—Foreign corporation—Action by shareholder to compel inspection of books.]—A shareholder in a company incorporated under the laws of a foreign state, but having its principal place of business, offices and works in Nova Scotia, may maintain an action in the Courts of this Province to enforce the performance of duties imposed upon the company in relation to its shareholders. The non-residence of the shareholders is no bar to such action There is no distinction between a foreign and a domestic corporation in respect to the relief asked in such case, and notwith standing the rule not to interfere in matters of internal management, the Court has power to compel the inspection of books in proper cases. Proof of a foreign statute by admission is as effective as proof by an expert in haec verba. In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be assumed that the rules of construction in the foreign state are the same as in this Province. There being no individual right of action to enforce compliance with the provisions of statutes of this Province intended for the protection of the public, the decree appealed from was varied to this extent.

—Non-registered foreign company—Registering as the owner of lands.]—The registerar is not justified in refusing to register a non-registered foreign company as the owner of land.

Ex parte New Vancouver Coal Mining and Land Company, 9 B.C.R. 571, reversing 2 B.C.R. 8.

—Power of attorney—Foreign company—Form.]—A foreign company may give a general power of attorney to its solicitors to act in all the causes in which it is or may be concerned. A power of attorney signed in the name of the foreign company by its president and secretary, before a notary in England, and sealed with the company's seal, is valid. The power of attorney may be given after the institution of the action.

-Registration and licensing fee in N. W. T.]-(1) Subject to the controlling powers of the Dominion Parliament, the Legislature of the North-West Territories has the like power to provide for the licensing of companies doing business in the Territories as a province has within its boundaries. (2) Such powers include the right to require a company incorpor-ated under the Dominion "Companies Act" to register with an officer of the Territories and to deposit a copy of the charter and regulations of the company and a power of attorney to a resident of the Territories to receive process issued against the company. (3) A company incorporated by letters patent under the Comparies Act, R.S.C. 1886, c. 119, to carry o business as implement dealers in the Dominion of Canada, is, quod the Territories, a company carrying on a business to which the legislative authority of the Territories Legislature extends, and is therefore subject to summary conviction under the Territories Foreign Companies Ordinance, 1903, if it carries on business without registering and paying the license fee under the Ordinance.

The King v. Massey Harris Company; Massey Harris Company v. Wright (N. W. T.), 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 25.

-Extra-provincial corporation-Sale of goods without license-Resident agent.]-The plaintiffs, a foreign corporation not licensed to do business in Ontario, authorized F., a resident of the Province, to sell their engines at certain specified prices, upon commission. F. never went out to solicit orders, but took only those which came to him at his place of business. He sold an engine for the plaintiffs to the defendant, and this action was brought to recover the price:-Held, that F. was a resident agent or representative of an extra-provincial corporation, within the meaning of s. 6 of 63 Viet. c. 24 (O.), and the plaintiffs, being unlicensed, were, by s. 14, incapable of maintaining the action. Judgment of the County Court of Lambton reversed.

Bessemer Gas Engine Co. v. Mills, 8 O.L.R. 647 (D.C.).

-Foreign Companies' Ordinance-Unlicensed company-Right of action of indorsee of note made to the company.]—The Foreign Companies' Ordinance, 1903 (c. 14 of 1903, 1st session), provides (s. 3) that no foreign company having gain for its object, or a part of its object, shall carry on any part of its business in the Territories unless it is duly registered under the said ordinance, and imposes a penalty for breach of this provision; it further provides (s. 10) that any foreign company required by the said ordinance to become registered shall not while unregistered be capable of maintaining an action or other proceeding in any Court in respect of any contract made in whole or in part in the Territories, in the course of or in connection with business carried on without registration, contrary to the provisions of s. 3:-Held, that an indorsee with notice of a promissory note made to a foreign company in the course of and in connection with business carried on in contravention of the above provisions could not recover. Plaintiff was the indorsee of a promissory note made by defendants in favour of the Sawyer & Massey Co., Ltd., to secure the price of certain threshing machinery. Defendants, with other defences, set up by the 3rd paragraph of their defence that the note in question was given to an unregistered foreign company engaged in selling machinery for gain within the Territories by resident agents, of which facts the plaintiff had notice when he became the holder of the note, and that they would rely upon the provisions of the Foreign Companies Ordinance. On argunent of the question of law thus raised, the facts above set out were admitted:—Held, a good defence in law.

Ireland v. Andrews, 6 Terr. L.R. 66.

-- Foreign company-Agent-One transaction-"Doing business."]-Plaintiff sued the defendant company for an account incurred by P. who was engaged in negotiations for the sale of one of defendant's engines to the city of H., and while so engaged incurred the account in question. P. left the province, leaving the account unpaid and attachment proceedings were commenced against the defendant company under the provisions of O. 47, R. 6:—Held, that as the evidence showed the agent to have been employed only for the one transaction and no further or other business was contemplated, this did not constitute "carrying on business" within the meaning of the rule of Court, and the writ and attachment with the service thereof must be set aside.

Halifax Hotel Co. v. Canadian Fire Engine Co., 41 N.S.R. 97.

—Use of charter.]—A joint stock company formed by letters patent from the Lieutenant-Governor of the province for the manufacture of wines, etc., and carrying on business having relation thereto, which after the receipt of subscriptions to its capital stock elects and re-elects directors, acts through the latter at several meetings and sells a considerable stock of wines and other merchandise though such sale is not followed by delivery of the goods "makes use of its charter and commences regular operations" so as to avoid the forfeiture intended by Article 4750 R.S.Q.

Cie Boissons Generale Canadiennes v. Attorney-General of Quebec, Q.R. 15 K.B. 536.

—Registration of company—Penalty—Contract by unregistered company.]—S. 123 of the B.C. Companies Act, 1897, although it penalizes the carrying on of business within the province by non-registered companies, does not avoid contracts entered into within the jurisdiction:—Semble, the forwarding of goods to an agent to be sold by him in his own name, is not a transaction within the prohibition of s. 123. Quære, whether the creating within the jurisdiction of an obligation which is to be performed without the jurisdiction is carrying on business within the jurisdiction within the meaning of the section.

-Extra provincial corporations-Company carrying on business in Ontario.]-The plaintiffs, a company incorporated in the State of Pennsylvania, to carry on a printing, publishing and bookbinding business, with the head office in that State, carried on, as one of its departments, under a special charter therefor, procured in the same State, and with the same head office, what was called "The International Correspondence School," the object being to give by correspondence through the mails, instruction to applicants for enrollment as students, the company having representatives throughout the Province for procuring such applications, all of which were submitted to the head office for approval, and, if accepted, the certificates of enrollment were sent direct to the students with the lesson and instruction papers, followed at stated intervals by further instruction and lesson papers, pamphlets, etc., and when the contract so provided, lesson books in bound form, drawing materials, phonographic and other outfits, were loaned to the students. The company had an office in Toronto, over which their name was affixed, with a superintendent, cashier, and number of stenographers, to which all moneys collected in this province were forwarded, and from there remitted to the head office, while the bound lesson books, etc., for convenience of passage through the customs were sent from the head office to Toronto, and after the payment of the duties were forwarded by the postmaster to the students. Salaries, etc., were paid by the cashier at Toronto out of the moneys in his hands:-Held, that the Act 63 Vict. c. 24 (O.) for licensing of extra provincial corporations, was intra vires the Provincial Legislature as coming within s. 92, sub-s. 2 of the B.N.A. Act, being a mode of direct taxation within the province, or as relating to the issuing of licenses in order to the raising of a reverue; and that the plaintiffs were carrying on business in Ontario within the meaning of the Act, so as to necessitate their taking out a license, and their omission to do so precluded them from maintaining an action for the recovery of moneys claimed to be due from one of the enrolled students.

—Unlicensed foreign company suing on a foreign judgment.]—A foreign company is not precluded by any provision in the Companies Act, 1897, compelling registration before it can transact any of its business within the province, from access to the Courts of the province in the capacity of an ordinary suitor. Judgment having been obtained against defendants in a foreigu jurisdiction, suit was brought in British Columbia on the foreign judgment. The defendant company had been wound up prior to the commencement of the suit, but this was not pleaded and was only raised by counsel for defendant Johnston at the opening of the trial, the liquidator of the company not being present or represented; nor was the permission of the Court obtained to sue the company:—Held, that the plaintiff must pay the costs occasioned subsequent to the receipt of notice of the company's legal position. The liquidator of such a company appearing for the first time in the action when it came to appeal. Held, that he should have only such costs as he could have obtained on an application to a Judge in Chambers. Charles H. Lilly Co. v. Johnston Fisher.

—Failure by a company to file a declaration—Prescription of action.]—(1) Semble, any one can take a penal action, even if he is not a British subject; in any event, one is presumed to be so. (2) A penal action against a company for its failure to file a declaration according to law, is prescribed if it is not taken within a year after the company has commenced to do business; the failure to file such a declaration is not a continuous offence, and there

-Doing business in province without li cense.]-Plaintiff company, incorporated by the Dominion Companies Act, but not licensed in British Columbia, entered into an agreement in British Columbia, through their resident agent, to supply certain machinery to defendant company, a British Columbia corporation. The machinery was rejected for faultiness, and also because it was not delivered within the time agreed, thus necessitating the purchase of other machinery:-Held, on the facts, that the machinery was faulty in construction and the rejection of it was justified; also that defendants knew that it was being held at their disposal and risk. Held, further, that plaintiffs were carrying on business within the province as contemplated by the Companies Act, 1897, and should have taken out a license to do so. Held, further, that s. 123 of the Companies Act, 1897, is not in conflict with the Dominion Companies Act. The latter gives a company the capacity or status to carry on business in the various provinces of the Dominion, consistently with the laws thereof and in British Columbia, a pre-requisite to doing business is the securing of a license.

Waterous Engine Works Co v. Okanagan Lumber Co., 14 B.C.R. 238.

—Foreign company—Failure to register—Contract.]—Plaintiff company, a company incorporated under the laws of Illinois, and having its head office in Chicago in that State, sought to recover damages against defendant for breach of a contract made at Halifax, in this Province. Under the provisions of R.S. 1900, c. 127, s. 18, it is provided that every company not incorporated in the Province, shall appoint a resident manager or agent and that such company, before beginning business in the Province, shall transmit to the Provincial Secretary a statement under oath giving certain particulars including the situation of the head office, the amount capital stock, authorized, subscribed and paid up, etc., and every company failing to comply with the provisions of the statute is made liable to a penalty of ten dollars per day during the continuance of such default:-Held, that non-compliance with the provisions of the statute did not render invalid contracts entered into by the company within the Province or prevent the company from re covering thereon.

American Hotel Supply Co. v. Fairbanks, 41 N.S.R. 444.

—Action qui tam—Registration of a company—Designation of pilantiff—British subject.]—(1) In a penal action taken by a plaintiff as well in his own name as in the name of His Majesty against a company for want of registration, it is not necessary to add, in the writ after the name of the plaintiff, the words, "Prosecuting as well in his own name as for us." (2) It is not sufficient to allege that it does not appear in the writ of summons that the plaintiff is a British subject, but defendant must specifically allege that said plaintiff is not de facto a British subject:—Quære, must one be a British subject:—Quære, must one be a British rubject to take a qui tam action?

Croysdill v. Shawinigan Carbide Co., 10 Que. P.R. 67.

-Promissory note-Action upon by unregistered foreign company-Sale of shares by unregistered company-Carrying on business.]-Held, that when a note is not made payable at any stated place it is not necessary to allege or prove presentation. (2) That the fact that a promissory note is endorsed in blank by the payee does not preclude such payee from suing thereon if the note is produced from the custody of the payee or his solicitor. (3) That the sale, in Saskatchewan, of its capital stock by a foreign company rot registered in Saskatchewan is not a transaction in the course of or in connection with its business and such company may therefore maintain an action in the Province to recover the price of such stock.

Canadian Co-operative Co. v. Traunic-zek, 1 Sask. R. 143.

-Extra-provincial corporation-License-Resident agent-Contract.]-The plaintiff company, an unlicensed extra-provincial corporation, sold absolutely to the defendont, a corporation within New Brunswick at Bloomfield, in the State of New Jersey, two car loads of its empire cream separators to be delivered f.o.b. at Sussex and Saint John, to be paid for by promissory notes to be given on delivery. Defendant company to have the exclusive right of sale in certain named counties and undertaking not to sell or handle any other separators in said counties. The defendant company, advertised in New Brunswick as the sole agent of the separators, with the consent and at the expense of the plaintiff:—Held, per McLeod, J., and Tuck, C.J. (Landry, J., doubting, and Hanington, J., dissenting), that the defendant was the resident agent of the plaintiff in New Brunswick, and the sale was a contract made in part within the Province within the meaning of ss. 12 and 18 of the Act, C.S.N.B., 1903, c. 18, and no action could be maintained on the notes.

Empire Cream Separator Company v. Maritime Dairy Company, 38 N.B.R. 309.

—Registration of company—Penalty.]—An unlicensed extra-provincial company, carrying on business within the Province, sued for a balance due on a contract to deliver building stone, entered into within the Province. The defence advanced was that, by reason of s. 123 of the Companies Act, the contract was illegal and void:—Held, on appeal, that as the Act to be done in pursuance of the contract was prohibited by statute, the contract was prohibited by statute, the contract was therefore unanforceable. De Laval Separator Company v. Walworth (No. 1), 13 B.C.R. 74, overruled.

CONDITIONS.

Of grant-Condition subsequent-Breach ot-Forfeiture-Assignment by vendor before re-vesting.—On the grant of a fee simple defeasible on breach of a condition no estate is left in the grantor, but only a possibility of reverter, and, therefore, before breach there is nothing capable of assignment. After breach, where the deed does not provide for ipso facto forfeiture, the fee does not revest automatically, and until re-vesting by suit or otherwise there is nothing capable of assignment. Land was conveyed subject to certain conditions to be performed by the purchasers, and, in default of the performance of such conditions, the purchasers were to hold the land in trust for the grantor, and reconvey to him, notwithstanding that any prior breach may have been waived. The conditions were not performed. In an action by the assignee under seal of the vendor for a declaration that the purchasers held the land in trust for him, and for an order for the conveyance thereof to him:-Held, by the full Court, that after the conveyance there was no estate left in the grantor, but only a possibility of reverter, which was not assignable, and no action

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Life insurance-Revocation by assured of trust in favour of beneficiary.]-The plaintiffs were the executors and trustees under the will of R. R. Hughes, and brought action to obtain a decision as to the effect of a clause in his will directing that the money payable under a policy of insurance on his life in the London Life Insurance Co. of Canada should become part of his estate and be paid to his executors, and absolutely revoking the appropriation of same in favour of his wife, which was expressed on the face of the policy. Hughes and his wife were residents of Manitoba, and the policy had been procured through an agent also resident in Manitoba, but the company's head office was in Ontario, where the policy was issued, and where the insurance money was made payable. By the Life Insurance Act, R.S.M., c. 88, s. 12, as re-enacted by 62 & 63 Vict., c. 17, it is provided that, in the case of a policy of insurance effected by a man or woman, on its face expressed to be for the benefit of his wife or her husband, the insured, may, by an instrument in writing attached to, or indorsed on, or identifying the policy by its number or otherwise, absolutely revoke the benefit previously made, and divert the insurance money wholly or in part to himself or his estate. The corresponding statutory provision in Ontario (R.S.O., c. 203, s 160), while it permits a person who has effected an insurance on his life for the benefit of his wife, to alter or vary the benefit of the policy as between his wife and children, prohibits him from absolutely revoking his wife's benefit in it and diverting the insurance money to himself or his estate. The decision of the question before the Court, therefore, de-pended upon whether the right of revocation was governed by the law of Ontario or by that of Manitoba:-Held, that although the contract of insurance itself must be interpreted and carried out acording to the Ontario law, yet the law of Manitoba should be applied as regards the collateral right of the assured to make any assignment, revocation or other appropriation of the insurance moneys payable under it. Toronto General Trusts Co. v. Sewell, 17 Q.R. 442, and Lee v. Abdy, 17 Q.B.D. 309, followed. The question was one not of the construction of the policy or contract, but of the capacity of the insured to make a disposition of the benefit of the policy; and, as he was living in Manitoba when he effected the insurance through an agent of the company there, it was reasonable to presume that it would be in the contemplation of all the parties that he could deal with the benefit that he had given his wife in the policy in such manner as the laws of Manitoba empowered him.

CONSPIRACY.

Conspiracy to defraud—Indictment—Necessity to set out overt acts—Preliminary proof.]—In an indictment charging a conspiracy to defraud it is not necessary to set out overt acts done in pursuance of the illegal agreement or conspiracy, nor is it necessary to name the person defrauded or intended to be defrauded. Before the acts of alleged conspirators can be given in evicence there ought to be some preliminary proof to show an acting together, but it is not necessary that a conspiracy should first be proved. A party may not introduce general evidence to impeach the character of his own witness, but he may go on with the proof of the issue, although the consequences of so doing may be to discredit the witness.

Rex v. Hutchinson, 11 B.C.R. 24, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 486.

-- Combination in restraint of trade-Conspiracy to prevent or lessen competition-Criminal Code, s. 520.]—Defendant was president and took an active interest in an association, one of the declared objects of which was the protection of its members who were dealers in coal, against the shipment of coal direct to consumers by producers. It was also formed to prevent members, including any local organization who had become members, from buying coal from any producer, who sold direct to con-sumers or to dealers who refused to maintain prices as fixed. When notified no member was permitted to purchase coal of any producer, etc., who sold direct to a consumer in any place where there was a member of the organization, or who sold to dealers who refused to maintain prices. For violations of these provisions, a claim for 50 cents a ton might be made for coal so irregularly sold, and if allowed and not paid by the defaulting member, after notice, any member dealing with the defaulter was liable to be expelled from the association. All these provisions and others having the same object were embodied in the printed constitution and by-laws of the organization, which were in force up to the time of the trial. Evidence was given of sales having been refused to dealers, not members of the association, for that reason and that dealers could not become members as of right; that a list of members and non-members was published, the latter of whom were not allowed to purchase except at retail prices, and that the association was in effective and active operation according to its constitution and by-laws. By s. 520, sub-s. (d) of the Criminal Code, as amended, every one is guilty of an indictable offence, etc., who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with any other person . To unduly prevent or lessen competition in the production, manufacture, purchase, barter or sale, transportation or supply of any article or commodity which may be a subject of trade or commerce:-Held, that the defendant was rightly convicted of an offence under the sub-s. plain object of the association being to restrict and confine the sale of coal by retail to its own members, and to prevent anyone else from obtaining it for that purpose from the operators and shippers. Held, also, that the offence being a continuing one, s 930 of the Code (if applicable to indictable offences) which limits the time for laying any information to within two years after the offence is committed did not apply. Held, finally, that a cross appeal by the Crown did not lie as s. 5 of 52 Vict. c. 41 only gives an appeal from a convic-

-Conspiracy - Indictment.]-The defendants were indicted for unlawfully conspiring and agreeing together and with each other to deprive one W. G. of the necessaries of life, to wit, proper medical care and nursing, whereby his death was caused: -Held, that this count did not charge the defendants with a conspiracy to commit any indictable offence known to the law, and should have been quashed. A second count charged that the defendants did unlawfully conspire and agree together and with each other to effect the cure of W. G. of a sickness endangering life, by unlawful and improper means, thereby causing the death of the said W. G.: -Held, that this count was equally bad, and was properly quashed. Rex v. Goodfellow, 11 O.L.R. 359 (C.A.).

--Illegal combination or conspiracy unduly to enhance prices and lessen competition.] -The plaintiffs, manufacturing chemists and sole owners of certain proprietary medicines, brought this action for damages and for an injunction to restrain the breach of two contracts entered into between themselves and the defendants, in one of which the defendants covenanted not to sell wholesale any of the plaintiffs' preparations below the price therein mentioned, and in the other not to sell the same to any retailer except at the prices therein men-tioned, and then only when such retailer had signed an agreement with the plaintiffs. The agreement was in the form adopted by the committees representing a large part of the wholesale and retail trade and the evidence showed that the commodities in question could not be purchased by the defendants or anyone else unless and until they had signed the agreements in question:—Held, that the agreements were a breach of ss. 516 and 520 of the Criminal Code, inasmuch as they unduly prevented, and, in fact, entirely destroyed competition in the articles referred to, and affected the entire trade in such -Conspiracy in restraint of trade - Evidence.]-Held, that upon an indictment of two incorporated trade associations for conspiracy in restraint of trade under s. 520 of the Criminal Code, the defendants were to be judged and condemned, if condemned at all, upon the acts proved to have been committed by them after incorporation, but in weighing and estimating such acts the Court might look at the immediately or proximately antecedent acts of the individuals now comprising the corporation and directing its operation; and that, in this case, the acts occurring after incorporation were, in view of their history, origin, and apparent purpose, sufficient to support a conviction:—Held, per Garrow, J.A., that it was not a sound objection to the indictment that it would not lie against any corporation except those named in s. 520, nor that there must be at least one natural person as distinct from a corporation indicted as a co-conspirator.

Cr. Cas. 371.

-Trade combine-Conspiracy in restraint of trade-Particulars.]-The offences enumerated in ss. (a), (c), and (d) of s. 498 Criminal Code are not governed by the definition in s. 496, and it is not necessary where a charge is laid under any of these sub-sections, to allege or prove an "un-lawful" act. It is within the discretion of the trial Judge to order particulars or not, and, where there are several counts, to direct whether they shall be tried together or not. A charge that the accused "did conspire with certain persons (naming them), and others unknown, or some or one of them," is not too indefinite. Where there are several counts in a "charge" or indictment for conspiracy, and the accused is convicted on one count only, the conviction will not be quashed merely by reason of the fact that some evidence had been received that would have been inadmissible if the charge or indictment had been confined to the single count under which the conviction was made. In any event the Appellate Court can review the evidence to determine whether there was evidence on which the judgment can reasonably be sup-

Awards as to accounts of common school lands fund-Jurisdiction of arbitrators-Submission as to accounts and destination of moneys received. 1-By s. 9 of the awards dated September 3, 1870, made in pursuance of the British North America Act, 1867, s. 142, it was directed that all moneys received by the Province of Ontario since June 30, 1867, from the school lands set apart by the Canadian statutes (consolidated by Can. Cons. Stat., 1859, c. 26) and called the common school fund. should be paid to the Dominion and that income derived therefrom should be paid to the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec in the proportions specified in s. 5 of that statute. On April 10, 1893, the three Governments of the Dominion, Ontario, and Quebec, entered under statutory authority into an agreement of submission as to the matters in difference in the settlement of the accounts between them under the award of 1870, and for the ascertainment and distribution of the said school fund. Thereunder Quebec claimed that certain moneys, which it was admitted had not been actually received by Ontario, had been constructively received, since they were deductions which Ontario was not authorized to make except at her own expense, and should be the subject of distribution between them:-Held, that the Supreme Court was right in affirming an award to the effect that the arbitrators had no jur-Moneys actually received by Ontario were alone the subject of the submission, the terms of which could not be extended so as to force a contribution from a larger constructive receipt. -Supreme Court Act, R.S.C. (1906) c. 139, ss. 3, 60-References by Governor-General in Council-Opinions and advice-Jurisdiction of Parliament-Independence of Judges -Judicial functions.]-Per Fitzpatrick, C.J. and Davies, Duff and Anglin, JJ .- The provisions of s. 60 of the Supreme Court Act, R.S.C. (1906) c. 139, are within the legislative jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. Per Girouard and Idington, JJ .: - The provisions of that section assuming to authorize references by the Governor-General in Council to the Judges of the Supreme Court of Canada for their opinions in respect to matters within provincial legislative jurisdiction are ultra vires of the Parliament of Canada; but, if the governments of the Dominion and of a province unite in the submission of the questions so referred the Judges of the Supreme Court of Canada should entertain the reference. Per Idington, J.-The administration of justice in each province having been assigned exclusively to it the power of Parliament in regard to the same is limited to creating a Court of Appeal and Courts for the administration of the laws of Canada. Per Idington, J.-Parliament has no power to authorize the interrogation of the Supreme Court of Canada except where the question submitted relates to some subject or matter

-Treaty extinguishing the Indian interest in lands-Payments by the Dominion under the treaty-Suit by Dominion against the Province of Ontario for contributions as respects lands within the Province.]-By a treaty dated October 3, 1873, the Dominion Government, acting in the interests of the Dominion as a whole, secured to the Salteaux tribe of the Ojibeway Indians certain payments and other rights, at the same time extinguishing by consent their interest over a large tract of land about 50,000 square miles in extent, the greater part of which was subsequently ascertained to lie within the boundaries of the Province of Ontario. It having been decided that the release of the Indians' interest affected by the treaty enured to the benefit of Ontario, the Dominion Government sued in the Exchequer Court for a declaration that it was entitled to recover from and be paid by the Province of Ontario as a proper proportion of annuities and other moneys paid and payable under the treaty:—Held, affirming the judgment of the Supreme Court, that, having regard to the jurisdiction conferred upon the Exchequer Court, the action must be dismissed as unsustainable on any principle of law. In making the treaty, although it resulted in direct advantage to the Province, the Dominion Government did not act as agent or trustee for the Province or with its consent, or for the benefit of the lands, but with a view to great national interests—that is, for distinct and important interests of their own—in pursuance ot powers derived from the British North America Act, 1867. -Powers of Provincial Legislature-Prohibition of sale of medicine-Trade and commerce-License under Dominion Proprietary and Patent Medicine Act.]-The sole jurisdiction to regulate trade and commerce being vested in the Dominion Parliament, it is not competent for a provincial legislature to prohibit the sale of that which the Dominion Parliament has given license to sell. Russell v. The Queen, 7 App. Cas. 829, 838, and Grand Trunk R.W. Co. v. Attorney-General for Canada [1907], A.C. 65, 68, specially referred to. S. 64 of c. 28 of the statutes of Saskatchewan, 1906, is ultra vires, in so far as it provides that "if any person not registered . . . shall . . . for hire, gain, or hope of reward . . furnish medicine," he shall be guilty of an offence, etc. The defendant, being the representative of a company licensed under the Dominion Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act, 7 and 8 Edw. Legislative powers—Appeals from the Quebec Court of Review.]—The power of the Parliament of Canada under s. 101 of the British North America Act, 1867, respecting a general court of appeal for Canada is not restricted to the establishment of a court for the administration of the laws of Canada, and, consequently, there was constitutional authority to enact the provisions of the third section of the Dominion Statute, 54 & 56 Vict., c. 25, authorizing appeals from the Superior Court, sitting in review, in the Province of Quebec.

—Courts of General Sessions in Ontario.]—An appeal from a summary conviction under the Criminal Code is, in Ontario, to be taken to the Court of General Sessions of the Peace sitting without a jury; and Code s. 881, constituting such Court the absolute judge as well of the facts as of the law in respect of the conviction or decision appealed against, in intra vires of the Dominion Parliament. A statutory provision that the Appellate Court shall try the appeal without a jury is one relating to the procedure and not to the constitution of the Court.

-Powers of the Dominion Parliament Railway Act-Prohibited contract.] - The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, s. 19, subs. 16, enacts:-"No person holding any office, place or employment in or being concerned or interested in any contracts under or with the company, shall be capable of being chosen as a director, or of holding the office of director, nor shall any person being a director of the company enter into. or be directly or indirectly, for his own use and benefit interested in any contract with the company, not relating to the purchase of land necessary for the railway, or be or become a partner of any contractor with the company." It was admitted that the appellant was a director and the president of the Temiscouata Railway Company at the time he entered into certain agree-ments with the contractors for the construction of the road, which agreements gave him an interest in their contracts:-Held, (1) The provisions of the enactment above cited are constitutional. The Dominion Parliament having the right to legislate on matters concerning railways, it has also the power to legislate on all incidents which may be required to carry out the object it had in view, provided such incidents are essentially and strictly connected with the principal object, and are primarily intended to assist in carrying out such principal object; and the capacity or incapacity of directors is a matter essentially connected with the internal economy of a railway company. (2) Where a contract is prohibited by statute, such contract is void, although the statute itself does not state that it is so, and only imposes a penalty on the offender. (3) Consequently,

K., upon being examined before the Judge of the County Court of W., was, under the provisions of 59 Vict., c. 28, s. 53, ordered to pay the amount of the judgment against him by instalments at the rate of five dollars per month. M. and W., being examined before the Judge of the County Court of S., were, under the same section, ordered to pay the amounts of the judgments against them by instalments at the rate of five and ten dollars per month respectively. Orders nisi having been obtained to bring up the three orders for the purpose of quashing them, upon the returns thereof, it was held, per Tuck, C.J., Hanington, VanWart and McLeod, JJ., Landry, J., dissenting, (1) That the provisions of 59 Vict., c. 28, s. 53, authorizing the Judge or other officer before whom the examination is held, upon it being made to appear to him that the judgment debtor is unable to pay the whole of the debt in one sum, but is able to pay the same by instalments, to make an order that the debtor shall pay the amount of the judgment debt by instalments, in so far as it is sought to apply the same to salary or income derived from office or employment under the government of Canada, is ultra vires of the provincial legislature, and, therefore, that the orders against K., M. and W. should be quashed.

The by-law was passed under sub-s. 17 of s. 542 of the Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 223, such section being headed "Storing and transportation of gunpowder," and providing "for regulating the keeping and storing of gunpowder and other combustible or dangerous materials," and was one of a group of sections under Division VI. of the Act headed "Protection of life and property," sub-division 3 of said division, which included s. 542, being under the heading of "Prevention of fires":—Held, that sub-s. 17 authorized the passing of the by-law and that the conviction could be supported thereunder; that the words "other combustible or dangerous materials" were not limited by the ejusdem generis rule to gunpowder or other similar substances, but would include the substances set out in the by-law. Held, also, that such legislation was not superseded by Dominion legislation, the Petroleum Inspection Act, 1899, 62 & 63 Vict., c. 27 (D.), dealing with the subject being expressly made conformable thereto.

—Act prohibiting the sale of real or personal property on Sunday—Whether or not ultra vires of the provincial legislature—Act of Assembly,]—S. 1 of 62 Vict., c. 11, whereby the sale of real or personal property or the exercise of any worldly business or work on Sunday is prohibited, is within the authority of the Legislature of New Brunswick. Therefore, where G. was convicted under the above section before the police magistrate of S. of selling cigars on Sunday, a rule nisi for a certiorari to bring up the conviction in order to quash the same was discharged. The fact that the Parliament of Canada can make the doing of such an act on Sunday a crime, and prohibit it under the general criminal law, does not necessarily show that the local legislature has no jurisdiction to deal with it under its powers to make regulations of a police or municipal nature. A subject matter of legislation though folling within some of the classes entrusted to the federal parliament by s. 91 of the British North America Act, may likewise, when looked at from another point of view, come within some of the classes over which, by s. 92 of the same Act, the provincial legislatures have exclusive jurisdiction.

Attorney-General (Ont.) v. Hamilton Street Railway, [1903] A.C. 524.

--Ontario Liquor Act-Voting on by electers-Delegation of legislative power-Appointment of judge to conduct trial-Jurisdiction.]-The subject matter of the Ontario Liquor Act, 1902, is one with regard to which the Legislature is competent to enact a law or laws. Attorney-General for Ontario v. Attorney-General for Dominion (1896) A.C. 348, and Attorney-General of Manitoba v. Manitoba License Holders' Association, (1902) A.C. 73, followed. The legislature, in enacting the Liquor Act, did not exceed or fail to properly exercise its powers. Legislation which provides a law, but leaves the time and manner of its taking effect to be determined by the votes of the electors, is not a delegation of legislative power to them. Russell v. The Queen, 7 App. Cas. 829, The Queen v. Burah, 3 App. Cas. 889, and City of Fredericton v. The Queen, 3 S.C.R. 505, followed. By s. 91 (4), providing that the president of the High Court shall designate a County or District Judge to conduct the trial of persons accused of corrupt practices at the taking of the vote under Part I., the legislature did not assume the power of appointing Judges, and did not exceed its powers in providing that a County or District Judge designated should exercise jurisdiction outside of his own county or district; and a Judge so designated may try the accused without a jury. The provisions of sub-ss. (2) and (3) of s. 91 are amplifications of the provisions of the Ontario Election Act, which are incorporated in the Liquor Act, and the Judge in this case did not exceed his powers in sentencing the accused, whom he found guilty of personation, to one year's imprisonment in addition to the payment of a penalty of $400 and costs. The jurisdiction is to try at any place in Ontario, and it appearing in the order of conviction that the trial was held under the Act and that the offence was committed at the city of Toronto, and the prisoner being sentenced to be imprisoned in the common gaol of the county of York at the city of Toronto, the order showed jurisdiction, although it did not specify the place of trial.

-Lands in Ontario surrendered by the Indians—Proprietary right—Power of disposition.]—Lands in Ontario surrendered by the Indians by the treaty of 1873 belong in full beneficial interest to the Crown as representing the Province, subject only to certain privileges of the Indians reserved by the treaty. The Crown can only dispose thereof on the advice of the ministers of the Province and under the seal of the Province, St. Catharines Milling Co. v. Reg. (1888), 14 App. Cas. 46, followed. The Dominion Government having purported, without the consent of the Province, to appropriate part of the surrendered lands under its own seal as a reserve for the Indians in accordance with the said treaty: -Held, that this was ultra vires the Dominion, which had by s. 91 of the British North America Act of 1867 exclusive legislative authority over the lands in question, but had no proprietary rights therein. The consent of the Province having been subsequently provided for by a stat-utory agreement between the two Governments, the special leave to appeal granted upon the representation of the general public importance of the question involved would probably have been rescinded if a petition to that effect had been made.

—Naturalization and aliens—British Columbia Provincial Elections Act — Privileges conferred or withheld after naturalization.]
—S. 91, sub-s. 25 of the British North America Act, 1867, reserves to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament the subject of naturalization—that is, the right to determine how it shall be constituted. The provincial legislature has the right to determine, under s. 92, sub-s. 1, what privileges, as distinguished from necessary consequences, shall be attached to it. Accordingly, the British Columbia Provincial Elections Act, 1867, c. 67, s. 8, which provides that no Japanese whether naturalized or not, shall be entitled to vote, is not ultra vires.

tion to compel a mortgagee in Great Britain under the provisions of R.S.C. 1886, c. 127, s. 7, to accept the principal money and interest due on a ten year mortgage, which had run over six years:-Held, that the section is intra vires of the Dominion parliament and is not restricted in its application to such mortgages as are mentioned in s. 3 of the Act, but applies to every mortgage on real estate executed after the first of July, 1880, where the money secured "is not under the terms of the mortgage payable till a time more than five years after the date of the mortgage." Held, also, that words of s. 25 of c. 205 R.S.O. 1897, are wide enough to apply to mortgages executed prior to the passing of that Act. Held, also, that the loan having been made, the property being situate, and the mortgage giving the option of payment, in Canada, the law of Canada must govern in relation to the contract and its incidents and that the tender made as described in the judgment was sufficient.

Held, also, that the intention of the legislature, under sub-s. 4 of s. 91, was to create a tribunal with authority to try certain specified off-fences, and that the Court, so created had power under the words "to conduct the trial" to bring the party charged before the Court, try him for the offence and sentence him, if found guilty; and that the County Judge appointed to conduct the trial does not act as a County Judge, but as a Court specially created; and who should act out of his own county in holding the actual trial; and that he may issue his summons in his own county or elsewhere; and has power after finding the accused guilty to adjourn the Court to a subsequent day for the purpose of passing sentence.

-Dominion legislation-Preamble-"Work for the general advantage of Canada"-Expropriations of private land.]-The preamble to an Act of the Dominion Parliament recited, that it was desirable for the general advantage of Canada that a company should be formed for the purpose of utilizing the waters of certain navigable rivers in the province of Ontario, with the object of promoting manufacturing industries and inducing the establishment of manufacturing and other businesses in Canada; and the Act then expressly authorized the construction of certain works connected therewith and the expropriation of land for such purposes, incorporating certain sections of the Railway Act of Canada, and also authorized the company to enter into certain contracts extending beyond the limits of the Province, which Act was subsequently amended by the Dominion Parliament and recognized by the Legislature of Ontario:-Held, that the preamble showed by implication the intention of Parliament to give the power to deal with public property of the Dominion and to expropriate private property in the Province, and the reason for so doing; and was a Parliamentary declaration that the formation of the company for the purposes mentioned was for the general advantages of Canada.

-Foreshore of Vancouver harbour-Occupation of by Canadian Pacific Railway terminals-Powers of Dominion Parliament.] -Held, in an action by the Attorney-General of British Columbia ex rel the City of Vancouver against the Canadian Pacific Railway, for a declaration that the public has a right to access to the waters of Vancouver harbour through certain streets, and that the streets at the time of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, were public highways extending to low water mark and that the public right of passage over said highways existed at the time of the admission of British Columbia into Canada, but that these public rights have been extinguished or suspended by reason of the construction of the said railway. The foreshore of Vancouver harbour is under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, either as having formed part of the harbour at the time of the union of British Columbia with the Dominion, or by reason of the jurisdiction of the Dominion attaching at the Union. The Parliament of Canada has power to appropriate provincial public lands for the purposes of a railway connecting two or more Provinces. The Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway, 44 Vict. Cap. 1, should not be construed in the same way as an ordinary Act of incorporation or any ordinary railway, but it should be interpreted in a broad spirit, and bearing in mind the objects sought to be accomplished. Per Hunter, C.J.: The British North America Act assigns public harbours to the Dominion, not so much qua property or land as qua harbours; the jurisdiction of the Dominion is latent and attaches to any inlet or harbour so soon as it becomes a public harbour, and is not confined to such harbours as existed at the time of Union.

-Sunday observance-Reference to Supreme Court—Legislative jurisdiction.]— The statute 54 and 55 Vict. c. 25, s. 4, does not empower the Governor-General in Council to refer to the Supreme Court for hearing and consideration supposed or hypothetical legislation which the legislature of a Province might enact in the future. Sedgewick, J., dissenting. The said section provides that the Governor in Council may refer important questions of law or fact touching specified subjects "or touching any other matter with reference to which he sees fit to exercise this power." Held, Sedgewick, J., contra, that such "other matter" must be ejusdem generis with the subjects specified. Legislation to prohibit on Sunday the performance of work and labour, transaction of business, engaging in sport for gain, or keeping open places of entertainment, is within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. -B.N.A. Act, 1867, s. 92, sub-s. 10 (c)-Legislative jurisdiction-Parliament of Canada-Local works and undertakings-General advantage of Canada.]-In construing an Act of the Parliament of Canada, there is a presumption in law that the jurisdiction has not been exceeded. Where the subject matter of legislation by the Parliament of Canada, although situate wholly within a province, is obviously beyond the powers of the local legislature, there is no necessity for an enacting clause specially declaring the works to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the Provinces. Semble, per Sedgewick and Davies JJ. (Girouard and Idington JJ. contra).—A recital in the preamble to a special private Act, enacted by the Parliament of Canada, is not such a declaration as that contemplated by sub-s. 10 (c) of s. 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, in order to bring the subject matter of the legislation within the jurisdiction of Parliament. A motion made, while the case was standing for judgment, to have the case remitted back to the Courts below for the purpose of the adduction of newly discovered evidence as to the refusal of Parliament to make the above-mentioned declaration was refused with costs.

-B.N.A. Act, s. 51, sub-s. 4; ss. 3, 146-Readjustment of representation - "Aggregate population of Canada."]-Held, first: that for the purpose of determining whether the representatives of New Brunswick are liable to be reduced, the expression "aggregate population of Canada," in s. 51 (4) of the B.N.A. Act means the whole of Canada as constituted by the Act, and not merely the four Provinces originally federated, but includes those and all other Provinces subsequently incorporated by Order in Council under s. 146. Held, secondly, that Prince Edward, which had been admitted under s. 146 by Order in Council directing it to have six members, its representation to be readjusted from time to time under the provisions of the Act, was not by s. 51 (4) protected from reduction, until an increase thereof had been previously effected. Attorney-General of Prince Edward v. Attorney-General of Canada [1905] A.C. 37.

-Masters and Servants Ordinance-B.N.A. Act-Constitution of Courts-Appointment of Judges-Justices of the Peace.]-The Masters and Servants Ordinance, R.O. 1888, c. 36, enacted that it should be lawful for any Justice of the Peace on complaint by any . . . servant of . . . non-payment of wages . . . by his master . . . to order such master to pay such complainant one month's wages in addition to the amount of wages then actually due him . . . together with the costs of prosecution, the same to be levied by distress . . . and in default of sufficient distress, to be imprisoned · . .:—Held, Rouleau, J., dissenting, and Scott, J., expressing no opinion-against the contention that the provision was ultra vires of the Territorial Legislature, on the grounds that it assumed (1) to impose a penalty with imprisonment to enforce it, and (2) to provide for the appointment of judicial officers -that the provision was within the powers conferred upon the Territorial Legislature by the orders-in-council promulgated under the N.W.T. Act, R.S.C. c. 50, s. 13 of 11th May, 1877, and 26th June, 1883. The former order-in-council gave power to pass ordinances in relation to "6. The administration of justice, including the constitution, organization and maintenance of Territorial Courts of civil jurisdiction." 7. The imposition of punishment by fine, penalty, or imprisonment for enforcing any Territorial ordinance, and, 8. Property and civil rights in the Territories subject to any legislation by the Parliament of Canada on these subjects." The latter order-in-council contained clauses in the same words. Per Wetmore and McGuire, JJ .- The provision in question of the Masters and Servants Ordinance did' not purport to constitute a criminal offence, but was designed to give enlarged rights, and a more effective and speedy remedy with respect to a civil contract; the remedy by imprisonment is a competent exercise of the power to legislate under the above cited paragraphs of the order-in-council; and paragraph 6 does not exclude the power of appointing judicial officers. The Dominion Statute, 54-55 Vic. (1891) c. 22, s. 6. substituting a new section for s. 13 of the N.W.T. Act, R.S.C. c. 50, is more restrictive than the terms of paragraph 6 of the orderin council, paragraph 10 of the section reading as follows: "10. The administration of jutsice in the Territories, including the constitution, organization and maintenance of Territorial Courts of civil jurisdiction, including procedure therein, but not including the power of appointing any judicial offi-cers." Per Richardson, Wetmore and Mc-Guire, JJ.—The Legislature having power to pass the provision in question of the Masters and Servants Ordinance at the time it was passed the provision did not cease to be valid by reason of the subsequent restriction placed upon the power of the Legislature. Per Wetmore, J.—The British North America Act, 1867, s. 96, which provides that "the Governor-General shall appoint the Judges of the Superior, District and County Courts in each Province, except those of the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick," does not prevent a Provincial Legislature from constituting Courts other than Superior, District or County Courts, and appointing or providing for the appointment of Judges or other judicial officers therefor. Per Mc-Guire, J.—The provision in question of the Master and Servants Ordinance did not attempt to create a Court or to appoint judicial officers; the Legislature found a Court and judicial officers already existing and appointed under federal authority, namely, Justices Courts and Justices of the Peace, and assigned to them, as it had power to do, duties respecting matters within its legislative power. This Act is intra vires of the Dominion Parliament under B.N.A. -British North America Act, 1867, ss. 91, 92, 108-Power of the Dominion to legislate for certain provincial Crown property-Provincial foreshore.]-Section 108 of the British North America Act, 1867, empowers the Dominion Parliament to legislate for any land, including foreshore, which is proved to form part of a public harbour. Sections 91 and 92, read together, empower the Dominion to dispose of provincial Crown lands, and, therefore, of a provincial foreshore, for the purpose of the respondent railway, which is a trans-continental railway connecting several Provinces:-Held, that s. 18 (a) of the respondents incorporating Dominion Act, 44 Vict. c. 1, is not controlled by the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, and applies to Provincial as well as Dominion Crown lands. Power given hereunder to appropriate the foreshore in question includes a power to obstruct any rights of passage previously existing across it.

Attorney-General for British Columbia v. Canadian Pacific Railway Company, [1906]

—Land in British Columbia—Military reserve—Title of the Dominion—Transfer by Imperial Government—British North America Act, 1867, ss. 108, 117.]—The land in suit, called Deadman's Island, was de facto a "reserve" by the Government of British Columbia under paragraph 3 of the Proclamation of 1859, and, according to the evidence a military reserve:—Held, that it remained Imperial property at the time of the British North America Act, 1867, and was transferred to the Dominion by special grant dated March 27, 1884. It did not, therefore, fall to the colony in virtue of s. 117 of the Act, nor to the Dominion in virtue of s. 108. Appeal from decision in Attorney-General v. Ludgate, 11 B.C.R. 258, dismissed.

-Power of Dominion Parliament-Validity of Dominion Act, 60 and 61 Vict. c. 11, s. 6, amended by 1 Edw. VII. c. 13-Power to expel and deport aliens.]-Held, that s. 6 of the Dominion Statute, 60 and 61 Vict. c. 11, as amended by 1 Édw. VII. c. 13, s, 13, is intra vires of the Dominion Parliament. The Crown undoubtedly possessed the power to expel an alien from the Dominion of Canada, or to deport him to the country whence he entered it. The above Act, assented to by the Crown, delegated that power to the Dominion Government, which includes and authorizes them to impose such extra-territorial constraint as is necessary to execute the power. -Vancouver Island Settlers' Rights Act, 1904-Construction-Powers of local legislature-British North America Act, s. 92, sub-s. 10.]—The British Columbia Vancouver Island Settlers' Rights Act, 1904. directed that a grant in fee simple without any reservations as to mines and minerals should be issued to settlers therein defined, and thereunder a grant was made to the appellant of the lot in suit. By an Act of the same legislature in 1883, land which included the said lot had been granted with its mines and minerals to the Dominion Government in aid of the construction of the respondents' railway, and in 1887 had been by it granted to the respondents under the provisions of a Dominion Act passed in 1884:—Held, that the Act of 1904 on its true construction legalized the grant thereunder to the appealant, and superseded the respondents' title. Held, also, that the Act of 1904 was intra vires of the local legislature. It had the exclusive power of amending or repealing its own Act of 1883. The Act, moreover, related to land which had become the property of the respondents, and affected a work and undertaking purely local within the meaning of s. 92, sub-s. 10, of the British North America Act.

—Liabilities of Province at Confederation— Special funds—Rate of Interest—Trust funds or debt.]—Among the assets of the Province of Canada at Confederation were certain special funds, namely, U.C. Grammar School Fund, U.C. Building Fund and U.C. Improvement Fund, and the Province was a debtor in respect thereto and liable for interest thereon. By s. 111 of the B.N.A. Act, 1867, the Dominion of Canada succeeded to such liability and paid the Province of Ontario interest thereon at five per cent. up to 1904. In the award made in 1870 and finally established in 1887, on the arbitration, under s. 142 of the Act to adjust the debts and assets of Upper and Lower Canada, it was adjudged that these funds were the property of Ontario. In 1904 the Dominion Government claimed the right to reduce the rate of interest to four per cent., or if that was not acceptable to the Province to hand over the principal. On appeal from the judgment of the Exchequer Court in an action asking for a declaration as to the rights of the Province in respect to said funds:-Held, affirming said judgment (10 Ex. C.R. 292), Idington, J., dissenting, that though before the said award the Dominion was obliged to hold the funds and pay the interest thereon to Ontario, after the award the Dominion had a right to pay over the same with any accrued interest to the Province and thereafter be free from liability in respect there-of. Held, also, that until the principal sum was paid over the Dominion was liable for interest thereon at the rate of five per cent. per annum.

—Powers of legislature—Criminal law—Recorder's Court.]—When the Parliament of Canada has declared an action to be criminal, has provided the procedure whereby it shall be punished, and declared what Court shall have jurisdiction over it, a local legislature has no power to pass an Act for punishment of the same offence, to authorize a tribunal to inflict the punishment, and provide the procedure to be followed. The Recorder's Court of Quebec has no jurisdiction over an offence under the Criminal Code when the jurisdiction is given to two justices of the peace though the recorder himself has.

-County Court Judge-Appointment to fill temporary vacancy—Provincial Act.]—The Provincial Acts of 1901, c. 22, s. 12, amended the County Court Act by providing that "in case of a vacancy in the office of Judge for any district the governor in council may designate and appoint the Judge of any other district to act during the whole or any part of such vacancy." Under this provision the governor in council appointed the Judge of the County Court for district No. 6 to act in district No. 5 during a temporary vacancy in the office of Judge for that district:—Held, tollowing In re County Courts of British Columbia, 21 S.C.C. 464, that the Act authorizing the appointment was intra vires the provincial legislature, and that the appointment thereunder was a mere extension of the district for which the Judge, who had been duly appointed, was authorized to act, and that it was not open to the objection of being an encroachment upon the power of appointment vested in the Government of Canada under the provisions of the British North America Act. s. 92, sub-s. 14. Defendant, who was confined in the lock-up of the town of Springhill on a charge of unlawfully stealing or receiving stolen goods, was tried and convicted before the Judge so appointed, under the Criminal Code, s. 161, of the offence of breaking prison. The evidence showed that the lock-up was situated in the same building with the office of the police magistrate of the town and had been used for years as a place of detention for persons charged with the commission of criminal offences and that there was no other place in the town used for such purpose:-Held, that defendant was a person confined on a criminal charge within the meaning of the Code, tit. I., pt. 1, s. 3, sub-s. (u), and that, with respect to the place of detention, the maxim omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta appiled, and that the regularity of all proceedings necessary to constitute the lock-up a place of confinement in such cases was to be assumed.

-British North America Act, s. 91, sub-s. 29; s. 92, sub-s. 10 (a)—Railway Act.]— The Railway Committee of the Privy Council of Canada, by order made under ss. 187 and 188 of the Dominion Railway Act (51 Vict. c. 29), directed certain measures to be taken to safeguarding the respondents' railway, which is a through railway, and for the protection of the public in traversing it at certain level crossings where it passes across public streets at points within or immediately adjoining the boundary of the appellant city, and directed the cost thereof to be borne in equal proportions by the railway and the city. In a suit by the railway after the execution of works as directed to recover the apportioned amount from the corporation:-Held, that ss. 187 and 188 were intra vires of the Deminion Legislature by force of the British North America Act, 1867, s. 91, sub-s. 29, and s. 92, sub-s. 10(a). Held, also, that, having regard to s. 7, sub-s. 2, of the Interpretation Act (R.S.C., 1886, c. 1), "person" in s. 188 includes a municipality.

Blackwood v. Reg. (1883), 8 App. Cas. 82, followed.

Woodruff v. Attorney-General for Ontario, [1908] A.C. 508.

-Indian lands-Extinguishment of Indian title—Payment by Dominion—Liability of province.]—Where a dispute between the Dominion and a Province of Canada, or between two Provinces comes before the Exchequer Court as provided by s. 32 of R.S.C. 1906, c. 140, it should be decided on a rule or principle of law and not merely on what the Judge of the Court considers fair and just between the parties. In 1873 a treaty was entered into between the Government of Canada and the Satteaux tribe of Ojibeway Indians inhabiting land acquired by the former from the Hudson Bay Co. By said treaty the Salteaux agreed to surrender to the Government all their right, title and interest in and to said lands and the Government agreed to provide reserves, maintain schools and prohibit the sale of liquor therein and allow the Indians to hunt and fish, to make a present of $12 for each man, woman and child in the bands and pay each Indian $5 per year and salaries and clothing to each chief and sub-chief; also to furnish farming implements and stock to those cultivating land. At the time the treaty was made the boundary between Ontario and Manitoba had not been defined, When it was finally determined, in 1884, it was found that 30,500 square miles of the territory affected by it was in Ontario and in 1903 the Dominion Government brought before the Exchequer Court a claim to be re-imbursed for a proportionate part of the outlay incurred in extinguishing the Indian title. The province disputed liability and, by counterclaim, asked for an account of the revenues received by the Dominion while administering the lands in the province under a provisional agreement pending the adjustment of the boundary:—Held, reversing the judgment of the Exchequer Court (10 Ex. C.R. 445) Girouard and Davies, JJ., dissenting, that the Province was not liable; that the treaty was not made for the benefit of Ontario, but in pursuance of the general policy of the Dominion in dealing with Indians and with a view to the maintenance of peace, order and good government in the territory affected; and that no rule or principle of law made the province responsible for expenses incurred in carrying out an agreement with the Indians to which it was not a party and for which it gave no mandate.

—Dominion overrides provincial legislation.]
—Where a given field of legislation is within the competence both of the Dominion Parliament and of Provincial Legislatures, and both have legislated, the Dominion enactment must prevail:—Held, accordingly, that the respondent company, which under Dominion Act, 60 & 61 Vict. c. 72, was empowered to supply, sell and dispose of gas and electricity, with other powers, could not be restrained from operating thereunder, at the suit of the appellants, who, under late Quebec Statutes, had exclusive power of operating in the locality chosen by the respondents.

--North-West Territories Act, s. 11 — English statutes passed subsequent to 15th July, 1870, when "applicable" — Infants' Relief Act, 1870) (Imp.).]—The word "applicable" where it first occurs in s. 11 of the North-West Territories Act, means "suitable" or "properly adapted to the conditions of the country; where it occurs the second time, it has the same meaning as in the Colonial Laws Validity Act, and means, "applicable by the express words or necessary intendment of any Act of Parliament." The Infants' Relief Act, 1874, not being applicable by express words or necessary intendment, was not in force in the Territories, and is not in force in Alberta.

Brand v. Griffin, 1 Alta. R. 510.

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

"Porch or projection attached to any dwelling"—Verandah.]—When an Act of Parliament begins with words which describe things of an inferior degree and concludes with general words, the latter shall not be extended to anything of a higher degree. A statute confirming a survey of a town provided that houses built before a named date need not be removed though encroaching upon streets as ascertained by such survey, but that this "shall not apply to any fence, steps, platform, sign, porch er projection attached to any such dwelling house":-Held, that a verandah of wood, resting on stone pillars, having its own roof, and firmly attached to such a house was an integral part of the house, and not a porch or projection attached to it, and need not be removed under this Act. Held, also, that the position of the house and verandah did not debar the owner from applying for com-pensation under the Ontario Municipal Act for damage sustained, within s. 448 of that Act, by lowering the grade of the street in

Williams v. Town of Cornwall, 32 O.R.

-57 Vict. (Q.), c. 57, s. 1—Properties fronting on lines of streets.]—1. Where it is clear on the face of a statute that it was intended to govern and provide for a particular state of facts the Court will modify the ordinary meaning of words so as to permit such intention to have effect. Therefore, in 57 Vict. (Q.), c. 57, s. 1, the word "widening," in reference to Milton street, being used evidently by inadvertence for "opening," the statute should be read in connection with other statutes relating to the same subject, and should be interpreted so as to give effect to the intention of the legislature. Joseph v. City of Montreal, R.J.Q., 10 C.S. 531 (decided under the same statute), referred to. 2. The clause "properties fronting" on the line of a street includes properties adjoining or contiguous to the line of the street on any side, although the buildings thereon front on a street intersecting the other and the properties are only bounded on the side line by the street first mentioned (Court of Review affirming 15 Que. S.C. 268).

Watson v. Maze, 17 Que. S.C. 579.

And see STATUTE.

—Privilege—Monopoly.]—Every limitation imposed by the legislature when a privilege is granted as a monopoly to the owner of a bridge, should be interpreted as intended to diminish, to the greatest possible extent, the inconvenience, trouble and burdens imposed by the monopoly upon the public. Rouleau v. Pouliot, Q.R. 25 S.C. 88 (Sup.

Ct.)

-Error in printing-Effect of amending Act —Absence of words giving retrospective effect.]—The Assessment Act, R.S., (1900), c. 73, s. 4, sub-s. (p), by the accidental insertion of the word "exempted" rendered liable to assessment property of the plain-tiff company, which had previously been exempted. It was admitted that the word imposing the liability was not contained in the manuscript revision of the statutes, but was inserted, by error, in the printed copy, deposited in the office of the Provincial Secretary, which, it was declared, by the Act respecting the Revised Statutes, Acts of 1900, c. 44, s. 5, should be held to be the original. By an Act of the following year (Acts of 1902, c. 25), the error was corrected, by striking out of s. 4, sub-s. (p) of c. 73 of the Revised Statutes, the word "ex-empted." Held, that, by this amendment, the Court was precluded from coming to the conclusion that the insertion of the word "exempted," in the chapter of the Revised Statutes, amended, was a mistake, and inserted and printed accidentally, it being assumed, in the amending Act, that the section amended was in full force and effect from the time it came into operation, the amendment being one that would be out of place if the legislature had intended from the first that the word should not be there. Held, further, that, in the absence of words giving the amendment a retrospective effect, it could not be so read, and that the Act, as amended, would only apply to future assessments. Held, further, the liability of the plaintiff company having been fixed by R.S., c. 73, and there having been no appeal, that the amendment would not have the effect of preventing the collection of the rate complained of.

under the provisions of the Criminal Code, if the jurisdiction of the Superior Court to deal with the matter, either relatively, because of the place in which it sits, or absolutely, on the ground that the subject matter is not one of contempt, is put in issue. But the Court of King's Bench, sitting in appeal, if it finds that the Superior Court has jurisdiction from both points of view, will not further inquire into the merits of the order. Per Archambeault, J., the order declaring the rule absolute is a final judgment of the Superior Court from which an appeal lies to this Court under Art. 43 C.P. as well on the merits as on the question of jurisdiction. (2) The Superior Court, sit-ting at Quebec, has jurisdiction to take cognizance of, and adjudicate upon, pro-ceedings for contempt by scandalizing the Court, in newspaper articles written and published in Montreal. (3) The Superior Court has jurisdiction to attach and punish for contempt by comments published in newspapers on judicial proceedings, both before and after disposal of them by final judgment. (4) The power to punish for contempt is inherent in Courts of superior original jurisdiction, such as the Superior Court of this province, independently of enactments in the codes and statutes relating to their disciplinary powers. (5) All writings or publications which tend to pervert or to obstruct the ordinary course of justice and to shake or destroy confidence in its due administration, are contempts of -Comment upon pending cause in newspaper-Comment by a party to the cause.] -(1) The question whether a contempt has been committed is for the sole decision of the Court; and the fact that the contemnor denies any disrespectful or contemptuous design to reflect on proceedings pending before the Court, will not justify him if such comments appear to the Court to amount to a flagrant contempt. (2) Proceedings are pending in a criminal case from the time the information has been laid, and so long as any proceedings can be taken. Where the jury have disagreed and a new trial has been ordered, the cause is pending until ended by a verdict or otherwise.

The King v. Charlier, 12 Que. K.B. 385, (Wurtele, J.).

-Party appealing in contempt-Rights of parties in contempt.]-Motion by the plaintiff to stay a pending appeal from a judgment dismissing an application to set aside service as an individual for the defendant Federation on the ground that the Federa tion was not an incorporate body or a partnership and could not be served as a body, for the reason that the Federation were in contempt for disobedience of an injunction: -Held, following The Metallic Roofing Co. of Canada, Ltd. v. The Local Union No. 30, Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers' International Association (1903), 5 O.L.R. 424. that the Federation were not a body capable of being sued or being served, and if so they are not capable of being enjoined or of committing a contempt and that as the very object of the appeal was to determine whether it can be sued and served with process it could not be determined whether a contempt had been committed without hearing the appeal. Held, also, that the rule is not universal, that persons guilty of con-tempt can take no step in the action; a perty, notwithstanding his contempt, is entitled to take the necessary steps to defend himself, and as the defendants here were ordered to appear within ten days, on pain of having judgment signed against them, they had the right to show if they could, that the service upon them was not permitted by the practice. Motion refused, under the circumstances without costs. Fry v. Ernest (1863), 9 Jur. N.S. 1151, and Ferguson v. County of Elgin (1893), 15 P.R. 399, followed.

—Attachment for contempt—Order—Power of Judge to vary—Appeal.]—On motion for an attachment for contempt, for the publication of newspaper articles touching a matter before the Court, and liable to interfere with the fair trial thereof, the learned Judge before whom the motion was made, allowed it, with costs, and concluded his judgment by saying that the defendant must, in addition to paying the costs, undertake not to publish or circulate anything calculated or liable to prejudice the course of justice in respect to the action, while pending, and that he must also publish, in an early num-ber of "The Truth," (a paper conducted by defendant), an expression of regret for having published therein anything touching this action. The order taken out was granted in different terms, requiring the defendant to deposit with the prothonotary of the Court a statement, under his hand, stating his regret at having made such a publication, and undertaking not to publish further comments upon this suit, etc. Held, that as the order was not drawn up at the time judgment was delivered, there was no necessity for following the terms of the written decision, but that it could be varied in any way that seemed proper to the Judge. Also, that the case was one in which an appeal would not lie.

-Refusal of witness to answer question-Materiality of question-Criminal Code, s. 585.]-1. Under s. 585 of the Criminal Code a magistrate would not be justified in committing a witness to jail for refusing to answer a question unless it were in some way relevant to the issue, as that section only applies when the refusal is made "without offering any just excuse," and the form of the warrant of committment referred to in that section contains the words, "now refuses to answer certain questions concerning the premises now put to him." 2. If B. is charged with making an alteration of a document received from A., the question put to A., on his examination as a witness on the trial of B., as to the person from whom he, A., had received this docu-ment, would not be material if the document is produced; but, if it cannot be found, proof of its contents would have to be given, and that might involve, as a part of the claim, information as to the source from which A., had obtained the document, and it could not be held that the question was not in some way material.

Newspaper editorial — Controverted election—Having regard to the principle that the summary remedy of committal for contempt because of comments on a matter sub judice should be granted only when it clearly appears that the course of justice has been or is likely to be restricted or impaired to the prejudice of the applicant, the Court refused a motion to commit the editor of a newspaper because of comments made in an editorial, pending the trial of an election petition in which the applicant, the member elect, was respondent, upon his election methods and expenditure, especially as after the argument of the motion the petition and a cross petition-both containing many charges of corrupt practices-had come on for trial and no evidence having been offered on either side had been dismissed, the applicant then resigning the -Injunction-Disobedience of - Sequestration - Stay of proceedings - Right of appeal.]—The plaintiffs, by the judgment at the trial of this action, were awarded an injunction restraining the defendants from continuing to make binders and sheets in imitation of the plaintiffs', for disobedience of which the issue of a writ of sequestration against the property of the defendants for contempt of Court was, on March 28th, 1907, directed by a Judge, whose order for sequestration was made, an order had been made by a Judge of the Court of Appeal, who, by his reasons in writing, delivered March 4th, 1907, directed that "execution of the injunction be stayed," pending the disposition of an appeal by the defendants from the judgment at the trial, but the formal order thereupon merely directed that "the operation of the judgment appealed from" should be stayed:—Held, that the Court had power to entertain the appeal, and that the order directing the issue of the writ of sequestration should be set aside, on the ground that it was made at a time when there was a stay of execution of the judgment by virtue of the order of March 4th, 1907. Per Moss, C.J.O., and Meredith, J.A.:—The subject matter of the appeal was not a "criminal matter" within the meaning of the British North America Act, 1867, s. 91, sub-s. 27, and was not excluded from the operation of the Judicature Act and the Consolidated Rules (see rule 4), as being the matter of "practice or procedure in criminal matters." enable an Appeal Court to reduce the amount of a fine or lessen the period of imprisonment imposed for contempt of Court it is necessary that the condemnation be so plainly excessive that a reasonable man would not have imposed it. When the Judge, on application for punishment for disobedience of an injunction decides to proceed to proof by affidavits instead of ordering a regular enquete he exercises a discretion given him by law and his decision will only be set aside by a higher Court when it works a manifest injustice.

CONTESTATION.

Want of affidavit—Filing after expiry of time limited — Motion to reject.]—If a motion to file a contestation of collocation, after the expiration of the time limited, has been rejected, because the contestation was not accompanied by an affidavit, it does not suffice that the party produces such affidavit, but he should obtain leave on application to the Court for the production of a contestation accompanied by an affidavit.

-Parol contract to drive logs-Statute of Frauds, s. 4.]-M., who had agreed with the defendants and a number of other lumber manufacturers, to drive down their logs for them, the defendants' contract being a parol one, arranged with the plaintiff to act for him, the obligation to drive the defendants' logs to continue to a named date, for which the plaintiff was to be paid a specified sum, and if M. did not then arrive and take over the drive, the plaintiff was to continue it and to be paid a specified sum per day for himself and those employed by him. M. did not arrive and the drive was continued by the plaintiff. Subsequently, M. having some difficulty in paying his men, a parol agreement was entered into between him and the defendants, whereby, in consideration of his assigning over to them the amounts due him by the defendants and other manufacturers, the defendants undertook to continue the drive, and to pay the existing as well as the indebtedness thereafter to be incurred, the plaintiff being instructed and agreeing to continue the drive on these terms:-Held, by Robertson, J., that there was a new contract founded on new and substantial consideration so that the fourth section of the Statute of Frauds did not apply. On appeal to the Divisional Court the judgment was affirmed, but on the grounds (1) of novation, or (2) that even if M.'s indebtedness still continued, the moneys coming to him having been assigned to the defendants upon their express promise to pay the indebtedness thereout, and the plaintiff having continued the drive on such terms, there was a binding obligation to pay him, and that, in either view, the Statute of Frauds did not apply.

We will see you later on and make final arrangements." Nothing further occurred until the following August, when the plaintiff sent several loads of cucumbers to the defendants, who accepted them and paid for them, nothing being said at the time of any contract between the parties:-Held, that the defendants' letter was not an offer open to acceptance by the plaintiff, or by the delivery of cucumbers to them by the plaintiff, but a statement of their readiness to enter into an agreement with the plaintiff upon terms to be arranged. The operation of this lottery having been declared illegal, the appellant claimed reimbursement of the $10,000, which he had so paid to the association. Both parties admitted the unconstitutionality of the statute of the Legislature in virtue of which the lottery had been authorized:-Held, affirming the judgment of the Court of Review, Lacoste, C.J., and Bossé, J., dissenting, that the payment in question having been made by the appellant, voluntarily and without error, he having made considerable profits out of his contract with the association, the appellant, asserting the illegality of this contract, could not recover back the amount so paid, the contract having been executed in good faith upon both sides.

The plaintiff thereupon abandoned her marriage and continued her service until her employer's death, which occurred four years afterwards, he, in the meantime, having given her a note for $1,500. Sale and conversion of unlisted shares-Measure of damages.]-The damages for the sale and conversion by the defendant of 20,000 shares of the capital stock of a nining company, unlisted and having no market value, to which the plaintiff was entitled under a contract with the defendant, were assessed by a referee upon a reference at 40 cents a share, which was the highest price at which shares of the company had been sold. It appeared that the circumstances in regard to that sale were exceptional. Upon the defendant's appeal to a Judge, the damages were reduced to 26 cents a share, the price obtained by the defendant. Upon the plaintiff's appeal to a Divisional Court, the damages as reduced by the Judge were increased by the sum of $1,500; the Court holding that it should act as a jury, and assess the damages at a fair sum, taking into consideration the fact of a sale at a higher price than that obtained by the defendant. Per Clute, J .: - The plaintiff never recognized the sale by the defendant, and only consented to take damages in lieu of the shares, because, the shares being sold, he had no other remedy. The shares on the day of action was brought had no market value; and a jury would have to say what was a reasonable compensation for the loss of the shares. Per Middleton, J .. - The defendant cannot escape liability beyond the amount received by him in a case of this kind, merely because he acted in good faith so far as the sale was concerned. Nor should he be held to account for the full price realized by another in exceptional circumstances. The value of the shares was left in doubt; and the Court should, as a jury, make a fair assessment. Order of Meredith, C.J.C.P., varied. Goodall v. Clarke, 21 O.L.R. 614.

-Small debt procedure-Conversion-Tort waived-Goods sold-Debt.]-A claim for the value of goods converted by the defendant, the plaintiff expressly waiving the tort and suing as for goods sold and delivered, may be sued under the small debt procedure. The plaintiff in his statement of claim under the small debt procedure, alleged that the defendant had wrongfully taken possession of a horse and converted it to his own use, and expressly waived the tort and sued for goods sold and delivered, claiming $75, the value of the horse. An application to set aside the writ and service upon the ground that the claim was not one for debt within the meaning of Rule 602, which brings "all claims and demands for debts whether payable in money or otherwise, where the amount claimed does not exceed $100," within the small debt procedure, was refused. Henry v. Mageau, 5 Terr. L.R. 512, Scott,

--Personal action-Abatement of-Trespass by testator-Suggestion of death-Liability of executors - Amendment.]-Where one converts to his own use, and sells the goods of the plaintiff and dies after writ issued, but before declaration, the action may be continued against his executors, and they are liable on a count for money had and received. In the above case the declaration was in trespass and for conversion, and upon the argument of the motion for a new trial, application was made to add a count for money had and received:-Held, that as the only fact in dispute, namely, the existence of a tenancy between the parties had been passed upon by the jury in favour of the plaintiff, and as no possible injustice could be done to the defendants, the amendment should be allowed.

Frederick v. Gibson, 37 N.B.R. 126.

-Trover-Stay of proceedings on return of goods-Dispute as to identity of article offered to be returned .- After the commencement of an action of trover for the conversion of a threshing engine, the defendants shipped to the plaintiffs an engine which the defendants alleged, but the plaintiffs denied, to be the one in question. The plaintiffs also claimed that if it was the same it was of very much less value than when converted: -Held, that the defendants were entitled on motion to an order permitting them to return the engine in question upon paying the costs of the action to date and of the motion within two weeks. and providing that if thereafter the plaintiffs proceed to trial and do not recover more than nominal damages they should pay the costs subsequently incurred.

Brown v. Canada Port Huron Co., 15 Man. R. 638.

-Permission to store goods with knowledge of dispute as to title.]-Mere permission by the defendant to store goods in defendant's barn, with knowledge of a dispute as to the title of the goods, but without intent to exercise dominion over the same, does not constitute conversion. Where a cause is tried by a Judge without a jury, and the facts in evidence are not disputed, the Court may reconsider the evidence in the case and overrule the judgment of the trial Judge, if they think it wrong. Here, in the opinion of the majority of the Court, the evidence did not prove any intent on the part of the defendant to convert the goods in dispute and the finding of the trial Judge that there had been a conversion was reversed.

Infringement-5 and 6 Vict. c. 45 (Imp.) -Application to colonies-Importation of fcreign reprints-Assignment of proprietorship—Necessity for registration—Status to maintain action.]—Upon a motion for an interim injunction restraining the defendants from importing into Canada for sale, and from exposing and offering for sale, copies of a book written by Francis Parkman, known as "A Half Century of Conflict," in infringement of the plaintiffs' copyright in such book, it appeared that at the time of the author's death he was the owner of and entitled to the copyright in such book for the British dominions, including Canada, and that after his death such copyright and ownership had been assigned and transferred to the plaintiffs by those upon whom they devolved; that the defendants had imported copies of the book from the United States of America and were offering them for sale in Canada: -Held, that s. 17 of the Imperial Act to amend the Copyright Act, 5 & 6 Vict., c. 45, prohibiting the importation of foreign reprints by any person, not being the proprietor of the copyright or some person authorized by him, is now in force in Canada; and the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to prohibit the importation of foreign reprints into Canada. 2. But the plaintiffs had no right to maintain this action or proceeding, for, although they were the assignees of the proprietorship and ownership of the book, they had not complied with s. 24 of 5 & 6 Vict., c. 45, by causing an entry of their proprietorship to be made in the book of registry of the Stationers Company, the word "proprietor" in s. 24 meaning the person who is the present owner of the work. —Infringement—Evidence—Textual copy.]

—In an action for infringement of copyright in a dictionary the unrebutted evidence showed that the publication complained of treated of almost all its subjects in the exact words used in the dictionary first published and repeated a great number of errors that occurred in the plaintiff's work:—Held, affirming the judgment appealed from, 10 Que. K.B. 255, that the evidence made out a prima facie case of piracy against the defendants which justified the conclusion that they had infringed the copyright.

