> Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad to take the question as notice, because as it is posed it is really a statement giving a lot of information certain parts of which I did not have before. I will be glad to look at the whole form of the question and bring forward an answer on the part of it which relates to this department.

I did that very carefully and thoroughly, and no part of the question relates to this department.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That, Mr. Speaker, is not an unexpected answer because that government does not know what its responsibilities are.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would then direct the question to the Prime Minister who, with the all-seeing eye, will be able to give an answer.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. If you look at the relevant page in Hansard you will find that he stated government policy on this question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister's answer is that the government is afraid to answer.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question. I would then repeat my question, why is it that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the Secretary of State continue to deny applications for citizenship by residents of Canada for 30 years who at one time were related to so-called communist front organizations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is clearly argumentative.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, speaking of revolutionary agents, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Could the Prime Minister inform the house of the whereabouts of another revolutionary agent who has been missing for a few hours and whose name is Dalton Camp?

INDUSTRY

RESPONSIBILITY FOR SAFETY OF MINE WASTE HEAPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or in his absence to the acting minister. In view of the two deaths which occurred near Natal as a result of slides from mine waste heaps, and in view of the statement by the chief mining inspector for British Columbia that these mine waste heaps are not the responsibility of anybody, is the federal government prepared to assume responsibility in this matter?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour to obtain a comment from the minister on this matter, which might be made tomorrow.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO REPAIRS REQUIRED FOR HERCULES PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Arising out of a report that nearly all of the Hercules planes used by the Americans in Viet Nam have been found to have wing cracks and have been recalled for an $11 million repair job, can the minister say whether there is similar danger to Canadian Hercules planes and, in particular, to the one which is now in use by the International Red Cross to take relief to Biafra?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of what has happened to the American planes in Viet Nam. We are keeping a very close watch on our planes and nothing of that sort has developed so far.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED STAFF AT EDMONTON AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Revenue. Would the minister undertake to provide an adequate customs staff and personnel at the Edmonton international airport in order to relieve the single official presently performing this function?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question could be placed on the order paper.

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the appropriate authority communicated to the Prime Minister the name of the new president of Air Canada?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, but it was my understanding that it would be announced at 1.30 today. I have not been listening to the radio.

Mr. Nesbitt: As a supplementary question, would the right hon. Prime Minister be good enough to ascertain who this person may be and revert to motions so he can make a statement thereon?

Mr. Trudeau: I shall be glad to attempt to do that, Mr. Speaker, if the announcement has been made by Air Canada people. I would be most anxious to hear about it and to announce it to the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Later:]

Mr. Trudeau: I suppose I ought to revert to motions; there is a fairly long release from the board of directors of Air Canada. But the essence of the reply to the question which was asked a few minutes ago is that the board of directors of Air Canada today at 1.30 announced the appointment of Mr. Yves Pratte, Q.C. of Quebec as chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the company, and of Mr. J. R. Baldwin of Ottawa as president. These appointments are effective December 15.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister supplementary to his announcement about Air Canada appointments, and supplementary also to the question asked by the hon. member for Lisgar. Now that the appointments to the two most senior positions in Air Canada have been made, will the government discuss once again with that organization the whole question of the overhaul and maintenance base at Winnipeg in the hope that it may be settled favourably and at an early date?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member will have noted that the appointments are effective December 15, and we do not think the question should wait that long to be discussed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ESTABLISHMENT OF STRAIGHT BASE LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that over-fishing by foreign nationals in Canada's territorial waters has caused a serious decline in our fisheries resources, would he inform the house whether any progress has been made in his discussions with other countries to reach agreement on geographical co-ordinates from which base lines for the 12-mile limit will be drawn?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take notice of that question.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO RELEASE OF HAWTHORN REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development may I direct a question to the hon. member for Port Arthur in his capacity, I assume, of acting minister, and ask when the house and the public might expect to receive the remainder of the Hawthorn report relating to Indian affairs?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I shall take notice of the question and advise the hon. member as soon as possible when the rest of the report will be released.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF DISPUTE WITH TECHNICIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, who I see is not present in the house; therefore perhaps his parliamentary secretary can take notice of it. I would like to ask the minister whether a tentative agreement has been reached between negotiators for the C.B.C. and the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians. I ask this question, Mr. Speaker, because apparently if such an agreement has not been reached we cannot avert a blackout of television and radio programming.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think this question should be placed on the order paper.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

ROOMS RESERVED IN LONDON FOR CANADIAN DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he say how many people he is taking to the Commonwealth prime ministers' conference in London, and what is the purpose of the 26 rooms reserved for this delegation at the posh Claridges Hotel in London?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me this is a repetition of a question that was asked yesterday.

AGRICULTURE

STEPS TO MEET INCREASES IN COSTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Since the outlook conference on agriculture stated that the price index of cost of goods and services used by farmers rose by 6.4 per cent in the 1966-67 period, and since that same conference forecast a similar increase—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has to ask a question. He cannot seek to give information but must ask for information.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, my question is this. What does the government intend to do to check this fantastic cost increase, which will amount to something like 13 per cent in the two-year period for agriculture?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I wonder if the hon. member would mind directing his question to the minister when the minister is supposed to be in the house.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is supposed to be here now, isn't he?

TELEVISION

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION ON EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put a question to the Secretary of State, but in his absence, I will direct it to the Prime Minister.

Following the statement of the Quebec premier on educational broadcasting, will the government decide to issue licences for educational broadcasting to provinces wishing to operate their own system?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We will, Mr. Speaker, apply the constitution which gives to the federal government jurisdiction on broadcasting.

Mr. Asselin: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Will educational broadcasting be on the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference to be held in Ottawa in December? Will it be considered?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the question of the distribution of jurisdictions between the two levels of government is in fact on the agenda and the provinces might wish to discuss it.

Mr. Asselin: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I think it should be easy for the Prime Minister to answer yes or no to my question whether that will be on the agenda.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes and no, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SALARY INCREASES FOR NON-CLASSIFIED CIVILIAN PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Could he shed some light on a serious and growing problem that is of concern to civilian employees of his department who still have not been classified? There are thousands of such employees, and they want to know whether action with regard to their pay increases will be taken before the end of the current year.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I understand that in the case of these people to whom the hon. member refers the classification process has not yet terminated, and that is probably why there is a delay.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister please find out whether the process has even begun? These people are complaining that the process has not yet begun.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I will undertake to do that, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED POLLUTION OF LAKES FOR RESEARCH PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and arises from a news report that the Fisheries Research Board will, for purposes of experimenting, artificially pollute 100 lakes near the Ontario-Manitoba border. Did the department or the board consult with the two affected provinces before making this decision?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the press report the hon. member refers to. I will look into the matter and report back to the house.

WATER RESOURCES

PEMBINA RIVER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He may want to take it as notice. Will he look into the present status of the Pembina river development, which has been approved by the International Joint Commission? Probably the minister will want to report to the house on negotiations between the Manitoba government and the United States authorities.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should think that question could be asked by putting it on the order paper.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED GRANTS FOR HEART TRANSPLANT RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would he consider the establishment of a special medical research grant above the usual research grants for the purpose of stimulating and increasing much needed Canadian research and allowing Canada to take the lead in research pertaining to heart transplants and associated problems?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether this is a matter of urgency, but perhaps the minister might be allowed to answer.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to have this matter referred to the Medical Research Council. As the hon. member knows, that is an autonomous body reporting to parliament through me.

THE MINISTRY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEETING WITH CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will he tell the house what commitments he made yesterday to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce that made them so jubilant about their visit with him?

[Mr. Schreyer.]

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I told them that this was a good government and likely to remain in power for some time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My leader suggests that I ask the Prime Minister what truthful thing he told them, but I would not do that. Instead, may I ask the Prime Minister if he made commitments to the Chamber of Commerce in relation to their objections to medicare?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare made the statement on this aspect. I cannot say that the Chamber of Commerce was extraordinarily happy with what he had to say.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then I had better leave it at that.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the Prime Minister finished bragging to the Chamber of Commerce did he tell them that he intended to maintain the Air Canada overhaul base in Winnipeg?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence.

Is it the intention of the government to maintain and even increase its forces in NATO, in view of the pressure exerted by member countries?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): That is precisely a question to which the cabinet has been giving its constant consideration, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AID

NIGERIA—PROVISION OF CARIBOU AIRCRAFT FOR RELIEF FLIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In reply to one of my questions and a similar question asked by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), the Prime Minister said yesterday in the house that we were still awaiting a reply from the Red Cross as to whether they can or cannot use our Caribou aircraft that were destined for relief work in Nigeria. Has the Prime Minister received a reply on this subject as yet?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to reply to this question. We have not yet received a reply.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Canadian government made a request to the Nigerian Red Cross with respect to the use of the aircraft.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

COMPLAINTS FROM FARM PUBLICATIONS AS TO INCREASED RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Has the minister received representations from farm magazine publishers to the effect that many of them may have to cease publication after the new postal rates come into effect? If so, has the minister considered the situation.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I received a number of such representations prior to the adoption of the bill. I pointed out to those making representations that in most cases they could cover the increased cost simply by increasing their subscription rates by as little as 35 cents a year.

NATIONAL PARKS

GLACIER—INQUIRY AS TO LOGGING OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or in his absence to the acting minister. Has the government, through the national parks board, announced that logging operations will be allowed in Glacier National Park, and particularly in that section bordering the trans-Canada highway through Rogers pass. If so, when will logging operations begin?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether this is a matter of urgency. If it is the hon. member may wish to give the Chair notice to have the question debated at the time of adjournment.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—UNEMPLOYMENT RESULTING FROM FISH PLANT CLOSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): My question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the recent closing of a large processing plant on the west coast of Newfoundland and the pending closure of a number of other such operations, can the minister say whether the government is taking any action to reinstate the deficiency payment to the Atlantic fresh fish industry?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I am sorry, but I did not hear the first part of the question.

Mr. Lundrigan: In view of the closing of a plant on the west coast of Newfoundland, putting 400 people out of work, and the pending closure of a number of other plants in the same area, is the government taking any action to reinstate deficiency payments to the fresh fish industry?

Mr. Davis: My understanding in the case of this plant is that it operates on a seasonal basis and that it normally closes at this time of year. However, I will look into the matter further.

Mr. Lundrigan: In view of the fact that 400 people have been prematurely put out of work, can the minister say whether his department is co-operating with the provincial department and the Department of Manpower and Immigration to offset the effect of this unemployment?

Mr. Davis: Yes, we are always co-operating with the provincial government in that province.

External Aid

EXTERNAL AID

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to special order of the house made on November 6 a motion is now before the house, as follows:

That the second report of the standing committee on external affairs and national defence, presented to the house on Wednesday, November 6, be concurred in.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): One of the strengths of Canada, Mr. Speaker, one of the qualities of the Canadian people that makes me proud to be a Canadian, is the interest which Canadians take in the welfare of others less fortunate than themselves. We are, I think it is fair to say, human beings first and citizens second. Successive Canadian governments have received full public support for measures which have been designed to relieve the suffering of persons elsewhere. In addition to our programmed external aid, Canada has again and again provided emergency food and relief supplies in generous measure to victims of famine and natural disasters. We have on several occasions welcomed to our midst in large numbers the unfortunate victims of wars and disruption.

We all stand taller as a result of our sympathies for human beings and our efforts to assist them. We stand taller not because we are seeking to mollify our own consciences, nor because we need to boast to others of our humanitarian motivation; we stand taller because we have chosen the right path of conduct and have been effective in the help we have tendered.

And this to me, Mr. Speaker, is what this entire debate today is about. It is unnecessary to discuss whether Canadians actively wish to assist the unfortunate victims of the civil war in Nigeria. They do. It is irrelevant to discuss whether a Canadian government can properly involve itself in a relief effort abroad. It can. The single point in issue is whether this government has acted correctly and wisely in doing what it has done.

In this respect correctness is not measured in red tape or technicalities and I shall not therefore make any attempt to suggest these considerations as an explanation for Canadian policies. But in this same respect, Mr. Speaker, neither is wisdom measured in the volume of our own voices raised in international arenas.

If we are truly and honestly committed to assisting the peoples of Nigeria, both correctness and wisdom must be measured in terms of the effectiveness of our efforts to help. Victims of war are not helped by grandiose speeches in the General Assembly; starving children are not nourished by acts which prolong hostilities.

[Translation]

For several weeks, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people have shown much concern and sympathy for the problem now being discussed. Opinions, comments and questions about it have increased. A standing committee has considered that matter.

The civil war in Nigeria is a particularly complex matter. Its outbreak is linked to various factors and its roots go back quite far in the history of that great country and it is possible that only those who are engaged in that conflict can measure its intensity and understand its full meaning. In any case, Canadians as individuals have been deeply moved by the stories and pictures describing the suffering of the people of that country and they have felt involved. It is necessary however to grasp a fundamental point, namely that it is a civil war and that the solution of the conflict can be arrived at only by the belligerents themselves. Of course, those from outside can offer their services, but they cannot impose a settlement which would be contrary to the will of either side. In that connection, the good offices of the secretary general of the commonwealth as well as those of the Organization for African Unity have been and will always be available, and I hope that they will continue to be used.

The fact is that during all the hostilities, there have been periodic discussions between Nigerian authorities and the rebels, some of them extending over several weeks. But it appears that it is not enough to have the belligerents talk things over, or even declare the urgency of a cease-fire. They must also be willing to make concessions leading to a peaceful settlement, and this is exactly this conciliatory spirit which cannot be imposed from the outside.

We have expressed on several occasions the earnest hope of this government to see the opponents in this tragic war show at least the good-will necessary to negotiate a lasting peace.

In testifying before the committee, the secretary general of the commonwealth, Mr. Arnold Smith, helped us to understand some of the implications of the problem. He explained, for example, that on several occasions during the past 18 months, certain compromises which he, as an outsider, thought quite acceptable, might have been found. However, Mr. Smith then added that there was no hope of a settlement unless the two sides themselves made some compromises. I quote some of his words:

> The Biafrans will have to make concessions with regard to sovereignty, and Lagos will have to make concessions with regard to physical security and economic viability.

I bring up that statement again, Mr. Speaker, to make clear that those who were in a position to offer their good offices made a close study of the question and that it is up to the belligerents to find within themselves the true spirit of conciliation which is the prerequisite of any compromise. Above all, we must not think that we, in Canada, were the first to become aware of that war, and that we have all the answers. We do not have them.

If Canada attempted, in one way or another, to impose any solution whatever to the conflict, that effort would constitute an intervention in the internal affairs of another country.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

The policy which my government has followed in this situation has been motivated, as is proper, by humanitarian considerations. But what a government cannot do in this or in any other situation is to depart from the broad context of its foreign policy or its general and carefully formulated outlook on the world. Thus our policy involves our attitudes toward the aspirations of the developing countries; it touches on our position in the Commonwealth and the United Nations; it urges us to be realistic in our continuing desire to play a useful, responsible role on the world scene. I emphasize this concept of responsibility in foreign policy both because it is particularly relevant to the question of Nigeria, and because it is our belief that in the increasing complexities we have to face in international affairs it is steadily more important that countries like Canada play their parts responsibly.

We see in Nigeria a tragic and bloody civil war taking place in a Commonwealth country with which Canada has developed strong ties of friendship. I am not now talking about red tape or protocol or diplomatic technicalities. I am talking about a real issue. Contemporary international practice recognizes a fundamental legal obligation not to interfere in the internal affairs of another state. The United Nations General Assembly's unanimous declaration on non-intervention in 1965 describes this duty in no uncertain terms:

> No state has the right to intervene, directly or indirectly, for any reason whatever, in the internal or external affairs of any other state.

Certainly world concern for the promotion and protection of basic human rights has enabled the assembly effectively to overcome past objections that even the mere discussion of these rights constituted a form of intervention. However, in this particular instance there was no general desire to have the item discussed at the United Nations. Moreover, in so far as actual intervention is concerned, that is, action by the United Nations within the territory of a state without its consent, it should be realized that only in the most extreme circumstances involving the maintenance or restoration of international peace and security can the appropriate United Nations organ authorize or approve such intervention.

I emphasize that to many of the states of the world—those which have only recently gained independence—the principle of non-intervention is a dominant consideration. As an example I need only recall that for all of the concern of the countries of Africa for the plight of the native population in the republic of South Africa, there has never been a proposal from an African country that the United Nations possesses the right to violate the territorial integrity of South Africa. The question of southwest Africa because of its mandate is distinct and not to be confused. If, therefore, the Africans, for fear of creating a precedent which might be used against themselves later, have not raised the argument of intervention on humanitarian grounds in South Africa, it is not likely that any Canadian effort to intervene in Nigeria would be met with other than outraged opposition.

There have been persistent proposals in this house and in the press that Canada raise this issue at the United Nations. Notwithstanding what I have just said, I should like to assure the people of Canada that we have gone into this deeply. There have been intensive consultations with other delegations in New York; the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) sought the views of the United Nations secretary-general in an exchange of messages in September; our missions abroad have sought advice; I talked personally with the secretary-general about this and other matters. As a result of all this, of my own talks with the secretary-general, of continuing inquiries made at the official level at the United Nations and in a number of foreign capitals, I remain convinced that an attempt to inscribe the Nigerian conflict on the agenda of the General Assembly would not only be bitterly resented by the Nigerian government and the member states of the Organization of African Unity, but would also be totally unsuccessful because of the procedural requirement of support of 63 other members. In view of the O.A.U. resolution, there is not a chance that even a small fraction of that number would agree. And hon. members should not forget that of the 126 United Nations' members, 42 are from the continent of Africa.

There is an alternative to the General Assembly, we are told. A committee. Should we attempt to employ a General Assembly committee for such a discussion, conceding for the moment that we could do so, which is not entirely clear, our efforts would prove not only divisive but totally counter-productive. The soundings to which I have referred and others revealed the following probable consequences of any such attempts: First, hostility and opposition from almost all African states. Canada's long term relations with these countries, which we now find amiable and productive, would be prejudiced for some years to come, both on a bilateral and a multilateral basis. Any doubt in this respect should have been resolved by the O.A.U. vote of 33-4 against intervention. Second, Nigeria would demand that we cease participating in relief assistance to any part of that country. Third, we should be asked to withdraw from the international observer team in Nigeria.

I need only add that in the view of the government, such a policy by Canada would be completely irresponsible and indefensible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: However much it might salve the feelings of concerned Canadians, it would be wrong. For these reasons I am reluctant to strain the very real and very meaningful ties of friendship which Canada enjoys with Nigeria and with other African states. I have accordingly assured General Gowon of our continuing support for his government as the government of all Nigeria. I have at the same time informed him of our desire to see an early conclusion of the hostilities in Nigeria on terms permitting Nigerians to live within a federal structure which provides adequate guarantees of personal and economic security to all persons. General Gowon has for his part assured us of his intention to provide such guarantees and has welcomed the understanding and interest of the Canadian people.

What I have said about action through the United Nations applies also to proposals that initiatives be mounted through the Commonwealth. Like the United Nations, the Commonwealth is an association of sovereign states, admittedly bound by special ties of affection but also bound by tradition not to intervene in each other's affairs or to discuss them at Commonwealth meetings. The Commonwealth does offer the unique facility of the good offices function of the secretary-general which I mentioned earlier. Members who are familiar with Mr. Arnold Smith's testimony before the standing committee are aware of the untiring efforts which Mr. Smith has lent to the search for a solution. These efforts have not met with success but they have served to keep open a channel of communications between the disputants.

Recently there have been proposals that Canada attempt to arrange a cease-fire. It is argued that this would not involve making a political or moral judgment on the merits of either side's case, and the advocates see it in terms of "let the fighting cease and peace will prevail". I agree with the theory but the practice is more complicated, as shown by reports of discussions already held by the Nigerian parties about a possible cease-fire. It is clear that this question has been surrounded by political conditions. For example, at one point the rebel proposals for a cease-fire stipulated a withdrawal of federal troops behind the pre-war boundaries, an action which the Nigerians claim would place some five and a half million non-Ibos under Ibo rule without their being able to make a choice. This one example illustrates that in this situation a cease-fire is not a simple proposition to be seen in isolation from the political factors. In present circumstances, any cease-fire inevitably involves a major concession of principle by one side or the other. I am not suggesting that a cease-fire is undesirable or that it is impossible; I am saying that it will be difficult to accomplish.

What I have been attempting to make clear, Mr. Speaker, is the legal, moral and political framework in which the government has viewed this human crisis in a friendly country. It has been clear to me throughout that the concern of the Canadian people in this situation is that their government should act to help relieve human suffering without interfering in the politics of the situation or being used to advance the political aspirations of one side over the other.

This challenge we have accepted; this concern of the Canadian people we have attempted to meet. I should like nothing more than to be able to stand here today and to announce that the Nigerian civil war has been concluded. It is of little consequence to me whether that conclusion is reached as a result of any special Canadian intervention. It is a solution that I seek, not necessarily a "made in Canada" solution. What is important is that the war cease, that the unnecessary deaths be avoided, and that the record of Canadians and their government be an honourable one. I think that the record to date is honourable and I should like to recount briefly some of the action the government has taken.

The government's concern with the Nigerian situation was engaged long before the Canadian people became aware of the problem and hon. gentlemen opposite began to ask questions. Our ties with Nigeria have been strong, affectionate and mutually advantageous, and because of this we watched with deepening anxiety as the situation deteriorated in 1966 and 1967. When the secession occurred and the fighting broke out we became increasingly concerned that this conflict would tear irreparably the fabric of this fellow Commonwealth country. We told the Lagos government that we believed a peaceful rather than a military settlement should be found. We supported the Commonwealth secretary-general in his efforts to bring about negotiations. Later we supported the initiative of the Organization of African Unity in the same direction. And we have repeatedly urged the Nigerian government, which we continue to recognize as the government of all Nigeria, to seek a peaceful negotiated settlement.

In terms of action the Canadian government has concentrated on humanitarian assistance to those in need. We were involved in this well before the human problem reached its acute and well publicized stage. As early as February of this year, we made representations to the federal Nigerian government urging greater co-operation with the International Red Cross in its mercy flights into rebel held territory. Since then we have spoken frequently with the Nigerian authorities on related subjects and have always been given a cordial hearing and explanation of their position. These explanations have made clear, for example, their longstanding willingness to open land and water corridors for the movement of relief supplies, a willingness which is not shared, I should emphasize, by the rebels.

In May, long before this unfortunate war was the subject of constant questions in the house, the International Committee of the Red Cross asked Canada for urgent financial help in their operations in Nigeria. We responded with a substantial cash grant. In July we allocated half a million dollars in food aid for Nigeria and sent an initial food shipment to Lagos by Hercules aircraft. At that time we decided in principle to provide Hercules aircraft for an airlift under Red Cross auspices if the agreement of the two sides could be obtained.

In August we lent the services of a Canadian expert to the International Red Cross to assist that organization in studying the feasibility of increased and improved airlift operations.

In September another allocation was made of half a million dollars in food aid. The large sea shipment of food sent under these allocations arrived in the area early this month and we have reports of it reaching the forward centres from which the Red Cross distributes it to needy civilians. These are significant contributions being made by the government in the name of the Canadian people, and they have been acknowledged warmly by the Nigerian authorities. But the story does not end there. Further food aid in large amounts will continue to move forward from Canada.

Private Canadian organizations have also made significant contributions, and their work should be praised and encouraged. I would pay special tribute to the efforts of the Canadian Red Cross Society which has been in this situation from the beginning, working patiently and hard to bring aid and comfort to the suffering in all parts of Nigeria affected by the fighting.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the most acute problem was that of transportation. The house is well aware of the sincere and sustained efforts the government made in this regard. Generally, attention was concentrated only on air transport into the rebel zone. But in fact, it was a second choice, for using the ground corridors into the eastern area would allow the transportation of far greater quantities of supplies. The situation could be met far better through their use instead of hazardous flights in an air corridor over the jungle, close to aircraft transporting arms. Still, the rebels have constantly opposed the proposals of the Red Cross and Nigeria with regard to the use of the ground corridors, and although one can understand their military concern, one can certainly question the merits of such priorities. As the food supplies decrease, it becomes obvious that even the most efficient and best organized airlift will not be sufficient. Ground transportation therefore remains the only adequate solution. And this requires the approval of Colonel Ojukwu.

With regard to air transport, let us look first at the fact that the Red Cross asked us for Hercules aircraft, because of their exceptional capacity and other features which made them particularly suitable for that type of work. Now, that request involved the use of Canadian armed forces airplanes and consequently, we had to get beforehand the authorization of the Nigerian authorities. Such authorization was required not only for the flights over rebel territory, since these territories were under Nigerian sovereignty. It was then that Nigeria made it clear that any flights over rebel territory not previously authorized by it would be considered as "acts of hostility". As a friendly and responsible government, we were not going to ignore that warning. Therefore, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) attempted to get from the Nigerian government, permission to fly over the rebel territory. Through painstaking and presevering efforts, such permission was granted on October 8. The sole condition stipulated by the Nigerian authorities was that Canadian airplanes should operate their mission under the auspices of the Red Cross. We were also advised that this permission would not continue if transport operations were made under the auspices of other organizations, such as the churches for instance. Therefore, it was with the authorization of the Nigerian government that our Hercules airplanes went to Lagos last summer.

[English]

I should like to pause briefly at this juncture to recall what I said a moment ago about the inviolability of territory and about the principles of international law which support non-intervention. Much as we may argue that in this instance or that such principles may or should be bent, we must remember that we cannot take unto ourselves such a decision. To do so means that we are setting ourselves above the law, as judges in our own cause. Rules of international conduct are not perfect but they are designed to ensure order. Breaking these rules because we think it is right only leads to chaos.

Following the agreement reached between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Nigerian Commissioner General for External Affairs, a Canadian Hercules aircraft did operate on the Red Cross night airlift from Fernando Po into the rebel area for some days. During that period it made a most significant contribution to the effort, carrying 20 tons of food each trip. Our experience quickly showed, however, that daylight flights by relief aircraft would be better; more flights could be made more safely, and much greater quantities of food could be delivered to those in need. We could see no reason why the rebel authorities should refuse to allow daylight flights if they were really interested in receiving food for their people in the quantities required.

It was about this time that I decided, in constant consultation with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and based on the continuous stream of information available to the government from its missions in Africa and elsewhere, that it would be appropriate to send to Lagos a personal representative of the Prime Minister of Canada to discuss with the Nigerian head of state the Canadian interest in an early settlement of the war. Accordingly I asked my legislative assistant, Professor Ivan Head, who had previously been in Nigeria, to fly to Lagos and speak on my behalf to General Gowon. This initiative was taken not because we thought that Canada possessed any wisdom not available to the Nigerians nor because we possessed some magic key which could solve the deadlock. I sent Mr. Head with instructions to explore the most effective avenues of Canadian relief assistance. And I sent him to assure General Gowon of our interest in a conclusion of hostilities in Nigeria and the establishment of a federal structure on terms which would guarantee the political and economic security of all minorities in Nigeria.

That initiative was successful. It was during Professor Head's discussion with General Gowon that it emerged that the Nigerians would have no objection to daylight relief flights by the Red Cross. I regard this statement as one of the most meaningful to date in this entire sequence of events, and one which is evidence of the good faith of the federal military government in Lagos.

I therefore issued my appeal on November 4 to the rebel authorities to permit these relief planes to land by day in their territory. Shortly thereafter we learned that the Nigerians would no longer agree to the continuation of night flights into the rebel area. It was evident that the federal government intended to step up military action against the shipments of arms which were going in at night, evidently in increasing quantities.

As I have reported to the house, my appeal was conveyed to the rebel authorities by the International Committee of the Red Cross, and although many days have passed we have received no clearcut reply. We are seeking every means possible to commence the daylight operation. Hon. members will understand the reason why we cannot accept at face value every statement attributed to some self-claimed rebel spokesmen. These statements have proved again and again to be contradictory. At the same time I stress that we do not reject these statements out of hand. In each case, as with the message conveyed to me yesterday by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), we attempt through the Red Cross channel to determine the authenticity of the communication. The Red Cross has served in this fashion as a channel of communication for decades, and with great honour. We see no reason to doubt either the integrity or the effectiveness of the Red Cross in these respects.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Our aircraft stationed on Fernando Po has not been without work. It has been able to perform several useful assignments for the Red Cross related to their work in the Nigerian area, but if it remains unable to participate in the airlift into the rebel area the responsibility rests squarely with the Ojukwu régime.

We have of course also offered aircraft to fly relief supplies into the federal-held regions of eastern Nigeria. A Hercules flew to Lagos for this purpose in October. Accompanying that aircraft were reconnaissance officers whose task it was to ascertain landing sites. To the distress of all concerned it was learned that the forward airports were incapable of utilization for relief flights by this size of aircraft for prolonged periods without permanent runway damage. The foundation of the runway at Enugu had been weakened by severe and prolonged rains, the heaviest in the history of Nigeria; the runway at Calabar was not well constructed and was in addition damaged as a result of the fighting in that area.

While Mr. Head was in Lagos he therefore discussed with General Gowon and his officials the provision of other, lighter aircraft which could replace the Hercules. The Nigerian government expressed a desire to receive Canadian Caribou aircraft and my government stated it was willing to supply them. However, as I repeated in the house yesterday, the policy of the Canadian government throughout has been to make our relief assistance available, not to the Nigerian government nor to the rebel authorities but to the Red Cross for impartial administration and distribution according to civilian need. We have been informed by the Nigerian Red Cross that that body is not now able to utilize efficiently the Caribou. We have been asked to delay the dispatch of these airplanes, and we have done so.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I should touch on another important aspect of the Nigerian problem. Canadian participation in the international team of observers has been studied at length by the committee and I need not comment in detail. I would like to say, however, that it has seemed most worth while for Canada to participate. We are pleased to continue to participate in the extended work of the team. There was much loose talk at an earlier stage accusing the federal Nigerian government of genocide, and I think that that government acted wisely in inviting observers from a number of countries and organizations to assess the situation independently. The reports of the observer team have refuted these glib charges. For our part, we take this operation very seriously and expect our observers to move about freely, observe and report fully and frankly. They have done so. So has the United Nations observer.

May I pay a personal tribute to the Canadian officers involved, as well as to the officers and crews of the Canadian aircraft involved in our relief contribution, for the spirit and competence with which they have been performing duties which are somewhat out of their regular line. We are proud of them all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Trudeau: With respect to our aircrew, Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in informing the house that the I.C.R.C. has communicated to the Canadian Red Cross its praise for the efficiency and conduct of the Canadian Hercules crew presently stationed in Fernando Po. The national commissioner for the Canadian Red Cross states that this heartwarming message is of particular significance because no similar message had been received by the I.C.R.C. in Switzerland from its officials in Africa with respect to any other aircrew.

There are many facets to the Nigerian problem. Much information has been brought out in the standing committee, and I believe the Canadian people are now better informed about its complexities and better able to understand the position of the Canadian government. I should like to put that position briefly again in conclusion. The government shares the deep concern of the people of this country with the suffering that is going on in Nigeria, and is anxious to help relieve it. It is doing so in a generous and responsible manner. We will continue to afford assistance and to increase it, if that is feasible, in order that human suffering can be alleviated. We will, moreover, continue to encourage in whatever way possible the peaceful settlement of the Nigerian dispute. We measure any suggested action against a single standard: Will it be effective?

Canada intends to remain friendly with all the peoples of Nigeria long after this dispute is settled, and to be in a position where we can play a useful role in assisting the African states to meet their problems. Our policies to this date have been designed to ensure that possibility. All information that reaches us from both parts of Nigeria indicates that we are successful to date.

The torment of the Nigerian peoples must be concluded as soon as possible. At the same time, the future welfare of the Nigerian peoples must be protected and assured. We must not permit our anxiety to achieve the first objective so to foul our reputation and hinder our effectiveness that we will not be given by the parties the opportunity to assist in the long term recovery of Nigeria.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Where is Biafra? A few of the world's people knew the answer to this question a year ago, and many more do today. Many Canadians know that Biafra is the eastern part of Nigeria in west Africa. We know too that people are frightened in that country. We know that people are hungry there; we know that people are dying there. We have seen the distended bellies of the children and we have seen their eyes. We are told that sovereignty prevents our responding—sovereignty, that hoary, outmoded nineteenth century concept. How much death and agony has been endured in its name?

Men say we must not feed the hungry unless the giving of the loaves and fishes is cleared with the appropriate government authorities. After all, protocol comes before protein and diplomacy outranks digestion. Are men becoming the captives of concepts? Are humane instincts being thwarted by ancient adages about sovereignty and interference in domestic affairs?

Cox in his book, "The Secular City", writes that there are no mysteries in the world any more. Man knows how to run it, man has the capacity to do the job, and man can control events. I submit that the great tragedy of the Nigerian civil war is that the international community has opted out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fairweather: Its representatives mouth platitudes as alternatives to action. Is this really to be man's total mission here on earth? Do we continue our catalogue of inaction in so very many areas of the world?

I suppose there was a time in man's long struggle to civilize himself when he did not know how to respond to hunger, to war, to death and the many other forces which beset him. But man does know now. Man's barns are bursting with food, his storehouses are full of medical supplies, his hangars contain many aircraft. Man knows that war is not an acceptable method of solving political problems. Yet he talks, he excuses, he fails to act.

Is it any wonder that many thoughtful people have doubts about the utility of the United Nations in its present structure? Can a world body of 126 countries founded on principles of peace and human dignity expect less than despair when no way can be found to respond to a massive suppression of human rights and human life? I say, shame for the United Nations which operates under a charter that authorizes it to maintain peace but not to intervene in a man-made disaster claiming the lives of thousands of people each week.

In an editorial in the August 24 issue of Saturday Review Norman Cousins, that eloquent spokesman for a new and better world, wrote:

> Biafra is a six-letter word spelling world shame. Shame first for the Nigerian government which is trying to starve the Biafrans into submission. Shame for the Biafrans who have been unable to come to agreement with Nigerian officials on the terms for allowing emergency food supplies to get through the blockade—

And to Mr. Cousins' list I add, shame for Canada whose government has fiddled and fooled about an appropriate role and has allowed itself to be hobbled and hamstrung by principles of non-intervention.

To paraphrase Mr. Cousins, the real issue here is not intervention but whether Canada has a double standard. Do we become innovative and are we courageous only when our national interest is involved? Is it not conceivable that the greatest thing we could do for our national interest would be to commit ourselves to a human interest? Canadians want to make a commitment to the people of Nigeria and Biafra, to those who have felt the effects of this evil war.

I do not need to outline in very great detail the ties which have found Canada to Nigeria and to Biafra. The strong relationships based on personal experience in these countries of missionaries, businessmen, educators and students have been a fact of Canadian life for many years. May I add here that the committee had eloquent testimony of this type of contact from a Canadian student, Mr. Keith Bezanson who, I thought, gave one of the most comprehensive pieces of evidence, far superior to those of many people who appeared before the committee and were considerably senior to him. It is this closeness of Canada to Nigeria and Biafra which has caused us to take such a deep and almost personal interest in the war. This interest has been reflected in our periodicals which as early as last March were calling on the Canadian government to take initiatives to end the shipment of arms to Nigeria and Biafra. It was in March too that the external affairs committee of this house first heard testimony outlining the background to the Nigeria-Biafra war.

The enormity of the tragedy weighs on us all, although I do hear in the corridors of this building those who wonder why we spend a day on such an issue. I will leave it to others to comment on this attitude. I fail to see why in a time of international tragedy some response would not be expected from the parliament of a great nation. How many have died as a result of the war and the malnutrition is difficult to say, but we all know that these deaths were largely unnecessary and were the result of a war that could have been stopped or made less serious had the governments of the world taken the appropriate action at the appropriate time.

I am going to undertake today, in a speech that will be longer than most I have made in my time here, a review of the government's response to this international tragedy. We must remember that in the first months following March, when Canadians called on the government to act, the government benches were preoccupied with electing the present Prime Minister to the leadership of his party and were unable to think much about affairs beyond Canada's borders. Shortly after we were all preoccupied with the federal election, and as late as early August the Prime Minister still felt able to feign ignorance in asking reporters "where's Biafra?" Awareness among the ranks of the ministers was slow to become a reality.

In fairness, however, let me say that the government did give grants for Biafran relief. On July 11, $60,000 was granted to the Red Cross. On July 30, $500,000 was granted in goods. On September 19 a further $500,000 was granted. But Canada has no cause to be smug or self-satisfied on account of these gifts. The United States government, quietly and without pressure from the public, had given as of November 8, $12 million, with the United States people donating a further $5 million in voluntary gifts. European governments, with equal discreetness, have been supporting aid to Biafran war victims. Canada has no claim to consider its actions in any way exceptional.

These gifts are in some ways a cause for sadness. What percentage of our goods have reached those in need? How much of our salt cod actually will go into the cooking pots of mothers with protein deficient children? Are our drugs actually being used in the war area? How much of our generosity has been lost in chaos and deteriorated in usefulness because there were no adequate means of transporting this food to the needy? These questions have not been answered and perhaps never can be. Because of the poor follow-up by the government, doubts remain as to how much satisfaction we are entitled to draw from the gifts that the government has made.

I am going to pass now, sir, to the dismal, shameful story of our failure to do the job we were perhaps best fitted to do. From the beginning of summer everyone connected with aid to Biafra recognized that the greatest need was for adequate air transport facilities. From the beginning, too, the Hercules has been recognized as the best plane available. Canada's air transport command has more than 20 of these aircraft. The fact that Canada could supply the needed planes was obvious. But what was the response of this government? On July 12 the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) first mentioned the possibility of Canada supplying Hercules aircraft. However, this suggestion was hedged by the decision to use only the Red Cross as the agency to distribute our relief and direct our planes, and the decision to obtain clearances from every interested jurisdiction before allowing the planes to move. If the churches had ever gone through this panoply of clearances the figures for deaths would have been substantially higher.

This decision was made in spite of the well known fact that church agencies, in terms of performance, were more effective than the Red Cross had been and in spite of the fact that the jurisdictions involved were giving de facto permission to fly through by making no moves to stop the flights. I believe, however, in the middle of summer we were warned that unless we were careful we could expect Nigeria to declare war on Canada. I must say that this piece of patent nonsense was not taken seriously by very many responsible people in the nation. The predictable result of this cautious decision was that it was not until October 12, 90 days after the minister's first suggestion, that our first Hercules left Canada for use in Nigeria. It was another 18 days before the first flight actually arrived in Biafra.

This is a bitter record. The Canadian people and the members of this house had been waiting for the Canadian government to act. We welcomed the Prime Minister's tardy but hope-giving message that flights would be taking place. We became angry and, yes, bitter, at the delay of 18 days while our planes remained sitting useless on scattered tropical airports. By November 16, the day one Hercules left Nigeria to return to Canada, our anger was replaced by shame at the inability or unwillingness to take the really bold action which the situation demanded. The Prime Minister's repeated attempts to put all the blame on Biafran shoulders only increased the burden of this shame.

Then, Mr. Speaker, came the government's final exercise in futility. Caribou planes were offered for use in Nigeria. The Red Cross predictably shunted this offer to one side. A simple telephone call to Canadian officials and agencies involved in relief operations would have confirmed the unsuitability of this lighter aircraft. We recognize, sir, that all causes for the failure of the government's reluctant attempts to do noble deeds were not within the control of the treasury benches. But surely the degree to which Canada felt obliged to get permission from those who were giving de facto permission for flights was within the government's control. The decision to use only the Red Cross was also within the control of the ministry. The vigour with which our government implemented the policy of contacting the authorities left much to be desired. I cite as an example the minister's declaration in the house on October 22 that the flights were held up pending approval from officials of Equatorial Guinea who, he mirthfully explained, could not be found.

Members of this house and the people of this country have been left with the distinct impression that the government has used official channels and procedures in a way that has not facilitated but rather has hindered the object of getting food to the starving. Abstract concepts have been allowed to get in the way of filling concrete needs. The poignant and bitter sketch of the emaciated Biafran child holding in his hands a bowl filled with what is labelled "red tape" is too real to be funny.

I should like now to draw a contrast between the government's actions and what has been done by private individuals and organizations in this country. The most dramatic actions have been the trips by four members of this house and one member of the legislature of Ontario to the beleagured regions. The first of these trips was 56 days ago. The trips of Canadian newsmen to both Nigeria and Biafra have been of prime importance in giving Canadians hard information rather than propaganda as a base for opinion. Churchmen of all denominations have been at the forefront of Canada's concern for the starving. They have been working actively to raise funds and to channel them in the most effective manner. Many of them have visited Biafra, while others have been moved to go to Nigeria and Biafra to work directly with the relief organizations.

In spite of the Prime Minister's suggestions to the contrary, Canadians have been generous toward Biafra. About $600,000 has been donated already for the relief of those in need. Almost any newspaper in this nation that comes to hand gives details of imaginative schemes, such as walks and so on, organized by young people who are concerned about the need of that country. Canada has been unique in the intensity of its interest in these circumstances. This intensity and the fact that the interest has been sustained have surprised visitors from other nations which have not experienced the same degree of concern. It is unfortunate that the government has not been able to give adequate expression to what I consider a most refreshing outpouring of concern. Senator Edward Kennedy wrote letters last week to the president and president-elect. He said that decisions of the United States government about the civil war and massive destruction of human life in Nigeria-Biafra must not be lost in the mechanics of political transition and cannot wait for the coming of the new administration. He described the situation as an "awesome tragedy". He went on to say:

I cannot accept the view that the deteriorating situation and extraordinary loss of life in Nigeria-Biafra is primarily an internal or African concern, and must be met within that context, however desirable this objective.

May I interpolate: If this were the case, how convenient it would be for those who pursue this attitude.

The mere fact that arms are pouring into the area from many parts of the world to needlessly prolong violence at the expense of innocent millions, should tax the conscience of all mankind—especially that of our nation, whose traditions and ideals call for a maximum effort in the service of peace and the welfare of humanity.

Senator Kennedy wrote:

The United States has always found a way to make its weight felt in the affairs of others when our political self-interest and national security have been at stake. In the historic tradition of our nation, I would also hope that we can still exert our powerful influence when great human tragedy strikes our fellowman.

And so today, I urgently call upon the leadership of our nation to make every effort to meet the needs of our fellowman in Nigeria-Biafra.

Senator Kennedy made three suggestions. I realize they are in the context of the United States situation, but I think they are worth repeating as part of this debate.

First, I urge that the United States energize its diplomatic initiatives to end immediately the flow of arms to either side—

And how much more effectively Canada could do this because of its special relationship in this regard with the United Kingdom.

—to pursue without delay a cease-fire on the battlefield, and to support earnestly and without prejudice to either side the renewed efforts by the Organization for African Unity to bring the warring parties to the conference table. I do not believe that the international community has lost its sensitivity to the moral imperatives in the pursuit of a newer world. So I am extremely hopeful that if a truly urgent call for peace is made, the world will support it, and the combatant leaders will respond.

Second, I urge that the United States, solely for humanitarian purposes, and in co-operation with the parties to the conflict, substantially escalate its contributions to the relief efforts being made by the International Committee of the Red Cross, UNICEF and the private voluntary agencies, whose dedicated representatives in the field deserve high tribute for a mission undertaken with great personal risk.

It is a harsh reality that the relief agencies do not have at their disposal adequate funds, food, medicine, and delivery capability to meet current needs, let alone those greater needs anticipated by the end of the year. I believe that nothing should be lacking in the commitment of the United States—especially in a positive response to the appeals for help by the religious agencies operating the air bridge into the besieged Biafran heartland with its starving millions.

But I do not believe that the maximum effort that can be made, under existing circumstances, is being made. So I urge that our leaders make a commitment, a massive commitment, to do what must be done, by making available funds, personnel, aircraft, and supplies to relieve a truly desperate situation. The stockpiling of food supplies must be given immediate priority. The United States can well afford to release additional commodities, especially corn, from our surplus. And let us forcefully enlist the help of others in an international humanitarian alliance, to head off what is clearly becoming one of the greatest nightmares of modern times.

Third, I urge President Johnson and President-elect Nixon to jointly agree on the appointment of a special presidential representative to galvanize this nation's acting commitment to do what must be done in Nigeria-Biafra, and to help mobilize the public and private sectors in an international humanitarian alliance in behalf of the starving millions. In the tradition of earlier missions carried out by Herbert Hoover, Herbert Lehman, and others who have served humanity, the special representative must be qualified by a deep compassion for those in dire need.

Senator Kennedy ends by saying:

I fully understand the many difficulties in taking new initiatives to relieve the situation in Nigeria-Biafra—especially those relating to the overriding need for a cease-fire and a negotiated settlement. But I also know that, while intensified measures to feed a starving people can surely save additional lives, only an early end to the conflict will avert the impending disaster of total famine and produce the conditions for a fully effective relief and reconstruction program.

At stake are human lives—innocent lives—African lives—thousands, even millions of lives—whose destruction will burden the conscience of Nigeria-Biafra and all mankind for generations to come, unless something more is done to save them.

Let statesmen act today—because it is right to do so—because it is unconscionable to remain silent—and because the hope of all mankind for a better world will be strengthened.

Canada is not in the midst of a transition. The Prime Minister and the government have a strong mandate for action. On the one hand, the government with commendable zeal is trying to make participatory democracy work—although I have never understood why democracy needs that adjective. Regional desks are being set up. People are being turned on and tuned in. Citizens are to take part in the decision-making process. But as the engines of participation are heated up the government and the Prime Minister, on the other hand, have cruelly turned off the humane instincts of Canadians. Attempts have been made to equate the feeding of Biafran civilians to feeding the Nazi army at Stalingrad. Is this not a paradox? It is grotesque to pronounce about the just society and renounce those who have suggestions for feeding the hungry and ending the fighting. As James Eayrs wrote: "A just society cannot call it quits at the 12-mile limit." People of good will all over Canada, in fact, all over the world, ask the question: "why can't we help? We want to. We are ready. Why must we wait for politicians to argue, with starving people as the pawn?"

The Canadian government has failed to put any pressure on the British government to stop the supplying of arms and ammunition. I single out the British government but I could add to that the government of France because of our special relations with those countries, and I would also hope we would take an initiative with regards to the U.S.S.R.

We justify our neglect by trotting out excuses about non-intervention. What about non-intervention at Suez in 1956 when, in my opinion, Canada enhanced her reputation in the world and a future prime minister won a Nobel peace prize as a result of massive direct pressure on Britain and France and because of bold and imaginative initiatives at the United Nations? Oil and diplomacy, treasure and pride, have a great deal to do with the attitude of some of the major governments of the world to this tragedy.

Two weeks ago the Prime Minister of Great Britain in a speech at the Guildhall in London spoke of his:

> —determination for human rights, a detestation of discrimination based on race or on colour... Above all, in Rhodesia... But human rights are at stake not only in Rhodesia. They are at stake in Gibraltar—and the issue is not one whit reduced by the fact that we are talking about 23,000 and not four million.

Commenting on Mr. Wilson's speech the Spectator of November 15 had this to say:

> Evidently... it is reduced out of existence when we are talking of seven million. At least, if the seven million are Ibos. For in its policy towards Nigeria the British government is engaged as principal accomplice in the biggest suppression of human rights—and of human life—in the non-Communist world today.

This is the Spectator—language that some people might find tough.

> Yet human rights mean nothing, it seems, when it comes to Biafra. On the subject of Nigeria, Mr. Wilson in his Guildhall speech simply fell back on the old Commonwealth Office platitudes. "Fewer still are the countries in Africa who will not lay themselves open to division and balkanisation on tribal lines, if we, all of us, fail in securing a solution... based on the integrity of that country."

• (4:20 p.m.)

He speaks of "the integrity of that country". What kind of concept is this when people are dying? It is so old fashioned it makes men groan. The Spectator continues:

> For 17 months now Biafra has been fighting desperately to secure its independence—after the so-called experts from the British High Commission in Lagos and the Commonwealth Office had assured the British government that all would be over in 17 days. Yet in spite of this the government apparently goes on believing the nonsense that continues to pour out from these same "experts".

Then the Spectator says:

> What must be stopped, they argue, at whatever cost to human life, is "balkanisation".

What about Nigeria? As the Spectator says, it is:

> —a country whose "integrity" did not exist until it was invented by Britain in 1914, and whose only unifying force for almost the whole of the subsequent period was British colonial rule. Long before Biafra, the Ibo-dominated eastern region, seceded after the 1966 pogroms in which tens of thousands of Ibos were murdered and many more maimed and mutilated, there had been threats of secession from the Yoruba-dominated west and the Hausa-dominated north. Whatever happens, the long-term prospects of Nigeria remaining one are negligible.

The Spectator article then goes on to talk about various federal states and collections of artificially collected countries such as the East African Federation, the commonwealth of the West Indies, Malaysia, and so on. They could not survive the artificially of their concept.

Many of us have been excited by the concept of the global village. But if the concept is valid and not just a catch phrase, some of the elements of village life will have to become part of this larger prospect. In the villages I know the inhabitants give food to those who are hungry. My villagers succour the sick and comfort the dying. I am not indulging in some romantic, nostalgic backward look at simpler times. I am talking about what happens. Such, too, must be the ethic of the global village.

This war is in man's hands to end. Biafra is a step in the development of an international control system. War indicates a breakdown in the system. But this war is one which is within the capacity of man to respond to and deal with. If arms and ammunition did not enter Nigeria and Biafra war would not be possible. It is as simple as that.

As the world federalists so correctly state in their brief to the government of Canada presented on August 14 this year, we must provide:

(a) World Security

A reliable and competent world of authority must be established which will

(i) provide a minimum and necessary level of security of nations and peoples;

This does not just deal with the concept of nation states but with peoples—with Ibo peoples, with peoples who are being killed because of concepts. The federalists also say that we must:

(ii) preclude the use of national force in the pursuant of political aims; and

(iii) enable all nations to disarm to police force levels required only for internal security.

The Prime Minister once talked about what we should be doing. He might consider what I have just read.

Utopian—do I hear the cry? Do I hear it is unrealistic and unworkable? But I suggest we wait. Had these principles been adopted by the United Nations with rules designed to give effect to justifiable aspirations of self-determination, no arms would have gone to Nigeria and no statistics of death and hunger would have been compiled.

In its report to parliament, Mr. Speaker, the committee made several recommendations. The opposition does not quarrel with many of these but we feel there are some serious omissions. We submit that more can be done. For instance, the dean of the faculty of law at the University of Toronto has made specific suggestions for a Canadian initiative. I pay tribute to Dean MacDonald because a couple of his suggestions are part of an amendment I intend to move. His ideas were passed over by the majority of the committee. Others, among whom are included my leader, have suggested that Canada should seek by direct and explicit appeals to have the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R. and France stop supplying arms. There have been suggestions about action for a cease-fire from commonwealth prime ministers. Presumably these suggestions have been overlooked. The prime ministers will be meeting in January, but God knows what may happen between now and January.

Mr. Stanfield: God knows what may happen then.

Mr. Fairweather: To these suggestions I add the enlisting of the services of Right Hon. Lester Pearson as a possible mediator between Nigeria and Biafra—that is, if such a suggestion would not interfere with the concept of integrity, sovereignty, etc., etc. and etc. Others from this side of the house presumably will be discussing the adequacy of Canadian efforts to supply food and medicine.

I am about to move an amendment to the committee's report, Mr. Speaker. It was to have been seconded by my seatmate but he has removed himself because of my expansive qualities. Nevertheless, I am delighted to hear that the amendment will be seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). We have made a great effort in this presentation to, shall we say, defuse what might be called partisan attitudes.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood:

That the report of the standing committee on external affairs and national defence be amended by adding the following recommendations as paragraphs 10 and 11 thereof:

"10. The Canadian government, alone or in conjunction with like-minded nations, should take initiatives to persuade nations supplying arms to the combatants in Nigeria-Biafra to stop the flow of arms without which the war would soon no longer be possible.

11. The Canadian government should mobilize support for a resolution in the General Assembly deploring the war, expressing concern for the human rights of the starving civilians in Biafra, and calling on both sides for a cease-fire. Canada should see that the matter of Biafra is raised for consideration in the third committee of the General Assembly. Canada should also invite the third committee to present a draft resolution concerning Biafra to the General Assembly."

I have almost ended. May I read a verse from "Guide to a Disturbed Planet". Conway Power must have been anticipating this tragic war when he wrote:

> We are all bowmen in this place
> The pattern of the birds against the sky
> Our arrows overprint, and then they die.
> But it is also common to our race
> That when the birds fall down we weep.
> Reason's a thing we dimly see in sleep.

External Aid

A year ago in Fredericton, at the campus of the University of New Brunswick, I heard Senator Robert Kennedy say this to the graduates:

> You come from a nation whose Prime Minister holds a Nobel prize for his work in bringing peace to a war-ravaged land; a nation whose work abroad has been a living testament to man's longing for peace; a land whose people have put their energy and their wisdom to the task of a world in which human freedom is enlarged, and peace preserved. Now you must turn to the work of building a newer world—

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this government must turn toward this end too. I continue:

> —a world which will be better for the work that you do. And this you must do.

As a final sentence may I tell the house of something that an old philosopher friend of mine, Albert Camus, a dangerous, rebellious, revolutionary Frenchman who won the Nobel prize, wrote not many years ago:

• (4:30 p.m.)

> Perhaps we cannot prevent this world being a world in which children suffer but we can lessen the number of suffering children, and if you do not help us do this, who will do it?

If we cannot believe this, Mr. Speaker, what can we believe?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I regard this as the most solemn debate in which I have ever taken part in this house. I think back a few weeks ago, and as we debate I cannot but picture the vultures of death swooping overhead in Biafra. I hasten to lend all my support to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) and to his words. I take it as a privilege to be allowed to second his amendment. I am indeed proud to associate myself with his words of condemnation of the fumbling, inadequate response of the government to this greatest of tragedies.

I want to discuss the report of the committee. This report contains certain recommendations which we in this party support. I particularly wish to call attention to the eighth recommendation of the committee which proposes that the Canadian government should continue and intensify its efforts by negotiation through all possible channels, including the Commonwealth, the Organization of African Unity and interested governments, to persuade the contending parties to accept further mediation.

I see that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not here now, but the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is here and I want to make a suggestion which I think he will find is a practical one. I urge upon the government the importance of taking concrete steps through the third committee of the United Nations or outside it, if necessary, to set up an international conciliation team.

Such a team could consist of persons appointed by the heads of state of five nations of which Canada could well be one. I think we should propose that some eminent constitutional lawyer such as Professor Frank R. Scott, formerly dean of the law department of McGill, or Professor Ivan Head, who is on the Prime Minister's own staff, or Professor Ronald MacDonald, Dean of the University of Toronto law school, whose name has already been mentioned during this debate, be called upon to serve—the Prime Minister himself being presumably unavailable. Any of these men, experienced in world affairs and knowledgeable in the field of international law, could be of great assistance to the parties involved; their integrity and impartiality would be beyond question.

Other countries should be represented. I suggest there should be three representatives from African countries: one, perhaps, from Tanzania or Zambia which have recognized the Biafran régime, and two appointed by the Organization of African Unity. This would mean that the majority of the members of this conciliation team would be Africans, as is appropriate. The fifth representative could be appointed by the government of Sweden, and in this connection one thinks of such distinguished names as that of Gunnar Myrdal. I am not proposing that this team should have binding powers, but the governments of Nigeria and Biafra could be asked to give every possible co-operation so that the extensive differences between the parties might be explored and suggestions as to the resolution of the problem made to both sides.

I am well aware that efforts toward conciliation made by Arnold Smith, the Canadian secretary-general of the Commonwealth, and through the Organization of African Unity under the leadership of Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, have failed to reconcile the parties. Today, however, when it is apparent that there is not to be an early end to the war, there is always the possibility that both parties will be ready to accept conciliation. The alternative is too horrible to contemplate—the death by starvation of literally millions of people, many of them women and children who have no control over the tragedy which engulfs them.

I put this suggestion forward today in the sincere hope that the government will consider it. It does, I think, fit within the terms of the report made by the committee on external affairs, and if adopted and carried out successfully it could bring a very high and deserved measure of credit to those who have put forward the suggestion.

As most hon. members probably know, the members of my party who were on the committee, namely, our acting leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) and myself, prepared and issued what would have been a minority report had the rules permitted it. In this document, issued at the time the committee made its report, we said that although we agreed with much of what was contained in the report we nevertheless found it inadequate in the following particulars:

1. It failed to call for Canadian action through the third committee of the United Nations, founded on concern for human rights, for an immediate cease-fire between Nigeria and Biafra.

2. It failed to call on Canada to use its influence, both diplomatically and through the United Nations, to put an end to the supplying of arms to the combatants on either side of the conflict.

3. It failed to propose action by the Commonwealth of Nations by which the Prime Minister of Canada might seek to convene a meeting of the Commonwealth, with a view to discussing and taking action to bring about a cease-fire and the cessation of the supplying of armaments to either side.

4. It failed to recommend with sufficient clarity and particularity the concrete action which could be taken forthwith by Canada to increase the effect of the airlifts into Biafra.

5. It underemphasized the handicaps and difficulties which have rendered the task of the observers virtually futile, and overemphasized the value of the observers' reports under present circumstances.

6. In discussing the issue of genocide it failed to emphasize the disastrous implications of the further continuation of the war.

I do not intend to review all these matters today. I would prefer to deal with two particular aspects which in my view are of overwhelming importance. First, let no one be deceived about the magnitude of the tragedy which is hanging over the heads of the people of Biafra. It has recently been estimated that more than one million have already died of starvation. That was up to the end of October. The New York Times reported just the other day that Dr. Herman Middlekoop, the Dutch relief expert in charge of the relief work of the World Council of Churches, sent the following figures to Secretary General U Thant:

Estimated deaths from starvation in month of July 6,000 per day, August 10,000 per day, September 12,000 per day. Present situation holds or decreasing slightly with present level of relief flights.

There are one million persons in refugee camps and they are receiving some food, but there are a further three million persons without relief in the bush. Carbohydrate reserves from last winter's crops will be exhausted in seven weeks, leaving Biafra completely without food. Acute mass starvation is then expected. This is not my opinion. This is from a report released by the Catholic relief services executive director.

What can we in Canada do about this disaster? I should like to discuss this matter under two heads. The first, and by far the most important, is that every possible effort should be made to bring the war to an end. However much the relief effort is kept up it cannot be adequate to meet the crisis. In our view the Canadian government should propose an immediate cease-fire, and this proposal in our view should be linked with a request for an immediate end to the supplying of arms to combatants on either side. This could be followed by massive governmental relief operations in the areas occupied by federal and Biafran forces.

The Canadian government is hesitant about taking action. All sorts of reasons have been given when the Prime Minister has been asked why Canada could not take this action. Such action has been described by the Prime Minister and others as intervention in the domestic affairs of Nigeria. To my mind this is a totally mistaken view. It might be that we would not get immediate or universal support if we took action through the United Nations, but if Canada gave a lead we believe the peoples of the world would require their governments to support that lead. There is already much more support throughout the world than the Prime Minister and his government are willing to admit.

The members of the committee were furnished with a memorandum on international law by Dean Ronald MacDonald. As has already been stated by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), Dean MacDonald is the dean of the law school of the University of Toronto and represented Canada at the Third Committee of the United Nations. This memorandum sets out the legal background for saying that international law has developed so as to recognize the right of international intervention in cases where human rights are being violated or threatened with violation. The Prime Minister himself mentioned that the resolutions passed by the General Assembly relating to the practice of apartheid in South Africa are an illustration. Perhaps international action in the case of apartheid is futile; perhaps not much can be done about it. But this is not to say that there is no legal right to intervene. It cannot be denied that the most fundamental of human rights is the right to live, and yet this right is being taken away from hundreds of thousands of people.

The Prime Minister has stated in the house that there is no right of intervention. Maybe it is not the wise thing to do, but let him not shelter himself behind a false interpretation of the developing rules of international law, because I tell him the law is quite different. Another eminent constitutional lawyer, Dr. Edward McWhinney, said the same thing, as did Dr. John Humphrey, a distinguished Canadian who for many years served the United Nations in the field of human rights. Surely countries which have accepted without protest the arming of the combatants by various European countries cannot seriously suggest that intervention by an international body to bring about a cease-fire is an intervention which can be likened to the other dangerous form of intervention. One is international intervention and the other is national intervention. One is to bring about the end of war and the other is to fan the flames of war and enable its continuance. I find the talk about intervention nauseating. What we are calling for is international intervention for the sake of humanity and in the interest of human rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: I am sorry the Prime Minister is not here now because I should like to say that I do not think he could have been serious when he compared this proposed intervention, by way of a resolution in the third committee calling for a cease-fire, to the massive armed intervention of nearly half a million troops by the United States in Viet Nam and the extensive bombing of that unhappy country. The Prime Minister has indulged in some very extraordinary analogies, and this is one of the strangest of all. When he intervened in the debate I hoped he would take the opportunity to say that he was not serious when he spoke in this way, any more than he was when he compared the starving Biafrans to the Nazi invasion at Stalingrad. Surely this was one of the most shameful examples of—

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member suggested that the Prime Minister was not serious. I am wondering whether that is a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is a matter of debate.

Mr. Brewin: In one form or another we believe that the fatal error in this matter, which has dictated the attitude of the government of Great Britain, the government of Canada and the government of the United States so far, has been what can be called the quick kill theory. The war was to last two days, two weeks and then two months. When the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) and myself were in Biafra nearly six weeks ago we were told, to our discomfort I might say, that the war might be over in a day or two, that the final push might come then. We were a little afraid it might come when we were there, but today, six weeks later, there is no sign of this final push being any nearer. In fact, if there has been any military development in the past few weeks it has been in the direction of a military stalemate. I could present direct evidence to bear this out, but anyone who has been near that country knows that the Biafrans are determined to carry out continued resistance and they are well fitted to do so. They have keen determination, based upon a well-founded fear of extermination. The dense forest makes it a natural area for guerilla warfare. Indeed, when we propose a cease-fire we are not doing it just for the sake of the Biafrans but also for the Nigerians. I would hate to think of the unfortunate Nigerians being involved in a military occupation of the area because it would be a sad and bloody spectacle continuing probably for years.

If this quick kill theory is rejected, and we believe it should be, then the international world in the interest of humanity must seek a different solution. A cease-fire through international action and further negotiations is the only alternative. In this whole issue there is more at stake than the fate of the Biafrans and the Nigerians. What is at stake is the whole idea of international order. I ask the house, what will future generations say about us if the world community sits idly by while a gifted people of some ten million are exterminated? I am not accusing the government of Nigeria of genocide; I am merely saying that the continuation of the war will be one of the gravest human tragedies since the Nazis destroyed some six million Jews. How can the conscience of the world remain dormant and let this thing happen?

I am most encouraged since my trip to Biafra, as I believe the hon. member for Fundy-Royal is, to find that the people of this country, particularly the younger people, take a different view from that of the government. They are far ahead of the government on this issue and the government should listen a little more to the sound judgment of our people, particularly the young people. The young people wish to build a new world order based upon fundamental human rights. They have no sympathy with the legalisms and the efforts at evasion which the governments of the world have displayed in this matter. I, for one, say that the young people are dead right.

I should like to turn now to the question of relief. We are indeed grateful that the government has done something about this. It has not only contributed money but has also contributed a Hercules plane. But in all candour it is impossible not to say that the effort has been far less effective than it should have been. When I put it that way I believe it is the greatest understatement I have made for some time.

When the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) and I returned from watching the airlift operation into Uli, we made certain proposals to the government at the request of the Canadian, Mr. Axel Duch, who is in charge of the churches, relief operation at Sao Tomé. I want to say something about that effort. It is truly remarkable. We have heard a great deal from the government side about the International Red Cross, and I give great credit to it for the work it has done. But by the middle of October it had flown roughly 3,500 tons of relief supplies from Fernando Po and the churches, relief services, which are carried on by the Roman Catholic and Protestant churches, had flown in some 4,300 tons. It is quite significant that just the other day when the churches' plane was shot down the church operation did not stop, but the Red Cross discontinued its operations with the Canadian Hercules.

Although there are 735 feeding stations in Biafra daily feeding 560,000 people, mainly children and nursing mothers in order that they may survive, this is nothing like enough. What Mr. Duch made abundantly clear to us was that the bottleneck lay in transporting supplies into Biafra. The difficulty is that the planes which fly in nightly to the airstrip at Uli have a capacity of only 10 tons, whereas the Hercules has a capacity of 20 tons and is better fitted for landing purposes and better fitted for loading and unloading supplies.

When we came back we urged the government, at the request of Mr. Duch, to make available Canadian Hercules aircraft to the church operation. If the government had some international nicety which may have prevented them from acting directly they could have done this indirectly in the same way as the Swedish government, by lending planes to the church operation. It is not as though the Roman Catholic and Protestant churches are disreputable outfits. They represent part of the conscience of humanity. It was suggested by the Prime Minister that this would constitute an act of war. I find this farfetched. Is Sweden at war with Nigeria? How ridiculous!

If, as it professes, the Nigerian government is deeply concerned about the welfare of the Biafrans whom it is fighting to retain within the Nigerian state, it should not object to non-political mercy flights. Indeed, it has approved of daylight flights. But it seeks from time to time to put these on its own terms, terms so readily accepted by the government of Canada, which have resulted in the frustration of relief efforts. As long as these terms are reasonable we cannot object but on occasions they have not been reasonable. It has denied its consent to flights by the churches, and the Canadian government has admittedly accepted its denial of consent.

Let me reassert, for the benefit of the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he still doubts me, that I happened to be able to arrange to obtain a recording of what was said by Dr. Arikpo. Dr. Arikpo, the foreign minister for Nigeria, did make it perfectly clear that his government would consent to the Canadian government making Hercules aircraft available to the church operation at Sao Tomé if there could be an inspection by the Red Cross to see that they did not take in arms. Instead of taking advantage of this the Canadian government, typically I suggest, insisted on going back to the Nigerian government and giving it the opportunity which it quickly took to renege on this promise which was clearly made, and the result has been to stultify the whole effort.

I understand that three Hercules were flown into the area. One was stationed at Lagos and it was withdrawn on the silly pretense that it was impossible to land anywhere in federally occupied areas. This is nonsense and is just not factual. Calabar has one of the three internationally recognized airports in the whole of Nigeria, and it is within the federally occupied area of Biafra. It is nonsense to say that you can land a Hercules on what is virtually an enlarged paved highway at Uli, which is where the churches are flying in, but you cannot fly them into an internationally approved airport. This is perfectly ridiculous and another example of the willingness of this government to accept any sort of excuse for not doing very much about this situation.

It is the government's attitude I am complaining about in this matter. The Hercules is supposed to be designed so as to be able to land almost anywhere, even in open fields if need be. I suggest that the attitude of the federal government that we cannot land anywhere in the territory Nigeria occupies with planes that are best suited for this job speaks much louder than words about their feelings toward the starving people within the territory Nigeria controls. I wonder whose is really the voice of Nigeria, the soft spoken General Gowon who speaks gently to our Prime Minister, or his representative, or the Black Scorpion who speaks with a more savage tone. The latter has made it perfectly clear that in the areas he controls, and he does control substantial areas, no food will be given to any Ibo until they surrender.

The government has been strangely hesitant about getting the operation from Fernando Po going effectively. The Prime Minister made a statement in the house several weeks ago in which he said the government of Nigeria had agreed to daylight flights. The other day I asked him whether the flights had not been restarted and he said there had been no word from the Biafran authorities. He said in his usual flippant way that he knew that Colonel Ojukwu could read Hansard, as though the head of state in a war had nothing to do but read Hansard.

The government took the position, as I understand it, that it could not communicate officially with Biafra. Surely this is a question of where there is a will there is a way. The government is well aware that the Biafran government maintains an office with an accredited representative in New York near the United Nations, as well as one in London. Surely if it could not communicate directly it could communicate indirectly through one of the Commonwealth countries, for example Tanzania or Zambia, which have recognized Biafra and are ready to talk to the Biafrans. The United States does not recognize the people's Republic of China but that does not stop it from undertaking to talk with that republic about matters which affect the two countries, through informal discussions at Warsaw. Cannot the Canadian government in the interest of saving lives do something about improving its means of communication with Biafra?

Just yesterday, Mr. Justice Onyuiki, leader of the Biafran delegation to America and a justice of the Biafran court of appeal, issued a statement which, as I read it, made it perfectly clear that the Biafran government would consent to daylight flights of Canadian Hercules aircraft. The statement said there would be no difficulty in getting permission for these Hercules aircraft to fly into the Uli airstrip provided that those unloading the food and drugs would not be fired upon and also that the Canadian government and the crews were satisfied with the verbal guarantees of safety.

The Prime Minister, typically, I suggest, rather than allowing this statement to speak for itself petulantly read into it that the Biafran government was turning down the condition that the Hercules daylight operations would not fly in arms. Of course, the Biafran government for its own part is perfectly willing to give such a guarantee. The Canadian government itself surely trusts the Red Cross not to fly in arms. One would think that the guarantee of the Red Cross would be more important than any words from the Biafran authorities. After all, it is the Red Cross which is the shipper and the carrier of what is in these planes. Why is there this insistence on a condition of this sort? Why is there this inability to get in touch with the Biafran government? With the little contact I have I can get in touch within 12 hours to find out what the position is, yet this apparently takes the government weeks. The Biafran authorities are perfectly willing to accept these terms. The Prime Minister could have found this out very quickly and the air flights could have been restored. The attitude of the government does not seem to be one of anxiety to get flights into Biafra but rather one of hesitation and readiness to accept obstacles.

I was asked at a meeting the other day, when I discussed this matter, what was the basic difference in the proposals I was making about relief supplies and what the government was doing. I put the answer very bluntly. I said the difference would be the saving of literally hundreds of thousands of lives. When the hon. member for Egmont and I came back six weeks or more ago and spoke to the government, if the government had lent the four planes to the Red Cross as requested by Major General Wrinch, the Canadian commissioner for the International Red Cross, and if four more planes had been lent to the church operations and the operations had been continued, the result would have been on each day an additional delivery of 240 tons of food and medical supplies. Present deliveries are saving half a million lives. If the deliveries were doubled or trebled, twice as many lives or more would be saved.

I think it is only fair to say that the action of the government has been dictated by its view that the consent of the Nigerian authorities is necessary. This fundamental difference of opinion has resulted in the delays and inadequacies of the Canadian effort to help. It seems to me that the interests of humanity override other considerations and there are ways in which to get around obstacles. When the President of the United States was bound by a lot of neutrality laws in the last world war, he found means to overcome those difficulties by means of lend-lease and other devices. We are asking for an opportunity to feed starving people in the country of a government which claims to be the government of the area in question.

I started my speech by saying that I hoped to make a constructive and reasonable suggestion in respect of a conciliation team with Canada as a member and a distinguished constitutional lawyer as its representative. This could be done through the United Nations or, if that is not possible, outside the United Nations. I urge the government to keep an open mind on this whole matter and be prepared to review its policies in the light of facts as they are revealed. The government should in its inner conscience recognize its present policy as being based upon the British government's theory of the quick kill as the way to end the dispute, and on not encouraging this "rebel" régime. The Prime Minister never speaks on this subject without underlining the word "rebel". It seems to me that after 18 months of fighting for self-determination one could find a different word than "rebel". In any event I urge the government to consider proposals for international action by a team of conciliators. If the United Nations will not take charge of the matter, the team of conciliators could be approved by both sides to the conflict.

Second, we urge the Canadian government to use all its powers of persuasion to get the British, U.S.S.R. and any other governments concerned to stop the export of arms. I suppose, in all fairness, this is a delicate matter. I do not know what the Canadian government has said to its British colleagues. When I made this suggestion one day the Prime Minister, flippantly I think, as is sometimes his wont, asked why we did not make the representations because we had some political sympathies with the party headed by the Prime Minister of Great Britain. I say it is a very different thing for an individual member of parliament to make representations than for a person who has the right to speak for Canada. I do not know what has been said to other governments in this respect. My view is that a solution of this problem will only come about when the British, Russians and others stop pouring arms into this territory.

I plead with the government to get nasty or tough, if necessary, about it. This is a tough proposition. If the government thinks what is being done is wrong, they should say something about it. I do not believe this is any time for quiet diplomacy if that quiet diplomacy does not work. I am in favour of trying quiet diplomacy but if it does not work something more is required.

Third, we urge the government to reopen with the Nigerian government the question of relief supplies being transported by Hercules aircraft into the area occupied by that government. It would be ridiculous, if it were not so tragic, to talk about Caribou aircraft taking the place of the Hercules. The Caribou carries two tons and the Hercules carries 20 tons. This is a palpably ridiculous excuse. Just what principle is involved as between Caribou and Hercules aircraft is difficult to understand. One is effective and the other is not. The Nigerian government will apparently accept one but not the other. I do not understand the principle involved in this question. The Canadian government should be firm with the Nigerian government on this point. It should point out that the validity of the protestations of the Nigerian government, when the question involved is helping the Biafran people in their own country, is not to be taken very seriously.

I again ask the Canadian government to consider stepping up the supply of Hercules aircraft to the Red Cross operation at Fernando Po. If one Hercules can do a good job, cannot two, three or four aircraft do a better job? Surely we are not going to be deterred by an objection which apparently may have been made by Equatorial Guinea to our doing this. Surely in the interests of humanity we could supply two, three or four aircraft and do a much better job than we are doing.

Finally, the government should find a way to provide Hercules aircraft for the Sao Tomé operation. It could, of course, exact any conditions it liked as to inspection to make sure that these flights would not be used to take in arms. Literally thousands of lives would be saved if the government adopted this policy. I know it is not easy for governments to change their minds, and I think I appreciate why the government's initial impulse has been to seek at all costs the maintenance of friendly relations with the federal government of Nigeria. But federalism and even friendliness with federal governments, important though they are, are not sacrosanct. The federal structure of Nigeria has been seriously damaged by this bitter war and what preceded it. No considerations should stifle the cry of humanity for the ending of the war and the feeding of the starving people of this war-torn country.

I urge the government to be bold, to innovate, to speak for humanity. In an open letter to the Prime Minister, signed by many distinguished Canadians, reference was made to a statement of the late secretary general of the United Nations, Dag Hammarskjold, who said:

> It is when we play it safe that we create a world of the utmost insecurity.

I say to this government and the Prime Minister, stop playing it safe in Nigeria, because by so doing you are creating a world of the utmost insecurity.

• (5:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing today a matter that is very important for Nigeria and the peoples of Nigeria because of the possible consequences of the action or inaction of the Canadian government with regard to a settlement of the terrible conflict now taking place in what is one of the most promising countries of the African continent since its decolonization.

We are considering today the report presented by the committee on external affairs and national defence. According to a motion passed by the house last October 7, the committee, and I quote, was to:

> Hear evidence on (1) the report of the official observer group on which Canada has a member, of the conduct of federal troops in the prosecution of the war in Nigeria; (2) the reported famine conditions in that country, and to invite Andrew Brewin, M.P. (Greenwood) and David MacDonald, M.P. (Egmont) to report their observation on the conditions of the civilian population of Nigeria.

Being myself a member of that committee, I participated with great interest in its proceedings and I agree that it is not easy to propose a solution, because it is always delicate to interfere in the affairs of another state. We will have to be careful because the action we take must not have consequences worse than those we want to correct.

We know that hundreds of thousands of people have lost their lives and that many others will die if that civil war is not ended soon. We know that thousands and thousands of other persons have been and will be wounded if that war does not end.

All wars are cruel, and that one more so perhaps, because of the physical and moral suffering that the civilian population must endure when, for the most part, it does not understand the reason of that war. One might wonder if the people who lived within the present borders of Nigeria were sufficiently prepared for independence in 1960.

The colonizing powers must assume part of the blame because they neglected to create a core of qualified people to govern the country wisely. Since Nigeria gained her independence—and that is the case also of several other African countries—it has been obvious that wisdom was not the main quality of the Nigerian and Biafran leaders entrusted with the administration of the country.

It is difficult, Mr. Speaker, to determine the exact usefulness of the study carried out by this committee, as it deals with two main points, that is the urgency to determine and alleviate the suffering and sickness due to malnutrition, and whether the war constitutes an act of genocide.

I will point out that the Canadian government did not wait for the report of the committee to send well-equipped Hercules aircraft to bring assistance and prevent thousands of innocent people from suffering and dying of starvation or sickness. The experience was not successful, but as I said, some leaders were not overly wise and did not co-operate as much as they should have. Since when, Mr. Speaker, must we plead with those we want to help to accept our assistance and our alms? There again, it is the humble folk, the peasantry who must suffer for the pride and the ambition of their leaders.

In my opinion, Canada has made a commendable effort, by no means daring, to bring relief to the sick and starving people who are dying by the thousands.

At this stage, I should like to pay tribute to those who have risked their lives several times carrying food and drugs in aircrafts under difficult and sometimes impossible conditions. I am referring to the crews in the service of Caritas Internationalis who have risked their lives several times to save other lives and relieve hardship, where the fighting was taking place, and I should like to quote a few excerpts from the report of Rev. Father Anthony Byrne of Caritas about the risks which the crews working with the Red Cross or Caritas had to take. Three of their members died carrying a Red Cross shipment when their plane crashed. Father Byrne himself ran similar risks; he tells us that on July 7 last and I quote from his report:

I take off with a load for Biafra; 15 minutes before landing the cannons of Nigeria use us as target. But they miss the bull's-eye by a long shot, and we continue our trip peacefully. There was much happiness in Biafra when it was learned that a load of fish had just arrived. It was the first shipment of fish since the beginning of the war.

Other trips were made in the meantime, but on the 14th of July, another very difficult trip was made.

A load of salt, fish and medical supplies was sent by a Superconstellation. Heavy fire greeted Commander Malcolm as he flew over Biafra. The commander is an experienced pilot and it was only thanks to his ability that the plane did not crash to the ground. The crew was convinced that the radar guiding the marine and ground firing was manoeuvered by Europeans. The plane about-turned and when it landed the members of the crew handed in their resignation.

Mr. Speaker, I feel one could have done it with less provocation. July 20, and I continue:

Arriving at Lisbon, I am confronted by a new problem: Nigeria now uses radar to direct the firing of the marine and ground batteries. They fire on our planes with great precision. A plane, flying at high altitude, was almost shot down. The pilots agree that Europeans are directing the firing.

Father Byrne also tells of another difficult trip; on July 31:

An important supply of blankets and 9 tons of dry beans were shipped by a Superconstellation. The plane got caught in heavy barrage fire but commander Raab, with his usual ability and courage, managed to escape.

And that goes on almost every day, and he speaks of the trip, on August 5:

Attempt to fly to Biafra. Commander Sheriffs and his crew managed to make it. They ran into curtain fire extremely well guided by Nigerian radars. One wing of the DC7 came within an inch of being struck, Commander Sheriffs and his men returned to Sao Tomé with frayed nerves. As he landed, the mechanic immediately gave his resignation. The other members of the crew refused to leave again until such time as another air route had been picked out.

The following is an account of the trip on August 9:

The planes are again flying through heavy artillery fire and a warning is issued by the commanders of both aircraft that under such conditions they refuse to take off for Biafra.

Finally, on August 21:

The plane's aircrew—

—from Transair (Sweden)—

—used to fly at a very low altitude of about 100 metres to avoid radar and anti-aircraft fire. On that night, unfortunately, the Nigerians had assembled troops equipped with anti-aircraft guns and machine-guns close to the border. The commanding officer had to use all his ability to avoid shells. His aircraft was hit twice and bursts of gun-fire tore holes through the wings. In spite of the danger, the pilot was able to fly through the exploding shells. On the way back, he had to face the same problems but he was not hit. Once in Sao Tomé, while mechanics were repairing the bullet holes in the wings, the commanding officer and his crew had something to eat. One hour later, they were taking off again at the risk of their own lives so that the starving people of Biafra might receive some assistance.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, it must be admitted that a great deal of courage is necessary in such danger and Rev. Father Byrne, commanding officers Raab, Malcolm, Sheriff and others deserve to be remembered. They should be rewarded for their outstanding bravery.

Had it not been for financial and political interests at the outset, all this suffering, all those deaths and risks would have been avoided. British oil interests did not hesitate in influencing their government which, through the supply of modern armaments supported the federal army, thereby preventing 10 million people from deciding their own fate, while they obviously wanted to do so.

Incidentally, this is not the first time that England refuses a people the right to self-determination.

Mr. Arnold Smith, secretary general of the commonwealth, said very clearly to the committee, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), that:

> The economic advantages to be derived from seizing the fabulous oil fields discovered recently play a very great part in domestic conflicts and, externally, in the interests of the various governments. They constitute important factors. I would not say that these are dominant factors, for I do not believe in the predominance of external factors. But they are very important.

Further on, he adds:

> In my opinion, however, as far as conditions are concerned, the advantages represented by these oil fields greatly influence negotiations.

Later, Mr. William McNeill, of the Canadian University Overseas Service, voiced the following opinion:

> As I understood it, the oil industry was, to a great extent, controlled by British Petroleum and by Shell, most of whose shares were owned by the British government.

I have here the evidence of Mr. André de Bloney, secretary general of the Interparliamentary Union, who wrote, in his report to the 56th conference in Lima:

> However, although he could on several occasions have given up his stand and rallied the federation, the Biafran leader did not give in. At the beginning of July 1967, General Gowon took a decision of great importance, that of reducing dissidence by force, by provisionally detaching from Nigeria the oil-rich part of the territory.
> Were foreign interests thus led to influence the course of events? Naturally, that is impossible to know, but the right to oil dues was to be an added cause of conflict between the two parties and the concessionary companies.

