite of these comments by the Auditor General, subsequently proceeded to give equally generous pensions to other top C.B.C. executives. Was anything ever done by the government? No. Did the man who now weeps for scarce tax revenue shed a tear for such unjustified and wasteful use of public funds? No.

As Patrick Nicholson wrote at the time of Mr. Henderson's report:

> The C.B.C., as has been made obvious over the years, has inflated itself into a self-governing empire beyond the control of parliament—and the government does nothing to stop it.

This is a pretty accurate summation of the situation as far as I can see. The fact is that the C.B.C. is a law unto itself. Government agents inserted into its structure, even at the top, are merely ignored or absorbed. A final measure of the C.B.C.'s arrogant self-assurance may be seen in the fact that in all the flurry of cancellations of projects in the sweet name of economy, not a finger was laid on the C.B.C. Its plush new office-studio complex of 23 storeys in Montreal will go ahead anyway, at a cost of $66 million. If it turns out like the National Arts Centre we could be running into a $300 million or $400 million project.

Until the minister and his colleagues can find some way to stop up the open sewers in their bureaucracy down which tax dollars are disappearing at an ever-increasing rate, it is a mockery for him to call for self-restraint and self-discipline in spending. These untouchable government agencies are only one of several areas of uncontrolled expenditure that make it impossible for any accurate forecasts to be made or to run the country on responsible fiscal principles.

The other most important area has already been dealt with at length by my colleagues in the opposition. That is the area of shared-cost, open-ended, federal-provincial programs. I will not deal with them now beyond saying that they are bleeding the country white, and the reason is simple. For purely political purposes federal Liberal governments of the past five years have concocted these programs too hastily, forced them upon provincial governments in no position economically or politically to oppose them and have failed, in setting up these programs, to provide any controls whatsoever upon expenditures. It is an example of negligence and irresponsibility without parallel, and to persist in the imposition of national medicare while at the same time announcing the intention to withdraw from the scheme in five years is, to say the least, amazing.

Before I close, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about another area in which I conceive this budget to be particularly weak. This is its failure to give any recognition to the basic economic development which must be the forerunner and foundation of any significant social development. This budget makes much of the so-called social development tax. In my view this is simply a cheap method of camouflaging a straightforward, old-fashioned tax gouge.

I come from a part of the country that has more than a passing interest in wheat. It would be no overstatement were I to say that the social development of my area depends primarily on wheat. Foremost in the economic development programs of most urgency in my area is the development of a modern, efficient and effective sales and marketing set-up for wheat. Many speakers in many debates in this house have set out in detail just what a large and important part wheat plays in the Canadian economy and what a direct and important bearing it has on the well-being of many thousands of Canadians far from the wheat fields and the elevators. I will not go over that ground beyond quoting briefly from an address made only last month in Winnipeg by Mr. A. M. Runciman, president of United Grain Growers Limited. He said at one point:

> Wheat growers have a legitimate right to ask for some sacrifice on the part of the taxpayers to maintain Canada's great industry of growing wheat for export.

Mr. Runciman also said that wheat growers had their responsibilities to the taxpayers too. One of the chief of these I believe is to ensure that the industry of producing wheat is not allowed to degenerate into a make work business, sustained only by generous transfusions of tax dollars from time to time in the form of subsidies or other artificial stimulants.

If we are to demand support from the body of the Canadian taxpayers we must ensure that wheat production remains a vital, necessary and lucrative business. This much is demanded by the national interest. If we accept this responsibility, however, as wheat producers we surely have a right to ask that the government assistance that is essential under our existing laws in support of the sale and marketing of wheat be the most modern, progressive and effective that it is possible for us to devise.

It is exactly in this area that I wish the Minister of Finance, and indeed the whole government, had shown some awareness of the vital necessity of moving swiftly and aggressively in the field of wheat marketing. I have no wish to burden the house with a detailed discussion of the complexities of wheat production, sale and distribution in today's world market. It will suffice for me to quote Mr. Runciman once again. He said:

It is doubtful if exports this year will go over the 350 million bushels.

This, in a nutshell, is our problem—declining export sales in a world market where old, traditional customers are becoming less and less dependent upon us, new customers are ultra price conscious, and competition and production have gone up sharply.

One of the chief competitive factors we face in Canada is the greater flexibility our competitors enjoy in pricing to make sales. Our present set-up, which has served well and profitably over many years, has become a handicap in the changed circumstances of the world wheat marketplace. Valuable as may be a national grains council, I do not think the pressing facts of Canada's economic life, and particularly the pressing facts of western Canadian economic life, permit us the luxury of waiting until such a necessarily cumbersome body gets down to work. I would suggest that what we need is an immediate and massive attack on the twin problems of pricing our wheat for sale in competition with other producing nations and a determined and businesslike approach to the question of surveying new markets, encouraging new uses of grains, and making new friends, customers and sales.

It is not enough any more to depend on detached, long range sales techniques. In today's world wheat users will not come banging on our door. We must bang on theirs, but in doing so we must be sure we have the goods they want to buy. Wheat sales made at a ministerial or ambassadorial level can no longer be depended upon. Special trade missions with limited life and scope will not serve. We want special, expert, highly skilled and knowledgeable teams of Canadian traders on the job abroad 52 weeks of every year. We must have sales teams, market survey teams, promoters and idea men on this export job the year round, day in and day out. And behind them we must place the support of a very much stepped up agricultural research effort. We have to be aggressive. We have to go where the business is; we have to revolutionize our whole concept of selling wheat.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the sort of economic development which I believe should have been encouraged by this budget. This is the sort of concept the Minister of Finance might find much more productive of tax dollars than his present theories of regressive, inward looking and outmoded national financing. This failure to arouse the spirit of the country, this failure to meet the real needs of Canada at this time, and this abject surrender to a gloom and doom philosophy I believe stand as the great indictment of this budget.

The Canadian people will long remember the minister who fathered this creature for his timidity, his lack of spirit and his approach to great national issues which, when the test came, showed him to have the approach of a moneylender and the techniques of a loan shark.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, rising for the first time in this 28th parliament, after an absence of three years, I would like, before making remarks on the budget and the economy in general, to congratulate you for the confidence which the members unanimously showed you by electing you as Speaker of the house.

Having had the privilege of coming to this house at the same time as our Speaker in 1962, I have had the advantage of meeting him, and I was not at all surprised that he rose rapidly to the responsible position he now occupies with tact and competence.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I lived through the difficult years which this parliament experienced from 1962 to 1965, and I know that the 1965-68 period was just as difficult.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Indeed, during three and a half years, I took part in the debates many times, putting forward solutions and giving my opinions on the problems facing our country, and my area in particular.

Defeated as an independent candidate during the 1965 election, I accepted to be a member of the new Liberal team during the election of June 25 last, when the Canadian people gave this government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a clear mandate.

However, nobody expects miracles. Nowadays, every country in the world is going through difficult periods, and Canada as well. However, it is largely with us, members of this house, that rests the responsibility of deciding policies likely to provide all Canadians with one of the highest standards of living in the world.

Mr. Speaker, since I came back to this house, I have been happy to see that the atmosphere of the discussions has changed noticeably and that, in general, all hon.

members seem ready to co-operate in the best interest of Canadians. I think that this attitude of hon. members is due to the fact that more than a hundred of them are newcomers to the house and are interested in seeing this parliament progress as quickly as possible. I think it is the will of the great majority.

Personally, I agreed to come back to politics because I am confident that a renewed Liberal party, led by a dynamic and able young man, will find the new formulas needed to push our economy toward new heights.

The young people of Canada have also put all their hopes in that man and in this parliament, because to them the stakes are much more important; in fact, their future is at stake.

During the last few years, an always increasing number of students have reached the university level or have gone beyond the high school level. We have told them in the past that they would be successful if they continued their studies and became qualified. We led them to believe, and with good reason, that education was one of the conditions that would guarantee their future success.

In view of the technological changes which we have experienced in the last few years and which will increase in the years to come, I feel that we have not misled them by encouraging them to stay in school to acquire as much knowledge and as much competence as possible.

But today, Mr. Speaker, the problem which is facing us and which we must solve is that of an economy which is at a standstill and does not offer the job opportunities that those able young people trained in our schools are entitled to expect on the labour market. That is the tragedy, I think, that is the most serious problem and the great challenge we must face.

Personally, I cannot resign myself to seeing the young people back home expatriate themselves in order to earn a living. For too long now, we have seen that policy of inaction on the part of our administrators who banked on private enterprise and its good will. Far be it from me to blame private enterprise for that state of affairs. But this fact must still be recognized: in the past, our governments have relied on the more or less arbitrary decisions of private enterprise for the development of our economy.

But these times are gone and, today, it is the duty of the leaders of our country to intervene and to create the political climate and such conditions as will allow enterprises to be born and to flourish.

If we want to create an atmosphere propitious to the development of such undertakings and the economic progress of our country, the budgetary deficits Canada has known in the last ten years must come to an end. There is nothing worse then accumulated deficits, for they are the direct cause of the high cost of living, the increase in interest rates, in direct and indirect taxes and all the various taxes imposed upon the Canadian taxpayers.

It is our duty to return to the balanced budget, because no enterprise whatsoever can function properly when it anticipates on the income of future decades. In my opinion, the Canadian government cannot do better than private enterprise. Like Canadians themselves, it has limits to its spending capacity.

After discussing the matter with my fellow citizens, I have reached the conclusion that, for some years, the government should revert to the pay as you go policy. It should not incur expenditures which cannot reasonably be met through existing taxation and, if possible, taxation should be reduced. The present taxation system is detrimental to savings for all practical purposes. This inflationary period we have gone through is a reason why a man saving a dollar today will lose money tomorrow as this same dollar will have less purchasing power. In fact, I would say that, in its present condition, inflation encourages indebtedness. A man can today obtain more through borrowing than by waiting until later to buy what he wants with his savings. This is leading us into a disastrous situation. It will affect the family budget as well as the municipalities, school boards and the provincial and federal governments.

We must revert to a balanced budget, but we should not start by computing the expenses first and then obtaining revenues. In my estimation, a balanced budget consists in calculating first how it will be possible to obtain revenues through the existing taxes which the taxpayers can afford and the economy's producing capacity. On the basis of a probable and sufficient secure revenue, it must first be established in what fields the money is to be expended in order to stimulate our economy and our industrial development so that Canadians will be assured of some social security. However, our first objective must then take into account our economic development, because employment can create more income for the workers and they, in turn, are better able to look after their own social security.

I would like at this point, Mr. Speaker, to quote a statement made by the newly elected American president who, soon after his victory, said as reported on November 7 in Le Devoir:

> A return to a balanced budget is the sovereign remedy that Mr. Nixon intends to apply to the American economy to cure it of its ills when he comes to power on January 20 next.

Further on, in the article, we can read the following:

> By controlling inflation, a balanced budget will also greatly improve the balance of payments of the United States, submits the President-elect. American goods especially will be able to sell again at competitive prices in the world, which will promote exports and curtail imports.

• (4:20 p.m.)

In my opinion, in Canada, we have to restore a climate and an economic situation which will allow our industries to compete on foreign markets. If the formulation of this policy is considered in the United States, it should, all the more, be considered in Canada. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) suggests that we go back to a balanced budget system and I fully agree with him on that. However, I would make a reservation with regard to the increase in the budget itself, because if we compare it with the budget of six years ago, we find that to all practical purposes, it has almost doubled.

I do not think that this is something we should be proud of because, as was so well put lately by the honourable member for British Columbia, strong governments are not necessarily good governments.

I think we should avoid over-expansion, particularly here in Canada. In my opinion, the economy has produced enough money during that period of time to balance the budget, but our successive governments have imposed a great many new taxes and raised existing taxes. This policy should be abandoned.

The government and the various ministers responsible for the estimates should keep within the sums allocated to them. In my opinion, the ability of a minister—and I think that should be one of the most important criteria for judging the competence of a minister—is not necessarily proportionate to the importance of the budget he administers or the number of employees working under him. He should be judged instead by the efficiency and the performance he obtains from each of his employees and each dollar at his disposal.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, I think I should say a few words about the region which I have the honour of representing in the House of Commons, an honour which I share with three other members. The riding of Lac-Saint-Jean is situated in the beautiful region of the Saguenay and lake Saint-Jean, some 150 miles north of Quebec city.

It is a somewhat isolated area, a valley which one discovers after travelling along a magnificent highway which cuts across the Parc des Laurentides. This area, Mr. Speaker, has a population of 280,000, and its economy depends mostly on agriculture, the pulp and paper industry and the production of aluminum.

During the past 25 and I would even say 50 years, our region has developed a great deal but now, as is the case with several other parts of the country, we are merely marking time for our industries are not developing and, since we depend almost completely on primary industries, we have almost no secondary industries. Unemployment has reached a rather alarming level.

At the present time, according to the statistics of the National Employment Service and Manpower Centre of our area, more than 15 per cent of the manpower is unemployed and must rely on unemployment insurance benefits and various welfare measures to make both ends meet. Mr. Speaker, such conditions cannot go on and should not be allowed. We should do everything possible to cope with it.

The milk industry is the main occupation of the farmers in my constituency. They are grouped in a recognized professional association which is well structured. For a great number of years, it has fought for the interests of regional agricultural class. The Catholic Farmers Union, to which belong most of the farmers in my district, has, during past years, worked tremendously hard to promote the interests of the agriculutral class.

Farmers now have organizations that are able to represent them well and especially to provide them with the necessary technical information to permit them to operate their farms with the greatest possible efficiency.

Mr. Speaker, for some years now, the Catholic Farmers Union through briefs has been asking for the establishment of an agricultural marketing board.

I realize, of course, the difficulty of establishing a set-up of that kind, but those farmers are aware nowadays of the fact that in order to be successful, to obtain some kind of security, to be able to share the well-being of the rest of the Canadian people, they must surely be more efficient and get a better income for their work as well as better prices for their products.

I therefore ask the government to co-operate with the above-mentioned organizations in order to set up as soon as possible the agricultural marketing board, so that we may once and for all find a solution to the farmers' problems.

Mr. Speaker, in the Saguenay-Lac-St-Jean area—as everywhere else in Canada—we were pleased to hear that the people in Gaspé would at long last know a period of prosperity thanks to the application of a huge development program costing some $258 million.

In the last election campaign, the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada, and several of his cabinet colleagues, pledged themselves to work hard towards eliminating regional disparities. The Saguenay-Lac-St-Jean region is now experiencing difficulties and I feel that with its tremendous potential it is certainly the ideal area for an experimental project in development.

That is why, in line with my commitments during the last election campaign and with the support of the ministers, and especially that of the Prime Minister, we ask that some body be set up and some study be made and some program be established, taking into account, of course, our potential and our needs.

I feel that the people deserve that the government take care of them, as we have even now the qualified people needed to make a success of such an undertaking.

We are not asking for charity, but merely that we get back part of the taxes that we and our large industries, such as Alcan, have paid to the federal treasury in the past, and are still paying for that matter. If that money, or part of it, were reinvested in the development of our area, not only could we cease to depend on the help of the various governments, but we could then generate new income for the government.

Mr. Speaker, I could not resume my seat without having pointed out one of the serious problems which industry in general must now face because of recent discoveries, which I feel is becoming an increasing challenge to man, I am thinking of the progress of technology, mechanical engineering and automation.

Throughout the ages, the methods used to produce various consumer goods have changed. However, our generation is witnessing a unique phenomenon in the history of humanity, namely the rapidity with which those technological changes are applied in industry. Their introduction in industry has changed the methods of production. If they want to survive and prosper our industries have no choice; they must adapt their methods of production to the exigencies of national and international competition. For enterprises, mechanization is not a luxury; it is a condition of survival. Those which refuse to modernize, to fall into step, are simply doomed to disappear.

Mr. Speaker, during the next five minutes, I would like to mention one of the problems raised by the application of changes in factories. Their effect is to modify greatly the traditional way of producing and, therefore, workers are greatly affected. The displaced worker must go through job retraining. Quite often he finds himself out on the street without any job or income and completely lost.

In a situation of this kind, a deep feeling of insecurity takes hold of the workers who will soon become the victims of our development. The present situation is all the more serious because the great majority of all industrial workers of this generation have been unable to take advantage of advanced academic training. For them, retraining is difficult, even impossible in some cases.

Confronted with the threat of mechanization and automation, the workers' unions have to fight progress, because they have no other alternative, especially when the unemployment rate is as high as it is today. Collective bargaining has become more and more difficult because, in addition to trying to improve working conditions and wages for the workers, the union leaders are compelled to fight dismissals resulting from technological changes.

Mr. Speaker, what is our responsibility as legislators in view of this situation? What have we done in the past? Very little, if anything. What does this government intend to do? I direct this question to the Minister of Labour, the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey). I do not know.

Since I have returned to the house, most of the members who have taken part in this debate have not said anything on this subject.

I am surprised at that and concerned, because after listening to all the members' speeches and finding that nobody was raising the problem of technological changes that affect the workers, I am wondering if we are not on the point of forgetting that we have been sent here by the great majority of workers. Workers are nonetheless affected by these changes and most of them are responsible for our being here. When the time comes to send them the bill of our budget extravagances, generally there is no delay. We have some more evidence of that.

As administrators of the business of the nation, our first responsibility is to foresee. We have only to recall the numerous strikes in public services to realize that we did not benefit from the experience of private enterprise in the field of collective bargaining. We have granted the right to strike to public servants without making sure, beforehand, that effective and approved machinery would favour the signing of conventions without numerous strikes.

To get out of this mess, we have been forced to grant wage increases that started the whole inflationary process, at the expense of all, and mostly of our industries which have been in an unfavourable position with regard to international competition.

Here, in Ottawa, when there are problems, we proceed with royal commissions of inquiry. That is not necessarily bad, Mr. Speaker. But while we investigate and conduct studies, there are some who suffer from the fact that we are doing nothing. When the commissions present their reports—and normally they do—what happens to them? Most often, some officials take a look at them, a few newspapers print excerpts, but unfortunately, very often, the reports lie on the shelves or they rot in the files where nobody reads them.

In the field of labour relations, the Freedman commission reviewed the situation resulting from technological and operational changes in the Canadian National services. This report was published some time ago, but has anything been done about it? What plans are contemplated in order to implement the recommendations made by that commission?

There are several recommendations, Mr. Speaker, embodied in that report. One deals with the introduction of technological changes and if it were implemented through appropriate legislation, it might have a great impact on future collective bargaining.

[Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean).]

In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is recommended by the Freedman commission that any technological change introduced during the life of a collective agreement should be subject to bargaining and that the workers could even go on strike if no satisfactory agreement is reached. Mr. Speaker the Freedman commission goes farther than that and this is very important.

It is recommended that those workers losing their jobs be compensated for their moving expenses, for the possible losses they sometimes incur and for selling their properties. It is even suggested that municipalities be compensated for the problems resulting from loss of revenues due to reductions in the number of employees or because of shutdowns by industry.

Mr. Speaker, if those recommendations are applied, they will have may implications. It will not be easy to make the companies understand this, and neither will it be easy to make the labour unions accept the regulations. However, I think it is our duty to tackle this problem and to find a solution to the application of modern technology which penalizes the workers for a time. It is indeed today's tragedy that the breadwinner lives with the impending menace of losing his job and his means of subsistence. I believe that is our primary responsibility.

I definitely intend to come back to this point because, as a worker coming from a working class family, I cannot dissociate myself from the problems of my fellow-Canadians, my fellow-citizens, my colleagues and my friends. One of the questions I was asked very frequently during the last election campaign was: "What do you intend to do to protect us against automation?"

I think workers can be protected through legislation, but they can also and above all be protected by a flourishing economy which will increase the number of jobs available. Technological progress would present no great problems, Mr. Speaker, if there were many jobs available, because then, simply on account of the departure rate, the mortality rate and the retirement rate, companies could introduce new techniques, new methods of works and new machines without great prejudice to the worker. But unfortunately this is not the case. At present, the workers have no alternative. They are being laid off and there are no jobs available. If there were, I would be the first to ask for an immediate application of technological changes, as this would, in the end, result in an economy of efforts, which is not the case now.

As this is not the case, we must find means of protecting the workers. Before I finish my remarks, I ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen), the two most involved here, to combine their efforts and bring this house to pass legislation as soon as possible to protect the workers' interests and insure full employment security for them and protection for their families.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the rules of this debate are somewhat elastic and I hope you will pardon me if I tend to test their elasticity. From the way our so-called reformers are debating overtime it may be some time before I shall have another opportunity to speak.

I want to talk about the time just before this government took office. For a few months before that time a mania was rampant in this country. That is what the press called it. That term did not emanate from this side of the house. Please bear in mind that it originated with an approving press, a favourable press, sometimes, one might say, an adoring press. They called it "Trudeaumania". For the fun of it I brought with me a little dictionary of synonyms and antonyms and looked up the different meanings of "mania". The different shades of meaning listed are: madness, insanity, furore, adoration, amentia, dementia, morosis, frenzy, delirium, delusion, hallucination, and brainstorm.

I shall begin, as a foundation for my remarks, by saying that this is a very shocking basis for any government. On June 25 the people of Canada were subjected to a test, to an examination, if you wish, to see just how seriously they were infected by this mania. Sir, the results of that test confirmed our very worst fears. It had indeed reached epidemic proportions, serious but not incurable in the west, serious in central Canada, possibly incurable or possibly not; I don't know. But in the east the mania did not get off the ground because we in the east had developed an immunity to manias. We in Newfoundland in particular had developed an immunity to manias. We have been suffering from a very serious case of Joey mania for the last 20 years but I am proud to report to this house that recovery is on the way. In any event, we in the east did not suffer from this mania.

I am going to make a few observations now and I will try not to be too much of an isolationist or too parochial. I also hope to make a few remarks with reference to the national scene which may be regarded as pragmatic because many Newfoundlanders are inclined to see all black or white and very little grey. However, I was elected by the people to come here and say what I think and not what somebody else thinks.

I refer first to a colourful magazine that came to my desk today, "Montreal 68". I have been receiving it for some time and it is very interesting. It has an item headed "Montreal's Gift To Canada." For the benefit of the house, and I am sure not too many people are familiar with this, the article reveals that the full name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is Joseph Philippe Pierre Yves Elliott Trudeau and that he was born in 1919, which makes him 49 instead of 46. But that is beside the point, Mr. Speaker.

I now wish to quote from a week end newspaper which states that the Prime Minister addressed some "3,200 smartly dressed people" who turned up at a $50 a plate dinner in the grand ballroom of a downtown Montreal hotel. I have no doubt that they did turn up smartly dressed and enjoyed their $50 a plate dinner.

The tenor of the Prime Minister's remarks seemed to revolve around political participation in democracy. This seemed to be the whole gist of his speech. He is worried about people not participating in politics in Canada. I would like to point out that I have been a member of this house since September 12 and on only one occasion have I seen the Prime Minister sit in his seat and listen to the remarks of members of parliament. That one occasion was the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in the debate on the throne speech. As the Prime Minister is known to be the author of the throne speech, naturally common courtesy compelled him to be here on that occasion, but on not one other single occasion have I seen the Prime Minister remain in the house after the question period.

He goes about this country and talks about participating in politics. I would like to point out that we have a participatory form of politics. The people of Canada elected 264 members to come to this house. This is the way they participate. I suggest that the Prime Minister sit in his seat and participate once in a while.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peddle: I am not worried because he is not here to hear my speech, but he is not even here to hear his own members speak. I am worried that this Prime Minister, who has been involved in Canadian politics only for the past two years, appears to know all the answers. But he gets up and with his ministerial following behind him he leaves, as though something dirty was going to happen here following the question period. He does not want to listen to the elected representatives of the Canadian people discuss their problems. He would rather go to a $50 a plate dinner in Montreal and invite the people there to participate in democracy. I suggest that the Prime Minister of this country sit in this house once in a while and listen to the representatives of the people. I suggest that when he rises from his seat and, with the ministers whom he permits to be here on a particular day, leaves the house, he is showing in no uncertain terms his contempt for parliament, his contempt for the 264 members who sit here, and his contempt for the Canadian people.

Mr. Benson: Where is your leader?

Mr. Peddle: And I see no reason in the world why he cannot test our present system of democracy which has been well tried. Our parliamentary system was not founded yesterday. When I entered the Newfoundland legislature for the first time some five or six years ago I confess that for the first six or seven weeks I said to myself, "This is a lot of garbage." But I soon found the reasons behind it. I soon found out, I soon learned and I soon appreciated why things were dragged out. We were members of the opposition and we were overpowered by a government that brought in legislation. But I could see that we were given the opportunity to question the legislation, to pick it apart, to examine it in detail. The system also gave the government the opportunity to stand behind its legislation and justify it.

Now the Prime Minister suggests that we speed up the parliamentary process, that we computerize it. According to the newspaper report he said:

> In this age of computers and instant communications, parliament can no longer proceed with its traditional slowness—
> [Mr. Peddle.]
>
> He is impatient.
> —without running the risk of always being left behind by advances in the life of society.

Mr. McGrath: He wants to computerize all of us.

Mr. Peddle: Maybe the Prime Minister would like to see 264 computers in the chamber. Maybe he would like to press buttons. Maybe he would like to become a benevolent dictator. This is what this statement suggests to me. He is worried because the Canadian people cannot participate in democracy. This House of Commons is the bulwark of democracy because here democracy is practised in this country. We do not want the Prime Minister, who came to power on a kind of a wave, a mania as the newspaper people described it, to come here and chip away at the bulwarks of our democracy. Let us reform parliament, Mr. Speaker, but I suggest that the Prime Minister is out to deform parliament, to destroy it. I quote again from the newspaper:

> He called upon the people "to let parliament know they don't want this kind of delay"—

On June 25 the people of Canada knew what they were doing.

An hon. Member: Or did they?

Mr. Peddle: Well, that is not the question, but they did elect 264 members to this parliament under our present system. They were not anticipating any fancy system that the Prime Minister might come up with later. This is the system under which they elected us. This is the system under which we must serve until somebody comes up with a better system, and I am not at all convinced that the Prime Minister has a better system.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The Prime Minister suggests that he knows all the answers. I suggest he does not know the questions, let alone the answers. He says he expects to have a series of these $50 a plate dinners like he had in Montreal on Sunday night. I have news for him; he will have very few $50 a plate dinners in Newfoundland. This is all very fine, but the Prime Minister cannot wait until the end of the question period to get out of here. There would seem to be something unclean about this place. He must get upstairs, downstairs, or wherever it is, to closet himself with those pseudo-intellectuals, not the Canadian people, at whom he can crook his finger and say, "Come here, boy; I can use you." He wishes to further his plans for some kind of a benevolent dictatorship or maybe one that is not so benevolent.

As I say, I am very concerned about this. It is all very well to be a member of the jet set. It is all very well to come swooping down in a jet, a helicopter, or what have you, speak to a group of people in a modern shopping plaza at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer in all probability, say a few well chosen words, give that famous smile, kiss a few teenage maidens, and take off again. I have figured out the reason the Prime Minister did not have much to say during his shopping plaza tours. He did not say much because he did not have anything to say. I have also figured out the reason for the famous haircut for which he is supposed to be responsible. It is not a hair style at all; it is only a very skilful attempt on the part of his barber to cover up his baldness. When the people of Canada realize this they may start to see through a lot more of these deficiencies.

The whole election campaign was won on two planks in the Prime Minister's platform. What were they? They were the just society and a promise to do everything that could be done about the regional disparity which exists in Canada. There is something else which has occurred to me. We have a new Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) who is very very concerned about this matter. He is the champion of the Canadian people. A few days ago he made a speech in the house in which he was very unctuous and pious. He mentioned that he is very much concerned about the wording of contracts, the fact that the weight of a product might be half an ounce less than it should be as marked on the container, and things like that.

I should like to talk about the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, this Canadian politician who goes back and forth across this country making irresponsible promises, the politician who stands up and suggests to the people of Canada that at seven o'clock in the morning on June 26 they will have a just society. I cannot help it if the people swallowed this; apparently they did. Now we learn that it will take time to bring all this about.

It is the job of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to see that the people of Canada are given the whole story. A few months ago the Prime Minister intimated to the Canadian people during the campaign that the Canadian economy was in wonderful shape. We know now that this was not true. Let us sick the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on him because he misled the Canadian public. One is not supposed to do this. If we are not to have a just society that is founded on hypocrisy we must see that the Ministry of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is a real factor.

This department should be dealing with advertising, for instance in respect of cigarettes. It is recognized and accepted throughout the world that cigarette smoking can lead to lung cancer, another lung disease the name of which I do not know, heart disease, and a number of other diseases. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is very concerned about the fine print on finance contracts and about labels being correct; yet every time we sit down to look at television or open a magazine we see advertising that is designed to lure us into smoking a different kind of cigarette. We even learn that there is a new 12-minute cigarette that will give us lung cancer twice as fast as the compact 6-minute cigarette. All this goes on.

The minister is concerned about the fine print in contracts and the labels on packages, but these things will not give one lung cancer, emphysema or a heart attack. These are the things which receive the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs while the cigarette manufacturers have a field day. They tell everybody down on the docks to smoke cigarettes. They show a big robust man with muscles. This will appeal to the younger generation. The suggestion is that you are a square if you do not smoke cigarettes.

This morning I saw a large billboard which said that everywhere today somebody is smoking a duMaurier. "Two pack Munro", as somebody said here the other day, says that smoking is declining for the first time since he became minister a few months ago. I am glad that he did not deliver the speech himself. He had his parliamentary secretary deliver it for him. I do not think he has any foundation for saying this, but it shows he is worried. What about the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro)? If his colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs does not take action in this regard it is up to him to do something about it. Let us wipe out some of the newspaper and television advertising in respect of cigarettes. Incidentally, I should like to say to "two pack Munro" that I smoke two packs a day also.

Mr. Munro: You shouldn't.

Mr. Peddle: As I say, there must be something done about this; otherwise we will be developing not a just society but a society of hypocrisy and a government of hypocrisy. If the government does not see its way to do something about this it will be the laughing stock of the Canadian people.

There is one other item I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Remember that on June 25 the people of Canada were sold a package. I suggest to members of this house that the package did not conform with the label indicating what was in the package. The label did not at all agree with what was inside the package. I refer to the practice of members of this present cabinet taking news releases of other members of the cabinet and rewriting them so they will be suitable for the consumption particularly of the voters of Newfoundland.

I will not put the whole of this on record but I should like to refer to a news release by the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand). It was released some time ago but the date does not really matter. He announced new mills to boost the Newfoundland lumbering industry. It is a very cautious and businesslike statement in which it is mentioned that this help to the Newfoundland industry would be conditional. The minister emphasized that these were normal public measures to aid in the development of a chip mill at Happy Valley, Labrador, and a liner board mill at Stephenville. He was very careful to emphasize that these were conditional but normal public measures. The minister was also very careful to say that some $6 million or $7 million of the entire $20 million would be recoverable from the companies, and that a large chunk of this, namely, the Atlantic Development Board portion, would only be payable after the companies became operative.

I suggest that at the very same time Newfoundland's representative in the cabinet of the government of Canada issued a release. What did he represent those measures as being? He represented them to the Newfoundland consumer as a great, magnanimous gift from a magnanimous government. He mentioned nothing about conditions and nothing about these amounts having to be repaid by the operating companies. He mentioned nothing apart from the fact that Newfoundland was to be the recipient of a $20 million gift from the government at Ottawa. We have a Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to protect the Canadian public against wrong labelling and so on, but who is going to protect the Canadian public from this type of misrepresentation which is just as serious as improper labelling?

An hon. Member: Who will protect the Minster of Defence Production (Mr. Jamieson) from the government?

Mr. Peddle: Let us have another minister to protect the people of Canada from irresponsible politicians.

I promised not to become insular or parochial, but before resuming my seat I should like to put a few words on record about regional disparity. Let me give the house an example of regional disparity of the type that should be labelled "made in Canada", by the government of this country. I refer to the installations and buildings maintained by the Department of National Defence in Canada. Very quickly I should like to give figures in relation to the total number of people, both military and civilian, employed in the provinces in this regard. In the province of Newfoundland there are 559; in the province of Prince Edward Island, there are 1,674; in the province of Nova Scotia there are 20,105; in the province of New Brunswick there are 7,612; in the province of Quebec there are 15,227; in Ontario there are 42,071; in the province of Manitoba there are 8,785; in Saskatchewan there are 2,214; in Alberta there are 8,877; and in British Columbia there are 12,782. Surely this is regional disparity of a kind that should be labelled "made in Canada." Perhaps it should be stamped, "made in Canada by a government with obviously no concern about correcting it." Some attempt should be made to equalize defence spending across this country.

All sorts of things of a serious nature to the province of Newfoundland have taken place since this government took office. Let me refer to the salt rebate program. The Minister of Defence Production has belittled this program. He is an affluent man and knows nothing about poverty. He suggests this means only $50 or $60 to the fisherman. From very good advice I know that it means $170 or $180 to some of our fishermen, and twice as much or $340 when that man is fishing with his son. The minister has suggested this is band-aid treatment. I asked the doctor who shares my place here what one should do if one has a wound and only has a band-aid. I asked whether one should pluck off the band-aid and let the victim bleed to death or leave it on until a better bandage was available. He replied that of course common sense would tell you to use whatever you had and make the best of it. He said we should not pluck away the band-aid in the way the Minister of Defence Production has suggested. His analogy there bears some examination.

I do not come here asking for handouts for the province of Newfoundland. We do not want silver platter treatment. Newfoundlanders do not want to be given a living but they rightfully feel they are entitled to the opportunity of earning a living. This is a responsibility of this government and I humbly suggest it should get going to find a solution, even at the expense of some of the other programs which cost millions of dollars.

Once the big problem of unemployment is solved the other problems will become smaller. I am sure that problems in respect of bilingualism will decrease. There is one common language in this country and that is the language of hunger. If you ask our unemployed, French speaking friends in Quebec what is more important to them, finding jobs or—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to rise in this house today to speak for the first time. It is also a great honour to be the first member of parliament for the new riding of Scarborough West. This riding was created in 1966 by the redistribution act, with the northern half carved out of the huge, old York-Scarborough riding and the southern half coming from the former riding of Danforth.

At this time I should like to pay tribute to the former members of parliament who served these two parts of my new riding recently, including Mr. Frank Enfield, Hon. Frank McGee, and Mr. Maurice Moreau, as well as the present member of the new riding of York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury). These members represented the old riding of York-Scarborough from 1953 to 1968. I should also like to pay tribute to Mr. Reid Scott, who represented the former Danforth riding from 1962 to 1968. While all these members did not belong to the Liberal party, they were all active and articulate members who served their constituents well, and it is a privilege and a challenge for me to try to follow in their footsteps.

Scarborough West comprises the southwestern part of the borough of Scarborough, which is the most easterly of the six municipalities making up metropolitan Toronto. It runs for about five miles north from the Scarborough bluffs of Lake Ontario and it is about three miles wide. In this comparatively small area dwell about 85,000 people, still predominantly of Anglo-Saxon origin but being more and more enriched by peoples of almost all racial, cultural and linguistic origins. Until the end of the second great war much of the riding consisted of farm land, but in the ten years or so thereafter it became completely built up, mostly with single family houses but also with some parts devoted to a wide variety of light industry.

During the election campaign last spring I devoted considerable time, while canvassing door to door, attending coffee parties and public meetings, to discussing the desirability of a one Canada policy, not only to allow equal opportunities for our French and English speaking peoples right across the country but also economic opportunities. Every effort must be made to develop those parts of Canada which, because of conditions, have not been so fortunate, particularly the Atlantic provinces, parts of Quebec and other rural areas in Canada.

While the great majority of my constituents are in the middle income bracket from which most of the taxes are raised to run this country, and while increasing living costs are pressing many of them quite severely, the people of Scarborough West are willing to concede that there are many parts of the country that need substantial, additional help, and they are willing to contribute to the worth-while and essential national goal of equality of opportunity no matter in what part of Canada one is born or lives. Therefore it is with much sympathy and some understanding that I have listened to hon. members in the house for the last two months relate in detail the problems particularly of the Atlantic provinces and some of the rural areas of this country.

I am sure that in the next few years our government, led by the initiatives of the new department of regional development, will add to and improve the many excellent regional development programs that we have started in recent years in order that this ideal of equality of economic opportunity will rapidly become a reality. However, I trust that my hon. friends who represent these areas will also reciprocate this sympathy and understanding when we deal in this house with the problems of the great majority of the people of Canada, the problems of those who live in the urban areas of this country.

As is well known, about 70 per cent of all Canadians now reside in cities and within about ten years this figure will rise to about 80 per cent. Therefore in 1980 about four out of every five Canadians will not be in the outports of the Atlantic provinces or on the farms in the west but will be living in the great urban areas of Canada. Accordingly, now and to an ever-increasing extent in the near future, the problems of Canada will be the problems of Canadian cities. These problems are severe and their solutions are difficult and expensive.

However, if Canada is to prosper and remain a good place in which to live and raise a family, the problems of Canadian cities, in which most Canadians live, must be attended to and attended to quickly. Despite overlapping constitutional jurisdictions in some of the problem areas of pollution, transportation and housing, the federal government in my view must take a larger and more important role in dealing with these problems.