-Registration - Infringement - Particulars.]-In an action for an infringement of copyright in a book, the statement of claim alleged that the plaintiffs were the proprietors of a subsisting copyright duly registered, and further alleged that the de-fendants printed for sale a large number of copies of another book, a part whereof was an infringement of the plaintiffs' copyright:-Held, that the defendants were entitled to particulars showing the date of registration of the plaintiffs' copyright, and showing what part of the defendants' book infringed the plaintiffs' right. —Sole right of dramatic representation — Infringement—Imperial Acts — Evidence— Examination for discovery—Admissibility thereof as evidence against co-defendants.] —S. 16 of the Imperial Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict., c. 45), provides that the defendant in pleading shall give to the plaintiff a notice in writing of any objections on which he means to rely on the trial of the action. S. 26 allows the pleading of the general issue:—Held (Richardson, J.), that s. 16 is compiled with if the objections in tended to be relied on are taken in the statement of defence. Where under Rule 201 of the Judicature Ordinance, 1898, a party to the action has been orally examined before trial, Rule 224, which allows any party to use in evidence any part of the examination so taken of the opposite parties, does not limit the effect of such evidence, or provide that it may only be put in as against the party examined, and, therefore, any part of such examination is admissible as evidence against opposite parties other than the one actually examined, provided they had an opportunity to crossexamine the party actually examined. At the trial of an action against the officers and members of the committee of management of an unincorporated society for infringement of plaintiff's sole right of dramatic representation of an opera, plaintiff put in as evidence parts of the examination for discovery of B., one of the defendants, the secretary-treasurer of the society. All the defendants were represented by the same advocate, who had attended such examination on behalf of all the defendants and cross-examined the witness. Held, that the testimony given on such examination was admissible as evidence against all the defendants as well as against B. himself. Plaintiff proved that the opera in question, and an assignment to him of the sole right of dramatic representation thereof, had been duly registered at Stationers' Hall. On said examination B. testified that he knew the opera in question, and that the performances complained of were meant to be performances of this opera. He also identified one of the programmes used on the occasions in question, and what he thought to be a poster advertising the performances. Both programme and poster designated the opera by its registered name, and specified the author and composer thereof. L. also testified at the trial that he knew the opera in question, which he had seen and heard performed many times; that he had been present at one of the performances complained of, and that what had been performed on such occasion was the opera in question. Held, that this was sufficient proof of the identity of what was performed by the defendants with the opera in question, and consequently of the infringement. Per Wetmore, J.-Objection to secondary evidence of the contents of a written document must be distinctly stated when it is offered, and if not objected to it is received, and is entitled to its proper weight, and the weight to be attached to it will depend upon the circumstances of each case. Each programme of an entertainment is an original document, not a mere copy. Per McGuire, J-The rule excluding oral testimony of a witness of the contents of a written document which he had read was not applicable to the present case. What was sought to be proved was not the contents of any book or document, but the resemblance or identity of two performances, partly verbal, partly musical, and partly made up of dramatic action, gesture and facial expression. Sufficiency and admissibility of evidence of resemblance or identity of the performance or of copy with original discussed. Judgment of Richardson, J., revered.

(2) The fact that in republishing the work the title was changed to one which was disagreeable to the author and wounded his susceptibilities, does not give him the right to restrain the sale of such republication-particularly where both the original work and the republication appeared under a pseudonym and it was not proved that the author was known to the public under such pseudonym.

-Foreign reprints—Notice to English commissioners of customs—Entry at Stationers' Hall—Copyright in encyclopaedia — Prima facie evidence of copyright—Imperial Acts in force in Canada.]-Held, that s. 152 of the Imperial Customs Law Consolidation Act, 1876, 39-40 Vict., c. 36, requiring notice to be given to the commissioners of customs of copyright and of the date of its expiration, is not in force in this country, notwithstanding the expression opinion in Part IV. of the Appendix to Volume 3 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897, to the contrary effect; and that the plaintiffs had established their right to an injunction perpetually restraining the defendants, the Imperial Book Company, Limited, from importing into Canada any copies of the 9th edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, and for delivery up thereof for cancellation, and for an account:-Semble, if in such notice to the commissioners a wrong date is given as that of the expiry of the copyright, this will invalidate the notice. Held, also, that a certified copy of the entry at Stationers' Hall is prima facie evidence of proprietorship of copyright of an Encyclopædia under ss. 18 and 19 of the Imperial Copyright Act, 1842, and it is not necessary for such prima facie case to prove the facts which by those two sections are made conditions precedent to the vesting of the copyright in one who is not the author. The plaintiffs by agreement in writing in consideration of a large sum of money gave certain other persons the exclusive right to print and sell the edition of the work in question at not less than certain fixed prices, for the remainder of the duration of their copyright except the last four years thereof and delivered over to them the plates used in printing which with all unsold copies were to be re-delivered on the expiry of the agreement and agreed not to announce the publication of another edition before such last mentioned period, but expressly reserved the copyright to themselves. Held, that the agreement was a license and not an assignment, and so did not require registration under s. 19 of 5-6 Viet., c. 45 (Imp.).

- Foreign reprints - Notice to English commissioners of customs-Entry at Stationers' Hall.]-S. 152 of the Imperial Customs Act, 1876, 39-40 Vict., c. 36, requiring notice to be given to the commissioners of customs of copyright, and of the date of its expiration, is not in force in this country, notwithstanding the statement to the contrary in the note to Table IV. of the appendix to vol. 3 of the R.S.O., 1897. That statement is no part of the enactment of the legislature, but is intended merely as a reference, so that the Imperial Copyright Act of 1842, 56 Vict., c. 45, is left to its full operation. Garrow and Maclaren, JJ. A., dissenting. Smiles v. Belford (1877), 1 AR. 436, followed. A certified copy of the entry at Stationers' Hall of an encyclopædia is prima facie evidence of the proprietorship under ss. 18 and 19 of the Act of 1842, and it is not necessary for such prima facie case to prove the facts whereby such sections are made conditions precedent to the vesting of the copyright in one who is not the author. An agreement in writing, whereby the plaintiffs, for value, gave certain other persons the right to print and sell a work at not less than certain fixed prices for the remainder of the term of the copyright, except the last four years, thereof, and under which the plates used in printing were delivered over, which, with all unsold copies, were to be redelivered on the expiry of the agreement, and in which it was agreed not to announce the publication of another edition before such last mentioned period, expressly reserving the copyright to the plaintiffs, was held to be a license, and not an assignment, and so not to require registration under s. 19 of the Imperial Act, 5-6 Vict., c. 45. Certificates of registration produced from the proper branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa are prima facie evidence of due compliance with the requirements of the Copyright Act entitling the producing party to registration under the Act. 2. —Foreign reprints—Notice to English commissioner of customs—Entry at Stationers' Hall.]—The judgment appealed from (Black v. The Imperial Book Company v. Black, 35 Can. S.C.R. 488.

—British copyright—Assignment and registration.]—(1) The assignee of a copyright granted in England under the 5 & 6 Vict. (Imp.) c. 45, is entitled to copyright of the same work, etc., in Canada by having it registered at the Department of Agriculture, under the provisions of c. 62, R.S.C., s 6. (2) Upon suit brought for infringement of such a copyright, the certificate of its registration by the proper officer of the department together with proof of the assignment of the British copyright, is sufficient evidence of the plaintiff's title to the same. (3) Evidence in addition to the foregoing, that the work had been entered at Stationers' Hall, London, Eng., entitles the plaintiff to his remedy under the Imperial Act.

The Anglo-Canadian Music Publishers' Association v. Dupuis, 27 Que. S.C. 485 (Curran, J.).

-Drawings - Publication in newspapers -British copyright - "Book"-Foreign author.]-The plaintiffs claimed copyright in certain cartoon drawings and the accompanying titles and letter-press prepared for the plaintiffs by a celebrated artist, and first published simultaneously in the plaintiffs' newspaper in the United States and in another newspaper in England owned by one H., under agreements between H. and the plaintiffs, to which the artist was also a party. By the agreement H. was acknowledged to be the owner of the British copyright. H. granted a license to the artist to publish the drawings in book form in the United Kingdom. Entry was duly made at Stationers' Hall of H.'s ownership of the copyright of his newspaper. Subsequently this copyright was said to have been assigned by H. to H. & Sons, and before this action was brought H. & Sons registered eight copies of the newspaper containing the eight drawings and letter-press in question, and assignments thereof to the plaintiffs. Before this registration the defendants had, without the consent of the plaintiffs or their predecessors, printed in Canada for the purpose of sale a quantity of pictorial postcards, on which were reproduced copies of the eight drawings, taken from books published by the artist under the license mentioned, but not registered at Stationers' Hall. The artist was not a British subject, and was not, at the time of the preparation or publication of the material in England, within any part of the British dominions. None of the material was protected by a Canadian copyright:-Held, that the effect of the agreements referred to was to vest in the plaintiffs the common law right to copyright in the drawings, and this right was validly transferred to H., who was an "assign" of the artist or author, within the meaning of s. 3 of the Imperial Copyright Act, 4 & 5 Vict., c. 45; and the English newspaper was a book within the meaning of that section, and H. became entitled thereunder to statutory copyright in the drawings as part of his book, for when drawings form part of a book they come within the provisions of that Act, and are protected not only as part of the book, but as drawings. Held, also, that the evidence sufficiently established the plaintiffs' title to the copyright by re-assignment. Held, also, that the present Copyright Act protects the productions of foreign authors wheresoever resident, where there is a first or contemporaneous publication within the empire. Held, therefore, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction, and to delivery up of the infringing copies.

-International copyright-Literary work produced in a foreign country.]-(1) Under the International Copyright Act, 1886, Eng., s. 4, compliance with the conditions and formalities of the country where a literary work is first published gives the author a copyright in Canada without his having to conform to the Copyright Act, c. 62, R.S.C. (2) The International Copyright Act, 1886, Eng., extends to the whole ot the British dominions and is therefore in force in Canada. (3) The words "exclusive legislative authority," in s. 91 and "may exclusively make laws" in s. 92 of the B.N.A. 1867, mean, "to the exclusion of provincial legislatures" in the former, and "to the exclusion of the Dominion Parliament" in the latter.-They cannot be construed to affect the power of the Imperial Parliament to legislate for Canada.

Corpse-Property in-Right of custody, control and disposition-Exercise by executor or relative.] - The plaintiff, the mother and executrix of a deceased man, shipped his body by the defendants' railway from Revelstoke to Bawlf, and accompanied the body. By a mistake of the defendants' servants, the body was put off the train at Banff, and did not arrive at Bawlf until a day later than it should have arrived, occasioning expense by postponement of the funeral, etc. The plaintiff's luggage was also treated in the same way, and she was put to expense in consequence:-Held, that the proposition, accepted in English law, that there can be no property in a corpse, does not rest upon a sound foundation, and is not sustainable at least as a general proposition. The English decisions rest to a large extent upon ecclesiastical law. which has no application or effect in Alberta. The true rule is, that, inasmuch as there is a legal right of custody, control, and disposition, the law recognizes property in a corpse, but property subject to a trust, and limited in its rights to such exercise as shall be in conformity with the duty out of which the rights arise. The property in a corpse is subject, on the one hand, to the obligations of proper care and decent burial, and the restraints upon its voluntary or involuntary disposal and use provided by law, or arising out of the fact that the thing in question is a corpse; and, on the other hand, the nature and extent of the right or obligation of the person for the time being claiming pro-perty; and the Courts will give appropriate remedies against interference with the right of custody, possession, and control of a corpse awaiting burial, presupposing a right of property therein, subject to the obligations and restrictions indicated. Held, also, that the action was one of tort, for damages occasioned by the defendants' negligence; and the plaintiff was entitled to recover as damages not only the money loss occasioned by the mistake, but compensation for her mental anguish occasioned by the delay, and the decomposition of the

A coroner is a local officer who can act only within his own municipal jurisdiction; and a warrant to apprehend issued by him cannot be validly executed out of his county. The fact that a witness at an inquest has already been questioned at great length is not a ground for prohibiting the coroner from subjecting her to further examination; the Court assumes that the coroner will not permit the witness to be unduly harassed.

Jury case—Damages claimed exceeding $1,000—Verdict less than $400.]—In an action tried by Judge and jury, for damages for breach of contract, where the plaintiff claims more than $1,000, costs will follow the event if the plaintiff recovers substantial damages, although the amount of the verdict be less than $400, a sum recoverable in the District Court. The fact that the verdict is less than $400 is not itself "good ceuse," within the meaning of s. 170, justifying the Judge in ordering otherwise. Potter v. Grierson, 2 Alta. R. 126.

—Workmen's Compensation Act—Costs of special case.]—In a memorandum handed down by a Judge of the Supreme Court on a special case under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1902, no mention was made of costs. —Salaried solicitor—Right of successful litigant.]—The city of Calgary employs a solicitor at a fixed annual salary, which by the terms of his appointment is to be received by him "in lieu of all fees and taxed costs payable in respect of any cause or matter," which costs are by by-law to form part of the general revenue of the city. An action against the city, defended by the city solicitor, was dismissed, and plaintiff applied for a review of the taxation of costs, claiming that as the defendant was not obliged to pay costs to its solicitor in respect of the action the plaintiff could not be required to pay any costs:—Held, that in the absence of evidence that the costs of this action as ordinarily allowable would more than indemnify the city against the salary paid to the city solicitor, the city was entitled to the usual costs.

-- Summary disposition-Master in Chambers-Jurisdiction.]—On the 16th May, 1910, the plaintiff began this action, to compel the defendant to convey certain land and for general relief. The statement of claim was delivered on the 9th June and the statement of defence on the 18th June, after which the defendant was examined for discovery. On the 26th August the solicitors for the defendant sent to the plain-tiff's solicitor a conveyance of the property referred to. A conveyance of the property had been made by the defendant's testatrix to the plaintiff, but the making of the affidavit of execution had been, at the plaintiff's request, delayed, and the witness was absent in Europe when the action was begun. The witness returned in August and made the affidavit of execution, whereupon the conveyance was at once sent to the plaintiff's solicitor. Subsequently, on the 1st September, the plaintiff gave notice of a motion to be made before the Master in Chambers "for an order that judgment be entered for the plaintiff for the claims set cut in the plaintiff's statement of claim, and for delivery of the papers therein mentioned, and for the costs of this action." The Master, upon this motion, made an order "that the motion herein made by the plaintiff 18 allowed, and the defendant is hereby ordered to pay to the above-named plaintiff the costs of this action." Upon appeal, an order was made by a Judge in Chambers re-seinding the order of the Master, staying the action forever, and providing that there should be no costs to either party. Upon appeal by the plaintiff from that order:-

Held, by a Divisional Court, that the order of the Master in Chambers was not "an order made by the consent of parties," within the meaning of s. 72 of the Judicature Act, which does not apply to an order made in invitum where jurisdiction is given by consent. Semble, that, if the order had been one made by consent, there would have been no appeal from it, the Master in Chambers coming within the words "High Court or any Judge thereof," in s. 72: Re Justin, a solicitor (1898), 18 P.R. 125. But it was immaterial whether the Master had or had not jurisdiction; he made an order not "as to costs only," and such an order is appealable under Con. Rule 767 (1), no other rule or statute taking away the right of appeal; and, therefore, the appeal was properly heard by the Judge in Chambers. Held, also, that the substantive order made by the Judge (that is, staying the action forever) not being complained of, and being manifestly right, the Court would not interfere with the disposition of the costs made by that order; and, if the merits were considered, the plaintiff, at least, could not complain of the order.

Davis v. Winn, 22 O.L.R. 111.

Review—Reduction of damages.] —The party who succeeds in varying the judgment at first instance by obtaining a reduction from the amount for which he is condemned of even five dollars only, is entitled to his costs on review.

Gamache v. Dechene, 3 Que. P.R. 399 (Ct. Rev.).

-Improper joinder of parties-New trial-Costs.]-The defendant M. brought an action against each of three Marine Insurance Companies on three policies of insurance, two being policies on the hull of defendant's vessel, and the third a policy on freight. Two of the actions were defended by one solicitor and the third by another solicitor. Before the trial an agreement in writing, headed in the three causes, was entered into between the solicitors for the respective parties, by which it was agreed that the three causes, so far as the trial before the jury was concerned, should be tried together, but that evidence relevant to the issues in either of said actions should be considered as taken in that action, etc. At the conclusion of the trial a separate order was taken in each action for judgment for plaintiff with costs. Notices of motion for a new trial headed in each of the three causes was given. The appeals were heard together, and M. having succeeded, a separate order was made in each case dismissing the application with costs. Three notices of appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada were then given—one in each action. No consolidation of the appeals was ordered in that Court, but all were heard together and judgment was given allowing the appeal on payment by the plaintiff companies of costs of the former trial within thirty days after taxation, the appeals, otherwise, to stand dismissed with costs. There being some uncertainty as to the exact terms of the judgment in the Supreme Court of Canada, as to what was decided as to costs and as to the time for payment, plaintiffs' solicitors paid to B. the amount claimed by M.'s solicitors as payable under the judgment, but did so under protest and reserving the right to require payment of any part of the amount paid, on the ground that they had already paid more than they were required to do. In an action brought on behalf of the three companies jointly to recover back the money paid, as having been paid by mistake:—Held, per Graham, E.J., McDonald, C.J., and Townshend, J., con-curring, that the claims made against the three companies and their supposed liability being several, and the money to pay the claims having been contributed severally and paid on their account severally in mistake as to part the implied promise to pay back that part to the companies was several and the title to the moneys in the possession of defendants was several and they could not be joined as plaintiffs, and that for these reasons the judgment appealed from must be reversed. Held, that if plaintiffs elected to have a new trial and amended by striking out all of the plaintiffs except one to be selected, and to retax the costs of the trial severally against each company they ought to have leave to do so on payment of the costs of appeal and trial and consequent on the amendment; otherwise the action to be dismissed with costs.

Insurance Co. of North America v. Borden, 37 C.L.J. 319 (S.C.N.S.).

—Dismissal of action—Warranty — Exception declinatoire. J—The plaintiff whose action has been dismissed with costs "excepting, however, the costs occasioned by the appeal in warranty," is, nevertheless, liable for the costs of the declinatory exception, made by the principal defendant whose action in warranty has also been dismissed, to put his warrantor (garant) en cause.

—Dominion Lands Act—Charge on land—Costs—Real Property Act (Man.).]—Under Rule 277 of the Queen's Bench Act, 1895, costs will be given against the Crown when it fails in proceedings taken by way of caveat and petition under The Manitoba Real Property Act.

Regina v. Fawcett, 13 Man. R. 205 (Bain, J.).

-Effect of allowing appeal-Non-appealing party.]-Action to restrain a township corporation and a contractor from constructing a drain authorized by by-law of the township. The judgment of the High Court granted an injunction against and ordered costs to be paid by both defendants, and ordered the corporation to indemnify the contractor if he paid them. The corporation appealed to the Court of Appeal, making the contractor a respondent; the latter appeared at the hearing of that appeal, but did not himself appeal. The appeal was allowed with costs:-Held, that the result of allowing the corporation's appeal was that, as the plaintiff's right to recover against the contractor depended upon his right to recover against the corporation. the action must be dismissed as against both defendants, but the contractor could have no costs of the appeal. Semble, that he should have his costs below against the plaintiff.

Challoner v. Township of Lobo et al. (No. 2), 1 O.L.R. 292 (C.A.).

-Liability for costs-Revivor-Substituted plaintiff-Transfer of right pendant lite.]-It may, in rare cases, such as Chambers v. Kitchen (1894), 16 P.R. 219, be "necessary and desirable" under Rule 396 to add or substitute a person as plaintiff, without the consent required by Rule 206 (3), upon the application of the opposite party; but where it becomes necessary to substitute a person as plaintiff without his consent, to prevent injustice, he should not be exposed, without some further action on his part or adoption by him of the position into which he is forced, to any liability for damages or costs. Under the circumstances of this case, the fact that F. had become pendente lite the transferee of the promissory note sued on did not entitle the defendants to an order substituting him as plaintiff and making him liable for the costs of the action. But the original plaintiff could not be allowed to prosecute the action further, because he had no longer any interest in it, and F. could not be allowed to do so because he had not caused himself to be substituted as a plaintiff, nor obtained leave to proceed in his own name upon the judgment pro-nounced in favour of the plaintiff, which had not been entered, but from which the defendants sought to appeal; and all further proceedings in the action should, therefore, be stayed, but without costs.

Murray v. Wurtele, 19 Ont. Pr. 288.

—Judgment for admitted part of claim.]—Where the defendant, by his plea, offers judgment for part of the sum claimed, and the plaintiff does not accept such offer, but proceeds to proof and is unsuccessful in establishing any greater sum than that admitted, he is entitled only 'to costs up to plea filed, and will be condemned to pay the defendant's costs of contestation after plea filed.

Poulin and Prevost, summarized in Bertrand v. Hinerth, 24 L.C.J., p. 168, followed; Gilman v. Cockshutt, 18 Que. S.C. 552.

-Application for summary judgment-Dismissal of summons-Costs.]-On a summons for judgment under Order XIV., if the case is not within the order, or there are circumstances which render it improper to grant the application, or the plaintiff knew the defendant relied on a contention which would entitle him to unconditional leave to defend, the summons will be dismissed with costs in any event, but not payable forthwith. Where leave to defend is given, costs, as a general rule, will be in the cause. It is only in exceptional circumstances that costs will be ordered to be paid forthwith. In chamber applications generally, costs are made payable by the unsuccessful party in any event, but not forthwith.

Victoria v. Bowes, 8 B.C.R. 15 (Martin, J.).

-Offer to suffer judgment by default-Effect on costs.]-In an action for false imprisonment defendants, seven days before trial made an offer to suffer judgment by default for $75.00. Plaintiff went down to trial and recovered verdict for precisely the amount of offer:-Held, on motion to review taxation of plaintiff's costs, Gregory, J., dissenting, that the offer, not having been filed in time to give the plaintiff ten days before the trial in which to make her option, the defendants were not entitled under s. 184 of the Supreme Court Act, to judgment against the plaintiff for costs incurred by them after the date of such offer, but, on the contrary, the plaintiff was entitled to full costs of suit. Rule discharged.

Sharpe v. School Trustees, 37 C.L.J. 82 (S.C.N.B.).

—Contested collocation.]—The costs of opposing the report of distribution of an insolvent's estate will be imposed on defendant when the circumstances of the case show that the contest was occasioned more by his fault than by errors of others.

-Offer of settlement pending appeal.]—
When a judgment is reduced on an appeal pending which the respondent had offered to accept in settlement an amount smaller than the original judgment but greater than the reduced judgment, the appellant will be allowed the costs of the appeal.

Dallin v. Weaver, 8 B.C.R. 241.

-Of examination for discovery- Parties to action.]—A flat will not be granted under Rule 932 of The King's Bench Act to tax to a plaintiff the costs of the examination of a defendant who was not a necessary or proper party to the action, although no objection on that ground was taken prior to the application for the flat. An insolvent debtor who has made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors is neither a necessary nor a proper party to an action by the assignee to set aside a fraudulent preference given by him.

—On appeal.]—Plaintiff having appealed from the whole of the order or decision, and having been successful only as to costs, held that neither party should have costs of the argument.

Bauld v. Fraser, 34 A.S.R. 178.

—Summons for judgment under B. C. Order XIV.—Practice.]—A plaintiff who obtains judgment on a summons under Order XIV., issued after the expiration of the time for filing defence, is entitled to the costs of the summons and not only to such costs as he would have been entitled to had he taken judgment in default of defence.

Diamond Glass Co. v. Okell Morris Co., 9

-Solicitor - Payment by salary - Costs against opposite party.]-By arrangement between the defendants and their solicitor he was to receive a salary of $1,800 a year, for all services, including the costs of litigation in which the defendants should be engaged. The present action against the defendants was dismissed with costs on September 14th, 1901. The defendants brought in their bill for taxation:—Held, following Jarvis v. The Great Western Ry. (1889), 6 C.P. 280, and Stevenson v. The Corporation of the City of Kingston (1880), 31 C.P. 333, in preference to Galloway v. The Corporation of London (1887), L.R. 4 Eq. 90, and Henderson v. Merthyr Tydfil Urban District Council, [1900] 1 Q.B. 434, that in view of the above agreement with their solicitor, the defendants could not tax their costs against the plaintiff. Judgment of Street, J., reversed. Leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal was afterwards refused by Moss, J.A.

Ottawa Gas Co. v. City of Ottawa, 4 O. L.R. 656 (Div. Ct.).

-Offer to suffer judgment by default - Costs of trial.]-The plaintiff, notwithstanding that she had received notice of an offer to suffer judgment by default within the ten days allowed to her by the statute for its acceptance carried the cause down to trial and obtained a verdict therein for a sum exactly equal to the amount mentioned in the offer. On a motion to review the taxation of the plaintiff's costs:-Held (per Tuck, C.J., Hanington, Landry and Mc-Leod, JJ.), that the making of the offer in no way operated as a stay of proceedings, and the taking of the cause down to trial by the plaintiff was not equivalent to a rejection thereof; and that she was, therefore, entitled to have the costs of the trial allowed to her on taxation.

-Refusal of costs - Discretion of trial Judge.]-In an action claiming damages for an alleged interference with a fishing berth, judgment was given in favour of defendant, but he was deprived of costs, it appearing that both defendant and plaintiff acted throughout as if they thought the fishing berth in controversy was in Lunenburg county; that it had, up to the time of action, been under the charge and control of Lunenburg officers; that defendant attempted to take it up according to the custom of fishermen followed in that county; that he attended before the fishery officers of that county when they attempted to settle the dispute between himself and plaintiff, and did not question their jurisdiction; and that the defence that the berth was not in Lunenburg but in Queens county was not pleaded, nor the objection taken until the trial:-Held, dismissing defendant's appeal with costs, that this was not a case in which the discretion of the trial Judge should be reviewed.

Selig v. Nowe, 36 N.S.R. 99.

—Payment into Court—Appeal as to costs— Amendment of pleadings — Moulding pleadings to accord with evidence.]—The trial Judge having reserved judgment came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were entitled to the moneys paid into Court by the defendant. He held, however, that they were not so entitled under the form of the statement of claim (4 Terr. L.R. p. 498), but only under a claim for conversion, and accordingly in his reasons for judgment— the formal order had not been taken out before the appeal-he stated that under the authority of Rule 189 of the Judicature Ordinance, C.O. 1898, c. 21, he "amended the statement of claim so as to determine the real question at issue according to the evidence adduced," and thereupon directed judgment to be entered for the plaintiffs for the amount paid into Court, without costs. On appeal to the Court en banc:-Held (1), that no amendment was necessary; that if, as in this case, the facts alleged showed a wrongful conversion that was sufficient, although the specific words were not used, and that so far as the relief claimed was concerned the Court was entitled under English O. 20, Rule 6 (introduced by J. O. 1898, s. 21), and J. O. 1898, s. 8, sub-s. 5, to give, and ought to give, any appropriate relief to which the plaintiffs were entitled, though it was not specifically claimed. (2) That where money is paid into Court (though with a denial of liability) it is to be taken to be pleaded as an alternative defence going to the whole cause of action, and if the plaintiff fails to show himself entitled to a greater sum the defendant is entitled to judgment on this defence, and that the proper judgment as to costs is:-The plaintiff to have the costs of the action up to the time of payment into Court: the defendant to have the general costs of the action from that time and the plaintiff to have the costs of the issues found in his favour. (3) That although by Rule 500 of the J.O.C.O. 1898, c. 21, no appeal lies without leave from any judgment or order as to costs only which by law are left to the discretion of the Court or Judge making the judgment or order; and although the Court will not as a rule interfere with such discretion unless it has been exercised on a wrongful principle, nevertheless when the judgment or order dealing with the question of costs is appealed from on other grounds, the Court has power under Rule 507 to make any order which ought to have been made by the Court or Judge, and this rule authorizes the Court in banc to deal with the question of the costs below in any way which may appear necessary or expedient by reason of its varying or reversing the judgment or order appealed from. (4) That there were therefore two grounds on which to vary the trial Judge's direction as to costs: (a) That the trial Judge acted on a wrong principle, and (b) That his direction amending the plaintiff's statement of claim was unnecessary and improper. The trial Judge's direction as to costs was therefore varied.

—Third party—Ont. Rule 214—Discretion—Appeal.]—Rule 214 gives power to the Court or a Judge to order a plaintiff whose action is dismissed to pay the costs of a third party brought in by the defendant. Such an order is in the discretion of the Court or Judge, and there is no appeal from it, unless by leave, as provided by the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 51, s. 72. Tomlinson v. Northern Ry. Co. R.S.O. 1897, c. 223, applies only to actions brought to recover damages "for alleged negligence on the part of the municipality." In an action against a municipality for damages for diverting water upon the plaintiff's land by the construction of a ditch without any proper by-law authorizing the work:—
Held, that s. 470 did not apply as the plaintiff's claim was for trespass and not for negligence, and that the trial Judge had

Defendant's agent having learned that the opposition had been filed, went to plaintiffs' office and told them that defendant would not pay the costs but without ordering the proceedings to be discontinued, and the opposition having been maintained he took away the piano:-Held, that under the circumstances the defendant was obliged to pay to plaintiffs the costs of the opposition. Semble, that the defendant if he wished to escape payment of the costs should have disavowed the proceedings taken in his Warman v. Crystal, 35 N.B.R. 562.

-Discontinuing action-Good cause for depriving defendant of costs.]-Plaintiff claiming that she was entitled to $1,500-part of the monies secured by two policies of $500 and $2,000 on her deceased husband's life—such amount being alleged to have been made over to her by her husband's dying declaration, her solicitor wrote to a brother of the deceased, the supposed holder of the policies, notifying him of the plaintiff's claim, whereupon a solicitor replied that his instructions were that the two policies were "originally and always payable" to the deceased mother, and so formed no part of the deceased's estate. The plaintiff's solicitor then wrote to the mother, to which the same solicitor replied that he could not understand the ground of the plaintiff's claim, but if she desired to commence an action he would accept service. The plaintiff thereupon commenced an action which was defended by the said solicitor, but on the plaintiff subsequently discovering that the brother who had been first written to actually did hold the policies under an assignment from the mother, he wrote to the solicitor for his consent to discontinue the action without costs, and on this being refused, a motion therefor was made under Rule 430 (4):-Held, that an order could properly be made for the discontinuance on the terms asked for. Construction of Rule 430 (4) and difference in the corresponding English Rule pointed out. Order of the Master in Chambers affirmed. Armstrong v. Armstrong, 9 O.L.R. 14

(Anglin, J.).

-Nominal damages-Discretion of trial Judge refusing costs.]-In an action brought by plaintiff claiming damages for breaking and entering plaintiff's close. and destroying and injuring his grass and crops, and permitting cattle, calves and other animals to break and enter, etc., the trial Judge found that the trespass committed was a very trifling one, that the action was the result of ill-feeling and of previous litigation, and that no substantial injury to plaintiff's property was suffered. He found that plaintiff was entitled to recover, but, in view of all the circumstances. he fixed the damages at the sum of $5, and refused plaintiff his costs of action:-Held, dismissing plaintiff's appeal with costs. that there was no reason for interfering with the discretion of the trial Judge in refusing costs.

-Judge's discretion-Question of costs-Depriving plaintiff of costs-Review.]-In an action brought by plaintiff against defendant for the conversion of a two-masted schooner, the "Mayflower," the trial Judge found that the property claimed was that of plaintiff, when taken by defendant, but he deprived the plaintiff of costs on the ground of fraudulent proceedings in connection with the prosecution of his claim. It appeared that, some time previously, defendant recovered judgment against plaintiff, and assued execution under which the property in question was levied upon, and that, at the instance of plaintiff, an action was brought by his wife to recover the property alleging it to be hers. Afterwards, the judgment recovered by defendant against plaintiff having been set aside, plaintiff brought this action in his own name:— Held, that the Judge's discretion was properly exercised, and that, on a question of fact, and especially on a question of costs, it should not be reviewed, minion), which award, by reason of s. 162 of the Railway Act, 1903, entitled him to the costs of the arbitration, the railway company appealed to the Full Court, advancing several distinct grounds of appeal, on all of which, with the exception of the rate of interest allowed by the arbitrators, they failed, the interest being reduced to the statutory rate, from six per cent. to five per cent.:—Held, (Irving, J., dissenting). (1) That the word "event" in s. 100 of the Supreme Court Act, 1904, may be read distributively. (2) That s. 162 of the Railway Act, 1903 (Dominion), does not apply to costs of appeals to the Full Court from the award of arbitrators, but that such appeal is an independent proceeding, and is therefore governed by s. 100 of the Supreme Court Act, 1904. (3) That the success of the appellant company on the question of interest was merely an "issue" arising on the appeal, and not an "event" on which it was taken.

Vancouver, Westminster and Yukon Railway Company v. Sam Kee, 12 B.C.R. 1.

-Agreement - Settlement of a judgment debt - Costs - Interpretation.]—The term "costs" in an agreement to accept a specified sum, and costs in settlement of a judgment, means the taxed costs in the suit, and does not include other charges due by the creditor to his solicitors in connection with the debt.

Blackwood v. Percival, 14 Que. K.B. 445.

—Costs reserved to be disposed of at trial —Not considered at trial—Jurisdiction of trial Court after appeal taken.]—Where on an interlocutory motion costs are reserved to be disposed of at the trial, and the trial is had without any reference to these costs, if an appeal from such judgment be taken and the judgment affirmed, the jurisdiction of the appellate Court attaches, and the trial Court on the further application has no power to render any further decision unless remanded, and even then the Court will deal with such application only under special circumstances.

Tucker v. The Ship Tecumseh, 10 Can. Exch. R. 153.

—Revising minutes of judgment—Mistake —Costs of abandoned defences.]—The plaintiffs' action was maintained with costs in the Courts below, but on appeal, it was dismissed with costs by the Supreme Court of Canada (37 Can. S.C.R. 546), no reference being made to certain costs incurred by the plaintiffs in respect of several defences which the defendant had abandoned in the trial Court. On motion to vary the minutes, the matter was referred to the Judge of the trial Court to dispose of the question of the costs on the abandoned defences.

—Privilege — Insolvency.]—A third party who claims, by petition, a privilege or droit de gage on certain effects of an insolvent in possession of his curator is entitled to the costs of an action for the amount of his lien.

In re Maller, 8 Que. P.R. 152 (Lafontaine, J.).

-Hypothecary action against third party -Assignment by attorney. |-The costs of an action to recover a privileged debt on an immovable are themselves privileged by the same title as the debt to which they are accessory. The creditor has, in such case, an hypothecary action to recover the costs from a third party who has acquired the immovable affected by the privilege. A judgment against the plaintiff in an action to recover the costs on the ground that they belong to the attorney ad litem by reason of distraction of costs is not chose jugée in a second action by the same plaintiff to recover the same costs under an assignment made to him by his attorney ad litem. When an action brought in a Court incompetent ratione materiæ is evoked by such Court to a competent tribunal the deposit of the amount claimed made before the evocation took place does not relieve him from the obligation to pay the costs.

General Hospital v. Dufresne, Q.R. 30 S.C. 530 (Sup. Ct.).

—Joint defendants—Appeal by one defendant only—Reversal of judgment.)—If one of two defendants acquiesced in the judgment rendered in favour of the plaintiff by the Superior Court, and the case is taken to appeal by the other defendant, who succeeds in obtaining the dismissal of the action, he can only tax against the plaintiff one half of the Superior Court costs, plus the costs of judgment, bill and taxation.

Marsan et al. v. Guay, 8 Que. P.R. 162.

—Payment out of Court—Accountant's office—Issue of cheque—Refusal to accept—Delay in second application.]—The High Court receives money primarily for the protection of infants and others not competent to deal with their own property, and those who cannot be found; the machinery of the Court not being intended as a convenience for those who are sui juris and know their rights, it is the duty of those entitled to receive money out of Court to apply for it at the earliest moment reasonably possible. A person so entitled, who had refused to accept a Court cheque on the ground that the solicitor who obtained it had no authority to do so, and delayed seventeen years in applying for payment of the money was ordered to pay the costs of an application to the Court for the issue of a duplicate cheque, the former cheque not having been accounted for, and interest was allowed at the rate of 3 per cent. only, while the money was in Court.

Re Sturgis, Sturgis v. Van Every, 14 O.L.R. 77.

—Mis en cause who has no interest in the case—C.P. 549.]—The mis en cause, who has no interest in the case, has the right to recover from the plaintiff his costs of appearance and declaration, and the plaintiff who succeeds against the defendant may in turn have them taxed against him.

Jacobs v. E. Hagerman Company, 8 Que. P.R. 281 (Davidson, J.).

—District Court—Action beyond jurisdiction of County Court—Scale of costs.]—
Where, in an action tried before a District Court Judge, without a jury, there is a recovery for an amount beyond the jurisdiction of the County Courts the Judge is not compelled, under s. 11 of the District Courts Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 109, read in the light of the Rules of Court applicable thereto, either to withhold costs altogether or to grant a certificate therefor on the High Court scale. He has a discretionary power,

- Wrongful detention - Amendment -Counterclaim.]-On the trial of an action claiming damages for the wrongful detention and conversion of plaintiff's horse, judgment was given in favour of plaintif for detention, but defendant's pleadings were amended to enable him to counterclaim for amounts paid to and on account of plaintiff, and judgment was given in his favour for this amount with costs and the costs were offset:-Held, allowing plaintiff's appeal, that plaintiff should not have been made to pay costs of an amendment required by defendant, and that defendant should not have been allowed costs of a counterclaim put on the record to enable him to get the benefit of payments not put forward to a claim against plaintiff. There was no evidence to warrant the damages awarded to plaintiff for detention of the horse, but it was held that, in the absence of an appeal, the judgment could not be disturbed World Printing and Publishing Co. v. The Vancouver Printing and Publishing Co., 13 B.C.R. 220.

-Appeal to Privy Council-Execution-Stay.]-When costs of appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have been awarded by the judgment of that tribunal, they are not subject to the rules of practice of the lower Courts; there is no right to set-off, and no right to modify the direction to pay, which means forth-with after the amount is fixed, unless by application made to the Committee before final judgment is completed. Russell v. Russell, [1898] A.C. 307, applied and followed. The plaintiffs, having been ordered by the Judicial Committee to pay the costs of the defendants' appeal to that tribunal, were held not entitled to a stay of execution for such costs in the Court below (the High Court), with a view to a set-off of other costs or of damages to be recovered upon a new trial ordered by the Judicial Committee.

Metallic Roofing Co. v. Jose, 17 O.L.R. 237.

-Reprise d'instance.]-The costs of the order directing a party to take up the instance will be reserved to be disposed of with the merits of the cause.

Lecompte v. Lanctot, 9 Que. P.R. 164 (Sup. Ct.).

—Discretion.]—The rule that the unsuccessful litigant must bear the costs of the action is imperative and the Court can only exercise its discretion of relieving him in whole or in part from such burden for special reasons which should be set forth in the judgment.

Co., Q.R. 31 S.C. 516 Ct. Rev.).

—Denial of allegations of facts—Discretion of Court.]—In an action against a municipality for damages for death of a horse caused by the bad state of a public road the defendant denied that the road was out of repair. The Court of first instance held that the allegation as to the state of the road was true, but that the accident occurred in another place as to which the municipality was not in fault:—Held, that as the denial of the allegation by defendant caused an expensive and useless enquire it was a special cause for which the Court could, by application of Art. 549 C.C.P., refuse to give costs.

Lauzon v. Township of La Minerva, Q.R. 32 S.C. 214 (Ct. Rev.).

—Mis en cause—Contested action.]—The plaintiff who calls in a party as mis en cause and demands costs against him in case he contests the action cannot, if he does not contest it, maintain an action against him for the costs.

Michaud v. Roy, Q.R. 34 S.C. 352.

—Dismissal of action—Failure of defendant to prove plea.]—The fact that the defendant who succeeds on the trial of an action has not proved one of his grounds of defence when the same did not cause any expense at the enquête is no reason against giving costs to the defendant.

Daigle v. Noel, Q.K. 35 S.C. 341.

—Action for damages—Amount of verdict.]

—In an action for damages whatever may be the extent of the injury suffered and the appreciation of the Court as to the same if it does not see fit to award damages for a sum exceeding $8 it cannot impose costs on a higher scale than the amount of the verdict would carry. Therefore a judgment against the defendant for $5 damages with the costs of an action for $60 to $100 and stenographer's fees should be set aside, the Court having no power to impose more than $5 for costs (Art. 550 C.P.Q.).

Donville v. Ouellette, Q.R. 34 S.C. 385.

—Dismissal of action—Actions in warrantry.]—Where an action is dismissed with costs for failure by the plaintiff to furnish security judicatum solvi he should be condemned to pay the costs of actions en garantie et en arrière-garantie though the same have not been tried as they depend on the result of the main action. House v. Hébert, Q.R. 36 S.C. 21.

Baker v. Atkins, 14 B.C.R. 320.

—Set-off exceeding plaintiff's claim—Judgment for defendant for balance.]—Where the claims of the respective parties to the action consist of mutual debts, they are subject to the statutory provisions relating to set-off, now found in R.S.O. 1897, c. 324, ss. 5, 6, 7. History of s. 7, which provides that if upon a defence of set-off a larger sum is found to be due from the plaintiff to the defendant than is found to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff, the defendant shall be entitled to judgment for the balance. Set-off and counterclaim, in our practice, remain in their nature different. The latter is in strictness a cross-action or claim for relief which cannot be obtained by the defendant in the action, and the costs of the action and counterclaim are usually dealt with as if the claims of the respective parties were the subjects of separate actions; while a set-off, when proved, is not only a statutory defence to the action, but where the defendant's claim over-tops that of the plaintiff he is also by s. 7 entitled to judgment for the excess, the latter not being, as in England, necessarily or properly the subject of counterclaim, but rather an incident of the defence. The proper judgment, therefore, when the defendant proves a set-off equalling the plaintiff's claim, is a dismissal of the action, and, if exceeding it, also a judgment for the excess. Where the defendant, in asserting a set-off or other claim which is merely a matter of defence, pleads it as a counterclaim, the practice is to disregard the form of the pleading, and to dispose of the action and costs in accordance with the real character of the defence. Judgment directed to be entered for the defendant dismissing the action and for the excess of the amount found due to him over that found due to the plaintiff, with costs. Costs are by statute and Rule of Court in the discretion of the Court or Judge; but when such discretion has been exercised upon an erroneous principle or upon a misapprehension of the facts-in other words, where there has been no real exercise of judicial discretion—an appeal lies without —Opposition—Dismissal on motion—Class of action.]—If an opposition is dismissed on motion, one attorney of the plaintiff who has not filled an appearance in writing on the opposition is not entitled to a fee for appearing. The fee on an opposition dismissed on motion is that of an action dismissed on preliminary exceptions. The class of action of an opposition is governed by the value of the effects claimed by the opposition and, in the absence of other proof, the amount claimed by the opposition as representing the value of the effects revendicated by it should be deemed to be the exact value.

—Scale of—Jurisdiction—Balance due on contract signed by defendant—Extrinsic evidence. J—In an action in the County Court for $37.50, balance due on a building contract of $475, signed by the defendant, where extrinsic evidence was required to show performance of the contract by the plaintiff, and for an open account for $27.35, and in which the defendant was allowed $25.00 for defective work and material:—Held, that the Division Court had no jurisdiction, and that the plaintiff was entitled to his costs on the County Court scale. Kinsey v. Roche (1881), 8 P.R. 515, approved of; McDermid v. McDermid (1888), 15 A.R. 287, followed; re Graham v. Tomlinson (1888), 12 P.R. 367, not followed. Kreutziger v. Brox, 32 Ont. R. 418.

—Appeal from judgment of drainage referee.]—The costs of an appeal to the Court or Appeal from the decision of the drainage referee in a proceeding under the Drainage Act initiated before him should (if awarded to either party) be taxed on the scale applicable to appeals in cases begun in the High Court of Justice. Decision of a Divisional Court, 19 P.R. 188, 1900 C.A. Dig. 76, reversed.

Jones v. Moodie, 3 Que. P.R. 354.

—Action to have foreign administrator recognized—Class of action.]—An action whereby the plaintiff, appointed by a foreign tribunal administrator to a decedent estate, seeks to have his quality recognized in this country, against a sequestrator appointed by our Courts to the property situate in this country, will be considered a first class action for taxation purposes, if it comes up that the property situated in this country amounts to more than $1.000. Royal Bank v. Harris, 8 B.C.R. 368 (Irving, J.).

—Writ of execution — Quebec tariff.]—When a writ of execution is issued from the Superior Court the costs should be according to the amount for which it is issued, but if the amount is less than $100 then it is the tariff of the fourth class of the Superior Court which should be applied; but when the execution of the writ is not by an opposition taken to have it set aside on the ground that the amount due has been paid, and which opposition is maintained with costs, the fees of the attorney should be according to the sum claimed by the writ.

Morinville v. Baril, 20 Que. S.C. 327 (Sup. Ct.).

—Scale — Retraxit — Witnesses — Art. 557 C.C.P.]—The fact that the plaintiff—who had sued to recover $1,165.29, namely, $776.82, the value of goods sent to the defendant to be forwarded, but which were not delivered, and $388.46 for damages caused by failure to deliver, has filed a retraxit pending the instance for $388.73 for certain goods sent since the action, does not take away the right of taxing the costs as in an action of the first class. There may be a review of the taxation of witnesses summoned from outside of the jurisdiction, even though no objection was made thereto on the taxation if the total amount of the costs taxed exceeds the cost of a commission rogatoire.

Rothehild v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co., 21 Que. S.C. 318 (Sup. Ct.).

—Saisie-arret—Costs—Scale.]—The saisie-arrêt is a new proceeding, and the costs of a judgment maintaining the disavowal of the attorney who had procured the seizure to be made are determined by the amount for which the writ of saisie-arrêt was issued.

Latour v. Latour, 5 Que. P.R. 306 (Doherty, J.).

—Tariff—Class of action.]—The allowance of costs, being a matter of statutory declaration and not of right, cannot exceed the limits defined by the text of the statute. Therefore sub-division 7 of the second class of the Quebec tariff must apply to the allowance of costs in an action praying for the rescission of a winding-up order and appointment of a liquidator to a company, although financial interests may be involved in the suit, which, if they formed the subject of the conclusons of the action, would bring it within the first class for purposes of taxation.

Leduc v. Corporation of St. Louis de Gonzague, 5 Que. P.R. 448.

—Attachment after judgment—Seizure of salary—Class of action.]—If a contestation of the declaration of a garnishee be dismissed the class of action will depend upon the amount of the judgment which the contestant might have recovered against the garnishee if he had been declared to have been indebted and this is so even if part of the amount may have been exempt from seizure.

Sieyes v. Painchaud, 5 Que. P.R. 363.

—Revendication of insurance policies—Class of action.]—In an action in revendication for the recovery of insurance policies where the company appears and s'en rapporte a justice, costs should be granted according to the face value of the policies and not according to the actual value of the policies as title deeds.

McDuff v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 6 Que. P.R. 133 (Fortin, J.).

-Trespass-Flooding land-Title to land.] -Where an action for damages for flooding and other trespasses to the plaintiff's lands situated in the Parry Sound District was brought in the High Court, and the title thereto was brought in question, and, though no evidence was given as to its value, it could not reasonably be contended that it did not exceed $200, and clause (d) of sub-s. 2 of s. 9 of the R.S.O., c. 109, giving jurisdiction to inferior Courts, where the land is under such value, not applying to such district, and the Judge at the trial having found for the plaintiff and directed judgment to be entered for him for $100 damages with the costs of the Court having jurisdiction to such amount without any set-off, the plaintiff was held entitled to tax his costs on the High Court scale.

Neely v. Parry Sound River Improvement Company, 8 O.L.R. 128 (D.C.).

—On County Court scale—Jurisdiction to order.]—In a Supreme Court action, the Judge has no jurisdiction to order costs on the County Court scale on the ground that the action might or should have been brought in the County Court.

Russell v. Black, 10 B.C.R. 326.

—Attachment after judgment—Class of action.]—(1) On a contestation of a garnishee's declaration, the class of action is fixed by the amount claimed by the contestant. (2) The fact that the contestation seeks to have the seizure declared holding does not change the class of action. (3) Even if the amount claimed by the contestation is below $100, if the same is tried before the Superior Court, the winning party is entitled to charge stamps and depositions as in Superior Court cases. (4) The debtor and the manager of the company garnishee cannot be taxed against the contestant.

Collins v. Clare, 6 Que. P.R. 381 (Archibald, J.).

—Class of action—Tutor.]—If a tutor brings an action, in his representative capacity, for damages which is dismissed with costs against him personally, and on appeal the personal condemnation is set aside with costs, the amount in dispute on the appeal is the amount of the costs awarded against him, and not the sum claimed by the action.

Garnier v. Armand, 6 Que. P.R. 45 (Würtele, J.).

—Class of action—Prerogative writs.]—An action praying "that the defendants be ordered to cause the immediate cessation of the emanation of unhealthy odors and smoke from their said establishments, and that on failure to do so that the plaintiff be authorized to cause the same to cease at the defendant's expense, by employing the means necessary for the purpose; and that the defendants be condemned to pay the said sum of one hundred dollars with costs," is similar as regards costs in the Court of King's Beneh, to proceedings by writs of prerogative, and is, consequently, an action of the first class.

Town of St. Paul v. Cooke, 6 Que. P.R. 48 (Würtele, J.).

-Alimentary allowance—Reduction.]—The scale of costs in an action for reduction of an alimentary allowance is governed by the amount of the monthly payments of the allowance.

Lavigne v. Pouliot, 6 Que. P.R. 138 (Pagnuelo, J.).

—Class of action—Nature of judgment.]—When an appeal is taken by the plaintiff from a judgment dismissing his action, which was one of the first class, but ordering the defendant to return him some effects claimed, the class of action is determined by the amount for which the action was brought.

Armstrong v. Beauchemin, 6 Que. P.R. 51 (Würtele, J.).

—Trespass to land — Title — Pleading — Amendment.]—In an action in the High Court for trespass to land, of greater value than $200, the plaintiff alleged his tenancy and occupation; the defendant, in his statement of defence, denied both, and asserted title and right to possession in himself, and also pleaded leave and license. About two weeks before the trial the defendant gave notice of motion for leave to amend by withdrawing his denial of the defendant's tenancy and occupation, and expressly admitted both, and withdrawing his own claim to right of possession. Leave to so amend was granted at the trial, terms as to costs being reserved. The jury found against the defence of leave and license, and assessed the plaintiff's damages at $1, for which a verdict was entered:—Held, that the original defence raised an issue of title, and it not having been amended until the trial, the plaintiff was obliged to go to trial in the High Court, and was entitled to his costs on the scale of that Court. Semble, also, that as a matter of discretion under Rule 1130, and perhaps also as a term of allowing the amendment, the same disposition of the costs would be made.

Marson v. Hébert, 6 Que. P.R. 342.

—Judicature ordinance—Counterclaim for large debt.]—In an action under the small debt procedure, the defendant may under Rule 612, set up a counterclaim, the amount of which exceeds the small debt jurisdiction. Where such a counterclaim is dismissed with costs, the plaintiff is entitled to tax a fee of ten per cent. on the amount under Rule 617 which extends to counterclaims.

Cox v. Christie, 5 Terr. L.R. 475 (Scott, J.).

—County Court scale—Unsuccessful counterclaim for amount beyond County Court jurisdiction. —Under a contract to two logs the tug is entitled to be paid only for the logs delivered, and, where the special term that the tug is entitled to be paid only for the logs lost is relied on, it must be proved specifically. Where the defendant in a Supreme Court action counterclaims for an amount beyond the jurisdiction of the County Court, costs on the County Court scale only will not be awarded to a successful plaintiff, even though the action should have been brought in the County Court.

Pacific Towing Company v. Morris, 11 B.C.R. 173 (Hunter, C.J.).

-Damages - Remainderman - County Court jurisdiction.]-In an action by remainderman against a life tenant of a farm and the purchaser of the timber for selling the latter, the trial Judge found for the plaintiff and assessed the damages at $400, to be paid into Court, to be paid out to the plaintiffs on the death of the life tenant, who was to have the interest in the meantime. On an appeal to a Divisional Court the judgment was affirmed as to the amount of damages, but varied by directing that instead of the $400 being paid into Court and the life tenant receiving the interest, the present value of the plaintiff's interest should be paid to them fixed at $180. Held, that although the formal judgment "is hereby varied by reducing the sum payable by defendant to the plaintiffs for damages from $400 to $180, which latter sum shall be paid forthwith by defendants to the plaintiffs," the plaintiffs were entitled to costs on the High Court scale. Held, also, that the effect of a defence by the life tenant, that payments had been made by her on an existing mortgage to the amount of $1,600, and claiming that she should be subrogated to the mortgage's rights; and by the purchaser, that he had bought the timber for value without notice raised the question of title to an interest in land to a greater value than $200 and the Court had no jurisdiction.

Whitesell v. Reece, 9 O.L.R. 182 (Teetzel, J.).

—Petition for interlocutory injunction— Class of action.]—The fees upon a petition for interlocutory injunction in an action to set aside a municipal by-law, are fees of second, not of first class actions.

Corporation de Belœil v. Cie d'Aqueduc, 7 Que. P.R. 77 (Hall, J.).

—Scale — Interim injunction.]—For an interlocutory injunction granted under Art. 4389 R.S.Q., in proceedings by petition to quash a by-law, the Court will allow a gross fee of $50 with no supplementary fee for the hearing.—An interim injunction in an action of this kind partakes of the character of the action itself, and the costs should be taxed as of the second class.—The fee payable to the prothonotary for the reply to a petition for an interim injunction is the $1 fixed by Art. 24 of the tariff and not the amount due on a plea to the merits.—The Court cannot, on taxation, refuse the fee for each affidavit filled in support of, or against, the petition.

P.R. 58 (Sup. Ct.).

—Scale of—Payment of money into Court with defence—Acceptance in satisfaction—Amount within jurisdiction of inferior Court.]—Where money is paid into Court by the defendant with his defence, and taken out by the plaintiff in satisfaction of all the causes of action, the plaintiff is entitled to tax his costs on the scale of the Court in which the action is brought, even where the amount paid in and accepted is within the competence of an inferior Court. Babcock v. Standish (1909), 19 P.R. 195, and McSheffrey v. Lanagan (1887), 20 LR. Ir. 528, approved.

—Class of action—Value in contest.]—(1) On an opposition to the sale of personal and real property, the fees, in the Court of King's Bench, will be the same as on the original action, that being the limit of plaintiff's interest, and consequently, the value in contest. (2) On an intervention against a demand of abandonment, based upon the fact that a prior abandonment has already been made and a curator appointed thereto, the value in contest is the value of the insolvent estate.

Henderson v. Harbec, 8 Que. P.R. 126.

—Review of taxation—Scales "over $10 to $28" and "over $250 to $500."]—Plaintiff claimed $333.19 for certain cattle sold to defendant, who pleaded tender of $300 and payment into Court, and not indebted as to the remainder of the claim. Judgment for plaintiff was given for $320. The taxing officer allowed costs on the scale "over $250 to $500":—Held, on review of the taxing officer's ruling, that the amount recovered by means of the action being only $20, the costs should have been taxed on the scale "over $10 to $25."

McLean v. Dove, 13 B.C.R. 292.

-Tariff-Possessory action.]-(1) Possessory actions are second-class actions, although the value of the immovable is over-$1,000, specially when plaintiff only seeks to be relieved of the disturbance in the enjoyment of his property, which deferdant commits in cutting wood on a part of it. (2) The application for the revision of the taxation of a witness must be made by the witness himself and not by one of the parties, through his attorney; this application must be made before final judgment. (3) The prothonotary has not the discretionary power to strike the cost of a surveyor's plan from the bill, when the Judge who rendered the final judgment did not do so.

Lefrancois v. Morel, 10 Que. P.R. 80.

—Scale—Resiliation of lease—Damages.]—In an action for resiliation of a lease at the yearly rent of $3.00 accompanied by a claim for damages to the amount of $1,100 the costs of the plaintiff will be those of the first class if he succeeds in setting the lease aside even when the claim for damages is dismissed.

Fecteau v. Vanier, 9 Que. P.R. 223 (Sup. Ct.).

—Scale—Quashing by-law—Intervention.]—
The costs on proceedings to quash a municipal by-law are the same as those of an action of the third class even when the constitutionality of the by-law is attacked. If the defendant submits his case to the Court and the issue is tried out between the plaintiff and the intervenant the latter if successful is entitled to full costs of the intervention as in an ordinary case but not to double costs as if there had been two issues between the parties.

issues between the parties.

Paul v. City of Sorel, 9 Que. P.R. 284 (Sup. Ct.).

— Tariff — Scale — Intervention.] — The scale of fees for an intervention which has been dismissed is determined by the amount in dispute in the principal action and not that of the intervenant's claim.

Gariépy v. Chartrand, 10 Que. P.R. 155.

—Increase of jurisdiction of lower Court after commencement of action in higher.]— A statute increasing the amount that may be sued for in a County Court is one relating to procedure and applies to pending litigation, so that a plaintiff who has recovered a verdict in a King's Bench action for an amount then within the jurisdiction of the County Court is not entitled to tax King's Bench eosts without getting from the Judge a certificate under Rule 933 of the King's Bench Act, although the amount of the verdict exceeds the amount that could have been sued for in the County Court when the action was commenced. Under such circumstances, however, such certificate should be given preventing, also, any set-off of costs by the defendant.

Rosenberg v. Tymchorak, 18 Man. R. 319.

IV. TAXATION.

-Costs of sheriff on interpleader issue-Counsel fee-Special matters.]-On the taxation of the sheriff's costs of an interpleader, the local registrar taxed to him costs of obtaining a copy of the claimant's examination, and a special counsel fee of $5 on the argument on the summons. The sheriff's position was not assailed by either party. On review:—Held, that the sheriff not being interested in the determination of the rights of the respective parties there was no necessity for the obtaining by him of a copy of the examination and he was not entitled to tax a fee in respect thereof. 2. That the taxing officer should allow a special counsel fee on Chamber applications under the tariff only in cases where it appears that circumstances rendered the application, in so far as the party affected was concerned, a special one by reason of it being opposed, or upon other substantial grounds, and here the sheriff, being protected in any event, the application did not concern him specially, and he should only be allowed the minimum fee.

Cross v. Cross, 3 Sask. R. 1.

—Defamation — Jurisdiction of County Court.]—Plaintiff brought action for $1,000 damages for defamation. He only recovered $100. Britton, J., held, that plaintiff's costs should be taxed on County Court scale, under Con. Rule 1132, as affected by 9 Edw. VII., c. 28, but directed that no set-off of costs be allowed defendant.

McCallum v. International Harvester Co., 8 E.L.R. 74 (P.E.I.).

-Action for wrongful seizure of goods-Verdict for $200 damages-Jurisdiction of County Court.]—In an action in the King's Bench against a County Court bailiff and an execution creditor for a wrongful seizure and sale of the plaintiff's goods under execution against another, the plaintiff recovered a verdict for $200 damages: -Held, that s. 43 of the County Courts Act, which, with immaterial changes, has been in every County Courts Act since the first (1879), is not affected by the granting to the County Courts of jurisdiction in claims against bailiffs; and the effect is, that an action of this kind, against a bailiff, is one that can be brought in the King's Bench, or that may properly be brought in the King's Bench irrespective of the amount of damages recovered, subject only to the provision as to costs where the damages are less than $10. In all actions tried by a jury, costs are in the discretion of the trial Judge (Shillinglaw v. Whillier, 18 Man. L. R. 149, 12 W.L.R. 128), and, therefore, irrespective of the County Courts Act, the trial Judge has power to grant or refuse costs to either party as he thinks proper; but in deciding whether the plaintiff in this action should have costs on the King's Bench scale, it was proper to take into consideration the fact that, under s. 43, the action could properly be brought in the King's Bench, irrespective of the amount recovered, so long as that amount exceeded $10, and, in the absence of some good reason to the contrary, to allow the plaintiff costs on the higher scale. Held, therefore, that the plaintiff should have costs on the King's Bench scale. The defendant L., who was the holder of a promissory note made by the plaintiff, after action brought, assigned a half interest therein to his co-defendant, the bailiff, and both defendants counterclaimed upon the note. There was no consideration for the assignment, and the plaintiff disputed the legality of it. Held, that it was not necessary to decide whether the assignment was good, for, if it was not, an amendment should be allowed so as to make the counterclaim by the defendant L. alone; and judgment should be given on the counterclaim for the amount of the note and interest, with costs of pleading it only; the amount of the note, interest, and such costs to be set off pro tanto against the $200 damages and costs of action on the King's Bench scale. Leave to the defendants to appeal to the Court of Appeal on the question of the scale of costs.

—Amount adjudged within County Court Jurisdiction.]—Plaintiff having brought his action in the Supreme Court for $2,010, and recovering only $160:—Held, that, notwithstanding the modification of s. 100 of the Supreme Court Act by marginal rule 976, the amount recovered being more than $100, costs must follow the event and be allowed on the Supreme Court scale; but Semble, the action here should have been trought in the County Court.

Young Hong v. Macdonald, 15 B.C.R. 303.

—Railway expropriation—Costs—Counsel fees.]—The costs of a successful attorney in a railway expropriation over $10,000 in-clude the sum of $25 for the first sitting at enquete, instead of $10; $70 as attorney's fee, $15 hearing fee, $20 for filing factums and an additional fee of $50, the amount of the case being over $10,000; but the sum of $25 for the special enquete fee will not be allowed.

Canadian Pacific Railway Co. v. Oligny, 12 Que. P.R. 11.

-Counsel fee on view before trial-Affidavit of counsel.]-Plaintiff having obtained a review of the taxation of the defendant's costs, an affidavit by counsel who attended the taxation, and was at the trial and on appeal, was submitted and allowed to be read. The affidavit having shown that the applicant informed the taxing officer that a view by counsel before the trial was necessary and had been had, the Judge refused to disallow the counsel fee, or interfere with the discretion of the registrar. The onus is on a party seeking to tax fees for a witness not called at the trial, to show by affidavit, the relevancy and nature of his evidence, the necessity for it, that he was in attendance and the reason why he was not called.

that, by supplementary conclusions, the plaintiff could have claimed damages which could have been determined by the judgment to be the sum of $300, does not change the class of such action.

—Contestation of abandonment.]—The fees upon a contestation of statement upon an abandonment of property are those of a second class action.

McManamy v. Glascott, 11 Que. P.R. 162.

--Quashing by-law—Scale.]—The costs of an action to quash a municipal by-law brought under the authority of Art. 50 C. P.Q., are of the second class as are also those of an intervention in the same action. Bernier v. St. Michel, 11 Que. P.R. 326.

Dismissal of action—Exception to form.]
—When an action has been dismissed on exception to the form after enquête and hearing the defendant is entitled to the fees for enquête and hearing over and above the fee given by Art. 7 of the tariff

Lapointe v. St. Onge, 3 Que. P.R. 314 (S.C.).

—Exception to form—Dismissal.]—The fees of the attorney on an exception to the form which was dismissed, are those mentioned in item 23 of the Superior Court tariff and not the fees of a simple motion.

In re Drummondville Foundry, 3 Que. P.R. 378 (S.C.).

—Costs of affidavits—Irregular filing]—The costs of affidavits for use on a motion in the Weekly Court filed with the Clerk in Chambers, instead of in the Registrar's office, as required by Rule 102, should nevertheless be taxed, if otherwise taxable, where such affidavits have been before the Court on the motion, and are recited in the order made thereon.

lowance is by an application by way of motion to the Court and not by way of review of the taxation. On such an application, an affidavit of information and belief, stating the grounds thereof, is sufficient foundation for a motion to set aside the certificate of taxation and refer it back to the taxing officer to ascertain whether or not at the time of the taxation the witness fees in question had in fact been paid. Union Bank of Halifax v. Vipond, 3 Que. P.R. 490 (S.C.).

-Taxation - Review - Severing defences -Setting aside judgment-Fi. fa. lands.]-Where an action is tried against two or more defendants and any defendant separates in his defence, and the judgment is against all the defendants, the law is that each of them is liable for the damages awarded by the judgment; and each of them is liable to the plaintiff, for all costs taxed by him as properly incurred by him in the maintenance of his action, except as to costs caused to him by so much of the separate defence of any defendant as is and can be a defence for that defendant only as distinguished from the other defendants The foregoing rule laid down in Stumm v. Dixon, 22 Q.B.D. 99, 529, an action for tort was held applicable to an action on a contract. In an action against two joint makers of a promissory note, who, though they set up substantially the same defence, sevevered in their defences:-He'd, that on the taxation of the plaintiff's costs, the following items should be allowed as against both defendants: (1) Costs of a concurrent writ of summons against one of the defendants; (2) costs occasioned by the separate defences of each defendant; (3) costs of the examination for discovery of one of the defendants, although as the other defendant had not been notified of the intention to hold the examination the depositions were not admissible in evidence against him. Where a judgment by default was set as:le, and the defendant was given leave to defend on payment of costs. Held, that the defendant was liable to pay the costs of a fi fa. lands issued concurrently with a fi. fa. goods.

Lougheed v. Parrish, 4 Terr. L.R. 54.

-Arbitration-Taxation-Review of judgment.]-There is no review of a judgment by a Judge of the Superior Court taxing and settling the costs of an arbitration in virtue of par. 26 of Art. 5164 R.S.O.

—Expert fees—Taxation.]—The cost of a report of experts appointed to assess the plaintiff's damages for loss of land taken by the city cannot be taxed with the costs in the cause; such experts may be taxed for as ordinary witnesses with right to plaintiff to claim the special fees he has paid them with his damages.

Crawford v. City of Montreal, 19 Que.

S.C. 323 (S.C.).

—Witness fees—Taxation.]—The fees of a witness served, but not examined, by the party calling him, cannot be taxed against the opposite party without his consent. A party heard as a witness is considered an ordinary witness and should be taxed for as such.

Royal Electric Co. v. Dupéré, 19 Que. S.C. 29 (S.C.).

-Copy of judgment-Registry-Pleas.]-A party who obtains judgment is entitled to a copy of it and to have it registered and the cost made costs in the cause to be recovered from the opposite party if the judgment is confirmed or not appealed from. Defendant met the action by a defense en droit and a special plea; plaintiff replied en droit to part of the pleading, and, after hearing on the two issues en droit, that of defendant was dismissed with costs and the reply maintained with costs. The prothonotary allowed plaintiff under Art. 24 of the tariff, a fee for each:-Held, that the taxation should be maintained as there were two issues in different rights and plaintiff was entitled to two fees.

Luneau v. Luneau, 19 Que. S.C. 146 (S.C.).

—Inscription for hearing—Withdrawal.]—When a cause inscribed for hearing on the merits is, during the sitting of the Court, withdrawn by the plaintiff, defendant is entitled to the same costs as if the action had been decided in his favour (item 9 tariff c.c.), but without costs of enquête (item 10 and 11 c.c.) if no witness is present in Court, defendant having been notified that the action would be withdrawn.

-Costs of some issues to plaintiff, of others to defendant-Action for slander-Apportionment.]—Where in an action for damages for four alleged slanders, the judgment was that "the plaintiff do recover against the defendant in respect to the matters set forth in the 3rd and 5th paragraphs of the statement of claim the sum of $1 and costs to be taxed," and that "the defendant do recover from the plaintiff in respect of the matters set forth in the 4th and 6th paragraphs of the statement of claim his costs to be taxed:"-Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the general costs of the cause, except such as were occasioned by the causes of action upon which he failed, and the defendant to the costs of the issues upon which he succeeded, the latter being set off. Sparrow v. Hill (1881), 7 Q.B.D. set off. Sparrow v. Hill (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 362, 8 Q.B.D. 479, followed Leave to appeal was afterwards refused.

—Of abandoned appeal.]—The production of the notice of the abandonment of an appeal will be sufficient authority for the taxing officer to tax the respondents' costs of the appeal, and it is now necessary in British Columbia to apply for an order for the costs.

Fry v. Botsford, 9 B.C.R. 165.

—Abandoned appeal—Briefs—Counsel fee—Rules 583 and 790.]—On 20th May, the plaintiffs gave notice of appeal, to come on at the November sittings of the Full Court, from an order requiring them to give security for the costs of the action. On 3rd June, the appeal was abandoned:—Held, per Martin, J., on a review of taxation, that respondents were entitled to tax briefs and a counsel fee. Counsel fee under the circumstances fixed at $10,000. A taxation may be reviewed under R. 583 as well as under R. 790.

Fry v. Botsford, 9 B.C.R. 207.

—Taxation of costs—Appeal.]—There is no appeal to the Court of King's Bench from a decision of a Superior Court Judge in Chambers reviewing the taxation by the prothonotary of costs allowed to one of the parties unless the payment of the costs is an essential part of the final judgment in the cause.

East Valley Richelieu Railway Co. v. Menard, 11 Que. K.B. 1.

—Solidarity — Costs — Commercial Matter.]—That there may be solidarity among several defendants condemned to pay costs, even in commercial matters, where the solidarity exists de plein droit, and notwithstanding that costs are, in general, accessory to the action, it is necessary that there should be a conclusion for solidarity; in the absence of such a conclusion, and that even in commercial matters, there is no solidarity as to costs among several defendants condemned to pay them by the judgment in the action.

Beaubien v. Rioux. 11 Que. K.B. 232.

—Witness—Taxation of—Art. 336 C.C.P.]— The taxation of a witness being under said article equivalent to a judgment on which he is entitled to sue out execution, the Court has no authority on motion to revise or reduce such taxation as excessive.

Lessard v. Meunier, 20 Que. S.C. 337, Davidson, J.

-Allowed by Supreme Court of Canada-No power to stay taxation.]-The Full Court allowed plaintiff's appeal. On appeal the Supreme Court of Canada allowed the appeal of the defendant Ward and ordered plaintiff to pay him the costs of that appeal, and also all costs in the Court below, except in so far as Ward was to be regarded as the representative of the mortgagor in an action to realize a mortgage security which costs were reserved until final decree. Held, reversing Irving, J., who made an order staying the taxation of Ward's costs of appeal to the Full Court until final decree, that there was no jurisdiction to make the order staying taxation. The application should have been made to a Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada instead.

Merchants' Bank of Halifax v. Houston and Ward, 9 B.C.R. 158.

-Art. 336 C.C.P.-Witness fees - Counsel fees for attendance before a rogatory commission.]-1. An item in a taxed bill of costs, representing the amount allowed a witness on taxation in open Court, being equivalent to a judgment enforceable by execution ,Art. 336, C.C.P.), such taxation cannot be disturbed by the Court on a motion to revise the taxation of costs. (See also Lessard v. Meunier dit Lagacé, R.J.Q., 20 C.S., p. 337.) 2. Where a rogatory commission is issued to another province, or to a foreign country, and the parties do not annex interrogatories and cross-interregatories thereto, but consent that the commission shall be an open one, and that the witnesses shall be examined directly before the commission, such consent does not justify the taxation against the losing party of counsel fees, for attendance before the commission,-the tariff not making any provision for such case.-Young v. Accident Insurance Co. of N.A., M.L.R., 5 S.C., p. 222, approved.

Magann v. Grand Trunk Railway Company, 21 Que. S.C. 72, Davidson, J.

—Witness fees—Taxation.]—(1) The taxation in respect of a witness who is heard in open Court takes place in the presence of the Court and constitutes a judgment which may be executed in the manner and after the delay prescribed by the Court (335, 336, 370 C.C.P.). (2) Even if such taxation were considered a judgment by the prothonotary and not by the Court, the time for objection is while the taxation is being effected.

-Taxation of costs-Attendance-Saisieconservatoire-Curator's costs-Scale-Tariff Arts. 47, 60.]-If a party who has received notice of taxation of costs does not appear on the day named but merely presents his contentions in a letter addressed to the prothonotary, the party who gave the notice but did not tax the costs on the day fixed may tax them afterwards at his pleasure, in the absence of his opponent. On intervention by the curator to defendant's insolvent estate to a saisie conservatoire, or when the curators contests, not the debt of the plaintiff but only his right to the effects seized, the costs of the curator whose intervention has been maintained will be taxed according to Art. 60 of the tariff and not as if he had proceeded by petition to annul the seizure. Semble. The costs of the curator on taking up the instance in the bankrupt's name are payable by the losing party and not by the insolvent estate except on default of the losing party paying them.

Auger v. Montambault, 5 Que. P.R. 21 (Sup. Ct.).