A little further on, Mr. De Bloney adds:

> In order to carry on a fight which continued, both sides had to seek from the outside the arms they needed. The Lagos government looked to Great Britain first and the shipments authorized in its favour due to their size, prompted some criticisms in the British capital. As far as the U.S.S.R. is concerned, it also granted its support to the federal government.
> As to Biafra, it tried to get some money for its oil resources in order to obtain not only military equipment but also the assistance of mercenaries who might lend a helping hand in a fight which, month after month, became more and more difficult.

At the same interparliamentary conference in Lima, a Swiss representative (Mr. Renschler) stated:

> Economic and political interests are behind that mortal aid. Without the military help of Great Britain, the Soviet Union and a few other countries, the Lagos military government would never have been able to wage a war against the Ibos.
> As far as Biafra is concerned, things are hardly better. France and Portugal support secession, also for selfish motives. By supporting Biafra, they hope to get some interests in the oil resources of the Delta of the Niger. It is urgent that no arms be sent to either side; the protection of economic and political interests, through the supplying of arms, is a form of neo-colonialism.

This confirms the general idea that if foreign countries had not interfered and encouraged slaughter by shipping them weapons, this massacre would not go down in history.

What are the causes of the war? The Ibos—and not the rebels as the right hon. Prime Minister and several members call them—have been mistreated and butchered. It was reported that Nigerians threatened to throw the Ibos into the sea, to crush them, to keep them in their own place and never let them reconquer again the economic and political suppremacy they had acquired through their work and skill. Not feeling accepted any longer in the federation and unwilling to remain slaves, these people decided to recover their security and to ensure their economic development through other channels, since they believe they can do it on their own, owing to their skill, intelligence and desire to progress and develop.

And now, Mr. Speaker, not only do the other Nigerian peoples, but also the foreigners, disallow them this right, thus practising a new form of neo-colonialism.

At the United Nations, at the commonwealth meetings or at the Interparliamentary Union conferences, resolutions are passed, basic principles recognizing the right of the peoples to self-government are agreed upon, but when it comes to applying such resolutions and principles, things are different and everyone gives a different interpretation, according to his own interests, and Canada is no exception.

On the border of Rhodesia and Southwest Africa are located the Portuguese territories of Angola and Mozambique. Portugal suggests that these are not colonies but provinces across the sea. This proposition is rejected by the majority of world states, including Canada, who feel that the inhabitants of these territories should be free to decide their own future. But what goes for Angola and Mozambique no longer goes for the Ibos.

Canada should follow a more coherent policy in its stands in the field of external affairs. What proposal should Canada make and what action should it take so that both parties in this conflict may come to a fair solution? That is what the committee should have told the government.

As regards aid, concerning food and medicine, we have seen, that the government did not wait for the committee's report, which was wise. Pressures from all sides, not only from political circles but also and chiefly from social and religious quarters, that were exerted upon the government indicated a desire on the part of the Canadian people to do something to relieve the suffering.

[English]

Mr. Smerchanski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Provencher on a point of order.

Mr. Smerchanski: Mr. Speaker, are speeches not to be limited to 20 minutes?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I do not believe that the time of the hon. member has expired yet. I am advised that there has been no order recognized by the Chair limiting speeches to 20 minutes.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Laprise: I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I was just saying that representations were made to the government, indicating a desire on the part of the Canadian people to do something in order to relieve these sufferings. I will not submit any opinion as to whether or not our aid was sufficient, but I say that we started too late.

As a matter of fact, the report includes the following statement:

The Committee recommends that, in order to avoid this problem in the future, the Canadian government take an initiative in developing international machinery to meet this need——such as the one facing us.

Mr. Speaker, I objected to that recommendation of the committee, since international agencies have already worked to this end since the outset of the Biafran crisis, as they have indeed in any other part of the world. I wish to refer particularly to the International Red Cross, Caritas Internationalis, the World Council of Churches and other agencies. I believe those international agencies are the most suitable and the most willing to dispense necessary services in conditions such as those.

So, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in the need to create a new international agency that would perhaps be more political and might generate difficulties rather than solve the problem. As regards this second recommendation, I would rather suggest that the Canadian government, like any other world government, make available to those agencies the necessary funds or materials to enable them to relieve distress where it is and in whatever form it may occur.

We received this week an urgent appeal from the Red Cross, asking for supplementary funds to keep on relieving misery during the last few weeks of the current year and the beginning of the new one.

We know, Mr. Speaker, from the evidence given to the committee, that even if the war ended today, it would still be necessary to help the starving and the sick and to rebuild what has been destroyed in that country. It means that still more funds will have to be made available to the organizations ready to help that country get back on its feet.

The committee also recommended to take Biafran children elsewhere, even to Canada. That is what the Prime Minister suggested also. Such a recommendation would be acceptable as long as the immigration of the children were directed to African countries where the customs are practically the same as where they were born. On the other hand, bringing young Biafrans to Canada where the climate and the way of life are so different would probably not give good results. Besides, that idea was criticized very strongly by the president of the Canadian Welfare Council, Mr. Baetz, as well as by Father Roger Tessier, of the White Fathers who do missionary work in Africa.

In a statement dated November 15, the Canadian Welfare Council said, and I quote:

Well-meaning Canadians who wish to adopt Biafran children, members of parliament of various political parties who support those projects have not pondered all the implications of such decisions, according to Mr. Reuben C. Baetz, general director of the Canadian Welfare Council.

"Any such project would likely come to nothing and would only divert Canadian vital resources meant for local action," said Mr. Baetz.

"Moreover, I am opposed to these projects of Biafran adoption under the policy statement made by the Canadian Welfare Council on inter-countries adoptions and after having discussed this particular question with the main children aid agencies operating in Canada and abroad."

"There are a number of reasons which compel us to take this point of view," Mr. Baetz said, "and transportation to Canada and the immigration regulations are the least important."

Moreover, Father Tessier in a recent statement, said this:

As human lives are at stake, our emotions could bring us to act immediately and assist those children, and many Canadians have offered to adopt them. This prompted the statements of the Prime Minister, Mr. Pierre-Elliott Trudeau, in the house on November 8. First, he mentioned that the initiatives for adoption in Canada of Biafran children must come from families, private institutions or provincial governments, as adoption comes under provincial jurisdiction.

As for the federal government, added Mr. Trudeau, it was ready to provide for the transportation to Canada of all the adopted children and, furthermore, to relax immigration regulations in the case of Biafran refugees... As for me, goes on Father Tessier, I can but agree with Mr. Roger Elophe, who is responsible, on the national level, for "Urgences", an emergency service operated by the Secours catholique de France, and who made some comments after returning from a journey that had brought him to the very doors of Biafra, in Cameroun and Gabon.

In answer to generous appeals, said Mr. Elophe a number of French families have volunteered to open their homes to Biafran children. It comes from a noble heart. But let us consider the hard facts: it does not appear to be either feasible or desirable. First of all, transportation is lacking and available means inadequate. Then, there are two possibilities to be considered:

"First, the children still have their family; is it a good thing to separate them from it? All the same, it would be unreasonable to do it without their parents' consent. Now, a simple question: will they give their consent?

"Second, the children who are sheltered are orphans or they have been deserted or lost; is it proper to move them away if not from their fellow-citizens at least from their natural environment?—

Most members of the committee did not want to be explicit and propose a cease-fire to allow intelligent negotiations. Who must take the initiative? Nobody wants to make the first move and during that time the war continues to decimate a population.

It would be necessary to conclude a cease-fire so to make General Gowan understand that to obtain the submission of the Ibos by force would never make good citizens of those people and would be useless to Nigeria. General Gowon should also be made to understand that there can be no unity in slavery or domination, between the dead and those who killed them. It is also important that both sides understand that time heals many things and that a cease-fire, without which negotiations are not possible, could solve many things.

[Mr. Laprise.]

And if it is not too late, that part of the African continent, and its inhabitants, could still progress and develop normally.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that all will be willing to help rebuild this country, and particularly heal the wounds left by the war. If the shooting and the bombing do not stop, it will really be a genocide to which we will have contributed by our lack of courage before certain powers more interested in saving their wealth and their pride than human lives that have no value for them.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the amendment proposed earlier by the spokesman for the Progressive Conservative party deserves all our attention and all our support. Consequently, these points should have been formally included in the report submitted to the house by the committee on external affairs and national defence.

• (5:40 p.m.)

As for me, I think that both points of the amendment tend to bring about a solution, although the mover did not want to be too categorical and he only made suggestions. I am sure that those who will study today's debates—I suppose that it will not only be members of the house and the Canadian press, but also all international agencies—will do it carefully. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I will support the amendment.

[English]

Mr. Pilon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I thought that before the beginning of this debate the house leaders had agreed upon a time limit of 20 minutes for speeches.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I was not aware of that arrangement when the hon. member for Provencher raised his point of order, but now I have the explanation from the hon. member for Chambly. Is this agreeable to the house?

Mr. Bell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, except in the case of those who have special privileges.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Except in special cases like the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the importance of this debate on the report of the standing committee on external affairs and national defence concerning the situation in Nigeria-Biafra. There is no doubt that all members of the House of Commons share the deep concern felt by the Canadian people for the suffering and starvation of innocent victims of war. This is particularly true in the case of Nigeria-Biafra where the large number of victims, especially children, has captured the attention of Canadians in all walks of life.

This interest of the Canadian people to some extent has been brought about by the emphasis given to the unfortunate situation in that part of the world by the news media, combined with the basic instinct of Canadians to give help and assistance to those in need. The purpose of this debate, as I see it, is to consider the facts that were brought before the standing committee on external affairs and national defence in order to arrive at a decision as to what Canada can do and should have done to bring assistance to the people of that area.

In all issues where emotions are running high it is important that we in the House of Commons, as legislators, remain cool and assess things in a reasonable manner so that we have all the relevant facts to determine a reasonable course of action which will afford us an opportunity to give the Canadian people the chance to properly and effectively help people through our humanitarian aid. It was for this reason that on Monday, October 7, the standing committee on external affairs and national defence was set up and given a special reference, first, to consider the conduct of the federal troops in that war and, second, to consider the famine conditions in Nigeria.

I am privileged to be a member of that standing committee which held 24 hearings between October 8 and October 23. Some 16 witnesses appeared before the committee, three from the Department of External Affairs and three from political parties, two of these being members of the House of Commons, one a Conservative and one a member of the New Democratic party, and the third a member of a provincial legislature who is also a member of the New Democratic party. In addition we received evidence from six persons representing religious and service organizations including the Red Cross, CUSO, and Presbyterian and Catholic agencies. A further two witnesses from the news media were heard, and in addition the secretary-general of the Commonwealth and Canada's representative on the international observer team, General Milroy.

During this debate I do not intend to go over the mass of evidence that was received in that committee. I, for one, was disappointed when witnesses were not heard from the Organization of African Unity or from Nigeria or Biafra. I think that those who are deeply concerned and obviously directly involved with the matter should have been given the opportunity to present their case before the standing committee. Unfortunately we heard no such evidence.

The contrast in the evidence presented to the committee and the information received by the public, from the press was astounding, to say the least. In the early days of October when the committee first met it was not uncommon for the public and even for members of the committee to throw about charges of genocide, as if it were a proven fact. Yet when one looks at the evidence presented to our committee there appears to be no justification whatever for that serious charge.

Certain members of the committee were so convinced of this charge at that time that they wanted us to use the charge as a basis to bringing the matter before the United Nations. Subsequently that argument was dropped and another put in its place, that we should go before the third committee on human rights. I have not yet heard the justification for that position.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Haven't you?

Mr. Cafik: There have been many changes in attitude. In the first instance hon. members concentrated on the need for humanitarian aid. I recall that before the committee was established questions in this house were directed to the matter of humanitarian aid that Canada ought to be supplying to this area. We agree that there is a need for aid and that Canada has done a great deal. As soon as the committee hearings began and we sat down to listen to evidence, particularly to evidence from two people who are members of this house, we found, and this was a surprise to me, that the general attitude had changed. We rapidly discovered that certain hon. members were hoping for some kind of political intervention. In the beginning humanitarian aid was all that was discussed. Later, humanitarian aid was almost irrelevant. It was said that the government must become politically involved. That was quite a significant change.

The new attitudes now take the following form: First, that we should take the matter to the United Nations, an argument that many hon. members feel is the correct one. I, for one, do not think it is a good idea and I will give my reasons for that later. Second, we should arrange a cease-fire. Third, we must do something to stop other countries shipping arms to Nigeria. In later questioning it was admitted in committee that perhaps we also ought to do something about arms going into Biafra. In the beginning hon. members were only concerned about the shipment of arms to Nigeria. The fourth point is that we should give military assistance somehow to produce a stalemate in Nigeria and Biafra. Some witnesses, seemed to want a solution whereby Biafra would be stronger than the federal area of Nigeria. It was also suggested that recognition be accorded to Biafra itself, something which fortunately seems to have been forgotten.

Lastly, there was a veiled suggestion, not by a member of this house but by a member of a provincial legislature, that possibly later if not as a first priority, we should give consideration to seeing that more arms were supplied to Biafra. These attitudes are not, in my opinion, consistent with the proper interests of Canada or of our friendly relations with other countries of the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cafik: Throughout all this confusion, fortunately for Canada and for the Canadian people and, indeed, for the people of Nigeria and Biafra, we had strong leadership from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who refused to be swept along by this kind of emotionalism. As I see it, Canada has taken the only course which is capable of achieving any kind of worth-while results. The course we have taken, justifiably, I think, is one of saying that the Nigerian-Biafran affair is a civil war, a matter of concern to those within that country, and that we have no right to interfere politically. Taking the matter before the United Nations would, I believe, amount to interference in a civil war, and for this reason I do not think we should do it.

In the second place—and this is the basic point I wish to make this afternoon—Canada must show proper respect and regard for international law. It seems odd to me that at this particular moment in history when peace of the world depends upon good relations between one nation and another, people in this House of Commons, who are as concerned with peace as I am, should suggest that this government take action of a kind which would tend to destroy the validity of international laws governing the relationship between nations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cafik: I do not see how one can be an advocate of peace while at the same time advocate that we should take the bull by the horns and disregard such laws. It is imperative today that nations should bear in mind the long term implications of their foreign policy. Unless nations have respect for each other's integrity the world could end in nothing less than chaos and destruction for the whole of mankind.

It has been suggested in this debate that the concept of sovereignty is outmoded. I realize that any concept of international relations is subject to scrutiny and inspection. But to imply that the destruction of the theory of international sovereignty or the rights of individual nations would, at the present time, be helpful to mankind is thoroughly questionable.

Some members opposite talk as though we should interfere in this war. I wonder whether they would talk in the same way if the nation now engaged in this civil war were large enough and strong enough to tell us where to get off. I wonder whether they are prepared for Canada to become involved only because they feel secure in the knowledge that no retaliation is possible. The rules applied should be the same in the case of strong nations as in the case of weaker nations. I have never heard anyone on the other side suggest we should become directly involved in the affairs, say, of Czechoslovakia, or in Russian affairs when something happens there. We are obliged to be careful in such circumstances because we want peace in the world. And we must also be careful in this case; otherwise there will be chaos in the whole of Africa.

There is another point. Canadian foreign policy recognizes, rightly in my view, that our humanitarian efforts must be conducted through the government of Nigeria. Much as we would desire to do so, we cannot take humanitarian aid into that country and frustrate the legitimate government of that nation. We should bear in mind that the area presently occupied by secessionist troops is merely an island in the middle of the federal territory of Nigeria. Biafra has no seaport; it has no access to the outside world except through federal territory or air space. In these circumstances it is impossible to offer effective aid except with the co-operation of the federal authorities themselves.

My last point is this. Canada has followed a policy of supplying all relief through the agency of the International Red Cross. It has been suggested by some that aid should be given through church agencies. But the International Red Cross is the only agency which has friendly relations with the federal area and is capable of negotiating agreements whereby relief supplies can enter Nigeria and hence Biafra. To act in any other way would be foolish. Moreover, it would undermine the whole of our relief effort.

In my opinion the Canadian government has done more to assist the starving people of Nigeria and Biafra than has the government of any other country in the world on a per capita basis. We have contributed in cash $1,060,000 according to information I have received. Moreover, it is estimated that it cost the government, hence the Canadian people, $105,000 to put the three Hercules aircraft into the position of being able to supply relief. While these aircraft were in the area it cost the Canadian people and estimated $6,000 a day to maintain and man them. In addition, we have supplied observers to the observer team. All in all, the Canadian government has in my view done more on a per capita basis than any other government in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cafik: The fact that these aircraft are not being used at the present time is no reflection on the Canadian government. It should certainly be obvious to the Canadian people that the reason these aircraft are not being used, particularly in Biafra, is that the Biafran authorities themselves have refused to allow them to fly into Biafra on daylight flights, not wishing to confine daylight flights to relief supplies. They seem to be more concerned—and I am not being critical; it is a matter for them to judge—about the conduct of the war than they are about the plight of their own people. It is not the fault of this government that Biafra has not agreed to accept the aid we have offered.

All this does not mean we should be satisfied with our present efforts. I think more should be done. However remote the possibility of success may seem, ways and means should be explored in an attempt to do everything possible to feed these starving people.

Had we approached this problem in any other way I believe we would have destroyed our good offices not only in Biafra but in Nigeria. We would have destroyed something which has taken many years to build—a certain attitude toward foreign affairs which must be sustained in order that we may continue to exert some kind of influence among the emerging nations of the world. If we begin to act now like a bull in a china shop, throwing aside international laws and rules, we shall lose our influence in foreign affairs for many years to come.

After hearing evidence and making judgment on the basis of that evidence, the committee reached certain conclusions with respect to conditions in Nigeria and Biafra. First, the committee found no evidence of genocide. Indeed, I have not heard anyone recently seriously suggest that genocide was taking place. Second, the committee believed that the international observer team, in spite of the criticism directed to it by certain 24-hour visitors to that region, had done a good job in performing its functions and that the evidence it presented was accurate according to the terms of reference under which it is operated. Third, we felt that the federal government of Nigeria is enforcing its code of conduct on federal troops in a proper and humane manner.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Cafik: May I have the permission of the Chair to carry on for another moment or two?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cafik: If I might sum up my personal views, I believe it is absolutely essential that we maintain our good offices with Nigeria. I think this is fundamental to any approach we take. I believe we do have better offices with Nigeria than any other nation in the world today. I think we have proven by our efforts that we are truly concerned about their needs. I believe we can properly take advantage of this by perhaps offering our services as a mediator in this dispute, consistent with our policy not to interfere in their affairs. I recommend that this be given careful consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling it six o'clock may I be permitted to refer for a moment to the procedural aspect of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

As hon. members know, section 2 of citation 323 of Beauchesne's fourth edition states that:

> A report from a committee cannot be amended by the house, but it must be referred back to the committee.

Under the provisions of that citation, the purported amendment now before the house could not normally be received or debated, since it seeks to amend the report of the committee rather than the motion for concurrence in the report. However, in view of the terminology of the special order setting up this debate, that is, suspending precedents and standing orders, the Chair, under the circumstances, considered that the amendment should be accepted. I hope that today's proceedings will not be drawn on as a precedent for use at a later date.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that at this time we would normally have private members' hour. However, if there is unanimous agreement, and since I gather a number of members wish to speak in this debate, perhaps we might have consent to continue with this debate until seven o'clock, adjourn at that time, and then resume at eight o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, there are debates in which I have enjoyed participating much more than this one because it does not make me particularly happy to stand here to participate in a debate which has as its basic note the sad reflection that our government has been so engulfed in its own red tape and misconception that it basically has been unable to act in respect of one of the greatest international tragedies that face us today. I could have wished very honestly that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of this country, when he addressed the house this afternoon, would have given us a statement that would somehow have sounded a realistic clarion call to action which is something that has not been forthcoming from this government from the time of the earliest review or consideration of the problem. Indeed, the speech we listened to this afternoon was filled with nothing much more than distortions, half truths, weak defences and misleading statements about this great tragedy. I do not know whether one should spend time in delineating, in the context of his speech, the failure to grapple realistically with this problem. It might be wiser in the long run to take the time, for example, to outline the basic weaknesses of the government's position plus some of the initiatives that it might yet consider.

There is, and I think this must be admitted, a basic misconception on the part of the government, first of all, about the nature of the conflict itself. The Prime Minister stated it clearly in his speech when he said it is necessary to grasp the basic fact that this is a civil war. I am neither an international expert nor a lawyer. I do know enough, however, to believe that civil wars are usually those which involve the recognition of certain basic standards of governmental conduct. If one examines the record in Nigeria even over the past few years it becomes evident that such certainly has not been the case. An automatic consideration by any government that the federal military government of Nigeria is fully accepted and representative of the views of the people of that country is a failure to come to grips with the situation as it exists. It is a well known fact that the government is the result really of a military coup, following a previous military coup, that there was no election in respect of the present government, that the constitution as it exists today in the country bears no relation to the one agreed to by all the people at an earlier date, that security of property and persons has broken down completely over the past two years and more in Nigeria, and that the economic action of the military government against a sizeable minority was such as to question the viability of that country even if there had been no civil war. This is beyond question.

The Prime Minister and other government spokesmen have failed even to recognize that such a situation exists. In the speech of the Prime Minister there were comments with regard to what the position of the government should be. He has suggested—I believe he suggested this as recently as yesterday in the house—that it was not the position of the government to take sides. How I wish that were true. What we have been faced with from the beginning is an increasing amount of partisanship, not in the sense we speak of it internally in our country but in terms of this conflict. Canadians, I believe, from coast to coast have asked that the government's action be genuinely neutral. This has not been the case with the government. I believe the government has adopted an increasingly pro-federal military government Nigerian position. I include the expression "military government" in that statement because I believe it would be a different thing to say that the government is just pro-Nigerian. There has been far too much evidence to date for anyone to suggest that even those people living in the federal part of Nigeria are in strong accord with the actions of their military government or their military forces in the field.

One of the astounding things I found in the remarks of the Prime Minister this afternoon was his suggestion that Canada should not take action at the United Nations either in committee or in the General Assembly because it might strain the very real and very meaningful friendship which Canada enjoys with Nigeria and with other African states. It seems to me, Mr. Minister, that your concern for these friendly types of relationship is greater than your concern for human life itself.

Mr. Sharp: They are the same.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I doubt they are in terms of the action the government has been carrying on over the past few months.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member must address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I am afraid the intervention by the minister made it a more personal confrontation than it was meant to be. I, for one, feel that when we are moving in an area of international conflict, as this one in a sense is at present, there may well be certain risks and certain difficulties in dealing with just the kind of problem we face today. We will have to accept what I will call the reasonable risk in terms of straining the friendship and the views in which other countries might hold us, particularly if this involves a question of human rights or life itself.

The Prime Minister has often referred to the fact that we must be very careful when we are setting precedents or allowing them to be established. I agree with him wholeheartedly. I think we must be very careful in respect of the precedents which are established in the international community. One of the most dangerous and diabolical precedents ever established is being established at this moment, that it is quite all right for a federal or national government to take whatever steps it wishes to put down or control the revolution of a minority, however large or small, for the sake of national unity. Any number of bombings, any kind of economic blockade no matter how substantial, how complete or how much it may affect civilians, women and children, is quite permissible within the international community provided it is all done in the name of territorial integrity, national sovereignty or some other catchword, which prevents the United Nations or any other international forum from taking action. Is this the kind of precedent we are establishing?

I remember that earlier people in our external affairs department were worried about the analogy that might be drawn between Biafra-Nigeria and Quebec. I would say to my friends in Quebec that they should watch closely the precedent we are allowing to be established. If they are worried and concerned about future rights and liberties they should ask themselves the question, does this justify any action on the part of the federal government in terms of these minorities? Of course, the analogy with Quebec has been a fraudulent one because, thank God, we have not lived through the kind of hell that the people of Biafra-Nigeria have lived through in the past few years. The people who try to suggest there is an analogy are being mischievous and evil.

I am concerned about the situation as it exists in Biafra-Nigeria, and I am concerned as all Canadians are with federalism but not with making federalism a dogmatism. That is not what people with any concept of fairness or concern should try to do, arrange some kind of universal solution that can be applied to every situation. We want to see and treat situations as they are, and that is what our government has failed to do in Nigeria-Biafra.

The government claims to be neutral, yet it talks to only one side. It waits for Colonel Ojukwu to respond, but it never asks him the questions. The government for years has had diplomatic contacts with Nigeria. It feels it is important enough, in order to have a relief operation that will be effective, to send a prime ministerial special representative to Lagos, but it never even makes a ten cent phone call to Biafra. What kind of neutrality is that? That is not neutrality at all. It is simply buying propaganda that has been cleverly designed by other governments which have certain interests in this country, and using the particular communications machine established by Nigeria itself.

If we really wish to take a neutral position, and we have not done so today, then we must begin to communicate with both sides. Some suggest we cannot talk to Biafra because we do not recognize it. In diplomatic parlance it does not exist. I think it was only a few days ago that one of our ministers stood in this house and announced further sales of wheat worth millions of dollars to another country which, according to diplomatic representation, does not exist. It is a very easy thing to sell wheat to anyone who wants to buy it, whether they exist or not, but when it comes to carrying on a relief operation for people who are literally starving to death, then we have to cross all the "t's" and dot all the "i's", making only those contacts which are diplomatically acceptable.

I for one am not anxious that Canada's name be listed in the record book as simply another partisan in a very futile and sick war. At the very most we can say we are pacifists. I am not a pacifist, nor am I a warmonger or a military type. I believe that Canada should be a peacemaker and it strikes me as incredible that the man who is now the Prime Minister of this country, who has said over the years many things with regard to the establishment of an international morality with greater acceptance in dealing with questions of the establishment of an international morality, should now be reduced to the point where he is just another national partisan in this great human agony.

Some people have talked about the great role that Canada plays as a quiet diplomat. Where is this great quiet diplomacy? We have had occasional references from time to time to what our government has done. Yet on investigation much of it has seemed to be half-hearted and misdirected. If quiet diplomacy really does work then let us see some definite results from it and not the kind of defensive innuendo that has been made far too often by the Prime Minister and others in his government in place of real action.

I am not going to spend all my time being critical of the government. I have done that in other places, and some people have suggested they have heard enough of my views on this situation. Let me just suggest a few initiatives that are still open to the government, some of which are so incredibly obvious I cannot understand why they have not been attended to months ago.

One of the comments made recently about the ineffectiveness of our Hercules aircraft was that the airfields at Enugu, Calabar and Port Harcourt were not suitable or would not bear the continual use of Hercules aircraft. I understood these were military planes and as such it was a relatively simple matter for our air force, because of training, to improve local airport conditions or, if necessary, to build new ones. Is the government trying to tell us that if we ever get into a real war or something like it we are going to spend as much time saying that we cannot fly these planes here, there and everywhere because we do not have suitable airports, and we will have to wait for five or ten years until we instal long runways with sufficient density to bear these aircraft? That is nonsense, and I think most people realize it.

I asked the Prime Minister a few weeks ago why, in view of the fact that many of these aircraft remained inoperational, we did not use a massive airdrop. I think the reply really was that the government had not considered this. The government has not considered this? This is one of the basic reasons we own these aircraft, but we simply pull them all back to Canada. Why can we not carry out an airdrop and carry it out now?

Earlier the Prime Minister referred to the idea of developing corridors, saying that corridors have been offered by land and by sea by Nigeria but have been refused by Biafra. That is misleading, to say the least. Corridors have been offered from time to time by both sides and both sides have refused them. If we are going to have statements about relief operations at least let us have the whole picture from the Prime Minister and not a one-sided, loaded story.

At the earlier stages it was the hope of myself and the hon. member for Greenwood that we would not get into some of the difficulties raised by the Prime Minister about acts of war. He has dropped that one for some time, but there are other problems as well. We suggested that the government could do what other agencies and other governments have done. It could put these aircraft at the disposal of private agencies to remove any kind of international involvements, if this was felt to be not in the national interest. This, of course, was considered summarily at best and abandoned.

It is my suggestion there were other alternatives available if the government really wanted to act. We know there are other agencies working, and even if we could not make our aircraft available we do have financial resources. A committee meeting is taking place right now in Toronto in an attempt to raise enough money to buy one Superconstellation to increase the relief operation into Biafra. Is our government ready to help and are we willing to match dollar for dollar? It seems to me that these are questions which should not be considered today or even yesterday, but a month ago or two months ago.

It seems to me that our contacts with Biafra have been ludicrous. We know there is a problem with regard to diplomatic recognition, and we know there is a problem with whatever national sovereignty and integrity still exists in federal Nigeria. Surely we could have set up the machinery for an accurate contact with the Biafran authorities through Zambia and Tanzania. What arrangements have been made to work through these contacts? None that I know of. Instead we choose one relief agency which, as is well known, has had considerable difficulty not just beginning in September but in July or before with its relief operation. Yet the Prime Minister told us this afternoon that his confidence in the Red Cross has not been shaken. Does he seriously expect us to believe that kind of statement? If we are serious about it, let us establish some contact so we can have a good back and forth communication with the authorities in Biafra. Let us use the Tanzanians or Zambians or whatever diplomatic contact will work, but let us not waste time trying to confuse the issue or faltering in feeble efforts such as we have attempted to date.

• (6:20 p.m.)

I hope the Prime Minister and the members of his government will simply not rest on their activities to date. I was frankly disappointed that the Prime Minister in his long speech spent almost no time dealing with the committee report itself. We and other opposition groups submitted minority reports. There were useful recommendations in them with regard to conciliation, the relief operation, the transportation of food and supplies, and the observer team. Yet since these reports were published two or three weeks ago there has been no comment, not even today, on what is to be the response of the government to the new series of suggestions.

Mr. Sharp: I will make that comment later.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): We look forward to a comment of that kind, because it is shocking that we should have set aside a whole day to debate this serious matter and should have to wait for some kind of wrap-up, presumably, or dessert before we are told the government's views with regard to the suggestions made. We look for action.

The tragedy of this war so far as Canadians are concerned is that they want to participate, not in solving the political problems of the Biafrans and Nigerians, for that is not our intent, but in looking for self-determination for all the people in Nigeria-Biafra. But that will only happen if these people are alive to participate in it.

Mr. John Roberts (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be no basic disagreement on the part of the opposition with the purposes of the government's policy in relation to Nigeria and Biafra. What they have complained about is the fact that they believe this policy does not go far enough. They are disappointed it is not promoting further the humanitarian efforts which they wish to see succeed. In this regard, of course, they share the concern of many Canadians that the suffering end in Biafra. That feeling is brought about by many of the best aspects of Canadian life, our concern for others, our disinterested desire for good and the strength of our moral concern.

But the test of a foreign policy is not simply the high-mindedness of its purposes. We live in a real and hard world where idealism must be tempered by realism. The major test of any foreign policy is its practicability, its usefulness for the objectives that all members of this house share, for it is not simply members of the opposition who are concerned about the suffering, the pain and the death in Biafra.

The criticisms which have been brought against the government's policy are basically of two kinds. There are those who say the government should be more vigorous in pursuing these humanitarian objectives but should not become involved in the politics of the dispute. They say the government should pursue these humanitarian objectives regardless of the various interests or expressions of opinion by the Nigerian authorities. There are others who, recognizing that the humanitarian and political aspects are impossible to disentangle, suggest that Canada must seek for and put forward some kind of political stalemate which would result in the end of the war. They believe that in this way the humanitarian aspects might succeed.

Let me talk briefly about both these aspects in turn. I refer first to the proposal that Canada could and should be more vigorous in pursuing these humanitarian objectives and that we should not be delayed or derailed from so doing by the point of view of the Nigerian authorities. It would be a lovely world if we could simply compartmentalize the political problems on one side and the humanitarian objective of bringing in relief supplies on the other. But unfortunately the political and humanitarian aspects are intermingled for at least three reasons.

First of all, unfortunate as the fact may be, in modern war the question of the morale of the state and the condition of the civilian population, is a factor of importance in the successful conclusion of a dispute. Second, in relation to this war it is obvious that a battle of public relations is going on. We have all seen newspaper reports that enormous sums of money are being spent, some in Geneva and some in the United States, to promote on both sides the public image that they wish to present. On the part of the Biafran authorities, this is quite a reasonable position for them to take. There is an attempt by them to use public relations, to use natural world sympathy, to promote their interests, which is the imposition of a political stalemate in the area. I do not criticize them for that. I simply point out that the public relations aspect and the humanitarian aspect are involved necessarily in a political dispute.

Unpleasant as the fact may be, we must recognize that for every plane load of relief supplies that goes into the Biafran area, a plane load is freed to bring in a supply of arms from Gabon or whatever part of the world is supplying arms to the Biafran authorities. The provision of relief relieves other facilities to bring in arms; so there is a necessary intermingling of the humanitarian and political problems.

It would be simple-minded to expect the Nigerian authorities to simply say: Go ahead with your humanitarian efforts regardless of how they affect our war situation, and pay no attention to our views. They have an interest in how the humanitarian efforts are being carried out. If we look at the real facts of the situation we will understand that without the co-operation of the Nigerian authorities no very substantial effort can be made which will be effective in bringing relief to the trouble-spot of Biafra.

As has been mentioned by other hon. members, Biafra is landlocked; it does not have great air or port facilities. The position is roughly similar to that in Berlin at the time of the blockade. I understand that in Berlin one aircraft arrived every 70 seconds bringing in food, medicine and other supplies, and even then the airlift was not effective. We cannot possibly hope, no matter how effective our airlift, no matter whether we use the airdrops the hon. member mentioned, to deal with the problem without land corridors; and we cannot get land corridors without the co-operation of the Nigerian authorities. That is the practical reason why whatever Canada does in the humanitarian area must be done not in defiance of the Nigerian authorities but with their co-operation.

Let me now turn to the second criticism which has been levelled against the government's policy, that which suggests we must insist upon or push for a political settlement, some kind of stalemate to the war, as a means of achieving the humanitarian end. Such an argument raises the question that other hon. members have mentioned, namely, that of the intervention of Canada in the internal affairs of other countries. What I think has not been sufficiently stressed is that the principle of non-intervention in the affairs of other countries is an extraordinarily progressive principle in international affairs. It is progressive because it substitutes another rule of action to that of the use of force in international affairs. It substitutes something other than national interest as a guide to the conduct of nations in foreign affairs. This is exactly the principle of non-intervention which we have attempted to use to protest, to deny the validity of the Russian intervention in Czechoslovakia.

The opponents of the policy of this government suggest a way of proceeding which they say is for the greater moral good in dealing with the problem of starving children and suffering in Biafra. They suggest we should be prepared to let these rules of international conduct go by the board. We should accept this minor inconvenience as a necessary price to pay for doing something good. They argue a little, like the girl who is prepared to be just a little bit pregnant as long as it is all good fun. They say that the morality of our objective justifies our intervention. There never was a country that intervened in the internal affairs of another country that did not claim its purposes to be moral and honourable. No country ever said it is going to intervene in somebody else's affairs for its own wicked ends. This principle of non-intervention is one which poses a rule of conduct which is not simply that of a self proclaimed interest of a country in the affairs of another. It may be that those who are opposed to the present government's policy in Biafra are prepared to abandon the principle of non-intervention in the affairs of another country.

If so, they are prepared to abandon a principle which has been at the root of Canada's foreign policy since the second world war, and if they are prepared to do so they should be clear what they are doing, because they are encouraging countries to interfere in the affairs of another country when they say they have a moral right to do so. This is a dangerous principle which is contrary to the way in which we have been trying to strengthen the system of international politics.

Criticism has been made that the government's policy is bound up by legalisms, diplomatic niceties and protocol positions. The suggestion has been that we should ignore the rules of the game. But we are not involved here in some kind of symbolic and monstrous game of hopscotch or tiddlywinks with rules which can be broken or not broken, but rather we are concerned with practicability. The rules of international conduct we have been trying to establish are related to the real political world in which we live. The real question is not whether the kind of intervention which hon. members in the opposition have asked for is within or without the rules of the game or whether or not it confines itself to protocol. The real question is a practical one: Will it work? Will the kind of dramatic intervention which the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) has asked for, work? Will the appeal to the United Nations which the hon. member for Fundy Royal (Mr. Fairweather) has asked for, work? It is not whether they will confine themselves to the rules of the game, it is whether they will work, and whether they will be useful.

The unfortunate thing for proponents of their view is that all evidence is against the hope they will be useful. Legal authorities have been cited, but the question is not whether it will be legally possible to bring this matter before the United Nations but whether it will be useful. Sometimes I have had the feeling as I did when the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) was speaking, that some people believe that out there somewhere there is a fantastically powerful force of public opinion which stands around with bated breath waiting for Canada to come out and lead it. He almost feels that if the trumpets were sounded, the walls of Jericho would crumble down. If he really believes that in the present world there is that force of moral character and strength which can dominate the affairs of a civil war, such as that between Biafra and Nigeria, he is living in a fool's paradise and he is advocating a Disneyland foreign policy. The question is whether this would be helpful, and the evidence is against the position the opposition has been taking.

It is not just the view of the government, it is the view which has been expressed by diplomats, by the vast majority of African nations and by the vast majority of nations in the United Nations, as well as the view expressed by U Thant. On this particular point it seems that everyone is out of step but the opposition parties in the Canadian parliament. What is the point of trying to make some dramatic statement about Canada's moral view of the situation? What is the point of trying to make a great public show at the United Nations on where Canada stands? It will enable us to stand up and be counted. We will have the smug feeling that we have expressed our moral point of view.

There are limits to what moral authority can do in international affairs. Righteous indignation, even when spouted so eloquently by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal and the hon. member for Greenwood, is not a foreign policy. To the Africans, the situation does not seem to be so easily susceptible to those simple moral judgments which have been presented to us. For them it is a complex problem, a problem of tribalism, of oil resources, of cold war involvement, of religious conflict, and of commercial interests. They do not seem ready to accept or to wish for Canada, as the self-proclaimed conscience of mankind, to interfere in this complicated situation, especially when it is the Africans and not the Canadians who will have to live with the consequences of such an intervention. The Africans, rightly or wrongly, will judge our morally inspired attempts as at best a clumsy, and at worst a self-interested missionary neo-colonialism.

What would be the result of such action? The proponents of the view that we should ignore the wishes of the Nigerian authorities and that we should at all costs bring this matter to the United Nations will succeed in doing three things. They will severely damage our influence in Africa for at least a decade by characterizing us as neo-colonialists. Second, they will deny the basic principles of the Canadian foreign policy of non-intervention in the affairs of foreign countries; and third and most important, they will not assist to one degree in the preservation of life or the relief of suffereing in this area. They will not help because, as I have stressed before, the effective provision of relief in this area requires the assistance and co-operation of the Nigerian authorities. We may not like it and we may wish it were otherwise, but that is the fact of the situation.

In the committee hearings it was clearly brought forth that something in the order of 3,000 tons of food in daily relief supplies would be required as the year wore on. There is no possible way to ferry or airlift that amount of material into Biafra, and there is no way of really dealing with the relief problem by way of the land corridor without the acceptance of it by the Nigerian authorities.

We have heard about the determination of the Biafrans to fight on. I can assure you, based on my experience at the United Nations, that there is just as strong a determination on the Nigerian side to bring this civil war to a successful termination from their point of view. The test of our foreign policy should not be whether it would give relief to the Canadian humanitarian desire, whereby we feel morally desirous of helping the Biafrans; but the test, as John Kennedy said, is whether it will work and whether it will help.

There is no doubt the Nigerians wish to pursue this war with all the force they can. They may be right or wrong. I suggest it is not for us to make that moral judgment. I believe that on the basis of the test of what will work and what will help, the Canadian government has done as much as any government is doing, and as much as any government can do at the present time. If I were to make one criticism of the minister and of the policy of the Canadian government in this area, I would say that perhaps we have been weak in explaining the policy and that our public relations has not been as good as it might have been. However, I do not think that the Canadian people ultimately will judge Canadian foreign policy from the effectiveness of its public relations nor do I think they want a foreign policy which is dominated by the idea of public relations. I do not think they want our politicians to strike attitudes in relation to our foreign policy, attitudes which are of no effect. What they want is a government which works effectively in two areas: first, to strengthen the rules of international conduct, and second a government which effectively works to assist those less fortunate than ourselves. That is the kind of government and the kind of foreign policy we now have.

[Mr. Roberts.]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of participating in this debate even as I appreciated participating in the committee hearings, I believe them to be some of the most fruitful and informative committee sittings ever held by this house. I have likewise appreciated the work that has been done by that committee. I am also grateful for these opportunities, because Africa still has the bigger part of my life and I know the continent very well. I know the background of the country and the tribal differences that have led to the present situation in Nigeria. To realize that we have in this house at least 30 members who have participated in the committee hearings and have been informed of the situation in Nigeria, as otherwise they would never have been informed, is something of great value and intense interest to me.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Emergent Africa has known more than its share of strife over the years, starting with Mau-Mau movement and going on through the carnage of the Congolese Secession. In scope of suffering, however, in depth of bitterness and in the hoplessness of any viable solution short of wholesale slaughter, I doubt that there has ever been a parallel to what is taking place in Nigeria today. This is the Nigeria of which only eight years ago we were so hopeful. It was held up before the world as one example of a colonial territory that was truly ready for self-government. Sir Alec Robertson, the last governor of Nigeria and a personal friend of mine—I had known him in Ethiopia, in the Sudan and then later in Nigeria—had the task of moving Nigeria into independence. He often said to me that Nigeria was perhaps the one country in Africa in which there was a hope of a stable, democratic government because the situation in Nigeria, which we do not have time to deal with today, prepared that country for self-government as no other colonial territory had been prepared.

Today we find the people of Ibo land, a tremendous race of people, fighting for what they believe to be their lives against their sister tribes, basically the Hausas and the Yorubas, who had joined with them to form the federation eight years ago. It is an interesting commentary on the situation that exists today to realize that the Ibo people led the struggle for federation; it was the Ibo people who struggled hardest for the federation. The northern section did not want to go along with it and the Yorubas in the west were not so sure. Today this hope for the federation has been fractured. The situation which exists certainly is a civil war and is the tragedy of the year.

The remarks that have been made by the different members who have participated in the debate this afternoon substantiate the fact that the conscience of the nation, yes of the world, has been awakened by this situation. It is likewise a sad commentary that the United Nations, and other organizations which exist for the very purpose of solving problems between nations, have been ineffective, have been unable or unwilling to provide any effective solution for stopping the war. I cannot help but say this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, that I wish to God our consciences were just as aware of what is taking place in other parts of the world. We discuss whether or not genocide is the situation in Nigeria. All we have to do is look at the facts in Tibet to realize that genocide is a fact in that country. Methodically down through the years the Chinese communists have sought to destroy the Tibetan nation, the Tibetan people and the Tibetan religion.

Coming back to Africa, I should like to refer to a part of it which I know even better than Nigeria, that is the Sudan, where the Nilotic peoples of the Upper Sudan during the last few years have suffered suppression that has cost, not tens of thousands but hundreds of thousands of lives. Unfortunately most people do not even know this suppression has ever taken place. This situation exists in several parts of the world, but we are not very much concerned or informed about it. It is good, however, that we are concerned and informed about the situation in Nigeria, at least a little. I feel that this debate this afternoon is of great value, just as the committee meetings have been, and just as all the dialogue that has developed across this country during the last few months has been. I wonder, however, just how much might have been done, how much we would have been aware of this situation if it had not been for the journey to Biafra undertaken by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

Mr. Richardson: Is that the 36 hour one?

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Yes, it may have been for 36 hours, but those 36 hours were a lot more than many people had who are having a lot to say on this matter. Such a visit might not give knowledge in depth, but it certainly gives a familiarization which I wish every member in this house could have had.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, whatever the reasons are, as I have said it is good that we have had this debate, that we are aware of the situation. I am concerned a little bit about some remarks that were made in the house this afternoon. I was disturbed by the remarks of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), because he attempted to interpret the motivation of members of the committee who happened to be from the opposition. It seemed to me that he lowered the level of the debate.

An hon. Member: Oh, come off it.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Everyone has the right to have his motives and his intentions regarded with respect. What has been branded as an attempt to get publicity by some, I feel shows an ignorance of what actually is taking place, and I am unhappy about it. One of the characteristics of this chamber, which I have learned down through the years, is the respect that members give other members with regard to their motivation and the convictions they hold. I hope it will never be otherwise. As I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Ontario I could not help but think of the testimony given before the committee by people like Dr. Johnson, of the Presbyterian missions; Major General Wrinch, national commissioner of the Canadian Red Cross Society; Mr. Romeo Maione, of the Canadian Catholic Organization for Development and Peace; Mr. Alan Grossman of Time Magazine; Mr. Charles Taylor of the Globe and Mail and Mr. Keith Bezanson, of CUSO. All of these people have had extensive experience in Biafra, and not just a 36 hour experience. They know what this situation is like.

Mr. Sharp: And Arnold Smith.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): The minister mentions Mr. Arnold Smith, and I was going to refer to him. However, he is in a slightly different category.

Mr. Richardson: And General Milroy.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): If hon. members would give me a chance to speak, I will mention these people.

Mr. Bell: They do not like it.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): I could mention people like Mr. Arnold Smith and Major General Milroy, friends of mine whom I respect a great deal. As we listened to these men, we came to understand that this situation in Nigeria, which is centred on Biafra, was not so easy to describe from either one side or the other. There was talk of genocide. Need we wait for proof of genocide to initiate our action? It has been said that we have done more than any other country. I am glad that we have done what we have done. We in the opposition who have urged for greater action by the government have not intended that we should contravene any sovereign rights of Nigeria. All we have asked has been that, on the humanitarian side, we follow the pattern of countries like Switzerland, Sweden, Norway and Denmark. They did not wait to rationalize their position; they went in with aid. Sweden has one Hercules aircraft in its air force, but it managed to transfer title of that aircraft to the Swedish Red Cross and thus to the International Red Cross. Scores of trips have been made with that aircraft. I rather believe that on a per capita basis countries like these have made a greater contribution than we have.

I do not minimize what we have done, because this has been good as well; but I would just say this, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot do justice to the situation in Nigeria unless we take cognizance of what has happened there in the last eight years. This is a civil war; there is no doubt about that. It is a civil war that has been brought about through tribal differences and by false assumptions made by those responsible for drawing the borders of Nigeria, and in thinking that under self-rule government could develop as it did under colonial rule in a harmonious way between the various tribes.

For example, you cannot separate the cessionist position of the Ibo people of Biafra today from the massacres of 1968. Very little has been said about this but the bitterness of that bloodshed, the first being civilian instigated and the second, following the first coup, being militarily instigated, is part of the background in understanding the situation.

The original concept of Nigeria, taking in three major tribal groups, the Hausas in the north, the Yorubas in the west and the Ibos in the east, was an effort to bring about a federation of three peoples basically different from each other, living together with numerous smaller tribes, in the hope that the country of Nigeria could be viable as an independent state. But this is only one part of the background. We who have been part of the committee are familiar with the overall picture. In fact, portions of the testimony given before the committee were very excellent expository statements of the events that led up to the present situation.

What can we do about it? I do not for a moment believe that anyone who took part in the committee proceedings had any other intention than that of trying to awaken ourselves and the government to the fact that we in Canada should be doing more than we were doing. Any statements to the contrary made here this afternoon are unfair and prejudiced.

When the committee first sat we in the Conservative party stated very clearly in our opening statement that there were two aspects of the problem that we were to consider, one the humanitarian aspect, and the other the political-military aspect. In the first instance I believe that we have done a lot on the humanitarian side. Nevertheless. I think all of us believe, whether we try to justify or criticize the position of the government, that we should have done more. We wish we could have done more, because in our plenty and our affluence it seems to me that we owe a debt to others less fortunate than ourselves, and there is certainly no better opportunity to demonstrate that than in a situation such as exists now in Biafra. But, on the other side, we have the responsibility which falls under the political and military side. This is, not to go in with our armed forces. I do not mean that we should transgress the sovereignty of the Nigerian federal military government. There are other ways of using our influence, and we do have influence. Hardly any nation in the world has more influence among the world's emerging nations than we have.

Also, we have influence with the world's larger nations. Examine the Suez situation, sir, which occurred a few years before the Nigerian independence movement occurred. If the Canadian government had then followed the sort of course it is following in this situation, I think the outcome of that episode would have been far different. The world will thank us if we can be of help in the Nigerian crisis as it did at Suez.

Though the government talks to the world about Nigeria or Biafra it seems to have lost touch with what has happened there. Its utterances lead to confusion, and that confusion may be seen in part when examining the committee's report.

I am not opposed to the report the committee has made to this house. I think every point raised is legitimate. My only point is that I do not think the committee went far enough. It limited itself to the humanitarian aspect of the matter and did not emphasize, as it ought to have done, what we must do to bring a solution to the problem on the political and military side. The amendment that was moved by the member for Fundy-Royal is an attempt to strengthen the report, which by itself is inadequate.

Some years ago when India and Pakistan were at war—and it was a war—the matter was brought to a conclusion after those who were shipping arms decided they would stop shipping arms. In the matter of Nigeria I think Canada ought to exert greater pressure or influence on Great Britain, Russia, France or Portugal to stop the shipping of arms on both sides. I think our influence ought to be used in that direction, and I am certain that world opinion would be behind us.

Also we need to bring pressure to bear on the commonwealth. I am sure that nations in the commonwealth, particularly those in Africa, feel that they ought to take a greater lead in this matter than they have taken so far. Some say that this is hopeless if the members of the organization for African unity could not agree on the course to take. Twenty nine members gave support to the military government of Nigeria and four members support the Biafran secessionists. If the commonwealth secretariat has the influence I think it has, it will ultimately be able to do more than we in Canada alone can do. We ought to try to convince the secretariat to act.

Mr. Sharp: We are working on that.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Some say that the United Nations had no business in the Congo or in Korea. The fact is that the United Nations refused to act in these matters until a consensus had been reached to act. In the case of Korea the United States went in with other U.N. members. The point is that in these matters the policy of the United Nations resulted in action. Where the results have been good, credit has been reflected on the U.N., but where there has been a failure, the failure has been not only that of the U.N. itself but of the member nations of the U.N.

An hon. Member: The same as Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): That is entirely different. The difference between the situations in Czechoslovakia and Nigeria-Biafra is the difference between black and white.

In closing may I say that I think we in Canada ought to be doing far more than we are doing, and the government of Canada ought to be more positive in trying to end the war. We must help in a humanitarian way, and at the same time seek a way to end the military war. If we can mobilize world opinion and influence the nations of the world to act with us to end this tragedy I think we shall have done a service to humanity—and made a contribution to world peace. Many Canadians feel that our efforts should be in this direction. If we cannot do that, then I ask: What hope is there for peace in the world?

May I call it seven o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

It being seven o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Ralph W. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, since the committee on external affairs and national defence began its hearings into the question of Nigeria and Biafra I made it a point in the committee to emphasize that we had to review all sides of the matter in order to arrive at a complete and unbiased opinion. From the very beginning of the hearings it was evident that opinions up to that point were not unbiased. We had reports from the Biafran side and we had reports from the federal side. Yet we had never had a report that covered completely both sides of the war. That is why in the committee I recommended that a group of the committee should go to Africa and view this problem from all sides.

I had the good fortune to go to Nigeria and Biafra and to spend approximately two weeks in Africa. I did not want to go to one side alone but insisted on going to the federal side as well. I did not want to come away with a one sided view and a biased opinion.

No doubt the situation in Biafra is sad. It is the kind of thing that tears at your emotions. I am not ashamed to say I cried in Biafra. I cried when a little boy came to me and threw his arms around me and wanted to stay with me. I could feel his little ribs sticking out. I cried when I saw women nursing their babies, and other women who were pregnant line up to receive a bit of food and some iron tablets. They cheered and sang songs because Canadians were there. They had been told we would help them and send food to them.

I was also touched to see little children in refugee camps and in sick bays there. There were little tiny ones, one, two and three years old; certainly they were not responsible for the war. I saw children with hair that was turning red because of lack of protein. Their little tummies were distended; their feet were swollen and their ribs were showing. We helped to feed some of these children and to distribute some soup that was made with nutritious food. These teeming, hungry children were given that food.

I will never forget the looks on their faces, and the little bowls they carried with them as part and parcel of their lives. They walked around with their little bowls, hoping they would obtain food. Some of them had bowls, and some of them had cans like our opened sardine cans or other fish cans. You could cut your finger on the jagged end. Certainly we would make sure that our children would never carry around cans like these on which they could cut themselves; but that is all those poor little children had to put their food into.

These are things you do not forget; these are things that tear at your heartstrings. These are things, also, that tend to make you look at that situation from the point of view of those who at that moment are being presented to you. Nevertheless, regardless of the emotional involvement, it is absolutely essential that we all look at this situation from every point of view. I cannot emphasize too strongly that we cannot become involved in a political situation. Ours is a humanitarian consideration, and nothing more.

We heard figures quoted about the numbers of people dying. It was said there were 1,000, 2,000—the figure went all the way up to 10,000—who were dying every day. I do not know the right figure. I do know, none the less, that people are dying needlessly. That is the important point. I also know that people are afraid. They are afraid of being exterminated. Whether their fear results from government propaganda I do not know; whether their fear stems from having seen families suffer atrocities I also do not know. They are afraid of their enemies. We were told that the people were afraid of losing their lives, and some were so afraid they would not come out of hiding.

Imagine, Mr. Speaker, a very simple people, most of whom are probably illiterate in any language. They are just living their daily lives and want nothing else but to live that life. Suddenly a war comes along, and there is a departure from normal customs. Naturally the people are afraid. They are afraid of troops, no matter whether they are Biafran or Nigerian. They do not want any more war; that is all. The question we must ask ourselves is not of whom they are afraid; the question to be considered is that they are afraid.

We must study the political situations existing on both sides of the war. To understand what is happening we must study more and more. But we must not become involved politically in the situation. As I say, we shall only understand the problems of the area by studying them. I do not pretend that simply because I spent two weeks in Africa I am an expert in African affairs. But at least I gained a little insight into the problems of the area by studying those problems before going over. Certainly, I think I have a greater insight than those who have never been there, and I appreciate the opportunity that enabled me to study the problem at first hand.

• (8:10 p.m.)

We spent several days on the Biafran side and then we went over to the Nigerian side. We also spent a little time on Fernando Po, an island off the coast of Nigeria. While in Lagos we had the opportunity to speak with several officials. We also had the opportunity to speak with the Bishop of Calabar, a town in the southern part of eastern Nigeria which had been in Biafran hands and is now in federal hands. We heard about atrocities on both sides. The Bishop of Calabar told us about the Ibos having locked a number of civilians in a church and set fire to it. If we are to believe all the reports we have heard it is obvious that atrocities have been committed by both sides. Another thing which came out in our talks to the bishop was that much of the propaganda which has gone out has not been completely correct. We know there has been propaganda on both sides. For example, while we were there it was obvious that the B.B.C. was not reporting the same thing in Africa as it was in its international service; it was obviously slanted to the federal side. This is something

I mentioned to the officials in London when I called there on the way back.

The Bishop of Calabar drew attention to something else. He went to his desk and took out a large picture of a starving child, one which had been published all over the world —we saw it here. He told us: This is what Biafra has sent around the world as a picture of a starving Biafran child. But all of us here know that this is an Epic child. People who live outside Africa would not know the difference, but this is the kind of thing which has been going on. No one is guiltless.

This business of propaganda has been the fault, to some extent, of our own Canadian media. I will give an example. We made that trip in the company of a reporter from the Toronto Telegram who had obviously made up his mind before he ever went to Biafra. He was obviously, biased in favour of the Biafrans, so much so that he wrote his story with the by-line "Biafra" even before he got there. He wrote it in Sao Tomé and as soon as he arrived in Biafra he sent it out on the wire. This is what I call irresponsible reporting, and it is the kind of thing which has been going on in this war. We have seen all kinds of biased reporting and propaganda going out from both sides. I think it is to be deplored, particularly, that a Canadian journalist would be part and parcel of that kind of bias. It is really a sad situation.

I plead with members of the house to abstain from making this sad situation into a political football. We all have our own ideas. If we want to embarrass the government let us choose some other subject—let us not choose the starving of people in Biafra and Nigeria as something out of which to make a political issue. The external affairs committee made a report. We did not all agree with everything in that report. I certainly did not agree with everything in it. In fact, I tried to put forward a couple of amendments, but my proposals were turned down. But when one is a member of a committee he tries to reach some kind of consensus. For example the fourth recommendation has to do with the building and rebuilding of airports. I felt this was going a little too far toward involvement in the war and I did not think this recommendation should be made. However, as I say, members of a committee try to reach general agreement.

I realize that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) was not in agreement with most of the report. That is his privilege. But I certainly do not think we should wash our linen outside the country; I think we should discuss our differences in the house and in the committee, and not take them abroad.

The day we left was the day on which the report was presented to the House of Commons, and for that reason we did not have a copy with us. But the hon. member for Greenwood chose to send a copy of his minority report along, so that Colonel Ojukwu had this report in his hands though he never did receive the other one. I do not think this is the kind of thing we should be trying to do, because it prejudices all our efforts. I would ask members of all parties to forget about their political differences in this instance. Let us try to work toward the best means Canada can find of helping the suffering people instead of trying to involve politics.

I should like to mention one small thing in connection with the Red Cross. It has worked very hard, and tried very hard, but I do not feel it has done a particularly good job in Nigeria. I think it ought to be mentioned for example, that the number of flights undertaken by the Red Cross has been far inferior in number than those carried out by the churches—about one half. I realize that the Red Cross may not pay its pilots the same rates, that it may have encountered difficulties with crews, and so on. But I think that if the organization placed a little more stress on its operations instead of on its administration there would be a great improvement. As an example, on Fernando Poo there are 56 people involved in administration, besides the crews of the aircraft. All those people are certainly not needed to handle the operations on Fernando Poo. This seems to be a common complaint in the area. Our Canadian servicemen were of the same opinion: There is too much concern about administration and not enough about the actual relief operation on the part of the Red Cross.

I believe it is Canada's best course to mind its own business, apart from trying to help meet the needs of Nigeria and Biafra in a humanitarian way. I hope all countries will adopt this point of view. With this in mind I would recommend two courses to the government. The first is as far as possible to increase aid to both sides—aid by means of daytime flights. I asked Colonel Ojukwu about day flights. He said he was in favour in principle but he could not agree to the Red Cross dictating the wheres and whys and wherefores. He may have a point. However, when there are thousands starving every day, somebody will have to give, so the more planes we have available to fly in food on day flights, the better.

• (8:20 p.m.)

We certainly would not be able to continue the night flights because I have every reason to believe the Nigerians have been tracking all these flights on their radar, and it is just a question of time before they start shooting down these aircraft. Certainly we do not want our planes to be shot down. Canada is well favoured by both sides. In fact both sides are almost begging us to help. They respect Canada more perhaps than any other country in the world. They feel we have a prestige which other countries do not enjoy, and that we have an influence with other countries. They would like us to help them. I think the main thing is that this war be ended by whatever means are possible. There must be an end to the fighting. We can bring in food and do other things, but unless the fighting ends a great deal of misery will continue and one might wonder where it will lead.

I suggest therefore that Canada offer itself as a mediator in an effort to bring about a ceasefire. Then it might be possible to bring about a solution of the political problem, with Canada acting as a mediator between the two sides. I feel that Canada not only would be acceptable but would be welcomed by both sides. Any other consideration, whether it be in respect of the political situation or recognition of it, or whether it be by arms, should be set aside and Canada should concern itself with the humanitarian problems only.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I hope my remarks will be reasonably brief in respect of the point at issue. I hope also that I shall be able to shed a little light, and not too much heat on the subject. The hon. member who just spoke urged that we do not make this a political issue. I do not think it has been made a political issue. Nevertheless I believe we have a duty to express our opinions quite frankly. When we feel there is some defect or shortcoming in the policy or in the position of the government I believe it is our duty to say so, with whatever reluctance we might have about becoming involved in argument or in making a political issue out of the suffering of the people of Biafra. What we want to do is get on the right course and stay there. This must be our aim.

I am a little disappointed in one sense, although I hope this will be corrected shortly.

[Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).]

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) indicated during the supper hour that he had, as I understood him, some constructive suggestions to make with regard to Canada's position in respect of this problem. I am rather disappointed that he did not do this earlier in the day, so that this could have been discussed freely by the members of the house. I hope he will take the earliest opportunity to put his suggestions before this house and before the country even at this late hour, after we have been discussing the Nigerian and Biafran problems through most of the day.

As the hon. member who last spoke suggested, we are not involved in any gamesmanship in respect of this, and I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs does not want to make this a matter of gamesmanship. Therefore I suggest that he put his projects and ideas before the house as rapidly as possible, so that they can be discussed.

Next let me say I might willingly accept the standards and aims set forth by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his speech this afternoon when he said that the government must be judged by one test and one test only on the simple issue, has the government acted correctly and wisely. As I recall, those were his words. I would not have put it quite that way, I would not have put the word "correctly" before the word "wisely". This may be an indication to some extent of the attitude of the government, but I do not wish to quibble about that.

I am prepared to accept that as not perhaps the happiest way in which the matter could be put, but as a standard by which to judge the position of the government. Certainly later on the Prime Minister said there is only one standard by which any particular measure should be judged, and that is as to whether it will be effective. I accept that. In other words, will it be effective in bringing relief to the people who are suffering, or will it be effective as a means, presumably, of bringing a cessation of the hostilities which are the fundamental cause of the suffering that is going on. I accept those standards for the purpose of this discussion. They are not put exactly the way I would put them, but I accept them.

I have come to the conclusion, judged by these standards, that the government policy to date has been a failure. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs tonight will place before the house some suggestions that will constitute a more constructive and more effective approach than we have seen so far.

It would seem to me that the attitude of the government has been one of a desire to keep out of this thing. A number of Liberal members have spoken in this way. I am not referring simply to the offhand and unfortunate comment of the Prime Minister when, during the summer, he was asked about this and is reported to have said, "Where is Biafra?" and, "You ask the funniest questions." However, ever since this session began the position of the government has seemed to indicate a reluctance to become involved, and to give every appearance of simply bowing a bit to public feeling and public concern and taking steps only by virtue of this concern. The initial attitude seemed to be just to make a gift and leave it at that, that there is far more suffering in the world than we can do anything about, and that it is all beyond us.

For example, when the suggestion was first made in the house that aircraft should be made available to the International Red Cross there was a great reluctance on the part of the government to accept this proposal. Indeed the Prime Minister appeared to give the widespread impression that this might very well be interpreted as an act of war.

Then, a little later, he indicated that the government of Canada would be prepared to make aircraft available to the International Red Cross if Nigeria granted permission. When there was some difficulty about permission being forthcoming to the International Red Cross, I then asked the Prime Minister whether the government of Canada would assist the Red Cross in obtaining this permission by the government of Canada itself, through its representative, approaching the government at Lagos in this regard. The Prime Minister replied to me in the house by saying that this is not the way it had been agreed. He said that we must make the aircraft available to the International Red Cross and that it is the International Red Cross that must do the consulting in an effort to obtain the agreement.

I do not know what happened in the meantime, but a little later on the government abandoned this position and made direct contact. As the Prime Minister reminded us this afternoon he eventually sent a representative to Lagos who, in the words of the Prime Minister, fulfilled a very useful mission and secured agreement of the government of Lagos to certain important measures.

Now, one cannot help but wonder why this sort of thing was not done long since. However, the amount of relief that has been brought to the starving people of Nigeria to date by means of the aircraft has not been great. There has been one difficulty after another, and various reasons have been given. In view of the reluctant procedures the government indicated earlier it will take to come to grips with the problem of bringing relief to the starving people of Biafra, it is very difficult for me and those of us on this side of the house to be convinced that this government is really trying, with full determination, to solve these problems which stand in the way of bringing relief to these people in Nigeria, particularly in the Biafran area. We must come to the conclusion that there seems little likelihood that enough food and assistance will be taken to Biafra to eliminate the suffering and starvation, unless the fighting is stopped and a peaceful solution worked out.

The Prime Minister and spokesmen on the other side of the house seem to take the position that this is a civil dispute, and that the recognized government of Nigeria has the right to use force to prevent secession. Let me say first of all that I do not believe for a moment that Canada should attempt to impose a solution.

There has been a great deal of confusion created by the use of certain words. The Prime Minister and the government are very right in insisting that Canada ought not to become involved in this war, and certainly ought not to sell arms in this connection. When hon. members opposite use words such as sovereignty and intervention, the situation can rapidly become very confusing. The Prime Minister, for example, said today that the United Nations ought not to intervene in the dispute, except under very extreme circumstances. He then went on to say that, even in connection with South Africa, African nations had not suggested arms intervention. In other words, he was suggesting that an intervention or interference of any sort must mean an arms intervention. Let me make it perfectly clear that I am not suggesting for a moment any form of arms intervention, and that when people talk about this they in effect create a red herring.

We should discuss among ourselves the meaning of these words and terms we use. Otherwise we only create more confusion. What is intervention in Nigeria? Are we intervening in some improper way in the affairs of Nigeria if we place this matter before the United Nations? Is that an improper intervention or interference with the rights of a sovereign nation? Are we interfering improperly if we try to bring about a cessation of the shipment of arms into Nigeria? Is this an intervention, or is it inconsistent with the exercising of sovereign rights of a country? Is it an improper interference with the sovereignty of a country, in this case Nigeria, to bring about in concert with other countries some pressure toward a negotiated settlement or understanding?

What I am suggesting is that we must not just use words like sovereignty, interference or intervention without defining meanings. I agree immediately that we should not interfere by shipping in arms, but are we and would we be endangering the whole structure of international order by taking an initiative, in co-operation with other countries, to bring about the cessation of the shipment of arms, or by taking some initiative in the United Nations to bring some pressure to bear to stop the fighting, and effect an ultimate peaceful settlement? My hon. friends opposite have suggested that this would be intervening, or could constitute an improper intervention or interference under international law. The suggestion has been made that, somehow or other, because there is a civil war, these people have a perfect right to fight it out and no one has the right to interfere. The suggestion has been made that interfering in any sense of the word is an act which might endanger the whole structure of international law and international order.

I agree that the sole test to be used by the government of Canada in respect of any particular proposal can be found in the question, will it reduce the suffering and achieve a peaceful settlement without bringing about worse consequences? When we ask ourselves whether the means employed by the government with regard to bringing aid to the suffering people, or in working toward a peaceful settlement, have been effective in either respect, I believe any honest man, regardless of his politics, has to say no, the government has not been effective in this regard. We must come to the conclusion that it has not effectively or substantially reduced suffering, and certainly has not effectively advanced measures to bring about the cessation of hostilities or the initiation of a settlement of an enduring nature.

The Prime Minister asked that these programs be judged on the basis of effectiveness.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Unfortunately we have to say that so far these measures have been ineffective. I shall not keep the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) waiting long, but I hope as soon as I sit down he will propose some effective measures to achieve either or both of these goals.

What is meant by acting wisely? What does the Prime Minister mean when he asks us to judge whether the government has acted correctly and wisely toward this problem? Does this mean prudently, from the point of view of the interests of Canada? What does it mean when we are asked to use wisdom in connection with the deaths of thousands of people each day? What is the test of wisdom under these circumstances? What is the test of wisdom when we know that thousands of people are dying today, that the fighting is continuing with no prospect of an early termination, and when we know also that arms are being shipped to both sides, and other large powers are threatening to intervene?

What is the wisdom, in those circumstances? The Prime Minister has warned the country against becoming involved in another Viet Nam. I do not think that is relevant. I lived through the 1930's. I think the Spanish civil war is much more relevant. It is by no means a complete parallel, but there you had a civil war in which the League of Nations and civilized society felt unable to intervene and bring about any sort of settlement. On the one side the fascists, and on the other side different powers, were shipping in arms. The result was a bitter, prolonged civil war that not only tore apart Spain, but also the rest of the world. I am not suggesting that the present terrible suffering in Biafra and Nigeria will develop into something comparable to Spain in the 1930's; but the fact is that the fighting is continuing, power on both sides of the dispute is becoming greater, arms are being shipped into that country, and at the moment there appears to be far more prospect of escalation than of de-escalation.

In these circumstances, what is wisdom? That is a question I direct through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who bears the very heavy responsibility of recommending the appropriate policy for the government of Canada. What has the government accomplished to date? There has been delay in acting. There appears to have been a lack of enthusiasm. I think we have to say that had the government acted earlier, more aid would have been possible. It seems to me there is no way of terminating the suffering without in some way bringing about a termination of the fighting. I have to ask this question, and I think most of us in this world must ask it of ourselves: Must we all sit back while thousands die and the world is faced with the prospect of growing bitterness and real danger as a result?

An hon. member to your right, Mr. Speaker, suggested this was a civil war; that they had a perfect right to fight it out without interference from outside. I ask: Is the civilized world faced with no alternative but to sit back, perhaps try to get some aid in there, but to refrain from taking any initiatives with regard to the cessation of the shipment of arms? Must the civilized world refrain from taking any initiative to bring the matter before the United Nations? Canada could have had the matter brought before the United Nations in the summer, without the large number of supporting countries to which the Prime Minister referred this afternoon. Is the civilized world compelled to sit back? Has it no alternative but to accept the view that any initiative of this sort is an interference with the "sovereignty" of a country and a danger to international order?

I do not accept that view. I am as anxious as the next fellow to preserve and build international order.

I think we must proceed in a regular and proper way. But I do not think this compels the world or Canada to refrain from taking proper initiatives. I do not think it is an improper interference on the part of Canada to try to bring about, in consultation with the United States, Russia, France, Great Britain and other countries, a cessation of the shipment of arms; to try to bring about, also, conditions which will lead to the fighting being stopped.

I do not think we have to accept that position. I hope it is not really the position of the government of Canada. We are talking about a country with a colonial background, created, with the best hopes and intentions in the world, under the leadership of Great Britain. Is the world compelled to sit back and watch them fight it out? On the other hand, is it not more constructive for Canada to join with other countries, through the United Nations or any legitimate means open to us, and in concert, to use the United Nations and our good offices to bring about a cessation of the shipment of arms and the real peace that must come through a settlement?

I hope nobody believes it is possible for a government to impose in any enduring way an arrangement or settlement through force upon any substantial number of people in a country. There has in the end to be a settlement of the dispute. I do not want to be unfair, but on the other hand I want to put it bluntly and frankly. I suggest in all sincerity that the government should stop looking for excuses. The Prime Minister said that Canada wanted to be, and would be, friendly with the people of Nigeria long after this dispute is ended. The way things are going now, because of what is happening in Nigeria there will be a great many people in this world with whom Canadians will find it very difficult to be friendly, at the rate people are dying in that country.

Without being maudlin about it, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the attitude of the government should be: Stop looking for excuses; stop using concepts to serve our own purposes and justify our positions. As I resume my seat I am looking forward to the Secretary of State for External Affairs making some positive suggestions or proposals whereby Canada can offer leadership to the world and take some initiative which will lead in a proper way and without any danger to the international structure of society, to the termination of this dreadful slaughter.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I would say that I concur with most of what was said by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald). I will not go into many of the details of the trip we just made to Nigeria-Biafra; my colleague the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) mentioned the different places we visited and the many things we saw.

I am rising to participate in this debate because of a great feeling of personal conviction, responsibility and concern for what is happening in Nigeria-Biafra. I have just returned from that country and have experienced a great deal of the suffering that is going on there. We all know that many people are dying. If anybody doubts this, all he has to do is go to Biafra for a few hours. I have pictures on my desk and many more in my office which illustrate the suffering in that country, and I invite anybody to see them at any time. I have pictures of Biafran children who are starving to death, not only Ibo children but those of different ethnic tribes in Nigeria-Biafra.

External Aid

I have seen much of the death, turmoil, insecurity and fear that today possesses the people in this part of Africa. When I was in Biafra and after I came back here I asked myself several questions. I did so, for example, in the midst of about 4,000 little children under the age of 10 who, as my colleague said, were standing with their little soup bowls out, looking at us with their big brown eyes and asking us to help to end this war if we possibly could. I said to myself then that the world stands idly by doing virtually nothing. I also asked myself how civilized is mankind. Does mankind only have a thin ring of civilization that encircles it, and once removed it is basically selfish? I also asked myself how international mankind is. Do we have an international spirit and an international feeling?

I hope that I am speaking basically from an international perspective tonight. I hope that I realize inside of myself that all men are basically brothers regardless of their race, the colour of their skin, their origin or their religion. I seriously believe that this is not an isolated problem but one which should concern the whole world. For example, the symptoms of the Nigerian-Biafran disease do not only exist in Nigeria and Biafra but exist around the world. These are the symptoms of discrimination, the symptoms experienced by the powerless and underprivileged people. We see this in all corners of the world. These are the problems of hunger, of starvation, the massacres and mutilations, and the fears and insecurity. But perhaps more than anything else we see the problem of helplessness all around the world. It exists right here in the urban ghettos of Canada, on many of the Indian reserves and among the smaller farmers in western Canada as well as among the working people and the young people.

As I said, the situation in Nigeria and Biafra is an international problem. It is not, as some people like to think, an African or a purely Nigerian problem. It is a problem which concerns each and every one of us. I think it is time that we as human beings and as members of the international community started to talk in international terms. It is time we started thinking that we are brothers and that we are all members of the great human race. It is time we started thinking that African problems are as relevant to us here in Canada as Canadian problems are relevant in Asia or Africa. It reminds me of the saying which goes something like this:

"Do not ask for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee." This is our problem which we all have to share together, for every problem of humanity is a problem for you and me.

The Prime Minister is talking of the new politics. I think a very important part of the new politics is the human concern and the human understanding for all peoples, regardless of their background. It is a concern to eradicate war and to find peaceful solutions for the problems that plague mankind. It is the concern to eradicate mistrust, insecurity, ignorance, poverty and disease from the face of the earth.

A few years ago U Thant said that as long as two thirds of the world's population is either starving or living in a state of deprivation or hardship we cannot have peace. I agree with this, and I think we have to promote understanding, brotherhood and progress among mankind. People are starting to talk this way because in the society in which we are living there is a feeling of concern, which also exists among members of this house, to really do something to end the suffering in Nigeria and Biafra. I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs, especially at the outset of this conflict, showed some kind of humanitarian concern; but the Prime Minister put his foot down and stopped the minister from doing anything about it.

So basically, the responsibility is on the Prime Minister of this country. It is a terrible responsibility for he must do a number of things. He must be bold and he must try some new things instead of relying on the old wishy-washy type of philosophy, sitting back in the corner debating legal technicalities and interpretations of international law.

The Prime Minister must show us some of the new politics and a new determination. He must bring Canada into the forefront in this international conflict in the search for peace and understanding. If he does not do things like this, then a few months or a year or two from now he must not ask why we have alienation and frustration in our society. He must not ask why more and more people are losing faith in the democratic process as it exists in our contemporary society because people are fed up with not getting results from governments. This will be a crucial test for the Prime Minister, for the government and indeed for our political system.

Canada can take the lead in ending this war and it must take the initiative. I think this is the greatest of all humanitarian acts that Canada can perform at this time. The need in Nigeria and Biafra, as I see it, is not merely to feed the starving people but to bring this barbaric war and conflict to an end. Regardless of the political history and contemporary circumstances that surround the Nigerian-Biafran war, and regardless of the legal technicalities and complexities of international law, people are dying by tens of thousands. The situation is of crisis proportion and has all the symptoms of worsening in the future. Today there is no communication whatsoever between the two warring parties, the Biafrans calling for a sovereign state and for separation and the Nigerians who are equally vocal in claiming a federal and single Nigeria.

One very important, and perhaps the most important, observation we made is that Canada has the trust and respect of both sides, more so than any one country in the world except perhaps Sweden, Switzerland or a country of that nature. Therefore, Canada not only has an opportunity but a moral duty to mankind, and a moral commitment to try to end this war. We cannot sit idly by twiddling our thumbs. This is not just an African problem but a tragedy of the human race. It is up to Canada to take the lead in this humanitarian course and to pressure the world to follow suit.

Thousands of people are dying of starvation every day. The lowest estimate came from one of the doctors at Queen Elizabeth hospital in Umuhia. He estimated the figure to be 3,000 a day. This is the lowest estimate. We heard estimates of up to 10,000 and more each and every day in Biafra. Even 4,000 or 5,000 dying a day would be pretty shocking. Most of the people I asked were doctors, nurses, priests and people involved in relief work. The majority of the people starving are children, although a substantial number of older people are also victims of starvation and malnutrition. Most of the starvation is the result of protein deficiency. Biafran doctors and relief workers told us that the situation has improved since the airlift of supplies has begun. They say people are now making improvements. As confirmation of this we were taken to one of a number of sick bays just outside Umuhia to see the progress of the children as a result of the relief. These children are now up and around although only a few weeks ago their feeble bodies were balancing between life and death. This visual progress of these children helps to restore in us a bit of faith in the human race, but it also proves what can be done to save thousands and thousands more lives if Canada can make a more determined effort to help in this tragedy.

The tragic part is that by the beginning of the new year the natural crops of Biafra will be depleted. These crops, banana, yam, gari, are the basic foodstuffs upon which the people have been living for the past year. They are, as well, basically carbohydrates and bulk foods. Unless something drastic is done now, tens of thousands of people literally will be dying each and every day in Biafra. As a member of the United Nations put it recently, we will have a massive famine in the real sense of the word.

As members of the human race, we have a moral commitment to assist these unfortunate people. Until day flights are commenced, we must fly at night. The churches and the Red Cross organization make flights at night. If I knew that it would help, I would volunteer to fly in every Canadian Hercules that goes into Biafra in order to save lives. This is something we have to do. Without doubt, there are massive deaths of civilians in Biafra. We saw victims of bombing raids, most of whom were children. We talked with person after person who spoke of atrocities committed against them. Every Biafran with whom I spoke told me of a relative or a close friend who had been massacred by the Nigerian people. We were shown testimonies signed by priests relating bombing of feeding stations, refugee camps and hospitals, marketplaces and innocent villagers.

We were shown a village that had been bombed a few weeks before. A Catholic priest told us of a feeding post that had been bombed. He said that 8,000 people were crowded into the centre of this place when a bomber passed over, circled back and dropped three bombs. It then strafed these people. This was not a military target. He also showed us a Catholic hospital that had been bombed. We visited a Red Cross hospital that had been bombed. The officials there were considering removing the Red Cross from the lawn, as they thought this would only be a target if it remained. As my colleague said, there have also been atrocities committed by the Biafrans. This only points up the fact that this is an extremely barbaric war and we must end it as soon as possible.

I could go on talking about the different things we saw and experienced. I could talk about the number of feeding camps we saw. One morning, for example, we visited a group of 5,000 children. This same morning we saw a camp composed of 3,500 women who were either pregnant or nursing, who came there for their iron pill and for a little bit of stock fish. My colleague mentioned this as well. I think, in the light of the suffering and death of the people of this area and the short term of relief supplies, the necessary solution must be political. This is where Canada can make a real contribution to the world on the humanitarian side.

I should like to offer a few recommendations to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). First of all, I would say that these recommendations are the result of our findings. I feel that Canada should offer herself as the mediator in a ceasefire. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), himself, could make this offer on behalf of Canada. Second, because of Britain's involvement in the war and the influence the commonwealth could have in motivating a ceasefire and settlement, Canada must make every effort to have the situation fully discussed as the first priority at the commonwealth conference in London in January. This will be especially important if nothing is done between now and January. I cannot help but emphasize the fact we have to act now because if we do not, by the beginning of January people will probably be dying by the tens of thousands.

The third recommendation I should like to make is that, even though past efforts have in a large measure been futile in moving the United Nations to act, I think we have to continue to pressure the United Nations into seeing this as an international problem which demands immediate action by the world community. Fourth, because of the anticipated shortage of carbohydrates, Canada must do all in her power to provide relief supplies for Biafra. The problem is not so much one of food or money or people, but one of transportation. I feel therefore we should lend at least two more Hercules aircraft to the people who would take these supplies into this country.

As a final recommendation, I say the government should encourage private citizens, especially medical personnel and volunteers, to help in relief work, to help alleviate the suffering in the desperate areas of Nigeria and Biafra. I do not want to take up too much of the time of the house, so I should like to conclude by saying that, as a member of the international community and the human race, I sincerely feel Canada has a moral obligation to take the initiative in solving this great human tragedy. This conflict is an international problem; it has to be an international problem. Canada cannot afford to lock it away in a closet and forget about it. If we do, then this terrible tragedy will become a scar upon the conscience of a nation that had the opportunity to act, but failed to do so. Mr. Speaker, I beg the government not to allow this to happen, but to help as much as we can immediately.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak as this debate nears an end I should like to reassure the members of the house that I do not intend to go again in detail over ground that has been covered by other speakers. May I congratulate all of those on all sides of this house who have taken part in this debate upon the very high level of the contributions they have made. If any evidence were needed of the concern of the people of Canada about this tragic war in Nigeria, that evidence is to be found in the speeches made by the representatives of the Canadian people in parliament. We have no reason to apologize, it seems to me, for spending a day talking about this tragic situation.

The civil war in Nigeria has presented both human and political problems of a high order. The humanitarian problem has been one of amassing vast quantities of food and other assistance for those in need as a result of the hostilities. A great effort, and I think this will be agreed upon on all sides, has been made by the International Red Cross and by other International and national bodies to alleviate the suffering. It is seldom that people of the world have gathered so much in a voluntary way, and amongst governments, for relief of the suffering in a country which has been torn by civil war. But more will be needed as long as the war continues. I can assure the house that Canada will continue to play an important part in this effort.

The political problem is more delicate because, as has been made clear, this is a civil war. There will have to be a readiness by all parties to compromise if a negotiated settlement is to be reached. We in Canada would of course be ready to facilitate the peace keeping if there were any indication whatever that this would help bring an end to the war. Let us be frank about this. What has been missing so far is not more mediators—there are lots of those—but an indication from both sides that they are willing to participate in meaningful negotiations. The Commonwealth Secretary General, the Organization for African Unity, both stand ready at a moment's notice to assist in the negotiating process. All they are waiting for is word from both parties that they are prepared to make the concessions necessary to get meaningful negotiations under way. As has been said by many speakers, action by outsiders in a situation such as exists in Nigeria is of no value whatever unless it is effective. As the Prime Minister himself said at the opening of this debate, unless the action is responsive to the wishes of those directly involved it can produce hostile reactions.