Of the various urban problems I would like at this time to say a few words with respect to housing. I was certainly pleased when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appointed the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) as the minister in fact responsible for housing, because of his past personal experience in the housing industry in metropolitan Toronto, particularly in the Scarborough area, and because of the minister's reputation for getting difficult jobs done. I was also pleased when the task force on housing, under the direct leadership of the minister, was announced with a view to touring the country and getting the opinions of all interested and knowledgeable people and organizations with respect to this major national problem and reporting some concrete findings and proposals by early 1969.

As you may know, Mr. Speaker, a group of interested citizens and elected officials from all levels of government, school board, municipal, provincial and federal in the Scarborough area, including my good friend the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) and myself, discussed the problem and then prepared a joint brief which we had the privilege of submitting to the task force at its hearings in Toronto last month. While our brief did not specifically mention this, I believe first of all that a new federal department of urban affairs should be created. Such a department would be able to be an effective liaison not only between the various federal departments interested in urban matters but would be able to direct and increase the co-operation among the federal, provincial and municipal levels of government, which is so necessary because of the overlapping constitutional jurisdictions in this field.

Such a new department would also be able to focus federal interest and concern on urban areas and also stimulate research, both in our universities and in the department itself, on urban problems. We have had departments of fisheries and agriculture ever since confederation and now, when most Canadians reside in our cities, I strongly submit that a department of urban affairs, with its own minister in the cabinet, is not only desirable but absolutely necessary.

Second, Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that there is no shortage of land for housing, even in an urban area like metropolitan Toronto. However, the cost of land has risen so sharply in recent years that a modest home is no longer possible. While speculation accounts for some of the increase, it seems that this was made possible by the shortage of serviced land available for development. Municipalities have found it difficult to finance the costs of services such as sewers and water mains, and they have resisted a too rapid growth in housing until sufficient industrial development has been attained to offset the costs of future services such as education.

While some of the possible financial solutions fall mainly in the provincial field, such as a possible equalization of assessment practices on land and buildings to discourage land speculation and the transfer of most educational costs from the municipalities to the provinces, the federal government still has a definite part to play. One way to reduce land costs and make land readily available for housing would be to encourage municipalities and regional governments to act as developers on their own through land acquisition. Federal loans at favourable interest rates might be provided for this purpose on condition that serviced lots were leased or turned over at cost after services had been installed. Although C.M.H.C. can now act in partnership with provincial authorities, our experience in Scarborough with the Malvern project would not suggest that involving the provincial authority leads to quick solutions. The regional or municipal governments, on the other hand, with appropriate assistance from the federal government could probably act more quickly in conjunction with their own planning authorities, thereby eliminating an important source of conflict.

Third, in order to achieve the necessary increase in housing units across Canada from the level of 180,000 in 1968 to 225,000 by 1970, in accordance with needs as projected by the Economic Council of Canada, we will require an additional $1 billion each year in residential mortgage funds. Substantial new sums of money will also be required for public housing to assist families with low and modest incomes, retired people and students. Therefore, much of the additional funds for residential mortgages will have to come from the private sector, and in our brief to the task force some of the following ideas were suggested by which these funds could be generated.

(a) Trust and loan companies could supply a substantially larger volume of funds to finance housing if present legislation were amended to allow them to borrow for terms exceeding the present limit of five years, in the same way as recent changes in the Bank Act permit chartered banks to borrow on subordinated, long term debentures.

(b) Trust and loan companies registered under the federal government deposit insurance plan should be permitted to increase their borrowing ratios from 15 times paid-up capital and reserves to 20 times these reserves. This would enable them to increase borrowing capacity in the market by 33 per cent and would enable them to significantly increase lending on residential mortgages.

(c) Pension funds are the most rapidly growing form of savings flow in Canada and have the greatest potential to contribute to the financing of new housing. However, in 1967 only 9 per cent of $8 billion in trusteed pension funds was invested in mortgages. If the pension funds were to increase by four times the proportion of their assets in residential mortgages, they would only equal the mortgage proportion in the portfolios of many life insurance companies. An active promotional program should be undertaken among pension managers to encourage mortgage investment, and the legislative requirements under which they operate should be thoroughly studied with a view to removing any technical or archaic impediments to their investing in greater amounts of residential mortgages.

• (5:20 p.m.)

(d) A secondary mortgage market should be established, with C.M.H.C. prepared to enter the market as a buyer as well as a seller. While C.M.H.C. should not be expected to guarantee the purchase of blocks of mortgages in the market in the absence of other buyers, any more than the Bank of Canada is obliged to support the Canada bond market under all conditions, a developmental approach on the part of C.M.H.C. to demonstrate a willingness to act as a seller or buyer in the interest of stabilizing prices would encourage the holding of larger mortgage portfolios by both small private investors and institutional investors concerned with liquidity.

Fourth, with respect to public housing, while the federal government supplies up to 90 per cent of the capital funds for public housing, up to 75 per cent for land assembly, and 50 per cent of the funds for subsidized rents in accordance with family incomes, the constitutional responsibilities for public housing lie largely with the provinces, and I would urge the federal government to take the lead in encouraging the provinces to create active housing authorities to make greater utilization of these programs right across the country. Although the quantity of public housing units immediately required is of paramount concern, we must be careful not to overlook the human aspects of the problem. If we continue to create apartment ghettos without providing recreational facilities, or without an appropriate dispersion throughout a somewhat mixed social and economic neighbourhood, or if we continue to treat public housing tenants as second class citizens, we can expect to find in a few years time that this great expenditure of public funds will have created serious social problems.

In particular, I would recommend using the present section of the National Housing Act which allows the spending of moneys by C.M.H.C. on ancillary matters appropriate to the project to encourage the installation of proper and sufficient recreational facilities in and about the larger public housing projects. The creation of proper public housing should be concerned not only with the bricks and mortar of the buildings themselves but also with the creation of the whole environment of living. Hopefully, it could be arranged to open such recreational facilities to the whole surrounding community, but in any event I feel strongly that such facilities should be considered a necessary and integral part of any large public housing project.

While limited dividend housing has been subject to severe criticism, not the least in Scarborough, the program, given a sufficient supply of funds, could generate a major expansion quickly. Not the least consideration is the fact that though publicly assisted the housing is self-sufficient and particularly geared to families of moderate income.

Fifth, the lack of standardization on all building codes must be an important source of delay, red tape and added costs. Present building codes are too rigid and restricted, particularly in their response to new technology. C.M.H.C. should definitely take a much stronger lead in the standardization of regulations and products. Along this line it could encourage the use of new and cheaper materials and promote their acceptance by local authorities and building codes. It might also promote national standards in dimensions of windows, doors, etc., and it could test and promote the use of prefabricated modular units such as bathrooms, kitchen units and complete homes.

Lastly, rapid transit could play a major role in making additional land and satellite communities attractive for low cost housing. Adequate land for housing with convenient access to the city would tend to stabilize prices, rents and excessive speculation. The federal government's role in transportation in Canada's history is well established, with its support of railways, the trans-Canada highway, etc., and since the great preponderance of Canadians are now living in or very near to the big cities, subways and commuter rail services can no longer be considered as a purely sectional interest. Such rapid transit facilities must be built around regional planning in the use and development of land for housing, and the federal government, particularly through a new department of urban affairs, should closely co-operate with the provincial and regional authorities which constitutionally have the prime responsibility for such planning.

I see that my time is almost gone, Mr. Speaker, and I am sorry that I will be unable to comment directly on the budget in very great detail. In campaigning last spring I found that the people of Scarborough West were convinced that the present tax laws at all levels of government were inequitable and that substantial changes should be made to make taxes fairer to all concerned. I certainly share this view and to me, therefore, the reform measures in the new budget with respect to the increased taxes on life insurance companies, on the banks and on the resource industries, as well as the exemption from estate tax of estates left to widows, are very welcome and are definitely steps in the right direction. However, more important is the definite assurance by the Minister of Finance that substantial new tax reform legislation will be introduced within the next six months.

I hope that among the tax reform proposals next spring some form of capital gains tax will be found. I am therefore looking forward with high expectations to the new tax reform legislation in general since to me its implementation will be one of the most important things this parliament will be doing over the next three or four years. While no one likes increased taxes, I believe the people of Scarborough West and the country realize that the new social development tax of $120, which decreases for those having taxable incomes of less than $6,000, is necessary as a contribution by each of us to the large sums of federal funds being spent on the very necessary and worthwhile social programs of hospital insurance, and to post-secondary education, and medicare. I am very proud of the lead the Liberal party has always taken in establishing nationwide social programs of this kind, and I believe the people realize that moneys have to be raised to pay for them. This new tax and the substantial increases in taxation of the insurance companies, banks and resource industries already mentioned will definitely allow us to work toward a balanced budget in the next fiscal year, which will provide a firm base from which substantial tax reform legislation can be introduced, debated and implemented.

Before concluding I would like to mention my high hopes for the proposals that the parliamentary committee for reforming the rules and procedures of the House of Commons will be presenting to us next month. As a brand new member I feel a little presumptuous in looking forward to changes in the rules when I am very aware that I do not fully understand the present ones. I also try not to advocate change just for the sake of change. However, times are changing more quickly than ever before and the people of the country expect, and I believe have a right to expect, that parliament will be able to amend its rules and procedures in order that the great backlog of proposed legislation in all federal departments can be brought forward, debated, amended as necessary and passed as expeditiously as possible.

I realize and agree that the rights of the opposition parties to fully criticize proposed legislation and the estimates, etc., have to be protected, but I am sure that full and adequate protection can be given while at the same time changing substantially the present rules and procedures to speed up the flow of parliamentary business. Such reform is greatly desired and demanded by most Canadians and surely it is a basic prerequisite before parliament can hope to deal with all the problems and challenges of Canada as it enters its second century.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate my colleague, the hon. member for Scarborough-West (Mr. Weatherhead), on a very fine maiden speech and an excellent contribution to this debate. You know, visitors from other countries who have listened to the opposition speeches in recent days must retreat from this chamber in bewilderment and dismay. They must think to themselves, surely this is a paradox in paradise. When one listens to the opposition speeches, one must believe Canada is in dire ruin and unemployment is shockingly high; there is irresponsibility everywhere and disillusionment in the land. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, the case of the opposition has been so grossly overstated that it certainly is not going to influence the Canadian people. Almost without exception, these opposition speeches have been epistles of doom and disaster.

Mr. Richard: You should have heard the Liberals in 1960.

Mr. Perrault: These speeches lack the basic quality of optimism. If a Liberal were to refer to this glass of water he would say it is half full, but a Conservative or a New Democrat would say it is half empty. This is the difference in philosophy between these parties. There is a spirit of optimism which prevails in government ranks in this house. The Canadian people detected this difference between the parties and this is one of the basic reasons there is a Liberal government today while the other parties are in opposition.

I should like to refer to some of the facts relating to this budget. I should like to quote the remarks of some of the members of the opposition. On page 2262 of Hansard an hon. member is reported as saying there is a "lack of credibility" in the government. A prediction was made by one opposition member that the budget "will be a dismal failure". The prediction was made also that "hard times are ahead" and "there is a likelihood of tax increases". Then we had the prediction of "a deficit of alarming proportions". This can be found on page 2263 of Hansard. The budget critic of the New Democratic party said the budget was a "colossal fraud". Actually, these words are rather temperate in comparison with some other words which have been uttered during this debate. Then he said "the budget was unenterprising, unfair and a budget for the privileged". Suffice it to say that none of these members has ever been accused of being an optimist and, true to tradition, these are not optimistic remarks.

The fact is that during an extremely difficult time in the history of the world—a time of gold crisis, an international exchange crisis and monetary crises in a number of nations, Canada has weathered the storm remarkably well. These are the facts. At no time in the twentieth century has there been a more difficult economic storm for a Canadian government to weather. Yet this government has come through. And looking to the future, surely there are grounds for optimism—an optimism so lacking in the claims of the "gold dust twin" parties, representatives of which we have heard speaking in these past days.

We have seen exports increase in recent months. We have seen good support for consumer expenditures. We have seen sharp increases in tourist expenditures and we have seen a record number of housing starts. I had the opportunity of attending some of the housing task force hearings on the Pacific coast during the past week. I feel, as a result, it is most unfair for any opposition member to stand up and accuse the government of lack of action in the field of housing. I think it is most unfair, particularly in view of the excellent briefs which are being presented from coast to coast in this country. All parties should work together to support constructive action in the area of housing, especially for those lower income groups requiring special assistance.

As for the budget, you would think even members of the opposition would be able to raise a faint cheer for the 7 per cent increase in gross national product in 1968. Even they should welcome the fact we are going to increase our real output in the neighbourhood of 3.5 per cent. This record is not as good as most of us would like, but it is progress; we are moving ahead.

An hon. Member: Do not be too critical or pessimistic.

Mr. Perrault: All is not "lost". The situation is not "desperate". Compared with some other jurisdictions we are doing extremely well. We, in common with most nations, are battling the twin evils of inflation and unemployment. The programs which have been launched by this government should produce beneficial results in both areas. When we talk about inflation in Canada, let us not use the word too glibly and attempt to portray Canada as a nation where inflation has run away, where it is out of control.

I have taken the opportunity of checking some facts. Australia, Thailand, South Africa, Switzerland, Portugal, Ecuador, Austria, Ireland, Pakistan, Italy, The Philippines, Japan, Spain, Bolivia, Turkey, Peru, and many other nations one could name all experienced depreciation in the purchasing power of their currency in 1967. All of them are battling the same problem we are battling here in Canada. In most cases they are fighting a less successful battle than we are in our own nation.

Our friends in the New Democratic party have been lecturing us during the budget debate, as is their wont, on the need for social planning. Let us look at Scandinavia which is supposed to be the shrine of socialist endeavour. While Canada's currency suffered a depreciation rate of 3.4 per cent in 1967, the rate in Sweden was 4.1 per cent, Norway, 4.3 per cent, Denmark, 7.6 per cent and New Zealand, also cited by our friends in the New Democratic party, was 5.8 per cent. Between 1957 and 1967 Canada experienced an average annual rate of depreciation of its currency of 2 per cent, while the rate for Sweden was 3.7 per cent and for New Zealand 3 per cent. These facts are not cited to support inflation but they represent an attempt to put inflation in Canada in proper perspective in the world, something I suggest the opposition members should have done before they made some of their comments during this debate.

I do suggest that for the opposition to imply that Canada stands alone in some sort of inflationary crisis is palpable nonsense, and they know it is nonsense. If we can agree on anything in this house it is that the government's efforts to battle inflation deserve the support of all parties. And in this fight against inflation the provinces must not opt out as "conscientious objectors" because there has been a vastly greater increase in provincial and municipal expenditures over the past ten years than there has been in the expenditures of the federal government.

Never have Canadians simultaneously sought national and individual freedoms on so wide and swift a scale and yet in the process set themselves on the brink of losing all freedoms by unleashing inflation. The opposition members in this house who suggest that the fight against inflation should be only a minor side skirmish are just as misguided as those who state that at all times and in all years the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has only one useful function and that is to balance the budget. Both of these concepts are wrong, destructive and ill advised.

The goals today, as they have been elucidated by the Minister of Finance, are these: full employment, a high rate of economic growth, reasonable stability of prices, a favourable balance of payments and an equitable distribution of rising incomes. It was a difficult task for the previous Conservative administration to achieve a proper melding of these objectives. It is a difficult task for the government here today, just as it is a difficult task for the provincial governments. No one should suggest that budgetary problems can be resolved by some basic, fundamental, simplistic action like merely proclaiming that a budget be balanced and then proceeding to do so. And those friends in the opposition who would vastly increase our social welfare programs regardless of inflation advocate, in effect, policies that would be disastrous for those in need. We have heard many proposals from the opposition side of the house suggesting limitless increases in benefits to various people. Not once, Mr. Speaker, has a price tag been put upon these programs, and I say that is not responsible opposition. Unless increases in Canada's human programs are funded in increased productivity and in meaningful purchasing power, then these programs are a fraud, a delusion, and would be ruinous especially to those who live in deprivation.

• (5:40 p.m.)

During the recent campaign and during this session, Mr. Speaker, one clear message has issued from the government, and it is this: If we demand an increasing range of government supported services, then we must be prepared to produce more and to pay more; to assent to more taxes, if these services are to be provided on the basis of economic reality instead of economic fallacy.

There is a widespread misconception, Mr. Speaker, propagated by opposition parties in the house that some sort of fiscal and financial fourth dimension exists, a monetary fourth dimension from which claims for government support can be satisfied. There is no fourth dimension of this kind. Neither this government nor any other government can hand out more than what it has taken from others, be it by taxation, tolls, fees, duties, or by the insidious and appallingly unfair method of inflation, which is the taxing of those who have to restrict their spending because their incomes do not rise as fast as the value of money falls.

The Economic Council of Canada reminds us, Mr. Speaker, that we must create 1.2 million new jobs in Canada every five years. The challenge before us, regardless of our political affiliation, is to bake a bigger economic pie so that there will be new jobs for our young people coming on to the labour market, and new taxes and revenues in order to bring the just society to more Canadians.

Those people who have participated in this debate and have had nothing but words of criticism for the efforts of this government should refer to a survey conducted by the Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development which was issued this year. They will not find the same critical tone in this objective analysis of the way Canada's affairs have been managed. I should like to quote an extract from page 31 of the report:

> In the last two years, with the trend of business conditions changing quickly, the authorities have on the whole been successful in maintaining relatively high levels of employment while combating first excesses and then mildly recessionary tendencies appearing on the demand side. Both monetary and fiscal policies have been rather promptly adjusted to changing conditions.

This report is not a partisan one, Mr. Speaker. The Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development is a group set up in December, 1960, by the member countries of the Organization for European Economic Co-Operation and by Canada and the United States. Canada is held in high repute in international monetary and financial circles for the job we are doing in trying to restrict inflation as much as possible while at the same time maximizing employment opportunities. We have in this budget, something that reflects admirably and well the government's intention to press on with this realistic approach to promote programs that at some later date will be productive of wealth for Canadians and our economy.

The opposition, Mr. Speaker, represents this approach as some sort of fiscal calamity. In fact, vast amounts of money are being invested in programs which will within the foreseeable future pay rich dividends to Canadians in economically viable new regions of our nation and provide all Canadians with higher incomes. In the case of aid for higher education, in financial terms alone there will be a return of almost 20 cent on our investment.

All we have heard during this debate from the members of the opposition, Mr. Speaker, is narrow, negative, tunnel-vision criticism of the sort that cannot see beyond the next 12 months. The other day the leader of the Conservative party stood up like some biblical prophet and lectured the government on how it had failed the Canadian people, on how it had deceived the Canadian people. When the leader of the Conservative party was premier of the province of Nova Scotia he grabbed federal money with both hands. He has never gone on record at a federal-provincial conference as telling the conference participants that no, they must refuse aid because this might cause an imbalance in the federal budget and that they should be concerned about the Canadian economy.

I ask you to listen to these figures, Mr. Speaker. The leader of the Conservative party, who the other day had nothing but condemnation for this budget, should remember that in the year 1961-62, during that heady period of Conservative rule, the province of Nova Scotia received $56 million by way of federal payments. In fiscal 1967-68, as a result mostly of Liberal legislation, that amount had gone up to $181,702,000. This is for the province of Nova Scotia alone. I hear no members of the house saying that this aid should not have been extended to the province. Surely it is time for governments at all levels to give due credit to other jurisdictions attempting to assist them achieve certain economic and social objectives. This is not being done, Mr. Speaker.

The fund for Atlantic development has never been criticized by the leader of the Conservative party because the province of Nova Scotia benefits from that fund. I should like to refer to the fifth annual economic council review, which shows that the province of Nova Scotia received from the Atlantic development fund a total of $52 million by the end of 1967. Mr. Speaker, as a British Columbian I am not standing here today declaring that there should not exist an Atlantic development fund, because this program is needed. But proper credit should be given to a federal government which has a deficit this year largely because of efforts to assist provincial governments like Nova Scotia. I suggest that it is easy to direct criticism at the federal government in a surface, narrow way.

If we examine the total contributions to the provinces, excluding tax rental agreements, we find that during the last year of Tory rule only $1.17 billion went to the provinces. This year, Mr. Speaker, $2.81 billion will go to the provinces. There, Mr. Speaker, is where you find a large part of the answer to why we have a deficit. Will one of the opposition members stand up before this budget debate has concluded and explicitly state which program should be cancelled in order to bring the budget into balance? Because this is where we separate the men from the boys, Mr. Speaker. These people who were ready to vote aye for medicare, for the Canada Assistance Plan and for the Atlantic development plan now stand up in righteous indignation and declare that the federal government is spending too much money.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Perrault: Let one of them stand up and tell us what the opposition would like to have cancelled.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has a question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): While the hon. member is on his feet, would he say that these plans should not be discontinued as far as the federal government is concerned in five years?

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with great interest to members who have neat, pat solutions to Canada's fiscal and monetary problems and I along with many others have been unimpressed. In those Tory days of which hon. members of the opposition have spoken so lovingly and nostalgically, on a per capita basis the provinces received $63.45 in fiscal 1962-63. This year the provinces will receive contributions of $135.81 per capita. It was $63 per capita in Tory days, Mr. Speaker; it is $135 per capita today. Again, I would ask the members of the opposition to tell us which programs they would like to have cancelled in their respective provinces in order to bring this budget into balance? Now is the time to stand up. We have been listening for six days to nothing but criticism; we now want to know which programs they want to cancel in order to bring the budget into balance.

In terms of a percentage of the gross national product, Mr. Speaker, the latest available figures show that 4.15 per cent went to the provinces in 1967-68, which is a vast increase over the days when the Conservative government was in power in this country. That Tory government with such an appeal for our friends to my left devoted 17.93 per cent as a total contribution to the provinces as a percent of total federal budgetary expenditures, less tax rental payments. In the fiscal year 1968-69 that amount has zoomed to over 26 per cent of the total budgetary expenditures. These are facts which are just as readily available to members of the opposition as to government members.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. McIntosh: The hon. member tells only half the story.

Mr. Perrault: In efforts to hasten the establishment of the just society, in efforts to equalize economic opportunity, educational opportunity and an opportunity for a decent standard of health, Liberal governments have established steady and rapid growth in federal contributions to the provinces. The share of total federal budgetary expenditures represented by these contributions has nearly doubled during the seven year period ending in the current fiscal year 1968-69.

The Leader of the Opposition in this house should be among the first to give due credit to the federal government for what federal aid has meant to his home province. When we look at the budgetary estimates of his own province while he was premier it will be seen that his provincial budgetary errors in forecasting amounted at times to considerably more than the 4 per cent figure he describes as "irresponsible" when applied to the federal government. The last available budget from Nova Scotia indicates that over 50 per cent of that province's revenue derives from tax sharing arrangements and other federal payments.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we often hear members of the New Democatic party in this house suggest, as someone suggested the other day, that it is unfair, unchristian, undemocratic and totally wrong that there should be so much unemployment in Canada. The last time the C.C.F.-New Democratic party was entrusted with governing any part of this nation was in 1961, in Saskatchewan. In 1961 I took the opportunity to visit Saskatchewan and I attended the Saskatchewan federation of labour convention. With the indulgence of the house may I be permitted to tell the house what the Saskatchewan federation of labour thought about the socialist panacea for unemployment. They said in their convention report:

> So far, the government of Saskatchewan has neither obtained the action from the federal government needed to increase employment let alone to create full employment, nor has it in the alternative, requested the necessary legal authority with a view to creating badly needed jobs—
> So far as we know nothing whatever has been done (by the CCF-NDP Saskatchewan government) in this connection, although the need for such a step has become extremely urgent—
> Even in such a relatively straight-forward matter as the collection of data on the labour force, nothing is being done within the province of Saskatchewan. We still have to rely almost entirely on the inadequate information provided by the federal government.

That is what was happening in 1961. Perhaps between 1961 and 1968 the socialist party in this house has evolved a magic formula to solve unemployment, something it could not do in 17 years of government in Saskatchewan. If they have discovered the new formula they have been remarkably successful in keeping it a secret. The fact is that when given the responsibility of government, political parties often change their attitudes. That is because they are faced with hard economic problems and facts, the solutions to which are not simple of achievement.

We have heard a great deal of talk about the 2 per cent social development premium which is to be levied on all Canadians. The funds from this source will be directed toward improving the health of the Canadian people. I do not like increased taxes; nobody here does. The premium is $120 a year, and there is a premium reduction for those who earn less than $8,000 a year, give or take a few dollars. That is the way to describe it.

For the family man with two children who now pays $150 a year in medical care premiums, the premium will be something like $66 a year. What does he get for it? In the case of British Columbia, the man's premier gets $23 million back in medical care grants from the federal government this year and over $50 million in medical care grants next year. These are facts. The man with two children should receive a premium reduction of about $75 a year in his medical care premium if, in fact, his premier passes along the full benefits of the federal medical care grants. The man making $3,500 a year with two children will pay $16 extra in taxes and receive back $75 in medical care assistance from the federal government, again provided the premier of the province passes this money along. But that is not the story told by the opposition, who wish to portray the government as a group of steely-eyed, heartless individuals intent on one thing only, the destruction of the little man.

The fact is that members of the opposition, almost all of them, voted for medical care and for the Canada Assistance Plan. They understood even in their remote way the need which exists in Canada. But it is not becoming of them, Mr. Speaker, to attempt to attack and denigrate efforts by the government to finance these great social programs. Their motives are patently political. Yet this is what we have seen in this debate. It has been suggested by opposition members that the medical care premium is—and I use their word—"oppression". It is clear that millions of people throughout the world wish they were suffering from such "oppression". Millions would welcome a medical care plan like Canada's.

It is most encouraging to hear the Minister of Finance say that in 12 months further reforms in our taxation system will be introduced to make taxation in this country more equitable.

This is a good budget, a heartening budget, a realistic budget, which sets worth-while and attainable goals. It offers more than pie-crust promises impossible of fulfilment. Above all, it is an optimistic budget reflecting the optimism which resides on the government side of the house with respect to the future of this great country.

In their frustration the fainthearted in opposition may condemn this budget, but the Canadian people are able to discern where their best interests lie. They do not lie on the opposition side of this chamber. They lie with a government which has established clearly its priorities in order to build a strong foundation for the country through sound economic, fiscal and monetary policies—a government determined to strengthen national unity between our two founding races. These are the best possible guarantees that we shall see a just society in the years to come.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. As it is six o'clock this house stands adjourned until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, just before the adjournment the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) had read to us his continuing jeremiad against the opposition parties in this house. I do not mind the hon. member preaching for a call to a higher notch in the just society, but when he reads speeches continually—and it seems to be the same one we have heard on a couple of previous occasions—I wish his call for higher duty could be mixed in with some extemporaneous prayer.

As a simile the hon. member held up a glass which contained some water and said that a Liberal would call it a half full glass of water because a Liberal was an optimist, while we on the opposition side would call it half empty. Knowing the habits of the hon. gentlemen with whom the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour is now associated in this house, I think he got his simile badly mixed. What really should have happened is that the glass would have been held up empty, but we would have been told it was filled to the brim with the most delicious of water.

Sir, it was about the time that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was born that the Liberal Federation of Canada met in Ottawa and passed a resolution, part of which dealt with medicare. It may be of interest to the house that the seconder of that resolution is now probably our senior parliamentarian, Hon. A. W. Roebuck, who is a distinguished ornament in the other chamber. Now we are told by members of the government that having brought in medicare they are going to withdraw from it. I think their behavior here is likened very much to that of a frolicsome young bachelor who is able to talk a young lady into certain action, takes a look at the bouncing baby boy—

[Mr. Perrault.]

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McCleave: —finds out it is called medicare, pats the infant on the head and says, "But this entails too much responsibility, and so I am getting out while the getting is good."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McCleave: I could deal with the other so-called shared cost programs in the same way, but there are three or four of them involving ten provinces and it would take a somewhat lengthy period of time.

For the benefit of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) I would like to say one thing before I turn to the main burden of my remarks about housing. It is with respect to a situation which I think is now developing across Canada in the collection of our national revenues. For years I believe the tax collectors had blinded their eyes to the so-called common law situations, but now they are not allowing people to claim as dependants those who are living with them in a so-called common law union.

This has been brought to my attention in at least one case in my area. The man in question has supported this woman for about 25 years but is not married to her. Now he has suddenly been told that he cannot claim her as an exemption. This will cost him a sum of $200 out of his own pocket. He wrote a very graceful letter in which he asked the Department of National Revenue to assume the responsibility for the lady, and see if they could feed and house her on $200 a year. But the letter unfortunately—

Mr. Benson: May I ask the hon. member a question, because I am sure he would not want to give the impression of producing the wrong kind of information. I wonder if he realizes that in fact our income tax law has never recognized common law relationships. If they have been allowed it is because they have never been picked up. I also think it is very unfair.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his generous remarks. I think I did indicate when I was drawing this case to his attention that it was a matter about which the tax people had suddenly become aware after a large number of years. In any event my friend's letter, in which he offered to consign the lady in question to the Department of National Revenue if they could feed and house her for $200 a year, apparently fell into the hands of the computer in the department, because he did not get much satisfaction in the reply. Now, knowing that the minister is aware of the situation, I hope we can expect happier news in that direction when the next budget is presented by the hon. gentleman.

Now, sir, I wish to make a few remarks about the housing situation. This morning when reading a letter to the editor in the New York Times I was struck by some of the phraseology in it dealing with the terrible housing conditions that exist in many parts of the world, but in this case in particular in New York City. The writer pointed out that the pathology of deprivation to use his expression, meant that many people would be so emotionally crippled in their outlook before they even reached the first school years that tney could not carry on either as successful students or become successful citizens, but would instead become a burden to the state for the rest of their lives. I suggest, sir, that this wastage of human resources almost from the cradle is something to which we have to give a lot more serious attention in this rich country of ours. I think it is one of our most important problems and, as I shall note later on, I think we should make a rallying cry from here, from every legislative body, every council and chamber, every ratepayers association in Canada, that housing is a fundamental right of every citizen.

But before I get to that may I read from two newspaper clippings, the first from the Montreal Gazette of September 16, 1968, headed, "Poverty, Misery Found Here," which states in part:

• (8:10 p.m.)

Poverty in Montreal has grown at such a rapid rate in the last two decades that more than half of the city's population now suffers "intolerable financial conditions," a local welfare executive said yesterday.

G. Roland Hennessey, assistant executive director of the Federation of Catholic Charities, told a poverty conference at Loyola College that the gap between the haves and the have-nots is widening steadily.

"Deprivation increased statistically six per cent in the Montreal area between 1946 and 1966. In 1946, 27 per cent of the population was destitute. In 1966 the count was 33.3 per cent."

Mr. Hennessey said today 38 per cent live in poverty, privation and misery' and 50 per cent suffer unbearable financial hardships.

You might note that this story was almost buried on page 3 of one of our leading Canadian publications. Then from my own area there is a story back on page 5 of the Halifax Mail-Star for Wednesday, September 4, 1968, which reads as follows:

Low Rental Public Housing: $165 a month?

Low rental public housing at $165 a month? That figure is the break-even cost of Dartmouth's first public housing project.

Planning director M. E. Lloyd told city council last night the low rental housing units would actually rent at $65 per month. This, he said, represented a $100 deficit on each unit.

The relatively high cost, $17,809 per unit, of the 40-unit public housing project, failed to raise an eye-brow from Dartmouth aldermen when details of the proposal were outlined at last night's general meeting.

Then further on the same report notes there is a waiting list of 250 persons for the public housing in the city of Dartmouth. These are just two examples. They were not very commonly displayed either. Perhaps we are becoming apathetic about this; I do not know. However, I believe it is something with which we must deal. A few weeks ago a number of members of this house, my friend from Toronto Broadview, my friend from Vancouver-Kingsway, myself and the Minister of Transport—perhaps there were others who I may not have noticed—were at the Canadian conference on housing held in the city of Toronto. This was sponsored by the Canadian Welfare Council.

For several days we heard statistic after statistic and harsh fact after harsh fact poured upon us about the problems of poverty and how they affect the home environments of tens of thousands of Canadians. Many resolutions came forward from that housing conference, but I think three are worthy of being placed on the record of Hansard. I believe my friend from Broadview and my friend from Vancouver-Kingsway and myself claim some credit for the first one. In a political way we thought the conference could make its record more effective if it stated a simple declaration in its first paragraph concerning what should be the goal of Canada. Here it is, although not as we undoubtedly would have written it. However, this is the form in which it was written at the conference, and adopted:

The Canadian Conference on Housing (1968) declares that all Canadians have the right to be adequately housed, whether they can afford it or not.

Then I should like to read paragraphs 3 and 5 of the same report:

There should be greater freedom of choice of appropriate housing for low and middle income groups, choice with regard to location, design, and ownership (private, cooperative, non-profit, public).

Canadian housing goals will not be easy to achieve. They require much higher priority within the national economy and should be seen to be as socially essential as education. No government is spending according to the priorities this conference insists on.

To that I say, "amen". Well, the problem is here; it receives a certain amount of publicity. A dominion-provincial conference on housing was held earlier this year. The former minister of labour who is now the Lieutenant-Governor of the province of British Columbia went about Canada last year investigating the situation. He held meetings everywhere. Now the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) in his capacity as spokesman in this parliament for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is doing the same thing. However, I believe there are certain facts so obvious that any task force would fail to uproot anything new about them. There are certain hard steps which in the long run must be taken. Certainly the problem of land values demands an approach which probably is beyond the political philosophies of most of us. Yet these steps undoubtedly will have to be taken.

I think there are steps which should be taken now and which should have been taken at the time the budget was presented to us by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). What group does the housing problem hit? I suggest particularly those in the low income brackets. The richer person will not have to sleep out in the open or on a muddy floor. He will find some place to lay his head and will be able to pay the price for that accommodation. But there are people who live in dire poverty in urban and rural areas in every province of Canada. For them we must emphasize over and over again, until it becomes a cornerstone of our political tradition no matter what part of the house we are in, that something must be done to see that more public housing is provided in Canada. It is as simple as that. There is something else which I believe could be brought about by federal impetus. I have in mind the provision of minimum standards in respect of housing across Canada. In this regard national standards are a help to municipalities which cannot afford the necessary research. I believe the federal authority could play a very proper role in this regard.

In my own city of Halifax minimum standards have existed for a period of approximately ten years. This has done much to build up the older stock of housing and maintain it at reasonable and livable levels in the city in which I live. If I have any objection to the minimum standards it is that they should be upgraded at intervals. Every decade the level should be raised another 10 per cent, let us say. In this way existing housing can be conserved. If the only approach to public housing should be that we have to pay up to $15,000 for an old home, tear it down and replace it with public housing so that the cost of every public housing unit in the development becomes somewhere in the order of $27,000 or $30,000, I dare say none of us in this chamber could go into a venture like that if we had to commit ourselves to an expenditure of that magnitude.

There is another step; that is, to get rid of the 12 per cent sales tax. I believe this is one of the most iniquitous taxes devised by revenue hungry people. Volume V of the report of the Carter royal commission on taxation deals with sales taxes, and at page 74 states:

• (8:20 p.m.)

On economic grounds, we believe, as we have already stated, that all goods and services used to produce or distribute goods and services for final use by individuals should be exempt from sales tax. To remove the regressive features of a sales tax we have argued that shelter should also be exempt from tax. There is, therefore, neither economic nor social justification for the taxation of building materials.

One of the effects of this sales tax is the inevitable and unfavourable increase it has on the cost of homes. The tax measure itself has to be administered by approximately 11,000 different organizations and companies across Canada which deal in building materials. They must employ extra staff or set aside time to look after these taxes. I know from personal experience, having dealt with some of these companies, that they have a terrible time in their dealings with the Department of National Revenue. This is not because the department has any idea about skinning them or making life miserable. It has been proven that this tax measure is difficult to set up administratively. This is true because wood products, for example, pass through many stages before they become part of a house.

In addition to the administrative difficulties involved in setting up this tax, the Department of National Revenue has changed the rules and regulations to my knowledge on at least two occasions, and perhaps more often than that. All these companies dealing in building materials have had difficulties with their initial assessments, and have then found that when the rules are changed the tax collectors come back, perhaps a year or two later, and re-assess the tax. This has made life extraordinarily difficult for them.

Leaving all these difficulties aside, and—perhaps some of them have arisen because of our psychological aversion to paying taxes—the fact is that the 11 per cent sales tax piles up administrative costs for those companies which deal with these building materials. In this way the 11 per cent becomes a higher percentage in relation to the over-all cost of a new house.

I suggest that if houses cost from $1,500 to $3,000 more because of the sales tax and its side effects, taken in conjunction with the high mortgage rates which all of us have to pay these days, many people find themselves with $500 to $1,000 less than they need to buy their own homes. When the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) comes back from his travels, or interrupts them, perhaps he should drop in on his good friend the Minister of Finance and persuade him that the elimination of this 11 per cent sales tax is a practical step to be taken immediately. This would put the cost of housing within reach of tens of thousands more Canadians who are now grasping at ownership but not able to reach it.