—Taxation of a witness—Revision—Art. 336 U.P.]—1. The taxation of a witness is a judgment in his favour on which he is entitled to sue out execution. 2. The Court has no authority to determine whether the taxation of a witness is excessive or not or to name any other particular amount in lieu thereof.

Lessard v. Meunier, 5 Que. P.R. 443, Davidson, J.

-Counterclaim-Taxation of costs.]-In an action brought by plaintiff to which defendant pleaded a counterclaim, plaintiff was held entitled to the costs of the action and defendant to the costs of the counterclaim: -Held, that defendant, as part of her costs, was entitled to tax a counsel fee, and that the fact that there was no reply to the counterclaim was not material, it being the existence of the defence to the action which determined whether it was a case for a counsel fee or not. Held, for the reasons given by Lindley, J., in Atlas Metal Co. v. Miller, (1898) 2 Q.B., 506, that defendant was not entitled to tax "instructions to sue," but was entitled to tax "instructions for counterclaim." Held, further, with respect to the amount of "brief" and "counsel fee" taxed, that the taxing master's judgment ought not to be disturbed, especially after it had been affirmed by a Judge on appeal. Held, also, that the "one-sixth rule" (O. 63, R. 23) is imperative, and that there being in this case no reason for departure from it, the appeal of each party should have been and should now be dismissed with costs.

Bauld v. Fraser, 36 N.S.R. 21.

of law submitted to the Court under Art. 509 C.P. is in the discretion of the Court. Paré v. County of Shefford, 24 Que. S.C. 50, Lynch, J.

—Taxation—Change in tariff.]—Plaintiff taxed, in 1896, his costs of recovering judgment and on appeal it was ordered that there should be a new trial and that the costs of the first trial should follow the event. Plaintiff finally, in 1901, recovered judgment with costs:—Held, that the costs of the first trial were not now taxable under the new tariff, which came in force in 1897, but that the old taxation must stand. Semble, costs incurred before the new tariff came into force are still taxable under the old tariff.

Harris v. Dunsmuir (No. 2), 9 B.C.R. 317, Drake, J.

—"Actual disbursements"—R. S. O. 1897, c. 153, s. 42.]—The "actual disbursements" which, by s. 42 of the Mechanics' Lien Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 153, may be allowed as against an unsuccessful claimant in addition to an amount equal to twenty-five per cent. of the claim, do not include counsel fees paid by the defendant's solicitor to counsel retained in the course of the proceedings, and a fortiori not counsel fees charged by the solicitor himself when acting as counsel. Judgment of Falconbridge, C.J., affirmed.

Cobban Manufacturing Company v. Lake Simcoe Hotel Company, 5 O.L.R. 447 (D. C.).

-Lunatic's estate-Committee's duty as to taxation of costs-Local master-Jurisdiction.]-In two cases where Local Masters had reported schemes for the maintenance of lunatics and made provision for the moneys of the estates being collected by the respective committees and thereafter for their investment by the committees on securities of different kinds at their discretion, and in one case had taxed the costs and inserted the amount in the report:-Held, that it is imperative that the costs in lunacy matters be taxed by the proper offi-cer in Toronto as the Local Master has no authority to tax them. And held, that the moneys in the hands of the committees and to be collected from debtors or by the sale of the land must be forthwith paid into Court.

Re Norris; and re Drope, 5 O.L.R. 99 (Boyd, C.).

—Lawyer's letter—Recovery of fee—Tariff of advocates' fee.]—A debtor who receives a lawyer's letter is not obliged to pay a fee therefor either to the advocate or to the creditor.

Robson v. Smith, 5 Que. P.R. 252.

—Contestation of declaration of garnishee

—Judgment maintaining contestation.]—
The fees of an execution creditor upon contestation of the deciaration of a garnishee which has been maintained without answer by the garnishee are those of a noncontested action and not of a contested action, and should be taxed according to the amount which the garnishee has been condemned to pay.

Etenberg v. Kelly, 5 Que. P.R. 428.

—Prothonotaries' tariff—Art. 867 C.P.Q.]— Under Art. 44 of the Prothonotaries' tariff the prothonotary has a right to charge a fee for every claim sworn to and filed in his office authorizing the creditor who files it to vote at the meeting held for appointment of the curator, etc., pursuant to Art. 867 C.P.Q.

In re Beaudoin; McLimont & Lefaivre, O.R. 23 S.C. 179 (Sup. Ct.).

—Appeal—Case submitted on factum—Fee to second counsel.]—When a case in appeal has been submitted upon the factum with the consent of the parties, a second counsel fee will not be allowed, even when at the time such consent was made both the attorney of record and the counsel were present and robed in Court.

Société des Artisans Canadiens Français v. Hëbert, 5 Que. P.R. 372.

—Cost of exhibits—Taxation.]—The cost of an exhibit, which is part of the muniments of title of the party producing it, should not be included in the costs taxed unless it be specially shown that it was ordered and obtained with the view of filing it in the suit

Lovignat v. MacKay, 5 Que. P.R. 40.

—Advocates' fees—Re-hearing of motion—Copy of judgment.]—In the district of Montreal the practice is to place in the record a copy of every judgment rendered during the course of a case and the cost of such judgments should be allowed upon taxation. (2) When a motion asks a condemnation in case the adverse party does not conform to an order of the Court, and that such order is made, the motion may be again presented in case of the non-exception of the order, and, consequently, a fee for re-hearing may be claimed.

DeWerthemer v. Boulanger, 5 Que. P.R.

—Payment under protest—Reductions—Acquiescence.]—A party who pays a bill of costs under protest after having contested the amount and obtained a reduction is presumed to have acquiesced in it and is estopped from afterwards insisting upon having it taxed.

Re Beaudoin, insolvent, 5 Que. P.R. 358.

—Application for interlocutory injunction—Requete civile—Fees.]—The advocate's fees on a requete civile to set aside a judgment granting an interlocutory injunction, before the issue of the writ were treated by Mathieu, J., as governed by items 12, 45 and 62 of the tariff of fees and were fixed by him at $14.80, the application being granted, each party paying his own costs.

5 Que. P.R. 176.

-Application for injunction-Dismissal after enquete-Costs fixed.]-The fees of attorneys for the respondent on a judgment dismissing an application for a writ of injunction after enquéte were, upon application, fixed by the Judge at $50.00.

National Typographic Co. v. Dougall &

Smith, 5 Que. P.R. 162.

-Taxation of witness-Quebec practice.]-See WITNESS.

-Appeal stood over for settlement at suggestion of the Court-Costs of negotiations.] -After an appeal was opened, it was stood over at the suggestion of the Court in order to give the parties an opportunity to settle; the negotiations for settlement were unsuccessful, and the appeal was ultimately dismissed with costs:—Held, that the successful party was entitled (1) to a counsel fee (under item 224 of the Tariff of Costs) on the first day's hearing, and (2) to an allowance for costs of the negotiations for settlement under item 81 of Schedule No. 4.

-Of adjournment.]-No costs of an adjournment of trial will be allowed to the successful party where the adjournment was caused by reason of there being no Court room available.

Macdonell v. Perry, 10 B.C.R. 326.

- Taxation between party and party Counsel fees paid to partner of litigant-Affidavit of payment made by counsel -Costs of brief.]-Where counsel fees were paid by a member of a firm of barristers and solicitors to his partner for the latter's services as counsel in an action in which the former was defendant, under a prior agreement to pay such fees as would be payable to counsel outside the firm: -Held, that such counsel fees should be taxed to the defendant against the plaintiff under a judgment dismissing the action with costs. Henderson v. Comer (1856), 3 U.C. L.J.O.S. 29, followed. Upon the taxation the defendant made an affidavit of payment of fees to his partner, and the latter also made an affidavit, upon which he was cross-examined: --Held, that the defendant was not entitled to tax the costs of or occasioned by the latter affidavit. Held, also, per Britton, J., that the discretion of the taxing officer in allowing the defendant the costs of briefing correspondence between the parties should not be interfered with on appeal, although the correspondence was not used at the trial.

Johnston v. Ryckman, 7 O.L.R. 511 D. C.).

-Circuit Court — Peremption — Dismissal.]-Where an action is dismissed on motion for peremption d'instance after the filing of a plea to the merits, it is Art. 8 of the Tariff of Costs to attorneys in the Circuit Court which governs the taxation of the bill of costs and not Art. 9 of the tariff.

Moody v. Lachance, 6 Que. P.R. 99 (Pelletier, J.).

-Joinder of actions-Counsel fees-Absent defendant-Bailiff's fees.]-Upon the joinder of actions for the purpose of enquete and hearing, the counsel receive fees of enquete and hearing for each cause, but the amount of stenographer's charge and witness fees is reduced. If a defendant is designated in the writ of summons as being absent from the district, the fees that the bailiff would have been entitled to for searching for him to effect service can not be taxed against him.

Henry v. Sanderson, 6 Que. P.R. 191 (Desmarais, J.).

-Of appeal to Privy Council-Costs incurred in Canada-Taxation.]-Rule 1256, providing that when the costs incurred in Canada of an appeal to the Privy Council have been awarded, and have not been taxed by the Registrar of the Privy Council, they may be taxed by the senior taxing officer, and the taxation shall be according to the scale of the Privy Council, is not to be construed as applying to a case in which the judgment entitling a party to costs was entered before the rule was made. The quantum of costs, as well as the right to them, is ascertained at the time of judgment, and the quantum cannot, without the clearest words, be altered by a subsequent change in the tariff or by the creation of a tariff which had no existence until after the judgment.

Earle v. Burland, 8 O.L.R. 174 (Street,

-Attorneys' fees-United issues-C.P. 291.] -When several issues are united for trial, and there is only one enquete and examination of witnesses, one argument and one judgment on the several issues, the attorney is not entitled to fees of enquete and argument as if there had been separate trials.

Demers v. Sanche, 6 Que. P.R. 241 (Davidson, J.).

-Petition for interim injunction-Affidavits-Taxation.]-That in the absence of any objection of the adverse party or of any remark of the Judge to the number of affidavits filed in support of or against a petition for interim injunction, the successful party is entitled to a fee upon each affidavit.

Giguère v. Payette, 6 Que. P.R. 178.

-Witness fees - Plaintiff travelling from abroad-Expenses.]-Upon a taxation between party and party of the plaintiff's costs and disbursements, she was allowed travelling expenses in coming from England to Ontario to give evidence on her own behalf at the trial of the action and in returning to England, and a per diem allowance for the time necessarily occupied in doing so, but was not allowed "subsistence money" for a period after the trial during which she remained in Ontario awaiting the result of an application for a new trial in order to be in readiness to testify if one should have been directed.

10 O.L.R. 537 (Meredith, C.J.).

-Extra-judicial seizure - Chattel mortgage.]-Under the provisions of s. 2 of c. 31 of the Revised Ordinances of the Yukon Territory, the defendant company are only entitled to charge the plaintiffs such costs as are provided for under that Act. The mortgagors are entitled to recover against the mortgagee the excess but the penalty provided under s. 3 of c. 31, is optional with the Judge.

Yukon Hardware Co. v. McLennan, 2 W. L.R. 294, Macaulay, J.

-Counsel fee before Court en banc-Application to fix-Travelling expenses. 1-It is not proper to make a formal application to the Court en banc to fix a counsel fee in a case argued before it. If the marking of the fee is overlooked by the Court, it would be proper for counsel to draw attention either in open Court or otherwise to the omission, and as a matter of courtesy only to notify counsel on the other side of his intention. No allowance can be made to counsel for travelling expenses.

-Appeal to full Court-Costs not specifically awarded—Statutory provision.]—The costs of an appeal may be taxed to the successful party although not specifically awarded by the judgment.

Kickbush v. Cawley, 11 B.C.R. 151 (Morrison, J.).

-Special fee-Taxation of costs.] - The Judge will not take cognizance of a bill of costs and allow a special fee, until the said bill has been taxed by the prothonotary.

Campbell v. Montreal Street Railway Co., 7 Que. P.R. 79 (Davidson, J.).

-Objections-Appeal from local taxing officer—Reference to taxing officer at To-ronto.]—As a foundation for an appeal from a taxation of costs between party and party objections must be filed with the of-ficer taxing and these objections must be directed to specific items: or semble at the least if a general objection is relied on it must be expressly stated to be di-rected to each and every item in the bill. A general objection that the bill is exorbitant is not sufficient. Upon a mere general objection of this kind or even upon specific objections to specific items the Judge before whom an appeal from the taxation of a bill by a local taxing officer comes for hearing, has no right to refer the bill to one of the taxing officers at Toronto for revision or re-taxation. He may ask the opinion of one or both of these officers as to any question arising but he must himself decide the points involved. Quay v. Quay (1886), 11 P.R. 258, explained. Judgment of Falconbridge, C.J.K.B., reversed.

Campbell v. Baker, 9 O.L.R 291, D.C.

-Security in appeal-Rejection of bond-Attendances.]—If a judgment permits an appellant to complete a security bond which has been declared illegal, the costs of the respondent comprise the attendance when the security was given, unless the judgment specifies that costs of motion only are granted.

Blair v. B. C. Express Co., 11 B.C.R. 153 (Martin, J.).

-Abortive and irregular proceedings-Several subpoenas.]-It is not open to a party on taxation of costs to take objections which could or should have been taken by application to set aside the proceedings, or by way of appeal. On this principle costs were allowed as follows: (1) The costs of an order de bene esse, irregularly obtained were allowed to defendant where no application had been made to set it aside, and and plaintiff's advocate had attended on the examination; (2) the costs of an insufficient affidavit on production where an application for a better affidavit had been dismissed and no appeal taken; (3) the costs of an order to examine plaintiff issued ex parte and without notice, where an application to set it aside had been refused and the grounds of the refusal were not shown on the review. A subpæna for each of several witnesses may be allowed where they reside in different parts of the country, and the same original cannot be conveniently produced to them all.

Craig v. New Oxley Ranche Co., 2 Terr. L.R. 277, Scott, J.

-Action for detention of goods-Judgment for return.]-Plaintiff in an action for detention of a horse alleged to be of the value of $1,000, recovered judgment for its return and $10 for damages:-Held, against the contention of the defendant that costs should be taxed as in an action under $100, or in the lower scale of the tariff, that in the absence of evidence to the contrary the value alleged in the statement of claim should be treated as the real value for the purposes of taxation. The following items were allowed to plaintiff against the contention of the defendant: 1. Instructions for affidavit of writ of replevin. 2. Two separate affidavits on production by coplaintiffs where they resided in different parts of the country. 3. An order postponing trial on application of defendant on terms of payment of costs taken out by plaintiff where defendant had neglected to take out order. An application by the defendant to have deducted from the bill certain costs of the day, claimed to have been improperly allowed on a previous taxation not appealed from, was not entertained.

Allison v. Christie, 2 Terr. L.R. 279 (Scott, J.).

-Counsel fee-"Costs of the day."]-Except as otherwise specially provided, only one counsel fee can be taxed in an action. Such fee must be taxed on the completion of the action and cannot be taxed before that event is reached. Where on a motion for a continuance, based upon the absence through illness of defendant, who was alleged to be a necessary and material witness in his own behalf, the continuance prayed for was granted on payment by defendant of costs of the day; held, that a counsel fee was improperly allowed as part of such costs, and that the appeal from the judgment of the Judge at Chambers reviewing the taxation and striking out such item must be dismissed with costs.

Acadia Loan Corporation v. Wentworth, 37 N.S.R. 316.

—Of appeal to Privy Council—Costs incurred in Canada—Ascertainment.]—On an appeal from an order granted to the defendants upon a petition, pursuant to the suggestion in the judgment herein, reported (1964), 8 O.L.R. 174, at p. 176:—Held, that Rule 1255 (818a) gives effect to P.S.O. 1897, c. 48, s. 7, and Rule 818, and does not earry the procedure beyond what is therein provided for, and that by applying it, or even without it, the defendants are entitled under the Act and Rule 818 to have the costs ascertained "as if the decision had been given in the Courts below" and the appeal was dismissed with costs.

Earle v. Burland, 9 O.L.R. 663, D.C.

-Affidavit of default of defence.] — The costs of an affidavit of non-delivery of a statement of defence cannot be allowed on a taxation of the plaintiffs' costs under a judgment in default of pleading, except when a defence has been filed and not served. Delivery including filing and service, there is default if no pleading is filed, which does not require proof.

—Action to set aside resolutions—Fees —
Art. 107, Tariff.]—When a direct action is taken to set aside a resolution of a municipal corporation, the costs should be taxed as in a contested action of the third class, although the disbursements are those of an action of the fourth class of the Superior Court

Ledoux v. Corporation of St. Edwidge, 7 Que. P.R. 353.

—Opposition afin d'annuler — Contestation — Costs — Taxation.]—The fees on a contestation of an opposition afin d'annuler are to be taxed on the scale which applies to the original action, whether the contestation be made by the plaintiff, another party, or a third person.

Sun Life Assurance Co. v. Palliser, 7 Que. P.R. 455 (Fortin, J.).

—Inscription in review—Deposit—Right to withdraw deposit.]—Where a solicitor has been granted distraction of costs in his favour by judgment in the Court of Review, he may forthwith withdraw the amount deposited by the party who has inscribed the cause in review. (2) He may retain this amount even when the judgment of the Court of Review is reversed on further appeal. (3) The party who made such deposit cannot set off in compensation against the solicitor who has withdrawn the amount, upon execution issued against such party, certain costs whereof distraction in his favour has been specially granted by the Court of Appeal.

Delisle v. McCrea, 7 Que. P.R. 309 (Lemieux, J.).

-Objections-Solicitor's slip-Setting aside certificate.]-Notwithstanding the provision of Rule 774 that the taxing officer's certificate of the result of a taxation of costs shall be final and conclusive as to all matters not objected to in the manner provided by Rules 1182 and 1183, the certificate may, in a proper case, be set aside in order to allow objections to be carried in, and the certificate resigned as of a later date; and this was ordered in a case where the solicitor for the party objecting had himself taken out the certificate, intending to appeal from it, but at the moment not remembering that it was necessary to carry in objections in writing, and had promptly applied for relief. In re Furber, [1898] 2 Ch. 538, followed.

-Costs on amendment-Apportionment -Setting oft.]-In an action brought in the name of a married woman claiming damages for various acts of trespass to land, it became necessary to amend by adding plaintiff's husband as a party, and an order was granted by the trial Judge allowing the amendment and allowing plaintiffs to enter final judgment for damages and costs to be taxed. On appeal from the latter part of the order, the order was amended so as to give defendant the costs of the trial up to the time of the amendment and of the amendment, if any, and plaintiff the costs of the action not including the costs of trial, costs to be set off.

Hart v. Simpson, 39 N.S.R. 105.

-Ruling of taxing officer-Costs of interlocutory examinations.]-Semble, that no appeal lies from the decision of the senior taxing officer at Toronto, under Con. Rule 1136, as amended by Con. Rule 1267, as to the allowance of the costs of interlocutory examinations: -Held, that if an appeal lies, it must be either under Con. Rule 774 or 767-probably the latter-and, under either, notice of appeal must be given within four days and made returnable within ten days after the decision complained of; and notice in this case not having been given in time, an extension should not be granted, having regard to the character of the decision complained of-a ruling against allowing the costs of examining more than

—Costs—Order of King in council — Construction.]—In a suit against L. and R. the bill was dismissed by the Judge in equity, with costs. An appeal to the Supreme Court was allowed with costs. On appeal by R. to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council it was ordered that the decree of the Supreme Court should be discharged as against the appellant with costs, and that the decree in equity should be restored:—Held, that costs under the original decree should be taxed also to L.

Fairweather v. Robertson, 3 N.B. Eq. 276.

—Action and counterclaim—Set-off to prejudice of solicitor's lien.]—Con. Rule 1165 as to a set-off of damages and costs between parties not being allowed to the prejudice of the solicitors' lien for costs, does not fetter the discretion of the trial Judge as to costs under Con. Rule 1130. An action and counterclaim together constitute but one action for the purpose of ascertaining the ultimate balance for which execution is to issue. Per Street, J., Con. Rule 1164 is special authority for setting-off the costs taxable to the defendant against those taxable against him without any saving of the solicitors' lien.

Levi Blumenstiel & Co. v. Edwards, 11 O.L.R. 30 (D.C.).

-Witness fee - Briefing evidence - Witnesses not called.]-In an action for libel the defendant not having pleaded jurisdiction, before the trial gave at notice, under Rule 488, of his intention to adduce, in mitigation of damages, evidence of the circumstances under which the libel was published. To meet such evidence the plaintiff had brought a number of witnesess to the trial. but the evidence was not admitted, and the witnesses were not called in reply:-Held, that by implication from Con. Rule 1176 or by analogy to the practice therein prescribed, the costs of procuring the attendance of these witnesses and the briefing of their evidence, etc., should be allowed on taxation of the plaintiff's costs against the defendant.

Ludlow v. Irwin,, 12 O.L.R. 43 (Anglin, J.).

—Evidence in the case made available in another case.]—The consent that the evidence adduced in a case be made available in another case woes not deprive a successful party to recover for the full expense of witnesses and depositions, chargeable by the witnesses and stenographers against him and for which he is liable. Leclair v. Mayrand, 8 Que. P.R. 248.

-Counsel fee-Trial or assessment of damages.]-In an action for damages for personal injuries, the defendants entered no appearance and filed no statement of de-Interlocutory judgment was not signed, and there was no admission of the liability of the defendants. Notice of assessment was served by the plaintiffs by posting it up in the office of the Court. Both the plaintiff and defendants issued commissions and took evidence abroad, and the defendants obtained an order for the examination of the piaintiff by medical practitioners. On the opening of the case at the trial (or assessment) counsel for the defendants admitted that they did not intend to contest liability, and the only matter tried out was the quantum of damages:-Held, that the plaintiff was not limited, in taxing costs against the defendants, to the counsel fee mentioned in item 152 of the tariff as appropriate upon a mere assessment of damages, but was entitled to a counsel fee as upon a trial, as provided in item 153; the assessment re-ferred to in item 152 being that which follows upon an interlocutory judgment. Semble, per Meredith, C.J.C.P., that the paragraphs which follow items 152 and 153 in the tariff are intended to give the taxing officer a discretion to increase the fee for the brief both for the assessment of damages and for the trial.

part of the effects seized as his property and obtains possession thereof on giving security to the plaintiff, the class of action, on contestation of the intervention by the plaintiff, cannot be higher than that on the claim of the latter. Boulet v. Heirs of M. F. St. John. 8 One.

Boulet v. Heirs of M. F. St. John, 8 Que. P.R. 139 (Lafontaine, J.).

—Distraction — Prescription.]—Distraction of costs is a judgment in favour of the attorney and forms a title to said costs only prescribed by thirty years and which is valid as well against the party condemned as of him whose prête-nom only he is. The short prescription for professional services and expenses of the plaintiff's attorney runs from the date of the abandonment (desistement) of the action filed by the latter even if it is not followed by a judgment. The costs of an action are not due to the attorney except in so far as his authority ad litem is not ended by judgment or otherwise.

Bernard v. Carbouneau, Q.R. 15 K.B. 329.

Separate bills — Taxable items — Final judgment.]—When costs have been incurred on two interlocutory proceedings, on a motion for particulars and on inscription end froit the attorney for the successful party may prepare separate bills of costs bearing the same date and presented for taxation on the same day. In such case the fees for drawing the bills and of an application to strike out duplicated items are taxable on each bill. It would be otherwise in the case of bills of costs in the cause after final judgment when it would be necessary to include the costs on these different proceedings in a single bill.

Baron v. Benoit, 8 Que. P.R. 303 (Hutchinson, J.).

—Sale proceedings on mortgage—Taxation—Local master.]—A local registrar is not one of "the taxing officers of the Supreme Court of Judicature" mentioned in R.S.O. 1897. c. 121, s. 20, and, if he is not a local master, has no judication, under that section, to tax mortgagee's costs of sale proceedings.

Re Drinkwater and Kerr, 15 O.L.R. 76.

—Preparing for trial—Searches for missing documents.]—In this action a certain contract and certain plans of material importance were lost, and the plaintiffs employed two of their former solicitors to try and find them, which they succeeded in doing, and they were put in evidence at the trial. For these services a sum of $350 was paid to them:—Held, that this expenditure was properly taxable among the plaintiffs' party and party costs, though not specially provided for in the tariff.

City of Toronto v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 13 O.L.R. 12 (D.C.).

-Record transferred to another Court.]If a record is transmitted to another Court, the defendant's fee will be as on a dilatory exception maintained (Art. 25), plus a fee for the transferrence of the record. Connolly v. McCarron, 8 Que. P.R. 192.

-Appeal from retaxation-Counsel fee.]-Defendant was convicted before the stipendiary magistrate of an incorporated town of a violation of one of the by-laws of the town. The magistrate having stated a case under the Summary Convictions Act, R.S. 1900, s. 73, an order was made by a Judge at Chambers setting aside the conviction and directing the informant to pay defendant the costs of the application and below, to be taxed. The bill, as taxed by the taxing master, included a counsel fee of $50 and an allowance of $30 for brief. On appeal to a Judge at Chambers the amount allowed for brief was reduced to and the counsel fee struck out altogether:-Held, that defendant was entitled to a counsel fee for the attendance at Chambers, and that $7.50 would be a reasonable amount to allow under the circumstances, the question having been but a trivial one and having occupied but a short time, and that the appeal should be allowed to this extent but without costs. Quære, whether a Judge at Chambers, exercising jurisdiction under s. 73 (8), upon a stated case, can be regarded as a delegate of the Court or is sitting under a special authority independently of the Court and as a person designated by the statute to discharge the duties prescribed by it.

The King v. Dimmock, 39 N.S.R. 286.

—Taxation according to tariff—Allegation of payment of an item.]—The taxing officer is bound to tax a bill of costs on production thereof according to the tariffs in force, upon seeing that the opposite party has had notice, and without consideration of any collateral equities which may exist between the parties.

Ross v. Ross, 8 Que. P.R. 300.

—Taxation of a witness—Revision before a Judge in Chambers.]—The taxation of a witness being equivalent to a judgment on which he is entitled to sue out execution, the Judge in Chambers has no authority to revise or reduce such taxation after final judgment.

Jouvin v. Bonhomme, 8 Que. P.R. 349.

—Action for injury to land—Value of land—Easement—Disturbance of—Damages under $200.]—The defendant, in the course of severing his house from that of the plaintiff, which adjoined it, the two houses being built together as one building, by his negligence, damaged the plaintiff's house to the extent of $140, for which he recovered judgment, the property itself being worth over $200.—Held, that the value of the property, and not the amount of the damages sustained, was the factor in determining the question of jurisdiction, and that the action was properly brought in the High Court, and the plaintiff entitled to tax his costs on the High Court scale.

Moffatt v. Carmichael, 14 O.L.R. 595.

-Covenant-Amount due under-Deduction by way of payment or set-off.]-In an action on a covenant in a deed to pay the plaintiff a specified yearly sum, the amount found to be due the plaintiff was the sum of $262.50, from which the trial Judge deducted $69, which the defendant, at the plaintiff's request, had paid to a creditor of the plaintiff, but which was in no way connected with the covenant, this reducing the amount to $193.50, for which judgment was entered:-Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to costs on the County Court scale, the claim being within the jurisdiction of the County Court, as the $69 was allowed the defendant, not by way of payment, but as a set-off.

Osterhout v. Fox. 14 O.L.R. 599.

-Witness fees-Foreign witness-Employee or party to action.1-$1,000, with $510 for expenses, allowed as witness fees for a Dominion land surveyor, a necessary foreign witness, who came from the Yukon to give evidence at the trial of this action at Sandwich, involving absence from home for 51 days. The Court refused to allow a similar sum to another witness from the Yukon who was in the employ of the party litigant calling him: only $630, inclusive of expenses, being allowed in his case. When a party to an action is a necessary and material witness on his own behalf, he is entitled, if the taxing officer is satisfied of such fact, to tax for himself the same witness fees as if he were not a party, but the taxing officer can take no notice of abortive attempts to bring the case to trial.

Boyle v. Rothschild, 16 O.L.R. 424.

-Attorney's fee on statement of facts in jury trial-Witnesses examined as experts -Stenographers' fees.]—(1) At a second trial by jury made necessary by reason of the disagreement of the first jury, no additional fee will be accorded to plaintiff's attorney for the statement of facts required under Art. 425 C.P. (2) Witnesses (mechanics) summoned to give expert evidence touching the working of a machine will be taxed at the rate of $4.00 per day. (3) No fee is allowed the stenographer for reading a disposition taken out of Court to the jury. (4) The case having been settled and withdrawn from the jury immediately after the re-assembling of the Court for the afternoon session, the sum of $10.00 for one day's session taxed in favour of the interpreter from French into English is reduced to $5.00.

Mills v. Royal Institution for the Advancement of Learning, 9 Que. P.R. 368.

-Printing of joint case in appeal.]—If it is proved that a joint case has been prepared, printed and paid by one party only, these costs shall be allowed to the attorneys of this party.

Glickman v. Stevenson, 9 Que. P.R. 224.

—Taxation of costs—Review—Evidence.]—Held, that an application for review of taxation by the taxing officer must be disposed of on the evidence adduced before the taxing officer, and no further evidence in support of the application will be received on review.

Martin v. Smith, 1 Sask. R. 141.

—Attorney—Fee for letter.j—The fee for an attorney's letter notifying the person to whom it is sent that if a movable which he detains is not restored to the owner an action for revendention will be brought against him cannot be recovered from such person. The action to recover the cost of an attorney's letter appertains to the client and not to, the attorney who wrote it.

—Old tariff—Art. 549 C.C.P.]—When an action is instituted under the operation of the old tariff it is that tariff which governs all the costs in the cause though the issue was joined after the new tariff came into force. Goold, Shapley & Muir Co. v. Gervais, 9

Que. P.R. 290 (Sup. Ct.).

—Right of mortgagee to—Taxation as between party and party.]—Held, that a mortgagee is entitled, in a proceeding for foreclosure or sale under mortgage, to tax against the mortgager and all subsequent recumbrancers all costs necessarily incident to a suit for foreclosure or sale, including costs as between solicitor and client; and unless such mortgagee has been guilty of inequitable conduct the Court has no jurisdiction in its discretion to deprive him of such costs or any part thereof properly taxable as between solicitor and client.

Confederation Life Association v. Leier, 1 Sask. R. 131.

—Taxing costs to the Crown—Fees to counsel and solicitor—Salaried officer representing the Crown.]—As the statutes of Canada defining the duties and salaries of the Attorney-General and his deputy deny additional compensation for services rendered by them in connection with litigation affecting the Crown, it is improper to allow counsel fees or solicitor's fees in respect of services rendered in such capacties by either of these officers on the taxation of costs awarded in favour of the Crown. Jarvis v. The Great Western Railway Company, 8 U.C.C.P. 280, and the Charlevoix Election Case, Cout. Dig. 388, followed.

- Revision.] - (1) If a jury's verdict awards a plaintiff a sum inferior to $400 (in this case, $140), and judgment is rendered according to verdict, with costs, such costs include the costs of the jury, of the translation of evidence, and the fees and disbursements, as in an action for the amount awarded, on the various motions and proceedings peculiar to jury trials. (2) No fee will be allowed on an examination on discovery which was dispensed with after the issuing of a subpæna. (3) When a party is examined on discovery, the adverse party has no right to charge in his bill of costs, the cost of a copy of such examination. (4) The taxation of a witness who has not been heard, made in the absence of the opposite party, will be annulled, when no evidence is adduced to show the possible usefulness of such witness. (5) The taxation of witnesses who have been heard, whether it has taken place ex parte or after objections by the adverse party, will not be revised by the Judge.

Clough v. De Fabre, 9 Que. P.R. 277.

-Redemption action-Taking mortgage accounts in master's office.]-The procuring of a copy of evidence taken in the master's office for use on the argument before the master may be taxed and allowed in proper cases. Re Robinson (1895), 16 P.R. 423, discussed. Per Riddell, J.:—The following items in a defendant's bill are taxable in reference to taking of mortgage accounts in the master's office: (1) Attendance by the other party's solicitor on inspection of productions; (2) Counsel fee advising on evidence: (3) Letter to client to call after service of notice of intention to cross-examine on affidavit; (4) Attending and copying entries in books of account produced; (5) Attendance of clients going over accounts and surcharge of plaintiff and considering and advising on; (6) Attendance of plaintiff's solicitor going over accounts and dis-cussing and making list of such as can and cannot be agreed upon and admitted; (7) The issue of a new subpœna for witnesses to be examined upon a day subsequent to that for which they were originally subpœnaed and brought into the master's office; (8) Attendance by client and advising after arrangement made to proceed with case on a certain day; (9) Perusal of accounts and considering and taking instructions for supplemental accounts; (10) Counsel fee on reference.

Plenderleith v. Parsons, 15 O.L.R. 397.

—Revision of bill—Action in warranty.]—
When a principal defendant, plaintiff in warranty, has paid the costs of the principal action, he can recover them from the defendant in warranty who has been condemned to pay, after these costs had been regularly taxed and the notice given to said defendant in warranty by principal plaintiff.

Malo v. Monette, 9 Que. P.R. 315.

-"Lawful costs"-Solicitor engaged on salary.]-S. 468 of the charter of the city of Winnipeg (1 & 2 Edw. VII. c. 77), provides that where the city solicitor is engaged at a stated salary, the city has the right, in law suits and proceedings, to recover and collect "lawful costs," in the same manner as if such solicitor were not receiving such salary. The corporation enacted a by-law appointing its solicitor at an annual salary, and, in addition thereto, that he should be entitled, for his own use, to such lawful costs as the corporation might recover in actions and proceedings, except disburse-ments paid by the city. Upon the taxation of the costs awarded to the respondent on an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada (41 Can. S.C.R. 18):—Held, that the statute and contracts above recited applied to costs awarded on said appeal and that, on the taxation, the usual fees to counsel and solicitor should be allowed. Hamburg-American Packet Co. v. The King (39 Can. S.C. R. 621) distinguished.

Ponton v. City of Winnipeg, 41 Can. S. C.R. 366.

—Peremption—Attending taxation.]—When an action is dismissed for gelay after a pre-liminary exception was filed and the plaintiff has paid the costs of the exception dismissed with costs against him the defendant is entitled to the fee for appearance only and not to the costs of attending the taxation.

Atkinson v. Cadieux, 10 Que. P.R. 100.

--Alimony.]—Art. 551 C.P.Q. applies to an action for reduction of alimony or discharge from the order to pay it. In such an action the provisions of the article apply as well to the plaintiff's costs when he succeeds as to those of the defendant if the action is dismissed or maintained for party only with costs against the plaintiff.

Moreau v. Micnaud, 10 Que. P.R. 184.

—Several preliminary exceptions filed concurrently.]—If several preliminary exceptions are filed concurrently, and the action is dismissed on one of them, the defendant is not entitled to the costs of the other exceptions, if these have not been urged to judgment. A motion by plaintiff to have defendant's bull of costs revised accordingly will be granted.

Bourbonnais v. Lortie, 11 Que. P.R. 17.

—Distraction—Creditor of attorney.]—The attorney of the party who has obtained a judgment with costs has a right to receive all the costs including fees of witnesses of his client. These costs are deemed paid to the attorney if paid to his creditor who has seized them in the hands of the party condemned to pay.

Bégin v. Breton, Q.R. 35 S.C. 380.

-Abortive trial-Successful party to action.]-The successful party to an action is not entitled to recover costs of an action rendered abortive by disagreement of the jury. The Judicature Act has made no change in this practice by granting power to award costs where costs were not ordinarily given previous to its enactment. Hacket v. Rorke, 42 N.S.R. 341.

—Cancellation of lease.]—(1) In an action for the cancellation of a lease, the consideration price of which is $525 a year, the fact that no rent is asked, but only $50 damages, does not prevent the class of the action to be regulated by the value of the rental for the year during which the action was taken, id est, in the present case, of the third class. (2) If Court fees have been paid as in a fourth class action, the winning party will be ordered to affix in the various proceedings filed by him such increase of stamps as the tariff requires. Gilbert v. Bowen, 10 Que. P.R. 359.

—Increased counsel fee—Fiat for—Application to Judge.]—On an application for increased counsel fee, no formal summons is necessary; merely a letter notifying the other side of intention to apply at a time mutually convenient, and the applicant showing dates and extent of sittings and the highest fee taxable by the registrar. These facts should be submitted without any argument.

Bryce v. Canadian Pacific Ry. Co., 14 B. C.R. 155.

—Apportionment of costs when defendant succeeds on one issue.]—Action for damages for trespass on the plaintiff's land, or, in the alternative, for a mandamus directing the defendants to place matters in train to assess the compensation due to the plaintiff for the lands taken for the purposes of the defendants' railway. At the trial, the Judge held that there had been no trespass but that the plaintiff was entitled to the mandamus asked for:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the general costs of the action, nowithstanding the finding against him on the issue of trespass.

Calvert v. Canadian Northern Ry., 18 Man. R. 307.

—Revision of taxation—Powers of Judge on petition to revise—Taxation of witnesses.]
—When a fina! judgment has been rendered in a case condemning one of the parties to pay the costs, a Judge in Chambers has no power, on a petition to revise the taxation of one of the bills, to strike from it the tax of one of the witnesses, on the ground that his evidence was of no weight or value. Cains v. Leeder, 34 Que. S.C. 368.

—Action dismissed on declinatory exception.]—An action dismissed on declinatory exception is a contested action for the purpose of taxation under the old tariff of advocates' fees which was in force at the time of the action.

Hodge v. Béique, 10 Que. P.R. 216.

- Appearance by separate solicitors -Severing in defences.]-Where an action brought against several defendants is dismissed with costs against the plaintiff, in party and party taxation: -(1) Several defendants who have, or may have, separate defences are entitled to separate bills of costs if they detend by separate solicitors. (2) If two or more appear by the same solicitor, it is within the discretion of the taxing officer to allow or disallow separate defences. Consequently where sixteen defendants were sued as joint and several makers of a promissory note:—Held, that on party and party taxation of their costs, the taxing officer had not improperly allowed three different sets of costs; nor two separate defences, where two or more defendants had appeared by the same solicitor. (3) A solicitor appearing for two or more defendants is entitled to charge for instructions to defend from each defendant; but can only be allowed for one perusal of statement of claim. (4) Instructions for pleadings can only be allowed for each separate set of pleadings. Where one party takes out an appointment for examination and discovery of the other party, who, having been served with a subpæna, is delayed by causes (e.g., snow-blockades, or inter-ruption of train service) beyond his power, yet attends and presents himself for examination as soon after as possible, the examining party cannot by abandoning the examination, escape the liability to pay witness fees and mileage-and under such circumstances, such fees and mileage, if not paid, are properly taxable on party and party taxation against the examining party, as costs in the cause. The solicitor for the party being examined is entitled to attend on examination, and charges for his instructions and attendance are proper party and party taxation items. Costs of a third party notice are not taxable as be-tween party and party, in the absence of an express order. Only one affidavit of disbursements, which may be made by the solicitor, is to be taxed in respect of each separate bill of costs.

Union Investment Co. v. Pullishy, 1 Alta. R. 489.

—Action in High Court—Jurisdiction of County Court—Title to land.]—In an action in the High Court to recover $500, the amount of a promissory note made by the defendant, payable to the order of W., and indorsed to the plaintiff, the defendant, by his statement of defence, denied that the plaintiff was the holder of the note in due course, and alleged that he was induced to make it by the fraud of the plaintiff and W., the latter pretending to have an interest in lands in a foreign State which he was to transfer to the defendant in consideration of the note, but in reality having no interest and never having made a transfer to the defendant, all of which the plaintiff knew, brought in question, within the meaning of s. 22 of the County Courts Act, the lands referred to not being in Ontario; but even if that were not so, the defence did not necessarily bring into question the title to the foreign land, and in fact no question of title was raised at the trial. Leave to appeal from an order of Latchford, J., affirming a ruling of a local registrar that the costs of the action were taxable on the County Court scale, refused.

Dobner v. Hodgins, 1 O.W.N. 12.

-Jurisdiction of County Courts-Trespass to land.]-In an action in the High Court for $200 damages for obstructing the plaintiff's access from his land to a street and for a mandatory injunction requiring the defendant to remove the obstruction, the plaintiff obtained judgment restraining the defendant from continuing the obstruction, and ordering him to remove it and to pay the costs of the action:-Held, that the action came within clause 8 of s. 23 of the County Courts Act, and, as the plaintiff's land was shown to be of greater value than $200, the action was not within the jurisdiction of a County Court, and the plaintiff was entitled to his costs on the High Court scale.

Ross v. Vokes, 1 O.W.N. 261.

-Review of taxation.]-Held, on a review of taxation of costs that it is not necessarv to set forth in the notice the grounds of the application, nor to lay objection in writing before the taxing officer. Smithers v. Hutchings, 3 Terr. L.R. 251.

-Costs-Service fees.]-To effect service of a writ of summons, the sheriff's officer bona fide travelled from the sheriff's office. where the writ was received, to the defendant's residence, seven miles, and not finding the defendant at home, he travelled from there to the residence of C., which was four miles from the sheriff's office, and there the defendant was found and served. The clerk on taxation allowed mileage for the entire distance travelled: -Held, on review, that the sheriff was entitled to mileage for eight miles only, that is, the distance from the sheriff's office to the place where service was actually effected and return. Wise v. Currie, 3 Terr. L.R. 149.

MacPherson v. Samet, 34 N.B.R. 559.

-Privilege-Saisie-arret after judgment -Prescription.]-The costs of an attorney on proceedings in a Court which was held, against the contention of both parties, to be without jurisdiction are not privileged. The rule in Art. 673 C.P.Q. applies, in case of alleged insolvency of the debtor, to the distribution of all monies not representing immovables and of which no account has been rendered en justice. When a saisiearrêt has been declared binding a subsequent judgment ordering the tiers-saisie to pay the monies seized has no raison d'être the amount subject to the allegation of insolvency should be distributed according to Art. 697 C.P.Q. and especially if there exists a seizure after a prior judgment. A tierce-opposition is not prescribed, whatever is the date of the judgment attacked, if the tiers-opposant has only had knowledge of it during the year preceding it.

Royal Electric Co. v. Palliser, 3 Que. P.R. 340 S.C.).

—Lien for on discontinuance—Collusion.]—If a discontinuance is filed in a suit without notice thereof being given to plaintiff's attorneys, and evident collusion is shown against the latter by the plaintiff and defendant, the plaintiff's attorneys will be entitled to take judgment against the defendant for their costs. (2) Such costs do not comprise the costs of appointment of the plaintiff's at turrix to minors, there being no lien de droit, in respect thereof between the defendant and the plaintiff's attorneys. Skelly v. Thibault, 5 Que. P.R. 75.

-Alimentary debt-Opposition - Substitution-Unseizable property - Will.]-The defendant was owner of immovables par indivis with his mother. The undivided part of his interest had been bequeathed to him by his father for purposes of maintenance (a titre d'aliments) with a clause of nonseizability and charged with a substitution. River, an attorney for his mother, had brought an action for partition of these immovables against the defendant and the curator of the substitution, and by the judgment in said action the property was partitioned en nature, three-fourths of the costs being made payable by the defendant River for such costs had caused a seizure to be made of these undivisible parts of the immovables allotted en bloc to the defendant. The plaintiffs, as attorneys for the defendants in said action, made opposition to the seizure, claiming that the costs had been paid, and invoking the clause of nonseizability. River pleaded to the opposition that he had not been paid and that the clause against seizure did not apply to his claim, which had been incurred in preserving the property to the opposant, and in defining his interest in the undivided immovables. The opposition was dismissed with costs, and the three undivided portions of the immovables were sold. River's costs on the opposition were taxed at $125.57, but on review on motion by the plaintiffs were reduced to $54.57. Plaintiffs then sued defendant for their costs of the opposition and of the review of taxation, and obtained judgment for $147.80, under which they caused seizure to be made of the two undivided parts of the immovables which were not sold in River's proceedings. Defendant opposed the seizure invoking the clause against seizure. Plaintiffs pleaded to the opposition that the costs were incurred in good faith to protect defendant's property against the seizure by River; that this made their debt alimen-tary; that the fact that the opposition was dismissed was of no importance; and that their claim could be realized from all the alimentary property of the defendant: -Held, that River not having contested the clause against seizure, but only having claimed that it did not apply to his claim the opposition made to his seizure was of no benefit to the property seized by the plaintiffs any more than it was to that seized by River; that there was no relation between the claim of the plaintiffs for their costs and the immovables seized in these proceedings; and that, therefore, the claim of the plaintiffs had not become alimentary to be realized from the unseizable

-Judge's order for costs-Direction for setoff-Service of allocatur-Issue of execution - Production of order.] - Where a Judge's order requires the defendant to pay interlocutory costs to the plaintiffs, and the Judge makes an oral direction that costs previously awarded to the defendant should be set-off pro tanto, the deduction should be made before execution issues on the Judge's order. It is not necessary to serve the certificate of taxation of the costs awarded by an order, where the party to pay has been represented upon the taxation, and has notice of the amount payable. When execution is issued upon a Judge's order, the order itself or an office copy should be produced to the officer issuing it; a mere copy is not sufficient, unless such officer is the one who has official custody of or access to the book in which the order is entered.

COUNTERFEITING.

Having in possession forged bank notes-Counterfeit token of value.]-The prisoner was convicted in the County Court, under the Criminal Code, s. 430, on a charge of having unlawfully, and without lawful authority or excuse, had in his custody and possession two forged bank notes for the payment of $10 each, well knowing them to be forged. One of the witnesses called on behalf of the prosecution, H., testified that the prisoner one day showed him a bill or note something like those in evidence (proved to have come out of the prisoner's possession) and that he then told the prisoner it was no good. Another witness, P., stated that, the day before the arrest, he had gone shooting with the prisoner, who said he had something to show him when they got out of the woods, and that that evening he went to the prisoner's house and the prisoner there gave him two bills. Other evidence established that these bills, which were paid over by P. to G., and M., were both forgeries:-Held, that there was ample evidence in the dealings between the prisoner and P., and in the conversation between prisoner and H., to prove that prisoner's knowledge that the documents he was handling were not genuine, and to justify the Judge in finding the prisoner possessed of the guilty knowledge required by s. 430 of the Code. At the trial, evidence was given of a conversation with the prisoner in the presence of the chief of police, in which the prisoner said that he got the bills in question from S., and that he gave them to P .: - Held (obiter), that the onus was upon the prosecution to establish that the statement in question was entirely free and voluntary, and that it was not sufficient for this purpose that the officer should swear to it, but he should have negatived possible inducements by hope or fear which would have made the statement inadmissible. But that the reception of this evidence did not necessarily influence the Judge's decision in reference to the other evidence, the Judge having stated the evidence on which he based his judgment and that evidence being sufficient. A verdict by a Judge, in this particular, is different from the verdict of a jury. At the trial evidence was given in relation to one of the bills in question showing it to be a counterfeit or forgery, purporting to be a $10 bill of the Bank of Montreal. Held, that the document was a "forged note," and was such a document as is contemplated by s. 430 of the Code. Semble, it might also be a "counterfeit token of value" under s. 430.

Transfer of action-Order for.]-An order of transfer from a County Court to the Supreme Court of British Columbia is effective from the day when pronounced. Parrot v. Cheales, 13 B.C.R. 445.

COVENANT.

Charge on land for debt executed under seal-Implied covenant to pay debt.]-Defendant executed under seal an instrument creating a charge on land in favour of plaintiffs for the price of an engine bought from them and interest to be paid by specified instalments. The instrument further provided that if notes should be given by defendant for the several instalments, such notes should not be in satisfaction of the said lien and charge, but the same should continue until payment in full of such notes and any renewals thereof. It contained no covenant or promise to pay the debt:-Held, that a covenant or promise to pay the debt could not be implied from the terms of the deed, and that plaintiffs could not have a personal order for payment of the debt based upon anything contained in it.

CRIMINAL CONVERSATION.

Damages-Statute of limitations.]-Criminal conversation is a continuing wrong, and where the wife is enticed away more than six years before, but the criminal conversation continues down to the time of, the bringing of the action, the husband may recover such damages as he has sustained within the period of six years next before the bringing of the action; recovery in respect of the enticing away and of anything else which happened prior to the six years being barred by the Statute of Limitations. Bailey v. King, 27 Ont. App. 793.

-Statute of Limitations-Criminal conversation-Damages.]-The Statute of Limitations is not a bar to an acton for criminal conversation where the adulterous intercourse between defendant and plaintiff's wife has continued to a period within six years from the time the action is brought. gin to run when the adulterous intercourse ceases, or is the plaintiff only entitled to damages for intercourse within the six years preceding the action. King v. Bailey, 31 Can. S.C.R. 338.

-Foreign divorce-Invalidity - Hearsay evidence.]-The plaintiff's wife separated from him with, as found on the evidence, his consent, and after some years obtained in the United States a divorce from him not valid according to the law of this province. She then went through the ceremony of marriage with the defendant and lived with him as his wife for many years before this action, which was brought to re-cover damages for criminal conversation and alienation of affections. The latter branch was abandoned at the trial, but on the former the jury allowed $5,000 damages, and judgment was entered for this sum: -Held, MacMahon, J., dissenting, that notwithstanding the separation and the divorce the action lay, but that the damages were grossly excessive, and on this ground, and on the ground of improper reception of evidence of rumours of infidelity of the plaintiff's wife with the defendant long previous to going through the ceremony of marriage, a new trial was granted. Per MacMahon, J.: The separation and subsequent conduct amounted to an absolute abandonment of his wife by the plaintiff, and were a bar to the action. Judgment of Anglin, J., at the trial, reversed.

C. v. D., 8 O.L.R. 308 (D.C.).

—Criminal conversation—Death of plaintiff—Revivor.]—The provisions of s. 10 of the Trustee Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 129, apply to an action for criminal conversation; and where the plaintiff dies pendente lite the action may be continued in the name of his personal representative. Where at the time of the abatement an appeal to the Court of Appeal is pending, an order of revivor may, nevertheless, issue from the High Court of Justice. The absence of the indersement on the order of revivor required by Con. Rule 399, notifying the opposite party of the time within which to apply to discharge the order, will not be regarded as a ground for setting aside the order upon a motion for that purpose made within the proper time.

—Abandonment of wife — Separation — Hearsay evidence.]—Appeal by the defendant from the judgment of a Divisional Court reported 8 O.L.R. 308, dismissed on the ground that the evidence did not show such abandonment by the plaintiff of his wife as deprived him of his right of action. I. EVIDENCE.

Evidence - Admission - Conviction for lesser offence.]-Upon an indictment for stealing from the person evidence was given upon which the defendant could have been convicted of simple theft, but the Judge charged the jury that they must either convict of theft from the person or acquit. No objection to the charge was made at the trial:-Held, the jury should have been instructed that they might convict of simple theft under the indictment, and a new trial was ordered accordingly. After imprisonment defendant was searched by a police officer and some money found on him. The officer said, "This looks bad, J," speaking to the defendant, whereupon the defendant made some admission of theft, which was evidence against him on the trial. He was under the influence of liquor at the time he made the statement. Held, the evidence was admissible.

—Arrest on minor charge—Interrogation of prisoner by police officer—Warning to accused.]—A confession obtained from a person under arrest for assault and robbery will be admitted in evidence on a charge of murder if the accused was warned that he need not answer and that what he said might be used against him, although he was not told that he would be charged with homicide.

The King v. Rossi, 8 E.L.R. 595.

—Attempt to commit incest—Evidence of children of tender years.]—The prisoner was tried upon a charge of having attempted to commit incest with his daughter, a child of seven years of age, and was found guilty:—Held, that, as the evidence showed that the prisoner had done what he could to commit the crime of incest, s. 570 of the Criminal Code applied to his case, and he was open to indictment under it. Held, also, that the evidence of the prisoner's child and of another child of four years of age was properly received, though not under oath, by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 145, s. 16; and that this evidence Act, R.S

Rex v. Pailleur, 20 O.L.R. 207, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 339.

—Depositions taken by magistrate—Parol evidence in addition.]—Where a deposition has been regularly taken down in writing by a magistrate at a preliminary hearing, and such deposition is available, that deposition is the best evidence of what the witness stated on that occasion, but where the deposition is produced and put in evidence, then parol evidence is admissible to prove statements made by the witness on the occasion of the taking of the deposition, and not appearing therein.

Rex v. Prasiloski (No. 2), 15 B.C.R. 29, 13 W.L.R. 298, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 139.

-Attempt to have carnal knowledge of child-Evidence of child not on oath-Corroboration.]-The prisoner was charged with the indictable offence under s. 302 of the Code of having attempted to have unlawful carnal knowledge of a child under the age of fourteen years, to wit, of the age of seven or eight years. The trial Judge received the child's statement, without oath, under s. 1003 of the Code, and upon that and other evidence convicted the prisoner of the offence charged, but reserved for the opinion of the Court of Appeal the questions whether the child's statement was sufficiently corroborated to comply with the requirements of sub-s. 2 of s. 1003, and whether he was right in holding that there was sufficient evidence to justify his finding the prisoner guilty:-Held, that the evidence of the child was sufficiently corroborated by: (a) evidence of the statement made to her mother within an hour or two after the occurrence-a statement volunteered by her, and not extracted by interrogation or suggestion; (b) evidence of the condition of the child's clothing, as testified to by her mother and two other persons; (e) evidence of the fact of the child having been with the prisoner during the time testified to as that during which his improper conduct took place. 2. That there was reasonable evidence on which, if believed, the defendant might be found guilty of the offence

—Statements of prisoner charged with murder to person in authority—Admissibility—Negativing threats or inducements.]—The prisoner, a foreigner charged with murder, was placed under arrest and taken to the police station, where the policeman in charge instructed an interpreter to tell the prisoner that, in view of any charge that might be brought against him, he need not answer anything unless he liked, but anything that he said would be used in evidence against him. This was all that the policeman told the interpreter to say to the prisoner, and the interpreter told the prisoner exactly what he had been told to tell him. At the trial of the prisoner evidence was given, without objection, of statements made by him in answer to questions put to him by the policeman, through the interpreter, after this warning. There was no negation in terms of the absence of threats or promises or inducements, but apperently all that actually took place was related. The trial Judge was satisfied that the statements were not made under the influence of threats or promises or inducements made or held out to the prisoner:-Held, that the evidence of the prisoner's statements was properly admitted; there was no necessity for a direct affirmation by the witnesses that no threats or promises or inducements were made or held out. The Queen v. Thompson, [1893] 2 Q.B. 12, 17 Cox C.C. 641, distinguished. Held, also, that it is not necessary in warning or cautioning a prisoner that a constable should say to him everything that is set forth in s. 684 (2) of the Criminal Code.

-Permitting young girls to be on premises for the purposes of fornication—Criminal Code s. 217—"Unlawfully."]—The defendant invited or induced or knowingly suffered two girls, under the age of eighteen, to be upon his premises for the purpose of being, as they were, carnally known by him and another:-Held, that he was properly found guilty of an indictable offence under s. 217 of the Criminal Code. The word "unlawfully," in the expression "unlawfully and carnally known," in s. 217, does not import that the unlawful carnal connection must be something of a character elsewhere declared to be unlawful and penalized by the Code or by some other definite law or the general law of the land; the word is used, in describing the act penalized, in the sense of not sanctioned or permitted by law, and as distinguished from acts of sexual intercourse which are not regarded as immoral.

—Evidence — Accomplice — Corroboration.]
—An accomplice is a "ompetent witness, and a conviction may be had on his uncorroborated evidence, if credit be given to it. Where the trial is by jury, the Court should call the attention of the jury to the character of the witness as an accomplice and the reasons why care should be taken in accepting the wholly unsupported evidence of such a witness; but the Court has no power to require the jury to reject such evidence. In this case there was no jury, and it was held, that the trial Judge, who was familiar with the common objections to the evidence of accomplices, had power to convict the accused upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice.

Rex v. Frank, 21 O.L.R. 196, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 237.

Evidence-Confession.]-The prisoner being suspected of having been guilty of the murder of one John Gordon but not under arrest, detectives were employed who associated with him, worked themselves into his confidence, and, by representing to him that they were members of an organized gang of criminals engaged in profitable operations, induced him to seek for admission to their ranks. They then intimated to him that he must satisfy them that he was qualified for such admission by showing that he had committed some crime of a serious nature, whereupon, according to their evidence, he claimed that he had killed Gordon as the result of an altercation. The detectives were not peace officers, no charge was then pending against the prisoner, nor did he know that the detectives were such: -Held, that an inducement held out to an accused person in consequence of which he makes a confession must be one having relation to the charge against him and must be held out by a person in authority, in order to render evidence of the confession inadmissible; that both these grounds of objection were wanting in this case, and that, therefore, the evidence of the confession was rightly received.

Rex. v. Todd, 13 Man. R. 364, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 514.

-Evidence-Answers tending to criminate -Claim of privilege.]-The prisoner, being the manager of a branch store for the sale of goods supplied by the factory of his employers, arranged with the checker at the factory to load certain goods on a waggon going to his branch store without charging them or keeping the usual check on them which his employers' system required, and had the goods delivered to a customer of his branch, the prisoner stating that for certain business reasons beneficial to his employers he had merely postponed the charging of the goods:-Held, that if the Judge did not accept the prisoner's explanation, which he was not bound to do, there was evidence upon which he could legally find him guilty of theft as defined by the Criminal Code. If a witness when called upon to testify does not object to do so upon the ground that his answers may tend to criminate him, they are receivable against him (except in the case provided for by s. 5 of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893) as proceeding amended in any crimina against him thereafter, but if he does object he is protected. Rex v. D'Aoust, 3 O.L.R. 653, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 407 (C.A.).

—Possession — Reasonable account.] — A Crown case was reserved to determine the question whether, when stolen goods are found in the possession of a prisoner, and he gives to those who find him a reasonable account of how he came by the goods, it is incumbent upon the prosecution at the trial to show that the prisoner's account is untrue:—Held, that, in the absence of any evidence to show that such account was in fact given, the Court was not in a position to determine the question reserved.

The Queen v. McKay, 34 N.S.R. 540, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 151.

-Theft - Cattle stealing - Evidence of ownership-Brand - Earmark - Deposition taken at preliminary inquiry-Reading of, in evidence at trial-Evidence of absence of deponent from Canada.]-Held, Rouleau, J., dissenting, that the production of a steer's hide with the prosecutor's brand and earmarks only upon it, and the evidence of the prosecutor that he had owned and had never parted with the steer from which the hide had come, was sufficient to justify the trial Judge in finding that the steer in question was the property of the prosecutor. (See now 63-64 Vict. (1900), c. 46, s. 707A, and 1 Edw. VII., c. 42, s. 707A:-Held, that the evidence that a witness at the preliminary inquiry was a corporal in the N.W.M. Police, and that he had been sworn in as a member of Strathcona's Horse, that he had left the post at which he had been stationed to join the latter force, and that, in the opinion of the deponent, if he had left the latter force he would have returned to such post, which fact would thereupon have become known to the deponent, was sufficient evidence of the absence of such witness from Canada to justify the admission as evidence at the trial of the deposition of such witness taken at the preliminary inquiry; and the question was one to be decided by the trial Judge.

The Queen v. Forsythe, 4 Terr. L.R. 398, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 475.

—Trial—Evidence not translated to prisoner —Certified extracts from registers of civil status—Evidence of prisoner's bad character.]—1. A conviction for murder will not be set aside because the evidence of witnesses for the prosecution, given in a language of which the defendant was ignorant, was not translated to him, where he was defended by counsel speaking and thoroughly acquainted with the language of the witnesses, and where neither the defendant nor his counsel asked that the evidence be translated. 2. Section 19 of "The Canada Evidence Act, 1893," which requires that ten days' notice shall be given to the prisoner before the trial, of the intention to produce certain documents, does not apply to certified extracts from the registers of acts of civil status, which were produced merely to explain the alias of the person killed. Such extracts are admissible without notice. 3. Evidence of bad character or of misconduct of the prisoner, not relevant to the issue before the Court, can only be introduced by the Crown in reply or rebuttal. The admission of such evidence as part of the case for the prosecution, before any evidence of good character has been adduced for the deence, is improper, irregular and illegal, and constitutes sufficient ground for setting aside the conviction. The illegality is not covered by the failure of the prisoner or his counsel to object to the evidence at the time, or by the fact that his counsel crossexamined the witnesses on their statements. 4. Even after evidence of the prisoner's good character has been made by the crossexamination of Crown witnesses, the prosecution is only entitled-to prove his general reputation and not particular acts of mis-

-Deposition of witness-Inability of witness to attend trial-Preliminary enquiry before magistrate—Opportunity to cross-examine—Criminal Code, s. 687.]—At the preliminary enquiry before a magistrate on a charge of indecent assault on a female, the latter's depositions were taken, prisoner's counsel being present, but before conclusion of the cross-examination (in which the magistrate refused to allow some pertinent and necessary questions) proceed-ings were adjourned on account of witness' illness. Meanwhile the magistrate determined to send the case to trial, and telegraphed to prisoner's counsel so stating and asking whether he would come up or not. Counsel replied that if the case was to go to trial, it would be no use his coming, and accordingly did not further attend the proceedings. On lapse of the adjournment the magistrate went to the witness' residence and obtained her signature to her depositions as already taken, neither the prisoner nor his counsel being present, and afterwards resumed the inquiry, the prisoner being present but not the witness, and on the evidence already taken the prisoner was committed for trial. At the trial the witness was proved to be too ill to attend, and her depositions taken as above were tendered by the Crown and admitted. Held, that in view of s. 687 of the Criminal Code, as amended in 1900, the depositions were improperly received, prisoner's counsel not having had full opportunity to cross-examRex v. Trevane, 4 O.L.R. 475 (C.A.), 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 124.

-Indecent assault-Child's testimony-Evidence as to similar acts.]-The defendant was tried for indecent assault upon a child under the age of fourteen. The child was examined on the "voir dire" and not sworn. On refusing to answer the Crown prosecutor had the trial adjourned. On the reopening of the trial on the second day the child still absolutely refused to speak. Counsel for the Crown, on being asked if he had any other evidence, offered two witnesses in corroboration of the child's evidence as told to them by the child, and also evidence of similar acts with others by the prisoner:-Held, following Queen v. Cole, 1 Phil. Ev. 508, that evidence not in support of the charges laid in the indictment, but referring to charges not laid, could not be received as corroborative evidence; and following Rex v. Kingham, 66 L.J.P. 393, evidence as to what the child told others could not be received. There being no other evidence for the prosecution the prisoner was acquitted.

Rex v. South, 39 Can. Law Jour. 639 (Bole, Co. J.).

-Evidence to show guilty knowledge.]-1. When, in the ordinary course, an indictment has been found for an offence with which a person who is either in custody or on bail, has been charged, and such indictment has been returned into Court and has filed of record, the Court is regularly and exclusively seized of the case, and the accused has no right then to ask for a speedy trial and to remove the case and the indictment and the other documents forming the record to the special Court for speedy trials, 2. On an indictment charging the accused with having obtained goods by false pretences from a company named, with intent to defraud, so soon as it has been proved that he did the act charged, evidence of false representations made to persons other than the president and general manager of such company, on other and distinct occasions, is admissible to show that the accused, at the time he made the false representations to the president and general manager of the company on whose information the prosecution was brought, was pursuing a course of similar acts, and to prove guilty knowledge of the falsity of the pretence charged in the indictment and the intention with which the act charged was done.

ness's testimony without a ruling that the witness is hostile to the party calling him. (2) The witness's deposition at the preliminary enquiry may be shown to him on his examination in chief at the trial for the purpose of refreshing his memory, but neither the examining counsel nor the witness may read the deposition aloud. (3) On the witness silently reading his previous deposition, a question, which had been put to the witness before he saw the deposition, and to which he had given an unexpected answer, may be re-put; and only in case the witness, after his memory has been so refreshed, persists in the same unexpected answer, can the question be repeated to him in a leading form from the depositions. Cas. 135 (Würtele, J.).

-Trial - Cross-examination-Right to reexamine.]-The right to re-examine follows necessarily upon cross-examination, even as to the matter elicited during the latter which is both inadmissible and volunteered. Such matters should be expunged at the instance of the cross-examiner if it be desired to avoid re-examination.

Rex v. Noel, 6 O.L.R. 385 (C.A.), 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 309.

-Evidence-Confession-Person in authority.]-The rector of a cathedral held an inquiry into the circumstances of an assault in which several of the choir boys were implicated:—Held, that the rector was a person in authority and that a statement made to him by one of the boys who was told to speak the truth and that the statement was for the purpose of that inquiry only, was not voluntary.

Rex v. Royds, 10 B.C.R. 407, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 209 (Irving, J.).

-Statement of accused to police officer-Admissibility—Negativing possible inducements—Onus of proof.]—(1) The onus is upon the prosecution to establish that a statement or confession made by the prisoner to a police officer was made voluntarily. (2) The proper mode of proving that the prisoner's statement was voluntarily made is by negativing the possible inducements by way of hope or fear that would have made the statement inadmissible, and not by merely taking the affirmative answer of the officer under oath that the statement was made voluntarily. (3) Semble, whether or not a statement was voluntarily made involves questions of both law and fact. (4) The improper reception of evidence before a County Judge trying a case without a jury under the "speedy trials" clauses will not entitle a prisoner to a new trial upon a case reserved, if the County Judge certifies therein that apart from the evidence objected to there was sufficient evidence to compel him to find the prisoner

The King v. Tutty, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 544, 38 N.S.R. 136.

-Confession - Caution.]-Where before making his confession the prisoner was duly cautioned, the confession is admissible in evidence although on an occasion previous to his making it an inducement may have been held out to him.

Rex v. Lai Ping, 11 B.C.R. 102, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 467.

-Confession of accused-Admissibility-Absence of threat or inducement.]-(1) Unless the evidence before an extradition Judge, of an alleged confession by the accused, was clearly inadmissible, another Judge, hearing the case upon a habeas corpus after committal, should not discharge the prisoner upon the ground of its inadmissibility. (2) Semble, where a witness called to prove a confession alleged to have been made by the accused, purports to give a complete account of the interview, and no suspicious circumstances are brought out pointing to any threat or inducement relating thereto, the evidence should not be rejected, although the witness was not asked whether any threat or inducement had been held out.

Re Lewis, (N.W.T.), 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 233.

-Evidence to support conviction-Justice's finding of fact.]-Upon an application to quash a summary conviction made by a justice of the peace, the justice's finding of fact should be treated in the same manner as the verdict of a jury, and not interfered with unless it clearly appears that there was no evidence to jutsify the finding. The King v. Canadian Pacific Railway Company, 9 Can. Cr. Cas., (N.W.T.), 328.

-Corpus delicti-Destruction of the remains of deceased-Circumstantial evidence of identity-Comment on failure of accused to testify.]-(1) On a trial for murder, if the fact of the death of a human being is established by direct proof and the remains of the dead man have been so destroyed by fire that direct identification is impossible, circumstantial evidence is admissible to prove the identity of the remains and also the identity of the person who caused the death. (2) While the fact of death must always be established by direct proof, the fact of the killing by the defendant as alleged may be proved by circumstantial evidence supporting the charge be-yond a reasonable doubt. (3) A statement by the Crown counsel in his address to the jury that the prisoner's counsel "took the very best and wisest course in not having the prisoner go on the witness stand," and that he, the Crown counsel, thinks it was wise for the prisoner himself, is a comment unfavourable to the accused on his failure to testify on his own behalf and is within the prohibition of s. 4 (2) of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893. (4) Where comment has been made in contravention of the Canada Evidence Act, upon the failure of the accused to testify, the same is a substantial wrong to the prisoner (Cr. The King v. Charles King, (N.W.T.), 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 426.

—Prisoner's statement — Comment on prisoner's failure to testify.]—A prisoner at his trial has the option of making a statement, not under oath, or of giving evidence under oath. A direction to the jury that an accused has failed to account for a particular occurrence, when the onus has been cast upon him to do so, does not amount to a comment on his failure to testify within the meaning of s. 4, sub-s. 2 of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

Rex v. Aho, 11 B.C.R. 114, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 453.

—Admissions — Statements made to constable after arrest.]—The prisoner was arrested on a charge of stealing S.'s gun, and in answer to questions put to him by a constable who did not caution him, he made certain statements: he was afterwards charged with the nurreer of S. and on his trial the Crown sought to put in evidence his answer.—Held not admissible.

his answers:—Held, not admissible. Rex v. Kay, 11 B.C.R. 157, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 403.

—Theft—Failure of prisoner to testify—Comment by Judge—Reserved case—Time or application.]—I. Where the trial Judge, in his charge to the jury, called attention to the fact that the prisoner charged with theft was not called to testify on his own behalf, and warned the jury that they were not to take that fact to his prejudice, but stated that if the accused were innocent he could have proved that he was not in the locality at the time, this is a prohibited "comment" within 'he meaning of s. 4 (2) of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893, entitling the accused to a new trial. A case may be reserved for the opinion of the Court after sentence has been imposed.

The King v. McGuire, 36 N.B.R. 609,, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 554.

-Prisoner as a witness-Requiring specimen of his handwriting.]-A prisoner called as a witness on his own behalf cannot be compelled to furnish a specimen of his hand-writing.

Rex v. Grinder, 11 B.C.R. 370 (Hunter, C.J.), 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 333.

-Judge's charge - Comment on failure of prisoner to testify.]-The jury in a criminal trial may be sent back for further deliberation when, upon being polled, one of the jurors dissents from the verdict of "guilty" announced by the foreman; and a subsequent unanimous verdict of "guilty" may propery be accepted. Upon the trial of the prisoner for burglary and burglariously stealing property, the Judge in his charge to the jury remarked that if they did not believe the evidence of a certain witness. they were "brought face to face with the fact that the prisoner is found in possession of a pouch which was stolen that he has not given a satisfactory explanation of how he came into possession of it": -Held, that the Judge did not thereby suggest to the jury that the prisoner might have given evidence in his own behalf, or that an inference unfavourable to him might be drawn from the fact that he had not done so. The burglary was on the 18th or 19th December, 1903, and the prisoner was arrested on the 16th February, 1904, with one of the articles stolen upon his person:-Held, that the Judge could not properly have ruled, in all the circumstances of the case, that the lapse of time was so great as absolutely to repel any presumption that the prisoner was concerned in the burglary; and that the possession of the article and other circumstances warranted the jury in drawing an inference of guilt. Leave to appeal was refused, and rulings of Street, J., at the trial, were affirmed.

Rex v. Burdell, 11 O.L.R. 440, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 365.

—Joint indictment—Separate trial—Canada Evidence Act, 1893, s. 4—Applicability to person not on trial.]—The prisoner and one F. were jointly indicted, and a true bill found against them. It was ordered that the prisoner should be tried separately and apart from F., as to whom the indictment was traversed to another sittings. At the trial of the prisoner the presiding Judge commented on the fact that F. was not called as a witness:—Held, that F. was not a person charged under s. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893, 56 Vict. c. 31 (D.), for that section only referred to the person actually on trial; F. was a competent vitness, but his competency did not depend on this Act, and therefore the Judge had the right to comment as he did.

per evidence only is before the jury. At the rial of a prisoner, the prosecuting counsel put in a letter, addressed to the Crown attorney from a counsel who had been re tained to act for the prisoner as follows: "I find that I will be unable to go on with this trial on the 28th December. . Would you kindly see the Judge and ask him if he can take it on Saturday, the 6th January. . . . I am quite willing to accept the evidence of the family, in particular those who gave evidence at the H. trial, so that it would not be necessary for you to call them." The trial was proceeded with on December 29th; the prisoner then being represented by another counsel, when in addition to the letter, the depositions of two witnesses taken at the trial of H., who were not members of the family, were put in without the consent of, or objection to on the part of, the prisoner's counsel .-Held, that even assuming the consent in the letter, which seemed to be a concession for the proposed postponement of the trial to the 6th January, wide enough to authorize the admission of the specified depositions, the depositions of the two witnesses, not members of the family were improperly received. Conviction quashed and a new trial granted.