Canada's whole policy toward African and other newly emerging countries in recent years has been built on a spirit of co-operation rather than intervention. African history is ripe with examples of domination and intervention by peoples from other continents, and Africans are rightly sensitive about their hard won sovereignty and their right to manage their own affairs.

Canada has earned a good name in Africa. Many speakers have mentioned this. They have said that Canada has a good reputation. Why do we have a good reputation?—because we observe these principles of co-operation and non-intervention. We have been able to make a positive contribution to developments on that continent. We have been welcome in the Commonwealth countries of Africa, and we have been welcome in the Francophone countries of Africa. We have been welcome because our policy has been to assist Africans and not to tell them how to run their affairs.

Canada's policy has therefore been recognized as sympathetic and disinterested. This government does not intend to change that policy regardless of emotional appeals, however well intentioned they may be, because I believe, and so I believe do all hon. members of this house, that if we were to abandon that policy we would become unacceptable and ineffective in the vast task that remains on that continent to overcome the problems of underdevelopment and to create viable political societies on that continent.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that the government will have the support not only of a majority of the members of this house—I hope of all hon. members—but of the overwhelming majority of the people of Canada in pursuing this course.

The government's responsibilities on the international scene are different from those of private organizations. In saying this I am not criticizing non-governmental groups operating in Nigeria or in other areas. The churches and other groups have done commendable work in bringing aid to the needy, and I join with many of the members who have spoken in praising their work. I support it. I hope that everybody in this house and that all Canadians will support the work of the churches. What I am saying is that governments must act as governments. For example, the Canadian government has chosen to funnel its food and transport aid in the Nigerian situation through the international committee of the Red Cross, the traditional organization for the assembly and distribution of assistance in difficult situations of this sort.

The international committee of the Red Cross has maintained working relations with the federal Nigerian authorities and with those in charge on the rebel side. It has the necessary support staff and organization on both sides. It has proven worthy of our support and continued co-operation, and I am quite sure that hon. members who spoke would not wish to reflect in any way on the excellent work done over years and years by the International Red Cross, and which is working so effectively in Nigeria.

The standing committee has made a most commendale examination of the many complex factors involved in this difficult situation. Its report contains recommendations in nine areas, and it might be useful if I commented briefly on those recommendations. We shall of course, be giving further study to the points made, and shall be pursuing them if this is feasible or desirable as the situation develops further. An indication of our views on them, however, may be helpful at this stage.

On the observer team the committee noted that the initial invitation for the observers was for two months, and suggested the government request the Nigerians to extend the duration of this invitation. In the interval since the committee's report was presented the Nigerians have in fact extended the operation of the team for a further month. We have been able to extend our participation accordingly and would expect further discussion of this and related questions at an appropriate time with the federal military government, and with those other countries and bodies participating in the observer team.

The question of whether the observers or a similar team should make observations on the rebel side is complicated by conflicting reports from the rebel authorities. I do not know whether the house is aware of some of the criticisms that have been made by the Biafran authorities—

Mr. Fairweather: And by Colonel Adekunle.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, that is right; but let me read how the Biafran commissioner of information described the observer team. He said, "We don't recognize the observer team. They are a bunch of crooks." It is difficult, under these circumstances, for there to be any particular welcome for that group of observers in Africa. We shall, however, continue to study the feasibility of this proposal.

To the extent that the committee's second recommendation deals with continuing and future Canadian assistance—

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question on the observer team?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. If the minister wishes to permit a question he is free to do so.

Mr. Sharp: My speech is not very long. I prefer to answer questions at the end.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It is a short question with regard to whether or not any inquiries have been made—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Sharp: To the extent that the committee's second recommendation deals with continuing and future Canadian assistance to Nigeria, I can report that we are in regular contact with the World Bank and with interested governments. The World Bank currently has a team of experts in Nigeria studying economic projects and priorities, and we expect to have the benefit of the conclusions of this team when it returns. It is important to note that assessments of this kind in any country must be carried out with the concurrence of the government concerned, and I may add, Mr. Speaker, that in this respect the co-operation between Nigeria and the World Bank is proving to be very useful at this critical juncture.

In so far as the committee was referring to emergency food aid, the government has had constant advice from the international committee of the Red Cross both on the amounts needed and on the particular categories of food to be emphasized.

The question of land and sea corridors has been discussed in the committee and in this house. It is one of those items on which it has not been possible for the two sides to agree, despite the best efforts of the relief agencies. I am sure we all regret this because it is quite clear, as was pointed out by one of the speakers in the far corner who said, "I would take planes moving in at about one a minute to supply the food that will probably be needed," and what we need will probably be land corridors. I regret, as I am sure do all hon. members, the fact that it has not been possible to work this out. I hope it still will be possible. Most of all I hope that the war will be over.

The committee's proposal for international machinery to aid innocent civilian victims of hostilities is one I supported at the United Nations. The house may recall, and the members who were observers at the United Nations General Assembly will remember that I made specific recommendations along these lines. These are now being discussed with other governments, and I hope will result in some positive action.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The committee's third recommendation relates to the continuation of our emergency aid to the victims of the hostilities. The government has intensified its efforts to be of assistance in the humanitarian sphere. I wish to announce, Mr. Speaker, that we have made a further allocation of food aid to Nigerian-Biafra in the amount of $1,600,000. A shipment will be made early in the new year.

Mr. Lewis: To both sides?

Mr. Sharp: This aid will be distributed, as the other food aid was, to both sides. When we made our shipment on the vessel that left some time ago—and the vessel arrived recently—it was decided that the food was to go to various bases so that it could be moved either into the rebel areas or into the areas controlled by the Nigerian government. The planning we have undertaken has followed consultations with the Red Cross and other contributors in order that the delivery of our supplies could fit in with their plans.

As to the airlift into rebel territories, it is obvious that daylight operations would permit the delivery of much larger quantities of relief. The Prime Minister therefore appealed to the rebel authorities to agree to daylight flights. I earnestly hope that Colonel Ojukwu will give his consent without further delay. It is tragic that food should be waiting to be moved in to feed hungry children, and is being held up because the necessary authority has not been granted for the movement. As to relief operations on the federal side, Canadian Caribou aircraft have been offered through the Canadian Red Cross society, and we await confirmation from the Nigerian Red Cross that they can be put to effective use.

In all these efforts we have worked closely with and relied heavily on the International Red Cross and the Canadian Red Cross society. We are grateful for their help and advice.

The committee proposed that we should offer, in concert with other interested governments, to provide non-military assistance in building a civil airstrip for the exclusive use of relief flights. This is a useful proposal which will be explored, along with others, in preparing further development of our aid program to Nigeria. For the immediate future we have considered it better to use the facilities already existing and, for example, just recently we offered the lighter Caribou aircraft for use in federal held territory, since the Hercules is too heavy for the forward airfields.

An hon. Member: Do you really believe that?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, I believe it, and I have evidence to justify that belief.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): That is nonsense.

Mr. Sharp: If we had any evidence to show that Hercules aircraft could be landed more than once or twice on any of these airstrips, they would be flying there.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): What about an airdrop?

Mr. Sharp: An air drop is a different question. I am talking of using Hercules aircraft on airstrips. The hon. gentleman said that my contention was nonsense. He ought to know that he is speaking nonsense.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Not at all.

Mr. Sharp: The evidence we have is that if Hercules aircraft could land more than two or three times on those airstrips, they would be flying to them today. They have been offered for that purpose. There is no other reason for them not to be available.

Mr. Fairweather: Why do they not land two or three times, then?

Mr. Sharp: Because they will destroy the airstrips.

The Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, appealed to the house to debate this matter seriously. I am trying to put the facts before the house in a serious manner. It has been said on a number of occasions that the Canadian government would like to have the Hercules aircraft fly into Nigerian territory and into Biafran territory. They are not flying to Biafran territory because we cannot obtain agreement from the rebels, and they are not flying into Nigeria because there are no airstrips suitable for that size of aircraft.

I hope Colonel Ojukwu is listening when the Prime Minister of the country makes an appeal. I hope he responds quickly so that we may help to feed these people that my hon. friends are speaking about so frequently.

Mr. Lewis: Why don't you send aid?

Mr. Sharp: I am quite sure that Colonel Ojukwu and his government know exactly what the Prime Minister of Canada has said so eloquently in this house.

An hon. Member: How could he know that?

Mr. Trudeau: By listening to the opposition, obviously.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to continue his speech.

Mr. Sharp: The government heartily endorses the committee's appeal to all Canadians to support the relief effort with their contributions. With the new allocation I have mentioned the government's contributions to relief and transport activities now come close to $3 million.

The committee's sixth recommendation deals with assistance to children from stricken areas. The Canadian Hercules aircraft stationed on the island of Fernando Po has been authorized to transport refugees to other neighbouring countries which are ready to welcome them. These people have been brought out from the rebel area by the Red Cross in order that they can be given better care. The government has been happy to assist the International Red Cross in moving them to other countries. As to bringing children from the rebel area to Canada, the government does not think it wise to press this idea in the face of the adverse views of those directly concerned.

The government accepts the committee's view that Canada should not sell arms to either side in this conflict. Indeed, as hon. members know, that has been the government's policy throughout.

In its eighth recommendation the committee urged the government to intensify its efforts to persuade the parties to accept mediation. The caution attached by the committee to this point is sound: that we should not operate in such a way as to jeopardize the effectiveness of our relief efforts. There are, as we have said, limitations on the government's action on this essentially political question; but I can assure the house that within these limits we shall work strenuously for a peaceful settlement of this dispute.

An hon. Member: Words, words.

Mr. Sharp: On the proposal that Canada should contribute to an eventual peacekeeping force in Nigeria, I think it is premature to offer comment before a settlement or ceasefire has been achieved or before the terms of any peacekeeping operation are known. I may add this, however: As is well known, Canada has always taken a positive look at peacekeeping proposals, and I can assure the house that any proposals in respect of the Nigerian situation will be given prompt and careful consideration by the government.

An amendment has been proposed to the committee's report, Mr. Speaker, which would oblige the government to take this question to the United Nations, to the General Assembly or to the Third Committee. As the Prime Minister explained this afternoon, and as has been made clear before, following intensive study of the matter we have come to the conclusion that this is neither a practical nor a useful initiative. Any proposal to have the matter discussed at the United Nations would not gain more than minimal support. For that reason alone an initiative would not be effective and would have no helpful influence on the situation. Moreover, if we were to press on regardless of the lack of support, Canada's position in the world body would be affected and the possibility of our taking useful steps on this or other matters would be seriously reduced.

In opening this debate this afternoon the Prime Minister spoke these words, with which I concur entirely:

> —I remain convinced that an attempt to inscribe the Nigerian conflict on the agenda of the General Assembly would not only be bitterly resented by the Nigerian government and the member states of the Organization of African Unity, but would also be totally unsuccessful—

He also said:

> Should we attempt to employ a General Assembly committee for such a discussion, conceding for the moment that we could do so, which is not entirely clear, our efforts would prove not only divisive but totally counter-productive.

I am asking, in the face of these statements, do hon. members think we should persist when the consequences of our actions would be those put forward today by the Prime Minister?

An hon. Member: You must prove that.

Mr. Sharp: The Prime Minister said that we would incur the hostility and opposition of African states, and that would jeopardize our policy of dealing with the situation effectively. We would probably be told that we were not welcome in providing relief assistance in Nigeria, and our observer would probably be told to go home. Is that what hon. members opposite want? Presumably it is, if they persist in making these statements.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Sharp: And now may I comment on the suggestion that we should intervene to press Britain, the U.S.S.R. and others to cease their sales of arms to the participants in this war? I am sure this house would be gratified if all the countries currently supplying arms to the two sides would cease to do so, and if I thought that action by Canada would accomplish this, I would not hesitate to propose it. This is, however, a matter of policy for each government to establish for itself. It is well known that the French government has denied it provides arms to the rebels. Moreover I ask the members of the house this question: Would the situation be improved if external pressure caused the British government to cease all its arms supplies to Nigeria, leaving the field open to the U.S.S.R. to become its principal source?

I should like to refer again to the hope, widely felt by the Canadian people, that this civil war can be brought to an end. I said earlier that the achievement of a peaceful negotiated settlement does not depend on the provision of facilities or the making of proposals by outsiders. Canada stands ready to be of assistance if that would be helpful; and I hope that the responsible course we have followed enhances the possibility of our playing a useful role. Whether any progress can be made toward peace depends, however, on the parties to the dispute. In particular, in my view, it depends on the Nigerian government providing sufficiently convincing guarantees to the Ibos of their security after the conclusion of hostilities, and on the willingness of the rebels to envisage a negotiated settlement short of complete independence from Nigeria. To advocate a negotiated settlement and secession is a contradiction in terms. I would therefore urge those Canadians who have influence with the rebel side—

An hon. Member: Who are they?

Mr. Trudeau: The churches.

Mr. Sharp: —both in this house and outside, to press them toward conciliation, and thus toward a peaceful settlement. And I call on the parties to this tragic civil war to show their willingness to negotiate positively, in order that with the assistance of the O.A.U. or the Commonwealth Secretariat, a peaceful settlement can be achieved.

In conclusion may I restate the basic principles which have guided the Canadian government's policy in this matter and which will continue to guide that policy:

1. The government will continue to provide assistance generously to meet the needs of the people of Nigeria as a whole;

2. We will maintain close liaison with the legitimate government of Nigeria in order to provide relief to the population under its control;

3. We will continue to urge the secessionist authorities to co-operate in arrangements acceptable to the Nigerian government for the relief of the population under rebel control;

4. The government will be ready, when this tragic conflict is over, to co-operate with the Nigerian government in the important tasks of reconstruction and rehabilitation it will face;

5. We will work toward a better international legal framework within which humanitarian assistance can be provided to people affected by civil conflict;

6. The government will not violate international law by supporting or endorsing any move, bilateral or multilateral, which will constitute intervention in Nigerian internal affairs;

7. We will continue to call upon both sides in the conflict to negotiate their differences;

8. The government will vigorously support any conciliation effort which may develop under the auspices of the O.A.U., the Commonwealth Secretariat or any other body acceptable to the parties;

9. We will stand ready to assist, if so desired by both parties, in promoting a negotiated settlement.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister indicated he would answer questions when he had finished. I wonder whether he would indicate what he meant when he said this government would establish a better international framework to deal with civil conflicts, and whether he would indicate when he proposes to start on this, if not tomorrow?

Mr. Sharp: This has already been started. The words I used were: "We will work toward a better international legal framework within which humanitarian assistance can be provided to peoples affected by civil conflict." That is what we are doing in the United Nations today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In connection with the minister's remarks about the observer team, I was wondering whether the suggestion had been explored that the team should be expanded, as Nigeria has requested, and that it should use its own vehicles, with the possibility of seeing all the areas presently involved in the conflict. The minister did not say whether inquiries had been made in this direction.

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member may recall that when the team itself suggested that its operations should be expanded I supported that idea in a cable to the authorities in Lagos.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Would the minister answer the other part of the question with regard to the vehicles and the expansion of the team?

Mr. Sharp: We made it clear we would be prepared to help in that respect.

Mr. Brewin: Has the minister made inquiries into the question of whether the airport at Calabar, in eastern Nigeria, a region presently occupied by the federal forces, is not perfectly capable of accepting Hercules aircraft on frequent and repeated flights? It is one of the major international airports there.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Before I came to the house today I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) if he would give me an account of the position there, and I shall read the relevant sentence:

Beginning 17 October, the Canadian reconnaissance team was permitted a survey of Calabar and Enugu airfields in Nigeria. Calabar was found to be acceptable by the Canadian team for limited Hercules operations. However, sustained operations would have seriously damaged the runway which was not acceptable to the FMG.

Mr. Speaker: I see that the acting leader of the New Democratic party is seeking the floor in competition with the hon. member from Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson). I have to take into account the number of speakers from the different parties who have taken part in the debate, and in view of this I am inclined to recognize the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, Canada should in my view continue its policy of non-political intervention so lucidly and forcibly expressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during the debate earlier today and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), whom we are all glad to see back in the house after his strenuous and successful travels around the world in the interest of world peace.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, may I also tell you, in the beautiful French language, one of the two I know—not the second, for they are equal in all respects—that Canadian diplomacy, for all Canada, is that of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who really understands the role our country plays in the world today.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the facts now indicate, in my opinion, that the Nigerian-Biafran issue is a politically contrived issue calculated to be used for the propaganda purposes of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gibson: Because the opposition has been totally lacking any substantive issue on which to badger the government, it has picked this issue involving a country many thousand miles away from Canada through which to voice their pent-up frustrations. It is quite clear that the learned Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has clearly faced these issues.

As a young member of this party I attended recently at the United Nations as a delegate. It was with some concern that I noticed, when talking about matters with Nigerians, that in their conversation they exhibited some wonderment and dismay. Fortunately the delegation from Canada included representatives from all parties in the house and we were able to convince the Nigerian representatives that the adverse impressions they had gained originated in a splinter group in the House of Commons represented by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

Since the hon. member for Greenwood is a lawyer it is shocking to me that he would abandon all legal principles of international law. It is interesting to see how he can scrap these hard won principles when grasping for alleged political patronage. He has lost the feeling of the nation, and somehow has become the spokesman for some minority group in Africa, an unauthorized country, a country without sanction.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Greenwood on a question of privilege.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member just suggested that I represent some minority in Africa. I should like to remind him that I am trying my best to do something for nine million starving people in Africa.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being 9.45 o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to special order made on Wednesday, November 6, 1968, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on the amendment now before the house.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Fairweather) which was negatived on the following division:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 27, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SALARIES IN PUBLIC SERVICE, ARMED FORCES, ETC.

Question No. 43—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

As of August 31, 1968, how many persons in the employ of (a) the Public Service of Canada (b) the Armed Services (c) Crown corporations or agencies, were being paid salary or pay and allowances, or emoluments in the following categories (i) $18,000-$20,000 per annum (ii) $20,000-$25,000 per annum (iii) $25,000-$35,000 per annum (iv) $35,000 and up per annum?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): (a) (i) 915; (ii) 770; (iii) 178; (iv) 39*.

* It is to be noted that almost all these persons are in the Department of External Affairs where the maximum salary for a person stationed abroad is $25,980, but where allowances are paid under the heads of post and foreign service regulations for official hospitality, higher living costs, etc. The same consideration applies, but to a smaller extent, to category (a) (iii) above.

(b) (i) 144; (ii) 117; (iii) 10; (iv) nil. (c) (i) 314; (ii) 241; (ii) 43; (iv) 4.

Air Canada, the Bank of Canada, the Canadian National Railways, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, the Industrial Development Bank, and Polymer Corporation advise that it has not been considered in the best interests of their respective corporations to disclose data on employees' earnings other than what is available through the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

RENTAL SPACE IN OTTAWA FOR TRADE AND COMMERCE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 323—Mr. Coates:

1. Has the Department of Trade and Commerce rented or leased space in Tower "B" of the Place de Ville, Ottawa, and, if so, from whom, for what term and at what rate?

2. On what date was the Trade and Commerce Building completed, on what date did the Department move into this building and why is it necessary to secure additional space?

3. What was the total employment of the Department of Trade and Commerce when the new Trade and Commerce Building was opened and what is the present staff of the Department?

4. What is the dollar value, per annum, of the lease for the additional space in Tower "B" of the Place de Ville?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works and Trade and Commerce as follows: 1. The Department of Public Works has rented 41,619 square feet of office space and 285 square feet of basement space in tower "B" of Place de Ville, Ottawa, for the Department of Trade and Commerce from Campeau Construction Company, 2932 Baseline Road, Ottawa, for a period of ten years commencing September 12, 1967 at the rate of approximately $4.82 and $2.00 per square foot per annum for office space and basement space respectively.

2. The trade and commerce building was completed in September 1958 and the staff of the Department of Trade and Commerce moved into the building in September 1958. It was necessary to secure this additional space to accommodate the expansion of that Department.

3. Total strength was 4242, however, a major portion of this total was not housed in the trade and commerce building. Present strength is 1877.

4. The value of the space leased for trade and commerce in tower "B" is $201,141.43.

COMMUNICATIONS TO U.S. RESPECTING DRAFT DODGERS

Question No. 328—Mr. Roberts:

1. Have Canadian authorities received notices from United States officials concerning United States draft dodgers or deserters, and also requesting Canada to inform American officials of attempts by such United States citizens to enter Canada?

2. For what period of time has this practice been followed?

3. Has the Minister of Manpower and Immigration instructed his officials not to circulate such notices?

Questions

4. If so, what was the date and content of these instructions?

5. If not, does the Minister intend to issue such instructions within the near future?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. There is no arrangement in effect whereby Canadian authorities receive notices from United States officials asking to be informed of attempts to enter Canada by American draft dodgers or military deserters. Occasionally immigration officers at border ports of entry receive advance information regarding individuals who will be seeking entry to Canada. This information can be with respect to any prospective immigrant and is not specifically with regard either to draft dodgers or deserters. These persons are examined as to their admissibility under the Canadian Immigration Act. If admitted, no further action is taken. If ordered deported, the United States authorities are informed as they are in all cases of deportations to that country.

2. Incidents in which immigration officers have received such advance information have occurred as long as there have been border examination facilities.

3. No.

4. Not applicable.

5. No.

COST OF PERFORMING ARTS CENTRE

Question No. 379—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. What was the original estimate for the construction of the National Centre for the Performing Arts?

2. What is the present estimate for completion?

3. What is the breakdown of any increase over the original estimate?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. $18,223,000.

2. $46,425,989.

3. Breakdown of increase:

Building and associated work including parking garage and stage equipment	23,898,639
Consultants' fees	2,241,750
Visual arts program	113,600
Relocation of municipal services	400,000
Furnishings, cafe and restaurant equipment and miscellaneous equipment	1,549,000
Total	28,202,989

TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION OFFICES

Question No. 394—Mr. Coates:

1. Did the Canadian Transportation Commission move into new quarters or are they moving into new quarters and, if so, when?

2. What building is the Commission moving into, who is the owner, what is the amount of the space under lease, for what period of time and at what annual cost?

3. Are new furnishings to be provided for these offices and, if so, what will be the cost of furnishing these offices?

4. Will the renovation of these offices be the responsibility of the owner or the Commission and if the Commission, what will be the cost of these renovations?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canadian Transport Commission and the Department of Public Works as follows:

1. The Canadian Transport Commission moved into new quarters in two stages, October 1968 and November 1968.

2. The building involved is located at 275 Slater Street, Ottawa, and is owned by Two Seven Five Realty Limited, 141 Laurier Avenue West, Ottawa. The commission occupies a portion of the total space of approximately 187,264 square feet being leased in this building by the Department of Public Works for a period of ten years at the annual rental of $898,868.

3. Yes; $43,675, of which $25,057 was for carpeting which could not be moved from buildings previously occupied.

4. The building is new so no renovation was needed. The purpose of moving to this building was to get all branches of the commission, originally housed in four different buildings, under one roof.

ILLEGAL GREEK IMMIGRANTS

Question No. 411—Mr. McCleave:

1. How many Greek nationals entered Canada illegally in 1967 and 1968 and, how many were (a) deported (b) allowed to remain?

2. Did any of the above seek refuge in Canada on political grounds and, if so, how many requests were (a) granted (b) refused?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Except in the case of seamen who are reported to the department as having deserted their vessels in Canadian ports, there is of course no way of knowing how many people may enter the country illegally in any given year until such time as they may be apprehended or otherwise come to the attention of the department.

1. During 1967 and to date in 1968, 611 nationals of Greece are known to have deserted their vessels in Canada. Of this number, 273 were either apprehended or surrendered themselves voluntarily. Of these 273 persons, (a) 229 were deported and (b) 14 were allowed to remain. The remaining 30 were not ordered deported but left Canada voluntarily on their own initiative.

2. No figures are available.

PUBLIC RELATIONS FIRMS, EXPO '67

Question No. 478—Mr. Mazankowski:

Who were the public relations firms that shared in the $26,755,000 expended on public relations, by Expo '67, and (a) how much did each firm receive (b) in what years?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition reports that: It is to be noted that the amount of $26,755,000 refers to the cost of the whole public relations department and this amount was not expended on public relations only by the Expo Corporation. Out of this $26,755,000 budgeted for the public relations department, $2,410,000 was budgeted for public relations in Canada, the U.S.A. and overseas countries. The balance of approximately $24,345,000 covered domestic advertising, foreign advertising, promotions (posters, calendars, films etc.), displays, news media, information and administration cost of the department.

Of the $2,410,000 budgeted, a total of $2,099,422 was shared by the following public relations firms: Sydney Morel & Co. (U.S.A.), Robert Wolcott (U.S.A.), Eurelex (Europe), Mathers P.R. Ltd. (U.K.), Bruce Cochrane Assoc. (Maritimes) and Williams & Wilson (Western Canada).

The above mentioned firms received the following amounts for 1964, 1965, 1966 and 1967: (a) and (b)

Firm	1964 $	1965 $	1966 $	1967 $	Total $
Sydney Morel & Co.	105,562	210,054	119,221	—	431,837

IMMIGRATION APPLICATIONS FROM INDIA

Question No. 519—Mr. Rose:

Is there a backlog of applications for immigration to Canada from India and, if so, (a) was it created by limitations imposed in the Canada-India Agreement before October 1, 1967 (b) was it created by the substantially increased numbers of relatives acting as sponsors or nominators (c) has the government considered expanding the facilities of our New Delhi Immigration Office?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): There is a backlog of immigrant applications in the Canadian immigration office in New Delhi, India, all of which are in varying stages of process. The limitations of the Canada-India agreement and the number of new applications being received for sponsored dependants and nominated relatives are not the prime reasons for this situation. Such applications represent only about one quarter of the present backlog. The remainder is comprised of independent applications which are being received at the rate of between four to five thousand per month. In the past two years, the total Canadian and local staff in New Delhi has more than doubled. The situation there is under review to determine what further measures can be taken to improve the service to applicants.

CIVIL SERVANTS IN ENGLISH LANGUAGE COURSES

Question No. 548—Mr. Isabelle:

1. How many individuals in the federal Civil Service have received courses that would assist them in securing a working knowledge of the English language and of that number, how many are presently enrolled in such courses?

Questions

2. Of the number presently enrolled in English language courses (a) how many receive the courses while continuing with their employment (b) how many are receiving the courses while on leave of absence (c) how many on leave of absence have been granted leave for more than a period of one month?

3. Of the number enrolled in English language courses while continuing with their employment (a) how many are granted free time to take such courses (b) at the present time and for the present fiscal year, what is the number of man-hours lost to the federal Civil Service?

4. Of the number enrolled in English language courses who have obtained a leave of absence while taking the courses (a) how many are receiving their salary while taking these courses (b) what will be the estimated cost to the federal Treasury in the present fiscal year?

5. Of the number enrolled in English language courses who have obtained a leave of absence from their employment (a) how many have moved from Ottawa for such purposes (b) how many have also moved their families (c) was assistance given to those who moved their families by the federal government and, if so, what will be the total cost to the federal Treasury in the present fiscal year?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission: 1. (a) Since January 1, 1964, 2,550 public servants have attended English language courses in programs offered by the Public Service Commission. (b) On September 23, 1968, 260 public servants were attending English language courses conducted by the Public Service Commission.

2. Of the number enrolled as in 1(b) above: (a) all receive courses while continuing with their employment; (b) none were on leave of absence; (c) not applicable.

3. Of the number enrolled as in 1(b) above: all are granted time to take such courses. In addition to this time granted, many students are devoting up to 20 hours per week of their own time.

In the view of the commission, the training time spent by public servants is a gain rather than a loss to the Public Service of Canada. The time devoted to training by the 260 public servants now attending English language courses is 2,070 man-hours per day, of which 675 hours will be on their own time. Students will attend classes for periods of 13 to 35 days depending on the level of instruction and the needs of the individuals; thus the total man-hours that will be devoted by these public servants to English language training during the present fiscal year will not be known until the close of the year.

4. See 2(b) above.

5. See 2(b) above.

Note: The hon. member in posing questions 4 and 5 may have had in mind the public service bicultural development program to which I referred in answering question 244 some days ago. The total salaries of ten officials attending at Toronto and York universities in the English language will be approximately $129,500 for the period of their secondment in the current fiscal year. Three officials moved to Toronto from Ottawa and seven moved from other centres. All officials moved their families to Toronto with assistance given by the federal government which it is estimated will cost about $6,000 in the present fiscal year. Exact cost figures cannot be given until the end of the fiscal year.

COST OF PRODUCING "CANADA: A YEAR OF THE LAND"

Question No. 563—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. What was the price paid by the Queen's Printer to the Carswell Printing Co., for the printing and binding of "Canada: A Year of the Land"; to the Graphic Litho-Plate Ltd. for offset separations; to Rolland Paper Co. Ltd. and Columbia Finishing Mills Ltd. for paper; to Hostmann-Steinberg (Canada) Ltd. for special inks; and to Cooper and Beatty Ltd. for typography of this publication?

2. What was the actual cost of production of "Canada: A Year of the Land"?

3. What was the total revenue to the government from the sale of "Canada: A Year of the Land"?

4. How many copies of "Canada: A Year of the Land" were distributed free of charge by the Secretary of State?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Public Printing and Stationery and the Department of the Secretary of State as follows: 1. To the Carswell Printing Company: $433,478.15. The Carswell Printing Company was the only firm under contract with the Queen's Printer for the printing and binding of "Canada: A Year of the Land"; other firms listed were subcontracted by Carswell Printing Company to supply components of the work, the cost of which was included in the prime contractor's quotation.

2. $433,478.15.

3. $425,000.00.

4. 484.

WATERFRONT PLAN, METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Question No. 564—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the federal government have a plan for dumping fill along the shoreline of Metropolitan Toronto?

2. Has the so-called "Waterfront Plan" for Metropolitan Toronto been considered by the federal authorities and, if so, has approval been given?

3. Does the federal government propose to make recommendations concerning the implementation of this conceptual "Waterfront Plan" for Metropolitan Toronto and, if so, when?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. No.

2. The harbour and airport aspects of the "waterfront plan" have received careful consideration and I expect shortly to be communicating preliminary views on these matters to the appropriate local authorities.

3. These views will deal primarily with those matters which relate to direct federal responsibilities, namely marine and aviation aspects; other aspects are primarily matters for the governments of the province and municipalities concerned, although the federal authorities will be glad to consult and co-operate with regard to their own particular interest in the over-all scheme.

PARK SITES, METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Question No. 565—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the federal government own any land in the Metropolitan Toronto area suitable for park sites?

2. Does the federal government plan on providing any federal land for park sites through fill operations in Lake Ontario and/or through the proposed "Waterfront Plan" for Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1 and 2. No, but as indicated in the answer to the previous question No. 564, the federal government is prepared to consult and co-operate with regard to the over-all scheme in reference to those matters which are of particular federal interest.

COST OF NATIONAL ART CENTRE

Question No. 579—Mr. Diefenbaker:

What is the total cost to date insofar as the Department of Public Works is concerned of the National Art Centre?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Total payment to November 20, 1968, is $40,275,168.

PUBLIC RELATIONS AGENCIES, NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

Question No. 580—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What public relations agencies, persons or companies have been hired, retained or contracted with by the Board of Directors of the National Arts Centre and/or by the Centennial Commission since the 1st of January 1965?

2. What are the names thereof, their respective addresses and amounts paid or undertaken to be paid to each of them?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Arts Centre Corporation as follows: 1. The board of directors of the National Arts Centre, who met for their first meeting in March, 1967, have contracted for the services of Mr. David Palmer for public relations activities.

The Centennial Commission did not employ or retain any public relations persons or companies, for or on behalf of the National Arts Centre since January 1, 1965, or prior to that date.

2. Mr. David Palmer has been paid the amount of $400 and his address is: National Theatre of Great Britain, The Archway, 10a Aquinas Street, London, England.

TECHNICAL CONSULTANTS, NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

Question No. 581—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Have "advisors" or technical consultants been appointed or hired under contract in connection with the National Arts Centre since the 1st of January 1965?

2. If so, what are the names and addresses with the amounts paid to each of them for (a) salary, and (b) allowances?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes.

2. Consultants paid directly by Department of Public Works: McRostie, Seto, Genest & Associates, Consulting Engineers, 393 Bell Street, Ottawa, Ontario. Amount paid $34,840.24—Fee only. Charles W. *STUDY OF AIRPORT EXPANSION, TORONTO

Question No. 616—Mr. Nesbitt:

1. What studies is the Department of Transport currently undertaking with regard to expanding the airport facilities in the Metropolitan Toronto area?

2. Is the Department studying the possibility of constructing a second airport in the Toronto area, as an alternative to expanding the existing airport?

3. Has the Minister of Transport authorized a study into the possibility of building a second airport in the Toronto area, specifically on Lake Ontario?

4. If the answer to Part 3 is yes, how does the Department intend to estimate the cost of making the required land fill, necessary to the construction of such an airport?

5. Is the Department giving study to the feasibility of building floating runways for such an airport?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The answer to the first part of the question is that the Department of Transport has completed a study in depth with respect to the expansion of Toronto international airport. This study involved a consortium of recognized consultants as well as officials of the Department of Transport. At present senior officials of the Department of Transport are conducting a series of technical meetings with technical representatives of the municipalities adjacent to Toronto international airport, with the object of determining the compatibility of the Department of Transport proposals with these communities.

The answer to the second part of the question is that a variety of possible alternatives have been considered as means of meeting the future requirements of the area for increased air traffic, ranging from expansion of the present airport to construction or expansion of other airports, either as a supplement to or as a replacement for the present airport. No final decision has been taken.

The answers to parts 3, 4 and 5 of the question are as follows. A preliminary engineering and economic assessment indicated that this approach was not feasible at the present time as a means of satisfying the requirements of the Toronto area for expanded facilities for scheduled traffic, and more detailed investigation has not, therefore, been undertaken. However, the question of a general aviation airport of a type similar to the present Toronto island airfield to replace that field in the lakefront area is still under consideration.

*MOVE OF AIR CANADA OFFICES TO WINNIPEG

Question No. 623—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Is Air Canada moving its administration offices in the City of Winnipeg and, if so (a) what is the name of the building to which the offices are to be moved (b) who is the owner of the building (c) how many square feet will be leased (d) how many floors will be leased (e) what is the annual rental per square foot of space leased (f) when will possession of the new premises be taken?

2. When does the term of the lease covering Air Canada's present premises in Winnipeg expire?

3. How many square feet of space comprise Air Canada's present office premises?

4. What is the annual rental per square foot of Air Canada's present office space in Winnipeg?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows, Mr. Speaker: 1. Yes. Two years ago the company decided to consolidate all of its administrative requirements in one building and made an extensive examination of existing and planned buildings in the Winnipeg area. (a) Richardson building; (b) Lombard Place Limited; (c) 88,088 square feet of office space; 10,000 feet of storage space; (d) 5½ floors; (e) It has not been the company's practice to disclose details of such transactions as such disclosure could prejudiciously affect the company in future transactions. The company made an examination of its requirements in Winnipeg and the going market rate for office and storage space suitable to its present and future needs, and opened discussions with the building owners in 1966 and concluded negotiations in September, 1967 which lease with the building owners was approved by the board of directors of Air Canada at its meeting of October 31, 1967. (f) Estimated August 1, 1969.

2. "Air Canada" building and Donnell building—December 31, 1974; Canadian Wheat Board building—December 31, 1969. The first two leases were assigned to Lombard Place Limited; occupancy of the latter building will be continued until the end of the lease.

3. 63,036 square feet of office space; 6,005 square feet of storage space.

4. See answer to No. 1(e).

REPORT ON ALLEGATIONS BY ARTHUR DAVID PRICE

Question No. 627—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What were the findings and recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry that was established to look into allegations by Mr. Arthur David Price?

2. What steps, if any, have been taken to implement the recommendations?

3. Does the Minister intend to release the report to the public and, if so, on what date?

4. If the report is not to be released, for what reason?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. In January, 1967, Mr. Arthur David Price, who had been appointed to Collège Militaire Royal, St. Jean, for a one year term in 1965 and whose appointment had been renewed for a further term ending on May 1, 1967, was given notice that his contract would not be renewed for a further term. It was explained to him that this action was being taken as he did not have a Ph.D. degree and was not working fast enough toward one.

Maxwell Cohen, Q.C., dean of law at McGill University, in his report as commissioner under the Inquiries Act, found that the reason given was not the main reason for the decision not to renew Mr. Price's contract although probably one of the motivating factors. The main reason for the decision was a feeling of discomfort among the college authorities arising from rumours and gossip concerning Mr. Price. Dean Cohen went on to find that, while a degree of maturity and good sense in handling the matters was lacking by college authorities, they had not acted in bad faith and that their decision was based on desire to safeguard the reputation of the college. Within the limits of the facts presented before him as commissioner, Dean Cohen found nothing in the rumours concerning Mr. Price deserving of belief.

In his general conclusions, Dean Cohen stated that the interests of justice would be served if the government compensated Mr. Price for the expenses borne by him arising out of the proceedings and for the effects which the failure not to renew his contract had upon his subsequent employment opportunities. He also suggested that there is probably room for fresh constructive thinking on how to maintain the essential military character and needs of the military colleges as military institutions while at the same time giving academic communities there a status and an environment essentially analogous to ordinary university conditions.

2. The matter of appropriate compensation for Mr. Price is in the final stages of negotiation with his solicitor. The suggestions of the commission regarding the operation and administration of the college are being carefully reviewed by a senior committee established to advise the deputy minister on matters affecting the administration of the military colleges.

3 and 4. Having regard to the interests of the persons involved, it is not proposed to release the report generally to the public.

CELERY IMPORTS AND PRODUCTION

Question No. 634—Mr. Fortin:

1. How much celery did Canada import in each of the last five years?

2. What were the customs tariffs with respect to celery for each of the last five years?

3. Has the government received representations advocating an increase in the tariff to protect Canadian celery producers and, if so, what was the government's reaction?

4. How much celery was grown in Canada during the last five years?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Finance and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics as follows:

Year	Quantity lbs.
1963	104,843,411
1964	105,877,091
1965	106,508,798
1966	104,987,633
1967	122,399,543

[Mr. Cadieux (Labelle).]

2. Fresh celery is classified under tariff item 8709-1. Celery imported under the most favoured nation tariff is subject to a seasonal duty of 2 cents per pound for a period of up to 24 weeks annually and for the balance of the year comes in free of duty. Celery imported under the British preferential tariff is free of duty. These rates have been in effect since 1959.

3. No. However, representations were received in 1965 in connection with the Kennedy round negotiations requesting that the tariff on celery not be reduced. The tariff on celery was not reduced in the Kennedy round.

Year	'000 lbs.
1964	40,504
1965	42,832
1966	38,790
1967	36,618

CHANGE OF POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT INTO CORPORATION

Question No. 637—Mr. Fortin:

1. Is the possibility of transforming the Post Office Department into a Canadian postal corporation being investigated and, if so (a) who are the members of the investigating group (b) when was each appointed?

2. What, precisely, are the terms of reference of this investigating group?

3. When will its report be ready and will such report be tabled in the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): 1. Yes. (a) and (b) The management consulting firm of Kates, Peat, Marwick and Company was assigned to the initial phase of this study on September 23, 1968. Mr. W. H. Wilson was designated as Special Advisor to the Postmaster General on October 3 to co-ordinate this study. He will be assisted by management consultants and senior Departmental officials.

2. To study and submit a detailed report on: (1) Current problems in the Post Office Department. (2) All the factors involved in the feasibility of establishing the Post Office as a Crown Corporation.

3. Completion date is not known at this time. The question of tabling the report will be considered by the government.

*COST OF AID TO NIGERIA

Question No. 643—Mr. Cafik:

1. What cash contributions have been made by the government to relief operations in Nigeria up to and including October 31, 1968?

2. To whom were such contributions made?

3. What are the estimated costs for operations of Canadian Armed Forces aircraft and personnel on Nigerian relief operations up to and including October 31, 1968?

4. What are the estimated costs per day for operations of Canadian Armed Forces aircraft and personnel on Nigerian relief operations?

5. What are the estimated costs of the return of the Hercules Aircraft to Canada following completion of relief operations?

6. Did the Canadian Government pay for the shipping cost of the relief ship that left from Halifax for Nigeria and, if so, what is the estimated cost to the Canadian Government?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed, Mr. Speaker, by the Departments of External Affairs and National Defence as follows: 1 and 2. Canada gave the International Committee of the Red Cross a cash grant of $60,000 through the Canadian Red Cross Society on June 5, 1968 for ICRC use in areas of Nigeria where the need was greatest.

3. $201,000.

4. Based on flying two relief missions per day—$8,500.

5. $67,400.

6. The Canadian government paid an estimated $149,000 for the charter of the relief ship which left Halifax October 22 for the Nigeria area but of this sum an estimated $31,375 is recoverable from the voluntary agencies who joined their contributions with those of the government in this shipment.

IMPORTS OF FRENCH CATTLE

Question No. 649—Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski):

1. By province, during the summer of 1968, how many import permits were issued for French cattle (Charolais and Limousin)?

2. What is the name of the holder of each such permit issued?

3. What is the number of cattle specified per permit?

4. Did any permit holder sell or transfer his permit and, if so (a) which permit holders and to whom were they sold or transferred (b) what action has been taken in each case?

Questions

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture):
1. The following number of permits were issued in the summer of 1968 to import cattle from certain European countries:

Province	Permits
Nova Scotia	2
New Brunswick	1
Quebec	7
Ontario	29
Manitoba	10
Saskatchewan	30
Alberta	53
British Columbia	7

2. Because of commercial considerations, it is not the practice of the department to divulge the names of livestock owners whose animals are being dealt with through quarantine or other controls under the provisions of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

3. From 1 to 6 animals, with each permit specifying the exact number.

4. Import permits are not transferable and the department is not aware of any permits having been sold or transferred. All the certification documents that accompanied the cattle at the time of importation were in the name of the original import permit holder.

PUBLIC UTILITIES INCOME TAX TRANSFER ACT

Question No. 678—Mr. Fortin:

1. What payments have been made by the government to the governments of each of the provinces pursuant to the provisions of the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act, for each type of utility since its proclamation?

2. Does the government intend to bring telephone companies under this Act as some provinces have nationalized telephone services?

3. Were any regulations made by the government under Section 6 of the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act and, if so, what are these regulations?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance):
1. None. It is anticipated that the first payments to the provinces will be made before the close of the present fiscal year.

2. This is a matter of policy; if the government should decide to recommend amendments to the Act, an announcement will be made.

3. No.

CLOSING OF FOREST RESEARCH LABORATORY, VANCOUVER

Question No. 680—Mr. Anderson:

1. Did the Department of Fisheries and Forestry discuss the closing of Rayonnier Canada (B.C.) Ltd.'s Vancouver research laboratory with the company prior to its closing?

Questions

2. Does the Department of Fisheries and Forestry intend to take over the operation of the laboratory in the place of Rayonnier?

3. Does Rayonnier carry out any forest research elsewhere in Canada?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): 1. No.

2. No.

3. Yes. The company has forestry oriented research in the forests of British Columbia.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR PROVINCIAL PARKS

Question No. 681—Mr. Fortin:

1. Does the Department of Forestry and Rural Development in any way assist in the establishment or enlargement of provincial parks?

2. If so, what is the nature of such assistance and what amounts were or will be spent for each province?

3. What criteria are applied for such assistance?

[Translation]

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. Yes.

2. Cost-sharing of certain development expenditures, particularly basic infrastructure in conformity with an overall plan.

Province	Commitments	Expenditures to Date Expenditures
Newfoundland	$ 232,000	$ 189,667
Nova Scotia	291,900	280,206
New Brunswick	2,993,498	2,273,882
Prince Edward Island	888,805	157,309
Ontario	1,724,000	652,009
Quebec	246,591	209,602
Manitoba	1,672,425	1,049,365
Saskatchewan	996,948	754,448
British Columbia	Nil	Nil
Alberta	Nil	Nil

3. An area to be considered for assistance must be jointly agreed to by the federal and provincial governments. Consideration is given to factors such as earnings in the area, extent of unemployment or under-employment, record of social assistance payments, levels of education and similar criteria. If sizeable assistance is called for, it must be justified by benefit-cost analysis.

GOVERNMENT AIR TRAVEL REGULATIONS

Question No. 685—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

1. Has the Treasury Board adopted regulations concerning travel by commercial airlines within and without Canada by members of the Public Service of Canada and of the Armed Services?

2. When were the main regulations adopted and when were they last amended?

3. What are the criteria used to determine which persons in the Public Service and in the Armed Services shall be entitled to travel by air (a) first class (b) economy class, and where in fact is drawn the dividing line?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. Yes.

2. The public service travel regulations were adopted August 13, 1959 and were last amended August 16, 1968. The Queen's Regulations and Orders which relate to the Canadian armed forces were adopted September 1, 1951 and were last amended February 1, 1968.

3. (a) Public service. In general the dividing line for first class air travel is at the level of senior officer 2 and equivalent. In the following circumstances employees below this level may also be authorized to travel first class: (i) when required to travel by air on two or more successive nights; (ii) on flights originating or terminating in Asia, Africa or Australasia, or internally in Latin America; (iii) when travelling with a minister of the crown; (iv) when the employee is designated as the head of a foreign post; or (v) when economy class is not available and the trip cannot be delayed. (b) Armed services. In general the dividing line for first class is brigadier general. The circumstances in which first class air travel may be authorized for personnel below this rank are similar to those of the public service. In addition, officers accompanying major generals or members of the defence council may fly first class.

PRODUCTION OF CANADIAN COINS

Question No. 705—Mr. Coates:

Is it the intention of the federal government to contract with firms in the United States for the manufacture or production of Canadian coinage for 1969, and does the federal government intend to establish in Canada facilities that will allow for the complete manufacture of coinage in this country and, if so, when and by what method?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): It is not the intention to contract with firms in the United States for the manufacture or production of Canadian coinage for 1969. Plans are being considered for the building of a new and larger Royal Canadian Mint.

QUEBEC—LIQUOR SEIZED BY R.C.M.P.

Question No. 716—Mr. Godin:

From June 26, the beginning of the liquor strike in Quebec, to date (a) has the RCMP had to make any investigations within the Province of Quebec (b) how many establishments have been visited (c) what quantities of adulterated liquor have been seized (d) what quantities of alcoholic beverages originating in the United States have been seized (e) how does the RCMP dispose of such beverages (f) what quantities originating in the other provinces of Canada have been seized, and under what conditions has the Province of Quebec taken possession of these supplies (g) how can the province dispose of these supplies?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): (a) Yes; (b) 285; (c) 2,774 imperial gallons; (d) 1,230 imperial gallons; (e) By destroying; (f) Not known—provincial jurisdiction; (g) Not known.

MINT SET PRODUCTION

Question No. 721—Mr. Coates:

1. How many mint sets were produced for sale in 1968, how many were purchased and what were the figures for 1965, 1966 and 1967?

2. Of the total number of mint sets produced in 1968, how many were produced in Canada and how many in the United States?

3. What was the total amount of coinage produced for the federal government in the United States and what was the amount of the contract or contracts of United States firms for the production of such coinage?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. Orders have been accepted for 518,000 sets, and 339,068 sets have been produced. Corresponding sets were produced and sold as follows: In 1967, 962,000; in 1966, 673,000; in 1965, 2,904,000.

2. All were produced in Canada.

3. The United States mint has contracted to manufacture 75 million 10-cent Canadian coins, but delivery had not commenced as of November 12, 1968. Cost of the contract is $149,000 not including cost of metal or transportation.

CIVIL SERVANTS IN FRENCH LANGUAGE COURSES

Question No. 723—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many individuals in the federal Civil Service have received courses that would assist them in securing a working knowledge of the French language and of that number, how many are presently enrolled in such courses?

2. Of the number presently enrolled in French language courses (a) how many receive the courses while continuing with their employment (b) how many are receiving the courses while on leave of absence (c) how many on leave of absence have been granted leave for more than a period of one month?

3. Of the number enrolled in French language courses while continuing with their employment (a) how many are granted free time to take such courses (b) at the present time and for the present fiscal year, what is the number of man-hours lost to the federal Civil Service?

4. Of the number enrolled in French language courses who have obtained a leave of absence while taking the courses (a) how many are receiving their salary while taking these courses (b) what will be the estimated cost to the federal Treasury in the present fiscal year?

5. Of the number enrolled in French language courses who have obtained a leave of absence from their employment (a) how many have moved from Ottawa for such purposes (b) how many have also moved their families (c) was assistance given to those who moved their families by the federal government and, if so, what will be the total cost to the federal Treasury in the present fiscal year?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): See reply to question No. 244, printed in Hansard, No. 29 of October 23, p. 1923.

JOHN C. DOYLE—PAYMENT OF TAXES

Question No. 734—Mr. Coates:

1. Has the federal government secured payment from John C. Doyle for outstanding taxes, what was the total amount outstanding and what is the status of the claim at the present time?

2. If payment in full has not been received what action is the federal government taking to protect the public interest?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): The decision rendered on June 6, 1967, by the Tax Appeal Board in respect of assessments against Mr. Doyle for the taxation years 1950, 1953 and 1954 has been appealed to the Exchequer Court of Canada and that appeal has not yet been heard. In connection with those assessments, a writ of extent was issued out of the Exchequer Court on July 8, 1963, for the sum of $3,410,130.90.

Except as indicated above, the information requested is confidential and cannot be divulged.

SPEEDING UP OF PASSENGER FLOWS AT AIRPORTS

Question No. 735—Mr. Forrestall:

Has the government considered the redesigning of such travel documents as the passport, with a view to utilization of computer techniques for the purpose of speeding up passenger flows at points of entry particularly airports?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes. This subject was formally raised for the first time in the agenda for the seventh session of the facilitation division of the International Civil Aviation Organization held last spring in Montreal. It was related to a proposal for the introduction of card passports as a means of facilitating an expected increase in foreign travel in consequence of the introduction of jumbo jet and supersonic aircraft within the next decade.

Canada contributed one of the four working papers on this proposal discussed at the seventh session. Subsequently, the Secretary General of ICAO invited member countries to nominate representatives to participate in examination of the proposals by a panel of experts. Canada has accepted this invitation. It is proposed that the panel of experts will hold an initial meeting in Montreal during the first quarter of 1969 to plan its examination of various ideas that have been made for an improved international travel document.

If the panel of experts is able to arrive at a solution in due course, ICAO will then consult member governments whether they are able to accept such a recommendation. At that time, the Canadian government will decide whether it wishes to accept the proposed solution as a recommended international practice.

LENGTH OF RURAL MAIL ROUTES

Question No. 754—Mr. Schreyer:

Of the 2,068 postal delivery rural routes that are in excess of 30 miles in length, what number are (a) 30 to 40 (b) 40 to 50 (c) 50 to 60 (d) over 60 miles in length?

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): (a) 30 to 40 miles, 1,191 rural routes; (b) 40 to 50 miles, 486 rural routes; (c) 50 to 60 miles, 175 rural routes; (d) over 60 miles, 216 rural routes.

EFFECT ON SALMON OF JORDAN RIVER HYDRO WORKS

Question No. 755—Mr. Anderson:

1. Has the Department of Fisheries discussed the possible injurious effect on salmon of the proposed Jordan River Hydro-Electric expansion program with B.C. Hydro?

2. Is it the intention of the company or of the Department to construct a spawning channel to ensure continuation of this salmon run?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): 1. Yes.

2. Engineering and biological studies are now being carried out and discussions have taken place at the technical level. These studies and discussions will determine the particular action required to ensure continuation of this salmon run.

TRADE AGREEMENT WITH JAPAN

Question No. 763—Mr. Godin:

Does the trade agreement the Canadian government is about to conclude with Japan provide for the imports of hardware products and, if so, did the government prevail upon the Japanese to buy the steel required to manufacture those products from Canada?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The agreement recently concluded between Canada and Japan related only to the application of quantitative restraints by the Japanese authorities on certain Japanese exports to Canada. The agreements which govern trade between Canada and Japan, which are the Canada-Japan Trade Agreement of 1954 and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, do not provide for the type of exchange described in the question.

CANADIAN SECURITIES COMMISSION

Question No. 810—Mr. Caouette:

Following the meeting of the Federal-Provincial Committee of government officials on the regulation of financial institutions and securities last October 25, what progress is being made toward the establishment of a Canadian Securities Commission?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Further discussions are in progress at the official level. The intention of the government is to introduce a federal securities act in parliament during the present session.

GRAIN

GOVERNMENT WHEAT POLICY—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Muir), to move the adjournment of this house under standing order 26 to discuss an urgent matter of public importance, namely the catastrophic failure of the government's wheat policy resulting in the imminent loss of 200 million bushels of damp grain through lack of drying facilities, a blow to the economy not only of western Canada but the nation as a whole; and the refusal of the government to undertake necessary measures to deal with the situation.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member please advise the Chair as to the urgency of this matter?

Mr. Southam: I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, I will confine my remarks to the matter of urgency. I am not in the habit of bringing forward motions of this type, but the urgency of this matter is so obvious and the opportunity for dealing with it in the ordinary way so lacking, that I am compelled to deal with it in this way. The occasion for the motion lies in the situation outlined at some length in a statement yesterday by the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. W. C. MacNamara, in Winnipeg.

Briefly, Mr. MacNamara stated that unless immediate action is taken our economy is threatened with the loss through spoilage of some 205 million bushels of wheat stored damp in the bins. In order to show that the matter is not only urgent but also important, I am going to quote a sentence or two from Mr. MacNamara's report:

> Even with maximum use of terminal drying facilities the bulk of the tough and damp grain will have to be dried on farms.

• (2:50 p.m.)

And again:

> A survey shows that terminal driers, operating at full capacity during the next eight months, would be able to condition about 100 to 150 million bushels of the estimated more than 350 million bushels of tough and damp grain stored on farms.

To emphasize the urgency of this matter, Mr. Speaker, the farmers cannot visualize drying grain for a period of eight months, because if spoilage is going to occur it will take place next spring. Only the climatic conditions of western Canada during the next three or four months, with temperatures around freezing, will preserve the grain over the winter, but after eight months spoilage will have set in.

Even this survey is optimistic, Mr. Speaker, because the truth of the matter is that our total drying capacity in all terminal elevators both inland and at the three ports is only 12 million bushels a month. For anybody who can add and subtract the implications of this statement are clear; and I am sure the Minister of Agriculture can at least add and subtract.

This means a threatened and serious loss of 200 million to 250 million bushels. The loss to the economy is in the neighbourhood of $300 million, a serious blow to western Canada and to Canada as a whole. This outlines the importance of the matter to the economy.

Dealing with urgency of debate, there is no opportunity under the rules to deal with this matter in the ordinary course of events. I will, however, make a suggestion. If the government will undertake to bring forward the agriculture estimates today, that will satisfy the need for dealing immediately and urgently with a situation which could be catastrophic. The reason the government must act is that farm drying facilities, even if utilized to the full, cannot possibly deal with more than some 50 million bushels a month. This means that a period of five months, drying at full capacity, would be required to save the grain. But within a few months the grain could well be beyond saving.

The only solution I see is for the government, through the wheat board, perhaps by using the provisions of P.F.R.A. or acreage payments, to undertake to provide drying machines to those farmers who do not have them and cannot afford them, in order that the drying out of on-farm grain may begin as soon as possible. This is the only way we can hope to save the major part of the grain.

Government action is required, and required now. That is why I bring this motion forward. There is no other opportunity to deal with it except by bringing forward the estimates immediately. What is required is an immediate statement of intention by the government, and immediate action to provide financing of grain drying equipment. With that assurance farmers could carry on. Without it, our economy will suffer another, perhaps disastrous, blow.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I want with all the emphasis I can command to support the motion having regard to the urgency of this situation. Some while ago I moved a similar motion asking that this house take time to debate the very serious, even desperate situation that was developing in western Canada. This motion was turned aside, and between then and now we have lost much time to examine and prepare for the very critical situation that exists.

In all honesty I would ask the house now to seize this opportunity to see what can be done to stave off really serious losses as a result of the condition of this grain. I know whereof I speak, because I have a dryer operating on my own farm saving grain that otherwise would have been a total loss. This situation will be repeated on farm after farm in western Canada. There are things that can be done and should be discussed in this house. Those here who are able to advance solutions and programs that might be useful should be given the opportunity to place them before the government.

The government should bring before us and offer to this house the opportunity to discuss the situation thoroughly and examine all facets and all courses of action that may be taken to use the resources of the commercial channels which are available, as well as the resources that the farmers themselves may have available.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, allow me to point out that we support the motion for study of the western farmers' very urgent problem.

However, frankly, we deplore the fact that, when we talk about an eastern agricultural policy, we do not get the necessary support in calling for justice for our own farmers. In the past, we have asked that grain elevators be built which would enable the transfer of feed grain from the west to the east; this would help the farmer, especially in winter, when boats cannot navigate and grain must come by rail, which of course makes it too expensive.

We support the motion and understand that there are problems in Canada. However, recently we too have asked that a solution be found to the unemployment and strike problems in the eastern townships; but we did not get the required support from the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If I may interrupt the honourable member, I should like to remind him that the debate on the matter under consideration is limited, since we have to determine whether or not there is urgency of debate. If the ruling of the Chair is favourable, the honourable member will then be able to discuss the subject matter of the motion to be moved subsequently.

Mr. Dumont: I was coming to that, Mr. Speaker.

I simply wanted to say that we could have built grain elevators to solve the unemployment problem and to make it possible for this grain to be moved from the west to the east. Since we did not find the means to settle this problem, the Canadian parliament, on the one hand, must today face a surplus problem in the west and, on the other hand, a shortage of feed grain in the east. The farmers are complaining every day, and we could have settled this problem if we had listened to the voices heard in 1962. In fact, the urgency becomes obvious because the Prime Minister refuses to renew the winter works program and because this western grain which becomes a burden for the western farmer has to be moved and could bring abundance to the east.

This is why we are asking for the immediate planning of works in order to settle this problem of abundance. As far as we are concerned, we of the Ralliement Créditiste, the solution would be to utilize simultaneously the Canadian money and production, that is 664 million bushels of wheat and the necessary capital which would make possible the distribution of abundance.

[English]

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, as seconder of the motion I rise to speak in support of the urgency of debate. I trust the house will not try to treat this as a routine motion or as mere attempt to divert the house from its proper business. I hope we shall have the support not only of all western hon. members but of the majority of hon. members from the east as well.

I say that because the situation is of such a serious nature. The statement by the chairman of the wheat board cannot be discounted. It lends itself to one interpretation only; that western agriculture faces a loss of hundreds of millions of bushels of grain and millions of dollars, which farmers cannot afford to lose. I therefore suggest that we take action on the matter now.

As the mover of the motion said, there is no immediate opportunity to deal with this crisis which arises out of a series of failures on the part of the government. Unless this is dealt with immediately the result will be a paralysing blow to the western economy. The six weeks' grain handlers' strike resulted in a disastrous slowdown in deliveries from which we have not yet recovered. This matter has not been dealt with previously because the government failed to provide an occasion upon which to do so. Now, because of the ramifications of the situation, it should be dealt with forthwith. There is urgency, and the urgency lies in the failure for six months to ratify the international wheat agreement, allowing the United States, deliberately and by agreement, an open door to markets which traditionally belong to Canada. As a result of these failures some 700 million bushels of wheat piled up on the prairies—not an unusual situation under Liberal governments. As far as the western farmer is concerned, Liberal years are lean years.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Reference has been made to the agriculture estimates. I say bring them on; let us see what solution the government proposes to a calamity of its own making.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to remind the hon. member that he is now making the speech which I assume he would normally make if the motion were accepted. He should attempt to limit his remarks to procedural considerations having to do with the urgency of debate.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I was just laying the groundwork for the procedural argument.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): It is true the chairman of the wheat board will be appearing before the committee on agriculture. It is certain that when he appears he will repeat the outline of potential calamity which he dealt with yesterday. This does not solve the situation. Let us not fall into the error which the government is trying to foster, that a committee is a substitute for parliament. A committee is not a substitute for this house. It is true that in committee information can be elicited from the officials, but that is not what is needed at the present time. What is needed now, and needed immediately, is a statement by the government indicating awareness of the catastrophic situation into which the western farmer has been plunged by its lack of policy; and what is required is an undertaking by the government that there will be action. Such an undertaking can only be given in parliament. The situation can only be met by an immediate undertaking on the part of the government that something will be done, at least to double farm drying facilities. This cannot be given in a committee.

[Mr. Muir (Lisgar).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to remind the hon. member once again that according to my limited understanding of this type of question he is at this point considering the substance of the situation and it seems to me, as an independent observer, that hon. members really defeat the purpose of this kind of motion when they fail to limit their contributions to the debate to the procedural aspects. If a number of hon. members take part in this debate by putting forward their substantive arguments, it is then much easier for the Chair to take the position that the matter has already been debated and that the motion for adjournment should not be allowed.

With this in mind, I ask hon. members to limit their contributions to the procedural aspects.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is because of the limited knowledge of this subject by members of the government that I felt they should be enlightened.

The farmers must have an assurance that the government will act to provide drying facilities on the farms. This is the first thing that should be done. Such facilities can cost a great deal of money. Should a farmer be asked to pay thousands of dollars out of his own pocket to make up for government negligence? Precious few farmers in western Canada have this kind of money at the moment to play around with. Unless we act immediately, millions of bushels of grain will rot in piles in the fields of western Canada.

That constitutes the urgency of the matter. Only government action can help the situation and prevent a very serious economic loss to the prairies and to the country as a whole. To be useful, such action must be forthcoming at once, or at least there must be an indication that it will be forthcoming at once. Unless an opportunity is granted to us now to deal with this subject and impress on the government the urgency of the situation there may be no other opportunity, once the time allotted to the estimates has elapsed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): In dealing with the question of urgency of debate, Your Honour will be aware that there have been numerous references to this subject on the orders of the day and on other occasions during the current session. I suggest there has been a pattern to the references which have been made to this matter, leading to the conclusion that there is now urgency of debate.

The first questions were asked on this subject on the second day of the session. The house was informed that everything was under control, that it was desirable to wait until the harvest had been completed before determining what action should be taken. Later, when it became perfectly apparent to all that a serious situation had developed in western Canada, the government gave an assurance that everything possible was being done to deal with the problem of tough and damp grain.

Hon. members were assured that terminal facilities were being used to the full at both lakehead and inland terminals. Later it was disclosed in reply to further questioning that these terminals were not in fact being used to the full, that there was difficulty in moving grain to the terminals. It then transpired that there were difficulties in getting box cars. The transportation problem was referred to yesterday by the chairman of the wheat board in the statement to which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain referred.

In reply to further inquiries we were told that the Saskatchewan department of agriculture had found there were some 800 farm dryers in the province at the present time, and that as a result everything was under control. On the following day, under renewed questioning, the Minister of Agriculture backtracked with respect to that statement. Recently I drew the attention of the house to a protest sent to the Minister of Agriculture by the Saskatchewan federation of agriculture in which it took issue with the minister's statement that the situation was well in hand. As a matter of fact the Saskatchewan wheat pool is quoted in a farm broadcast on November 12 as saying "the committee strongly states that this is not the case." The reference is to the situation being well in hand. As reported in the Leader-Post of November 19 the Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture also stated there were 100 million bushels of wheat in the province which would have to be dried elsewhere than in commercial drying facilities.

Now we are faced with a statement by the chairman of the wheat board making it clear that the bulk of tough and damp grain will have to be dried on farms in western provinces. Thus I think it is abundantly plain that any semblance of a government program has been lacking, despite the assurance of its spokesman that they have the situation well in hand and are watching it closely. I maintain that the only way an adequate discussion of this problem is possible a this stage, having regard to the manner in which the situation has developed over the past number of weeks, is by allowing this motion. That would at least permit a full discussion of the serious situation which is affecting the entire national economy of Canada.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been raised in the house on numerous occasions by many hon. members on this side. We have tried to impress the government with the seriousness of the situation. I refer to only two instances. One was on November 7 when the matter was raised with the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) from Saskatchewan. At that time he said he was not aware of any problem concerning an insufficient number of box cars. Again, on November 13 I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) about this matter, and he replied that he had been in contact with the wheat board that very day and said he had no reason to believe that the situation presently existing is abnormal.

In reply to a supplementary question the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) told me the terminal elevators were operating on a five day basis. Despite the urgency of the situation the terminal elevators at the lakehead are still operating only on a five day basis. Unless the government can be impressed with the fact that these terminal elevators must operate on a seven day basis, there cannot be any relief for the farmers.

Why is it urgent that the terminal elevators operate on a seven day basis? Much of the grain that has been harvested is of low quality. Consequently any grain that can be sold will not command a very high price, in fact approximately only two thirds of the normal price for No. 2 wheat. The situation is so urgent that one cannot expect farmers to sell their grain at that price and then turn around and pay for commercial dryers out in the country. The farmers must be able to sell their grain and have it delivered at the terminal elevators. In that way they will receive some money from the wheat board and have some income with which to continue operations.

The farmers cannot be expected to pay for the drying of grain and then store it for a year or two, as may now be necessary with the present developing situation. As I understand it, even at this late date there are not sufficient competent technicians at the terminals.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me the hon. member has been referring more to the urgency of the matter than to the question of urgency of debate. Perhaps he might very soon bring his remarks in line with the requirements of the rules of the house.

Mr. Korchinski: With all respect, Mr. Speaker, I want to bring out the fact that a debate is absolutely necessary, and to show that the problem is directly related to the fact that there are not sufficient competent staff at the terminal elevators, even though we have known since September that the situation was such that we would require more staff at the elevators.

Without further comment, Mr. Speaker, I urge the house to have this matter debated, particularly as there are other matters pertaining to the labour contract which must also be discussed. Apparently the contract does not permit the labourers to work on a seven day basis, and that is something which must be brought out during the debate. I therefore urge Your Honour to accept the motion.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I noted with interest many of the comments of hon. members opposite and I thought I should bring to their attention, and particularly to that of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) two additional statements from the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board speaking in his capacity as chairman of the transportation commission.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the minister, who is obviously going to make a contribution to the substance of the matter. I hesitate to interrupt him in view of the fact that contributions of the same nature have already been made in the debate, but in any event I have to remind him that, as much as possible, contributions should be limited in this debate to the procedural aspects of the matter.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I was trying to deal with the question of urgency in the tone I have heard from other hon. members. The point of the statement of the chief commission was that there was an attitude on the part of some farmers to the effect that there was in fact no problem at all, and he was bringing to their attention the fact that there was still some problem left. I would like to read the final two sentences in his report:

> All producers should be made aware of this situation. Current reports from the provincial departments of agriculture indicate a very substantial farm drying capacity which, if used fully, can go a long way toward helping farmers cope with this very serious problem.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the contribution by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) is one that will always be remembered for its impotence, its total disregard of the facts and the serious situation on the prairie. It is an amazing thing that we have two ministers from western Canada, both without portfolio, the one who has spoken who is not too conversant with this subject and the other from Manitoba who is one of the greatest authorities on wheat and the marketing of wheat in all Canada, but he has not chosen to make a contribution to the debate. Indeed, Liberal members have maintained silence in the face of the most serious situation we have faced in western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the situation getting worse? Will the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Richardson) from Manitoba say the situation is getting better when only 12 million bushels have as yet been transported to the head of the lakes for drying, 12 million out of 250 million bushels?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the right hon. gentleman, as I have already reminded other members, that the debate at this time is simply on the question of urgency of debate, and that we should not be debating the urgency of the matter itself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was just answering the vacuous statement by the hon. minister from Saskatoon, and pointing out that what he said indicated he has no appreciation of what the situation is, and how it has worsened. For weeks we have tried to get action and the government, King Canute fashion, has simply sat, listened and done nothing to meet an ever worsening condition. According to the statement made today by the hon. member who moved this motion there are 250 million bushels of wheat that have to be dried—250 million bushels, and the government sits and does nothing. Surely this would have been a time when the Prime Minister, with his just society, would have listened and said this is unjust and the house should have an opportunity of speaking out.

There is no need to endeavour to exaggerate the situation. We in western Canada face a most serious condition of affairs, yet the government supinely refuses any consideration or any action. I know, Mr. Speaker, we have to go a long way to regard anything on the part of this government as an emergency, but this is an emergency that worsens every day.

One cannot go into the facts, as Your Honour has said. We can simply point out how serious things are, how we have warned them day after day, and all we have received in return is the glossed over observations of the Minister of Agriculture who, even today, is abroad telling them in Europe how to run the O.E.C.D. With all the force at my command I repeat that there never was before this house in the last eight, nine or ten years anything more emergent than this, yet the government sits silent. Even the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), the farmer from Bay Street, has not spoken yet. I await his words. He is the only one, I believe who has his heart sufficently softened to ask the house that this motion be accepted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask the cooperation and indulgence of hon. members, and I trust there will not be too many further contributions to the debate which we are effectively having at this time.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Perhaps I should invite hon. members to be as brief as possible in their statements.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address myself to the urgency of this matter, and repeat that I am one of a number of members of this house who have exhausted every possible opportunity available since the beginning of this session on September 12 to obtain a statement of government policies and programs to deal with this situation. We have tried in every way possible, during questions on the orders of the day, during the throne speech and budget debates, yet we have not received any indication from the government as to what action it intends to take. We have exhausted every effort, sir.

I spent the last two week ends in my constituency, and the people I represent believe this to be a matter of urgency. I am sure every member who represents a constituency like mine has found the same thing. This is a matter of national importance which involves hundreds of millions of dollars and a great many more people than farmers. It involves the transportation industry, the grain handling industry and the entire economy of this country. It also affects our export markets. All these matters are of extreme importance to every member of this house. We have tried everything we can to get this government to deal with this situation and I plead with you now, sir, to rule this motion in order because of this urgency, so this house will have the opportunity to obtain some indication from this government about its programs to deal with this matter.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the only question to be dealt with at this time is the question of urgency of debate. If I may I should like to direct Your Honour's attention to citation 100(3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which states:

> "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

Mr. Speaker, an hon. member says we are two months late now. That is a very useful observation. We have followed a practice in this house in dealing with the estimates of various departments. I have arranged to introduce here such estimates as hon. members wished to have dealt with, and have, by agreement with the opposition house leaders, referred those estimates to the standing committees which hon. members in the opposition did not wish to deal with in the house. Therefore, if the hon. member who just sat down has exhausted every effort to have this matter dealt with in order to get action, let me suggest that he should have had his house leader, or one of the other house leaders, request that the estimates of the Department of Agriculture be considered here.

We have been considering estimates now for several weeks, and there still are several more days for their consideration, but there has been no request from hon. members opposite that the estimates of the Department of Agriculture be brought before this house at a time when the Minister of Agriculture was here. Just by coincidence this motion is proposed today when my colleague the Minister of Agriculture is attending the O.E.C.D. in Paris. I think it is important that a Canadian representative should be at an international meeting on farm policy.

In respect of opportunities, Mr. Speaker, may I remind you that—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): May I remind hon. members that the agriculture committee—

An hon. Member: Come off it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the house that the agriculture committee will be meeting tomorrow and that there will be an opportunity to consider estimates next week. In respect of the suggestion that there has been no opportunity to deal with these matters in the house, so far as the official opposition is concerned, there has been no opportunity presumably because the leadership of the official opposition did not want the matter discussed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): I thank you, Mr. Speaker. And to comply with your instructions, I shall be extremely brief.

Having heard all the arguments from either side, I believe there is really a problem that must be solved, and it should come before the house. It is a major problem, vitally important for many farmers of the western provinces. It is equally of interest to the eastern farmers as far as supply is concerned.

So, in my humble opinion and considering the extremely serious nature of the problem, we should, if you allow me, Mr. Speaker, make you a suggestion: first, accept the motion and then discuss it in the light of all the ideas that may be brought forward. I think that would help the government to solve the problem.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the question of the opportunity for debate and its urgency, I must contradict completely the statement of the President of the Privy Council. There is no opportunity to discuss this now because, while it is true the estimates were sent to the standing committee, the right still persists in this house to call back, at the request of the government house leader, any estimates in order to facilitate the kind of debate we might now have under the provisions of standing order 26. If the government house leader refuses to accept the very reasonable request of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, then I suggest he is delinquent in his duty. It is his duty to bring back these estimates. It is only within the four corners of this house that this debate can be held with the solemnity and the attention it deserves, and the failure of the minister to respond to that request is a certain indication of the government's failure in its responsibilities in this respect.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. minister wishes to rise on a question of privilege. After hearing his question of privilege I would hesitate to allow too many more members to continue these enlightening contributions to this debate. Having heard the question of privilege, if it is not followed by a formal motion, I will recognize another hon. member who has been trying to get the floor, and then I suggest we go on with the business of the house.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there has been an imputation by the hon. member for Peace River regarding the manner in which I have called these estimates. I should like to point out that throughout I have called these estimates on the basis of consultation with house leaders. I can only say that this is typical of the hon. member for Peace River, and the kind of co-operation I can expect from him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Battle River.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, regardless of the verbiage of the hon. member for Rosedale in respect of why we should not consider the plight of the western agricultural industry at this time, let me say that if the government of Canada considers western Canada and its agricultural industry of any importance to this urban-oriented just society, then it should consider this motion at this time. If the government does attach any importance, let it show us now in order that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Let me remind the hon. member that this—Would the hon. member resume his seat? Let me remind hon. members that this is a procedural debate. The more of these speeches by hon. members I hear, the more I am confirmed in my opinion as to the ruling I should make in respect of this motion.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Downey: I offer my apologies, Mr. Speaker. I was only trying to impress upon the members on the government side of the house the real urgency of this matter. I can only say that if they ignore this urgent plea from the representatives of western Canada, our worst fears will become grim reality. I say that now is the time to act, not later.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, on the question of urgency of debate of the very serious situation in western Canada, I believe the house should consider it urgent because, first, of the economic conditions in western Canada today. Anybody doing business in the rural areas of western Canada realizes that the farmers have a drastic need for ready cash. Their damp grain is not moving.

We have many times urged the house to put the dryers at the terminals on a 24-hour basis, seven days a week. The government has decided not to do that. The President of the Privy Council suggested that this whole matter could be raised in the agricultural committee tomorrow when the chief of the wheat board will be before us. We are asking for a policy decision by parliament, not for a statistical review of wheat handling such as the chief commissioner of the wheat board can give us in the agricultural committee.

We want a policy decision by parliament, first, to activate the grain drying equipment at the terminals on a 24-hour basis, seven days a week. This is a policy decision that parliament and the government have to take. Second, we ask that the transportation committee look into the problem with regard to box cars. In the past two weeks members of this party and others have urged the government to look into the problem of box car shortages. No fundamental action has been taken by the government on this serious question. We want a policy decision by the government to alleviate the serious problem with regard to box cars and their availability in order to move our damp grain.

Third, we want a policy decision by parliament and the government with regard to commercial dryers purchased by farmers or farm co-operatives. Today they have to pay duty of 22½ per cent on these dryers, which practically prohibits their importation. We believe these three policy decisions should be made by the government. They could be brought about today by having an active debate in the house on this serious matter.

On only two or three previous occasions has a motion to adjourn the house under standing order 26 been accepted by the Chair. One had to do with the drought-stricken conditions in eastern Canada a number of years ago and another with the problems on the St. Lawrence seaway a number of years ago. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this question is every bit as urgent, particularly in light of the statement made on television last night by the chief of the wheat board on two of the matters to which I have referred. I would like to think that you, sir, and the government feel that western Canada is every bit as important as eastern Canada, the drought-stricken conditions of a few years ago in that area and the problems on the St. Lawrence seaway of a few years ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Starting at the end, I would say that the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Crowfoot have very little relevance to the procedural aspects of this matter and I cannot consider them at all in reaching the decision which I am now going to give to the house. Very serious arguments have been advanced by hon. members who have taken part in the debate. It is not an easy task for the Chair at any moment to reach a decision on standing order 26. I gather that the special committee on procedure has been giving very special consideration to changing the conditions under which that standing order operates, which would, I believe, have the effect of making it much easier for the Chair to reach a decision and to take into account the views advanced by hon. members in such circumstances.

Hon. members know that what we have to consider at this time is not at all the urgency of the matter. Although I do not come from the western provinces, I fully realize how important and urgent this matter is. I have been in the house every day, of course, since the beginning of this session and in the chair I have heard the questions asked from day to day by hon. members on both sides of the house representing western constituencies. I have seen similar questions on the order paper.

Mr. Horner: The responsible ministers have not been here.

Mr. Speaker: A motion under standing order 26 was made earlier by another hon. member. I believe that was more than a month ago. All this indicates clearly to me—and I am looking at the question from strictly a procedural standpoint; hon. members must bear that in mind—that the matter has been under consideration, that it is not a sudden emergency as is required by the rule but is obviously a continuing emergency. I wonder whether there is a point at which a continuing emergency becomes a sudden emergency. This is a philosophical decision which I hesitate to make at this time. But when a month ago a matter was considered extremely urgent, and when every day since then it has been considered extremely urgent, I doubt that today, by reason of the fact that a motion is made, I can reach the conclusion that it has now become a sudden emergency.

On the other hand, I have to take into account that there may be opportunities for debate of this urgent matter within the next few days. I hesitate to mention, but I believe it is my duty to do so, that there is always open to the opposition the possibility of moving an amendment to a supply motion, at which time this matter could be debated at length. This is a possibility which might be considered. After the exchange between the government house leader and the opposition house leader, I hesitate to suggest that they should get together—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: —and perhaps try to arrange to set aside a supply day for a debate on this very urgent and important matter. In any event I feel bound by the standing order and by the rules and precedents inasmuch as they require that the matter brought before the house should be one of sudden emergency. This is primarily a matter of a continuing emergency. Because in my view it should be possible for the house within the next few days to arrange for that kind of debate, I would be inclined to refuse the motion. At the same time I advance the possibility that the motion might be brought forth again later if there does not seem to be an improvement in the situation and if there does not appear to be the possibility within the next few days of a debate being provided with the agreement of hon. members from both sides of the house. Having said all this—and much of it might be not entirely relevant—I must reach the conclusion that I cannot accept the motion.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege does not concern Your Honour's ruling but rather has to do with the statement made by the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon. He quoted or attempted to quote the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board and I jotted down the words he quoted. The minister attributed to that gentleman the words that Canadian farmers are not generally aware of the seriousness of the problem. Either the minister did not have a chance to complete the quotation, which would be unfair, or he misquoted Mr. McNamara and should have a chance to explain.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a question of privilege. If any hon. member has a question of privilege now it would be the minister, not the hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, is the minister not going to avail himself of the opportunity to explain?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no question of privilege.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I ask Mr. Speaker, that all the notices of motions be allowed to stand.

GRAIN

PROVISION OF DRYING FACILITIES ON FARMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the appropriate minister, possibly the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon. What efforts are being made by the Canadian Wheat Board or by the government itself to try to ensure that there are adequate facilities on farms to handle the 200 million bushels of grain that cannot be conditioned at terminal facilities? I ask this question in the light of the very disquieting statements made last evening by the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board which have been discussed here this afternoon.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the terminal facilities do not come under the responsibility of the department of which I am the acting minister. However, this matter is, of course, being given active and serious consideration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanfield: Am I to understand from the statement made by the Minister without Portfolio that the government has in fact no proposals to put forward with regard to measures to assist in the drying of the damp grain which is in danger of being destroyed?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): We have, over a long period of time, been assessing the situation—

An hon. Member: Some three months now.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): —and in looking back at the debates in the past, one will find that the problems being considered today are not exactly the problems that existed a month ago since the weather has allowed a good deal of harvesting to take place. So it is well to look at these things. The chairman of the transportation commission in his recent statement indicated that another questionnaire based on post-harvesting conditions has now been prepared and was put in the hands of the elevator operators on November 22. We expect to have the results at a very early date. This will no doubt be of great assistance in helping us assess the whole situation.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister say whether the wheat board or the government is conducting any survey of the location of dryers in order to ascertain whether these facilities are in a position to be of maximum use in connection with grain drying, and has the government or the wheat board given any consideration to facilitating the importation of dryers from the United States or from other sources?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): As I indicated at the beginning in my first answer, these are questions largely for the Minister of Agriculture who is not here today. I am sure he would be glad to provide detailed information on this matter when he returns from Europe.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the acting minister of national revenue whether the government has given any consideration to the removal, by agreement with the United States, of tariffs on the admission of dryers into Canada or, if this cannot be arranged, would the government be prepared to pay the duty on the necessary dryers so that farmers in western Canada would be able to secure them?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take that up with the officials of the department and to make to the cabinet such recommendations as seem necessary.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that part of the problem is due to the shortage of box cars, would the minister discuss this matter with the railways, if he has not done so already, and promise western farmers a flow of box cars so that damp and other grain can be moved?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take this up with the railways.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have there been any discussions to date with reference to this serious matter or are they to take place only now?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, there have been discussions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister please take the house into his confidence and tell us what has been the result of those discussions with the Canadian railways?

Mr. Hellyer: At an early date, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The west is forgotten.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Today both the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture are away. We have witnessed the arrogance of the Minister of Transport who has refused to answer questions. What kind of a government is it that will not give answers to our questions?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether this is a point of order.