The Minister of Transport has at many meetings in various cities referred to conventional wisdom when faced with this old problem of housing. Perhaps he has suggested the same old solution. I do not know what else there is but conventional wisdom in this field. I do not think there is anything new under the sun in this housing field. Perhaps the minister will be able to find some new plan or scheme that is entirely different. If he does, he will have our entire appreciation, but I suggest in the meantime the elimination of the sales tax is a practical first step.

I intend to save some of my remarks for another occasion, but I think the government will have to recognize that if certain steps are taken as outlined in this budget it will be more difficult to find mortgage money for home building. Let me read very quickly in this regard from part of an editorial that appeared in this morning's Montreal Gazette:

> In the last federal budget, Mr. Benson, as the federal finance minister, imposed new, heavy taxes on the insurance companies. To compensate for the diminished income resulting from the new taxes, the insurance companies may shift more of their investments out of fixed-value, long term securities and into common shares.
> The insurance companies are permitted under law to invest 25 per cent of their assets in stocks. They now have in stocks far less than this permissible percentage. By moving into stocks they may not only hope for capital gains but would have the benefit of the 20 per cent tax credit.
> Mr. Benson has spoken of the wide tax reforms he may introduce in his next budget. If these reforms follow the recommendations of the Carter commission, they will increase the amount of the tax credit for the holders of common shares. This would of course have the effect of making fixed-value, long term investments, such as mortgages, still more unattractive.

This is a very substantial problem facing the minister and I suggest that consideration must now be given to the use of money sources such as the federal superannuation fund and the Canada Pension Plan fund in respect of the very important matter of housing.

Finally, let me again read this statement from the Canadian conference on housing, which I think should be adopted by all Canadian politicians, no matter where they serve:

> The Canadian conference on housing (1968) declares that all Canadians have the right to be adequately housed, whether they can afford it or not.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks by recalling an event which occurred last September 12. On that day, the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) issued a postage stamp commemorating Henri Bourassa, nationalist leader, member of parliament, journalist and founder of the newspaper Le Devoir, to celebrate the centennial of his birth. Henri Bourassa was born in Montreal on September 1, 1868. As a very young child, he moved with his father to Montebello, a small municipality in the riding of Labelle. When he was 21, he was elected mayor of his municipality. He had been offered the nomination two years earlier, but he was unable then to meet the requirements of the law. In 1896, he was elected to the House of Commons as a Liberal member for the riding of Labelle, which he represented until 1905. In 1905, he decided to go into provincial politics. From 1926 to 1935, he was again elected to the House of Commons, this time as an independent member.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) opened last September 3 an exhibition presented by the public archives of the national library, thanks to the generosity of the Bourassa family, which let them have some very interesting exhibits. The exhibition is to continue until November 15, 1968 and is open to the public.

I should now like to quote some extracts from an editorial written by Claude Ryan and published in Le Devoir on August 31, 1968.

A man independent by nature, Henri Bourassa had a taste of party politics at the beginning of his career. He very quickly moved away from them. His vocation lay elsewhere.

This vocation can best be summarized by two words. Bourassa had been born and was to spend his whole life fighting for freedom and justice.

Bourassa was the father not only of French-Canadian nationalism, but of Canadian nationalism. However, nationalism was never an end in itself for him. It was rather the form which his love of freedom and justice had to take at the time when he lived.

Mr. Speaker, I had the honour, on three occasions, to represent the former Labelle constituency. Once again, I take this occasion to thank the electors for this honour and also to thank the people of the new Gatineau constituency for their generous support on my election last June 25.

The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) would have preferred no doubt to present to the house a balanced budget for the fiscal years 1968-69 and 1969-70 without any increase in taxes. He was not in a position to do so because of supplementary expenditures resulting mainly from joint federal-provincial programs which are not under the immediate jurisdiction of this government as they are administered by the provinces.

However, in the field of secondary education, the federal participation for the fiscal year 1965-66 was $40 million which included a special rebate to the province of Quebec. We find that, for the current year, federal transfers and cash payments to the provinces are estimated at some $500 million, which is equivalent to 12 times the amount paid three years ago.

During the present fiscal year, expenditures for university and post-secondary education amount to approximately $138 million more than forecast. On the other hand, the Canada assistance plan will be $47 million more than was expected. In the case of hospitalization, Mr. Speaker, the figures indicate an increase of $45 million. These three joint programs amount to a grand total of $230 million.

Mr. Speaker, three major changes not included in the calculation of the tax structure committee alone add $675 million in costs incurred by the federal treasury, compared with the projections for 1968-69, especially equalization payments to the Atlantic provinces for provincial post-secondary educational programs and other related programs, in order to assist as much as possible the provinces to rationalize social welfare and to distribute further the costs implied in the Canada assistance plan established in 1967. Therefore, the contribution of the federal government to joint expenses for social welfare has been raised from $211 million, as indicated by the projections of the tax structure committee to the present estimates of $413 million. As for the equalization payments to the Atlantic provinces, the projections of $410 million, will apparently reach $590 million. For provincial post-secondary educational programs and other related programs in 1966, the federal government accepted to pay 50 per cent of the operating costs. As a result, instead of expenses of $300 million in 1968-69, in accordance with the estimates, the total amount of the federal commitments to financial assistance for provincial education will have almost doubled, that is about $610 million. This does not include, Mr. Speaker, the huge expenses for adult education entirely paid by the federal government under a national program which will cost some $220 million this year.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has been wise, as far as the estimates of the present financial year are concerned, to have refrained from trying, through financial measures, to collect sufficient revenues to balance the budget. In fact, as he suggested, such measures would have been quite strict and would have been prejudicial to the Canadian economy.

With regard to the year 1969-70, he was realistic and quite brave, because he could have gone to the capital market and obtained the revenues necessary to make up the deficit but, the provinces, the school boards, the municipalities and the private interests would have had greater difficulties in getting the necessary funds which they need, with the possibility of paying a higher rate of interest. In certain quarters, the Minister of Finance is blamed for the fact that the social development tax of 2 per cent does not bring any additional revenues to the provinces. According to the minister, the tax amendments suggested in the 1968-69 budget will bring, for the year of 1969-70, sufficient income to balance the budget. Otherwise, he would have had to increase the taxes further in order to transfer some to the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to federal contributions to the provinces and municipalities, such as equalization payments, social welfare benefits, health insurance, winter works, expenditures concerning the Trans-Canada highway, post-secondary education, tax transfers and so on, from 1961-62 to 1967-68, they went from $900 million to $2.6 billion, which is about 26 per cent instead of 15 per cent of the total federal budget expenditures. That has no relation with the regular increase in tax payments made to the provinces with regard to personal income tax, which have gone up from 16 to 28 per cent, that is from $641 million to $1,829 million.

Mr. Speaker, the minister has announced on various occasions that, in 1969, the government will have to put before parliament a proposal to revise the taxation system in depth. I hope that this so-called social development tax of 2 per cent—the 3 per cent surtax levied since the beginning of the current year is supposed to end on December 31, 1969—will also come to an end on that date and that this revision will eliminate discrimination with regard to income tax.

Many criticisms have been made about the ceiling of $120 on that so-called social development tax of 2 per cent. But, Mr. Speaker, there have been precedents with regard to the maximum.

In 1951, when the old age security pension was adopted, a tax of 2 per cent was introduced with a ceiling of $60, and now this ceiling is $240. In 1965, when parliament voted for an abatement of 10 per cent on income tax, a maximum amount of $600 was also set. Similarly, with regard to the Canada pension plan, we have a minimum income of $600 and a ceiling of $5,000 which will be raised to $5,200 on January 1, 1969.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw this to the attention of the Minister of Finance. Other members have mentioned the fact that some people have to spend part of their income on such things as tools, equipment, books, even clothing in certain cases, and on transportation costs to get to work, and the fact that those deductions are allowed companies and the self-employed.

• (8:40 p.m.)

In this connection, here are few remarks and proposals made by the royal commission on taxation. I quote a few excerpts from volume 3, page 289:

> We now turn to consider the deduction of expenses by employees. The principle involved is clear enough. All the expenses incurred in the expectation of generating net gains, other than personal living expenses, should be allowed as deductions from all actual gross gains. Distinctions between the kinds and forms of taxable gains, and considerations of whether a net gain actually resulted from the expenditures, are irrelevant. The major problem would be to allow the deduction of all expenses laid out to generate employment income and yet to prevent the deduction of personal living expenses.

I shall now quote from page 312 of the same volume:

> We came to the conclusion that the most equitable course would be to treat employment income on the same basis as income from a business or profession. Expenses would then be deductible if reasonably related to the earning of income. The prohibition against the deduction of personal and living expenses as set out in section 12(1)(h) of the Income Tax Act would, of course, be applicable, as would the provision in section 12(2) that expenses must be reasonable in the circumstances.
> The deductibility of particular itemized expenses would then be determined in accordance with the rules to be applied to business expenses. Employees, like the self-employed, would not be permitted to deduct travelling and entertainment expenses in excess of the limits discussed earlier in this chapter.

Mr. Speaker, these expenses could be considered as acceptable to the extent of 3 per cent of the gross income or a maximum of $500. Any person having expenses over $500 could deduct them, with supporting proofs.

I would like also to deal with the legislation on small businesses loans, amended in 1967, to enable more owners of small businesses to take advantage of it. Another amendment would increase from $250,000 to $500,000 the approximate yearly income maximum required of a borrower. At the present time, a borrower may get a maximum of $25,000 only, a ceiling established in 1961 when this legislation came into force, to enable the owner of a small business to consider a substantial expansion of his enterprise. But in 1968 such a maximum is unrealistic, and this amount must necessarily be increased.

Moreover, the section on the 5½ per cent maximum interest rate should be amended. I recognize that it is very important for heads of businesses to secure loans, but how good is a 5½ per cent interest rate if bank managers find all kinds of reasons to refuse these loans?

As we all know, Mr. Speaker, this house very recently changed the farm loan corporation interest rate. It was 5 per cent. The farm improvement loan rate was also changed.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the minister of Finance should give serious consideration to my remarks and I think he could amend this section on interest rates without a review of the legislation by parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I would like once more to bring forth a matter I wish to deal with in this house. It has been raised by several members and has to do with water pollution.

Our area is affected by the pollution of the Ottawa River and of its tributaries. According to a study of the salubrity of the river, issued by the Ontario Water Resources Commission it has been found, in several places along the river, between Pembroke and Hawkesbury, that the water was not up to the required standards and that taking the necessary steps to control it would involve considerable expenditures which are far beyond the financial means of the municipalities concerned.

The Association québecoise des techniques de l'eau has held on February 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16, its fifth annual Congress, at the Sheraton Mount Royal Hotel, in Montreal.

The theme of that conference "Water, everyone's problem" was intended to illustrate that everyone should fully assume his responsibilities, if our society wishes to achieve the progress necessary to promote the rational use of water.

In the Réalités magazine about a year or so ago, a questionnaire was submitted to 25 Nobel Prize winners as well as to 25 of the world's prominent figures. One of the questions was: In your opinion, what are the most serious problems which the world will have to face within the next 20 years? The answers showed that population explosion was considered as the most serious problem; it was generally thought that such an explosion would cause food shortages, and poverty in under-developed countries and, furthermore, that man and industry would pollute water almost irretrievably unless a drastic change in the present approach concerning the use of that basic resource be implemented.

Conservation of water is everyone's problem. Therefore, governments, municipalities, industries and citizens in particular must fully assume their responsibilities.

We must get rid of an idea which is voiced too often by too many people: "Such and such an industry or municipality has yet to do something, so why me?" Too often, as result of this attitude no one does anything and our rivers continue to go out to the sea as they have always done, but with this difference that along the river, homes, industries and cities repeatedly use their drop of water.

Public opinion is already sensitized to the important problem of water pollution. Still, it is imperative that the people understand that solutions are difficult to find as well as costly.

In every country, the critical problem is that of finding the financial resources to be applied in a fight against pollution. It has been established that it would cost approximately $500 million to purify the waters for all Quebec municipalities with a population of 5,000 or more, and approximately $300 million to do the same for the smaller municipalities.

That is why financing the struggle against water pollution requires close co-operation between provincial and federal governments because the municipalities and cities do not have the required financial resources to solve this serious problem.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, as a representative from northwestern Ontario, an area which constitutes slightly more than half of the land and water mass of the entire province and rivals each of the three prairie provinces in size, I wish to limit my remarks in this budget debate to the topic of regional economic development, with particular reference to the mid-Canada corridor concept. There has been a revolution in Canada's thinking about northern development. It was only a decade ago that a royal commission on Canada's economic prospects described as unfavourable the outlook for northern development. They could not see a very close analogy between the historical opening of the west and the similar pressure now for economic development of the north.

Frequently, northern Ontario has been referred to as an economic desert, conveying to us the impression that this great central part of our country is forever doomed to remain unpeopled and unproductive. In his history of Canada, Stephen Leacock more than 20 years ago wrote this:

> Perhaps the brightest page in these annals, is the record of discovery and exploration of the incalculable mineral wealth of the central wilderness of Canada between Hudson bay and the lakes. This means far more than the wealth itself, great though it must be, for it removes from our commonwealth its fatal geographical defect of an uninhabited and seemingly worthless central area which broke east and west apart.

Dr. Leacock's prophecy of a flourishing north has not yet been fulfilled, but many experts now believe that Canada's future is inseparably linked with the development of natural resources in the north. This vast undeveloped and most important area has the potential to support millions of people. The advent of new and easier forms of transportation, better and cheaper systems of communication and modern technology applied to township development, carry the promise of considerable economic activity and settlement in Canada's north, this treasurehouse of national resources.

Recent economic studies and conferences have established that there are a number of problems in the development of the north which must be tackled. I should like to refer to just a few of these, Mr. Speaker. The first, and probably most important, is the availability of markets. Nothing can be done, no matter how rich and vast the resources, unless we have markets. This is more important to the north than to any other part of Canada. Resources will have to be developed, and on a large scale, in order to recover costs. Therefore large markets are needed, most of them outside of Canada. We must be widely concerned with the development of markets and our relations with countries which are going to be our markets, particularly I think the United States of America.

Second in the way of problems is the availability of capital. Most northern development involves very heavy investment of capital. Our future circumstances are not likely to be easy in this respect. We will live in a world of scarcity of capital for some time to come. There will be many competing demands for capital elsewhere, so if the north is going to develop it must be able to compete. We must have policies applied to the north, and to the country as a whole, that will attract capital. Capital has far less nationality now than at any time in the past, and it will go where the attractions are the greatest. In Canada the question of long term opportunity and security are very important.

Third in the way of problems is manpower. We face manpower problems in the north with which we in Canada have not had much experience. Northern development must proceed in a way that will give native peoples a future in their own country. However, nowhere in the past in Canada have we carried out economic development on the basis of involving the native people to any great extent. The danger is that economic development will run far ahead of the ability of native people to participate. We must do everything possible to shorten the time required to educate them sufficiently.

The fourth problem is transportation. Fortunately, there have been major new developments in transportation that offer great promise, although they still remain to be adapted to the particular problems of the north. In the meantime we must rely heavily upon rail transportation. Other areas of Canada have received great assistance in their development by means of specific subsidies from the federal government for reduction of freight rates in their respective territories. There is a precedent therefore for similar consideration of the needs of northwestern Ontario, as part of a national economic development policy. In the clamorous contention for equality, the just and reasonable demands of this great central section of Canada have gone unheard and unheeded. Its promise, therefore, has remained largely unfulfilled as a result.

The fifth problem is that of efficiency. The north will always be a high cost area. In the past, Canada has had a habit of letting other countries, particularly the United States, solve its development problems. But in this case, in the development of our north, Canada will have to make more than her customary effort to solve her own problems. Fortunately we can now use technology more extensively than in past development. The basis of research and development is already set up in our universities but we have not a big background in this respect as yet.

I wish now to make a few comments, Mr. Speaker, regarding what has become known in some circles as the mid-Canada corridor concept. The long range development of a coast to coast corridor through Canada's mid-north would go a long way to meet both the opportunities and the problems that have been outlined. Such a concept has been advanced in a corridor running from Newfoundland through Labrador, northern Quebec south of James bay, the northern Ontario clay belt, northern Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and into three arms—one stretching up the Mackenzie valley of the Northwest Territories, another into the Yukon, and the third into northern British Columbia. It generally runs between the narrow belt in which 90 per cent of Canadians live and what is considered to be the far north, and varies in width between 200 and 500 miles.

The Canada north development corridor is identified as an area with the following general characteristics: The climate is acceptable to working and living; the terrain is accessible and suitable for development; resources are abundant and well distributed; settlements already exist; there are potential urban growth centres; north-south transportation routes already reach into the areas; and finally, new east-west transportation routes can be provided in a reasonable manner.

Preliminary study supports the concept of a coast to coast Canada north development corridor, Mr. Speaker, and a number of reasons are advanced to support the claim. Canada is expected to become a giant among the productive nations of the world, thus its future is inseparably linked with the development of the north. Such a development would require people, capital resources, foresight and initiative. It could be a challenge that would truly shape our destiny; a Canadian undertaking, financed by public and private funds and part of an overall national planning policy.

Of great consequence will be those elements of the national policy which direct economic activity and capital to certain specific areas in the development corridor. Northwestern Ontario is now ready to receive such special attention. It is obvious that the conscious creation and implementation of a Canada north development corridor concept as outlined must be a national undertaking, requiring vast amounts of public and private capital and manpower, and the support of the people of Canada as a national objective over the next several decades.

The provision of adequate incentives to bring industry and people into the area will play an important role in the establishment of the development corridor. Incentives for industry may vary from direct financial subsidies to the provision of tax regulations, and a transportation rate structure to allow new industries to operate competitively. Incentives for settlers may include high incomes, good employment opportunities, long holidays, and urban settlements of sufficient size with a wide range of services and amenities—perhaps a climatically controlled environment and good and inexpensive transportation linkages to other settlements in Canada north and south. While the rate of development in Canada north will, to a large extent, depend on the demand for its resources, the rate of development will also greatly depend upon a national policy which expresses the kind of nation in which Canadians wish to live.

Concrete plans to develop the concept are already in progress, Mr. Speaker. A two-part conference will explore the feasibility and that were first presented in a 1967 report. The conference will explore the feasibility and practicability of the development plan, and held in conjunction with it will be field trips to Siberia and northern Sweden.

[Mr. Penner.]

The conference will be sponsored by the University of Guelph, Lakehead University, Laurentian University and the Ontario government. It has grown from a vision of Richard Rohmer now a Toronto lawyer, who last year commissioned a research project by a prominent and well known research and planning firm of Toronto. The opening session of the conference will be held at Lakehead University next January 18 and 19. The second meeting, after the field trips, will be held in August 1969.

The federal government has agreed to support and participate in the conference, Mr. Speaker. The provinces and territories through which the corridor passes will also be asked to join as co-sponsors. Representatives of industry, labour, finance and commerce will also be invited to take part. The ultimate findings of the conference will be submitted to the governments involved for them to initiate further studies and policy leading to action.

To dramatize the project, a film has been prepared which is entitled "Leave this not to Cain". The title refers to Jacques Cartier's purported comment that the Canadian north was the land that God gave to the first murderer. The film unreels photographic and factual evidence that this is no wasteland, and that modern technology can make northern living comfortable and give it a distinctive appeal. It asserts that Canada is fortunate to have such a frontier, with its potential attraction for the restless young in search of a challenge. The film concludes:

> It is here, after all, that we will forge an identity. The land will form us. It will stamp us with its uniqueness. Always, from the beginning, it has been a bequest, the sort of gift a future can hinge on—the future of a whole people.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of my first speech in this house, I should like to congratulate you on your unanimous re-election as Speaker of this house. Canada is fortunate in having been able to have you presiding over the proceedings of its legislators. Your integrity and your dignity represent the ideal required of leaders by the institutions of our parliamentary system. It is with admiration that I support the choice of this house.

I think it is suitable to point out the outstanding contribution of the Hon. Hédard Robichaud to the public affairs of Canada. I feel particularly proud of having been elected as the successor of a man so dedicated to his fellow citizens and to his country. I also wish to express my admiration and respect for the premier of New Brunswick, the Hon. Louis J. Robichaud. The eagerness and courage with which he is serving New Brunswick show he is a great Canadian.

I also wish to express my most sincere appreciation to the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Pierre-Elliott Trudeau; he understands Canada and he is a real Canadian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Breau: His leadership answers the aspirations of young Canadians and the needs of our country.

Since the house is now studying the budget speech, I would like to assure the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) of my wholehearted support for his fiscal and budgetary changes.

This budget, Mr. Speaker, is realistic. It fights against inflation. It is unfortunate that the government should have to take steps to restrain development and diminish the purchasing power of the Canadian people. However, let us not forget that inflation always follows a boom which upsets the economic balance.

Certain members on the other side of the house have criticized this budget. They accuse the government of being irresponsible and bring forward all sorts of arguments, all of them unrealistic, in order to attract public attention.

To impose taxes is a difficult and complex job, Mr. Speaker.

However, I must remind those members that the Canadian people had the opportunity to listen to them and to their colleagues in the party before last June 25, and that on that date it chose the party it wanted. In my opinion, they are wasting their time trying to have their inconsistent fiscal policy adopted. They say that government expenditure is too high. However, they did not refrain from making promises during the last election campaign. I wonder how they would have managed to keep them without increasing expenditures or reducing certain services. Mr. Speaker, their attitude is completely illogical.

It is customary, I believe, for a member making his maiden speech in the House of Commons to talk about his riding. I should like to speak particularly about the future of the riding of Gloucester in view of the efforts made by the government to reduce the economic gap between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of the country.

The economic situation of the constituency of Gloucester is not flourishing because of a great number of factors. First, we are struck by the importance of the economic gap existing between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada, and my constituency is badly affected. In short, from the economic point of view the geographic situation of the constituency of Gloucester is not so favourable as that of the other Atlantic provinces.

Another factor which is prejudicial to our economy is the psychological climate of the population. It is true that in a certain part of the constituency, namely the Bathurst region, wages are reasonable and maybe even appropriate. We find there a psychological climate more favourable to investment and, therefore, to economic development. Generally, that region is the most prosperous of the constituency.

However, as far as the rest of the constituency is concerned, the greatest part of its population is composed of fishermen, farmers or lumberjacks. We have seen in the economic history of other countries that people in such trades are not attracted by economic development. That economic situation is detrimental to the cultural and social progress of people and therefore there is a real danger of losing a great deal of skills which are so necessary to our country.

The fishing industry, at the present time, is having a hard time. Because of the unfavourable market situation, the prices paid to the fishermen are relatively low. Even under normal circumstances, fishing now requires technological studies and investment. The small fisherman—there are several of them in my riding—is still placed in a dilemma and lives in frustrating economic conditions.

Weather and soil conditions in our area are not very favourable to farming. Consequently, unless modern techniques are being developed in order to improve this situation, the small farmers in my area must forget about that avenue, or engage in it through sheer love of the thing or to provide for their own needs. It should be mentioned also that the main market for food products is located far away. Therefore one can reasonably say that farming at the present time is not a viable industry for the Gloucester riding.

As far as lumber operations are concerned, mechanization now eliminates the lumbermen. They are therefore forced to get into another field of work, which is very difficult for them.

The conditions I have just mentioned, Mr. Speaker, are well known to hon. members but, in my opinion, it is my duty to bring them up.

The federal government has done a lot already to improve the situation in my riding and to reduce the economic gap between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada. In fact, two years ago, the government of New Brunswick and the federal government reached an agreement under which the latter undertook to co-operate in the implementation of a rural development program.

The news was very well received but after a while, since they had not understood the real meaning of the program, the people felt frustrated by the lack of visible results. The program I am talking about is only breaking ground for a real development scheme. It is a pilot project, therefore a program that will serve as a guide for subsequent programs. That program will have to make the population more conscious of development. If the people of the riding of Gloucester take part in the pilot project now under way, they will be ready to take advantage of other programs. They will see to it that those programs reach their objectives more easily and are consequently more advantageous for Canada.

The citizens of Gloucester were very happy to hear the Prime Minister say that the problem of national unity will not be solved as long as economic disparities have not been abolished in Canada. They have been waiting to hear those words for a long time, because they want to be first class Canadians. Therefore, the creation of a Department of Regional Development makes me very happy.

I read with great interest the remarks made by the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) before the Atlantic Development Board in Halifax on October 29 last. I commend him for the serious and realistic way with which he faces his challenge. To reduce the economic disparities between provinces, it is essential to initiate a well-planned study, geared towards a common objective. I mean by that that the federal, provincial and municipal governments, in short the whole population, must develop an objective to which everyone must hold fast.

The operation of the new department is now confined to the co-ordination of the efforts of the various departments, while appraising the markets for viable industries and preparing the various avenues necessary for development. But in my opinion, the minister must see to it that the government fiscal and budgetary policies make allowance for regional circumstances. He should also, in conjunction with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), set up a more realistic policy concerning the transportation problems in the area.

The department will also have to consider the possibility for the federal government to have a greater concentration of its purchasing power in the Atlantic provinces. For instance, it should encourage industries, which are government suppliers, to settle in that area. The government national policies have not promoted progress in the Atlantic provinces in the past. I do not say that the future Department of Regional Development should not go beyond those three suggestions. Those are simply three examples of decisions which could stimulate the economy of the area. It will then be easier for the department to find means of reducing the economic disparities which exist, and to that end, it should provide for the establishment of basic guidelines concerning the maximum use of manpower by training a qualified and mobile manpower and increasing the quantity and the quality of jobs. It is a pity that most of the workers in our area should, at a certain age, have to leave the province in order to go somewhere else in Canada, or which is worse, to the United States.

We must also control the maximum development of the production potential of the Atlantic provinces through education, training and retraining and develop all human resources. Moreover, we must provide for accessibility to production technology, for the establishment of economic growth centres, for the orderly and planned use of financing as well as human capital.

The minister must also ensure the availability of essential services for the villages and towns that are potential industrial centres.

Encouragement must also be given to creative economic activities, use of an adequate and modern technology and development of viable economic activities.

Finally, we must see to the full development of our tourist resources and to the establishment of essential facilities for tourism.

[English]

The six principles that the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) has expressed to the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council are the essence of a very realistic plan. Of particular importance is the fifth principle mentioning the importance of the people's participation. People must indeed become involved in this rural development. The whole scheme must be an effort of the entire population. Without that it will fail.

[Translation]

I should mention here the efforts made by the Conseil régional d'aménagement du Nord and The Northern Regional Development Council. Those councils of my district must ensure a minimum of support on the part of the population. They must really help the population to go through the psychological changes necessary to the development and, therefore, should be careful not to confuse people. They must inform people, explain to them the real meaning of the present projects and their relationship to future projects.

The lessening of the economic gap existing between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada will have the effect of encouraging and reassuring the people of my district, but as the future Minister of Regional Development said, we shall not see the tangible results of this before some fifteen years.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The elite of today may still enjoy better conditions but it is not the elite which suffers the most today. It is true that it does not enjoy conditions comparable to those of their equals in the centre of Canada, but it is the small fishermen, farmers and lumberjacks I have mentioned who do not profit by the prosperous economy.

The few fishermen who are lucky enough to participate in the development of their industry, those who work at the paper mill of Bathurst, or in the mines or at the foundry of Bathurst may have a sufficient income. But the less fortunate will not participate in this development.

Most of them are between 25 and 60 and what is unfortunate is that the social assistance scheme does not solve their problems. Social assistance cannot—and I pray heaven that it will not—become a substitute for employment.

Even though our labour force is unskilled, it must be gainfully employed in order to avoid the danger of having unemployed people. I think that the government social assistance programs are obviously essential, but there must be some assurance that these programs are benefiting those in need of them and are not being used to destroy the people's initiative.

I think the Minister of Regional Development will be in a position to collaborate with the Minister of National Health and Welfare in order to establish regional policies ensuring social security as criteria vary with the different regions.

Regional criteria differ in rural areas from those in urban areas. The department must take future planning into account, because regional development in the interest of the population and economic progress call for planning: it is not done on short notice. In the meantime, short term solutions must be found in order to assist the less fortunate and those are two factors which are quite different.

Mr. Speaker, as the member representing Canadians of the Gloucester constituency, I wish to convey to the right hon. Prime Minister and to his government the assurance of my full co-operation.

I want to remind the hon. members that I am interested in the development of the Atlantic provinces for one good reason: because it is essential to Canada.

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, will the member allow me a question?

Mr. Breau: Yes.

Mr. Dumont: Could the hon. member for Gloucester—by the way, I congratulate him sincerely on his perfect bilinguism—could the member tell us whether he made representations to his government with regard to sending help to Biafra? He told us fishing income was not adequate in his riding and alluded to the shipment of salt cod to Biafra. If he did, when did he intervene?

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand the question. Is the member speaking of the shipment to Biafra?

Mr. Dumont: Yes, the shipment of salt cod to Biafra to feed the Biafrans. Did he make representations to his government in this regard?

Mr. Breau: It was not necessary to do so, because the government had already made efforts in that connection.

Mr. Dumont: Has the shipment reached Biafra—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon member for Battle River.

The Budget—Mr. Downey

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Rising to speak in this budget debate makes me sad, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak in support of the budget, because I am sure the government has done its best, but I find there is precious little cheerful news in it for anybody, and certainly not for my constituents in Battle River. All the budget promises them is sweat, taxes and tears—their sweat their taxes, and Mr. Benson's tears.

To hear our Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) weep over the terrible state of the federal government's finances is enough to soften the hardest heart, until of course you remember that he and his colleagues are the authors of their own misfortunes. However, he was able to choke back his sobs long enough to be able to announce that all of us will have to pay a new 2 per cent surtax on our incomes. He said this was necessary because federal finances were in such bad shape, and admittedly they are. He was very eloquent when he pleaded for everyone to cut back spending and save money, but certainly we have no evidence that the government is considering restraint in its administrative costs.

The Auditor General has reported that $2½ million is being paid out by three federal departments for new office accommodation, and an additional $1 million for equipment, I would gather mostly for prestige. Then, Mr. Speaker, there is that door hanging at the back of the centre block of the parliament buildings. It does not really look that much different from a great many other doors I have seen—I do not believe you could even drive a combine through it—but there must be something different about it because I notice we paid over $13,000 for it.

The Minister of Finance did not mention that while the government is supposed to be setting an example to the country and to individual taxpayers on how to save money, his colleagues in the cabinet are living high, wide and handsome at the taxpayers' expense. I would like to recall something that Thomas Jefferson said almost 200 years ago:

> I place economy among the first and most important virtues and public debt as the greatest of dangers to pursue our independence. We must not ourselves load up with perpetual debt. We must make our choice between economy and liberty, or profusion and servitude. If we can prevent the government from wasting the labours of the people under the pretence of caring for them, they will be happy. The same prudence which in private life would forbid our paying our money for unexplained projects, forbids it in the use of public money.

The minister did not mention the money that would be spent this year on the B and B commission, a mere few hundreds of thousands of dollars on top of the $7 million already spent on it. He skipped quickly over the fact that not every Canadian taxpayer will pay the full 2 per cent on his or her income. Only those earning less than $10,000 per year will pay the full charge. This country of ours, this bulwark of the just society is supposed to provide the same opportunity for all, with no discrimination; yet three quarters of our taxpayers will be paying an additional 2 per cent while about one quarter will pay considerably less.

As an illustration I will take an income of $4,000. On this an individual will pay a tax increase of $80. A man with an income of $40,000 will pay a tax of $120. The man with an income of $4,000 pays 2 per cent. The man with an income of $40,000 pays one third of one per cent. On top of all this the Prime Minister announced publicly that he would be trying to find ways to lighten the tax burden on the higher income groups. The Minister of Finance called the new surcharge on income a social development tax, but I am sure if his boss has his way and high incomes are to have their tax rate cut back we can look forward to getting hit with additional taxes in the next budget. The Minister of Finance probably will call it a poverty development tax, because if he and his friends keep going the way they are they will be turning all of us into the new Canadian poor.

This new tax perhaps would not have been so hard to take if it was really what he said it was, a social development tax. If some of that 2 per cent tax revenue was to be paid out for higher old age pensions, social assistance or veterans allowances, it would be justified. If it were put on our backs to help the people in our society who need real help just to stay alive at today's prices and with today's inflation, we might be happy to pay it. When we speak of inflation we must remember that no civilized country in the world ever adopted the extreme philosophies of either fascism or communism unless the middle class was first liquidated by inflation.

This was a desperation budget. Five years of uncontrolled and irresponsible spending by the federal government left the till empty. Desperate measures had to be taken to raise ready cash. The first and obvious step was to load a bigger income tax on the group of citizens least able to resist or talk back. That explains the 2 per cent surtax and the cut-off at incomes of $10,000. Our finance minister then looked around at the next most helpless group, and found the old reliable area, the dead. Sure, he made estates passing between husband and wife exempt from taxation, but at the same time he more than received the money back by finagling the taxation rate on other estates.

Then of course we must look at the plight of those engaged in western agriculture. The men of the west are experiencing one of the most trying times in their history. People are selling their farms; some are hungry, and I might say that in respect of those that are not hungry or selling out, if conditions do not soon improve the nation will see one of the greatest bank robberies in history. But, no, we cannot afford an acreage payment or a subsidy for the farmers of the west. Under a previous Conservative government acreage payment cost the federal treasury approximately $46 million in one year. This was of immeasureable help to many people in buying their groceries throughout the winter.

This government has already spent $46 million on the national arts centre, that Liberal granite memorial across the street here. While I am dwelling on the figure of $46 million another matter comes to mind, which also concerns a matter of approximately $46 million. I refer now to our Canada 3 per cent perpetual bond issue of the dirty thirties. People who were patriotic bought these bonds because they had faith in the future and faith in the integrity of our country. I am sure, however, that their generous gesture did not include a gift of money to Canada for all time. After all it was a loan with interest to be paid at 3 per cent and every loan must have a maturity date. In this case the date was 30 years hence, or 1966. Any other financial arrangement that is even hinted at is completely out of reason. The subsequent events of 1966, the extending of the maturity date another 30 years at 3 per cent interest, in my opinion was an attempted swindle, the result of a blatant confidence game which if perpetrated by private enterprise would be investigated immediately, and penitentiary sentences would be handed out to those who instigated such a crime. We have had explained to us by our previous finance minister the reason it was not paid back; but let us not stand for any mamby-pamby financial jargon, because the facts are clear.

The facts are that the government of Canada asked for a loan from its citizens; it promised to pay 3 per cent on that loan until maturity after 30 years, or 1966 in this case. It refused to honour its debt. The market price has nothing to do with the value of the actual debt. Our government owes the people the face value of this loan. In my opinion this is a very serious matter, and one of principle which rises above academic political thinking. Something must be done, and done now, because we cannot let the integrity of Canada rot at the seams for the sake of the price of this granite museum across the street which, I might add, most Canadians will never see. If we are to expect the people of Canada to have confidence in our debt and to buy future bond issues, then we had better give them something on which to base their confidence.

Franklin D. Roosevelt said in 1932 in respect of debt that any government, like any family, can for a year spend a little more than it earns; but you and I know that continuance of that habit means the poorhouse. I think this holds just as true today as it did in 1932. All this is unpleasant and depressing, but I believe the worst feature of the Benson budget is its negative, defeatist spirit. It makes no provision for national development, for assistance to agriculture, for our export trade, or for our vital resource and service industries. It is an open admission of surrender to the influence of big business, and a shameful confession that the minister and his colleagues have neither the heart nor the guts to do the things that are necessary for Canada today.

It is not news to anybody that this government has written off the small farmer and the small businessman. So far as Ottawa is concerned, they have been classed as expendable for five years now. But it is news, and grim news at that, that the government by the terms of this budget appears to have written off the whole area of Canadian agriculture and large sectors of other vital basic industries. The members of the government appear content to sit tight in their Ottawa offices, raising money by taxes and loans while prices climb, inflation grows and interest rates soar. They appear to be unconscious of the fact that most Canadians are overburdened by taxes, frustrated by lack of government policy and action, and are growing increasingly depressed about the future.

In closing I should like to reiterate the sentiments expressed by one hon. member the other day. It would seem that to be a financial expert today is to pass our financial troubles on to future generations. No progress will be made in getting out of this financial morass in which we are mired until we accept the responsibility of paying the debts of our time in our time.

• (9:40 p.m.)

I suppose to suggest here today that we as a nation should pay our way would label me as a bit of a square, but we all know what happens in the business field if we spend more than we make. I see no reason why the principles of business management should not also apply to the business of this nation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Main motion (Mr. Benson) agreed to on division.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

1. That Schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff items 20925-1, 21045-1, 22001-1 and the heading thereto, 22002-1 and the heading thereto, 22003-1 and the heading thereto, 26325-1, 40938-1, 42761-1 and the heading thereto, 42762-1 and the heading thereto, 44043-1, 44047-1, 47600-1, 56400-1, and 69315-1 and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of those items, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I have the suspicion that my hon. friends may wish to say something about this resolution in respect of the Customs Tariff. Perhaps whoever is the spokesman should be allowed to take the floor, and by agreement adjourn the debate.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might suggest that in view of the fact the subject matter of this resolution was considered last year by a committee of the house, and that during the intervening period some things may have happened, the minister would like to bring hon. members up to date by giving a short statement, to be followed by comments of spokesman for each party at the resolutions stage. That may be all that is required. I do not think we are in a position to do that this evening.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, that is the procedure I would propose to follow at the resolution stage of the Customs Tariff. This has been referred to a committee of the house and considered in some detail, except for those changes in respect of chemicals. Perhaps we could proceed with this resolution on Thursday, or tomorrow, at which time I could make a statement dealing with the individual items, and then move on to the next resolution, and so on.