-Admission by prisoner made to constable without preliminary warning or caution-Subsequent repetition.]-Defendant, while confined in jail awaiting trial on a charge of murder, was visited by a detective who had been sent by the Provincial Govern-ment to inquire into the case, and who, without preliminary warning or caution of any kind, succeeded in obtaining from defendant an admission that a statement made by her previously was untrue. Shortly afterward the same admission was made to the prosecuting officer in the presence of defendant's counsel:-Held, that, in the absence of evidence to rebut the presumption that the second statement was made under the operation of the same influence as the former one, the trial Judge erred in receiving evidence of it, and that the defendant, who had been convicted, was entitled to a new trial. Also, that the burden of showing that the influences under which the first statement was made had been dispelled when the second statement was obtained, rested upon the Crown. Also, that the prisoner's counsel, who was present when the second statement was made, could not assent to or waive anything to the prisoner's prejudice, and that, in a case where the prisoner herself could not make a waiver or admission, such waiver or admission could not be made through the agency of her counsel.

The King v. Hope Young, 38 N.S.R. 427, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 466.

-Proof of previous conviction-Time for.]
-The proper time for proving a previous conviction against a prisoner under the Criminal Code section 971, is not upon the trial of the offence, but after the trial and before sentence. Where there has been a previous conviction, within the recollection of the magistrate, but the Crown has failed to prove it, and it has not been otherwise shown, the magistrate may proceed upon his own initiative, and may inform himself at the same time as to the previous conviction, and the age, character and antecedents of the prisoner. Semble, that the proper course to be pursued by the magistrate in such a case is not a proper subject for a reserved case.

The King v. Bonnevie, 38 N.S.R. 560, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 376.

-Evidence of girl under 14-Understanding the nature of an oath.]-Upon a stated case the question was whether a girl under fourteen appeared sufficiently to understand the nature of an oath to justify the magistrate in receiving her testimony. magistrate stated that on examination of the girl he found that she did understand, and there was nothing in her answers as reported to indicate otherwise. It appeared, also, that she had been attending school, and the handwriting of her signature to the depositions was good:-Held, that the magistrate was right in receiving the girl's evidence under oath, and that the fact that she had been instructed on the subject a few days before the trial afforded no sufficient ground for holding otherwise.

Rex v. Armstrong, 15 O.L.R. 47 (C.A.), 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 544.

-Evidence of statement by accused while in custody-Interrogation by police officer-Answer that he had nothing to state-Conduct as evidence.]-(1) When the prosecution offers evidence of an alleged confession by the accused, it is the duty of the presiding Judge to enquire into all the circumstances in order to ascertain if the confession was made freely, and, if he finds it was not, he must reject the evidence. (2) A prisoner's answer that he has nothing to say when confronted while in custody with the statement of a witness charging him with the crime of murder, cannot be considered as an admission or quasi-admission of the charge so as to be admissible in evidence against him. (3) The silence of the accused when incriminating facts are asserted in his presence does not afford a presumption of acquiescence, it the occasion, or the nature of the demand or the manner of making it will reasonably justify silence in a prudent man, and particularly if it is in the interest of the accused not to answer.

-Recorder's Court, Montreal-Evidence—Charter of Montreal, s. 503—Cr. Code, ss. 590, 856.]—In all cases before the recorder of the City of Montreal other than civil actions the provisions of the Criminal Code apply generally and the evidence must be taken down in writing.

-Statements made to constable at time of and after arrest-Admissibility - Inducement.]-The constable when arresting the accused, said: "I arrest you for assaulting old man McGarvey," and proceeded to hand-cuff him. Accused asked to be permitted to go to the office to get some money, and inquired: "How much will the fine be?" to which the constable replied that he did not know anything about that. Subsequently the accused asked to have the handcuffs removed as he had no intention of escaping, to which the constable answered that he was taking no chances, and that he "bad not much sympathy with a man who would kick an old man and bite him:"— Held, that these remarks of the constable were not an inducement to the accused to speak.

-Attempt to commit rape-Duty of Judge to reject inadmissible evidence-Identity of party charged - Description - Rebuttal testimony - Proving contradictory statement by witness—Proving complaint to police officers.]—(1) It is the duty of the trial Judge in a criminal case to exclude inadmissible evidence, and its admission is a ground for a new trial whether objected to or not on the trial. (2) Whether or not the conditions required by section 11 of the Revised Evidence Act, 1906, formerly section 107 of the Criminal Code, 1892, to justify the admission of rebuttal testimony contradicting a witness who has denied making an alleged statement to a third party at variance with her testi-mony, have been fulfilled, is a question for the presiding Judge, and, if reasonably exercised, is not a ground for a new trial on a case reserved. (3) On the trial of an indictment for an attempt to commit rape statements of the person assaulted and of her companion present at the beginning of the assault, made to police officers, some four hours after the assault, that they had given a description of the assailant, but not stating what the description was, and evidence of the officers that in consequence of such description they had looked for the assailant were properly received, although statements of a like character had previously been made to other persons. (4) Where the prosecutrix on cross-examination had stated that she had given a description of her assailant in the presence of her father, and that in consequence of such description her father had suspected a person other than the prisoner, the Crown was properly allowed to prove by her father what the description was that his daughter had given in his presence. (5) On the trial of an indictment to commit rape if the only issue involved is as to the identity of the prisoner it is unnecessary for the trial Judge to point out to the jury that the law permits the finding of a lesser offence than the one charged.

The King v. Clarke, 38 N.B.R. 11, 12 Can.

—Complaint in case of rape—Questions put to complainant by a relative on the following day—Admissibility.]—Where the complainant makes a statement, to a third party, not in the presence of the accused, such statement may be given in evidence, provided it is shown to have been made at the first opportunity which reasonably offered itself after the commission of the offence, and has not been elicited by questions of a leading and inducing or intimidating nature.

-Corroboration-Illicit intercourse.]-Section 684 of the Criminal Code of 1892, which enacts that a person accused of offences of the nature therein indicated, interalia of having illicit intercourse, with a girl of previously chaste character, is not to be convicted upon the evidence of one witness unless such evidence is corroborated in some material particular, does not make it necessarily incumbent upon the Crown to adduce testimony of another or other witnesses to the acts charged. It is enough if there be other testimony to facts from which the tribunal trying the case, weighing them in connection with the testimony of the one witness, may reasonably conclude that the accused committed the act with which he is charged. New trial ordered after a case stated under s. 743 of the Criminal Code, and the propriety of so doing discussed.

The King v. Burr, 13 O.L.R. 485, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 103.

—Murder — Statements of deceased — Res gestae.]—(1) On a trial for nurder by shooting, evidence of statements made by the person shot immediately after the shooting and while under apprehension of further danger from the accused and requesting assistance and protection therefrom, is admissible as part of the res gester, even though the person accused of the offence was absent at the time when such statements were made. (2) Statements not coincident, in point of time, with the occurrence of the shooting, but uttered in the presence and hearing of the accused and under such circumstances that he might reasonably have been expected to have made some explanatory reply to remarks in reference to them, are admissible as evidence. (3) Where on the trial for murder the evidence was that the deceased had been killed by a gun-shot wound inflicted through the discharge of a gun in the hands of the accused and the defence was that the gun had been discharged accidentally, and no case of culpable homicide of less degree than murder was presented on the evidence, there could be no objection to a charge by the trial Judge to the jury that the offence could not be reduced by them from murder to manslaughter but that their verdict should be either for acquittal or one of guilty of murder.

Gilbert v. The King, 38 Can. S.C.R. 284, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 127.

-Deposition of deceased person-Inadmissible where prisoner was not represented by counsel.]-The Criminal Code section 687 provides for cases in which and the conditions under which depositions taken on preliminary examinations can be used on the trial in the event of the deponent's death, and supersedes the comomn law procedure as to this matter. Where the accused was not assisted by counsel when the deposition was taken:-Held, that it could not properly be received in evidence against him and as there was no other evidence nothing was to be gained by requiring another trial.

The King v. Snelgrove, 39 N.S.R. 400, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 189.

-Confession obtained by trick-Conversation with person who represents himself as having been sent by prisoner's counsel.]-(1) Statements made by a prisoner in a cell to a person whom he reasonably supposed to be an agent sent by his counsel to interview him regarding the defence are as much privileged as would be statements made to the counsel himself. (2) Where persons concealed themselves outside the cell in a position to overhear such statements in pursuance of a scheme previously planned, the interview should be treated as one with several persons who had fraudulently adopted the character of the counsel's representatives, and the cloak of privilege should be applied to what was heard by the listeners without, as well as the one within, the cell.

Rex v. Choney, 17 Man. R. 467, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 289.

-Confession - Interrogation by police -Formation of jury—Juror not on list.]— Evidence should not have been received on trial for murder that the prisoner was silent or answered "absolutely nothing" to the detective who held him under arrest and asked what he had to say to the statement of the widow of the person killed that it was he (the prisoner) who had murdered her husband. Therefore, the direction by the trial Judge to the jury that this evidence formed a link in the chain of proof of guilt which they had to weigh was irregular and illegal, and a verdict of guilty when such evidence was received and such direction given should be set aside. Where a person summoned by mistake as a juror, whose name was not on the jury panel and who had not the qualification required by law was sworn and placed on the jury for a criminal trial a verdict rendered by such jury was a nullity and was set aside.

Rex v. McGraw, Q.R. 16 K.B. 193, 12

Can. Cr. Cas. 253.

-Evidence in reply of previous criminal act-Unlawful intent.]-Upon an indictment of the defendants (P., a physician and surgeon, and T., a boarding-house keeper), for procuring an abortion, the case for the Crown was that the defendants had performed an unlawful operation upon a certain woman, for the purpose of procuring a miscarriage. Of this there was evidence to go to the jury. The defence was then entered upon, and the defendant, P., swore that the operation was performed for a lawful purpose, and without any criminal intent. He was cross-examined as to whether he had not, some few weeks previously. performed an operation upon a person then in Court. He denied having done so, and all knowledge of having treated her at all. This person and the man whom she had subsequently married were, against objection, called in reply, and gave evidence that P. had been employed to operate, and had operated, upon her so as to procure a miscarriage. It was contended that this evidence was admissible, as tending to rebut the evidence of P., or, in other words, to prove the unlawful intent:—Held, that the testimony of these witnesses was improperly admitted, there being no evidence of a system which would let in proof of a single prior criminal act as part of it. The King v. Bond, [1906] 2 K.B. 389, discussed. The conviction of the defendants was set aside, and a new trial was directed under

-Comment of Judge on failure of accused to testify. I-A statement made by a Judge. in charging the jury in a criminal case, that the evidence of a witness for the Crown is wholly uncontradicted is not a comment on the failure of a person charged to testify, within the meaning of the Canada Evidence

-Untrue statement made to prisoner-Subsequent voluntary statement by prisoner.]-The prisoner, W., was tried for attempting to murder J. P., whose wife, M. P., was tried at the same time for aiding and abetting in the attempt. Before the trial, and while W. was in custody, a police officer made an untrue statement to him, that M. P. had "done some talking" about the matter, upon which W. voluntarily made statements to the officer as to the key of J. P.'s house, and as to a club which he said he had used:-Held, that evidence was properly admitted as to the statements made by W. with regard to the key and the club. Subsequently to the making of the untrue statement by the police officer, conversations were overheard between W. and his father and between W. and M. P., in which the former admitted his guilt. Held, that evidence was properly admitted as to these conversations. Per Osler, J.A.:—Though the practice is not to be approved of, it is, generally speaking, no objection to the admissibility of a prisoner's confession that it was obtained by means of a trick or artifice practised upon him by the officer or other person to whom it was made.

II. TRIAL PROCEDURE.

-Criminal Code-Alberta and Saskatchewan—Indictable offence—Preliminary in-quiry—Preferring charge—Consent of At-torney-General—Powers of deputy—Lord's Day Act, s. 17.]—Section 873 A. of the Criminal Code (6 & 7 Edw. VII. c. 8) provides that, "In the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan it shall not be necessary to prefer any bill of indictment before a grand jury, but it shall be sufficient that the trial of any person charged with a criminal offence shall be commenced by a formal charge in writing setting forth as an indictment the offence with which he is charged. 2. Such charge may be preferred by the Attorney-General or an agent of the Attorney-General or by any person with the written consent of the Judge of the Court or of the Attorney-General or by order of the Court":-Held, that a preliminary inquiry before a magistrate is not necessary before a charge can be preferred under this section. Held, also, that the deputy of the Attorney-General for either said provinces has no authority to prefer a charge thereunder without the written consent of the Judge or of the Attorney-General or an order of the Court. Section 17 of the Lord's Day Act provides that "no action or prosecution for a violation of this Act shall be commenced without the leave of the Attorney-General for the province in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, nor after the expiration of sixty days from the time of the commission of the alleged offence." Held, that the deputy of the Attorney-General of a province has no authority to grant such leave.

R. v. Hannay, 2 W.L.R. 543 (B.C.).

-Criminal trial-Sanity or insanity of accused-Inquiry-When to be held.]-On a trial for murder, the Crown moved for an inquiry as to prisoner's sanity and the case was sent over to the next assizes. the trial Judge remarking: "There will be that preliminary trial first to determine. Of course, when that time arrives, there may not be any doubt about his sanity, or, on the other hand, there may not be any doubt about his insanity.", At the next assizes, there was a different Judge. The trial proceeded without the inquiry as to sanity being held as mentioned. It was then objected on behalf of accused that the inquiry should have been held before trial, and a reserved case requested for the opinion of the Court of Appeal. The objection was over-ruled, and a reserved case refused: -Held, on appeal, per Macdonald; C. J.A., that the Judge at the first assize merely directed counsel they should proceed at the second assize, and that the motion should be dismissed. Per Irving and Martin, JJ.A .:--That counsel for accused by proceeding to verdict at the second assize, had waived missible in the present case?-Held, on or abandoned any order that was made, or supposed to have been made, at the previous assize. Per Martin, J.A.:-The proper order to have made at the first assize was to have postponed the trial in the ordinary way, leaving it to the Judge at the next assize to decide, de novo, the issue as to the sanity or insanity of the accused at the time of such next issue.

Rex v. Watt, 15 B.C.R. 466 (C.A.).

-Mixing up trials-Evidence of previous similar offence.]-There were four questions reserved for the opinion of the Court: 1. Whether there was any corroboration of the evidence of the boy on whom the assault was committed, this corroboration being required on account of the fact that the boy was too young to take an oath? 2. Was it competent for the trial Judge to look to the whole case, including the evidence put in by the defence, for such corroboration? 3. and proceeded with another charge. After hearing the second charge, he dismissed the first and convicted upon the become. Was it competent for the Judge to adopt this procedure? 4. The trial Judge admitted evidence of a boy who testified to a previous similar offence committed by the accused with regard to himself (the boy). Was this evidence ad-the first point, per Macdonald, C.J.A., and Irving, J.A., that there was no corroboration. Per Martin and Galliher, JJ.A., upholding the trial Judge, that there was corroboration. Also that corroboration may be furnished by a child too young to take an oath. Held, on the second point (per curiam) that the whole case might be looked to for corroboration. Held, on the third point, per Macdonald, C.J.A., and Irving, J.A., that the matter involved in this question was simply one of procedure, and it was open to the Judge to deal with the cases in any order he chose; or at all events that the accused was not prejudiced by the manner in which the Judge heard and determined the charges. Per Martin and Galliher, JJ.A .: - That the mixing up of the two trials occasioned "a substantial wrong or miscarriage" under section 1,019. Held, on the fourth point (per curiam) that evidence of a prior offence was not admissible on the charge in the present case. The result was that the conviction was set aside and a new trial ordered.

Rex v. Iman Din, 15 B.C.R. 476.

-Comment on failure to call witness-Empanelling of jury.]-(1) If the trial Judge has no doubt that there was evidence of the offence to go to the jury, he should not reserve a case upon that point. (2) Where defendant's counsel during the trial states that he intends to call a witness to prove certain facts but does not call any witness on that point, the Crown counsel may properly comment on such failure in his address to the jury. (3) As to the Yukon Territory the provisions of the Yukon Juries' Ordinance passed under the authority of 3 Edw. VII. (Can.) c. 73, superseded sub-sections 2 and 3 of s. 667, Criminal Code, as to the procedure on impanelling a jury.

—Wifully obstructing a peace officer—Right of accused to be put on election.]—
(1) An accused party, charged before two justices of the peace with wilfully obstructing a peace officer in the execution of his duty, cannot be tried summarily by them without his consent, after being put to election as provided in s. 778 Cr. Code. A summary conviction of the accused by the justices, without his consent, is irregular and will be quashed on appeal. (2) The Court to which an appeal is taken by the accused frem a summary conviction so made, shall hear and determine de novo the charge upon which it was made and make such other conviction or order as it thinks just. (S. 754 Cr. Code.)

Von Koolberger v. Lapointe, 19 Que. K.B. 240, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 228.

—Second preliminary enquiry—Fresh information on same charge—Discharge on first and committal on second enquiry—Transmission of second depositions only.]
—(1) A person discharged by a justice on a preliminary enquiry for an indictable offence may be summoned again before the same or another justice on a fresh information for the same offence. (2) If the accused is committed for trial on the second preliminary enquiry, the depositions on the first, when he was discharged, need not be transmitted to the trial Court under Code s. 600.

The King v. Hannay, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 23.

—Insanity of prisoner—Invalidity of conviction—Mabeas corpus.]—No person can be rightly tried, sentenced or executed while insane. If there be sufficient reason to doubt whether an accused person is unable, on account of insanity, to conduct his defence, the question whether by reason of such insanity he is unfit to take his trial should first be tried.

Rex v. Leys, 16 O.W.R. 544.

—Indictment—Special leave of Attorney-General.]—I. The Attorney-General has the right to directly present to the grand jury an indictment against a person suspected of committing a criminal offence, without having recourse to a preliminary enquiry before a magistrate. 2. The fact that an accused person has been sent up to the assizes for trial pursuant to a preliminary inquiry, does not deprive the Attorney-General of the right to bring an indictment before the grand jury and to ignore altogether the proceedings already taken before the magistrate.

The King v. Houle, 12 Que. P.R. 4.

—Indictable offence—Place of trial.] — At common law and under the Criminal Code, a person accused of an indictable offence has a right to be tried in the Judicial District in which the offence was committed, unless an order of the Court is first obtained, under s. 884 of the Code, directing that the trial be held elsewhere. Ss. 557, 580, 584 (c), 873 A, and 884, of the Code, considered. The Queen v. Ponton, 2 Can. Crim. Cas. 192. The King v. O'Gorman, 12 Can. Crim. Cas. 230, and The King v. Roy, 14 Can. Crim. —Count applying to more than one offence.]—Upon an indictment containing a count "That M. at the parish of St. H. in the county of M. on divers days and times between March 31, A.D. 1909, and May 10, A.D. 1909, unlawfully did obstruct or interrupt, or cause to be interrupted or obstructed, the free use of the railway of the T. Ry. Co. by putting or placing or causing to be put or placed upon the said railway certain pieces of iron, iron bolts, horseshoes, rocks, and other matters or things," contrary to s. 518 of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1906, c. 146, evidence was given that obstructions were placed on the track upon several different days, among others April 14, 15, 17 and 30. Counsel for defendant requested that the prosecutor should elect which offence he proceeded upon, on the ground that each count must apply to a single transaction. The Judge refused to compel the election, and a case having been reserved:—Held, that the prosecutor could not be compelled to elect under the circumstances as the count in question charged only one offence, and the evidence of the different acts of obstruction was admissible under the count. Held, also, that the prosecution might treat the several acts of obstruction as successive cumulative acts, forming but one offence in law, and further, held, that at all events under the circumstances no substantial wrong or miscarriage had been occasioned and a new trial should be refused.

The King v. Michaud, 39 N.B.R. 418.

—Quashing of former indictment—New indictment preferred by Attorney-General.]—

1. Although an indictment may have been set aside by the Court for irregularities in procedure at the preliminary inquiry, nothing prevents the Attorney-General from presenting a new indictment which will be submitted to the grand jury without there having been any preliminary inquiry or any information whatever before a magistrate.

The King v. Robert (No. 2), 12 Que. P. R. 9.

-Commissions of assize-Abolition of-Charge not objected to by defence-Nondirection-Dying declaration.]-The abolition of commissions of assize is within the competence of the Provincial Legislature, the reading of the commission not being "procedure" within the meaning of s. 91, sub-s. (27) of the B.N.A. Act. In a trial for nurder, counsel for the Crown in opening the case, directed the attention of the jury to the blood-stained clothing of one of the prisoners. It developed later in the trial that the witness capable of proving the ownership of the clothing was the wife of the prisoner in question, and she was not examined. The subject was not brought to the attention of the jury in any other way, nor did the trial Judge refer to it in his summing up; nor was the charge objected to by either side: -Held, that the counsel for the Crown should not have in his opening indicated evidence of such gravity which he subsequently was unable to submit to the Court and jury, and that omission by the trial Judge to advise the jury to ignore the remarks of counsel was non-direction, causing a substantial wrong within the meaning of s. 1019 of the Code, so as to entitle the accused to a new trial. The injured woman said to another Indian woman, "Fellowes hurt me and make me die," and to her father she said, "I am going to die, hurry up and get the priest"; "Sure, I am going to die, hurry up and get the priest for me." Held, that this was sufficient indication of apprehension of imminent death and hopelessness of recovery to be admitted in evidence as a dying declaration. A "reply" of a Crown counsel under s. 944 is not restricted to answering matters dealt with by the prisoner's counsel. Where a witness, who is being examined through an interpreter, voluntarily makes a statement incriminating the accused, but which statement is included in other evidence subsequently admitted, the accused is not necessarily prejudiced thereby. Held, on the facts that the objections taken to the interpreter and his competency were not well founded.

Rex v. Walker, 15 B.C.R. 100, 13 W.L.R. 47, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 77.

-Several justices hearing same charge-Jurisdiction.]-An information for assault was laid before S., justice of the peace for A. county. After summons issued an order nisi of prohibition was served on him at the instance of the defendant and no further proceedings were taken before him. B., another justice for the county, having been requested by S. to hear the charge, took another information and issued a summons. On the return of the summons the defendant's attorney who was clerk of the peace advised B. that he had no jurisdiction, and B. thereupon refused to proceed. An information was then laid before R., another justice of the peace for A. county who was requested by S. to act after B. had declined to proceed. An order nisi of prohibition having been granted against R.: -Held, that the three justices had concurrent jurisdiction, and as S. and B. were not bona fide proceeding in the matter, there was no ground for interfering with R.

Ex parte Peck (No. 2), 39 N.B.R. 274. 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 49.

—Magistrate's conviction under repealed statute—Attempt to sustain under different statute.]—The defendant was prosecuted before a police magistrate for a breach of the provisions of s. 415 of the Railway Act of Canada, R.S.C. 1906, c. 37, and on the evidence was found guilty of the offence as charged. No amendment was asked for, and a conviction was recorded on the charge as laid. Subsequently the magistrate discovered that s. 415 had been repealed, and he thereupon reserved for the opinion of the Court of Appeal the question whether the conviction should be allowed to stand under s. 283 of the Criminal Code: -Held, that the conviction could not be sustained under a different statute.

Rex v. Corrigan, 20 O.L.R. 99, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 310.

-Charge preferred before Supreme Court by Deputy Attorney-General—No preliminary hearing.]—After the conviction of the accused on a charge preferred against him by the agent of the Attorney-General, the Peputy Attorney-General, who appeared in person, without obtaining the leave of the Judge or a direction from the Attorney-General, no preliminary hearing having been held, preferred a further charge signed by himself against the accused, on which, after trial, he was convicted. Objection having been taken to the charge on the ground that the Deputy Attorney-General had no authority to prefer such charge without leave of the Judge or direction of the Attorney-General, and on the ground that no preliminary hearing had been held, a case was stated by the presiding Judge to the Court en banc:—Held (Johnstone, J., dissenting), that the Deputy Attorney-General is not an agent of the Attorney-General within the meaning of the term as used in the Criminal Code, and is not, therefore, authorized to prefer a charge as agent of the Attorney-General. 2. That while by the General Interpretation Act (Dom.) it is provided that words directing or empowering any minister to do any act or thing includes the lawful deputy of such minister, such provision is controlled by the special interpretation sections of the Criminal Code, and as the deputy is not referred to therein, it must be held that the deputy of the Attorney-General is not by reason of his office authorized to prefer a charge under the provisions of s. 873a of the Criminal Code. 3. The Deputy Attorney-General, not being an agent of the Attorney-General under the provisions of s. 873a of the Code authorized to prefer a charge, the conviction of the accused must be quashed, not having been preferred with the leave or by the order of the Court.

The King v. Duff (No. 2), 2 Sask. R. 388. 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 454.

Felony-Polling jury-Jury separating-Refreshments for jury.]—In a prosecution for felony, it is discretionary with the trial Judge to permit or refuse to allow the jury to be polled. Held, the prisoner being convicted of felony, that the circumstances—that two of the jurors had, during the trial, but before the Judge's charge, been allowed to separate for a short time from the other jurors in the custody of one of the con-stables, who had been placed in charge of the jury, and during such separation to hold a short conversation, not referring to the cause, with a stranger to the proceedings, and to partake, at their own expense, of intoxicating liquor, insufficient in quantity to cause intoxication-did not constitute sufficient ground for discharging the prisoner, or for a new trial.

Regina v. McClung, 1 Terr. L.R. 379.

-Grand jury-Indorsing names of witnesses on indictment.]-Motion to quash an indictment at assize. Amongst the witnesses who gave evidence before the grand jury were two who had been summoned by the grand jury on its own motion, and whose names were not indorsed on the bill of indictment:—Held, that the provisions of s. 645 of the Criminal Code, requiring the names of all witnesses examined by the grand jury to be indorsed on the bill of indictment, are directory only, and an omission so to indorse does not invalidate the indictment.

The King v. Holmes, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 402.

-Contradicting one's own witness-Other relevant testimony admissible although inconsistent-Witness hostile or adverse-Refreshing the memory.]—(1) The party on whose behalf a witness is called is not debarred by Code s. 699 from proving by other witnesses any relevant facts inconsistent with or contradictory of such witness's testimony without a ruling that the witness is hostile to the party calling him. (2) The witness's deposition at the preliminary enquiry may be shown to him on his examination in chief at the trial for the purpose of refreshing his memory, but neither the examining counsel nor the witness may read the deposition aloud. (3) On the witness silently reading his previous deposition, a question, which had been put to the witness before he saw the deposition, and to which he had given an unexpected answer, may be re-put; and only in case the witness, after his memory has been so refreshed, persists in the same unexpected answer, can the question be repeated to him in a leading form from the depositions. (4) The opposite party is entitled to crossexamine not only upon the examination in chief but upon the previous depositions which had been so shown to the witness for the purpose of refreshing his memory. The King v. Laurin (No. 5), 6 Can. Cr.

Cas. 13 (Wurtele, J.).

-Private prosecutor-Right to conduct proceedings.]-A private prosecutor is no party to a criminal prosecution, and cannot insist that he or his counsel shall aid in the conduct thereof.

Rex v. Gilmore, 6 O.L.R. 286, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 219.

-Trial - Cross-examination-Right to reexamine.]-The right to re-examine follows necessarily upon cross-examination, even as to the matter elicited during the latter which is both inadmissible and volunteered. Such matters should be expunged at the instance of the cross-examiner if it be desired to avoid re-examination.

Rex v. Noel, 6 O.L.R. 385 (C.A.), 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 309.

-Swearing of grand jury-Evidence submitted to grand jury-Initialling, by foreman, of names of witnesses.]-(1) It is essential that, at the time the foreman of the grand jury is sworn, the other jurors be present and hear the oath taken by their foreman. And, therefore, where it appeared that none of the other jurors were in the box at the time their foreman was sworn, that there was no certainty that the oath taken by him was heard by them, that the other jurors were only sworn, afterwards, to observe the same oath which their foreman had taken, and that objection was duly made by motion to quash, before the arraignment of the defendant, the indictment found by the grand jury, was held to be null and void. (2) The omission by the foreman to initial the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury, as required by law, is a fatal defect, and has the effect of annulling the indictment. (3) The submission of a record to the grand jury, in order that they may examine certain exhibits, and verify certain statements made by witnesses examined before them, is not a fatal irregularity, where it is proved that the decision of the grand jury was arrived at without reference to the depositions contained in such record. (4) The objections to the indictment above mentioned are proper grounds for a reversed

--Grand jury--Summoning. J—In the Province of British Columbia it is imperative that thirteen jurors should be summoned for service on the grand jury, although seven of those appearing are sufficient to constitute a grand jury; and where the sheriff summoned only twelve and omitted to summon the thirteenth because he was informed that the latter had become demented, seven of them are not competent to find an indictment.

—Trial by jury in the Territories—Assault, occasioning actual bodily harm—N. W. T. Act, s. 66.]—A person charged with assault occasioning actual bodily harm contrary to s. 262 of the Criminal Code is not entitled, under s. 67 of the North-West Territories Act, to be tried with the intervention of a jury. Section 66 extends to all minor offences included in the several offences specifically enumerated therein.

-Misapprehension of jurors-Statements by jurors after verdict.]-It is no ground for stating a reserved case, after a trial and conviction, that two of the jurors who joined in the verdict of guilty did so under a misapprehension; it is contrary to principle to allow the statements of jurors, even under oath, to be used for the purpose of an application for a reserved case.

Rex v. Mullen, 5 O.L.R. 373, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 363.

—Grand jury—Indorsing names of witnesses on indictment—Cr. Code, s. 645.]—The provisions of section 645 of the Criminal Code requiring the names of all witnesses examined by the grand jury to be indorsed on the bill of indictment are directory only and an omission so to indorse does not invalidate the indictment. —Grand jury—Constitution of—Cr. Code, s. 656.]—A sheriff when about to summon, pursuant to s. 48 of the Jurors' Act, one of the jurors drafted to serve on a grand jury, ascertained that the juror was demented and did not summon him:—Held, that the grand jury was not legally constituted and that an indictment found by the jurors who had been summoned must be quashed. A motion to quash such an indictment is not an objection to the constitution of the grand jury within the meaning of s. 656 of the Criminal Code.

Rex v. Hayes, 9 B.C.R. 574, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 453.

—Wounding and assault—Limit of tweive peremptory challenges.]—On an indictment for unlawful wounding, in which is included a separate count for assault, the accused is not entitled to claim the total number of peremptory challenges of jurors as he would have if the charges were contained in separate indictments, but is limited to the largest number allowed in respect of any single count.

R.S.C. 1886, c. 50, s. 67 (section substituted by 54-55 Vict. 1891, c. 22, s. 9, provides that: "When the person is charged with any other criminal offence the same shall be tried, heard and determined by the Judge with the intervention of a jury of six; but in any such case the accused may, with his own consent, be tried by a Judge in a summary way, and without the intervention of a jury. So held, where the event of the accused electing to be tried by a Judge alone, the Judge is not bound so to try the case, but may insist upon the intervention of a jury. 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 457. -Remarks by trial Judge during trial.]-Held (affirming the judgment of Wurtele, J.), 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 365, 12 Que. K.B. 368:-1. A verdict cannot be impeached in consequence of an observation made by the Judge presiding at the trial, unless such observation was calculated to influence the jury agains't the defendant; and, consequently, the fact that the presiding Judge remarked to the defendant's counsel while the jury was being sworn, "if you continue to challenge every man who reads the newspapers, we will have the most ignorant jurors selected for the trial of this cause," is not a proper ground for granting leave to appeal to the Court of King's Bench, appeal side, such remark having no tendency to influence the jury against the defendant, and being without importance. 2. On a trial for conspiracy to defraud a railway company, by frauduler tly obtaining information of the secret audits about to be made and furnishing the same to conductors of cars to enable them to be prepared for the audits, proof that information of this nature might be given by one conductor to another for purposes other than to defraud the company, was properly excluded, because such evidence would be merely hypothetical, and could not disprove the object of the conspiracy, or throw any doubt on the evidence which had been adduced to show the object which the parties had in view. 3. An observation by the Judge presiding at the trial of a criminal case, in his charge to the jury, to the effect that "about forty or fifty witnesses had been examined for the purpose of establishing the defendant's good character, and that it was very strange that it should take forty or fifty witnesses to establish it," is not an irregularity which can constitute a ground for granting leave to appeal, the presiding Judge having the right to express his opinion of the evidence, which, however may or may not be accepted by the pary. The essential point is that the whole evidence be submitted to the jury who deeide finally as to the innocence or guilt of the accused. 4. An appeal from the verdict to the Court of King's Bench sitting in appeal lies only upon questions of law arising either on the trial or on any of the proceedings preliminary, subsequent, or incidental thereto, or arising out of the direction of the Judge. It follows that in cases such as the following, the right of appeal does not exist, viz., where it is alleged that one of the jurors was prejudiced against the prisoner; where it is alleged that the verdict was the result of an improper arrangement entered into between the jurors, these being questions of fact; or where it appears that no application was made to the trial Judge to reserve the question for the opinion of the Court of Appeal.

R. v. Blackley, 13 Que. K.B. 472, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 405.

-Election of prisoner to be tried summarily -Amendment - Further election of prisoner.]-A prisoner was indicted before a county Judge charged under s. 181 of the Criminal Code with having on the 9th January, 1905, seduced a girl of or above the age of 14 and under that of 16 of, as alleged, previously chaste character, upon which he elected, under s. 767 of the Code, to be tried summarily, but on the evidence disclosing a connection with her six days previously at another place, the charge was amended by setting up the offence as having been committed on such prior date, and without giving the prisoner the right of electing whether or not be would be tried summarily on such amended charge, he was tried thereon and convicted:-Held, that the conviction could not be supported, for the offence could only be committed once, namely, on the first occasion on which the connection took place, so that the date was material to the charge, and while an amendment could be made substituting the prior date, which was in effect preferring a new charge based in a different transaction, the prisoner should have been given the opportunity of electing under s. 767 how he would be tried thereon.

Rex v. Lacelle, 11 O.L.R. 74 (C.A.), 10 Can, Cr. Cas. 229.

—Summary trial—Conviction for theft—Defect in form—Waiver.]—Defendant was charged before the stipendiary magistrate for the Otty of Halifax with the thett of a number of amalgam plates and copper plates with gold amalgam thereon of the value of $200 or thereabouts, and, the charge having been stated to him in open Court and he having pleaded guilty, he was thereupon convicted of the offence charged and sentenced to three years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. An order in the nature of a habeas corpus for defendant's discharge was applied for, on the ground that the magistrate could not proceed with the trial without the preliminary examination required under section 789 of the Code and that the requirements of section 786 were not complied with:-Held (Weatherbe, C. J., dissenting), that the stipendiary magistrate had power to proceed with the trial under section 785 of the Code, as amended by Acts of 1900, c. 46, without entering upon the preliminary examination under section 789. Also, that the procedure adopted by the magistrate was sufficiently in accordance with the requirements of the statute to be considered as defective in form only, and, there being a good convic-tion and one alleging that defendant had been convicted, the provisions of section 800 applied. Also, the charge having been read to defendant in the terms of the information, which was in writing, and defendant having pleaded guilty, it was not competent for him thereafter to say that he was not aware of the nature and particulars of the charge.

Rex v. McLeod, 39 N.S.R. 108.

—Summary hearing—Omission of magistrate to reduce evidence to writing.]—The omission of the magistrate to have the evidence taken in writing at the trial of a charge under the summary convictions clauses us fatal to the conviction clauses is fatal to the conviction.

R. v. McGregor, 11 B.C.R. 350 (Hunter, C.J.), 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 313.

—Summary trial—Election by accused—Preliminary question.]—The omission by the magistrate to hold the preliminary inquiry as provided in section 879 of the Code, to enable him to decide whether or not the case should be disposed of summarily, invalidates the conviction. Held, further, that the omission to inform the accused as to the probable time when the first Court of competent jurisdiction would sit, was also fatal.

Rex v. Williams, 11 B.C.R. 351 (Hunter, C.J.), 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 330.

—Preliminary enquiry — Commitment on other charges — Indictment — Attempt to murder—Amendment of indictment.]—(1) The magistrate who holds the preliminary investigation on a charge preferred against an accused person, may commit him on any other one or more charges disclosed by the evidence. (2) On the trial of a person accused of attempt to murder by shooting, evidence that he had burglar's tools in his possession at the time is admissible, as tending to prove criminal intent. (3) An indictment that "A.B. attempted to kill and murder C.D." sufficiently discloses an indictable offence, and the Court has the power to allow it to be amended so as to read that "A.B. with intent to commit murder, shot at C.D." (4) It is lawful for the Judge, in charging the jury in a trial for an attempt to murder, to instruct them that they may draw an inference as to the prisoner's intent to kill from the circumstances of his being a stranger loitering in a street or park, between four and five o'clock in the morning, with a loaded revolver and burglar's tools in his possession.

The King v. Mooney, 15 Que. K.B. 57, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 333.

-False statutory declaration-No allegation of intention to mislead-Amendment of charge-Withdrawal of election to be tried by jury-Preliminary inquiry on several charges against different defendants.]

—The defendant was charged for that in a certain statutory declaration, he did falsely, wilfully and corruptly declare to the truth of certain facts, setting them out. Upon objection before plea the charge was amended on the application of the Crown by adding an allegation that the defendant was duly authorized to make the declara-tion, but there was no allegation that it had been made with intent to mislead:-Held, that no allegation of intention to mislead was necessary; that the amendment was properly allowed, and that the charge was sufficient in point of form. Held, further, that section 26 of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893, authorized the making as well as the taking of the declaration. The defendant pleaded to the charge before amendment and elected to be tried by a Judge with the intervention of a jury. Upon being called upon to plead to the charge as amended he sought to alter his election and to be tried by the Judge alone. This was refused. Held, that the refusal was justified. The declaration in question had been made by four parties commencing, "We," and setting out the names of the declarants, but there was no statement that it was made jointly and severally. Held, that, the defendant having signed it, there was no reason why he should not be taken to have made it ot his own personal knowledge. The evidence at the preliminary investigation was taken on an information against the defendant at the same time as upon separate informations against two of his co-declarants. Held, that the defendant was properly charged upon such evidence. The defendant at the preliminary investigation, after being cautioned, requested that he should be sworn, and made his statement upon oath. Held, that such statement was properly receivable against him at the trial. Regina v. Skelton, 3 Terr. L.R. 58, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 467.

-Intermixing of trials by magistrate— Same evidence in both cases except as to testimony of accused — First charge sustained and second dismissed.]-(1) On the summary trial of concurrent charges of assault and pointing a fire-arm, the magistrate after hearing the assualt case re-served judgment to take up the second charge, but no further evidence then being adduced except the examination of the defendant, the magistrate dismissed the second charge and entered a conviction upon the charge of assault. There is no presumption under such circumstances that the intermixing of the trials has prejudiced the accused, and the conviction should be sustained unless such prejudice is clearly shown. (2) On obtaining the consent of the accused to a summary trial, under Rev. Cr. Code, s. 778, and stating to him his option of jury trial, it is not essential that the date of the sittings of the jury Court should be stated if the name of the latter Court and the city where the trial would take place are both specified and the accused told that he may be sent for trial at its "next ensuing sitting."

The King v. Reid, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 352.

—Hard labour — Sentence.]—A summary conviction by the recorder of Montreal with imprisonment with hard labour under an Act authorizing a penalty of imprisonment is a nullity and will be quashed on certiorari by the Superior Court.

Gévry v. Weir, Q.R. 30 S.C. 95 (Sup. Ct.).

—Depositions not in writing — Plea of guilty.]—(1) When a prisoner has pleaded guilty, in a summary trial, the depositions need not be in writing. (2) The discharge of a prisoner can only be obtained by an application for a writ of habeas corpus, and not by a certiorari.

King (Wm.) v. Weir (No. 2), 8 Que. P.R.

—Evidence not taken down in writing— Consent of the accused.]—In a trial before the Recorder's Court, the accused may validly waive the taking down of evidence in writing, and a summary conviction pronounced after such trial will not be quashed on certiorari on the ground that such consent would be illegal.

King (Wm.) v. Weir, 8 Que. P.R. 400.

—Speedy trial—Adding counts to charge.]

—When an accused person elects to take his trial before a judge without a jury on the charge upon which he was committed or to answer which he was bound over to take his trial under section 601 of the Criminal Code, 1892, leave should not be granted, under section 773 of the Code, for the addition to the charge of new or other charges for offences substantially different, unless the accused elect to be tried on such other charges also by a Judge without a jury. Rex v. Douglas, 16 Man. R. 345, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 120.

—Trial—Motion to discharge jury—Evidence given ruled to be inadmissible.]—Although a witness at a trial before a jury volunteers evidence which the trial Judge has already ruled to be inadmissible and which might have weight with the jury in arriving at a verdict, yet the Judge should not for that reason imendiately discharge the jury and impanel a new jury to try the issue.

Rex v. Grobb, 17 Man. R. 191, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 92.

—Summary trial—Jurisdiction of magistrate — Offence committed in another county.]—If a person is brought before a justice of the peace charged with an offence committed within the Province, but out of the limits of the jurisdiction of such justice the latter, in his discretion, may either order the accused to be taken before some justice having jurisdiction in the place where the offence was committed, Cr. Code [1892] s. 557; Cr. C. [1906] s. 665, or may proceed as if it had been committed within his own jurisdiction. S. was brought before the stipendiary magistrate of the City of Halifax charged with having committed burglary in Sydney, C.B.:—Held, that the stipendiary magistrate could, with the consent of the accused, try him summarily under Cr. —Change of venue.]—The Court, in dealing with applications for change of the place of trial, is bound to act with caution, particularly, in ordering the change from the place in which the offence was committed, and to consider expediency to the ends of justice, nor is its power exhausted when once exercised. Hence, after a first order has been made to have a trial take place in another district than that in which it is charged the offence has been committed, the Court will make a further order that it be held in the latter district, on proof that the circumstances which necessitated the first order, have disappeared.

—Evidence at trial—Comment thereon in Judge's charge.]—A Judge presiding at a criminal trial may, in his charge to the jury, state his own opinions as to what inferences of fact may be drawn from the testimony, while leaving it to the jury to believe or disbelieve any portion of the evidence and to draw their own inferences therefrom.

The King v. Swyryda, 15 Can. Cr. Cas.

-Conspiracy-Offence committed in one county and tried in another-Venue.]-On an information laid in the county of York, the accused were charged with numerous offences against the election law alleged to have been committed in the "county of York, and in the county of Middlesex, and at other places in the province unknown.' None of them resided, nor were found, nor apprehended in the county of York, but they were brought into that county solely by process issued under the information. Before the sitting of the Assize Court in the county of York the accused surrendered to the sheriff of the county, and elected to be tried before the County Court Judge. The grand jury returned a true bill against them. The offence, however, found to be established, and on which they were convicted, was a conspiracy wholly entered into and wholly carried out in the county of Middlesex, with no overt acts outside that county:-Held, on a case reserved, that there was no jurisdiction to try the case in the county of York, and that the conviction should be quashed notwithstanding s. 577 of the Criminal Code.

—Selling obscene pictures—Place of offence —Evidence — Summary trial — Reducing charge to writing — Examination of documents before trial.]—The defendant was summarily tried and convicted by one of the police magistrates for the city of Toronto upon a charge laid under s. 207 (a) of the Criminal Code. The information was that he "at the city of Toronto did sell a quantity of obscene books, printed matter, pictures and photographs tending to corrupt morals." Being in prison pursuant to the conviction, an application was made for his discharge on the return of writs of habeas corpus and certiorari in aid. The evidence before the magistrate was given by police detectives, who said that they found the articles produced upon the person of the defendant and in a valise in his room, that the defendant admitted that the valise was his, and said he had sold all these things for $200—"he did not say he had sold them here," i.e., in the city of Toronto, "but said he was here and expected to get the money here." No evidence was offered for the defence:—Held, that there was evidence that the sale took place in Canada. (2) It was urged that before evidence of a confession can be admitted, the prosecution must prove affirmatively that the confession was free and voluntary. Held, assuming the rule to be as stated and to be applicable upon such a motion, that there was nothing to show that all the facts necessary to make the evidence admissible were not properly proved; the written record need not contain the allegations of a witness which will render his evidence admissible. (3) A confession alone is sufficient to justify a conviction. (4) Upon the evidence, s. 778 (3) of the Criminal Code, requiring the charge to be reduced to writing and read over to the accused, after his consent to be summarily tried, was complied with; there is no reason why the charge should not be prepared in advance in anticipation of the accused's election; and the fact that the charge is in the form of an information is immaterial. (5) It was objected that, before the actual trial of the case, the magistrate had looked at the books and pictures found in the defendant's possession, and had thereby necessarily become prejudiced against the defendant. Held, that, as the magistrate was at liberty to look at the productions before issuing a summons or warrant, in order to form his opinion as to whether or not a case was made out, he was entitled to do so after the defendant was in custody, or at any time. (6) The information under which the defendant was convicted omitted to state that he "knowingly" did the act charged, which under the statute is a material element in the offence, and the same omission was made in the conviction and in the warrant of commitment. Held, that, though the magistrate had amended the conviction, before return to the certiorari, by inserting the word "knowingly," and, though the defect in the information was immaterial, the omission of the word "knowingly" in the warrant was a fatal objection to its validity, which was not cured as being an "irregularity, informality, or insuffi-ciency," within the meaning of s. 1124 of the Code. (7) Although, however, the original warrant was clearly bad, the Court or Judge had power under s. 1120 of the Code to "make an order for the further deten-tion of the person accused," and to direct the issue of a new warrant in accordance with the conviction as amended by the magistrate. Rex v. Morgan (1901), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 63, 272, 2 O.L.R. 413, 3 O.L.R. 356, followed. (8) A conviction made by a magistrate, though under the summary trial provisions of the Criminal Code, is not in the same position as a conviction made by the sessions, and may be amended by the magistrate before return to a certiorari.

-- Conviction of foreigner - Interpreter-Capacity.]-Upon a motion to discharge a prisoner, upon the return of a writ of habeas corpus, the proceedings should not be conducted as upon an appeal from the magistrate's finding; the most that can be done is to see if there is evidence upon which the magistrate could pass and find as he did. All questions as to admissibility of evidence, method of conducting examinations, etc., are in the power of the trial tribunal; and such questions cannot be raised upon a motion to discharge. In this case the return was good upon its face, showing a warrant of commitment, which recited the conviction of the defendant for unlawfully committing an act of indecency in a public place; and there was ample evidence to support the conviction; but the defendant attempted to show by affidavits that, not understanding English, he did not know that he was on trial, and did not understand the evidence given. This was contradicted by one who was sworn as an interpreter at the trial, and by a policeman:-Held, that the capacity of the interpreter and all matters connected with the interpretation of the evidence were questions for the magistrate, and his finding could not be attacked in this way. Semble, that there is no inherent right in any foreigner that the proceedings taken in the Courts of this province shall be made wholly intelligible to him, even though he should be charged with crime. Cases in which a contrary doctrine is laid down turn upon some statutory or constitutional provision.

—Summary trial — Stipendiary magistrate for county acting in absence of and on his request.]—Even though a stipendiary magistrate for a county may have conferred upon him by a provincial statute the powers of a police or stipendiary magistrate for a city or incorporated town, nevertheless he is not a police or stipendiary magistrate for the purpose of trying offences summarily under s. 777 of the Criminal Code. It is desirable that there should be uniformity of decisions in all the Courts of Canada on Federal legislation.

III. PROCEEDINGS IN APPEAL.

-Summary convictions-Appeal-Enforcing conviction after affirmance-Commitment-

Amendment.]-(1) The proviso in s. 3, c. 148, R.S.C. 1906, that no time during which a party convicted is out on bail shall te reckoned as part of the term of imprisonment to which he is sentenced, applies to cases of release on bail in appeal, under s. 750c Cr. Code. Hence, when the appealing convict has been out on bail and the conviction has been affirmed, it may be enforced by the appellate Court, although, when originally made, it contained no express direction that it should be suspended by an appeal, s. 1023 Cr. C. (2) A commitment for a time in excess of that ordered in the conviction, is not bad on that ground, which is merely an irregularity that may be cured by amendment under ss. 1121 and 1124 Cr. C. (3) When a conviction is affirmed and the appellate Court further condemns the convict to pay the costs of appeal, a commitment signed by the clerk of the Court commanding the gaoler to detain the convict during the period ordered in the conviction, and, further, until he shall have paid the costs of appeal, of the distress, of the commitment and of the conveyance to gaol, is valid. (4) A commitment for the period ordered in the conviction and, further, until certain costs are paid, is wrong as to the latter part, in not specifying the period of detention in default of payment. This, however, is not a ground for quashing the commitment, but an irregularity that may be cured by amendment under ss. 1121 and 1124 Cr. C.

The King v. Hamlink, 2 O.W.N. 186.

-Reserved case after sentence-Admitting convict to bail pending appeal.]-1. On reserving a case by way of appeal after conviction, the trial Judge has power to postpone sentence and admit the accused to bail meanwhile or after sentencing the accused to stay the execution of the sentence pending the determination of the reserved case upon bail being given. 2. Where the trial Judge has ordered bail and has fixed the amount thereof and the method of testing the sufficiency of the sureties, the taking of the recognizance is a ministerial act which may be delegated to justices of the peace. 3. When the recognizance of bail is taken by justices under the Judge's order, the justices become, for the purpose of such recognizance, temporary officers of the Court in which the order was made, and the recognizance is subject to estreat in such Court. 4. The power to respite the execution of the sentence pronounced until the appeal shall have been decided, is not restricted to cases reserved during the trial or in which no part of the sentence has been carried out, but may be exercised on granting a reserved case, after a substantial portion of the imprisonment ordered has been served. 5. A recognizance of bail may likewise be validly taken, on granting a reserved case after the trial and during the currency of the term of imprisonment conditioned for the surrender of the convict forthwith on the determination of the reserved case, if the Court of Appeal should either affirm the conviction or set it aside and order a new trial.

—Appeal from summary conviction—Jurisdiction of County Court Judge.]—A County Court Judge, who has allowed an appeal from a summary conviction under a statutory provision similar to Code s. 883 and has quashed the conviction as invalid on its face without hearing further evidence and trying the case de novo, cannot be compelled by mandamus to re-open the appeal

on showing cause against an order nisi to quash an order dismissing an appeal from a conviction under the Criminal Code granted under the rule of Court of Michaelmas term, 1899, although the rule requires the ground to be stated in the order. A recognizance entered into under s. 880 (c) of the Code is bad if the word "personally" is omitted from the condition to appear and try the appeal and abide the judgment of the Court thereupon. And the Appellate Court, on this objection being raised to the recognizance, has jurisdiction to dismiss the appeal with costs.

-Defence of insanity-Evidence in support -Acquittal - Case reserved. 1-Defendant was indicted for theft under s. 305 (a) of the Criminal Code. The act of theft was admitted, but it was contended that there was evidence of insanity at the time the act was committed. The trial Judge charged the jury that there was no such evidence, and that the case did not come within s. 736 of the Code. The jury having found the prisoner not guilty, two questions were reserved for the opinion of the Court:-(1) Whether there was evidence of insanity as required by s. 736, and (2) If not, whether there should be a new trial. The Court was moved to quash the case reserved on the ground that where there had been an acquittal the Crown could not have a case reserved or an appeal:-Held. that the motion must be dismissed, and the reserved case proceeded with, to as-certain whether there was evidence of insanity sufficient in law for submission to the jury.

—No reserved case on weight of evidence—Code, s. 736.]—The prisoner was indicted for theft and was acquitted on the ground of insanity:—Held, that the trial Judge cannot reserve a case depending upon the weight of evidence, and that the question reserved, whether there was evidence of insanity as required by s. 736 of the Code was within the principle decided. Also, that the question of the weight of evidence is entirely for the jury, and that the provision for granting a new trial, where the verdict is against the weight of evidence, cannot be invoked on the part of the Crown. Rex v. Phinney (No. 2), 36 N.S.R. 288, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 280.

-Alibi — Proof of — Misdirection — New trial.]—Where the defence to a criminal charge is an alibi, it is misdirection to tell the jury that the onus is on the prisoner to prove it to their entire satisfaction, and to show beyond all question or reason that he could not have been present at the commission of the crime.

Rex v. Tucker, 10 O.L.R. 506 (MacMahon, J.), 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 217.

-Conviction-Substantial wrong or miscarriage-Criminal Code, s. 746 (f).]-Upon a trial for perjury alleged to have been committed at a previous trial for a criminal offence, the fact of the previous trial must be proved by the production of the indictment and the formal record, or of a certificate under s. 691 of the Criminal Code; the evidence of the clerk of the Court, accompanied by the production of his minutes of the trial, and the evidence of the Court stenographer who took down the evidence at the trial, are not proof of the indictment and trial. Where there is no proper evidence of some fact essential to the proof of the crime charged and a conviction takes place, there is a substantial wrong or miscarriage at the trial, and s. 746 (f) of the Code cannot be applied to uphold it. Conviction by the chairman of the General Sessions of the peace for the county of Brant set aside, and a new trial ordered.

Rex v. Drummond, 10 O.L.R. 546, C.A. 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 340.

—Appeal—New trial—Perverse verdict.]—On a charge of theft a new trial was refused although the verdict was contrary to the view of the trial Judge, the evidence being conflicting, but the Court being of opinion that the verdict of guilty was one which reasonable men could properly find. In deciding the question of the reasonableness of the verdict of the opinion of the trial Judge is entitled to and ought to receive great weight; but it is not conclusive.

The Queen v. Brewster (No. 2), 2 Terr. L.R. 377, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 34. -Grand jury constitution of-Misdirection -Murder and manslaughter - Benefit of doubt-Motion for new trial-Jurisdiction.] —1. Where eleven grand jurors answered their names when the roll was first called, but ten only were impanelled and sworn (one having failed to answer on the second calling), the grand jury was properly formed and the accused, having suffered no prejudice thereby, cannot, on that ground, move for the rejection of the true bill found against him. 2. Where the Judge in a trial for murder concludes his charge thus: "the verdict of the jury is generally resumed in a few words, in the solemn words of guilty or not guilty," it is not to be inferred that such is a direction to bring in but one of the two verdicts of guilty or not guilty of murder, if in other parts of his charge he has sufficiently pointed out the distinction between murder and manslaughter, and instructed them as to their duty to find whether the prisoner acted with or without intent to kill. 3. Where the Judge considers that no doubt exists, he is not obliged to instruct the jury that the prisoner is in-titled to any doubt they may entertain, such a course being more likely to impede than to assist them in the discharge of their duty. 4. A motion for a new trial can only be made before the Court of Appeal, upon leave therefore granted by the Court before which the trial has taken

Rex v. Fouquet, 14 Que. K.B. 87, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 255.

—Appeal—Leave—Practice.]—Leave to appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeal should not be lightly granted, and the representative of the Crown should be served with a notice of motion setting out the grounds of appeal. Quere, whether the ruling of a Judge as to the admissibility of a confession is open to review by the Court of Criminal Appeal?

Rex v. Lai Ping, 11 B.C.R. 102, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 467.

—Crown case reserved—Questions of law.]
—The Court of King's Bench (Que.) sitting as a Court for the hearing of cases reserved by criminal Courts, has jurisdiction only to pronounce upon a question of law, under facts proved, and mentioned in the reserved case. Consequently, where the question stated in the reserved case was whether the use of a particular apparatus constituted a mixed game of chance and skill, or only a game of skill, and did not submit the question whether, under facts proved, and stated in the reserved case, the game was one which came within the prohibition of the Criminal Code, the Court declared that it was without jurisdiction in the matter.

The King v. Fortier, 13 Que. K.B. 308, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 417.

-Appeal from refusal to reserve case - Substantial wrong or miscarriage-Code s.

The King v. McLean, 39 N.S.R. 147.

—Stated case — Application — Time.]— S. 900 of the Criminal Code is now available for the review of all summary convictions under Ontario law, by virtue of the amendment to R.S.O. 1897, c. 90, by 1 Edw. VII. c. 13, s. 2 (O.). An application to a magistrate to state a case in regard to a prosecution under an Ontario statute need not be made within the time limited by R.S.O. 1897, c. 90, s. 9, which applies only to appeals to the general sessions, but should be made within a reasonable time, no time being limited by s. 900, and no rules having been made under s. 533 of the Code.

Rex v. Ferguson, 12 O.L.R. 411 (Boyd, C.), 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 277.

—New trial—Testimony of accused—Appreciation by jury — Criminal Code, s. 747.]—Leave to apply to the Court of Appeal for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence (Orim. Code, s. 747) cannot be granted unless there has been a denial of justice. (2) This defect cannot be attributed to the verdict by reason of the jury not considering the evidence of the accused as to facts tending to his acquittal in rendering it. The jury, being sole judge of the weight of such evidence, was at liberty to refuse to believe it.

344 (Y.T.).

—Summary trial—Appeal—Jurisdiction.]—Since before 1895 two justices of the peace in the Northwest Territories had jurisdiction to try offences under paragraph (a)-(f) of s. 783 of the Criminal Code, 1892, and there was no appeal from their decision, the extension in that year of this jurisdiction to two justices in any province, subject to appeal where the trial was had before them by virtue only of the new enabling clause, did not extend the right of appeal to the Northwest Territories. (See now R.S.C. 1906, c. 146, s. 797.) The Alberta Act since it continued the law theretofore in force made no change in this respect.

Rex v. Pisoni, 6 Terr. L.R. 238. [See Crim. Code s. 797.]

-Appeal from refusal of trial Judge to reserve case - Application not made at trial.]-On the trial of the accused before a Judge without a jury his counsel objected that the accused was entitled to be tried by a jury, but the objection was overruled and the trial proceeded, no application being made for a reserved case. The accused was convicted and sentenced, and two days afterwards an application was made to the trial Judge to reserve a case for the Court ot Appeal. The application was refused:-Held, that an appeal from the refusal of the trial Judge to reserve a case on a question of law arising during a criminal prosecution lies only when the application is made at the trial, and although after the trial the Judge might still, in his discretion, reserve a case, yet if he refused, no appeal lay.

The King v. Toto, 6 Terr. L.R. 89 (also reported, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 410).

—Case reserved as to communication with jury—Question of fact.]—Defendant was indicted and tried for the erime of rape, committed upon the person of a girl a few weeks over the age of fourteen years. The jury found the prisoner guilty and he was sentenced to imprisonment for the term of one year. Before sentence there was a motion on behalf of the prisoner to reserve a case, upon affidavits of two of the jurors to the effect that while they were deliberating in their room they called the sheriff in and asked him "whether they could report that there had been sexual connection, but with consent, and recommend the prisoner to mercy" to which the sheriff replied "no, that they would be obliged to report the defendant guilty or not guilty, and that if they found him guilty with a recommendation to mercy, the Judge would give him a light sentence." This was denied by the sheriff who swore that all he said in reply to the question asked him was "whatever your verdict is bring it into Court":--Held, per Townshend, Meagher and Drysdale, J.J., that as the case as reserved called upon the Court to first decide the question of fact whether anything was said to the jurors by the sheriff to which objection could be taken, the Court for this reason had no jurisdiction to deal with the question. Per Graham, E.J., and Russell, J., that the conviction should be quashed.

Cr. Cas. 301.

—Charge to jury—Exception to—When to be taken—Application for a reserved case.]—After verdict, but before sentence, it is too late to move for a reserved case. S. 1014, sub-s. 2 of the Code provides that the Court before which any person is tried may, either during or after the trial, reserve any question of law arising either on the trial or on any proceedings preliminary, subsequent or incidental thereto, or arising out of the direction of the Judge, for the opinion of the Court of Appeal . . .—Held, that this means that any reservation of a case after verdict must be of the Court's own motion.

-Appeal-Circumstantial evidence - Identity-Weight of evidence.]-The deceased was murdered, according to the only eye witness (a girl of about 8 years), by a dark man with a fat face, dressed in brown trousers, in the seat of which were two rents. He also had on a black shirt with white stripes and a dark coat. Prisoner had been seen in the vicinity of the murder, within 1,000 feet of the place, some 20 or 30 minutes previously. His dress corresponded with the shirt, coat and trousers mentioned, in addition to which he wore a stiff black hat. A knife, sworn to as having been in the prisoner's possession three days before, was found on the afternoon of the murder, still wet with blood, a few feet from the murdered woman's body. When arrested, three days later, prisoner was without the dark shirt:-Held, refusing an application for a new trial, that the jury was justified on the evidence in coupling the prisoner with the crime. verdict is against the weight of evidence, the Court will be governed by the fact whether the evidence was such that the jury, viewing the whole of the evidence reasonably could not properly find a verdict of guitty. While, under the criminal law, the accused person is not called upon to explain suspicious circumstances, there may yet come a time when, circumstantial evidence having enveloped him in a strong network of inculpatory facts, he is bound to make some explanation or stand condemned.

Rex v. Jenkins, 14 B.C.R. 61, 14 Can. Cr.

-Appeal from summary conviction-Revision of sentence.]-The plaintiff was convicted for unlawfully selling liquor to an Indian in violation of the Indian Act, before the defendant as a stipendiary magistrate, who sentenced him to fine and imprisonment absolute. He appealed to the County Court where both penalties were reduced in his absence as he was confined in jail on a conviction under another penal statute. On the hearing of the appeal the defendant acted as counsel for the prosecutor, prepared the conviction and warrant, and by appointment handed them to the sheriff who executed them. The plaintiff had been discharged by the Court in banco, under a writ of habeas corpus, on notice to the defendant, the order reciting an adjudication that the conviction was illegal and without jurisdiction (R. v. Johnston, 41 N.S.R. 105), and on that application the defendant filed an affidavit against the motion. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant, in his capacity as solicitor, for false imprisonment, the trial Judge withdrew it from the jury at the close of the plaintiff's case, on the ground that there was no evidence of malice, and that the defendant's privilege as a solicitor protected him:-Held, dismissing the plaintiff's appeal and motion for a new trial, that the plaintiff could be legally sentenced to imprisonment absolute in his absence by the County Court Judge on the appeal, but assuming he could not, that the action of the County Court Judge in so sentencing him was a mere error which did not invalidate the conviction, and as the defendant was not shown to have acted maliciously or officiously he was not liable in trespass.

Johnston v. Robertson, 42 N.S.R. 84, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 452.

—Appeal from police magistrate—Order appealed from not lodged until after the first day of sittings.]—S. 757 of the Criminal Code is directory only, and the transmission of the conviction to the Court in accordance with the provisions of that section before the time when the appeal may first be heard is not a condition precedent to the appeal. It is sufficient if the conviction or order be lodged in Court before the appeal is actually heard.

Harwood v. Williamson, 1 Sask. R. 58, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 76.

-Appeal from summary conviction-County Courts-Sittings in another county in the same district-Time between conviction and appeal sittings.]-(1)-Per Townshend, C. J., Meagher, and Russell, JJ .: - An appeal under ss. 749 and 750 of the Code from a summary conviction is to be made to the appropriate sittings following the conviction in point of time, of the Judge presiding over the County Court District where the cause of complaint arose, whether such sittings be in the same or another county comprised in such district. (2) Per Longley, J.: -The appeal is to the County Court of the county in which the cause of complaint arose, and notice of appeal is properly given for a session to be held within the county without regard to an intervening session by the Judge of the same district held in an other county. (3) Per Townshend, C.J., and Meagher, J .: - In computing the time which must intervene between the conviction and the sittings of the Court hearing an appeal under Code s. 750, the term "more than 14 days before the sittings" means that 15

—Preliminary inquiry—Hearing a witness in absence of the accused.]—The object of a preliminary inquiry is not to establish the guilt or innocence of the accused, but merely to ascertain whether he should be committed for trial or not. Hence, irregularities thereat afford no grounds for quashing an indictment subsequently preferred, such as the hearing of one of the witnesses in the absence of the accused.

Rex v. Eliasoph, 19 Que. K.B. 232. 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 131.

—Depositions at preliminary enquiry— Quashing commitment and indictment where depositions not authenticated.]—I. If the depositions at a preliminary inquiry are not signed by presiding magistrate, they are not clothed with the authentic character required by law, and in such case no preliminary inquiry exists on the docket. 2. A motion to quash a commitment based upon such an enquete will be granted.

The King. v. Robert (No. 1), 12 Que. P. R. 7.

—Information—Criminal offence disclosed—Refusal of magistrate to issue process.]—
1. In Ontario a magistrate who refuses to issue either a summons or a warrant upon an information laid before him for a criminal offence may be called upon by order nisfrom the High Court of Justice to show cause why the information had not been proceeded upon. 2. The person accused by such information may also be made a party to the proceedings against the magistrate that he may also show cause why the magistrate should not issue process against him. 3. A charge against a magistrate of wrongfully exacting illegal fees for his own use and benefit discloses a common law offence.

The King v. Graham, 2 O.W.N. 306.

—Theft—Arrest without warrant.]—The applicant had been arrested, without a warrant, by the chief of police for Vancouver at the instance of a private detective there who had received a telegram from a private detective in Montreal. The offence alleged was that the accused had, in Montreal, received a ring with instructions to hand it over to a third person. A second ring he had, as alleged, stolen from such third person directly. He converted it to his own use and left for British Columbia:
—Held, that this was not an offence within the meaning of s. 355 for which an arrest could be made without a warrant.

Rex v. Schyffer, 15 B.C.R. 338.

-Deposition of one witness taken in absence of one defendant-Regularity of enquiry as against co-defendant.]—1. An indictment will not be quashed because of an irregularity in the taking of some of the depositions at the preliminary enquiry if the depositions regularly taken thereat are alone sufficient to justify the committal for trial. 2. Where one of two persons accused is absent during a part of the preliminary enquiry when the evidence of one witness was taken for the prosecution, the deposition of that witness may be regularly taken as against the co-defendant then present. 3. An indictment not preferred with the consent of the Judge or the direction of the Attorney-General under Code s. 873 may be quashed if not founded upon facts disclosed in the depositions taken on the preliminary enquiry. 4. Semble, the consent of the Judge under s. 873 to the preferring of an indictment may be called in question on a motion to quash the indictment, if it appears that the consent was obtained without disclosing a material fact known to the prosecutor the disclosure of which would probably have caused the consent to be refused, ex gr. the previous withdrawal of a complaint in respect of the subject matter of the indictment.

The King v. Eliasoph, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 131 (Que.).

Irregular deposition—Deposition taken in the absence of the magistrate.] — Depositions taken at a preliminary inquiry, in the absence of the magistrate before whom the case is proceeding, have no legal value whatever; and, therefore, the commitment by the magistrate of a prisoner for trial, the bill of indictment founded on his illegal commitment on the illegal depositions, and the true bill and indictment reported by the grand jury are null and void.

R. v. Traynor, 10 Que. Q.B. 63, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 410 (Würtele, J.).

—Order to juror to stand by—Time when it may be made.]—The direction to a juror to stand by is practically a challenge for cause, and, therefore, the order to stand by must be given at a time when a challenge could be made; and inasmuch as the right to challenge must be exercised before the juror has taken the book in order to be sworn, the direction to stand by can only be given before the juror has received the book. R. v. Barsalou (No. 1), 10 Que. K.B. 180, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 343 (Würtele, J.).

dismissed the charge under s. 787:—Held, that the magistrate was right in refusing thereafter to bind the prosecutor over to prefer and prosecute an indictment against the defendant, as provided for in s. 595; for the magistrate has, under s. 791, to determine, before the defence has been made, whether he will try the case summarily or

-Preliminary enquiry-Change to summary proceeding-Excess of jurisdiction.]-A defendant being charged with offering for sale, publicly, meat unfit for food, the magistrate treated the charge, though ambiguously worded, as one for an offence under the Criminal Code s. 194 (and took evidence in support. They then concluded that an offence had been made out under a municipal by-law based on the Public Health Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 248, but not under the Criminal Code, and adjourned for a week "to enable the accused to put in a defence under the new conditions if he so decided." The defendant protested, and offered no defence, and was convicted under the by-law: -Held, on certiorari, that the conviction must be quashed on the ground of want of jurisdiction; and also because, even if there was power to change the charge to one under the Public Health Act, no evidence was given of the offence so charged after that charge was made. It is not competent for magistrates where an information charges an offence which they have no jurisdiction to try summarily, to convert the charge into one which they have jurisdiction to try summarily, and to so try it on the original information.

Rex v. Dungey, 2 O.L.R. 223, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 38.

-Attempt to incite-Perjury-Bail-Recognizance-Estreat.] - A defendant charged with offering money to a person to swear that certain other persons gave him a sum of money to vote for a candidate at an election, was admitted to bail, the recognizance being taken before one justice of the peace:-Held, that the offence was not an attempt to commit the crime of subornation of perjury, but something less, being an incitement to give false evidence or particular evidence, regardless of its truth or falsehood, and was a misdemeanour at common law, and that the recognizance was properly taken before one justice, who had power to admit the accused to bail at common law, and that s. 601 of the Code did not apply. The comomn law jurisdiction as to crime is still operative, notwithstanding the Code, and even in cases provided for by the Code, unless there is such repugnancy as to give prevalence to the latter law.

Rex v. Cole, 3 O.L.R. 389, 5 Can. Cr. Cas.

-Absence of magistrate-Proceeding novo-Certiorari.]-A preliminary hearing in a criminal case commenced before one magistrate cannot be continued before another. But if the magistrate who had begun the hearing dies, is dismissed, resigns his office or withdraws from the hearing, then another competent magistrate may take it up, but he should begin the hearing de novo before himself; he cannot merely continue that previously begun. The Judge of the sessions of the peace, Hon. Mr. Chaveau, who had begun the preliminary hearing having obtained leave of absence, and, without concluding it, started for a voyage to Europe, is deemed to be withdrawn from the proceeding; and in such case, with the consent of the Crown, the party prevented from proceeding was entitled to obtain from the magistrate, Angers, who replaced him, an order for beginning de novo the hearing in order to dispose of the matter. A writ of certiorari will not, in such case, be granted to prevent the Magistrate Angers from taking up the case and beginning it

Bertrand v. Angers, 21 Que. S.C. 213 (Sup. Ct.).

-Statutory prohibition of certain acts -Public policy - Remedy by indictment.]-Where the doing of a particular act is prohibited by statute on public grounds, and the statute does not declare a mode of enforcing the prohibition, the offence is indictable. A person who without lawful excuse wilfully and corruptly votes more than once at a municipal election for city aldermen by general vote under s. 158 (a) of the Ontario Municipal Act is guilty of an indictable offence by virtue of s. 138 of the Criminal Code (disobedience of statutes). Wrongfully voting twice at an election would not be indictable at common law unless prohibited by statute, and, semble, every contempt of a statute is indictable at common law where no other mode of pun-ishment is provided. Where a magistrate is applied to for process in respect of an indictable offence which cannot be dealt with summarily, no fees can be demanded by him therefor. The Court will not grant to the prosecutor a mandamus to compel a rehearing by the magistrate of an application for process in respect of an indictable offence, if the magistrate had exercised his discretion (although erroneously) in refusing the process after being put in possession of the facts, on which he can exercise discretion. If the magistrate on an application for process erroneously holds that the offence is not indictable and that he therefore has no jurisdiction to hold a preliminary inquiry in respect thereof, a mandamus will lie to compel him to do so.

-Preliminary hearing - Re-opening - Discretion.]-In a criminal case the preliminary hearing before the magistrate of an offence punishable on indictment, is not, properly speaking, the enquete of the informant, but that of the magistrate. On the preliminary hearing, after the enquete on the information has been declared closed, and no evidence has been offered on the part of the accused, and even after argument on question of law arising from the evidence given, the magistrate may, in his discretion, allow the informant to reopen the enquete and give further evidence.

Belanger v. Mulvena, Q.R. 22 S.C. 37 (Sup. Ct.).

—Fine and imprisonment authorized —Discretion of magistrate,]—I. S. 932 of the Code applies as wei to proceedings under Part LVII., "Summary Convictions," as to proceedings by indictment. 2. Where both fine and imprisonment are provided as the authorized punishment for a statutory offence upon summary conviction, the magistrate may in his discretion impose either a fine alone or an imprisonment alone or both, unless the particular statute specially provides otherwise.

Ex parte Kent, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 447.

-Dispensing with distress-Summary conviction.]-1. Where a fine is imposed by a summary conviction made by two justices and distress in default and imprisonment for want of distress, the discretionary power of dispensing with dis-tress and directing imprisonment if the distress would be ruinous to the accused and his family, is one which belongs to the convicting justices jointly, and one of such justices has no power to commit upon his own finding alone in respect thereof. 2. The accused is entitled to be heard on the question of dispensing with the distress warrant. 3. The went of sufficient distress, necessary for the alternative of imprisonment, can only be proved by the return of nulla bona to a warrant of distress or by hearing the defendant regarding the same. The King v. Rawding, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 436.