Mr. Woolliams: It may not be a point of order, Mr. Speaker, but it is a point of emergency on which Your Honour ruled a short time ago. These ministers will not answer; they will not even come into the House of Commons to grace this place with their presence. Parliament is falling to pieces now, and you are the Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a supplementary question which I should like to direct to the Minister without Portfolio since he is certainly speaking for the Minister of Agriculture. Will the government undertake a program to co-ordinate the use of farm drying equipment that is now available on farms and to give financial assistance to farmers toward the cost of operating dryers in order to avoid the possibility of substantial losses because of damp grain?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring these representations to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister without Portfolio. I am sorry to see that the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce are not in their places as they should be according to the roster. Will the government take under consideration the question I put two months ago to the Minister of Agriculture in which I suggested that in a similar emergency in 1959 with wheat and other grain under the snow acreage payments were made and asked whether this could not be considered now so as to alleviate the financial difficulties in which the farmers find themselves at this time?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, of course I must point out that this is a problem which was apparently much more serious a month or two ago when the hon. member put his question than it is now. With regard to the question as to how many people the suggestion would help, this situation is certainly being examined at this time.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon. Now that we have lost one month in drying grain at the lakehead terminals, will the terminals be operating their drying facilities on a 24-hour seven day basis?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I will have to bring that question to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Is the minister in a position to provide the house with some particulars of the proposal to allow accelerated depreciation on farm grain dryers as referred to by the Minister of Agriculture in the house on Monday evening?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, regulations in this regard are being drafted and will probably be issued early next week.

Mr. Woolliams: Congratulations! At least this minister is answering questions.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon. Can he advise the house whether the government has made any provision for additions to the drying facilities of the inland terminals by the purchase of this equipment and its immediate installation in order to increase the capacity of the dryers?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I can only draw attention again to what I said before, namely, that the question is being directed to the wrong department.

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I then ask whether the acting minister of agriculture or anyone who has something to do with agriculture can answer any of these questions?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Where the hell are they?

AIR CANADA

CONSIDERATION OF POSSIBLE CHANGE IN OWNERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of press reports concerning discussions on a possible change in the ownership of Air Canada, and in view of the fact that a government committee is studying this matter, can the minister say whether a decision has yet been made and, if not, what is the position at the present time?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Is my hon. friend referring to the Winnipeg overhaul base or to the whole system?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the discussions that have been reported of a possible change in the ownership of Air Canada.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, there has been no change since the last time the question was asked and answered. The same answer has been given, I think, twice this session. Although the government is considering the future form of the corporate structure of the company, this is not a question which can be considered lightly. It has very serious implications regardless of the decision that may be made and therefore will require some time for study. No decision is imminent, but I do hope that perhaps some time next year or in the early months of next year we will be able to make some sort of a position statement in respect of it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Could we be assured that parliament will have an opportunity to express its view on this matter before we are presented with a fait accompli?

Mr. Hellyer: I think that is a reasonable request, Mr. Speaker. I am sure an opportunity will be provided. New legislation would be required in any event so that parliament would have its full say in respect of any change in the corporate structure. I am very pleased to give my hon. friend an undertaking that an opportunity will be provided to discuss it.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In reply to question No. 623, the Minister of Transport said that the administrative offices of Air Canada in Winnipeg would be moved.

Has that branch anything to do with the maintenance of the Viscounts, which entails a deficit of $10 million by staying in Winnipeg instead of being transferred to Montreal?

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary question should also be put on the order paper.

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WINDSOR, ONT.—REPORT ON MEETING RESPECTING LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Is he prepared to report on a recent meeting between the representatives of the government and the United Auto Workers concerning lay-offs in Windsor? In particular, can the minister say what undertaking the government gave this delegation with regard to alleviating this crisis?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): As the hon. member intimates, Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting with representatives of that union yesterday. We had a very fruitful meeting. Many suggestions came out of that meeting, some advanced by the government and some by the union. I am not, however, prepared to state anything specific today. When and if there are any changes in government policy, they will be announced in the appropriate manner in the house next week.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister give a date to the house on which he may be able to present any promises he made to the delegation concerning the eligibility of the union members for temporary assistance benefits?

Mr. Mackasey: No, Mr. Speaker, I would not be prepared to give any particular date. It would depend on the rate of progress.

COMMUNICATIONS

REPORTS ON SATELLITE DESIGN STUDIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): My question is directed to the Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker. Can the Postmaster General advise the house to whom R.C.A. Victor and Northern Electric delivered their reports following surveys they made on behalf of the government with regard to Canada's satellite?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, late yesterday afternoon I received copies of the reports.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question. Did some member of the government or an official representing the government give authority for these companies to make these reports?

Mr. Kierans: No member of the office of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or in the office of the President of the Treasury Board or in the office of the Postmaster General gave any such authority.

Mr. Hales: Are we to assume, then, that these companies made these reports purely on their own initiative?

Mr. Kierans: No, they may have been in contact with some officials; that is the distinction I am making.

Mr. Hales: In the light of the minister's answer, would he advise the house who those officials were?

Mr. Kierans: They were not in my department; that is all I can say.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, could the Postmaster General tell the house if it is true that Mr. J. Orr, of the research branch, attended the press conference given by Northern Electric about a satellite?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): I am not aware of that, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Can the Postmaster General indicate whether the government of Canada is committed in a contractual way now to these two firms for development of a space communications satellite?

Mr. Kierans: The government is committed to no one.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether that question can be asked at this time. This question should be placed on the order paper, I suggest.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Was permission given by anyone in that department for this report to be released or by anyone in the deputy minister's office?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge the reports as such have been received by the government and have not been released.

[Mr. Hales.]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED LAY-OFF OF SECURITY STAFF, ATLANTIC REGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): May I ask the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker, whether he is in a position today to report to the house the results of his discussion with Canadian National regarding the alleged proposal to cut back the Canadian National police force in the Atlantic region, which has been brought to his attention by a number of members including the hon. member for Moncton?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I am not today, Mr. Speaker. When I was in Halifax on Monday a delegation of the policemen visited me on Monday morning. We had a discussion and I wired back for my departmental assistants to speed up the information. I have not had a chance yet to determine whether it is available and to look at it.

[Translation]

TELEVISION

QUEBEC—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put my question to the Secretary of State but, in his absence, I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

In view of the fact that, within a few days, a federal-provincial conference on constitutional matters will be held and that the question of using television for educational purposes will certainly come up, has the Secretary of State or the government received from the province of Quebec an official communication stating its position on the use of educational broadcasting?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we have never received any proposal in that respect from the Quebec government, despite several requests.

However, I note that the Quebec premier has expressed the wish to discuss the matter at the next constitutional conference. I need not add that we shall welcome a frank and full discussion with the provincial governments on any subject of mutual concern.

[English]

TRADE

REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED KINGDOM ON IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce but in his absence I will address it to the acting minister. Can the minister report on the outcome of representations made by the Canadian government to the government of the United Kingdom with regard to the new import restrictions recently put into effect, and especially the serious effect on imports of Canadian synthetic rubber, lumber, plywood and newsprint?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot as yet report on the outcome of these discussions.

Mr. Harkness: I have a supplementary question. In addition to the representations made by Canada directly to the government of the United Kingdom, can the minister say whether Canada has made any protest to GATT and, particularly has the government of Canada taken the position in GATT that the British import restrictions are in fact a contravention of Britain's obligations under GATT?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Canada is represented on a committee of GATT which will be studying this question and therefore will have direct access to the question of the position of these changes in relation to the GATT obligations.

Mr. Harkness: Perhaps the minister did not hear my question. I asked whether Canada made a direct protest to GATT with regard to this matter?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Since the whole matter has been referred to this committee for study it was not really a question of making a protest at that stage.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED INTERNATIONAL MEETING TO STABILIZE CURRENCIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a related question. In view of the fact that we have had three monetary crises and an indication from the chief economic adviser to president-elect Nixon that we may expect six months of chaos and continuing crisis, can the minister assure the house that Canada will take the lead in seeking immediately an early international conference along the lines of the Bretton Woods meeting to make more satisfactory and permanent arrangements for the strengthening of international currencies and provision for orderly readjustment which may be necessary from time to time?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition, there are continuing consultations taking place on matters of international finance and exchange. Canada will play its full part in any such negotiations.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I gather the answer is no, though it took the minister a little while to say so. Did he say on return from his recent trip to Bonn that the crisis which has just temporarily passed is "primarily a French or European problem"?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I did say that there has not been any pressure on either the Canadian or the United States dollar as a result of this recent upheaval in international foreign exchange, and that the problem has primarily been a French-German-British problem. As my hon. friend knows, the movement in exchange was from France and Britain into Germany. Since the conference there has been a reversal of this situation, as I understand it, and quite a substantial outflow from the deutschmark.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question. Is the minister still—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Abitibi rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

I hesitate somewhat to interrupt the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), but I would like to submit that, since the beginning of the question period, none of our group has been recognized and the time has almost expired.

Even though there was a request for a debate on a very important subject, namely the wheat problem, the fact is that a debate on this subject has taken place on two occasions, that is during the discussion of the motion and during the question period. Why is it then that members of the Ralliement Créditiste are not recognized this afternoon?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may rest assured that I am keeping an eye open and that his group and himself in particular will be given their turn in a moment.

The hon. member for Abitibi.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF EDUCATION MINISTERS OF FRENCH SPEAKING COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I wish to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he can tell the house if he has received an official invitation from the Niger—and on what date—to attend or participate in the coming conference of the education ministers of francophone countries?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, an invitation was in fact addressed to Canada. We received it on last November 17, I believe, or last Tuesday, from president Hamoni Diori of the Niger. We have been invited to attend a conference, not of the ministers of education, but of French speaking countries in general.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Will that invitation be handed over to the province of Quebec or does the federal government intend to accept the invitation for itself and send its own delegation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the invitation was extended to us, and we are in the process of considering what reply we will give.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

I would like the Prime Minister to tell us if the federal government intends to hold direct consultations with the Quebec government with regard to sending a Canadian or a Quebec delegation to that conference.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we would hope that, in accordance with the policy established by right hon. Mr. Pearson at last year's federal-provincial conference, a delegation to such a conference will represent all Canadians and particularly French speaking Canadians who, as everyone knows, do not live only in the province of Quebec but also in other provinces.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members will admit perhaps that the situation has righted itself somewhat but just the same I give the floor to the hon. member for Champlain.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

In the invitation received by the federal government, is it mentioned that the Quebec government has also been invited?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can even say more. That invitation contained a special indication to the effect that it was their wish that Quebec would attend that conference and this is evidently in accordance with our own views. We hope, however, to establish a formula under which there would be a single Canadian delegation made up of the representatives of several provinces interested in the "francophonie" or French speaking countries.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he intends, since there are many French speaking Canadians in other provinces, to convey that invitation to other Canadian provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: I did not hear very well, Mr. Speaker, but if—

Mr. Fortin: I will repeat my question in order to be well understood.

Since the Prime Minister said a while ago that there are many French speaking Canadians in other provinces, will he also convey that invitation to the other provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I said it and I say it again: We intend to make up a Canadian delegation including representatives of the various provinces interested in the French speaking countries.

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I think I should direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having in mind the announcement last night by the prime minister of British Columbia to the effect that he intends shortly to absorb the Yukon and part of the Northwest Territories, will the government give consideration to intervening to protect the natives of those areas?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my function is to protect foreigners, not Canadians.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

USE OF MAIL FOR BINGO ANNOUNCEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Is it the policy of the minister to threaten prosecution of village service groups who send out notices of Christmas turkey bingos through the mails for local charitable purposes such as children's playgrounds, and at the same time permit the mayor of Montreal to send out lottery literature to homes in the same area?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for a policy statement which should be made on motions.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED FRAUDULENT ART AWARDS BY MAGAZINE

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that Maclean's magazine is presently informing thousands of Canadians that each is the winner of a genuine oil painting by Renoir or a genuine original etching by Rembrandt or four or five other similar art treasures, what steps does the minister propose to take to stop this fraud?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): To start with, Mr. Speaker, I will read Maclean's, which I have not yet done.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR WHITE PAPER ON SMOKING AND LUNG CANCER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last week, as reported at page 2910 of Hansard, I asked the minister a question which he said he would prefer to take as notice. In view of the tables that he put on the record last week I am wondering whether he has given any further consideration to this matter and to the possibility of indicating the level of tar and nicotine on packages of cigarettes offered for sale?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this and other questions pertaining to tobacco will be discussed by a parliamentary committee, and I also believe that the President of the Privy Council will have an announcement to make in this regard on Friday.

IMMIGRATION

PRESSURE OF APPLICATIONS IN U.K. OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the heavy pressure on the immigration offices of Australia and South Africa in the United Kingdom caused by prospective immigrants, I suppose because of the austerity program in effect there, could the minister inform the house whether or not there is similar pressure on the Canadian offices there? If there is, what measures are being taken to meet the situation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there is pressure in a number of offices and we are doing our very best to staff these offices within budgetary limits.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO AND NORAD—STATEMENT BY POSTMASTER GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Would the right hon. gentleman say whether the statement made by the Postmaster General on national television last night, that Canada should get out of NATO as well as NORAD since we have no contribution to make in that field meets with the earlier guide line the Prime Minister laid down yesterday in answer to my question, when he said that a minister should not place himself in an irrevocable position which might be contrary to that which the government might eventually take?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I did not say that. I support fully our present policy. I am a member of the cabinet and I intend to support it. I said that future alternatives were up for discussion.

Mr. Speaker: I bring to the attention of hon. members that the only question that may be asked of the Prime Minister is whether the statement attributed to the minister represents government policy.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I was simply asking the Prime Minister whether the statement which I suggest was made meets the earlier guide lines he laid down in his answer to me yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was not taking issue with the question but with the question of privilege.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of what I have just heard from the Postmaster General I can only say the question is hypothetical.

Mr. Baldwin: Table the transcript, then.

HOUSING

DIRECTION OF PENSION FUND HOLDINGS INTO CAPITAL MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Will the minister tell the house whether, in view of the Minister of Transport's comments in Halifax and St. John's, he is giving serious consideration to taking steps to direct pension fund holdings into the capital market for housing?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the opportunity to read the report of what the Minister of Transport said in Halifax and St. John's. I assure my hon. friend that anything the Minister of Transport says is taken under serious consideration by the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running out of time, but perhaps the house might agree to allow the hon. member for Palliser to ask a question.

DIVORCE

EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION TO COUNTY AND DISTRICT COURTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice.

[Mr. Kierans.]

Since it is a fact that some 1,400 divorce actions are still awaiting trial in the Supreme Court of Ontario and the court expects an average delay of nine or ten months from the time the actions are filed, and since the same situation is developing in other provinces and imposes severe hardship on individuals, would the minister say whether the government is giving any consideration to changes in the divorce legislation that would, for example, give jurisdiction to county and district courts or otherwise enable divorce applications to be dealt with in a more efficient and considerate manner?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

INDUSTRY

RESPONSIBILITY FOR SAFETY OF MINE WASTE HEAPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday and yesterday three questions were directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources relating to strip mining waste. A statement was promised for today. May I ask the acting minister, perhaps, if he is prepared to make that statement at this time?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, statements have been made in the province of British Columbia by Premier Bennett and by the minister of mines, Mr. Richter, which clearly indicate and acknowledge that this is a provincial problem and is directly within the competence of the government of the province of British Columbia and the provincial legislature.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1. General administration, including grants as detailed in estimates, $31,015,000.

The Deputy Chairman: Vote No. 1 will be found at page 392 of the blue book and the details are listed on page 394. For the information of hon. members these estimates were last considered on November 4 and 19.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on item 1 of the public works estimates. I have long been interested in public works and I have often been concerned about what has motivated the government in some of its actions in administering this vast department. For example, I note that each year for the last three years we spent $180,000 in improving wharves. We have also done some dredging for Canadian Vickers at Montreal. Canadian Vickers is a worthy industry. I ask the minister, why are some wharves and some drydocks improved while others are neglected?

Two years ago when I was in Vancouver with the agricultural committee I saw how dilapidated the dock facilities were. Recently the port at Vancouver has become one of our major ports through which goods are exported from Canada. Yet I found buildings there which were, as people say in western Canada, as old as the hills. The dredging going on in the harbour was 20 years behind the times. What most concerned me was the lack of an over-all plan for the building of larger facilities at that port to enable the movement of a greater volume of commodities.

Without doubt, the attention of western Canada is focused on Vancouver as a port of export. Hon. members no doubt are aware of the serious situation in western Canada at the terminals and in government elevators. I know that terminal elevators need not necessarily come under the Department of Public Works. Yet when talking about port facilities one must include terminal elevators, and in western Canada we have been worried for the past month because these elevators have not worked at full capacity. They work five days a week and less than 24 hours a day.

We all realize that if the government, and particularly the Department of Public Works, showed a greater interest in this matter they would bring about modernization of port facilities and facilitate the handling of Canadian products. Those products, of course, include grain coming from the terminals and from the dryers. Of course, many realize that one of our bottlenecks in grain has been in drying it. Dryers operate in the terminals. If grain has to be dried elevator companies sometimes do not know where to put it. They have no place to put it. Surely the solution of this problem has something to do with the Department of Public Works and the operations of the department with regard to improving harbour facilities, dredging, and facilitating the movement of Canadian products to export markets.

I could not bring myself to admit when I toured the port of Vancouver, and the Lakehead shortly after, that the facilities I saw were modern or that the dredging operations at Vancouver, particularly, were up to date. I could only conclude that we are behind the times. It was realized that Asia was a gigantic market and that we should streamline our port facilities to accommodate that market. But we were late. And we have had to pay the price for allowing our harbour facilities to fall behind.

We hear a great deal nowadays from the Minister of Transport about the government's intention to build a brand new port on a sandy peninsula. The minister has not told us how he proposes to stop the sand drifting in without continual dredging. He has not told us whether the legal situation between the federal government and the province has been ironed out. With present pressure on the shipment of Canadian products, whether they be potash, iron ore or grain, surely there is urgent need to iron out the red tape and speed up the modernization of our port facilities and the development of new ones.

Looking over this year's estimates I find very little change in the total expenditure compared with last year. There is an increase of some $11 million. No real savings have been made in any of the items. There is really just a continuation of programs which have not proven to be particularly successful in the past. No consideration has apparently been given to the change which has taken place in the pattern of Canadian exports particularly from the Lakehead and the west coast. We see the United States taking advantage of our harbour facilities at Baie Comeau, for example, while we are failing to keep abreast of our leading export competitor. This should be brought sharply to the attention of the government.

One could go into the whole question of grain drying and grain drying facilities at these harbours. They have not proved good enough. A few years ago when the question of grain dryers on prairie farms was raised Mr. McNamara, chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, advised against farmers purchasing dryers on account of the danger of damaging the quality of Canadian wheat. Yet today, because of failure to handle the massive amounts of damp grain on the prairies, Mr. McNamara is urging farmers to get into the business of drying their own grain. He has thrown his caution of a few years ago to the winds and has said in effect: Get into the business because the government cannot handle the 380 million bushels of damp, tough grain which will have to be dried this winter.

The picture is plain to see. Certainly we must improve the dredging of our major ports. We must improve the buildings, the basic installations necessary for the handling of Canadian products. It is necessary to streamline port facilities. It is not good enough to put up modern buildings here and there while the railroad leading to them is tied up by city traffic for half a day before the cars can get in there. We remember the situation two years ago when box cars were piled up from Vancouver almost to the rockies because of the difficulty of moving cars to the terminals. The fact is that the activities of the Department of Public Works, the Department of Transport and the Board of Grain Commissioners which handles the terminal elevators, must all be dovetailed together. In other words, one department has to know what the other is doing; they have to work together if we are to keep abreast of the demand nationally and internationally for Canadian products.

I can only say once again this fall that we in Canada have failed to keep abreast of the need for improved harbour facilities, particularly to deal with damp grain, a problem which is causing severe hardship to many prairie farmers because in consequence they have not been able to market their grain. They face the situation that if the grain is not marketed before early spring there will be a tremendous amount of spoilage and wastage. For this reason I urge the Department of Public Works to get together with the other departments concerned and not only give Canadian Vickers a subsidy of $180,000 every year but facilitate the marketing of Canadian goods and streamline the handling of Canadian products even if this includes the drying and cleaning of Canadian grain which has played such a major part in increasing Canada's exports during the past number of years.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I, too, went on that trip two years ago when members of the agricultural committee learned a great deal about the agricultural problems of various areas of this country. I was impressed this afternoon by the motion which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain put forward with regard to western agriculture and I was surprised that members of the government did not take the opportunity to announce the changes which I am sure are necessary. When a motion of that kind is moved I am often impressed not so much by the arguments as to the urgency of debate as by the indications that if a debate were allowed members of the house would be in a position to offer practical suggestions to solve the problems which had led to the demand for a debate. If the house is not capable of suggesting any solution to those problems then in my view there is really not much point in having a debate at all. But if a genuine crisis develops I am of the opinion that some consideration should be paid to the readiness of hon. members to offer their solutions.

I realize the minister is wondering what this has to do with the estimates of the Department of Public Works. I am coming to that. The department is responsible, among other things, for providing the facilities needed by the grain trade in western Canada. I was surprised that one very vociferous group, the wheat board, under the able leadership of its chairman, was able to provide itself with new facilities which were probably long overdue. I was equally surprised when an even more influential group, the Board of Grain Commissioners, failed to obtain new facilities. The minister may say he will not build them but I suggest he should be interested in extending the influence of the Department of Public Works into the construction of all public developments in Canada.

When I visited the Moose Jaw terminal, one of the large inland terminals discussed today by a number of hon. members when they spoke about the drying of grain, I was surprised to discover it was built 50 or 60 years ago and very little change has been made in it since. In fact the method of dumping grain there has hardly changed at all from the time wagons were used right through to the use of rail cars. This is another matter that must be considered. Most of the box cars still use the side dumping method, archaic beyond imagination in the context of a commodity which is one of the largest revenue producers for a great portion of our nation.

Damp grain is a serious problem at present, and if the government considers the construction of drying facilities this would likely come under the responsibility of the Minister of Public Works. The fact that there are no additional drying facilities at Moose Jaw indicates that the government has failed to meet a need it should have foreseen. Over the years farmers have been plagued with cyclical problems of drought and damp grain, and had the motion been allowed for a debate today I would have suggested the construction of permanent drying facilities at the inland terminals. Grain could be transported to them for drying and rerouted to country elevators for storage. Although this would not be the best way to handle grain it would be better than putting damp grain into country elevators where, as a result of weather conditions, it may become a partial or total loss.

One of the recurring problems has been the shortage of box cars at the harbour and inland terminals. On occasion this has been due to the reluctance of the Canadian Pacific Railway to provide box cars at terminals when it was more advantageous for the railway to use them elsewhere. I know this is not the responsibility of the minister, but I think he will agree that if he provides additional drying facilities at the inland terminals and damp grain cannot be delivered there because of a shortage of box cars, the whole process will break down.

On a number of occasions we have appointed a transportation commissioner and given him control over box car allocation. This is something that should be considered in the present situation. Such a commissioner could allocate box cars to areas from which it is necessary to move damp grain.

We have spent years and much effort developing markets throughout the world for our grain. We are not going to be able to sell damp grain on the export market. No one in eastern Canada will be interested in buying feed grain if the present situation is not rectified.

I have visited the terminal elevators on the west coast and at the Lakehead elevator complex and have been surprised that the construction we have undertaken is not meeting the ordinary needs of today. Recently I read a pamphlet issued by the Japan trade centre dealing with a complete change in the type of shipping that will be used to handle many types of cargoes. Many new ships are being built to carry container cargoes. The containers measure 8 feet by 8 feet by 20 feet and 700 or 800 of them are carried on one ship. It is possible that we shall soon be exploring this method of moving grain from our inland terminals and, if so, the facilities at those terminals will have to be changed accordingly.

All of us remember the efforts made by the hon. member for Skeena to have port and grain handling facilities expanded at Prince Rupert. His efforts were opposed both by the hon. member for Calgary Centre and the hon. member for Niagara Falls when they occupied the position of minister of agriculture. However, I know that the Minister of Public Works, who comes from Canada's western maritime province, is familiar with the development taking place at Prince Rupert and knows the role played by the hon. member for Skeena in that development. The changes made at Prince Rupert will result in that port being able to handle new methods of cargo transportation.

If the government would direct the Department of Public Works to undertake new construction at inland terminals I believe that department has the necessary planning and construction know-how, although these things have not always been evident as some of my friends will argue in the case of the National Arts Centre in Ottawa. I am sure the minister will also agree that if his department rather than Mr. Bennett had had some say in the development of the facilities to be provided in the Roberts Bank project things would have been handled in a much more advantageous manner and many of the problems developing in the area might have been avoided. It is my opinion the minister has the facility to foresee some of the construction needs in his own area. Had he done so he might have avoided the problems which are now developing in western Canada, particularly those in respect of the lamentable situation which gave cause for an hon. member to stand up this afternoon and say we are not only drying a very limited amount of grain in terminal elevators but in inland elevators as well.

The members of the committee made a study of this situation and recommended that construction be undertaken to modernize the facilities for drying grain at a number of points on the prairies. As far as I know this has not been followed up by any concrete action. I presume that the drying facilities at the inland elevators have not been improved and that in fact there has been no substantial gain.

Those are the few remarks I wanted to make in this regard. I feel that the Department of Public Works has a responsibility in this field and that this house has the responsibility to pursue every avenue to see that a long term or permanent solution is found for some of these problems which occur year after year to plague various areas. One of these problems relates to inland terminals and is the result of the fact that we have not constructed new facilities or modernized those built many years ago to meet horse and buggy demands in order to meet the demands of this modern day and age in which we live.

It is generally agreed by all concerned that this is one of the situations which might have been brought to the attention of the minister had hon. members been allowed to take part in the debate sought in the motion earlier today. It is my suggestion that the departments of government should not be divorced from one another and that when responsibilities affect large segments of our economy and our natural resources departments should work together so that an improvement accomplished by one will result in an improvement in the others.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak during the debate today I should like to say that in general I have supported the stand taken by the Minister of Public Works on the Roberts Bank superport issue in British Columbia. The minister was extremely forthright and decisive initially with the provincial government on this matter but as of late I feel he has been discreetly quiet.

I should like to make a protest about the veil of secrecy that has been dropped over the whole matter of the Roberts Bank superport, both by the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Public Works. This matter is of the greatest consequence to the future planning of the lower mainland of British Columbia and is probably more important than any project in recent memory.

As recently as August 17 I wrote a letter to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport and W. A. C. Bennett, the premier of British Columbia, in which I said that in view of the extensive ramifications of this project for the future of the lower Fraser valley and the resulting controversy, would it not be pertinent at this time to examine the Canadian National alternative route along the south bank of the Fraser river, a route which, incidentally, is favoured by the lower mainland regional planning board. Further, it would seem logical for a publicly owned railway to serve a port facility at least partially financed by the federal government. It appeared to me at that time and it appears to me today that this whole scheme has proceeded with undue haste, unreasonable secrecy and insufficient regard for the views of those people who are going to be most affected by this project.

On September 24 I submitted a notice of motion for production of papers and it was only recently, over a month later, that the government finally agreed to produce those papers. I hasten to point out that I have yet to receive any of the documents requested, but at least the government is on record as agreeing to produce them at some time.

I feel now as I have felt for some time that there is federal pussyfooting about this project and that the government has been less than frank with the house about the Roberts Bank negotiations and agreements. It is not to the advantage of anyone that this be allowed to persist.

The original proposal, under which the rail line to serve Roberts Bank was to go through the finest agricultural area in the lower mainland and finally proceed along the shoreline of Boundary bay, which incidentally is the last major recreational resource on the lower mainland for the purpose of public recreation and also as a wildlife refuge, created a huge public outcry. Premier Bennett recently bowed to this public outcry and after one of his famous second looks ordered a study to proceed under Mr. J. Broadbent, vice-president and general manager of the Great Eastern, a provincially owned railroad.

Mr. Broadbent's study and proposals have resulted in some alterations of the original proposal so far as the rail lines are concerned. However, while conducting his study, Mr. Broadbent neglected to consult the chief planning agency for that area, the lower mainland regional planning board which represents 28 lower mainland municipalities and is ultimately responsible for lower mainland regional planning. It seems ludicrous to me that the chief planning authority for the area should not even have been on the team to assist Mr. Broadbent in his study and recommendations.

The Broadbent proposal, as some members may recall, suggested that the existing Canadian National rail line be used from Clayburn to Fort Langley where it would then connect with British Columbia hydro links and finally the port, thus avoiding the rather tortuous and very costly route through the mountainous area of Matsqui, known as Mount Lehman and Bradner. The proposal also suggested that the rail line be removed some two miles from the beaches at Boundary bay to avoid very serious despoilation of the last warm water beach in the area. This seems to me to be a compromise, but it may be only part of the over-all concept. I am forced, because I have no documents, to make some guesses and assumptions. This government leaves me no alternative by denying me access to the information I need to be deadly accurate.

Two British Columbia cabinet ministers, Hon. Ralph Loffmark and Hon. Frank Richter, had previously assured the lower mainland public that the original route was by far the most economic that could be chosen. Paradoxically, Mr. Broadbent's route is now being boosted as being the cheaper by some $7 million. What kind of hasty planning has our provincial government been up to when a $7 million anomaly of this kind can manifest itself in so short a time? It reminds me of the Ottawa arts centre estimate.

Mr. Broadbent's second stage of recommendations disturbs me possibly a little more. It foresees a new C.P.R. bridge at Albion to connect with Fort Langley, thus avoiding the use of the C.N. line. This seems to be directed toward the development of a rail loop which would give the provincial government owned railroad complete access into the lower mainland area, and anticipates a causeway over the arm of Burrard Inlet to the present P.G.E. lines. Apparently what has happened here is that the public has been asked to approve of a half-loaf set of rail links, which probably implies more than we have been led to believe up to this moment. I do not think that a rationalized rail system is necessarily a sinister thing, but I am afraid that once we have agreed to a portion of the line it is possible that a much larger system may be forthcoming.

I do not think any one link in a rail pattern should be considered in isolation. The general public is entitled to know what are the over-all plans and effects. I believe that by keeping this whole matter under wraps the federal government has defaulted in its responsibility for Canadian federal interests and has allowed provincial interests, the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority and the Pacific Great Eastern Railway, to drive a rather bold bargain with the national railways throughout the lower mainland.

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Rose: I would prefer, sir, that I be allowed to finish.

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): I was only going to suggest to my hon. friend, if I may, that while I would like to discuss all these matters in my position as a member of parliament from Vancouver and a minister from British Columbia, I would be entirely out of order if I discussed them now. They fall entirely within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport, whose estimates will be considered immediately after those of my department. Therefore I am certain my hon. friend will have to repeat everything he is now saying.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I assure the minister that I would be most reluctant to repeat everything I have now said, and I know the minister would not want that. However, since the rail links are directly involved in the access to the superport, I suggest this question comes under the minister's department. I would be most happy if I were allowed to proceed with this question.

The federal government has been reproved once before because it neglected its duty to the people of Canada over matters concerning rail lines within a province. I cite the pertinent parts of the case of The Queen v. Board of Transport Commissioners before the Supreme Court of Canada, and later the Luscar case. Referring to the Luscar case, the judge said:

> There again the criterion of the jurisdiction is the fact that the operations are a part of the interprovincial system.

The question of jurisdiction before the supreme court was whether an Ontario government system for commuter trains using C.N.R. tracks came under the federal board. The court held:

> The constitutional jurisdiction depends on the character of a particular service provided on that railway line. The fact that for some purposes the commuter service should be considered as a distinct service does not make it a distinct line of railway. From a physical point of view the commuter service trains are part of the over-all operations of the line over which they run.

The court has since reproved the board and the federal attorney general for not appearing to argue for their jurisdiction and held that the provincial system was subject to federal regulation. On the basis of this ruling the physical character of the Roberts Bank route is that it is the sole rail connection from interprovincial rail lines to a federal port. That it may incidentally carry local deliveries from Vancouver by B.C. Hydro trains does not change the principal purpose or character of that rail connection.

Perhaps it would be to the benefit of everyone if there were a rationalization of the whole lower mainland rail system into a recognizable rail authority for the area. There is a federal interest involved here. I think the federal government, since it is deeply concerned with the financing of the Roberts Bank port facilities, should be very interested in the composition of any authority or group which will control the rail access to this very important port and the Vancouver waterfront generally.

I would like now to quote from the British Columbia Gazette of September 26, 1968. My quotation is from the Canada-British Columbia Joint Development Act under which easement rights were negotiated between the province of British Columbia and the government of Canada. The pertinent part of the document is found at page 479 and reads as follows:

—hereunder has now been reached between representatives of the board and of Her Majesty in right of British Columbia (hereinafter referred to as the "Crown") with regard to the period May 17, 1968-December 31, 1969, it being expected that, prior to December 31, 1969, a permanent solution of the matter will have been reached in respect of all periods subsequent to that last mentioned date.

Paragraph No. 2 provides:

The easement rights granted by paragraph 1 above shall nevertheless terminate on December 31, 1969.

I suggest this is an extremely serious matter. We are spending millions of dollars on a federally financed port and the situation is that we have an agreement with the government of British Columbia that is good for one year only. In other words, it is a temporary agreement. It seems to me the federal government must be on guard so that it is not put into an intolerable position in bargaining with the premier of British Columbia. I note that the British Columbia Gazette to which I have referred has outlined this matter in some detail. However, what is missing alarms me very much. What happens after December 31, 1969, if Mr. Bennett decides to change the rules of the game? Will we have to carry the coal by helicopter down the rail line and across the then closed easement in order that it may reach the ships? Will the federal writ, which incidentally is to the low water mark, force the Minister of Public Works to roll up his pant legs and wade from the docks to the waterway? What appurtenances are part of this lease? Where will federal services be established for the storage of material and equipment? Where will the servicing be carried on? These are very serious questions and we must be careful how we deal with them.

We all recall that in 1961 the previous Conservative administration was invited to sit down with Premier Bennett on the Columbia treaty and ended up like the oysters in "The Walrus and the Carpenter". The National Harbours Board is now a tenant with a one year lease on the access to Roberts Bank, and Mr. Bennett is the landlord. One can visualize the renewal of that lease after December 31, 1969, being one where the landlord can padlock the tenant and where the board is at the dubious mercy of Mr. Bennett. When Mr. Bennett invites you to dinner, you might be the main course. I feel there has been an extreme reluctance on the part of the government to table the documents—

The Chairman: Order, please. It being five o'clock it is my duty—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I think there is a certain disposition to continue with the estimates of this department. Do you want to deal with the question now or wait until the Speaker is in the chair?

The Chairman: Is it agreed that I do not see the clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have not had very long on these estimates today and I think there would be general agreement to continue until six o'clock.

The Chairman: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rose: I shall try to conclude as rapidly as I can, Mr. Chairman. As I was saying, I feel there has been a reluctance on the part of the government to table the necessary documents. This is because the government does not wish to face a test of federal constitutional authority and wishes to avoid a constitutional confrontation with the provincial government at this time.

The federal government is undergoing an extreme paralysis in asserting its authority and the result will be a mish-mash of port authorities all across Canada. In the example before us we have established a precedent in that a provincial government has been delegated, by default, powers that can be used against the federal interest in future disputes of this kind. I ask: Is the federal government concerned about this? I know the minister originally was concerned about it. If the government is no longer concerned about it, why not?

Federal railways are now being driven into agreements with provincial rail lines, and once the authority over these matters is frittered away or delegated it might be very difficult to get it back. In addition, the port terminal operators, which include the federal government, will in future be at the mercy of any provincial government in a position to exert considerable influence over the various costs of service to these ports. I think what is needed in this area to avoid future controversies of this kind is an over-all system, a rationalization initiated by a public authority so that the interests of everyone concerned are planned and considered.

I believe we are on the verge of making decisions that are going to affect the planning of the area I happen to represent and the areas adjacent to it for the next century, perhaps even longer. In my view the decision to go along with Mr. Broadbent's compromise solution pleases no one, including the national railways. The railways however, appear to be prepared to subordinate their own views and rights in order to ensure for themselves access to the superport at a later date. I think it is interesting that both the national railways seem to consider the establishment of the port at this time to be premature, if only because of their considerable financial investments on Burrard inlet in the Canadian Pacific Railway docks at Port Moody and the Canadian National Railways Neptune docks on the north shore.

Expediency is not a sufficient excuse for regional planning. The federal government, by its reluctance to act, is assisting Premier Bennett and defaulting on its responsibilities in this very important matter. If officials would be more open and forthright in explaining their position, most of us would feel much more comfortable.

Various municipalities have been concerned about this matter. Although some are prepared to endorse the present compromise on the grounds that it will provide more industrial development for their areas, I do not think this will happen, and even Mr. Broadbent seems to support the suggestion that high speed commuter trains do not really add much to the municipality's ability to attract secondary industries.

People from the lower mainland planning board still feel that the kind of energy devoted to the development of the Broadbent compromise might have been better directed. They continue to favour the route which would provide a communications corridor along the south shore of the Fraser river and avoid the problem of the beaches. Some of them even feel that a causeway would assist in the development of port facilities in the Ladner area of Delta municipality.

I should like to say Mr. Chairman, that I do not think we can stand idly by forever. We have to search for all kinds of information with regard to what on the surface appears to be a very erratic position that has been arrived at in haste and protected by silence. That is why on this side we have been pressing for about three months now to get the kind of information we need. We cannot reach any reasonable and sensible conclusions on the basis of the rather tight-lipped and terse comments from the government side of the house.

The province appears to regard the lower mainland regional planning board as being the equivalent of some small pressure group. This kind of attitude is only too prevalent in British Columbia. The province has recently placed a dredging reserve for gravel right in the middle of Boundary bay. One is moved to ask why the federal government has not placed a recreational reserve in the same area. This bay is situated on the very doorstep of a great metropolitan area whose population is due to double by the turn of the century.

Finally, it seems to me that exhibited here is a total lack of co-ordination between the federal and provincial jurisdictions. Roberts Bank was a provincial game reserve in 1947, as was Boundary bay, but in 1968 Boundary bay has become a gravel reserve. Everyone wants to know to what extent there is federal interest in this development. Has the federal government decided to abandon its interest? Do we have to wait until we are in a real mess before we act? We will need a Pacific development board like the board in the Atlantic provinces in order to prevent the area from suffering intense religional problems. How will we integrate federal interests with provincial interests. Must we wait until we have an entirely new organizational framework? I do not think it should be necessary to impose a structure like the Atlantic Development Board in order to have the region extreme cost when it can be prevented by intelligent foresight.

I think the reason we are heading for a mess is that we have lacked the kind of courage necessary to go in as a federal authority and make the decisions we need to make. We have been forced to accept a compromise which is unacceptable, but we are doing this all the time. What will happen to the old Boundary bay airport? This airport can be easily declared a surplus property at some future time, just as Jericho was, and an entirely new interest could take over. At the moment it is only being used as a wireless station, although civilian pilots and some commercial transport pilots would dearly love to use this facility. The national wildlife service might be interested too in seeing Boundary bay became a wildlife refuge station and sanctuary.

People in this area are becoming extremely alarmed about where these rail links are going to go. The people of Fort Langley, for instance, are very concerned about what the changed route will do their community. There will be a line running through the very fine farmland along the Salmon river, and there is a risk it will destroy a fine residential area in the community of Fort Langley. Why is it necessary to have this third railway?

I should like to conclude by saying that the reason we have been so determined in pushing this whole question is that provincial political control of the lower mainland railways and port facilities seems to be the main stake in the whole matter. If this is so, we can deal with it. If it is not so, that is another matter, but in any event we are entitled to know what the real objectives are. Surely we can avoid a constitutional confrontation with Premier Bennett. We must be sophisticated enough so that we can plan with the province and do this whole thing openly. It has been suggested that there has been a public hearing with various groups. What happened was that Premier Bennett called to his office various petitioners one by one. This is not a public hearing.

I hope there will be some resolution of this hassle and I hope we can avoid constitutional difficulties. However, I doubt it because I think we will be heading toward this sort of thing as long as we keep matters of extreme national and, incidentally, local concern under a hat. I realize I have been persistent to the point of boring the house, but I do not think this is important so long as something is accomplished.

Finally, I think it is time the federal government acted decisively to protect the public interest and gave us a definitive legal opinion on whether or not it has the authority to take charge of this whole project and bring it to a reasonable, long term and sensible solution.

[Mr. Rose.]

• (5:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, in commenting on the estimates of the Department of Public Works, I must pay tribute not only to the minister, but to his staff, which I have met on several occasions. Quite a few of my colleagues, I think, have met these officials, particularly in parliamentary committees. This team which, together with the minister, ensures the efficient administration of the department, is exceptionally competent and particularly convinced of the importance of its responsibilities towards the Canadian public. For example, I am among those who have admired the ease with which these officials answer the most complicated questions, which proves that they know their department thoroughly.

They deserve to be praised for that to offset criticism levelled at them. Of course, Mr. Chairman, when a service of that size is concerned, it is always possible—to use a very popular expression where I come from—to pick holes in something and find cracks in the shield when one must absolutely find fault with something. I think, however, that the department is well administered as a whole. Moreover, I think that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) showed exceptional courage when preparing his estimates by cutting them drastically to meet that financial situation and the wishes of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) who had asked his colleagues to set an example to the provincial and municipal governments. In fact, he asked them to be extremely moderate with regard to capital expenditures precisely to prevent crises as serious as those we deplore in some European countries, such as England and France.

When the session began, Mr. Chairman, I tried for a few weeks to keep tab more or less of the amounts asked in this house from the Department of Public Works and other departments for works which normally should have been carried out only by the Department of Public Works. They added up to approximately $2 billion. I must say that most of those requests dealt with works which normally could be justified but that, under the circumstances, could certainly not be undertaken without seriously endangering the financial and economic situation of Canada and dangerously straining the budget. I am sure that the minister had to show great courage for he must have been subjected to extreme pressure. When one considers an administration as important as the federal government, one must take into consideration the representations made to the ministers, the subtlety with which they try to establish priorities, to give precedence to what is most urgent and to put off till the morrow what can wait. But this is not the main part of my remarks this afternoon, Mr. Chairman.

I would like, during the discussion of the estimates, to deal with the National Arts Centre. Many criticisms have been made about this national monument built for the centennial of confederation. I had the advantage of sitting on the committee which heard the evidence given by the Secretary of State—responsible for the National Arts Centre—his whole staff, the directors of the centre, those responsible for the various committees that studied the plans progressively, the architects, some government advisers, as well as officials of the Department of Public Works.

We questioned them very closely on everything. I do not think that one detail escaped our questioning, and we even questioned them at least two or three times on the same matter. Some of my colleagues are past masters at questioning witnesses and pumping them. Furthermore, people say in some circles that there has been a scandal. Here is a monument, they say, which was supposed to cost about $18 million, at the outset, and later $29 million; now, according to experts, it will cost $46 million.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, the opposition could see in this a golden opportunity to say that there was a major scandal. However, in spite of repeated questions, and all the subterfuge they could resort to, those who were interested in finding a scandal, could not even find a trace of one. In fact, Mr. Chairman, we have proof today that this building costs $46 million and this is, in my opinion, the most significant fact.

If evidence of squandering or patronage could have been found or if some politicians had taken advantage of the situation to gain some personal benefits, I too would say: "There is a scandal", but such is not the case. Everything has been conscientiously checked, not only by one, two or three men, but by dozens of men and at least half a dozen control committees.

There was, for instance, the commission set-up to prepare the plans. There were the architects and engineers and even consulting engineers. Also, the officials of the Department of Public Works. And then, of course, Treasury Board. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that makes a team of serious people, very much aware of their responsibilities. Then, how can we explain such differences in costs between the initial estimates which were around $18 or $19 million and the actual cost of $46 million? It is very simple for those who seek the truth.

First of all, they had thought about building on a given site which was changed for all kinds of reasons that would take too long to explain. Then, they chose another site, only to discover that the subsoil was of solid rock. Therefore, the cost immediately went up. Then, after the preliminary blueprints had been completed, they realized that a parking space for 900 cars was needed. In a rock foundation, the cost of this would reach a few million dollars. Then, they thought special sound-proofing was necessary. Everybody will understand, of course that if, during a concert, one can hear noises originating from the furnace and from the air conditioning, music lovers will not be happy, especially if they are perfectionists. Thus, many things which were judged essential in order to have a perfect public building were added as work progressed. The construction of a $20 million monument which would not have been perfect would not have given us any national pride. Now, since it is a unique monument which is built once in a century and there are so few throughout the world, it was surely impossible for those who drew up the plans to foresee those things.

I agree that, in an ordinary construction, some time is required to establish plans, specifications and costs, but in the present case, it was an exceptional and huge monument. It even belongs to a field where we have no experience in Canada. It is even something almost unique, if we compare that centre with other monuments throughout the world, because ours will be more modern.

The whole construction was performed with all the guarantees which I have just mentioned under the supervision of those various committees and with the approval of Treasury Board. I myself put the question bluntly to some of the witnesses. For instance, I asked the deputy minister of public works: "Can you tell me that the monument we have there is worth $46 million?" And he replied: "Yes, of course, what we have here is worth $46 million. The difference between the original estimates and the present cost, the true cost, is due to the additions that were made."

Certain things, for those who are not knowledgeable, are absolutely scandalous. At one point, the director told us: "The curtain of the large theatre will cost $72,000." Mr. Chairman, can you imagine the reaction of those who know nothing about the situation. As for me, my eyes popped out when I heard that the curtain would cost $72,000. But, when we were told what kind of a curtain it is—that it was necessary to draw up plans and specifications—when we were told that only one plant in the whole world could make curtains of that size and that it is located in Japan, I understood better. It is a plant which has been in existence for 800 years. Naturally, this curtain had to be packed in a special way in order to send it to Canada. One can then understand this figure of $72,000. It may seem excessive, for example, to people who have no experience of these matters, who live in isolated parts of the country and who are struggling with poverty. However, in the case of a monument which reflects the soul of a nation, this sum is not excessive, for the best is not too good for a country such as Canada.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, when a country reaches maturity and wants to compare itself with others, it must be able to do so favourably, and the best is not a luxury in our country. The National Arts Centre will be a source of pride for all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mongrain: It has been said that the way those things added up is questionable. Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that normally things are not done that way. It might happen that a construction project, even an important one, might include one, two or three additional features, but not as many as in this case. It is obvious. Monuments like that one are not erected every year; one is built every hundred years and it might be another three hundred years before another one is built. It is important that those additional expenditures be checked as they occur, that they be justified by various bodies that controlled one another.

This criticism was also heard: It will not be an economic proposition. Of course, it will not be so fundamentally. No one ever thought, for instance, that parliament would be a paying proposition in itself. That is obvious. No one ever thought that the C.B.C., set up as a public service, would make money.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Many other things are not economic in our country, Mr. Chairman, but if they are not, as far as money is concerned, they nevertheless constitute an enrichment for a country like Canada. Canada must provide Canadians not only with bread but also with culture and arts. Canada must give all its children the possibility of making the most of their talents and developing them here instead of having to go into exile to the United States or European countries.

So, Mr. Chairman, these things cannot be valued in dollars; they have an intrinsic value. These are intangible things that depend on money but which intelligent people understand; those who do not understand are lacking in intelligence and goodwill, or they are over-critical. That seems quite obvious to everyone. We say: It is a great luxury. But, after visiting the establishment and examining the plans, we realize that the building is really functional. Everything that we could describe as a great luxury does not exist. As a matter of fact, lines are simple, and costly accessories as we find in European institutions have been avoided to achieve a solid work that will perfectly meet the needs of the most demanding artists and even the perfectionists.

There have been insinuations for a time that Ottawa had been favoured to the detriment of other small towns that do not have the same advantages. That is a lot of childishness, stuff and nonsense, because Ottawa after all is the capital of Canada.

If we wanted to erect a monument which was to be the property of Canadians, then the right place to do it was in the national capital. Canadians and people from abroad, who will come to visit our national capital, will be very happy indeed to see the monument commemorating the first centenary of confederation. As for us, we shall have a little more pride in ourselves.

Mr. Chairman, some people have suggested that this building entailed extravagant expenditures. But figures never tell the whole story. We could have built a $20 million monument which could have been inadequate. This would have been wasteful expenditures and could rightly be called scandalous. Now, we have a $46 million monument which financially cost us more, but which meets all the requirements of the greatest perfectionist in the world. We can invite the most demanding companies of the whole world and they will be happy—and this is already evident—to perform here.

Mr. Chairman, we owed such a monument to Canada, our country. We owed it also to the young Canadians who will come after us and who will find here not only a reason to be proud of their country but also a place where they will be able to reach their ideal and continue to improve their knowledge in their field of interest. It will also be a centre to which our Canadian artists in exile will be able to return. Already a number of them are ready to come back in order to pursue their artistic career, thanks to the monument erected by the Canadian government which will be, as I say, a source of inspiration for all Canadians.

I think that it would be mean to keep on criticizing the National Arts Centre. Everyone readily understands what I mean. Therefore, we should try to make everyone realize that a country which aspires to such great fortunes, which is on the point of coming to maturity, and wants to play a part among the great nations, must from time to time achieve great things such as the National Arts Centre. Great things, of course, cost money because one does not get anything for nothing and it is not always the cheapest things which are the best.

In my opinion, it was a good idea to clarify the matter because it has been attempted too often to seek in that cause for scandal. Efforts were even made at a certain time to call the former minister of public works (Mr. McIlraith) to account, when everything had already been accounted for by a lot of people involved in every phase of the construction of that building. I call on the members who have not visited this Canadian Arts Centre to go and visit it as soon as possible for their enlightenment.

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I was listening to him quite carefully and I thought he was talking very skilfully and in a general way about public buildings in Ottawa, cultural buildings, and so on. In that sense he was quite in order. However, I draw to his attention the fact that the arts centre specifically falls under the estimates of the Secretary of State. If he wants to deal with that specific building then the hon. member should wait until those estimates are before the committee. If he wishes to deal with public buildings in a general sense, then he is, of course, in order.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, you are right. However, allow me to point out very respectfully that in the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, when questions were put to the Secretary of State about the construction cost of that building, he referred us to the Department of Public Works. He told us that if we wanted to deal with cost, amended plans, increases or extensions, we should apply to the Department of Public Works. Complaints were made to the Minister of Public Works, Mr. Chairman, and not to the Secretary of State.

I am speaking, of course, of the building which was constructed by the Department of Public Works and of its cost to Canada. In order to justify that cost, of course, I am speaking of the future use of that building. I apologize, because I seem to disagree with you, Mr. Chairman, but I think that it is not so much a difference of opinions. I feel that you were impressed yourself by all the good things I said about the future use of the building and I am pleased to have been eloquent enough to convince you. I hope I can also convince all my colleagues. However, basically my argument was meant to prove that the cost is not excessive, that the successive increases are largely justified, and that all the experts agree in saying that the monument, which has been added to in the course of its construction, is really worth what it costs us.

Besides, there may be a reason to justify why we proceeded differently in this case. Indeed, there was a date line. It had been hoped that it would be completed for the centennial year, which was impossible. So, Mr. Chairman, under the circumstances, there is nothing to fuss about. It is a beautiful monument and we should be proud of it. It cost no more than it normally should have.

I shall conclude on a short remark which has absolutely nothing to do with the Arts Centre but which concerns the Department of Public Works. I am thinking of the retaining walls along the shores of the St. Lawrence in my riding and in some of the others. In fact, I mean my riding and the neighbouring one. The Department of Public Works is responsible for the construction of those walls to prevent land erosion.

I should like to ask the minister, his inspectors and his officials, to proceed with this work as extensively as possible.

I have seen with my own eyes certain lands being eroded to the extent where the shore has now reached the house or the cottage. The tide or the waves have nibbled away, in certain cases, some 100 or 150 feet of land; trees measuring 15 or 18 inches in diameter have been uprooted. And some experts say: We are not to blame, the waves cause that.

I have had the opportunity perhaps a hundred times, of seeing that the erosion is caused by the waves, but, in most cases, by waves stirred up by ships that go by too fast. Year after year, those waves nibble away at the shores, to the detriment of the shore owners. I feel that very often the inspectors of the Department of Public Works are really too severe and blame too easily natural erosion for the disappearance of the land of the shore owners. I would therefore ask the minister whether it might not be possible to ask those inspectors to be, let us say, a bit more human in their conclusions or to file more complete observations and not to be merely content with spending let us say 20 minutes or half an hour on the site and then say it is erosion. Let them go and see at different intervals. Let them go there when large ships are going through. They will realize that, in my riding and in the two adjoining ones—and I speak of this because, naturally, the cottages there belong to people in my riding—navigation produces erosion which causes great damage and is very costly for the shore owners.

I think the same situation exists on the other side of the river; anyway, it does on my side. I myself have made representations to the department; in most cases, I did not get a satisfactory answer. Mr. Chairman, I intend to raise the matter again with more details because, in my opinion when these shore owners built houses 100 or 150 feet from the shore, they could not predict that their cottage would one day be swept away by the tide, which is more or less what is happening today.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, at this stage of the estimates I wish to ask the minister a few questions and at a later stage perhaps he may be able to answer them.

I say to my hon. friend who recently sat down that if he is worried about erosion problems he should consider the erosion that has taken place on the east coast during the last thousand years. He should thank his lucky little stars for his problems. If ships are giving his constituents problems the port of Halifax will certainly welcome all those that go up the St. Lawrence.

Can the minister say whether his department is in a position to consider the recommendations of the so-called Murray Jones report that deals with the development of the general over-all land use within the confines of the port of Halifax and Bedford basin? Specifically, is the department able to make specific recommendations flowing naturally from the important observations contained in the Murray Jones report? On the Halifax side of the port I know the department is bringing to a fairly rapid conclusion the development of container facilities. It is appropriate at this time for me to ask the department to look at the long range implications of this development and to consider adequate and proper utilization of the land surrounding the basin and the port. In this connection the Murray Jones report is most important.

I apologize if the answer to my next question is a matter of public record. Has the government advised the province of Nova Scotia or the Halifax-Dartmouth bridge commission that it will participate in the construction of the second harbour crossing, the approaches to that crossing and the crossing of the northwest arm?

If I may be parochial, may I ask the minister to advise the committee of the present status of plans for a new federal building in the city of Dartmouth? Do current plans within the department call for the construction of such a building or is it contemplated that suitable and adequate space may be leased elsewhere?

My last two questions are of pressing concern to some of my constituents. First, may I make a direct representation on behalf of one of the more active fishing areas in the constituency of Dartmouth-Halifax East. I am speaking of Little Harbour, and the minister will know what I mean when I say I understand the department's difficulties with regard to Little Harbour. It is all a question of priorities. I urge the minister and the department to make provision for Little Harbour in next year's estimates. That, Mr. Chairman, is an unabashed and straightforward plea.

Finally, may I ask about the access road to an old and traditional area, the breakwater at Eastern Passage in Halifax county. The piece of land in front of the breakwater recently was sold for back taxes. The fishermen in the area had to acquire this land; they had to pay the back taxes in order to be assured of access to the breakwater and the wharves adjacent to it. I respectfully ask the minister to look into this matter. I hope to ask the minister more questions when we come to later votes but for the time being that is all I wish to ask.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a few questions to satisfy my curiosity about an article that appeared in the Ottawa Journal on Tuesday, October 1, 1968. The headline reads, "DPW 'Philosophy' Switch Saving Taxpayers Money". The first two paragraphs of the article read as follows:

> It cost something like $10,000,000-plus for the 18 floors of 220-foot high Judy's Tower out at Tunney's Pasture. And now public works is running up 23 floors of a new 253-foot high-rise two blocks away for $6,694,000. How come five more floors and 33 feet of height cost better than $3,306,000 less? And at today's construction prices, running far ahead of those of five years ago? The answer, says public works, is a "break-through" in a lot of things. But mostly in departmental thinking.

I wish to ask the minister a number of questions. Was a clear and precise building program formulated for the private commission as well as for the department's own design? On what basis is the public plan more economical compared with that of the private commission?

For example, let us take the over-all floor area and volume. What is the usable floor area and what is the ratio of net to gross. How flexible is the design? What are the respective finishes, exterior and interior? What is the extent of partitioning? Is it the same or will it be greatly reduced? What amount of built-ins and fixed furnishings is included in both cases? Also, what was the total environmental control that was required in both cases? What other features were sacrificed or felt to be unnecessary at this time? What would be the total cost per square foot of the building, if it were designed privately or publicly, at the stage when the building is ready for occupancy?

Another question I might ask is this. Is the architect's fee equitably included in the cost for private and public designs? Are the hidden costs of public administration, such as use of office space, light, heat, janitorial services, building maintenance, depreciation, blueprinting, office supplies, general administration, owner's job supervision, etc., included in the comparison? Third, what assurance can be given that the new estimate will not be exceeded during actual construction? When the Department of Public Works submits its publications for the people of Canada to read, this is the type of information which I think should be given.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, there are one or two constituency matters I should like to bring to the minister's attention. Some of them relate to wharves. First, I should like to point out that when the Columbia river treaty was signed and the Arrow dam built just north of Castlegar practically every wharf along the Arrow lakes was destroyed. Many of the communities had to be relocated. I do not know what kind of agreement the federal department has with B.C. Hydro for the replacement of these wharves but I suggest the minister should acquaint the committee with the terms of any agreement which may exist in this regard.

I point out that to date only one wharf has been replaced along the Arrow lakes. That wharf is at Nakusp. The department has done a reasonably good job; there are several complaints which I have taken up with the minister, and he is kindly looking into them. I am sure that quite often the hon. gentleman will find the B.C. Hydro authority coming to his department to say there is no need for the replacement of wharves at little places like Burton, Fauquier, Edgewood, or other communities which are springing up along the Arrow lakes. But they had these wharf facilities prior to the flooding. The new community of Fauquier has been in contact with me regarding the wharf; the people wanted to know to whom they should write. I gave them the minister's address and he may well have received a communication from them by now.

I suggest to the minister that in no circumstances should he allow his department to keep from these new communities which are springing up or which have been moved back from the water line the boating facilities which they enjoyed before the High Arrow project. I am sure it is only a matter of time before he receives requests from Burton and Edgewood in this regard, and I trust he will give them sympathetic attention.

The department has been dealing for some time with another wharf—really it is a breakwater and boat bay—being built by the town of Ainsworth on Kootenay lake. This is not a large community but there are not many communities like it in Canada displaying the co-operative spirit which this little community has shown. Public works engineers who have been there to see the boat bay and the breakwater estimate that at least $12,000 in labour has already been spent on it. They put a cat in to clear the area. They put a shovel in and dug out an area where boats could shelter. They hauled a vast amount of rock. They supplied logs and built a breakwater so that boats in that area could shelter in the event of a storm. The minister knows this lake well and he realizes this is the only spot between Kaslo and Balfour where a boat can run for shelter in the event of a storm. I have seen the estimates of the cost. They are fairly high; in fact, some local people believe they are too high. But I ask the minister this: will his department match the $12,000 in the coming budget? That is the least he could do, give an additional $12,000 to the people of Ainsworth so they can add to the structure they have started. Perhaps a further amount could be included in some future budget.

Let us give encouragement, for goodness sake, to a community which has the intestinal fortitude to go out and do something for itself. They are hoping to build a little launching ramp where boats coming from Nelson to Kaslo and Ainsworth can get down to the beautiful Kootenay lake, one of the best fishing lakes in Canada. We do not catch little fish there; we get them up to 30 pounds, big rainbow trout, and people come from all over North America to this fine fishing area. The local people need places to launch their boats. Today people have more leisure time than in the past. They have their little cabin cruisers and rowboats and motors and they need places from which to launch them. We need more of these facilities and I urge the minister to put this work on his agenda for the coming year. It is not asking very much when one considers the vast amount covered by these estimates.

There are one or two other matters I should like to deal with while I am on this subject. We have heard a great deal about roads to resources and there is one road in particular I should like to mention. I refer to the Stuart-Cassiar road. At one time the federal government used to share in the annual cost of this road. Cassiar, I might say, is a whole mountain of asbestos in the northern part of British Columbia, and the road is designed to give access to this area. I do not think a better expenditure could be made in this part of British Columbia than by completing this road into this part of the country and giving access to a region which is extremely high in minerals. Perhaps the minister could tell us why the agreement fell through. I know he has a difficult customer to deal with at times in the premier of British Columbia. Sometimes the demands from the provincial government might seem a little high. But I do feel the federal government should be sharing at least in this particular road. The lack of money is delaying its completion. A lot of money has already been spent on this highway and I think we should continue it and make certain it is completed at a very early date.

[Mr. Harding.]

I wish to say one more thing and it is in connection with Roberts Bank and the premier of British Columbia. I think two portfolios may be involved here, and possibly the Department of Transport is the one to which these remarks should be addressed. However, a number of years ago we had a minister here by the name of C. D. Howe who knew how to say no to Premier Bennett when the premier of British Columbia was wrong.

I recall when the deal to sell the water of the Columbia for a song to Kaiser was under consideration and how C. D. Howe told the premier of British Columbia, "We are not going to go for this foolish deal—period." The federal government of the day had the courage to pass legislation and stop the foolish sell-out of a resource.

We can erode federal responsibility to the point where it will become ineffective. I say it is now time for a minister in the federal government to stand up to Premier Bennett and say no. If harbours and national transportation are federal responsibilities, then let us have the courage to tell this man no and mean no.

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks following the long series of statements that have been made by members. I want to tell the members who have participated in the debate that I am grateful for what they have said. Most of their comments were valuable. Most of them were very generous to the department and to me, and I appreciate that.

I am a new boy in the department and am fully conscious that I have got to take some time to grasp the work of the department and to learn the aspirations of members in various parts of Canada because here we are dealing with bringing services directly to people. Therefore this department is extremely important to people who live in the more remote areas of Canada, and because of that is extremely important to individual members of parliament. The individual member of parliament is given credit for obtaining those services which are part of the daily lives of the people in all areas as the result of the representations that he has made in the House of Commons. In other words, Mr. Chairman, this is a far more political department than the one I was in charge of formerly. However, I want to say to hon. members that in the operation of the department I will assure them that no constituent of theirs in any part of Canada is going to suffer for the sole reason that constituents themselves were foolish enough to put a member on the opposite side of the house instead of on this side. I think that is an assurance that is due to members' constituents in all parts of Canada. I give them it unconditionally, and I will see it works that way.

In this department we are dealing with a variety of extremely important services such as dredging, the building and maintenance of harbours, and the erosion of water frontage, the question raised by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières. We are doing what we think is fair. Where the responsibility for erosion is at least 50 per cent because of the effect of transportation in rivers or the building of government installations, then we accept the full responsibility for preventing that erosion. Where it is less than that we try to negotiate on the basis of a breakdown, after discussion and investigation by our engineers.

Several hon. members discussed the important question of services and assistance for the tourist business. A very important tourist industry is developing for Canada through the use of pleasure craft. As a matter of fact my department has received a report from the west coast which shows that there are no less than 71,000 tourist boats in Georgia Strait. In passing I may say I have a friend who has a yacht in that general area, and he says that if we could only put the commercial fishermen out of business he could catch fish that would produce not 65 cents for a half pound but over $8 per pound. Indeed the tourist business today is extremely important and we have to pay more attention to it than we have in the past when we restricted our activities to dropping some stones to provide protection for pleasure craft. That is not the final answer.

I now wish to deal with the remarks of the hon. member for Western Nova who said that a number of fishing villages were inadequately taken care of in respect of accommodation. I draw his attention to the fact that we are moving into an era when larger boats are going farther off shore and, as a consequence, the type of facility required in respect of dredging and the building of docks is far more expensive than hitherto. Instead of building a great number of very small docks we shall have to point out to the fishermen that we will have to build a small number of larger docks which will require bigger expenditures. I would point out that in the case of representations which my department has received for the expenditure of $70,000 or $80,000 on a small wharf we have discovered that the amount of fish crossing such a wharf was not more than two tons a year. It is unreasonable on the part of people in such instances to expect that we make such expenditures.

I think it was the hon. member for Edmonton Centre who made reference to our intention to build utilitarian buildings. I am in favour of such buildings. I am of the opinion that a person who goes to work is entitled to a comfortable atmosphere but I do not think he should be provided with luxurious surroundings. He is supposed to enjoy that at home.

An hon. Member: Tell Joe Greene that.

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): So far as I am concerned, in the erection of buildings for the accommodation of servants of the public I am disposed to insist upon a greater degree of utilitarianism than in the past, and in the case of the building mentioned, which we are erecting for $6.5 million, about $16 per square foot, we are emphasizing the utilitarian nature of the building. At the same time I think the departmental buildings are entitled to have a little bit more sugar cake, if you want to put it that way, but when we double or treble the cost per foot in order to erect a building then I think we can do with less prestigiousness, and that is what we are driving for at the present time.

The hour is now six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, and again I want to thank members who have participated in the debate. I want to assure them that in respect of all the questions they have asked they will individually receive a letter from the department giving them direct answers.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, we are quite happy with the minister's explanation and, even though it is nearly six o'clock, if you would like to call some of the items we would be glad to co-operate.

The Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, there were some questions I asked on vote 1. I am sure the minister would like to take some time and answer them, so I would call it six o'clock.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before leaving the chair I should like to remind hon. members of the provisions of the special order adopted on Friday, November 22, 1968, which suspended tomorrow's sitting. It being six o'clock this house stands adjourned to meet again at eleven o'clock in the morning on Friday, November 29.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 29, 1968

The house met at 11 a.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Third report of standing committee on labour, manpower and immigration—Mr. Caccia.

[Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON PROCEDURE—SECOND REPORT

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present the second report of the special committee on procedure of the house, and later this day will ask leave to move concurrence.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman), moves for leave to present the second report of the special committee on procedure of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the second report of the special committee on procedure of the house presented earlier this day be now concurred in.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, because of the nature of this report—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should first put the motion.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I intend to deal with that, Mr. Speaker, because I do not think you should put the motion in view of the lack of unanimous consent, the nature of the report, and the fact that it may require some discussion to determine whether we should give this committee an extension of time or just let it flounder.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must bring to the attention of the hon. member that leave was obtained earlier when the hon. member sought leave to introduce the motion. The only thing the Chair can do now is put the motion. Then it will become debatable and hon. members can express their views at that point.

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

THE MINISTRY

REPORT ON MINISTERIAL MISSION TO LATIN AMERICA

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the ministerial mission to Latin America returned to Ottawa on Wednesday of this week. I wish today to make a brief statement about the mission and its work, a mission which I am convinced marks a turning point in our relations with Latin America.

The house will recall that shortly before the mission left Canada the Prime Minister stated that its purpose was to assist the government in its review of policy toward Latin America, a part of the world with which we believe Canada should develop closer relations. The mission's main tasks were as follows: to explore the common benefits that might result from closer relations with Latin America; to explore all important aspects of Canada's relations with Latin America, political, economic and cultural; to demonstrate our desire to draw closer to Latin American countries on a bilateral basis and the importance we attach to our relations with the hemisphere as a whole; to enable ministers to have direct consultations with important Latin American leaders and to observe at first hand developments in some of the important Latin American countries; to review not only relations with Latin American countries but also world issues in which we and they have a common interest, and, to make Canada better known in Latin America, and to establish a basis for better understanding of Latin America on the part of Canadians.

The government felt that to accomplish these objectives it was necessary to send ministers who could speak with authority on matters of foreign policy, trade and economic questions and cultural affairs, supported by a strong team of officials drawn from the departments and agencies of government principally concerned with our relations with Latin America. To gain a broad perspective on our relations with Latin America, the mission visited as many countries of that area as possible.

At one time or another five ministers took part in the mission. They were the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin); the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene); the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan (Mr. Lang) with responsibilities in the field of industry, trade and commerce, and myself. My parliamentary secretary (Mr. Goyer) also took part. We so arranged our time that at least three of us were present in each country. In this way our three main areas of interest, political, economic and cultural, were always well covered.

Ministers were supported by senior officials of the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of the Secretary of State, as well as of the Canadian International Development Agency, the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, the Canada Council, the National Gallery, the National Film Board and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Most of these officials were with the mission throughout the tour.

The mission visited nine countries; six in South America—Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Peru and Venezuela; one in North America—Mexico—and two in Central America—Costa Rica and Guatemala. The tour lasted approximately one month. In each country ministers were received by the president and had a series of meetings with ministers of the host government. In most countries we talked with leading members of the legislative bodies and with some representatives of regional and international organizations. Certain officials had individual meetings or made brief side visits, sometimes to neighbouring countries not covered by the official itinerary. In all these meetings a very wide range of subjects was discussed in considerable depth.

In the political field we discussed hemispheric questions and current international issues. In the trade and economic field we discussed trade in the multilateral context, bilateral trade, financing and investment. Everywhere we went we found that development is a main preoccupation of government.

[Mr. Sharp.]

In the cultural sphere, to which the Latin Americans also attach great importance, we explored a wide spectrum of activities ranging from scientific research to film production. I would like to emphasize that our discussions related to concrete possibilities as much as to general policies and procedures.

While we worked mainly with governments we paid special attention to private institutions which, both in Latin America and in Canada, have an important role to play in developing our relations. We had meetings, for example, with chambers of commerce, with university rectors, with museum directors and leading experts in the arts. We met with Canadian businessmen and with Canadian missionaries, religious and lay, and with other volunteer workers. In all these meetings we were greatly impressed by the importance of the part which private individuals and groups can play in the pursuit of goals shared by the peoples of Canada and Latin America.

In every country we visited we were offered a warm and most hospitable reception. The atmosphere in our talks was at all times cordial, frank and, as a rule, quite informal. The scope and frequently the depth of our exchanges were striking; we entered into a dialogue which we intend to continue.

Our mission was widely publicized in all the countries visited. Good coverage was afforded by the press as well as by radio and television stations. I can assure the house that the presence of the mission was felt in Latin America.

There is one feature of the mission which I would like to mention. The mission was an excellent projection abroad of the Canada of today. Almost every member of the mission was bilingual in French and English. In addition many could speak Spanish or Portuguese.

The mission has amassed a great deal of valuable information and has formed impressions and tentative opinions which will clearly be of great assistance to the government when completing its review of relations with Latin America. The substantial preparations for the mission and the work of the mission itself constituted the first phase of that review, and much has been accomplished in this first phase. Some projects which can be advanced under present policies and procedures have been identified; a few of these have been carried to completion and the others will be followed up without delay.

One example is the establishment of a joint Mexico-Canada committee for the consideration of matters of common interest to the two countries in the political, economic and commercial fields. The committee may also consider other matters such as, for example, cultural relations. With the leave of the house, I wish now to table, in English and in French, the note on this subject which I signed and handed to the foreign minister of Mexico when the ministerial mission was in that country. This note and the note which the foreign minister signed and handed to me in reply constitute an agreement establishing the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: I am glad to be able to report that the mission accomplished the objectives set by the Prime Minister before its departure. It is the desire of the government to determine, in the shortest possible time, how present possibilities may be translated into action within the framework of our broader foreign policy review. The members of the ministerial mission will now reflect on what they have found and seen and heard and will shortly make a report to the government.

I would like to make clear that it is the intention of the government, before completing its review of policy toward Latin America, to consult individuals and groups within the Canadian community which have an interest in Latin America and, in parliament, to submit the review to critical examination in committee. In this process the government will welcome presentations and representations from all sides. I would add that the ministerial mission itself has given a new impetus to the development of Canadian relations with the countries of Latin America.

I am sure I speak on behalf of all members of this house when I once again express to the governments and peoples of the countries we visited our sincere thanks and deep appreciation for the reception they accorded to the ministerial mission. To the governments and peoples of the countries of Latin America which the mission was not able to visit I would like to say that in undertaking our voyage in Latin America, we were extending the hand of friendship to them also.

I would like to take this opportunity to express my warm appreciation, and that of all members of the mission, for the excellent arrangements made for us by our own embassies in the capitals we visited. Their care and diligence on our behalf was indeed praiseworthy.

I now ask leave to table a set of papers which contains information about the composition of the mission, its itinerary and the main outlines of the program in each of the countries visited. There is also included a specimen of the statements made at the opening of the press conferences held by ministers.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table those documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that a preliminary report on the work of the mission is being prepared, and I will table it also as soon as it is available.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, we all welcome the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the various ministers who accompanied him and their officials back to Canada from what was obviously a most arduous trip. I hope the ministers had a chance to look behind the glamour and glitter of some of the countries they visited and see some of the serious problems resulting from the population explosion and severe poverty. We shall be interested in studying the implications of the visit in the fields of expanded trade and commerce, energy, cultural exchanges, external affairs, and so on. We also hope the details of the real effects of the mission will soon be made public in an ongoing policy review.

We should be interested to know whether increases in trade can be expected, what problems would accompany or impede such increase, and whether Canada ought to set up permanent structures in those countries in Latin America to facilitate trade. We share the government's views about the usefulness of an expansion of cultural relations, and here again we must wait and see what are the implications of this exchange.

In the fields of external relations and aid to South America the questions that come to mind are these. What role can our country best play; what role will we play vis-à-vis the United States in South America; and has Canada selected certain South American countries upon which to concentrate aid? Another question is, how is aid to South America to be integrated with Canada's overall aid policy? We were interested to hear that following a proposal of the government led by my right hon. friend from Prince Albert an agreement has been signed between Canada and Mexico. We shall be interested in the membership of this new committee.

• (11:20 a.m.)

The minister did not specifically mention the Organization of American States, but obviously during any visit by Canadians to South America this must have been very much in mind. Here may I enter a caveat. I hope the Canadian government will continue to be sceptical about accepting the full implications of membership in this organization. As I see them these implications are in the category of defence, and they have political overtones as well. If we join the O.A.S. we shall become part of a hemispheric defence system with all this would involve for Canada. We should therefore need to know, as the review progresses, of the political conditions Canada would accept for membership in the organization. Would we be prepared, as Mexico has been on certain occasions, to pursue a course independent of the O.A.S. and suffer the economic consequences of such independence?

I hope there will be wide public discussion of these issues; that platitudes about dialogue, studies in depth and so on will be ended, and that the people will be told exactly what are the implications of any move to join what now appears to some of us to be a rather reactionary organization.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Fundy-Royal I think there is much more that the Secretary of State for External Affairs could have told us. But I suppose we shall have to settle for two promises; one, that there will be a further report on this mission; and two, that at some point the whole subject of our relations with Latin America will be referred to parliament or to a committee of this house.

Frankly, what we have been given this morning, while very interesting, was little more than a travelogue. This certainly applies to the statement the minister made while he was on his feet. As for the document he asked leave to table, copies of which have been made available to some of us, I find it includes a long list of all the lunches and receptions which the ministers attended, and really it contains no more than the minister told us.

However, there has been a promise of a further report. I hope there will be more substance in it, and I hope, too, that this question of our relations with the countries of the western hemisphere will be referred to parliament, referred to a committee, and adequately discussed before any final decisions are taken. I need not take the time of the house to suggest what the solutions to these problems are; because, as the hon. member for Fundy-Royal has been saying, the whole question of our trading relationship with the countries of the western hemisphere is highly important to us and we feel that in the world today with its problems of over-population, its economic problems, its socio-economic problems, not forgetting the need for aid all over the world, there is a special role which Canada can play by way of aid to certain sections of the western hemisphere.

I think this should be brought out of the sphere of things that are awfully vague. It should be pinned down. We should know what we are doing.

I also want to say we are aware of the fact that lurking behind all this talk, all this travelogue, is the question of the Organization of American States to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs made no reference whatever. There is no reference in the formal statement, or that I can find in the multi-page document that has been tabled. This too is something we feel parliament should have an opportunity to discuss before we have been taken down the path to a situation that might involve us in defence, monetary and trading relations that would make us more a satellite than we are now of the main power in the Organization of American States.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, the minister has taken time on motions to give us an interesting travelogue. We have enjoyed it, but the fact is that there are matters of substance to which this parliament must give its attention.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) gave us this morning a most interesting report on what seems to have been a wonderful jaunt to Latin America for him and his colleagues, and very little to show for it.

The newspapers tell us that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), who also made the trip to Latin America, allegedly stated that it was an "exploratory trip" and it was not undertaken in order to sign trade agreements, or even cultural agreements.

Listening to the Secretary of State for External Affairs a while ago, I noted that the ministerial mission had taken a great interest in the development of the film industry and related activities in Latin America. I do not know if the film industry is as well organized in Latin America as in Hollywood, for instance, but in any case, it seems to me that a month of talks, visits, cocktails and banquets should allow us to hope that Canada, through the agreements that will be reached as a result, will try to meet the repeated requests made by representatives of Latin America to some countries other than the United States, because a study of history shows that instead of encouraging the development of Latin America, the United States has enslaved those countries.

Appeals were made at the 56th conference of the Interparliamentary Union held in Lima and recently at a symposium held at Laval University in Quebec, where President Luis Alberto Sanchez stated that integration must be the aim of Latin America. He recalled that, for years, countries had sought the disunion of Latin American states and having defeated them, not only from the outside but from the inside, they managed to enslave and exploit them. In one of his speeches, President Sanchez stated:

> Because of the poverty, aggravated by a lack of a proportionate quantity of consumer goods, by their high cost in relation with the low salaries, by the excessive growth of the population—

Which is said to be 3 per cent in Latin America.

> —the excessive concentration of capital in the hands of a few people and in capitalistic areas, the pressure exerted by the exasperated and the desperate increases, and they fall prey easily to national and foreign propaganda in favour of communism and fascism, both of which are international anti-American doctrines.

Mr. Speaker, in the light of a statement like that one from a representative of one of the Latin American states, I feel that the trade relations which Canada wishes or intends to establish with those Latin American countries should encourage their development.

We are giving considerable help to the underdeveloped countries and Latin America is an underdeveloped continent. I feel that our help should not be restricted merely to technical help, but that it should encourage and facilitate commercial exchanges in the hope of fostering the industrial development of those countries and improving the lot of their labouring classes.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the one month trip of our ministers and their associates will prove to be more than an exploratory trip, and that it will give satisfactory results for the countries visited as well as for Canada itself.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—STATEMENT BY POSTMASTER GENERAL IN TELEVISION INTERVIEW

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which relates to a question I asked the Prime Minister on Wednesday, the last sitting day, in connection with a television appearance of the Postmaster General, in respect of which the Postmaster General intervened to impute the accuracy of the comments I made, and my subsequent examination yesterday of the transcript of the television interview in question.

Chronologically, the situation is as follows. On Tuesday I asked the Prime Minister a question about government policy with regard to the authorization of ministers of the crown to express their personal opinions concerning policies being formulated. The right hon. gentleman said in part in his answer, which appears at page 3188 of Hansard, that a minister in answering must make sure he does not place himself in an irrevocable position which might be contrary to that which the government might eventually take.

That night I had the pleasure of observing the Postmaster General on a national television interview. I took note of what he said. On the last sitting day, Wednesday, I then asked the Prime Minister the following question which appears at page 3275 of Hansard:

> Would the right hon. gentleman say whether the statements made by the Postmaster General on national television last night, that Canada should get out of NATO as well as NORAD since we have no contribution to make in that field, meets with the earlier guide line the Prime Minister laid down—

The Postmaster General, to whom I gave notice that I intended to rise on this question of privilege, as quoted at pages 3275 and 3276 of Hansard, said:

> On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I did not say that.

The fact is, as confirmed by what is purported to be an official transcript of the proceedings, that the Postmaster General in this interview was asked the following questions and made the following replies:

> Pape: You made statements in the past that you felt that we should get out of NORAD as well as NATO and I'd like to ask you about that.
> Kierans: This hasn't come up in cabinet, thank the Lord . . . (laughs)—
> Pape: Well, let me ask you about it. Do you still feel that way?
> Kierans: I still feel the same way. I don't think that we have any contribution to make in this field.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I felt compelled in my position to rise on this issue today because this has been an unfortunate practice. Not only on this issue but all too often we have seen the practice of statements having been made outside the house and then what appear to be equivocation and contradiction in the house. The members of this government from the Prime Minister down seem to have set out deliberately to do this, and the ultimate and inevitable result is and must be to debase the currency and deteriorate the quality of this house until its survival as a useful arm of democracy is seriously threatened.

Naturally, if the Postmaster General says he did not say what the transcript says he did say I will accept that and only add that this is simply another sorry chapter in the chronicle of confusion which surrounds the question of NATO and NORAD and our position in collective security.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, if I may speak to the question of privilege, I should like to refer to other parts of the interview. You might wish also that I table the entire proceedings, and if so requested I should be glad to do so. Mr. Pape asked me an earlier question:

> Let me switch you to another area. You've been gaining a lot of publicity in the past couple of days with your comments on NATO and defence spending and all the rest of it. Just how deeply are you committed to these views? Are you in effect kite-flying?

My answer was:

> No. You have my book here; you have all kinds of things I said in the leadership speech and so on and you know what my personal beliefs are. Well, when you enter a cabinet you set those aside, because you accept as your own cabinet policy, which I do. So let me say, to go to the conclusion of this, if X months from now, in April or May, cabinet should decide that our present policy is the best alternative; in other words, you don't veer either to the left or to the right of that policy, I'm not going to resign.

I know this disappoints the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Kierans: May I continue. I listened to the hon. gentleman who raised the question of privilege.

> I mean there are lots of things I can do working for the government of Canada. But that isn't the point. The point at the present moment is that the Prime Minister has said we are considering changes. Well who's going to consider the changes? Only the 26 or 29 cabinet ministers?

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell: The hon. member from Hamilton.

Mr. Kierans:—

> Or should other people, you know, make suggestions? Or should we get the pulse of the people of Canada? And how can you get the pulse of the people of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kierans: How can you get the pulse of the opposition as well?