There is one main resolution we should like to complete in addition to this, that dealing with anti-dumping. In view of this I might have the permission of the committee at this time to call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I intended to suggest the same thing. In spite of some remarks to the contrary, this house has done very well and made remarkable progress. Perhaps we might call it ten o'clock now. If the house leader accepts that suggestion, perhaps he is prepared to indicate the business of the house for tomorrow.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Chairman. The proposal would be to take the third reading of the bill—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps before we do that, the minister should move that we rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the first item to be called tomorrow will be the third reading of the C.N.R. financing bill. If that is disposed of we will proceed to the Customs Tariff resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Shall I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2.30 p.m.

It being twelve minutes before ten o'clock, by unanimous consent Mr. Speaker adjourned the house, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 13, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

I can now report that later today a supplement to the return already made will be tabled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Thank you.

REFORESTATION PROGRAM, QUEBEC

Question No. 240—Mr. Laprise:

1. Is there an agreement between the federal government and the Government of Quebec in regard to a reforestation program?

2. If so (a) when is this program to begin (b) in what region of Quebec is it to take place (c) what will be the cost of this program?

RURAL MAIL ROUTES

Question No. 325—Mr. Schreyer:

1. What is the number of postal delivery rural routes in Canada?

2. How many, if any, are in excess of 30 miles in length?

3. Are tenders called in every case where a rural route delivery service is established or renewed?

4. If not, in how many cases have contracts for the rural route delivery of mail been given by other means of selection and what were the other means of selection?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General):

2. 2068.

3. No. Tenders are called when new services are established. Where rural route service is renewed, tenders are not called.

4. The present policy is: (a) tenders are called for all new services; (b) tenders are also called when a contract, transferred during the contract period to another person, expires; (c) if a contractor dies, or asks to be released from his contract, it may be transferred to another person for the balance of the contract period. At the end of that time, tenders will be called rather than the contract being renewed; (d) contracts for rural mail delivery service may be renewed, with the same contractor, for a further five-year period, if the service has been satisfactory and the amount of the contract does not exceed $10,000 per annum.

Information as to the number of contracts which have been renewed or transferred is not readily available and a great deal of work would be entailed in obtaining it.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF REPORT ON POSTAL SERVICES

Question No. 343—Mr. Anderson:

Of the recommendations of the Montpetit Report on postal services (a) how many have been implemented (b) how many have the Post Office Department and the unions agreed not to implement (c) how many and which ones have been rejected (i) by the Unions (ii) by the Post Office Department, and (d) how many remain to be considered?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): The report of the royal commission on working conditions in the Post Office Department contained 282 recommendations, all of which have been considered and discussed with the unions. The action on these recommendations has been as follows: 1. Implemented (a) in whole, 152; (b) in part, 53. 2. Rejected jointly by department and unions, 4. 3. Rejected by department, 4. 4. Relating to action exclusively within the jurisdiction of the unions, 13. 5. Set aside for negotiation at the time of collective bargaining, 22*. 6. Decision reserved, for further consideration by both parties, 34.

NOTE: * Fourteen of the 22 subjects in item 5 were subjects of negotiation at the time of bargaining with the Council of Postal Unions. The remaining 8 concern employees outside the jurisdiction of the Council of Postal Unions.

 The 34 recommendations on which decision was reserved include 21 which have been covered in the list of demands submitted by the Council of Postal Unions and which have been the subject of negotiation. They cover a percentage of part time staff to be used in relation to full time staff, sharing of overtime, protective clothing, definition of preferred assignments, scheduling and rotation of annual leave, industrial first aid, nursing and doctors' care, transportation for employees and financial protection for wicket employees.

The other 13 deal with the definition of peak periods and emergency situations, composition of rating boards, rotation of shifts, development of appraisal and performance review program, fringe benefit study by the unions, letter carrier occupational diseases, alphabetical mail sorting systems and removal of snow around relay boxes. The department has set forth its position on these items and has invited the unions to make such further comment as they feel necessary.

At the time of the agreement with the Council of Postal Unions, it was separately agreed by management and union representatives that Mr. Justice Montpetit should be asked to review the recommendations in his report which deal with environmental and physical working conditions. He agreed to do so and the review is under way. Its results will be communicated to him by both parties and may be the subject of further discussion between the parties.

LABELS USED IN CATTLE TESTING

Question No. 432—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Since January 1, 1965 has the Department of Agriculture used any label or sticker relating to the testing of cattle for brucellosis containing, in addition to an identifying number, the words "Canada Agriculture Health of Animals Branch—Do not remove"?

2. In which countries were such labels printed and what amount of money was paid, and to whom for such printing?

3. In which country was the last order or batch of these labels printed?

4. In which country will the next order of Batch of these labels be printed?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): In so far as the Departments of Agriculture and Defence Production are concerned: 1. Yes.

2. In addition to the cost of printing, there are other costs such as cutting of the tags to size, making them up into pads, packaging and delivering them to various destinations. Therefore, the contract expenditures shown below are the full costs of the tags delivered to various destinations in Canada.

FRED PROJECTS, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 567—Mr. Coates:

Of the thirty-three projects carried out in the Province of New Brunswick under the FRED Agreement what will be the estimated final cost of each project, what will be the financial responsibility of the federal government and what will be the financial responsibility of the Government of the Province of New Brunswick in each instance?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): A project cannot be declared "carried out" or complete nor can its estimated cost be given (due to fiscal funding and changing circumstances) until the term of the FRED agreement (10 years) has almost run its course.

Under a FRED agreement, projects are recommended to the treasury boards of both the federal and provincial governments by the joint advisory board, which is composed of senior federal and provincial officials. This advisory board has no authority to fund or implement a project but no project can be considered by either Treasury Board unless it has been recommended by the advisory board.

Funding of a project is done on a yearly basis by both governments. A project may continue for the life of the FRED agreement (up to 10 years) or may remain dormant for some years until reactivated on recommendation of the board. Funds allocated during a fiscal year may be adjusted between or among projects under a program within an agreement by mutual agreement of the federal and provincial FRED co-ordinators, but funds may not be moved from one program to another without FRED Board recommendation and approval by both treasury boards.

JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS OF FEDERAL BODIES

Question No. 604—Mr. Fortin:

1. What federal bodies exercise judicial functions?

2. Has the government considered, is it considering or will it consider the possibility of having a uniform procedure for such bodies and, if so, will any report on this matter be laid before the House?

3. Does the government intend to reform the federal judicial system?

[Translation]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): 1. Without attempting to be exhaustive or controversial, the ordinary courts such as the Exchequer Court of Canada, the Supreme Court of Canada and the Territorial Courts exercise judicial functions. In addition, other bodies such as the Tax Appeal Board, the Tariff Board and the Immigration Appeal Board also exercise judicial functions, if by that term it is meant that the bodies are empowered by law to determine legal rights and obligations in accordance with predetermined principles of law.

2. A uniform procedure code for judicial bodies has received and will receive further consideration but there is no present intention to lay any report on such a matter before the House of Commons.

3. Reforms in the federal judicial system are in contemplation.

HERCULES AIRCRAFT

Question No. 614—Mr. Brewin:

1. What are the landing capabilities of the Hercules Aircraft (a) according to the Department of National Defence, and (b) according to the manufacturer, Lockheed Aircraft Limited?

2. Is the Hercules a forward support plane, and as such is it basically designed to land on (a) bare ground (b) raw dirt, or (c) sand?

3. How much clear space does it require to land?

4. What training do the Canadian Armed Services personnel have in regard to landing Hercules on (a) prepared airstrips (b) unprepared terrain such as an unobstructed field (c) highways, asphalt, gravel base (d) snow covered area?

5. (a) Specifically, what training had the pilots and crews of the Hercules recently made available for the flying of supplies into Nigeria and Biafra (b) have the pilots and crews of the Hercules been given concentrated training to meet the stated capability of the aircraft?

6. Has the use of the Hercules made available for the Nigerian and Biafran area been delayed by (a) difficulties in landing or lack of adequate airstrips or landing facilities (b) by lack of complete or adequate training in landing?

7. Have the operations of the Canadian Hercules or other aircraft in relation to the flight of supplies into Nigeria or Biafra been obstructed by failure to provide facilities for reconnaissance or otherwise and who has been responsible for such failures, if any?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) and (b) Many factors such as fuel load, number of passengers, freight, runway conditions, temperature, etc., enter into determining the landing capability of the Hercules aircraft. Operating instructions published by the U.S.A.F. and based upon manufacturers' data are used by the Canadian Forces.

2. (a), (b) and (c) Because of its flexibility the Hercules aircraft is used by the Canadian Forces both as a strategic transport and as a tactical support aircraft. It has the capability of landing on unprepared surfaces such as clay, sand or sod, providing the soil bearing strength is sufficient to support the aircraft.

3. The landing field length requirements vary with all-up weight of the aircraft, the surface temperature, the surface wind and the altitude of the airport. At a landing weight of 140,000 lbs, at sea level at standard day temperature of fifteen degrees centigrade zero wind zero gradient and dry surface, the normal landing distance over a 50 ft. obstacle is 4,200 feet.

4. (a), (b), (c) and (d) Hercules pilots in the Canadian Forces are thoroughly trained to fully exploit the landing capabilities of the aircraft on prepared, semi-prepared and snow covered surfaces within the aircraft's design limitations. Asphalt highways which conform to the minimum length, width and weight bearing requirements can be equated to landing on prepared surfaces.

5. (a) and (b) The crews assigned to the task of flying Hercules aircraft had previously gained from several hundred to several thousand hours of experience on other types of flying duties before being selected for Hercules operations. These personnel were then given courses on the Hercules aircraft during which they received approximately 230 hours of experience on that type of aircraft. In addition, Hercules pilots are employed as co-pilots for a considerable period of time, thus gaining approximately a thousand hours of Hercules experience before being upgraded to an aircraft captain. These personnel have been employed on flying operations in all parts of the world. This employment includes participation in Arctic operations where only gravel airstrips are normally available and in Africa and Asia. The particular Hercules pilots dispatched to Biafra collectively have an average of approximately 8,000 hours of total flying experience. They are considered, therefore, to possess the maximum possible qualifications.

6. (a) Yes; (b) No.

7. Yes. The international committee of the Red Cross experienced difficulty in obtaining overflight clearances both for operations and airfield surveys.

MILITIA UNITS IN READY RESERVE

Question No. 622—Mr. Robinson:

1. (a) What militia units are components of the Ready Reserve (b) what are the tasks of the units in the Ready Reserve (c) how many officers and men are required by each unit to carry out the task allotted (d) how many units are presently capable of performing their allotted task (e) when are all militia of the Ready Reserve expected to be able to perform their allotted task?

2. What is the efficiency rating of all militia units in the Ready Reserve?

3. What was the efficiency rating of all units that attended summer camp in 1967 and 1968?

4. Would the Ready Reserve at the present time be professionally competent to back up the Regular Force?

5. Is it the intention to (a) train, and (b) equip, the Ready Reserve to regular force standards?

6. What is the overall state of the Ready Reserve?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Attention is directed to Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 3, dated March 12, 1968, of the standing committee on national defence, dealing with the reserve components of the Canadian Forces. Insofar as "ready reserve" is concerned, its purpose is to produce in an emergency, trained specialist individuals of all components for regular force establishments.

1. (a) The ready reserve is not composed of militia units, per se, but of individual officers and men; (b) Units are not tasked to the ready reserve; individuals are earmarked to fill various regular force establishment positions in an emergency; (c) See (a) above; (d) See (b) above; (e) No time limit can be specified; it varies with the individual positions to be filled.

2. Not applicable, see 1 (a).

3. The current allocation of tasks given to the militia has been in force for less than a year and as yet efficiency ratings have not been established.

4. No, further training is required.

5. (a) Yes; (b) not applicable.

6. The strength and composition of the ready reserve will vary from year to year according to the needs of the regular force. The long term aim is to provide individuals with a standard of training in a variety of trades so as to provide a viable back-up to the regular force. Under these circumstances it is not possible to accurately assess the over-all state of the ready reserve.

At that time, the government will consider tabling the report in the House of Commons and releasing its contents to the public.

CUSTOMS EXAMINATION, COLLECTION AND LIABILITY

Question No. 641—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the government giving any consideration to changing its approach to the growing problems of customs examination, collection and liability?

2. Is it giving any consideration to switching its primary approach from the merchandise itself to the importer, so as to permit a straight line transaction that will allow cargo to move from its point of origin to the premises of the importer?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Acting Minister of National Revenue): 1. Departmental officials continually assess changing trends in transportation and marketing practices to ensure that customs examination and release procedures are revised, consistent with the law, to facilitate expeditious delivery to the importer.

2. Recently established procedures include a pre-audit of entry documents by customs appraisers which, provided the officer is satisfied that adequate controls exist and that there is an accurate description of the shipment, permits delivery to be made without any undue delay. These procedures combined with a provision whereby the goods may be released under security posted by the importer or his agent allows for the delivery of imported goods prior to the payment of duty and tax. The present system is considered to approach, as nearly as possible under existing legislation, a straight line transaction.

1. For each of the years 1957-68, what was the total number of immigrants who settled in Prince Edward Island and from what countries did such immigrants come?

2. Since 1966, has the Government of Prince Edward Island made any representations to the Canadian Department of Immigration with a view to assisting the arrival of farm immigrants and, if so, what was the date of such representation?

3. In the same ten year period as in Part 1, what was the total number of farm immigrants landed in (a) the Maritime Provinces (b) Ontario (c) the three Prairie Provinces?

Return tabled.

Return tabled.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be kind enough to call notice of motion No. 19?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

SIGHTING OF UNIDENTIFIED OBJECT IN 1967

Motion No. 19—Mr. Mather:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all letters, reports, studies or other data in respect to an exchange by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Royal Canadian Air Force, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Geological Survey of Canada and the National Research Council of Canada regarding the sighting in 1967 by Mr. Steve Michalak of an unidentified flying object.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the National Research Council that on an informal basis they have been soliciting correspondence from individuals throughout Canada on these particular sightings. They have asked that this kind of correspondence not be made the subject of a return in this house. I wonder whether in the circumstances the hon. member would be agreeable to withdrawing his notice of motion.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I would like the motion transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate, pursuant to standing order 47.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO WORLD SALES PROSPECTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but perhaps he will be here later in the afternoon. I would therefore ask the minister of trade and commerce, upon his return to the house, whether he has any good news for the country with regard to the sale of wheat.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In Latin America, or elsewhere in the world?

An hon. Member: Anywhere.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the only thing I can say now is that the government is doing its utmost to put the Canadian Wheat Board in the best possible position to compete in the world.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF QUALIFIED APPLICANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, the acting minister of labour and the second acting minister of labour—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): — may I direct this question to the Prime Minister. In view of the announcement that has been made of increased efforts to check abuses with respect to the unemployment insurance fund, will similar efforts be made to protect the rights of those who qualify for unemployment insurance to have their benefits continue without overzealous officials applying the availability clause too severely?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour is now attending I.L.O. meetings in Geneva. I am happy to give to this house the assurance that is demanded by the hon. member.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question which is related to another one put to him a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Since many unemployment insurance claimants make false statements due to the fact they are not familiar enough with the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act, would the Prime Minister also ask the Minister of Labour if he intends to invite the Unemployment Insurance Commission to organize an education campaign throughout Canada so that the population will be informed about the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made his representations and I take it for granted that they have been noted.

[English]

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON ELECTION EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council. Having in mind the reported remarks of the Prime Minister the other day in Montreal to the effect that he hopes for a fairer basis for political campaign funds, my question is, can we hope for action at this session of parliament on the report of the committee on election expenses, appointed by the Prime Minister's predecessor in the last parliament?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier in the session, it is the government's hope to be able to deal with all aspects of electoral reform by a reference of the various matters to the standing committee on privileges and elections. The timetable of the committee is such that we hope this matter can perhaps be dealt with early in the new year.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO REDUCE POVERTY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. On September 13, exactly two months ago, I asked the Prime Minister what the government intended to do in regard to adopting measures to reduce poverty in this country. On that day he answered me in these terms, that he felt the government's best procedure would be to adopt measures to ensure that inflation is curtailed. My question is as follows. In view of the fact that in each of the two months that have elapsed since that time inflation has increased materially—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask the question.

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In view of that fact, does the government intend to introduce some new measures in the near future to correct the problem of poverty in this country?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, the measures in the budget are of course directed at curtailing inflation, and they have been debated at some length in the past few days. I am sorry we did not have the whole hearted agreement of the members of the opposition on this, but I am sure they will do their best in other ways to help us fight inflation.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that higher taxes greatly increase the cost of living it is obvious, is it not, that the government intends to do absolutely nothing to curtail something which the Prime Minister has agreed is a national disgrace.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REPORTED REVOLUTIONARY STATEMENTS BY U.S. NATIONALS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether to direct the question to the Prime Minister or to the Solicitor General, but on October 28 I asked for information regarding Jerry Rubin's entry into Canada. The Solicitor General replied he would look into it. I would ask him in giving a report thereon whether he would say, in view of the Prime Minister's definition and delineation the other evening of the serious menace facing Canada in the prospect of civil anarchy and revolution in the United States, what steps are being taken by the government to prevent such people as Rubin and Stokely Carmichael and other revolutionary riffraff of that kind from coming into Canada and, having done so, thereafter ridiculing the Canadian government for its failure to keep them out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course our immigration laws are aimed at preventing the entry into Canada of those who would come here with criminal intent, but it is not our view there can be any danger of uprising or strife as a consequence of a free discussion of ideas. It is the cause of unrest which we try to correct.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I would ask the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that both Rubin and Carmichael said there should be bloodshed in Canada to change the government, whether in his view that is not against the law when it is uttered by those coming into this country?

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a supplementary question. In view of the Prime Minister's reply to the right hon. member for Prince Albert, can the Prime Minister tell us if steps were not taken to keep out a minister of the Rhodesian government when he came here to make a speech a short while ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question. Would the same principle be applied to a representative of the Rhodesian government who wished to come to Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is hypothetical.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. He has referred in glowing terms to freedom of speech, and I should like to ask him whether he regards the statement made by Stokely Carmichael, "Get out your guns, get all you can and use them", as free speech in Canada of the type we ought to encourage?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the right hon. gentleman, who has a distinguished record as a lawyer, would ask me to interpret the laws of seditious libel. In my opinion this has not been the case, and I know of no charge of seditious libel having been brought against Mr. Carmichael.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question which I can ask in plain English. Does the Prime Minister feel that those who would overthrow the government of Canada by force should be welcomed in Canada and allowed to speak here? Can he answer that in straightforward language?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Frontenac.

Mr. Hees: I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister refused to answer the right hon. member for Prince Albert because he was being asked to interpret the law. I am not asking him to interpret a certain aspect of the law, I am asking him in plain, straightforward, ordinary English whether people who would overthrow this government by force are welcomed here. Would he answer that question?

Mr. Trudeau: Now that the question has been asked in plain, ordinary English, I will ask the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration to answer it in plain, ordinary French.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I believe the policy of the Department of Immigration in this regard is known. I myself explained it in this house and I believe it had also been applied previously. When someone comes here, especially when he is sponsored by a well known organization in Canada, if he only comes to start a public debate and exchange ideas, without any pronounced intention of organizing a revolution or stirring up trouble, then, in the name of the freedom of speech, we allow him across our border.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Would the minister explain how the intentions of the one who goes to the department should be interpreted? Who makes the decisions in this regard?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we do not know the intentions of those who come to Canada.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING OVERHAUL BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Transport but, in his absence, I shall direct it to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us how far negotiations have progressed as to the transfer of the Winnipeg maintenance base for jet aircraft?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I understand that this concerns the Department of Transport, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dumont: In the absence of the Minister of Transport, I direct my question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the acting minister is here.

[English]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, actually there is nothing that can be added to the statement made by the Minister of Transport in the house recently.

[Translation]

Mr. Dumont: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Could the $10 million annual deficit for the maintenance of the Winnipeg base be used instead for the Lauzon workers?

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister without Portfolio. Will he accept a word of approval rather than criticism, such as he gets from his side of the house, for his efforts to persuade the government to keep its promise to Winnipeg, and will he continue his efforts?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Simcoe North.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister was half way up and I believe the minister would like to reply, and I would like an answer.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO STUDY INTO EFFECTIVENESS OF DRUGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the alarming statement made a few days ago by the United States National Academy of Sciences to the effect that 6 per cent of the drugs now being sold are clinically ineffective and will likely have to be withdrawn from the market, can the minister advise the house whether similar studies have been or are being done in Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows there are studies of this kind going on in Canada, and the food and drug directorate is aware of them. I will advise the hon. member later on this week in the house, as to the further particulars of these studies.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister is checking with the food and drug directorate I wonder if he would determine whether in these studies—because there is a difference here—a close look has been taken at those drugs which are completely ineffective as opposed to the percentage of drugs that are just not up to acceptable clinical levels.

Mr. Munro: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING PROPOSED SECURITIES COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether, following his discussions with the provinces, he feels he is any nearer the realization of the proposed national securities commission and any legislation to bring such a commission forward?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at the meeting which was held almost two weeks ago I think there was a very co-operative and friendly atmosphere among the federal and provincial officials. I believe considerable progress was made by both levels of government in understanding the problems of each other and the need for action at the national level.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the house whether his officials are following the apparent speculation in so-called junior securities, and whether this is causing him concern in relation to his conception of a national securities commission?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, my officials are aware of the situation and of all developments in the market. All these considerations are taken into account in our belief that there should be some form of national administration.

GRAIN

PROVISION OF BOX CARS TO INCREASE DELIVERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who answers for the wheat board. I wonder whether the minister or anyone on his behalf has taken up the problem of spotting box cars at country elevators so the farmers can deliver more than just their initial quotas?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. The report I had this morning from the wheat board was that the railways are co-operating fully with the Canadian Wheat Board in respect of box cars that are required to move grain from country stations to terminal positions. This matter is the subject of daily discussions between the board and the railways throughout the crop year. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have no reason to believe that the situation as it is now is abnormal, and as I say I checked with the wheat board this morning.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that on Thursday last he indicated to the house that the terminals are drying grain on a five-day basis only because of shortage of grain at the terminals, would he take up this question with the railways?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I might add to my answer that a few weeks ago there was some slack in the use of drying facilities, because owing to weather conditions shipments were not being made. However, this situation has been improving since then and my answer applied to the situation of today, not of two or three weeks ago.

Mr. Korchinski: Then may I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he will take up this problem. Are the terminals drying on a seven day basis?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the inland terminals will be drying on a seven day basis, 24 hours a day, as soon as sufficient quantities of grain in those terminals warrant that kind of operation.

FISHERIES

LOBSTER FISHING REGULATIONS IN BAY OF FUNDY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Is the minister able to advise the house of any change in the regulations concerning lobster fishing in the bay of Fundy, since the season commences in a day or two?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the regulations have been amended and the fishermen will be able to leave shore tomorrow morning at 8 a.m. instead of 10 a.m., as previously announced.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MARKETING POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and at the same time welcome him back from his holiday down south. I wonder when the minister will be prepared to make the statement he promised about three weeks ago, on the marketing of another staple product of the Canadian economy, Atlantic fish. As I said, three weeks ago the minister indicated he was prepared to make a statement, not on the selling of the fish but on the selling of it for a just price.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, before I left I had a conversation with the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis). He has now advised me that the house committee on fisheries and forestry is meeting and has had pretty exhaustive discussions on this subject. The committee hearings are going on right now. The hon. member's questions would be raised there.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to differ with the minister's statement. I should still welcome a comment on what is being done by the department, since I am not at all satisfied with the present situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is similar to the one asked some time ago by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan). What initiatives is the government taking to offset the serious decline in Canadian frozen fish sales on the United States market? That decline is having a disastrous effect on the economy of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member agrees that since his question is of rather wide scope it ought to be answered by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Lundrigan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member would have to ask a different question, because I have suggested that the answer to the previous question might be given by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I directed a similar question to the minister three weeks ago. At that time the minister undertook to make a statement to the house the next day regarding the serious decline in the sale of frozen fish on the United States market. As I say, the statement was to be made the next day. That was over three weeks ago. This situation has become so serious and so urgent that I submit we are entitled to demand some sort of statement of policy from the government to ascertain what the government is doing about this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a representation in favour of the minister making a statement on motions. That is precisely what I was suggesting. If the information is to be given it ought to be given on motions and not during the question period.

[Translation]

NATIONAL REVENUE

QUEBEC—EXCISE TAX ON SEIZED LIQUOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the hon. Minister of National Revenue—who has an excellent reason for not being in the house this afternoon, since he has to undergo a very serious surgical operation, and I take this opportunity to wish him a prompt recovery—however, in his absence, I shall put it to his parliamentary secretary.

In view of the substantial quantity of spirits seized during the week-end at Ville Vanier, a suburb of Quebec City, can the Parliamentary Secretary to the hon. Minister of National Revenue tell us whether the officials of the department have made an investigation in order to establish whether the production of alcoholic beverages or spirits of the Melchers distillery is in all respects consistent with the excise duties of the department? Is an investigation being carried out and have the duties been paid?

Mr. Speaker: I have the impression that the question, as asked, is rather general in character and I suggest to the hon. member that this question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Rondeau: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO PROCLAMATION OF RECENT LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Will he tell the house how soon the various items of agricultural legislation passed by this house some time ago, the benefits of which are desperately needed by the farmers, will become law?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the legislation dealing with cash advances has been passed in the other place. I am advised further that Bill C-110 passed through the committee of the Senate yesterday. I am further advised that we can expect royal assent tomorrow to some if not all of these bills.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since some of this legislation has to do with interest rates, may we know when the interest rate is to be determined with the banks with respect to the farm improvement loans legislation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are presently discussing this matter with the banks, and I hope to announce an interest rate with respect to farm improvement loans very soon after royal assent.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

HALIFAX—REPORTED REDUCTION IN HOSPITAL SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the minister received representations from the president of the Royal Canadian Legion for Nova Scotia regarding cutbacks in services available to veterans at Camp Hill Hospital, Halifax. If so, what action is he taking on the basis of those representations?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I have not as yet, to my knowledge, received those representations.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROVISION OF DRUGS FOR INDIGENT INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I understand he is planning a second trip to Manitoba, to look over Indian health services. Is the minister planning to visit the community townsite of Churchill on this visit?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I visited the hospital at Churchill and I hope to go there again on my return visit.

Mr. Simpson: A related question, Mr. Speaker. It has to do with Indian health services and is further to the question the minister took as notice last Wednesday. Will the minister tell the house if his department is circulating among drug stores in British Columbia lists of Indians receiving welfare and entitled, therefore, to free drugs?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the department makes provision for the issuance of drugs by licensed pharmacists to medically indigent Indians. The initiation of medicare introduced a new element to this plan, including the freedom of choice of pharmacists. Since drugs are not covered under the British Columbia scheme, and because of the mobility of large numbers of the Indian population in that province, it has become necessary to provide druggists with lists of people who are to be issued drugs free of charge, on the understanding that we will assume the costs of such drugs.

The lists used are based on the Indian affairs branch list of people who are indigent. The lists are supplemented by our medical personnel, who add people who may not be on the first list but who are nevertheless considered indigent for medical purposes. We are presently studying means, in my department, of substituting a card system for the present system.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are recipients of the old age pension being included on lists that are circulated among drug stores?

Mr. Munro: Old age recipients may be included if they are considered indigent, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say how often these lists are revised?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether that supplementary question is in order.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

ALLEGED LEAKS RESPECTING REPORTS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. Some ten days ago a question arose with regard to the publication in La Presse of certain portions of the yet unreleased report of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. Mr. Jean-Louis Gagnon, co-chairman of the commission, said the excerpts were authentic. He, of course, had a former connection with La Presse. Since the Prime Minister suggested he was distressed, has there been an investigation? Has theft been ascertained? If not, has anything been done to ascertain how this information leaked out in such a complete and authentic manner?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as indicated when the question was asked earlier in the session, an investigation was started. I have no report on it as yet. When I have one I will be prepared to answer the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister has no report he can easily get one by placing a telephone call. He could call Mr. Gagnon, who might be helpful in that connection.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AID

NIGERIA—REPORTED ABANDONMENT OF SUPPLIES TO MILITARY FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Having regard to the government's insistence that the Red Cross is the most useful channel of humanitarian relief in Nigeria, would the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs investigate charges that the Red Cross is abandoning food, medical supplies and vehicles to military fighting forces in the region?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I am not sure it would be appropriate for the Canadian government to investigate the Red Cross, but I will see whether inquiries can be made regarding this.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED FERRY SERVICE, YARMOUTH-NEW ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): I have a question for the Minister of Transport; in his absence I will direct it to the Minister without Portfolio. Is the federal government engaged in any co-operative negotiations with the provincial government, Lion Ferry, or any United States interests with respect to establishing the proposed Yarmouth-New England ferry?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): I will take that question as notice.

Mr. Comeau: As the new ship is reported to be a stern loader, will the federal government make the necessary facilities available at Yarmouth to accommodate it?

AGRICULTURE

PAYMENT OF CASH ADVANCE ON FARM STORED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): May I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he can advise the house when the Canadian Wheat Board will authorize country elevator agents to begin issuing the full $6,000 cash advance?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): As was intimated a few minutes ago by my colleague the Minister of Agriculture, the relevant bill should be given royal assent on Thursday. The regulations are ready, but they need to be approved by the cabinet or by a committee of the cabinet. I hope this can be done on Friday. I will do my best to see that it is done.

[Mr. Speaker.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO RETROACTIVE PAY INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I should like to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. In light of his sympathetic reply yesterday when questioned about retroactive pay increases to national defence employees, may I ask whether the hon. gentleman has taken advantage of the opportunity to find some more appropriate answer to give these several thousand men as to whether they will get their pay before Christmas?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I think I gave an undertaking yesterday to see that the process of payment is advanced as rapidly as possible. As the hon. gentleman probably knows, these pay increases have been the subject of collective bargaining, and certain procedural steps have to be taken before the necessary calculations can be made. This work is being done as quickly as possible, and I am hopeful that these efforts will have a happy outcome.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—APPROVAL OF NEW HEADQUARTERS BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board; it follows one I asked him a week ago. I should like to know whether he has been able to find out if the order in council approving an expenditure of more than $66 million for the C.B.C. building in Montreal has been approved by Treasury Board.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): The answer is that Treasury Board has approved the construction of a new headquarters for the C.B.C in Montreal. In connection with the execution of this work, the department concerned forwards submissions from time to time covering the detailed aspects. There is no blanket approval given for total expenditure; it is done in detail.

Mr. Nowlan: Are we to understand from the minister's answer that this project has escaped the heavy knife wielded by the Minister of Finance when assessing the priorities to be given all projects of this type in Canada?

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

OTTAWA—FUTURE USE OF TRADE AND COMMERCE BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Public Works, who seems to be somewhat neglected in his new portfolio. Can the minister advise the house whether the Department of Trade and Commerce has moved, or is in the process of moving, from the trade and commerce building on Wellington Street? If so, to what building are they moving, and who will be occupying the old one?

Mr. Speaker: I think this question should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for the Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-124, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system for the period from the 1st day of January, 1968, to the 30th day of June, 1969, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and by Air Canada.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, though I was absent from the house during debate on the second reading of this bill I followed with interest the representations made by some of my colleagues with regard to the discontinuance of rail passenger service in Newfoundland and I hope the sincerity and logic of their statements made some impression on the minister responsible.

It becomes increasingly obvious day by day that the people of Newfoundland were made the victims of a railroading—a con game between the provincial government of Newfoundland, which for the first time in its history has remained silent despite the pleas of the vast majority of the people, the municipalities, the labour organizations and other responsible bodies whose right to the normal standard of transportation services will be affected, and the then minister of transport, the transplanted Newfoundlander who was imported into the province for reasons of political expediency to represent one of the districts. This is the man described in Richard Gwyn's book as the minister who devised and piloted through the Commons the epochal National Transportation Act of 1967, creating a $40,000 pullman class job for himself in the process. He is also described by the same author as speaking before a Burns' night audience in Newfoundland with tears in his eyes, crying "You will never know how much I owe you." Brother, how hypocritical can you get? I will tell him what he owes Newfoundlanders, Mr. Speaker: he owes them his conscience.

The only reason the transport commission gave for discontinuing passenger service was the fact that the service was losing $918,000 a year. I say that if the service is losing money it is because of the inefficiency of the management; it is not the fault of the passengers. Whom do you blame in any business, Mr. Speaker, for neglect and lack of efficiency? You blame the boss. And where is he now? The former president of the C.N.R. has a new job as chairman of BRINCO. BRINCO is the only hope Newfoundland has of ever becoming solvent. Yet they put a man in as head of this organization who failed even to operate the railway in Newfoundland at a break-even point, let alone make a profit.

If the Canadian National Railways could not operate the rail passenger service efficiently, how can anyone with any sense of business logic say that the same company can efficiently operate a bus service? Nobody in Newfoundland objects to the introduction of the bus service. Every province has the two services. But when the C.N.R. has demonstrated its lack of efficiency as the operator of a rail passenger service, why take the gamble of going into the bus business to the tune of $950,000 for a start?

Are there not enough bus companies of proven efficiency, already operating at a profit, which are able to take on the franchise for Newfoundland? Are they not the logical ones to take the risk, when it is so obvious that the C.N.R. will most likely operate this venture too at a loss? Why should the people of Canada be taxed still further in this connection? Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask every member sitting in this House of Commons, representatives of the ten provinces of Canada, regardless of political affiliation, whether they would stand for such blatant disregard of their constituents.

Perhaps I should tell them that a Canadian National Official in Moncton, headquarters of the company's Atlantic region, had this to say as reported in the Financial Post of June 22:

> Train travel is well established here . . . passenger revenues increased 63 per cent between 1962 and 1967, even though the red, white and blue plan reduced over-all fare levels. The number of train passengers has increased steadily.

If I were to tell hon. members that there is one town in my constitutency, the town of Howley, which does not even have a connecting road to the highway—the inhabitants would have to swim a mile if they ever wanted to get out in case of need—would they stand for these conditions? Is this justice, Mr. Speaker.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Would the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), the Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, the premier of Newfoundland and the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Jamieson) take another trip from Port aux Basques to St. John's, as we six Newfoundland members did and which they refused to do, and talk to the employees of the Newfoundland railway, listen to the statements they make about the deterioration in the maintenance of the passenger service and listen to them tell of the deterioration in the condition of the trains that has been allowed to happen in order to uphold the camouflaged reasons the commission gives for discontinuance of the service? Why is the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo so silent? When his own constituents came out to greet the six federal members from Newfoundland on our arrival at Port aux Basques he was not there. Why did the largest demonstration take place in his constituency to support our cause in protesting the discontinuance of the rail passenger service while we were on our trip across Newfoundland on the Newfoundland Bullet?

Since royal commissions and task forces are the vogue now, why not create a task force to investigate the relevance of our arguments and assess the advisability of this action? Let them look at the terms of confederation and decide whether this action by two or three individuals is justified. Let them decide with a sense of humanity and justice whether this discriminatory act can better serve the people of Newfoundland. But, Mr. Speaker, let this utter disregard for human beings rest on the conscience of those responsible in the years to come.

[Mr. Marshall.]

Mr. Frank Moores (Bonavista-Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, today I wish to speak about the operation of the Canadian National Railways, particularly as it has affected the province of Newfoundland. During the year 1966, as has been said in this house before, the national railways even with padded accounts lost some $918,000 in Newfoundland and at the same time lost some $35,900,000 in their total operation in Canada. It seems strange to me that at that time the rail passenger service in Newfoundland was abolished without any consideration given to abolishment of the same rail passenger service in the rest of Canada. The reason given in the case of Newfoundland was that the rail passenger service was losing money. Well, the fact is that rail passenger service loses money in every province in Canada. If a principle is to be applied, it should be applied in the total Canadian context. One could imagine what would happen if the rail passenger service were abolished in the province of Quebec or in the province of Ontario. I do not think the federal government would be allowed to get away with that.

The C.N.R. should change its name to the C.M.R. It is no longer a national service; it is the Canadian mainland railway. Newfoundland has been placed on the system's expendable list. Newfoundland passengers have been downgraded below livestock, the service has been reduced and the public is expected to conform to the utility rather than the utility trying to meet the needs of the public. With the C.N.R.'s attitude in Newfoundland, as the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle) mentioned, we have 39-seat buses plus one lavatory. Knowing the C.N.R.'s philosophy as it applies to Newfoundland I expect they will probably be billed as 40-passenger buses.