—Procedure to escheat recognizance—Condition—Notice.]—A recognizance was entered into by the defendant and his surety before the stipendiary magistrate conditioned to keep the peace and to appear before the magistrate on a day named. Defendant failed to appear and the recognizance was estreated without notice to defendant or to his surety:—Held, per Graham, E.J. (McDonald, C.J., concurring), following The Queen v. Creelman, 25 N.S.R. 404, that notice was necessary under the N.S. Crown Rules and that the order estreating the recognizance was improperly made. Held, per Townshend, J., and Meagher, J., that notice was not necessary. R. v. Brooke, 11 T.L.R. 163, referred to.

-Bail-When a matter of right and when discretionary.]-1. All Superior Courts of criminal jurisdiction, or one of their Judges, and also, in the Province of Quebec, a Judge of the Superior Court, have authority to admit to bail persons accused of any crime whatsoever (including treason and capital offences), but as respects indictable offences which, before the enacting of the Criminal Code, were felonies, it is within their discretion to grant or refuse the application for bail. With respect to indictable offences which were formerly misdemeanours, the accused is entitled to be admitted to bail as a matter of right. 2. The propriety of admitting to bail for indictable offences which were formerly classed as felonies should be determined with reference to the accused person's opportunities for escape, and to the probability of his appearing for trial. To determine this point it is proper to consider the nature of the offence charged and its punishment, the strength of the evidence against the accused, his character, means and standing. Where a serious doubt exists as to his guilt the application for bail should be granted. If, on the evidence, it stands indifferent whether he is guilty or innocent, the rule generally is to admit him to bail; but if his guilt is beyond dispute the general rule is not to grant the application for bail unless the opportunities to escape do not appear to be possible and it is consequently almost certain that he will appear for trial. The fact that the application for bail is not opposed either by the attorney-general or the private prosecutor may also be taken into account by the Court or Judge.

The King v. Fortier, 13 Que. K.B. 251. 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 191.

The applicant was committed for trial at the sessions upon three charges of receiving cattle stolen from C. and two other persons, knowing them to have been stolen. At the previous sessions three persons were convicted of having stolen cattle from C., one of whom and two others were also convicted at the same sessions of having stolen cattle from No charge was pending against the applicant of having received stolen cattle from S.:-Held, that in such case the question is whether the applicant would be affected by the records which he sought to examine, and that while he might be so affected as regards the cattle stolen from C., and so was entitled to the inspection asked for, he was not as regards those stolen from S.

-Commitment-Imprisonment in penitentiary - Form of warrant-Venue - Commencement of sentence.] - The certified copy of sentence is sufficient warrant for the imprisonment of a convict in the penitentiary and it is not necessary that it should contain every essential averment of a formal conviction. Where the venue is mentioned in the margin of a commitment, in the case of an offence which does not require local description, it is not necessary that the warrant should describe the place where the offence was committed. A warrant of commitment need not state the time from which the term of imprisonment shall begin to run, as under the seventh sub-s. of s. 955 of the Criminal Code, terms of imprisonment commence on and from the

(2) The first duty of a magistrate dealing with a person arrested upon his warrant is to have such person brought before him as soon as practicable, and then make out such order as the case requires. The express enactment of the Criminal Code (s. 567), must be followed in this respect, although the form of remand in connection with it has no mention of the presence of the prisoner. —Commitment after repeal of special statute—Duty not to delay commitment ordered by conviction.]—(1) The issue of a warrant of commitment in execution of a summary conviction is a ministerial and not a judicial act. (2) Where a summary conviction has been made under a special statute and the statute is afterwards repealed, a commitment in execution may be issued notwithstanding the repeal. (3) It is the duty of a magistrate making a summary conviction and imposing a penalty of imprisonment to follow up his judgment with a commitment, and it is doubtful whether he has any discretion to suspend the issue of the warrant of commitment.

Re Thomas Lynch, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 141.

-Change of venue - Balance of convenience.]-The principle on which a change of venue in a criminal case will be ordered is, that there is fair and reasonable probability of partiality and prejudice in the district, county or place, within which the indictment would otherwise be tried. On a motion to change the venue, notwithstanding that a strong case was made out for the change if the balance of convenience alone was to be considered, still, as it was not shown that there was or was likely to be any prejudice against the accused and certainly no more where the indictment was found than in the place to which it was proposed to change the venue, the motion was refused.

-Indictment — Attempt — Stating the offence.]—Where the accused was indicted for "concealing himself with intent to escape from the penitentiary:"—Held, that as the criminal act consists in an attempt to commit an offence, doing something with intent to commit the offence is not necessarily sufficient to constitute an attempt. Where the accused pleads guilty to a charge, and it is disclosed that the indictment alleges only a fact which might or might not, according to the circumstances, be sufficient to prove an offence, the plea of guilty will be struck out.

-Arrest on Sunday - Taking bail and fixing day.]-M. was arrested on Sunday on a warrant issued for an offence against the Canada Temperance Act. When brought before the magistrate he applied to be admitted to bail, and was permitted to make a deposit in lieu of bail. The case was set down for hearing on a week day and M. was discharged from cutsody. M. appeared at the time appointed and secured a further adjournment upon his agreeing to leave the amount of the deposit as bail for his appearance. On the day last mentioned he appeared and objected to the legality of his arrest on Sunday and to the action of the magistrate in taking bail and fixing a day: -Held (1), S. 564, sub-s. 3 of the Code was made applicable to the case by the Canada Temperance Act, s. 107, and that the warrant could be executed on Sunday. (2) Per Graham, E.J., Meagher, J., and Russell,

J., assuming that the releasing on bail and fixing a day for the hearing were illegal, that the arrest being legal there was a negligent escape and nothing to prevent the defendant from being retaken, and that the magistrate had jurisdiction to proceed with the case. (3) For such a defect as that contended for in the procedure prohibition was not the proper remedy. Per Townshend, J.:—The taking of bail and fixing a day was not illegal, but an act done in connection with the arrest.

Fourteen, including accused, were remanded pending decision of the other two as test cases. Upon resumption of proceedings, evidence similar to that on which the two first cases were committed for trial was put in, whereupon a remand of a week was granted to permit the procuring of further evidence. At the end of that time a second remand was granted. Upon application for a mandamus requiring the magistrate forthwith to commit the accused for trial:—Held, that a writ of mandamus will not issue directing a magistrate to commit prior to his adjudication of the case. That it is the duty of the magistrate to take the evidence of all concerned, and that the Court must not interfere with the discretion of the magistrate as to remands when that discretion is being exercised legally and in good faith.

The magistrate thereupon had a summons issued and served upon the constable calling upon him to appear in answer to a charge of unlawfully releasing the Indian. province originally to the Dominion for the purposes of the railway, and by the Dominion transferred to the railway company, which in giving grants or conveyances of portions thereof, reserved the minerals, Defendant, who held from her predecessor in title, applied for and obtained a grant under said s. 3:—Held, on appeal, that the railway company was entitled to be heard upon such application. Held, further, that a grant issued without such opportunity being given to the railway company to be heard on the application, was a nullity, and that the defendant should be restrained from making use of it. Held, further, that one of the conditions in the statute was that the claims of applicants thereunder should be passed upon by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, and the absence of compliance with such condition was fatal, but held, further, that in the circumstances here the defendant should be permitted, on giving notice to the railway company, to proceed with her application and that the Crown need not be a party to the action.

Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Co. v. Fiddick, 14 B.C.R. 412.

-Military reserve-License from Crown to use lands as public park.]-On the 8th of June, 1887, a portion of land near the City of Vancouver, and known as Stanley Park, was handed over to the municipality for an indefinite period for use as a public park. The land, which had been an Imperial military reserve, had been transferred to the Dominion on the 7th of March, 1884. The city's petition, pre-sented in 1886 to the Dominion, asked for "that portion of land (described as within the city limits) known as the Dominion Government military reserve near the First Narrows . . . bounded on the west by English Bay and on the east by Burrard Inlet." Adjacent to the peninsula known as Stanley Park, and within Vancouver harbour, is a small island, and there was some evidence that at certain stages of the tide during the year, there was bare land between the island and the peninsula. Shortly prior to the 8th of June above mentioned, the city's boundaries, by an amendment to the charter, were stated so as to extend down to low water mark. It was contended for the city that this made the island a portion of the park. But in all charts and maps the land was shown as an island. The city assumed to use the island as a portion of the park, and built out to it a foot-bridge, which afterwards was allowed to fall into disuse and decay. Plaintiffs' predecessor, in 1898, applied for a lease of the island, and although the city was notified of such application, no reply was given until when, in February, 1899, an order was passed authorizing the Minister of Militia to grant a lease for 25 years, the city protested and asserted a right to possession of the island under the terms of the order of the 8th of June, 1887 A question then arose between the Province and the Dominion as to the ownership of the island (see (1901), 8 B.C.R. 242; (1904), 11 B.C.R. 258; [1906] A.C. 552), resulting in favour of the Dominion. In consequence, the city opened negotiations with the Dominion for a lease of Stanley Park, and sought to have Deadman's Island specifically included in such lease. Eventually a lease was executed of "all that portion of the City of Vancouver (and the foreshore adjacent thereto, bounded by the western limit of district lot 185, group 1, New Westminster Dis trict, as shown on the official plan thereof filed in the Land Registry office at Vancouver) and the low water mark of the waters of Burrard Inlet, the First Narrows and English Bay, and being all that peninsula lying to the west and north of said district lot 185, known as "Stanley Park." The lease was also "subject, until their determination, to any existing leases of portions of said land." Two small portions of Stanley Park were leased to athletic clubs:-Held, that, in all the circumstances, the city's lease granted in 1908 embraced only the portion of the reserve set out in the peninsula. Held, also, that the plaintiffs' lease was a valid one. Judgment of Morrison, J., 13 W. L.R. 75, reversed.

Vancouver Lumber Co. v. City of Vancouver, 15 B.C.R. 432 (C.A.).

-Railway ties-Inspection-Inspector exceeding authority in respect of accept-ance.]—The suppliant, in reply to an advertisement calling for tenders for ties for the use of the Intercolonial Railway, offered to supply ties to the Crown for such purpose. The Crown expressed its willingness to purchase his ties provided they answered the requirements of the specifications mentioned in the advertisement for tenders. D., an inspector appointed by the Government, in excess of his authority and contrary to his instruc-tions, undertook on behalf of the Crown to accept ties not up to the said specifications. On this becoming known to the Crown, D.'s inspection was stopped, and other persons were appointed to reinspect the ties, who rejected a portion of those which D. had undertaken to accept. The suppliant claimed the price of the ties so rejected:-Held, confirming the report of the Registrar, as referee, that the Crown was not liable for the price of the ties which D., as inspector, wrongfully and in excess of his authority,

Michaud v. The King, 13 Can. Exch.
R. 147.

— National Transcontinental Railway — Services connected with construction of eastern division.]—A petition of right will not lie in the case of a disputed claim founded upon a contract entered into with the Commissioners of the National Transcontinental Railway for services connected with the construction of the Eastern Division of such railway. Under the provisions of 3 Edward VII. c. 71, the Commissioners are a body corporate, having capacity to sue and be sued on their contracts. Action, therefore, upon such a claim should be brought against the Commissioners and not against the Crown.

Johnston v. The King, 13 Can. Exch. R. 155.

-National Transcontinental Railway-Lands taken by Commissioners-Compensation.]—Section 13 of 3 Edw. VII., c. 71, reads as follows: "The Commissioners may enter upon and take possession of any lands required for the purpose of the Eastern Division, and they shall lay off such lands by metes and bounds, and deposit of record a description and plan thereof in the office for the registry of deeds or the land titles office for the county or registration district in which such lands respectively are situate; and such deposit shall act as a dedication to the public of such lands, which shall there-upon be vested in the Crown saving al-ways the lawful claim to compensation of any person interested therein ":-Held. that, under the terms of s. 15 of the above Act (read in connection with the provisions of the Railway Act, R.S. 1906, c. 37), when lands have been taken and become vested in the Crown as provided by s. 13, and the Commissioners cannot agree with the owner thereof as to compensation for the same, such compensation must be ascertained by a reference to arbitration, and not by proceedings taken in the Exchequer Court for such purpose. -Crown lands-British Columbia Land Act—Holder of pre-emption record—Occupation.]—The 30 days' notice required by s. 13 of the British Columbia Land Act is for the benefit of the pre-emption holder, who can waive it, wholly or in part if he so desires; and, if he does so, the commissioner has jurisdiction to adjudicate and cancel the pre-emption record before the 30 days have elapsed. And held, that the pre-emption holder had waived the notice by requesting the commissioner to give an earlier hearing and by attending thereon with counsel without objection. The pre-emp-tor obtained his record on the 8th January, 1909, and was on the land for the first time thereafter on the 6th March, staying 3 days. He was there again in March, but for no length of time. He next went upon it for 2 nights in May, and again in July -for how long did not appear. After that he was absent from the land continuously to the date of hearing, the 15th February, 1910:-Held, that, in view of the spirit of all the sections of the Land Act dealing with pre-emptions, and especially ss. 14 and 16, it was impossible to hold that the commissioner was wrong in finding that the preemption holder had not complied with the provisions of the Act as to occupation.

Breach of contract by servant-Sureties -Discharge.]-The defendants were sued as sureties for the performance of a contract to deliver hay to the N. W. M. Police. The defendants claimed they were relieved from liability because the police authorities failed to carry out their part of the contract in material particulars, viz. (1) By using a quantity of hay before it had been inspected by a board of officers as provided by the contract. (2) By allowing a portion to be carried off by some of the constables, and another portion to be destroyed by cattle before the hav was weighed or measured, as provided by the contract. (3) By measuring instead of weighing the hay, as provided by the con-tract; the result by weighing being much in favour of the defendant's principal:— Held, that the third objection offered a good defence. Held, also, that the Crown was responsible for breaches of contract resulting from the acts or omissions of its servants, though not for their torts. The -Contract-Liability of agent-Extrinsic evidence.]-The defendant, the principal of an industrial school, an employee of the Dominion Government, entered into and signed in his own name a written agreement engaging the plaintiff for a certain period in a certain employment. The factory in which the plaintiff was employed being destroyed by fire, and the plaintiff thrown out of employment, he sued the defendant for wrongful dismissal: -Held, that evidence of the capacity in which the defendant entered into the agreement and the other surrounding circumstances was admissible. It appearing that the defendant acted merely as agent for the Government. Held, that the defendant was not liable.

—Military reserve—Deadman's Island —Recitals in private Acts—Whether binding on the Crown.]—The statement in the Vanconver Incorporation Acts which are private in their nature, that certain land was a "Government Military Reserve" is not conclusive on the Crown in right of the province, and held, on the facts that it was not shown that Deadman's Island was a military reserve called into existence by properly constituted authority and, therefor, that it belongs to the province and not to the Dominion. Remarks as to the powers of Governor Douglas and as to what constituted a "reserve."

inasmuch as he did not reside in Westminster district, and the cause of action did not arise either wholly or partly in that district:—Held, that it is a prerogative right of the Crown to bring a suit in a County Court, even though as between subject and subject such Court would not be open, either because of the defendant not residing, or of the cause of action not arising in the district.

(3) The appointment partakes more of the character of a public office than of a mere employment to render a service under a contract express or implied.

Galindez v. The King, Q.R. 26 S.C. 17 (Sup. Ct.).

-Public work-Collision with entrance pier to canal-Negligence in construction.] -One of the entrance piers to a Government canal was so constructed that a substructure of masonry rested on crib work. The base of the pier was set back three feet from the edge of the crib work, which left a step or projection under water between the masonry and the side of the crib work. It was necessary for vessels to enter the canal with great care, at this point, owing to the eddies and currents that existed there. The proper course, however, for vessels to steer was marked by buoys. A vessel on entering the canal touched another pier than the one in question, and then, taking a sheer and getting out of control, swung over and came in collision with this pier:-Held, that upon the facts proved the accident was caused by the vessel being caught in a current or eddy and so carried against the pier. 2. That as there was no negligence by any officer or servant of the Crown as to the location and the method of construction of this pier, the Crown was not liable for damages arising out of the col-

-Negligence - Freight elevator in post office-Use of by employees-City by-law.] -The suppliant, an employee of the post office in the city of Montreal, was injured by falling from a lift to the floor of the basement. The lift was used for the transfer of mail bags and matter with those in charge of them from one floor to another in the post office building. It was proved that the lift was constructed in the usual and customary manner of freight elevators; but the suppliant contended that as the lift was allowed to be used by certain employees in going from one floor to another it should have been provided with guards or something to prevent anyone from falling from it, as the suppliant did while passing from the first floor to the basement:-Held, that such user by the employees did not constitute the lift a passenger elevator and impose a duty upon those in charge of it to see that it was better protected than it was. 2. In any event the suppliant was not using the lift as a passenger at the time of the accident, but to transfer mail matter of which he was then in charge. 3. The by-law of the city of Montreal respecting freight and passenger elevators passed on the 4th February, 1901, did not affect the liability of the Crown in this case. The lift in question was built in 1897, before the enactment of such by-law, and was situated in the post office at Montreal, which building constitutes part of the public property of the Dominion, and so was within the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada.

A "caution" under the Lands Titles Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 138, amounts to no more than the notice of an adverse claim equivalent to a lis pendens, and expires by lapse of time or otherwise, as be directed by the Court in an action. and the fact that a submission was duly made after the institution of the action is not an answer to the plaintiff's claim. In a case where it would be open to a jury to find that an actionable wrong had been suffered and to award damages, the withdrawal of the case from the jury is improper and a new trial should be had. The Supreme Court of Canada reversed the judgment appealed from (12 B.C. Rep. 476), which had affirmed the judgment at the trial withdrawing the case from the jury and dismissing the action and allowing the plaintiff his costs up to the time of service of the statement of defence, costs being given against the defendant in all the Courts and a new trial ordered. Davies and Maclennan, JJ., dissented and, taking the view that the refusal, though illegal, had not been made maliciously, considered that, on that issue, the plaintiff was entitled to nominal damages, that, in other respects, the judgment appealed from should be affirmed, and that there should be no costs allowed on the appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

School Fund), the defendants pleaded that the Crown were estopped from recovery inasmuch as, at the time of their purchase, the advisers of the Crown were aware that these debentures were being issued in breach of a trust and with the intention of misapplying the proceeds towards payment of interest upon other debentures due by them in violation of a statutory prohibition:-Held, affirming the judgment appealed from (8 Ex. C.R. 390), that, there was statutory authority for the issue of the debentures in question, knowledge of any such breach of trust or misapplication by the advisers of the Crown could not be set up as a defence to the

The shipper accepted the special rate and shipped a considerable quantity of hav. Being compelled to pay freight thereon at the regular rate he filed a petition of right to re-cover the difference between the amount paid and that due under the special rate: -Held, that as the claim was based upon the negligence or laches of an officer or servant of the Crown, for which there was no statutory remedy, the petition must be dismissed.

Those gauges demanded unremitting attention owing to the peculiar character of the boilers. B. was instructed by the engineer and fully understood that these gauges demanded his unremitting attention, and that it was dangerous for him to leave except momentarily, a position which gave him a view of some of the gauges. B. left such a position for about ten minutes, going to another part of the dredge, and during his absence one of the boilers exploded and he was fatally injured. Patent — Locatee — Improvements — Claim for.]-On an application being made for the patent to certain lands, a claim was made by the defendant, who had married the widow of the locatee, and had improved the land, to be allowed the value of such improvements, whereupon the Commissioner of Crown Land's directed that before the patent issued the amount, if any, payable to the defendant for his improvements and work on the land, after proper deductions, should be ascertained. A consent judgment was obtained referring it to the Master to enquire and report as to what sum, if any, the defendant was entitled to for permanent improvements and work done upon the land: for maintenance of the family of the locatee: and for any advances made to them, after making all proper deductions: -Held, that while the consent judgment was silent as to the principle to be applied in ascertaining the amount payable to ment to the contractor of the amount found due was concerned, unless the Legislature should appropriate the money; the original agreement was within the authority of the Executive Government of the province and did not require the ratification of the Legislature to give it contractual validity, and that the later agreement was a new agreement, which also was within the authority of the Executive Government, as well as any changes or modifications in either. Held, also, on the evidence, that after accounts had been taken on a certain basis occasioned by a change in the contract, it was too late to re-open them. 2. That parties are not entitled to interest as a matter of right, and as in the transactions between the parties here, interest was not charged by the Government, as they now sought to charge it, that claim could not be allowed. 3 That although insurance was not provided for in the agreement and the machinery was purchased by the company, it was subsequently to become the property of the Government, and so was substantially a purchase by the Government, and as insurance had been allowed to the company in the accounts, it was too late to object to such allowance now. 4. That accounts rendered, checked and entered in the prison books, there being no fraud or concealment, should not be disturbed. 5. That the contract did not call for the payment of additional men supplied beyond the original number contracted for, and there was no implied contract for their payment as on a quantum meruit. While not necessary to determine the case, the Court was of opinion that the resolution of the Legislature ratifying the contract did not give the contract the force of a statute of the province, and there was no intention it should, and even if it did, that the Executive Government had power to modify it.

-Costs-Indemnity — Vancouver Island Settlers' Rights Act, 1904.]—In a statute declaring certain settlers entitled to mineral rights on their lands, there was a provision that any action attacking such rights should be defended by and at the expense of the Crown. On action taken by plaintiff company to test the statute, judgment was given in favour of the defendant. The company appealed and the appeal was dismissed:—Held, as to costs, that defendant was not in a position to claim any costs against plaintiff company as his rights were being asserted by and defended at the expense of the Crown.

Highland v. Sherry, 32 Ont. R. 371.

-Contract for grant of part of public domain-Breach of-Remedy-Jurisdiction -Declaration of right.]-The Exchequer Court of Canada has jurisdiction in respect of a claim arising out of a contract to grant a portion of the public domain made under the authority of an Act of Parlia-2. Such a claim may be prosecuted by a Petition of Right. 3. Where the Court has jurisdiction in respect of the subjectmatter of a Petition of Right, the petition is not open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory judgment or order is sought thereby. If on the other hand, there is no jurisdiction, no such declaration should be made. Clark v. The Queen,

1 Can. Exch. R. 182, considered. The Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railroad and Steamboat Company v. The King, 7 Can. Exch. R. 105.

Petition of right — Kaslo and Slocan railway subsidy.]—Suppliant applied to be allowed to purchase certain lands under s. 31 of the B.C. Land Aet, tendering the proper amount therefor. The application was refused on the ground that the lands had been granted to the railway company. The suppliant alleged that such grant was illegally issued and void, and the Crown allowed a Petition of Right to be brought:—Hield, that the suppliant had no locus stand it to obtain any relief.

Hall v. The Queen, 7 B.C.R. 480, affirming 7 B.C.R. 89.

-Grant made in error—Adverse claim — Cancellation.]—The provisions of the Quebec Statute respecting the sale and management of public lands (32 Vict. c. 11, R. S.Q. Art. 1299) do not authorize the cancellation of letters patent by the Commissioner of Crown Lands where adverse claims to the lands exist.

The King v. Adams, 31 Can. S.C.R. 220.

—Timber licenses—Sales by local agent—Location ticket — Suspensive condition—
Timber licenses—Suspensive condition—
Timber license to cut timber on ungranted lands of the Province of Quebec, the local Crown Lands Agent made a sale of a part of the lands covered by the license and issued location tickets or licenses of occupation therefor under the provisions of Arts. 1230 et seq. of the Revised Statutes of Quebec, respecting the sale of Crown Lands. Subsequently the timber license was renewed, but, at the time the renewal license was issued, there had not been any express approval by the Commissioner of Crown Lands of the sale so made by the local agent as provided by Art. 1269 R.S.Q.:—Held, affirming the judgment of the K.B. Quebec, appealed from, Taschereau and Davies, J.J., dissenting, that the approval required by Art. 1269, R.S.Q. was not a suspensive condition the fulfilment of which would have retroactive effect from the date when the sales by the local agent were made, and that, at the time of the issue of the renewal license, the lands in question was still ungranted lands of the Crown for which the timber license had been validly issued.

Leblanc v. Robitaille, 31 Can. S.C.R. 582.

—Location ticket—Cancellation—Prescription against the Crown.]—Held (confirming the judgment of the Superior Court, district of Ottawa, Rochon, J.):—1. Under the terms of a sale from the Crown in 1857, the grantee was obliged to perform all the obligations contained in ordinary location tickets, and without residence and clearance upon the lot the grantee could not become the incommutable owner or acquire letters patent. 2. Prescription does not run against the Crown, which always has the right to cancel a location ticket.

Kealy v. Regan, 23 Que. S.C. 305 (C.R.).

-Land subsidy in the N. W. Territories-Mines-Reservation in grant-Dominion Lands Act.]-By the Act 53 Vict. c. 4, the suppliant railway company, among others, was authorized to receive a grant of Dominion lands of 6,400 acres for each mile of its railway, when constructed. Under the provisions of s. 2 the grants were to be made in the proportion and upon the conditions fixed by the orders in council made in respect thereof, and, except as to such conditions, the said grants should be free grants, subject only to the payment by the grantees, respectively, of the cost of survey of the lands, and incidental expenses. The Act came into force on the 16th of May, 1890. On that date there were certain regulations in force, made on the 17th September, 1889, under the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act, which provided that all patents for lands in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories should reserve to the Crown all mines and minerals which might be found to exist in such lands, together with the full power to work the same. Orders in council authorizing the issue of patents, for the lands in question, to the suppliant railway company were passed from time to time, according to the number of miles of railway constructed. There was no reference in these orders to the regulations respecting the reservation of mines and minerals of 17th September, 1889:—Held, that the regulations reserving mines and minerals applied to all grants of lands made under the provisions of the Act. 53 Viet. c. 54, and that the omission of reference to such regulations in the orders in council authorizing patents to be issued did not alter the position of the suppliant company under the law. Semble, that where Parliament grants a subsidy of lands in aid of the construction of a railway, and nothing more is stated, the grant is made under ordinary conditions, and subject to existing regulations concerning such lands.

Calgary & Edmonton Railway Co. v. The King, 8 Can. Exch. R. 83.

-Transfer from Dominion to Provincial Government—Swamp lands—Selection.]— By the statute 48-49 Vict. (Can.) c. 50, R.S.C. c. 47, s. 4, it was provided that in certain territory all Crown lands which may be shown to the satisfaction of the Dominion Government to be swamp land's shall be transferred to the province and enure wholly to its benefit and uses:-Held, that the section did not operate as an immediate transfer to the province of any swamp lands or of any profits arising therefrom, but only from the date of the order in council made after survey and selection as prescribed by the statute. Meanwhile the Dominion and not the province was entitled to the profits arising from the lands for the public uses of the Dominion.

Attorney-General (Man.) v. Attorney-General (Can.), [1904] A.C. 799.

-Crown grant-Party in possession by permission-Estoppel.]-In an action to recover land, plaintiffs relied upon a grant from the Crown dated March 14th, 1891. Defendants limited their defence to a portion of the land claimed, and as to that portion, depended upon title acquired in 1893, from H., who entered as a servant of plaintiffs, and by their permission, erected a house on the land in 1890:-Held, that the possession of H. was not sufficient to prevent the Crown from granting to plaintiffs. Also, that H. having entered by plaintiffs' permission, both defendants and H. were estopped from denying plaintiffs' title. Also that if the Crown was misled by the omission of plaintiffs to disclose in their petition that the land was in the occupation of H. that objection could not be raised by a third party, in collateral proceedings, but must be raised in a proceeding to be taken before the Governorin-Council to have the grant vacated. Also that the case was not within the provisions of R.S. (5th series), c. 9, and that the occupancy, being that of a person in possession by permission of plaintiffs, did not require to be disclosed.

Lakeview Mining Co. v. Moore, 36 N.S. R. 333.

— Settlement of Manitoba claims—Operation of grant—Transfer in praesenti—Condition precedent-Ascertainment and identification of swamp lands-Revenues and emblements.]-The first section of the "Act for the Final Settlement of the Claims of the Province of Manitoba on Dominion'' (48 and 49 Vict. c. 50) enacts that "all Crown Lands in Manitoba which may be shown, to the satisfaction of the Dominion Government, to be swamp lands shall be transferred to the province and enure wholly to its benefit and uses'':-Held, affirming the judgment appealed from (8 Ex. C.R. 337) Girouard and Kill lam, JJ., dissenting, that the operation of the statutory conveyance in favour of the Province of Manitoba was suspended until such time as the lands in question were ascertained and identified as swamp lands and transferred as such by order of the Governor-General-in-Council, and that, in the meantime, the Government of Canada remained entitled to their administration and the revenues derived therefrom enured wholly to the benefit and use of the Dominion.

Attorney-General for Manioba v. Attorney-General for Canada, 34 Can. S.C.R. 287.

—Scire facias—Annulling letters patent.]
—The information of the Attorney-General for annulling letters patent is simply the statement of the claim with conclusions as in the declaration in an ordinary action. (2) Summons in matters of seiro facias or actions to annul letters patent is made by writ issued in the usual manner, without affidavit of petitioner, order of a Judge or flat of the Attorney-General. (3) Want of authorization, by the Attorney-General, of the attorneys signing the information for him is not a ground of exception. If necessary, the Attorney-General may file a disavowal of the attorneys ad litem.

-Land in British Columbia-Military reserve-Title of the Dominion-Transfer by Imperial Government-British North America Act, 1867, ss. 108, 117.]-The land in suit, called Deadman's Island, was de facto a "reserve" by the Government of British Columbia under paragraph 3 of the proclamation of 1859, and, according to the evidence, a military reserve:-Held, that it remained Imperial property at the time of the British North America Act, 1867, and was transferred to the Dominion by special grant, dated March 27, 1884. It did not, therefore, fall to the colony in virtue of s. 117 of the Act, nor to the Dominion in virtue of s. 108. Appeal from decision in Attorney-General v. Ludgate, 11 B.C.R. 258, dismissed.

-Crown land in New Brunswick-Adverse possession for less than sixty years -Grant by the Crown during adverse possession valid-Rights of grantee.]-In an action of ejectment it appeared that the land belonged to the Crown, and was in peaceable possession of its grantee, the defendant, but that the plaintiff and his predecessors in title had enjoyed uninterrupted occupation thereof for a period of fifty-six years down to a date about seven years prior to the date of action:-Held, that judgment was rightly entered for the defendant. Occupation against the Crown for any period less than the sixty years required by the Nullum Tempus Act is of no avail against the title and legal possession of the Crown, and still less against its grantee in actual possession. The Act 21 Jac. I. c. 14, only regulates procedure, and its effect is that if any information of intrusion is filed and the Crown has been out of possession for twenty years, the defendant is allowed to retain possession till the Crown has established its title. Where no information has been filed, there is nothing to prevent the Crown or its grantee from making a peaceable entry and then holding possession by virtue of title. Decisions by the Courts of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia to the effect that when the Crown has been out of actual possession for twenty years it could not make a grant until it had first established its title by information of intrusion, overruled. Decision in Maddison v. Emmerson, 34 Can. S.C.R. 533, affirmed.

Emmerson v. Maddison, [1906] A.C. 569.

CURATOR.

Service upon heirs of person deceased-Art. 135 C.C.P.]-(1) The general rule of Art. 135 C.C.P., authorizing service upon the heirs of a person deceased within the previous six months, without mentioning their names or residences, by leaving the document for them at the former domicile of the deceased, does not apply to heirs who are not capable of pleading, e.g. minors, and who, moreover, at the time of the service were not actually interested, their tutrix having renounced the succession of the deceased in their behalf. (2) The fact that the curator to the vacant succession may have had knowledge of the service of the writ and made no objection, cannot be taken as equivalent to a service nor avail to support an ex parte judgment obtained without legal service. Turcotte v. Dansereau, 27 Can. S.C.R. p. 583, followed.

CUSTOM.

Trade custom—Art. 1016 C.C.]—A party to an action on a contract may rely on a custom of trade not only when the terms of the contract are ambiguous, but also when it does not plainly appear from the circumstances of the transaction what was the intention of the parties.

Prior v. Atkinson, 19 Que. S.C. 210 (S.C.).

CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Customs—Reference of claim.]—Where, in the case of a customs claim referred to the Court under the provisions of s. 179 of the Customs Act (R.S. 1906, c. 48), the judgment was mainly based on evidence which, though it was in their possession at the time, the claimants had neglected to produce to the Minister of Customs when the claim came before him, the claimants were not allowed the costs of the reference. Red Wing Sewer Pipe Co. v. The King, 12 Can. Exch. R. 230.

-Smuggling-Being on board smuggling vessel-Knowingly concerned.]-1. It is essential to the offence of participation in smuggling operations by being on board a boot engaging therein that the defendant should have been knowingly concerned in the prohibited acts and such guilty knowledge must be charged and proved by the prosecutor. 2. The words "if he has been knowingly concerned" contained in s. 216 of the Customs Act, R.S.C. c. 48, constitute a condition precedent to the completion of the offence and are not merely an exemption, exception or proviso not necessary to be alleged under Code s. 717 (amendment of 1909). 3. Where the charge to which the prisoner pleaded guilty did not allege that he had been "knowingly concerned" in the prohibited acts, a warrant of commitment in like terms is insufficient and the prisoner is entitled to be discharged on habeas corpus.

The King v. McDonald, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 505 (N.S.).

—Importation of jewellery in Canada—Exemption.]—Where unsatisfactory statements with respect to certain articles of jewellery imported into Canada were made by the owner to the customs authorities who had seized the goods, but the Court, on a reference of the claim, found that upon the evidence before it there was no intention on the part of the claimant to evade the law, the goods were ordered to be restored to the claimant; but he was not allowed his costs.

Greenspan v. The King, 12 Can. Exch. R. 254.

Keeping or concealing goods imported without payment of lawful duties—Penalty.1-Section 197 of the Customs Act of Canada as amended in 1888 is to be construed as making the punishment of fine or imprisonment, therein provided, to be "in addition to any other penalty," applicable as well where the goods unlawfully imported into Canada are found and are thereupon liable to be forfeited and seized, as where they are not found, in which latter event the offender forfeits the value thereof.

O'Grady v. Wiseman, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 332, 9 Que. Q.B. 169.

-Importation of steel rails-Return of duties paid under protest-Interest.]-The suppliants had imported at different times during the year 1892-1893 large quantities of steel rails into the port of Montreal to be used by them as contractors for the construction of the Montreal Street Railway. The Customs authorities claimed that the rails were subject to duty, and refused to allow them to be taken out of bond until duties, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $53,213.54, were paid. The suppliants paid the same under protest. After the decision by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of the case of the Toronto Railway Co. v. The Queen [1896] A.C. 551, and some time during the year 1897, the Customs authorities returned the amount of the said duties to the suppliants. The suppliants claimed that they were entitled to interest on the same during the time it was in the hands of the Crown, and they filed their petition of right therefor:-Held, 1. That as the duties were paid at the port of Montreal, the case had to be determined by the law of the Province of Quebec. 2. That on the particular question as to interest at issue in this case the law of the Province of Quebec is the same as the laws of the other provinces of the Dominion. 3. That as the moneys wrongfully collected for duties were repaid to the suppliants before the action was brought there was no debt on which to allow interest from the commencement of the suit. If at the time of the commencement of the action the Crown was not liable for interest claimed it could not be made liable by the institution or commencement of an action. Laine v. The Queen, 5 Ex. C.R. 128, and Henderson v. The Queen, 6 Ex. C.R. 39, distinguished.

-Lex fori-Lex loci-Interest on duties improperly levied-Mistake of law-Repetition-Presumption as to good faith-Arts. 1047, 1049 C.C.]-The Crown is not liable, under the provisions of Articles 1047 and 1049 C.C., to pay interest on the amount of duties illegally exacted under a mistaken construction placed by the customs officers upon the Customs Tariff Act. Wilson v. The City of Montreal (24 L.C. Jur. 222) approved, Strong, C.J., dubitante. Per Strong, C.J .: - The error of law mentioned in Arts. 1047 and 1049 C.C. is the error of the party paying and not that of the party receiving. Money paid under compulsion is not money paid under error within the terms of those articles. The Toronto Railway Co. v. The Queen, 4 Can. Ex. C.R. 262; 25 Can. S.C.R. 24; [1896] A.C. 551, discussed. -The Customs Act-Infraction-Smuggling-Preventive officer-Salary-Share of condemnation money.]-The suppliant had been empowered to act as a preventive officer of customs by the Chief Inspector of the Department of Customs. The appointment was verbal, but a short-hand writer's note of what took place between the Chief Inspector and the suppliant, at the time of the latter's appointment, showed the following stipulation to have been made and agreed to as regards the suppliant's remuneration: "Your remuneration will be the usual share allotted to seizing officers; and if you have informers, an award to your informers and you must depend wholly upon the seizures." Certain regulations in force at the time provided that, in case of condemnation and sale of goods or chattels seized for smuggling, certain allowances or shares of the net proceeds of the sale should be awarded to the seizing officers ana informers respectively:-Held, that where the Minister of Customs had not awarded any allowance or share to the suppliant in the matter of a certain seizure and sale for smuggling, the Court could not interfere with the Minister's discretion.

-Customs Act-Infringement by importation of cattle without payment of duty-Intention.]-(1) Where cattle are liable to the payment of duty upon importation into Canada, the bringing of such cattle to a point within two or three miles south of the boundary line between Canada and the United States whence they may stray into Canada, constitutes an element in the offeace of smuggling. (2) Where cattle are brought into Canada for pasturage, or to a point from which they themselves may stray into Canada for pasturage, if the owner in Canada exercises any control over them, a contravention of the Customs Act is complete, more especially where the control exercised is that of putting Canadian brands upon such cattle.

-Smuggling-Penalties-Averments in information. 1-In an information for smuggling, laid under the provisions of s. 192 of the Customs Act, it is a sufficient aver-ment to allege that "the defendants in order to defraud the revenue of Canada did evade the payment of the duties upon said dutiable goods imported by them into Canada; and did fraudulently import such goods into Canada without due entry inwards of such goods at the Custom house," It is not necessary to charge the defendant with all the offences mentioned in such section; and the information is good in law if it sets out any one of the offences mentioned in the said section, 2 In such an information where it is sought to recover, in addition to the value of the goods smuggled, a sum equal to the value of the goods, it is necessary to allege that the goods were "not found." The offender is only liable to forfeit twice the value of the goods, when the goods are not found but their value has been ascertained. 3. The penalty "not exceeding two hundred dollars and not less than fifty dollars." mentioned in s. 192 of the Customs Act as recoverable before "two justices of the peace or any other magistrate having the powers of two justices of the peace," cannot be sued for in the Exchequer Court of Canada. Barraclough v. Brown [1897] A.C. 615 referred to. 4. While a claim for penalties in respect of goods smuggled more than three years before the filing of the information would be prescribed under s. 240 of the Customs Act, where the goods have been seized by a Customs officer, such seizure is to be deemed a commencement of the proceeding within the meaning of s. 236.

The King v. Lovejoy, 9 Can. Exch. R

-Customs Act-Penalty under-To whom payable.] — A penalty imposed by the police magistrate of the city of Saint John for harbouring smuggled goods under section 197 of the Customs Act (Rev. Stat. Can. c. 32) forms part of the consolidated revenue of Canada, and is payable to the receiver-general, and not to the chamberlain of the city of Saint John, under 52 Vict. c. 27, s. 50.

The King v. McCarthy, 28 N.B.R. 41.

—Importation in original packages—False entry—Burden of proof.]—Where a seizure is made of goods imported into Canada, on the ground that while the goods were stated in the entry papers to be imported in the original packages, they were not so imported in fact, if the claimant declines to accept the minister's decision confirming the seizure and obtains a reference of his claim to the Court the burden of proof is upon the claimant to show the bona fides of the entry in dispute.

—Assessment—Estimating by guess—Concurrent findings.]—The evidence being insufficient to enable the trial Judge to ascertain the damages claimed for breach of contract, he stated that he was obliged to guess at the sum awarded and his judgment was affirmed by the judgment appealed from. The Supreme Court of Canada was of opinion that no good result could be obtained by sending the case back for a new trial and, therefore, allowed the appeal and dismissed the action, thus reversing the concurrent findings of both Courts below. Armour, J., however, was of opinion that the proper course was to order a new trial.

In an action brought after his death by his universal legatee to recover damages for loss of the use of the ice house during the unexpired term of the lease: -- Held, affirming the judgment appealed from, that the reservation in the first action did not preserve any further right of action in consequence of the expropriation, and, therefore, the plaintiff's action was properly dismissed by the Courts below, as, in such cases, all damages capable of being foreseen must be assessed once for all and a defendant cannot be twice sued for the same cause. -Speculative damages - Publishing company-Contract to supply books, etc., for a fixed period-Liquidation of company-Damages for residue of period.]-On payment of a subscription fee to a publishing company, certificates were issued by the company to the subscribers, guaranteeing to such purchasers the privilege for five years of purchasing all books, magazines and periodicals and other printed matter at the price quoted in the company's catalogues and bulletins, but subject to ordinary trade fluctuations, and undertaking to act for such subscribers as purchasing agents, at the lowest possible prices, for books, etc., not contained in such catalogue. The certificates were not transferable, and were only available to subscribers for their personal and family use and benefit. Before the expiry of the above period a liquidation order was obtained for the winding-up of the company, whereupon certain subscribers claimed to be placed on the list of contributors for damages alleged to have been sustained by them through the company's failure to supply them with books, etc., during the residue of the term:—Held, that only nominal damages were recoverable, for beyond this they were of too speculative or conjectural a character to be ascertained, nor could any part of the subscriptions be recovered back on the ground of it being unearned. Village of Brighton v. Austin (1892), 19 A.R. 305, referred to.

-Contract-Breach-Measure of damages -Burden of proof.]-In an action claiming damages for breach of contract the measure of damages is the profit which plaintiff might reasonably look for in performing his contract, had he not been prevented from doing so. Plaintiff gave evidence that he estimated his profit at from 15% to 20% on the total amount of the contract, or from $75 to $80, but on cross-examination he failed to give any data by which the accuracy of his estimate could be tested, while the person who actually did the work gave evidence that his profit was about $35:-Held, that the burden was on the plaintiff to show grounds which would would justify the Court in adopting his estimate, and that. in the absence of such evidence, the amount of damages allowed must be reduced from $70, at which it was fixed by the trial Judge, to $35. The trial Judge added to plaintiff's estimated profit an allowance for plaintiff's time while the contract existed. Held, that he was wrong in doing so as time was one of the elements forming the basis upon which the profit was to be calculated. Held, also, as to material provided by plaintiff for the purpose of carrying out his contract, that he could only be allowed damages in so far as the material was shown to be useless for any other purpose.

-Contract-Substituted contract-Consideration-Measure of damages. 1-In an action to recover an amount claimed under a contract to provide material required for re-seating a church, plaintiff's right to recover depended upon whether the words "seat" and "lining" in the contract should be read with a comma or a hyphen between them. -Nervous s were drivin; vehicle which negligence (he would only be bound to furnish the material of which the seats were to be constructed. The trial Judge decided in favour of the reading contended for by the defendant (the comma, as in the contract) on the ground that to admit plaintiff's construction would be to ignore the actual reading, and to give an unusual and improper meaning to the word "lining," and to materially vary the terms of the contract:—Held, that it was not possible to dissent from this contraction. The performance by a contractor of that which he is already bound to do under the terms of his contract will not, in itself, be consideration for a promise to pay for the work was done as extras. Quære, whether the settlement in this way of a bona fide dispute between the parties, as to the meaning of the terms used, would con stitute sufficient consideration for the alleged promise to pay. Semble, that if the plaintiff relied upon a new promise made by defendant after breach, defendant would be entitled to counter-claim for breach of the original contract, and that the measure of damages would be the amount which plaintiff would be entitled to recover under the amended contract. Held, that there was no reason for sending the case back for trial on a theory which neither party seemed to have considered. Dempster v. Bauld, 37 N.S.R. 330.

-Reduction-Consent-New trial.]-The Court of Appeal pronounced judgment on the 4th April, 1905, dismissing the defendant's appeal except upon the question of damages. It was held that the damages assessed by the jury were excessive, and a new trial was ordered unless the plaintiff would consent to a reduction. certificate of this judgment not having issued, the Court on the 2nd June, 1905, reconsidered the matter, and, acting under Rule 786, directed a new trial confined to the question of the amount of damages:-Held, following Watt v. Watt, [1905] A.C. 115, that the Court has no jurisdiction, without the defendant's consent, to make the new trial dependent upon the consent of the plaintiff to reduce the damages. Hockley v. -Nervous shock-Impact.]-The plaintiffs were driving on a highway in an enclosed vehicle which owing, as was found, to the negligence of the defendants, was struck by a moving car of the defendants, pushed a short distance sideways, and struck on the other side by another car moving in the opposite direction. The plaintiffs suffered no visible bodily injuries except slight bruises, but complained of mental or nervous shock, and a jury assessed damages therefor:—Held, that damages of this kind were not recoverable notwithstanding the impact and the bodily injuries. -Measure of damages-Natural gas leases-Reservation.]-By agreement and conveyance executed in April, 1891, by the plaintiffs and one of two appellant companies, and afterwards in 1894 assigned to the other of them, the plaintiffs, who carried on an extensive business of quarrying stone and burning lime on their property, sold, and the two companies successively acquired, various gas leases, gas grants, and gas wells theretofore held by the plaintiffs. These gas leases conferred on the holders the exclusive right to explore and drill the lands to which they related, but which were not demised thereby, for subterranean or natural gas which had been discovered to be useful both as an illuminant and as fuel, and to set up and use the necessary machinery for reduc-ing the said gas into their possession and control. The transaction included the following clause: "It is understood that the parties of the first part reserve gas enough to supply the plant now operated or to be operated by them on said property." Shortly after the assignment of 1894 the assignee company cut off the supply of gas theretofore enjoyed by the plaintiffs under the said reservation clause and refused further supply; and the plaintiffs thereupon procured the gas required for their plant by the acquisition from independent sources of other gas leases and by the construction of works necessary to obtain the same. In an action for damages caused by the deprivation of gas against both companies:-Held, that on the true construction of the reservation clause the companies were successively bound to supply from the gas obtained by them to the plaintiffs a sufficient amount to operate their plant, varying according to its requirements:-Held, also, overruling the Court below, that the measure of damages recoverable by the plaintiffs was the cost of procuring the gas to which they were entitled and not the price at which the substituted gas when procured could have been sold; and that, as they had sold the leases and works used in procuring the substituted gas for more than they cost, they were entitled only to nominal damages. Erie County Natural Gas and Fuel Company v. Carroll, [1911] A.C. 105.

—Injury to property—Future damages — Indemnity.]—The plaintiff in an action claiming damages to his property from the adjoining owner by construction of a new house cannot require the defendant to agree to indemnify him against future damages and to execute a hypothee in his favour for the purpose, especially when he does not allege and prove that he is entitled to the same by operation of law or by special contract.

Onofrio v. La Patrie Publishing Co., 8 Que. P.R. 365 (Loranger, J.).

-Fraud and misrepresentation - Measure of damages-Difference between purchaseprice and fair value-Loss of profits in operation.]-The plaintiffs alleged that they were induced to purchase from the defendant two creameries, relying upon certain representations of the defendant and his agent as to the output, expenses, and profits of the creameries for the year 1904-5, which were, as they alleged, false and fraudulent. By the judgment in the action, a reference was directed to ascertain and state what damages, if any, the plaintiffs had sustained by reason of the fraud referred to in the pleadings:—Held, that the true measure of the damages was the difference between the purchase-price of the creameries and their actual value at the time they were purchased; and that damages for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs in the operation of the creameries should not have been allowed by the Master upon the reference. The purchase-price of the creameries was $4,-830, and the Master found that their fair value at the time of the purchase was $900, and he assessed the damages (irrespective of loss in operation) at $3,930, the difference between these two sums, and interest thereon from the date of payment of the purchase-price. Held, upon the evidence, that the creameries had no value as creameries at the time they were sold to the plaintiffs, and that there was no reason to differ from the finding of the Master that $900 was the fair value of the land, buildings, and machinery. Held, also, upon the evidence that, instead of a profit as was represented, there was a considerable loss in operating the creameries in 1904-5. To show this, the plain-tiffs were not obliged to trace to the last pound the quantity of butter that went out from the two creameries; there would have been no doubt as to that matter, had the books of the defendant not been destroyed; and the plaintiffs were warranted in invoking the maxim omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem. Report of the Master affirmed, except as to the damages for loss in operation.

es for loss in operation. Lamont v. Wenger, 22 O.L.R. 642. —Breach of contract—Fraud—Exemplary damages.]—Where there has been a fraud committed in the breach of a contract the injured party has a right of action for the recovery of all damages resulting therefrom, whether or not they could have been reasonably foreseen at the time of the contract. (2) Damages ought not to be refused merely on account of difficulty in fixing the exact amount, in the absence of precise proof; in such a case, it is the only of the Judge to make an assessment of the damages in accordance with his appreciation of the evidence.

DEBENTURES.

Negotiation of, without authority and without value received-Negligence-Innocent holder for value.]-A debenture of the defendants, payable to bearer, sealed with their corporate seal and signed by their chairman and secretary, was allowed to get into circulation without the authority or knowledge of the defendants, and without their receiving any value therefor. It was finally purchased by the plaintiff before maturity, who took it in good faith and gave full market value for it. In an action brought upon two of the interest coupons attached to the debenture, the learned Judge who tried the cause asked the jury the two following questions (among others) which were answered in the affirmative: "Did the bond come into the hands of the plaintiff as an innocent holder for value through the carelessness and neglect of the defendants, or those of their officers whose duty it was to have the bonds properly executed and issued, and in which hands or custody the bond's should be detained until delivered to bond fide purchasers?" "Do you find that the board of school trustees, or their officers, were guilty of such negligence in connection with this bond, as that in your opinion it would be inequitable and unjust that the defendants should be permitted as against the plaintiff to set up a defence that the bond was not duly executed, or the issue thereof authorized by the board?" A verdict was thereupon entered for the plaintiff:-Held, that the verdict was rightly so entered of vendor.]—The plaintiff transferred to the defendant the stock in trade and goodwill of his business as a merchant, and received as consideration therefor a section of land, with the horses and implements thereon, and a sum of money. The plaintiff sued for damages for deceitful representations in regard to the land and the chattels:-Held, upon the evidence, that the transaction was not one in which the parties were equally ignorant of the conditions and value of what they were getting, and understood that they were taking chances and dealing at their peril; the plaintiff had never seen the land, and had no independent information about it; the defendant did make certain representations about it, and the plaintiff acted apon some of them at least. The representations alleged were: 1. That the land was first-class farm land; 2, that it was all fit for cultivation; 3, that it was all good heavy soil, except 40 acres, which was rough, but first-class pasture land; 4, that, with the exception of wells, there was no water on the land. Held, that the first and third representations were in regard to matters of opinion and were mere commendation, not justifying an inference of fraudulent intent; but the second and fourth representations were untrue and in regard to matters of such moment that they must be regarded as fraudulent. Held, also, that misrepresentations alleged as to the condition, age, and value of 6 horses upon the land, could not be regarded as proved; value is a matter of opinion; the plaintiff must have understood what their condition was; and, if their ages were misrepresented, it was hardly material, in view of all the circumstances. Damages assessed for land not at present fit to be cultivated and for water on the land in excess of what was represented. Strome v. Craig, 15 W.L.R. 197 (Man.).

-New trial-Excessive damages-Conspiracy - Fraudulent representations.]-Where on the trial of an action claiming damages for injuries suffered by reason of an alleged conspiracy on the part of defendants to injure plaintiffs in reputation and otherwise, the jury awarded damages to one of the plaintiffs which were clearly excessive, and awarded to the other plaintiff damages including elements which had no relevancy to the cause of action, the Court ordered the verdict set aside and a new trial, unless both parties consented to a reduction of damages. There was evidence which, if submitted to the jury, would show an agree-ment to which all of the defendants were parties, in pursuance of which fraudulent representations were made to one of the plaintiffs to induce her to abandon the emplayment in which she was then engaged and accept an engagement in connection with an enterprise of a fictitious character: -Held, that this embraced all the elements necessary to an action for deceit, and complied with the definition of a conspiracy, and that the means used need not be criminal, it being enough if they involved the commission of an actionable wrong.

Cullen v. The Canadian Detective Bureau, 44 N.S.R. 322.

-Fraud and misrepresentation - Sale of creameries-Measure of damages.] - A Master was directed to ascertain and state what damages, if any, the plaintiffs had sustained by reason of the fraud referred to in the pleadings. The fraud was in respect of two creameries which, the plaintiffs alleged, they were induced to purchase relying upon representations of the defendant as to the output, expenses, and profits of the creameries for 1904-5, which were, as they alleged, false and fraudulent. The purchase-price was $4. 830. The Master found that the value of one creamery was $367.50 and of the other $532.50, and allowed as damages the difference between the aggregate of these two sums and the purchase-money, viz., $3,930, with interest, and also allowed as damages $3,440.14, which he ascertained to be the loss sustained by the plaintiffs in the operation of the creameries after the purchase:-Held, that the true measure of damages was the difference between the purchase-price and the actual value at the time of purchase; and that the report, in so far as it allowed damages for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs in the operation of the creameries, must be set aside.

Demurrer—Action of deceit—Misrepresentation as to future event.]—In an action of deceit it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to allege a misrepresentation by defendant as to something to take place in the future, as, for example, that a store to be leased by the plaintiff from the defendant would be vacant at a certain date; and, if, in such a case, the plaintiff's inability to get possession of the store at such date was caused by the defendant having given a prior lease to another party, the statement of claim should specifically allege the concealment of such prior lease as the ground of action

Smythe v. Mills, 17 Man. R. 349.

—Misrepresentation—Damages.]—The only damages recoverable in an action of deceit based upon false representations inducing the plaintiff to purchase property are the difference between the price paid for the thing purchased and its real value, and when the plaintiff has sold the property at a profit he can recover no damages, although he has failed to realize the profit he could reasonably have expected if the representations had been true.

Rosen v. Lindsay, 17 Man. R. 251, and Steele v. Pritchard, 17 Man. R. 226.

-Damages-Costs of uselessly defending suit.1-The plaintiffs, according to the findings of fact, had been induced by the misrepresentations and fraud of the defendants to purchase a horse for $1,200 and to give the defendants their promissory notes therefor, but such notes had been indorsed for value to the Bank of Hamilton before maturity, so that the plaintiffs had no defence to the bank's claim on the notes, and they had ample means of informing themselves on that point. They, however, defended the bank's suit, but unsuccessfully:-Held, that in this action, which was brought to recover damages for the defendant's misrepresentations, the plaintiffs could not add their costs of needlessly defending the bank's suit to their other damages, but must be limited to the amount due on the promissory notes together with the costs of the present action only.

-Equitable action-Default judgment-Appearance after time limited.]-Plaintiffs as heirs of L., claimed as against defendants, who were also heirs of L., partition of certain lands granted by the Crown to L. in 1805, or, in the alternative, a sale of the property and a division of the proceeds. Also a declaration that a grant of the same lands from the Crown to defendants, dated on or about the 23rd August, 1890, was inoperative and void. Shortly after the issue of the writ plaintiffs' solicitor was informed by F. a solicitor, that he had been consulted by defendants, and had advised them that they had no defence, and that the only thing to be done was to have the property divided as cheaply as possible. No appearance having been entered, judgment by default was entered against three of the defendants on June 6th, 1899. Subsequently on the 26th February, 1900, appearance was entered on behalf of all the defendants by G., another solicitor, and a defence was filed and served. Notice of trial was given on behalf of the defer ants for the first day of the September sittings of the Supreme Court at A., and notice was given on behalf of plaintiffs, for the same time, of a motion to set aside the notice of trial, and entry of the same on the docket. on the grounds, among others, that aefault had been marked for want of appearance before an appearance was filed or served, and that the solicitor G., had no authority to appear and defend the action, The latter motion was dismissed with costs, and as the trial was not proceeded with by the plaintiffs, defendants' solicitor obtained an order "that the action be, for want of prosecution, dismissed with costs, to be taxed against plaintiffs, and that judgment be entered for defendants with costs, unless plaintiffs paid the costs of their motion to set aside the notice of trial, to be taxed, and unless plaintiffs gave to defendants security in the sum of $200, by a bond to respond. defendants' costs to be incurred, said bond to be approved of by defendants' counsel, etc." Per Ritchie, J., Graham, E.J., concurring:-Held, that the proceeding being one of an equitable nature to have a grant declared void, as well as for partition, plaintiffs were not entitled under any practice of the Court prevailing immediately prior to October 1st, 1884 (the date at which the Judicature Act, 1884, came into force) to obtain a judgment by default against the defendants as at common law. Held, that the suit must be governed by the same practice as any other equitable action not provided for in O. xiii., Rr. 11 and 13. so far as the defendant against whom judgment by default had not been entered was concerned, the appearance and defence were unobjectionable, and he could appear at any time although not served. Held, that the appearance and defence being good, the notice of trial and entry on the docket were regular, and the trial Judge was right in dismissing the motion to set them aside, and that the appeal on this point must be dismissed with costs. Semble, that even if the appearance and defence were irregular, the motion should have been to set them aside, and not the notice of trial and entry on the docket which followed them. Held, that the notice of trial, given by defendants' counsel, was regularly given under O. xxxiv., R. 11, and that the defendants. having appeared when the cause was called for trial, and plaintiffs having failed to appear, the action was properly dismissed under R. 23, of the same order by compliance with which plaintiffs were enabled to retain their suit, although unusual, were such as it was within the province of the trial Judge to impose. Held, that the order should be amended by adding recitals showing that the cause had been called for trial, and that defendants had appeared, and that plaintiffs had not appeared; and that the appeal from the order should be dismissed, but without costs, the difficulty having been created by want of care on the part of plaintiffs' solicitor in drawing up the order. Held, also, that the action should be dismissed with costs in case the conditions imposed were not complied with. Per Weatherbe, J., and Graham, E.J.:-Held, that the trial Judge was wrong in requiring the bond to be given for costs, to be approved of by defendants' solicitor, and that the order should be varied in that respect.

DEMOLITION.

Destructive fire—Demolition of buildings—Precaution.]—A fire at St. Roch, in the city of Quebec, threatened to assume large proportions and to destroy a valuable part of the city. It was deemed necessary, in order to arrest its progress, to demolish the respondent's house. Circumstances justified this as a measure of prudence and for the public safety in this part of the city. It happened, however, that the fire was extinguished before it reached the house so demolished:—Held, that the demolition was an allowable and lawful act; that the city corporation was obliged to indemnify the respondent for the demolition of his house which would not have been reached by the fire.

Special answer changing nature.

—Special answer changing nature of action—"Res inter alios acta."]—The female plaintiff alleged that in another suit, in which her husband was defendant, the present defendant purchased at sher-iff's sale certain immovables subject to a right of usufruct in her favour during her life, but that the defendant has entered into possession of the property and deprives her of the usufruct; and she asked that defendant be ordered to give up the possession of the property to her, and render her an account of the rents and profits. The defendant, by his plea, admitted that a clause existed in the sheriff's deed, to the effect that the property was sold subject to a right of usufruct in favour of the female plaintiff during her life, but such clause was of the nature of res inter alios acta, and had never been accepted by the female plaintiff, and that the defendant had since protested against the clause and repudiated it,-the female plaintiff not being, in fact, entitled to the immediate usufruct, but only from the death of her husband who was still living. The defendant further pleaded that previous to the sheriff's sale he became hypothecary creditor upon the property in question, by obligations granted to him by the male plaintiff, in which the female plaintiff intervened and re-nounced all her rights upon the property in favour of the defendant. To this the female plaintiff answered that it was the defendant himself who arranged for the sheriff's sale and contrived that the pro-

DISAVOWAL

Action in disavowal—Power of attorney -Form.]—The power of attorney to be furnished by the plaintiff need not be in authentic or legal form.

DISCONTINUANCE.

After counterclaim—Cause of action — Jurisdiction.]—Where the plaintiff discontinues his action after the defendant has delivered a counterclaim, the defendant may proceed with his counterclaim as if it were an action; the plaintiff will then be in the same position as a defendant served with a writ of summons; and if the counterclaim is one which the defendant could assert only by virtue of the plaintiff having come into the jurisdiction and sued the defendant, he should not be allowed to proceed with it as a term of permitting the plaintiff to discontinue.

Dominion Burglary Guarantee Co. v. Wood, 3 O.L.R. 365.

—Nolle prosqui entered as to certain defendants before trial.]—Where a nolle prosequi had been entered as to certain defendants before trial, and a verdiet was afterwards obtained against the remaining defendant, the Judge, who tried the cause, under section 373 of the Supreme Court Act, granted a certificate depriving such first-mentioned defendants of their costs:—Held, that the certificate was authorized by the section in question.

Mellon v. Municipality of Kings, 35 N. B.R. 291.

O'Brien v. O'Brien Brewing & Malting Co., 10 W.L.R. 694 (Y.T.).

—Without offer to pay costs.]—A discontinuance not accompanied by an offer to pay the costs is insufficient and ineffective.

Moon · v. Bullock, 6 Que. P.R. 59 (Doherty, J.).

—Desistment from action by party without attorney's consent.]—A desistment from an action filed by a party without his attorney's knowledge or consent, will not be rejected on motion if no fraua is proved against the parties.

Gauvreau v. Computing Scale Company, 6 Que. P.R. 448 (Curran, J.).

—Intervention in action for damages in quasi-delicts.]—(1) As long as a judgment is not entered upon a discontinuance, third parties can intervene to protect their rights. (2) If a widow who sued for damages for her husband's death according to Article 1056 C.C. desists from her action, the mother of the deceased has the right to intervene in the case.

Gaze v. Dominion Bridge Co., 8 Que. P.R. 181.

-Discontinuance by plaintiff of action as to principal.]-(1) A plaintiff in an hypothecary action cannot, on production of a plea by the defendant that he is not in possession of the hypothecated immovable, file a discontinuance as to his principal demand and move for costs against the defendant on the ground that at the date of the institution of the action, the latter was, according to the cadastre, the apparent proprietor in possession of the property. This fact must be established in the regular way and the plaintiff must therefore proceed to trial for that purpose. (2) Nor can the defendant, by motion, seek a condemnation for costs against the plaintiff who files a discontinuance under the above circumstances.

Piton v. Cantin, 31 Que. S.C. 51.

(Pelletier, J.).

—Inscription for proof and hearing.]—A party who has filed a discontinuance of certain paragraphs, against which his opponent had made an inscription in law, cannot inscribe the case for proof and hearing before acte is given of his discontinuance.

McKeown v. Wright, 8 Que. P.R. 137.

-Abandonment of action-Service-Costs.] -Personal service on defendant of the abandonment of an action before the day on which the writ is returnable is ipso facto valid as it precedes the appearance of the defendant and the instance belongs exclusively to the plaintiff. Demand by plaintiff of acte of his abandonment is not one of the conditions imposed by the Code on its validity as no special formality is prescribed and the party on whom it is served cannot demand its embodiment in a judgment. If the plaintiff has by his action occasioned any costs not taxable under the tariff and which cannot be settled at this stage of the proceedings (before the return of the writ) the defendant can recover the amount as damages by a direct action against the plaintiff.

Lussier v. Tellier, 9 Que. P.R. 113 (Sup.

-Renunciation to judgment-Costs.]-(1) If a plaintiff desists from a judgment based upon grounds not set up in his declaration, the parties stand in the same position which they occupied prior to the readition of said judgment. Plaintiff may then ask the Court for permission to amend his declaration. The costs of such amendment will be determined by the final judgment. (2) The word "proceeding" as used in Art. 255 C.P. concerning discontinuance of suit refers to and includes any procedure adopted by any party to a suit; a defence is included in that word. (3) It is not absolutely necessary that a party should embody in his declaration of discontinuance, that it is made subject to the payment of costs, inasmuch as that is the condition imposed by law upon which alone it can be made.

Bessette v. Equitable Mutual Fire Insurance Co., 10 Que. P.R. 201.

—Abandonment—Judgment.] — When the plaintiff abandons his action and tenders the costs to defendant the latter is entitled to enter up judgment if it does not appear that the tender was accepted and the costs paid or the amount deposited in Court.

Turgeon v. Sévigny, Q.R. 36 S.C. 304.

—Partial confession of judgment—Right of plaintiff to discontinue in part.]—When an in part conditional confession of judgment is not accepted by plaintiff, said confession does not limit or disturb plaintiff's control over his action, which he may discontinue in whole or in part.

Moreau v. Jodoin, 10 Que. P.R. 353.

-Want of prosecution.]-See that Title.

DISCOVERY.

Examination of officer of corporation—
"Right-of-way agent." J—An officer of an incorporated company who is liable to be examined for discovery is one who is engaged in such a capacity that the primary purpose and effect of his engagement is to delegate to him a portion of the company's authority and to constitute him its agent to deal with third parties within the scope of his authority; and if the delegation of the authority is a mere incident in the performance of his duties he may not be examined. Under Rule 201 an officer of the company liable to examination may not be examined beyond the jurisdiction. Order made for the examination of a railway "right-of-way agent" within the jurisdiction could be effected.

Powell v. Edmonton, Yukon & Pacific Ry

Co., 2 Alta. R. 339.

Examination of officer of defendant companies.]-Plaintiffs supplied gas to their customers in Hamilton. Defendants were three companies, also operating in Hamilton, and plaintiffs alleged, supplying or using electricity. Plaintiffs complained that defendants, by allowing electricity to escape, had set up electrolytic action and damaged plaintiff's gas pipes, etc., and claimed damages and an injunction. Plaintiff examined for discovery one Hawkins, as an officer of all three defendant companies, and upon the examination Hawkins refused to answer several questions, and plaintiffs moved for an order compelling him to answer. Riddell, J., held, that Hawkins should disclose who his employers were and the terms of his employment; give information as to kind, conductivity, etc., of defendant's wires, number of cars run, their average mileage, and generally all information that would enable an expert to compute or determine the amount, tension, etc., of electrical current; and the means adopted to prevent the escape of electricity; that plaintiffs were entitled to all the information defendants had, and the officer examined must inform himself. Harris v. Toronto Electric Light Co., 18 P.R. 285; Clarkson v. Bank of Hamilton, 9 O.L.R. 317, followed. That, if he did not know, he should say who did, that that person might be examined, specified, even if his attorney has not received notice of said proceedings.

Tremblay v. Hénault, 12 Que. P.R. 81.

-Examination for discovery-Refusal to answer — Attachment.] —An examination for discovery should be confined to the matters in question in the action, and should be governed by the rules of evidence. Any evidence that may be material on any question arising for the decision of the tribunal trying the cause is a proper subject for examination. Where the refusal to answer a question on an examination for discovery raises a more or less fine point of law, such party should be ordered to attend and answer before attachment proceedings are taken.

—Production of documents—Evidence exclusively in support of case of party producing.]—A party to an action is not entitled to discovery of the evidences in the possession of the opposite party which exclusively relate to the case of the latter, and the truth of a statement to that effect respecting any particular document made in the affidavit on production of documents sworn to by one party cannot be questioned on an application by the opposite party to compel production of that document.

Von Ferber v. Enright, 19 Man. R. 383.

—Right of a defendant to examine another defendant.]—A defendant who, in his defence, submits completely to the relef sought by the plaintiff, neither denying nor admitting the allegations of the statement of claim, is not a "party adverse in point of interest" to another defendant, who disputes the plaintiff's rights, within the meaning of Rule 387 of the King's Bench Act, and the latter, therefore, cannot, under that Rule, examine the former for discovery, as the pleading do not raise any issue between them. Moore v. Boyd (1881), 8 P.R. 413, not followed. Fonseca v. Jones, 19 Man. R. 334.

-Officer of corporation.]-Held, that the plaintiff could not, after examining an officer of the defendant corporation for discovery under Rule 387 of the King's Bench Act, require another officer of the corporation to attend for a similar examination when the information desired could have been obtained from the first officer examined. Dill v. Dominion Bank (1897), 17 P.R. 488, not followed.

Brown v. London Fence Limited, 19 Man. R. 138.

-Examination for-Interrogatories.]—A party may be required to answer interrogatories delivered pursuant to Rule 407B of the King's Bench Act, as enacted by s. 2, of c. 17 of 5 & 6 Edw. VII., notwithstanding that he has also been ordered to attend and be examined for discovery under Rule 387. Dobson v. Dobson (1877), 7 P.R. 256. followed.

-Officer of corporation.]—In an action against a city corporation for damages occasioned by the negligence of an employee of the waterworks department of the city in discharging his duty of examining a water meter in the plaintiff's premises, the plaintiff has a right, under Rule 387 of the King's Bench Act, to examine for discovery a water meter inspector of the city as an officer of the corporation.

—Interrogatories—Service — Absentee.]—
Art. 85 C.P.Q. which provides that in any case in which one of the parties to an action has, pending the proceedings, left the province or has no domicile therein, any order, notice or other document can be served on him at the prothonotary's office does not apply to a summons to reply sur faits et articles. Thus, interrogatories sur faits et articles will not be considered as admitted by, or established against an absentee if they have been served on him at the prothonotary's office especially if his residence is known.

-Ordering particulars. J-See Particulars.

Defamation-Justification-Immorality -Disclosure of name of paramour.]-The defendants having in their newspaper charged the plaintiff with immorality, he sued them for libel, and the defendants pleaded that the charge was true. plaintiff having required particulars, the defendants set forth that he lived at a house of ill-fame; that he lived at a particular place in adultery; that a child was born to the woman with whom he lived: and that he brought to his house and kept with the members of his far ily a woman who had lived in a house of ill-fame. The plaintiff, being examined for discovery, admitted that he had lived in adultery with a woman who had previously lived in a house of ill-fame, and that she bore a child of which he was not the father, but denied the other allegations of the particulars:--Held, that the plaintiff was bound to disclose the name, although such disclosure might injure her.

Macdonald v. Sheppard Publishing Co., 19 O. Pr. 282.

-Examination for-Second trial-Ont. Rule 439.]-A party to an action may be orally examined before the trial touching the matters in question: Rule 439:-Held, that a trial which has proved abortive by the disagreement of the jury or by the granting of a new trial is not a trial within the meaning of the Rule. Leitch v. Grand Trunk Railway Co. (1888-90), 12 P.R. 541, 671, 13 P.R. 369, considered. Where the defendant had not been examined before the first trial, and the judgment thereupon had been set aside, and a new trial ordered, the plaintiff was allowed to examine the defendant before the second trial. Semble, that if there had been an examination of the defendant before the first trial, a second examination might be an abuse of the process of the Court.

Clarke v. Rutherford, 1 O.L.R. 275.

-Examination of plaintiff resident abroad -Place of examination within jurisdiction -Order-Discretion.]-The plaintiff resided at Cleveland, in the State of Ohio, and the defendant and solicitors for both parties in the county of Oxford, Ontario, where also the cause of action arose:-Held, that the local Judge for that county had jurisdiction under Rule 477 to make an order, upon the application of the defendant, requiring the plaintiff to attend for examination for discovery at Windsor, Ontario; that it was unnecessary for the defendant to show special circumstances to obtain such an order; that it was a proper exercise of discretion to name Windsor, as a p purpos took j situati Lick Lick v. Rivers, 1 O.L.R. 57.

-Examination of plaintiffs-Specific performance-Denial of contract-Tender -Financial means.]-In an action for the specific performance of an alleged contract for the sale and purchase of a vessel for $5,000, one-half of which was to be paid in cash at the execution of the bill of sale and delivery of the vessel, and credit given for the remainder of the purchase money without any security upon the vessel or otherwise, the plaintiffs alleged a tender to the defendants of $2,500 in payment of the down instalment. Defences in denial of the contract and of fraud were among others, set up:-Held, that as the defendants absolutely refused to carry out the contract, and denied their obligation to do so, the question whether there had been a tender in fact was immaterial, in an equity action such as this; and, therefore, the plaintiffs were not obliged upon examination for discovery to answer questions as to the source from which they had obtained the money alleged to have been tendered. The defendants also sought to examine the plaintiffs as to their means to show that they were persons of no means, which, it was contended, would be a circumstance to induce the Court to refuse to adjudge specific performance, even if the contract were proved. Held, that the defendants were not entitled to such discovery, no such issue being raised upon the record, and it not being alleged that the contract was entered into upon the belief or representation that the plaintiffs were persons of means. Certain parts of the statements of defence stating the plaintiffs' want of means and that the alleged tender was only a pretended one, were considered irrelevant, but were not struck out, because the plaintiffs, had pleaded over.