Mr. Speaker: I trust the minister does not propose to read the whole interview. This is the impression I have gained. Perhaps he should limit his intervention to the point raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Kierans: May I continue with another statement from this; it is not a long one:

> I said when you want to change defence policy or when you forecast a review of a defence policy, what are some of the alternatives? You know, making NATO stronger is one alternative. Staying right where we are is an alternative, making it a bit shinier, increasing defence expenditures; on the other hand reducing expenditures, defence expenditures—

—is another alternative. This was the whole nature of the discussion. Later on Mr. Pape returned to the subject and said he was not quite satisfied with all this, and I said "I still feel the same way." I have my own personal beliefs. I may have certain views about the infallibility of the Pope, but I will not confine myself to entering a cabinet of those who only believe in the infallibility of the Pope.

An hon. Member: Don't disgrace the Pope, whatever you do.

Mr. Kierans: I feel—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must ask the minister for his co-operation in coming to the point.

Mr. Kierans: All I wish to say is I should like to see a debate arise in cabinet. I should like some day even to know the views of the opposition on these questions, and it is a problem to find them—I meant "of the country". If a debate does not rise on this in the country then I suppose we turn to something else.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Fortunately, in view of the fact that no motion was made following the hon. member's question of privilege, I do not have to rule on the situation. I think I will have to let the matter rest where it rests at the moment.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT CONCERNING SALARY REVISIONS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps in a less contentious vein I should like to move:

That the report of the joint commitee on the library of parliament presented to the house on Monday, November 25, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING POLLUTION OF STREAMS AND COASTAL WATERS

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-135, to amend the Criminal Code (pollution).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in spite of the great amount of legislation on our statute books there is very little concerning pollution. It is for this reason I am introducing this bill which would make it an offence to pollute interprovincial streams or the seas surrounding Canada. For this reason I hope this bill will receive assent.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Translation]

PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE TITLE OF QUEEN'S PRINTER

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois) moves for leave to introduce Bill No. C-136 entitled "An act to amend the Public Printing and Stationery Act".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is simply to substitute the title of "national printer of Canada" to that of "Queen's printer", a designation which, in my opinion, is archaic and out-of-date.

I make this proposal without any secret motive and with due respect for Her Majesty and what she means to our Canadian political system. This change would not be so necessary if the Queen's printer were limited to publishing official proclamations and documents for the government, the House of Commons and the Senate, but when we consider the wide range of publications printed and distributed by the Queen's printer, it is time, in my opinion, to make this change.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[English]

BROADCASTING ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT ADVERTISING OF CIGARETTES

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Berthier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-137, to amend the Broadcasting Act (Prohibition of cigarette advertising).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Yanakis: Mr. Speaker, lung cancer is now epidemic in Canada. It is killing more men daily than street accidents or any other disease. Therefore we should take a firm and courageous stand and ban all cigarette commercials from television and radio entirely, the same as in Britain, in order to protect public health.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

GRAIN

PROVISION OF DRYING FACILITIES ON FARMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but first I should like to say how pleased I am to see him in apparent good health. My question arises from a series of questions asked on Wednesday which were not answered. Will the minister advise the house what efforts are being made by the Canadian Wheat Board, the government or any government department to ensure that there are adequate facilities on farms to handle the more than 200 million bushels of tough and damp grain that cannot be conditioned at the terminal facilities?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the condition of my health is so good, but I will try to answer just the same. The situation which now exists is one which has been described as very serious. There has been damp wheat in the past. In 1927 we had 180 million bushels of damp grain and in 1951 we had 200 million bushels. This year we have 350 million bushels. When this situation was realized, the proper authorities, the grain transportation commission, held a meeting in Winnipeg on the 26th. I have read, as I am sure everyone has, the press release issued at that time. The situation was fully described then by Mr. MacNamara, the chief commissioner of the wheat board because he and the transportation committee thought the farmers were not using all available facilities to dry their own grain; in other words they were relying too much—as is quite natural and nobody blames them for it—on the facilities that existed, and they issued a warning.

Mr. Woolliams: Answer the question.

Mr. Pepin: The question is a specific one. Yesterday for my own part I had the situation investigated with respect to tariffs on grain dryers. I found that any grain dryer for use on the farms may be imported free under tariff order 40924-1, regardless of ownership. I found also that grain dryers of a stationary type used adjacent to storage sites off the farm are generally classified for tariff purposes as machines under the machinery program, tariff item 42700-1, which permits remission of the 15 per cent duty on the recommendation of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce when he considers them not available from domestic production. So if these dryers are not available from domestic production, I hereby announce to the house that I will remit the tariff on such items.

The Minister of Finance has been questioned on this matter too, and this morning I have received telegrams, some of them asking for accelerated depreciation on dryer equipment. I understand the Minister of Finance is looking into this, and I also understand that he has already intimated to the house that he would give accelerated depreciation on such items.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he is conducting surveys to determine the adequacy of the existing equipment and the location of existing farm dryers to ascertain whether those facilities are in a position to be of maximum use in grain drying. Second, has the government or the wheat board given any consideration to determining, as a result of such surveys, whether the tariff items referred to should be removed?

Mr. Pepin: The very able Minister without Portfolio assigned to matters having to do with industry, trade and commerce will give an answer to the question.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the provincial ministers of agriculture have been assessing the situation with regard to farm drying equipment, and the Minister of Agriculture has been in constant contact with them. He had a meeting with them within the last week and expects to have further meetings with people in the prairie provinces as soon as he returns from Paris to further pursue these matters so that, in co-operation with the provincial ministers, the maximum amount of information will be obtained and maximum use will be made of the equipment on farms.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask either minister whether there is any prospect of the terminals operating their facilities around the clock, 24 hours a day and seven days a week.

Mr. Pepin: I have a very long report on that but I will not read it because I am sure you would cut me off, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The house may want to give leave to the minister to read the report.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pepin: I will read the conclusion of this report. It states that terminal drying can only start once damp grain starts arriving in volume. I have in hand a week by week analysis on such arrivals. It reads further that, as the statistics which I have not given show, it has only been in the last two or three weeks that damp grain has been delivered in volume to country elevators. It is then a matter of two or three weeks from the time grain is delivered to country elevators until it gets to terminal position. Therefore it has been in the last two or three days only that terminals have had, unloaded and in their bins, sufficient quantities of damp grain to keep dryers going on a 24-hour day basis.

At the meeting of the grain transportation committee held in Winnipeg the owners of terminal facilities assured those present that the terminal drying facilities in some cases were already being utilized to full capacity—

Mr. Korchinski: But not at the lakehead.

Mr. Pepin: —and in cases where they were not, would be during the course of the next few days as stocks of damp grain accumulate at the terminal positions. Labour union leaders attending the meeting at Winnipeg gave an assurance of their fullest co-operation in meeting this emergency.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which relates to this damp grain situation, but I would like to direct it to the government house leader. In view of the seriousness of the situation will the government house leader, before he decides on next week's business, discuss with his opposite numbers the possibility of bringing back the estimates of the Department of Agriculture or some other reasonable vehicle to allow us to have a day's discussion on this whole problem on Monday or at least early next week?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Of course we would be glad to bring the estimates back to the house, notwithstanding the previous request by opposition members. I do not know if it might be appropriate at this point to make my weekly announcement with respect to the business of the house, and perhaps we might then have further discussions among the house leaders as to the appropriate occasion for discussion of this matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Before the minister does that, I wonder if I may ask him a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that some of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture have been passed so that at least the first one could be brought back for the purposes of this discussion if, as I am sure is the case, there is general agreement that we should have such a day without delay?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In any event if there were a disposition on the part of the opposition to have those estimates brought back in the house, I would be glad to make a motion to bring them back. I suggest this might be a fruitful subject for discussion among the house leaders.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and ask him what emergency action the government has in mind to meet the situation; for at the present rate it will take 20 months to dry all the damp wheat and by that time much of it will be decayed. What emergency action has the government in mind to meet the situation, and has any consideration been given to providing acreage payments for the farmers on the prairies who find themselves in a serious financial situation?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, most of us do not have the capacity to anticipate events which the right hon. member has.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am just referring to the rate.

Mr. Pepin: Consequently we cope with problems as they emerge. A few weeks ago the problem appeared to be the need to provide payment for grain still on the land. Now the situation is quite different. Farmers have decided to harvest the grain even though it is damp, so that now we have to cope with the situation of harvested damp grain. I have indicated what we are doing at the present time—exemption of tariff and accelerated depreciation. I have said I am willing to remit the tariffs on imports if Canadian drying facilities are not available. The wheat board is looking into the possibility of using grain drying facilities in the United States. We are doing everything that I think can be done at the moment to cope with this very difficult problem, but we can only cope with problems as they arise because we do not have the right hon. member's ability to predict history.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have a further supplementary question. I wish to ask the minister, in view of the very small amount of damp wheat that has arrived at the head of the lakes and which according to his statement has only been arriving in the last two weeks, whether one of the reasons is the shortage of freight cars. If that is so—as it apparently is because farmers cannot market their wheat—what consideration is being given to bringing back Canadian box cars from the United States? I asked that question the other day but the Minister without Portfolio did not have any information on the matter.

Mr. Horner: And did not understand the problem.

Mr. Pepin: Notwithstanding the respect I have for the right hon. member, I must say that that information is absolutely wrong. The chief commissioner of the wheat board said in his press conference "box car supply is not a limiting factor".

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is? Why cannot farmers move their wheat?

Mr. Pepin: Perhaps the right hon. member knows more about these things than the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Horner: A lot more than you do.

Mr. Pepin: The problem is that the movement of damp grain to the terminals must be geared to the optimum capacity of the drying facilities. The railways have been asked to regulate the flow of box cars to conform to the drying ability of the terminals. Every effort is being made now to avoid an oversupply of loaded cars of high moisture grain to the terminals since such grain would freeze. This is something to be taken into consideration, is it not?

Mr. Horner: At Vancouver it is going to freeze?

Mr. Pepin: My hon. friend should at least give me credit for knowing the distinction between the weather at Vancouver and at the lakehead. As I said, since such grain would freeze it would make unloading at the lakehead difficult, whereas the box cars could be heated at the west coast. This is what the transportation committee are trying to do; they are trying to regulate the use of box cars. The opinion expressed by the hon. member is consequently wrong. There is no problem connected with the availability of box cars in the opinion of people who should know. If they do not know, that is not my fault.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat? I want to bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that there are quite a few members who want to ask questions on this important matter. Perhaps we should try to give an opportunity to as many members as possible to question the minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: To hear the government's alibis for inaction.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is it not a fact that the terminal elevators at the lakehead are still not drying on a 24-hour, seven day a week basis, and that the situation is the same at Vancouver? Second, could he indicate whether consideration has been given to using commercial dryers at the country elevators where the annexes are empty but the elevators themselves are filled? In this way, grain could be dried and put in the annexes in order to relieve some of the congestion.

Mr. Pepin: I think anyone who reads Hansard will realize I have already answered those two questions. With regard to the use of commercial drying facilities, I have said we would make it possible for grain companies to purchase this equipment without tariff, if that could be done, and would grant accelerated depreciation. There will then be an incentive for them to buy such equipment. I know though that drying equipment would be used only once every 20 years or so, so one can understand the reluctance of a company to purchase this equipment which would likely be allowed to rust more often than be used to dry. We are trying to make it attractive to groups of people to buy this equipment and use it on a commercial basis.

Mr. Korchinski: Would the department or the wheat board consent to having commercial dryers come to the elevators and, without the companies purchasing them, dry the grain that has been already purchased? Then this grain could be transferred from the elevators to the annexes where it could be stored in a dry condition. Would this be permitted?

Mr. Pepin: If the wheat board, as is the case, is willing to consider drying in the United States, I think they would be willing to consider drying under those conditions. I will make sure of that.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

On Wednesday I gave the Minister of Transport notice that I would ask this question:

Would the minister please take the house into his confidence and tell us what has been the result of those discussions with the Canadian railways?

The reference was to the shortage of box cars. The minister replied that he would do so at an early date. He assured me that he would make a report on the box car situation. What have the railways told the minister and would he inform the house in this regard?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Exactly the same as has been reported by my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker, that the shortage of box cars is not the limiting factor. The limiting factor is the ability to dry grain. The board has given the railways a schedule that it would like in respect of deliveries and the railways have advised it will be possible for them to meet this schedule. To the best of my knowledge, this is generally true, but if my hon. friend has any specific example to the contrary I would be pleased to hear it. However, I have been given the assurance that my colleague just gave to the house, namely, that transportation facilities are available to meet the demand and the limiting factor now is the ability to dry wheat.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister has checked on this situation, because he can get information from points all across the land that this is the problem. Will he discuss it with the president of the wheat pool and the president of the line elevator companies in order to determine whether those companies which handle the farmers' grain are getting the necessary box cars? Will he go that far? I think the minister wants to answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hellyer: I believe our negotiations have to be with the wheat board, Mr. Speaker, which really has the over-all responsibility in respect of this matter. If there is any means that comes to their attention through which we can be of greater assistance, we would be more than happy to help.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): On October 20, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Agriculture to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to make a full statement to the house on this whole matter of box cars. May I ask this question of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is there any department or agency of government which has the sole responsibility for negotiating with the railways every year the allocation of available box cars to the various distributing points and branch lines?

Mr. Pepin: My understanding is that this is done at the level of the transportation committee. This committee, as the hon. member knows, includes members of the grain commission, members of the wheat board, representatives of the railways and the grain companies. So far as I know, on previous occasions recommendations made by this committee have been implemented by the railways.

Mr. Benjamin: In spite of this, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that some shipping points have had more than their fair share of cars while other shipping points have had no cars for three or four weeks. Would the minister give consideration to appointing a transport controller with complete authority to require the railways to allocate box cars according to the needs of each individual shipping point?

Mr. Pepin: This has been done in the past. I remember one case in particular where it was done, and I will look into it to see if it is needed in the present circumstances.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is he or his department considering the placing of grain drying equipment at the inland terminals, which would greatly facilitate the drying of grain this year?

Mr. Pepin: That would mean added facilities because there are some facilities there now.

Mr. Horner: Yes, adding to the facilities of inland terminals for drying grain. These facilities are not being used to the full extent, and in this way they could be.

Mr. Pepin: As I said before, we are now doing everything we can, but I will certainly take this idea into consideration.

Mr. Horner: Take another look at the problem.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister dealing with two aspects of this situation which I do not believe have been considered. The first point concerns the availability of drying equipment from the United States; it is not available at all in Canada. Since the farmers have no money with which to buy these pieces of equipment which run as high as $10,000 or $12,000 for equipment with a 2,000 bushel per day capacity, would the government consider doing something about that?

Mr. Pepin: I could not speak about the availability of the equipment. I am aware, however, that these are expensive gadgets and that is why we are trying to make the purchase of them more attractive by eliminating the tariff of 15 per cent and by giving accelerated depreciation.

Mr. Southam: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The volume of damp grain amounts to about 300 million bushels and it will rot in the bins unless it can be saved. We must take action to produce this equipment in Canada because it is not available anywhere else. This is the emergency.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he would explore all possible avenues from the financial point of view so that these dryers may be put in the hands of users? Accelerated depreciation and tariff removal are not enough.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Compton wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt, since he stated that certain plans are under way in the matter of co-ordination. In view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture is out of the country at the moment, would the government bend all its efforts toward co-ordinating over-all policy to deal with the present crisis?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what the government is intending to do. Previous consultations with the provincial ministers of agriculture have revealed the extent of the farm drying equipment that is available on farms. In fact, as Mr. MacNamara said in Winnipeg on Tuesday, if this equipment is used to the full it might go a long way toward handling the situation. Obviously one problem is seeing that this equipment is fully available and is in the right place at the right time during the course of the winter. Certainly we will be interested in seeing that this is done.

Mr. Gleave: A supplementary question. What concrete action has the government taken up to now to achieve the objective of seeing that it is in the right place at the right time?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, we have considered it important to gather together the information first before taking specific action to deal with the problem, because we must know what the problem is.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister has indicated that he will encourage the purchase of farm dryers through the elimination of tariffs. In view of the fact that the cheapest and smallest continuous flow dryer, which really is the only practical type, costs $8,000 or more, and in view of the fact that a farmer who farms 1,000 acres can expect to sell only about 6,000 bushels of wheat a year—and I might add that damp, tough wheat sells for—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member ask his question.

Mr. Downey: How does the minister expect a farmer to purchase such a dryer? Is the government considering making acreage payments to farmers at this time?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have dealt at least in part with this question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As far as the second part of the question is concerned, it has already been asked.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But not answered.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Selkirk wishes to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Because of the extreme difficulty of securing grain drying equipment, has the government in mind a policy whereby it will assist the grain industry to secure supplies of grain drying equipment?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, if it is found that our present best is not good enough, then we will certainly consider this.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare but in his absence and in view of the emergency perhaps his parliamentary secretary will take notice of the question. Will the department use its good offices and facilities with respect to the urgent health problem facing the Calgary Stampeders football team?

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put it to the Secretary of State, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

Since the C.B.C. recently contributed to make us meet some nice boys who are waiting for the advantages of the omnibus bill, is the crown corporation considering the possibility of presenting other such programs in order to give an opportunity to the unemployed heads of families to state their views on their financial problems?

TELEVISION

REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT ON EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he tell the house whether the government intends to amend the constitution so as to allow the provinces to operate their own television network for educational broadcasting during the next federal-provincial conference?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the division of powers, including those concerning broadcasting, is on the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference. We will then see what the provinces have to say on the subject.

HARBOURS

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF DECENTRALIZATION STUDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister now in a position to advise the house of the outcome of the study concerning port administration which has occupied his time for the past two week ends?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that this would be a good subject for study by the committee; it might divert their attention from some other matters. However, my difficulty so far as the order of precedence is concerned is whether or not the committee should visit the Atlantic provinces before commencing its study of this report or whether the report should be considered first. Any advice that my hon. friend wishes to give me in this regard will be most welcome.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister point blank whether he has finished reading the report and what he thinks of it? He made a big play of the fact that this study had been brought back early and I think we are entitled to know.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHRISTMAS ADJOURNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I almost hesitate to rise in view of the significance of the questions asked up to now in regard to a matter affecting many members of the house. I should like to direct my question to the government house leader. In view of the fact that the homes and constituencies of some members are over 3,000 miles away and in view of the fact that there will be transportation problems over the holiday season, could the minister give us an indication when it is contemplated that the house will rise for the Christmas recess and reassemble in January? This information, sir, will be of great assistance to many hon. members.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the problem here. The hope would be that if the items of business which remain to be dealt with in this part of the session can be disposed of by December 20, then we might rise at the end of that day. This will depend, of course, on the progress made in the house and perhaps the hon. member can have some influence in that matter.

Mr. Winch: And reconvening when?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to make a further announcement about that.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, may I pose a supplementary question, because I think this matter is important. Did I understand the answer to be that if satisfactory progress, in the opinion of the government, is made the house will adjourn on the 20th but if not we will be sitting here on the Monday and Tuesday before Christmas day, which is Wednesday?

OLD AGE SECURITY

REQUEST FOR ISSUANCE OF CHEQUES BEFORE CHRISTMAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister consult his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare with a view to having old age security cheques for the month of December sent out before Christmas rather than after? Otherwise a great many old people will be having a pretty bleak Christmas. Mr. Speaker, I believe the Prime Minister was intending to reply to my question.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I was not really intending to reply, Mr. Speaker. The minister himself will be here on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, so perhaps the hon. member would ask his question on one of those days.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—PROPOSED REFERENDUM ON STATUS OF EASTERN SECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will Canada join other commonwealth countries which have urged Nigeria to accept a referendum supervised by the United Nations or the Organization of African Unity to decide the future status of former eastern Nigeria?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of this appeal of the commonwealth countries. I doubt that it is shared by many.

[Mr. Winch.]

COMMUNICATIONS

REPORTS ON SATELLITE DESIGN STUDIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce supplementary to the question I asked the Postmaster General on Wednesday last. Did any official of the Department of Industry or the Department of Trade and Commerce give permission to the R.C.A. Victor Company or the Northern Electric Company to make a report, following the surveys they made, on Canada's satellite?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the government was approached with a proposal by Northern Electric to make a number of press releases. This was fully discussed by responsible officials in the Department of Industry and by the task force which reports to the Postmaster General. Both firms, however, were given instructions to follow regarding price, details of specifications, etc. I have not had time to go into the matter in the last few days but as far as I have been able to check both companies have respected the government's instruction regarding the release of confidential information. It does not appear that there has been any breach of confidence. I should also add that these reports were in the hands of the government before the press conference was held, though it might have been wiser—

Mr. Fairweather: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pepin: —to keep in mind that ministers are not always available at a second's notice. It might have been wiser and gentler for the companies to allow a bit of time between the sending of the report to the government and the minister, and the press conference.

Mr. Hales: I rise on a question of privilege. It is that the Postmaster General did not give this house the proper information on Wednesday last. He misled the house in an answer he gave me on Wednesday, November 27, when he said in answering a question similar to the one that has now been asked:

> No member of the office of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or in the office of the President of the Treasury Board or in the office of the Postmaster General gave any such authority.

Mr. Kierans: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I drew the distinction on Wednesday that no member in the office of my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, gave such authority. The hon. member referred to a government official. No member of the minister's office or of my personal office was aware of this.

Mr. Pepin: It had been received by officials in our department but I do not think the Postmaster General or I were aware of it—I for obvious reasons because I was absent from Ottawa—or had seen these documents.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, further to the point of privilege, it appears that a very thin line is being drawn between the words "in the minister's office" and "any officer or official". I accept the explanation on that basis.

Mr. Kierans: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the hon. member that my answer to him was also:

No, they may have been in contact with some officials; that is the distinction I am making.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): A supplementary question to the Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker. In view of reports that the rocket launching site at Churchill, Manitoba, is capable of launching a communications satellite, will the minister assure the house that every consideration will be given to launching Canada's first communication satellite from our native launching pad?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a representation. If he is seeking information I think the question, although it is important, is not so urgent that it cannot be placed on the order paper.

HOUSING

OSHAWA—AVAILABILITY OF DEFENCE DEPARTMENT PROPERTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My question is for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. In view of the serious housing crisis in Canada, and in view of the recent announcement by the Department of National Defence that some 275 acres of land will be available early in the spring in the Oshawa area, is the minister giving consideration to making this land available for housing?

Mr. Speaker: I think that question ought to be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MALVERN PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who is in charge of housing. What progress, if any, has been made with regard to building homes at the Malvern project in order to ease the housing crisis in Toronto?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that question might also be placed on the order paper or, if the hon. member wishes, it might be discussed at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Gilbert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister consider appointing the former mayor of Toronto, now the hon. member for York West (Mr. Givens), to be in charge of this project? Otherwise the housing policy may well be a charade.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the President of the Privy Council could indicate our business for next week.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As a result of yesterday's consultations and without taking into account the questions this morning it has been proposed that we should go into committee of supply on Monday to take the estimates of the Department of Industry. That is the last of the departments that hon. members opposite have requested to be dealt with in the house. On Tuesday we propose to call second reading of the Customs Tariff bill, No. C-131, item No. 35 on the order paper, with the hope that we can make good progress so that on Wednesday we may call third reading of the bill and then deal with estimates. On Thursday we propose to deal with estimates again. On Friday, depending on the availability of the report of the committee, we hope to open debate on the report of the standing committee on procedure.

With regard to the question of estimates, I should be pleased to discuss with hon. gentlemen opposite the estimates to be dealt with. I understand that the standing committee on agriculture chose to retain the first item under the agriculture estimate yesterday; it is still seized of that matter. I hesitate to withdraw that from the committee unless there is general consent. Subject to that, I should be glad to talk about the scheduling of estimates for the coming week.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): I wonder whether the minister could make arrangements to bring the appropriate part of the estimates of the Department of Transport back to the committee of supply so the house may debate the recommendation of the committee respecting the decision by the C.N.R. to abandon certain rail passenger services, and pass on that recommendation to Canadian National Railways?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I point out to the hon. member that the estimates of the Department of Transport have never been out of the committee of supply. At the choice of the opposition they were left in the house.

Mr. Baldwin: What was the committee dealing with, then, when it passed that resolution?

AIR CANADA

CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT ON DISPUTE WITH EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. I realize he is not here, but if we had met yesterday he would have been here, and he will be here on Monday. If the answer is not available at once perhaps the question might be taken as notice. Has the government received the report of the conciliation board dealing with the disagreement between Air Canada and the air line employees association? Also may I ask if the board has resolved the differences between the parties?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I note that the minister will be here on Monday. Perhaps he could deal with this then.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

REPORTED REGIONAL LIMITATION ON NUMBERS ACCEPTED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct my question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration but, since he is absent, his parliamentary secretary might give us an answer.

Is the number of persons entitled to take advantage of retraining courses limited in any way to a certain number in a given region, or must all those qualified be accepted?

Mr. Speaker: The question could easily be put on the order paper.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary question should also be put on the order paper.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

PAYMENT OF RETROACTIVE PAY INCREASES BEFORE END OF YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the recent pay increases for postmasters and their assistants, some raises being retroactive to October 1, 1966, will he make sure that the increases are available to the people concerned before the end of the year so that they will not be subject to the social development tax coming into force next year?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): To answer that question very quickly, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of employees, included among whom, for example, are rural contractors, whose cheques are still outstanding. We hope to have all this cleared up by December 15.

CANADA YEAR BOOK

REPORTED CHANGE IN SECTION ON DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, only a few moments ago I directed a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I regret troubling him again so soon. But since he will not be here again until next Wednesday may I ask him whether he is aware that during his absence the section in the Canada Year Book on the dissolution of parliament was changed and, if so, why?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I try to check everything, Mr. Speaker, but that one escaped me.

Mr. Bell: May I ask the Prime Minister whether he or the staff of his office were aware of this change?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In view of the fact that the change referred to has already been made, perhaps the question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Bell: It is very serious.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate has passed the following bills:

Bill C-124, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system for the period from the 1st day of January, 1968, to the 30th day of June, 1969, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and by Air Canada, without any amendment.

Bill C-103, an act respecting Atlantic Peat Moss Co. Ltd.—Mousse de Tourbe Atlantic Cie Ltee—without any amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, November 29, 1968

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable J. R. Cartwright, P.C., M.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 29th November, at 12.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Louis-Frémont Trudeau
Brigadier General
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

1. Departmental administration including administration of the guaranteed loans acts, the Inspector General of Banks office, and payments to provinces as detailed in the estimates, $3,970,500.

The Deputy Chairman: Vote No. 1 will be found on page 138 of the blue book. Details thereof are listed on page 142. Shall the item carry?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, there are so many aspects of the work of the minister and his department upon which I should like to comment that I will have to exercise a great deal of restraint in the choice of topics. It is not my wish to trespass for too long on the time of the committee but there are certain particular questions concerning the attitudes and the judgment of the minister which I feel it is necessary to raise. I hope the minister will excuse my being very blunt in some of my remarks, as I view with a good deal of concern some of the tendencies which are all too apparent.

I have already found occasion to comment as frankly as I can upon the credibility gap arising from the discrepancy in the assurance which the minister, in another capacity, gave this house and the country in connection with the expenditures of the current year. I have expressed my condemnation of the assurance given to bondholders through the securities and exchange commission of the United States. I described this behaviour as inexcusable and condemned it in the strongest possible terms on one occasion when the minister was not in the house—and he seemed to think I had taken advantage of his absence in doing so. I repeated this charge in the minister's presence. As far as I know he has never felt it necessary to give any explanation to the house or to a committee of the house as to the reasons for his behaviour or in justification of what transpired.

I say again that the minister and others responsible in the government misled the house. Maybe they feel that because they have a majority here they are not bound to give an answer, that there is no need for them to account to the house or to the Canadian people. I am not one who uses words like "arrogance" readily, but I think the minister owes this committee some explanation of the failure of the government to live up to its assurances, or of its action in misleading the House of Commons and the Canadian public, for it can only be described as that. The Canadian people did not give this government a majority in parliament in order to permit it to ignore charges or fail to account to the people for its behaviour. This is not good enough.

I want to talk for a while today about the budget resolutions but not for the purpose of discussing the merits of the resolutions as such. We shall have a further opportunity, I realize, to discuss the iniquitous 2 per cent social development tax together with the other measures which the government has put forward. Today I wish to comment on one group of the budget measures. Again, we shall have an opportunity later to discuss these on their merits. I wish to comment on a particular problem which the Minister of Finance has placed before the Canadian people by the manner in which he is proceeding. I believe this is another indication of something approaching callousness and indifference or, indeed, injustice on the part of the minister and the government. I am referring to the changes which were proposed in connection with inheritance and gift taxes.

Inheritance taxes were formerly of concern mainly to a relatively small group of the well-to-do. Now, with the proposed reductions in the exemptions, they will be of real concern to hundreds of thousands of Canadians, a substantial proportion of the people of this country. This situation arises not only because of the lowering of the exemptions but also because of the continuing inflation which exists. The minister said he wanted to help transfers to be made between husbands and wives by exempting them from transfer tax, gift tax or inheritance tax. In the process of doing so he has proposed to make it infinitely more difficult for a son or a daughter to help a parent or for a family to maintain a family farm or a family business. There can be no doubt about this.

The new rates will make it virtually impossible for a family to maintain control of a substantial family business, a large family business. This, of course, is bound to lead to more U.S. takeovers and this sort of thing, but we will have an opportunity to speak about this when the measure is specifically before us. But there are thousands and thousands of thrifty Canadians who, through the course of their lives, have built up farms. In the past they have been able to arrange the transfer of their farms over a period of time through a farmer-son partnership or something of that sort, and now the Minister of Finance proposes to make that pretty well impossible in the future, or at least to create much difficulty.

There is a lot of talk about maintaining the family farm. There is also a lot of emphasis on the need for maintaining the efficiency of family farms for them to be competitive. Yet obviously the minister is making it much more difficult for a family farm to maintain its capital position and remain in a viable state. Certainly this measure strikes a heavy blow at the concept of the family farm, and a heavy blow at the efforts of anybody who has built up a small business to keep it in his family in any satisfactory condition.

I only mention these details today for the purpose of emphasizing the importance of the subject that I now propose to develop. I have done this to emphasize that what I am talking about concerns not only a few wealthy people in Canada but indeed hundreds of thousands of Canadians. We will have plenty of time to discuss the details of the legislation, but my point today is that legislation which the minister announced, I think it was on October 12, the date of his budget speech—I do not want to be wrong about this date but I think it was approximately October 12—has not yet been introduced and there is no sign of it. As far as we know it will not be made public until some time in the new year. My point, and I want to make it as emphatically as I can, is that this legislation which is to take effect as of October 12 will not have been seen by anybody in October, November or December, and I do not know about January of next year.

Here is legislation that affects the plans, the wills and the intentions of hundreds of thousands of Canadians, and yet the Minister of Finance for some reason apparently thought it was perfectly all right for him to announce on October 12 that these changes are going to be made and leave hundreds of thousands of Canadians hanging in limbo for months and months and months.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister says he is anxious to try to help transfers between husbands and wives. I cannot help but notice the comments that experts have been making on the budget resolution, its lack of clarity in a number of respects, the confusion it has created, and the fact that nobody will know where they really are until the legislation is introduced, in fact, until it becomes law.

In the meantime everybody is hanging in limbo. I do not know what is going to happen, what the position is of people who have had the misfortune to die or will die between the time the minister made his announcement and the time the law becomes effective. I do not know what anybody can do in the meantime to try to protect himself with regard to this measure. Lawyers and others are making it very clear that they are finding it exceedingly difficult to give anybody any advice. The one thing they are saying is that a very substantial percentage of Canadians will have to change their wills or be penalized. Surely, Mr. Chairman, this is not good enough.

Certainly we do not know what the new law will be in any detail. The minister announced it would be retroactive to October 12. There are many doubts about the detailed meaning of the resolution. Incidentally, it is said by some that it will be years before litigation in the courts really clarifies some aspects of what the minister has in mind, but there are many doubts now which the legislation will probably clarify when it is introduced and passed, although I may be optimistic in this regard.

As I say, there is no sign of the legislation, no sign of it being introduced before the new year. Yet it will have a profound effect upon hundreds of thousands of Canadians. There appears to be at least four months of unnecessary—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again later this day.

Progress reported.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Right Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable house attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

• (12:50 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1968, to the 30th day of June, 1969, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and by Air Canada.

An act respecting Atlantic Peat Moss Co. Ltd.—Mousse de Tourbe Atlantic Cie Ltée.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Bechard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, before lunch I was explaining to the committee the confusion and injustice created by the Minister of Finance as a result of the imprecise manner in which he proceeded to announce the changes in gift and estate taxes. I should like to continue on this quiet Friday afternoon to give the Minister of Finance the benefit of another view in respect of one or two other aspects. I mentioned this morning that the budget speech was delivered on October 12. I believe it was delivered on October 22 and I should like to be as accurate as possible.

There appears to be an indication that for three or four months we will be uncertain about these taxes because of the content of the legislation concerned. In respect of anything that is far reaching we may experience several years of uncertainty so far as judicial interpretation is concerned. I do not intend to complain about the judicial doubts at the moment but rather about the procedure the minister has followed which in turn has created serious confusion in the minds of not just thousands but hundreds of thousands of Canadians. This is inexcusable.

It is my hope that the minister will not attempt to justify the creation of this confusion by saying how difficult it is to get measures before the house. I do not think there is any question of emergency in this regard. The minister has said that as far as revenue and expenditures are concerned things will pretty well balance out, at least so far as this aspect of his budget speech is concerned. I refer, of course, to the changes in estate and inheritance taxes.

The minister obviously chose his own time to announce these changes in the law. They should not be judged in terms of revenue but rather in terms of their effect on the Canadian people. Perhaps the minister introduced these changes at this time to distract attention from the size of the budget deficit and the general increase in taxation. Certainly he has created not only additional but enormous confusion.

I am wondering how estates of individuals who have died since the minister's budget speech are being administered. What effect is this uncertainty having in respect of insurance policies payable to widows and children? I am sure the situation cannot be exactly felicitous at the moment. Having announced these changes, the minister ought to have proceeded immediately to bring them into effect, thereby eliminating this confusion and bringing assistance to these widows as quickly as possible. If the minister intended to wait several months, why did he include the element of retroactivity?

The size of gifts that could be made free of taxation under the law as it existed prior to October 22 was not substantial. No great harm could befall if citizens were able to operate under the old laws so far as exemptions were concerned. Those Canadians who might have chosen to make large gifts in order to benefit from the old rates could possibly do so during this interval. This situation could have been covered by making the new rates retroactive so far as gift taxes were concerned.

As I pointed out this morning, I do not think the minister or the government fully realized the effect these proposals would have on institutions such as the family farm. Quite apart from these effects, I do not think there is any real justification for this retroactive feature regarding testamentary provisions. Certainly, even under this government, nobody is going to be in a hurry to die just to get the benefits of certain tax rates which will prevail for a limited period of time.

I suggest that the proper procedure to follow with regard to a measure designed to reform taxation—and the minister put this forward as an interim measure of reform—would be to introduce a draft bill for study and clarification because when we are considering measures which have to be fitted into the total tax structure in order to see how they work out there are all sorts of complexities that even the minister and his staff are not likely to see at first glance. So I suggest that the proper course would be to have some procedure whereby people could express their views and which would elicit comments from others outside the government service who have to work and live with these laws from day to day.

I suggest this is an improvised reform. We had improvised estimates last winter that proved to be very wide of the mark despite the most firm assurances concerning their validity. Now we have an improvised reform introduced in such a way that there will be the most severe confusion for months at least and maybe irremediable hardship for some people who get caught in the meantime.

The minister has put this measure forward as one which will be of assistance to wives. It may in the end assist wives after the confusion has passed but it will certainly assist one group of people, namely lawyers, because it will result in wills being drafted and perhaps redrafted by the thousands if not by the hundreds of thousands.

The minister has taken this course and has created confusion. I say to him that the best thing he can do now to minimize the difficulties that exist and help the Canadian people get out of the mess he has created is to immediately produce the draft bills—because more than one is required—and to place before the house and the people of the country the detailed legislation. I hope the minister does have the legislation ready. I think he should no later than Monday place before members of the house and the country draft legislation so that at least some of the confusion resulting from the bare bones of the budget resolutions will be removed and the process of consideration and analysis of the legislation can be started.

The week end is approaching so I will be content to wait until the first day of the week when I would most earnestly call upon the minister to circulate among the members of the house draft legislation relating to these proposals. The legislation must be ready inasmuch as a month ago, on October 22, the minister announced his changes. Let us have it in draft form so that we can at least start to remove the confusion which exists.

I should now like to turn briefly to two other areas. I wish to express my concern regarding the attitude which the Minister of Finance has adopted toward the country and the provinces with regard to financial questions in general. I will not go over the ground which I covered in the budget debate but I again call the minister's attention to the effect his stand will have upon the pending priorities in the country, the effect it will have on increasing the disparity in services in various parts of the country, and the unfortunate effect his attitude will have on federal-provincial relations. I am referring to the minister's imposition of restraints and at the same time his tendency to push the provinces into new programs. Generally speaking, I do not want to exaggerate, but I think there is a very real danger that in a short period of time this government, through the medium of the Minister of Finance as well as the Prime Minister, will cause a serious deterioration in federal-provincial relations and will very rapidly lead the country close to disaster in this area.

I urge the minister to change his approach in another area which I will mention briefly. I refer to his attitude toward the problems of international currency. Judging from the minister's public pronouncement I think he is unbelievably complacent with regard to these problems because he has given the Canadian people the impression that last week's problem was largely one of European concern. His statement may have been intended to give reassurance about the strength of the Canadian dollar but the fact is we in Canada are immediately affected by the restrictions which Great Britain has imposed upon trade as a result of the currency difficulties. Surely we must all be very concerned about the way that various countries are reacting to these currency difficulties by adopting policies of restriction which cannot help but have a dampening effect upon international trade and which, if they spread, could lead to a very serious increase in the difficulties in international commerce.

I think the minister should be taking initiatives to try to bring about measures to strengthen the international currency system, and he should be doing this not only through his officials. I think there is no country in the world that has a greater interest in this or has more to fear from the existing situation than has Canada, despite the assurances of the minister. I say this because it must be very clear to every Canadian that, for example, every time the United States feels it necessary to take some particular measure to project their currency position, that measure is likely to have an effect on Canada because of the extent of our trade with the United States. When the United States imposes particular measures of a restrictive nature to preserve its cash position, what usually happens is that the Minister of Finance has to beetle off down to Washington to get an exemption from that restriction and thus yields a further measure of Canadian independence.

It is pretty well accepted that as a result of efforts we made in 1963 and again last winter to get an exemption from the United States we really do not have any independent monetary policy left in Canada. I am not exaggerating. The minister can make a face about it, but the fact is that as a result of the extent to which we are tied in by the arrangements we have with the United States in this respect, our effective autonomy in the area of an independent monetary policy is very limited. It seems to me that every time there is a monetary crisis which affects the United States or ourselves there is a very real chance it will result in a further diminution of our independence as a country.

In addition, there is our general interest in doing everything we can in Canada through our international associates to try to achieve happier methods than we have today of providing for an orderly adjustment of currencies as required, and not just have countries resorting to the kind of restrictive practices to which they are resorting today which, as I said, when they involve the United States and ourselves usually result in some reduction of our independent position. I say to the minister, therefore, there is no country that has more reason than Canada to be concerned about this subject. When he gives the Canadian people the impression that the existing difficulty is not of much concern to us but is primarily a European concern, I suggest to him he is doing no service to Canada in taking this line.

I do not wish to take any more time of the committee this afternoon because these are subjects to which we will be returning from time to time as they are brought forward. I deplore the almost unbelievable complacency of the minister with regard to our international monetary problems. I deplore his almost unbelievable arrogance—and I use that word advisedly—in giving no explanation to the house for misleading the house with regard to the estimates. I deplore the attitude adopted toward the provinces, not so much for the provinces as for the effect it will have on the people in various parts of Canada and on the governmental services available to them, and the effect it will have in different parts of Canada on the growth rate and on the growth rate of our country as a whole. I deplore the effect this arbitrary attitude will have on the distortion of expenditures and the effect it will have on the lives of individual Canadians.

As I have indicated today, sir, I also deplore the views the minister has expressed with regard to his tax measures and the effect of those measures on not a few hundred or a few thousand but many thousands of Canadians in a quite unnecessary way. We have had a few months only of a majority government in this country. I think the minister has become high-handed in his attitude toward these problems. I am not talking about his morality. When I was speaking in the budget debate I said the government was like a bunch of western badmen, shooting hell west and crooked. This came out in Hansard as, "a bunch of western badmen and just as crooked".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hansard is always right.

Mr. Stanfield: I was not presuming to pass judgment on the morality of the minister. However, I am saying that the people of Canada did not give this government a majority to act in such a way as not to be responsible to the house, to act in a high-handed way toward the people of the country, to be careless of the problems it is creating for the people of the country. If I may presume to give the minister a bit of advice, Mr. Chairman, I think he must learn very quickly to distinguish between firmness, which is obviously very necessary in a minister of finance, and arbitrary action and complacency which are very unfortunate in a minister of finance.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, on other occasions in this house we have pointed out how unfair the budget was in its impact on the little men of this country, the ordinary taxpayers, in view of the fact that the 2 per cent social development tax stops at a certain level and leaves those with higher incomes relatively free while those in the lower and middle income brackets have to bear the full brunt of the minister's austerity program. This afternoon I should like to discuss something that goes beyond equity and perhaps deals with whether this country is going to survive at all in view of some of the statements that have been made by the Prime Minister and some of the past attitudes of the government. I hope the minister will lift himself out of the boredom into which he has now sunk. There is not much time left, only another two hours. He sits there and reflects on how little he thinks of this debate. His head is sunk in his hands; he scratches his head and yawns.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I have been sitting here listening very attentively to everything that has been said by the Leader of the Opposition and I am now listening attentively to my hon. friend. I certainly have the right to make notes and to read those notes.

Mr. Saltsman: I accept the minister's statement about his attentiveness and can only say that I marvel at his great dexterity which makes him so capable of performing all these functions simultaneously.

The other day, Mr. Chairman, the Globe and Mail contained a report of an interview or discussion between Jay Walz, correspondent of the New York Times, Seymour Topping, foreign news editor of the New York Times, and the Prime Minister of this country. The Prime Minister was asked the following question:

> Are you worried by the influx of U.S. capital investment, in the sense that this investment might result in an American economic domination of this country?

In reply the Prime Minister stated:

> I think the problem of economic domination is somewhat inevitable—not only of the United States over Canada but perhaps over countries of Europe as well.

We have long suspected that the Liberal party had committed itself to continental integration, that the Liberal party has no concern about the future of Canadian nationalism, and this statement of the Prime Minister confirms our worst fears. I am not standing here today with the objective of haranguing the Minister of Finance. I said what I did to gain the minister's attention. I wanted his attention because I want to ask him some questions rather than to stand here and say I have all the answers, that I can tell him how to run the country. I should like to pose some questions to the Minister of Finance and to the members on that side of the house.

Perhaps the minister has some answers to these questions. After all, there are some members who recall some of the statements made by the present Minister of Finance when he was on the opposition benches. At that time we had reason to hope that things would be different if he became minister of finance. After all, he was the white hope of Walter Gordon; this was the man the former minister of finance felt had a genuine interest in the future survival of this country. This is the man who, from the opposition benches, denounced those forces that were working against Canadian nationalism. Today he is a powerful figure; he is the Minister of Finance. He sits in that exalted place and he has enormous influence in terms of the policies this country will be following, the kind of objectives that will be sought through the use of budgetary policies.

I ask the minister if he agrees with that statement by the Prime Minister, whether he believes that Canada is doomed to extinction, that it is inevitable our economy will be dominated by the United States? Does he believe that if it is dominated by the United States there can be such a thing as Canadian independence, that we can pursue social policies different from those directed by the United States?

I am not going to take a definitive stand on the question of foreign ownership. I am not at all convinced that what stands in the way of Canada developing her own policies or maintaining her independence is foreign ownership. I think that excuse is too glib and too simple and I do not buy it at all. I think that what is standing in the way is the refusal of the government to stand up to corporate power, whether it be Canadian, American, British or any other corporate power, and to say that the government of Canada as elected by the people of this country should decide the nature and scope of our society, that our lives are not going to be ruled by the makers of toothpaste and underarm deodorant.

Policies should be formulated by this parliament rather than in the board rooms of corporations. Our policies must be debated by this parliament rather than foisted upon us by faceless corporations. We must declare that taxation will originate in this parliament instead of our being subjected to the kind of taxation that is imposed upon us by corporate power. Let us make no mistake about that, Mr. Chairman. Our corporations tax Canadians just as effectively as does the government, perhaps more effectively because Canadians do not always see such taxation whereas they do see taxation by government. The corporations, aided and abetted by our tax system, decide on the kind of expenditures they are going to make and the kind of policies they will pursue. As a result of our tax system all of us pay for this, whether we buy the specific products of the corporations or not.

I am prepared to sit down at this moment, Mr. Chairman, if the minister would tell me whether he believes that this country is inevitably doomed to economic domination by the United States. Does the minister wish to answer at this time?

Mr. Benson: The simple answer is, no.

Mr. Saltsman: Well, Mr. Chairman, it is just not good enough to say "No". The minister is contradicting the Prime Minister who has said that he believes this to be the case. It is all right for the rest of the cabinet to fly kites, but surely the Prime Minister is not flying kites. I think that more than a casual "No" thrown across the aisle is required.

What we want to know, Mr. Chairman, is what sort of policies the government is going to bring in to ensure that this is not allowed to happen. We want to know what sort of commitment the government is going to make to the Canadian people that this will not happen.

We live in great fear of retaliation. Liberal after Liberal has risen in this house and across the country, including no less a Liberal than the former prime minister, Mr. Pearson, and spoken of this fear. Mr. Pearson made a speech in the west in which he intimated that in this country we really cannot have an independent policy because 60 per cent of our exports go to the United States. He asked how we can maintain our independence when we have so many eggs in the one basket.

We seem to have this great fear that the United States will do dreadful things to us if we try to assert ourselves, if we try to develop a policy in regard to NATO that is suitable to Canada, or a policy in regard to NORAD, or if we make a move to recognize China before the United States is ready to grant us permission. There is a fear that we cannot do any of these things, and this despite the rather enlightened statements made by those who ran in the last election. Now that these same gentlemen are in office their statements seem to be forgotten; certainly they are not reflected in government policy.

What are we afraid of? It seems to me that the United States needs Canada infinitely more than Canada needs the United States. This talk of retaliation is really just a bit of nonsense. I have gone over this in my own mind and have tried to visualize in what way the United States could retaliate in any real fashion that would be of long run significance to us, and I have failed to find such ways. It seems to me that the great power of the United States rests in the chicken heart of the government and is not based on sound economic grounds. If the United States chose to invade Canada, of course, or to send a military force across the border, I do not think there is much question in my mind or anybody else's mind that that would be the end of the ball game. But I doubt that we need worry about that sort of thing because I do not think the United States is really interested in retaliation of that kind. What we are discussing here is economic retaliation.

In this regard, Mr. Chairman, what can the United States really do to us? Would they stop buying our iron ore? They need it. Not only that, but in some ways they have given us a hostage to fortune in the sense that so much of our raw material resources are owned by the United States. They would hurt themselves in two ways. Not only would they not get the supply of ore they need to keep the mills of Pittsburgh operating but they would also hurt the interests of their own investors. I suggest that those who are afraid that the United States would stop buying from Canada are really scaring us with an empty threat. The Paley report of some years ago pointed out that the United States would become increasingly dependent on raw materials from abroad, particularly from Canada. Therefore, I think we can assert our independence and can take a stand without any great fear of retaliation.

Sometimes, Mr. Chairman, ministers of finance have a phobia about capital flows, about our money supply from the United States being cut off. Actually, all of the evidence seems to indicate that we are almost completely self-sufficient in this country in the matter of capital formation. If we are not completely so at the present time we could make ourselves self-sufficient if we taxed foreign corporations as adequately as the Carter commission suggested they should be taxed. Much of the potential taxation that is not collected in this country is money that is of benefit to foreign corporations.

As the result of this fear about the inflow of United States capital being cut off, Canada has made all sorts of suicidal arrangements that restrict our ability to influence monetary policy in this country. We probably agreed to a fixed exchange rate in return for access to the United States capital market. The Liberal party prides itself on being businesslike. It likes to talk of the close relationship that exists between it and the chamber of commerce. The chamber of commerce is enthralled with it. But it strikes me that the Liberals are poor businessmen and have made bad deals for the nation.

The other day during the debate on defence production I was pleased to be told that we do not have to worry about the end of the war in Viet Nam. If that war comes to an end and some of the defence production sharing agreements we now have with the United States are not renewed, the factories of Canada can switch over to other kinds of production. I was pleased to get that information because I think we should be getting out of shared cost defence agreements with the United States. I think the government should stop scaring the working people of this country into believing that we have to stay with these agreements because there is $300 million worth of work involved, as though no other work were available. It is as though these people are to be committed to making bombs and bullets used to kill people in a war we do not approve of, in a war in which our government has remained neutral.

Is it right for the government to slant its words in this direction? Is it right for the government to say to the Canadian people, when some of us ask for military production to be stopped because we do not wish to participate, even by the making of armaments, in a war we do not approve of: Oh, but we are preserving your jobs; that is why armaments must be made; your jobs must be preserved. I think it is quite dreadful for the government to take this stand and I hope the minister will take the opportunity to comment on this situation.

It seems to me that nature was very good to Canada. It gave us enormous wealth and great opportunity. I think Canada was very fortunate in its early leaders, who knew that to create a nation with a different sense of values they would need to be imaginative, bold and strong. Our early Canadian leaders overcome the obstacles of distance and geography and welded our nation on the northern part of this continent. They could easily have said: The economic lines on this continent flow north and south, and abdicated their responsibilities. But they did not. They made enormous sacrifices to create a special kind of country and they were successful. Distances were overcome, the nation survived, and it has prospered. But just at a time when the prophecy of another statesman who said that the 20th century will belong to Canada may come true, we find that the Prime Minister and the government do not believe the prophesy; they do not believe it will come true and do not believe it needs to come true.

This house is entitled to answers from the government. We want to know what sort of fiscal and financial policies generally the government will bring in to make sure we are masters of our own house and that the people of this country have a future. I do not think we need to pay, as some on the government side have suggested, a large price for our independence. If anything, our independence ought to make us more prosperous than we now are. Although this debate cannot continue for much longer I look forward to hearing the minister say something on this subject that will assure our people we have not been sold out completely, as the words of the Prime Minister would indicate.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, at the very beginning of my remarks, I would like to say that economic balance is impossible in the present context without financial reform.

Recently, I attended the meetings of the United Nations, which must face up to the communist expansion in the world. In order to do that, we have no solution other than to arm ourselves to the teeth and ask every member country for a bigger contribution.

On the other hand, at the meeting of the economic committee, of which I was a member, I said that in order to fight communism, we should not resort to weapons or force, because I think we shall not defeat communism by using force against force.

In fact, communism is an idea and an idea must be fought with another idea, stronger, deeper, more logical, easier to understand and better suited to the economic objectives and realities of each country.

The outcome of all that is that more money is asked to revive the arms race, to buy more arms and stockpile more war material, to face the communist threat throughout the world.

There again it has been found that everything is simply an economic and financial matter, each country knuckles under again and wonders how to finance its contribution and discharge its commitments. Everything depends on each country's finances.

So, I simply said to my colleagues: If you want to finance your military organizations, if you want all countries to contribute adequately and according to their responsibilities, you must set up a financial organization which will enable every country to contribute its share, if there are no other means, without depriving the people of the necessities.

Here in Canada, we have a huge debt which cripples all our initiatives, all our economic activities. We pay too much interest on money. Federal and provincial debts are immeasurable, as well as municipal, school and individual debts.

We are now at a stage where we can no longer pay the interest on our debts; however, we must find billions of dollars to cope with communism, to organize ourselves and meet our commitments.

If we cannot meet our obligations reasonably well under the present system, let us try to improve it, let us try to find a few practical solutions to balance our economy again. If building destructive machinery is physically possible, it should also be financially possible. Something that is physically possible, should logically be possible, financially and economically. This is the point I want to make.

I should like to go over what has been done since June 25, since the present government has come to power. The claim is that great things have been done. But I say, that the people are being more and more dispossessed, and that they have new economic and financial problems. That is what the present administration has brought.

How is it that thinkers, free men like the members of the government should suddenly become the slaves of the old routines, customs and disciplines of the Liberal party? This was supposed to have been something new. They were supposed to have found a new organization to balance the economy without increasing taxes. They were supposed to find financial ways and all. Nothing at all that has been done.

A series of reforms were made in the departments, and in the office staff of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). That is not at all where reforms should be made. The people are not lacking anything there. But they do in private homes, residences and slums.

Since the present government has come to power, interest rates have been increased. Those who used to receive from 2.75 per cent to 5 per cent will get 6 per cent, 7 per cent and even more in the future, from $15 to $30 more per $1,000, from $15,000 to $30,000 per million. The poverty of the millionnaires, or lesser capitalists, does not need to be abolished. There is something more pressing than that, like increasing family allowances from $6 or $8 a month to a reasonable level, commensurate with the increase in the national production and the increase in the cost of living.

Up to $60 per month and sometimes $120 per month is distributed to foster homes and orphanages for children of the same age. Can an unmarried person understand that?

The government does not lack money, but residences and private homes do. However, public administration goes on as before, increasing the expenses of departments and distributing increasingly considerable sums to political parties, while the individuals lack money.

The government members are constantly increasing the income of citizens who already have one thanks to their employment or their capital, but they fail to increase the income of citizens who do not have any because they are unemployed or do not have any capital. However, those individuals who are unemployed and have no capital need some income to obtain the necessities of life for their subsistence.

Let the government change this old-fashioned way of administering the country and the Canadian people. Let them think of groups of citizens without money and without income before raising the profits and the reserves of institutions, companies, banks and rich people, all of whom are already flourishing economically.

Mr. Chairman the government is still spending its time in promoting productivity, the profits, chances of success, interests and capital surplus of the rich and powerful in Canada, either themselves or their companies. The gap is widening between the rich whose income is increasing and the poor who pay more and more taxes in order to pay for rising interests on public debts. Small wonder that this national imbalance is becoming worse and worse. This must be changed if we want to establish a just society and if we want to have a united Canada.

Have the members of the present government forgotten or, indeed, ever known that companies and individuals can capitalize $28 billion on a production of $68 billion, in 1968, after having lived well and paid their taxes? Have they forgotten or even realized that, at the same time, the government has an administrative deficit every year, and that many citizens and families live from day to day, lacking the necessities of life and cursing the government, progress and society? The government has not thought or ever known what could so easily be done.

Have they ever realized that it would be easy to make a few changes, not within institutions, organizations, banks, companies, structures and systems, but merely in the basic philosophy of the right hon. Prime Minister, the 29 ministers and the 264 members of the government, so that every citizen who is not working and has no income may be given a share of the revenue of this production of $68 billion in 1968, or out of the capitalization of $28 billion, which is really becoming too ambitious and even harmful and dangerous for the economy.

All you have to do is think about it. The present government can easily set the situation to rights and re-establish economic stability on a nation wide scale.

However, this national economic stability will not come about by itself. It will only be brought about by change; it must be given new directions and steps must be taken to readjust it once more to the actual situation in the country.

Before going any further, I should like to show the graph line of the Liberal budget. The October 24, 1968 edition of La Presse says, and I quote:

> Of the eight budgets brought down by the Liberals since they came back into power five years ago, four raised the personal income tax, one reduced it and three left it unchanged.
> Since 1963, federal budgets are divided as follows:
> June 13, 1963: Mr. Walter Gordon and his "realistic budget" are soon in hot water, and the budget has to be appreciably modified; however, the minister persists in his determination to bring no change in the personal income tax.
> April 26, 1965: anticipating a $300 million deficit, Mr. Gordon reduces by 10 per cent the personal income tax. In one year, the government loses $265 million A married man with two children earning $5,000 a year was to benefit from a $30 reduction which brought down to $208 the amount for that fiscal year.
> March 29, 1966: Mr. Mitchell Sharp invites the Canadian people to "spread out prosperity". He restores for the most part the reduction granted by Mr. Gordon. The low wage-earners still benefit from a 10 per cent reduction, but on the whole, the government takes back $210 million out of the $265 million lost the previous year. The tax reduction for the taxpayer earning $5,000, now amounts to only $20.
> December 19, 1966: Mr. Sharp's mini-budget changes the 4 per cent tax on taxable income distinct from the basic tax, tax which pays most of the cost of the old age pension. Increasing from $120 to $240 the maximum amount a taxpayer can pay in that regard, Mr. Sharp increases to $135,000,000 per year the fund which makes it possible to assure an income to pensioners. As a result needy pensioners can get a $30 supplement to their pension which amounted to $75 a month that year.
> June 1, 1967: Hoping for a new deficit to fight the recession, Mr. Sharp does not tamper with the income tax rate.

November 3, 1967: Mr. Sharp wants to levy a 5 per cent surtax on basic tax over $100, limiting the increase to $600 for each taxpayer. That bill is defeated in the Commons, and Mr. Sharp proposes a surtax of 3 per cent, illimited, which is finally approved in March of this year.

Effective for 1968 and 1969 only, the surtax will yield $105 million in 12 months. The family-head with a yearly income of $5,000 will have a tax increase of $3.

October 22, 1968: Mr. Benson levies a "social development" tax of 2 per cent which will be effective on January 1, 1969, and which applies to the taxable income, as the old age security tax. Contrary to Mr. Sharp's surtax, this tax does not apply to the basic tax only and, therefore, the yield should be higher. Mr. Benson thinks that this tax of $46 for the taxpayer with an income of $5,000 will yield $440 millions to the government in one year.

That is, Mr. Chairman, the administration, the logic of the present government. The present government is doing eaxctly what its predecessors have done. You do not have to be a genius to understand the situation. Things have not changed an iota in the last five years, the last ten years or even since Confederation. This financial nonsense, Mr. Chairman, adopted in wartime is accepted in peacetime. With the help of borrowed money at exorbitant rates, we are trying to progress in peacetime. In order to pay our wartime debts, we are increasing the value of bonds issued to finance the wars to 2, 3, 4, 6, 7 and even 8 percent. Such are the ways of the present administration.

They imagine themselves able to set things straight, while the economy is tumbling down. There seems to be no ways to find a balance. I think the hon. Minister of Finance is beginning to have headaches. If he would think it over and listen to those who might have some solutions, the situation might improve. I believe it would be easy to decrease the taxes and I believe also that it is easy to have everybody pay taxes on an equal basis rather than having an income tax form for the small taxpayers and one for the others. Under the present system, everything is taken from the poor and given to the rich. If means cannot be found to balance our economy, well, let us take a look at the income tax rates and let justice be done. The most outrageous injustice ever done in any country is found in our income tax rates. It has created widespread dissatisfaction. It is what is bringing on the revolution in Canada and it will lead us to war and disaster. Injustice reigns in the field of taxation.

The Carter report, up to now, has offered logical solutions; however, they have not yet been followed; they were not even looked into. Like all the other reports, the Carter report will probably remain on the shelf and no attention will be given to it, although it cost $3½ millions.

Mr. Chairman, the Berlin or Moscow dictators, as well as the modern banker, grab the people's money and, being dictators, use it either to make guns, or to get people into debt; both types despise mankind, both want to dominate the world. The cult of the race, the cult of the pocket-book, a terrified world, cowering under a deadly weaponry or crushed by ruinous debts which it cannot repay: bend or die, pay or croak, such is the situation and everyone knows it.

Prosperity is not dependent upon a perpetually favourable balance of payments, Mr. Chairman. A monetary instrument does not need gold to play its role. It is unused money that causes unemployment of men, and an injection of new money would revive the general activity. With a currency regulated according to the needs of a country, it would be possible to keep that country out of economic depressions. If the volume of money regulated by the state removes stagnation, money in the hands of the state would guide the various activities and constitute a real dictatorship by the government over the economic life of the country. It would replace bank dictatorship by political dictatorship.

If, on the contrary, Mr. Chairman, by deduction, money originally placed in the hands of the consumer were to guide the economic life, according to the wishes of the consumer, that would generate social and economic democracy where freedom could develop against all forms of planning or dictatorship as imposed upon us today.

As far as workers' salaries and interests paid to investors are concerned, planning will never succeed in solving this problem, since progress is reducing the number of people earning a salary. It is because we cling to that policy of salaries and interests that millions of people earn a bare living and curse progress instead of blessing it. This is why Social Credit is asking to distribute dividends to everybody, so that everybody may share in progress.

I say: "share in progress". Progress is the result of science which, together with the personal work of inventors and investors, who are rewarded in the usual way, which is their justification. But accumulated science, which is common capital, plays an important role in invention and progress. After the capitalist and the inventor, as well as the workers, have been rewarded, that share remains of accumulated science which belongs to everyone.

That is why all the good things which remain unsold, all the good things that the salaries and interests do not buy, belong to everyone. Everyone is entitled to his small share, instead of letting it go to waste and stopping progress. And who is to see that everyone shares in the progress? The present government, seeing it represents everyone and is responsible for the well-being of all.

There are several ways of allowing men to purchase their share of progress. First of all, by lowering the price of goods so that more can be bought per dollar; secondly, by increasing the number of dollars in everyone's hands; thirdly, by lowering the absurdly high rate of interest we are subjected to and tolerate today.

Progress in the volume of production requires progress in the volume of money. As enormous as it is in the first case, it should become enormous in the field of distribution. Those who stick to the old methods of financial distribution, as we do today, are the enemies of progress and distribution; they paralyse the growth of progress in production and prepare the progress of revolution. As progress distinguishes man from the beast, Social Credit distinguishes the intelligent from the imbecile.

The government of a country certainly has the right to administer, legislate, implement for the common good, for the common prosperity of all. The government has that right or, if you would rather, that legal power. It also have the physical power, the executive capacity, it can find the men, the equipment and the things needed to serve the community. But it happens that the government does not acknowledge it has financial power; it always stumbles across restrictions in the field of finance.

This means that in spite of its unquestioned legal power and unlimited physical power, the government stands still for lack of financial power. Even in the case of centralized and planned government, as a result of the bill on economic planning proposed by several honourable members, who are economists too, the same remarks hold true. Legal and physical powers are not enough without financial power.

The honourable minister takes good care to stay away from the financial power. That is why, while proclaiming the rights of each individual, while asking for as much legal powers as possible for the lower organizations, we maintain that unless a financial power is also given to individuals, corporations and governments, the economy will remain paralysed, plans will stay on the drawing board, certain reports will gather dust, for lack of readers—the minister is aware of that—the citizens will remain poor and unemployment will rise, as is the case today.

At the present time, the number of the unemployed in Canada increases tremendously and within two months, we shall see what happens, as far as unemployment is concerned, in our beautiful Canada.

We do not object to the increase in the price of butter, to a gainful return for the farmers, for their products, but the reasons given by professors of economics are but a recognition of the figures. It is always necessary to adjust man, to adjust the consumer, to adjust the demand to the supply. We always do it the opposite way, and man is the victim.

When will they see the light and adjust the purchasing power? When will the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Finance bring the purchasing power into line with existing facts and situations? When will we see the great economists, highly paid and highly compensated by the system, ask for reforms in that direction?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is up.

Mr. Latulippe: Would you allow me, Mr. Chairman, to ask the minister to open his eyes and his ears and to reflect on everything that may happen in the next few days.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order, please.

• (3:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a brief statement with regard to the management of the public debt for the information of the committee and the public in connection with the announcement I am making in the normal way concerning the refunding of forthcoming maturities.

On November 21 I was able to announce the results of the highly successful Canada savings bonds campaign this year, and the plans to refund, through a new issue of $75 million of special 364 day treasury bills, a part of the $125 million of special treasury bills maturing today. These bills were sold at auction yesterday. I am announcing this afternoon plans to refund the $100 million issue of bonds maturing on December 15 and at the same time to refund in advance $100 million of the $400 million of bonds maturing on July 1, 1969. Such advance refunding will be of assistance to us in our debt management operations in the next fiscal year. In addition I have thought it prudent to raise an additional $50 million in cash through this issue to cover a portion of the recent increase in our exchange reserves, which will be announced in accordance with the usual timetable on Tuesday morning next.

I think it may be helpful to review the present prospect for further public debt operations during the remainder of the current fiscal year. In doing so I must stress the tentative nature of our projections by reason of unforeseeable changes in our foreign exchange reserves and also in the pace of the normal seasonal redemptions of outstanding Canada savings bonds.

Over the remaining four months of the present fiscal year I may wish to make some modest increase in the volume of treasury bills outstanding. Such an increase would take the form of small additions from time to time in the regular weekly issue of 91 day and 182 day bills. Combined with the bond financing announced today a modest increase in the bill issue, on present expectations, would leave the government with adequate working balances at the end of the fiscal year. In mid March plans will be announced for the refunding of $410 million of marketable bonds maturing on April 1. It is quite possible that this financing will be designed to raise some new money to meet the seasonal decline in cash balances in April. As in the issue announced today, the possibility of advance refunding will be considered in connection with each new issue to facilitate the orderly phasing of our debt management program.

If unforeseen requirements for the purchase of foreign exchange or the redemptions of savings bonds result in a significant reduction in the expected level of cash balances at the end of March consideration will be given to some new financing dated in February, but on the basis of the present prospects I do not believe that such an issue will be necessary.

I hope that this statement will be of assistance to the bond market and to those planning issues during the winter season.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

Supply—Finance

Mr. Chairman, while I am on my feet I should like to comment very briefly on a few matters which were raised by hon. members opposite. First of all, I wish to return to the question of the recent developments in the international monetary system, which has been raised by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. The recent crisis which affected the Deutsche mark, the French franc, and indirectly other currencies as well, was a source of deep concern. We can therefore all be reassured by the development in the exchange market during the past week. The measures announced by Germany, France and the United Kingdom, and the evidence of their vigorous implementation, appear to have restored the stability to the foreign exchange situation. A good start has been made.

It is understandable, however, that a disturbance on the scale of the past fortnight has given rise to some questions about the monetary system itself. On November 25, members of this house suggested that the system should be re-examined once again by an international conference. Similar suggestions have been heard from a number of other quarters and, in particular, the suggestion has been made that there should be a greater degree of flexibility in exchange rates.

I believe it would be appropriate for me to stress that the attitude of the government of Canada toward the international monetary system has been far from rigid. Members are familiar with the many discussions which have taken place in a variety of international meetings in recent years. During the last five years in particular, those concerned with international monetary question have met regularly within the framework of such organizations as the I.M.F., the Group of Ten and O.E.C.D. Canada has participated actively from the outset in all of these discussions, seeking to find ways of improving the system and consistently supporting the great number of improvements which have resulted.

The most notable of these has been the scheme for special drawing rights. It is hoped that the enlargement of the powers of the International Monetary Fund to allocate special drawing rights, which will add to international liquidity in a manner subject to rational, international control, will soon be an accomplished fact. In this context members might wish to note the significance of the forthcoming amendments to the Bretton Woods agreement legislation, which will enable Canada to help achieve this goal at an early date. Improvements have also been made in the arrangements regarding gold. Less spectacular, perhaps, but at least as important, have been the continuing efforts to improve the balance of payments policies of countries, and the operation of the adjustment process. Canada will continue to participate in his process of evolution and will examine with interest every proposal for further improvement of the system. The advantages and disadvantages of such particular proposals as that to enlarge the permitted degree of exchange rate flexibility are debatable. Nor is it clear whether they can command the necessary degree of international support, since the events of the past fortnight gave added evidence of the strong desire of countries to maintain their currencies at existing levels.

I feel some concern that the recent monetary difficulties may cause our attention to be diverted from the progress which has been achieved in international trade and payments in recent decades. During the postwar period world trade has grown rapidly and has been liberalized to a very marked degree. This has been of great benefit to Canada as a major trading nation whose prosperity depends on world trade to a degree equalled by few, if any other countries. It also was achieved, despite the fact that international liquidity grew at a much less rapid rate, particularly so in recent years.

Imbalances have emerged and have occasionally given rise to crises. These difficulties, however, have been contained by the adoption of appropriate economic and financial policies by industrial countries and, in the short run, by international support operations, all of which evolved within the framework of international consultations. I might refer in this context to the substantial improvement in the balance of payments of the United States which recent statistics have indicated. The first order of business therefore is to press on with these tasks and implement the plans which have been made to ensure future growth of international reserves.

The Leader of the Opposition raised a few other matters which I think are worthy of comment. First of all he referred to the estate and income tax resolutions. When I introduced the estate tax and income tax resolutions in the house they, of course, included changes in taxation of insurance companies in Canada. These are very complex changes and I indicated at the time that there would be discussion and reviews made after hearing from people in respect of these particular measures. I indicated also that I would not press these changes, with the result that we might have bad taxation law, because I personally do not want bad taxation law in Canada.

Having regard to the estate tax changes, they were made on October 22, budget night, because it was necessary to make such changes effective at that time, at least I believed it was. I still believe so, because of the many things that can be done during any intervening period of time. This is not retroactive legislation. Tax changes are almost always effective as of budget night, as my hon. friend will recall from past experiences. Perhaps I should say to my hon. friend that we have really had very few inquiries in respect of estate tax changes. We will be happy to consult with people, and with the professions, if they wish to come to us at any time. People will be available to talk to them because we want to end up with good law which will be effective.

There may be some period of uncertainty, as there always is when substantial changes in tax legislation are made. I hope this period will not be unduly long. I would have dealt with these changes now if we had the necessary time, and I am not trying to use this as an excuse because we are moving forward at this time. We hope to pass these measures in January, and if one checks back on former legislative changes in the tax field he will find that this will be one of the fastest changes to estate tax laws that has taken place in this house. Perhaps there will be a longer period of uncertainty than there should be. However, if it is passed within two, two and a half or three months it will still be one of the fastest changes.

There are a few other questions raised by hon. members.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question? Am I correct in assuming from what he has said that he does plan some changes in the estate and income tax legislation?

Mr. Benson: No, I am not contemplating changes at this time, but there are some things which were left open. If the hon. member read my budget speech carefully he will know that in respect of the determination of investment income by insurance companies to be taxed, there are some matters for consideration. We felt in this regard that consultation would be useful. I have no intention at the present time to change the resolutions, to answer the hon. member's question. The Leader of the Opposition also raised a number of other questions, and deplored this and that. I came to the conclusion that the real reason for his deploring this and that lies in the fact that the Canadian public did not elect him as Prime Minister on June 25.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benson: I have heard that hon. gentleman deplore so many things on so many occasions—

An hon. Member: You have no cause to say that.

Mr. Benson: The hon. member has received answers from the President of the Treasury Board, yet he said he has not received explanations regarding particular questions. In any event let me move on to the questions raised by the hon. member for Waterloo. He criticized me for not paying attention. I note that he is not even in the house to hear my reply—

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Waterloo is now attending a radio broadcast and he is unable to be here. I think it is unfair for the minister to make such a statement at this time.

Mr. Benson: I am sure the hon. member is out of the house on very important business. I shall take the first opportunity when he is back in the house to answer the questions he raised.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather touching on the part of the Minister of Finance when he claims that the Leader of the Opposition has made speeches in which he has deplored this and that thing. Of course the whole country deplores some of the things the Minister of Finance has said, as well as many things he has not said which we expected during the budget speech. The minister has still not explained the credibility gap referred to by the Leader of the Opposition. I refer, of course, to what actually has happened and what was suggested by the minister's colleague, the President of the Treasury Board. In any event, the government's record is there to be seen. There is a credibility gap. There is no question about that. It still remains unexplained.

The Leader of the Opposition has complained about the minister making statements outside this house in explanation of those things which should be explained here. Many members have complained about the minister making statements on television and radio, where he is not faced with a critical audience. I think government ministers should learn that this should not be done. These explanations should be given in the house. It is all very well for them to go out and speak before the television cameras, but these important statements must be made in this house where questions can be asked and answers provided. Ministers should not go before the television cameras to rationalize the positions they take, where they are not faced by those who will demand justification for their words, and where they cannot be brought up short and kept honest.

It was my intention to make certain comments this afternoon. I was interested to find that the minister touched upon some of the subjects I had in mind. He indicated that a week ago he found himself in the position to point out the successful campaign in respect of Canada savings bonds. He indicated that as a result he was going to be able to make some refunds. In other words, he has found himself with a limited amount of cash. What is going to happen 14 years from now when the government has to repay for these bonds at the promised rate of interest? Does the government intend at that time to entice or induce the bondholders to exchange these bonds for new bonds at a greater rate of interest? Quite frankly, I believe the government misrepresented the facts in respect of this latest bond issue. The advertisement suggested a basic interest rate of 6¾ per cent, increasing to 7 per cent. The advertisement stated that if investors did not cash their coupons they would receive a 150 per cent increase at the end of the 14 year period. But they did not tell the investing public that if those bonds were held for that time the value of $150 on a $100 bond would be taxable as income at the marginal rate.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: I am sure my hon. friend knows that there is an alternative and that you can report interest each year and pay the tax as you go along.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I grant you that, but you do not report it unless you have cashed the coupons.

Mr. Benson: No, that is not so.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There are very few people who are aware of this and they will simply ignore the bond interest up to the limit which need not be reported. There is more danger in what is not said than in what is said, and I can assure the minister that for the average investor it will be a case of paying income tax on the whole $150 at the marginal rate. So in effect this is a tax on capital. I agree that if a taxpayer wishes to report his income and pay tax on it, and if he then were to reinvest at the current rates each year, then there would not be a tax on capital. If the interest is left merely at compounding rates and unreported, the tax becomes a tax on capital because the whole of $150 would be taxed at the marginal rates as income.

In his statement this afternoon the minister was very careful not to indicate at what price the treasury bills were sold, what was the effect, and what were the rates on the bonds on which he is refunding in December and on which there is to be a pre-refund. I have the information here, so it is quite all right, but I would have liked to see the minister announce it because in actual fact I would suggest to the house the following—and here I will go into the precise details. For instance, the December 15, 1968 issue at the November 6 interest rate would be 6.15. The rate was not shown for the week of November 27, but if we look at the July 1, 1969, issue on which there is to be a $100 million pre-refund, we find that as of November 6 the rate was 6.27 and on November 27 it was 6.13. What will be the rate on the treasury bills? We know that the average rate on the 364 day special issue on this week's sales of treasury bills was 5.90, and a year ago a similar $125 million issue had an average yield of 5.65 per cent. In other words there was a full one quarter of 1 per cent increase in the interest on this type of investment in the spread of one year. Accepted bids reported by the Bank of Canada on this rate ranged from a high of 94.501 for a yield of 5.83 per cent to a low of 94.408 for a yield of 5.94 per cent. In other words, the minister is engaged in some refinancing here on very small fractions of 1 per cent.

During the sale this week the average yield for government of Canada treasury bills rose slightly from 5.65 per cent of last week to 5.66 per cent. Accepted bids on the $135 million ranged from a high of 98.613 for a yield of 5.64 per cent to a low of 98.605 for 5.57 per cent. The average bid was 98.603. I am putting this rather detailed information on the record because I think it is very relevant.

On the $35 million of six month bills, accepted bids ranged from a high of 97.223 for a yield of 5.73 per cent to a low of 97.215 for 5.75 per cent. We are told that similar amounts of both types of maturities, that is the three month bills and the six month bills, are to be offered this coming week.

It is strange that the Bank of Canada bought $36 million worth of treasury bills in the last week to support the sagging bill market. The minister indicated as well that the Bank of Canada is going to take a substantial portion of the forthcoming sales. This is a deliberate central bank action to support the bond market. In other words, the bank is actively participating in maintaining a lower interest rate than a true market rate if the forces of demand and supply were given a free operation and if the bank were not in there to support the rate. I suggest that this is why the minister is able to make refunds at a rate slightly below the existing market rate on refundable maturities.

We are told that there are to be further public debt operations during the remainder of the current year so that the government can engage in what they call a better debt management. I have a very uneasy feeling with regard to some of the operations of the government in the bond market. The classic example was the last Canada savings bonds operations. As I indicated, I wonder how high the government can go or what kind of carrot it will have to fashion in order to entice or induce the bondholders to exchange bonds either ahead of time, or again to postpone maturity date.

In other words we see the government building up a snowball when we look at the figures of the total government indebtedness, how much it has changed over the past few years, what the government has done and what are its prospects in the forthcoming years. In any event we have seen a natural build-up which I would say is conscious, and in many instances equivocal in the actions taken by the government to induce bond-holders to exchange their present holdings for bonds of longer maturity at higher rates. But there is always a day of reckoning. On the night of the budget we were talking about chickens coming home to roost. These chickens are going to come home to roost. I think the minister may be able to find some solace in the hope that he will not be the minister of finance when these things will have to be faced by whoever is occupying the office at that time. I am not talking about a sudden political reversal or anything like that, or the sudden demise of the minister. These happenings are being pushed off many years into the future.

Let us look at the interest rate as it stood during this week. On the day to day loans the average closing rate as of November 27 was 5.20 per cent. About a fortnight ago the rate was 4.75 per cent. In other words, day money has almost gone up by one half of 1 per cent. Surely the Bank of Canada return does not mislead. I am reading from it, and I think I can interpret the return quite as well as the minister. This is what it says. If the minister does not believe me, he must control his facial expression because there was a sort of grimace of disbelief on his face when I read out these figures.

Then, we go to the long term average, which is 6.95 per cent, and that is very close to the 83's at 7.12 per cent. This is a clear indication, Mr. Chairman, that the investing public still has a great fear of the bogey of inflation. As we go through the maturity dates of the major government issues in progression further and further away in their date of maturity, the interest rate rises. In other words, the investing public has less and less confidence that the government will be able to contain inflation, in view of its present performance. These investors therefore are hedging against inflation.

We could go through the whole of the statistical summary of the Bank of Canada and go through the bond issues to see where they stand and what they have done. Let us look, for instance, at the 83's. In May of 1966, they stood at 92 7/16. We should remember these are 4.5 per cent bonds maturing on September 1, 1983. The average rate at that time was 5.14 per cent. Any person who two years ago bought these bonds maturing in 1983 at 92 today would be $16 per hundred poorer because the market valuation of the same $100 bond would be $76.50 or an average rate of 7.07 per cent.

Let us look at the shorter term maturities, say the 7 per cent maturing April 1, 1973. Here we find a clear indication of a reversal. The present valuation of that bond is $101 for an average rate of 6.63 per cent. This is a clear indication of where the market has stood, somewhere between 6.75 per cent and 7 per cent. The 72's, which in 1965 were $95.50, on November 2 were down to $92. It is rather pathetic to receive letters from pensioners—

Mr. Stanfield: Where are the perpetuals?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They have disappeared from sight. In any event, as I say, it is pathetic to receive letters, such as I did the other day, from a man who is 83 years old, who, a few years ago, invested his remaining free capital in some 83's. Now, he is faced with his own illness as well as illness in his family, and must dispose of these bonds. He bought them at close to $100 and he was quoted, on the market, about $74. He writes to me and says, in what can I believe if these bonds of the government of Canada for which I paid almost $100 per bond will now only bring me between $74 and $76? This is the type of hardship that is being imposed on the investing public.

Let us not forget that the great proportion of Dominion of Canada obligations are held by the public, not the insurance companies. I know it is true that many government funds, such as unemployment insurance and the superannuation fund, have moneys invested in government securities. Let us look back and see the amount that is in the hands of non-residents. Of a total of $22,634 million of government of Canada obligations of all kinds, in May of this year residents of Canada held about $6 billion. In other words, they held roughly 25 per cent of the obligations. These are rough figures, and I am sorry that, as I stand here, the calculations cannot be more accurate. If a trust fund, shall we say, a union pension fund or a firm pension fund, it does not matter, had invested in Dominion of Canada bonds such as the 1983's, the trustees would be faced with losses on the face value of these bonds because of this rise in interest rates. The rise in interest rates is attributable, in part, to the actions of the government or the inaction of the government. Although the government may not be entirely responsible for the rise in interest rates, they are responsible in good measure for the rise in interest rates. This results in one of the hardships imposed upon the general public.

The other subject I want to speak about, Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes that remain comes within the estimates of the minister and relates to the Auditor General. We could go to the blue book and read from pages 138 to 155 all of the estimates for which the Minister of Finance is responsible. I should like to refer, however, directly and primarily to those of the Auditor General. The pertinent legislation provides that the Auditor General is responsible to parliament, not to the government. Yet we have seen how governments have placed the Auditor General within certain restrictions, and continue to keep him there. He is not unfettered. He cannot report independently to parliament. How is this? For one thing, we have received representations from time to time from the Auditor General with regard to the size of the staff he requires to enable him to report meaningfully to parliament.

The Auditor General has not been allowed to increase his staff, Mr. Chairman. Why? Because his administration budget is subject to Treasury Board direction. Who sits in control of the Treasury Board? The Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board. This is the limitation that is imposed directly on the Auditor General, I think it is scandalous and should be brought to an end as quickly as possible. The government must free the Auditor General. The Auditor General's office is not the servant of government, it is the servant of parliament. Yet the present situation is quite in keeping with the philosophy expressed by the government through the words of the Prime Minister, who has said: "We are the masters of parliament; we are the masters of this house". To that extent, Mr. Chairman, I suggest the government is being dishonest with this house by maintaining its control of the office of the Auditor General through control of its estimates.

We have seen a very modest reply to his repeated demands to be able to hire staff so as to enable him to do an adequate job on behalf of parliament. We know the Auditor General and his reputation for being honest and fearless. It must be because he is honest and fearless that these restrictions are maintained. This has been the practice over the years, I am not denying that it has not existed before. But I think the practice is wrong and that the government must immediately remove this injustice so far as parliament is concerned. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am looking forward to the announcement to be made in due course by the minister that the Auditor General will be given a freer hand and will be given that responsibility which the legislation passed by this house intended him to have.