First of all, it is not a matter which involves only the people who travel from St. John's to Port aux Basques. People now using the rail passenger service come from the more isolated areas not near the trans-Canada highway. They come from places such as Bonavista and must travel some 75 to 80 miles in order to get to the trans-Canada highway. How are these people to be serviced in the winter? The roads are nearly impassable in the summer and certainly will be closed for most of the winter season. Must these people suffer and be unable to travel because of the decision of one man in the transport commission? This man, Mr. Pickersgill, was very friendly to Newfoundland over the years. He and the premier of Newfoundland were known as the original wheeler-dealers for Newfoundland. While the premier of Newfoundland was popularly considered the wheel when spending money in Newfoundland, Mr. Pickersgill was an intricate part of the wheel, in fact the hub, and a self-greasing hub at that.

This man, Mr. Pickersgill, who owes Newfoundland so much is the same man who through his political acumen created in his own fashion a job at $40,000 a year. One could also say, regarding Mr. Pickersgill's attitude, that not only was he self-appointed to that job but that his attitude toward Newfoundland has been that of someone who has been self-anointed. In the years when Mr. Pickersgill and Mr. Smallwood were in their heyday we must realize just how the operation worked. We had the king of the pork barrel in Ottawa, the man who made the pork barrel work, dipping in and taking out the big slices of pork and slinging them down a very carnivorous gullet, Mr. Smallwood at the other end, who devoured it at the expense of the Newfoundland people. One could say that certain Newfoundlanders go fat from overeating. The great majority are now at the point of starvation because of the attitude of a few.

We have been renowned in Newfoundland during the past years for all kinds of deals. We have had tax deals, promotional deals and cost plus deals. This is the type of government we have had at the expense of the people of Newfoundland. We have poverty in Newfoundland that people in this house would find it difficult to conceive and now, to top it all off, we have the railway deal. If all the roads to the stations other than those on the trans-Canada highway were brought up to standard and paved, then possibly we would be getting something in return for the abandonment of the rail passenger service. But are we to have something taken away and replaced by something better? No. We are to have just another example of the federal government taking something away from the have-not provinces with no respect or consideration for regional disparity and no respect for human decency.

It is high time this government abandoned its bits and pieces approach to the affairs of Newfoundland and adopted a comprehensive, long range program aimed at bringing the tenth province fully into confederation. Basic to any such co-ordinated plan is transportation. A modern and widespread transportation network is essential in creating and maintaining the diversified industry necessary for the economic rehabilitation of Newfoundland. An efficient and effective transportation system is essential to the development and expansion of Newfoundland's great basic industries of fishing and forestry. In the circumstances that exist, only the C.N.R. is available for the creation of such a transportation system. It is one of the many minor tragedies of modern Newfoundland that this national, publicly owned system is being forced to operate within the narrow confines of private business and thus being compelled inevitably to give profit priority over people.

Perhaps the greatest tragedy is the poverty of spirit and absence of imagination on the part of this government that permits a great instrument for national development to atrophy while Newfoundland's real need goes unnoticed.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this bill, C-124, includes among other things provision for loans and other arrangements to assist Air Canada in meeting its obligations. This is the third reading stage of the bill. It is not automatic that we debate all third readings but because of a development of the last day or two I feel I should take a few minutes of the time of the house to say something with regard to the obligations of Air Canada. What I have in mind was previewed in the question that I put to the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Richardson) on orders of the day this afternoon, namely, the promise of the Liberal government, when Mr. Pearson was prime minister, to the people of Winnipeg that the maintenance and overhaul base would stay there at least until 1973.

As some hon. members are aware—certainly the people of Winnipeg are very much aware of it today—one of the members on the other side, the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Rock), has been quoted as criticizing, in fact condemning, the Minister without Portfolio for his efforts to persuade the government of which he is a member to keep the base at Winnipeg. As I said, using a question as a means of saying it, I think the Minister without Portfolio should be commended rather than criticized for trying to persuade the government to keep its promise in this respect.

Canadian National Railways

As a matter of fact, I want to say categorically that I believe the first thing which should be respected in this whole dispute or problem is the pledged word of the then prime minister of Canada. May I make it clear that the fact we have a different government and a different Prime Minister does not alter the situation. I point out that this is not just an assertion of mine. Indeed, when this matter was the subject of questioning on the floor of the house on Friday, November 1, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) referred to the commitment made by the previous prime minister to the people of Winnipeg and made it very clear that the commitment still stands.

Lest anyone thinks I am paraphrasing I should like to read a bit from page 2298 of Hansard for Friday, November 1. We were on the orders of the day and after three or four other questions had been asked, indeed seven or eight other questions, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) put this supplementary question:

> Would the minister give an assurance to the people of Winnipeg, as well as to the employees in question, that the pledge given by right hon. Lester Pearson, then Prime Minister of Canada, is going to be carried out?

The response to that question by the Minister of Transport reads as follows:

> Yes, Mr. Speaker. That commitment which was given by the former prime minister, and which was subsequently reiterated by me in Winnipeg, still stands.

It could not be stated any more clearly than that. I suggest that all of the arguments about the surveys and the reports of the experts have to take second place to the pledged word or there is just no way in which we can carry on. I might add to this that I find it pretty hard to take for the hon. member for Lachine and others to act as though Winnipeg is trying to take something away from Montreal, something that somehow or other belongs to Montreal. No one who looks at this objectively could swallow that line. This is a base that belongs to Winnipeg. Winnipeg is where Air Canada started in the old T.C.A. days. It is the retention of something that belongs to the people of Winnipeg which we feel we are seeking when we ask the government to see to it that the base stays there.

I recognize the right and responsibility of the management of Air Canada to look at these things in economic terms and decide what is best in the pure economic sense, but when it comes to national policy such as placing industry round the country and coping with employment and unemployment in different areas, I submit that the government has a particular responsibility. If that responsibility involves a subsidy, and I question this despite all the reports that some people have made to this effect, it is up to the government to give it.

As I say, I am not going to take the time to go into all of the arguments back and forth on this issue. I just want to say that when we who come from Winnipeg, and I believe I am speaking for all members from Winnipeg—even if I am speaking for them I hope some of the others will get up and say it too—say we cannot accept the idea that we are trying to take something away from somebody else we do so because we are trying to do no such thing. We want something which we believe is ours and which the then prime minister of Canada said would stay at Winnipeg and would not be taken away from us.

I suppose my question to the Minister without Portfolio on orders of the day was a bit rhetorical. Perhaps it implied its own answer. I would be grateful if he would take the opportunity in this debate on third reading, as I would be grateful if other members from Winnipeg would say a few words, of rising and saying that he agrees with me. I should be grateful if the hon. member for Winnipeg South, who happens to be that Minister without Portfolio, would take this opportunity. He deserves to be commended rather than criticized by a fellow Liberal member for taking the stand he has taken, namely, that the pledge or promise of the government of Canada should be maintained. I hope that Liberal members and other members of the house might take the same position.

I know we have had this issue before us in the house on occasions without number over the past several years. It goes back over the régimes of two or three governments. Normally, as I say, one would not raise this on the third reading of this kind of a bill, but it is of tremendous concern to the employees of Air Canada in my city and to all the people of Winnipeg that certain things are now being said, and I felt that the situation should be outlined in this more correct light.

I again offer my commendation to the hon. member for Winnipeg South for trying to persuade the government to maintain its pledge. Again I repeat that the first consideration which should be respected in this whole matter is the pledged word of the government which are those words of the present Minister of Transport, spoken by the former prime minister and subsequently reiterated by him in Winnipeg. He said on Friday, November 1, that the commitment still stands. We insist that it be kept.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take the other side of the C.N.-A.C. credit card. Last week I asked the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Richardson) as the acting minister of transport whether the government has any intention of allowing carriers other than Air Canada to increase their service in and out of Edmonton to compensate for the loss in service resulting from Air Canada's winter schedule. The minister made it clear that these decisions were under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Transport Commission. He said they would be reviewed by that body.

Upon checking my facts again I asked the minister a few days ago if he would clarify the role of the commission regarding air line schedules. I make the point now that air line scheduling is the prerogative of the air line involved, not of the Canadian Transport Commission. However, the minister again told the house that the commission has responsibility for air line schedules and by this he implied that the commission has the authority to approve or disapprove of changes thereto. I am sure the minister did not deliberately mislead the house, but again I make the point that the air line decides on the amount of service given to a particular city, not the Canadian Transport Commission.

The minister said a few days ago that the commission will be reviewing Air Canada's winter schedule to Edmonton. As of this afternoon the commission had no such plans.

Air Canada is Canada's national air line. It is owned, financed and supported by the taxpayers of Canada. It reports to parliament through the Department of Transport, not through Mr. Pickersgill or his commission. If the minister is aware of facts that are not at my disposal I would appreciate it if he could clarify the role of the commission with regard to its involvement in air line schedule changes. It is my information that the commission does not have to approve such changes.

I should like to ask the minister whether he will in the near future make representations to the management of Air Canada to restore service in and out of Canada to its previous level. I need not point out that Edmonton is the capital city of the province of Alberta and I have the honour to represent in this house a number of its citizens.

It appears to me that Edmonton is not going to get too far with Air Canada until we have some representation on the C.N.-A.C. board of directors. Since one of the members from southern Alberta has recently resigned from this board over the disagreement regarding the appointment of Mr. Seagrim, perhaps there may be some hope now for Edmonton representation. It is important that Alberta have proper representation, that appointments are not made as political rewards and that elderly persons are not added to this already ponderous board. We need some young blood to stimulate the old.

The treatment being accorded Edmonton by Air Canada is a disgrace. The Edmonton-Vancouver service has been reduced from 38 flights to 28 flights a week, and seating capacity from 4,200 to 2,900. Edmonton has only one direct dayline flight to Toronto. The Edmonton-Winnipeg service has been reduced from 42 flights a week in summer to 28 flights, and the seating capacity is down to 2,320 seats from 3,330. The government has shown no concern about protests from business, industry and the Alberta Aviation Council. The new winter schedule is a blow to the city of Edmonton and an insult by Air Canada and this government to the capital city of Alberta. If Air Canada cannot provide a reasonable service there is only one thing to do—let C.P.A. come in and do the run on a daily basis.

Again I say, Mr. Speaker, that we had the spectacle of the minister from Winnipeg hiding behind the coat-tails of the transportation commission and attempting to test the credulity of this house with the statement that the transport commission was responsible for setting the schedule. This is ridiculous. He knows as well as I do that the schedule is set by Air Canada, and he knows that Air Canada has cut back on the service to Edmonton residents deliberately and of its own volition. If people in Edmonton want to get any kind of service to the United States they are now forced to fly to Winnipeg first. Now we have the Minister without Portfolio making sure that Winnipeg is well taken care of, while Edmonton is being neglected. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who has the nominal responsibility in this regard, is so busy running round the country that he has no time to look after his own responsibilities

The new winter schedule, which deprives Edmonton of service to which it is entitled on past performance, is causing harm to the city's economic expansion. At a time when air travel to and from Edmonton has been expanding at a rapid rate, Air Canada comes along and reduces the facilities. No reason has been given, because no reason can be given. I am asking the Minister without Portfolio and the Minister of Transport, when he returns, to put prejudice aside and reopen this question so that Edmonton will be given the service to which it is entitled. Failing that, the ministers can lend support to the granting of a daily flight plan to Canadian Pacific Airlines, who at least are willing to provide reasonable service if Air Canada is not.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in the debate on third reading of Bill C-124 I am very conscious of the fact that just a few days ago some of us spoke extensively on the resolution stage of the bill and asked a number of questions at the committee stage. I am very much aware of the fact that it is not usual, especially on a bill of this nature, to debate third reading. But the circumstances that prompt some of us to rise are also unusual. It is not every day that the government of this country condones a move on the part of two of its agencies, the Canadian Transport Commission and the C.N.R., to totally abandon rail passenger service in a whole province of this country. I submit that the circumstances are unusual, and consequently we feel obliged to make a few remarks on third reading of this bill.

I note again with regret, as have some of my colleagues, the absence from the house of the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Jamieson), the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. He has at no time indicated an interest in this subject save for a few remarks during the course of his speech in the debate on the Speech from the Throne. At that time he tried, in a very inadequate way, to defend the action of the C.N.R. and the Canadian Transport Commission, and in effect implied that the government of which he is a member was prepared to stand behind this unjust decision.

I wonder where the Minister of Defence Production, who sits in this house as the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, would be if tomorrow Canadian National Railways decided they were going to abolish the coastal service in Newfoundland. The Minister of Defence Production knows better than anybody in this house what the consequences of such a move would be for the people it is his responsibility to represent here. The Newfoundland coastal service is absolutely essential to the people of the south coast of the province, whom the Minister of Defence Production represents in this house. Yet this is the next step in what we consider to be the total abandonment of Canadian National Railways services in the province of Newfoundland. We consider that the rail abandonment is merely the first step in a program of complete abandonment: first, the passenger service, second the coastal service and third the freight service. Then the C.N.R. transportation services will be gone completely.

We reiterate the point we made in the house two weeks ago, that until this becomes national policy, until it becomes the policy of the government of Canada to allow Canadian National Railways to abandon their train services in all the other provinces of Canada, we will oppose it. My submission, which is inherent in this whole question, relates to the entire concept of public transportation. Public transportation made this country what it is. I believe it is a well known fact that before any segment of the public transportation system of this country can be abandoned the people who depend on that particular segment must show, and show conclusively, that they no longer need the service and in fact that they no longer want it.

In my humble submission the opposite is true of Newfoundland. When the transport commission opened its hearings in St. John's, briefs were presented to the commission in opposition to the C.N.R. application. I know of no brief that was presented which supported the application of Canadian National Railways. Since that time petitions have been circulated throughout the province of Newfoundland. These petitions contain hundreds and hundreds of names of people from all walks of life. As a matter of fact, since we on this side of the house rose to speak a few days ago my colleagues and myself have received telegrams, letters and communications from every segment of Newfoundland's population including, I might add, most of the labour unions in that province. This is why I note with regret the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and his colleagues failed to rise and support us in this house. At the present time an appeal has been lodged against the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission allowing Canadian National Railways to abandon its train services. That appeal was initiated, I believe, by the Newfoundland Federation of Labour, with whom the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and his colleagues profess to have some sympathy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? I wonder whether he realizes that the only reason we did not rise and speak of this issue was that we thought he and his colleagues were doing such an excellent job. We are right behind you. Keep it up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, that is the type of loaded question for which the hon. member is so well known. Nevertheless, we accept his implied support and hope he will give us some vocal support before this bill receives third reading. It is not my intention to take up the time of the house, but there is one very important point that I feel is germane to the debate and important in this whole question. It is that during the last federal election, when the six of us who sit on this side of the house stood for election in the province of Newfoundland one of the main planks in our platform was the retention and upgrading of the rail passenger service in Newfoundland. The people of my province proved conclusively by their votes—two-thirds of them supported our party and sent six members here to manifest that support—that they wanted to retain the rail passenger service in Newfoundland. It was in effect a plebiscite which said to the government of Canada, to the Canadian Transport Commission and to the Canadian National Railways: we want to keep our rail passenger service.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I further submit that the government of Canada has an obligation, in respect of this important segment of the public transportation system, to listen to the voice of the people. The people of Newfoundland have proved by their mandate on June 25, by their briefs submitted to the transport commission, by their letters and telegrams, and by their appeal now lodged with the transport commission, that they want to retain the rail transport system in Newfoundland. In fact, they not only want to retain it but they want it upgraded. They want a service equal to the service enjoyed by Canadians in other provinces of Canada.

The point has been well made that in very few provinces of Canada where Canadian National Railways operates rail passenger services does it come anywhere near to operating in the black. As a matter of fact, I think it is fair to say most if not all of them, apart from some of the main interurban services, operate at a substantial loss.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I submit through you to the government of Canada that it has a solemn obligation to uphold the spirit of the terms of the union, in particular to uphold the spirit of term 29 and the letter of term 31 dealing with this important aspect. I serve notice now on the government through you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Newfoundland intend to see to it that they get justice in this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, at this stage of our consideration of Bill No. C-124, you will allow me, I hope, to point out certain deficiencies in the administration of the C.N.R.

We all know that, originally, the C.N.R. took special pains to provide services in areas lacking in adequate transport facilities. Unfortunately, the closing down of several stations proves that the main reason for the founding of this company is being completely ignored. Stations are closed down in the interest of a greater centralization. I am not against the closing down of stations which have no reason for being kept open, but only against the unjustified disappearance of economically viable stations. In view of the fact that in the province of Quebec and in Newfoundland there are still important villages which have no paved road linking them with other parts of the country, in my opinion these stations should be most definitely maintained.

The C.N.R. services in those localities are not only essential but they could also make money, in my opinion, since there is practically no competition.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to re-examine carefully the centralization plans of the C.N.R. In my opinion, too much centralization can lead to the operating deficits that we know, to say nothing of the displacement of a number of workers who are the real victims.

I would like to mention here the fate of telegraph operators in particular. Several of those agents are called upon to do all types of work, except that for which they were trained. Those station agents are displaced without their many years of service being taken into account. Stations are closed down without taking into account the accidents which can happen following the lack of traffic experts.

Men trained for the maintenance of tracks are dismissed, and those who are kept by the company are transferred to the maintenance of extended sections, sometimes twice as long as what they are humanly able to look after. The great number of accidents which occurred recently are the result of this new centralization policy. In fact, if one goes back to the past, damages caused by the derailment which happened in December 1966 at Rivière-à-Pierre, when 25 cars ran off the line, amounted to $1.5 million.

A train went off the track in the county of Kamouraska and following an investigation and an examination of certain important parts of the cars, we were informed that there were not enough maintenance men. In fact, trains do not stop long enough to be checked.

Two trains ran into one another in Drummondville, and the cause of this accident is still unknown. A few days later, in Ontario, two trains collided on the same track; the cause of the accident is unknown to date.

Mr. Speaker, air companies sometimes lose airplanes which crash on mountains or fall in the sea. When he learns of such a loss no member of the house, no citizen is surprised.

But when one learns that the Canadian National lost a train between Quebec and Montreal, for instance, one is entitled to wonder.

Mr. Speaker, I once was on a train which got lost between Montreal and Ottawa during the 1967 winter. This Canadian National train which was going to Ottawa, was switched on a C.P.R. track. It ran for eight miles before being traced. There were 250 people abroad, among whom were several members of the house. For the information of those who would doubt my word, I suggest that they inquire further about this of a former official of the Post Office Department, the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr), who was with us on that day. He will be able to tell you that we arrived in Ottawa forty-five minutes late.

An hon. Member: They never knew where they were going.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to recall the danger to which we are exposed when we board C.N.R. trains. Excessive centralization, curtailment of staff at the wrong places—

[Mr. Godin.]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Papineau wishes to direct a question to the hon. member for Portneuf.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member for Portneuf whether he is in the process of charging C.N.R. officials with an attempt to lead astray a group of créditiste members?

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that, at that time, we were not very many in this house, and that the hon. member is no doubt mistaken, even though once more he had a majority on board the train.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the curtailment of the staff at the wrong places warrants an investigation, because in certain areas the staff has been reduced to the point where it is dangerous to travel on board C.N.R. trains.

And while the government, in order to promote the development of foreign countries, provides millions of dollars earmarked for road and railway construction, the Canadian people witness a decrease in services, under the pretence of economy. Less fortunate countries are developed by improving the railroads, but to develop Canada, to achieve a just society, services previously given are decreased.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, jobs as station agents in rural areas and in small towns are being done away with, and this constitutes a real problem. In fact, it is not realized that no money is saved because those positions are transformed into city jobs, in the large centres, for the white-headed boys. Recently I met a station master who still has his job, in spite of it all. He explained to me that, in the one day, he had had to render accounts to three inspectors.

In view of numerous deficits, notwithstanding successive presidents at the head of this company, in view of the patronage at the hiring level, in view—and I repeat it—of massive lay-offs, numerous accidents with loss of life, many differences in freight rates, and in special rates granted to companies that contribute to the election funds, there is serious reason for concern.

I wonder whether the minister would not take these problems into consideration and, if he is not in a position to give us an answer today—which I doubt, for he probably does not have all the data on hand—whether he might not order an inquiry to establish whether it might not be advisable to define the obligations of this crown corporation towards the public. I therefore ask the hon. minister to study this question and perhaps, when the estimates of his department come up for study, he can give an answer to the problems I have just pointed out.

[English]

Mr. Joseph Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell you first of all, as I am sure you are aware, that this is not my maiden speech. I am keeping that for a more appropriate moment. But I feel it is very important that I stand up today and support not the policy of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) but rather what he has said pertaining to the necessity for maintaining the Air Canada overhaul base in our province.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I believe, as many others have said, that it should be clearly understood and emphasized, even repeated many times if necessary, that we are not taking anything away from Montreal or Quebec when we request the minister to give consideration to retaining the base in Winnipeg. We are not taking anything away from them; rather, we are trying to hang on to something we have. We are just like a man falling into a pool; we are trying to hang on to something. We are hoping that someone will give us a handout rather than take from us something which maintains life in our area. It is therefore vital that consideration be given to retaining the maintenance base.

I think we are all aware that when the railways came into the west people said that was a lost cause. However, the money that was expended to establish the railways in the west was of benefit to all Canadians and certainly helped the development of western Canada. The same consideration should apply in the case of our keystone province. I believe all members should give consideration to this problem and studies should be undertaken to determine the potential of our keystone province in respect of the development of air travel.

We are also conserned about the employees who have been with Air Canada since its inception. Many of these employees have worked for Air Canada for years in the hope they would be able to remain with their families in our province and in the greater Winnipeg area. Many of these employees would not be in a position to accept a transfer even if they desired to do so. It would be very difficult for them to move outside of our province.

There is another aspect of this problem that many of us are not considering when we are asking the government to retain the maintenance base in Winnipeg. I refer to the position of the suppliers. The employees of these suppliers are almost as numerous as the Air Canada employees and the removal of the base would have a terrific economic effect on the greater Winnipeg area. Today I should like to ask for the support of all those who are in favour of retaining the base in Winnipeg. While I am not going into all the details of our reasons for desiring that the base be maintained in western Canada, I want to emphasize that we are not taking anything away from anyone. We are only asking the government to leave with us what we have. In other words, we want the Air Canada base to remain in the greater Winnipeg area.

Mr. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to voice briefly my objection to certain remarks made earlier by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) according to whom the Minister without Portfolio has been criticized by some of his colleagues in the Liberal party.

I must congratulate the Minister without Portfolio on the work he is doing and I must assure this house, and in particular the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that the minister is not being criticized in the least for the stands he has taken. On the contrary, several members of the province of Quebec and, in particular, of the Montreal area made representations to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) and to the Minister without Portfolio concerning the construction of the international airport in Montreal and the Air Canada maintenance base in Winnipeg.

In spite of the accusations made by a union leader of the Q.F.L. the members of the Montreal area, far from taking no interest in the matter, have followed it closely. They have been active in this field for some time now. They may have done so without fuss, without calling press conferences and making statements as seems to be the habit of a certain union leader, but they have taken up the matter with the ministers concerned and with officials of the Transport Department. We hope that the decisions taken in the past by Air Canada directors concerning the Winnipeg maintenance base—and taken not for reasons of political patronage but for reasons of economy—will be maintained.

We appreciate the co-operation shown by the government and in particular by the Minister without Portfolio who, we have been told earlier, is being criticized. I must say that the minister is not criticized in the least. We believe that, in the next few months, a solution should be found that takes into account the recommendations of a commission of inquiry which could also find a solution to the Winnipeg problem.

Before I bring my remarks to a close, I should like to point out that on several occasions here the opposition criticized the Minister of Transport for being absent from the house. I should like to remind you that last year, in the month of October, the opposition presented a motion of non confidence against the government precisely because it believed there was no minister responsible for housing problems.

Although the government is dealing actively with these problems, although a minister is going around the country and looking determinately for a solution to the serious housing problems, the opposition is still not satisfied.

On the contrary, all the members of the house should pay tribute to the hon. minister and member for Trinity for his excellent work. In addition to the extremely important work he is doing in housing, he continues to assume his responsibilities in transportation, where he is ably assisted by the member for Winnipeg South and Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Richardson).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) wishes to put a question to the hon. member for Papineau.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I shall allude to the situation the member spoke of at the end of his speech, when he said that the Minister of Transport was not here often and that the opposition criticized him for it. Might the absence of the minister not be due at times to the reasons the member for Portneuf mentioned a while ago? Might it be that he gets lost aboard some train or other?

Mr. Loiselle: What a crazy question.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, a question was put to me. I feel I have the right to answer it—

An hon. Member: No, it is not worth it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The question is out of order.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The member has just made a slightly foolish remark, in the style of those of the Ralliement Créditiste representatives, those who get lost on trains—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. Matte: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ouellet: There is none—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. Matte: My question might be funny, Mr. Speaker, and I agree quite candidly, but it jolly well completes the question that the hon. member had asked to the hon. member for Portneuf.

An hon. Member: Stupid.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. There is no question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question? Would the hon. member for Papineau accept my thanks for the comments he made about the situation at Winnipeg, and will he see that a copy of his remarks gets into the hands of the hon. member for Lachine to offset his criticism of the Minister without Portfolio?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not understand the hon. member's question very well, because another member of the Ralliement Créditiste was again filibustering and speaking while the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was asking me a question.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question was in two parts. Would the hon. member accept my thanks for the things that he said about the situation in Winnipeg, and will he see that a copy of his remarks gets into the hands of hon. member for Lachine?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I hope that the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Rock) will read my remarks in the official report.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So do I.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I want to take but a few moments to outline to the house what I believe is a very shortsighted approach by the railways in connection with the relatively new potash industry in western Canada. By way of background, I want to inform the house as to the size of the industry at the moment and how large it is expected to become in years to come.

The potash industry, though relatively new, is rapidly overtaking the production of the entire world. The industry is centred in the province of Saskatchewan and has an adequate supply for something like 1,000 years. In other words, there is for the railways a potential market in the transport of potash. Although there are approximately only ten mines, by the year 1969 these will overtake Russia in production. By that year about 5.4 million tons of potash will be produced in Saskatchewan. Eight years from now world production will double from 16 million to 31 million tons. However, owing to overproduction in the last two years the industry is going through a very critical period. In the year 1971 the supply of potash will exceed the demand by 33 per cent.

Several factors have brought this situation about. As I have said, one is overproduction. In addition, new mines have been opened. There is a need, first of all, to educate countries on the use of fertilizers. Many countries lack the necessary resources. However, by 1977 supply and demand should level out.

I believe that the railway companies are, as it were, missing the boat in regard to transporting the products of this industry. As a result of the overproduction to which I have referred, mines have had to cut back on their production. They are operating at something like 20 per cent under capacity. Therefore they are looking for economies, and one area they are exploring is that of transportation.

I might point out that it costs between $9 to $16 a ton to move the potash produced to the central markets of North America. It costs $9 a ton to transport it to Pacific ports, with an additional $29 a ton for ocean freight. However, these companies have been negotiating with United States railway companies, which have taken up the challenge that Canadian railway companies cannot seem to meet, and the Great Northern Railway has accepted the concept of unit train loading.

At the present time, I.M.C. mines at Esterhazy are using trucks to transport their production of potash from the mine sites to Northgate in the United States where it is loaded on to United States unit trains for transportation to the Chicago-Minneapolis-St. Paul areas. It seems passing strange that railway companies operating in Canada, with rail beds laid and rolling stock available in an area of potential business for years to come, cannot see their way clear to transport the products of this industry, if not at a profit, at least at a rate sufficient to balance their books for the next few years until it does become profitable.

I do not see why any mining company should decide after a few years to revert to transporting its production by rail when it has been operating a fleet of trucks to move production to the United States border whence it is hauled by U.S. railway companies. Neither do I see why the U.S. railway companies should surrender the business, having operated their unit trains apparently at a profit. I understand that the potash industry is at present saving by this method something like $5 a ton, so surely there must have been room for a little leeway on the part of the railways.

I should like to refer to a very timely article that appeared in the Monetary Times for this month. Part of it reads as follows:

> According to R. W. Puder, I.M.C. vice-president in charge of materials management at Skokie, Ill., the decision to establish the truck operation was the direct result of the failure to negotiate satisfactory arrangements with Canadian railways which, he says, refuse to accept the unit train concept.

I have already indicated that Saskatchewan has 1,000 years' supply of potash. Apparently the trucking company transporting this potash is making a profit; otherwise I presume it would not do it. Also the U.S. railway companies must be making a profit or they would not be interested. Yet our own railway companies do not have the foresight to retain this business for the next seven or eight years if necessary until world production equals world demand, at which time they could make a profit. The Canadian railway companies are quite prepared to cut down railway service in various parts of Canada, abandon railway lines in other places and raise freight rates, but they are not prepared to seek new business that obviously has tremendous potential. This leads me to suspect there has been some shortsighted and very short range thinking on the part of the railways. They have never indicated what the explanation is.

In addition, what is to happen to the railway town of Melville? It has always been a railway town. The employees will have to move and find other jobs because the train service is to be abandoned. Present services will be dislocated and the potential for growth will be curtailed. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because the railway companies do not wish to give the town any backing. They consider that in that area they have a captive market and they will not reduce freight rates from Churchill, even though the result may be that freight cars return empty. The railway companies do not seem to have been clear in their thinking since they obviously prefer their cars to be loaded going one way and to return empty. That does not make sense.

I said I would be brief, and I do not want to detain the house any longer. Nevertheless we must have some explanation from the railways about the immediate losses of business being suffered as well as those business losses that will be suffered in the years to come. Railway revenues will drop. Every year the I.M.C. people will move out something like 1,200,000 tons, saving in the process $5 per ton. And this amount is to be moved at medium production levels. What is to happen later? We must hear an explanation from the railways as to their thinking on this matter and why they are giving this business to United States railway companies. Why can trucking companies make a profit when our railways cannot see their way clear to continue under present conditions?

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed not only at the support we have had within our own party, which is to be expected, but at the support we have had also from Liberal members of the house. I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) who spoke last Thursday or Friday, as well as the remarks of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau).

To judge from the remarks of hon. members this afternoon, though matters such as this are seldom debated the present C.N.R. financing bill would have great difficulty in passing through the house if we had the full co-operation of all those who are interested. Quite a few of my friends in the Liberal party have expressed support for the maintenance of the Canadian National passenger service in Newfoundland. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) said that Newfoundland has six Conservative members of parliament—

An hon. Member: Six good Conservative members.

Mr. Lundrigan: —and that a major plank in their electoral platform was the maintenance and upgrading of the C.N.R. passenger service. The hon. member for St. John's East referred to the voice of the people, an interesting phrase. It is the key to the entire democratic system of the western world. The voice of the people ultimately makes itself heard through the representatives of the people in governments at various levels. Clearly the Canadian Transport Commission and its captain have not paid attention to the voice of the people. Still, that is characteristic of the present government.

The six Conservative members of parliament from Newfoundland were given a mandate or a vote of confidence, if you like, to make sure that our rail passenger services are continued and upgraded in quality. Not too many months ago we travelled across the island of Newfoundland in order to gather support for the continuance of our passenger service. Our people gave us tremendous support, and in almost every community it was the same story.

The Canadian Transport Commission or its subsidiary, the rail transport committee, held hearings in Newfoundland. After reading the report of the hearings I find it difficult to see on what the commission based its decision. Nobody agreed with the abandonment of our rail passenger service, and I want to remind the members of the commission of that fact. Almost everyone who appeared before the commission was totally in favour of maintaining our rail passenger service. In fact, on our tour of Newfoundland we saw many indications that the people supported the maintenance of this public service. That was the voice of the people speaking in support of that service.

If Captain Jack Pickersgill of the commission were sitting opposite me this afternoon I might show him this petition which has appended to it 2,448 names. That fact deserves to be noticed. We have had telegrams from just about every union, every community and every organized group. We have heard from literally dozens of communities. On November 1 Conservative members of parliament spoke in support of maintaining our rail passenger service. On November 4 I received a petition from the transport commission employees union, and if I had time I would read the preamble. As I have said, 2,448 people from right across Newfoundland, from the communities that will be affected, put their names on that petition. They do not want rail passenger service to be abandoned. That is the kind of reaction we have had in Newfoundland.

Time does not permit me to speak of all the support we have had in Newfoundland. The people of Newfoundland know that the abandonment of their rail passenger service would have tragic consequences for their economy. We want our transport system to be upgraded and not abolished. I am not against Jack Pickersgill earning $40,000 a year. I do not mind when a man tries to build himself up through the winter and make a living for his family.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lundrigan: I am not against most of his commissioners, the autocrats and bureaucrats making $24,000 a year and up. I am not against people making a good living; I think people ought to make a good living. After all, are we not living in the new just society? I hear no applause from the right hon. leader of the rump.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lundrigan: But I am against having our passenger service abolished merely to justify the existence of another bureaucratic body. That is what it amounts to. It is costing the government $1 million a year to keep the Canadian Transport Commission in funds; it is also costing it $1 million a year to provide rail passenger service in Newfoundland. Clearly, by removing the rail service the government can afford to maintain the commission.

I serve notice to the captain of that commission and his $24,000 a year men that they should take heed of the words uttered by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) some time ago, that it is a long road that does not have any ash cans.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up the time of the house and I do not rise, like my friends from Newfoundland, to bury a dead horse. I would rather revive certain projects which are dear to the people of Madawaska and to the congenial people of the Victoria riding which I represent.

I intend to speak only for a few minutes on the passenger-train service which has been provided to us since the spring of 1967 by the Canadian National between Moncton, Edmundston and Montreal. It is important to mention here that this passenger train which was made available to the people living along that railway line was cancelled from another line linking Moncton to Montreal through Campbellton, the Matapedia Valley, Rivière-du-Loup, and Quebec.

Nevertheless, this other railway line is already provided with a passenger service, so that we now have on both sides of the province trains going to Montreal, Halifax or Sydney, Nova Scotia.

But, since the Canadian National saw fit to grant passenger services to the people living in Madawaska, Victoria, Carleton and York counties, I think it would be equally important for the C.N. authorities to consider providing such a service at more suitable hours. Otherwise, there is no reason at all for ensuring that service since it is not suitable at present.

The train leaving Edmundston at 11.35 p.m. arrives in Montreal at 7.30 a.m. the following morning, Edmundston time, according to the winter schedule. Nevertheless, the return train to Moncton leaves Montreal station at about 4.15 p.m. and arrives in Edmundston in the middle of the night, at about 2.15 a.m. What is most annoying is that as the train pulls in, the engines have to refuel, which means that passengers often have to wait for more than 10 minutes before being able to get off. In the matter of bad publicity, I think that beats it all. The train should be able to refuel while allowing at the same time the passengers to get off. That is the point I wanted to make.

Something baffles me. Last winter or last year—I am not sure about the date as I have no prepared text—when the Quebec Air Company came before the Transport Commission in Bathurst, the Canadian National opposed the request from Quebec Air to establish a service between Quebec, Edmundston, Bathurst and Gaspé. They said "We just granted a passenger rail service to the Edmundston people and now they want an air service"—as if it were a sin to ask for an additional transport service.

If the Canadian National Railway really wishes to give a good service to people in my area, in Madawaska, Carleton and York counties, let them change the departure hour of the train that travels from Montreal to my area. Instead of leaving the station in the middle of the afternoon, it should leave about 8 or 9 o'clock in the evening, so that the passengers, instead of reaching their destination in the middle of the night, may sleep on board, because we do sometimes get some shut-eye, so as to get to Edmundston around 8 a.m.

That service would be of great help to everyone.

On the other hand, if the C.N.R. keeps objecting, as it has to the application of Quebec-Air, in Bathurst, to set up an air service at the request of the cities, villages and chambers of commerce of the area, it should think seriously about improving its service between Edmundston, Montreal and Halifax.

That is what I had to say, Mr. Speaker, and I wanted very much to say it because those are things which must be clearly understood.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in rising to say a few words about the position of Air Canada in relation to my home city of Winnipeg I am mindful of the fact that I have spoken on this subject on a number of occasions in sessions of former parliaments. I have made my position clear and I think there is no need for the people of Winnipeg to wonder about the stand I take. At the same time, we do have a new government, a new Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and a new Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), and I believe I should put on record once again the views which I and, I think, the people of Winnipeg and Manitoba hold regardless of their political opinions, with regard to this situation.

If I were to suggest I am making this speech unmindful of the fact that this is a situation which vitally affects the interests of the people of my city, hon. members would undoubtedly question my objectivity. Of course one of the reasons I rise today is that this issue affects the city from which I come. But the position I take today is, I suggest, the same as the position I take whenever any question arises affecting the welfare of any part of Canada.

I do not believe we want to see in this country a wealthy Montreal, a wealthy Toronto, and second class citizens elsewhere. I have always believed that one of the most important functions of any federal government is to do whatever it can, after considering all the implications, to improve the productivity and the living standards of people in all regions of Canada. It is with this in mind that I have always supported proposals by Liberal and Conservative governments for the expenditure of large sums of money under ARDA programs. I recognize the importance of improving the economic well-being of the rural population. This is why I supported a proposal to set up a heavy water plant on Cape Breton Island despite arguments that there were other areas in this country where the plant could have been built much more cheaply. But I understand, as do other hon. members, the difficult situation which the people of Cape Breton Island have to face.