Bentley v. Murphy, 2 O.L.R. 665.

-Examination of party-Appointment -Service-Enlargement-Default of attendance.]-The plaintiff obtained from the proper officer an appointment for the examination for discovery of the defendant; the defendant's solicitor was served with a copy of the appointment more than forty-eight hours before the time appointed for the examination, but the defendant himself was not served. At the appointed time and place the plaintiff's solicitor attended before the officer, but neither the defendant nor his solicitor attended, and the officer enlarged the appointment till the next day (the 7th), and on the 7th, the defendant still not having been served, and neither he nor his solicitor attending, the officer enlarged the appointment till the 8th. On the 7th the defendant was served with the appointment for the 8th and with a subpœna, and was paid his conduct money, and his solicitor was on the 7th notified by letter of the enlargement till the 8th:—Held, that the defendant was in default for not attending for examination on the 8th. Ontario Rules 443 and 446 construed.

Reid v. Walters, 19 O. Pr. 310.

— Action for maintenance—Criminating answers.]—Maintenance is an indictable offence in this province; and in an action to recover damages for maintenance, the plaintiff is not entitled to obtain from the defendants upon examination for discovery such answers as would tend to subject them to criminal proceedings. In such an action no discovery of the matters charged could be had which would not involve the defendants in matters leading up to the offence; and therefore the examination should not be allowed to take place at all.

Hopkins v. Smith, 1 O.L.R. 659.

-Documents relating to plaintiffs' title-Protection.] - The plaintiffs' manager made an affidavit on production of documents in which he objected to produce a certain agreement (referred to in the statement of claim) between the plaintiffs and their assignors whereby the property in question in the action was assigned to the plaintiffs, on the ground that such document "relates exclusively to the title of the plaintiffs and to the case of the plaintiffs in this action, and not to the case of the defendants, nor does the said document tend to support the defendants, case, nor does it, to the best of my knowledge, information, and belief, contain anything impeaching the case of the plaintiffs' :- Held, not sufficient to protect the document from production. —Reading depositions at trial.]—If an appointment is taken out for the examination for discovery of an ex-officer of a corporation, and the corporation's solicitor does not attend, and gives notice that he will object to the deposition being received at the trial:—Held, following Osler, J., in Leitch v. Grand Trunk Railway Company (1890), 13 P.R. 369, that it should not be received.

Bank of B. C. v. Oppenheimer, 7 B.C.R.

-Examination of ex-officer of corporation -Reading depositions at trial-Practice.] —On an examination for discovery of an ex-officer of a corporation, the corporation's counsel attended and objected to certain questions being put:—Held, that the deposition was admissible at the trial. Walkley v. City of Victoria, 7 B.C.R. 481.

-Examination for discovery-Nature of-Whether or not cross-examination allowed.]-Upon the examination for discovery of the defendants certain questions were objected to on the ground that they were in the nature of cross-examination. examination was adjourned for the purpose of bringing the matter before a Judge in Chambers, and on May 30th, 1900, Martin, J., made an order requiring the defendants to answer the questions objected to. The defendants appealed to the full Court. Owing to some doubt as to the construction to be placed on the rules for examination for discovery, on the 15th of June, 1900, Rule 703 was amended expressly sanctioning cross-examination. The appeal was argued before the full Court on the 17th September:-Held, dismissing the appeal, that the examination for discovery under Rule 703 (even before the amendment) was in the nature of a crossexamination, but limited to the issues raised in the pleadings. Carroll v. The Golden Cache Mines Company (1899), 6 B.C. 354; 35 C.L.J. 208, overruled. The amendment of 15th June, 1900, is retroactive —Examination of opposant—Dismissal of opposition—Art. 651 C.P.]—Held, that a motion merely asking for the examination of the opposant, without asking for the dismissal of the opposition after such examination, will not be granted.

Hogue v. McConnell, 3 Que P.R. 387.

—Action for wrongful dismissal and libel — Relevancy.]—The plaintiff had as a member of the medical board of the defendants, recommended a certain woman as nurse, and she was employed by the defendants. Subsequently the defendants having been informed that the plaintiff had introduced the woman under an assumed name and had previously been living in adultery with her, dismissed the plaintiff from their medical board, and withdrew permission to him to deliver lectures to the nurses, by a resolution of their board of directors, in which the grounds of their action were stated to be that the plaintiff had "recommended as a nurse a woman who was not a fit and proper person for the position, and had in doing so done injury to the hospital, and for other reasons" not specified in the resolution. The plaintiff sued for wrongful dismissal and for libel. In their defence the defendants set up that the alleged libel was privileged and that they had received information to the effect that the plaintiff had been living in adultery with the woman in question some time previous to his appointment. Upon his examination for discovery, the plaintiff was asked several questions as to his former relationship with the woman. These he refuse! to answer. Upon an application to compel him to answer:-Held, that the plaintiff was bound to answer all questions the answers to which tend to show whether or not the woman in question was or was not a fit and proper person to be employed as a nurse, even though the facts sought to be proven had occurred previously to the plaintiff's appointment, and that evidence tending to show that the woman had been living in adultery or leading an immoral life was evidence bearing on that issue, especially as the adultery was alleged to have been committed with the plaintiff himself, and he would therefore be aware of it, and of the fact that the woman was not a fit and proper person when he recommended her appointment.

Daily Co. v. B.C. Market Co., 8 B.C.R. 1.

-Examination for-Appointment-Attendance on-Voluntary taking oath-Refusal to answer questions.]-A party to an action who had been served merely with an appointment for her examination for discovery, attended before a special examiner, voluntarily submitted herself for examination, and was sworn:-Held, that she was precluded from setting up, as a ground for her refusal to answer questions submitted to her, that she had not been served with a subpæna.

Cooke v. Wilson, 3 O.L.R. 299.

-Examination for-Railway company -Engine driver-Consolidated Rule 439.1-An engine driver in the employment of a railway company is an officer thereof within the meaning of Consolidated Rule 439, and may be examined for discovery under the provisions of that Rule.

Morrison v. Grand Trunk Railway Co., 4 O.L.R. 43 (Div. Ct.).

-Books, documents, etc., in possession of debtor-Art. 289 C.P.1-There is no provision of the Code of Civil Procedure whereby a debtor, contesting a demand of assignment made upon him can be ordered to exhibit and give communication, to a creditor, of his books of account, letterheads or any documents or books of whatsoever nature.

Wistar v. Dunham, 5 Que. P.R. 79.

-Affidavit on production-Dual relationship of solicitor - Privilege.]-Where it appeared that certain letters had passed between the defendant in an action and his solicitors therein, who had also acted as his real estate agents, and that in his affidavit on production, he had claimed privilege for such letters:-Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a further affidavit, setting forth and distinguishing what communications had taken place be tween him and his solicitors as such, and as real estate agents, in order to claim privilege for the former, as the latter were not privileged. Moseley v. The Victoria Rubber Co. (1896) 55 L.T.N.S. 482, followed.

Clergue v. McKay, 3 O.L.R. 63.

-Affidavit on production of documents-Materiality-Examination of parties -Scope of-Contents of Document-Costs of lengthy examination.]-The plaintiff alleged a contract of partnership between him and the defendant J, for the promotion of a company to purchase certain bicycle plants, and to carry on a bicycle manufacturing business, etc., and that the defendants R. and C. had maliciously caused a breach of the partnership contract; and the plaintiff claimed a partnership account, and damages for such breach and for conspiracy. It appeared from the examination for discovery of the defendant R. that he obtained written agreements from various companies, either in his own name, or in the names of himself and the defendant C., or in the names of other persons; that these agreements, or some of them, were afterwards assigned to a company which was then incorporated (not a party to this action). The plaintiff alleged that these agreements were, in fraud of his rights, substituted, with variations, for certain agreements previously entered into between the same companies and the defendant J., who was alleged to be the plaintiff's partner in the transactions. The plaintiff also alleged that the defendants R. and C. paid $20, 000 to the defendant J. to induce him to act with them, instead of with the plaintiff, in completing the purchase of the agreements; and it appeared from R.'s examination that he and C. drew a cheque upon their bank account in favour of the defendant J., which was paid:-Held, that the agreements and the cheque and also a certain memorandum prepared by the defendant R. were material to the plaintiff's case, and should be produced or accounted for in the defendants' affidavits on production of documents. 2. That the defendants R. and C. ought not, as a matter of discretion, to be ordered to disclose, upon their examination for discovery, facts which would become material only when the plaintiff should have established his right to recover damages. 3. That the plaintiff was entitled to discovery from the defendants R. and C. as to whether they paid money to J., whether it was their own money or that of other persons, and if the latter, of what persons; and for what it was paid. 4. That the plaintiff was entitled also to discovery as to the amount paid by R. and C. to the M. company for the bicycle branch of their business; it being alleged by the plaintiff that he and J. had obtained an option to purchase it, and that the defendants had substituted a new option therefor, 5. That the plaintiff was entitled to know from C. the nature of the agreements made for the purchase of the properties; if they were in writing, and he had access to them in his capacity of director of the company which was formed, he should inform himself of their contents so as to be able to answer as to them, or should produce copies; but, if he had no right of access, he was not bound to state his mere recollection of them. Semble, that where an examination is unnecessarily long, the costs of it should he entirely disallowed. Decision of Meredith, C.J., varied. Evans v. Jaffray, 3 O.L.R. 327.

-Production of documents-Affidavit -Privilege-Confidential communications -Solicitor and client.]-Where an affidavit on production of documents claims privilege for a correspondence between a solicitor and his client, it must not only state that the correspondence is confidential and of a professional character, but the nature of it must be set forth, without any ambiguity whatever, in order that there may be no doubt as to its being privileged. Where the solicitors were acting as agents for the sale of the defendant's land in question in this action shortly before the first of the letters for which the defendant claimed privilege was written:-Held, that the defendant in order to protect the correspondence should give some more definite description of it than that it was written "in reference to the matters which are now in question in this matters which are low a question." Gardner v. Irvin (1878), 4 Ex. D. 49; O'Shea v. Wood, [1891] P. 286, and Ainsworth v. Wilding, [1900] 2 Ch. 315, followed. Hoffman v. Crerar (1897), 17 P.R. 404, commented on. Clergue v. McKay, 3 O.L.R. 478.

-Production-Correspondence between solicitor and client - Common grantor session of letters by defendant.]-Letters passing between a solicitor and his client, who was the common grantor of the plaintiff and defendant, in respect to the property in dispute, and which had passed into the possession of the defendant from the executor of the client after his decease, were held not privileged from production.

Platt v. Buck, 4 O.L.R. 421.

-Insolvency-Examination of third party -Prothonotary-Review of judgment -Arts. 33, 882-3 C.C.P.]-Under Art. 883 C.C.P. a Judge cannot order a third party to appear before him, or before the prothonotary, to be examined on oath respecting the liquidation of an insolvent estate, but the third party can only be summoned and examined, under Art. 882 C.C.P., as to the schedule and the state of the insolvent's business. An order of summons granted by the prothonotary in the absence of the Judge, under Art. 33 C.C.P., on an application which does not conform to the very terms of Art. 882 C.C.P. is subject to review.

Boggs v. Bennett Lake and Klononke
Navigation Co., Ltd., 8 B.C.R. 353.

-Miners' Union-Witness in dual capacities-One subpœna-Conduct money-Objection as to sufficiency of.]-A miners' union entered an appearance in an action and by statement of defence raised the objection that it was not shown that the defendant was a legal entity capable of being sued:-Held, that the defendant by so pleading must be deemed, before the trial of the action to be a corporation for the purposes of the litigation, and so compellable to make discovery. Where it is sought to examine for discovery in his dual capacity, one of the defendants in an action, who is also secretary of another defendant, two subpænas are not necessary. On an examination for discovery, if the witness has an objection, such as the payment of insufficient conduct money, he should take the objection before the examiner, and he will not be allowed to raise it on an application to compel his attendance to answer questions which he has refused to answer.

-Infant-Evidence-Examination for discovery.]-An infant suing by a next friend may, in the absence of special incapacity, be examined for discovery. Arnold v. Playter (1892), 14 P.R. 399, approved. Judgment of Meredith, C.J., C.P., affirmed by Divisional Court. An order for the examination of an infant for discovery should not give to the examiner a discretion to determine the capacity of the infant; the proper manner of raising any question as to the capacity of the infant is by motion to set aside the appointment, or, if there is no time for that, then upon the motion to commit for non-attendance, so that the question of capacity may be considered by the Court itself.

-Evidence - Discovery - Production - Patent of invention.]-In an action for damages for the infringement of a patent of invention, the defendants pleaded, among other defences, that the invention was in public use prior to the application for letters patent; that the patent was void for want of novelty; that the patent was not at the commencement of the action a valid and subsisting patent; that the plaintiff had not since the expiration of two years from the date of his patent commenced, and after such commencement continuously carried on in Canada the manufacture of the patented invention; that the plaintiff had after the expiration of one year from the granting of the patent imported or caused to be imported into Canada articles made in accordance with the patent:-Held, that the defendants were entitled to the fullest discovery from the plaintiff, and that he was bound to give information as to agreements and transactions made and carried on between him and certain agents employed by him for the manufacture and sale of the patented invention, especially as to the time at which and the terms upon which the patented invention was manufactured in Canada under the patent; and the plaintiff having refused upon his examination for discovery to answer questions relating to these maters, was ordered to attend for re-examination at his own expense. The plaintiff was also ordered to make and file another affidavit on production, and to produce for inspection statements received by him from such agents.

Parramore v. Boston Manufacturing Co., 4 O.L.R. 627.

—Damages for accident—Railway company—Reports—C.P. 334.]—A company sued in damages on account of an accident may be compelled to produce at the trial all reports of the accident made by its employees in the ordinary course of their business, or of their duty, but not its reports made at the request or instance of its solicitor, in answer to inquiries made to the latter, with a view to and in contemplation of anticipated litigation.

Campbell v. Scott, 5 O.L.R. 233 (Meredith, J.).

—Identification of documents—Sufficiency of description.]—An affidavit of discovery should sufficiently identify documents referred to, as to enable the Court to order their production; the convenient and safe course being to letter or number each document. Where, therefore, an affidavit referred to two sealed parcels of letters marked A and B, and as containing corres pondence between named dates, it was held insufficient.

-Production abroad-Power of Court-Inspection-Demand for, previous to application to Court.]-While the Court may have power to order production abroad of documents here, it will not exercise it except in special circumstances. Where inspection of documents was had by consent, an objection on a summons for an order for inspection subsequently taken out, that a demand in writing for inspection was required by s. 62 of Act 53 Viet. c. 4, to be first made, was overruled as technical-the Court declining to express an opinion upon its correctness-and as entailing costs, while without benefit to the suitors--a result avoided by the Court where pos-

—In action for equitable execution—Right to attack judgment.]—In an action brought by a judgment creditor against the judgment debtors and one L. for the recovery, by way of equitable execution of moneys claimed to belong to the judgment debtors, and to have been fraudulently transferred to L., an inquiry into the circumstances, under which the judgment was recovered, cannot, in the absence of fraud and collusion in the recovery thereof, be insisted upon. A motion that one of the plaintiffs, who, on examination for discovery, had refused to answer questions relating to such circumstances, should be compelled to attend and be examined at his own expense, was therefore refused.

Smith v. McDearmott, 5 O.L.R. 515 (M.C.).

- Examination for - Postponement till prior questions disposed of-Fiduciary relationship - Account. |- The statement of claim displayed a single cause of action based upon the proposition that the individual defendants, under the circumstances of the transactions detailed in it. stood in a fiduciary relation to the defendant company, which prevented them from making any profit out of their purchase of certain businesses afterwards transferred by them for a large sum to the company, and claimed an account, and payment by them of the difference between the aggregate of the price paid by them and what was paid to them. It was admitted that the individual defendants had made a large profit on the sale to the company, and the only matter really in controversy was the fiduciary relationship with the company, and their liability to account for such profit, and if liability existed, the amount for which they were answerable:-Held, that discovery as to the details of the expenditure made by the individual defendants in acquiring the businesses, should be postponed until their liability to account had been established. Bedell v. Ryckman, 5 O.L.R. 670 (D.C.).

-Examination for-Officer of company -Engine driver.]-On application for leave to examine an engine driver for discovery. under Consolidated Rule 439, as an officer of the defendants, in an action under R. S.O. 1897, c. 166, the Fatal Accidents Act: -Held, reversing the decision reported 4 O.L.R. 43, that, inasmuch as the engine driver never was in charge of the train. never assumed the duties of conductor, and never acted for the defendants in relation to the control of the train, so as to make him responsible to the defendants, except for the management of his engine, he was not an officer of the company examinable under that rule.

Roberts v. Fraser, 9 B.C.R. 296 (Martin, J.).

—Examination for discovery — Manitoba King's Bench Act, Rule 379—Disclosing names of witnesses.]—On an examination of a plaintiff for discovery under Rule 379 of the King's Bench Act, he cannot he compelled to disclose the names of his witnesses, or to answer questions as to whether he has received from persons or corporations, not parties to the action, assistance or promise of assistance or indemnity as to the costs of the action, or as to whether he consulted before action with such other persons as to bringing the suit, Gibbins v. Metcalfe, 14 Man. R. 364 (Richards, J.).

-Examination for-Nature of-B.C. Rule 703.]—The examination for discovery under Rule 703 (B.C.) is a cross-examination both in form and in substance, and a party being examined must answer any question the answer to which may be relevant to the issues.

Hopper v. Dunsmuir (No. 2), 10 B.C.R.

-Controverted Elections Ordinance-Examination for discovery.]-Section 18 of the Controverted Elections Ordinance, C. O. 1898, c. 4, provides as follows:-"The said petition and all proceedings thereunder shall be deemed to be a cause in the Court in which the said petition is filed, and all the provisions of the Judicature Ordinance in so far as they are applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this ordinance, shall be ap plicable to such petition and proceedings: '-Held, 1. That the provisions of the Judicature Ordinance respecting examinations for discovery come within the above section, 2. That where particulars of the charges had been ordered the examination could not be compelled until after the delivery of the particulars.

Leblanc v. Maloney (No. 1), 5 Terr. L.R. 341 (Scott, J.).

—Action for penalties.]—It is improper in an action to recover penalties under the Extra Provincial Corporation Act, 63 Vict. c. 24 (O.), to issue the usual praccipe order for production of documents by the &fendants. Such an order having been issued, it was held that the defendants were not bound to file an affidavit and claim privilege, but were entitled to have the order set asi&c.

Johnston v. London and Paris Exchange, 6 O.L.R. 49 (Cartwright, M.C.).

—Production of documents—Place of production.]—Where an order has been made for the production of documents, the documents should be produced in the city or town in which the writ was issued, but a Judge has a discretionary power to order production somewhere else to prevent inconvenience and prejudice to a party's business operations.

Davies, Sayward Co. v. Buchanan, 10 B.C.R. 175.

-Inspection of movable in dispute-C.P. 290.]-Held (by Andrews, J.):-1. That when an action is brought to revendicate a machine which the defendant says is in his factory, but which the bailiff charged with the writ has been unable to find or seize, the Court is without power to order the defendant to exhibit the machine in his premises, because Art. 289 C.P., does not authorize a compulsory entry on the premises of a party. 2. That the Court will not, in such a case, order the defendant to bring the machine to Court, because such a course would subject him to expense which he is not bound to bear. Held (by Routhier, J., on a subsequent application):—3. That nevertheless an order for inspection will be granted in such a case ordering the defendant to bring the machine to Court, when the United Shoe Machinery Company v. Caron, 6 Que. P.R. 100.

Standard Trading Co. v. Seybold, 7 O.L.

- Interrogatories - Answers - Exceptions.]-The bill alleged that a testator by his will bequeathed a fourth part of his estate to be divided equally among the four children of his son, who were living at the date of the will; that the plaintiff was one of the children, and a beneficiary under the will. The defendants, trustees under the will, to interrogatories whether the plaintiff was not one of the four children of the son mentioned in the will, and living at the date thereof, and beneficially entitled thereunder to some and what interest in the estate, after admitting the will, answered that they did not know that the plaintiff was one of the children of the said son, or that she was living at the date of the will, or that she was beneficially entitled to an interest in the estate, although they were so informed and believed:—Held, sufficient. Specific information should be given in answers upon facts within the knowledge of the party answering, and the matter should not be left to inference. Where some exceptions were allowed, and others overruled, costs were allowed to each party.

Crosby v. Taylor, 2 N.B. Eq. 511.

—Interrogatories — Service.]—Interrogatories sur faits et articles should be addressed to the corporation in the suit and not to one of its officers.

Lambe v. Electric Fire Proofing Co. of Canada, 6 Que. P.R. 397 (Sup. Ct.).

-Examination of person for whose benefit action defended.]-Rule 440, providing that a person for whose immediate benefit an action is prosecuted or defended shall be regarded as a party for the purpose of examination, is difficult of application where the plaintiff seeks to examine a person for whose benefit it is said that the action is defended. Where the action was for infringement of a patent of invention for a certain heater, and the statement of defence denied the infringement and set up that the right to manufacture the heater was acquired by the defendants from C. & Co., and it did not appear that anything had been done by C. & Co. in reference to the action before or after it was brought:-Held, that the members of the firm of C. & Co. were not persons for whose immediate benefit the action was defended; at the most, a successful defence might relieve them from a possible liability to the defendants. Moffat v. Leonard, 8 O.L.R. 519 (M.C.).

—Interrogatories—Service out of province—Art. 352 C.P.Q.]—Sub-s. 6 of C.S.L.C. c. 83, s. 63, is repealed. A party who, in Ontario, receives service de faits et articles and at the same time accepts his travelling expenses, thereby consents to appear and answer interrogatories and cannot oppose a motion to take the faits et articles proconfessis if he fails to do so. Faits et articles may be secured, in an action accompanied by a writ of capias, immediately after the petition to quash the capias is filed.

Carbonneau v. Bernard, 6 Que. P.R. 309 (K.B.).

—Examination of former officer or servant.]—There is no power now under Con. Rule 439 (a) as substituted by Con. Rule 1250 for Con. Rule 439 (1) to make an order for the examination of a former officer or servant of a corporation for discovery.

-Examination of persons for whose immediate benefit defended-Action against assignee for creditors-Examination of assignor.]-This action being at issue all all matters were referred to be tried before a referee pursuant to s. 29 of the Arbitration Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 62:-Held, Meredith, J., dissenting, that the reference being before trial and the cause being referred for the purpose of trial, the referee had power to direct one who was a party, or one for whose immediate benefit the action was prosecuted or defended, to be examined for discovery. The action was brought against an assignee for the benefit of creditors to establish the right of the plaintiff to rank upon the estate, which was in fact insolvent. Held, Meredith, J., dissenting, that the assignor was a person for whose benefit the action was defended within the meaning of Rules 440 and 466, and was to be regarded as a party for the purpose of examination and for the purpose of discovery. Garland v. Clarkson, 9 O.L.R. 281

—Prete-nom.]—When the plaintiff in an action is only a prête-nom and not familiar with the facts of the case the party really interested may be examined on discovery.

Barbeau v. Viau, 7 Que. P.R. 151 (Sup. Ct.).

-Officer of company-Conductor of railway train.]-The plaintiff's claim being that, while employed as a brakeman on one of the defendants' trains, he went under one of the cars, by order of the conductor in charge, for the purpose of adjusting some chains, and that, while so engaged, the train was started without warning to him, and caused him injury:-Held, that the conductor, under the circumstances, was an officer of the railway company within the meaning of Rule 387 of "The King's Bench Act," and must attend and submit to be examined as to his knowledge of the matter in question. Moxley v. Canada Atlantic Railway Co. (1887), 15 S.C.R. 145; Leitch v. G. T. R. (1890), 13 P.R. 369, and Dixon v. Winnipeg (1895), 10 M.R. 663, followed. Gordanier v. that the corporation should suggest for examination the officer or servant best qualified to give the desired information, who should prepare himself for obtaining knowledge of all relevant facts. In an action to set aside a chattel mortgage

(Scott, J.).

-Examination of officer of society-Head office and local office.]-An organization consisted of a head office called the "Head Camp,'' and a number of local branches called "subordinate camps," the Head Camp being composed of a delegate from each subordinate camp, and having eleven officers elected therefrom, while the subordinate camps had similar officers elected from their members, the Head Camp having absolute jurisdiction over all members. The members' dues were payable annually to the clerk of the subordinate camp, and handed to the banker, and remitted to the Head Camp, but no clerk or banker could be installed until they had given security to the satisfaction of the head managers of the Head Camp:-Held, that the clerk of a subordinate camp was an officer of the organization, and therefore subject to examination for discovery.

-Examination-Privileged documents -Reports of officials to company respecting accidents.]-(1) Reports made by the employees of a railway company to their superior officers in accordance with its rules concerning an accident resulting in death, and immediately thereafter, are not privileged from production in an action against the company for damages arising out of the accident, if they were made in the discharge of the regular duties of such employees and for the purpose of furnishing to their superiors information as to the accident itself and were not furnished merely as materials from which the solicitor of the company might make up a brief, and an officer of the company who has made an afficavit on production of documents, must, on his examination on such affidavit, answer questions as to whether such reports were made, who received them, and how they came to be made, and generally furnish such information concerning them that the Court may be in a position to decide, on a further motion, whether they are privileged or not. Wooley v. North London Railway Co., (1869), L.R. 4 C.P. 602; and Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia (1876), 2 Ch.D. 644, followed. (2) If any of the information sought on such examination, and to which the plaintiff is entitled, is not within the knowledge of the deponent, he must ascertain the facts and give the information. -Interrogatories-Answer-Reference to answer of co-defendant.]-To an interrogatory to set out particulars of a claim of debt by the defendant against the defendant company, the defendant answered that he believed that schedules (which contained the information sought) attached to the answer of the defendant company were true:-Held, allowing an exception for insufficiency, that the interrogatory relating to a matter within the defendant's knowledge, he should have made positive oath of the correctness of the schedules, or that they were correct to the best of his knowledge, information and belief, accounting for his inability to swear positively to their correctness.

Lodge v. Calhoun, 3 N.B. Eq. 100.

-Estoppel-Plea of fraud.]-The doctrine of estoppel is not an answer to a demand for discovery when the parties seeking to set aside the documents plead fraud, public policy and duress. Whenever discovery is sought in aid of an issue which must be determined at the hearing, a plaintiff is entitled to it to help him prove the issue, but where it is sought in aid of something which does not form part of what he must prove at the hearing, but is merely consequential to it. the right is not absolute but discretional until the plaintiff has established his fundamental right at the hearing.

-Production-Affidavit of documents.1-In an action to recover for services alleged to have been rendered in finding a purchaser for defendant company's property, etc., application was made at Chambers for an order that defendants answer or affidavit "stating what documents relating to any matter in question in this action are or have been in the possession of the defendants, etc." The application was dismissed with costs. It appearing that one of the defendants was a corporation, and must have under its control, all records, proceedings and correspondence, if any existed, relating to communications with the other defendant, and the Court, having regard to all the circumstances, being unable to say that discovery was not necessary, or might not be helpful on the trial: -Held, that the order should have been granted, and the appeal should be allowed with costs, the costs at Chambers to be costs in the cause.

Wood v. Dominion Lumber Co., 37 N.S.

-Order-Endorsement-Default of compliance.]-In order that a party taking out an order for discovery may invoke the provisions of s. 184 J.O. 1893 (J.O. 1898, Rule 198), though only with the object of having a plaintiff's action dismissed or a defendant's defence struck out, the order must be endorsed in accordance with s. 311 (J.O. 1898, Rule 330). Doidge v. Town of Regina (No. 2), 2 Terr. L.R. 337 (Richardson, J.).

-Better affidavit on production.]-When a party to an action has made and filed an affidavit on production of documents in the ordinary form in obedience to an order to produce served upon him, the opposite party must be satisfied with such affidavit unless he can show, from admissions or former statements on oath of the affiant that there is a reasonable suspicion that he has in his possession or power other documents relating to the matters in question. The party seeking discovery cannot get an order for a better affidavit merely by showing that there are in the possession or power of the opposite parties letters or other documents not mentioned in the affidavit which might contain relevant matter, in the face of the statement in the affidavit that there are none such.

Muir v. Alexander, 15 Man. R. 103.

-Privilege-Documents secured in view of possible litigation.]-Documents obtained by the solicitors of the plaintiffs to aid them in forming an opinion as to the legal rights of the plaintiffs in reference to a road, about which a dispute with the defendants had arisen, are privileged from production in an action brought as a result of the opinion formed by the solicitors, notwithstanding that an action was not expressly contemplated when the solicitors were instructed to obtain the necessary information and give the opinion. (2) If such last-mentioned officer on his examination states that he does not know whether or not certain docu-ments exist which, by the rules of the company, should be in existence, he will be ordered to inquire and obtain the information necessary to enable him to answer fully and explicitly. (3) Reports of the various officials and servants of a railway company upon the occurrence of a fire alleged to have been caused by sparks from a locomotive, and as to the condition of the locomotive, if made in the regular course of duty under the rules of the company, are not privileged from production. (4) The fire having occurred on the 20th day of the month, the officer was ordered to produce all re-ports on the condition of the locomotive from the first to the last day of the month.

-Letters - Solicitor and client.]-In an action on a policy on the life of the plain tiff's husband, the defendants filed an affidavit on production, but objected to produce certain letters between a local and the head office on the ground: "That they are privileged, being of a confidential nature and disclosing certain legal points in connection with the defence of this netion." On a motion to compel production. the defendant's manager in an afficavit states that: "It is my custom in the course of business, frequently to write to the head office on matters involving points of law; the head office confer with their general solicitors, receive legal advice from them, and then communicate with me. The letters (in question) are of the same nature as those between solicitor and client, and are, as I am advised and be-lieve, privileged for that reason:—Held, not sufficient, and that the afficavit should state that the letters "came into existence for the purpose of being communicated to the solicitor, with the object of obtaining his advice or enabling him to defend an action." Levy (who carried on business as L. Levy & Co., with her husband L. Levy as manager) admitted that she had certain letters relating to the present action written subsequently to the 16th of February, 1904 (the date on which defendants notified plaintiffs that they, defendants. would no longer be responsible under their guarantee). Plaintiffs having had previous dealings with defendants on the strength of other guarantees given by them, obtained an order for further and better discovery generally. In her affidavit filed pursuant to this order, defendant Rebecca Levy swore that she had no entry in her books of cheques received on account of the previous transactions to that in question in this action: that if the cheques had been indorsed with the name L. Levy & Co. it was done wholly without authority, and she denied having any documents relating to the guarantees. Plaintiffs then obtained an order "that the defengants do within one week from the date hereof make full discovery on oath of all books of account, ledgers, journals, blotters, cash books, bank pass books, promissory notes, cheques, memoranda and other books of account, statements, or writings which now are, or were in use in the business of the defendants in the years 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, with liberty to the plaintiffs to apply again as to the other matters mentioned in the notice of application filed and served herein on the 25th day of July, 1906." Toronto Type Foundry Co. v. Mergenthaler Linotype Co., 8 Que. P.R. 279.

-Reports of officials of company respecting accidents.]—(1) In an action for damages resulting from a railway accident, when negligence is charged, reports of officials of the company as to the accident made before the defendants had any notice of litigation, and in accordance with the rules of the company, are not privileged from production, although one of the purposes for which they were prepared was for the information of the company's solicitor in view of possible litigation. (2) The fact that the reports sought to be withheld were written on forms all headed. "For the information of the solicitor of the company and his advice thereon.' is not sufficient of itself to protect them from production, (3) When the officer of the defendants who made the affidavit on production was cross-examined upon it and as a result made a second affidavit producing a number of documents for which he had claimed privilege in the first, the examination on the first affidavit may be used to contradict the statements in the second, although there was no further examination. (4) An affidavit on produc-tion cannot be contradicted by a controversial affidavit; but, if from any source an admission of its incorrectness can be gathered, the affidavit cannot stand.

-Production-Accident-Negligent driving.1-In an action for injuries to the plaintiff and his carriage, alleged to have been caused by the defendant's servants driving "recklessly and negligently," on an examination of the defendant for discovery, he gave the names of his men who were with his wagon at the time of the accident, but he could not give the weight of the load without his books, which he declined to produce. After the examination was adjourned for the purpose of a motion to compel their production, his solicitors wrote a letter that the defendant's team was coming from a house on a certain street, and that the weight of the load and wagon together was not less than three tons. This the plaintiff declined to accept as sufficient:-Held, that as the plaintiff's case rested on "recklessly and negligently driving horses and a conveyance." which the defendant contended was impossible, on account of the weight of the load; and as it might assist the plaintiff to find out what house the team was coming from and the weight of the load. the books must be produced.

-Foot-note to interrogatories - Exceptions to answer.]-The plaintiffs omitted to add any foot-note to their interrogatories as provided by s. 44 of the Supreme Court in Equity Act, Con. Stat. (1903), c. 112. On a motion to set aside an order setting exceptions to the answer down for hearing:-Held, that by a proper construction of the section, such an omission was equivalent to a requirement that all the defendants should answer all the interrogatories. Where defendants, in answering interrogatories filed as part of the bill, neglect to state their belief, or, when required to set out a document at length, neglect to do so without assigning a sufficient reason, the answer is insufficient, and exceptions on that ground will be allowed. If, however, the interrogatories relate to matters which are altogether irrelevant, the exceptions will be overruled.

-Playing poker in hotel room-No exclusive proprietorship.]-1. A game of poker with incidental betting not conducted in a place declared to be a common gaming house under Cr. Code s. 226, is not illegal. 2. The playing of poker games with money stakes at various times by the same persons in a room ordinarily used for other purposes will not constitute the place a common gaming house under Code s. 226, if none of the players were exclusively bankers in the game, nor had exclusive rights to the room, nor were the chances of the game more favorable to one player than to another.

(2) Proof that persons other than those resident at or belonging to the house, room or place at which the proprietor operates for gain a game of chance or a mixed game of chance and skill, were in attendance there and participated in such game is evidence that such persons "resorted" to such place for the purpose of playing such game, and of the place being a common gaming house under ss. 196 and 198 of the Criminal Code.

The King v. Mah Kee, (N.W.T.), 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 47.

—Indictment, summary trial or summary conviction.]—(1) A prosecution against a keeper of a common bawdy house may be brought either by indictment or under the summary trials procedure, or the keeper may be charged as a vagrant under the summary convictions procedure, and neither the provision nor summary trial nor that for summary conviction abrogates the right of the Crown to bring an indictment. (2) The different methods of procedure with the varying penalties dependent upon the class of tribunal selected are not inconsistent but are alternative.

The King v. Sarah Smith, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 338; 38 N.S.R. 148.

—Keeping common gaming house.]—(1) Code s. 738 (f) which confers the power of summary trial for the offence of keeping "any disorderly house, house of ill-fame or bawdy house," includes as a 'disorderly house,' a common gaming house. (2) The definition of the term ("disorderly house" contained in Code s. 198 (Part XIV. ''Nuisances'') applies to the same term in Code s. 783 (Part LV. ''Summary Trials'') and the rule "noscitur a sociis" does not apply to the interpretation of sub-section (f) of section 783.

The King v. Flynn, (Y.T.), 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 550.

—Keeping a bawdy house—Evidence necessary to prove offence.]—(1) A woman living by herself in a house, cannot be convicted of keeping a bawdy house therein, unless it is shown that one or more other women resort to it for purposes of prostitution. Rex v. Young (1902) 14 M.R. 58, and Singleton v. Ellison, [1895] 1 Q.B. 607, followed. (2) In order to support a conviction for keeping a bawdy house, it is not sufficient to show the bad' reputation of the house and its inmates and that men resorted to it in the night, but actual proof must be given of some act or acts of prostitution, though definite proof of one may be sufficient. Regina v. St. Clair, (1900), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. at p. 557 followed. (3) Section 195 of the Criminal Code, 1892, does not change the law, as it was before the Code, as to the essential ingredients of the offence of keeping a bawdy house, and it is intended merely to define the nature of the premises within which a bawdy house may be kept, and not to state what acts constitute such keeping.

-Disorderly house - Inmate-Pleading guilty-Form of conviction-Summary conviction or summary trial.]—A single Judge in the Territories has jurisdiction under 54-55 Vict. (1891) c. 22, s. 7, ss. 2, to hear and determine applications to quash summary convictions, whether the convictions have been brought into Court by certiorari or not. If the conviction has been returned to the clerk of the Supreme Court, by virtue of s. 102 of the N. W. T. Act, the issue of a writ of certiorari is unnecessary. The defendant pleaded guilty before a magistrate of being an inmate of a disorderly house, an offence punishable either under Part XV. of the Criminal Code (Vagrancy), where the fine on summary conviction is limited to $50, or under Part LV. (Summary Trials of Indictable Offences), where the fine and costs together must not exceed $100. A fine of $90, with $6.25 costs, was imposed, but the conviction was in the Form WW prescribed under Part LVIII. relating to summary convictions, and not the Form QQ prescribed under Part LV., and old not contain the words "being charged before me the undersigned," which appear in the latter form. On an application to quash the conviction was sustained as a good conviction under Part LV., as being of like effect to the form therein prescribed; the amount of the fine and the fact that the accused was not charged with or convicted of being a loose, idle or disorderly person, indicating the procedure adopted by the magistrate. The omission to recite that the accused had been charged with the offence before him, a fact which appeared from the proceedings, is a matter of form only and not sufficient to void the conviction.

-Keeping bawdy house-Warrant of commitment-Form of conviction-Statement of offence.]-The prisoner was convicted before three justices of the peace for being the keeper of a disorderly house, bawdy house, or house of ill-fame, or house for the resort of prostitutes-following the words of sub-s. (j) of s. 207 of the Criminal Code-and was committed to gaol for six months under a warrant signed by two of the justices. She obtained a writ of habeas corpus, and upon the return of it moved for her discharge, which was refused by a Divisional Court. She then appealed to the Court of Appeal, and, after the appeal had been argued and judgment reserved, the justices returned a further warrant of commitment signed by all three justices, which was received by the Court of Appeal. The offence was stated to have been committed in a city, for which there was a police magistrate. The warrant returned to the Court of Appeal was signed by all three justices, under their respective seals, and set forth a conviction by them, all acting in the absence of, and one at the request of, the police magistrate:-Held, that under s. 208 of the Criminal Code, as amended by 57 and 58 Vict. c. 57, one justice had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the charge. and by R.S.O. 1897, c. 87, s. 7, had authority to act in the city in the absence of the police magistrate; and if authority be given to one justice it may be executed by any greater number, and the fact that others join in making the conviction does not invalidate the proceeding. Held, also, that the conviction and commitment, following the language of sub-s. (j) of s. 207 of the Code, properly set out and disclosed the offence: s. 846 (2) of the Code (63 and 64 Vict. c. 46).

Rex v. Leconte, 11 O.L.R. 408, 11 Cau. Cr. Cas. 41.

Being inmate of bawdy house — Vagnancy—Form of conviction.]—(1) A conviction by a city stipendiary magistrate for the offence of being an inmate of a bawdy house need not expressly state on its face that the accused is a vagrant. (2) A warrant of commitment following a conviction by a magistrate whereby three months imprisonment was imposed, is not invalid because it directs detention "for three months or until delivery by due course of law." (3) The addition of the words "or until delivered in due course of law." is in such a case a contingent limitation upon the three months' term which would apply upon the quashing of the conviction or other like contingency. The King v. Young, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 109.

—Disorderly house—Gaming.]—The term "disorderly house" in Cr. Code s. 774 includes any house to which persons resort for criminal or immoral purposes and therefore includes a common gaming house. Rex v. Four Chinamen, 13 B.C.R. 216; Rex v. Ab San, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 538.

-Keeping house of ill-fame-Amending information-Evidence as to offence subsequent to issue of summons.]-Two justices dealing with a charge of keeping a house of ill-fame will be deemed to be acting under Part LV. of the Criminal Code, 1892, if they adopt the form of conviction provided by s. 786, and the form of conviction QQ. A defendant cannot be convicted of an offence alleged to be committed after the date of the issue of the summons, even though the information is amended and resworn:-Semble, that, if with a deposit of cash as security in proceedings to quash a conviction, a writing is filed, the condition should be that the applicant will prosecute the motion to quash the conviction, not merely the application for the writ of certiorari, and that such writing is bad if the condition is to prosecute such motion or writ of certiorari.

The King v. Earley (No. 3), 6 Terr. L. R. 269, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 10.

-Common betting house-Betting on race course — Definition of "place."]—In order to constitute a "place" within the mean-ing of s. 227 of the Criminal Code, there must be a measure of fixity, localization and exclusive right of user. The defendants were two of a number of bookmakers who, on payment of the usual entrance fee, were admitted, along with the general public, to a fenced enclosure owned and controlled by the Ontario Jockey Club, an incorporated racing association. bookmakers laid bets from day to day. through their assistants, with members of the general public attending the races. They did not use any desk, stool, umbrella, tent, or booth, or erection of any kind to mark any place where bets were made, and no part of the general enclosure was especially allocated to them, nor did they occupy a fixed position, but during each race stood as much as possible about the same spot within a radius of from five to ten feet. The betting operations were carried on in the same method as in the case of Rex v. Saunders, except that in that case the bookmakers used a wooden box, or booth, moved about on castors from one part of the grounds to another during the progress of the race meeting:-Held, that the defendants did not occupy a "house, office, room or other place" within the meaning of s. 227 of the Criminal Code, and were, therefore, not guilty of the offence of keeping a "common betting house" under s. 228 of the Code. Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., [1899] A.C. 143, followed. Rex v. Saunders (1907), 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 174, 38 S.C.R. 382, distinguished.

-Frequenter-Asking account of conduct.] -A police detective, in plain clothes, questioned accused as to what she was doing in a certain house. He did not inform her that he was an officer:-Held, that the officer should have first disclosed his authority, and then expressly asked the accused to given an account of herself.

Rex v. Regan, 14 B.C.R. 12, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 106.

-Keeping a common gaming house-Evidence.]-On the premises of the accused a number of person unconnected with the premises had been observed playing games involving the use of money, dice and dominoes, and the accused had stated to the chief of police that he was having a game of fan-tan at his place, and that he was willing to pay for the privilege as he was doing well out of it:-Held, sufficient evidence to sustain a conviction for keeping a common gaming house.

The King v. Mah Kee, 6 Terr. L.R. 121, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 47.

-Keeping common gaming house-Summary trial-Right of accused to elect to be tried by jury.]-A police magistrate has not absolute and summary jurisdiction under ss. 773 and 774 of the Criminal Code to try, without their consent, persons accused of keeping a common gaming house; such persons have the right to elect to be tried by a jury; the words "disorderly house'' in s. 773 do not include "common gaming house," but are limited by the words which immediately follow them, "house of ill-fame or bawdy house." The Queen v. France (1898), 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 32, approved and followed. The accused having been illegally tried and convicted before a magistrate, their conviction was quashed, and it was directed that they should be accorded the right of election to be tried by or without a jury, and that they should be tried accordingly.

DIVISION COURT.

Splitting cause of action-Money lent-Separate loans.]—The plaintiff lent sums of money to the defendant on five different days, all within a short period. Each of the amounts was advanced as a separste and distinct loan, without any reference to a further advance or loan of any kind, and upon the defendant's promise to pay in each instance, and with an offer to give his promissory note for each sum, if desired. The plaintiff brought two actions in a Division Court to recover the money lent: the first for two of the sums lent, amounting together to $70; the second for the other three sums, amounting to $100:-Held, not a dividing of a cause of action into two actions for the purpose of bringing the same within the jurisdiction of a Division Court, which is forbidden by s. 79 of the Division Courts Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 60. Re Gordon v. O'Brien (1886), 11 P.R. 287, and Re Clark v. Barber (1894), 26 O.R. 47, distinguished.

-Jurisdiction-Claim over $100-Promissory note-Production and proof of signature.]-Under s. 72, sub-s. (d), of the Division Courts Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 60, and s. 72a (added by 4 Edw. VII. c. 12, s. 1), a Division Court has jurisdiction to entertain a claim upon a promissory note for over $100, but not exceeding $200; all that is necessary to make out the plaintiff's case being the production of the note and proof of the signature of the defendant: and the jurisdiction is not ousted because it appears that there were other dealings between the parties, and that the note is an item of an account which the plaintiff kept against the defendant and another, secured by a mortgage, even if it is necessary to investigate the account for the purpose of ascertaining whether the promissory note has been paid in whole or part.

-Demand for trial by jury-Motion for judgment.]-A general enactment is governed by a particular one. Section 116 of the Division Courts Act, allowing a plaintiff to move for summary judgment, prevails over the section under which a party who demands a jury has an absolute right to trial by jury. And a judgment under s. 116 was held to have been properly granted after the defendant had demanded a jury and the case had come on for trial with a jury and had been postponed; and prohibition was refused. judgment of a Division Court cannot be enforced by action in a higher Court, because the obligation to pay thereby created is not an absolute obligation, but is subect to the discretion vested in the Judge to defer payment in certain circumstances; and the fact that a Division Court is now a Court of record makes no difference in that respect. Berkeley v. Elderkin (1853), 1 E. & B. 805, McPherson v. Forrester (1854), 11 U.C.R. 362, and Donnelly v. Stewart (1866), 25 U.C.R. 308, followed. Per Boyd, C., that the state of the law is unsatisfactory, but the earlier decisions, which have stood for more than fifty years, must be followed. Per Riddell, J., that a Court sitting in appeal from a County Court decision, being the final Court, is not bound by previous decisions; but the decisions of the Court of Appeal in England are binding (Trimble v. Hill [1879], 5 App. Cas. 342, at p. 344); and Berkeley v. Elderkin, 1 E. & B. 805, has been approved by the Court of Appeal in The Queen v. County Court Judge of Essex (1887), 18 Q.B.D. 704.

Crowe v. Graham, 22 O.L.R. 145.

Jurisdiction-Balance due on contract signed by defendant-Extrinsic evidence. -In an action in the County Court for $37.50, balance due on a building contract of $475, signed by the defendant, where extrinsic evidence was required to show performance of the contract by the plain. tiff, and for an open account for $27.35, and in which the defendant was allowed $25.00 for the defective work and material:-Held, that the Division Court had no jurisdiction, and that the plaintiff was entitled to his costs on the County Court seale. Kinsey v. Roche (1881), 8 P.R. 515, approved of; McDermid v. McDermid (1888), 15 A.R. 287, followed; Re Graham v. Tomlinson (1888), 12 P.R. 367, not fol-

-Jurisdiction-Amount not ascertained by signature-Husband and wife-Sale of goods-Undisclosed principal - Judgment against husband and wife.]-A husband, as agent for his wife, purchased goods from the plaintiffs, who were ignorant that she was the purchaser. On becoming aware of it, and the goods not having been paid for, they sued both husband and wife, but on the husband giving a promissory note for $150, signed by him for part of the debt, and the wife paying the balance in cash, the action was not proceeded with. The note not having been paid at maturity, an action was brought in the County Court for the balance due on the goods, being the amount for which the note had been given, and judgment was entered against both husband and wife:-Held, on appeal, that the proper inference was that the husband's note was not taken in satisfaction of the debt, nor was it an election to look to him alone for payment; and the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to sue on the original cause of action, but that they could not have judgment against both husband and wife; and must elect as to which they desired to hold it, and that they could properly hold it against the wife, a recovery against her being now maintainable under "The Married Woman's Property Act," R.S.O. 1897, c. 168. Wagner v. Jefferson (1876), 37 U.C.R. 551, distinguished. Held, also that the debt was not cognizable by the Division Court, the claim not having been ascertained by the signature of the wife; that the note signed by the husband could not be treated as such, it not having been signed by the husband as her agent, but as his own promise.

Davidson v. McClelland, 32 O.R. 382.

-Jurisdiction-Evidence-Non-suit- Man damus.]-The plaintiff claimed $212 for wages, and gave credit for payments thereon, suing for a balance of $58. The defendant, by counterclaim, alleged large account of $744.58, and claimed a balance in his favour of more than $100. The Judge entered a non-suit after hearing the evidence of one witness, who disclosed the nature of the account:-Held, that the Judge at the trial having found that the evidence given showed that the case was beyond the jurisdiction of a Division Court, and ruled that further evidence should not be given, and the plaintiff having submitted to this, and a judgment of non-suit with costs having been entered, and the plaintiff having moved to set aside the non-suit and for a new trial, which was refused, an application for a mandamus did not lie. Regina v. Judge of Southampton County Court (1891), 65 L.T.N.S. 320, distinguished. That the plaintiff had no right of appeal in this case under the Division Courts Act, might be a defect of legislation, but it did not enlarge the remedy by mandamus.

—Landlord and tenant—Assignment for creditors—Acceleration clause—Forfeiture—Division Court Jurisdiction.]—The effect of s. 34 R.S.O. 1897 c. 170, "The Landlord and Tenants" Act," is to place the assignee, who has elected by notice in writing under his hand to retain the premises occupied by the assignor at the time of the assignment for the unexpired term of the lease under which said premises were held, in the same position as respects the lease, as the assignment not been made; the landlord in such cases being entitled to the full amount of the rent reserved by the lease, but to nothing more; and where accelerated rent due for the unexpired term of a lease containing the usual forfeiture clause on an assignment for the benefit of creditors being made by the lessor, had been paid by his assignee for creditors, who had elected to retain the premises to the end of the term he was entitled to recover back a further sum forrent of the premises for a portion of the same period, which he had paid on demand of the landlord, under protest, to avoid distress. Rent payable under a lease of laud is an incorporeal hereditament, and where the right or title to it comes in question, a Division Court has no jurisdiction in an action to recover it.

Kennedy v. MacDonell, 1 O.L.R. 250.

-Public school teacher-Action for salary -Jurisdiction of Division Court.] - An agreement between school trustees and the plaintiff, as teacher, gave either party a right to terminate it on one month's notice. The former notified the plaintiff of its termination pursuant to a resolution passed at a board meeting, notice of which, however, had not stated that this matter would be considered, of which some of the trustees were unaware, and two of them did not attend:-Held, that this was not a proper exercise of the option to terminate, and had not that effect. The plaintiff brought this action in the Division Court, claiming a balance of salary, and had recovered judgment for $132.03. Held, that the matters of difference between the parties fell within R.S.O. 1897 c. 292, s. 77, sub-s. 7, and the Division Court had jurisdiction.

-Division Court Act, ss. 84, 92-Action by bailiff-Debt or damages.]-The plaintiff was the bailiff of the 1st Division Court of the county. The defendant resided and the cause of action arose within the limits of the same division (1st division). The action was for damages, and was brought in the adjoining (6th) Division Court to that in which the plaintiff was bailiff. The question was: Had this Division Court jurisdiction to try the action?:-Held, that the words "debt due," in s. 92, could not be construed as including damages in tort, and that the 6th Division Court had no jurisdiction. Reference was made to Dwarris on Statutes, 193; Stroud's Jud. Dict., p. 184; in re Hill v. Hicks, 28 O.R. 393; Webster v. McDougall, 26 C.L.J. 85.

-Prohibition-Post diem interest on mortgage-Splitting cause of action-Jurisdiction.]—Plaintiff, on November 2, 1901, brought an action in a Division Court for one year's interest due February 1, 1901, and for interest on that sum, amounting together to $81.50, due on a mortgage, the principal of which was some years overdue:-Held, that the interest sued for, being interest post diem, as to which there was no covenant to pay, was not due the plaintiff qua interest, but was recoverable only by way of damages, and the case did not come within the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 79 R.S.O. 1897, c. 60. Held, also, that the plaintiffs, if entitled to recover interest from February 1, 1900, were entitled to recover as d'amages interest down to the date of the issue of the summons amounting to about $140, which sum was divided for the purpose of suing in the Division Court, which is forbidden by s. 79. Prohibition granted.

Re Phillips v. Hanna, 3 O.L.R. 558.

-Orders for committal-Previous order for payment-Affidavit.]-The plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant in a Division Court action for a debt contracted before the passing of the Act, 61 Vict. c. 15 (O.), and the defendant was at the hearing ordered to pay the amount of the judgment forthwith:-Held, that the Court had jurisdiction under sub-s. 5 of s. 247 of the Division Court Acts, R.S. O. 1897, e. 60, upon examination of the defendant on an after-judgment summons, to make an order for her committal, without a previous order for payment based upon such an examination and default thereunder. Where it appears that a judgment debtor has been examined before the Judge, his order for committal must, on a motion for prohibition, be treated as a complete adjudication as to that which must be made to appear to warrant the making of an order under sub-s. 5 of s. 247. Semble, that if the affidavit of the plaintiff required by s. 243 to be filed before the issue of the summons were not filed, it would not be open to the defendant, after appearing in obedience to the summons, to raise an objection to the jurisdiction on that ground; and, the defect not appearing on the face of the proceedings, prohibition in such a case would not be granted.

Re Hawkins v. Batzold, 2 O.L.R. 704 (D.C.).

-Jurisdiction-Breach of undertaking --Amount ascertained by signature.]-Defendant gave two notes for $75 and $62. respectively, on a form which contained an undertaking to give further security, and in the event of default in giving the security, that the notes might be treated as due. Plaintiffs demanded further security, and not receiving same, brought an action on the notes before the time mentioned in them for their maturity had expired:-Held, that notwithstanding the plaintiff had to prove a breach of the undertaking to give security before he could recover on the notes, the Division Court had jurisdiction to entertain the action. Petrie v. Machan (1897), 28 O.R. 642, followed in preference to Kreutziger v. Brox (1900), 32 O.R. 418. Judgment of the 10th Division Court of the County of York reversed.

McCormack Harvesting Machine Co. v. Warnica, 3 O.L.R. 427.

-Territorial jurisdiction-Cause of action -Flooding land-Erection of dam-Prohibition.]-In a Division Court action the plaintiff's claim was for damages for injuries caused to his lands, which were situate within the limits of the division in the Court of which his action was entered. by reason of their having been overflowed and his crops damaged by waters alleged to have been unlawfully brought by the defendants to and cast upon his lands. The backing of the water was alleged to have been caused by a dam which the defendants had erected on their own lands, situate beyond the limits of such Court:-Held, that the erection of the dam was part of the cause of action, and therefore the whole cause of action did not arise within the jurisdiction of the Division Court in which the action was brought; and prohibition was ordered —Jurisdiction—Dividing cause of action—Division Courts Act, s. 79—Proof against insolvent estate.]—The defendants, becoming insolvent, made an assignment for creditors, and the plaintiffs proved their claim upon a certain promissory note and other notes made by defendants, and in respect of an open account for goods sold, for a lump sum, upon which they were paid a dividend. The plaintiffs had no security for their claim:—Held, that the remedy upon the promissory note in question was not extinguished, and the plaintiffs could sue in a Division Court for the amount of it as a separate cause of action, giving credit for a proportionate part of the dividend paid without offending against the provisions of s. 79 of the Division Courts Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 60, forbidding the dividence of O.I.P. 60

Harvey v. McPherson, 6 O.L.R. 60.

-Power to amend-Division Court Rule 4.]-The defendant joined in a promissory note, as the payees knew, for the accommodation of his co-maker. When it became due, the latter tendered a renewal note, purporting to be signed by the defendant, which the payees accepted, and gave up the original note, stamped "paid." The primary debtor became insolvent and aiel, and the payees afterwards sued the defendant on the renewal note only in a Division Court, when the defendant swore he never signed it, but, nevertheless, there was verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs. A new trial was then granted, resulting in a verdict for the defendant. A further new trial then being granted, the Judge, at the trial, allowed the plaintiffs to claim in the alternative upon the original note, as well as on the renewal, and to amend his claim accordingly. A verdict was then returned for the plaintiff on the original note:-Held, that the Division Court Judge had jurisdiction under Rule 4 of the Division Courts, to amend the plaintiffs' claim as he had

Matthews v. Marsh, 5 O.L.R. 540 (D.C.).

—Attachment of debts—Interest of Residuary legatee—Jurisdiction.] — A primary creditor in a Division Court, by garnishee summons served on the executors, attached the interest of a residuary legatee in the estate of a testator, who had died within the year of the attachment A receiver was subsequently appointed in a High Court action to receive his interest. The Division Court Judge gave judgment against the garnishees. An appeal to a Divisional Court was allowed on the ground that such interest was not attachable under section 179 of the Division Courts Act, R.S.C. 1897, c. 60.

Arnprior v. Bradley, 39 Can. Law Jour. 81.

-Judgment summons-Committal-'Ability to pay.'']-Judgment was recovered at the trial by the plaintiff in a Division Court action, no order being at that time made for payment in instalments. Subsequently, the defendant was examined upon an after judgment summons and was ordered to pay $15 a month. Default having occurred, he was again brought before the Judge on a show cause summons and committed to jail for twenty days:-Held, that it was to be assumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that there had been a finding on proper evidence of the existence of the conditions justifying the making of an order of committal and that prohibition would not lie. Judgment of Anglin, J., affirmed. Per Meredith, C.J .: -"Ability to pay" in sub-s. 5 of s. 247 of the Division Courts Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 60. covers the case of a dishonest debtor who can by working earn the means to pay the debt and contumaciously refuses to do anything. Per Anglin, J .: - An order for committal is not made as punishment for disobedience of a specific order for payment and in the nature of a committal for contempt, but is granted as a punishment of the fraudulent conduct of the debtor in having refused or neglected to pay the judgment debt, though having had the means and ability to pay. It is, therefore. not necessary before a committal order can be made, that there should be an order on after judgment summons and disobedience of that order. The judgment itself is sufficient foundation for the order to commit.

Re Kay v. Storry, 8 O.L.R. 45 (D.C.).

-Division Courts - Prohibition - Claim under $20-Counterclaim over $20-Trial by jury.]-The plaintiff sued in a Division Court for a sum less than the amount entitling the defendant to have it tried by jury. The defendant, besides filing a dispute notice, counterclaimed for a sum which entitled him to a jury, which he asked for, but the Judge refused to place the case on the jury list:-Held, that the filing of the counterclaim did not entitle the defendant to have the plaintiff's claim tried by a jury, but that s. 160 of the Division Court Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 157, did entitle defendant to that right in respect of his counterclaim. Prohibition ordered , subject to the right of the Judge to order that the counterclaim be the subject to an independent action under Division Court Rule 108.

—Appeal—Notice of setting down.]—The giving of the notice of setting down for argument and of the appeal and of the grounds thereof, required by s. 158 of the Division Courts Act, is a condition precedent to the right to appeal to a Divisional Court from a judgment in the Division Court, and where this notice has not been given, the Divisional Court has no jurisdiction to deal with the appeal.

—Execution against lands—Previous nulla bona return.]—Since the revision of the statutes in 1897 incorporating sub-s. 5 of s. 8 of 57 Vict. c. 23 (O.), into s. 230 of c. 60 of R.S.O. 1897, it is not necessary to have a return of nulla bona made by a bailiff of the Division Court in which the judgment was recovered before an execution against lands can be issued, a raturn of nulla bona by a bailiff in such Division Court being sufficient. Judgment of Ferguson, J., reversed.

Turner v. Tourangeau, 8 O.L.R. 221 (D.C.).

—Money demand — Final judgment — Absence of dispute notice.]—An action in a Division Court in which the plaintiff's claim was stated in the particulars to be "for money received by the defendants for the use of the plaintiff, being money obtained from the plaintiff, being money obtained from the plaintiff, being money obtained from the plaintiff, by the defendants by false representations," is an action for a "money demand" within s. 1:3 of the Division Courts Act, R.S.O, 1897,e. 6C, and a motion for prohibition to restrain proceedings upon a judgment entered in default of a dispute notice was refused.

Re Mager v. Canadian Tin Plate Decorating Co., 7 O.L.R. 25.

-Jurisdiction-Proof of.]-When there is any evidence to support the finding of a Division Court upon a question involving its jurisciiction the Court, upon application for prohibition, will not review its finding, especially where the question relates to the merits and is not merely collateral to them; but it will review such finding where it is shown that there is no evidence to support it, whether the finding is of matters intrinsic or only collateral. After a valid lease of premises held by a company had been duly put an end to, and the key delivered up to the landlord, the company's agent, without any authority from the company, verbally agreed with the landlord for the renewal thereof for a year, and received the key. The company, however, refused to agree to the renewal lease and the key was handed back to the landlord; no actual possession of the premises being taken by the company:-Held, that there being no evidence of a contract made and broken within the jurisdiction of the Division Court, prohibition was properly granted.

Wilkes v. Home Life Association of Canada, 8 O.L.R. 91 (D.C.).

-Jurisdiction—Foreigner out of Ontario—Form of summons.]—Section 87 (1) of the Division Courts Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 60, which provides that an action may be brought in the Division Court, notwith-standing that the residence of the defendant is out of the province, applies as well to foreigners as to British subjects. No practice being provided therefor by that Act, by s. 312, the practice of the High Court, under Con. Rules 103 and 312, is to apply. The form of summons issued in this action, and which is fully set out in the report, was held to be a compliance with such rules.

than $65.10, is not such an affidavit as is required by s. 243 of the Division Courts Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 60, and prohibition will lie to restrain proceedings upon a judgment summons issued pursuant to such an affidavit.

In re Barr v. McMillan, 7 O.L.R. 70, affirmed by Divisional Court, 7 O.L.R. 672.

-Jurisdiction-Amount over $100-Ascertainment-Extrinsic evidence.]-In an action in a Division Court for the price of goods, the amount claimed was more than $100, and the plaintiff relied upon the signature of the defendant to an agree-ment containing the terms of purchase, under which it was alleged default had been made, as ascertaining the amount:-Held, that the other extrinsic evidence beyond the mere production of the document and the proof of the signature to it, would have to be given to establish the claim of the plaintiff, and therefore the Division Court had no jurisdiction, by reason of the new section 72a added to the Division Courts Act, by 4 Edw. VII. c. 12, s. 1 (O.). The amending Act is declaratory and applies to an action begun before it was passed.

Re Thom v. McQuitty, 8 O.L.R. 705.

—Attachment of debts — Jurisdiction — Garnishee out of province—"Carrying on business"—Intervener.]—A person living in the United States entered into a contract in Ontario for the building of a house upon land owned by his wife. It was shown also that he acted as his wife's agent in affairs relating to this property and other property in Ontario, all situate within the territory of a certain Division Court, process from which was issued against him as garnishee:—Held, that the evidence did not show that he was carrying on business in the division, within the meaning of s. 190 of Division Courts Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 60. Held, however, Street, J., dissenting, that as the garnishee had submitted to the jurisdiction of the Division Court, a person holding an equitable assignment from a primary debtor of a part of the fund sought to be garnished, could not effectively intervene unders. 193 and defeat the garnishing proceedings by showing that the Court had no jurisdiction over the garnishee.

Nelson v. Lenz, 9 O.L.R. 50 (D.C.).

-Jurisdiction-Claim over $100-Promissory note-Endorser.]-Having regard to s. 8, sub-s. 24, of the Interpretation Act, the word "document" in s. 1 of 4 Edw. VII. c. 12, amending s. 72 of the Division Courts Act, may be read if necessary in the plural, and therefore the increased jurisdiction of the Division Court may be exercised where the claim can be established by the production of one, or more documents and the proof of the signatures to them. Production of a promissory note and proof of the signature of the defendant as an endorser, and production of the protest setting out the facts of presentment and notice of dishonour, make out a prima facie case within the jurisdiction of the Division Court. Judgment of Magee, J., reversed. Slater v. Laberee, 9 O.L.R. 545 (D.C.).

-Judgment inadvertently entered for wrong person-Correction of-Prohibition.] -In a Division Court action for $70 the Judge, by a mere slip, so obvious that no one was misled by it, directed judgment to be entered for the defendant instead of the plaintiffs, and about three weeks afterwards, on his attention being called to it, the mistake was corrected in the presence of the solicitors who appeared for both parties at the trial. Immediately after the trial the defendant had an interview with his then solicitors, when he was advised that there would be no use in moving for a new trial. He then retained a new solicitor, and without in any way communicating with his former solicitors, or making any application for a new trial, and after the time therefor had elapsed, moved for prohibition:-Held, that the application would not lie.

North American Life Assurance Company v. Collins, 9 O.L.R. 579.

—Bailiff—Service of summons,]—Except in a few special cases provided for by the Division Courts Act, the bailiffs of the Courts have the right to serve summonses, and a plaintiff is not entitled as of right to effect service himself. Mandamus to a Division Court clerk to compel him to give a summons to the applicants for service refused.

Re Wilson v. McGinnis, 10 O.L.R. 98.

—Division Courts—Action against an executor de son tort is not within the measing of R.S.O. 1897, c. 60, s. 72 (d), giving enlarged jurisdiction to Division Courts 'when the amount is ascertained by the signature of . . . the person whom, as executor or administrator, the defendant represents,' and a Division Court has no power in the same proceeding to declare a defendant executor de son tort and pronounce judgment against him as such for the amount claimed.

Re Dey v. McGill, 10 O.L.R. 408.

—Judgment debtor—Married woman—Committal.]—The committal of a judgment debtor in a Division Court for wilful default in appearing to be examined is in the nature of process to coerce payment, rather than of a punitive character, as for contempt; and there is no jurisdiction to make an order for the committal of a married woman judgment debtor who refuses to attend for examination upon a judgment summons, even though her non-attendance amounts to wilful misconduct. Ex p. Dakins (1855), 16 C.B. 77, followed. Re Stewart v. Edwards, 11 O.L.R. 378.

-Acceptance of goods-Cause of action-Statute of Frauds.]-In an action for $45 the price of a coat ordered by the defendant in Toronto to be made and sent by the plaintiff to him at Belleville by express:-Held, that the plaintiff must prove as part of his case an acceptance of the coat at Belleville and that certain letters written by him at Belleville to the plaintiff at Toronto while evidence from which acceptance might be inferred, were not the acceptance itself, and, as the plaintiff failed to prove this, the whole cause of action did not arise at Toronto within the jurisdiction of the Division Court in which the plaint was brought. Prohibition ordered. Re Taylor v. Reid, 13 O.L.R. 205 (D.C.).

—Prohibition—Interpretation of statute—Jurisdiction.]—Where it is necessary to interpret a statute, in order to find out whether the Division Court should decide the rights of the parties at all, then if the Division Court Judge misinterprets the statute and so gives himself jurisdiction to decide such rights, prohibition will lie, but if it be necessary to interpret a statute, simply to decide the rights of the parties, prohibition will not lie, however, far astray the Division Court Judge may go. -Prohibition-Finding of Judge.1-On a motion to a Division Court Judge on the ground that the defendant declined to give any evidence or enter into any defence on the merits because the plaintiff had not shown that he had taken the various appeals to the domestic forum provided for by the conditions of a benefit society and so establish jurisdiction in the Division Court:—Held, that the Division Court had jurisdiction and that the question to be decided was not in what Court the action should be brought, but can such an action succeed in law? and that then a High Court Judge had no right to dictate to a Division Court Judge. Held, also, that a finding that the plaintiff "had exhausted every possible means of redress in the domestic forum" could not be interfered with, as a motion for prohibition was not an appeal; and that the Division Court Judge had not given himself jurisdiction by any error, but that any mistake he may have made was made in a matter within his jurisdiction to try. -Order for committal of judgment debtor -Power to rescind.]—A Judge of a Division Court has no power, under any of the provisions of the Division Courts Act, or otherwise, to reseind an order made by him under s. 247 of the Act committing a judgment debtor to gaol, on the ground that it appeared to the Judge that the debtor had incurred the debt for which judgment had been recovered, by means of fraud. A mandamus to the Judge to hear an application to rescind was refused.

-Jury trial-Non-suit after verdict.]-In a Division Court suit tried with a jury, the Judge reserved judgment on a motion for non-suit, subject to which he took the findings of the jury, and subsequently granted the non-suit on the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury. The plaintiff then applied for a mandamus, requiring the Judge to enter judgment for the plaintiff upon the findings of the jury:-Held, affirming the order of Anglin, J., that under the provisions of 62 Viet. c. 11, s. 9 (O.), the Judge had jurisaiction to non-suit the plaintiff, although the jury had rendered their verdict. A docket or note book in which the registrar kept a record of applications under the Manitoba Real Property Act received and examined by him is not to be considered "the proper register or record book" in which to make the necessary entries, which should have been made in the Abstract Book kept under The Registry Act, as the patent had been registered under the old system of registration.

DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA.

Savings bank deposit book—Trust.]—A deceased person in her last illness, and shortly before her death, handed to the defendant a government savings bank pass book in which was credited in the names of the defendant and the deceased a sum of money deposited in their names, and at the same time told the defendant to pay to the plaintiff $400 out of the bank, pay some debts owing by the deceased, and her funeral expenses; to which the defendant assented. The money on deposit belonged to the deceased, but could be withdrawn by the defendant on delivery up of the pass book, before or after the deceased's death:
—Held, (1) that the pass book was a good subject of a donatio mortis causâ. (2) That there was a valid donatio mortis causâ constituted by trust, and enforceable in equity, in favour of the plaintiff.

—Gift—Bank deposit book.]—A banker's deposit book, which is numbered, and in which it is stipulated that deposits recorded in it will not be repaid without its production, is a proper subject of donatio mortis causā, and delivery of such a book in anticipation of death operates as a transfer of the debt to take effect upon death.

Brown v. Toronto General Trusts Corporation, 32 O.R. 319.

—Gift of mortgage.]—The holder of two mortgages, while very ill and about to start on a journey for the benefit of his health, handed the mortgages and some title deeds to the defendant, telling her that they were for her and that he would execute an assignment of them to her if one were prepared and sent to him. The mortgagee died two months later, no assignment having been executed by him, and one of the mortgages having been partially discharged by him:—Held, that there had not been a donatio mortis caush of the mortgages, but merely an incomplete and ineffective gift inter vivos, and that the mortgages formed part of the mortgages's estate.

Ward v. Bradley, 1 O.L.R. 118 (C.A.).

-Absolute or conditional gifts.]-See also GIFT; DONATION.

—Ratification by will.]—C., the father of the respondent, had sold an immovable to A. W. and C. B. Morris for the sum, secured by privilege of bailleur de fonds, of $150,000, of which $50,000 was payable to the respondent after the decease of the vendor, and subsequently he made a will in which he ratified the said donation and delegation of payment. Messrs. Morris were appointed executors of this will. The appellant having become proprietor of the immovable by virtue of a title which obliged her to pay the debts of the respondent, Messrs. Morris, in their quality of testamentary executors of C., granted her a discharge of this debt, and a withdrawal of the hypothec which secured it. On an action in declaration of the hypothec of the respondent, demanding the nullity of the discharge granted by the testamentary executors:-Held, (1) even if the delegation of payment stipulated in favour of the respondent by the deed of sale was null as containing a donation à cause de mort, made by a decd entre vifs this donation became valid by the subsequent will of C., and the debt in question passed to the respendent with its accessories, and especially with the hypothec and privilege of bailleur de fonds. (2) A testamentary executor only having possession for the purposes of the execution of the will, that is for the payment of the debts and legacies specified, Messrs. Morris had no power in this case to give a discharge to the appellant, there being nothing to show that they required this sum to satisfy the debts of the succession, on the contrary, one of the said executors, assignee of the other, had sold the immovable to the auteur of the appellant, with a charge to pay the amount of the legacy in question to the respondent herself.

Consumers' Cordage Co. v. Converse, 30 Can. S.C.R. 618, affirming 8 Que. Q.B. 511.