The last point that I should like to raise is this, Mr. Chairman. Within the next fortnight another dominion-provincial conference will be convened. We know that after the last one the provinces went away—to say disappointed is the understatement of the year. To say that relations between the federal government and the provincial governments are on a good basis is also a major understatement. I suggest that this next conference is going to be the last chance for this administration to repair the harm that has been done to relations between the federal government and the provinces.

Yesterday we had the words of Premier Robarts of Ontario in which he gave fair warning to the federal government in terms that I think are even blunter than those which any premier of the province of Quebec may have used, or have been alleged to use. Naturally, Mr. Chairman, not as much ink will run because the remarks do not seem to have been motivated by the same circumstances. They have a political connotation. It is not racial, it is not religious, it is not linguistic, but political.

Perhaps the premier of Ontario has overstated his case, Mr. Chairman, but surely to goodness even we in this house must recognize the justice of his cause. We have heard the treasurer of the province of Ontario indicate the parlous state into which the province will be thrown in regard to taxation in order to meet legitimate programs. They are not embarking upon a new spending orgy. I will admit that the provinces could curb some of their programs, but many of them are joint programs initiated by the federal government.

On the one hand, Mr. Chairman, the federal government misses out on its estimates by some $700 million this past year. This it blames on joint programs with the provinces in limited sectors, and says the provinces should watch them more carefully. But who in the first place drove the provinces into that expense, and who now intends to drive them into medicare?

The province of Alberta I think has enjoyed, among all provinces in Canada, perhaps the greatest prosperity at the government level, not entirely due to ability but as a result of the good fortune of resources—though there has been some wise administration as well. I should just like to read the headline of the Edmonton Journal for Tuesday, November 26, which says: "Alberta's 6-month deficit hits record $132,290,000". And this, Mr. Chairman, for a population of 1.5 million people. This figure is $29,500,000 more than the six-month deficit for 1967-68, and we know that in 1976-68 that deficit was $99 million. In 1966-67 the deficit was $1 million.

When was the great change made in regard to post-secondary education, Mr. Chairman? It was in 1966-67. We know that the province of Ontario accuses the federal government of underestimating by far the cost of the post-secondary education program imposed by the federal government on the provinces. I warrant now, Mr. Chairman, if the deficit in the province of Alberta was $99 million for 1967-68, that the deficit for this year will be in excess of that sum. Yet Alberta is supposed to be one of the wealthier provinces of this country.

Premier Robichaud of New Brunswick has indicated that the budgetary deficit of his administration will be $42 million. The population and resources of New Brunswick are not comparable to those of the province of Alberta. As I said the province of Ontario is facing real problems. They have not yet indicated the size of its budgetary deficit but no doubt we will know the figure in a couple of months. And what about la province de Quebec?

All along the line, Mr. Chairman, there is an indication that the provinces will have to pull in their horns. I am not going to hesitate to tell this committee what the provincial auditor of Alberta, the provincial equivalent of the Auditor General of Canada, had to say in his report. He said that the only remedy is a complete re-examination of all expenditure programs of the province to decide which have become obsolete and which are not doing what they were designed to do. Mr. Huckvale said that he had been trying to preach restraint. We have also heard that said here by the Auditor General.

Time and time again, Mr. Chairman, we have had exhortations to the government to decide with the provinces on priorities so that they can live within their incomes. But now everybody must go and wear sackcloth and ashes. We must live in short commons. There are restrictions on this and that. There has been fiscal mismanagement by this administration over the years, and we are now having to pay for it. I do not for one moment believe the budgetary estimates for 1969-70 any more than I believe those we have had for 1968-69.

I see you are getting impatient, Mr. Chairman, and that my time is up. All I can say is that the sorry record speaks for itself.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, every time I look over to the Minister of Finance and he expresses worldly wisdom on his face, with his big smile and his silence on so many issues, I think of Buddha. Perhaps he should be called "Buddha Benson". This is the impression that some of us get with regard to his attitude to some of the problems that directly affect Canadians.

I should like to deal very briefly with some of the matters that have been brought to my attention by constituents. The first is a letter from the president of the superannuated women teachers of Ontario. It is dated November 21 and says:

• (4:30 p.m.)

May I draw to your attention, a petition which was forwarded to the Prime Minister this summer by the Ontario Association of Superannuated Women Teachers. It had been previously accepted by (1) The Provincial Council of Women, (2) The National Council of Women, and (3) The Canadian Teachers Federation, at their annual meetings. We now have the support of approximately 1,003,000 women.

In view of the obvious merit of this petition, may we hope for your whole-hearted support when the opportunity arises?

The resolution that the president, Mrs. Harriet C. Miles, refers to was passed in Toronto on January 25, 1968, at the conference of superannuated teachers. It reads:

Whereas the spiralling cost of living during the past ten years has caused much distress to many of the older group of citizens of Canada, and

Whereas the tax burden is falling heavily on those no longer able to earn, and

Whereas their already slashed incomes are being still further eroded by constantly increasing taxation,

Be it resolved that for all citizens of 70 years and over the income tax exemption shall be increased from $1500 to $2500 beginning January 1st, 1968.

I should like to hear the minister's reaction to this resolution which was passed by the Association of Superannuated Women Teachers. One million and three thousand persons support the association in Canada, and I think the minister ought to know that. He ought to make some statement other than that he is studying the matter and it will probably be brought forward in the spring's tax proposals.

Second, I wish to say a word about our foreign exchange rate. The minister came back last week from the monetary conference and made a pontifical statement in the house assuring us that we could have confidence in the dollar and that everything was all right. We, in the N.D.P., for a long time have been advocating a floating exchange rate. The minister has remained silent on this proposition. In fact, when the hon. member for Waterloo raised it the Prime Minister's response to a floating exchange rate was, "Heavens, no!" Yet the Postmaster General, a colleague of the Minister of Finance, has spoken out loudly and clearly on the question of Canada's having a floating exchange rate policy.

Last week I quoted part of something he had written for a book called, "The Nation Keepers". On page 214 of the book he sets out the argument for a floating exchange rate. I should like to hear what the minister has to say about the floating exchange rate, especially since this idea is becoming popular in financial circles. For some time now the president of the Royal Bank has advocated a floating exchange rate. What does the minister say to that?

It has been suggested that a "crawling peg" rate would solve monetary exchange problems. Writing to the London Times, Douglas Jay, a cabinet minister of Great Britain, had this to say about our recent currency crisis and the crawling peg rate:

> This could be done, for instance, by a system on the lines of the so-called "crawling peg". The exchange rate on any given day would not be able to move by more than, say, 1 per cent on either side of the peg. But the peg itself would be based on the average market rate over the previous, say, 12 months. The peg would thus "crawl" up or down automatically, without political decision or political crisis. The weak currency could slide down, and the strong up, by as much as 2 per cent a year. This should enable the long-term adjustments to be made without provoking uncontrollable speculation.

What does the Minister of Finance say to the idea of a crawling peg rate, which, as Mr. Jay says, might prevent speculative crises such as we have had recently.

Third, I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Finance to an unsigned letter that came to me through the mail. I do not know who sent it but the heading is, "Tax Evasion Cuts Revenue". The letter reads:

> Canadian corporations have been deferring income tax to future years since 1958.
> Federal and provincial revenues, depleted by billions of dollars over ten years, have burdened municipalities and school boards with heavy debts, involving interest at high rates and forcing ruinous taxation on small property owners throughout Canada.

Below the letter there is a list of 40 corporations with amounts of money opposite the name of each corporation. For example, the companies are shown as follows: "Bell of Canada, $79,916,000; Dominion Foundries, $101,617,000; Aluminum of Canada, $139,405,472; Imperial Oil, $87,645,000;." I have taken these companies at random from the list. I shall send the minister a copy of the letter and ask him to explain its meaning. Does it mean that Canadians are being bilked out of approximately $1.75 billion every year? If the minister could recover the amount that is owed to him in this manner he would have no problem in raising money to meet next year's expenditures.

I now wish to direct the minister's attention to the Carter report. It will be recalled that the right hon. member for Prince Albert appointed Kenneth Carter in 1962 to investigate Canada's tax structure. The report was submitted to parliament in February, 1967 and showed the tax inequities burdening low and middle income groups in Canada, and the unjustified benefits enjoyed by oil companies, mines and insurance companies by way of depletion allowances, tax holidays, etc. When the report was tabled in the house the present Minister of Finance attempted to play it down. He belittled it by saying it applied only to 1964 and, more especially, that it would have an adverse effect on the potential economic growth in Canada. I understand that the minister of finance of that time directed six special, independent studies on this matter to be undertaken in his department. He wanted to know what effect Carter's recommendations would have on the potential economic growth of Canada. All those studies indicate that if the recommendations were implemented they would have no adverse effect on our economic growth.

The high priced officials who assist the minister are in the gallery, and I am sure the Minister of Finance would be happy to table those independent reports that some of his officials may have prepared on the effect of implementing Carter's recommendations on the economic growth in Canada. In any event, perhaps the minister can be persuaded to show those reports prepared by members of his department to hon. members of the house.

It will be remembered that the minister of finance of that time invited different corporations to present briefs, setting September 30 as the deadline. Amazingly, 100 briefs came from industry alone. I have it on good authority that International Nickel spent $250,000 preparing their brief to fight the Carter report. When a hundred corporations attempt to justify their positions, one cannot but become suspicious. As my hon. friend says it is a clear attempt to preserve socialism for the rich.

In October, 1967, the minister promised a white paper containing tax proposals as close to the end of the year as possible—he did not indicate which year. This white paper has still to be produced. Some time in 1968 it was decided to drop this idea of a white paper. Now, the present Minister of Finance tells us we may see these long-awaited tax proposals in the early part of 1969, and that some of them may be implemented by the end of 1969. From the time this report was tabled by the government, back in February, 1967, some 20 months have now passed. One might ask: how much has this cost Canadians? One economist has calculated that this failure on the part of the government to act promptly on the proposals has cost Canadians a thousand dollars a minute, or roughly half a billion dollars a year. If this is so, there is certainly a strong case for deciding not to implement this proposed 2 per cent social improvement tax which the minister so proudly announced on budget night. If Canadians are losing all this money through failure to implement the Carter recommendations, it is high time he took some action to do so.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Carter made particular studies of certain areas of taxation. On the question of oil companies he told us they got one third of their profits tax-free on the ground that their assets, their underground assets, were being depleted. Profits from new mines are tax-free for the first three years—most oil well and gas costs are tax deductible. Mr. Carter said this cost the treasury $150 million a year in lost revenues. Some of the potash companies in the west have attempted to take advantage of this tax holiday. I am told they work for a while on exploration or development, and when the end of the three-year period is approaching they form new companies and attempt to get another three-year tax holiday. I should like to hear a statement from the minister with regard to the actions of some of these companies, most of which are attempting, not to evade the law but to avoid it.

In the year 1964, Mr. Carter said, eight big companies three of which were oil companies, accounted for 85 per cent of all depletion allowances in Canada. Because of heavy foreign ownership of our resources, United States residents received 80 per cent of the oil and mining benefits. Mr. Carter also told us that small businessmen have an easy time with the tax man because they pay only 21 per cent on the first $35,000 of their profits.

On the face of it, the government is soaking the big-income boys because the tax rate on incomes above $400,000 is 80 per cent. But, as the Carter report makes clear, tax rates as high as this are in practice only on the statute books; they are readily avoided by most of the few people who receive incomes of this size. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, the tearful plea made by the Prime Minister for those who are paying 80 per cent. He told us down in Halifax that he would have to take care of these people because otherwise we might see a flight of these talented men to other countries. He was not so much worried about the difficulties the little people might find in paying this 2 per cent social welfare tax, but he was concerned about these 80 per cent boys. I think we ought to draw Mr. Carter's words, that such a rate exists "only on the statute books", not only to the Minister of Finance but also to the Prime Minister.

Present practice under taxation law is to place the emphasis on the word "avoidance" rather than on the word "evasion". If ever avoidance is being exercised by corporations, it is within our Canadian tax structure. I happen to be a lawyer, and I might add that lawyers seem to do quite well in persuading big corporations to take advantage of this angle of avoidance.

Talking about people with incomes of $400,000 and more a year, this is one of the sleek methods they use to avoid taxation. They acquire farms and attempt to say they are in the farming business. Then they apply all the expenses of the farm operation—which in many cases runs at a loss—against income. After a few years have gone by, they have acquired a large tract of land, and taking advantage of urban expansion are able to dispose of it for a large capital gain. The minister in charge of housing is here, and he knows that this is the case. They have it both going and coming, as my hon. friend says.

I should like to spend a few minutes, now, considering the question of a capital gains tax. Yesterday I noticed that according to the Daily Star the premier of Ontario is studying the idea of a land profit tax. The article in the Star reads as follows:

> The Ontario government is considering a capital gains tax on land speculation, Premier John Robarts told the legislature yesterday.
> The tax would bolster revenue in the face of a government austerity program and help ease the high cost of housing in Ontario cities.
> Robarts said the treasury board is currently examining all areas of taxation "and this is one of them."

If this is one of the areas which the government of Ontario is studying, it is high time not only the Minister of Finance but the minister in charge of housing paid attention. If we permit the provincial governments to step in with regard to a capital gains tax the hon. gentleman will have a difficult time with his task force on housing, should it bring forward reasonable recommendations to solve the housing problem. It is one of the real shortcomings of Canadian tax history that we should have no capital gains tax. Such a tax exists in the United States and in Britain, yet in Canada we do nothing about those who speculate in land or who devote themselves to the stock market and make huge profits with which they escape tax free.

When I heard the speech of the hon. member for Scarborough East who, by the way, is an economist and was one of the whiz kids who advised former minister of finance Walter Gordon when he introduced that great budget of his a few years ago, I thought our present Minister of Finance would pay some attention to him. In the budget debate the hon. member strongly urged that we have a capital gains tax. I suggest that the minister read his speech and learn from it. These are some of the aspects upon which I would like the minister to comment. He has about seven minutes before this debate adjourns, and I have raised seven matters with him. I am sure he can touch on at least some of them.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister when we are going to get a draft bill?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I shall take that under advisement. I cannot make a promise without first talking to my officials.

Mr. Stanfield: I just want to emphasize again that I do not see any real excuse for the state of uncertainty in which people are being left.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I was hoping that the minister would answer some of the questions put to him by the previous speakers. We have only a few minutes left before the hour is up. Sometimes these questions drag on and we do not get the estimates back again for several more days. In that way it is a little awkward to keep track of them.

Would the minister care to answer the questions that hon. members put to him?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. member was not here put I answered the questions put forward by many speakers this afternoon. I believe the last speaker is the only one whose questions I have not answered, and they were of such a general nature that they are difficult to answer. First of all he asked if I am in favour of a floating exchange rate. My answer is no. To me it is rather unusual to see this new alliance between the N.D.P. and the president of the Royal Bank.

The other questions raised were very general ones about what we are going to do in connection with the Carter report and other submissions that the government has had on taxation. Of course I am not going to indicate what we intend to do until I produce the draft bill which will be studied by all members of the house.

Mr. Harding: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think we should let this item pass at this time. I wish to raise one or two things before the hour of five o'clock. In the last few days I have been going over some of the old Hansards. We learn a lot from history, but it is said that quite frequently those of us who live at the present time do not take too much cognizance of what has gone before.

I went back to 1962 and read some of the statements made by the Minister of Finance during the budget debate of that year when another party was in power.

I must tell him I thoroughly enjoyed reading the words of wisdom which he addressed to the House of Commons on a number of occasions, and the thought occurred to me that surely all the good ideas he had in those days cannot have gone by the board since he assumed the august position of finance minister in the federal government.

I am going to relate his old ideas to just one phase of one operation in my home province of British Columbia, and I am going to refer to the big coal operation around Vernon, the Kaiser coal operation. The minister is well aware of what has happened. The former company, Crowsnest Industries, has sold out to Kaiser Steel which has bought a large area of coal from that company. Kaiser have moved in and they are going to set up a strip mining operation. As I recall the minister's remarks he was not too happy about big, foreign owned companies moving into areas such as this in the field of natural resources and getting special tax concessions—for example, a three year exemption period on mining.

I ask the minister, is your department going to allow the Kaiser corporation a three year tax exemption period in this particular operation? Here is a loophole that could and should be plugged by the federal government. All over this country of ours we have big corporations that get these tax concessions. I can give several good examples. They get an initial tax concession. Then they set up a new company, move over a short distance and get another tax concession for another three year period. They are robbing the public of Canada of hundreds of millions of dollars that rightfully should be going into the tax coffers of the federal government.

This was the line which the minister took several years ago in connection with oil and gas reserves in the Dominion of Canada. He pointed out that we were forced to import 50 per cent or more of our oil requirements, and emphasized what a drain this was on the financial resources of the country. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I ask him what are you going to do about it now? You are sitting in the seat where you can do a job. What recommendations are you going to make to the cabinet and to the House of Commons? Are you, Mr. Minister of Finance, going to suggest that we alter this approach? If so, it is up to you to lay before the house within the next two or three months some changes which will bring your old ideas to fruition.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, we would be glad to pass this first item and move along. So far as we are concerned we have had a good afternoon. The minister has given us some satisfactory answers.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee agreeable?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

TOBACCO—REFERENCE OF BILLS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have unanimous consent, as leader of the house, to revert to motions, to put some items concerning the tobacco business into the committee on health, welfare and social affairs?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions in the four corners of the house on the question of the potential injury to health arising from the use of tobacco; and I believe there is general consent, and more particularly consent on the part of hon. members who have bills standing on the order paper with respect to tobacco, that these bills should not be proceeded with, but that the subject matter of them should be referred to the standing committee on health, welfare and social affairs.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I should like to move, therefore, seconded by Mr. Pepin—

That the order for second reading of bills C-39, C-45, C-53, C-134 and C-137 be discharged and that the subject matter of the said bills be referred to the standing committee on health, welfare and social affairs.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, speaking for the bills which emanate from this part of the house we welcome this move and hope that this will facilitate discussion of this problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt said motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

RAINMAKING EQUIPMENT

PROVISION FOR LICENSING AND REGULATION

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-11, to govern, licence and regulate the operation of rainmaking equipment in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, had I known the date when this bill would be called we probably could have tied it in with the Grey Cup game and the rain situation in Toronto. Probably a number of people would have been very interested in supporting this bill. That of course is no joke, because on a number of occasions the company operating out of Montreal has been asked to project the weather on a longer term basis to decide whether there would be snow, rain, or what the weather would be, when Grey Cup game time came around, especially a crucial game.

I, and I am sure other members, have been interested in two or three things connected with a bill of this nature. One is the attitude of people to a bill called a bill to regulate rainmaking. I am sure many people still think of the Indian dances that are being performed in Arizona and sold to tourists as representing the former method of rainmaking.

An hon. Member: And in the west.

Mr. Peters: Yes. They may have one in the west. It might be interesting for the hon. member, who comes from Saskatchewan, to know that his friends, the farmers in Alberta, over a period have voted, in a number of districts, that a certain amount of money be paid, through taxes to rainmakers to make rain in that area, and more important to end hail in that area. While this also may be considered to have dubious value, those farmers have renewed this proposition for many years now in the province of Alberta and are very close to having the provincial government make a decision in respect of everybody paying taxes so that hail does not occur in that area.

The whole matter of rainmaking involves a very large problem of weather modification and what the international and national relationship to this should be. It is quite clear, in a broad sense, that in the foreseeable future we will be able not only to plot weather fronts of various kinds throughout the world by satellite control but that we will also be able, through several methods that are being developed, to prevent what would be the disadvantages of those storm fronts developing. This will happen where expenditures are made to control hurricanes, fog, hail, and I suggest probably to control or modify the normal rainfall in a given area. All these things are being undertaken. If we in Canada think this is a joke, then we should look at the situation in the United States. In the year 1967 in the United States $7 million was spent on this type of weather control. It is expected by 1970 the expenditure will be $150 million. That is equivalent to the total amount spent by the Canadian government a few years ago on its total works on behalf of all the people in Canada.

I suggest it is necessary that we pay some attention to the matter of weather control. Frankly I am interested in a very small sphere of weather control; that is, the ability of people by certain processes to make rain fall in a given area in greater amounts than would normally be the case if the weather were uncontrolled. I suggest that in Ontario we have engaged in this for some time. We have seen the Ontario department of agriculture contribute a quarter of a million dollars to make rain in the Renfrew area, when that area experienced a severe drought. You will also be aware, Mr. Speaker, that in the same area money was spent by the Ontario Department of Agriculture to compensate the people for an over-abundance of rain in that fall period. You may also believe that there is something to rainmaking by noise, because you will remember a few years ago while the noise was being made in parliament it started to rain in the Renfrew area. That foreshadowed the end of that drought and preceded the bringing in of generators by about three days.

There may be many methods by which this can be done. I am not particular how we do it. However, I believe it would be a shame if members of parliament do not take some action in this matter, because it would seem to me that we must be able to protect the people who now are the victims of modification of weather, and really have no control over it. If someone decided to dust the apple trees in his yard with a heavy spray, and this covered the yard next door, then the person next door is protected because there is legislation which provides that something can be done about this. He may have his grass replaced or his flowers replaced because of the over-kill by the spraying of the person two lots down the street. So long as the Canadian parliament takes the attitude that this is a big joke nothing will happen.

For a change the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) is here. We are glad to see him in the house. This does concern the Minister of Transport because I believe it will have to be his responsibility. An agency is hired by his department to assist in long range weather forecasting. His department has a responsibility for this forecasting. It is my opinion that his department will also have to be involved in the matter of weather modification.

I do not suggest that the department of lands and forests in northern Ontario should not be able to hire silver oxide machines to bring about water precipitation in a given area. What I do suggest, however, is that if this affects some people living in that area they should have recourse through law for the recovery of damages suffered by them in that regard.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Certainly.

Mr. Francis: I have listened to the hon. member's contention about the rights of people to recourse as a result of the adverse effects of provincial activity in rainmaking. How can this be done under the type of provisions he is putting before the house? Is there not a grave constitutional problem involved here? Does his own legislation not exempt provincial activity.

Mr. Peters: Yes, there is a major problem here. In the United States they have done some work in this regard and have come across similar problems. They have listed a number of basic questions regarding control in this respect. Some of them are:

> How should the regulatory function be performed? Can an agency with mission interests in weather modification serve also as a national licensing and regulatory authority? Is a new agency necessary for this purpose? Can the co-ordinating function and the regulatory function be combined in a single agency? Is it premature to undertake federal licensing and regulation?

The United States has passed a number of laws in respect of weather modification as a result of their investigations in this matter. I understand the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) has also done some research in this regard. Weather control really involves weather projections. Weather conditions are projected not only in respect of Newfoundland but in respect of British Columbia, and these projections are made simultaneously. These are made without any provincial control or provincial information. They are also based on international information.

I am sure everyone is impressed when watching television to see that satellites thousands of miles above the earth project back pictures of weather formation. We no longer see lines drawn to indicate weather fronts; we now see the actual fronts. This is done not only on a national basis, but on an international basis; so one should not worry too much about the provincial implications. Weather modification is not confined to provincial jurisdictions. Anything that crosses provincial boundaries becomes national in nature. Therefore I believe we should not hesitate to make laws in this field simply because provinces have a role to play.

A number of laws have already been passed in the United States in this regard, but one problem they have experienced relates to the fact that the laws in one state often conflict with those in another. In any event, they have been able to establish a number of facts, one of which is that rainmaking must naturally come under governmental regulations. This authority goes on to state that weather is national in scope rather than a state proposition. In this regard a number of cases have been heard in both district or state and federal courts. This is an extensive field, and I believe our federal government must have some control.

The hon. member's question has more relationship to the making of rain than to the powers or authorities I recommend. I refer only to control and regulation by licence. There are only seven or eight companies of this kind operating in this field. Surely we could regulate them as to the weather modifications they may carry out. In this way we could require these companies to keep a record of the results of their attempts.

The main example we have in this country is in respect of the firm Weather Engineering which is operated by Paul Denison and Bernard Power of Montreal. They have had great success with the silver iodide generators. These are small coke operated ovens in which you place crystals of silver iodide. The temperature is brought up to about 1,200 or 1,400 degrees. The iodide cystals are evaporated and go up into the clouds by convection. When the clouds are supercooled, usually about 10 degrees fahrenheit, the iodide crystals create a molecular bond which attracts the moisture in the air. This produces precipitation in the form of rain or snow. If this is in a cold area snow will fall, which eventually can turn to rain. Whether or not these efforts have been successful can be judged by what has happened.

Let me refer to what happened in 1956. There was some talk about using this system to control forest fires in northern Ontario. The article to which I refer states:

> In Quebec the clouds held more moisture. In mid-July, for example, a forest fire out of control along a ten mile front in the wild North Shore

Rainmaking Equipment

Paper Co. bushland, southwest of Seven Islands, was rapidly sweeping toward the little St. Lawrence settlement of Shelter Bay.

Denison and Power flew in 23 of their silver iodide generators. On the morning of July 22 a few weak storm clouds drifted over the blaze but produced no rainfall. At noon Denison ordered his fireboxes lit. By five o'clock 1.3 inches of rain had fallen on the blazing timber—enough to dampen down the smoke and enable forest rangers to close in on the flames. The showers quenched the fire just in time to save Shelter Bay. The community was already partly evacuated and flames had reached some of its outlying buildings. Said H. A. Sewell, Quebec North Shore's general manager of woodlands, "We have seen enough of the work of Power and Denison to know that we want more."

On October 7, 12,000 crackling dry square miles of Abitibi Power and Paper Co. forest from Lake Abitibi west to Kapuskasing, Ont., were drenched with 2.8 inches of rain a few hours after Denison's generators went into action. Some small fires fizzled out and, for the first time in months, rivers rose to normal levels, hydro plants began operating at full capacity and reservoirs started to fill up, giving hope of adequate water storage before freeze-up.

Denison called George Arnold, chief chemist of Spruce Falls Power and Paper Co., at Kapuskasing one Sunday in September, advising him to alert company forest rangers operating Weather Engineering silver iodide furnaces. Rain-heavy clouds were passing over Spruce Falls forests the next morning.

We must remember that he was in Montreal, a thousand miles away from Kapuskasing, yet he said:

"Light your generators at seven o'clock and keep them burning until eleven," he instructed. It started to rain on Monday morning at a quarter to eight. The shower stopped abruptly at half past eleven. Bushlands surrounding the Spruce Falls property didn't get the downpour. The government weather office had forecast no rain for the region until Wednesday.

I am convinced that you can make rain. We have had some very bad seasons in northern Ontario when we had no forest fires at all, yet the department of lands and forests were operating these machines.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The same was true when Ontario Hydro decided to fill their reservoirs. It may be that we want to make a rainshed out of the whole of northern Ontario, but if we do, those people who are already there in the field of tourism and agriculture, and in fact those people who live there, should be able to have a say in the matter and to start litigation in the courts if they consider the effects to be detrimental to them.

I suggest that this is a responsibility of the federal government which it should exercise.

[Mr. Peters.]

If the members of this house wish to pursue this matter, they could vote to have the bill referred to a committee. I suggest it should be studied by officials of the Department of Transport, which has a very large meteorological service, of which we should be proud. This weather institute, which operates in Montreal, has a direct teletype communication with the Department of Transport. It plots the weather in its Montreal offices and then sells the weather forecasts back to agencies, such as Air Canada and others, in a completely different form. The two specialists at the institute have been trained by the Canadian government and are familiar with its methods. They are able to forecast from maps well ahead of time the type of storm fronts that are likely to develop under given circumstances and from given areas.

For instance, if you, Mr. Speaker, wanted to select a nice day for your daughter's wedding because you wanted to hold it in the garden, you could consult these experts who would be able to provide you with the information, so that you could select a day of sunshine and suitable temperature for the event. For businessmen these experts can provide a correct forecast with reasonable certainty. They are able to say whether or not the use of dry ice or silver iodide which is being discharged by artillery will be successful in producing rain.

We in this house will be failing in our duty toward people who live in areas where rain can be produced, or toward government agencies which need to control weather, if we do not soon take a look at the whole matter of weather modification, and provide regulations and licences necessary for these people to operate in this field.

My purpose in producing this bill is to ensure that such agencies as the Department of Agriculture, Ontario and Quebec hydro, private pulp and paper mills and other agencies interested in this field do not abuse a new technology which, as is not realized by most people, is involved in the modification of weather, an undertaking in which all civilized countries are now engaged, in one way or another.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take the floor on the bill now under consideration. We had planned to introduce such a bill but I think the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) read our minds, and I congratulate him for having introduced that bill.

It will first of all have the advantage of finally convincing everyone that artificial rain exists. In fact, many people still do not believe it, but I can say that our regions had a taste of it, so to speak, because we had to put up with uncontrolled artificial rain during three summers and that is why I support that bill.

It is not that I am against artificial rain, Mr. Speaker; not at all. But I am in favour of artificial rain controlled by legislation, so that the government will know to whom permits are delivered, but most of all the permits will state exactly the regions where artificial rain can be made, as well as when it can be made, to prevent what happened in our regions.

Rain is being made throughout the summer without regard to planting or harvesting. That is the reason why our areas have been flooded during three consecutive summers by this artificial rain.

I remember five or six years ago when we raised this question of rainmaking in the house, we had started a roar of laughter in the house. Now I understand why hon. members felt that was rather funny. In fact, the government was aware of rainmaking experiments, but they considered them a military secret. I do not think that they should be so considered, because if rainmaking is interesting to big companies—as it has been for some years—it is even more interesting to farmers.

The matter also concerns the population for reasons of public health. Excesses should not occur again as in the past years, when Operation Umbrella was launched in the Saguenay-Lake St. John area. Everybody was crying for help, and I think it influenced very much the reports of doctors who appeared as witnesses and stated that this could affect the health of the population.

Legislation should be passed to grant permits to a company, but that company should not be solely in the service of large corporations. In my opinion, the legislation should provide that the companies would come under the government control, because if we let them act as they please, the abuses will continue.

On the one hand, we hear the opinion of the farmers or of the people. The population of a given region knows and realizes that the government may at certain times allow companies to make artificial rain in order to raise the water level of hydraulic reservoirs, but that it will see to it, at the same time, that this rain does not drown the crops planted by the farmers or spoil the grain or the hay harvest.

Mr. Speaker, I wish with all my hearts that this legislation may be refered to a committee for consideration, so that the government might, if necessary, introduce legislation to that effect for the situation is urgent. I have proof of that here, for I have a whole file on this question of artificial rain. It would take me nearly a week to read all the evidence in favour of or against artificial rain, and all of it proves to the Canadian people and to all the hon. members that artificial rain has been in existence for many years.

At first, ground rainmaking machines were used. Today, however, planes are used to seed clouds. In our areas, ground machines are hardly used any more, because it is much easier to use airplanes. That is why the matter today concerns the federal government far more than provincial governments, because it is a question of air pollution. When ground rain-making machines were used, the matter concerned the provincial governments. I always wondered why the government has been hiding that fact from the people for the past ten years. Why can the government not reveal when companies will be allowed to make rain? If one region is not suited for such a program the people will be in a position to advise the government as to its ill effects.

Mr. Speaker, I was anxious to have this bill discussed in order to bring in the final proof. This latest testimony we received from the C.F.U. on August 30, 1968; as you see, it is recent enough. I will not have the time to read this letter entirely as I would not want to have this bill killed today so that it may be referred to a committee. I will read a few excerpts.

Dear Sir, as a result of the decisions taken during our annual convention concerning the effects of bad weather upon our members, as well as upon the whole population of the Saguenay-Lac St-Jean district, and considering the possibility that artificial rainmaking may be the cause, the Fédération de l'UCC du Saguenay is requesting your assistance to set matters straight in the minds of our population and to find out whether artificial rainmaking is being practised at the present time. If it were practised, please help us to get rid, once and for all, of this disastrous system which caused us untold hardships some years ago.

Rainmaking Equipment

I feel that the C.F.U. might have laid it a bit thick, as such an organization cannot really be 100 percent against all experiments in cloud seeding. It probably hopes for restrictions in a particular region at a given time, as I said previously.

Our farmers and our population as a whole could not endure the consequences of artificial rainmaking; more over, uncertainty about this condition is unbearable.

In the past, ground rainmaking machines have been used in our province and in our region.

A great number of those machines were used in the northern part of the province of Quebec. There were some in our region, in St-Felix d'Otis, Shipshaw, Falardeau, Chûte-aux-Galets, etc.

All the places where ground rainmaking machines were used are listed. I happen to have a map indicating the site of all those machines.

The services were engaged by the Association Protectrice des Forêts Laurentiennes Ltée, as well as by hydro-electric companies, including Hydro-Quebec after the nationalisation of power production.

The Department of Land and Forests of the province also contributed financially to that operation, through the Association Protectrice des Forêts Laurentiennes.

Following pressures by the UCC, the news media and Operation Umbrella, the provincial government assured the UCC, through the Minister of Natural Resources, that Hydro Quebec would stop using the services of the Weather Engineering Limited (Meteorological Engineering) and it asked the Gatineau Power as well as the Association de protection des Forêts laurentiennes, the other two sponsors at that time, not to resume cloud seeding operations. Moreover, the minister undertook to supply the C.F.U. with the list of the places where the seeding machines were located to afford better supervision.

And it is on that occasion that we secured a map showing the exact location of the machines.

Since then, the C.F.U has kept in touch with the senior officials of the Department of Natural Resources in order to maintain pressure to prevent cloud seeding. In addition, each time serious information was received, it sent its technicians to check if there was anything to it.

However, it is impossible for a union group to survey the Quebec territory to find rainmaking equipment, when one knows that this equipment is very small and can easily be disguised.

With new developments, the federal government got involved.

Now, especially during the last five or six years, rainmaking is carried out by airplanes and this is precisely what C.F.U. is referring to.

On July 28, 1967, the federal government, through the Air Transport Board, granted Royalair Ltd. an air survey licence (rainmaking).

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Nobody dared to say that that was a rainmaking licence; they said it was for air survey, but it was, in fact for rainmaking.

In its argument to the board, Royalair Ltd. said that it wanted to operate in conjunction with Weather Engineering. We also had confirmation, during the public hearing of the Air Transport Board that Ontario Hydro, Abitibi Corporation and Spruce Falls Paper Company resorted to artificial seeding of clouds in order to increase rainfall. We also had confirmation, on that occasion, that Newfoundland was also a victim of that cloud seeding by the Newfoundland Air Transport Limited Company.

Therefore, to that method of cloud seeding from the ground, is added that of seeding by aircraft.

Faced with this reality, the annual convention of the Saguenay C.F.U., which was held on August 31, 1967, officially and publicly reaffirmed its position as follows:

(1) That the provincial and federal governments, within their respective jurisdiction, should make the necessary arrangements so as to maintain the ban on all the methods which might increase natural rainfall in our area and that the state should exercise a strict control in that respect.

(2) That the state should undertake a serious and complete study of the influence on our climate of the numerous and large underground streams artificially created by hydroelectric dams and the consequences these may have on farming, so as to take them into account in the planning of our agriculture.

The position of the C.F.U. Federation is just as unequivocal. In fact, the resolution passed at the last general convention of the C.F.U. held in Quebec City in October 1967, read as follows:

The general convention of the C.F.U. recommends to the federal and provincial governments to revoke immediately all licences issued for cloud seeding.

I think the C.F.U. is suggesting that we should ask some questions so as to get further information on orders of the day. That is what I did. I am waiting for answers to my questions. All this should bring the government to pass legislation. We must have some legislation and we can no longer leave this matter up to some companies. Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable to say this, but during the past years, I even read articles written by the authorities of certain companies defending these seedings. They stated that the interests of companies and industries should come before the interest of the population.

For my part, I say that this is absolutely false. We are here in the first place to work for the population without neglecting the industrial interests and especially research, but it is possible I think to associate both, to protect the population and carry on such research, because as the hon. member for Timiskaming stated earlier, this is scientific progress which could be quite valuable in case of a disaster and could even improve the production of our industries. We should not stop everything by saying: We do not want any more seeding. No. Once again I insist that we merely want that seeding to be governed by a specific act which will take into account all the interested parties. We plead the case of the people, but company officials, just like farmers, also have the right to plead their own case.

This bill is a start and if perchance it is not referred to a committee this evening, I would urge the government to introduce similar legislation right after the Christmas recess. Mr. Speaker, the house may rest assured that we will support it, thereby expressing the will of all those who, in the past, have suffered from those artificial rains because they were not controlled. Cloud seeding without control is like anything else which may be good in itself but becomes evil when there is any excess.

I therefore hope, Mr. Speaker, in order not to prolong the debate any more—I would not want to be accused of having killed the bill—that the bill will be referred to a committee for study and that legislation will be introduced for the control of cloud seeding as soon as possible.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) says he believes there are effective rainmaking machines and the bill appears to be based upon that premise. This is a subject that has long vexed the south-central area of Alberta, that I have the honour to represent. I noticed the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) intervened in the debate, I suppose because of his connection with the same area. Everyone in that area is extremely interested in this question of weather modification. Despite long studies and a great deal of money that is being spent in a study of the subject by individuals, private groups, municipalities, provincial governments and federal government agencies, it has certainly not become clear to the population of Alberta or to the government of that province that there are such things as effective rainmaking machines. In fact, the large groups of population in that area are divided into those who belong to the converted and those who belong to the unconverted in regard to weather modification.

Every year, Mr. Speaker, we find municipalities subjected to plebiscites to determine whether or not they should pass a bylaw to enable them to employ the services of a weather modification company. I might say that the most prominent company in this regard is the Irving P. Creek Company based in California, who have operated their fans in Alberta.

Some people have adopted weather modification almost as a religion. Others are equally as well convinced that the theory of it is inaccurate and that it is ineffective. As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, there is an annual plebiscite conducted at great expense in the municipalities involved. The subject creates bad feeling between neighbours, and we cannot seem to come to any final conclusion as to whether or not the provincial government, at least, should recognize the procedure as an effective one.

It is my feeling that instead of passing a bill such as this, which does not seem to promote the kind of inquiry required into this general field—as I have said, the situation is not fully clarified as yet—the government should be devoting its activities to promoting more research in this area. In this respect I feel that the bill is premature.

I know my hon. friends who sit in the same part of the house as the sponsor of the bill are very prone to controlling things; it seems that that is their expertise. But in this case they will not even allow the goose to be born, before wanting to control what might be the goose that lays the golden egg.

If there is indeed some method by which rain can be increased in the prairie provinces, then the output of the area could be doubled or tripled. Large areas of eastern Alberta, and I suppose western Saskatchewan, are not producing the crops they could produce if they received more rain.

The explanatory note to the bill says the purpose of the bill is to provide for compensation where damage is deemed to result from the use of rainmaking machines. I have looked through the bill but I cannot see this provision. I find no clause in it which lays responsibility for damage caused. It does not say that the government or that the user of the machine will be responsible for such damage.

Mr. Peters: The bill does provide for licensing.

Mr. Schumacher: I do not find that provision. Perhaps my copy of the bill does not contain that clause. As far as I can see the bill provides for the licensing of the owners of equipment; but it does not say how the owners of the equipment should use the equipment. In any event, I would suggest that this provision does not have to be in the bill, because if a person does cause damage through the use of some piece of equipment that he owns, and causes injury to a person, the ordinary law of negligence would apply and the responsibility would be upon the person at fault.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, as I say, the bill is premature. There is room for research in this field. The Alberta hail study group, which I believe is associated with the Alberta research council, and to which the dominion government contributes funds, has not made the statement that there is such a thing as an effctive rain increasing procedure. Until such a thing happens we are dealing with something, really, that is not here. I suggest we have no effective machines and we cannot control them. I think the government would be better advised to undertake research into this subject.

If we could produce such machines the agricultural output of this nation would be greatly increased. Frankly, everyone in my area would be happy to settle this question, since feuds are developing over it.

I do not think the bill should be referred to committee; I think it is premature, and this is the wrong way to attack the problem. That there is a problem I agree, but the answer to it lies in research, and not in some sort of legislation which seeks to control machines which have not proven effective.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, this is one of those rare occasions when I find myself agreeing with the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). I told him today I wanted to speak on the subject because I think there ought to be some kind of control over rainmaking equipment. A few years ago I would have put rainmaking machines into the category occupied by voodoo and witch doctors. After spending the last summer in northern Ontario I have changed my mind, because we were rained out in northern Ontario.

I understand that the entire subject is of large scope and has been studied by the meteorological branch. I know that complicated policy implications are involved, and that rainmaking machines are still experimental.

[Mr. Schumacher.]

Frankly, I cannot understand all the fuss about constitutional problems that was raised by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis). These machines came into use without anyone raising constitutional problems. It seems, though, that when it is a question of buckets of water falling on the heads of my people in northern Ontario we have to be involved in constitutional matters to stop it.

The Northeastern Ontario Municipal Association met at the end of the summer and sent me a letter, which I assume other hon. members received also. The association wants the senior or federal government to pass legislation controlling weather modification apparatus. The association represents 17 municipalities in northeastern Ontario and says this in its letter:

> As you are aware, the heavy rainfall which occurred in this area, leaves a lot to be desired, and has caused damages to our tourist and wood industries, and farmers.

The attached figures compare rainfalls for the summer months of 1967 and 1968. In June, 1967, there were 3.37 inches of rainfall, for this year, 1968, the rainfall was almost double, at 6.09 inches. In July 1967, average rainfall was 2.8 inches and in July of this year it was 8.97 inches. I think this indicates conclusively that rainmaking machines are effective.

The explanatory note of the bill has this to say, in part:

> It appears that control licensing and regulations must be adapted to protect the public and make possible the payment of compensation where damage is deemed to result from such use.

I do not think you could apply such legislation, since rainmaking equipment is not like a switch. It will not rain when you press the switch, and stop raining when you take your finger off the switch. Therefore it will not be possible to make compensation. One would have to go to court and prove that the damage caused resulted directly from rain brought on by rainmaking machines, and I do not see how that would be possible.

I should prefer to see a bill that seeks only to control these machines, so that not just any company, or any Tom, Dick or Harry could try to make rain. What would happen, for example, if one of these machines went out of control? Supposing someone seeded clouds and it began to rain uncontrollably? What if our weather were affected over a long term? All that ought to be considered. I think that studies ought to be undertaken in this field.

However, I hope those studies are not undertaken in northern Ontario. We hear about damp wheat and grain, but no one worries about damp wood in northern Ontario. We have been hearing about problems with grain on the prairies for years, but no one says anything about the wood industry in northern Ontario, which is the largest industry in Canada. Perhaps the members from northern Ontario should start screaming; perhaps then the old adage that the squeaking wheel gets the grease would hold true in our case. I hope any tests are conducted in arid parts of the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hour for the consideration of private members business has now expired. The time being six o'clock the house stands adjourned until 2.30 p.m. Monday next.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 2, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate has passed Bill S-3, an act to amend the Canada Evidence Act, to which the concurrence of this house is desired.

HON. M. J. COLDWELL

FELICITATIONS ON EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, because the gentleman to whom I should like to make a moment's reference is a distinguished member of the Privy Council, I am sure you will grant me this moment of time. The Hon. M. J. Coldwell, former leader of the C.C.F. party and a distinguished member of this House of Commons for 23 years, is today celebrating his eightieth birthday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am sure I speak for all who knew him when I say there never was a finer man to sit in this House of Commons. We who worked with him found him a tremendous leader, and I think it is fair to say that both throughout the house and throughout the country he was and is widely respected. During his years in this house he advanced the cause of our movement. I believe it can be said as well that he added to the good name of parliament. I am sure I speak for all members when we wish Mr. Coldwell "Many happy returns".

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a word on behalf of the government, and to say I am in complete agreement with what the hon. member has just said. We all have a very high regard for Mr. Coldwell. Long before I joined a political party I had heard him often at political meetings. My predecessor, Right Hon. Mr. Pearson, also had great admiration for him, and I believe it was he who named Mr. Coldwell to the Privy Council.

This shows, Mr. Speaker, that on this side of the house we are always ready to recognize great politicians with great ideas. Mr. Coldwell has rendered some very important services, not only to parliament but recently to this government as a member of the royal commission on security. I do want to add congratulations from the government side to Hon. Mr. Coldwell on his birthday.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I join with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the words of tribute paid to Hon. M. J. Coldwell. He comes from a province that has given many outstanding parliamentarians to this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the applause indicates that this is well known by members in all parts of the house. I am not here for the purpose of advertising Prince Albert, but Prince Albert is the only constituency in Canada that has had three prime ministers represent it.

• (2:40 p.m.)

That is indicative of the state of affairs in the province of Saskatchewan.

I have known Mr. Coldwell for many years, and sat with him in the house from 1940 to 1957. He was a fine parliamentarian, always courteous and always effective. I know I speak for all when I express the hope that this momentous landmark will be one of many to come, and that he will be spared for many years to make his contribution to Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, er, following the very pertinent remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), we the members of the Ralliement Créditiste are very happy to join in offering our best wishes to hon. Mr. Coldwell. Although I am too young to have known him myself, I want to say that his reputation goes beyond the artificial barriers which age can create between older and younger people. We join the previous speakers in expressing our congratulations and our appreciation of hon. Mr. Coldwell's indisputable merits.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It will be the duty of the Chair and my personal pleasure to convey the congratulations and good wishes of the house to Mr. Coldwell.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STATEMENT RESPECTING OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I announced in the house that the government would soon be able to make an important statement with respect to offshore mineral rights.

The question has been a matter of controversy for some time. Last November the Supreme Court of Canada provided an authoritative clarification of the legal position with respect to the areas off the west coast and lying outside the harbours, bays, estuaries and other similar waters which were regarded as inland waters at the time the province entered confederation. In brief, the court opinion was that the federal government is entitled to proprietary and other rights in these new areas offshore from the historic boundaries of British Columbia, which were defined generally as the ordinary low-water mark. The court thus confirmed the view previously reached by the law officers of the crown that all rights held or acquired by Canada in submerged lands lying outside the boundaries of any province accrue to Canada as a whole.

[Translation]

The reference to the Supreme Court was designed to determine in the most authoritative way where the jurisdiction rests. My predecessor, Mr. Pearson, indicated at the federal-provincial conference of July 1965, and I repeated in the house on September 19, that we intend to proceed now by negotiation. I am announcing today certain steps the government is taking and certain proposals we are making to the provinces which we believe to be both important and equitable.

In the light of the Supreme Court's unanimous finding in favour of the crown in right of Canada, on the basis of principles that would appear to be substantially applicable to the east coast as well as to the west coast, the main problem becomes one of delineating the areas concerned to meet the practical requirements of mineral resource administration. That is, it is necessary to establish lines for the purpose of differentiating between submerged lands to be administered by the federal government and lands to be administered by the provincial governments.

There are certain difficulties in using for this purpose the boundaries described by the court, since it is difficult to ascertain what would have been considered as a bay or harbour for the purposes of international or domestic law at the time most of the provinces entered confederation, and since the lines of low tide are shifting and uncertain and our seacoasts are characterized by deep indentations, straits, innumerable islands, and inlets of various configurations.

[English]

After exploring a number of alternatives, it has been found that the geodetic grid system provides the best basis for delineation of areas of offshore administration. This method is already utilized for the issuance of exploration permits. The geodetic grid system is the reference system of lines of longitude and latitude used to identify the precise positions of points on the earth's surface. Using this system we have drawn so-called mineral resource administration lines, always well within the area of federal jurisdiction on the basis of the principles laid down in the Supreme Court opinion, with the intention that the federal government will administer all offshore mineral rights seaward from these lines. It should be noted that the mineral resource administration lines are not to be confused with the base lines from which Canada's territorial sea and fishing zones are measured in keeping with international law.

We are taking into account the undertaking of equitable arrangements made by Mr. Pearson. We are offering to work out in conjunction with each of the coastal provinces a method whereby they would in effect administer any offshore mineral rights under federal jurisdiction on the landward side of the mineral resource administration lines. In addition the federal government is prepared to concede to the coastal provinces all revenues derived from the mineral resources of the submerged lands within these lines.

The proposed administrative lines enclose several offshore areas which are linked closely with adjacent provincial lands. Off the west coast these include the sea bottom between Vancouver island and the mainland, as well as appreciable areas in close proximity to the mainland and offlying islands. Off the east coast they include large areas of the sea bottom in the bay of Fundy, Northumberland strait and the passage Jacques-Cartier. These areas will also include historic bays and waters adjacent to numerous offlying islands thus making substantial territories available for administration by each of the coastal provinces.

[Translation]

In view of the many aspects of national significance involved, the government regards it as essential to retain the administration and management of mineral resources seaward from the mineral resource administration lines. With respect to the revenues, however, Mr. Speaker, the government wishes to seek a fair and reasonable basis whereby the provincial governments would share in the revenues that may be derived from these national resources which lie off the coasts of the provinces. It would be the intention to place the revenues accruing from these resources in a single national pool from which half the revenues would be made available to the provinces concerned. This would be purely a financial arrangement and would not imply involvement by the provinces in the jurisdiction and administration of mineral resources in those areas beyond mineral resource administration lines.

I am issuing today maps showing the locations of the mineral resource administration lines off both the east and west coasts. Similar lines will also be drawn in the regions of Hudson Strait, Hudson Bay, and James Bay, where it will also be necessary to define a boundary between the submerged lands adjacent to the provinces and those adjacent to the Northwest Territories and Arctic Islands. Acceptance of the mineral resource administration lines is the necessary first step in resolving the offshore situation. We can then work together with the provinces in finding a satisfactory basis upon which the provincial share of revenues would be divided.

[English]

The question of the basis upon which the provincial share of revenues would be divided is one on which the federal government is open to suggestions. We would be agreeable to any proposal that the provincial governments themselves feel is acceptable. It may be that in discussions among themselves the provinces have already touched upon a basis or method which can be utilized in this connection. We would be prepared to hold the provincial share of revenues in escrow for a reasonable time until a satisfactory formula has been decided upon. If it would help in reaching an acceptable solution within a reasonable period, we would be willing to make constructive suggestions. I have written on Friday to the premiers on this subject, and I hope they will respond favourably to the federal offer within a relatively short time. Then we can proceed to work out details.

It is essential to reach a settlement of the offshore situation with all possible dispatch. The continental shelf areas adjacent to Canada comprise a vast new territory estimated to be almost 40 per cent as large as the total land area of Canada. Several regions favourable for the development of mineral resources are probably present, particularly as concerns oil and gas.

It is clearly in the interest of all levels of government that conditions are such as to facilitate the rapid development of Canada's offshore minerals. For our part we wish to do everything possible to avoid jurisdictional disputes that would hinder or delay the development of these natural resources. This is the spirit in which we are offering to work out these arrangements with the provinces.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I first be permitted to welcome the Prime Minister back from his adventures in Toronto. I am sure we who had a chance to see him on television and watch the determination with which he kicked off will examine with great interest the result he achieved in the light of what happens to the just society from here on.

Mr. Trudeau: Stopped by the press.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Prime Minister with great interest. This is indeed an important subject. It has been estimated that there are 250 years supply of oil alone beneath the sea, based on present yearly consumption, and that the continental shelf contains as much mineral wealth per square mile as dry land. So it is indeed a very important matter with which the Prime Minister has dealt today.

First I want to say quite clearly that it is not possible at this stage to indicate that the proposals made by the Prime Minister are in fact equitable, or to examine clearly the extent to which there will be fair sharing between the provincial governments and the federal government under the terms of the proposals he has made. That has to be considered later. However, I would make several other comments.

In his statement the Prime Minister said we intend to proceed now by negotiation. As I listened to him delineate very clearly what the federal government intended to do and what the provincial governments would be allowed to do, it struck me at first blush that there was remarkably little negotiation involved. It may well be that as the matter proceeds further negotiation will indeed be permitted, but if the Prime Minister is saying on behalf of the federal government "This is the way we intend to do it", and the provinces will be entitled only to such resources as lie within the area delineated in his statement, then I say this falls far short of the true kind of negotiation which we should expect.

There are still one or two questions which have to be answered. Certainly this is not the forum in which to go into details, but to what extent is the judgment applicable on a national scale? The Prime Minister indicates that it does have national application, but as one examines the answers given by the Supreme Court of Canada to the questions, one discovers those were specific answers to specific questions related to the province of British Columbia alone. While it may be true that these proceeded on certain principles, I think it is a well known legal maxim that where there is a specific question, and a specific reference, the answers are applicable only to that reference.

This is a question which must yet be determined. In spite of the fact that the Prime Minister has indicated that the law officers of the crown, in the right of the federal government, have taken a certain view, this may not necessarily be the view which the provincial governments will take.

The second question is, to what extent is the federal government free to negotiate, to give away or withhold as it sees fit, resources which its legal advisers have told it belong to all the people of Canada, resources which, pursuant to the constitutional decisions, to the British North American Act and other constitutional statutes, belong to all the people of Canada? To what extent would it be possible for the federal government to make a binding disposition of such resources without such a decision being subject to challenge? I cannot take any position at this time, but I think this is a very important question which must still be decided. Certainly if the Prime Minister's statement is a basis for discussion and negotiation between the federal government and the provinces that is fine; but I suggest through you, Mr. Speaker, to the members of this house that the only type of decision which in fact can be fair and probably binding in law as well as in equity is one arrived at after full discussion between the provincial and federal governments. Until that time comes we will have to look at this issue very, very carefully.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Prime Minister for his courtesy in sending us in advance a copy of this important statement. I confess that when an opposition spokesman receives a statement an hour in advance, he spends that time in trying to find things that are wrong with the statement. I must also confess that in the hour I had I found little that one can really complain about so far as this statement is concerned.

The importance of this subject is impressed upon us by the remarks the Prime Minister made and by the statistics just given by the hon. member for Peace River. We also realize that there is a very real issue at stake, namely to whom shall go the revenues from the huge oil and mineral resources that probably are to be found under the waters adjoining this country.

It seems to me that the essence of the Prime Minister's statement is very simple; that is, the jurisdiction is clearly federal, but common sense calls for some sort of a share the wealth program. We see this statement as seeking to implement those two principles, and to that extent it would seem to us to merit the approval of the house.

I did look in this statement for some reference to the international aspect of this whole question of mineral resources under the sea. It would seem that this has become a subject of concern at the United Nations. I looked for something in the statement, but it was not there. Perhaps we will get that on another occasion. I welcome the fact that the Prime Minister has taken the position that the matter is federal and, therefore, that certain decisions have to be declared a starting point but that the federal government is prepared to negotiate with the provinces from that point on. I hope there will be an early effort, on the part of both the federal and provincial governments, to settle this very important question.

We are grateful to the Prime Minister for having made this statement without further delay. It is a very important issue.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, first of all we wish to thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for his statement on off-shore mineral rights.

I should like to make a brief remark on one specific point, namely the sharing of revenues derived from the exploitation of mineral resources means or suggests the sharing of responsibilities. The federal government having indicated that consultations would be held with the provinces with regard to the basis for the distribution of half the revenues derived from mineral resources. I feel that the provinces will also wish to participate in the administration and operation. Now, if the statement of the right hon. Prime Minister is studied carefully, it does not seem sure that the provinces can participate directly in the operation or administration if the federal government takes over those rights and it may not necessarily be to blame. I feel that it is a matter of jurisdiction and once again we go back to the very basis of our constitution which must delineate clearly the responsibilities of the federal and provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker, if this case is treated the way Labrador was, I fear that no solution will be reached. The privy council reached a decision in 1927 concerning the ownership of Labrador which led to a now historical bone of contention. It was to decide to whom Labrador belonged—to Quebec, to Newfoundland or to the federal government—and the privy council settled the matter in 1927. A few months ago the right hon. Prime Minister replied to me saying that nothing had changed and I think that the federal government does certain things when they serve its purpose, but it remains mute when that is more suitable. I should therefore like to take this opportunity to speak to the extremely timely statement of the Prime Minister and urge him to reconsider his decision concerning the ownership of Labrador, because I feel it is somewhat related to the matter now under discussion, that is off-shore mineral rights.

I therefore feel that it would be both in the interest of the federal government and the provinces to meet and define clearly the jurisdiction of the governments, on the federal and provincial level, because, in the final analysis, it concerns the very essence of the B.N.A. Act.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BIOLOGICAL EFFECTS OF MICROWAVE ENERGY

Question No. 499—Mr. Schreyer:

Has any research been conducted in Canada to test, under field conditions, the possible biological effects of microwave energy, both in its thermal and non-thermal effects and, if so, under whose aegis was the research done?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): In so far as the National Research Council of Canada is aware the answer is as follows: At the level of intensity such as may occur in the vicinity of airport radar equipment, microwave communication systems, etc., work is believed to be in progress at the University of Manitoba (animal science division) to determine the long term effects of microwaves on the productivity of populations of chickens.

At a higher intensity corresponding to the "slightly thermal" level, research is being conducted at the National Research Council and supported by the council at Queen's University in relation to the behavioural influence that can be exerted on birds to keep them away from airports and commercial flight lanes.

MARC LALONDE

Question No. 537—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys):

1. What is the present position of Mr. Marc Lalonde in the Office of the Prime Minister, what are his duties and what is his salary?

2. Did the said Marc Lalonde hold any previous position or positions in the federal government and, if so, what was this position or positions and with what department or departments of government was he associated?

3. Did Mr. Lalonde hold a position with the Royal Commission on Pilotage and, if so, what was this position, how long was he employed in this position and what was the total amount he received in salary and expenses from this position?

4. On what date did Mr. Lalonde first assume his present position in the Office of the Prime Minister and was he formerly employed by the Prime Minister when he was Minister of Justice and, if so, what was his position at that time and what was his annual salary?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. Mr. Lalonde is principal secretary to the Prime Minister. The principal secretary is the Prime Minister's chief of staff and has direction of the Prime Minister's office.

The terms of his previous employment with the government were continued when he was appointed to his present position. His remuneration is on a fee basis and not to exceed $33,000 per year.

2. Mr. Lalonde was special assistant to the Hon. E. D. Fulton, Minister of Justice, in 1959-60; junior counsel to the industrial inquiry commission in the disruption of shipping on the great lakes in 1962; special adviser to the chairman of the royal commission on taxation in 1962-63; special adviser to the Privy Council office on securities, corporations and federal-provincial matters of a constitutional character in 1966-67; special adviser to the Prime Minister, April 1, 1967-June 26, 1968.

3. No.

4. June 27, 1968—the answer to the second part of the question is no.

FEDERAL BUILDINGS, METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Question No. 573—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many federal buildings are there in Metropolitan Toronto?

2. What is the total assessment of these buildings?

3. What were the total federal grants paid in lieu of taxes to each of the municipalities of Metropolitan Toronto in each of the years 1964-68 inclusive?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. Number of federal buildings and other properties assessed according to 1967 applications for grant in lieu of taxes submitted by municipalities in metropolitan Toronto:

City of Toronto	31
Borough of Scarborough	7
Borough of York North	10
Borough of Etobicoke	7
Borough of York	4
Borough of York East	2

ROLAND MADJIWON—EMPLOYMENT ON INDIAN RESERVE

Question No. 657—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Was Roland Madjiwon employed at Lac la Croix Reserve as a teacher and drug dispenser?

2. If so, by whom was he employed and for how long a period?

3. What were Mr. Madjiwon's formal academic qualifications as (a) a teacher, and (b) a pharmacist?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. During the academic year 1967-68, the department employed Mr. Rolland Nadjiwon as a teacher-aide at the Lac la Croix school. Teacher-aide is a classification used for teachers who do not hold valid training certificates. He was not employed as a drug dispenser.

2. The department employed Mr. Nadjiwon from September 1, 1967 to August 31, 1968, inclusive.

3. (a) Mr. Nadjiwon completed senior matriculation and one year at Algonquin College of Applied Arts and Technology. (b) Unknown.

EXCHEQUER COURT OF CANADA

Question No. 679—Mr. Fortin:

1. Is it the intention of the government to introduce in the House a measure to modify the powers of the Exchequer Court of Canada and, if so (a) what changes will be proposed (b) will a court of first instance and an appeal court be established?

2. Are the rules of procedure of the Exchequer Court of Canada available in French and, if not, when will such rules be available in that language?

3. What have been the expenditures of the Exchequer Court of Canada during each of the past ten fiscal years?

4. Is it the intention of the government to decentralize the Exchequer Court of Canada in order to make it easier for citizens to have access to this Court?

[Translation]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): 1. The government has under consideration legislative proposals that will modify the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court of Canada and establish an appellate branch or division but specific details can not be disclosed prior to introduction of a Bill in the House of Commons.

2. At the moment there is a 1966 Consolidation of the General Rules and Orders of the Exchequer Court of Canada in English only. This Consolidation was translated but not published because by the time the translation was available, the rules had and were being substantially amended. Since it would have cost nearly $9,000.00 to publish the translation, it was considered more advisable to wait until the Court had completed its amendments to the rules, at which time a new English and French Consolidation would be published. It is expected that the new bilingual edition will be published early in 1969.

3. Including administration, judicial salaries and travelling allowances total expenditures were: 1958-59, $243,094; 1959-60, $252,160; 1960-61, $261,178; 1961-62, $255,205; 1962-63, $285,249; 1963-64, $326,691; 1964-65, $363,358; 1965-66, $392,048; 1966-67, $453,625; 1967-68, $591,204.

4. The government has under consideration various ways and means that might be adopted to further decentralize the operations of the Exchequer Court of Canada.

IMMIGRANTS FROM CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Question No. 693—Mr. Schreyer:

1. To date in 1968, what is the cost to the Government of Canada for (a) transportation, and (b) accommodation for persons coming to Canada from Czechoslovakia as (i) immigrants (ii) refugees?

2. How many persons have come to Canada in 1968 from Czechoslovakia as (a) immigrants (b) refugees?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. While a refugee classification has been used for statistical purposes, all Czechoslovakians admitted to Canada under the special measures adopted by the government have, on arrival in Canada, been granted landed immigrant status in the same way as any other immigrant to this country.

(a) (i) and (ii) On the basis of arrivals up to November 8, 1968, the cost of transoceanic transportation is estimated to be $698,490 most of which is recoverable. A further $18,864.57 has been expended on inland transportation in Canada.

(b) (i) and (ii) It is estimated that up to November 8, 1968, the department has expended $662,907.28 on assistance in Canada to Czechoslovakians for such items as accommodation, meals, groceries, clothing and other necessities. No breakdown is available showing expenditures under these various items.

2. (a) and (b) As of November 8, 5,002 Czechoslovakian refugees had been granted landed immigrant status in Canada.

Questions

PRESS RELEASES, PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

Question No. 695—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Does the Department of Public Works issue documents which are of the nature of press releases, press communiques, news releases or the like and, if so, how many such documents have been issued since July 1, 1968?

2. What has been the cost of (a) printing headings or cover sheets (b) typing the stencils (c) mimeographing or other form of duplicating (d) collating and stapling (e) addressing and mailing the said documents?

3. With respect to the paper used for the said documents, what is (a) its quality (b) the quantity used and the cost thereof?

4. What is the estimate of the number of man-hours consumed in the preparation, production and distribution of such documents?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes; 179.

2. (a) $24; (b) $150; (c) $37; (d) and (e) $642.

3. (a) No. 7 bond 16 lb.; (b) 30,000 sheets 8½x14—$75.

4. 475 hours.

SCIENTISTS SENT TO JAPAN BY GRAIN COMMISSION

Question No. 696—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. What are the names of the senior scientists sent to Japan by the Board of Grain Commissioners?

2. What was the duration of the visit?

3. What was the cost involved in conducting this mission?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Dr. I. Hlynka and Dr. W. O. S. Meredith.

2. Dr. Hlynka, 27 days; Dr. Meredith, 20 days.

3. $3,046.90.

TELEVISION SATELLITE PROGRAM

Question No. 731—Mr. Robinson:

1. Is it the government's intention to have a Canadian satellite program to provide satisfactory TV reception in all parts of Canada?

2. Is it the intention of the government to license individuals and/or companies to use the Canadian satellite in the field of CATV?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as telecommunications is concerned —1. The government's intention has been outlined in the white paper presented by the Minister of Industry on March 28, 1968. Detailed planning is now being carried out in accordance with the principles enunciated in the white paper.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

2. No. The white paper stated that the proposed corporation would own both the satellites and the earth stations of the satellite system.

DYKE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM, MANITOBA

Question No. 752—Mr. Schreyer:

1. What was the total cost of the dyke construction project undertaken under the ARDA-FRED program since 1965 in the area east and north of Riverton, Manitoba?

2. What was the federal share of the construction cost in percentage and absolute terms?

3. How many miles of dyke were constructed?

4. Were any of the dykes constructed under this program removed or lowered?

5. If so, for what reason?

6. If so, what footage of dyke was so lowered or removed and at what total cost?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. No dyke construction was undertaken under the ARDA or FRED programs in the area east and north of Riverton, Manitoba.

2 to 6. N/A.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES SERVICE

Question No. 762—Mr. Godin:

1. Do all the provinces avail themselves of the weights and measures service provided by the federal government?

2. How many times a year are commercial concerns visited by an inspector of that service?

3. In the course of his regular work, how many concerns does an inspector visit in one month?

4. Is the service provided free and, if not, what is the cost and what are the conditions?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. The weights and measures service operates in all provinces, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

2. One each year, unless more frequent inspections are requested, or unless devices require reinspection following repairs.

3. On the average, each inspector visits 77 concerns each month. In 1967, 472,365 trade devices were inspected, ranging in complexity from gasoline meter pumps to electronic railway track scales, and 671,765 packages were checked for accuracy of quantity declaration.

4. Fees charged for inspection of measuring devices used in trade are in accordance with schedule IX of the weights and measures regulations established by order in council P.C. 6894 dated December 19th, 1951 and amendments. No charge is made for tests leading to type approval of new models of weighing or measuring machines, or for inspection of prepackaged goods.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Question No. 773—Mr. McQuaid:

1. Is the government planning the construction of any new post office buildings in Prince Edward Island during 1969 and, if so, how many are planned and where are they to be built?

2. Were any new post office buildings constructed in Prince Edward Island during 1968 and, if so, where were they built and at what cost?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. No.

2. One at Cornwall, costing $21,069.94.

MOUNTED POLICE BUILDING, HALIFAX

Question No. 776—Mr. McCleave:

1. What buildings have been built or are being built under Vote 20 of the current estimates of the Solicitor General, where and at what cost or estimated cost?

2. What is the estimated cost of the new RCMP building considered, but postponed, for the Halifax area?

3. Will the building be included for the next fiscal year?

4. What continuing use, if any, would be made by the RCMP of its present building in Halifax?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General):

1. For the Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Questions

POSTAGE RATES ON BOOKS

Question No. 786—Mr. Monteith:

1. What is the rate of postage for a book mailed by a book seller or his agent?

2. What is the rate of postage for the same book if mailed by a member of the general public?

3. Would the Postmaster General consider a subsidy for the book trade by way of a special postal rate?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): 1. 14 cents for the first 10 ounces, 1 cent each additional 2 ounces or fraction to each separate address, up to a maximum weight limit of 25 pounds, when mailed for delivery in Canada under the postage rate category recently established for mailings of books posted by publishers, book clubs and retail and wholesale distributors. Books may also be posted by such mailers at the regular third or fourth class rates of postage, in which case the normal 1 pound limit of weight for third class mail or the normal 25 pound weight limit for fourth class mail applies.

2. For delivery in Canada, 5 cents for the first 2 ounces and 3 cents each additional 2 ounces or fraction thereof to each separate address up to and including 1 pound. Over 1 pound up to and including 25 pounds, the fourth class zone rates of postage apply.

3. No. The special postage rate mentioned in question 1 was introduced 1st November 1968.

"CARRILLON CANADA"

Question No. 787—Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary):

1. What is the cost per issue, including staff employees' salaries, of producing the new Veterans Affairs departmental magazine "CARRILLON CANADA"?

2. How many copies are printed and who gets them?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. The estimated cost of the first issue of this staff magazine is $3,400, of which about $300 was for non-recurring design charges and approximately $1,100 for salaries of public relations division staff.

2. The print order was for 12,500 copies, of which 11,400 were required for distribution to personnel in the Department and its associated agencies. Copies of the first issue have been distributed to senators and members of the House of Commons, to several deputy ministers and other senior government officers, to the members of the Ottawa and overseas veterans' contingents, to the dominion council of the Royal Canadian Legion, leaders of the public service staff associations and a few others.

LAKE ONTARIO CLAIMS TRIBUNAL

Question No. 791—Mr. Mather:

1. When was the Lake Ontario Claims Tribunal established?

2. When did the Tribunal make its report?

3. Who were the members of the Tribunal?

4. What was the cost, in dollars, of the Tribunal to Canada?

5. What was the result of the work of the Tribunal, including its finding as to Canada's compensation obligation, in dollars?

6. What was, in dollars, the earlier offer of settlement of claims by the U.S.?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In so far as the Department of External Affairs is concerned: 1. The tribunal was established by a Canada-U.S. agreement dated March 25, 1965 which came into effect on October 11, 1966.

2. The tribunal handed down rulings on certain important preliminary questions on January 15 and February 13, 1968. It made no other ruling or report but the chairman did make certain statements at the final session of the tribunal which was held on Friday, September 27, 1968. In these statements the chairman noted that the governments of Canada and the United States had agreed to settle the claims for a lump sum payment to the government of the United States by the government of Canada of $350,000 U.S. on the basis that such payment be made without prejudice to legal or factual positions maintained by the two governments and without precedential effect.

3. Members: Chairman: Dr. Lambertus Erades, vice-president of the Rotterdam district court, The Netherlands. Canadian national member: The Honourable W. D. Roach, retired justice of the court of appeal of Ontario. U.S. national member: Professor Alwyn V. Freeman of John Hopkins University, Baltimore.

4. A number of accounts are still outstanding. The cost to date to Canada including the amount of the settlement is $442,100.

5. As indicated in the answer to question 2, while the tribunal handed down rulings on certain important preliminary questions it made no award. However, in a closed session on February 13, 1968, the tribunal suggested to the agents of the two governments that an attempt to be made without prejudice either to the validity of the claims or to the issue of substantive liability that they ascertain whether their governments would be prepared to attempt to negotiate a settlement. Following the making of this suggestion, intergovernmental negotiations were undertaken, and these negotiations culminated in a settlement, the terms of which have been summarized briefly in response to question 2.

6. No earlier offer of settlement in dollars was made by the U.S. government. However an offer of compromise by the claimants to settle the claims in full for the sum of $875,000 United States dollars was transmitted to the Department of External Affairs in a communication dated July 22, 1959 from the United States embassy in Ottawa. Eventually many of the claims were formally espoused by the United States government in proceedings before the tribunal.

STABILIZATION BOARD PAYMENTS TO QUEBEC FARMERS

Question No. 804—Mr. Matte:

What part of the cost of the Agricultural Stabilization Board programs for the first ten years of operation ending March 31, 1967, was paid to Quebec farmers for the following products (a) potatoes (b) apples (c) sugar beets (d) honey (e) manufacturing milk?

Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMS

Question No. 805—Mr. Laprise:

How many initial requests were made to the Unemployment Insurance Commission during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1968?

[Translation]

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): 1,389,366 initial claims were made through the commissions's offices during the fiscal year which ended March 31, 1968.

DEFENCE POSTINGS FOR SEA SERVICE

Question No. 821—Mr. MacLean:

1. Did the Department of National Defence send out a general signal on June 26, 1968 to the effect that men from other services would be posted to fill sea-going personnel shortages?

2. Have any other signals to this effect been transmitted by National Defence Headquarters since that date?

3. Since June 25, 1968, how many men have been posted to serve in an environment (air, sea, land) other than the one he was in, without volunteering for such assignment?

4. Have any servicemen indicated that they did not wish to accept such a posting and, if so, how many?

5. Have any servicemen refused to accept such postings and, if so, how many?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. A general message was sent out stating that, as certain environmental and trade imbalances could be expected due to the planned force reduction by normal attrition, some tradesmen would be offered employment outside of the environment in which they enlisted. The message emphasized that the vested right of all servicemen who enrolled before 1 February, 1968, would be respected. Because of the small numbers involved, it was considered unnecessary to go out with a request for volunteers. Instead, the question was put as part of a normal posting instruction and if the serviceman exercised his vested right the posting was offered to someone else. This in no way affects his career opportunities.

2. No.

3. 38.

4. Yes, one.

5. Yes, 14.

PUBLIC WORKS, BEAUCE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 831—Mr. Rodrigue:

What projects undertaken by the Department of Public Works are presently in progress in the constituency of Beauce?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): A new Post Office at St. Benoit Labre is under construction in Beauce constituency.

ARMOURIES TO BE DISPOSED OF BY CROWN ASSETS

Question No. 852—Mr. Marshall:

What armouries in Canada are to be closed and handed over to Crown Assets?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): The following armouries are in the process of being declared surplus to defence requirements: Brooks, Alberta, (0.339 acres and two buildings); Montreal, Quebec, (750 Belair Street); (3590 St. Antoine Street), (2.49 acres and 9 buildings—partial armoury site).

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege. I have placed a number of questions on the order paper in line with Your Honour's suggestions, some of which have been there unanswered for two and a half months. I have directed questions to the minister of Manpower and Immigration. They have been unanswered. Question No. 485 was directed to the Minister of Transport, and it has been unanswered for two months. This is a question which could and should have been answered within three or four days. I bring this situation to Your Honour's attention and suggest that the answers to some of these questions should be forthcoming at a very early date.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am not here to raise a kick, or even to endeavour to kick the distance of 18 feet which separates me from the right hon. gentleman, but I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has received that list of those who were awarded Centennial medals between June and December of 1967. I have been trying to obtain that list, including all those other than members of the armed forces, and the Prime Minister indicated that he would table it. I thought he should have done so before now, because surely the list must be ready after this length of time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO AGENDA FOR CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can now say that an agreement has been reached in respect of the agenda for the federal-provincial conference. If so, can he advise the house as to the items to be discussed?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I have not received replies from all the provinces to a letter I sent to the premiers more than a fortnight ago. I asked them if they would agree on the agenda which had been discussed by officials for some period of time. Until I have received such agreement from the provincial premiers I do not feel that I should unilaterally release the proposed agenda. If I did so I might be blamed by the official opposition for acting unilaterally, and hon. members may want to use this as another political football.

If it is of any assistance to the opposition I might indicate that the agenda does arise from decisions taken at the February conference. We are not proposing any great departure. I appreciate the importance of making this information available to the opposition and the public at an early date, and I hope the provincial premiers will see fit to answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks of Premier Robarts in the Ontario legislature, as well as other provincial premiers, is the government giving consideration to whether the conference will concern itself with the division of revenues as well as responsibilities at the two levels of government?

Mr. Trudeau: In the absence of the Minister of Finance I can say that he has written the provincial premiers suggesting that the two days following the constitutional conference be allocated to discussion of financial matters and meetings of federal-provincial ministers of finance. These days will be in addition to the meeting which took place early last month, and will give provincial officials ample opportunity to raise this matter and for us to discuss it with them.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REIMPOSITION OF CEILING ON BANK INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fantastic profits being reported by a number of the chartered banks in Canada, will the government consider reimposing the ceiling on interest rates which banks may charge?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We can always consider this, Mr. Speaker, but I would prefer that this question be directed to the Minister of Finance. He may have a more sophisticated answer.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the Prime Minister discuss with the Minister of Finance the possibility of referring this matter to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not mind discussing this possibility with him, Mr. Speaker, but I must say I will not have a very strong inclination to try to convince him.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is that leadership?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF EDUCATION MINISTERS OF FRENCH SPEAKING COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether he would agree to table a copy of the invitation he received from the government of the Niger and a copy of the letter he sent through the leader of the government in the senate concerning the conference of French-speaking countries which is to take place in the Niger soon? Would he table those two letters, for the information of the members of this house?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question could have been put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) but, in my opinion, it would be contrary to usage in the field of external affairs to make public a communication we have received without the authorization of the person who sent it to us.

CRIMINAL CODE

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGES IN AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he has redrafted or changed those sections of the new omnibus bill to be brought before the house which have reference to abortions?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have received representations from all over the country in respect of various matters contained in the omnibus bill. As a result of these representations I have recommended some important changes in detail but not in principle. The new draft of the bill is currently before my colleagues.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank the Minister of Justice for his answer. Has the minister disclosed to the news media or others the nature of the changes in the new bill, compared to the bill as drafted and presented by the previous Liberal government?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have made no firm disclosures of them, because whatever changes are contemplated by the bill will have to be approved by the government as a whole.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Justice says he has made no firm disclosures. Has he made any disclosures to the news media or others?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, naturally I have been discussing this bill when the occasion has arisen and I have had reason to comment on the various views affecting all aspects of the bill, as I believe it is my duty to do.

Mr. Woolliams: I have one further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Minister of Justice given any thought to making some revolutionary changes in reference to amendments to the Criminal Code to strengthen the hand of administrative officers to effectively stop and control the spread of syndicated crime in Canada?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is another important matter and I agree with the hon. member as to its importance. I earlier stated to the house that only the matters currently found in former Bill C-195 would be brought back for consideration by the house; but as the hon. member suggests, and I agree with him, organized crime is a matter to which we have to direct our attention.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING C.N.R. RAIL SERVICE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as house leader. Will the minister recall the estimates of the Canadian Transport Commission before the house so the house can deal with the recommendation of the standing committee regarding the passenger rail abandonment of the C.N.R. in Newfoundland?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly prepared to consider that, but I suggest both in respect of these estimates and others that a far more productive way of arranging the business of the house would be for the hon. member to consult his house leader. I have asked the other house leaders what estimates they would like to deal with for the balance of this week. I think this would be a better way to deal with the matter.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I direct a supplementary question to the chairman of the standing committee on transport and communications. Will the hon. member undertake to bring in a report to the house at the earliest possible opportunity so the house can deal with the recommendation made by the committee on Thursday last?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could remind the hon. member that it is not necessary to make a report. The house can bring these estimates back when it desires.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

APPLICATION OF SUPREME COURT DECISION TO PROVINCES OTHER THAN BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Prime Minister in connection with the statement he read to the house today. I do not know whether I missed the answer to the question I am about to ask. If I did, it is only because I did not hear that portion of the statement.

The situation in provinces other than British Columbia, that is the provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Quebec, Ontario and the maritime provinces, is quite different basically and juridically, and I am wondering why the request for the viewpoint of the Supreme Court of Canada regarding the ownership of offshore minerals in these provinces was not submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada before the Prime Minister decided on setting out in detail the attitude to be taken by the government of Canada.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman is asking why it had not been done before, I can only say that it was another government that decided to submit this reference in this particular way. With regard to why it is not being done now before making the statement, I think the best answer is that this type of reference is a lengthy procedure. It might take months of litigation and waiting for the rendering of a decision. It is in order to gain time that the government has proceeded in this fashion.

I agree with the right hon. gentleman that there are some distinctions in law to be drawn between the various situations. But we feel the underlying principles are much the same and we prefer to go ahead now with a negotiated settlement, if it is possible, rather than embark upon possibly years of litigation; because it is extremely urgent that all Canadians should reach some kind of agreement as soon as possible in order that the exploitation of these resources be begun as quickly as possible.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question of time is always important, Mr. Speaker, but there is a matter of great principle here. I am wondering whether the Prime Minister has given consideration to asking the Supreme Court of Canada to permit an early submission to them for their opinion. It would not take very long. It did not take very long in regard to the submission respecting British Columbia. I am sure the Supreme Court of Canada, in view of the importance of this matter, would give the Prime Minister the assurance that at the earliest possible date an opinion would be given. Otherwise these provinces which have a different juridical position than British Columbia find themselves in an impossible position.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member recognizes that the legal position may vary from case to case; therefore it would take a great many references. Also, the impression I got from the comments of the house leader of the official opposition was that this should be more by way of a political decision rather than a judicial one. He indicated that there was not enough negotiation, and seemed to object that we were starting from the fact that the opinion had given us entire priority with regard to areas in British Columbia below the low water mark.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. What I said with respect to this matter—I have to repeat it in order to make sure that the question of privilege is clearly understood—was that with regard to the other areas the question may well be dependent upon what view of the law could be taken by the Supreme Court, and then in any event the rights which are determined are not rights which the federal government by itself can dispose of. If the answer to the first question I asked is in the affirmative, it may well be that provinces and people who do not have access to the coast lines have certain rights which the federal government may not be able to barter away. Consequently, if a decision is going to be made, in the final analysis it should be a decision in which all the provinces are able to participate.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister what influenced the law officers of the crown to change their minds or reverse their decision with respect to offshore mineral rights in the last 18 months.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I know of no such reversal; therefore I am not in a position to say what influenced them to change their minds.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the acquisition rights of the government under the crown corporation as set out in Bill C-135, that bill recognizes the right of Nova Scotia to offshore minerals. This matter is legislated in their own bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Calagary North on a supplementary question.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. At the time this question was placed before the Supreme Court in connection with the mineral rights of the province of British Columbia, we were informed by the then prime minister that the decision would not necessarily weigh upon the other provinces and that the other provincial—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member would not recognize that this is becoming close to a debate. Perhaps we might allow the Prime Minister to reply to the hon. member's question. That may clarify the situation; I am hopeful it will. If not, perhaps I will allow the hon. member to continue his question of privilege.

Mr. Trudeau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): With all respect, sir,—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who has the floor?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, with all respect to the answer that may be provided by the Prime Minister, he has already indicated that he does not understand the situation, and on the question of privilege I thought I would just draw his attention—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that on a question of privilege he should indicate how his personal privileges or the privileges of the house have been affected.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Well, I could be wrong, but in my opinion the privileges of the house have been affected.