It is for this reason that the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg), speaking on November 1, endorsed the representations made by Newfoundland members of parliament opposing the proposal of the C.N.R. to abandon passenger rail service in that province. I wish to associate myself with those representations. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has already done so. If Canada is to be one country, surely a whole province, and not a small one by any means, cannot be left without rail passenger service. I suggest that under the agreement by which Newfoundland came into confederation there is a moral, if not a legal, obligation on the part of any government of Canada to see that at least a minimum railway passenger service is maintained in the province of Newfoundland.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Orlikow: As I said, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say something about the problems of Air Canada and its overhaul base. Let me say that I am not one of those who think, as apparently the hon. member for Lachine (Mr. Rock) does, that a choice must be made between Montreal and Winnipeg. That possibility disappeared many years ago. However,

I believe the record should be kept straight. Air Canada, or Trans-Canada Air Lines as it was known for 30 or more years, had its headquarters, most of its departments, its planning staff and auditing staff located in the city of Winnipeg. I do not intend to put the whole sad story on the record step by step. But beginning in 1948 there were indications that the former Trans-Canada Air Lines was beginning to move departments from Winnipeg to Montreal.

In 1948 my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), asked the then minister of trade and commerce, Mr. C. D. Howe, for assurance that the headquarters and main departments of T.C.A. would not be moved from Winnipeg. He was given the most categorical assurance that this would not happen. These assurances were confirmed several months later by the then president of Trans-Canada Air Lines. From that date to today, however, there has been a gradual movement of Air Canada departments and personnel from Winnipeg to Montreal.

As I said on an earlier occasion and repeat today that decision to move, which must have been planned pretty carefully by the management of Air Canada, was never communicated to any minister of transport in the past 20 years until just a few years ago when the then president of Air Canada made a statement to the effect that the whole operation would terminate. When that happened there was, of course, consternation among the people of the city of Winnipeg. Representations were made by the widest group of organizations I have ever seen come together on any one question. These included the government of Manitoba, the city of Winnipeg, the muncipalities around Winnipeg, the chambers of commerce, the boards of trade, the trade unions and the farm organizations. They all made representations to the then government.

What happened at that time? The then prime minister, Mr. Pearson, made the categorical statement that the base would continue its operations at the city of Winnipeg at least until 1973. When the minister of transport, the present Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith), was in Winnipeg in 1963 he was asked whether the government had been given a firm guarantee that the base would continue its operations in Winnipeg until 1973. He said:

> It is a firm fact that the base will be kept open for the next decade.

Despite those assurances there has been a constant whittling away of the staff at the base in Winnipeg. When this matter was debated on November 1 the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler), in speaking along the same lines I am speaking today, gave the number of employees at the overhaul base in Winnipeg as 700. When we were discussing this question in 1963 and 1964 the number of employees was in the neighbourhood of 1,000 or more. So there has been a reduction in the past few years of approximately 30 per cent despite the fact that the then prime minister, minister of transport and subsequent ministers of transport on behalf of the government gave the most categorical assurances that the base would be maintained at Winnipeg at least until 1973.

I would be foolish if I were to attempt to reverse the process by proposing that all the overhaul facilities be moved to Winnipeg, although I think that if the government which was in office at the time when the first decision on the part of Air Canada was made to move part of the overhaul base to Montreal had been told what the company had in mind the decision would have been countermanded. But, Mr. Speaker, we cannot get that kind of change. I should like to suggest that if we in this chamber believe in the economic welfare of people in all parts of Canada then we will realize that it is not too late yet. Recently we had a report from the Minister of Transport which indicated that the airport of Dorval in the city of Montreal and the airport at Malton which services the city of Toronto are much too small and that in the next 10 years they will either have to be doubled in size or new airports will have to be built to service the Toronto and Montreal areas.

I understand that the Air Canada facilities at Dorval are already too small, that the personnel there are working long hours and that there is a program of subcontracting a substantial part of the overhaul work. This is the situation at a time when at the overhaul base in Winnipeg there are substantial facilities and employees with long service who have lived all their lives in the city of Winnipeg. These employees are being forced to move to Montreal. They are being blackmailed because in effect they are given notice that when the overhaul base in Winnipeg is closed, as it will be by 1973 at the latest or earlier if Air Canada continues its policy of ignoring government direction, they will lose the opportunity of continuing to work for Air Canada if they do not move.

With the development of the DC-9, a relatively short range aircraft which cannot be used in overseas flights as can the DC-8, it would seem pretty obvious to me that it is not at all impossible or impractical to have an overhaul base at Montreal which would service large aircraft such as the DC-8's and, I suppose, the subsonic and supersonic planes that will be purchased. At the same time, the Winnipeg base, instead of merely overhauling the Viscounts, could have the kind of permanent facilities which would be capable of servicing the DC-9's.

It is no secret that Winnipeg has not shared in the rapid growth and expansion of cities such as Montreal, Toronto and to a lesser extent Vancouver. There are good economic reasons for this. I would not want to urge the government to do the impossible. If Winnipeg does not have the economic base for population growth to the same extent as Montreal or Toronto then Winnipeg will have to face the fact that it will continue to be one of the smaller cities of Canada. Winnipeg does not have the basic industry which exists in the Montreal and Toronto-Hamilton areas. It is an area which does not have high skilled and high paid jobs such as exist in central Canadian cities.

The loss of a thousand highly paid jobs for skilled employees to the city of Winnipeg would be a tremendously serious blow. The Conservative government of Manitoba, with which I have had differences of opinion in the past and will continue to have, should be commended for the progressive campaigning it has carried on over the years to bring industry to the province and specifically to Winnipeg. I think the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Richardson), with his experience in industrial and commercial enterprise, will agree with me. The province has tried to develop resources and utilize manpower in the province, but what it has been able to do is relatively small. The government has certainly not been able to bring to Winnipeg that kind of industry which employs a thousand or more employees, as Air Canada has done for 20 or more years. The loss of this base to Winnipeg will be a very serious blow to the city, the province and its people.

It is my hope that government of Canada will continue to keep in mind the pledge of the former prime minister and that slogan which the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has used so often. I refer to the just society. I also hope that the reports to the effect that the Minister without Portfolio is doing his job both as a minister and as a member from Winnipeg in trying to assure that this base will continue to operate in Winnipeg are true.

Before we conclude this debate I hope the minister will take the opportunity to rise in his seat and tell us what is happening in respect of the investigations the government is making as well as in respect of the negotiations by the government of Canada and the government of the province of Manitoba with Air Canada and other interested parties. In fact it is my hope that, if not today, in the not too distant future we can obtain a statement from the minister or the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who is not here very often, that will allay the doubts and fears in the minds of the people of Winnipeg that next year or the year after this base will be completely closed. It is my hope that we will receive a statement from the appropriate minister allaying these fears and giving us the kind of assurance that seemed to be implied in the statement of the former prime minister. He seemed to suggest that not only would the present employees have jobs but more jobs would be available with Air Canada in the city of Winnipeg in years to come.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this bill I do so in support of the stand taken by my Newfoundland colleagues and other members of this house in respect of the decision taken by Canadian National Railways to abandon its passenger train service in the province of Newfoundland. This is a very unpopular move, and like every other citizen in that province I oppose it.

I might say for my own part that whenever in the past few months I have heard the name Canadian National I have got a bad taste in my mouth. I see red, as it were, because like most of my fellow Newfoundlanders I know that this move by the C.N.R. to take away what we feel is traditionally ours has created a very sad situation. I hope that the members of this house, the Canadian National Railways and the people of Canada will take notice that my five colleagues and myself, with the people of Newfoundland behind us, have declared outright war on the Canadian National because we feel the people of Newfoundland have been given a dirty deal. If the Canadian National is allowed to carry through with its plan to abandon rail passenger service in Newfoundland this will be a blot on the consciences of the Canadian people.

This whole abandonment is a betrayal of the terms of union between Newfoundland and the rest of this great nation of Canada. For the Canadian National to abandon the rail passenger service without offering a better alternative than the provision of buses is a disgrace to the nation of Canada. As I have already said in this house, the people of Newfoundland are against this move. I cannot understand the situation because, as one of my colleagues has mentioned, during the June election campaign it was a plank in the platform of the six Conservative members from Newfoundland that this service should be retained.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely—

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the feelings of the house are in this regard but hon. members might be disposed to hearing the last guns fired in this war we have just heard declared. This would only take about five minutes. I would hope that could be allowed in order that we might see whether we can give third reading to the bill. There is one more speaker on this side whose remarks I am sure can be made within the five minutes. Hopefully the house might be agreeable to that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we would agree to suspending private members' hour today for this purpose, but let there be no misunderstanding. The hon. member mentioned is not the last speaker. We are quite prepared to give up the hour at this time for this purpose but we do not want any misunderstanding.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, as far as the Ralliement Créditiste is concerned, we are quite willing to co-operate with the house to complete the study of that bill. However, two or three hon. members want to be heard and I doubt that we can finish that study tonight.

Therefore, I think that we should follow the rules of the house, adjourn the debate, go on to the private members' hour, and take up the debate again tomorrow.

[English]

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to forgo private members' hour today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock we will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion, public bills.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS BOARD

SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF AUTHORITY TO SECRETARY OF STATE AND EXPANSION OF RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. John Roberts (York-Simcoe) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of transferring the authority over the Historic Sites and Monuments Board to the Secretary of State and of expanding the responsibility of this board from concern for buildings and monuments of unique historical interest to general assistance in the preservation of towns, villages and landmarks of artistic, cultural or historical interest.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion is relatively simple and straightforward in both form and content. The first part of the motion suggests that the responsibility for the Historic Sites and Monuments Board should be transferred to the office of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier). The corollary of that transfer would be the transfer of the national historic sites service, which is in effect the civil service arm of that board. I think this would be a desirable phenomenon in any case. Its goals are really part of the general cultural policy which the government should be pursuing. Since the National Museum of Canada is now the responsibility of the Secretary of State, it would seem to make more sense to have the Historic Sites and Monuments Board in the same place.

I would, however, prefer to spend most of my time today speaking about the second part of the motion which suggests an expansion, in effect, of the terms of reference of the board. It is my suggestion that the board not be limited as it now is both in regard to funds and function. The terms of reference of the board are not sufficiently broad, and it could be doing a much more valuable job in relation to the preservation and encouragement of the maintenance of parts of our historic and cultural heritage.

My argument is that the present activities of the board are restricted by its initial concept and also perhaps by the approach of those who govern the board, which I believe is one of historical conservancy. It is interesting that the members of the board are almost, but not entirely, archivists or professors of history. There are on the board no architects, no urban planners, nobody concerned with the history of architecture, no landscape architects. Indeed, the orientation of the board and its origin I think can be clearly seen in a document provided to me by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board. This document indicates that in spite of the changes that have taken place since the board was established in 1919, the fundamental concept of the board has not changed. It is a federal body whose appointed members have the collective duty of advising the minister on what sites, events, persons, buildings and objects are of national historical importance. I emphasize the words "national historical importance."

The board's terms of reference are keyed to historical geography, since the Historic Sites and Monuments Act refers to "historic places." If one looks at the Historic Sites and Monuments Act one finds there are continual references to the historic aspect of the board's function. The minister may, by means of plaques or other signs or in any other suitable manner, mark or otherwise commemorate historic places. He may make agreements with any persons for marking or commemorating historic places and for the care and preservation of any places so marked or commemorated. The minister may establish historic museums. He can acquire, on behalf of Her Majesty in the right of Canada, any historic places or lands for historic museums. One sees that the emphasis is entirely on the historical aspect. If you look at the criteria which the board uses in assessing a project you see that such things are considered as:

> The site or structure shall be closely associated or identified with events that have shaped Canadian history in a prominent way—

Another criterion is:

> The site or structure shall have been prominently associated with the life of a great Canadian or an important movement in Canadian history—

Another criterion is that the structure shall embody the distinguishing characteristics of an architectural type exceptionally valuable for the study of a style or method of construction or its period or be a noteable example of the work of an early master builder, designer or architect. An important consideration of the board in assessing projects is that the potential for illustrating Canadian history shall be high. In other words, there has been what I would call an archival orientation, an emphasis upon the museum or historical function.

What have been the results of this policy? Since 1919 the Historic Sites and Monuments Board has noted 600 sites as being of national historic importance. It has established 31 major national historic parks, and it has preserved over 30 buildings—in almost 50 years of activity. I suggest this is certainly the result of insufficient funds but it is also a result of the restricted interpretation placed upon the words "national historic importance."

If we consider what other countries are doing in this regard we cannot but come to the conclusion that we are lagging behind. In the United Kingdom, for instance, the Historic Buildings Council is supporting 1,200 historic buildings at a cost of something like $20 million. The National Trust in Great Britain is responsible for 190 historic buildings and owns 400,000 acres of land. Indeed, the National Trust is, next to the government of Great Britain, the largest landowner in the country.

I would like to consider what the French are doing in this regard, because they have developed some very imaginative ideas in this area. They are supporting 10,000 classified monuments in France and have elaborated a whole system of financial assistance for the preservation of these monuments. The French government is prepared to provide 50 per cent of the total cost of renovating and maintaining historic monuments. It is supporting about 15,000 monuments and historic buildings listed in the supplementary inventory, and the state can meet up to 40 per cent of the cost of any repairs or maintenance considered necessary.

The French have a policy of encouraging by fiscal measures the owners of properties classified or listed as historic monuments by means of deducting from income tax a proportion of the expenses of repairing and maintaining these buildings. Very imaginatively they have developed a monthly television program called "Masterpieces in Peril" which informs the public not only of the dangers threatening certain monuments forming part of the national heritage but also of the efforts of voluntary rescue workers. They have also established a prize of $30,000 which is distributed each year to persons who have been instrumental in saving or working to save a monument.

Those are European examples and one might suggest that in France and England there are more historic buildings and places of cultural interest which require to be preserved. But if you look at the United States, a country which we sometimes hear is lagging in cultural and spiritual matters, you find that since 1966 they have been spending over $10 million a year on projects designed to preserve the 17th, 18th and 19th century heritage of that country. Their earlier efforts which were limited, as we are now in Canada, to projects of national significance were found in 1966 to be unsatisfactory.

For instance, in respect of historic sites legislation in the United States it was said that earlier efforts to preserve historic sites had been limited for the most part to projects of national significance acquired and administered by the national trust with donated funds. On the state and local levels, where historic lands and buildings were increasingly endangered by the bulldozer, interest and activity in preservation varied widely. Because of this, in 1966 the Congress of the United States passed an act which was intended to foster interest in saving landmarks of both local and national significance. I emphasize, not simply national but also local significance.

As I have said, they are now spending something like $10 million a year on these projects. The Americans are doing some very imaginative things under their program in connection with the housing and urban development act. They conduct surveys of historic places; they prepare local and state plans for preservation programs; they plan specific preservation activities in urban renewal projects; they acquire, protect and enhance historic buildings and sites, as we do; they carry out special demonstration projects to develop and study significant preservation methods for the guidance of other communities.

This is one of the more interesting things they do. They acquire restorable buildings and resell them to private parties who agree to rehabilitate and maintain them according to the requirements of the urban renewal plan. These buildings are restored and refurbished, then sold to private parties who agree to rehabilitate and maintain them under the urban renewal plan.

In addition, the federal government of the United States makes grants available to assist in planning. For communities of under 50,000 population, the American government has even more extensive programs which are designed not simply to maintain buildings of unique or historic interest but buildings worthy of preservation because of their beauty or interest.

In the United States over 200 of these projects are now under way. It seems to me that in comparison with what other countries are doing the Canadian record of 30 buildings being supported by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board is really a pretty sorry accomplishment. We are lagging behind. I suspect that one of the reasons we are lagging behind is that the board, because of its terms of reference and the fact that it is now within the present department, is not sufficiently concerned with the preservation and maintenance of our cultural heritage. I do not see why the activities of this board should be limited to monuments of a national or historic significance. There are many buildings of local or regional interest which are well worthy of being preserved. I think we should be leading the provinces in this area and not simply following in their footsteps. It should be the federal government which should be concerned, much more that it has been, for instance, with the maintenance, preservation and restoration of the port area in Montreal. How many fine buildings have been lost by delay there? There are many areas in this country—the town of Niagara-on-the-Lake is one—where a great deal of help could be provided to maintain the legacy of our past.

It seems to me we should be investigating more actively the possibility of using tax credits for these purposes. We should be doing more to publicize the fine buildings we have. We should be doing more to encourage interest in them by tourists and travellers in Canada. I suggest that museums and institutions such as Upper Canada Village are fine, but I do not think we should adopt an archival approach to this problem.

We should try to maintain the tradition and the grace of some of the eighteenth and nineteenth century buildings which exist in this country. I think we should keep alive what was good in the past not simply because it is of unique or museum value but because it is good. The roots of heaven are to be found here on earth, but the roots of the present are to be found in the past. Many of the buildings in the Maritimes, Ontario and Quebec preserve a living tradition and living values which have gone into the make-up of what we are as Canadians today. I suggest we should preserve these buildings, and we should be more active in preserving them not simply for their historical significance but because they are part of the values which are embodied in the Canadian character. We should preserve them not simply because they are unique but because they are good and beautiful.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I want to support the hon. member who has introduced this motion. Like him I feel it is high time that parliament and the government gave more attention to the preservation of Canada's historic past. I am pleased that a member on the government side of the house has brought forward this motion at this time because there has not been too much enthusiasm from that quarter in supporting similar motions that we in this party have proposed from time to time in respect of this matter. The Historic Sites and Monuments Board has, as part of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, had a rather chequered career. I was responsible for it during the period when I was in charge of that department, and I was aware then that there had been serious neglect in bringing into focus the historic sites which are identified with Canada's pathway to nationhood.

I was fortunate to have the opportunity of being responsible for this board when we were planning our centennial year. As a result there was an upsurge of interest in the subject of preserving and perpetuating Canadian history, and plans went forward to have a major historic commemoration and restoration with the idea of perpetuating living examples of Canadian history in our historic sites. A major project in each province was contemplated. Of course the maritimes were emphasized because that is where a good deal of Canadian history had its beginning. It was during that period that plans went forward for Louisbourg. A project which will be completed shortly at Signal Hill was moved forward into the development stage. Plans were in progress for Citadel Hill in Halifax and right across the country even to the farthermost northern recesses of Canada in commemoration of Dawson City as a historic complex.

I find it interesting that the hon. member has broadened the concept in the resolution to include the preservation of towns, villages and landmarks of artistic, cultural or historical interest. I think the Dawson City complex was the first attempt on the part of Canada to commemorate a whole community which represented one of the high watermarks in the development of the Northwest Territories as it was known in those days. It has been universally recognized through the poetry of Robert Service and the writings of Jack London and is one of the best known historic sites in any part of Canada.

Unfortunately the program that was started in preparation for the centennial has not been expanded beyond that point. I think we were perhaps sidetracked into other activities that became associated with our centennial celebrations. We concentrated on Expo, a major feature of our centennial which represented a huge investment, with the result that the program recommended by the advisory committee in the early planning stages of the centennial celebrations was sidetracked from the fundamental purpose of making 1967 a year when we would have major breakthroughs in the preservation and restoration of our historic past. Unfortunately, even the project for a national museum which would be of a standard befitting a country such as Canada was sidetracked for such projects as the national centre for the performing arts which has been under discussion in this house from time to time. The funds that could have been used for historic preservation and commemoration were drained off into these other projects.

I am hoping there will be general support for the hon. member's resolution because it puts back into proper focus the cultural and historic activity of our country which has been neglected far too long. Of course it also has other features. We often talk about the demands for spiritual and cultural pursuits in this age of growing leisure. When we think of that aspect of the modern society in Canada we immediately move into the whole area of the development not only of historic parks and monuments but also of recreational and national parks. Again this is an area in which the government has been moving very slowly or hardly at all in recent years.

We have heard some talk in recent days that we will be moving forward to establish national parks in the days that lie ahead. However, there has been no change in this situation since 1963. It is not enough for the house to approve a resolution recommending that the functions of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board be transferred from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the department of the Secretary of State. This is an interesting change in the physical location of this particular function at the Ottawa level, but the problem is much more inclusive than that.

I should like to suggest that not only Ottawa has responsibility in these matters. Our provinces are deeply involved in historic restoration and preservation. Indeed, many of the provinces have been much more active than Ottawa in this regard. Of course, some of the large urban centres have been active in preserving historic buildings within their borders. In so far as the provinces are concerned, I merely mention such major restorations and commemorations as the pioneer village and old Fort Henry in Ontario and Barkerville in British Columbia, which is a complete restoration of one of the gold rush cities along the gold rush trail. In Manitoba we have Fort Garry, and Lower Fort Garry is being developed as an animated historic site. I have already mentioned Louisbourg, the largest project of this kind which is going forward in the province of Nova Scotia.

Although there is no mention of this in the resolution, I think it is only right to point out now that we might revitalize or even revive the federal-provincial parks committee which was set up back in the sixties in order to bring about a joint program under the auspices of Ottawa and the provincial governments so that Canada as a nation might move forward to do precisely what the hon. member has suggested this afternoon, to accelerate the program of preserving our historic sites.

There is one more subject that I feel should be mentioned at this time. If we are going to co-ordinate our museums, our historic sites and our historic parks program under the department of the Secretary of State for the sake of greater efficiency and, we trust, greater enthusiasm on the part of the government for its responsibilities in these matters, I think we might also give attention to bringing under the aegis of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board the activities of the National Battlefields Commission which operates as a separate entity in the province of Quebec. The sole responsibility of this commission is to preserve, protect and develop the battlefields in and around Quebec city which are associated with Canada's early history. It seems to me that there is absolutely no difference at all in the functions of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board and the activities of the National Battlefields Commission which has this one isolated and exclusive responsibility.

With these comments, Mr. Speaker, I support the resolution. This does not necessarily mean we are going to resolve the problem the hon. member has in mind. The mere shifting of this activity from one portfolio to another might mean a change, as I have indicated, in the physical location, but unless the government becomes more deeply involved in its responsibilities in this regard than it has since 1963, unless it revitalizes the program that was going forward in the early sixties, we are not going to achieve the results that I believe a great many members of this house would like to achieve. In addition to the sentiments in the resolution, therefore, I would urge the government to move forward on the basis of the program that was outlined in the early days of centennial planning, to reactivate the federal-provincial parks committee which has been dormant in recent years, and to attempt to co-ordinate all the activities in the field of historic site commemoration along with general park development with provincial bodies as well as civic authorities. This is the day and age of leisure, which is a trite expression. The government has a responsibility to see to it that Canadians in every part of Canada have park facilities of all kinds so that they may, as the hon. member has suggested, be able to enjoy their spiritual and cultural heritage.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments about that notice of motion which deals with one of the most interesting problems for the Canadian people.

I reluctantly express an opinion contrary to that of my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Roberts). I am reluctant also because my position is the opposite to that of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) who was, before I had the honour of being a member of this house, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who is responsible for this matter relating to the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada.

If we consider the problem according to a most current and logical theory, we will be inclined to say that it is logical, that the responsibility for the National Sites and Monuments Board rests with the Secretary of State.

We may appear at first sight to be considering only the cultural, social and intellectual aspect of this problem of development of historic sites, the preservation of historic buildings, and the classification of historic events during which prominent persons in our history became famous.

However, when a method gives good results, it is not logical to put it away and waste energy which we may need in other fields.

It is obvious that, according to our principles, we are in favour of change and development. However, we must consider that development so as to obtain the most immediate results. This is why I think the mover of this motion has forgotten the role which is now played by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, not taking into consideration the environment in which it acts and the principles on which its recommendations are based.

I presume that the department, advised by the board, must also consider extensive projects as well as the available funds and the opportunities of finding specialized personnel in that field to carry out those projects.

For this reason, I am of the opinion that this board should remain under the department, as is the case at present. We should obviously, in keeping with the present policy of the government, tend towards improving government administration. But we can do that not by thinking immediately of making all sorts of changes but rather by stabilizing the structures we already have, in order to allow the board better to fulfil its terms of reference.

I think it is worthwhile to glance rapidly at the present status of this board and at the present policy of the government which actually has been in existence for many years. From what we know, the terms of reference of this board are very important indeed.

The Historic Sites and Monuments Board advises—and that is its main function—the minister responsible for the elaboration and implementation of a national development program with regard to historic sites on any subject of a historic nature.

It was said earlier, if I am not mistaken, that today the Board does not have enough architects, and engineers among its members.

I feel that at times several architects or engineers would be useful to the Board but since its responsibility is to advise the minister on national programs dealing with matters of a historic character and since it is made up of distinguished historians and of at least one archivist, those specialists can make appropriate and useful recommendations to the minister and then the architects, the engineers and the town planners can start implementing the program.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski).]

If we refer to our legislation, we can see that the National Parks Act gives the minister the responsibility I mentioned a few moments ago, that is the responsibility for the elaboration and implementation of a national development program with regard to historic sites or anything of a historic nature. The act gives that responsibility to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I cannot say or I cannot imagine why, at that time, the legislators did not give that responsibility to the Secretary of State, but I suppose that they then had serious reasons to give it to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

This responsibility was specified in 1953. When it was passed, the Historic Sites and Monuments Act provided the statutory base for the operation of the board and defined its role as an advisory one. This role is very well defined in section 5. In a booklet published by the National and Historic Parks Branch under the title "National Historic Sites Policy", we find this section 5 on page 2, which reads as follows:

> The Board may receive and consider recommendations respecting the marking or commemoration of historic places, the establishment of historic museums and the administration, preservation and maintenance of historic places and historic museums, and shall advise the minister in carrying out his powers under this act.

It is fitting to recall that the board itself was established in 1919 and from that date until the act was passed in 1953, operated under order in council authority. It is interesting to see the results which the board achieved.

Since its establishment, more than 600 sites have been designated as being of national historic significance and 31 historic sites and parks of prime national interest have been opened to the public.

Furthermore, steps were taken to preserve more than 30 buildings designated as being of a national historic significance.

The board usually meets twice a year. That means that other bodies carry out the projects. At every meeting, the board reviews proposals or recommendations made by individuals or representatives of historical societies, provincial or municipal governments, organizations interested in historic persons, sites or events, to appraise the merits of every proposal according to its national rather than regional or local significance.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Research reports on subjects to be studied are prepared under the auspices of the research division of the Historic Sites Service of Canada. The recommendations of the Board are then submitted to the ministers for their approval, in accordance with our legislation.

The Board is composed of fourteen members, twelve of whom represent the ten provinces. There are two representatives from Quebec, two from Ontario, and one for each of the eight other provinces. There is also the federal archivist and an official of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The provincial representatives are appointed by ministerial decree and chosen on the basis of their ability as historians and archivists. Because the Board acts as an autonomous jury, it must take care to give the best possible advice. As the responsibilities of the Board have increased in the last few years, it has decided to establish special committees to increase the results of its research. Those committees dealt particularly with criteria for the selection of special subjects. It has established for example a committee which would particularly deal with fur-trading and primitive sites of Indian tribes.

With the passing years, the Board has felt necessary to determine a certain policy to help it to play its role. In March 1968, it tabled in the house a report on the policy of the historic national sites giving an outline of the criteria regulating the selection of those sites. It was, as it were, the synthesis of the policy adopted by the members of the Commission over the years, and it may be useful to mention again its achievements.

I think that I should stress the complexity of the work and of the present mandate not only of the Commission, which is not the only one to act in this field since it has but an advisory role, but also the related services which carry out these projects after planning them.

These are the criterions of the Commission and the various committees it sets up occasionally, and I quote:

It is a policy that national history sites shall be located within the geographical boundaries of Canada.

Secondly,

(i) The site or structure shall be closely associated or identified with events that have shaped Canadian history in a prominent way, or illustrate effectively the broad cultural, social, political, economic or military patterns of Canadian history;

or

(ii) The site or structure shall have been prominently associated with the life of a great Canadian personage;

or

(iii) The site or structure shall have been prominently associated with an important movement in Canadian history;

or

(iv) The site or structure shall shed light on or illustrate effectively the culture of a prehistoric people, or shall be associated with important archaeological discoveries which have affected ideas and concepts to a major degree;

or

(v) The structure shall embody the distinguishing characteristics of an architectural type exceptionally valuable for the study of a style or method of construction or its period or be a notable example of the work of an early master builder, designer or architect.

If the site or structure has religious importance, in order to be eligible it shall also be significant in other fields of Canadian history and shall be no longer in active use by a religious order or congregation.

The potential for illustrating Canadian history shall be high—that is the site or structure shall be such that it will be possible for the visitor to gain an understanding of the history with which it is associated.

The site shall possess integrity; that is, it shall be known to be what it is represented to be, and shall include the original site. A further important consideration would be the extent of original materials and workmanship remaining.

I am trying to prove that considering the carrying out of our projects, up to now, as well as the criteria which must be applied with regard to the terms of reference of the Board and to the service which must be provided, and in the light of the minister's responsibility—which was conferred upon him under the act—as well as of the co-operation which must exist among various organizations, not only the federal government, but also provincial and municipal authorities, before making drastic changes, the resulting costs should be borne in mind, at a time when the government is trying to balance its budget. When considering the co-operation among the experts and various agencies of the government, we bear in mind the costly duplication which would impede the progress and success of our projects.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, in the rather forlorn hope that this resolution will not be talked out I intend to speak for only a few minutes. The resolution seems to contain two main proposals: first, that the Historic Sites and Monuments Board be transferred from the department of Indian affairs to the Secretary of State and, second, that its responsibilities be expanded from merely looking after monuments to looking after larger items of historical interest such as towns, villages, landmarks and so on. I believe that both proposals are in line with our cultural development as a nation.

Twenty or 30 years ago the department of Indian affairs was looked on much as we look upon an attic. If we had something to preserve we put it in the attic under the care of the department of Indian affairs. Once in a while we took it out and looked at it. Such was the case with our national museum a few years ago.

I believe that the Historic Sites and Monuments Board ought to be transferred to the Secretary of State who looks after cultural affairs. With regard to the other proposal that we enlarge our concern in this matter to preserving our historic towns, villages and landmarks, this also is in line with the cultural development of Canada and is to be commended.

I had the honour to be a member of the centennial committee in British Columbia and I can say that some of the provinces are ahead of the federal government in preserving little towns as living monuments. It is not enough to set up monuments to the dead. We have to recreate the life of earlier communities such as Barkerville, once the largest community north of San Francisco, which was restored by the government of British Columbia so successfully that it attracts thousands of visitors from the United States and elsewhere every year.

It has been well said that if we lose our memories, either as individuals or as a nation there is not really very much left. It is important that we keep our memories as persons, as families and as a country. In this age we are singularly able to do something about this in Canada because of advanced photographic and tape-recording techniques and the greater amount of leisure time which can be devoted to a review of what ought to be preserved. I shall confine myself to these remarks. I rose to support the motion, Mr. Speaker, and I hope it will come to a vote.

Mr. H. Gordon Barrett (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak in favour of this motion. Aside from a general interest in the historical aspects of this country I have a direct interest since Lincoln riding which I represent contains the historic town of Niagara-on-the-Lake.

[Mr. Mather.]

I know that the provincial and federal governments have done a great deal to preserve historic places and monuments but there is a great deal still left to be done. If responsibility in this area were transferred to the department of the Secretary of State the situation in this regard would, I feel, be greatly improved.

I am sure all hon. members are aware of the part played by Laura Secord in the war of 1812-1814. The tragedy is that the home she visited has been lost as the result of neglect on somebody's part. I hope that in the future homes of this sort can be restored and maintained by enabling people to live in them as an alternative to leaving them unoccupied.

I have suggested that departmental responsibility for this work be assigned to the Secretary of State. This seems logical, especially if one considers that the riding I represent is situated in the most southerly part of Ontario where so many great events in Canadian history have occurred but responsibility for preserving and commemorating the memory of the past lies with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. To my mind, this is strange. If the change I am proposing can be made I feel it would be helpful in preserving and in some cases restoring all those things which belong to Canadians as a whole. The department of the Secretary of State has in the past been charged with maintaining and correlating records of everything we want to remember, and it is the logical place for the activities we are now considering.

These are a few short words only on a subject which is both interesting and vital. I hope that in some ways the objective in the mind of the mover of this motion can become an actuality. I attach great importance to this, believing that parts of our country with a special claim to fame should become, in a sense, the property of the people of Canada as a whole rather than just a section. The sponsor of the motion indicated that it was desired to maintain certain towns which at the moment are of regional interest. I feel that the idea could be broadened in its scope. Nevertheless I hope the motion succeeds in its objective, if not today then at some time in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, allow me to bring forth the viewpoint of a representative of the province of Quebec.

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of transferring the authority over the Historic Sites and Monuments Board to the Secretary of State—

—up to that point, I have no objection.

—and of expanding the responsibility of this Board from concern for buildings and monuments of unique historical interest to general assistance in the preservation of towns, villages and landmarks of artistic, cultural or historical interest.

I object to the last part, Mr. Speaker because all this already exists in Quebec; and if there is a field in which Quebecers are entitled to be jealous of their concern about historic and artistic matters, it is that very field which is their own business.

And to see what can happen when the federal government has too much to say in these matters, one has only to think of the unfortunate situation that exists now. In the city of Quebec, the population of which is 98 per cent French-Canadian, there is a park of the battle-fields which falls within the jurisdiction of that board, and there are monuments, such as the Wolfe monument. There is nothing very pleasant for Quebecers in saluting the author of the defeat they would have liked to forget.

Of course, I do not approve those who decided to remove the monument in 1963, nor do I approve those who removed commemorative plaques.

Mr. Speaker, those incidents struck me in a very special way since I was accused of having stolen the said commemorative plaques which commemorated the arrival of the first British sovereign to set foot in America.

Of course, although I was accused of having stolen them, I had neither the competence, nor perhaps the courage to do so; but I am not saying I would not have done it, had I had—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to advise the house concerning the business for tomorrow. The first order of business will be the continuation of Item No. 24, third reading of Bill No. C-124 dealing with the C.N.R. financing. That would be followed by the resolution preceding amendment of the Customs Tariff, pursuant to the budget. The third order of business would be No. 7, second reading of Bill No. C-112, to amend the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act.

I might also advise the house that I will not be in the chamber during the question period tomorrow, but my colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) will respond at that time with regard to the order of business for the coming week.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock the house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2.30.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the growing embarrassment to our representatives at NATO and to members of parliament arising from the ambiguity of his government's position toward NATO and the resulting disrepute of this country, can the Prime Minister reconsider his position and give the house an assurance that the study of our external position will be completed by an early date, which he might indicate, to be followed promptly by a firm statement by the Prime Minister as to what our policy is?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the so-called growing embarrassment mentioned by the hon. gentleman, I should like to reassure him that this is not the case. Our position is as I described it in the house a few days ago. Of course when the review is completed I will want to make a statement about the government's policy in that area, but until that time has come the government will continue to assume the present position.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the obvious refusal of the Prime Minister to give any firm commitment with regard to the time of completion of this study, would the Prime Minister indicate whether the study is being conducted simply within the governmental spheres or whether personnel outside the government service is being consulted in connection with it?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me answer once again the first part of the hon. gentleman's question in this way. It is not that I refuse to give assurance with regard to the date, but that such a date does not exist, and of course I am not in a position to say now when the study will be completed. We want it to be well and thoroughly done, and we realize that the sooner it is completed the better. I cannot give a date for reasons not under my control; we want this study to be as thorough as possible.

With regard to the second part of the question, I just want to say that the review is being done in a way which we find to be most compatible with a fresh and new look being given to this subject in the advice to the government.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, is it really too much to ask the Prime Minister on a question as important as this one to give us an indication as to the scope of the review and the scope of the consultation in connection with the review?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in answering the hon. gentleman with regard to the scope of the review. It is very wide in scope; that is why it is taking some time. I believe I have indicated at another time in the house that it extends to our external policy both in Europe—

Mr. Stanfield: But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Trudeau: This is the scope of the review.

Mr. Stanfield: What about the scope of the consultation?

Mr. Trudeau: The scope of the consultation is as wide as is the subject. The Department of External Affairs is itself engaged in this review with the help of all people necessary to ensure the best possible results. Most of the study is being done within the department, but the government is also turning to other sources of advice.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a further supplementary question. Could the Prime Minister indicate whether the representatives of his government, the Canadian personnel at the NATO meeting, are giving any assurance to NATO countries with regard to the continuation of the stationing of the Canadian armed forces in Europe; and if any such assurance is being given, is the actual size of the forces to be maintained under NATO also indicated and for what if any length of time?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the two ministers engaged in the Brussels talks now are telling our fellow members of NATO that we are engaged in this review; that at the present time we do not want to make any decisions which will prejudge the results. We are not envisaging now any drastic move forward or backward out of NATO until this review is completed. We are trying as much as possible to hold the line until the review is completed.