-Gift inter vivos - Promissory notes-Evidence.]-The defendant, by representations he been presented had by one M., deceased, with several promissory notes, as a gift, a few days before the death of M., induced the plaintiff to give him a new note for the balance due by the plaintiff to M. on the old notes alleged to have been donated to the defendant. The notes in question were not indorsed by the deceased, and there was no evidence of the alleged gift apart from the defendant's statement. In an action by the plaintiff, asking that the note given by him to defendant be delivered up to him:—Held, 1. That the evidence of the defendant was inadmissible to prove the fact of the donation alleged, the debt represented by the notes being a civil and not a commercial debt. 2. Even if the defendant's evidence were admissible, the words to which he deposed as those which had been used by the deceased, viz., "ces billets, je te les donne au cas où je mourrais," were not sufficient to establish a valid donation inter vivos.

show her appreciation of the services which he had rendered and was rendering every day to her, and also as a mark of her regard, had made him a donation of the sum of $8,000 to be a charge upon her succession from the moment of her death and before division of her property. This donation was annulled by the Superior Court (12 Que. S.C. 162, confirmed in review 13 S.C. 205) on the ground that it was a donation a cause de mort. Defendant thereupon rendered an account of the sums he had received from the executors in execution of the donation, but set up en compensation a larger amount as being due him from the succession of the deceased for solicitor's fees, cost of agency, etc. The plaintiff in reply alleged that such account was prescribed:-Held, that, notwithstanding the donation in question had been declared void, the prescription of defendant's account had been interrupted by the acknowledgement and promise to pay contained in it, and had been suspended until the death of the donor, the defendant not being able, before then, to claim payment for his services; and that, moreover, the prescription had been interrupted by the payment by the executors of the amount granted by the dona-

Boucher v. Morrison, 20 Que. S.C. 151 (Ct. Rev.).

-Savings bank deposit-Delivery of pass book - Evidence - Corroboration.]-The money at the credit of a savings bank depositor may pass a donatio mortis causa by the delivery of the savings bank book by the depositor to the donee with apt words of gift, the deposit being subject to the condition that no part of it can be withdrawn without the production of the book. The class of evidence which is sufficient to prove any fact against the estate or a deceased person is sufficient to prove donatio mortis causa, that is, any evidence which is believed and is corroborated as required by the statute, may be acted upon. Re Reid, 6 O.L.R. 420 (Street, J.).

-Gift-Solicitor and client-Absence of independent advice - Invalidity.]-Held, per Moss, C.J.O., and Garrow, J.A., where at the time of the making of an alleged donatio mortis causa, the relationship of solicitor and client existed between the parties, who were the only persons present at the time, no previous intimation of the intention to make the gift having been given to any one, nor any disinterested person called in, nor any advice or explanation of the nature of the proposed gift given to the deceased, such gift could not be supported. Maclennan, J.A., dissenting. Per Osler, J.A.:-Apart from the question of confidential relationship, the plaintiff's testimony as a litigant making a claim upon the estate of a deceased person in respect of a matter occurring before the death of such person had not been corroborated by some other material evidence as required by section 10 of the Evidence Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 73. Davis v. Walker, 5 O.L.R. 173 (C.A.).

-Succession duty-"Dutiable" property-Donatio mortis causa—Contract for valuable consideration.]—The aggregate value of the estate of an intestate was $12,877, and of this $7,540 passed to the hands of his niece by virtue of an agreement between them, given effect to by a donatio mortis causa, as established in Brown v. Toronto General Trusts Corporation (1900), 32 O.R. 319:—Held, that the $7,540 was not dutiable under the Succession Duty Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 24, and amendments, the transfer from the intestate to his niece not being a voluntary one, but made in pursuance of a contractural obligation for value; and the niece not being estopped, by the form of the judgment in her action against the Toronto General Trusts Corporation, from setting up in this action, brought on behalf of the Crown to recover succession duty, that the transfer was not a gift, but the implementing of a contract. Held, also, that the $7,-540 did not pass by survivorship within the meaning of s. 4 (d) of R.S.O. 1897, c. 24.

Attorney-General for Ontario v. Brown, 5 O.L.R. 167, Boyd, C.

-Moneys and notes-Delivery of keys.]--The defendant's father, a man of ninetyeight years of age, who had been living in her house, was taken suddenly ill, and, while she was endeavouring to make him comfortable, he handed her a small wallet, containing three keys, and said: "all the money and notes I have got are yours." One of the keys was that of a trunk in his room and another of a cash box (in which the money and notes were) in the trunk. There was evidence that he had a foreboding that it would be his last illness, and that he intended to give his property to the defendant -she retained the keys until his death .-Held, that there was a good donatio mortis causâ. In re Mustapha, Mustapha v. Wedlake (1891), 8 Times L.R. 160, followed.

Charleton v. Brooks, 6 O.L.R. 87 (Ferguson, J.).

-Deposit receipts — Cheques and orders— Delivery for beneficiaries-Corporation.] -McD., being ill and not expecting to recover, requested his wife, his brother being present at the time, to get from his trunk a bank deposit receipt for $6,000, which he then handed to his brother, telling him that he wanted the money equally divided among his wife, brother and a sister. The brother then, on his own suggestion, or that of McD., drew out three cheques or orders for $2,000 each, payable out of the deposit receipt to the respective beneficiaries, which McD. signed and returned to his brother, who handed to McD.'s wife the one payable to her and the receipt, and she placed them in the trunk from which she had taken the receipt. McD. died eight days afterwards: -Held, affirming the judgment appealed against (35 N.S. Rep. 205), Sedgewick and Armour, JJ., dissenting, that this was a valid donatio mortis causâ of the deposit receipt and the sum it referred to, notwithstanding there was a small amount for interest not specified in the gift. By R.S.N.S. [1900] c. 163, s. 35, an interested party in an action against the estate or a deceased person cannot succeed on the evidence of himself or his wife or both, unless it is corroborated by other material evidence:-Held, that such evidence may be corroborated by circumstances or fair inferences from facts proved. The evidence of an additional witness is not essential.

MeDonald v. MeDonald, 33 Can. S.C.R.

DONATION.

Parties—Arts. 177, 521 C.P.Q.]—It is not necessary, in an action to revoke a donation for ingratitude, to bring into the cause one of the donees who, as alleged by the plaintiff, has since transferred all his rights to his co-donee the defendant in consideration of a hypothec on the immovable donated. Failure to make a necessary person a party is a still stronger ground for a dilatory exception, but does not in law make necessary the absolute rejection of the claim.

Jacob v. Klein, 3 Que. P.R. 519 (S.C.).

—Consideration — Maintenance of donor — Revocation.]—A donation is not a burdensome donation equivalent to a sale from the mere fact that the donee is under obligation to furnish lodging, board, heat and maintenance to the donor. A donation may be revoked for ingratitude when the donee under obligation as above—uses low and insulting terms respecting the donor and expels him from her house.

Rousseau v. Majour, 18 Que. S.C. 447 (C. R.).

-Absolute or conditional.]-See also GIFT.

-Donation subject to debts - Registry -Warranty-Fraud.]-The universal donee, being liable for the donor's debts, cannot evict a prior purchaser with an onerous title (titre onereux) of one of the immovables donated aithough the deed of sale had not been registered and the donation had, since the donee had succeeded to the liability under the warranty of the vendor. Art. 2085 C.C. does not apply to the donee of an immovable so as to prevent there being set ur against him his knowledge of an interest unregistered appertaining to a third party and subject to registry, but it is otherwise when the charges on the donation equal in value what is donated, for then the pretended donation is really a sale. The mere knowledge that the purchaser à titre onereux might have that the immovable he has acquired had been previously sold by his auteur to a third party whose title was not registered, does not constitute a fraud sufficient to affect the validity of the duly registered title of such purchaser.

Barbe v. Barbe, 20 Que. S.C. 119 (Ct. Rev.).

-Gift - Confidential relations - Evidence -Parent and child-Public policy-Principal and agent.]-The principle that where confidential relations exist between donor and donee the gift is, on grounds of public policy, presumed to be the effect of those relations, which presumption can only be rebutted by showing that the donor acted under independent advice, does not apply so strongly to gifts from parent to child or from principal to agent. Thus, in the case of a gift to the goror's son, for benefit of the latter's children, when said son had for years acted as manager of his father's business, when he was the only child of the donor having issue, and when the donor. nine years before his death, had evidenced his intention of making the gift by signing a promissory note in favour of the son, by renewing it six years later and by voluntarily paying it before he died, such presumption does not arise. Judgment of the Court of Appeal (2 Ont. L.R. 251) reversing that of the Divisional Court (31 O.R. 414) affirmed, Sedgewick and Davies, J.J., dissenting.

—Practice as to concurrent findings—Avoidance of gifts—Civil Code, Art. 762.]—Held, that gifts made by the testator to the respondent during his lifetime would not be avoided under Art. 762 of the Civil Code where there was neither allegation nor evidence that they were made in expectation of death. The proviso in the article "unless circumstances tend to render them valid," requires that those circumstances should be investigated.

DOWER.

Petition—Title—53 Vict. (N.B.), c. 4, s. 237.]—While a widow may file a bill for the admeasurement of her dower, she must not where she proceeds by petition entitle the petition as in a suit.

In re Woodman, 37 C.L.J. 704 (Barker, J.).

-Registry - Declaration - Marksman - 47, Vict., c. 15 (Que.).]—The registration of a declaration signed by a cross in presence of a single witness is sufficient to preserve the right to legal dower. The widow has a right to possession of the portion of ar immovable charged with payment of her legal dower even if there are debts which will be the subject of a claim on a subsequent partition. On taking possession of immovables charged with payment of her dower the widow must pay interest to the heirs on such portion of the debts as may be claimed against the part of the immovables which she is entitled to take; but this pertains only as to the heirs, and payment is due to them only and not to a third party purchasing the immovables whose only recourse is in warranty against his auteur. 47 Vict., c. 15 (Que.), which provides that after January 1st, 1884, the right to legal dower will be extinguished as against purchasers if the declaration required by law has not been registered, should be interpreted as being confined to the case where a purchaser subsequent to 30th June, 1881, has registered his title before registration of the right of the wife to her legal dower.

Toupin v. Vezine, 9 Que. Q.B. 406.

-Will - Dower - Election - Ignorantia juris.]-A testator left his wife all his personal estate absolutely, and all his real estate for life or widowhood, subject to which he devised "my said real estate" in specific parcels to his sons, and died in 1889. After his death his widow, who knew the will, remained in possession of the house, to which she built an addition, and sold some of the timber, rented the land on shares for two seasons, supporting the children, and married again in 1891. In 1893 she and her husband took a lease of the property from the executors to expire in 1899, when the eldest son came of age. His parcel was conveyed to him by the executors, who then granted a new lease, still current, of the rest of the land to the second husband:-Held, that the widow was put by the will to her election. Held, also, that though there was no positive evidence that the widow knew she had a right to elect between the will and her dower, yet on the principle ignorantio juris neminem excusat she must be held to have elected in favour of the will.

Reynolds v. Palmer, 32 O.R. 431.

—Report of commissioners—Right of widow to have land set off to her.—Payment of money—Convenience of owner of land subject to dower.]—Under Act 53 Vict. (N.B.), c. 4, s. 237, et seq., a widow will not be compelled to take money in lieu of land because such a course will be more satisfactory or profitable to the owner of the land subject to dower. Affidavits upon questions of fact inquired of or relevant to an inquiry by commissioners to admeasure dow-

In re Kearney, 2 N.B. Eq. 264.

-Lease made by deceased husband -Priorities-Assignment of dower-Rights of executor and devisee.]-A dowress whose dower has not been assigned has no estate in the land out of which she is entitled to dower, but, as soon as her dower is properly assigned, she is entitled to claim possession of the land assigned to her, in priority to persons claiming under leases created by her husband, without her assent, during the coverture. Stoughten v. Leigh, (1808, 1 Taunt. 402, followed. Where a testator, dying in August, 1901, devised land to his son, and probate of the will was granted to the executor named therein, and the son in April, 1902, executed a conveyance of a part of the land to the testator's widow for her life, as and for her dower, the executor not assenting thereto:-Held, that the conveyance was of no avail; for the only person who could assign dower was the executor, in whom, under s. 4 of the Devolution of Estates Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 127, the whole inheritance of the testator vested.

Allan v. Rever, 4 O.L.R. 309.

-Interdiction-Marriage laws - Authorization by interdicted husband - Dower -Registry laws—Sheriff's sale — Warranty—Succession — Renunciation.]—The registration of a notice to charge lands with customary dower must, on pain of nullity, be accompanied by a certificate of the marriage in respect of which the dower is claimed and must also contain a description sufficient to identify the lands sought to be affected. A sale by the sheriff under execution against a debtor in possession of an immovable under apparent title discharges the property from customary dower which has not been effectively preserved by registration validly made under the provisions of Art. 2116 of the Civil Code. Per Taschereau, J.-Neither the vendor nor his heirs, who have not renounced the succession, nor his universal donees, who have accepted the donation, can on any ground whatever, attack a title for which such vendor has given warranty. Semble, that voluntary interdiction, even prior to the promulgation of the Civil Code of Lower Canada, was an absolute nullity and that the authorization to a married woman to bar her dower is not invalidated by the fact that her husband had been so interdicted at the time of such authorization.

Rousseau v. Burland, 32 Can. S.C.R. 541, affirming the Court of King's Bench, appeal side, Province of Quebec.

—Election — Proceeds of sale of deceased husband's land—Money in Court—Death of widow—Payment out to widow's administrator.]—The widow and administrator of a deceased owner of land sold the land with bar of dower, and the proceeds were paid into Court to her credit and that of the official guardian on behalf of an infant by the former marriage, she reserving her right to elect between the value of her dower and her distributive share in her husband's estate, one of which it was clearly understood she was to have out of the moneys in Court. Subsequently she elected in writing to take the former in lieu of "any other interest she might have in her husband's undisposed of real estate," and died shortly afterwards:

—Held, that her administrator was entitled to receive out of Court the value of her dower according to her expectancy at the time of sale.

Re Pettit Estate, 4 O.L.R. 506.

—Dower—Equitable estate—Voluntary conveyance by husband.]—It is only when the husband dies beneficially entitled thereto that the wife acquires any right to dower in an equitable estate, and the husband can therefore deal as he pleases with such an estate, a voluntary conveyance thereof, even though made with an object of preventing the wife acquiring any right to dower, being unimpeachable by her.

Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 5 O.L.R. 279 (C.

-Equity of redemption-Conveyance by husband alone-Discharge of mortgage-Effect of.]-On the 8th February, 1881, the owner of land subject to a mortgage, dated the 29th January, 1879, in which his wife had joined to bar dower, made a second mortgage in which his wife did not join. A portion of the money advanced upon the second mortgage was applied in payment of the first mortgage, and the first mortgagees executed a discharge, which was registered on the 5th March, 1881. On the 30th September, 1881, the owner executed a convey-ance of the land to the plaintiff, the grantor's wife joining therein to bar dower. Neither the plaintiff nor his grantor paid the principal money due under the subsisting mortgage, and the mortgagees, in the exercise of the power of sale, on the 27th February, 1892, contracted to sell the land to the defendant, who had ever since been in possession as purchaser. The plaintiff's grantor died on the 19th February, 1901, leaving his wife surviving him, and the plaintiff, claiming as assignee of the vife's right to dower by virtue of the conveyance of the 30th September, 1881, brought this action for dower on the 11th September, 1902:-Held, that, as the law stood on the 29th January, 1879, the wife, having joined in the mortgage of that date and thereby barred her dower, could become entitled to dower out of the equity of redemption only in the event of her husband dying beneficially entitled; and, as long as the mortgage subsisted, her husband could by a subsequent conveyance defeat her dower in the equity, which he effectively did by the second mortgage; and this was not affected by 42 Vict., c. 22 (O.), which became law on Anderson v. Elgie, 6 O.L.R. 147 (C.A.).

-Equity of redemption - Conversion -Dower.]-The testator in his lifetime purchased property subject to a $10,000 mortgage, which he assumed, but subsequently procured a new loan on the mortgage, in which his wife joined to bar dower, and paid the former mortgage off, the discharge being registered subsequent to the registration of the new mortgage. He afterwards made a further mortgage for $16,500.58, in which his wife also joined to bar dower. Subsequently he entered into an agreement for the sale of the property, receiving $500 on account. The agreement was carried out by his executrix, the purchase money being applied in paying off the two mortgages, taxes, etc., leaving a balance: -Held, that the wife was only entitled to dower out of the balance of the purchase money after satisfying the charges, and that the doctrine of conversion did not apply so as to defeat her claim to dower therein.

Re Williams, 7 O.L.R. 156.

-Infant wife-Purchaser for value-Consideration.]-A purchaser for value is one who obtains a property for a valuable, as distinguished from a merely good, consideration; and where there is no question of bona fides involved, the question of the adequacy of the consideration cannot be inquired into. Where a son, who had left his father's farm, returned upon his father's request and promise of remuneration, and lelped the father to work the farm, and remained with him, working in that way upon a further request and promise of a conveyance, and the father afterwards married a girl under 15, and then conveyed a part of the farm to the son; the wife, who was still under 15, joining to bar her dower:-Held, that the consideration, having become executed by the son having done his part, was a substantial and valuable consideration sufficient - to make the son a purchaser for value, and within the meaning of section 5 of the Married Woman's Real Estate Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 165; and, therefore, the wife having been found to have known what she was doing when she executed the release of dower, was not entitled to dower out of the land conveyed to the son. Judgment of Meredith, C.J.C.P., 6 O.L.R. 259, affirmed.

Crossett v. Haycock, 7 O.L.R. 655 (D.C.).

-Prior equitable charge — Legacies—Mort-Eage.]—A testator devised a farm to his son, subject to the payment by him of certain legacies. The son mortgaged the farm, his wife joining to bar her dower, and paid the legacies out of the proceeds. The son died seised of the farm, and the mortgage was then in force:—Held, that the son took under the will the legal seisin in the farm and not a mere equitable estate, and that his widow was entitled to dower out of the full value of the land.

Re Zimmerman, 7 O.L.R. 489 (Anglin, J.).

-Land contracted to be sold by testator-State of nature-Right to dower-Payment to widow for release.]-The testator was the owner in fee at the time of his death of a timbered lot containing 100 acres, from 15 or 20 acres of which he had taken the timber; a part of the cleared land had been prepared for cultivation, and seeds planted, but, owing to the nature of the soil, with little or no result. The testator had contracted to sell the whole lot for $2,000, and after his death the purchaser called on the executors to receive the balance of the purchase money and to make title. The widow claimed her dower, and her claim was compromised by the executors at $390, which they paid her, and she released her dower; they then conveyed to the purchaser under s. 24 of the Trustee Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 129:-Held, that, as the lot was not in a state of nature at the time of the death the widow's dower attached upon the whole of it: she was entitled to have one-third of such part as was not woodland assigned to her, and one-third of such part as was woodland, with the right to take from the woodland firewood for her own use and timber for fencing the other part, and the exectuors had the right, under section 33 of R.S.O. c. 129, to apply the money of the estate in the purchase of a release of the widow's dower.

Re McIntyre, McIntyre v. London and Western Trusts Co., 7 O.L.R. 548 (Street, J.).

-Locatee of Crown lands-Trust resting on bond-Unregistered assignment-Evidence-Corroboration.]-A locatee of Crown lands executed a bond in favour of his son, in consideration as to one of the lots, of the son's services for many years, which was duly registered, providing that the land should, at his death, be conveyed to the latter, on condition that he paid the Crown dues, which he did. The father married again before obtaining the patent: -Held, that his widow was not entitled to dower, insomuch as he had no more than the right of enjoyment for his life with the fee held as trustee for his son. A locatee of land transferred all his interest therein to his son by assignment, which was deposited, but not registered, in the Crown Lands Office: -Held, that notwithstanding R.S.O. 1897, c. 26, s. 19, the omission to register did not invalidate the transfer as against the assignor; and it operated to prevent the locatee from dying beneficially entitled, and so defeated any claim of his widow under the Dower Act. Held, also, that the evidence of the son, on which the facts mainly rested, did not need corroboration under R.S.O. 1897, c. 73, s. 10, as he was not litigating adversely, to the representative of his fatner's estate. Brown v. Brown, 8 O.S.R. 322, Boyd, C.

—Claim against assignee of mortgage—Remedy by redemption.]—Plaintiff joined with her husband in executing a mortgage of land, and released her dower in due form. Defendant took an assignment of the mortgage, and, subsequently, received from plaintiff's husband a release of his equity of redemption, in which plaintiff did not join:—Held, dismissing the action, that plaintiff could not assert a claim for dower against defendant as long as the mortgage remained on foot, her only remedy being to redeem.

Thompson v. Thompson, 37 N.S.R. 242.

To another son he devised the remainder of the lot containing thirtythree acres, together with all buildings and erections thereon, reserving such privileges as were theretofore given to his widow during her lifetime and subject to a bequest of $150 to the said daughter, and the payments of the funeral and testamentary expenses:—Held, that the widow was not entitled to dower in the dwelling house, but was so entitled as to the thirty-three acres, not being put to her election by reason of the disposition made in her favour.

-Statute of Westminster, 13 Edw. I .- Repeal by Provincial Legislature - Dower -Claim resisted on ground of adultery.]-A claim made by plaintiff to dower out of the estate of her deceased husband was resisted on the ground of adultery, the circumstances being that her husband, who was a seafaring man, being away from home for a number of years, and being reported to have been drowned, plaintiff, be-lieving this to be true, went through the form of marriage with another man and lived with him. The provisions of the Statute of Westminster, 13 Edw. I., were substantially embodied in the Married Woman's Property Act of 1884, which provided that a woman guilty of adultery . . should not be entitled to dower, etc., but in the revision by c. 22 of the Acts of 1898 this section was omitted and by s. 23 the Married Woman's Property Act of 1884 was repealed:-Held, that the effect of this course of legislation was to repeal the Statute of Westminster, if it ever was in force in this province, irrespective of whether it would be applicable to such a case as the present, as to which no opinion was expressed.

-Assessment for outlet-Drainage area-Benefit.]—The proceedings were begun by a petition to the council of the township of M. praying that, in order to drain a described area in that township, the C. river, which flows through a number of townships, might be deepened and improved. The petition was referred to a civil engineer, who prepared a report, plan, specifications, and an assessment of lands in several townships, which, in his opinion, would be benefited by the proposed work. The corporation of H. township appealed unsuccessfully to the Drainage Referee, and then to the Court of Appeal, contending that the lands in H., being comparatively high, had already a sufficient outlet and would not use the proposed new outlet:—Held, that the mere size of the area is of little consequence in considering whether or not the assessment is lawful. Drainage water must not go merely to an outlet by means of which it satisfactorily escapes from the lands which are being drained, but to a "sufficient outlet," which, as defined in s. 2, sub-sec. 10, of the Municipal Drainage Act, means the "safe discharge of water at a point where it will do no injury to lands and roads." It is not sufficient, in order to escape from liability, simply to shew that the first discharge was into a "swale, ravine, creek, or watercourse": s. 3, subsec. 4. There must appear to be a reasonable connection between the source of the injurious water and the outlet, and, that being established, the legal right to assess under the statute, however large the area, follows. And, upon the facts of this case, the assessment was right and should not be disturbed.

—Drains — Overflow — Flooding premises abutting on street.]—The plaintiff complained of damage to goods in his shop on the 27th November, 1909, by the overflow of water from drains constructed by the defendants. On the day of the overflow there was an unprecedented rain-fall; 4.35 inches of rain having fallen in 24 hours. The floor of the plaintiff's shop was 2 feet below the street level:—Held, on the evidence, that the water which damaged the plaintiff's goods came from the overflow of the 10th street drain; and that drain had been proved, by actual experience of 20 years, to be sufficient to carry off properly all the rain-fall for that period, even on a previous occasion when there was a rain-fall of 4,10 inches in 24 hours. The plaintiff said that the condition of affairs had been altered by the macadamizing of the streets and the filling in of the portion of a swamp upon which the plaintiff's shop was situate with sand or silt from the river. Held, that the plaintiff, having consented to this, could not complain. Held, also, that the rainfall of the 27th November was so great that it could not reasonably have been anticipated-it amounted to vis major.

-Injury to crop-Faulty construction of ditches-Blocking of culverts.]-The plaintiff, the owner of the north-east quarter of section 16, sued for damages for injury caused to his land and crop by water carried to and gathered on his premises, owing, as he alleged, to the faulty construction of two ditches and the blocking of two culverts by the defendants:-Held, upon the evidence, as to the south ditch, that the marsh had no real outlet at its south-east end south of the ditch-so that the water which flowed on to H.'s and then to the plaintiff's quarter from the south, came from the overflow of this south ditch; and that, although the main runways into which the marsh flowed at its north-west outlet stretched out northerly, there were minor ones running in a north-easterly direction which must have carried considerable water, in the autumn of 1907, to the north-western portion of the plaintiff's land. Held, as to the north ditch, dug by the defendants along the road allowance immediately north of the plaintiff's land, that it was not shown that any water came from it on to the plaintiff's land. Held, as to the east culvert, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to make that part of his case; and as to the west culvert, that the plaintiff had not established any duty on the part of the defendants to keep it open. The defendants were liable for the water that came from the south ditch and gathered in the direction of the north-east portion of the plaintiff's land, but not for that which gathered on the west side. The rainfall was a revere one, but not so much so as to bring it within the term "act of God." Special damages assessed at $200 and general damages at $25; costs of a County Court action.

-Ont. Ditches and Watercourses Act-Railway.]-An award under the Ditches and Watercourses Act directed that a drain should be built by the initiating owner a certain distance along a highway of the defendants, then by the defendants along the highway to a point opposite the land of a railway company, then by another land owner, and then by the railway company along the highway, or across the highway through their own land, as far as might be necessary to give a proper outlet. The drain was built by contract under the Act as far as the point opposite the railway company's land, but the railway company, whose railway had been declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, refuse to recognize the award or do the work directed. The defendants then built a culvert across the highway and brought the water to the railway company's land, and the railway company s and, and the railway company thereupon built an embankment to keep it back, the result being that it overflowed from the highway ditches and caused damage to the plaintiff: -Held, that there was no jurisdiction under the Ditches and Watercourses Act as far as the railway company were concerned; that the award was therefore no protection to the defendants; that the damage resulted from the construction of the culvert; and that the defendants were liable therefor.

-Mandamus — Notice — View—Damages.]

—A letter written by the complainant's solicitor to the council of the municipality, stating that the land in question has been flooded by water from a drain constructed by the municipality, but not saying anything as to the drain's condition, and asking them to construct and maintain such drainage work as is required to relieve the land, is not a sufficient notice under section 73 of the Drainage Act to justify the issue of a mandamus. It is the claimant's duty to show that proper notice has been given if a mandamus is asked for, and objection to the sufficiency of the notice may be taken by the defendants at any stage of the action without pleading want of notice. The drainage referee in trying an action may proceed partly on view, but in so doing must follow strictly the directions of the Act, and not make the view without appointment or notice to the parties. If he do so proceed, however, his finding, though based partly on the view, may be upheld if the evidence supports it. A complainant is entitled to recover for any injury to the use and enjoyment of his land or for its depreciation in value, if caused by failure to keep a drain in repair, but not for depreciation in value based upon the alleged insufficiency in size of the drain as originally made, and the Court holding, on the construction of the referee's judgment, that this element had been allowed to enter into the computation of the damages, reduced them from $250 to $50.

—Improvement of natural watercourses—Artificial watercourses—Embankments—Dykes—Drainage Act, 1894 (Ont.)—"Benefit" assessment—"Injuring liability"—"Outlet liability"—Assessment of wild lands—Construction of statute.]—The Ontario Act 57 Vict., c. 56, has not abrogated the fundamental principle underlying the provisions of the previous Acts of the legislature respecting the powers of municipal institutions as to assessments for the improvement of particular lands at the cost of the owners which rests on the maxim qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus. Lands from which no water is caused to flow by artificial means into a drain having its outlet in another municipality than that in which it was initiated cannot be assessed for "outlet liability" under said Act. Where a drainage work, initiated in a higher municipality, obtains an outlet in a lower municipality, the assessment for "outlet liability" therein is limited to the cost of the work at such outlet. Every assessment, whether for "in-juring liability" or for "outlet liability" must be made upon consideration of the special circumstances of each particular case and restricted to the mode prescribed by the Act. In every case there must be ap parent water which is caused to flow by an artificial channel from the lands to be assessed into the drainage work or upon other lands to their injury which water is to be carried off by the proposed drainage work. Assessment for "benefit" under the Act must have reference to the additional facilities afforded by the proposed drainage work for the drainage of all lands within the area of the proposed work, and may vary according to difference of elevation of the respective lots, the quantity of water to be drained from each, their distances from the work and other like circumstances. Section 75 of that Act only authorizes an assessment for repair and maintenance of an artificially constructed drain. The cost of widening and deepening a natural watercourse for the purpose of draining lands is not assessable upon particular lands under said s. 75, but must constitute a charge upon the general funds of the municipality. In the present case, the scheme proposed was mainly for the reclamation of drowned lands in a township on a lower level than that of the initiating municipality, and such works are not drainage works within the meaning of said s. 75 for which assessments can be levied thereunder, nor are they works by which the lands in the higher township can be said to have been benefited.

—Drain—Damages awarded against municipality for trespass—Finding of jury—Continuing trespass.]—In an action brought by plaintiff against defendant for entering upon his land and cutting a drain or trench through the same, etc., the jury found, in answer to a question submitted, that the town constructed the drain in 1886 "by virtue of the Streets Commissioner's power of office." It appeared that plaintiff knew of the drain at the time, but made no objection until the latter part of 1896, when the land caved in and repair work was undertaken, and plaintiff demanded compensation:—Held, that the clear meaning of the words "by virtue of the Streets Commissioner's power of office" was that the town constructed the drain in question by their agent, the streets commissioner, one of whose duties it was to construct drains. Held, that the trespass, being a continuing one, was not barred by the Towns Incorporation Act of 1895, Acts of 1895, c. 4, s. 295, which provides that "no action ex delicto shall be brought against any town incorporated under the Act... unless within tweive months next after the cause of action shall have accrued" except as to damage suffered more than one year before action brought.

These costs were taxed during a sitting of the board at the sum of $1,200, and were paid by the plaintiff corporation which brought action against the defendants for the amount. Defendants pleaded want of notice and that the County of Hochelaga had no right to appoint the special supervisor:-Held, that as the costs were taxed while the board was in session notice was not required; and that the council had, in this case, power to appoint the supervisor, but even if it had not the corporation would not be responsible for the consequences of a wrong proceeding solicited and accepted by the interested defendants. Held, further, that the decision of the Bureau des délégués rejecting the proces-verbal with costs against the petitioners, had, as to them, the force of chose jugée and could not be incidentally reformed in an action for recovery of the costs taxed on said judgment.

-Removal of obstruction-Municipal Act, 1883, s. 570 (Ont.)-Mun. Amendment Act, 1886, s. 22-Report of engineer.]-In 1884 a petition was presented to the Council of Elizabethtown asking for the removal of a dam and other obstructions to Mud Creek into which the drainage of the township and of Augusta adjoining emptied. The council had the Creek examined by an engineer who presented a report with plans and estimates of the work to be done and an estimate of the cost and proportion of benefit to the respective lots in each township. The council then passed a by-law authorizing the work to be done which was afterwards set aside on the ground that removal of an artificial obstruction was not contemplated by the law then in force, s. 570 of the Municipal Act, 1883. In 1886, the Act was amended and a fresh petition was presented to the Council of Elizabethtown which again instructed the engineer to examine the creek and report. The engineer did not again examine it (its condition had not changed in the interval) but presented to the council his former report, plans, specifications and assessment, and another by-law was passed under which the work was done. In an action to recover from Augusta its proportion of the assessment:-Held, affirming in this respect the judgment or the Court of Appeal (2 Ont. L.R. 4), Strong, C.J., dissenting, that the amendment in 1886 to s. 570 of the Municipal Act, 1883, authorized the Council of Elizabethtown to cause the work to be done and claim from Augusta its proportion of the cost. Held, further, reversing said judgment, that the report of the engineer was sufficient without a fresh examination of the creek and preparation of new plans and a new assessment.

--Municipal corporations--Contract to construct sewers-Interference by reason of other sewers. Interference by reason of other sewers. In the plaintiff contracted with the defendants to construct certain sewers. In the course of his work the contents of other sewers of the defendants, the existence of which had not been disclosed to him, but which had to be displaced to enable him to complete his work, flowed into the trenches dug by him, and impeded him, and caused him additional expense:-Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendants the loss thus sustained for the defendants had broken the duty they owed to him, to do nothing to prevent or interfere with his doing the work he had contracted to do.

—Flooding of land—Prevention of damages.]—Where there is, in the power of the person complaining, an obvious and inexpensive method of reducing, diminishing, or wholly doing away with the damages complained of, e.g., by a short transverse drain to prevent flooding of the land, it is his duty to adopt it, and, in default of his doing so, he is only entitled to recover such loss as he would have suffered if he had taken proper measures to prevent or diminish the dameters.

-Drainage of highway - County road -Special superintendent.]-Held, reversing the judgment of Robidoux, J. (Lacoste, C.J., and Blanchet, J., dissenting: -1. That Art. 772 of the Municipal Code applies only to the case where it is necessary to construct a watercourse over lands which adjoin a duly established highway, and where such watercourse is necessary, not only to carry off the water from the highway, but also for the drainage of the neighbouring lands. 2. In the present case, there being no question as to a watercourse serving for the drainage of several farms in the neighbourhood of the highway, but merely one as to the prolongation or continuation of the road ditches in natural hollows to facilitate the carrying off of the waters from the highway end, con-sequently, the special superintendent has the right, in the process-verbal, to provide for the construction and maintenance of such discharge drains in virtue of Arts. 799 and 803 of the Municipal Code.

—Negligence of municipality—Costs—Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 223, s. 470—Trespass.]—Section 470 of the Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 223, applies only to actions brought to recover damages "for alleged negligence on the part of the municipality." In an action against a municipality for damages for diverting water upon the plaintiff's land by the construction of a ditch without any proper by-law authorizing the work:—Held, that section 470 did not apply, as the plaintiff's claim was for trespass and not for negligence, and that the trial Judge had full power over costs.

Lawrence v. Town of Owen Sound, 5 O L.R. 369 (D.C.).

—Ditches and Watercourses Act — Engineer's award—Time for making.]—Held, on appeal from the award or the engineer of the township of the front of Yonge and Escott, made under the Ditches and Watercourses Act, R.S.O. c. 285, that the 30 days prescribed by s. 16 (2) of that Act, within which the engineer is to make his award, is merely directory and not imperative; and where the engineer attended on May 23rd under the Act, but did not make his award till August 1st, the award would not be set aside on the ground of being made too late. Bigford v. Baile, 40 C.L.J. 875.

—Costs of repairs—Varying apportionment.]
—Upon certain repairs to a drainage work becoming necessary; one of the townships interested directed their engineer to make a report, and he assessed the cost against the different townships in the proportions in which the original cost had been assessed, no proceedings having been taken under sections 69 or 72 of the Drainage Act to vary the assessment:—H-ld, that this was the proper mode of apportionment, and that, notwithstanding the wide wording of section 71 of the Act the Drainage Referee had no power to vary an apportionment made under such circumstances.

-Notice-Appeal to County Council.]-A public notice by a special superintendent of his appointment and visit to the place where it was proposed to make drains, is sufficient if addressed to the persons directly or indirectly interested in the work to be done, and owners of a concession through which the drains will necessarily pass are properly summoned by such notice. Arts. 881 and 882 of the Municipal Code, passed in the interests of agriculture, override Art. 501 C.C., and oblige the owners of high lying land to submit to drains being made thereon for the benefit of low and marshy lands. Owners who claim to be already subjected to the drainage established under procès-verbal in order to escape contributing to the cost of new works, must prove the homologation of the proces-verbal, and can, moreover, be subjected to participation in the cost of the new works for the portion of their land to be drained thereby. -Extension of sewers into adjoining municipality-Acquisition of necessary land-Terms and conditions - Uncertainty.]-Where a municipality is desirous of extending its sewers into an adjoining municipality, the acquisition of lands therein is not a condition precedent to an arbitration under s. 555 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19; but the arbitration or an agreement between the municipalities as to terms and conditions is a condition precedent to the dominant municipality exercising the power of expropriation of private property in the servient municipality. An award in which no specific lands are mentioned which may be taken by the dominant municipality with which the necessary connection with its sewage system may be made is void for uncertainty. And an award is bad which does not determine, pursuant to the Act, the terms and conditions upon which a proposed extension is to be made as between the municipalities.

-Culvert - Drain - Revocable license therefor - Damages - Easement.]-The owner of a farm consented to the water, which came through a culvert, being carried off by means of a drain, which he himself dug, through the corner of the farm, into a ravine. No written agreement was entered into therefor, nor was there any expenditure of public money thereon, nor any consideration given for its use:-Held, that a revocable license merely was constituted, which the plaintiff, claiming through such owner, was entitled to revoke; and even if a valid agreement with such owner were established, it would not be binding on the plaintiff, for no notice or knowledge thereof was proved, knowledge merely of the existence of the culvert and drain not being sufficient. Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction, the damages allowed him-$100-being under the circumstances substantial, while the cause was a recurring one, which, if allowed to continue, might ripen into an easement by prescription.

—Pumping machinery—Negligent operation of—Lands injuriously affected.]—Persons whose lands are injuriously affected by the non-operation, or imperfect or negligent operation of pumping machinery constructed under the Drainage Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 226, are entitled to damages under the provisions of s. 73 or that Act, and s. 4 of 1 Edw. VII., c. 30 (O.). Where, therefore, the plaintiff's lands and crops were injured by the overflow of water caused by the neglect of the corporation to efficiently operate the pumping plant erected in connection with certain drainage works constructed by the township, the plaintiff was held entitled to recover damages for the injury he had sustained, one-half of which was imposed on the general funds of the township, and the other half on the area benefitted.

—Through another municipality.]—A municipal corporation, unless specially authorized by statute, has no right to construct sewers or other works across or under the public streets of another municipality, without having obtained the consent of such municipality, or a right of way; and it may be restrained by injunction from proceeding with such works, where the same will cause great or irreparable damage to the plaintig.

Village of Ahuntsic v. City of Montreal, 26 Que. S.C. 291, Dunlop, J.

-Sewer-Insufficiency - Damage resulting therefrom—Compulsory use of—Actionable negligence.]—In the exercise of their statutory duties the corporation of the city of Moncton provided a system of sewers for the city. In the year 1894 the plaintiff built a house on the east side of lower R. street, and, in pursuance of a by-law of the city requiring drains to be made from all houses and buildings on the streets to the sewers, entered a sewer already laid down in the street. The sewer extended along lower R. street to a point a short distance south of the plaintiff's house, where it connected with a cross drain leading eastwardly into a main outlet sewer discharging into the Petitcodiac river at a point below high water mark. In the year 1898, when an unusually high tide took place, the water backed up through the sewer into the plaintiff's and other cellars on lower R. street. The same thing occurred several times afterwards. In 1901 the corporation, with a view, if possible, of preventing damage in future by back flowage, continued the sewer on lower R. street southwardly to the river, the outlet being below high water mark. The new sewer was constructed according to plans prepared by the city engineer and approved of by the city council, and the device at the outlet to prevent back flowage is the same as in the other sewers in the city, and similar in principle and mode of operation to those used in other places where sewers discharge into tidal rivers. The new sewer did not prevent back flowage, and the action was brought for loss and damage by the flowage of back water from the main sewer into the plaintiff's cellar through the house drain. Held, that the city, having the statutory authority to construct the sewer, and having built it after plans made by a competent engineer and adopted by the council, was not guilty of actionable negligence, on account of the insufficiency of the sewer to answer its purpose, and a person thereby injured has no remedy by action at law; and it makes no difference in this particular whether the use of the sewer is voluntary or under compulsion.

—Defective system—Recovery of damages and costs—Subsequent assessment.]—The assessment for damages and costs recovered by a person complaining of a defect ve system of drainage must be made only against the lands included in the drainage scheme complained of. Lands included in an amended scheme undertaken after the right to damages has accrued and claim has been made are not liable.

In accordance with the provisions of sub-section 2 of section 4 of the same Act, the council by bylaw fixed for the charges to be made by the engineer for his services at the rate of $5 a day, and under section 29 the engineer certified to the clerk that he was entitled to $45 for fees and charges for his services:-Held, that his certificate established prima facie the validity of his claim for $45, and the onus was on the plaintiff, objecting to the award, to show its incorrectness, which she had not done. Held, also, that under sub-section 4 of section 28 work under an award not performed as contracted for, may be re-let.

-Engineer's report-Delay in filing-Extension of time-Alteration and enlargement of scheme.]-The power of extending the time for filing the report of an engineer upon a municipal drainage scheme, by s. 9. sub-s. 8, of the Municipal Drainage Act, as amended by 62 Vict. (2) c. 28, s. 6 (O.), can only be exercised under the condition mentioned in that sub-section. It is a lim-ited power to extend for good cause, and is dependent upon inability of the engineer to make a report within the time fixed owing to the nature of the work, and not upon dilatoriness or supineness on his part. An engineer was appointed to make examination and report in 1900, but did nothing within the first six months after his appointment. Various extensions were granted, several after the extended time had expired. No report was made till February, 1905, and such report was after amendment adopted by the council in June, 1905, and a by-law founded upon it, the engineer advancing no excuse for delay except press of work and lack of assistance:—Held, that when the report was made the petition was not on foot, and therefore there was no warrant to the council for adopting the report or founding a by-law upon it.

-Liability to contribute-"Persons interested"—Water flowing from high level to low level lands.]—(1) The expression "persons interested" in article 470 M.C. applies to those who are benefited by the work therein mentioned. Hence, the owner of lands on a higher level from which water is carried by its natural flow to those on a lower level cannot be made a contributory to the work or expense provided in a procesverbal for the opening and maintenance of the municipal watercourse through the low level lands into which such water is discharged. (2) An action will lie before the Superior Court by a party unlawfully made a contributory to work in a proces-verbal to have it annulled in so far as he is concerned and such action is not subject to the limitation of thirty days prescribed in article 708 M.C. (3) When the considerations and homologation of a proces-verbal is referred by a local council to the County Council under article 136 M.C. and the latter takes the matter up and homologates the proces-verbal any action to annul it is properly brought against the corporation of the county which is liable for costs in case of contestation.

-Rural lands—Flow of water.]—The owner of rural lands is obliged, under Art. 501 C.C., to receive water diverted by the ditches on higher land of the adjoining owner, necessary ditching not being comprised in the exception of the article "without manual labour having contributed thereto." Moreover, difficulties of this nature between owners of rural lands are matters of administration and should be governed by the — Municipal corporation — Negligence—Drainage—Capacity of drain.]—F. brought action against the city of Ottawa claiming damages for the flooding of his premises by water backed up from the sewer with which his drain pipe was connected:—Held, that according to the evidence the sewer is capable of carrying off a fall of 1½ inches of water per hour, which is considered as meeting the requirements of good engineering and is the standard adopted by all the cities of Canada and the Northern States; the city, therefore, was not liable. Held. also, that a fall of rain at the rate of 3 inches per hour for nine minutes was one which could not reasonably be expected and for which the city was not obliged to provide.

 Claim for payment for construction work.]—S. 93 of the Municipal Drainage Act, as enacted by 1 Edw. VII. c. 30, s. 4, deals only with cases of damages occasioned to others by reason of the construction of drainage works in the way provided for by the municipality, and does not refer to the claim of a contractor or workman to be paid for work performed; and therefore an action brought in the High Court which appears by the statement of claim to be one to enforce payment of such a claim should not be summarily dismissed on the ground that the drainage referee alone has jurisdiction; but the question of jurisdiction should be left for determination at the trial, when the facts are investigated; Meredith, J.A., dissenting. Whether the point of law raised is brought up for hearing and disposal under Rule 259 or Rule 373, the party raising it must admit, for the purposes of the argument, that the pleading on which it is alleged that the question arises is true in fact; and for the purposes of the argument the allegations of the statement of defence ought not to be

He was denied access to the books and vouchers and, some weeks afterwards, upon settlement of the affairs of the partnership, the amount so charged to him was paid over to the other partners. It was subsequently shown that this partner had made his returns correctly and had not appropriated any part of the missing funds:-Held, that he was entitled to recover back the amount so paid in an action condictio indebiti as both the consent and the payment had been made under duress and in error, and, further, that there had been no ratification of the consent to the deduction of the amount by the subsequent payment, because the denial of access to the books and vouchers caused him to continue in the same error which vitiated his consent in the first place and, further, that, even if the consent given could be regarded as amounting to transaction, it would be voidable on account of error as to fact.

In an action claiming damages for trespass to land, defendant justified under a deed reserving a way "formerly used" by the grantor, and "running, etc." Evidence was offered to show that the way claimed by defendant, although it did not conform to the description, was the one used by the grantor, and was treated by him when he occupied the land as the road specified in the reservation, but there was evidence on the other hand to show that there was a way on the land which did comply with the description, although it could not be conveniently used on account of an obstruction placed upon it by a tenant, and because of a stream running across it. Held, that defendant's rights were limited by the words of the reservation, and that she could not acquire a different way by user, or by acts or declarations of the grantor after he had parted with the title.

-Easement-Conveyance of lots according to registered plan—Park reserve.]—Held, affirming the judgment of a Divisional Court, 19 O.L.R. 471, in the circumstances there stated, that what the plaintiff claimed and was entitled to was an easement, and that the defendant's possession was insufficient to bar the plaintiff. Mykel v. Doyle (1880), 45 U.C.R. 65, approved and followed. Per Garrow, J.A., that, even if the conveyance to the defendant had actually been of the land which she claimed to have purchased, she must have taken subject to the rights of prior and subsequent purchasers of lots laid out on the plan, such rights resting upon and being protected by the prior registration of the plan, of which every one subsequently dealing with the land was bound to take notice; and such rights were in the nature of easements. Per Meredith, J.A., that the whole difficulty had arisen through a mistake of fact as to the actual position on the ground of the reservations, a mistake made when the defendant first acquired an interest in the land, and not attributable to the plaintiff; what the parties were bar-gaining about was land abutting on these reservations, with common rights over them, for access, etc.; and the common rights in the reservations-created, t least when the defendant took her leaseleing easements, against which the Statute of Limitations relied upon by the defendant does not run, no title by length of possession had been acquired.

Servitude — Destination — Homologated plan — Street — Registry — Hypothecary creditor.] - The indication on an official plan of a projected street homologated by the city is not equivalent to the writing required by Art. 551 C.C. for creation of the servitude by destination of the proprietor; such destination must be by writing and not otherwise. The homologation of this plan does not constitute a title to the owner; such title is only acquired by compulsory or voluntary expropriation. The servitude created by destination of the proprietor has effect, as against third persons, only by registry with indication of the parts taken, conformably to Art. 2168 C.C., and is of no avail as against creditors previously registered. In this case the debt of the claim was registered at the time of the creation of the alleged servitude, and the city of Montreal not having followed up its purpose of expropriation for the continuation of Hutchinson Street, the claimant had a right to demand that the land be sold against the insolvent in satisfaction of his debt.

-Servitude - Right of passage - Parties to suit.]-The plaintiff, who is the owner of a farm lot abutting upon the rear of defendant's property, and without communication with any highway, complained that he had been prevented from exercising the legal servitude of passage to which the defendant's property was subject in favour of the plaintiff's. He asked that the servitude be located, and prayed that it be located on the defendant's farm road:—Held, 1 The legal servitude of passage in favour of the owner of a property enclavée over the neighbour's property, to gain access to a highway, exists upon the shortest line which communicates from the nearest highway to any part of the property enclavée, unless upon this line serious obstacles exist which would render the cost of construct-ing and using the road very onerous, in which case the servitude would lie over the shortest road which would avoid such obstacles. 2. No part of the property en-clavée can be counted in computing the distance to a highway, which distance would be measured from any point of the property enclavée to the nearest highway. 3. Even where a servitude of passage is held to exist, the person whose land is subject to it is not obliged to permit the person exercising it common use with himself of his farm road,—the situation of the servitude depending upon the natural conditions of the several properties, and not upon the works which the surrounding proprietors may make. 4. In case of doubt as to the locating of the servitude, the plaintiff ought to put in the cause the various parties interested, so that the location of the servitude may be ascertained by experts. It is not the duty of the defendant to bring these parties into the cause.

The company hav-ing filled up the ravine, G. applied for an injunction to have it re-opened:-Held, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal (Guthrie v. The plaintiff subsequently purchased from the defendant lands on said street, the deed containing a covenant by the defendant to indemnify plaintiff against the payment of any money, and all loss, costs or damages he might be chliged to pay for access to said street. The plaintiff's right of access being objected to by the university and use of the same forbidden, a settlement was effected by plaintiff agreeing to pay a named sum, part of which was paid down and an undertaking given to pay the balance by yearly instalments: -Held, that the dedication of the street was a limited one, and that the plai the amount h remedy was actually paid the predecess for nearly th of the Act en avenue, no rigurder the steffect of the create a new and also by statute could three years original lease -Agreement respecting easement - Effect of, upon subsequent purchasers of dominant and servient tenements-License-Revocation - Expenditure - Equitable compensation - License to lay water pipes - Repairs.]-The lower and the upper half of a lot of land were respectively conveyed to separate purchasers. In the deed of the lower half the grantor reserved to himself, his heirs and assigns, the right of way to convey water by aqueduct or otherwise from one of the springs on the lower lot to the upper lot. The easement was assigned in the deed of the upper lot. On the lower lot were two springs known as the front and back springs. It was agreed and acted upon by the purchasers of the lots that the back spring should be set apart for the exclusive use of the owner of the upper lot under the reservation in the deed of the lower lot. Plaintiff and defendant, becoming respectively the owners of the lots, entered into a parol agreement for the construction by the defendant of a pipe from the front spring to her house, to be tapped on her land by a pipe leading to the plaintiff's house. The plaintiff paid for the pipe connecting with his house, and for the part of the main pipe from the spring to the dividing line between the lots, and the defendant paid for the remainder. The flow of water to the plaintiff's house having been stopped by the defendant, the plaintiff forbade the defendant the use of the front spring. In the plaintiff's bill it was admitted that the defendant was entitled to use the back spring:-Held, that the agreement between the original purchasers of the lots to limit the easement to the back spring was binding upon the defendant; and that the license to the defendant to use the front spring was revocable upon the plaintiff making equitable compensation, fixed by the Court, to the defendant for her expenditure under the license. Where license is given to lay pipes on another's land to convey water to the licensee's land the burden of repair rests in law upon the licensee, and it is a revocation of the license to refuse to the licensee permission to go upon the licensor's land for the purpose of making repairs. Way of necessity-Parol grant - Easement by prescription - Constructive notice.]-The plaintiff's claim was for damages for trespass and an injunction to prevent defendant from exercising an alleged right to cross the plaintiff's land in going from his farm to the travelled road. The two parcels of land were separated by at least half a mile, but evidence was given to show that in the year 1875 the plaintiff's predecessor in title had as part of an agreement for an exchange of the two parcels with the defendant promised verbally to allow the latter the right to cross the parcel in question and that the defendant had exercised this right for four or five vears. His user of the way, however, ceased after that for six or seven years until about 1886 or 1887 he commenced to use the trail over the plaintiff's land at times for heavy loads; but in 1892 the defendant himself built a fence without any gate right across the trail which he claimed the right to use and between the plaintiff's land and a parcel on the east of it which the defendant had in the meantime acquired. There was no evidence to show that the plaintiff when he acquired the land had any notice of the alleged agreement for a right of way:-Held, 1. That the intermittent use by the defendant of a conveni-ent old trail was not sufficient to affect the plaintiff with constructive notice of the alleged agreement. 2. That defendant was not entitled to use the trail as a way of necessity notwithstanding that there were natural obstacles to his reaching the travelled highway by any other road. 3. That there was no such continuous enjoyment of the way as is necessary to establish an easement by prescription under 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 2. Carr v. Foster 1842), 3 Q.B. 581, and Hollins v. Verney (1884), 13 Q.B. D. 308, followed. 4. That the evidence was not sufficient to establish a definite agreement for a perpetual right of way or to warrant the interference of a court of equity by way of specific performance, as the agreement was made when the country was sparsely settled and the road allowances were not expected to be speedily made passable, and the passage across the intervening land not owned by either party might have been shut off at any time. Huddleston v. Love, 13 Man. R. 432.

-Streets and lanes marked out by hypothecary debtor-Antecedent registered hypothecary rights of vendor.]—On the 4th August, 1891, the estate of the late F. Frothingham sold to J. S. Thomson two blocks of land, for the sum of $35,945, part of which Thomson paid in cash, and the vendor re-tained a bailleur de fonds claim for the balance,-the hypothec being restricted to fifty cents per foot of the land so sold. On the 29th October, 1891, Thomson caused to be made and registered a plan sub-dividing the two blocks of land into building lots, and also indicating the proposed extension of a street called Hutchison street, and of two lanes through the land. These building lots he subsequently sold to various persons granting them a servitude of right of passage over the projected street extension and over the lanes. On the 8th December, 1892, the intervening party, Hatton, purchased the bailleur de fonds claim from the Frotningham estate, and was subrogated in all the rights of that estate. On the 11th October, 1893, Thomson having become insolvent made an abandonment of his property for the benefit of his creditors, and Caldwell (subsequently replaced by Stevenson) was appointed curator of the estate. The city of Montreal refused to carry out the proposed extension of Hutchison street, and the result was that the lots sold by Thomson, and on which buildings had been erected, fronted on portions of the land covered by the hypothec of Hatton, the intervening party. On the 1st October, 1894, Hatton petitioned for an order upon the curator, for the sale by the sheriff in or-dinary course of the land subject to his hypothec. The petition was granted, and the sheriff seized and advertised for sale four lots, being parts of the projected ex-tension of Hutchison street, and also parts of lanes. Five oppositions to the sale were filed by persons whose rights of passage would be interfered with by the proposed sale. These oppositions were dismissed by Davidson, J., in the Superior Court, on the ground that any undertaking or warranties or servitudes pretended to be made by Thomson could not affect the antecedent registered hypothecary rights of his vendor, which rights, in so far as they remained undischarged by payment, were vested in the petitioner Hatton:-Held (by the majority of the Court of Review, affirming the judgment of Davidson, J., as to the depositif, but with a change of motifs) that the opposition, being an opposition to secure a servitude, was, under Art. 725 C.C. P., unnecessary and inadmissible.

Re Thomson, Hatton v. Masson, 19 Que.

-Servitude - Oppositions - Ordre de sursis.]-The Court of Review had confirmed a judgment of the Superior Court which dismissed several oppositions by different persons, to secree an alleged servitude of right of passage, but an the oppositions were dis-missed by the majority of the Court, on the ground that an opposition afin de charge to secure a servitude is prohibited by the Code of Procedure, Art. 725, the recourse of the opposants by opposition to annul, or such other procedure as might be advised, was reserved. The opposants now asked for an ordre de sursis:-Held, that the opposants having urged no reasons subsequent to the proceedings by which the sale was stopped in the first instance, the Court was precluded by Art. 654 C.C.P., from granting the order asked for; and it was not within the jurisdiction of the Court to express an opinion for the guidance of the sheriff as to the effect of the judgment of the Court of Review.

The opposants then made an opposition afin de distraire, which the petitioner-intervenant moved be rejected from the record:—Held, that the opposition, being founded upon reasons which were not subsequent to the proceeding by which the sale was stopped in the first instance, and there being no Judge's order to stop the sale, was without effect under Art. 654 C.C.P., and should be rejected from the record, notwithstanding the reservation contained in the judgment of the Court of Re-

By the same deed the said Paul Dumais sold to Thibault all he had acquired from Beaulieu by the deed of 21st February, 1889, in all respects just as it was conveyed to him:-Held, that in view of the ambiguity of the terms of the contract, and to give effect to it according to what seemed to be the intention of the parties under the special circumstances appearing in the evidence the clause containing the reserve the subject matter of the litigation), should be interpreted and made to read as follows: "With the reservation in favour of Honorat Dumais of what shall serve as a right of way on the land sold with a length of twenty panels (pagées) running from the public road."

—Non-apparent continuous servitudes — Want of renewal of registration — 44-45 Vict. (Ore.), c. 16 —Arts. 505, 520, 534 C.C.]—Held (affirming the judgment of the Superior Court, Archibald, J., 19 Que. S.C. 292)—(1) Clauses in a deed of sale, prohibiting building in certain materials, or for certain purposes, do not create servitudes. (2) The words "établissements qui pourraient être de nature à incommoder les voisins et devenir un sujet de plainte," imply some substantial inconvenience exceeding ordinary grievances such as neighbours living together are obliged to endure. (3) A proprietor has a right, under Art. 520, C.C., to occupy nine inches of his neighbour's land, for a foundation wall eighteen inches in thickness. He has also the right to erect upon his line, a building which cannot serve as a mitoyen wall, such as a wooden brick-encased wall, but subject to the obligation of demolishing such wall at his own cost, in the event of his neighbour constructing a mitoyen wall between their respective properties; and even where the previously existing wall was quite suffi-cient for his purposes, he will still be obliged to contribute one-half of the cost of the mitoyen wall if he use it. (4) The word "fastened" (scellé) in Art. 534, C.C., is sufficiently complied with by a window fixed to the wall with nails or screws, and these covered by a moulding of plaster which is, itself, fastened in such a way as not to be removable without being broken. (5) The deed creating a servitude must sufficiently indicate the dominant property without extrinsic aid.

-Projecting eaves-Descending water and snow-Common owner - Conveyances by-Grant and reservation of rights.]-Plaintiff's predecessor in title built two houses on a lot with a passageway between them, and with the eavestrough and part of the eaves of the westerly house projecting over the passageway. He then conveyed to defendant's predecessor in title the westerly house "with the privilege and use of the projection of the roof . . . as at present constructed," and covenanted for the quiet and undisturbed enjoyment of the projection and that on any sale or conveyance of the house to the east he would "save and reserve the right . . . to such projection." Subsequently he conveyed the easterly house with the land between the two houses to the plaintiff "subject to the right . . . to the use of the projection . . . as at present constructed" -Held, that the defendant was not bound to prevent the snow and water discharged from the clouds upon his roof from falling from it upon the plaintiff's land, and that the easement of shedding snow and water, as had been done ever since the defendant's house was built, was necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted; that the original grantor could not, after such a grant, insist upon the grantee altering the construction of the roof so as to prevent the snow and water coming down, and the plaintiff stood in no higher position than the grantor, and that the projection of the roof carried with it the necessary consequence that water and snow falling upon the roof must to a large extent descend upon the land below. Judgment of the County Court of the County of York reversed.

In an action brought by plaintiffs, claiming under R., against defendant, claiming under T. R., to recover a proportion of the cost of rebuilding the aboiteau, it appeared that the dyke in question had never been brought under the operation of the Act, R.S., c. 42, of Commissioners of Sewers and Dyked and Marsh Lands, but that the provisions of this Act had been followed in relation to the calling of meetings of proprietors, the summoning of proprietors to perform work, and the appor-tionment of the cost of such work among the proprietors according to the acreage. an agreement signed by T. In an action to establish a right to ancient lights, the burden of proof in the first place is on the plaintiff to show uninterrupted use for twenty years, and then the burden is shifted to the defendant to show such facts as negative the presumption of ancient lights.

Feigenbaum v. Jackson and McDonell, 8 B.C.R. 417.

—Servitude — Renewal of registry—Aggravation.]—Failure to renew the registry of a deed creating a servitude does not involve the extinction of such servitude unless it is a question of a servitude real, discontinued and not apparent. In the present case the servitude in question, though discontinued, is apparent; it is indicated by a road, and the Act 44 & 45 Vict., c. 6, ss. 5, 6 and 7 do not apply to servitudes discontinued but apparent, and therefore it was not necessary to renew the registry of the deed which constituted it. There is no ground for claiming that there is aggravation of the servitude in the fact that the place where it should be exercised changes little by little on account of this state, as in the present case, the water of the river encroaches on the land and gradually destroys the place where the gravel is found which would be taken out under the terms of the deed creating such servitude.

Such provisions affect the right of the Crown as represented by the Government of Canada. (2) Under such provisions, where in Ontario one enjoys an easement as against the Crown and over Crown property, within the limits of some town or township, or other parcel or tract of land duly surveyed, and laid out by proper authority, for a period of twenty years he thereby establishes a right by prescription in such easement; and if the Crown interferes with the enjoyment of it by expropriation proceedings the owner is entitled to compensation. (3) To establish the easement by prescription it is not necessary to show that the present owner was in undisturbed possession for the full twenty years; but the undisturbed possession of his predecessors in title may be invoked in order to complete the term of prescription.

W. became the owner of, and went into possession of his land in 1855, at which time A., plaintiff's predecessor in title, was owner of and in possession of the servient tenement. That in April, 1856, J. W., with the knowledge and assent of A., made use of the way claimed, being informed by A. that he had the right to do so, and that the way had been given by the previous owner, P.A., for the benefits of the lots owned by J.W. That there had been a user, at various times in each year, as required, from 1856 down to 1890, the time of action brought, without any interference by plaintiff or others, until 1896, when, in 1897, 1898 and 1899, plaintiff obstructed the way, and sought to prevent defendant from using it. That the obstructions placed by plaintiff were, in each instance, removed, or protested against, by defendant. Evidence was given on the part of plaintiff to show that a gate had been maintained across the way, and that the user was permissive, but the learned trial Judge found that the gate was maintained with defendant's permission, and that its purpose was to avoid the expense of fencing, and to prevent cattle straying at certain seasons of the year. As to the character of the way, the evidence showed that it was a well defined road, with deep wheel tracks over its entire length, except for a few feet close to the gate, where the ground was hard and stony. Also, that the road had been in the same condition throughout the whole period during which it had been used: -Held, per Graham, E.J., Ritchie, J., concurring, affirming the judgment of the learned trial Judge (McDonald, C.J., and Weatherbee, J., dissenting), that defendant was entitled to the way claimed, and that plaintiff's action must fail. Held, also following Symons v. Leaker, 15 Q.B.D. 629), that the period from 1871 to 1895, during which a life estate was outstanding in plaintiff's mother, was not to be excluded in computing the period of forty years referred to in R.S. (1900), c. 167, s. 36, although it should be excluded in computing the shorter period of twenty years. Semble, that the ten-ancy for life, being a matter in respect to which defendant would not ordinarily have knowledge, and plaintiff would, should have been replied by the latter. Held, also that the occasional attempts at interruption by plaintiff in 1897, 1898 and 1899, not acquiesced in by defendant, were not sufficient to defeat the operation of the statute.

Eisenhauer v. Whynacht, 35 N.S.R. 295.

—Servitude — Water flowing from higher lands to lower — Action to annul procesverbal.]—I. A proces-verbal establishing an artificial watercourse to bring water from a higher land to a lower, which would not flow there naturally, is illegal and will be annulled. 2. In an action to annul such a proces-verbal, it is not necessary to make a county council, which, sitting in appeal, had amended the said proces-verbal, a party to the suit.

Brouillet v Corporation de Saint-Sévérin,

22 Que. S.C. 159 (C.R.).

-Right of way-Agreement-Evidence-User.]-Plaintiff claimed a right of way over a private road of several hundred feet ir length, in part on land of defendant adjoining plaintiff's land, and leading from a public highway to lots comprised in part by defendant's land, sold by defendant's predecessor in title, B., under a conveyance reserving to the grantees the use in common of the road. The evidence of plaintiff's predecessor in title, K., was, that shortly after the sale of these lots, he moved back on his land his farm house and fence, to widen the entrance of the private road at its junction with the highway, under an agreement with B., concurred in, as he believed, by the owners of the lots, that he, K., should have for so doing a right of way with them over the road. B. denied that an agreement was concluded, and his evidence was corroborated by H., a former owner of the lots, and by drafts of an agreement, containing alterations indicating that the parties were merely in treaty, and providing for the maintenance of the road by K. in common with the owners of the lots, an obligation disclaimed by plaintiff, and for a conveyance by K. of the part of his land to be used for widening the entrance. This conveyance was never made, and the road was included in the conveyance to the plaintiff. The road had been used, from the time of the alleged agreement, by K. and plaintiff in connection with the farm house, until it was torn down, situate about two hundred feet from the public highway, and the plaintiff had used, but not without interruption, the road for about 15 years, for a considerable part of its length. Shortly after the date of the alleged agreement, fences, with gates, crossing the road at separate points a considerable distance from its entrance, were erected by H., without objection by K.:—Held, that plaintiff's bill for an injunction to restrain defendant from obstructing plaintiff in the use of the road should be dismissed. Fairweather v. Robertson, 2 N.B. Eq. 412. —Private way over railway lands—User not incompatible with requirements of railway.]—Railway lands may be dedicated for public or other user so long as that user is not incompatible with the present and actual requirements of the railway. Where an adjoining landowner had used a well-defined path across railway station grounds continuously for over 30 years, his user was held to be confirmed by lapse of time. (Canadian Pacific R.W. Grand Trunk R.W. Co. v. Valliear, 2 Can.
Ry. Cas. 245 (Boyd, C.).

—Right-of-way — Gates.]—Plaintiff being the owner of a part of a farm, which was subject to a right-of-way connecting two other portions of the farm, reserved by a former owner of the whole farm, for the use and benefit of himself, his heirs and assigns as a lane or roadway 33 feet wide across . . so long as needed or required in passing to and from the other lands now owned (by the grantor) brought his action for a declaration of his right to place gates at the termini of the right-of-way:—Held, that he was so entitled.

Siple v. Blow, 8 O.L.R. 547 (C.A.).

-Aqueduct-Servitude-Contract to supply water.]-In the year 1880, Roy, who was building an aqueduct, found it necessary to pass over Doyon's land, and bound himself. in consideration of being permitted to do so, to supply Doyon with as much water for the use of his house as he had a right to expect from the proper working of the aqueduct, on payment of $4 per annum. In 1902, Roy forcibly broke the connection between the main pipe and Doyon's house and cut off his supply of water, because, although Doyon's family had increased in numbers, he refused to pay $9 per annum for the water:-Held, reversing the judgment of Pelletier, J .: - (1) Defendant had no right to refuse the supply of water so long as he retained the servitude on plaintiff's property. (2) If a party to a contract dissolves it by reason of infractions, by the other party, of some of its stipulated conditions, he must dissolve it in toto. Doyon v. Roy, 24 Que. S.C. 191 (C.R.).

—Right of way—Contract—Part performance—Unsigned draft of agreement—Admissibility.]—Though the agreement was verbal and related to an interest in lands, there was evidence of sufficient part performance by the plaintiff's predecessors in title to take it out of the provisions of the statute of frauds. Drafts of the agreement, as to the right of way, containing alterations and providing for the partial maintenace of the way in question by the plaintiff's predecessors in title, which obligation was entirely disclaimed by the plaintiff, were offered in evidence and admitted:—Held, per Tuck, C.J., and McLeod, J., that as the drafts were not signed by any of the parties to the agreement, were not shown to them when giving their evidence, and no explanation as to them was sought from the parties, such admissions were improper. Fairweather v. Lloyd, 36 N.B.R. 548.

-Servitude-Creation by deed-Light and air.]-A notarial deed inter partes, entitled "Convention et Accord" contained the following stipulation: "The parties, their heirs and assigns, will respectively have the right at all times to retain the openings in their houses built on said lots Nos. 120 and 119, and to alter the position of the same according to their several necessities. but they shall have no right to place more of them therein than they each have at present":-Held, that the said deed created a servitude de vue in favour of the parties. It follows therefrom that nothing could be done tending to lessen the use of this servitude and render it less convenient; no more can the condition of the places mentioned be altered so as to render the servitude illusory. Thus, the construction of a new roof to one house, of a height which almost entirely shut out the light and air from a window the maintenance and enjoyment of which were secured by the said deed, constitutes an interference with the exercise of such servitude, and consequently the person entitled thereto may demand the demolition of such new construction, which demolition must be such as will replace him in the same enjoyment as he had before. The servitude de vue so agreed to implicitly bound the defendant not to build in a manner to interfere with the exercise of the plaintiff's servitude.

Thibault v. Gourde, Q.R. 26 S.C. 185 (Sup.

—Common lanes—Right of passage—Private wall—Windows and openings on line of lane—Arts. 533-538 C.J.—A conveyance of lands fronting on public highways with the right of passage merely over a private lane does not create a servitude that can entitle the grantee to make windows and openings in walls which are built upon the line of the lane. A reservation in a deed of partition to the effect that lanes through subdivided lands should be held in common by the proprietors par indivis or their representatives must be construed as reserving the rights in common only to the co-proprietors, their heirs or the persons to whom such right in the lanes might be conveyed. Lespérance v, Goné, 36 Can. S.C.R. 618.

At the time of the conveyance and for many years preceding, the occupants of the east half of lot 19 were accustomed to drive to the 6th concession road across the west half of lot 18, and by his statement of claim the plaintiff claimed a right of way as an easement over the west half of 18 by reason of the conveyance from his father and twenty-five years' user of the same. J. D. died in 1877, and by his will devised to J. D. the younger the northeast quarter of lot 18, and to W. D., the grantor of the defendant, the residue of lot 18, and, by an agreement between J. D., the plaintiff, and W. D., the latter conveyed to J. D. a right of way over a lane then existing upon the west half of lot 18 and over an extension to be made of said lane, so as to give him access to the 6th concession road, in the following language: "Agree and permit the said J. D., his heirs, etc., a full and free right of way along the lane where it now is, on lot number 18, leading from the 6th line and extending 40 rods east from the centre of said lot so as to allow a free communication for all his and their teams, etc." The lane on the west half of lot 18, if extended easterly in a straight line, would be upon the northeast quarter of lot 18, the lands devised to J. D., and one matter is dispute between the parties was whether a proper construction of the agreement required that the extension of the lane should be by means of a jog continuing solely upon the land of W. D., or should be extended in a straight line upon the lands of J.D. Upon the trial before Galt, J., and a jury, a verdict was found that the plaintiff was entitled to the right of way over the west half of 18 to 6th concession road by reason of grant and continuous user, and also that the extension of the lane should be wholly on the defendant's land. An order nisi to set aside the verdict and to enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant was made absolute by the Divisional Court, and judgment entered for the defendant. On appeal to the Court of Appeal this judgment was set aside and the judgment at the trial restored. On appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada: - Held, Ritchie, C.J., dissenting, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal, that a way must be a defined way in order to pass by the general words "all ways used and enjoyed," when the way is not an existing easement or way of necessity, and that in this case the way claimed as an easement was not a well defined, permanent road or way, but simply a track in no settled or defined direction, and that all J. D. obtained from his father was a user purely of tolerance, under license and permission, and one which neither constituted an easement in fact at the time of the conveyance, nor a user which however long its continuance would ripen into an easement by prescription. Held, affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeal, that according to the true construction of the agreement between J. D. and W. D., the extension of the lane was to be wholly upon the lands of W. D., and not in a straight line. Held, that under Con. Rule 755, the Court having all the material before it necessary for determining the case, and as no useful purpose would be served by sending the case back for a new trial, the Court should give the final judgment in the action. Rule 755 being a transcript of the English Order 40, Rule 10 of 1875, and there being no rule in Ontario corresponding to Rule 568 of the English Rules, which restricts the Court to such inferences of fact as are not inconsistent with the findings of the jury, the observations of the Lord Chancellor in Toulmin v. Millar (12 App. Cas. 746) have no application. Rogers v. Duncan (1890), S.C. Cas. 352.

—Water supply—Injunction.]—If a right to use water is granted in consideration of other benefits, it should be regarded as a real servitude as much as a personal right; and an interim injunction will be granted to cause it to be maintained, especially when the respondent cannot put an end to it without trespassing on the property of the petitioner.

Christin v. Peloquin, 7 Que. P.R. 13 (Sup. Ct.).

—Conveyance—Right of way for pole line with exclusive possession—Grantor's right of cultivation.]—A conveyance of a right of way to a power and light company for a pole line and any other purpose which it may use it for and the sole and absolute possession of the right of way does not divest the grantor of his right to cultivate the right of way in such a manner as will not interfere with the company's poles or pole line.

Tarry v. West Kootenay Power and Light Company, 11 B.C.R. 229 (Morrison, J.).