Mr. Trudeau: Don't be so modest.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): When we think back to the performance of the Prime Minister on Saturday afternoon, he has a lot to be modest about.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if I could seek the co-operation of hon. members. We are now in the question period and it seems to me hon. members should be asking questions. There was a valid question asked in the first instance which evolved into a question of privilege, and now there is a further question of privilege. There are still many members in the house who would like to ask questions about this and other subjects. I will recognize the right of the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond to raise a question of privilege, but perhaps it might be better if we were to allow the Prime Minister to reply to the hon. member's question. Then he may have a further supplementary question.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond).]

Mr. Trudeau: I think the answer to the hon. member's problem, Mr. Speaker, may be that there was a reference to mining rights which belong to the provinces, and which under the arrangement we propose would continue to belong to the provinces. The member knows that the resource administration lines we propose to draw are well within federal territory, well offshore from the low water mark. Any such mines as do exist at present in the maritime provinces would be well inside the lines which we propose to draw, leaving the administration on the landward side of these lines to the provinces and leaving also the revenues from these resources entirely to the provinces.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question which I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. Has there been any negotiation or consultation with the provinces prior to making this statement, to see if they approve or will negotiate on the formula which the Prime Minister outlined today?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no special communication of that nature with the provinces. Once again we took the position that, certainly in the case of the province of British Columbia, we were drawing lines well within the territory which was allocated to the federal government, and therefore we were leaning in favour of the provincial side. We felt we were giving more to the provinces than the court obliged us to do in this particular case. We followed the same principles, as I just indicated in answering a previous question, in drawing the resource administration lines in the case of other provinces, keeping always well on the outside of what might be interpreted to be historically provincial seas or waters. It is for this reason we are trying to avoid litigation, by being as generous as possible even with territorial seas which normally might be suspected, under international law, to be federal. We hope, by avoiding litigation, to advance this whole question much more quickly for the benefit of all the people of Canada.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

PAYMENT OF SUBSISTENCE ALLOWANCES DURING HOLIDAY SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration of which I have given him notice. I am informed that some students attending retraining schools under manpower assistance programs are not to be paid their regular living allowances during the Christmas holiday season if the school is closed during that period. Would the minister tell the house what his department is planning to do to rectify this situation, which will leave many people without the means to exist for a two week period of time?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): I will take this question as notice.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. Can the minister indicate when the long overdue report of the agricultural task force will be tabled in the house?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Agriculture is not expecting to be answering questions before Wednesday of this week.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. We have had two questions now which raise serious doubts about this practice the government has been following. A question was asked of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, who was absent—oh, my point is going to be destroyed because he is now returning to the house. However, the question was taken as notice. Now a question has been asked of the Department of Agriculture and we are told that the department is not supposed to be answering questions until Wednesday. There is no such rule, and I think urgent questions should be dealt with.

Mr. Trudeau: On the same point, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that all the members who are on this unnameable roster and who are supposed to be here today are here today. It was by accident that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration happened to leave the house for something, to practise football or something.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar could be allowed to ask the question again.

Mr. Gleave: I am in an embarrassing position, Mr. Speaker, because I cannot recall the exact wording of the question and a messenger has left with the written question. However, I gave notice of the question to the minister several days ago. It has to do with students who are attending manpower training centres. The information I have is that during the Christmas holiday season these students will not be paid their living allowances if the schools are closed for two weeks, which is happening in some cases. I want to know what action is being taken to correct the situation, since obviously the students have to eat and have shelter during that period.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I regret my absence for a few moments, Mr. Speaker, which led to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raising a point of order. In point of fact, however, I was telephoning attempting to service a request from one of his colleagues. I will try not to do that in the future.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I did not arrange that.

Mr. MacEachen: In reply to the question, we are attempting to deal with this problem wherever possible by having the courses run during this period so that students will be in receipt of training allowances. We think this is the best way to overcome this particular problem.

Mr. Gleave: I have a supplementary question. Certainly the student to whom I was talking said the students would be quite satisfied with this solution. In the event the schools close down, however, will the minister say what action will be taken to ensure that the students do not suffer deprivation?

Mr. MacEachen: I think the best possible long term solution to this problem is to encourage the schools to remain open. If we take any other action we are likely to discourage that.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): In view of the fact that the decision as to whether the schools remain open is not made by the students but by the school administration and teachers, and in view of the fact that the students have to eat whether the school is open or not, could not the department make an arrangement to permit students to be paid their living allowances so they will not be penalized if the schools close?

TELEVISION

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION ON EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Secretary of State. We welcome the hon. gentleman back to the house following his sortie into South America. Will the Secretary of State tell the house when legislation proposing the establishment of a Canadian educational broadcasting agency can be expected to be introduced?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a definite date, as the hon. member will no doubt understand, but we are doing our utmost so that this legislation can be introduced in the house this session and, if possible, early in the coming year.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question. Can the Secretary of State inform the house when the report of the special task force might be received?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: It is expected that the work will be completed early in June, according to our calendar. However, that calendar is far from definite, because the task force has barely gone to work. The final and complete report would therefore be submitted early in June.

But, once again, I repeat that there is nothing definite about that calendar and other difficulties might arise in addition to those already expected. However, the legislation would be ready to be introduced in the house before the end of the work needed to set up the educational television broadcasting agency.

[English]

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the house with which provinces the task force has been in communication, in particular whether it has been in communication with the province of Quebec and, if not, why not?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, contacts have been established at various levels, and that is why the hon. member's question would require a properly shaded answer.

In most of the provinces, contacts were established at the official level; in other provinces, it was at the level of the Minister of Education.

Therefore, I would rather take the hon. member's question as notice to see, first, whether the provincial authorities with which we have been in contact agree to the proposition that these contacts be disclosed in the house. Only then would I want to give a detailed report.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Secretary of State inform the house whether he has invited the provinces to name permanent members to the task force studying educational television, as was suggested to him on October 24?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: No, we have not taken any steps in that direction, Mr. Speaker. However, I may say that the setting up of that task force includes two stages and that we are now considering the first stage.

It is not impossible that during the second stage we would consider the proposal made in October.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

When the honourable Secretary of State speaks of consultations with the provinces at various levels and says that his reply must be shaded, can he tell the house whether, with regard to Quebec, the last statements of the Quebec premier are going to alter the type of consultations to be held between Ottawa and Quebec with regard to educational television?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, since my return I have unfortunately been unable to read, in its entirety, the speech of the Quebec premier in this regard. I have only read the accounts in the press. However, I have the document here on my desk and I shall be able to give the member a reply only when I have read the speech itself.

However, I shall only be able to reply with regard to the attitude of the federal government, because that of the Quebec provincial government will obviously be determined by the Quebec premier himself and not by us.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CHURCHILL, MAN.—NEGOTIATIONS ON DEVELOPMENT OF TOWN SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works in regard to the proposals to be made to the cabinet by officials of the minister's department in respect of the development of the townsite of Churchill. Can the minister say whether these proposals have been made available to cabinet and, if not, when the minister thinks they will be?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this will be done almost at once, and I would expect that thereafter we would make good progress with the province of Manitoba.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED COMMENT BY GERMAN AMBASSADOR ON CANADIAN NATO POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What explanation, if any, did the minister receive from the West German ambassador to Canada in connection with the ambassador's statement during the course of a recent press conference in Kitchener to the effect that Canada was an enigmatic sphinx in its policy toward NATO?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take the question as notice.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

REPORTED CONSIDERATION OF ABANDONMENT OF PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I want to direct to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. May I also compliment him on his obviously improved health since he has given up cigarette smoking. My question is prompted by today's press reports to the effect that cabinet ministers are considering the advisability of abandoning the family allowance program. Would the minister say whether this is so?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker. The situation, as has been announced now several times, is that this program, like all other programs involved in the social welfare field, is under review. There is no suggestion of abandonment or otherwise of any programs at this stage.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

REPORTED REGIONAL LIMITATION ON NUMBERS ACCEPTED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Considering the seriousness of unemployment and the fact that, when putting an end to the winter works program the government had announced the establishment of an intensive retraining plan, could the minister tell us whether the number of persons entitled to take advantage of retraining courses is limited in any way to a certain number in a given region, or can all those qualified be accepted?

Moreover, has a certain age limit been set?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question is a very complicated one and to answer it in detail would require a good deal of time. However, let me say that we have increased very substantially funds for training in the province of Quebec. Just recently the Prime Minister notified the premier of Quebec that an additional sum of money in the millions of dollars was available for additional training in that province. We believe that the work we are doing in the training field will be more effective in coping with the problem of unemployment than the former winter works program.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I should like to ask another question, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I already told the hon. member last Friday, this question is out of order. I was reluctant to interrupt him today, but if he thinks the question should be discussed further, I suggest he could do so later, at the time of adjournment.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Now that the views of the Postmaster General in connection with our participation in NORAD and NATO have been clarified and placed on Hansard, will the minister seize the earliest opportunity to state his views?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recognize that the question as asked is not perhaps entirely in order.

Mr. Baldwin: Then, Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Secretary of State, in the interests of participatory democracy, if he would use his good offices with the national networks to arrange a debate between the Postmaster General and the Minister of National Defence?

Mr. Speaker: That question tends to be argumentative.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the house whether Coach Vic Chapman is still on his personal staff after the two-yard kick-off on Saturday?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad I have given the opposition something to play football with, apart from ideas. It is time they realized—

An hon. Member: Here comes the lecture.

Mr. Trudeau: I have sent Mr. Chapman to exile out in British Columbia.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ORGANIZED CRIME AND FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and arises from the reference in the press today to the vast upsurge in bankruptcy frauds in the province of Quebec, now numbering some 60 per cent of all bankruptcies in Canada. Because of the relationship between bankruptcy frauds and other illicit activities of organized crime, as outlined by Montreal police officials, will the Solicitor General use the powers conferred by the Bankruptcy Act to launch an inquiry into this unsavoury facet of organized crime?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to take the right hon. gentleman's suggestion under consideration, but I should point out to him that if he will check the evidence given before the justice committee on this subject very recently in connection with the activities of the fraud squad of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police he will find some rather encouraging reports.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have read that. I am asking whether the Solicitor General, who always looks after his department, would care to get in touch with the government of Quebec with a view to doing something to prevent the increase in crime that this country is now experiencing?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I was seeking to point out that a great deal is being done to prevent the increase in crime, and it is being done in very close co-operation with the province of Quebec. In any event, I will take the suggestion of the right hon. member under consideration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPLICATION OF OFFSHORE MINERAL POLICY TO ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's statement on motions today, can he say whether the government has had discussions with the French government regarding the sovereignty of the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon with respect to the matter of offshore mineral rights?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Negotiations have been going on for a great many months with a view to reaching some solution satisfactory to both countries.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are those negotiations about to reach a satisfactory conclusion so far as Canada is concerned?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can only say that if they are not satisfactory so far as Canada is concerned they are not about to reach a satisfactory conclusion. I do not mean to evade the question. I just mean to say that the discussions are very difficult and they are not near to conclusion so far as we are able to see.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In implementing newly announced government regulations with respect to offshore mineral rights will the government also be implementing the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act which was passed in 1964?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I must emphasize that the two questions are completely unrelated. I cannot guarantee that the solution of one will accelerate the solution of the other.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, with all deference I submit that the questions are directly related since St. Pierre and Miquelon oppose the implementation of the 12-mile limit. In any event, will the Prime Minister take this question under consideration when reviewing the matter?

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

PERSONNEL OF DELEGATION TO ACCOMPANY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the widespread interest in the composition of the delegation to accompany the Prime Minister to the forthcoming prime ministers conference, may we have a general outline of the various functions these individuals accompanying the Prime Minister will perform?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that that question should be placed on the order paper. As the hon. member knows, if there is urgency to the question it may be debated at the time of adjournment tonight.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

QUEBEC—COVERAGE GIVEN TO POLITICAL PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State, but before I would like to make a correction.

Now I would like to ask the Secretary of State to tell us what has become of the report which he promised about the policy of the C.B.C. and its application concerning the allotment of time to political and non-political movements or other movements. Is the report now ready to be tabled?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I admit that I do not know which report the hon. member is speaking about. Reference was made to an answer to a question put on the orders of the day. I know nothing about the report mentioned by the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The hon. member could perhaps get in touch with the minister to elucidate the matter.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

As for the answer of the Secretary of State—

An hon. Member: You cannot speak about something when you do not know about it.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, an hon. member has just said that one cannot speak about something when one does not know about it. I think that it is not up to him to judge and that it would be advisable for government members to agree among themselves, as we like to say, in order to give intelligent answers.

The right hon. Prime Minister has already promised to the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) to have a study made on that subject. Later on the hon. Secretary of State undertook to have an inquiry conducted into that matter. The hon. member for Témiscamingue placed on the order paper questions which were answered; however, the broadcast time granted by the C.B.C. during the last convention of the Ralliement Créditiste, compared to that of the Parti Québécois—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member indicate what is essentially his point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. Later on, as a follow up to the answers given to the question of the hon. member for Témiscamingue, I asked the hon. Secretary of State to inquire into the policy followed by the corporation with regard to the broadcast time granted to political, apolitical or other movements. It is then that the hon. minister rose—and the Debates of the House of Commons can prove it—to promise me that inquiry. That is what I am referring to, Mr. Speaker, and I think that the statement just made by the hon. Secretary of State is totally unacceptable and shows the lack of responsibility of this government.

INDUSTRY

PROVISION OF INCENTIVES IN MARITIME AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. When will we obtain additional information about the proposed new legislation on industrial incentives in the maritimes?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, it will take a few months.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of that answer, will the minister say that no industries applying for assistance in the transitional period will suffer, because that does not appear to be the case at present?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, nobody is going to suffer in the meantime.

Mr. Bell: Well, we are suffering.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. I draw his attention to this matter in order to be helpful to him and to other hon. members. I do not wish to refer to any unmentionable document, but would the Prime Minister note that under present arrangements no cabinet members answering for trade, commerce, agriculture or the Canadian wheat board are in the house on Mondays or Tuesdays? That means that between Friday and Wednesday there is a period of 96 hours in which no hon. member can obtain information about these subjects. Is it possible to arrange matters so that ministers answering for the fields I have mentioned may be in the house on Mondays or Tuesdays?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house leader on the government side would be delighted to sit down with the house leaders of the other parties and arrange a roster which is acceptable to them.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, originally my question was for the President of the Privy Council but I wish to direct it now to the Prime Minister. Bearing in mind the fact that a number of ministers of the crown, by their own admission, are disturbed because they are not allowed to attend proceedings of the house on their days off, can the Prime Minister say what action he proposed to take in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have serious doubts about that question.

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps I should indicate to the house that this is a matter which has come to my attention and there is evidence to substantiate the fact that a number of ministers are disturbed by the fact that they are not allowed to attend the proceedings of the house on their days off. They want to attend.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

DIVORCE

EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION TO COUNTY AND DISTRICT COURTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, November 27, I asked the Minister of Justice a question about the backlog of divorce petitions building up. I took too long in asking the question to arrive at facts. Since we are not so rushed now I wonder whether the minister can say whether county and district courts will be allowed to work on this backlog in order that these divorce petitions may be dealt with expeditiously?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we are, of course, reviewing the situation closely. The initiative in this respect, following the constitutional division of powers with the administration of justice lying with the provincial attorneys general, would have to come from that quarter. If it did, we should be only too happy to try to achieve better court procedures.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PORTUGAL—PROPOSED AMNESTY FOR POLITICAL PRISONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the parliamentary secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of Canada's recent vote in the United Nations condemning mildly Portugal's colonial policies and in light of the recent change of régime in Portugal, will the government of Canada take advantage of this opportunity to indicate to the government of Portugal that friendship between our two countries, which is so much to be desired, could be best based on a mutual respect for the rule of law and fundamental human rights, which might be evidenced by the granting of an amnesty to Portuguese political prisoners?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a suggestion to the parliamentary secretary. I doubt that he is really asking a question.

AIR CANADA

CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT ON DISPUTE WITH EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether he is now in a position to answer the question I put to him on Friday as to whether or not the government has received the report of the conciliation board dealing with the disagreement between Air Canada and the air line employees association? I might also ask whether the board has resolved the differences between the parties.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I did receive the report on Friday. The board was not successful in resolving the differences.

OLD AGE SECURITY

REQUEST FOR ISSUANCE OF CHEQUES BEFORE CHRISTMAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would it be possible for old age security cheques to be sent out before Christmas this year in order that people might receive them in time to have a better Christmas?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): It is very unlikely, Mr. Speaker. This situation has come up many times, as the hon. member knows, and it has been found that there are many disadvantages to complying with the proposal.

SASKATOON—REQUEST FOR TELEVISION OUTLET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Secretary of State. In light of the request recently made by the council of the city of Saskatoon that consideration be given to providing a C.B.C. television outlet in Saskatoon, will the minister inform the house whether the C.B.C. intends to act on this submission?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member should place his question on the order paper.

EXPROPRIATION ACT

INQUIRY AS TO DRAFT OF NEW BILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice. Has the draft bill for the new expropriation act been drawn up by the government and, if so, when will it be introduced in the house?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we have encountered certain difficulties in processing all the draft legislation going through the legislative section of the Department of Justice. I expect that the draft bill should be available for parliament when it reassembles in January.

Supply—Industry

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1. Departmental administration, $12,495,330.

The Chairman: House in committee of supply, revised estimates of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for the year ending March 31, 1969. Order. I should like to revise that statement. Apparently it is the estimates of the Department of Industry only.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Hales: Does the minister not intend to make some introductory remarks before we proceed?

Mr. Pepin: I was waiting for an invitation!

An hon. Member: You look so relaxed.

Mr. Pepin: In a number of situations I have learned that silence is the key to success.

An hon. Member: You should tell the opposition that.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry): Mr. Chairman, since the creation of the Department of Industry in 1963 the department has introduced numerous programs to assist Canadian industry in increasing its productivity and expanding its output. These programs have made industry more competitive and have contributed appreciably to the success of the manufactured products sector of Canadian exports. Indeed, during the past five years Canada's exports of manufactured products have increased fourfold and now account for about 34 per cent of total exports.

It is interesting to observe the growth of the manufactured products sector of Canadian exports. In 1958, it amounted to 13.2 per cent; in 1963, to 15.4 per cent, in 1967, to 31.2 per cent and this year to about 34 per cent. As a result, exports of processed manufactured products now make up nearly three-quarters of total Canadian exports. Furthermore, some of the greatest gains in expanded production and increased exports have been in the more sophisticated product lines.

A few moments ago I was reading a paper on the subject of productivity. Canadian manufacturing compares favourably, the paper said, with that of most countries, but productivity in the United States is still more than 30 per cent higher than in Canada. However, Canada has been successful in reducing this productivity gap. While productivity in United States manufacturing has increased by some 80 per cent over the post-war period, manufacturing productivity in Canada has more than doubled. The narrowing of the gap was continued during the last decade during which Canada reported a 43 per cent increase compared with 36 per cent in the United States. Apparently the gap is still about 30 per cent for the whole industrial sector. Hon. members will no doubt understand the importance of reducing this gap as much and as fast as possible, since this is a major determinant in international competitiveness and consequently a major factor in the success of Canadian exports.

Canada has improved its production and export performance, as I have indicated, in a number of product areas such as electronic equipment, aircraft and aircraft components, and this improvement is directly attributable to special arrangements and programs in which the Department of Industry has played a leading role.

May I now tell you a few things, Mr. Chairman, about the automotive industry program. Substantial progress has been made toward the attainment of the objectives of the 1965 program. By 1968 the production of passenger vehicles had increased by 29 per cent and commercial vehicles by more than 129 per cent, over the levels for 1964, the year immediately preceding implementation of the program.

The surge in trade has been even more spectacular. In 1964 Canada exported automotive products valued at $136 million. By the model of 1968 the export of such products amounted to a value exceeding $2 billion.

Of course imports have also risen but the trade imbalance in automotive products, which had been growing rapidly in previous years, was reduced for the first time in 1966, and it will be further diminished in 1968. The projection for 1968 indicates that the imbalance may be about $364 million world wide, $350 million of that with the United States. When one compares that figure with the figure of $683 million for 1966 and $547 million for 1965, one easily realizes the tremendous progress which has been made.

Average levels of employment in the automotive industries have also increased during the life of the program, from a monthly average of 68,000 in 1964 to about 80,000 people in 1968.

An appreciable amount of rationalization of production has taken place both in the assembly of vehicles and in the manufacture of parts. Although total production of motor cars has increased appreciably, the number of car makes, body styles and models assembled in Canada has been reduced considerably. This was a condition of the success of the over-all operation.

Productivity has also improved in the automotive industries. Traditionally productivity in the Canadian automotive industries has been well below that of the United States. The trend to a greater variety of models and styles intensified this problem for Canadian producers, but under the new program, with a bigger output of fewer models, it has been possible to achieve greater specialization and, consequently, greater productivity. During the period 1961 to 1963 the average annual increase in productivity was 5 per cent with respect to vehicles assembled in Canada. From 1965 to 1967 this annual increase reached 8 per cent, and so it is estimated that the productivity gap between Canada and the United States in the automotive field has now been reduced to about 20 per cent. This is obviously still too high, and efforts will be made by all concerned to reduce it further.

The success of the over-all operation was not entirely painless. In order to take advantage of these production and trade opportunities many parts manufacturers have found it necessary to undertake major re-equipment and expansion programs. Smaller manufacturers in Canada have always formed an important part of the automotive industry. These firms wished to play a role under the automotive program, which was designed in several specific ways to take their interests into account. For them the Department of Industry introduced the automotive adjustment assistance program to ensure that they would be able to obtain adequate financing on reasonable terms in order to modernize and re-equip their plants. This program provides for loans to automotive parts manufacturers and suppliers of materials, accessories and tooling used in the automotive industry. The repayment period of a loan made under this program is related to the borrower's capacity to repay and the circumstances of the loan, and may extend over a period of up to 20 years.

Since the initiation of the program 68 loans valued at $55 million have been made to assist Canadian automotive producers to expand their operations and make them more efficient, and 17 other cases are presently under investigation.

Also, in order to reduce the costs of Canadian automotive parts makers and thus improve their ability to compete for North American markets, a program has been initiated by the department to remit duties on imported production machinery and equipment which are not available from Canadian producers within the time needed to meet production schedules. In order to keep hon. members informed of the growth of this program, I might indicate that my information to April 29, 1968, shows that 170 applications have been received and remissions of $2.9 million have been granted. My latest figures with respect to the amount of remissions show $3.24 million in remissions on machinery imported into Canada. This is so much expense that the producers did not have to meet.

Many Canadian parts manufacturers are now supplying not only the domestic markets but are shipping substantial quantities of components to export markets.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that you are quite aware of the importance of the Kennedy round of tariff negotiations, and you may like to know that the Department of Industry has been involved in developing programs in order to make it possible for Canadian manufacturers to take advantage of all the possibilities afforded by the Kennedy round.

The first program I would like to mention is the general adjustment assistance program, which was announced in March, 1968, very recently, relatively speaking. In circumstances of freer world trade it was essential that Canada's secondary industry should develop greater competitive strength. This situation directed that the major objectives of industrial adjustment policy should be, (a) to derive as much benefit as possible from widening markets and increasing scope for greater specialization and longer production runs, and (b) to assist firms adversely affected to adapt effectively to more competitive conditions. These are the purposes of the general adjustment assistance program.

The first feature of the program is the offer, by the Department of Industry, of insurance on the major share of the risk of loss on adjustment assistance loans made by private lenders. The second feature is the offer of direct loans to firms that have been seriously injured, or threatened with serious injury, as a result of reductions in the Canadian tariff, and which are unable to borrow the funds they require from the private sector under the insured loan program. The third feature of the program is the offer of technical and professional advice to firms. The department will share the cost of such consulting services with the firm to the extent considered appropriate in each case, but the department's share will not exceed 50 per cent.

These are the three features of the general adjustment assistance program. Again, one is insurance of loans made by the private sector, the second is direct loans, and the third is technical assistance.

To date 377 inquiries have been received, 90 per cent of which have been for insurance of private loans and 10 per cent for direct loans. A total of 80 cases are under direct study, two have been approved and one has been rejected.

It is estimated that in the next five years insured loans totalling half a billion dollars and direct loans totalling $45 million will be made under this program. Requirements for consulting grants are expected to amount to $5 million in the same period. For 1968-69 we are asking spending authority for direct loans and consulting grants in the amount of $10 million—that is vote L75—and $1 million under vote 3.

[Translation]

I would now like to say a word about another program of the Department of Industry, arising from the Kennedy Round, the machinery program. It is an extension of what I said earlier about the machinery program within the framework of the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement.

This program, which is defined by tariff item 42700-1 and came into force on January 1, 1968, has a twofold objective. Its first purpose is to promote greater efficiency by enabling the industry to get production equipment at the lowest possible prices. Secondly, it enables the Canadian machinery industry, that is machinery producers, to make the best possible use of the rate which, in the future, will apply with more certainty to the products they make.

Allow me to explain, Mr. Chairman. The main aspects of that program are twofold. First, it will set up a single tariff for imported machinery. Those duties which until now could reach 22½ per cent are now set at 15 per cent for the countries enjoying the most favoured nation status and at 2½ per cent for those enjoying the British preferential tariff. All those tariffs which varied so much previously have been reduced to a single tariff of 15 per cent.

It will be recalled that previously Canadian machinery producers had to prove that they were in a position to meet 10 per cent of local consumer needs before getting that protection. They no longer have to prove that; now, once again, they are automatically protected, and by a single tariff.

The second aspect of that program is a provision allowing for the remission of customs duties by the governor in council, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Industry, when such machinery is not made by Canadian producers and such remission is in the public interest. That is, I think, a happy compromise between the interests of the buyer-importer, that is the man who needs the machinery to produce other things, and the interests of the Canadian machinery producers.

It is impossible, in fact, to produce in Canada all the equipment needed by our industry. The needs are too varied and very often machinery producers in other countries have developed special machines and it would not be very economic for us to try to compete. Therefore, that equipment not produced in Canada enters the country duty free —because of that program and in the best interest of the buyer, the Canadian industrialist and also, I think, the Canadian public.

On the other hand, if a Canadian company produces that type of machinery, its market is reasonably well protected. I feel this is an excellent compromise between the interests of the manufacturer, who needs equipment and must pay as little as possible for it, and those of the Canadian machinery producer. That is the compromise the legislation I have mentioned has put into effect.

The program applies to approximately 60 per cent of the $700 million worth of annual imports in that field. One can see therefore that the program will cost the receiver general, in losses, roughly $45 million a year. I feel everyone will admit that this is an excellent piece of legislation.

I should also like to say a few words on the important program on productivity in the defence material or military equipment industry. That program takes in two others: the defence export development program set up in 1964, and the defence industries plant modernization program set up in 1959. You will find those estimates under votes 5 and L75.

The defence industry production program has four objectives:

First, to reduce the purchase price of military material purchased by the Canadian Department of National Defence for the use of the Canadian army.

Second, to develop, in Canada, an industrial capacity in the field of military equipment, with a view to its benefiting from the international agreements between Canada and its allies in the sharing of military equipment production contracts. As you know, there are agreements between Canada and the States, Canada and England and others the purpose of which is to enable the producers in each one of those countries to benefit from the defence contracts in the other countries.

Those then are the two first aims but it seems that the others are at least as important.

Third, to benefit from the advantages of highly advanced modern technology and administrative techniques, usually inherent in military research and production which are often in the very forefront of the technological and business management development. The program aims directly to allow Canadian industrial sectors to benefit from this progress.

Fourth, to increase progressively civil applications that are directly related to military production and sometimes depend upon it. I believe all members know to what extent progress in the industrial civil field is closely related to the one in the militry equipment field. One very seldom sees an ultra-modern product, ahead of its time in the industrial field, that has not been influenced by defence contracts distributed in Canada or in other countries; this is due to the close relations existing nowadays between the military and civil areas of industrial development. We may not like it, we may deplore it, but it is a fact, if not unavoidable, at least undeniable.

Under such a program, Mr. Chairman, government aid is granted to that industry to enable it to obtain, before any preliminary technical work, the necessary equipment for the production of new products designed in Canada for the world markets.

[English]

Among the projects that have received assistance are communications and aircraft navigation systems, gas turbine engines for aircraft, flight safety and simulation equipment, information display facilities, and so on. Since its inception 165 projects have been supported under this program. Expenditures today amount to $148 million. Of the projects supported, some 120 costing $99 million have been completed and are achieving sales. The value of sales resulting from these is expected to reach $2.4 billion during the sales life of the products. There obviously have been a few failures, but there have been a number of success stories in these cases of assistance given by the federal government for the development of the defence industry.

I would have liked to say more about industrial research and development, but the time is getting short. In this field the department has three major programs.

The first is the industrial research institutes program. In December, 1966, the department introduced a plan to assist Canadian universities in establishing and administering industrial research institutes. The basic aim is to draw on university staff and facilities to help alleviate the shortage of scientific and technical resources available to industry as a whole and to provide scientific services to smaller firms which cannot afford to maintain and staff their own research facilities. Grants to four Canadian universities totalling about $475,000 had been approved under the program by the end of the year. For this year we are asking $240,000.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The next program is more important at least in financial terms. It is called the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act. The initials are IRDIA. That is a name I would not give to my daughter but it describes well, the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act. This act, dated June 1967, has been providing general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada. Under section 70 of the federal Income Tax Act an allowance can be made for deduction of all expenditures of a current and capital nature made for scientific research. Over and above that, under IRDIA, Canadian Corporations are also entitled to apply to the department for a cash grant or for a credit against federal income tax liabilities amounting to 25 per cent of all their capital expenditures for scientific research and development in Canada, and 25 per cent of the increase in their current expenditures in Canada for scientific research and development over the average of such expenditures in the preceding five years.

Corporations must undertake to exploit the results of their research and development work in Canada and must be free to market products resulting from their research and development to all countries in the world. As of today, December 2, 728 applications for grants totalling $44,500,000 have been received. A total of 318 applications to the value of $8 million have been approved, and we have $31.3 million in the vote for 1968-69.

The last of these programs for industrial research is PAIT, program for the advancement of industrial technology. Under this program the department underwrites the development of new or improved products or processes which involve a significant advance in technology and which offer good prospects for commercial exploitation. The department pays 50 per cent of the development costs. If the project is successful there is an obligation for repayment, but if it is a failure no such obligation exists.

Forty new development projects estimated to cost $8 million were approved in 1968, bringing the total number of projects supported under the program since its inauguration to 160 valued at $44 million.

One interesting detail is that several companies which have successfully completed projects have begun to repay the department's contribution. Another interesting detail is that 22 of these projects were successfully completed. Their cost was $1,400,000 and the sales potential is $95 million in five years. So, for an investment of $1,400,000 we will have a sales potential for these Canadian goods of $95 million. The benefit ratio is rather extraordinary. I cannot say they are all like that, but a good number of them have been.

[Translation]

I should like to conclude my remarks by taking a minute or two to talk about industrial design. The improvement of industrial design, or industrial aesthetics, if you prefer, is one of the most important ways there are to make Canadian products more competitive.

To this end, the department has set up several programs of assistance to industry and of consumer information. A sum of $678,430 will be allocated to those programs in 1968-69. I shall mention only some of those programs.

There is the "Canada-Design 67". I should perhaps say first of all that the word "design" is accepted, even in French. This program was undertaken in 1965 in order to promote the manufacturing of Canadian products which could be used for centennial projects. This allowed reference lists on the aesthetic merits of the various products to be drawn up for the use of those who planned the centennial projects.

"Canada-Design 67" catalogues were distributed to many architects, contractors and buyers, as well as to retail salesmen and businessmen, both in Canada and abroad.

In order to stimulate further the sale of these products, a series of Design 67 exhibitions were organized in various centres in Canada and they attracted more than 100,000 visitors. The products which attracted the most attention were also widely publicized in Canadian and foreign newspapers.

During the whole of Expo 67 the Department made a study of products especially conceived for our universal exhibition in order to select those which could best lend themselves to commercial production. This project goes under the name "Design Expo 67." 150 products were selected as worthy of commercial promotion, and catalogues were prepared containing photographs, the name of the manufacturer, prices and other information concerning these products.

The department organized two design competitions, the costs being shared with industrialist associations. The object was to recognize the achievements of Canadian designers by offering prizes to the best works, and publicity to their authors. The Design Canada structural steel competition, designed to reward the authors of remarkable achievements in an original application of structural steel to the construction of buildings and bridges, attracted 62 competitors.

There was another competition for concrete works. I have a long list, Mr. Chairman, but I will spare the details to the house.

The year 1967 has seen the outcome of an important project: the opening of a new Design Canada Centre at Place Bonaventure, in Montreal. Here again, the purpose is to improve aesthetic qualities of products made in Quebec in particular, and in Canada in general. Furthermore, the Toronto Design Canada Centre is stirring an ever-increasing interest among the public; 84,786 people visited it this year as against 46,614 last year. Nine specialized exhibitions have been set up there.

Before closing, I should like to mention the Design Canada service. As one can see, Mr. Chairman, I am trying to advertise a little these various sectors of my department which have obvious merits. It is a consulting service intended for Canadian industrialists so that they may collect material on matters of design. The Design Canada service includes a reference library, books, periodicals, technical movements, and a repertory of Canadian industrial designers which includes information on the members of the profession and the specialized services in this field.

In the field of design, Mr. Speaker, I have been and I continue to be particularly interested since, in my opinion, if Canadian products do not compete with foreign products as to appearance, in this sector, that is, if they are sturdy and well-made, but inelegant and unattractive, tremendous opportunities for sales, and for exports in particular, will certainly be missed.

These are, Mr. Speaker, some comments on the activities of my department. I could say a lot more but I shall provide now my hon. colleagues with the opportunity to give me some advice.

[English]

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, we appreciate the minister's introductory remarks in respect of the estimates of the Department of Industry, but I would much rather he had taken the time to tell us whether there is a Department of Industry, whether his department is industry and trade and commerce, or just exactly where we are in this program of amalgamation or unification. Surely we are out of order to discuss the estimates of the department of industry and trade and commerce because such a department does not exist. We in this house have not passed legislation setting up this department.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, Your Honour was very clear in pointing out at my request that we were discussing the estimates of the Department of Industry.

Mr. Hales: I should like to ask the minister whether the Department of Industry is now the department of industry and trade and commerce?

Mr. Pepin: No, we are concerned now only with the Department of Industry.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Hales: I am still confused. I understand that the Department of Industry has been dismantled and is in the process of being amalgamated with trade and commerce. We have even gone so far as to call it the department of industry, trade and commerce in the blue book of estimates. I am confused on this issue. The minister says we are discussing the estimates of the Department of Industry. This department is being amalgamated with the Department of Trade and Commerce, and the Department of Trade and Commerce has moved from its original building on Wellington Street to the building which housed the Department of Industry. This is the situation as I understand it.

There is great confusion amongst the staff of the two departments. They do not know for whom they work. They do not know how/or where they are being fitted into the new department or program. I also hear there is a problem in fitting in some of the officials who were hired by the Department of Industry at much higher salaries than the prevailing salaries in the Department of Trade and Commerce. When you try to fit such a person into a lower pay schedule it creates a problem which I can quite easily understand.

In 1963 we on this side of the house gave the government of the day our views on setting up a department of industry. We said we thought it was folly and foolish to do so. We thought that the existing Department of Trade and Commerce could do anything the Department of Industry would endeavour to do. We were told that it would not be an expensive operation, that the government would take staff from the Department of Defence Production and the Department of Trade and Commerce and move them to the Department of Industry. However, when you look back on the whole program you see it has been nothing but a great big bill of expense. It has been a tremendous expense to the Canadian taxpayer.

The Department of Industry started in 1963-64 with a staff of 274. The next year that staff jumped to 786, an increase of 512 employees or 200 per cent. That is staff alone. With regard to money, in 1968 the estimates which this house approved totalled $117,586,-000 to operate the Department of Industry. Now it is all being shattered, broken up and moved over to trade and commerce and all this money has gone down the drain. All this could have been saved by just adding to the department of trade and commerce the word "industry" and the taxpayers of this country would have been saved a great deal of money. But they have to pay the tune because the government would not listen to the advice of the Conservative opposition. Be that as it may, that is what happened and we must move on from there. I hope that the house will soon be advised how this amalgamation is proceeding and what savings will be made as a result of amalgamating industry and trade and commerce.

I will be very brief in my remarks, Mr. Chairman. The minister made many very interesting observations about the Canada-U.S. Auto pact. I thank him for that. He gave us a great many statistics. I know he does not like statistics any more than I do. Nevertheless he had them prepared for him and gave them to us. They will be useful to look back on and read at our leisure. The minister also gave us all the highlights of the Canada-U.S. car pact, but I am still of the opinion I had when the pact was arrived at, namely, that the one fundamental point is that if you lose your economic birthright you lose your political birthright. By giving all these advantages to American subsidiaries in Canada we are handing them our political birthright. I think this is as true today as it was when the pact was instituted.

Another thing the minister and the government will have to sell to the Canadian public before this pact is a success is that the Canadian purchaser can buy a made in Canada automobile at the same price as his American cousin who lives in, say, Detroit. A car is made in Oakville, Canada, and shipped to Detroit, and an American can buy the same car for $200 or $300 less than a Canadian. When Canadians can purchase cars made in this country at the same price as Americans can, we will have proved to Canadian taxpayers that this program has been partially worth while and that they share the so-called benefit which the minister outlined this afternoon.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, we must not forget that at the time the pact was introduced we gave to the car manufacturers over $50 million in tariffs which we had previously collected. We gave this amount of money to the car manufacturers and allowed them to sell Canadian made cars in the United States for less money than we in Canada can buy them. When the Canadian purchaser of an automobile has the same benefit, the minister will have proven that the pact has been somewhat successful.

With the U.S.-Canada car pact came some very good things. I said at the time that there were two sides to every coin and there would be some good and some bad points to the pact. The minister has told us only about the good points this afternoon. He did not say it was responsible for bringing into Canada parity of wages not only in this industry but in many other industries in Canada to which it has spread. There will be many more industries affected as time goes on. The minister did not tell us about the growing number of small industries that have been put out of business. He did not tell us that the large industries have been getting larger and the small ones getting smaller to the point where they had been forced out of business.

Members of the house who had in their ridings small manufacturers of car parts will tell you that these businesses have disappeared. The farther you go from the border, the more you will find they have disappeared. They have been replaced by larger industries which are in turn subsidiaries of American companies. This means there is more control by the United States of the Canadian economy. We have lost more of our political strength when we should be maintaining or regaining it. However, this was the government's decision and we just hope for the best. I might have missed some of the statistics the minister gave, but I think he dwelt more on export figures than on imports. We must remember that a great many cars and trucks have been imported into Canada, which fact offsets many of our exports.

However, Mr. Chairman, we are not here to debate the Canada-U.S. car pact but to study the estimates of the once Department of Industry. The minister says this department still exists. I propose to leave time for hon. members to deal with these estimates. Before we leave the matter of the amalgamation of departments and the setting up of new departments may I tell the committee that I know of a person who came to Ottawa to discuss a problem with the Department of Industry because he believed that department was concerned in his problem. He went to the Department of Industry and they told him it was not their problem and he should go to the Department of Trade and Commerce. He went to the Department of Trade and Commerce and was advised that it was really a problem for the Department of Industry. Finally the problem was settled by the Department of Labour. This man spent the greatest part of a day travelling between departments before he found the right one to deal with his problem. This illustrates the state of confusion that exists in these departments. I hope the situation will be ironed out before too long and that when a manufacturer comes to Ottawa with a problem he will be able to go to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and find the answer there.

The former minister, now President of the Treasury Board, spent a great deal of time in the house telling us what a wonderful department the Department of Industry was going to be. Last year he said that most of the time had been spent in getting staff and adopting policies and programs, but the whole idea was to increase productivity in Canada. I think it is fair to say that productivity in Canada has not increased to the same extent as it has in other countries of the world. Even with all this expenditure on hiring of experts in the field, the department still cannot come forward and say that productivity has increased in Canada at the same rate as in other countries. This department, therefore, has not produced the results we were told it would in the field of industry.

We have seen many examples of duplication and overlapping. The Department of Industry has sent trade missions abroad and they have bumped into trade missions from the Department of Trade and Commerce. I grant you that they were there on different missions but there was some overlapping. These trade missions were nice junkets for a lot of people but there was a lot of overlapping and expense. The Department of Industry started interfering with the Department of Agriculture by getting into the blueberry business in Nova Scotia. This was the business of the Department of Agriculture, but they got into it. The Department of Industry got mixed up with other departments such as the Department of Labour and the Department of Trade and Commerce. The whole situation became confused.

I am told that now the Department of Industry will be amalgamated with the Department of Trade and Commerce and these difficulties will be overcome. I hope that the amalgamated staff of the department of industry, trade and commerce will be no larger than it is now so that a lot of this waste and extravagance will be eliminated. I should mention, too, that I feel the programs under PAIT and the general assistance loan in connection with the Kennedy round have been very good ideas. I believe a lot of assistance has been given to industry in connection with their various problems in this field. The department has done a good job in this area but that job could have been done by the Department of Trade and Commerce; we did not need the Department of Industry.

The minister did not say anything about the matter of grants which, according to the blue book, this year total almost $2 million for this department. A lot of these grants are for science research. Where are we going with these grants in the field of science? Why is aid being given by this department instead of through the science secretariat or council which directs all government science research? There is a great amount overlapping in the giving of grants to various universities, grants to this and that in the field of science. I feel these grants should be handled by a central board.

The minister did not mention the establishment of a national standards association. I happened to read in the Ottawa Journal for October 11 that the government was moving to set standards for goods. The article stated the federal government was preparing legislation to set up a council for the national coordination of standards in sizes, shapes and the general performance of Canadian goods. I understand that this council has been practically set up so far as staff are concerned and is functioning. One of these days the minister will come to the house and ask us to pass legislation to set up this council; yet it is already in operation. The article states also that officials hope the council will be off the ground within 12 months, but this will depend on getting legislation put before parliament early in 1969. Why put the cart before the horse? Why does the government not come to the house to get legislation passed and thus ascertain whether or not we approve of a national standards council for goods? If the house agrees, that is fine and the government can go ahead and set up this agency. However, the government should not ask us for $80,000 in the estimates to set up this council and then come back and ask us to pass legislation approving it.

We have been through this business so often. We have had instant departments and ministers. I do not mind instant coffee or instant tea but I do not like these instant departments that are set up. We have had other examples of this procedure. In fact, we are discussing estimates which appear in the estimate book under the heading "Department of Industry and Trade and Commerce", but there is no such department at the moment. I say to the minister and members of the government that they should introduce legislation so that we can discuss it, and if we are satisfied we will pass it. Then we will give the government the money to run the department. Now the government asks for the money to run the show and then comes back to ask us if it is all right.

The same thing was done by the department of manpower in connection with the adult training program. The program was in operation throughout the country before we passed the bill establishing it. I know I am rather off the subject when I mention manpower and adult training, but all hon. members know what a great shemozzle that was in this country. There still is a great deal of confusion connected with this training program. With these few observations I will conclude my remarks. No doubt there will be many questions to be asked as we consider these estimates.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, as I listened to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce extol the virtues of the Canada-United States auto pact I was reminded of the words of the former minister of industry when he proposed the plan. It seemed to me that, although this minister is a French Canadian and the former minister is an English Canadian, really the more things change in a Liberal government the more they are the same. We have had an explanation of this plan which reminded me of the famous maxim of Mr. Charles Wilson when he was secretary of defence for the United States. Mr. Wilson had been president of the General Motors Corporation. On one occasion he said, "what is good for G.M. is good for the American people". As I listened to the minister I could not help but think that the minister really had the same view, that what is good for the auto companies of Canada must be good for the Canadian people. Certainly that is not entirely true.

I remind the minister and members of the house that the purpose of the auto pact was to provide free trade, not for you, Mr. Chairman, or for me or other buyers of automobiles in Canada but for the giant automobile companies in the United States and their mouse partners in Canada. It enabled them to rationalize their production to the extent that they could exchange automobiles and automobile parts without paying the customary duty. What the minister did not tell us this afternoon was that the sweetener that the Canadian people gave these poor automobile companies like General Motors, Ford and Chrysler, who between them own billions of dollars worth of assets in the United States, Canada and other countries in the world, was $50 million in tax revenue as an inducement to enter this pact.

When the pact was first proposed the then minister told the Canadian people that one of the results of the pact would be a reduction in automobile prices in Canada to the extent that the price in Canada would approximate that paid in the United States for the same automobile. For many years we were told that automobile prices in Canada had to be substantially higher than prices in the United States because the market in Canada was much smaller, the production run for individual models was smaller, and therefore productivity was lower and automobiles cost more. The minister has already said that as a result of the pact the industry has been rationalized to a large extent and the number of models manufactured in Canadian factories has been cut sharply. There is a flow from Canada to the United States which has made productivity in both Canada and the U.S. increase.

When he introduced this pact the former minister of industry, now President of the Treasury Board, in a statement on January 15, 1965, dealing with the effect of the pact on the cost of automobiles had this to say:

> Of significance for the Canadian consumer is the fact that over several years, the plan should progressively make possible increased efficiency and reduced costs. Indeed, this is one of the principal objectives of the entire program. In line with the attainment of lower costs of production, it is to be anticipated, as the program develops, that the forces of competition will gradually result in savings for Canadian consumers in the form of a narrowing differential between Canadian and United States prices for motor vehicles and components.

It was not only the opposition members of parliament who took the minister seriously, Mr. Chairman. The Vancouver Sun, a newspaper that members from British Columbia will know better than I to be a supporter of the Liberal party, published an editorial in its edition of April 14, 1965, from which I should like to place on record one or two sentences:

> Among other things, Mr. Walter Gordon's forthcoming budget will have to defend the Canadian-American free trade deal in automotive products. It can be easily defended if it means that automobile prices will soon fall. If they don't, the deal is quite indefensible.

Then the Winnipeg Free Press, published in my own city, made this comment in its issue of April 17, 1965.

> A much larger question now faces the Canadian government as a result of the free trade deal. It is whether this ostensibly constructive agreement will do any good for the Canadian consumer or whether it will benefit only a few rich automobile manufacturers.

These comments were made two and a half years ago, Mr. Chairman. What is the position today? The hon. member for Wellington who has just resumed his seat referred to the fact that even making allowance for the price differential between Canada and the United States and the different government taxes, both federal and provincial, cars produced in Oakville and sold in Buffalo are cheaper than the same models sold in Toronto. Therefore we must ask ourselves how this is possible. Either the Ford Motor Company is selling in Buffalo cars produced at Oakville at a loss—and I do not think that even the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce believes that—or the price the company charges in Canada for its products is exorbitant and its profits are similarly exorbitant.

The automobile companies of Canada, which are almost exclusively U.S. owned, have been very careful not to reveal the profits they make in Canada. Canadian governments have been too stupid to pass legislation that would require the automobile companies, like any other company in Canada, to issue annual statements detailing their turnover, profits, capital investments and so on. Several years ago both the Chrysler Corporation and American Motors did submit figures, not to the Canadian government but to the United States securities and exchange commission at a time when the companies were trying to float a new loan in the United States. These figures indicated that the net profit amounted to 30 per cent on invested capital per year. Although the figures applied to those particular years, that is probably their proportion of profit every year.

The Toronto Globe and Mail, which is not a very radical newspaper but is very widely read and respected in the business community of Canada, had this to say about the profits of automobile manufacturers in a report on January 19, 1965:

> According to one estimate, the average annual profit of the auto manufacturers often has run to around 30 per cent of their net worth, that is the total amount of their invested capital, compared with a more normal 10 to 15 per cent return in other industries.
> While the balance sheets of most of the major producers are closed to public scrutiny, one federal official estimated that in a good year the profit earned by one of the leading Canadian auto producers might run as high as 80 to 90 per cent of invested capital.

This calculation is made by the writer of this article in the Toronto Globe and Mail and I think it merits the minister's study.

Having made these comments about the prices of Canadian automobiles failing to come down and about what I consider to be the exorbitant profits made by the automobile manufacturing companies, I should like to deal for a moment with some of the good things that the minister had to say about the results of the auto pact. I agree with him that there has been a large increase in the production of automobiles in Canada, and this is good. The trade imbalance has been reduced from $683 million in 1966 to $350 million. Those are the figures I understood the minister to give when he spoke earlier and I jotted them down. The average level of employment has increased from about 60,000 workers in this country to 80,000. An increase of 20,000 is substantial and this too is all to the good. Productivity has already increased, as I have said. The minister estimates that the gap in productivity between the United States and Canada has been reduced to 20 per cent.

The minister went on to say that a program of loans has been worked out for automobile parts manufacturers. As I noted his statement, 68 loans to a value of $55 million have been made to automobile parts manufacturers. That is good. We have also been told that automobile manufacturers have been permitted to benefit, to the tune of several million dollars, by tariff arrangements with respect to machinery that is not made in Canada. That also is good. Nevertheless the difficulties with regard to this plan which were discussed in 1965 are still there. Those difficulties were spoken about eloquently last week during the estimates of the Minister of Labour by the hon. members for Essex East and Essex West, who represent the automobile workers of Windsor and who know more about these problems than I do, coming from Winnipeg.

Without going over ground that has previously been gone over, may I commend to the hon. member for Essex East a reading of Hansard for the month of May, 1965. It will be seen by so doing that a number of hon. members, of whom I was one, predicted then to the minister responsible for industry precisely what would happen. We said that although productivity would go up this would prove of little consolation to workers who might be laid off. Right now about 1,000 Ford workers have been laid off.

Mr. Pepin: Temporarily.

Mr. Orlikow: It is very fine for the minister, the hon. member for Essex East, for me and everyone else here to be philosophical and say this is a temporary lay-off. After all, we are paid every month as long as we remain members of parliament. Ford workers who have been laid off for the next 18 months will not be paid—

Mr. Pepin: They get 95 per cent of their income, do they not?

An hon. Member: All of them?

Mr. Orlikow: I think the minister will find that only those workers who have worked with the company for some period of time will benefit to that extent. A substantial number of the people who have been laid off, in fact, practically all, are new employees who will obtain little benefit from the company's supplementary benefits. The minister ought to read the speeches of the hon. member for Essex East who told us precisely what would happen. I say that what has happened ought not to have happened. When the plan was drafted the union representing the Canadian automobile workers did not oppose it. In fact, the union endorsed and welcomed the plan and called on the government to take precautionary steps to ensure that the workers would receive the kind of sweet, loving attention which the government gave to the employers. We looked after the employers in this field by giving them what amounted to a $50 million subsidy under new tariff arrangements.

When the employers are caught in a squeeze because of any rationalization brought about by the automobile plan, they are looked after. Yet, as the union said in 1965, the government simply refuses to make a similar kind of provision for the employees. The government knew what would happen because the unions warned it. The minister need only look at the correspondence that two former ministers of labour, Mr. Nicholson and the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration, have had on the subject to see that this is so. The unions proposed a series of measures to protect workers who would be caught in the squeeze.

Credit must be given where credit is owing, and I must say that the minister was interested in this matter. The deputy minister of labour, Dr. Hawthorne, was most interested in the union's proposals. Why did the government not go ahead with those proposals? I will tell you why, Mr. Chairman. Because the companies refused to co-operate—that's why —and because the government did not have the courage to bring in legislation implementing the union's proposals and the proposals made by Mr. Justice Freedman.

Although I was not here last week when the estimates of the Department of Labour were before the house I read the minister's speech and I commend him for it. After the speeches we had from the former minister of labour, last week's speech certainly sounded wonderful. All the same, two years have elapsed since Mr. Justice Freedman handed down his report. How long must we wait before the suggestions of the report are implemented in legislation? The former minister did not think it was necessary to pass legislation in this field, believing that the companies, out of the goodness of their hearts, would adopt the basic principles of the Freedman report through collective bargaining. Of course, that has not happened. How many legal or illegal stoppages must we undergo before the government brings in legislation to implement the suggestions of the Freedman report?

Now we are told that we must wait for the Woods commission to make its report. When will that be? If the Woods commission makes no special recommendations about the basic principles of the Freedman report, must we wait for the findings of another committee or another commission? We are dealing with human lives and, at the moment, with 1,000 jobs. The Ford Motor Company at Windsor has acted in a way no different from the way thousands of other Canadian corporate employers have acted.

Our labour legislation says that except where there is a special clause in a labour-management agreement that prohibits a company from acting in a certain manner, a company has the right to manage its own affairs. The corollary to all this is that when a company makes a change such as is now contemplated while an agreement is in force the union by law is precluded from striking. While an agreement between the union and the company is in force the union is estopped from doing anything about the sort of change we see here. I can only say that had the government listened to what the unions said in 1965, had it set up the kind of labour-management discussions that was then suggested and had it followed through with the legislation that was proposed, this kind of thing would not have happened. The government must have known what would happen if it did not listen.

I concur with the remarks of the hon. member for Essex East who said that it is a disgrace in 1968 for the Ford Motor Company, which has tremendous assets, not to give its employees more than a week's notice that they are to be laid off for a year or 18 months. It is more than a disgrace it is an insult to the kind of society in which we live. I wish to put on the record what the union said to the minister concerned and to the government of Canada in 1965. On January 16, 1965 the international president of the United Automobile Workers, Mr. Walter Reuther, said:

> We in the U.A.W. are pleased that an agreement has been worked out by the U.S. and Canadian governments to provide for a common market in automobiles and parts.
> We have long favoured trade liberalization and expansion and we have advocated for many years the creation of such a common market.
> We are confident that a rational division of labour in the production of autos and parts as between the United States and Canada will prove to be in the best interests of the economies, the consumers and the workers of both countries.

Rather than being a hard-headed labour leader, it seems to me Mr. Reuther was being pretty idealistic, and in retrospect somewhat naïve, I suppose. Certainly the consumers of automobiles in Canada have not derived any benefit from this fact during the last two and a half years. Mr. Reuther went on to say:

> The efficiencies resulting from such a division of labour will reduce production costs, particularly in Canada where low volume has prevented full and effective use of mass production techniques. The industry is morally obligated to pass these cost savings on to consumers by way of lower prices and thus expand sales and production.

They have, without doubt, expanded sales and production. Mr. Reuther went on:

> Lower prices would mean increased employment in both countries for auto workers as well as for workers in other industries which supply materials, parts and components used in auto factories.

Later he added:

> In order to achieve the more rational division of labour made possible by the agreement, there will inevitably be some adjustment in production within and between both countries. This could result in hardships and dislocation for some groups of auto workers and their families unless effective steps are taken to tide them over the transition period.
> We call upon both governments to assure that adequate protection will be provided for those who would otherwise be adversely affected by the agreement. It would be wholly improper for the auto corporations and car consumers to enjoy the benefits of the agreement while auto workers and their families bear the burden and sacrifices resulting from it.

We are now able to see what has happened. The consumers have got nothing. The auto workers who are actually in employment are doing fine. But those who are being put out of work, like the 1,000 employees of the Ford Motor Company at Windsor, are experiencing the bad effects of this rationalization.

The auto workers went on to spell out in detail what the government and the industry should do to protect workers from the kind of thing which has been happening during the past month at the Ford plant. Mr. George Burt, at that time the Canadian director of the U.A.W., said in his report to the Canadian U.A.W. council in March of 1965:

> Up to this point, to our knowledge, neither the Department of Industry which developed this "free trade" program, nor the Department of Labour which is responsible for the manpower and employment aspects of the program, have made any study whatever of the impact of this program on Canadian workers' jobs and incomes. It is therefore absolutely essential that we should be in a position to inform Mr. Drury and Mr. MacEachen of what is taking place under this program as soon as that information becomes available so that we can demand that action be taken, and if it is not, then those that speak for us in the House of Commons in Ottawa can demand to know of the government why the necessary action has not been taken.

Well, we have been asking this government for two and a half years to take action and, as I have indicated, nothing has been done. When we discussed this matter two and a half years ago the hon. member for Essex West, as he then was, scoffed at these pleas. He said we were making mountains out of molehills and anticipating difficulties which would not arise. I notice that the hon. member made a very different speech last week from the one he made in May, 1965. He has learned that we were right and that the auto workers' union was right in predicting what would happen.

The United Auto Workers' union sent a memorandum to the minister of labour early in 1965 spelling out the six steps which it believed the government should endorse so as to cushion the shock of the kind of dislocation which is now taking place. I should like to put this memorandum on record again in the hope that the government and the present minister will have learned something from experience. Even though the implementation of the proposals at this date would be late in coming, it is better to be late than to be altogether wrong. Here is what was proposed in the memorandum sent to the then minister of labour:

1. Preferential Hiring: to ensure that workers who lose their jobs as a result of the program will be given every possible assistance to remain in the industry and not lose seniority, pension, vacation and other credits, as well as the level of wages they had achieved in the industry.

2. An earnings-related adjustment benefit payable during the period of transfer from one job to another or during the period of retraining.

3. Transfer Allowance: covering the cost of transportation of the displaced worker and his family as well as his furnishings to a new location after he is re-employed, or to a training centre away from home.

4. Age Discrimination: Federal government action to end hiring practices in the industry so that older workers who may be displaced will not be refused employment with auto producers whose work force is expanding as a result of the free trade program.

5. Advance Notice: Federal government initiative to obtain management co-operation in having advance notice of major changes in the levels of employment in the auto and auto parts industry in order to minimize the effects of dislocation.

6. Supplementary pension benefits payable to older displaced auto workers who wish to retire at their own option rather than to remain in the industry if they regard themselves as unable to take advantage of retraining.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder whether I could be given just a minute or two in which to finish my speech?

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give the hon. member permission to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: The specific proposals put forward by Mr. Burt at that time on behalf of the workers in the auto industry look like a charter of human rights. Had the government taken action at that time, the present hardship and dislocation might have been avoided. I submit that the government could have done one of two things. First, it could have used the power it had at that time with the companies. After all, the government could have refused to go ahead with the auto pact, an arrangement which would obviously bring definite advantages to the companies. Alternatively, the government might have passed legislation to protect the rights of the workers. Instead, the government chose to ignore the pleas made on behalf of those employed in the industry, so today we are facing a serious problem at Ford in Windsor. Tomorrow it may arise in Oshawa, as it did several years ago. Next month or next year it may arise in Oakville, and so on down the line.

• (5:20 p.m.)

If the government really believes in the just society, about which the Prime Minister has spoken so often and so eloquently, it ought to translate such glib phrases and slogans into concrete action, into legislation, into direction to the automobile companies whereby the benefits of the agreement worked out by the Department of Industry will give the workers the same kind of protection as the government's programs now give to the automobile manufacturers, a group of companies which needs less assistance from the government of Canada than any other group of manufacturers in the country. This agreement has had a very profound effect on the Canadian economy as a whole and some pretty drastic effects on individual automobile workers.

The agreement has been in effect for almost three years. Unless the government is prepared to do as I suggest I can only conclude, and I am sure the 380 workers already laid off at the Ford company and the 700 more who will be laid off during the next few months can only conclude, that the just society was just an election gimmick on the part of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chairman, we have heard various gloomy words from the other side of the chamber. I would like to emphasize some of the more positive aspects of the Kennedy round tariff reductions which will have a decisive and favourable effect on the Canadian economy. The successful conclusion of these negotiations has provided Canada with new access to world markets for a much wider range of Canadian products than was the case in the past, including many manufactured goods. These new opportunities for increasing the sale of our products abroad have made it possible for Canadian industry to realize some of the economies of volume production and greater specialization which other countries enjoyed in the past. I think these factors will be very important to our country too.

The improved access to export markets is a most important factor in shaping our economy to meet the competitive demands of the future. I think we all know that this is inevitable in a country such as ours which devotes about 20 per cent of its production to exports.

The Kennedy round was the most extensive trade and tariff negotiation ever undertaken under the auspices of the GATT. The negotiations covered all classes of products and dealt not only with tariffs but also with non-tariff barriers. To give some idea of the scope of the negotiations, there were more than 50 countries participating in them, including all the major trading countries and some 30 of the so-called developing countries.

The major participating countries are making tariff cuts on 70 per cent of their dutiable industrial imports, of which some two-thirds will be reductions of 50 per cent or more. Under the most favoured nation principle of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade these concessions are automatically and unconditionally being extended to all GATT members.

The most important long term benefits for the Canadian economy are the across the board reductions being made by the principal industrial countries in the manufactured goods sector. The 50 per cent reductions being made for a wide range of goods in this area will result in final rates of 10 per cent or less for a very wide range of manufactured products.

Canada is a relatively small supplier of manufactured goods on the world markets. Therefore we see that already there has been a marked growth in Canadian exports of fully manufactured products in recent years. As a matter of fact exports of such products have risen from 14 per cent to 34 per cent of the total Canadian export trade. To look at this in another way, exports of fully manufactured goods have grown at a rate nearly five times faster than that of total exports.

While the Kennedy round tariff reductions will substantially assist in expanding trade in products now being exported, they will also encourage Canadian producers to look into the possibilities of exporting goods which hitherto may have sold only in domestic markets. This twofold expandion of trade is important for several reasons. While our traditional resource-based industries will remain an important factor in our export trade, the increase in trade in these products would not provide for the amount of expansion required in our over-all trade to sustain our economy at viable levels. Therefore we must concentrate on the manufactured goods sector, which is the fastest growing sector in world trade. Expansion in this sector and in the service industries will have to provide the employment opportunities for our rapidly growing labour force.

[Translation]

I would now like, Mr. Chairman, to make a few brief remarks about the Kennedy round as a whole. Those negotiations are the sixth of the great tariff negotiations which took place under GATT since its interim application in 1947. They were also the most important trade negotiations held until then—if one considers the number of participating countries, the value of the trade operations that will be affected by those agreements and the consequences of the tariff reductions.

The negotiations covered all types of industrial and agricultural products and dealt not only with customs tariffs but also with some non-tariff problems. It was agreed that, as much as possible, and subject to general reciprocity, the tariff negotiations would tend to realize uniform or general linear reductions of 50 per cent.

Obviously, Mr. Chairman, the advantages arising from the tremendous scope of the Kennedy Round have a decisive and lasting effect on Canadian exporters as a whole. As the export trade accounts for—as I just said in English—20 per cent of the total Canadian production, these negociations will have a great impact on the whole economy, provided the Canadian export industry is in a position to avail itself of the opportunities offered in the coming years.

It is in the manufactured goods sector that the tariff reductions are most striking and most important. It is the sector that offers the greatest possibilities for the expansion of the export trade. The adjustment assistance program will be available for a specialization and a restructuration of the Canadian industry which will be essential if manufactured goods are benefit by an easier access to export markets.

Mr. Chairman, may I refer for a few moments to that program. Maybe we have heard too much about what is wrong with the Kennedy Round, and not enough about what we have done here, in Canada, to promote the export of products covered by the Kennedy Round.

Mr. Chairman, the adjustment program comprises three parts.

First, the underwriting by the government of an important part of the risk of loss which the industrial assistance loans granted by private lenders involves; secondly, in exceptional cases, direct loans granted by the government to companies disadvantaged or in danger to be seriously disadvantaged because of the reductions of the Canadian tariff and which cannot get underwritten adjustment loans; and thirdly, technical assistance to prepare adjustment programs.

[English]

I think that this program, if accepted by Canadian manufacturing industries, both unions and management, if it is accepted by the banks that are participating, and also by the government, should do much to encourage Canadian exports in this important field. It is my hope, Mr. Chairman, that we will in future be hearing far more about this program, the adjustment assistance program, and perhaps this will be the method whereby we will not view the Kennedy round, as some members of the opposition seem to view it, as something detrimental but rather as a great area of opportunity for the ambitious Canadian exporter.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief. Recent figures issued by the department of industry, trade and commerce show that in 1967 approximately 69,300 persons left the Atlantic provinces while only 63,800 entered those provinces. They illustrate the continual exodus from the maritime provinces to other parts of Canada. We all know, as has been stated many times in this house, that this situation could be cured by a stronger industrial base. I am concerned that in the change-over period from the industrial assistance programs that we now have to the new legislation the applications made by industry will not be processed. I realize that the minister's responsibility is fading out to a certain extent, but I see in the estimates that some of the A.D.I.A. officials are shown as being under the minister.

I should like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the house that we are in a transitional period and, as the new minister of rural and urban development has admitted—I have one of his releases here which I shall not go into—it will be a fairly long time before we have the new legislation and before it takes full effect. I have heard that there are many industries that would be interested in industrial incentives or general assistance of some kind. The Atlantic Development Board, which is the responsibility of another minister, of course, is another agency involved.

I understand there are two or three avenues by which new industry could come to the Atlantic provinces. Whether or not these avenues are satisfactory is a matter I do not wish to go into at this time. However, because of the change-over period which has been referred to by the hon. member for Wellington and the mix-up in the departments I have heard many complaints from industries which wish to obtain assistance whether it is under the old or new plan. There is provision in certain cases for some applications to be received, but I have not heard that these are being satisfactorily processed. I hope that the new minister of rural development will not lose sight of the desperate plight in which industry still finds itself in the Atlantic provinces and that he will see that every application is received and very favourably processed in this change-over period.

We all know the story of how Halifax, Saint John, Dartmouth and Fredericton were excluded under the industrial incentive plan. I realize that an additional measure was introduced to include them, but I do not believe it even had an opportunity to take effect before new legislation was brought in by the minister of rural and urban development. I believe I speak for everybody when I say we hope this works out, that these cities will be given the best treatment and that other cities will be brought in under some new plan that is as good as the old. I bring to the attention of the house that industries in the maritimes, whether small or large, new or not new, are puzzled. They do not know whether their applications should go forward. If they do go forward they certainly are not being processed favourably. I hope the minister will take a moment or two to at least give some guidance to these industries in this regard.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question or two of the minister with regard to item 10, grants approved by the Treasury Board to promote improvements in the manufacture of rapeseed products. What are the size and nature of these grants?

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I believe we are still on vote 1. I think the hon. member is referring to vote 3.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the minister's speech with a great deal of interest. As is appropriate for members of the opposition I shall not waste time in commenting on those matters in respect of which we are in substantial agreement. I look with some interest at the history of the department of industry, trade and commerce. This department has gone through an interesting metamorphosis in terms of organization. First, in 1963 the domestic commerce division was transferred to trade and commerce, and this provided the core for the new department. At that time the government of the day assured us that great objectives could be achieved by the effective co-ordination that would take place in respect of all our industrial affairs by reason of this department with its new core.

Then we had the integration of the department with the Department of Defence Production. Again the benefits of this new reorganization were brought before the house. We were told about the great economies of scale that would be obtained by the close integration of the two departments. However, the brand new marriage did not last very long. We then had the great division of 1966. We heard about the different sections of the department going around competing with each other. Now, once again, they are being integrated into the department of industry, trade and commerce.

Mr. Pepin: The division took place in 1963.

Mr. Broadbent: Now we are waiting for a proper new format with new expectancies in terms of the co-ordination of industry.

I should like to speak on a couple of other matters. One of the disadvantages of following a number of other speakers is that one has the benefit of hearing at least half one's speech made by someone else. Therefore I can assure hon. members that my comments will be quite brief.

I wish to add a few observations to those already made on the subject of the auto pact. The first observation is a very general one but although it is general I do not think it is any less relevant to the auto pact, the automative industry or industry as a whole. I refer to the role of the trade union movement in the actual distribution of power within corporations. In the auto pact negotiations we see a good example of how the people most directly affected can be effectively removed from the decision-making centres in an industry. The auto pact originally was, and in terms of negotiations remains, substantially a product of the federal government negotiators and the representatives of management and industry. I am quite convinced that we would not have experienced what has happened in the past week at Ford Motor in Windsor had the trade union movement been directly involved in the original negotiations which led to the establishment of the auto pact and in the other assessments which have developed in the past few months. The trade union movement, in respect of all sectors of industry rather than just the automotive industry, must have its power substantially increased in all areas in which it is directly affected. This is justice of the most elementary kind. We saw the effects of the absence of this power last week in the unilateral decision made by the directors of Ford.

The second aspect of the automative pact I should like to comment on relates to the issue of price parity. It has been suggested by a number of defenders of the pact that this was one of the goals which in part has been achieved. There can be no doubt about that because we have moved from an average price differential of 8 per cent between United States and Canadian prices in 1964 to 3 per cent, I understand, in the past year. Obviously there has been some real gain in this regard. However, I cannot understand why the Canadian government has refused to make this matter the subject of a contract or law. Why has the Canadian government not insisted that within a certain fixed period of time, perhaps by 1970, automative companies have similar average prices in the two countries? These would not necessarily have to be average retail prices because there are bound to be regional variations vis-à-vis manufacturers' dealers. Surely this could be a matter of contract. I suggest it should be a matter of contract.

We are faced with an ironic situation in that automobiles produced in Canada are sold in the United States at prices lower than those which prevail several hundred yards from the factory which produces them. This situation should not exist on the basis of any economic justification. When the minister again takes part in this discussion on his estimates I hope he will attempt to justify the absence of such a mandatory regulation.

Let me speak briefly about the pricing policies of the automobile industry, divorcing my remarks from the lack of regulation. We have observed constant increases in the prices of automobiles each year which have taken place as a result of some assumed divine right by the owners of this industry to increase prices without economic necessity. There is profit necessity but no other economic necessity. One of the leading automotive industry experts has pointed out—I refer to Ralph Nader—that there is absolutely no relationship between costs and prices in this industry. This is an oligopolistic industry which is probably more powerful in Canada than in any other country. I suggest it is more powerful than many agencies of the federal government. It has increased prices to a greater extent than other industries in similar oligopolistic situations. Without any stretch of the imagination this industry is in such a position in our economy that it can virtually tax the public if members of the public wish to purchase its products. I suggest that such corporations should come under federal government regulations. One way of accomplishing this would be to establish a prices review board or a similar body with the type of responsibilities I have suggested by the N.D.P.

Let me turn now to what the government is doing in the Department of Industry in terms of research and development. Civil oriented programs of the government for the advancement of industrial technology provide substantially fewer benefits than those programs of industries involved in research and development for military purposes. Under the program for the advancement of industrial technology and the new defence development sharing programs the government pays approximately 50 per cent of the cost. Under the former arrangements a firm had to repay the loan, if the enterprise was successful, plus a competitive interest rate. In the case of defence research and development programs no repayment is required.

Under the new arrangements a defence industry embarking on a non-military program is eligible for this kind of defence grant. In other words, we are not only providing more incentives and rewards for industry moving in a military direction but we are now saying to such industry that if it will do research and development in the civilian rather than the military sector of the economy we will provide even more money. Does this not undermine entirely P.A.I.T. the program for advancement in industrial technology? If the benefits are much greater in respect of military-oriented industry, research and development, how will we ever encourage serious research and development in the non-military segments of our industry? I should like the minister to deal with this question at some point.

A recent article by N. H. Lithwick in the Journal of Canadian Studies points out that most of the money used for research and development provided under recent government programs is going into military areas.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Over 50 per cent of the money used for research and development, provided from government funds, is being used for military purposes. Is this something of which Canadians should be proud? Should we, for example, be proud of the fact that in a recent speech to members of the Air Industries Association of Canada the minister said, "Your interests are mine"?

As the minister well knows, the group to which he was speaking is most heavily involved in the defence kind of research and development. I do not want to distort the significance of the minister's comment and am prepared to think that in a sense he was unconscious of the implications of what he said. But as one Canadian it seems to me at least that we are very much in danger of promoting a kind of industrial-military elite in the country, without any conscious motive of being interested in self-perpetuation as a war oriented economy but for very human reasons. Industries involved in this kind of work have millions of dollars at their disposal, their employees earn very high salaries upon which they come to depend, and they have research projects in which they become interested. We could find ourselves in exactly the same kind of situation as the United States, with an economy overwhelmingly dominated by war production and military research projects.

The late President Kennedy made comments about this kind of situation. In fact, one of the main projects of secretary of defence McNamara, had he remained in that position, would have been to do what he could to get the United States away from the overwhelming influence that is being exercised in that country by this overlapping interest of military research and industrial people. I suggest this is the kind of research that we in Canada seem to be promoting with government funds. Over 50 per cent of these funds are going toward such research. I suggest we will in the end be in exactly the same position as the United States.

I would like the minister to try to deal with this question. Perhaps he will suggest to me that my emphasis is misguided. I hope it is. I suggest that instead of indulging in this kind of expansion of military research we should get out of the whole business—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Broadbent: —and buy weapons, if we need to, on the open, competitive market. I am not saying we should get out of defence entirely, because that would be a ludicrous argument. But I suggest we should be spending our money for research and development in the private sector, that we should be looking at the sectors of Canadian geography and industry that could be viable in terms of international competition. We should be using government funds to encourage research and development in this area and should not be promoting a new kind of industrial-military, research-oriented elite in this country.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister whether he can give us a breakdown or report on the operations of the machinery advisory board under section 15 of the Department of Industry Act. Also, can the minister give us a breakdown of the expenditures of the board? In other words, what is the cost of the board in so far as its operations are concerned?

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister wishes to reply to the questions asked up to this time or are we to proceed with vote 1?

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, while we are considering the estimates of the Department of Industry and Trade and Commerce, I take the opportunity to congratulate the minister for his appointment to this important position. All those who know him for his intelligence, his devotion to duty, and to work, are happy he has been chosen for this tremendous job and we certainly expect his support for the economic development of the less favoured areas in particular which need government support and help to actualize their potential.

I should like to draw his attention for only a few minutes, on the present situation of the textile industry and specially on the necessity of long term policies and programs in order that these industries may make plans for a certain number of years rather than to be acquainted with government policy on a yearly basis; the latter not only unsettles them, but prevents any planning of their production and of the increase of their industrial capacity for a certain number of years.

I believe I do not need to draw the attention of the minister on the situation in the textile industry, which is well known to him. He knows how important the textile industry is, particularly to a great number of Quebec municipalities. As a matter of fact, these communities are particularly apt to suffer from importation of textiles or clothes from countries where lower production costs allow manufacturers to export their products in Canada. This is an industry which generally hires quite a number of employees. And if we study the statistics, we shall see that the number of workers shows a tendency to decrease every year. In 1967, according to the statistics for March, the number of employees was 83,000 whilst in 1966, they numbered a little over 87,000. The volume of importations has greatly increased especially during the last few years—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day.

[English]

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding)—National Parks—Glacier—inquiry as to logging operations; the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert)—Vocational training—restriction of retraining to a certain number of persons; the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent)—Housing—Oshawa—availability of defence department property.

• (6:00 p.m.)

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions. I am advised that notice of motion No. 14 was called for the first time on Monday, November 25, 1968, and if not proceeded with today when called it would normally be dropped from the order paper.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact it was allowed to stand on November 25 by unanimous consent because the hon. member was then at the United Nations, I wonder whether it could not be agreed that it stand once more but only once more?

Mr. Forest: We would have no objection to allowing it to stand once more in view of the fact the hon. member had reason to be away, provided it is proceeded with next Wednesday.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

YOUTH EXTENSION PROGRAM

SUGGESTED PROMOTION OF INTEREST IN PARLIAMENT AND THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of underwriting a youth extension program of the parliament of Canada to:

(a) Promote and nurture an interest among the youth of Canada in the principles of our constitution;

(b) Promote belief in the power of reason as applied through public discussion as preferable to silence coerced by law;

(c) Provide annual seminars for young Canadians from shore to shore under the supervision of M.P.'s and officers of the House of Commons and Senate to gain insight into, and understanding of, the workings of government in deliberation and action.

He said: Mr. Speaker, many motions of this type have appeared before and been debated in this house. They were particularly plentiful prior to centennial year and were discussed in connection with the establishment of the Company of Young Canadians when there was hope that body would contribute in some constructive way to the quality of life in Canada instead of turning into what appears to be a group of self-seeking agitators with international aspirations. Because of the publicity given to the desirability of participatory democracy and the just society during the recent general election, I would hope hon. members would not talk out this motion but rather allow it to result in a formal expression of opinion by the house.

I am happy that this motion has risen to the top of the list for debate today, in view of the fact we will soon be debating the procedures of this house. In my view, as a result of discussions with other hon. members and of reading the views of certain journalists, there appears to be a great misunderstanding concerning the proper role of parliament. According to these views, mistaken in my opinion, parliament should be busy governing the country by actually making day to day decisions on this and that problem. According to this view, the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, as well as the speech itself for that matter, are useless and a waste of time. As I have said, these views appear to me to demonstrate a lack of understanding of our parliamentary system.

I believe that the people of Canada are entitled to an annual report from the government as to its assessment of the state of our nation and a general outline of the government's intentions in that regard. I believe also that the representatives of the people should be able to criticize that report and those intentions and to make general suggestions which could lead to better solutions to the problems of our nation. In my opinion, it is ridiculous to suggest that, on the one hand, our democracy should be more participatory while on the other hand proposing that the democratically elected representatives should be restricted in the expression of their views. Hon. members, journalists and the general public should know that the house is a deliberative body which exercises no executive powers. It should not be looked upon as a machine that will grind out decisions which, in fact, are executive in nature. It is high time that the executive and its apologists stopped using this as an excuse for lack of action and leadership in administering the affairs of this nation.

This motion also refers to the constitution itself and that brings up the question of the monarchy. I have noticed since arriving here that there is not a general acceptance of this institution. This is a fact which concerns me more than any other in connection with the future of this nation. If I might speak personally for a moment, I would say that I am a relatively new Canadian since both of my parents were born in the United States. I would say also that when I first became interested in the government of this country and began comparing our institutions with those in the United States I was not very impressed with ours. However, as my study progressed I reversed that decision. Having said that, all I wish to say is that an understanding of our system will result in the revelation of its superiority and that a danger exists in destroying or removing those symbols or symbolic items which strengthen the foundation of our system. I feel that if the monarchy were removed and a congressional or republican form of government established there would be growing pressures for union with the United States, the argument being, why use a facsimile when the real thing is available?

It took over 500 years to bring us from the plains of Runnymede and Magna Carta to our present position where the rights of the individual are recognized in a free society. Today our youth is being subjected to direction and persuasion from movements based on violence, permissive sex and drugs in a concerted attempt to undermine and overthrow what it took 500 years to build, namely, our free society with respect for the rights of the individual but recognizing also individual responsibilities.

Parliament cannot remain indifferent to the many tides and currents of intent, not all of them good, to which our young people are exposed today. Let us face the fact that many of the institutions which we take for granted, free speech, parliament itself, the rights of the individuals, service to our country, are today being attacked and derided not only by expatriate drop-outs from the United States society but by Canadians who would replace our way of life with suppression and tyranny. Let us bring some of our young people to Ottawa and make known to them what parliament is all about. Let them discuss and learn from members of this house how freedom works on parliament hill. This house cannot remain aloof from what is going on. Let us give parliament back to the people.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely and earnestly congratulate the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) upon bringing before this house a notice of motion which is excellent in both wording and intent. I believe that the concept of an annual thought-gathering conference of the young people of Canada would stimulate enthusiastic discussion and consideration. It is, therefore, with strong conviction that I lend my support to the suggestion that the government of Canada should underwrite such a project in order to promote and nurture interest among the youth of Canada in the principles of our constitution and to promote belief in the power of reason through public discussion, as the motion suggests.

As an educator I am personally aware and convinced of the urgent need to introduce a vigorous program in Canada to educate our young people in the functions and responsibilities of our parliamentary system of government. I well recall my efforts in trying to teach Canadian students about societies and cultures of the past in other parts of the world. Seeking a point of reference to clarify an understanding of political practices, I used our own parliamentary system for the purpose of drawing a comparison. To my dismay, this proved to be a very ineffective teaching technique simply because there was an appalling ignorance of our federal parliamentary system of government among the students I met.

I hasten to point out, Mr. Speaker, that this situation is not entirely the fault of our students, for they can only take advantage of the opportunities which are presented to them. Further, we should not seek to blame hard-working and dedicated teachers who have long courses of study to present in a limited amount of time. Most schools, I believe, offer a course or courses on civics at some stage along the educational route, and I have seen some excellent books and booklets which try to shed light on the organization and operation of government. Nevertheless, many good teachers will testify that civics, more often than not, is among the most sterile and boring of all subjects.

Part of the reason for this unfortunate fact is that all too frequently classroom lessons on government require and expect a student to memorize, digest and duplicate the information to which he is exposed. He is stuffed or programmed like a computer, and there is minimal opportunity for participation or involvement.

The notice of motion now under consideration calls for annual seminars for young Canadians to gain insight into and understanding of the workings of government in deliberation and in action. I would go a little further and call for annual regional and national youth parliaments in conjunction with these seminars where our young people could not only discuss but actually participate in the processes of parliamentary democracy.

These have been tried before with outstanding success and we need more of them now. They can only be brought about with the encouragement and assistance of the federal government, with the help of officers of this house and of members of parliament and senators. Such a program would go far in breaking down the walls of ignorance. The interest, enthusiasm and resultant comprehension of our young people would amaze us all.

The report of the provincial committee on aims and objectives of education in the schools of Ontario entitled "Living and Learning"— the so-called Hall-Denis report—speaking about curriculum says:

> The curriculum must provide a greater array of learning experiences than heretofore. Classes must be more mobile, within and beyond the local environment, and the rigid position of education must yield to a flexibility capable of meeting new needs. These and other innovations will be aimed at developing in the child a sense of personal achievement and responsibility commensurate with his age and ability—

While education is not directly a federal responsibility, we can certainly do something in the national interest to promote interest and understanding of our political system.

The United Nations Association has been very effective in developing an educational program of model United Nations which are conducted annually in several areas of Canada. Having participated in these projects, I vividly recall the intense interest and enthusiasm which marked the proceedings. Young Canadians acting as representatives of various nations, actively involved in debate and discussion, became aware of complex world problems and the terrible elusiveness of quick, easy solutions. We have a responsibility also to assist our youth to comprehend more meaningfully our serious national problems and the existing machinery which must be used as is or redesigned to find the answers to our problems.