Mr. Stanfield: I have one final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, on a question of such importance. Is it fair to assume from what the Prime Minister has said that the representatives of Canada at this council meeting will not in fact give any firm assurance with regard to the forces, as to quantity or as to time?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Trudeau: Well, it depends what the hon. member intends by that type of assurance. We of course are not going to give any firm assurance in respect of increasing our commitments to NATO; neither are our representatives instructed to indicate we are going to pull out of NATO. I hope this answers the question.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he made a determination as to the accuracy of reports that our ambassador to NATO has denounced Canada's NATO policy as being vacillating?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not attempted to determine that. I take the position that in this particular government, policy is decided by the cabinet and not by the press.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): May I ask the Prime Minister, then, why he is getting this information outside of cabinet circles and outside the Department of External Affairs, and why he does not tell us who are these anonymities who give advice to the Canadian government about what it ought to do?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the policy decisions of this government are based on advice not only from civil servants but from all the areas which are available to us. This government is not taking the position that it must necessarily be guided only by what is decided by the civil servants. We are ministers who are responsible to the Canadian people and we are seeking advice from all possible sources.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not intend to embarrass the Prime Minister by pressing the question, but who are these incognitos who are being consulted about what Canada should do in connection with a policy that Canadians as a whole support?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it would not be realistic to expect me to give the names of all the people who have given me advice over the past year. They would probably include the right hon. member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All I have to say is that if I were consulted I would advise carrying out Canada's responsibilities, which this government is not even doing.

Mr. Trudeau: It seems hypothetical to me, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the Canadian ambassador to NATO submitted his resignation and, if so, has it been accepted?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—FURTHER ATTEMPT TO EXTRADITE FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

In view of the attitude of some American senators and the election of a new American president, can the minister tells us if his department has started procedures to get Hal Banks extradited, since the Americans seem more conciliatory and ready to send Hal Banks back to Canada to face the charges laid against him?

[English]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is the opinion of the law officers of the crown that proceedings for the extradition of Mr. Banks are spent, and that any attempt to reopen the case before the United States courts would not succeed.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of what the Minister of Justice has said, would the minister discuss with the attorney general of the province of Ontario the steps to be taken to request the incoming administration in the United States and the new United States secretary of state to review the Hal Banks case, with a view to securing his extradition to this country? I am suggesting that the minister contact the proper authorities in Ontario—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: —and have them contact the United States officials regarding a review.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have received no request from the province of Ontario to have the federal government attempt to reopen the case with the United States.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question. Is this government or this minister going to ask the attorney general of Ontario or the proper department in the United States to review this situation?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have just stated the opinion of the law officers of the crown, for the Attorney General of Canada, that the case could not be successfully reopened. As a principle of law I suggest to the hon. member, who is learned in the law, that a mere change in executive in the United States is not sufficient reason to place a man in double jeopardy before the courts. There has been a trial, and it has been concluded.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He never was in jeopardy.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the Minister of Justice, in view of what his officers have said, request the legal officers in the United States and their department to see whether they would review the situation, in view of the fact that a change of administration is about to take place?

An hon. Member: That was a political decision in the United States.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I heard the remark that that was a political decision of the United States. The case for Mr. Banks' extradition has been before the United States courts and the proceedings have been exhausted. Speaking legally, Mr. Speaker, I see no useful purpose in attempting to have the United States courts reopen the case. It is the opinion of the law officers of the crown that this would not be successful.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, any dealings with the United States would have to be through diplomatic channels. I am speaking of the law as it is interpreted to me, namely that the extradition proceedings having been taken unsuccessfully before the United States courts those extradition proceedings are spent, and that the case could not be successfully reopened before the courts.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question. Would the minister not admit that the courts prepared an order so the extradition would have gone forward, but that it was reviewed by Secretary of State Dean Rusk—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: I am asking, Mr. Speaker, that that be reviewed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's additional supplementary is argumentative.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

REPRESENTATIONS AS TO CANADIAN HOLDINGS OF U.S. FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister advise the house whether representations have been made by the government of Canada to the United States government to lift the ceiling of $2.6 billion in permitted holdings of United States exchange by the Canadian government?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the matter has been discussed, and it is a question of continuing discussion. I should indicate to the house that the ceiling figure is a target, not an absolute limit, a target that has been exceeded from time to time in the past and may be exceeded in the future. However, the matter is under discussion at the official level.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to advise whether an early decision in this matter is expected, or is the Canadian government to continue to be restricted further for many months to come?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the government is restricted by the present level of the ceiling. We are close to the ceiling now. We have exceeded it from time to time in the past, and that has neither caused any difficulties nor had any effect upon the monetary policies we follow in this country.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did I understand the minister to say that there is in fact no ceiling?

Mr. Benson: That is not what I said at all, as my hon. friend would know that if he had been listening. I said the ceiling was a target which we have exceeded from time to time. Of course we have also gone well below it in Canada, in some circumstances. There will not be any great difficulty if, as has happened in the past, we run over the ceiling. I do not foresee any difficulties with the United States in this regard. I have said, however, that the whole matter is under discussion.

Mr. Baldwin: You are always so optimistic.

[Mr. Speaker.]

INQUIRY AS TO FLOATING EXCHANGE RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Is the government considering a revision of its monetary policy to provide for a floating exchange rate, as advocated recently by the chairman of the Royal Bank of Canada?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORTATION

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—STUDY OF PROBLEMS BY STANDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister make appropriate arrangements to authorize the standing committee on transport and communications to complete its visit to the maritime provinces for the hearings that were interrupted last year by the election?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should be quite happy to give any assistance to the committee that it is within my jurisdiction to give.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister please see that this matter is hurried, because the briefs that were prepared for that visit are quickly becoming obsolete.

Mr. Hellyer: I should like to help to expedite this matter, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—REPORTED STATEMENTS RESPECTING OBSERVER TEAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs or his parliamentary secretary. Is the minister aware of recent statements made by Biafran officials respecting the international observer team? One statement was made by Dr. Eke, the Biafran commissioner for information; who called the observer team a bunch of crooks and said they were not welcome in Biafra. Another statement was made by Colonel Ojukwu, in which he said the observer team would be welcome in Biafra.

Could the Minister clear up the apparent contradiction?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the question in that form is acceptable. The hon. member is asking whether the minister is aware of certain statements, and I doubt whether a question in that form can be asked.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask if the minister had any direct information about the statements, and whether the government had any intention to widen the terms of reference for the observer team in Biafra.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the information commissioner indicates clearly that the observer team is not welcome in rebel territory.

However, there was a report in this morning's papers to the effect that the rebel leader was inviting the observer team in his territory. We have no confirmation of those two statements but we hope that they will not prevent the continuation of our relief program for the Biafrans.

[English]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In answer to a question on October 23 the Prime Minister in effect said that the government intended to proceed to negotiations dealing with offshore mineral rights, and they expected soon to lay a proposition before the provinces. He also said the matter had been discussed in cabinet and that the cabinet were waiting for the appropriate time to proceed.

As three weeks have passed since that time I wonder whether the Prime Minister can make an announcement on this matter.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have not announced the policy nor have we yet approached the provinces. I share the hon. member's concern, and I am hopeful that it will be done in the immediate future. Time does fly.

Inquiries of the Ministry

VETERANS AFFAIRS

HALIFAX—REPORTED REDUCTION IN HOSPITAL SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the minister received any representation regarding cutbacks in services to veterans at Camp Hill hospital at Halifax, Nova Scotia?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Coates: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister investigate to determine whether services have been cut back at Camp Hill hospital and inform the house of the situation in this regard?

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, services have not been cut back.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PROPOSED LIMITATION ON GRANTS FROM HEALTH FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare may I direct an urgent question to the Prime Minister. In view of the serious situation that has been created regarding the expansion of medical schools—and I refer to the situation created by the announcement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare that there is to be an annual limitation on the amount of grants made out of the health resources fund—will the Prime Minister have the matter checked in the light of the Health Resources Fund Act to see whether the minister has the authority to impose this freeze?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would mind asking this question on a day when the minister is supposed to be in the house.

[Later:]

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, knowing his close relationship with the universities. In view of the acute shortage of doctors and the startling statement that medical schools will be unable to admit more students unless medical research is expanded, will the minister assure the house that everything possible will be done to prevent the impending freeze of capital funds?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman is probably thinking about the health resources fund, for which the minister of health will answer when he is in the house. I should, however, draw the attention of the house to the great increase in the amount of funds provided for medical research since this government took office. It has been going up at the rate of 33⅓ per cent, compounded annually.

Mr. Rynard: I should like to tell the minister that it was his government which brought in medicare, resulting in this great need for doctors.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question, since this question relates partly to the subject about which I directed a question to the Prime Minister a few minutes ago. In view of the urgency of this matter will the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance take it under advisement and give us an answer tomorrow, since the Minister of National Health and Welfare may not be here until Monday, as to whether there is authority under the act as it now reads for this freeze to be implemented?

Mr. Benson: I believe this question, which the hon. gentleman addresses to me so urgently at this time, was answered by the then minister of national health and welfare a year ago.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He answered it the other way.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister tell us whether the continuing committee of federal-provincial fiscal advisers, on which the minister is represented, was sent a report last September by officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare stating that the total cost of medicare in its first year was to be projected at $953 million for both levels of government? If so, how does the minister reconcile such a projection with the budgetary estimates of $335 million for the federal government? After all, there is a gap of $118 million.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether this question is in order, as asked.

[Mr. Rynard.]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am sorry; I did not hear your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It was a doubtful ruling. I said I had some doubt as to whether the question as asked was in order.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR DRAFT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATIVE CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether he would make public for the enlightenment of native Indian people attending consultations and conferences the draft legislation relating to the Indian Act. The minister replied that no such draft document existed in the department. I should like to ask him now what happened to the draft amendments to the Indian Act which the former minister said did exist as of December 11, last year. Has this document been destroyed, or hidden away, or is it just waiting to be resurrected?

Hon. Robert Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Neither I nor the minister of Indian affairs is aware of the existence of this document, but I will bring the hon. member's comments to the attention of the minister on his return.

Mr. Howard: I wonder whether, in the style of the Minister of Finance, I could draw attention to the fact that the reference is to be found in Hansard of December 11, 1967 at page 5264.

TRADE

JAPAN—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE STEEL EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should have liked to put this question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but since he is not here, I shall direct it to the right hon. the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that a trade agreement is on the point of being signed between Canada and Japan respecting hardware imports, could the Prime Minister advise the house whether the Canadian government has convinced the government of Japan to buy in return from Canada the steel necessary for the manufacturing of these products?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that the question is in order and I believe that the hon. member should place it on the order paper.

[English]

WHEAT—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN EXPORTS TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I had a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In his absence I will direct it to the acting minister, or possibly to the Minister of Agriculture who might take it as notice. It relates to the recent startling announcement that Japan has developed a process capable of producing artificial meat from wheat, and is soon to commence producing 150 tons of synthetic meat per month. Can the minister say what action he or his department is taking to step up wheat sales to Japan in order to provide the raw material for this new product?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the question should be placed on the order paper.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FERRY SERVICE, SAINT JOHN, N.B.—DIGBY, N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I should like to address this question to the Minister of Transport, whom I welcome back to this house from the hazards of housing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: I believe the last time the minister spoke was on the day of Hallowe'en. My question arises from an announcement he made that day having to do with the Digby-Saint John ferry. What is the timetable proposed for the ferry ship, or the terminal?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I am pleased to be back. I had a most interesting trip to the Atlantic provinces this week.

An hon. Member: How was the party in Yellowknife?

Mr. Hellyer: I visited my friends down there—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am wondering whether the minister wishes to return to motions.

An hon. Member: He wants to return to Yellowknife.

Mr. Hees: Can the minister tell us about the party in Yellowknife?

Mr. Hellyer: I would be very glad to do so. We certainly missed the hon. gentleman, who is noted for his enjoyment of parties.

With regard to the specific question which was asked, plans in connection with the Saint John-Digby Ferry are proceeding apace. There are some technical difficulties, as the hon. member is well aware because his sources are almost as good as mine. These difficulties, however, are not insurmountable by any means; they are just matters which have to be worked out among all the parties involved. A meeting will be held within days between government officials and representatives of the C.P.R. at which I hope additional progress can be made. I can assure the hon. member that no delay will be tolerated in getting ahead with this important ferry.

Mr. Nowlan: I hope the ferry floats better than the housing. Has the government yet signed an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway concerning terminal facilities for the ferry at Saint John and Digby?

Mr. Hellyer: The question asked by the hon. member is not too precise, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hellyer: It is difficult to know exactly what he is driving at. If he means to ask whether the C.P.R. has agreed to pay wharfage, the answer is, not yet but hopefully soon.

PROPOSED FERRY SERVICE, YARMOUTH-NEW ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): This is really a related question, Mr. Speaker. Is the federal government engaged in any co-operative negotiations with the provincial government of Nova Scotia, Lion Ferry or any United States interests with respect to establishing the proposed Yarmouth-New England ferry?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that this is a supplementary question, but the minister may wish to reply.

Mr. Nowlan: I have a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have allowed the hon. member's question, and I think we might now go on to another.

Mr. Hellyer: We have indicated to the province our willingness to negotiate with them to see what assistance we could lend in this case.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria): Could the Minister of Transport advise us how we in British Columbia can get as good a deal on ferries as they seem to do in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Bell: We have had a raw deal.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—ADMISSION OF DELEGATES TO MONTREAL PEACE CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, this week I wanted to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration but I did put it to the right hon. Prime Minister who gave me sound advice by telling me to put it again to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration when in the house.

In view of the statements made by the police chief in Montreal to the effect that the presence of rogues in that city would be due to a poor supervision on the part of your department, does it expect to exercise closer supervision in the future?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have had no communication from the chief of police in Montreal with respect to any incidents or imminence of disorder.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: I should like to put a supplementary question. You have probably not been officially advised.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must direct his question to the Chair.

Mr. La Salle: Are you aware of the fact that the police chief has made an official statement on this subject?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDUSTRY

CAPE BRETON—REPORT ON OPERATION OF COAL MINES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister of regional and rural development. I apologize if that is not his exact title nowadays. Does he propose to table in the house the report that I believe he has received from the Cape Breton Development Corporation with regard to future planning in the operation of the coal mines in Cape Breton?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Prime Minister of Nova Scotia is agreeable to it we will jointly publish the report.

Mr. Stanfield: As a supplementary question, would the minister approach the government of Nova Scotia to see whether agreement could be reached about the tabling of this report?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will communicate with the Prime Minister of Nova Scotia, and I think he will agree.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING OVERHAUL BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell us whether he will take into consideration the reports of experts concerning the closing down of the overhaul base in Winnipeg and its transfer to Montreal?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timmins.

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Speaker, would you allow the Prime Minister to answer me, since I believe that he is ready to do so?

[English]

[Later:]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the assurance given by the former prime minister, Right Hon. Lester Pearson, when he was in office that the Air Canada base at Winnipeg would not be removed, certainly not until after 1972 at the earliest, does the government intend to honour that firm commitment given by the former prime minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is reiterating a question which has been asked on a number of occasions recently.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance wanted to rise on a point of order on my last question, and I think he should be recognized.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean R. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State or his assistant. Can the minister or his assistant inform us, or find out for us, if Radio Canada has decided to allow René Levesque to enjoy the privileges of an official party leader, as the French news broadcasts would seem to indicate?

Mr. Speaker: If this question is in order it should be placed on the order paper. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REPORTED STATEMENTS AS TO EXTENT OF UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. I know I need the exercise of standing up. I was going to ask a question of the Minister of Transport, but perhaps I should let him have a little time to relax in the house again, so I will direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Does the minister concur in the statements which have been emanating from a number of his colleagues that unemployment in many parts of Canada has reached emergency proportions?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question cannot be asked in those terms. The hon. member cannot ask if the minister is in agreement with statements made outside the house.

Mr. Lundrigan: Could I rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker, and ask the minister whether the unemployment situation in many parts of Canada has reached emergency proportions?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that unemployment for the individuals concerned is always an emergency and a matter of serious concern.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lundrigan: As a supplementary question I wish to ask the minister, is he in agreement with or could he comment on the fact that the Minister of Finance has indicated that the major reason for the emergency situation with respect to unemployment is related to the government's cancellation of many programs?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I said nothing of the sort.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is not in order.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—PROTESTS AGAINST EXPANSION OF FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the situation in Malton and the intended extension of the airport area. Approximately 100,000 people who will be seriously affected have raised strong objection. Under the circumstances will the government give reconsideration to its intended decision, or to the decision already made in this connection, and decide on a second area for an airport, as was done in Montreal, so these people who settled in the areas surrounding Malton will not be virtually dispossessed as a result of the additional areas being brought into the airport area?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, last summer when I announced that the government intended to proceed with the expansion of an airport facility at Toronto and the construction of a new airport facility at Montreal I made it clear in both cases that we had to obtain the co-operation of the provincial and municipal governments concerned with zoning in order to provide some element of protection for the airport itself and also for people who might be directly affected as a result of these measures.

Negotiations have been continuing and we have had a number of meetings with the province of Ontario and with various municipalities. I think it would still be premature for me to indicate what the final decision will be. Naturally we must have co-operation with respect to zoning in order to proceed with the expansion at that location.

If the necessary degree of co-operation is forthcoming all the expert advice we have been given, based on exhaustive studies comparing alternative sites with an expansion of the present site, which would indicate that it is the best place for an expansion, on the basis of all the yardsticks considered by the experts, which included relations with people as well—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hellyer: —I can only assure my right hon. friend—

Some hon. Members: Speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. In view of the tremendous upset to the people who have settled there, will not the minister give overriding consideration to the human element?

Mr. Hellyer: Well, of course always, Mr. Speaker, but there are many factors involved so far as providing service to the community is concerned. My right hon. friend will recall that it is not too many years since he and his party were criticizing the location of Malton airport as being too remote from Toronto.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That statement is not correct.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is a supplementary one relating to seaports, not airports, but it is still ports.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I look to port and recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys.

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO SNOW REMOVAL EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. As a result of the extreme hardship and difficulties suffered by thousands of people at Montreal airport during the last two or three days, and in view of the study that was carried out by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the whip of the Conservative party, would the minister cause an investigation to be carried out to ascertain if there is adequate snow removal equipment at this airport?

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is in effect making a representation to the minister. I intended to say there is no urgency to the matter, but I realize there might be so perhaps I shall allow the question.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member would not allow the question to be asked first.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister wishes to reply to the question. I pose it as the result of a 23-hour study by members of this house and senators, and because thousands of people were affected. Is there not enough snow removal equipment to maintain more than one runway clear at Montreal airport?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to make inquiries anyway, and if hon. members and senators could give me the results of their investigation it might speed up my investigation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I would be very glad to give my view of it.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member do this at some other time.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): May I pose a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must bring to the attention of hon. members that the period of time assigned for questions has already expired. I believe, however, we should allow the hon. member to set out his question of privilege.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is the first time the Minister of Transport—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will have to consider the plight of the Chair which has to consider two points of order and a question of privilege. I suggest that according to the rules, the question of privilege takes precedence.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great feeling to get vertical again. A few minutes ago I directed a question to the Minister of Transport and Your Honour ruled that the question had been asked previously and was therefore out of order. I have looked through the questions asked yesterday regarding Air Canada and the air base and there was no question asked, with respect, which relates to the question I asked. For that reason I would request your permission to re-ask the question.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might ask it some other day, as the question period has expired.

Mr. Hees: Oh, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have not yet resolved the question of privilege.

Mr. Hees: That would ordinarily be very satisfactory, Mr. Speaker, and I should be glad to bow to your ruling. The difficulty is that the Minister of Transport will not likely be in the house again for some time and I should like to ask my question today.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt very much whether the rules agreed to by hon. members and by which I must be guided in my decisions would allow me to permit the question at this time.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether we might have the co-operation of hon. members. Apparently some hon. members wish to suggest that more questions should be asked. If it is unanimously agreed among hon. members that we pursue the question period—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The question period has already expired by at least a few minutes. There are two points of order, and I should be pleased to hear them.

Mr. Lundrigan: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I understand there is a second question of privilege, and I will hear it.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I think hon. members should recognize the fact that the Minister of Transport has been out of the house for quite some time and has been back only today. My question of privilege is that perhaps we should go a little easy on him, because he obviously is not with it after his long absence.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, would the house give permission to the Minister of Agriculture, the acting house leader, to indicate the business for the ensuing week?

Mr. Olson: The Minister of Manpower and Immigration is the acting house leader.

Mr. Baldwin: I was misinformed again. May I redirect my question.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys might allow the minister to reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Peace River. I will hear the hon. member's point of order, but I should say that the question period has expired. I will also hear the hon. member's question of privilege.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, later today we hope to deal with third reading of the C.N.R. financing bill, the customs tariff resolution and second reading of the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. Tomorrow we hope to go into committee of supply to deal with the estimates of legislation and those of the Minister of Transport. On Monday we hope to go into committee of supply again to deal with the estimates of the Auditor General and the Treasury Board. On Tuesday we hope to continue with the Customs Tariff resolution, and then deal with estimates for the balance of the week.

The house leader will be consulting with his opposite numbers as to the order of dealing with the estimates.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I tried to catch your eye earlier, and I would normally defer to your suggestion, but since this is the first time we have had the opportunity of seeing the Minister of Transport for some time I wanted to pose my question. It could wait until tomorrow, but according to my rotation I will not be in the house tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: As long as I have an assurance that the Minister of Transport will be in the house tomorrow I will feed my question to somebody else who will direct it to the minister then. Otherwise I should like to ask the indulgence of this house to permit me to ask the question today. It does not really matter whether I ask it today or tomorrow.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, health and weather permitting I will come tomorrow to oblige my hon. friend.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which relates to a question I posed which is of urgent and national importance.

An hon. Member: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): The Speaker sits up there. The reason I bring forward this question of privilege is the fact that the minister attempted to rise to answer my question. I believe he was prepared to answer it but was not given the opportunity. The house went on to a question of privilege on the part of another member. I posed my question because I should like the minister to find out whether it is a policy of Air Canada to allow paraplegics to sit for periods of from 22 to 24 hours in airports. They cannot be moved to hotels or motels. That is the point I should like to have brought to the attention of Air Canada.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Wednesday, November 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. McIlraith (for Mr. Benson) for the third reading of Bill No. C-124, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system for the period from the 1st day of January, 1968 to the 30th day of June, 1969, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and by Air Canada.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in the third reading stage of Bill No. C-124 I should like to support the views expressed by hon. members on both sides of the house concerning the need for the best type of service at the lowest possible cost by our national transportation system, the C.N.R. I particularly support the representations made by hon. members from Newfoundland and the city of Winnipeg.

It is my submission that railways, by their very nature, are public utilities and should operate first and foremost as public services. The public and national interests must take precedence over the narrow interests of a particular railway company. Let me say at the outset that I have always felt the C.N.R. is a great transportation system and is doing a better job than most railway systems throughout the world. In my opinion the C.N.R. is doing a better job of serving the public of Canada than the privately owned system.

I for one would be much happier if this bill provided for several hundred million dollars more to allow the minister to commence to purchase and nationalize the other major railway company in Canada. As one who spent 15 years as a railway employee, watching the disintegration and discontinuance of the services railways must give the public, I submit that the new federal government must move toward a national transportation policy that will provide for an integrated transportation system which is rational, efficient and serves the people of the nation at the lowest possible cost. The public need for railway transportation service takes priority over private needs. If, for example, the choice is between passenger service needed by the people of Newfoundland or dollars, surely the choice is easily made. The people of that area must take priority over dollars.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benjamin: I note that the bill calls for an expenditure of some $68,900,000 for equipment. I submit it is very likely that a large portion of this amount will be for rolling stock and particularly for box cars. I plead with the minister to use whatever influence he may have with Canadian National Railways so that if they do not have sufficient rolling stock in the form of box cars to meet the requirements of grain movement in normal years, and particularly in years of bad harvest conditions, the greater proportion of the money provided for equipment in this bill will go toward the purchase of new rolling stock in the form of box cars to be used to move a greater amount of grain.

In my opinion, in the past several weeks both railways have done an abysmally bad job of meeting an emergency such as we have not had since 1959, and prior to that in 1951-52. In my constituency a C.N.R. shipping point, Tate, Saskatchewan, did not receive a box car for three and a half months. I hope that some of the money being voted in this bill will be used to at least buy one box car to send to Tate, Saskatchewan.

I submit that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) and his colleagues the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) need to sit down with the officials of both our national railway systems and insist that there is an emergency requiring an all-out allocation of freight cars to the movement of damp and tough grain. I estimate, and I am certain this estimate is low, that 100 million bushels of damp grain need to be moved within the next six weeks. This will require each of the two national railways system to allocate and spot 500 to 1,000 cars per day in order to provide for the immediate movement of damp grain. This product is of national importance and if it spoils $150 million in revenue will be lost to the agricultural industry.

I ask the Minister of Transport to take up with the railway officials the question of how many Canadian National Railways' box cars are on United States lines at the present time. I know that sometimes it is very profitable, in the interchange of railway equipment, to have a great many cars on U.S. lines. I also request the Minister of Transport find out what measures are being taken to have these cars returned immediately to Canadian National lines for use in the movement of grain.

I ask the same question in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I know I should not mention this railway company under the bill we are considering, but surely the problem is of sufficient national urgency to require the attention of all the ministers concerned. A systematic plan must be devised in the next two or three days by the ministers concerned, both railroads, the Canadian Wheat Board and the country elevators in order to provide for the immediate, total movement of this grain to terminals for drying.

I plead with the minister to make every possible representation to Canadian National Railways and the other railway company in this respect. As a result of my investigations and telephone calls to shipping points in my constituency and others, it is my opinion that this whole matter is being treated much too casually by both railways. It may require more than just the attention of the minister to solve the problem. It may require the minister to tell both railways the number of box cars they shall immediately supply and keep in grain movement. If they are not prepared to co-operate I suggest they be given no choice but be compelled to supply these box cars.

I spent 15 years as a railway station agent and observed the miserable and incompetent manner in which railway rolling stock is supplied for grain movement. There is nothing new about this. The railway companies take the position, first, that they are out to make a profit and, second, to provide service to the public. Therefore if rolling stock can be used to move lumber at $600 per car from British Columbia to the United States, that is where the rolling stock goes and the wheat can damn well wait.

I submit that because of the crop year we are having the railways cannot be allowed to allocate their rolling stock according to their present practice. I plead with the Minister of Transport and the other ministers concerned in the movement of grain to meet with the railway companies, the wheat board and the elevator companies in order to launch immediately a systematic allocation with regard to the spotting of box cars and the movement of grain to terminals. The grain drying equipment is there ready to be used and it is not being fully utilized at the present time. In spite of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture tries to assure us that all is well, the fact is that all is not well.

I hope that the expenditure of money on equipment will mean an increased supply of rolling stock suitable for the movement of grain so that no longer in normal or abnormal harvest seasons will we have to put up with an unfair, inequitable and inadequate supply of box cars.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will be very brief. I would like to support the requests made so ably and eloquently by hon. members from Newfoundland concerning the Bullet. I draw to the attention of the house and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who again is not here today, the fact that in the spring the Conservative candidates from Atlantic Canada met in St. John's, Newfoundland, and among the resolutions drawn up at that time was one to upgrade the Newfoundland railway service rather than reducing it so drastically. We mainlanders from Atlantic Canada had the opportunity to sense the mood of the people of Newfoundland as well as that of our colleagues.

This is a serious matter to the province of Newfoundland and I think the need of its people in this regard should be reconsidered by the government. I know the government has the convenient refuge of saying that the C.N.R. has proceeded in the regular way and the transportation commission has acted. But surely the voice of this parliament means something, and the voice of the government in this parliament should mean something too. A direction to the C.N.R. and the Canadian Transport Commission could reverse the decision that has been taken.

I appeal to the government to examine this whole matter again in the light of the requests that have been so ably made. I also want to say to the six Conservative members of parliament from Newfoundland that they have 19 allies from Atlantic Canada who are just as firmly committed to this request as they are.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on November 1 I dealt with the resolution presented to the house in connection with C.N.R. financing, and I should like to refer very briefly to one section of the resolution as some reference was made to it the other day by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). When I spoke on the resolution for the New Democratic party I said that we have a responsibility to ensure that the Newfoundland passenger service, trains 101 and 102, is not eliminated. At that time we suggested that money must be allocated for necessary services and that this was one of the most important services that must be retained if we are to keep Canada united. I went on to say that this government will stand accused in the eyes of every man, woman and child in that province if it allows the cancellation of this rail service to go through. I referred at that time to the fact that we in this party agree wholeheartedly with hon. members from Newfoundland that the service must be retained.

I was somewhat disappointed when one hon. member expressed as late as yesterday his regret at the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and his colleagues had failed to rise and support him in the house. May I say, in order to clear the record, that this party does support the hon. member's request and did speak in favour of retaining the service as early as November 1.

There is one other point which I should like to bring to the attention of the house. It has to do with an article published recently in the Regina Leader-Post entitled "Despite Experience of U.S. Train Travel Not Dying Out". I should like to suggest respectfully to the management of the C.N.R. that they are doing a good job now as long as they do not eliminate any more passenger services and as long as they provide the service which must be provided for all of Canada. The article reads in part as follows:

> —in some parts of the world travel by train is better than ever.

It is true enough that in some parts of Canada, particularly those areas that are serviced by the C.N.R., travel by train is better than ever, but if trains 101 and 102 in Newfoundland are eliminated I suggest we will not be able to stand up and boast about our passenger service. This article also refers to the fact that trains are winning new popularity in South Africa and in Canada where the Canadian National Railways has introduced a bistro car with sing-along entertainers, yellow-vested waiters and a gay nineties décor. I suggest that if we are to retain our lead in the world today we must not eliminate any more passenger services. I should like to refer to the last part of this article which suggests the following:

> —the newly formed federal department of transportation has been taking steps to protect U.S. railroads, and new turbo trains and high speed city to city trains are being developed.
> With our highway traffic jams steadily worsening and flocks of stacked airliners circling above the airports, . . . American travellers will have to return to the rails.

I suggest that if we expect to keep Canada united the people of this country will have to return to the use of railways. I believe it will become increasingly more impossible to use highways because they are becoming more and more congested, and as long as the air lines are subjected to the conditions to which they are being subjected at this time—we heard about this during the question period today—a return to the railways will become inevitable. I respectfully suggest that the management of Canadian National Railways give serious consideration to their transportation policy and ensure that their service does not deteriorate in any way, shape or form.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my contribution to the debate on third reading of Bill No. C-124, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system, will be brief because I feel that the subject matter has been quite thoroughly covered by previous speakers. However, I should like to say that I fully sympathize with the pleas and arguments put forward by my colleagues from the great province of Newfoundland with respect to the maintenance of the passenger rail service in Newfoundland.

May I say, since I come from western Canada, that several years ago we were faced with a rail line abandonment in our part of Canada which was particularly serious because it affected our agricultural industry. The same problem still exists there but fortunately for us a good mother nature provided us with several bumper crops and the railways found it necessary to maintain their rolling stock and to increase their box car capacity. So the railway service is being maintained for the time being.

Of course this was the policy of the previous government, ably supported by the minister concerned who put a moratorium on rail line abandonments at that time. I might say I had the honour of being a member of the transport committee for several years and flowing through the recommendations and the study that was made by the MacPherson royal commission was a thread of discontent with regard to the railway cost accounting formula on the part of all the witnesses who appeared before the standing committee on transportation.

It seems to me that whenever an application is made by either of the railroads for the abandonment of a service it provides us with a set of figures to which in many cases we have to object because they are not based on a sound costing formula. Only two or three weeks ago I put a question in the house to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer)—and I am sorry he is not here today—asking if he would intervene in the deliberations going on in Winnipeg at that time with respect to this very important matter because before we can make any decision as a matter of policy so far as rail line abandonment is concerned we have to have a costing formula that is satisfactory to all those concerned with the applications. Therefore I wish to make one last plea to the minister—and I hope he reads my remarks in Hansard—to see to it that the railway companies come up with a cost accounting formula that is satisfactory to the Canadian people.

One of the things that interested me most of all during the deliberations of the transport committee was the testimony given by witnesses from the interstate Commerce Commission of the United States concerning similar problems in that country. They insist that the participating parties lay the books on the table so that all the economic factors can be fairly reviewed before a decision is made. I suggest very strongly to the minister that he insist that this type of cost accounting formula be established here in Canada.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join my parliamentary colleagues from Winnipeg who have taken part in the debate on third reading of Bill No. C-124, particularly with regard to the Air Canada base in Winnipeg and its future. Apart from anything my colleagues said yesterday, a great many silly things have recently been written in newspapers and broadcast on the air indicating that a huge inter-city fight of some kind is developing.

I should like to pose the following question. For 300 years Montreal has prospered and grown as the funnel and hub through which things have moved into the hinterland and from there to other places. Montreal knows what it means to have a prosperous hinterland. Without it it would die. There would be no reason for Montreal to exist if it did not have trade and commerce coming and going. It seems to me then that the people of Winnipeg are not asking for anything unreasonable when they ask the government to agree with them that it would be best for the country as a whole and something upon which Montreal and Winnipeg could equally agree that the prairie provinces must prosper.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I feel that the regional development concept the government is bringing forward, as well as other manifestations of the just society, have to have something on which to build. It would be senseless, in my opinion, to allow an operation to close that employs 700 or 800 people and which, for all we know, may be the corner-stone for future development and the take-off point for Manitoba in a new and more prosperous direction. This could not fail but help Montreal to prosper because Montreal always prospers as a result of what occurs in the hinterland. Therefore, with respect, I think we should not pay any attention to the argument that Winnipeg is trying to take something away from Montreal because, of course, it is not. Winnipeg is just trying to share in the abundance which nobody ten years ago dreamed would occur as a result of the development of Air Canada. Air Canada has grown so extensively and its requirements have grown so much now that they cannot even be fulfilled at Dorval. At the moment we are asking to be allowed to retain a portion of the total over-all work Air Canada does and can give to a community in order that our community will at least remain where it is until such time as the just society and the regional development viewpoint can help us move forward again.

I suggest that when the regional air lines have been given permission to move into the jet age, and with the tremendous expansion the two trunk air lines are now experiencing, it is just ridiculous to feel that this work cannot be shared. I said once before that the people of Winnipeg are not small enough to try to oppose a great corporation like Canadian National Railways or Air Canada to the point of trying to cut off their money. When this bill is passed I hope the government will have the good sense to take these things into consideration as well as other things that have been said by other members so that this crown corporation, without being subject to interference in any way in its day to day operations—I would oppose that—could be used to a limited extent as a vehicle to help regional development and to help one region of Canada hold its own and prosper.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on third reading of Bill No. C-124, the preamble of which reads in part as follows:

An Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System—

—I should like a few brief remarks on some specific points.

[Mr. Osler.]

First of all, I notice a serious anomaly in clause 15 of the bill. I wish to discuss it at this stage of the debate in the hope of convincing the Minister of Finance to revise his position because, to my mind, this clause can absolutely not be accepted.

Clause 15 stipulates that private enterprise, more specifically a chartered accountants firm of Toronto and Montreal, three individuals more specifically, will be allowed to audit the books of this crown corporation known as the Canadian National Railways.

Now, in the report of the Auditor General of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1967, specifically on page 140, paragraph 219, one reads, and I quote:

Since the Auditor General has not been appointed the auditor or the joint auditor of the following crown corporations and public instrumentalities, their accounts were not examined by him during the year:

A list follows of seven crown corporations whose accounts are not audited by the Auditor General of Canada.

One can read also, in the same report, which becomes interesting:

In its eleventh report 1966-67, the public accounts committee again repeated its recommendation—

This was not the first time it was recommended——that the Auditor General be appointed the auditor or the joint auditor of these corporations or instrumentalities—

—of the crown.

In Appendix 1 of the same report of the Auditor General, the recommendations of the standing committee on public accounts are also dealt with—I do not wish to bore the members, but the quotation is very brief and will throw light on what I consider an extremely important point—and I quote paragraph 27:

The committee noted that although this officer of parliament is the auditor of the majority of the crown corporations, it has not been the practice of successive governments to appoint the Auditor General the auditor of seven of the crown corporations and other public instrumentalities and that therefore their accounts have not been examined and reported upon by him to the house. The committee expressed its belief that it would be in the best interests of parliament in its control of public funds were the Auditor General empowered to audit the accounts of all of the crown corporations, agencies and public instrumentalities owned or controlled by the crown, wherever they may be, and to report to the house.

The Committee therefore recommended:

(a) that the Auditor General, be appointed either the sole auditor or the joint auditor pursuant to subsection (2) of section 77 of the Financial Administration Act of each crown corporation, agency and other public instrumentality—

This should also apply to the accounts of the Canadian National Railways.

The government does not comply with this recommendation since Clause 15 of Bill No. C-124 asks us to approve the appointment of outside auditors.

Mr. Speaker, the committee on public accounts reiterated that recommendation in its third annual report, that for 1966-67. It reiterated vigorously the recommendation made by the Auditor General of Canada in 1967, whereby he should act as auditor or joint auditor for all crown corporations, for all public organizations owned or controlled by the crown and report on his audit to the house.

This illustrates a basic principle of our democracy which says that every crown corporation must be accountable to parliament.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Auditor General of Canada, whose responsibility it is to check expenditures and to see to it that public funds are used wisely, strongly recommends not to entrust private enterprise with the auditing of the books of public agencies or crown corporations, which are owners or trustees, since that violates the rights of parliament to receive an appropriate report. In fact, common sense and logic require that all crown corporations be treated the same way by the government and have the same obligations towards parliament.