Recently we have witnessed disturbing outbreaks of youth violence in many parts of the world. A report recently referred to in the committee on miscellaneous estimates and prepared by a consultant for the Company of Young Canadians doubted the sufficiency of the parliamentary system for today's needs, and even suggested that our efficient bureaucratic society might produce the need for violence to achieve change. This report, of course, was only a position paper, and it was not by any means fully endorsed by the C.Y.C. Nevertheless, the fact that some people think in such radical terms, the fact that so many in our society do not know how to protest, how to initiate change, points to a learning deficiency which exists not only in Canada but in many parts of our contemporary world. The lessons of so-called participatory democracy must be learned and our government can help to assist this concept by introducing a youth program on government, using the suggestions outlined in this motion and other ideas as well.

[Mr. Penner.]

The Hall-Denis report on education in a chapter entitled "The Search for Truth in a Democratic Society", says:

> Democracy is a flexible, responsive form of government, which arises not as a result of imposed or structured political practices, but as a dynamic, liberating force nurtured by the people themselves. It implies the freedom to think, to dissent, and to bring about lawful change in the interest of all. It can flourish only when its citizens are free to search continually for new ideas, models, and theories to replace outmoded knowledge in an effort to serve an increasing number of people. A true democracy is a free and responsible society—
> The heart of the problem of providing a general education in a democratic society is that of ensuring the continuance of the liberal and humane tradition. This is far more basic to our society than the worship of intellectual pursuits and scientific endeavour for their own sake. If freedom is to be nourished and maintained, the educational process must include at each level of growth and development some continuing experience in making value judgments.

I strongly urge the government to consider some form of a youth program on government. It would be helpful to have members of parliament involved in this program, not so much under our supervision, as the notice of motion suggests, but rather using them as resource persons. And what an opportunity for them as well, Mr. Speaker. Not only would our youth become more familiar and better acquainted with the operations of the government but our members of parliament would also become more familiar and better acquainted with the views and aspirations of this nation's youth.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak this afternoon but my interest was awakened when I read this notice of motion. I think it comes at the right time, since we may begin to consider constitutional reform after the Christmas recess and ideas put forward now are like seeds of future discussions.

The notice of motion says:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of underwriting a youth extension program of the parliament of Canada.

The first reason for this program, and I continue to quote, is to:

> Promote and nurture an interest among the youth of Canada in the principles of our constitution.

I think hon. members who have often come into contact with the youth of today will first and foremost have to try to give our young people confidence in our present constitution, a confidence they lack, as I realized in all my discussions with them. Our constitution has been so infringed upon in the past hundred years that the youth of Quebec no longer have much faith in it. The first aim of the proposed program is to promote and nurture an interest among the youth of Canada in our constitution. However, I think that those who will meet our youth in the future will realize that our young people today want a new constitution adapted to modern needs. They want to see a new constitution to take the place of the old one which was so often infringed and trampled upon and in whose name so much injustice was done.

The notice of motion also suggests, and I quote:

Promote belief in the power of reason—

• (6:20 p.m.)

I do not think that we have to persuade our young people of the superiority of reason, because it is precisely their strongest point. Young people nowadays do not believe in myths, and I have been shocked when I heard the first speaker advocate once more the myth which has been pounded into our head for the past 300 years.

Mr. Speaker, youth today is nurtured on facts, not on fancies, and facts appeal to reason. Therefore, I believe that if we want to appeal to the reason of our young people, we will have to get rid of those old myths. Therefore, I congratulate the government, because I think it could not care less about myths; it relies mainly on reality and that is what the young people want.

Mr. Speaker, I have been so surprised and shocked by what was said by a new Canadian that I decided to speak up. Had it been a Britisher, I would have simply said he is a Britisher, and that's that. But he is a new Canadian, born in the United States where myths have been dead for a long time.

I consider such comments as a little surprising on the part of a member who wants to arouse new aspirations among young people. Why did he have to preach once more the cult of the myth. The notice of motions states, and I quote:

—provide annual seminars for young Canadians from shore to shore and under the supervision of M.Ps and officers of the House of Commons and Senate—

I think, Mr. Speaker, that those seminars are urgent in the present circumstances. I think that the men best qualified to organize those seminars in all the constituencies of Canada are the members of parliament. Therefore, I still wonder why members of parliament cannot be granted one month or one month and a half to travel through their constituencies and organize such seminars. We must go in all our educational establishments to meet our youth. Several times, during my term of office, I was invited by some groups. I went to meet them eagerly. The present government should, therefore, organize information programs. In fact, not only the youth, but even the middle-aged people do not know anything about parliamentary matters. About ten years ago, people in most ridings could not tell the difference between a provincial and a federal member. The situation is much better today. In fact, many organizations and members of parliament have endeavoured to inform the citizens and have tried to make them see the difference at least. Even today we still get many letters that should be addressed to the provincial member. In my own riding, things are a little better today, but when I was first elected six years ago, I think that 75 per cent of the letters I was getting from electors in my riding should have been addressed to the provincial member. That shows how well informed our people are and when we explain things to the people, when we tell them that this is a provincial matter and that is a federal matter, they are filled with admiration to find at last someone who can set them straight.

Therefore, I think that even if that motion was meant only to urge the government to give members of parliament time to visit institutions and travel in their ridings, it would not be without merit. It would be for the member of parliament a matter of spending a month or a month and a half in his riding to inform the people on everything parliament does, in order to give them a more concrete idea of the work of parliament. In fact, I think it would benefit all members of parliament and the people even more. It is found that in our organizations much of the work done is often useless because it becomes obvious a few months after a program has been under way that it is a false start, that it is misguided and that everything must be done over again.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I would be in favour of seminars, the organization of which should be one of the first steps to be taken by the government, one of the first questions to be considered. As a matter of fact, I am convinced that if we give adequate information to our people, our work will be more effective and lower levels of government will also be able to take advantage thereof.

Youth Extension Program

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support without any reservation whatsoever the motion put forward by the hon. member. In recent years many in Canada have been increasingly interested in and concerned about our young people. It has been felt that the young people of Canada should have a closer contact with and participation in affairs of the nation at the national level. It is interesting to note that in response to that growing interest the average age of hon. members of this house has decreased over the years, that supports the contention that the young people of Canada are becoming more concerned about and more directly involved in governmental processes.

The hon. member who preceded me in this debate was somewhat critical of the observations made by the mover of the motion. I think that those criticisms would be dissipated if the house approved of the proposition that has been put forward this afternoon.

I will not deal with all aspects of the motion but only with part (c) which says:

> Provide annual seminars for young Canadians from shore to shore under the supervision of M.P.s and officers of the House of Commons and Senate to gain insight into, and understanding of, the workings of government in deliberation and action.

I am sure some hon. members who are present in the house this evening will recall it had been hoped that a major activity of the centennial year would be a youth parliament. Some who are with us this evening took an active part in trying to promote this idea and get it off the ground. It was endorsed by the then prime minister, by the leader of the opposition and by the leaders of the smaller groups, and considerable groundwork was laid in planning the project. A joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate met on several occasions and strongly recommended that the idea of a youth parliament should be carried out in 1967. It would seem to me that part (c) of the motion before us would tie in directly with the youth parliament proposal. I particularly like the words which say it should be under the supervision of members of parliament and officers of the House of Commons.

Those who followed the work done in connection with the youth parliament will recall it was an essential recommendation that the centennial youth parliament should be directly connected with the activities of this house.

Indeed the final report of the joint committee recommended that the youth parliament be a precise duplication of the senior parliament of Canada. The involvement of M.P.s would have arisen from the fact that they would have supervised the electoral process in their constituencies.

This process would have resulted in the election of a young person of high school age, a boy or girl who would receive the honour of going to Ottawa and, during a particular period of time, actually understudying the functions of the official federal representative in parliament. I think you will understand, Mr. Speaker, why there was so much enthusiasm for this proposal. It would have meant that every high school in every constituency in Canada would have become deeply involved in direct participation in the parliamentary process and this, I think, would have been an educational experience par excellence; it would have meant the carrying out of the purpose of clause (c) here to the ultimate.

I do not wish to prolong this discussion unduly, but I would suggest that the idea of a youth parliament is not a lost cause. Questions have been asked on this subject on several occasions already this session. On the most recent occasion a question was directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who indicated that the youth parliament idea would not be proceeded with during the current parliament, largely on account of the need for austerity. However, I suggest that if this house were to support unanimously the excellent proposal which is now before it, it would strengthen the Prime Minister in reaching a final decision on this question.

I certainly hope that the excellent preparatory work which has gone into this youth parliament proposition—it began as early as 1964 and extended through centennial year—will not be lost, and that the proposal will at last be implemented. The records are available, I believe, in the official records of parliament, because the joint parliamentary committee was officially established to look into the proposal. In seeking support for the resolution before us I urge that this proposal be linked with the background to which I have referred, and that we should move forward as quickly as possible toward a program which will involve the youth of Canada more directly in the political process.

In recent months, the desire of the youth of Canada to become more directly involved in affairs of state and in the political process at all levels has been made dramatically clear by the activities of the protest movement on the campus. I recently came across a quotation which appears to be highly relevant in this regard, and I should like to present it to the house:

> Everything about us stresses instant gratification of want. We can travel anywhere in a matter of hours or days. We can communicate instantly, be entertained instantly. Is it any wonder that young people living in this climate should want instant spiritual fulfilment, instant physical gratification, instant change in the political and social system?

Those of us who have been in parliament over a period of time are aware that instant solutions to the political and social problems facing this nation are not possible. The process of parliamentary discussion, attempting to arrive at consensus, takes place only slowly through the parliamentary system as we have seen it established over the years. It is unfortunate that because of the present sense of urgency the functions of parliament have been downgraded in recent years. This is a point which was made by the mover of the motion in his opening statement. I am sure that if we can arrange a youth seminar or a youth parliament, whatever one wishes to call it, on an annual basis under the supervision of M.P.'s and officers of this house, it will result in a much more intelligent and responsible approach to affairs of state by the rising generations. It is for this reason, and many others I could state, that I hope the house will give unanimous approval to the motion.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity to speak in this house since my election and I must say I cannot but be moved by applause, not yet deserved, coming from the hon. members from all sides of the house.

I should like first of all to congratulate sincerely the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) for having brought in this project that I would call a youth parliament. The hon. member for Palliser is a young member, like me, and I believe this project concerning youth suits him well and that he owed it to himself to bring it in.

I heard about such projects of youth parliament a long time ago and I was quite interested by it. I now have the opportunity to support this motion. The main reason why I support it is the deplorable lack of interest in Canada for federal politics.

From one election to another, in the various ridings, candidates spend huge amounts not only to get elected but also to interest people in politics, to stir them up, to induce them to discuss and to vote.

In my riding, I noticed that despite the efforts made by six candidates during a month and a half, not even 50 per cent of the people cared to vote. Such a lack of interest stems undoubtedly from the fact that people are not informed, and a youth parliament will be a means to interest this sector of the population that will be the electorate of to-morrow, i.e. our youth. That is why I want to support this project of a youth parliament.

This program will have unquestionable advantages, the major one being political education. Today's youth, as other speakers said earlier, are ill-informed in school on the subject of politics and parliamentary institutions. Today's youth are disputatious and they insist on their rights; they insist, from day to day, from month to month, on getting more and more from governments. They do not know much, however, about the responsibilities of a minister; they do not know much about budgets. While they demand, they often forget that to give, a government must take from the taxpayers' pockets. There is a lack of political education when people are always begging for something, without realizing that money has to come from somewhere.

In my opinion, a youth parliament, a model parliament of that type, would enable young Canadians to be initiated in all the complicated aspects of the Canadian political life and to familiarize themselves with the good as well as with the bad sides of things. On returning home they would be in a position to communicate their enthusiasm to other young people in their surroundings and as I was saying before, stimulating a political interest in today's youth is creating a sense of responsibility in tomorrow's electors.

There are other advantages also. In fact, a youth parliament would constitute a forum for discussion. The young of today have much to say. They want to be heard and they are heard. In the universities, student committees demand joint management, joint government. Everywhere, youth wants to be heard. However, on political matters, they have no outlets except through young people political associations across the country. Yet those associations are based on political partisanship.

Now, that youth parliament would offer the young man or the young woman who wishes to discuss politics in a non partisan fashion, a forum, a place from which to put their opinions before the land.

Likewise, let us not forget that this youth parliament could constitute a source of new ideas. The present government has already innovated since it has come to power and it will blaze even newer trails.

There is talk of parliamentary reform, of many things to come. Still, let us not forget that it is up to the people to bring new ideas to the fore, and if that is so, on whom can we bank more than on the young people, on those who are never content with the status quo and who wish to challenge everything and everybody.

To my mind, a model parliament, a youth parliament, could be a source of new ideas which could help Canadian administrators to modernize both present structures and plans.

In addition, a model parliament, a youth parliament could perhaps become a means of action. Our young people—let us face it—do not have any very specific mode of action when it comes to achieving their ambitions from a political point of view. And so, we see them demonstrating, marching, walking about with placards, at times even indulging in violence. That violence we witness comes from somewhere; it stems from a deep feeling of frustration in the young people who have no means of action. They see no other means than that, so they resort to the most obvious: violence and demonstrations which threaten law and order.

A youth parliament could channel those energies and offer, at long last, to our young people, bubbling over with energy, an outlet through which they might give vent to their ideas and achieve their objectives.

Finally, looking at the shape of things to come, we see that we will soon have to revise the Canadian constitution. We will have to bring the people of Canada to accept upheavals. We will have to change an aging constitution, over a hundred years old, which hardly anyone understands completely.

Has the time now not come to support a project such as the youth parliament so that the people can develop an interest in public affairs? They will soon have to decide what constitution we will need for our second centenary, for constitutions do not change often. Now, if the people are to choose the men who will lead the government and make decisions, if the people have perhaps to vote by referendum on some aspects of the constitution—this, we do not know yet—today is the time to stir their interest at grass roots, level by stirring the interest of the young people and setting up a youth parliament.

I should like to refer to a term used during the election campaign: We should have a policy of participation. Well, the policy of participation can no doubt exist in many ways, but this youth parliament suggested by the hon. member seems to me a good starting point and, before we involve all the people in the participatory process we should start with political education and this youth parliament seems to me a good way of going about it.

[English]

The concept of a youth parliament, Mr. Speaker, is one which has tremendous potential for beneficial results. Each year hundreds of young Canadians would be able to return to their homes in the various parts of our nation having had first hand experience of the workings of federal government. They would be able to communicate to their communities their own newly awakened enthusiasm and knowledge concerning our tradition of federal parliamentary government. This is why I would like this house to underwrite the motion.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, as I am one of the young members of the house, you can be assured that the motion of the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) is of great interest to me.

In view of the development in the last few years, the Canadian youth, as that of the United States or of other countries, will be called upon to play a very important part. Young people react in a way which is not necessarily the best to what is wanted of them and even if there are no demands made upon them, their reactions seem sometimes abnormal to many people.

I have had the good fortune, since I am a little younger than most of the members, to be on those university campuses a few years ago; I saw various organizations become protest bodies and I heard all about the imaginary fences which, according to the young people, separate other generations.

[English]

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) for bringing this very important subject to the attention of the house. I believe the proposals contained in his motion are very realistic. There is no doubt that the young people of Canada must have an interest in our constitution and that they must put forward their ideas in respect of any review of the constitution, or any reforms. The hon. member spoke of parliamentary procedures which might be simplified. I believe it is very important that we have the ideas of the young people in this regard.

I support the principle of the hon. member's motion in respect of the provision of annual seminars for young Canadians from shore to shore under the supervision of M.P.'s and officers of the House of Commons and Senate, so that those young people may gain insight into, and understanding of, the workings of government in deliberation and action. I should also like to thank the hon. member for presenting his motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, speaking of the Canadian youth of today, I cannot forget the Prime Minister's attitude towards youth. I believe he is the first chief of state able to communicate and really to hold a dialogue with people of all ages and especially with the young. He has shown recently, as throughout his whole political career, and even prior to that, that he always concerned himself with young people, in short, that he always took an interest in conversing with them.

I was referring earlier to an imaginary door or barrier existing between young people, the various levels of administration and other generations.

If we look at Canadian university campuses to-day, we can see many reactions and often people wonder if what is going on in some cases is justified.

Well, I think it is very simple to explain. Young people have something to contribute, something to give, something to say and let us admit it, our institutions, whether government or private business, do not take them into account. Our structures do not permit us to listen to young people, to allow them to participate and, above all, to accept or, at least, to consider their ideas.

Young people are asking for something, and those who should answer them do not know how to go about it. As far as I am concerned, this reaction of students or young people before these problems is easy to understand.

This government compromised itself recently when it tried to remove regional disparities in the country, not only from the economic point of view, but mainly by emphasizing the fact that the problem of national unity would never be resolved before these disparities are removed.

Obviously, in these areas, the people will have to be motivated, they will have to awaken and to work.

I should just like to point out the necessity to encourage young people in these areas and the necessity to recognize a region where perhaps the young people will be called upon to find solutions as rapidly as possible.

It is certainly on young people that our hopes must rest, our chances of succeeding in those areas. The motion before us this evening is quite realistic, because it provides for the establishment of structures and direct participation of young people organizations.

I think that it is a way to hear the contribution of young people especially through seminars, because it is quite important that all Canadians should truly understand the nature of government work at all levels, especially that of the federal government which has become such a big and complicated business.

I think that, from that point of view, it prepares the young people to know the government better and to understand our procedure. Consequently, they will be ready to discuss government policies and, in addition, when they will be in the business world, in law practice, in the educational world or in any other profession, they will understand better the different departments of the government and its various procedures.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member, but I must remind him that the hour reserved for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we would have no objection if notice of motion No. 16 were allowed to stand at the request of the government and kept its place on the order paper, as mentioned.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being seven o'clock I now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1. Departmental Administration, $12,495,330.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, a few minutes before six o'clock, when the house went on to the consideration of private members' business, I had started to talk briefly about the conditions that exist today in the textile and clothing industries. I was dealing with the problems which now face that industry whose survival and progress are essential for a large number of municipalities, especially in Quebec and Ontario.

Of course, the volume of imports from countries where the production costs are lower remain the most serious problem for the textile industry and for a large number of other industries in Canada.

The figures for the period between 1954 and 1957 indicate that the Canadian industry saw its share of the market drop from 68 to 60 per cent. The important penetration of imports in the Canadian market is obvious since it is the highest per capita among industrialized countries, and our market is too easily accessible to export countries with a low production cost.

In fact, in 1966, every citizen bought $19.32 worth of textile in Canada, $10.89 in England and only $6.07 in the United States. This indicates that Canada uses three times more imported textiles and clothing than the american, and twice as much as the average Englishman.

Canadian manufacturers are not to blame, because our textile industry is among the most modern in the world from the standpoint of technology. Furthermore, it has invested about $500 million, since 1960, to modernize its plants and increase its productivity. Besides I think the administrators of those industries are aware of the difficulties facing Canada, as an exporting country, in the course of negotiations with certain countries, especially those with which we have a favourable trade balance as our exports consist mainly in primary products, whereas we are importing mostly manufactured articles.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

Therefore, it is important that the government insist in insuring above all the protection of those products being manufactured in larger quantities. Obviously, Canada must produce enough, at reasonable costs if this industry is to achieve a higher degree of rationalization as advocated by several experts in this field. If we are not far-sighted enough, our manufacturers will find it increasingly difficult, not only to maintain their present level of production but also to plan adequately for a profitable production and to invest the capital that will be required in the years to come to maintain an adequate level of employment.

The primary textile industry is today the second largest employer in the manufacturing sector in Quebec. Recent statistics, in the cotton industry in particular, are giving great concern and rightly so to the industrialists and the workers, to all those who are dependent upon it.

It is, therefore, essential to clear up the situation and to look further into the future, within the framework of a realistic and well established policy, because Canadian producers are now unable to anticipate the impact of imported manufactured products at low costs coming from underdeveloped countries. They are unable to take the necessary steps against this competition, because they can not guess at it or foresee it, since they have no indication or information. Their production schedule may be normally set up a long time in advance; they often squander more or less uselessly, a lot of time and money, but when the time comes, they are unable to follow up their programs.

It is therefore absolutely necessary to implement a long term policy, in fairness to this industry. I am confident that the present minister, who understands the problem, will put these production plans into effect as soon as possible and implement a general policy which will allow Canadian manufacturers to understand their situation in the Canadian economy in relation to imports from countries where the cost of living is lower, and which will show them what their aim should be in deciding to invest. This will also help the government to establish a general policy with regard to low-priced imports, instead of the present short term or one-year policies.

The changing structures of the world trade in textile products also make it increasingly necessary to implement a new policy which, instead of leading to a continual decrease in production, level of employment, investments and the deterioration of social conditions in the centres where these industries are located, will give us a more economically viable and a stronger textile industry which will look to the future and which will provide a sufficient and increasing number of productive jobs, following the recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada.

I think that this request for a realistic and well defined policy by the textile industry is justified and should be supported by the government. I am confident that the present Minister of Industry and Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) will comply with this request as soon as possible, in order to allow the textile industry to develop economically and to participate in the development of our country.

Mr. Chairman, I have several other comments to make on this subject. I shall have the opportunity to come back to it another time, and I will only insist tonight on the implementation of a planned long term policy in order to allow this industry to plan its programs ahead of time and to develop. I am confident that the present minister will comply with this request.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a number of comments on the ideas brought forward in the short debate we have had. First, the hon. member for Wellington talked about the department, past, present and future. I think we agree that industrial production and export promotion should go hand in hand and consequently should be under one department. I do not think we have time to go into the question of why the division took place between "Commerce" and "Industry" in 1963. I sometimes say that the whole thing was planned in order to give more importance to "Industry", so that a marriage could be performed between two activities of equal size and equal maturity, but I do not know whether that is an explanation. Why "Industry Trade and Commerce" was given as a heading in the estimates book is still a mystery to me. I regret it, for the two departments are still separate. They may have found ways and means to work together until the legislation comes about, but as of now the two departments are separate entities.

The hon. member referred to internal, fusion troubles in the department. A task force was created, as he knows, to study the problems and present recommendations. Boards were formed to determine who were the most qualified people, and in cases of uncertainty people were given the opportunity to state their case. I believe—and I hope I am right; I have checked—this was done with a minimum of pain. But it is possible that some people felt injured. However, I think the hon. member would agree with me that it is not easy to carry out such a merger without a few sacrifices being made and encountering a few difficulties. I believe the difficulties have been reduced to a minimum and that individuals involved were treated decently.

The hon. member had a lot to say about the automobile agreement. He said, mainly, that the automobile pact was mostly advantageous to U.S. subsidiaries in Canada. He did not put forward how he would have done it. Would he have preferred the government to take over? If so, I would remind him of some of the difficulties associated with such an operation. Nevertheless he and the hon. member for Winnipeg North were very generous in recognizing the progress that has been made in regard to production, exports, productivity, employment, and so on. My philosophy is that politics, as Burke says, is a choice of inconveniences. In this case I believe that the advantages were very, very much more on the side of the automobile agreement, and I believe the Canadian interest has been well protected in this pact.

The hon. member for Wellington also said that a great number of small companies were put out of business. I inquired immediately of the department and was told this had occurred in only two cases, and that in fact most small companies have expanded. I am told by a number of people on all sides of the automobile business that any parts company that has a capacity is now completely absorbed and is handling as much business as it cares to or can handle. I have checked on these matters. If the hon. member knows of some cases where this is not true, I would be delighted—as I did on one occasion for a small plant in my riding—to bring it to the attention of those concerned, so that if at all possible a remedy can be found. However, I am informed that this is not the case. The bulk of the government loans has been made to small companies in order to help them expand. This then is the general pattern.

The hon. member for Wellington also said that imports have increased. I think I mentioned this too, but to be absolutely scientific I would say that exports have increased 2,592 per cent and imports have increased 1,381 per cent. However, I paid more importance to the phenomenon of trade imbalance, to the comparison of our trade balance in automobiles. I think this is where the comparison should be made. Hon. members will recall that I said we had an imbalance, against us of $351 million in 1968. In 1965 it was $547 million, and in previous years it was even higher.

The hon. member also said that productivity in Canada is increasing more slowly than in the United States. I am delighted to tell him that, fortunately, he is wrong, at least as far as the automobile industry is concerned. In Canada annual productivity increased 8 per cent last year. In the United States it was 5 per cent. As I said in my speech, the productivity gap has been brought down in this industry from 30 per cent to 20 per cent. I hope this trend will continue.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, just to put the record straight: That is for one industry only, the automotive industry, and if you lump all industries together, that is not a fact.

Mr. Pepin: I have figures on that, too, Mr. Chairman. I gave figures in my speech and I have further figures showing that the productivity increase in Canada is faster than it is in the United States at this time, and has been for the last ten years or so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pepin: In view of the size of the gap which existed before, that kind of news does not cheer one completely, but it is nice to know that the gap is being minimized, even if it is not being minimized rapidly enough.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North also said a number of things on the subject of automobiles. He paid his compliments to the agreement. However, he also talked about the number of workers being laid off, in particular at the Ford plant in Windsor.

• (8:20 p.m.)

As I said, many of these lay-offs are temporary, resulting from the construction of a new plant. One could very well make the point that, had it not been for the decision to build a new plant, these workers would have been laid off permanently. This situation would have been worse than the one we now deplore. I must emphasize the fact that these workers will be coming back to better jobs, more secure jobs, and there will be 200 more of these jobs than at present. I must repeat also that the workers with seniority will receive up to 95 per cent of their present income. Unfortunately, those who have been employed for less than 30 weeks will not receive this advantage. I have to emphasize, and I checked this at the time, that there is alternative employment in the Windsor area, again partly the result of the automobile agreement.

Hon. members know that Ford is building a new engine plant in Windsor which will produce about 900,000 engines per year, and will employ 1,200 people. Chrysler is also building a new engine plant which will provide work for an additional 1,500 people. Many of us would like to see developments of this sort take place in our ridings. However, I sympathize with the temporary situation in which some individuals find themselves.

The hon. member for Wellington was interested in the blueberry project to which reference was made in the estimates. This project was undertaken at the request of the governments of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. The department is having a look at the possibility of processing these berries. This is a processing, an industrial, not an agricultural problem. It is an industrial problem which is related to individual productivity, to exports, by freezing the berries. The project was undertaken with the full co-operation of the federal Department of Agriculture, so there is no duplication. The hon. member is rightly concerned about avoiding duplication.

On the subject of grants, the same member feels that there is not enough concentration of these grants, which he might call scientific grants. He seems to think that all these subsidies should be handled through the science secretariat. While that is debatable, I presume that if we had a minister of science he would want to have most of these things in his hand. There would be a few of us, however, not opposing this procedure because we are a disciplined group, but making the point that our departments may have some expertise to contribute that might not be found in the present science secretariat or in a future science department. What I mean is that these grants are given for industrial development; they are not for exclusively scientific achievements. The purpose of these grants is industrial development and they must be looked upon also from the point of view of tariffs, export possibilities, technological progress and so on. At times many members complain that our programs are not sufficiently developmental-oriented, are not sufficiently mission-oriented, and I believe it to be the responsibility of the "operating" department to see that they are.

I venture to say, therefore, that it is not wrong for the department to make such grants.

The same member was greatly concerned about the standards council. He was afraid that we were proceeding without legislation. We are not doing that. He will understand quite easily that if we do intend to bring legislation to provide for a standards council, some preliminary work has to be done. I want to reassure him the money is not being spent now, as if the council existed.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar was concerned about grants given by my department for research in connection with rapeseed. The situation is the following: The rapeseed crushers and processors in western Canada are attempting to improve the quality of rapeseed oil and meal, so they can compete more effectively with imported oil and meal. In the interests of the rapeseed processors, the department has made a grant to a project which is attempting to reduce the toxicity level in rapeseed oil and meal. This work is being carried out by research groups in the western provinces, and we subsidized it at the level of $144,000 and supervised it too.

The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby made what I thought was an excellent contribution and I want to thank him for it. I will not involve myself in the philosophical debate of the first two subjects he raised. We might do that at the University of Ottawa or at Carleton one of these nights.

His first point had to do with the distribution of power in contemporary society. This is an interesting subject, but the debate would likely be lengthy. His second point had to do with price fixing. I am more interested tonight in the third one, and that is the relationship between grants for scientific research and development programs on the civilian as opposed to the military side of the industrial spectrum. The hon. member seems to feel that our defence programs will lead to the formation of an industrial military elite in Canada, very much against the interests of democracy. There is no doubt that we are generous in this sector. However, I should like to present some argument in favour of that conduct.

My first point is just to remark that vote 5 is now down from $37 million to $32 million. There is a saving of $5 million over last year.

My second remark has to do also with the fact that funds available from the Department of National Defence for the same objective have gone down substantially from $60 million in 1959, at the time of the Arrow incident, to about $15 million at present.

My third point is to underline the fact that the funds are more effectively used now than they were in the past and also to underline that the emphasis is slowly, perhaps not quickly enough to suit the hon. member, moving to the civilian side. In other words, more and more importance is attached to the civilian part of these allocations of funds.

I am quite sure that on reflection, if not at first sight, the hon. member will recognize that advances in technology have very often come from military requirements. Money spent for defence materials has served the civilian side of industry as well. As an example, I would cite the transistor. The development of the transistor was highly subsidized by the United States government and everybody knows it is now one of the main elements in contemporary industrial production.

The PT-6, to which the hon. member also referred—

Mr. Broadbent: May I ask a question?

Mr. Pepin: May I finish first? The PT-6 engine built by United Aircraft near Montreal was developed with funds from vote 5 and vote 20, but half of the sales of these engines are now going to commercial companies. If I recall well, these Canadian motors are now found in 37 countries of the world. This is another example of military expenditure that is now serving the civilian side. The hon. member also knows that the C.N.R. turbo trains running between Montreal and Toronto are powered by the same engine, as are the Twin Otters.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Why do we spend money on defence projects? There are many reasons and I have indicated some. Another reason is that the risk in the defence field is greater than the risk in the civilian field. Also, such expenditures are also made by foreign countries. Hon. members may doubt that we should copy the Democrat government of the United States or the Labour government of the United Kingdom or the Social Democrat government of West Germany. All I can say is that when every other country is doing it, it would be terribly dangerous to be different. Some political parties have tried to but have not succeeded very well. Certainly a country would probably fall flat on its face if it used the hon. member's reasoning in industrial development policies.

May I emphasize that generally I am in agreement with the motivations of the hon. member. I too would very much like the accent to be on the civilian side with respect to expenditures on research and development. I do not contest the fact, however, that expenditure on the military side does have a civilian connotation and will sooner or later come to serve the civilian side of the industry.

If my hon. friend studies the details of the matter I am sure he would realize that a Canadian industrialist who availed himself of our programs might get as much for a civilian project as for a defence project. Again we are trying to establish a proper balance.

The hon. member referred to a part of my speech to the representatives of the air industry of Canada, where he alleged I said "Your interest is mine". I have been unable to find that quotation in the text, though I may have ad libbed it, as I sometimes do. On pages 14 and 27 of my speech I referred to civilian and defence projects. For example, at page 27 appears this statement:

> However, much can be done to achieve a better balance between defence and civilian activity in the "air industry" at large.
> The industry's sales are now balanced at roughly 50/50 military/civil. We must consciously strive to sustain and, where feasible, increase our civil aerospace production.

So may I thank the hon. member for raising this point because it does give me the occasion to repeat what I said at that time.

The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster asked me to pay some attention to movements that are taking place in the area development agency. I understand the difficulty he is experiencing. It has been decided to designate certain areas in his region as in need of development—Saint John, Halifax, Dartmouth and Moncton, I think they are. However, this designation cannot be made until the legislation is introduced in this house. The hon. member said that this has led to rather sad delays. However I do not think I can intrude upon the sphere of influence of the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, though I will try and adopt the hon. member's gentle manner and sympathetic attitude in drawing this particular problem to the attention of the said minister.

The hon. member for Edmonton West expressed some concern over the machinery tariff remission program and asked me to give him a breakdown of the cost of operation of this program. The salaries will amount to $382,000. However, I must immediately point out that the cost to the government should be nil. As far as expenditures by the department are concerned, the government is going to retain the 15 per cent duty on the first $500 of value of each importation. It is estimated that since there are now between 500 and 1,000 requests for remission per month, revenue will be more than $1 million a year, which will easily recoup cost of administration. I might also add that the board will reduce the cost of manufacturing for Canadian industry by $45 million, and in doing so will make Canadian industry more competitive on domestic and international markets.

[Translation]

I wish to thank my good friend, the member for Missisquoi (Mr. Yves Forest) for his good words and for the excellent advices he has been giving me with his usual generosity. The textile industry is also a concern of mine and this for two reasons at least, one being that I am representing a district where textile industry is, just as in his own district, a very important part of local economy. And this is one of the subjects on which I will try in the years to come, to exert my personal influence.

This particular Canadian industry, as the hon. member said, must be rationalized; we must at any cost, in the next few months, set a long-term plan. The parliamentary secretary insisted on this, as did the owners of manufacturing plants and the union leaders who, a few months ago, presented us with a report. I shall devote all my efforts to this task.

However, I wish to say to the hon. member that there is at the present time a review made at the interdepartmental level of our policy towards countries with low salaries, so as to determine if we are doing everything necessary in that field. Of course I do not have to point out to him again that the Canadian consumer has also some interests to be reckoned with and that Canada, a country exporting such a large range of products, can hardly apply a protectionist policy in that field and demand that other countries act otherwise elsewhere. It seems apparent that various interests are at stake, and this is why my honourable friend insisted on a long-term solution. Some officials of my department are now carrying out studies on the textile industry, on its competitive position in the world, on sectors which are profitable, less profitable, or a dead loss. It goes without saying that all this will help define a policy which I hope to introduce in the house one day.

[English]

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the minister's observations, though some of the points he made may be debatable. However, I do not propose to take time now to answer them.

I understand we are about to proceed to vote No. 1, but before doing so I should like to get clear in my mind the situation regarding the separate departments of industry and trade and commerce. I would ask the minister whether or not the minister of industry has been appointed, because if he has there is no salary appropriation for him in the estimates. The first estimates that were tabled—not the revised ones—for the year ending March 31, 1969, show an appropriation for the minister's salary. The revised estimates, however, do not provide for the minister's salary. Apparently we have a department without a minister to head it. Would the minister care to comment on that.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pepin: It is very simple. You have a Minister of Trade and Commerce who is at the same time the Minister of Industry. As he cannot be paid twice by the Queen he receives only one salary, and from the Department of Trade and Commerce. You see, there are two departments and I am the minister for both departments. From that point of view I suffer from schizophrenia, but I receive only one salary for the schizophrenia from which I suffer.

Mr. Hales: Perhaps the minister could find out from his officials to what date the former minister of industry received his salary.

Mr. Pepin: He received it until he was transferred to his present position as President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Broadbent: Although I found the minister's remark interesting he did not go into the question of the distribution of power within the ministry. At some future time I should be happy to hear him speak about the distribution of power within our economic system.

I notice the minister did not refute the points I raised; instead he said he could not find the quotation. I will repeat it. At page 31 of his speech to the Air Industries Association of Canada of October 9, 1968, he said, "Your interests are mine." Perhaps the minister may want to look into that, since my copy of the text may be inaccurate.

I do not mean to quibble about points the minister raised; he said that society received undoubted benefits from some forms of military research and development. No intelligent person denies that; but my reply is, "So what?". I dare say the furnace industry in Germany benefitted from Hitler's experiments in the 1940's, but that is no justification for burning people. Similarly, I do not see where certain benefits from the research undertaken in fields of military technology justify the spending of millions of dollars for that research. From my reading and from my gleaning of facts I have learned that over 50 per cent of government moneys going into research and development promotion go into research undertaken for military purposes. The minister did not deny this purported fact.

My third point was that currently it is more profitable for industry in Canada to undertake research in military fields. Under existing laws the greatest benefits accrue to the kind of research that is carried out in military areas; those benefits are greater than the benefits accruing to research in non military areas. Since the minister did not deny that categorically I can only conclude that my arguments are substantially correct.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I refuse to become confused by the minister's explanation of his responsibilities. At the moment all I know is that he has some over-all responsibilities in the field of industry, and that worries me. In one of his replies in this house he said that it has been made clear that no grants will be available to Saint John, Halifax and Fredericton until the new legislation is brought down. That is understandable, perhaps.

I note that the Area Development Incentives Act ceases to be effective on March 31, 1971. I also note that the Area Development Board to some extent is to be phased out. In any event, there is some doubt about its future. The minister cannot know about all this; certainly, that board has been a vehicle providing assistance to industry. The three entities, measures or bodies—call them what you will—that have been of assistance to industry in general are being transformed or phased out. It may be one or two years before something else that is concrete does the same job—we all know how long it takes to put legislation through this house. In the meantime I feel that the minister has the responsibility to say categorically that no industry in the maritimes will receive less assistance in the near future than it received in the past. He should let industries know that amounts of money available for assistance will not be decreased. As Minister of Industry he has a responsibility to make sure that parts of the country needing assistance in industrial development do not suffer, and that moneys available to those parts of the country will not be lower.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to criticize the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is probably the happiest minister in the cabinet, as well as being the most co-operative. I merely want answers to a couple of questions.

First I want to know whether he is a continentalist or a nationalist. This is an important question. From my reading of a summary of a statement the Prime Minister made last week, in which he took an inventory of the just society, he seemed to say so far as the automotive industry is concerned, "We have lost it." Does the minister feel the same way? Is he putting up the white flag, surrendering, and saying he is an integrationalist and continentalist?

Think of Sweden, Mr. Chairman, with a population of around 8 million. It has an automotive business. Think of Italy, France, Germany, England and Japan; they all have developed automotive businesses. Yet here in Canada we are surrendering this field to the United States. When I look up in the gallery and see all those high priced officials it seems to me we could ask some of our experts in the research development area to develop this automobile business.

I hope the minister does not hold the same views as does the Prime Minister, and has ceased to be an integrationist. When I look across the chamber I try to find nationalists, but it is extremely difficult. So many are becoming continentalists. The only one I can think of who might be a nationalist is the hon. member for Scarborough East. He is an economist, and I understand he helped Walter Gordon, who is Canada's No. 1. nationalist. I should like to hear him say: "I am a nationalist." I should like to hear him set forth some of the ideas which he and Walter Gordon developed, and try to help Canada. The Postmaster General may be of the same ilk.

I should like to find as many nationalists on that side of the house as I can, because there is a terrible trend developing in Canada involving the complete collapse of any nationalist feelings. Again, I look over at the hon. member for York North who has been a very successful businessman in Canada and who has been making a great contribution to parliament up to this date. I should like to ask him whether he agrees with the trend in Canada today with regard to continentalism.

Mr. Danson: The hon. member was not around to hear my speech the other day.

Mr. Gilbert: I apoligize to the hon. member if I did not hear him. I hope he developed the theme of nationalism.

Mr. Danson: I will send the hon. gentleman a copy.

Mr. Gilbert: I would certainly appreciate a copy from the hon. member. When I think of the rift which developed during the leadership race, how the former minister of trade and commerce became a continentalist, and how the present Secretary of State for External Affairs took the continentalist view—it seems that the nationalist view was put down—it occurs to me there was not at any time any forceful exposition of an expressly Canadian viewpoint. I notice that the hon. member for Scarborough East is getting agitated. I think he should; I think he should get up and express to us his views on nationalism.

There is another point I should like to bring to the attention of the likeable minister, and that is the question of the profits which manufacturers of automobiles are making. I recall that last session a special committee of the House of Commons was set up to study prices to consumers. An attempt was made to investigate car prices, but it did not succeed. If the figures given by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North are correct—and they show that in some years there was a profit of 80 or 90 per cent on capital invested in the business, and that the overall profit on the capital operation is roughly 30 per cent—it is obvious that Canadians are being charged too much for their cars.

I should like to hear the minister say in a straightforward way that he will undertake to have this question referred to the standing committee which is responsible for corporate affairs, or to some other committee, so that we might study car prices in Canada. If Canadians are getting bilked, I believe the minister would be the last person to wish to see such a situation continue.

Looking across the chamber, I happened to notice the hon. member for York West. The other day he made a statement that the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs was a charade. I should like the hon. member to tell us just why he thinks this particular committee, which has been studying anti-dumping legislation, is a charade, and what alternative assistance could be provided to the minister in this important area.

Mr. Hales: Could the minister tell us when the chairman of the machinery and equipment advisory board was appointed, whether this is a full-time position, and who set the salary at $28,750. Could he also tell us the name of the chairman? While I am on my feet, perhaps the minister could give us a brief outline of what is meant by foreign services. I see here the phrase "administrative and foreign services". What is involved in "foreign services"?

Mr. Pepin: The foreign service section is composed of departmental officers in Europe and in Washington who are involved in the sale of Canadian defence material. The chairman of the advisory board is Mr. C. A. Annis. His salary was set by Treasury Board, and it is a full time job.

I do not wish to take time in which to answer the rather philosophic questions raised by the members of the New Democratic party. The debate about continentalism and nationalism is a very old one—as old as confederation, as old as Canada, as old as the world. I do not think we could resolve it tonight. Once I said, smilingly as usual, but seriously as usual, that I could be a continentalist if that were in the national interest. That is a better answer than hon. members might think it is. One does not solve these questions by a yes or no, or by an attitude which divides everything into black or white. The issue is much more complex than that. I am sure hon. members opposite realize they have touched on a debate which might last a very long time. The hon. member was trying, as he said, to "agitate" me; but he has failed, on this occasion.

Mr. Hales: Can the minister advise the committee as to his future plans concerning these foreign services? It seems to me it would be most unnecessary to have a foreign service in the department of Industry when we now have a Department of Trade and Commerce the estimates of which provide for the services of officials all over the world. Why have people duplicating their efforts, doing the same job?

Mr. Pepin: The answer is simple. They will be closely associated with the trade commissioner services.

Mr. Hales: Would not the minister be considering reducing the staff and letting the Department of Trade and Commerce do this work?

Mr. Pepin: I must tell the hon. member that these men operate in a highly specialized field. Trade commissioners are usually generalists. These officials are specialists, as opposed to the first group. But we can bring up this question when we introduce the legislation to create the new department. At that time I will report about the expectations we have of saving a few positions here and a few positions there, a few hundred thousand dollars here and a few hundred thousand dollars there. This will come in due course.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Hales: Under administration, vote 1, we have an amalgamation of industry and trade and commerce, yet the estimate shows an increase of $127,850 for telephones and telegrams. Since we are supposed to be amalgamating departments it seems to me that this is out of line and that there must be something wrong.

Mr. Pepin: I presume that the telephone bill was not previously for communications with the Department of Trade and Commerce. It was for phone calls outside of government. I do not see why this should change to any extent. I presume that the growth in the estimate is the natural growth in the importance of the department.

Mr. Hales: It must be a tremendous growth in any department of government to have an increase of $127,850 in the simple charge for telephones and telegrams.

Mr. Skoberg: Under professional and special services can the minister say how many outside consultants were used, and at the same time, inform us whether these services were tendered for, or sought on request by the department?

Mr. Pepin: I am informed that we seek bids for services, and after a proper analysis of the bids the best man wins.

Mr. Skoberg: Could the answer be made along the lines of how many bids there were, and how much was spent on outside services?

Mr. Pepin: As the debate goes on I will try and answer that question.

Mr. McCutcheon: While the minister is looking that up could he tell us what the extra half million dollars was for under this item?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, if we could proceed I will give the explanation at the end of the debate.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I still have some questions on the rapeseed item. Shall we take them on vote 3 or vote 1?

The Chairman: I think we can proceed on vote 1.

Mr. Gleave: I note that the grant to promote improvements in the manufacture of rapeseed is reduced from $180,000 to $144,000. Why has it been reduced, and what was the nature of the reduction?

Mr. Pepin: The obvious is apparently the truth. Some of the work has been done, so there is less need for more work, and consequently there is less need for more money.

Mr. Gleave: But our markets have not been improved that much.

Mr. Pepin: I am informed that the study will be completed this year, and that there is less need for money because the study is coming to a conclusion.

Mr. Gleave: These were studies to promote improvement in the manufacture of rapeseed products. Does the department do any work on the improvement of strains or varieties, or is that left entirely to the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. Pepin: It is a market study to promote improvement, and the study is coming to a conclusion. I presume if there is any promotion to be made the Department of Agriculture or the industry itself more probably will be responsible for it.

Mr. Gleave: I would also like information on the GATT negotiations. Was the rate of tariff on the entry of soybeans into the United States altered as a result of the GATT negotiations, and was the rate of tariff on rapeseed entering Japan altered as a result of those negotiations?

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. Pepin: I think the hon. member will want to be generous and accept my promise to write him and give him the proper information. This is something I do not have at the tip of my finger or in my book for that matter.

Mr. Gleave: All right, it would be fine if the minister would be kind enough to do that. I would also like to know the amount of money or effort which the Department of Trade and Commerce is spending on the promotion of the sale of rapeseed into Japanese and western European markets?

Mr. Pepin: I say "bis" to that.

The Chairman: Order. I would point out that we are dealing specifically with the estimates of the Department of Industry, and to the Chair it appears that this might be a question to be raised on the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, the rapeseed item is here. Certain amounts of money have been spent. I am interested in why these amounts of money have dropped $40,000 in the current year, at a time when export markets are of vital importance to us. I am quite willing to accept the minister's statement that he does not have the information at the moment but, Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to accept an implication that these questions should not be asked at this time. I think the tariff changes are of importance and that is why I asked the questions. If the minister is willing to give the answers to me in due time, this will be satisfactory.

I see no items here for the Canadian Wheat Board. I know that the Wheat Board to a large extent, almost entirely, is self-financing. I assume that is why there are no items here for that board, which comes under the Department of Trade and Commerce. I may say I am somewhat disappointed that the Department of Trade and Commerce is not spending some money promoting the sale of rapeseed in overseas markets. I had been under the impression that the Department of Trade and Commerce was making some effort to promote the sales of rapeseed in overseas markets, particularly Japan. I am surprised, when these estimates are before us, that there is no evidence in them that the Department of Trade and Commerce is spending time and money on the promotion and marketing of rapeseed. I would be very pleased if the minister could assure me that they are spending some time and money on the promotion of rapeseed.

Mr. Pepin: Everything the hon. member is saying is true. There is no credit here for the Wheat Board because it is a self-sustaining institution. Money is being spent for rapeseed promotion. Probably the hon. member was not present when this matter was raised. There has been a mistake. These are indicated as the estimates of trade and commerce in the blue book, but it includes only industry. The estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce are going to a committee. Only the estimates of the Department of Industry are taken here to day.

Mr. Gleave: Am I to understand from this, Mr. Chairman and Mr. Minister, that there may be some moneys spent on the promotion of rapeseed but those estimates will go to a particular standing committee?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, sir.

Mr. Skoberg: Under the item "Expenses of conferences, seminars and sundries," I notice there is a reduction of close to $50,000. I should like to know why and in what area the conferences have been reduced, because I believe these have been most beneficial throughout the country.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Pepin: Well, Mr. Chairman, I really cannot give an answer to that. May I suggest, as in the previous case, that I write to the hon. gentleman, because I simply did not expect to be questioned on such details. The only answer I could find would be out of my imagination, and I do not think, Mr. Chairman, you would want me to give that type of an answer.

Mr. Skoberg: I might agree with that, so long as the minister realizes that these conferences are most important throughout Canada.

Mr. Pepin: I do.

Mr. Skoberg: If the minister realizes that, I will accept the explanation.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to continue with some of the questions I put to the minister, to see whether he would at least reply more directly to some of them. Does not the minister feel that the situation which exists in Canada now is much more conducive to the development of military research or defend research than it is to non-military research? I have in mind specifically the kind of grant that is provided which enables industries engaged in defence production to be completely reimbursed in terms of original grants, whereas if research is done in the civilian sector the industry must pay for it if the project should turn out to be profitable. Does not this in fact provide greater encouragement for available capital to go into the defence sector, rather than in the civilian sector of the economy.

Mr. Pepin: I think I have said everything I could say on that subject. I have indicated quite clearly that some of the pangs suffered by my hon. friend are also in part mine, although I realize better than he does the seeding effect of defence production. I have already indicated also that I am looking forward to even more money being given to development and growth in the civilian sector. So I believe I have indicated that I understand his preoccupations. I share them in part.

I also said that this orientation had been undertaken by the department before I came in. It is not often that a minister does not claim to be the originator of such moves! This orientation had already been taken, in the sense that less money was being assigned proportionately speaking to the defence part of the industry, and more money to the civilian side. I have indicated that if my hon. friend would like to do the mathematics, a combination of IRDIA and PAIT, the two programs I talked about this afternoon, would give him quite a lot of governmental support and as much as he would get on a defence project. So, I do not think there is too much disagreement between us. I feel that the debate on this subject, however interesting it is to me as well as to my hon. friend, might now be suspended if not concluded.

Mr. Broadbent: On that point, Mr. Chairman, perhaps we do differ in our mathematical calculation, but more specifically on the question of the degree of pain that the minister claims he shares with me. Incidentally I did not use that term myself originally. I suggest, with respect, he is much more in a position than I am to deal with the problem of his pain.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I properly understood the answer to a question I asked regarding the professional and special services. Was the minister to give us that information later?

Mr. Pepin: I can only read from the document which has been give to me. "The object of the vote for professional and special services covers fees and commissions for professional and special services. The following constitute the major items of the increase. The first is the study of a Canadian communications satellite." I should have thought of that one, because it is a $550,000 item which accounts for the increase.

Item 1 agreed to.

3. Grants as detailed in the Estimates, $1,993,000.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would attempt to get me out of the sea of confusion here. There is an item headed grants to the Canadian Standards Association, and the amount is $50,000. Then there is a grant to assist in establishing a national standards association. On top of that I understand the department intends to set up a standards council of Canada. Would the minister try to tell the house what this is all about. It looks to me as though one is established, one is to be increased, and so on.

Mr. Pepin: Well, the $50,000 item apparently is a standard grant of money given annually to the association. The $80,000 item is the expenditure incurred in developing the legislation that would create the national standards council.

Mr. Hales: I thought the minister had told the house earlier this evening that no money had been spent on setting up the standards council of Canada. Now we are told that $80,000 has been spent to set it up. The point I raised this afternoon is that a standards council of Canada is being set up, and $80,000 is being asked to set it up. The show is on the road, and now you will come back to the house some day to ask that legislation be established to set up a national standards council of Canada. I do not think this is the way to do business. The minister should come into the house and say that he wants to set up a standards council of Canada, explain what the idea is, and then the house could approve or disapprove. At that time he could ask that the money be provided to proceed with it, and the house would give its approval. This is no way to run a business, and I think the government should stop this practice which has been followed in so many cases. The manpower department set up a whole training program, and then came to the house to ask for its approval.

Mr. Pepin: I hope I did not say it as my hon. friend indicated I did. We will look at it tomorrow in Hansard. I think I said the money was not being spent as if the national council existed. I thought that was what I said. In any event the $80,000 is money assigned for the preparation of the legislation. My hon. friend has some interesting views on this, but it seems to me that when you come with a bill to the House of Commons you do not come only with a resolution; you come also with a bill that will be taken through first, second and third readings. So it seems to me that some preliminary work must be done even in order to bring the suggestions to the attention of members of the house. At any rate I will see to it that as little money as possible is spent.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. Hales: I think that not only the minister but also the government probably is in a very unorthodox position. What would happen, for instance, if the house turned down the legislation for the setting up the standards council of Canada? I for one have very grave and sincere views concerning the setting up the standards council of Canada, when there is an associaton now which is doing a good job and which will probably continue to do it a lot better and more cheaply than the government could do it. I do not believe it is necessary to set up another bureaucracy in order to do such a thing. However, the government intends to go ahead and set up a standards council whether we want it or not. I do not think we should be asked to vote $80,000 to set up this council, and I am of two views as to whether I should allow these estimates to pass tonight. As far as I am concerned, I will have to make a decision in this regard.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure what this vote involves, so far as the standards council is concerned. I hope the minister will give some consideration to the establishment of standards in the field of international trade. The necessity arises for someone to make a decision whether Canada, the United States and the western hemisphere should superimpose standards on the rest of the world. I am sure the minister is aware that most international trade is carried out on the basis of the metric system, yet we in Canada are still operating on the basis of pounds, ounces, and drams. Most other countries in the world operate on the basis of a straight metric system.

Following the establishment of this standards council, will one of its jobs be the creation of a system to maintain equity on the international trading scene? Will a system be established to give an indication that Canada will be in a position to develop standards compatible with those in existence in the rest of the world? It has been my contention for some time, and obviously by the number of similar bills on the order paper the contention of a number of other members, that the Canadian system should be changed in all forms to a decimal system. While some countries do not use the decimal system as far as currency is concerned, most of these countries use this system in terms of weight. This creates some difficulty in international trade. Because of the monetary structure throughout the world, we now find ourselves in a position of advantage in relation to countries using the metric system. This causes a great deal of confusion. I have in mind the standards of the western hemisphere in respect of automobiles made here and automobiles imported from France, England and many continental areas including, Italy, Germany, and other countries.

If we intend to establish a standards council the minister should outline the government's function in this regard. I am sure there is going to be some disruption, no matter when we decide to change over, but it is probably easier to adopt a total and complete decimal system when several countries are experiencing serious monetary difficulties, than at any other time. If we are to set up a standards council which will interest itself in trade, and the development of our industries, some consideration should be given to the standardization of a system of measures. Canada should then convert to a specific system, rather than waiting until a system is developed which will be more to our advantage.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I feel that the hon. member for Timiskaming and the hon. member for Trois-Rivières have the same preoccupation. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières has written to me on a number of occasions regarding this specific matter. When this matter comes back before the house I will explain the relationship between the proposed council and the metric system. One of the functions of that council, I am sure, at least I hope, will be to study and propose methods of implementing this system in Canada. My hon. friend is aware that we are a neighbour to the United States, and even if a large percentage of world trade was carried out in the metric system, the United States is an important customer of ours, and that country has not changed its system as yet.

I am sorry that I may have misinformed the hon. member for Wellington. The amount of $50,000 is an annual grant to the National Standards Association. Perhaps I should have checked first, but I am now informed that the $80,000 grant to the national standards council is for that council when it comes into being. I am sorry to have given the wrong information.

Mr. Gilbert: I should like to direct the minister's attention to the grants to the manufacturers in Canada who apply for government insured loans under the agricultural adjustments assistance program in relation to the Kennedy round agreements. I note the amount is $650,000. I do not expect the minister to have details tonight, but I should like to know some of the facts in relation to the larger grants to particular companies. I have in mind government grants to these companies during the transitional period resulting from these Kennedy round agreements. They apparently continue to have a chamber of commerce application to the disadvantage of the employees who work for the companies. I should like to know the results of a study made in respect of these grants to manufacturers during the transitional period. Perhaps the minister can give us some indication of the amount of money these companies receive as a result of these agreements.

I was under the impression that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance when introducing these estimates said that these grants had not been taken up by the manufacturers. I must have been wrong. I would appreciate it if the minister, if not tonight, would inform me as to some of these major grants. Perhaps he could do so by writing me a letter.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, under item No. 3, grants to industrial research organizations, the minister referred to agricultural machinery. If that is not so I apologize, and suggest I misunderstood because of my inability to understand French.

Mr. Pepin: In my opening remarks I was referring to automotive machinery.

Mr. Skoberg: I understood the minister also referred to other machinery, particularly agricultural machinery.

Mr. Pepin: I am informed that agricultural machinery for the farmer is tariff free, so it is not covered in any event.

Mr. Skoberg: I believe some suggestion was made in so far as research is concerned, and I should like to suggest to the minister that there is dastardly neglect in respect of the agricultural economy. I would ask the minister whether he has given any consideration to industrial research associations interested in testing farm machinery. Many years ago the agricultural machinery administration for Saskatchewan made some study of this matter. At that time it came under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture. I presume now that this could come within the general scope of research associations within the jurisdiction of the minister's department.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I must say that I was not able to follow the translation clearly, but this afternoon I understood the minister to suggest that agricultural machinery would be considered under this item. I would like once again to ask him whether the government is taking into consideration at this time the testing of agricultural machinery.

The Chairman: Shall vote 3 carry?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow up the questions of the hon. member for Wellington a few moments ago. I noticed that the grant to the Canadian Standards Association of $50,000 is a new item this year; nothing was spent on this item last year. I would ask the minister this question: Is it correct that there is now a Canadian Standards Association?

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Mr. Monteith: This is a grant of $50,000 to them this year only, or might it be continued in future years?

Mr. Pepin: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that this is an annual event. Second, I understand also—

Mr. Monteith: I am sorry to interrupt, Mr. Chairman. Will it be an annual grant from now on?

Mr. Pepin: It has been annual until now.

Mr. Monteith: Where did it appear before?

Mr. Pepin: I understand that the situation will be reviewed after the council has reported. I presume we will accept the recommendation of the council as to the grant made to the national standards association.

Mr. Monteith: I am sorry to show my ignorance, Mr. Chairman, but the grant of $50,000 appears as a new item this year at this particular spot in the blue book. There is no corresponding item for last year.

Mr. Pepin: Apparently the reason is that it was paid by Trade and Commerce in the past.

Mr. Monteith: It must appear somewhere in the 1967-68 estimates. Perhaps the minister would inquire as to what page in the blue book it did appear.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I have a note here—

Mr. Monteith: The minister did not answer my question.

Mr. Pepin: I am looking for the answer, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order, please. As I understand it, the minister is finding the answer. Meanwhile we will continue with the hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, possibly the minister should pay attention to me, because we may not understand each other too well if he does not. I have here a note that the minister referred to the procuring of equipment and production machinery, referring I believe to farm machinery. I wonder whether he would give me an answer as to whether in his statement this afternoon he referred specifically to farm machinery. The minister can take this question as notice and give me an answer later.

Mr. Pepin: I did not.

Mr. Skoberg: I did not hear the answer, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I did not refer today to agricultural machinery, but I did a few days ago. The committee may recall that this matter arose in the question period, I think last Thursday or Friday. I indicated at the time, with respect to drying facilities, the attitude the Minister of Finance and myself were taking on the matter. Is this what is now preoccupying the hon. member?

Mr. Skoberg: Hansard will probably show it tomorrow. But if the minister did not refer to research in respect of farm machinery, I am quite prepared to accept his answer.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, the last item at the bottom of page 236 refers to a grant to assist in establishing a national standards association. The expenditure in this item drops from $150,000 to $80,000. Perhaps the minister could explain the economy. The wording looks a little peculiar, if we spent $150,000 a year ago and we now have a grant to assist in establishing it. How long will it be before it becomes established? Is this a continuing proposition? Is it established every year?

Mr. Pepin: I understand that it is now believed it can be operated for $80,000 a year. As far as I am concerned, everything is ready for the introduction of this legislation in the house, as soon as we find time to do so. I refer to legislation to create a national standards association. To answer the hon. member for Perth, the reason—this is a bit tricky—is that $48,000 was paid last year to the C.S.A. by way of a supplementary estimate. I do not know why a supplementary estimate was not included here.

Mr. Monteith: I do not know either. These are supposed to be revised estimates.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, as I understand the minister, he is asking us to provide $80,000 toward setting up a national standards association for Canada.

Mr. Pepin: That is right.

Mr. Hales: Last year the department got $150,000 toward setting up the same association. So there is $230,000 that has already been spent in establishing a national standards association. The minister now tells us that the legislation is ready and he will introduce it into the house for us to pass. I believe this is the point we have reached.

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I shall move that vote 3 be stood, and that we do not grant the $80,000 to set up a national standards association for Canada until the minister presents legislation to the house in order that we know what a national standards council involves, what its ramifications are, what it stands for and whether it will cover those matters in which we are interested. When we have the legislation we will know the answers to these questions. I do not think the house should vote $80,000 until we know what the minister has in mind. I do not know the procedure and whether I would have to write out my motion and give it to you now, Mr. Chairman, but I move:

> That vote 3 of the revised estimates of the department of industry be not now passed until the minister presents legislation to this house, and it is passed, setting up a national standards association of Canada.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I am very interested in keeping my reputation as a flexible man, a smiling man. So I accept the suggestion made by the hon. member for Wellington and suggest that we agree with the motion he made.

Mr. Hales: I thank the minister, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Is there agreement that this item stand?

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Chairman. I am very much in favour of this item. I note that the department has already dropped the amount from $150,000 last year to $80,000 this year. I also support the idea of the hon. member for Wellington that we should have more detail in this regard. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières, I am sure, and myself would very much oppose dropping this item if it meant there would not be a continuation of the study respecting the metric system and the standards, weights and measurements used in Canada. On the other hand I agree with the hon. member for Wellington that we should have more details in this regard. I am sure that if the minister thinks about it for a minute or two he will be able to give us the reason for the department asking for this amount. For the minister to agree that we drop it, which I gather is what he is suggesting—

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, my mother was very right. She said to me one day, "If you try to please everybody, you will not please anybody."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pepin: Let me try to make it clear. The $150,000 for last year was not spent because legislation was not introduced in time. Plans did not materialize as rapidly as was hoped. The reason for the $80,000 is the expectation that this would be for one part of next year. I presume it was expected that legislation would be passed about March or April, and then there would be enough provided to maintain the council for the rest of the year. This is why I do not propose to say any more, in an effort to be conciliatory.

Mr. Peters: I am sympathetic to both positions, but I do not want to get into the position of supporting neither one. Even if we have some money left over from last year, it does not seem to me it can be directed for a specific purpose. I believe that the establishment of a standards council is worth while, but I agree also that the minister should be more specific about what it is going to do. I have a very definite direction in which I want to see this council progress. I am sure that the hon. member for Trois-Rivières agrees that we want to see this council directed toward international trade. This will involve some compromise at least with the metric system, and the standards we have been using for our trade. We may have enough money to carry on this year, but I think the argument made by the hon. member for Wellington will be repeated next year. He probably wants some declaration as to the purpose of that item. I believe this is really all that is being requested.

Mr. Pepin: I did not want to get into a big quarrel about this because it seemed to me to be a tempest in a teapot. The hon. member for Wellington asked me to cut it out, so I said all right and I would bring it back when the bill is introduced. Nobody is suffering, any way you look at it. I would have preferred to let the item remain, but by hon. friend on the other side, who is a keen defender of public finance, feels that it should be out. I do not want to quarrel with it so I am suggesting, in the spirit of Advent and in the interests of advancement, that we agree.

Mr. Gleave: Perhaps I can get the $36,000 back for rapeseed.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), mentioned my name several times and once again I will agree with him. I would not be very happy if that item no longer appeared under that credit, especially if we were not assured that it would not hurt in any way that standards office which would provide for the changing of our measure system, as far as the eventual adoption of the decimal system is concerned.

Like the hon. member for Timiskaming, I am one of those who are convinced that we are even a little late here in adopting the decimal system. England set up a commission which studied the problem and decided that the decimal or metric system, if you wish, would be applied over a certain number of years; it is a change which takes 7 or 8 years. France has been using it for a long time as well as almost all the countries of Europe. Australia adopted it recently. The United States also have set up a commission which is studying the problem and we are told that it is preparing a report and will recommend that the system be adopted.

This means that we, in Canada, will have to follow, but to be able to do so, some organization will have to establish a modus vivendi, a program enabling as to adopt the decimal system within a given number of years, and according to methods prepared in advance. Such an organization, and I refer to what the minister said earlier, should have a minimum budget enabling it to undertake studies and report later.

I said that we are behindhand and the minister stated that he would prefer that this be included in that item. If he prefers it, it is precisely because he has foreseen the adoption of a piece of legislation which will have to be considered by a competent commission.

I had the opportunity to receive from the minister some quite enlightening information in that connection and I think that the house should not cut that item, because it is quite important for the modernization of our weight system and also the combination of our measure system with that of European countries adopted by most commonwealth countries, including Australia and soon to be adopted by the United States.

Now, I think that the amount provided should be left to the minister, because it is a rather small amount and there is no likelihood of any scandal or squandering. We would be foresighted if we gave to that commission the means to report to the government in the shortest possible time and suggest the measures to be taken in order to apply the decimal system. I support the suggestion of my friend the honourable member for Timiskaming and I think that the house should also approve it.

[English]

Mr. Hales: I was in hopes that we would pass these estimates tonight, and I do not want to delay them. However, a principle is involved here. It is not a question of deciding whether we are going to have the metric system, whether we are going to have standard sizes for ladies dresses or whether we are going to have standards for electrical motors. The principle involved here is this, that the minister should present some form of legislation, so we know what is involved in a standards council of Canada. Then, I think the house would be only too happy to pass the vote for $80,000, or whatever it takes. However, I do not think we should pass the vote for $80,000 when we do not know what it is for, or what form the legislation is going to take. This was my point in asking that vote 3 should not be agreed to at the moment, but that we could proceed with the other items. The minister may wish to enlarge on what I have said.

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee, then, that vote 3 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pepin: I have accepted the suggestion made by my hon. friend, so I do not think there should be any difficulty in dropping it.

Mr. Hales: By "dropping it", you mean there is no item of $80,000 in there, I take it? Is that agreed?

The Chairman: There are certain procedural difficulties that have arisen at this point, and I should like to consult with the officers at the table. There is some uncertainly in the mind of the Chair as to exactly what agreement has been arrived at between the minister and the hon. member for Wellington. Perhaps the minister would like to explain, so we would be in a better position to make a decision.

Mr. Pepin: I will take the contrary position. As I understand it, the hon. member and the committee would be willing to pass vote 3 with the exception of the $80,000 assigned to the national standards association, so perhaps we could do it that way without getting into procedural difficulties.

Mr. Hales: If it might assist the Chair, I shall withdraw my motion in view of the suggestion made by the minister.

Amendment (Mr. Hales) withdrawn.

The Chairman: This, then, involves a procedural difficulty in that another minister has to move that the item be reduced by the sum of $80,000. If possible the Chair would like a motion to that effect.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, could I ask a question?

An hon. Member: Sit down. You are not a minister.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps we may clear up this temporary procedural impasse before we move on.

Mr. Davis: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready to debate the motion?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, before you put the question I should like further clarification of the minister's explanation regarding the $150,000 vote in 1967-68.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): As I was entering the chamber I understood the minister to say that this $150,000 would be carried over. I also heard a reference to the fact that it would be added to the $80,000.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I said that the $150,000 was not spent and was returned to the receiver general. This is an entirely new item, and we have now agreed to pass vote 3 with the exception of this amount of $80,000 for the national standards association.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I should like to know whether this $150,000 has been spent. It is my understanding that any vote not used last year cannot in any way, shape or form be spent again by the government unless it is reintroduced in this house in the proper way. If $150,000 was not spent last year, then it should not be spent in some other way without being reintroduced.

Mr. Pepin: This is why we introduced a new vote for $80,000.

Amendment (Mr. Davis) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall vote 3 as reduced pass?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Item agreed to.

(The following items were agreed to:)

5. To develop and sustain the technological capability of Canadian defence industry for the purpose of defence export sales or civil export sales arising from that capability

(a) by supporting selected development programs,
(b) by paying one-half of the cost of the acquisition of new equipment required for plant modernization, and
(c) by supporting the establishment of production capacity and qualified sources for production of component parts and materials, on terms and conditions approved by the Treasury Board and to authorize, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, total commitments of $150,000,000 for the foregoing purposes during the current and subsequent fiscal years, $32,000,000.

10. To advance the technological capability of Canadian manufacturing industry by supporting selected civil (non-defence) development projects on terms and conditions approved by Treasury Board and to authorize, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, total commitments of $40,000,000 for the foregoing purposes during the current and subsequent fiscal years, $10,000,000.

15. Capital subsidies for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels in accordance with regulations of the Governor in Council, $32,500,000.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, the amount shown under this item is $9.5 million less than the previous years' amount. I am wondering why this particular expenditure has been curtailed, since this money was instrumental in providing much needed employment in our shipyards while adding to our commercial and our fishing fleets. Without a shipbuilding subsidy, our shipbuilders cannot hope to compete with builders from the United Kingdom, The Netherlands or Japan. This is due in part to our high labour costs and the high cost of materials, and due also in no small measure to the present high rate of taxation.

At the present time there are no ships under construction in my constituency. However, this does not indicate that none are required, not only in my constituency or in Nova Scotia, but throughout the Atlantic provinces. As our fishing vessels become obsolete they must be replaced. At the present time there is need for new scallop draggers and ships are required for the queen crab industry. However, unless the government recognizes its responsibility to our shipbuilding industry and to our fishermen by establishing a shipbuilding policy, the ships presently required by Canadians will be built in foreign lands. This will only aggravate our present serious unemployment problem.

When a ship is built in Europe it does nothing for the shipbuilding industry in Canada. It does not contain any wood or steel supplied by Canadians. It does not contain any heating equipment, any electronic gear or have on its hull paint manufactured by Canadians. I know of no industry comparable to the shipbuilding industry that makes a greater impact on our over-all economy. For the construction of a ship is comparable to the building of a small village: it needs heat and light and power, and a whole multitude of materials, right down to the wooden rolling pin for the chef in the galley.

[The Chairman.]

The minister and the government think nothing of increasing the amount for professional and special services to $1.6 million, or spending $127,000 more on telephones, as the minister informed us this evening. But when it has under consideration a matter of such great importance as assistance for our commercial and fishing vessels, the amounts are cut down as an economy move.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the minister is aware of the impact that the present lack of policy on the part of the government has on the shipbuilding industry. With no ships to build, our shipwrights are forced to seek other occupations and they can soon lose their skills. I would also point out that the present amount of subsidy is insufficient to cover the cost differential between Canadian and foreign builders.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister to exert some pressure on his colleagues to provide a shipbuilding policy for Canada at an early date. Could the minister give me any indication of what his department is planning, so as to provide this much needed assistance to this very important industry, one which is of great concern to so many Canadians?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, this vote has been cut from $42 million to $32 million, not because it is an indication of a lack of interest but simply because under the present circumstances the demand for shipbuilding at the moment led us to believe that $32 million would be sufficient. My colleague the Minister of Fisheries recently had conversations with representatives of the government of Nova Scotia, and they agreed that there would be a slow-down in construction this year in view of upward trends in the shipbuilding industry in previous years. The reduction from $42 million to $32 million does not imply lack of interest on the part of the government, but simply an analysis of the facts.

Item agreed to.

(The following items were agreed to:)

LOANS, INVESTMENTS AND ADVANCES

Industry and Trade and Commerce—

Industry—

L75. Advances, subject to the approval of the Treasury Board, to assist Canadian defence industry with plant modernization in amounts not to exceed one-half of the cost of the acquisition of new equipment, such advances to be recovered on sale of the equipment to defence Industry, $8,000,000.

L80. Loans, under the Adjustment Assistance Program related to the Kennedy Round agreements, in the current and subsequent fiscal years and in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the Governor in Council, to assist manufacturers in Canada who have been determined by a board established pursuant to section 15 of the Department of Industry Act:

(a) to be seriously injured or threatened with serious injury by reason of increased imports attributable to Kennedy Round tariff reductions made by Canada resulting in exceptional problems of adjustment; and

(b) to be unable to obtain sufficient financing on reasonable terms from other sources for purposes of making the necessary adjustment, $10,000,000.

The Chairman: This concludes our consideration of the estimates of the department of industry. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to rise, report certain resolutions, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed to the adjournement motion perhaps I can confirm that the business for tomorrow will be second reading of the bill to amend the Customs Tariff.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL PARKS—GLACIER—INQUIRY AS TO LOGGING OPERATIONS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on November 26 I directed the following question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development:

Has the government, through the national parks board, announced that logging operations will be allowed in Glacier National Park, and particularly in that section bordering the trans-Canada highway through Rogers pass. If so, when will logging operations begin?

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

At the time Mr. Speaker suggested that the above question ought to be raised at the time of adjournment, and I have taken advantage of the privilege of raising it at this time. I feel that this matter is important and urgent enough to warrant a statement being made by the department concerned. Of course, if the answer to my question is negative, there would be no need for concern over logging in Glacier National Park. Since raising my question last week, however, over logging in Glacier National Park, we had a C.B.C. television program on loggin in Algonquin Park, Ontario, which comes under provincial jurisdiction, I believe.

It would appear that the parks boards of both Ontario and the federal government allow logging in their park reserves. It also appears that there is an increasing relaxation of restrictions which were laid down years ago. As the C.B.C. depicted in its television program last night, logging of hardwoods in Algonquin Park has been allowed. The hardwood supplies material for the surrounding mills. Much of this material goes to the furniture manufacturing industry.

Perhaps we should ask why there is a shortage of hardwood stands in eastern Canada. The answer is obvious. Over the years governments, federal and provincial, have never had sound conservation policies in forestry. In these instances the lack of proper forest conservation has caused almost complete exhaustion of commercial stands of hardwoods which are required to keep the sawmills and furniture manufacturing industries alive. The policy has been "Cut out and get out," a weak policy by weak governments that gives the green light to commercial operators to move into our parks where some of the best timber reserves are still left.

May I point out that our national parks have been set aside to preserve for Canadians for all time part of the great natural heritage with which Canada has been so richly endowed. These parklands must be protected at all costs against greedy operators and weak politicians, whether they be in provincial or federal fields, who worship the almighty dollar above everything else.

Glacier National Park sits astride that portion of the trans-Canada highway which goes through Rogers pass. This is the most scenic drive found anywhere in Canada, a veritable tourists' paradise. Under no circumstances must we ever allow commercial logging to mar the beauty of this particularly scenic area.

I speak out against commercial logging operations in any of our national parks. In a few short years in Canada we have virtually eliminated a number of our renewable natural resources, through stupidity with regard to conservation. Surely some remnants of our original Canadian heritage should be allowed to remain unspoiled for future generations?

On occasions it might be necessary to remove some timber from national park areas because fire or disease has destroyed certain stands. It might be necessary to do so for our own protection. In these instances removal should be carried out under the strictest park supervision possible; the logging methods involved should relate to a conservation policy, and in no circumstances should commercial logging enterprises be allowed in our parks. Reforestation should immediately follow the removal of material damaged by fire or disease.

With these thoughts in mind I ask the minister to give the house an explanation why any logging should be allowed in Glacier National Park. I ask him to tell us the acreage and approximate volume involved. Will the timber be put up for public auction? What is the estimated revenue to be returned to the parks branch? Have any contracts been let to date? What safeguards have been provided to ensure maximum protection for the park area?

We should be given this information. However, I serve notice that all my life I have fought for sound conservation policies in relation to all our natural resources. Parks are of special interest to me, and I have no intention of remaining silent if there is any move to liquidate these resources which have been set aside as national park areas for all time for Canadians to enjoy. Under no circumstances must we ever relax our guard as far as these parks are concerned. We have a solemn duty to preserve these areas for future generations, to pass them on as unimpaired as possible, and I urge the minister to give us as much information as he can this evening, trusting he can announce that a decision has been taken against logging operations in this particular national park.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I should like to make just one point, first of all. The hon. member spoke at length about Algonquin Park. I must tell him immediately we have nothing to do with this—it is a provincial park, not a federal park. There is no cutting operation in any of the national parks of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chrétien: I welcome the hon. member's lecture on conservation, but there is no one who is more interested than I am in preserving the natural beauty of our land in the national parks. The department has a policy under which permits may not be given to anyone to cut timber in our national parks, or try to exploit any of the natural resources there. This is because we believe the parks should be preserved in their present state for people to enjoy, both now and in days to come.

As far as Glacier park is concerned, I am well aware of the problem to which the hon. member has referred. I must inform him that I have looked into this matter, because only a few weeks ago the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Stewart) wrote me a letter saying he was very much concerned about these problems because there are four national parks in his riding. I found that these companies have long standing rights to conduct certain operations there. I took steps to permit the federal government, through my department, to buy these rights back because I would not like these companies to cut any wood in the Glacier National Park.

I am convinced that this is the right policy for us to follow. We are conducting negotiations right now and we are hopeful we will reach an agreement with them. If we do not arrive at an agreement with them, we will use other powers that exist under our jurisdiction.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING—REPORTED REGIONAL LIMITATIONS ON NUMBERS ACCEPTED

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, the question I raised has a great importance for those who wish to take advantage of the retraining, and they are numerous in my riding.

An early winter has put a stop to some building operations before the expected date and, as a result, the number of the unemployed has increased. Moreover, the fact that the government has abandoned the winter works program is not likely to remedy the situation.

Another reason why more people want to take advantage of retraining is the fact that some dairy producers will be excluded from that production next year, and under the rules of the Canadian Dairy Commission in the next few years, they will have to turn to other sectors, now, in order to be ready, they will necessarily have to take retraining.

Others wish to spend their time doing something more interesting than remaining idle. This applies especially to the young, for when one is young, one is full of energy; and when one is idle, one is exposed to doing things which are not advisable. So an interest must be taken in the young in order to give them the opportunity of doing something good instead of doing something evil. They wish to take courses to improve their education or to increase their knowledge in some field or other.

I receive letters from people who complain about not being able to take courses because they have not been accepted by the manpower centres in their area; and this, even when at times it would be possible for the schools to accommodate them.

Must the officials of the manpower centres apply some standard before accepting a candidate who wants to take a retraining course? Is there a maximum age? Some people who took courses in 1967-68 are refused in 1968-69. Why are they rejected?

Here is an example. Someone wrote to tell me that last year he registered at his local manpower centre for a retraining course as a heavy machinery operator. He was told that he needed a 9th grade education to register for that course. Since he had gone only to the 7th grade, he chose to take his 8th grade of schooling to go on to the 9th grade, and he finished with marks of 89 per cent.

Last fall, he went to the same office to register for his ninth grade, but he was turned down because, he was told, he was over 35 years old and only those under 35 were accepted for the ninth grade this year. But as he wanted to complete his ninth grade this year at all costs, he went to the regional school board, of his area, and he was accepted. He is now taking subjects for his ninth grade since November 18, but without financial assistance.

Others are rejected because there is not enough room in the schools. Is that the true reason? Farmers would like to follow refresher courses in agriculture but they are turned down.

It is urgent, Mr. Speaker, that the people interested in the training courses should know as soon as possible where they stand, so that they do not run the risk of losing their school year.

We speak rightly of the establishment of a just society. I suggest it should not remain at the project stage. We should not lose a minute in order to make it a reality. Many persons are denied, for a thousand and one reasons, the benefits of training courses. Is that the way to prepare them to bring their contribution to the achievement of a just society which will finally enable everyone to enjoy a decent living?

Society is troubled with the very serious problem of social welfare allowances paid to valid persons that could contribute, through their work, to the exploitation of our country's resources for their benefit as well as that of the whole community, thus giving back confidence in work efficiency.

I therefore ask the responsible minister to have amended the regulations on retraining courses, if it is so indicated, so that a larger number of people can take advantage of them before the year is too far advanced.

Finally, if the problem is financial, it is time for the government to take the bull by the horns and make financially possible what can be achieved humanly and physically.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to reply to the honourable member.

First of all I wish to thank him for the interest he shows in our manpower development programs. That much interest in those programs surely indicate that they are good. It is obvious that any new institution takes a few months, and often a few years, before attaining its maturity.

However, I note with interest that the people in his riding are interested in the progressive policy our government has put forward, which will certainly lead us towards a just society more rapidly than any Créditiste government could.

HOUSING—OSHAWA—AVAILABILITY OF DEFENCE DEPARTMENT PROPERTY

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, it is a general duty of a member of parliament, I believe, to try on the one hand, to speak out on problems that generally are important to the nation as a whole, and on the other, to speak out on issues which have a more direct bearing with regard to his own constituency. Tonight I should like to speak very briefly about a problem which fits into both categories. I have in mind the question of housing.

It was recently announced by the Department of National Defence that the Oshawa wireless station would be available for disposal on March 31, 1969. This station is located on 275 acres of land. As soon as this announcement was made a number of interested citizens in my constituency immediately raised the question concerning the suitability of this land for housing. This is the reason I say the issue is both of local and national concern. Housing is a national problem.

Specifically three organizations in my constituency, the United Automobile Workers of America, Local 222; the Royal Canadian Legion, Oshawa Branch 431 and the Canadian Corps Association, unit 42 of Oshawa, all approached me on the question of inquiring about the suitability of this land for housing for veterans. I made such an inquiry and have been advised that a feasibility study is being carried on in respect of this land, to see whether it would be appropriate for the construction of homes for veterans.

My point, which I attempted to raise in the house the other day, is whether the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who is responsible for housing, would commit himself to the view, if the feasibility study that is being carried out on this land turns out to be positive in nature, that this land which is in the midst of a large metropolitan region would be used for the construction of homes. Would the minister in fact assure the house that some arrangement will be made for this public land to be used for housing, and more particularly that it will be used for this purpose without being turned over to private speculators?

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, because my question was ruled out of order at the time I posed it, I have discussed the matter in this form this evening. So far, most of my requests on behalf of my constituents on this matter have been in the interests of veterans. Whether or not it would be equitable to use the entire 275 acres for veterans is a question I have not completely settled in my own mind. Certainly a good portion of this land should be used for this purpose, provided it is suitable. The main question seems to be whether the minister responsible for housing will ensure that, if this public land is suitable for this purpose the government will make it available.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the member for having drawn this problem, which concerns his riding to the attention of the house.

As he said himself, this is a problem on which we are not yet ready to make a decision, since it necessitates preliminary studies regarding the possibility of establishing housing lots in that part of the land which belongs to the Department of National Defence. However, I can assure him that the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who is in charge of the housing problems in Canada, will certainly take into account the representations which have been made in the house and, if necessary, will negotiate with his former department, in order to make the best possible use of those lands in the interest of all Canadians.