That is why the Auditor General of Canada, through his functions and the laws to which he is subjected, is the official representative of parliament to check the books and see if the public funds have been spent wisely, and must report to the house.

In clause 15 of bill No. C-124 the government is assuming a right openly and against all logic. In fact, it wants to appoint as auditors of Crown corporations' accounts some private companies on very friendly terms with members of this government who do not miss a chance to reward their supporters, their members and their creditors. That explains, Mr. Speaker, why this man Touche mentioned in clause 15—of the three cases I will deal only with this one—received from the federal government $100,000 in 1964 and $125,000 in 1965. I find that unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. I feel that it is a shameful waste of the public funds that we must administer fairly. If, on the one hand, the Auditor General strongly insists on auditing the accounts himself, and in fact checks them, and if, on the other hand, the government disregards that and continues to hand over the job to private companies on friendly terms with the party at fees of $100,000 to $125,000 a year, I feel that is a scandal.

How much did Mr. Touche receive since 1964? How much did Mr. Ross get since 1964? How much did Mr. Bailey and Mr. Smart receive since 1964? Yet, during that time, the Auditor General could have done the same job for ten times less. This is very simple to understand, and it can be proved.

So, Mr. Speaker, needless to try and understand this situation. I wanted to inform the house on that point to try and bring the Minister of Finance to reconsider his position concerning clause 15 because, in my opinion, it is not at all acceptable. In fact, it is contrary to the recommendations made by the Auditor General of Canada in many reports and contained also in the report of the public accounts committee.

What would have been the cost, Mr. Speaker, if the same job had been carried out by the Auditor General, who is duly authorized to do it? Why does the government, through the Minister of Finance, disregard the recommendation of the public accounts committee? That is one of the questions that we ask ourselves at this stage of the debate.

The second point I wish to raise, Mr. Speaker, deals with the Air Canada maintenance base in Winnipeg, about which I put question No. 724, made up of nine parts, on the order paper. Its purpose is to throw light on the problem of the possible or probable transfer of the base from Winnipeg to Montreal.

There again, Mr. Speaker, there are serious anomalies. In fact, instead of being sound, the present administration is irresponsible and does not take the economics into account.

In 1957, the Wallace Clark Company, at the request of the government, published a survey report which come to the conclusion that it was not efficient or economical to maintain in Winnipeg the Air Canada base. After the Wallace Clark report came that of the Thompson Commission which made the same recommendations and drew the same conclusion. The government remains unmoved. The Dixon Spears Associates was then invited to form a study commission. After a thorough examination of the problem, after weighing the pros and cons this commission came to the following conclusion: it is neither reasonable nor efficient to maintain the Air Canada base in Winnipeg and therefore recommend its transfer to Montreal.

In 1963, the President of Air Canada sent a letter to the employees at the Winnipeg base informing them of the transfer of the base to Montreal. Suddenly, the light goes out. The light thrown by the three study commissions in fact clarified nothing since the situation is still the same and the base has not yet been transferred.

Earlier, an hon. member said that this question should not turn into a strife between two cities. I fully agree but I do not think that it is a strife between two cities but rather a matter of efficiency and economics. Therefore, I ask myself a lot of questions, and I should like the minister to take them into consideration and to answer them as quickly as possible.

Has it been decided to move the overhaul facilities of Air Canada from Winnipeg to Montreal? If so, when will it be done? What were the factors involved in the delays concerning the implementation of the decision?

In February 1963, the President of Air Canada wrote a letter. Could we have a copy of that letter? What were the recommendations contained in the report prepared by Dixon Spears Associates and why have the recommendations concerning the transfer of the overhaul facilities not been implemented?

Mr. Speaker, the same question arises with regard to the Wallace Clark firm and the Thompson commission. The conclusions of these three inquiries on the transfer to Montreal of the overhaul facilities have not been implemented when they were in fact suggested by those three commissions.

Mr. Speaker, those are only two examples. The hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) pointed out yesterday some anomalies about the Canadian National Railway. As for me, I should like to point out some others.

The hon. minister would find it to his advantage to enlighten this house and clarify this absolutely unacceptable situation, namely why cannot the Auditor General examine the accounts of the Canadian National Railways. This parliament has a right to get complete reports, to be able to examine the books through its official delegate, the Auditor General of Canada, and the hon. Minister of Finance must reconsider his position as to section 15 of Bill No. C-124, so that private enterprise may not have the job of examining those books, since this is obviously a way of extending political patronage. The Auditor General, is paid for doing that and he can do it at a cost surely three times lower than at present.

Secondly, I should like the minister to make a decision and to tell us precisely what progress is being made about the transfer of the overhaul base from Winnipeg to Montreal.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak for a very few minutes on this bill because certain matters that came under my jurisdiction when I had the honour to be minister of transport some years ago are under discussion and I think are important.

First of all, I should like to speak about the discontinuing of the railway service in Newfoundland. When I took over the portfolio the railway in Newfoundland came under very exact and minute consideration with regard to its efficiency and usefulness. The result of this examination was that it was decided the railway was performing a useful role, that it was operating efficiently and that it should be maintained. Therefore, our government gave encouragement to the operation of that railway, and it continued to perform a very useful function on behalf of the people of that island province.

Recently, Mr. Speaker, I checked into the operations of the railway and discovered it was still performing a useful function in the province of Newfoundland. In my view and in light of my knowledge of the matter there is no justification in discontinuing this railway operation. I feel it should be continued in view of the fact that it is performing a very useful service to that most important province that joined confederation in 1949.

Second, I should like to speak very briefly about the proposed transfer of the Air Canada overhaul base from Winnipeg to Montreal. Once again this matter came under examination during the time I had responsibility for transport matters. It was decided that the base in Winnipeg was at that time performing a very useful function, that it was operating efficiently, and that there was no reason to consider transferring the operations in Winnipeg to any other location. Likewise, I have checked into the operations of the base in Winnipeg in order to satisfy myself that it is still performing the useful function it was performing when I had responsibility for these matters, and I found it is so doing.

This base employs a very large number of people residing in the city of Winnipeg and vicinity, some 800 to 1,000 employees, who together with their families number some 2,500 people. To suggest that these people should simply pack up and move to Montreal is not a practical suggestion at all, particularly in view of the fact that this base is a first class facility, is operating well and can perform the functions asked of it efficiently and extremely well for Air Canada.

I thought it incumbent upon me as a former minister who has had some experience with these two matters to rise and urge the government not to take the actions that it appears determined to take in these two cases. I do not believe there is any necessity for making these important changes. The people of Newfoundland will benefit greatly by the continued use of the railway there, and the people of Winnipeg deserve to have this efficient air repair facility that has been in operation in the Winnipeg area for some years continued and maintained.

Therefore I hope that even at this late date the government will give serious consideration to re-examining the facts that have been put before them both by the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada, that it will reconsider the decisions that appear to have been made and will leave the railway in Newfoundland in operation and allow the air repair terminal at Winnipeg to continue its efficient operation in the future.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak after hearing the words of reason and encouragement of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). I was also interested to listen to the comments of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). For the past few weeks he has been trying to obtain information to show that some of our crown corporations do not adequately reflect what may be called the French fact in this country. I do not oppose his efforts since on the surface his allegations seem justified. I merely bring to his attention that though crown corporations such as Air Canada and Canadian National Railways did not reflect a few years ago the fact that in this country there are several million people with a French language background, that situation has been changed. Most people in this country are now satisfied that Air Canada and the Canadian National reflect the French fact in their employment practices.

Crown corporations do not exist merely to provide a service that will make the maximum profit. Surely crown corporations can be used as instruments of policy by the government. In this regard my comments have some bearing on the location of the Air Canada jet overhaul base at Winnipeg. Hon. members no doubt are well aware that there have been studies and reports as to the comparative economies or benefits to be derived by moving the jet overhaul base from Winnipeg to the more central location of Montreal. I will not challenge the accuracy of cost accounting figures which have been quoted though I believe one could challenge the accuracy of figures that different consultative groups have put forward. Though there may be a dollar and cents saving to Air Canada by moving its jet overhaul facilities to Montreal, there are powerful and logical arguments for keeping these facilities at Winnipeg.

One of these arguments is regional need. Another is that as a matter of national policy we should avoid putting all our eggs in one basket. It is not in our national interest to cluster all our technological capability with respect to jet overhaul facilities at one geographic point. Even though such a clustering may bring dollar and cents savings, I do not think it is justified. The economic operation of Air Canada is important to Canada, of course, but such economy is only one factor which must be considered.

I believe all hon. members from the Winnipeg area have talked about this matter. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Richardson), who is a member of the Liberal party, the hon. members for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who are colleagues of mine, and the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), a member of the Liberal party, have all touched on this matter. Though my riding touches on only a small part of the Winnipeg area I have repeatedly said to the government that more is expected of it than it has done during the past 18 months with regard to the problem of the Air Canada overhaul base at Winnipeg. The former prime minister gave a firm commitment that the jet overhaul base would not be moved from Winnipeg before 1973. We expect that promise to be honoured, and there must be no deception in the process.

Canadian National Railways

On a number of occasions recently the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) has said that he cannot really prevent the continuing transfer from Winnipeg to Montreal of machinists and other skilled employees at the Winnipeg Air Canada base. The minister would have us believe that the transfer of personnel from Winnipeg to Montreal is a matter of negotiation in the collective bargaining between the union and the air line. Clearly that is absurd. The employees point out, and rightly so, that they have signed a collective agreement with their employer, the air line, and that it is not for the employees, the union or the bargaining agent unilaterally to try to prevent the transfers of any employees. Employees must abide by the joint decisions of the air line and the government.

Many employees do not want to be moved from Winnipeg to Montreal. Much though they may dislike what is happening, they cannot end such transfers. I point out that many of the present ministers were ministers in the former government. A commitment was given that there would be no transfers from Winnipeg until 1973. I hope that steps will be taken to prevent surreptitious transfers in the future of personnel from the Winnipeg base.

A few years ago Air Canada and the Canadian National embarked on a policy of hiring personnel who were fluent in English and French. Why was that done, Mr. Speaker? It was done because, as a matter of national policy, it was deemed to be in Canada's best interests. Clearly one must not look at the jet overhaul base of Air Canada merely in terms of dollars and cents. Much more is involved here than the balance sheet of Air Canada. The regional needs of the various regions of the country must be considered. We must also consider the kind of service the air line can provide to all regions of the country. Since its inception the air line has been closely connected with one region, the prairies, because of the availability of sophisticated facilities for aircraft servicing and overhaul. But now it has been decided to phase out this operation and leave this important regional centre as a place where only casual, relatively unimportant and, therefore, relatively unskilled engine maintenance will be performed.

• (4:20 p.m.)

In the meantime there is growing talk about the future of our urban centres in North America. There is concern about the pressures connected with life and living in the big urban conurbations of this continent such as Chicago, Montreal, Los Angeles and New York. There is the increasing problem of pollution, the pressure of rapidly rising land prices, the soaring cost of housing. Despite all this the government has apparently decided to sit idly by and allow the present trend to continue. In fact, the administration opposite is aiding and abetting this trend toward the concentration of our population in relatively few centres. At the same time, other regions such as Newfoundland and the prairies are underdeveloped and underpopulated; there is relatively slow growth in terms either of population or of per capita income.

I certainly hope that the government, if not the crown corporations of this country, does not regard these problems as being beyond our capacity to solve. It is not as though Winnipeg and the prairie region have been enjoying a rate of growth comparable with that experienced in the central part of this country. It therefore makes little sense to sit neutrally by and allow events to take place which will simply aggravate the present disproportion. Does it make sense for the government to engage in industrial incentive programs or area development programs when its own action can be so strongly criticized? According to the estimates passed by this parliament we shall be spending hundreds of millions of dollars in an attempt to encourage industry to locate in regions of this country where growth is relatively slow and incomes relatively low. We shall be doing all this in an artificial and desperate attempt to reduce disparities between regions. But at the same time we shall be allowing this crown corporation, an ideal instrument of national policy which could be used as a perfect instrument for reducing regional disparities, to follow a course of action which will produce a precisely opposite result. Wherein lies the logic, Mr. Speaker?

I do not suppose that at this point there is any real possibility of getting the ear of the government, any real hope of persuading it to reconsider this decision with regard to Air Canada and its intention to move the overhaul base to Montreal. Nevertheless, the plea must be made, as it has been made by Liberal members opposite from the west and by my own colleagues. We understand that the airport facilities at Montreal are now being used in almost every case to the utmost of their capacity, that the engine overhaul facilities at the Montreal airport plant of Air Canada are being used to the greatest possible extent. There is no indication that even if the engine overhaul base were retained at Winnipeg it would mean a reduction in the amount of work carried out at Air Canada's Montreal hangars. As a matter of fact, projections indicate that the work there will continue to grow, so much so, indeed, that Air Canada must have plans to increase its facilities at the Montreal airport. In these circumstances, how in the world can any hon. member claim that we from Winnipeg are trying to take something away from Montreal?

As the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) put it yesterday, those who have been speaking about the situation faced by Winnipeg at no time had in mind taking something away from Montreal. They simply want to retain a regional operation, or industry, or facility, or opportunity for employment which Winnipeg has had for many years so as to avoid the disruption and dislocation that would be caused if this plant were moved to Montreal.

I challenge anyone to say that retention of the base in Winnipeg would change the picture entirely. If anyone could show that retaining the base in Winnipeg would somehow interfere with the growth of employment on engine overhaul in the Montreal area in a meaningful way, he would have a powerful argument. But even if the base were not transferred to Montreal there would still be a positive increase in the number of job openings in connection with engine overhaul at the Montreal Air Canada base. I repeat that to talk in these circumstances about taking away from Montreal something which will improve employment opportunities there is absolute nonsense. In proportionate terms there is no comparison.

However, I suppose the base will be transferred and that the government will set about preparing legislation as a means of inducing some corporation connected in some way with civil aviation to move into the Winnipeg airport area. There have been rumours already about two firms from Edmonton. There has been another rumour about Douglas Aircraft Corporation moving part of its Canadian operation to Winnipeg to fill the gap. It is rumoured that Douglas might set up an operation in Winnipeg to employ 500 or 600 people in the construction of aircraft wings and related parts. I dare say the government will be desperately seeking some such solution in order to fill the gap caused by its own failure to deal with the rather stubborn position taken by the executives of Air Canada with respect to moving the engine overhaul facility from Winnipeg to Montreal.

In his last book, "The Distemper Of Our Times", Peter Newman referred to the attitude of Liberal governments in previous years being one of concentration on an area encompassing Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa. He pointed out that for all practical purposes the attitude of past Liberal governments to the rest of the country, to the Atlantic provinces, to Newfoundland, and to the prairies was that these regions were the great outback. Perhaps that is putting it in extravagant words. Perhaps it is overstating a state of mind. Perhaps it is somewhat unfair. I do not intend to enlarge on those words but there is something about that statement that does ring true, that is indicative of the present Liberal government and of civil servants in high places in various government departments.

I remember that one of my professors in my college days told me that between the Liberal government and the mandarins of the civil service there was an almost incestuous relationship. At the time I thought those were rather harsh words, but a few years here have persuaded me that there is an element of truth in them, not just with respect to civil servants in the departments but with respect to high ranking officials in our crown corporations. It seems to me from their attitude that there is an overconcentration of solicitude and attention for the central area of the country to the detriment of the prairie and Atlantic regions.

Unfortunately I do not know enough of the specific details to be able to come to the assistance of my hon. friends from Newfoundland with respect to the performance of Canadian National Railways in seeking to abandon completely passenger service in that province. However, I agree in spirit with the fight they are putting up, and I wish we were in a position to make the government and high ranking officials of the various crown corporations, including the C.N.R., more concerned about the needs faced by regions of this country that are somewhat remote from the capital city.

I realize that later this session we will have an opportunity to question officials of the C.N.R. at hearings of a standing committee. But I wish to say it is a pity that we are faced now with a bill to provide a sum of almost $200 million to the C.N.R. in order to enable it to acquire road property and equipment of various kinds without having the opportunity to examine in detail some of the procedures which the company uses in its dealings with the general public and in its dealings with contractors. I know that the Canadian Heavy Construction Association is on record as being very unhappy with C.N.R. procedures in calling for bids on construction contracts. Judging by the association's reference to some of these procedures it seems clear to me that some reforms and changes must be made. There must be more consistency between the contracting procedures followed by the Department of Public Works and the procedures followed by the C.N.R.

In a standing committee the other day when questioning Department of Public Works officials we discovered with respect to the construction of the National Arts Centre in Ottawa that when the prime contractor came across unforeseen construction conditions that were expensive to cope with, it was a simple matter to arrange a meeting between the contractor and the department where the unforeseen costs were discussed in a friendly way and as a result supplementary payments were made to the contractor. Everyone seemed satisfied with that, except perhaps the taxpayers.

The C.N.R. does not operate that way. If a contractor makes a bid which is accepted and subsequently unforeseen conditions arise resulting in great extra cost to the contractor, the attitude of the C.N.R. is tough. It has been tough over the years. More than one contractor has been forced to the wall. Of course arguments can be made pro and con whether this is the right kind of policy or position for a corporation to take. There can be arguments on both sides, but I would like to see some consistency between the contract tendering practices of all crown corporations and the practices of the Department of Public Works.

In view of your impatience, Mr. Speaker, which I sense, I merely take this opportunity to serve notice on the officials of the C.N.R. before they are examined by the appropriate committee that they must supply us with a great deal of information to justify their tendering practices which seem to be at such variance with those of the Department of Public Works. I also serve notice that they will have to give a lot of information to justify their conduct in the celebrated case of the construction of the Great Slave Lake railway where, because of their own sloppy specification provisions, many contractors found themselves out on a limb and were ultimately forced to the wall. It is appropriate to serve this kind of notice in view of the fact that we are being asked to pass Bill No. C-124 to vote close to $200 million to the C.N.R. In return we expect some answers.

[Mr. Schreyer.]

• (4:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, allow me to deal first with some aspects of the situation with regard to Air Canada. All the previous speakers mentioned the fact that the decision of the government would result in some dissatisfaction on both sides, in two large Canadian centres. If we have to choose between displeasing Montreal or Winnipeg, in both cases there would be some dissatisfaction.

Should the government decide to leave the said base in Winnipeg, it is easy to imagine the outcry from Montreal, from all intermediate groups in Quebec and in particular from the labour unions of the Montreal area. We know also that the same thing can happen in Winnipeg.

In those circumstances, the government should be guided solely by considerations of efficiency since there will always be some dissatisfied people. In any event, there will be many more of course if the Montreal area must suffer the consequences of such a decision.

That is not necessarily a valid argument but I say that the government when reaching a decision must be guided simply by efficiency.

Recently the Post Office Department talked of profit and efficiency to justify the increase in postal rates. In my opinion, the Department of Transport should also take into account the fact that if the whole thing was installed in Montreal, it would be an economic venture, and it is the only valid criterion.

If one tries to satisfy a certain area from a political point of view, there is obviously dissatisfaction in another. Objectively, without any doubt, if it is proven that tremendous financial advantages will result from the transfer to Montreal, it seems to me that we should comply with that decision.

Those few comments on Air Canada have merely allowed me to state my opinion and finally to caution the gouvernement against the present situation in Quebec. Indeed, it is known that all these things have an unimaginable effect. Now, it would be useless to create critical situations for the Montreal area and the whole province of Quebec.

I will now deal with the Canadian National. First I will deal with the material situation of the company as far as the line between Quebec City, Abitibi and Cochrane, in Ontario, is concerned. As 250 miles of that line are in the riding of Champlain and that it is the only means available to me to get out of there—since there is no road suitable for motor vehicles—I often travel by train. The situation on the train is sometimes so ridiculous, so absurd that we may wonder whether the administrators are responsible.

For instance, I am told—though I am not given official statistics—that the operation of this line is uneconomic. That is hard to understand, if one considers, as I noticed it myself, as well as the citizens of the area, that the train on the Quebec City-Abitibi-Cochrane is always packed.

In fact, the last two times I travelled on that train, I had to sit in a sleeping-car. Surely the deficit is not due to a lack of passengers.

Moreover, the seats are not occupied by the employees since there is only one conductor and two assistants for a train of eight to ten cars, and the conductor has to deal with all sorts of people from La Tuque to Parent, and in Abitibi. In fact, most of them are lumberjacks, and we know that they work very hard cutting wood in the forest. Normally, they could relax while travelling to visit their girl friends in their respective towns or villages. So it happens that the train is full of lumberjacks who, most of whom wait for hours in small localities such as Sanmaur, Parent and others, for the train comes at one or two o'clock in the morning. During that time, while waiting for the train from six at night to one in the morning, they hit the bottle and they are often fairly tight when they finally board the train, so that the conductor finds himself in a pretty nasty spot. The conductors have presented reports on the matter and have simply asked the C.N.R. to put constables on the train to help because they seem to have great difficulties in keeping order.

The situation is somewhat paradoxical, since the train is the only means of transportation for many of the people in the area, and I wonder why this situation is allowed to continue.

There is also another point which is most important. If there really is no place on board the trains, why not run more of them for passengers and why, especially, not make a distinction between the various passengers? For instance, I have seen with my own eyes the ridiculous situation where a mother accompanied by several children had to sit in the middle of a "gang", as we say, of lumberjacks and I can tell the house it is no fun to hear swearing around you when there are young children. Indeed, there is another situation which is little short of ridiculous.

• (4:50 p.m.)

When funds are requested to assist the Canadian National, I don't balk of course, since they are needed. But on the other hand I would like some consideration given to the possibility of improving adequately the services in need of improvement.

I am not complaining about discrimination, but I do have the impression that generally speaking the C.N. is neglecting Quebec.

In the Ottawa area for instance, where 45 per cent of the population is French speaking, is it acceptable that sometimes the conductors speak only English? I would not mind if we were in a purely English environment, but it is a well known fact that 45 per cent of the people in the Ottawa area are French-speaking. And these things are still going on.

When shall we understand, once and for all, that all these companies that must serve Canadians, should serve them wherever they are, whether in Quebec or in other areas where there are a great number of French-speaking people? As far as other provinces are concerned, it seems obvious to me that this situation should be corrected.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was saying recently in reply to a question from my colleague, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), that we never had it so good. I am tempted to say that it must have been zero formerly and two times zero is still zero. Even if the situation is twice as good or ten times as good as it was in the beginning, if it were zero, the product would still be zero. Therefore, we must ultimately have some real proof that things are going to be straightened out.

I am rather reluctant to bring up once again the matter of bilingualism. We know that in the opinion of many Quebecers, those who speak of such things today are mossbacks, old fuddy-duddies. People imagine that we are still fighting for bilingual cheques, money or stamps. Naturally, this is a huge joke in Quebec, but anyway, I wish to point out those strange situations.

Here is another example of bilingualism aboard C.N.R. trains or within crown corporations. I personnally found out that in the sleeping-cars of C.N.R. trains between Quebec and Abitibi—as unbelievable as it seems, since the train is a service to a population of which 99.9 per cent are French Canadians —there are very few English-speaking people. Believe it or not, among the employees of sleeping-cars, twice this summer, I met persons who spoke English only.

Now, if such a situation should arise in the Vancouver or Toronto area, it is easy to imagine the reaction of a Toronto or Vancouver citizen who could not make himself understood in English by the train officer. But this is what we have been suffering for years. This is, I think, what we had to bear unfortunately, because as I said, the federal members of Quebec have always been too long in office. They thought that this could give them some advantages. But we know what has been the result of this.

Today, for instance, in the course of the debate on Air Canada and on the base that must be transferred from Winnipeg to Montreal, the cabinet members of Quebec and of the Montreal area have practically not been heard to defend their own interests categorically and energetically. We are always dealing with this famous compromise and this is why we are always full of complexes.

We are proud of only one thing. We have developed a complex of superiority which makes other people laugh, in my opinion. Here is that complex of superiority: We understand them when they speak English but they cannot understand us. Is that a complex of superiority? Certainly not, Mr. Speaker, because whoever thinks like that is so weak that there comes a time when he must find some reason to appear strong.

Therefore, the material situation of the C.N.R. in Quebec should be given special consideration. The statistics I have date back a few years—unfortunately I do not have current ones—and I have no way of knowing if the situation has changed. In the largest province of confederation, the second with regard to population, it would only be normal to find the longest railway line, in miles. That would be normal since geographically, ours is the largest province. However, Quebec has only one eighth of Ontario's railroad mileage. We are not spoiled in that respect. This material situation must change if Quebecers are to be better served.

As far as the French fact is concerned, the situation is being corrected though there are still unilingual English-speaking employees on trains serving completely or almost completely French Canadian areas.

Mr. Speaker, I am not making these few remarks to complain about discrimination but to throw light on the problem, so that everyone can consider it objectively, as it is.

If we speak of economics, let us be logical all the time, and before concluding I will remind you of a few illogical situations. Changes are sometimes made in the railway service to reduce deficits, so they say. I agree with that up to a certain point. But when the Canadian National Railways decide for instance, to abolish the position of stationmaster in Saint-Casimir and that according to the figures for the last few years, the net amount of profits in that station has increased steadily, one begins to wonder what is going on. It is a profit-earning station, statistics prove it, but we are told that there are no profits. Such a state of affairs makes one wonder why should it always be the same people, the same places, the same areas, that get the worst of it on account of the decision to recuperate money, while elsewhere, it is clearly acknowledged that a deficit is acceptable for this or that reason.

Of course the purpose of a crown company is to serve the public and I admit deficits may be tolerated in some areas for very definite reasons. Such deficits cannot be avoided in the field of public service, but when an enterprise is profit-earning, hands off. That is what I had to say, Mr. Speaker.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I will not speak at great length on subsidies now under discussion, but I would like to say a few words about Air Canada. I would like to recall some of the history of Air Canada and I will quote an excepı from the Petit Journal, dated February 14, 1965:

> From the time of its establishment in 1937 and until 1948, Air Canada has maintained all of its facilities in Winnipeg, except that its president has had his head office in Montreal from the beginning. "This was logical, said Mr. McGregor, as Air Canada was only operating on a local basis and Winnipeg was then the center of its air service. But the situation has changed through the expansion of our air lines in Eastern Canada, in the United States and overseas and the center of our activities has moved gradually towards the East."

And it goes on:

—Air Canada airplanes were DC-3's and the North Stars had just arrived.

Then

—there was no question of Super Constellations;—

—or Vanguards. As you know the use of Super Constellations has been discontinued by Air Canada.

—in 1952, the first turbo-jet Viscounts were put into operation. In 1956, Air Canada ordered DC-8's and Vanguards. Following the recommendations of the Wallace report in 1957 adopted the same year, construction began——of a new maintenance base in Montreal at a cost of $31 millions.

Evidently, there is no doubt and nobody will deny that the Winnipeg base is most modern and efficient. It is very useful and it is even necessary for the regional economy. But that is not the point.

The point is that the Winnipeg base is equipped exclusively for repairs to the Viscount airplanes, Dart motors and to DC-3's which are not being used any more.

As we know, the number of Viscounts flown by Air Canada is decreasing from year to year, and the Winnipeg base is still geared exclusively for the maintenance of those planes. We have now reached the point where, every year, Air Canada adds new planes to its fleet such as DC-9's and DC-8's. The repair shop in Montreal is very adequately equipped to give complete maintenance service to jet aircraft such as the DC-9's and DC-8's.

The reports of the various commissions created in the last ten years prove beyond a doubt that it is more efficient and economical to operate only one repair base for those jet airplanes. That is no reason to locate it in Montreal. It could be located anywhere else as well, but I believe the operating centre for Canada is Montreal, considering the developments of the last few years. We know Air Canada started servicing new lines last year, even though it had to face competition on certain lines in western Canada. Moreover, Air Canada was granted an important line between Montreal and Miami, and between Toronto and Miami which, I believe, within a few years, will contribute to increasing its profits.

We have nothing against the Winnipeg base, far from it. But I wonder precisely what we will do with that base when Air Canada has completely done away with its Viscounts. This will certainly happen within the next two or three years at the most. We will no longer need it, as DC-9's will then be used. The DC-9 is recognized as a medium-run plane which can land on average-sized runways. It is very fast and can transport far many more passengers than the Viscount we now use.

Winnipeg will not be the only city to lose from the change. Let us not forget that the repair shop at Dorval, where the Vanguards are now being repaired. Within the next few years, they will no longer be used either. As a matter of fact, even now buyers are sought for those planes, because turbo-planes will no longer be used on the type of flights Air Canada will be operating within a few years.

I feel that officials of the department concerned should consult again the reports of the commissions of inquiry and follow the advice of experts. To my mind, that is certainly the best solution in this case, especially taking into account the considerable investments Canada has made in Air Canada. In the years to come, we will be called upon again to invest even greater amounts, in view of the important developments that will take place in aeronautics within the next few years.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few words to say on Bill No. C-124 regarding the Canadian National Railways, as well as the services and the administration of Air Canada. I will speak especially of the deficits of those crown corporations, but all this is included in the expression "Canadian National Railways".

Mr. Speaker, I would probably not have spoken on that bill if, last April, I had not had the opportunity of going by C.N.R. to the west, namely from Ottawa to Vancouver. I went to Vancouver by Canadian Pacific and I came back by Canadian National to see the difference between those two companies.

Mr. Speaker, when one thinks of the fabulous amounts of money parliament must vote for the maintenance of the services of the Canadian National and one sees the difference between a service provided by a private company and a crown corporation, it is a little embarrassing to agree to pay such fantastic sums to maintain an organization or a crown company which has so little to give to the Canadian consumer.

For example, I have noticed that the service provided by the C.P.R. is decidedly better than that of the C.N.R. For instance, meals on trains going from here to Vancouver were much better on the C.P.R. than on the C.N.R. train. The C.P.R. train had observation cars which allowed us not only to look out but to admire enthusiastically the beauty of the Canadian countryside, particularly going through the Rocky Mountains; there were no such cars on the C.N.R. train.

Before we reached Vancouver, on our last day on the train, a C.P.R. inspector who had come aboard in Calgary offered my wife and myself a delicious meal—a steak, if you please—at the expense of the C.P.R. On the C.N.R. train, on the other hand, we could not even get a hot dog between meals which were served in an incredibly sloppy manner.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I think that if a C.N.R. director, for example the president, had to go to Vancouver, he would make the trip in a special car.

Members of Parliament are not entitled to such cars, nor are the leaders of the parties, except for the Leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). We have to go by sleeping-car and make do with the same service as everyone else. That is perfectly natural, under the circumstances, and it allows us to see the kind of service provided for the public travelling on C.N.R. trains.

Mr. Speaker, it was really humiliating for me as a member of the federal parliament to see this difference and to know that the C.N.R. is yearly in the red and asks parliament to make appropriations to allow them to compete with private enterprise.

The authorities of the Canadian National cannot balance their budget with their revenues from Canadian funds or moneys. On the other hand, the Canadian Pacific has yearly excess profits and pays dividends to its shareholders. As for us, we pay dividends to the Canadian National for services inferior to those given to private industry. This applies to the passenger service.

As for trucking, it is the same thing. We give grants to the Canadian National to allow it to compete with private enterprise in a very dishonest way. Private enterprises and the trucking companies, for example, do not receive any grant from the State, while the National Canadian Railways will cost the government and Canadians this year almost $500 million. We shall have to pay $500 million for people who make fun of us.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): A pocket service.

Mr. Caouette: The member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) is right when he calls it a pocket service. It is very seldom we hear such a clever intervention from a liberal member but it is true.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian National could provide at least a service equivalent to the one provided by the Canadian Pacific. I shall only mention a few details. Everybody has seen the roomettes of the Canadian Pacific. They are all neat and cosy, with small drapes hanging at the window. On the Canadian National one sees only flies on the windows. What a difference. And this is the company which is asking us to vote $500 million to maintain it in operation.

Moreover I have noticed that the Canadian Pacific has been accused on several occasions in this house of employing only unilingual staff. Do you know that on board the Canadian Pacific I was able to speak French practically during the whole trip from Ottawa to Vancouver, which was impossible for me on the Canadian National during my return trip to Ottawa? This is the kind of service provided by a government corporation.

Would the Canadian National tolerate in the province of Quebec that our employees speak French only to look after the people coming from the West or the Maritimes? In this case again French Canadians are required to speak English and I have no objection to that. But why is the same thing not required from English speaking people who have to serve the whole Canadian public?

Mr. Speaker, these are discriminations not only from the linguistic viewpoint but also with regard to the service which we get on the Canadian National trains. I have often noticed the kind of service which we get between Ottawa and Montreal for instance. We are treated somewhat as a dog in manger. We are treated like dirt and, then we are being asked through the Canadian National authorities, to vote fabulous sums of money to keep these people on the job. I believe that is worth about as much as what it costs to manage the Canadian-National. That does not mean the employees are not willing to work well. But, where the authorities are concerned, and they are responsible for planning the work, something is seriously lacking. It is difficult to be heard by those people, to get a reply to our letters.

On my return from Vancouver, I tried to write to the president of the Canadian National to advise him of certain failings. For instance, meals are called about an hour ahead of time and we are asked to answer a certain call. We go to the dining car, and there we have to wait another hour before finally being told that we should have gone on the first call instead of the third. It is just one big mix-up. In addition, rudeness is even allowed with the passengers. I have seen waiters being positively rude to passengers in the dining cars.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it might be a good thing for the officials of the Canadian National to travel incognito on the Canadian Pacific—and not in a special car—and to see what difference there is in the quality of the service between the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National as well in the profits at the end of the year.

Of course, the excuse is always the same: the Canadian National serves non-profitable runs while the Canadian Pacific has the profitable ones.

Take the case of my area, for instance. From a commercial point of view, the freight trains that run between Abitibi, Northwestern Quebec to Montreal, Toronto or elsewhere are probably the most profitable runs of the whole Canadian National network. But go and see what kind of service the passenger trains get from Cochrane to Hervey-Junction, —going through Noranda and Senneterre— where the train is divided into two sections: one for Quebec, the other for Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, there again we see how the Canadian National or the authorities are wrong. We are given the old cars, which were used in the Montreal and Toronto areas perhaps 25 or 30 years ago. Those cars were taken to Northwestern Quebec and we were told: Look at the wonderful improvement. The seats are battered, even when they are individual seats. Service is pitiful, and through no fault of the people in Noranda; only that of the Canadian National authorities.

Our people in Abitibi, our people in Rouyn-Noranda, our people in Témiscamingue, are they not right in asking to be treated as well as those in Toronto or in Montreal?

Now, we have trains with bar-pullmans and anything you want, which can go 100 miles an hour between Montreal and Toronto. But we have difficulty getting a car to serve coffee on a trip from Senneterre to Quebec or Montreal. The coffee is not even good; it must be instant coffee.

Mr. Speaker, those lines are economical anyway. The transportation of wood from the Clova, Senneterre or Lebel-sur-Quevillon areas towards northern Ontario or lower Quebec is something which is economical for the Canadian National. The same is true for the Matagami zinc, the minerals which the Noranda Mines Company processes into brass ingots and ships to Montreal through the C.N.R.

On the other hand, as concerns the quality of service for passenger trains, the objection is that they are not used too much. One cannot blame people for not travelling on board of Canadian National trains because the quality of service is so poor that they only use them once.

• (5:20 p.m.)

That is what we have in the north of the province to serve a population which is a source of profits for the C.N.R. That is how those people are treated. They do not even have suitable trains, cars to go to western Canada and we are asked to vote $300 or $400 million to pay the deficits of the C.N.R.

As far as Air Canada is concerned, its service has improved considerably compared to what it was a few years ago. If only the C.N.R. did the same, its service would improve very quickly. In fact, Canada could improve in some respects, but it is understood that perfection can never be achieved and there will always be room for improvement. However, Air Canada has improved its services considerably in the last five or six years. For instance, meals are now served at times when one were served in the past. Our stewardesses are charming and most of them speak both official languages. On the flight I took to Toronto during the weekend, the cute little stewardesses spoke French very well. I noticed the same thing in other areas of Canada, in Vancouver as well as in Victoria. The same is true for the Maritime provinces and Quebec.

Air Canada services have greatly improved. A second flight was requested between Montreal and Rouyn. This company granted it as an experiment last April and it surely did not regret it, since this second flight has become a happy, profitable as well as interesting undertaking for the people in my area who can go to Montreal twice daily. It is a very useful service to our people.

Canadian National Railways

Mr. Speaker, those were comments I wanted to make especially in regard to the Canadian National for which we are paying through the nose while it complains about the decreasing number of passengers. This is due precisely to the quality of its service, because people are losing more and more interest in the transportation services offered by the Canadian National.

Therefore, I wish to call the atention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) and the directors of the Canadian National to this situation by way of comparison between the Canadian Pacific that is run by free enterprise and the Canadian National that is subsidized by the government with tax money. As soon as this company realizes that the improvement of its services is to its own advantage, the Canadian people will then be less reluctant to have their money expended to make good those existing deficits. Canadians object to voting fabulous sums of money to enable one company to continue operations which have not proved too successful.