-Origin in grant-Prescriptive title-Evidence-Referee's deed-Proof of decree.]-In 1854, R.B., owner of lot 8, conveyed the northern part thereof to M., together with the privilege of taking water thereto through a pipe, which M. was empowered to build, from a spring on the southern part of the lot. By mesne assignments M.'s lot, with the water privilege, became vested in J.B. In 1871 he executed to S. for 21 years, with covenant for renewal, a lease of the spring, with a right to lay a pipe therefrom, through the southern part of lot 8 to lot 9. The ownership of the southern part of lot 8 was then in H., and in 1905 became vested in the defendant. In 1872 S. built a pipe from the springs across H.'s lot to lot 9, and it has been in uninterrupted use ever since, a period exceeding 20 years. In 1904 lot 9, with the lease, was assigned to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' predecessors in title always rested their right to the easement on the lease and not upon adverse user:-Held, that a prescriptive title to the easement could not be set up. A deed of a Referee in Equity, though purporting to have been made under a decree of the Court, is not admissible in evidence without proof of the decree.

Loggie v. Montgomery, 3 N.B. Eq. 238.

-Party wall - Reservation of servitude -Resulting privilege.] - The vendor of a building of which the wall is in the condition of a party wall may reserve the right of the party wall himself. (2) This right to a common wall applies to the eventual rights of the vendor or his representatives in either of two alternatives, i.e., to make the wall common without payment of the compensation provided by Art. 518 C.C., should he acquire the adjoining premises, or to recover such compensation from the owner of such adjoining premises making it a party wall.

Duperrault v. Roy, Q.R. 28 S.C. 519 (Sup. Ct.).

-Real servitude-Dominant and servient tenements — Personal obligation.] — A covenant in a deed by which P. acquired the right to erect a wind mill pump on his neighbour's land to supply water to his premises by a pipe, "that he agrees to per-mit F., another neighbour, to take water for the use of his premises from the pump, and for that purpose to connect a pipe with the one to be laid by P.", does not estab-lish a servitude in favour of F.'s premises. The latter are not described so as to be made a dominant tenement and there is no servient tenement on which the charge is imposed. The covenant only gives rise to a personal obligation by P. to F. and the subsequent owners, à titre particulier, of F's premises have no rights of servitude that can be enforced against P.

Christin v. Péloquin, 28 Que. S.C. 299 (Archibald, J.).

-Servitudes-View from sides of gallery at right angles to division line.]-A view over a contiguous tenement from a platform or gallery of which the front parallel to the division line is closed, obtained by leaning over the side-rails that are at right angles to the division line, is not a direct view within the meaning of Art. 536 C.C. De Bellefeuille v. Auger, 28 Que. S.C. 532.

-Servitude - Building line - Condition of deed.]-In a deed of land sub-divided into building lots, a condition pronibiting the construction of buildings within a specified distance of the line of the street does not establish a servitude upon each of the lots for the advantage of the others, nor, in the absence of a dominant tenement, does it give rise to the obligation to observe the condition against building whereof the vendor and his representative would be creditors and the purchaser and his representatives would be debtors.

Pelletier v. Trudeau, Q.R. 27 S.C. 196 (Sup. Ct.).

-Servitude-Undivided ownership - Right of view-Petition-Common lanes-Rights of subsequent purchaser-Windows.]-In a deed of partition giving each of four copartitioners certain lots and lanes in a subdivision of inherited lands, the clause "the lanes adjoining their respective properties. shall be in common, as well to them as for their representatives," does not create an indivisible servitude or enforced co-ownership as to these lanes. Nor does it constitute a servitude by destination of the original grantor. Consequently a subsequent purchaser of one of the lots under a conveyance granting him merely a right of passage on one of the lanes cannot put windows in his building overlooking the lane in violation of Art. 536 C.C. Any of the co-partitioners and co-owners of the lanes may, in such case, exercise the action négatoire against him.

-Tenants in common-Division of lands by agreement and subsequent occupation-Way -User for more than twenty years.]-Land H., who owned and occupied a farm in common, agreed upon a division of the property between them and called in a surveyor for that purpose who ran a line upon which a fence was erected and by which the purties continued to hold. At the time of the division there was a road upon the property which had been used as a means of obtaining access to the public road and which both parties continued to use. After a time H. constructed a road on his part of the property which gave him a more convenient mode of access to the public road when going in certain directions, but he continued from time to time as necessary to use the former road. After the death of H., L. erected a fence for the purpose of preventing defendants, who claimed under H., from making use of the portion of the old road which passed through his land, and upon defendants taking down the fence brought an action claiming damages for the removal of the fence and an injunction to prevent defendants from passing over his land. The evidence showed a continuous user of the way for a period of about thirty years and plaintiff failed to show any abandonment or interruption of the user:—Held, affirming the judgment of the trial Judge, that plaintiff could not succeed in his action. Also, that the construction by H. of the new road over his own land and its use as mentioned was not an abandonment of his right to use the former way.

This right is not a real, but a personal conditional right of acquiring the common use of the wall without charge, in the event of becoming the owner of the contiguous property, or of recovering the charges and dues prescribed in article 518 C.C. from any other party who, becoming such owner, chooses to make the wall a common one. quently acquiring the strip which forms the servient tenement. It is the owner of the dominant tenement who should do the work necessary to establish the right of way over the servient tenement. The obligation on the owner of the latter is to submit to the servitude and nothing more. Lamontagne v. Leclerc, Q.R. 30 S.C. 418.

-Lane-Private way-Closing up-Registering plan-Amendment and alterations. I -The effect of section 110 of the Registry Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 136, whereby after a plan has been registered and a sale or sales made thereunder, the plan is binding upon the persons so registering it, is that it is not irrevocably so, but it may be amended or altered on a proper case being made out. Notice of any proposed amendment or alteration must be given to all purchasers thereunder, who are entitled to oppose the amendment or alteration. Such application may be made not only by the person registering the plan, but also by a purchaser or anyone claiming under him; but when it is sought to close a lane laid out on plan the soil of which remains in the person registering it, a purchaser seeking to close the lane must show that he represents the title of the person who registers. Where, therefore, an application was made by the purchaser of lands laid out on a plan situated in a city to close a private lane laid out thereon and the applicants failed to show that they had acquired the title to the soil in the lane, the application was refused.

Re Hamilton Terminal R.W. Co. and Whipple, 14 O.L.R. 117 (C.A.).

—Origin of right—Presumption of grant—Rebuttal.]—The plaintiffs and their predecessors in title had for many years under a lease from B., a supply of water by pipes passing through the land of the defendant. B. did not in fact own the land, and had no right to make the lease. There was no evidence that the lease was made with the knowledge and consent of H. the predecessor in title of the defendant), the owner of the servient tenement:—Held, that the plaintiffs' right to the easement could not be supported on the presumption of a lost grant and a continuous uninterrupted user for over twenty years referable to that title.

Loggie v. Montgomery, 38 N.B.R. 112.

—Light and air—Sale of house and portion of land—Interference by fence with enjoyment of vendee—Derogation from grant.]—Defendant, being the owner of certain land, on the east end of which was a house lighted by windows on the west side, sold and conveyed part of the land, including that part upon which the house was built, to the plaintiff. The defendant subsequently built a high fence very close to the house, entirely on his own land, but up to the boundary line. The fence cut off the light, and by excluding the air impaired the ventilation, and the snow and ice collected in the narrow space between the fence and the house from which it could not be removed, and when melting in the spring the water could not run away, but soaked through the walls of the house:-Held, that the defendant could not derogate from his own grant, and as the plain-tiff was thus deprived of that comfortable and reasonable enjoyment of the house which he had a right to expect, an injunction was granted restraining the defendant from continuing the fence in such a way as to interfere with that enjoyment.

-Right of way-Extinguishment by unity of possession - Revival on severance.]-Unity of ownership extinguishes all preexisting easements, such as a private right of way over one part of the land for the accommodation of another part, and nothing in ss. 26 or 45, or in any other provisions of the Land Titles Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 138, affects the matter. The owner of a certain property, upon which was a saw mill, in 1887 built a grist mill upon another part of the same property. In 1888 he conveyed the part of the property on which the grist mill was, and in 1891 he also conveyed the rest of the property, with the saw mill, to the same grantees. In 1894 the saw mill property was conveyed to the defendant's predecessors in title, and in 1895 the grist mill property was conveyed to the plaintiff's predecessor in title. Throughout all this time access to the grist mill had been obtained by a more or less defined way running through the saw mill property, and so continued until 1906, when the defendant obstructed it. The plaintiff brought this action for an injunction restraining the obstruction and for damages. In none of the conveyances or transfers was there any mention made of the way now in question, either by way of grant reservation or otherwise: -Held, affirming the decision of the Divisional Court reported 15 O.L.R. 67, that the action must be dismissed, upon the above principle.

-Aggravation of condition of the servient tenement-Action to abate aggravation -Stable erected near a common wall.]-(1) An action lies in favour of the owner of a servient tenement against the owner of the dominant one to have it declared that the condition of the former has been aggravated by the latter in the use of the servitude, and for an order upon him to desist from the acts of aggravation complained of. (2) He who builds a stable near a common wall or a wall belonging to his neighbour, is obliged to make a counter-wall or other works as provided in Art. 532, s. 4 C.C.

(3) The rule of the article is a fixed one to provide against a cause of probable damage and to preclude the greater number of disputes which would otherwise arise. Relief from the obligation cannot therefore be obtained through care, cleanliness or the avoidance of injury to the neighbour. (4) It is imposed as a protection, not merely to the wall from deterioration, but also to the neighbour, from nui-sance or injury. (5) Nor does it matter how the neighbouring wall is constructed. whether of masonry or of wooden planks. (6) The obligation also arises in the case of the enlargement of a stable which has existed for many years, during which it has not been enforced.

Defoy v. Saint Jean, 16 Que. K.B. 432, reversing 31 Que. S.C. 97.

-Right of way-Digging wells.]-The action negatoire between adjoining owners of the right of digging wells (puisage) and of passage against which the defendant sets up his title to the land on which the wells and the passage are situate can be instituted and determined as an action for revendication of said land without any necessity for resorting to a bornage. The contents of a lot of land expressed in square feet will be understood as meaning French feet for land originally forming part of a seigniory and English feet in all other Nevertheless such rule can be departed from by agreement and when land in the first category is conveyed by a description expressing its contents according to English measure subsequent transfers of parts of it by measurement in feet will be deemed to be according to the same measure when knowledge of the parties to the deeds is shown by the references they make to the first conveyance and by the conduct while in possession of the land.

-Possession of land-Way between lots-Ownership in common - Prescription.]-A right of way between two properties may become the joint property of the owners by prescription. Therefore, one of them, disturbed in the legal possession which he has had for a year and a day has his remedy against the author of such disturbance. The Court adjudicating on the claim in such case should, in pronouncing upon the rights of owner hip in the parties, avoid joining together he petitory and possessory rights.

-Dominant and of water.]-Diffi struction of a fire-escape, three feet wide with its lower end 17 teet above the ground (in compliance with municipal regulations), is not an unreasonable use nor inconsistent with the use of the lane in common by others; consequently, its removal should not be decreed at the suit of the owner of the land across which the lane has been opened. Judgment appealed from affirmed. Meighen v. Pacaud, 40 Can. S.C.R. 188.

-Entry for repair-Notice to owner of servient tenement.]-(1) An agreement between neighbours in these words: "les parties auront toutes deux droit de passer sur le terrain situé entre les dites maisons pour réparer chacune la sienne," does not estab-lish a servitude of right of way; it simply confers the right known to the old French law as "le droit de tour d'échelle." It gives the owner of the dominant tenement the right to go upon the servient one and to use upon it such implements as ladders, repair his buildings, wherever they are in need of repair and then only. Notice to the owner of the servient tenement is therefore implied, as a condition precedent to the exercise of the right. Further, it cannot be used, if no repairs are necessary, nor if such repairs cannot be effected at the season when the exercise of the right is claimed. (2) An action lies to compel the owner of a building to perform the necessary works to prevent rain-water from spattering from his roof or outworks into his neighbour's windows.

Thibault v. Gourde, 33 Que, S.C.R. 536.

-Obstruction to access of light to windows -Claim under grant - Distinction between grant and ancient lights.]-The rules settled by the Courts in case of the inter-ference with ancient lights are not applicable to a case where, as here, the plaintiff's rights were dependent upon a prior conveyance from the common owner of his lot and the adjoining one, now owned by the defendants, the plaintiff being entitled to receive such access of light through his windows as they had at the time the severance of his lot from that owned by the defendants:-Held, however, Mabee, J., dissenting that the plaintiff had by his inertness in insisting on his rights, while the defendants' building complained of was in course of construction, disentitled himself to a mandatory injunction for the removal thereof, his remedy being limited to an award of damages, with a reference, if the damages assessed by the trial Judge were not accepted as sufficient. Held, also, that the existence at the time the grant to the plaintiff's predecessor in title of an outstanding mortgage, which was subsequently discharged, was not material.

Simpson v. Eaton, 15 O.L.R. 161 (D.C.).

-Dominant and servient tenement - Flow of water.]-Difficulties between adjoining owners of rural property arising from water flowing to the lower land are subjects of administration and should be governed by the provisions of the Municipal Code. They do not afford ground for recourse by action negatoire in favour of the owner who claims that his neighbour, by means of ditches, has caused an excessive discharge of water on the former's land.

Muldoon v. Casey, Q.R. 33 S.C. 45 (Ct. Rev.).

-Servitude - Purchase of dominant and servient tenements-Unity of ownership.] -By the judgment appealed from (O.R. 18 K.B. 24), reversing the judgment of the Superior Court (Q.R. 32 S.C. 289), it was held that (1) Where the purchaser of two parcels of land upon one of which there existed a servitude for the benefit of the other, that was extinguished by the unity of ownership thus restored, executes a deed of sale of the former, subject to the servi-tude as constituted by the original title deed to which it made reference, such deed of sale in turn becomes a title which revives the servitude; (2) The situation of a servitude giving a right of passage, which has not been defined in the title by which it was created, is sufficiently determined by the description given of its position, accompanied by a plan, in a deed of compromise between the owners of the two parcels of land submitting their differences in regard to the servitude to the decision of an arbitrator; (3) Both before and since the promulgation of the Civil Code, apparent servitudes are not purged by adjudication on a sale by the sheriff under a writ of execution. On appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada the judgment appealed from was affirmed.

Thompson v. Simard, 41 Can. S.C.R. 217.

-Conveyance of lots according to registered plan-Park reserve and entrance marked.]-Upon a registered plan of land in the township of Bertie there were laid down one hundred and sixty-two lots, and there were shown upon it six blocks, lettered from A to F; between these blocks there was a space marked "No thoroughfare, private entrance for occupants of lots in Crescent Beach tract;" and, except between blocks E and F, there was at the lake shore end of the space a figure marked "Park Private Reserve," and between blocks E and F two figures similarly marked. All of these lots were originally owned by the Crescent Beach Association, and the plaintiff and defendant each bought and had conveyed to them certain lots according to the regis-tered plan, and certain other lots were demised to the defendant by the association for a term of 99 years from the 21st August, 1894. The defendant, by mistake, occupied with her house and grounds part of one of the spaces marked "entrance" on the plan and part of one of the parts marked "Park Private Reserve." The plaintiff, alleging the right of herself and all others the property holders at Crescent Beach to the enjoyment of the private entrance and park reserve, brought this action to restrain the defendant from obstructing and to compel the removal of the house, etc. The defendant pleaded a mistake as to the land conveyed and demised to her and also the Statute of Limitations:-Held, that the defendant was not in the present action, to which the association was not a party, entitled to a reformation of the instruments of conveyance from the association to her; and semble, that the evidence would not justify a reformation. Held, also, that if the defendant were in equity the owner of the land which she claimed to have purchased from the association, her equitable right could not prevail against the plaintiff, who claimed under a registered conveyance; there was no evidence that the plaintiff purchased with such notice of the defendant's equitable right as would be required to defeat the plaintiff's registered title; all that was shown was that the plaintiff had notice that the defendant was in possession and had made valuable improvements on the land, and that was not sufficient. Held, also, following Mykel v. Doyle (1880), 45 U.C.R. 65, that the defendant's possession for ten years was not sufficient to bar the right of the plaintiff to the easements claimed by her. Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to the easements or rights claimed; that was the effect of the plan and the conveyances of lots to her. Semble, also, that the defendant was precluded by the judgment in a former action from setting up in this action the same defences in regard to the easements claimed by the plaintiff as had been set up in regard to the lots in question in the former action.

—Servitude—Surrender.]—A servitude may be extinguished by surrender, or by renunciation implied as well as expressed, on the part of the owner of the dominant property. This result follows, in the case of a servitude non altius tollendi, when such owner having conveyed away the portion of his land adjoining the servient property, has allowed the purchaser, a joint stock company in which he is a shareholder, to erect a building of a height exceeding that permitted by the conditions of the servitude.

EJECTMENT.

Conveyance of fee-Reservation of life estate-Possession.]-In October, 1853, D. conveyed to his father and two sisters six acres of land for their lives or the life of the survivor. A few days later he conveyed a block of land to M. in fee "saving and excepting" thereout six acres for the life of the grantor's father and sisters or that of the survivor, or until the marriage of the sisters, on the happening of said respective events the six acres to be and remain the property of M., his heirs and assigns under said deed. Three months later M. conveyed the block of land to R. M. in fee, and when the life estate terminated in 1903 the latter brought ejectment against the heirs of the life tenants who claimed the six acres on the ground that the deed to M. contained no grant of the same and also because the life tenant had had adverse possession for more than twenty years:-Held, that as the evidence showed that the life tenants went into possession under R. M. the title of the latter could not be disputed and the statute would not begin to run until the life estate terminated. Held. per Idington, J., that R. M. under his deed and that to his grantor had the reversion to the fee in the six acres after the life estate terminated. The lease of the life estate was given to R. M. with the other title deeds on conveyance of the land to him and on the trial it was received in evidence as an ancient document relating to the title and coming from proper custody. It was not executed by the lessees and no counterpart was proved to be in existence. Held, that it was properly admitted in evi-

This paragraph of the defence having been struck out as disclosing no reasonable answer to the action, or in the alternative, as tending to prejudice, etc., the fair trial of the action:—Held, that the paragraph should be restored and amended in such a way as to show that the heir of M., in whose possession the land was alleged to be, was defendant's wife, and that plaintiffs, if they wisned, should have leave to add H. as a defendant.

--Equitable defence -- Verdict under---Legal title---Costs.] -- In an action of ejectment where the defendant pleads he is entitled to possession on equitable grounds, and the Judge trying the case without a jury finds that the plea is proved, it is proper under s. 134 of c. 111 Con. Stat. 1903, to order a verdict for the defendant, although the legal title and right to possession is in the plaintiff, and the effect of the verdict is to deprive the plaintiff of the costs of the ejectment.

—Possession of land—Squatter—Revendication by owner—Payment for improvements — Liability for revenues received.—The party in possession of land is in good faith within the meaning of Art. 411 C.C. only so far as he possesses animo domini. Therefore a squatter who has conveyed or sold his rights in a lot on the public domain and continues to occupy it after his purchaser has obtained a title to it by letters patent from the Crown does not occupy the lot in good faith and is not entitled to the revenues therefrom. He can only claim from the owner who revendicates the land the cost of his improvements subject to compensating said owner for the value of the revenues he has received.

Returning officer—Return—Injunction.]
—An injunction order was made ex parte restraining the defendant, who was the returning officer for an electoral division, his servants and agents, from making a return to the elerk of the Executive Council that H. was elected as a member of the Legislative Assembly for that electoral division. Before notice of the injunction order reached the defendant, he had delivered his return, to the effect that H. was elected by acclamation, to an express company for conveyance to the clerk. The agent of the express company was notified of the injunction order, and knew that it restrained the defendant, his servants and agents from delivering the return; but, several hours afterwards, delivered it to the clerk:-Held, that, although the express company were the agents of the defendant, and had committed an act in violation of the injunction, and were guilty of contempt of Court, the status as it existed at the time they received notice of the injunction could not be restored, because the return could not be recalled, and it could not be said that it, although made in violation of the injunction, was a nullity; and the Court had no jurisdiction to declare void a return which was not on its face a nullity. The return having been actually made, its validity or invalidity must be dealt with under the Controverted Elections Act: and the Court could not grant a mandamus to the defendant to compel him to declare that the plaintiff had been duly nominated as a candidate at the election in question, for to do so would involve a finding that the return made was illegal; and to continue the injunction would be futile. Semble, that the violation of the injunction by the express company was deliberate and intentional, and it was no excuse that the agent had been advised by his solicitors to do as he did.

-Registration of electors-Sittings of registration clerk.]-Pursuant to s. 6 of the Manitoba Election Act, 1904, an order of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council was passed on the 28th April, and proclaimed in the Manitoba Gazette on the 30th April, appointing registration clerks for a certain electoral division, and fixing the 23rd May as the date and A.'s house as the place for receiving applications for registration of electors. Notices as provided for in s. 7 were posted up as required, naming the 23rd as the date. The King's Printer, for certain reasons, deemed the date inconvenient, and printed and on the 4th May sent out new posters naming the 16th May as the date, and these were posted 10 days before the 16th May. On the 10th May an order in council was passed amending the proclamation of the 30th April by substituting the 16th for the 23rd May. Quære, whether the Lieutenant-Governor in council had power to change the date mentioned in the proclamation. that, at all events, the King's Printer had no authority to issue the amended notices. and the notice thus given was not a compliance with s. 9, which requires the no-tice to be posted at least 10 days before the commencement of the registration sitting. Upon an application for a mandamus to compel the registration clerk to hold a sitting at A.'s house, the applicant swore that he had seen the notice appointing the 23rd, but did not become aware of the change of date until after the sitting had been held on the 16th. Semble, that it was no answer to the application that the applicant might have attended at another place in the electoral division on a subsequent day; his right was to have the clerk sit at the places named in the proclamation. But held, that to make a mandamus effective the clerk must be ordered to attend at some future time: the Court had no power to fix a time, and the clerk was equally powerless. The Lieutenant-Governor in council might have the power under s. 10, but the Court had no jurisdiction to compel the exercise of it; and the Court will not grant a mandamus unless it can be made effective. Re Assiniboia Electoral Division; Re

Where, therefore, persons resident within an electoral district, and otherwise qualified, went to another province merely to take part in harvesting work there, and with the intention of returning, which they did, their absence was held to have been of a temporary character, and their qualification not thereby affected.

-Territorial election-Court of Revision -Judge in appeal — Jurisdiction — Voter's qualification.]—In the case of an election under the Territories Election Ordinance, a Judge sitting in appeal from the Court of Revision is limited in the exercise of his jurisdiction to the same extent as the Court of Revision. The jurisdiction of the Court or Revision is limited to enquiring whether any of the formal statements, subscription to which the Ordinance provides may be required from a person tendering a vote, is false in whole or in part; if false in whole or in part, the vote is to be disallowed; if altogether true, the vote is to be allowed. New polls were held in two polling divisions; votes were challenged on the following grounds; (a) voter was deputy returning officer in another polling division on the day of the general election, (b) voter was resident in another polling division on the day of the general election and entitled to vote there, and (c) voter was absent from electoral district on day of general election; and in each case the voter could not possibly have voted on that day at either of the two polling divisions in question; the Court of Revision disallowed these votes; the Judge in appeal held that he had no jurisdiction sitting in appeal (but only in proceedings under the Controverted Elections Ordinance) to consider the validity of these votes, though he doubted their validity. "Residence" means a man's habitual physical presence in a place or country which may or may not be his home; the word "habitual" does not mean presence in a place for either a long or short time, but the presence there for the greater part of that period.

One of the revisors took this completed list for the purpose, as alleged, of forwarding it to the secretary-treasurer of the municipality. Several days afterwards the certificate and affidavit, which were attached to the list above mentioned, were received by the secretary-treasurer, annexed to another list containing over 400 additional names-of unqualified voters - the same having been mailed-registered-from the city of St. John in an adjoining county. On motion to make absolute a rule nisi to quash the bogus list the fraud was admitted by the counsel showing cause, but it was contended that certiorari would not lie. The Court held, however, that the action of the revisors was a judicial proceeding and that certiorari would therefore lie. Rule absolute to quash.

Ballots marked for a candidate, but having (1) the word "vote" written after his name; (2) having the word "Jos.," being an abbreviation of the candidate's christian name, written before his name; (3) having the candidate's surname written on the back of the ballot, were held bad.

Where the printer had printed the surname of a candidate too high up and in the division of the ballot paper occupied by the name of another candidate:—Held, that the ballots marked with a cross above the dividing line but opposite to the surname so placed could not be counted for such candidate, but were either marked for the other candidate, or were void for uncertainty.

on the bailot between the names of the candidates, and not the lines between the numbers and the names, indicate the divisions within which the voter's cross should be placed, and the space containing the number is part of the division of the ballot containing the candidates' name, and that votes marked by a cross to the left of the lines between the numbers and the names were good. Held, also, that a ballot, from which a portion of the blank part on the right-hand side had been removed, leaving all the printed matter except a portion of the lines separating the names, but which was properly marked by the voter, was good. Held. also, that ballots marked for both candidates, and a ballot marked on the back. although over a candidate's name, were properly rejected. pending. On the motion coming on for hearing, it was claimed that the board had no power to go on with their proceedings because, under s. 70 of The Manitoba Voters' List Act, 63 & 64 Vict., c. 62, the former revised lists were to be used until new lists had been prepared and revised throughout the province, and further, that even when that was done, the board were not to prepare the whole list, but only lists supplemental to the lists prepared under The Voters' Lists Act. It was contended on behalf of the board that there was no power in the Court to interfere with a hoard of that kind by prohibition:—Held (1), That a Judge should not undertake to decide difficult questions of that kind on a summary application such as was made, but that the parties should be left to declare in prohibition which might still be done under The Queen's Bench Act. (2) Although the board was about to prepare and revise lists of electors under the Act. it could not be assumed that they would decide or attempt to decide what lists the returning officer should use at the coming election, or would determine or attempt to determine whether the vote of the applicant should be received or not in the event of his name not being put on the list they were about to prepare; and therefore the applicant could not say that the board intended to take away any of his rights, and there was no necessity for an immediate prohibition. Motion dismissed without costs.

Dominion election—Presiding officer—Refusal to deliver ballot to voter—Liability for malice—Non-resident's oath.]—Plaintiff who resided at St. John in the province of Xew Brunswick, was a property owner and entitled to vote at Dalhousie in the County of Annapolis and province of Nova Scotia, where his name appeared on the list of voters as a non-resident. Plaintiff presented himself before the deputy returning officer at Dalhousie at the last Dominion election and demanded a ballot paper, but the officer refused to deliver a ballot paper or to permit plaintiff to vote unless plaintiff took the non-residents' oath:—Held.

that the oath proposed was not applicable to the case of a property owner residing in another province, and that the officer was wrong in his refusal to permit plaintiff to vote. Per Ritchie, J., McDonald, C. J., concurring (affirming the judgment of the trial Judge). Held that plaintiff's right to vote being clear defendant was responsible in damages for his refusal to permit him to do so. Held, also, that defendant, in undertaking to determine plaintiff's right to vote, was not acting in a judicial capacity, but was merely a ministering officer to carry out the provisions of the Act. Held, also, even assuming that defendant was acting in any respect in a judicial capacity, that, his action in refusing the ballot paper not being bona fide, but being wilful and corrupt, the action was maintainable even on the theory that proof of malice was necessary. Per Weatherbe, J., and Graham, E.J. Held that defendant was a public officer having a quasi judicial duty to perform and that he could not be made liable for an error of judgment. Held, that in order to make defendant liable, malice must be shown, that the burden of showing malice was on plaintiff, and that the evidence adduced was not sufficient for that purpose.

(2) The notice of complaint consisted of fifteen sheets, each in itself in the form given in the schedule to the Voters' Lists Act as No. 6, the lists Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 being printed on the back of forms of notices of complaint; only the notice of complaint on the last sheet was filled out and signed by the complainant: but evidence was given that the whole fifteen sheets were attached together when the complainant signed the notice, and handed the whole to the clerk; and they so appeared before the Court. The notice referred to the "subjoined lists:"-Held, that the lists were part of the complaint, and it was sufficient in that regard. (3) Held, that, if it were necessary, in order to make the notice of complaint a good one, to amend it so that it should refer explicitly to the annexed sheets, the amendment should not be allowed under s. 32.

—Damages for depriving of vote — Two causes of action — Election to pursue one -Penalty - Discovery - Dominion Elections Act, 1900.]-The writ of summons (issued 30th January, 1901) was indorsed with a claim to recover penalties under the Dominion Elections Act, 1900, and for damages for wrongfully depriving the plaintiff of his vote at an election held on the 7th November, 1900. The statement of claim (delivered 14th March, 1901) did not assert any claim to penalties, but was confined to the common law cause of action. The statement of defence delivered 27th March, 1901. denied the allegations of the statement of claim and alleged want of notice of action. The plaintiff obtained the usual discovery from defendant, without objection. On 31st December, 1901, after such discovery, and when the action was ready for trial, the plaintiff applied for leave to amend the statement of claim by adding a claim for the penalties mentioned in the indorsement of the writ:-Held, that the defendant in an action for penalties might have successfully resisted an attempt to compel him to submit to an examination for discovery. Regina v. Fox (1898), 18 P.R. 343, distinguished. The plaintiff, having by proceeding at common law obtained from the defendant the discovery which he could not have had in an action for penalties, and having allowed more than a year to elapse before applying for leave to amend, must, notwithstanding the indorsement of the writ, be taken to have conclusively elected to pursue his common law remedy; and leave to amend was properly refused. Ss. 19, 131, 133, and 142, of the Dominion Elections Act, 1900, discussed.

-Ballots - Marking of - Initialling of.]-Ballots marked with a straight line only are improperly marked and cannot be counted, while ballots marked with a cross upon or above the upper division line, or marked with a cross made by three or four pencil strokes, or marked with a cross and also with what might be taken for a "c," are properly marked, and should be counted. In initialling the ballots a deputy returning officer at one sub-division put as his initials H. G., instead of his full initials H. C. G., and a deputy returning officer at another polling sub-division put McN. instead of his full initials W. D. McN .: - Held, that such ballots were sufficiently initialed within the meaning of the Act, the object of such initialling being merely the identification of the ballot, which was effected here, there being no suggestion that the number of ballots cast at the polling sub-division was not correct; and, semble, that under these circumstances the ballots should not be rejected, even if not initialed at all.

-Recount of votes-Jurisdiction of Junior Judge of County Court-Ballots-Irregular marking - Notice of appeal.] - A Junior Judge of a County Court has jurisdiction under the Ontario Election Act. R.S.O. 1897, c. 9, ss. 124-131, to recount votes. Four ballots counted for one of the candidates by a deputy returning officer were held to have been properly rejected by a County Court Judge on a recount, in consequence of each being marked with a cross in the divisions of both candidates. There was nothing to show that, as was alleged, one of the crosses had been placed on each ballot, after the count by the deputy returning officer. A ballot having a distinct cross in the division of one candidate, and an obliterated cross in that of the other, was allowed for the first. But where there was a distinct cross in one division, and a very faint one in the other, the ballot was rejected. A ballot marked for one candidate and having the name of that candidate written on the back, was rejected. Ballots having, instead of a cross, a perpendicular line, a horizontal line, a straight slanting line, were rejected. A ballot properly marked, but having on the back words written by the deputy returning officer, was allowed. Ballots marked by placing the cross on the back were rejected. Several tremulous connected marks in one division. Ballot allowed. A strongly marked cross in one division, and a thin faint upright pencil mark on the upper edge of the ballot in the other division, not indicative of any intention to make a cross. Ballot allowed. A distinct cross, and in the same division, in one case, a slight, irregular pencil marking, and in another case a slight, cloudy, formless pencil marking. allowed. A mark consisting of two lines lying very close to each other, partly coincident and then divergent, both distinctly visible in one division. Ballot allowed, as there was evidence of an intention to make a cross. Remarks of Ritchie, C.J., in the Bothwell Case (1884), 8 S.C.R. 676, 696, referred to. The notice of appeal from the decision of a County Court Judge upon a recount of votes under s. 129 (1) of the Election Act, need not be signed by the appellant candidate personally, but may be signed by his solicitor or agent on his behalf. Where both candidates appeal from the decision of the County Court Judge, and the result of the appeal of one, first heard and determined, is to give his opponent a majority, the appeal of the other will be heard and determined, although it cannot change the result except by increasing the majority. —Recount of votes—Ballot papers — Absence of candidates' numbers.]—The candidate's number, mentioned in s. 69 (3) of the Ontario Elections Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 9, is not an essential part of the ballot paper; and where a deputy returning officer, in detaching the ballot papers from the counterfoils, did so in such a manner that the candidates' numbers were left on the counterfoil, instead of appearing on and as part of the ballot papers, such ballot papers, when marked by voters, were not rejected.

-Recount of ballots.]-Upon the recount of ballots cast at the election of a member for the Ontario Legislature, there being two candidates, ballots were allowed which were marked (1) with a cross below and to the right of the lower compartment; (2) with a cross in one compartment and a line in the other; (3) with a cross in one compartment and a faint and probably unintentional mark in the other; (4) with a mark somewhat in the form of an inverted V as being probably intended for a cross: (5) with three crosses in one compartment; and (6) with a mark which might fairly be taken to be a clumsy and ill-made cross; and ballots were disallowed which were marked (1) with a single stroke-the error in the head-note in West Huron (1898), 2 E.C. 58, in which it is stated that ballots so marked were in that case allowed, being pointed out; (2) with a plain cross in one compartment, and a fainter, partly smudged or rubbed out cross in the other; (3) with the name of the candidate written in the compartment; and (4) with a circle in both compartments. Ballots marked in due form, but with a coloured pencil, were objected to on the ground that there was possibly a design to identify the voters, but these were allowed, there being no evidence and evidence not being admissible, to show whether a pencil of this kind had or had not been supplied by the deputy returning officer.

—Recount of votes — Marking of ballot papers — Identification of voters — R.S.O. 1897, c. 9, ss. 112 (4), 124, 126.]—A County Court Judge is not confined on a recount to the consideration of cases in which an objection was made before the deputy returning officer when counting the votes at the close of the poll. A ballot marked with a cross outside, but near, the upper line of the top division:—Held, good. It is not essential to have such a line on a ballot paper at all. Similarly all votes below the lower division must be counted for the candidate whose name is in it. Where a ballot was marked with a circle, not a cross, or any apparent attempt to make a cross. Held, bad. Where a ballot was well-marked for one candidate, but in the other candidate's division there was an irregular, shapeless pencil mark, which was not, however, a cross, or any attempt to make a cross, nor a mark by which the voter could be identified. Held, a good vote for the candidate for whom the paper was well marked. A ballot, though well marked, had in the same division the initials S. A. in small, but legible capitals. Held bad. Any written word or name upon a ballot, presumably written by the voter, ought to vitiate the vote, as being a means by which he may be identified. Ballot papers had a cross or crosses in the divisions of both candidates. Held, bad.

It is not essential that the form given in Ontario Voters' Lists Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 7, for objections to the names wrongly inserted on the voters' list should be followed with exactness, all that is required being that the nature of the objections to the names should be stated with reasonable clearness. Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 9, commented on. Re Port Arthur and Rainy River Provincial Election (No. 4), 14 O.L.R. 345.

-Ontario Voters' Lists Act—Case stated by County Court Judge—"General question" —Specific cases.]—S. 39 of the Ontario Voters' Lists Act,, 7 Edw. VII., c. 4, only authorizes a County Court Judge to state a case for the consideration of the Court of Appeal upon some "general question" which has arisen or is likely to arise in the revision of the lists by the Judge. It is not competent for a County Court Judge to ask the Court of Appeal to determine simple questions of fact arising in any particular case, nor within the competence of the Court to relieve him of his duty to find, in such particular cases as were here stated, whether, at the times necessary to confer a right to vote, a particular person was in good faith a resident of and domiciled in some particular municipality, and had continuously resided in the electoral district, as the Ontario Election Act requires. Re Voters' List of Township of Seymour (1899), 2 Ont. Elec. Cas. 69, distinguished. Re Norfolk Voters' Lists, 15 O.L.R. 108.

—Electoral list—Petition to amend—Proof of status.]—The mere production of the electoral list containing the name of the party who applies for its revision is not sufficient to establish the identity of the latter with the person mentioned on said list and therefore does not establish his status as an elector.

Larivée v. St. Vincent de Paul, 8 Que. P.R. 150 (Robidoux, J.).

--Wilful making of erasures in voters' list.] -(1) When a returning officer, appointed to hold a Dominion election in an electoral district, selects one of the copies of lists of voters sent to him by the clerk of the Crown in Chancery pursuant to the Dominion Elections Act, as the one which he will certify and forward to the deputy returning officer, for use at one of the polling sub-divisions, the copy so selected becomes a voters' list within the meaning of s. 528, Revised Criminal Code, and it is an indictable offence for the returning officer wilfully to erase names of voters from it either before or after he certifies it and forwards it to the deputy.

The King v. Duggan, 16 Man. R. 440, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 147.

—Voters' list—Who may appeal against.]—Under the Ontario voters' Lists Act. 7 Edw. VII., c. 4, ss. 14 and 15 (O.), no person is entitled to be entered as an appellant in respect of the voters' list of a municipality, except a person who is entered, or entitled to be entered, on such list as a voter. the Ontario Voters' Lists Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 7, where an appellant "entitled to appeal" dies or abandons his appeal, or having been on the alphabetical list, etc., is afterwards found not to be entitled to be an appellant, the Judge may, "if he thinks proper," allow any other person who might have been an appellant to intervene and prosecute the appeal, on such terms as he may think fit. This Act was repealed by the present Voters' Lists Act, 7 Edw. VII. c. 4 (0.), s. 33, being the same as the repealed section, except that the words "entitled to appeal" are omitted, and the words "in his discretion" are substituted for the words "if he thinks proper." S. 15 defines an appellant, namely, any voter whose name is entered or who is entitled to have his name entered on the list for the municipality:-Held, that the substituted section does not empower the Judge-where an appellant, after the time for appealing has elapsed, abandons his appeal by reason of not being properly qualified-to allow a duly qualified appellant to be substituted.

-Voters' lists-Manhood suffrage voters -Assessment roll-Change of domicile.] -If the assessor has placed the name of a person on the assessment roll as a rural "M. F." voter under s. 24 of the Assessment Act, 4 Edw. VII. c. 23 (U.), the duty of the clerk of the municipality is to place the name of such person on the voters' list thereof and the conditions of that section as to his residence and domicile are those to be regarded by the Judge when finally revising the list under s. 25 (3) of that Act and s. 14 of the Voters' Lists Act, 7 Edw. VII. c. 4 (O.). A. B. having been properly placed on the assessment roll for the township of Adolphustown as M. F., removed to an adjoining township in the same electoral district, and was domiciled there at the time of hearing complaints against the voters' list for the former township, and of the final revision thereof. No appeal was made to the Court of Revision for Adolphustown to have his name removed from the assessment roll and the municipal clerk placed his name on the voters' list. He took no steps to have his name entered on the assessment roll or voters' list of the township to which he had removed, nor was any application made to have his name so added. An appeal or complaint, however, was filed to have his name struck off the Adolphustown list:-Held, that his name should not be struck off the latter list. The conditions as to the residence of the rural M.F. voters are to be looked for in the Assessment Act, 4 Edw. VII. c. 23, s. 24 (O.), and the Election Act, 8 Edw. VII. c. 3, s. 16 (O.). on the voters' list, and not having resided in the province for one year. The nominator objected to was called and sworn, and stated that he could not remember when he came to the province, nor did he know if he was qualified to vote. The voters' list was also produced and showed his name erased:—Held, that in an election held under the provisions of ss. 269 to 284 of the Saskatchewan Election Act the entry of a voter's name on the list is not an essential qualification as a voter, and therefore the absence of the name of the nominator from the list did not in itself disqualify him as a voter. 2. That the receipt given by the returning officer under the provisions of s. 122 is conclusive evidence only as to the matters in such receipt contained, and does not apply to the qualification of the nominators. 3. That the onus of proving lack of qualification being on the pctitioner, in the absence of positive evidence of Lick of qualification, the negative evidence given by the party whose qualification was attacked was not sufficient to discharge the onus and prove lack of qualification.

The production before the Court of the actual list used in the polling division in which the petitioner claims to have had the right to vote, or of a copy thereof by the clerk of the Crown in Chancery or his deputy, and the identification of the petitioner's name thereon, fully proves the right to vote. Such judgment was given on 29th October and on 19th November, on application of the petitioner for instructions, another order was made by the said Judge which decided that juridical days only should be counted in computing the said thirty days, stating that such was the meaning of the order of 25th May, and that 6th December would be the date of trial. On the petition coming on for trial on 6th December appellant moved for peremption on the ground that the six months limit for hearing had expired. The motion was refused and on the merits the election was declared void. -Controverted election - Preliminary objections-Status of petitioner.]-The principal contention on preliminary objections to a controverted election petition was that the petition had been guilty of corrupt practices before and during the election, and that, by the effect of the statutes 61 Vict. c. 14, and 63 & 64 Vict. c. 12, the Dominion Franchise Act was repealed, and the provisions of the Quebec Elections Act regulating the franchise in the Province of Quebec substituted therefor so as, thereby, to deprive the petitioner of a right to vote under 59 vict. c. 9, s. 272, and being so deprived of a vote that he had no status as petitioner. In the Election Court, evidence was taken on issues joined, and the Judge, holding that no corrupt practice upon the part of the petitioner had been proved, dismissed the preliminary objections. On appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada:-Held, that, as corrupt practices had not been proved, the question as to the effect of the statutes did not arise. Per Gwynne, J .- The amendment to the Dominion Franchise Act by 61 Vict. c. 14 (D.), and 63 & 64 Vict. c. 12 (D.), has not introduced into that Act the provisions of s. 272 of "The Quebec Elections Act" so as to deprive a person properly on the list of voters for a Dominion election of his right to vote at such election.

—Petition — Copy — Service.] — In the printed copy of the petition served upon the respondent the concluding prayer had, by mistake of a clerk, a pen stroke drawn through it:—Held, that though the copy was not a "true copy" of the original, yet

(b) If by reason of special difficulty the petition is not served within the ten days the Court or Judge may extend the time, in which case the service should be personal. (c) If within the extended time it has been found impossible to effect personal service the Court or Judge may order it to be made in some other manner. No such provincial electoral district as Lincoln and Niagara existed, but there was an electoral district for Lincoln, being the district intended:—Held, that the misdescription was not fatal; that the ad-

—Stay of proceedings pending appeal on preliminary objections—Trial within six months - Extension of time - Disqualification.]—Preliminary objections to an elec-tion petition filed on 22nd February, 1902, were dismissed by Loranger, J., on April 24th, and an appeal was taken to the Su-preme Court of Canada. On 31st May, Mr. Justice Loranger ordered that the trial of the petition be adjourned to the thirtieth judicial day after the judgment of the Supreme Court was given, and the same was given dismissing the appeal on October 10th. making November 17th the day fixed for the trial under the order of 31st May. On November 14th a motion was made before Loranger, J., on behalf of the member elect. to have the petition declared lapsed for non-commencement of the trial within six months from the time it was filed. This was refused on 17th November, but the Judge held that the trial could not proceed on that day, as the order for adjournment had not fixed a certain time and place, and on motion by the petitioner he ordered that it be commenced on December 4th. The trial was begun on that day and resulted in the member elect being unseated and disqualified. On appeal from such judgment the objection to the jurisdiction of the trial Judges was renewed:-Held, that the effect of the order of May 31st was to fix November 17th as the date of commencement of the trial; that the time between May 31st and October 10th, when the judgment of the Supreme Court on the preliminary objections was given, should not be counted as part of the six months within which the trial was to be begun, and that December 4th, on which it was begun, was, therefore, within the said six months. Held, also, that if the order of 31st May could not be considered as fixing a day for the trial, it operated as a stay of proceedings and the order of Mr. Justice Lavergne, on November 17th, was proper. As to the disqualification of the member elect by the judgment appealed from, the members of the Court were equally divided and the judgment stood affirmed.

-Order for substituted service-Jurisdiction to make order after time for personal service expired. [-Under s. 8 of c. 20 of 54 & 55 Vict., substituted for s. 10 of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, the Court has jurisdiction to make an order for substituted personal service where the application for the order is not made until after the time allowed for personal service has expired. The order is not bad because it omits to fix a time within which the substituted service must be made. Where the petitioner, by reason of a deception practiced upon him, erroneously believed a personal service had been effected, and allowed five days after the extended time to elapse before taking out the or-—Controverted Dominion election—Appeal to Supreme Court—Preliminary objections.]—If the respondent in a contested Dominion election appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada from the judgment dismissing his preliminary objections, the Superior Court cannot, so long as the appeal remains undecided, fix a day for the hearing on the merits, but it should, on the contrary, suspend the proceedings and postpone the hearing of the petition.

Ste. Marie v. Perrault, 5 Que. P.R. 430.

-Disagreement of trial Judges on charge of corruption-Right of appeal - Ontario Elections Act.]-The Judges at the trial of an election petition having reserved judgment in respect of five charges, subsequently dismissed four of them, both judges agreeing as to the result. As to the fifth charge—payment of money by the candidate to a voter to induce the latter to vote for him-the Judges disagreed; one being in favour of the dismissal of the charge; the other being of opinion that the charge was proved. On an appeal to the Court of Appeal:-Held, that the existence of a right of appeal in respect of one class of charges does not draw with it the right of appeal in respect of other charges, as to which there would otherwise be no right of appeal. Held, also, that the provisions of the Ontario Controverted Elections Act relating to the right of appeal in cases of disagreement between the Judges, must be construed in connection with the other provisions of the same Act; and also with the provisions of the Ontario Elections Act which are in pari materia; and that there is no right of appeal to the Court of Appeal in respect of a charge of corrupt practices where the two Judges who try the charge fail to agree.

Re Lennox Provincial Election; Perry v. Carscallen, 6 O.L.R. 203 (C.A.).

-Election petition - Application to fix day for trial — Extending time for trial — Grounds for.] — The petitions were presented on the 4th February, 1903; the Legislative Assembly sat from March 10th to June 27th. On November 5th applications were made by the petitions to a Judge on the rota to fix dates for the trial of the petitions, and if necessary to extend the time for bringing them to trial. Owing to the engagements of the other Judges on the rota, and the difficulty of immediately communicating with them, the Judge was unable then to fix dates, and the respond-ents not being prepared to agree to an extension of time, the applications stood over pending applications to be made to extend the time. On the 11th November the petitioners moved before the same Judge (one of the Judges of the Court of Appeal) for, and obtained orders extending the time for the commencement of the trials, upon affidavits showing that the petitioners believed that the Court would fix days for trial suitable to the Judges' other engagements; that bribery was extensively practised on behalf of the respond-ents; that the petitioners could prepare for trial in one month; that the requirements of justice rendered it necessary that the time for the commencement of the trials should be extended; that the applications were made bona fide and not for delay:--Held, that the applications to the rota Judge were in time to enable the trials to be commenced within six months from the date of the presentation of the petition (excluding the time occupied by the session) within the meaning of ss. 47 and 48 of the Ontario Controverted Elections Act: and the failure to fix days could not be attributed to the petitioners; ss. 16 and 47 of the Act and Rules 26 and 27 leaving the fixing of days in the hands of the rota Judges. It was not open to the respondents to complain of lack of diligence by the petitioners within the six months, no days for trial having been fixed. Much of what was necessary to be shown on the application to extend the time, transpired in the presence of the Judge, and the facts were within his own knowledge; there was no reason why he should not act upon that knowledge in considering the applications. And having regard to the whole circumstances, the justice of the case was entirely in favour of making the orders; the Judge rightly exercising his discretion upon sufficient grounds and for sufficient reason appearing before him, and his orders should not be interfered with. The appropriate form of the orders would be to extend the time for fixing the days of trial, rather than the time for the commencement of the trial.

—Presentation of petition — Copy for returning officer — Omission — Extension of time.] — Election petitions filed with local registrars under 62 Vic. (2nd sess.) e. 6 (0.) are received by them as registrars of the Court of Appeal. Although a petitioner who does not leave with the local registrar a copy of the petition at the time of filing the petition to be sent to the returning officer is in default under Election Rule 1 (2), still the time for doing so is subject to Election Rule 58, enabling the Court or a Judge in a proper case to enlarge the time appointed. And when through inadvertence the solicitor for a petitioner had omitted to leave the copy and applied without delay, the time was extended, and an order for the dismissal of the petition was discharged.

Re North Grey Election; Boyd v. Mackay, 6 O.L.R. 273 (C.A.).

—Controverted election petition — Particulars — Costs — Witness fees — Failure of charges — Uninvestigated charges.]—At the trial of a controverted election petition sixteen witnesses were examined for the petitioner generally and with special reference to six charges, which were investigated. The total number of charges in the particulars of record was 685, and application was made at the trial to add eight or ten more. Upon one case of bribery being proved, or perhaps two, the re spondent admitted responsibility for the corrupt act of an agent, and did not claim the protection of the saving clause of the statute. Thereupon the Court declared the seat vacated, and no further evidence was given. Two charges were proved; all the others taken up failed. It was said that 225 witnesses were subponaed and paid in all 8530:—Held, that the number of charges was excessive. The practice of heaping up particulars should not be encouraged. No costs were allowed of the charges which failed, nor of witnesses subpenaed for the supplemental charges. The petitioner was allowed as against the respondent a reasonably approximate apportionment of the outlay for witness fees in respect of the charges not taken up, fixed at $230.

-Examination of respondent for discovery -Inquiry into corrupt practices committed at former election - Scope of.] - Corrupt practices said to have been committed by the respondent to a controverted election petition at a former election, on the petition against which he was declared to have been duly elected, cannot, as such, and as committed with reference to that election, be inquired into for the purpose of invalidating the election in question. Therefore, the petitioner has no right, up-on the examination of the respondent for discovery, to make a general inquiry into such corrupt practices, unless it can be shown that they are in some way con-nected with and are still operative upon the election in question. Where a question was asked with reference to a discussion between the respondent and another person before the previous election, coupled with a statement that the discussion was alleged to have been renewed at the election in question:—Held, that the question should be answered. If an examination for discovery is not conducted with discretion or becomes oppressive, the Court is empowered to declare that it shall be closed. Where the examination was continued until late at night, when the examiner became exhausted and was unable to proceed further with it:-Held, that the respondent must attend for further examination.

—Qualification of petitioner — "Reside."]
—One of the petitioners was the owner of a farm situate in the electoral district, but the dwelling house and part of the land was in one township and the main part of the land in another township. The part on which was the dwelling was assessed for $8750 only, but the aggregate assessment of the whole farm exceeded $1,000: — Held, that the petitioner was not qualified under s. 3 of the Controverted Elections Act, R.

S.O. c. 11, as amended by 62 Vict. (2), c. 6, s. 1, 1897. In re North Renfrew (Provincial), 7 O. L.R. 204 (Moss, C.J.O.),

- Fixing time for trial - Application by petitioner - Extending time.] - While there is nothing to prevent a petitioner from making an application to fix the time and place of trial, he cannot be said to be in default for not having done so. The obligation and initiative in that respect are cast upon the rota Judges, the only penalty upon the petitioner being, that if three months elapse after the presentation of the petition without the day for the trial being fixed, any elector may on application be substituted for the petitioner on proper terms. And where the Judges' other engagements are such as to make it difficult for them to fix a time to try the petition, an application to extend the time for proceeding to trial will be granted almost as a matter of course.

- Presentation of petition - Subsequent denial by two of the petitioners of the statements contained therein - Absence of corroboration.] - Within a few days after the presentation of an election petition, signed in a solicitor's presence, with the affidavits accompanying it, sworn to before another solicitor, deposing to the presentation of the petition being in good faith, and with reason to believe the statements contained in it were true in substance and in fact, and after a retainer of the first named solicitor to conduct the proceedings, two of the petitioners made affidavits virtually contradicting their former affidavits, one of them deposing to having been intoxicated at the time and unable properly to realize what he was doing, the petition having been partially read over to him, some of the statements in which he had since found were wholly untrue, while as to others he knew nothing; the other petitioner stating that he was an old man, unable to read or write, and without the petition being read over or explained to him, and without his having any independent advice and without his appreciating his position, he was induced by the first-named solicitor and a hotelkeeper to sign the petition and swear to the affidavits:—Held, that, in the absence, not only of any corroboration of the statements made in the subsequent affidavits, but in the face of their denial by the parties interested, as well as by another person then present, they were not sufficient to support an application made by the respondent, to set aside the petition.

(2) No court house tax is payable upon an election petition. (3) The respondent has no interest in urging that the prothonotary gave credit to the petitioner's attorney, instead of claiming his fee on the election petition at once. (4) A copy of an election petition which is followed by an affidavit is not invalid by the mere fact that a copy of the petition itself is not certified with the words "true copy" when the signature appears at the end of the last document, the affidavit. (5) A deposit of bank bills accepted by the prothonotary is regular. (6) It is regular to serve a copy of the election petition and affidavit, not a duplicate thereof. The deposit of $500 required by s. 5 was made with the deputy clerk, who thereupon issued the writ of summons under s. 7;—Held, that the deputy clerk was, by virtue of s. 3 of Ordinance 10 of 1891-2, the proper person to receive the deposit and issue the writ of summons. The deposit was made in bills of a chartered bank. Held, that a payment or deposit of a sum of money required by statute need not, in the absence of express provision, be made in gold or legal tender; and that, therefore, the deposit was sufficient.

-- Preliminary objections - Status of petitioner - Time of trial - Notice.]-Under the Quebec Election Act an allegation that the deposit required was not made by the petitioner and that the latter was only a prete-nom for another cannot avail as a preliminary objection. If the respondent alleges that the petitioner is not a British subject and a qualified voter the petitioner must prove his status to contest the election. The production of the original list on which the voting took place, or of a copy duly certified by the official who has the custody of the original is the best proof of the status of the petitioner; and if the latter voted at the election without objection his capacity of elector cannot afterwards be questioned. The production of a baptismal certificate, giving the date of the petitioner's birth and the domicile in the province of his parents at the time, is sufficient proof that he is a British subject notwithstanding the baptism took place more than twenty-four years after his birth; and the onus is on the respondent of proving that, although baptised in the province, he was born in a foreign country. objections the evidence of the witnesses should be taken by a stenographer appointed by the Judge, occupying his proper place, and the witnesses may be sworn by the clerk of the Court (deputy prothonotary of the Superior Court) in presence of the Judge; this procedure conforms to the spirit of the law as indicated in articles 473 and 500 of the Quebec Controverted Elections Act. To prove the holding of the election it is not necessary to produce the writ nor the proclamation and appointment of the returning officer; verbal evidence may be given of these facts. (Art. 515 Quebec Controverted Elections Act.) The Controverted Elections Act of Quebec and the rules of practice thereunder do not provide for any notice of the time for the hearing but leave to the Judge the duty of fixing the date for commencement of the trial on application of one of the parties as he considers convenient in the interest of the parties and the public; and the rules followed in England in this respect are not in accord with the law and rules of practice governing election petitions in the Province of Quebec. The Judge may, without causing prejudice to the parties, fix the day for trial of the petition at the same time that he grants a motion of the respondent for particulars, but the trial should be limited to the facts as to which particulars are not demanded and of which proof can be made by the production of public and official documents, and the enquete as to the other matters may be postponed until the particulars are filed. It is not necessary to give public notice of the date appointed for the trial, the only public notice required by law being that of discontinuance of the proceedings or abandonment of the petition.

Lemieux v. Paquet, Q.R. 27 S.C. 159 (Sup. Ct.).

—Status of petitioner — Proof — Notice of petition and deposit of security.] — At the hearing of the preliminary objections to an election petition the petitioners were called and gave evidence that they were British subjects by birth and had resided in the North-West Territories and in the electoral district of Alberta for more than a year before the issue of the writ for the election, and that they were not in any way disqualified to vote and had voted at that election. There was also produced and put in evidence a copy of the voters' list for joiling division No. 51 for the electoral district, and the petitioners identified their names thereon. The copy of the list was certified by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Notice under the Canada Evidence Act of adducing this copy in evidence was proved to have been given to the respondent in due time. In the Territories the voters' list is not final; the real criterion of a person's right to vote is his ability to take the oath of qualification; if he is not on the list and takes the oath, he is put on by the deputy returning officer; if he is on, but refuses to take the oath, his name is struck off. The evidence given was therefore admissible to prove the status of the petitioners; held, also, that the voters' list was a public document, and, as the original could be received in evidence, the certified copy was also evidence under the Canada Evidence Act. It was further objected that no notice of the presentation of the petition nor of the nature of the security furnished nor of the time and manner of furnishing was given to the respondent. A notice was in fact served upon the respondent, but by a clerical error it described the rerespondent as member for West Assiniboia instead of for Alberta. It was held that this was not a notice of the presentation of the petition as required by the Act: but. attached to the petition served on the respondent, was a copy of the certificate of the Registrar of the Court to the effect that a proper deposit had been made in the matter of a petition delivered to the Registrar, etc. Held, that this was a sufficient notice, although not signed by the petitioners or their solicitor. Objections overruled.

The petitioner is not obliged to appoint an attorney and if he does so he need not designate the attorney's domicile. Re Yukon Dominion Election, 2 W.L.R. 136.

- Preliminary objection - Status of petitioner - Disqualification - Corrupt acts.] -S. 113 of the Dominion Election Act, 1900, provides that any person hiring a conveyance for a candidate at an election, or his agent, for the purpose of conveying any voter to or from a polling place shall, ipso facto, be disqualified from voting at such election:—Held, that the right of an elector to present a petition against the return of a candidate at an election may be questioned, by preliminary objection, on the ground that he is disqualified under the above section and that on the hearing of the preliminary objection evidence may be given of the corrupt act which caused such disqualification. Beauharnois Election Case, [31 Can. S.C.R. 447] distinguished. Held, also, that though, unless the commission of the corrupt act charged is admitted, it must be judicially established, such admission or judicial determination does not take effect merely from the time at which it is made but relates back to the commission of the act.

Cumberland Election Case, 36 Can. S.C. R. 543.

 Petition — Service out of jurisdiction— Second service on agents.] — Under the Dominion Elections Act service of an election petition cannot be made outside of Canada. Idington, J., dissenting.) By Rule 10 of the Nova Scotia Rules under the Election Act, a candidate returned at an election may, by written notice deposited with the clerk of the Court, appoint an attorney to act as his agent in case there should be a petition against him:—Held, that an agent so appointed is only authorized to act in proceedings subsequent to the service of the petition, and service of the petition itself on him is a nullity.

King's, N.S., Election Case, 36 Can. S.C.R. 520.

—Service of petition—Exhibition of original—Default to put date of service.] —1. There is nothing in the law requiring that the original of a petition contesting a Federal Election be exhibited to the respondent at the time of the service. 2. The omission by the baillift to mention on the copy of the writ of summons or contestation of election the date of such service is no ground for exception to the form, unless prejudice is shown. 3. It is sufficient in the contestation of an election held in one of the divisions of Montreal, to state that the same took place within the judicial district of Montreal.

Darlington v. Gallery, 7 Que. P.R. 40 (Davidson, J.).

-Setting down preliminary objection -Jurisdiction of Chambers Judge.] - The words of O. 35 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, made under the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, and the Table of Chambers work indicating the order in which each Judge shall sit and the period of time during which he shall take the duties assigned, etc., fulfil the provisions of the Dominion Act, Acts of 1887, c. 7. s. 2. and, there being both a practice as to the order of business and an arrangement of the order of business, a Judge sitting at Chambers has jurisdiction to make an order setting down preliminary objections to an election petition to be heard before one of the Judges of the Supreme Court. It is not necessary in this province that there should be a rota before such an application can be heard, the English practice in that particular being different, and depending upon the wording of the English Act applicable in such cases. The words "order," "duties," and "arrange," as used in the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, are not used as conferring jurisdiction.

-Ballots numbered by deputy returning officer-Dominion Elections Act.] - The prohibiton contained in sub-s. 2 of s. 80 of the Dominion Elections Act, 1900, 63 and 64 Vict. c. 12 (D.), against the counting of ballot papers "upon which there is any writing or mark by which the voter could be identified" applies to ballot papers upon which a deputy returning officer has placed (not in the cases specially provided for in the Act) numbers correspond-ing respectively with the numbers opposite the names of the respective voters in the poll book, and such ballot papers must be rejected. Where in consequence of this irregularity ballot papers sufficient in number to alter the result of the election had to be rejected, it was held, applying the principle of Woodward v. Sarsons (1875), L.R. 10 C.P. 733, that there must be a new election.

-Application to substitute petitioner-Setting case down for trial — Necessary attendance of petitioner.] — Application was made on behalf of B. to be substituted as petitioner against respondent's return to the House of Commons. The application was based primarily on the ground that more than three months had elapsed since the presentation of the petition without the day for trial being fixed:-Held, dismissing the application: Per Fraser, J .-That the presence of respondent at the trial being shown to be necessary the time during which Parliament was in session was not to be computed and the period of three months had, therefore, not elapsed. Per Russell, J.—That the fact that respondent's presence at the trial was necessary, was a complete answer to the application to substitute another petitioner in so far as that application was based on the petitioner's assumed default in not having proceeded with the trial.

Brenton v. Laurence (Colchester Election Petition), 38 N.S.R. 232.

—Controverted Dominion election — Examination on discovery — Persons to be examined.] — Where the petitioner in a controverted Dominion election case declares that he is aware only by hearsay of the facts alleged in his petition, the respondent will not be allowed on a preliminary examination to examine the persons who have given such information.

Darlington v. Gallery, 7 Que. P.R. 329 (Lavergne, J.).

—Controverted election — Commencement of trial — Extension of time.] — An order fixing the time for the trial of an election petition at a date beyond the time preserbled under the Act operates as an enlargement of the time. -Trial of petition - Evidence - Corrupt acts at former election - Agency-System of corruption.] - A petition against the return of a member for the House of Commons at a general election in 1904 contained allegations of corrupt acts by respondent at the election in 1900 which were struck out on preliminary objections. On the trial of the petition evidence of payments by respondents of accounts in connection with the former election was offered to prove agency and a system and was admitted on the first ground A question as to the amount of one account so paid was objected to and rejected:-Held. that such rejection was proper; that the question was not admissible to prove agency for agency was admitted or proved otherwise; nor as proof of a system which could not be established by evidence of an isolated corrupt act. Held, also, that where evidence is tendered on one ground other grounds cannot be set up in a Court of Appeal.

Shelburne and Queen's Election Case; Cowie v. Fielding, 37 Can. S.C.R. 604.

- Personal corruption-Charge in petition -Judge's report - Adjudication.] - On a charge of personal corruption by the respondent of the adjudication by the trial Judges does not contain a formal finding of such corruption this Court may insert it if the recitals and reasons given by the Judges warrant it. Respondent, the night before the election, took a sum of over $4,-000 and divided it into several parcels of sums ranging from $250 to $1,500. He then, after midnight, visited all his committee rooms and gave to the chairman of each committee, personally and secretly, one of such parcels. His financial agent had no knowledge of this distribution and no evidence was produced of the application of the money to legitimate objects:-Held, that the inference was irresistible, that the money was intended for corruption of the electors and respondent was properly held guilty of personal corruption. Allegations in the petition that respondent had himself given and procured, undertaken to give and procure money and value to electors and others named, his agents, to induce them to favour his election and vote for him, for the purpose of having such moneys and value employed in corrupt practices were sufficient to cover the offence of which the respondent was found guilty.

St. Ann's Election Case; Gallery v. Darlington, 37 Can. S.C.R. 563.

—Death of petitioner — Appointment of substituted petitioner — Rival applications — Priority in point of time.]—The petitioner having died the Court was moved on behalf of two parties to be substituted in its place, one being a person qualified to vote at the election, R., and the other the unsuccessful candidate, B. It was disclosed by the affidavits that R. was actively interested in securing the return of the respondent at the election, that he was a member of one of his committees, and that he associated with leading members of the political party with which the respondent was identified :- Held, that as R. was not, for these reasons, a person by whom the inquiry under the petition was likely to be prosecuted without partiality and with effect, his application, although prior in point of time, should not be granted, and that the interests of the electors concerned in the prosecution of the petition would be better served by the appointment of B. Held, further, Fraser, J., dissenting on this point, that the appointment of B. should not be refused on grounds which would not have been available against him if he had been the original petitioner.

Murray v. McDonald (Pictou Election Petition), 38 N.S.R. 242.

-Dominion elections - Hearing on election petition - Absence of record - Certified copy - Admissions by respondent - Withdrawal of admission - Election expenses-Agents-Criminal offences - Presumptions -Knowledge by candidate of acts of agent.]-The Act permitting, on the one hand, appeals from decisions on preliminary objections, and, for that purpose, the transmission of the record to the Appellate Court, and providing, on the other hand that such appeal shall not have the effect of suspending proceedings nor delaying the hearing of the petition, without, at the same time, providing any method for supplying the absence of the record so transmitted, the Court seized of the case must of necessity, in order to comply with the statute, proceed with the hearing, pending the appeal, upon certified copies of the necessary portions of the record. (2) An admission made and filed by the respondent that unlawful acts were committed by electors and agents of a nature to avoid the election cannot be withdrawn. An application to that effect unsupported by reasons, not even that there was error, must be refused. (3) A candidate at a Dominion election cannot incur any expenses except through an agent or agents appointed in conformity with s. 143 of the Dominion Statute, 62 & 63 Vict. c. 12; violation of this provision is an indictable offence and, moreover, gives rise to a presumption of fraud which cannot be rebutted. (4) A candidate, having a duly appointed agent, who furnishes money, for alleged lawful election expenses, to another person without keeping control of the manner in which it is to be employed of requiring an account, and who causes the vouchers returned by the person who received the money, to show how it had been used, to disappear, is presumed to have approved or permitted of the latter making use of the money for illicit purposes. (5) A person who, to the knowledge of a candidate, takes part for him among the electors, assumes some important part in the election, by canvassing or otherwise, becomes an agent for the candidate so that he is responsible for and must bear the consequences of the acts of such person. The candidate cannot plead ignorance of such acts, and his failure to exercise control, his carefully closing his eyes in order to maintain such ignorance, is equivalent to express authorization for the committing of such acts. (6) Such authorization or implied agency results from infinitely varied circumstances, the appreciation of which rests with the Court. (7) It being proved that the respondent's agent had been guilty of corrupt acts, personation and fraudulent practices, the respondent was held responsible, and, in consequence, disqualified, the election being likewise declared void.

[See St. James Election Case (33 Can. S.C.R. 137)].

—Preliminary objections — Information of petitioner — Affidavit — Receipt of clerk for deposit.]—(1) The total absence or lack of information of the petitioner necessary to enable him to make the affidavit required in support of an election petition under the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, affords no ground of preliminary objection to such a petition. (2) The receipt of the clerk of the Court for the deposit made as the security required on the presentation of an election petition is sufficient if it state that a deposit of $15,000, has been made, though it should go on to give an erroneous description of the bills of which that sum consisted.

-Petition against return - Jurisdiction--Province of Saskatchewan. 1-The Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a petition against the return of a member of the Legislative Assembly of Saskatchewan. It is an essential principle of the common law of Parliament that that body as a whole is the guardian and arbiter of its prerogatives and privileges, and having regard to ss. 14 and 16 of the Saskatchewan Act and the fact that the former section expressly continues in force the Legislative Assembly Ordinance and the Election Ordinance, the Controverted Elections Ordinance was not continued in force, and as a consequence, the Court had not the jurisdiction in question.

Where for the purpose of a scrutiny the respondent had filed and served particulars of votes objected to by him, and the scrutiny had been begun but not completed, he was allowed (upon terms) to add new particulars of other votes objected to. -Enlargement of time for trial - Power of Court to order - Petition - Laches.]-On application by the petitioner to have a day fixed for the trial, or, in the alternative, to have the time enlarged for the commencement of the trial, the Court dismissed the application to set the case down for trial but made an order enlarging the time for the period of six months, and by a subsequent order enlarged the time for the commencement of the trial for the period of eight months:-Held, that the orders so made were within the jurisdiction of the Court, and that it was not essential to the exercise of the jurisdiction to enlarge the time under the statute that the case should have first been set down for trial. The petition was entitled "Election of a member for the House of Commons for the Electoral District of . . . " and the objection was taken that there were two members to be returned for the county and that the title should read "Election of members, or election of two members, etc." Quære, Whether this was an irregularity. Hetherington v. Roche, 39 N.S.R. 383.

-Preliminary objections - Corrupt practices-Returning officer as party respondent to petition.]-Each petition alleged, among other things, that the returning officer, acting in collusion with the elected member, unlawfully established different polling divisions from those arranged by the provincial authorities for provincial elections; that, instead of supplying the deputy returning officers with the copies of the voters' lists received from the clerk of the Crown in Chancery, he made changes and erasures therein and removed therefrom the names of many persons entitled to vote and so prevented such electors from voting at the election; that he had given copies of the voters' lists so improperly made out to his co-respondent and refrained from furnishing such copies to the opposing candidate and concealed these matters entirely from the latter, and that all this had been done in furtherance of a design previously arranged between the respondents to embarrass and hinder those opposed to the election of the elected member; also that the returning officer had signed a large number of certificates in blank to enable voters to vote at polling places for which their names did not appear, and that the respondents had, in these and other ways, conspired to impede and interfere with the free exercise of the franchise of many voters:-Held, 1. That the acts complained of might constitute corrupt practices within the meaning of sub-s. (f) of s. 2 of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, R.S.C. c. 9, for, although they were not so declared by the Dominion Elections Act, or by any other Act of the Parliament of Canada, yet they were infractions of subsequent statutory provisions as to the conduct of elections and may amount to corrupt practices within the common law of Parliament, as they might be of such extent that the constituency had not had a fair and free opportunity of electing the candidate whom the majority might prefer, this being the test applied by Lord Coleridge, C.J., in Woodward v. Sarsons (1875), L.R. 10 C.P. at p. 743, and therefore the paragraphs of the petition setting forth such acts should not be struck out on preliminary objections.
(2) The conduct of the returning officer in connection with the election being com-plained of, he was properly joined as a respondent under s. 7 of the Act. (3) An allegation in the petition that the return-ing officer, with the knowledge and consent of the elected member, in many ways improperly aided in the election of the latter is too vague and should be struck

— Contestation—Preliminary objection — Corrupt practices.]—Charges of corrupt practices against the petitioner in a contestation of an election for the provincial legislature cannot be the subject of preliminary objections, and even if established, could not affect petitioner's status as such, because the evidence in support of said corrupt practices is irrelevant and inadmissible.

—Preliminary objections to petition — Reopening trial to let in further evidence—Dismissal for want of prosecution.]—(1) Under the Manitoba Controverted Elections Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 34, and ss. 92 and 93 of the King's Bench Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 40, the Judge, at the trial of preliminary objections to an election petition, may, even after the petitioners have closed their case, re-open it and allow them to put in further evidence to prove their status as petitioners. (2) The requirement in s. 39 of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 7, that an election petition must be brought to trial within six months from the time of its presentment, is not imported into the law governing election petitions under the Manitoba Controverted Elections Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 34, by the language of s. 13 of the latter Act. Such a provision would require a positive statute, as it deals with something more than a mere matter of practice and procedure. Re Morris Election Petition, 17 Man. R. 330

-Dominion election-Notice of presentation of petition and nature of security.]-Upon the hearing of preliminary objections to a petition against the return of a member of the Dominion Parliament for the electoral district of Alberta, due no-tice having been given, a copy of the list of voters for a certain polling sub-division returned by the returning officer of the electoral district to the clerk of the Crown in Chancery, duly certified by said clerk under his official seal, was put in evidence. and the petitioners identified their names They also swore that they were male British subjects, not Indians, of the full age of 21 years, and that they had resided in the North-West Territories for over twelve months, and in the electoral district for over three months immediately preceding the issue of the writ of election: -Held, that in view of the provisions of the North-West Territories Representation Act, R.S.C. (1886), c. 7, the evidence of the petitioners was admissible to prove their status, and that the voters' list was properly proved by a certified copy in spite of the absence in the Act referred of any provision, such as is found in the Franchise Act, 61 Vict. c. 14, s. 16, for certified copies of the list being evidence. Richelieu Election Case (1892), 21 S.C.R. 168, distinguished. The notice of the presenta-tion of the petition, handed to the petitioner immediately before the copy of the petition, referred to the presentation of a petition against the return of the petitioner as member for electoral district of the west riding of Assiniboia (sic), but there was attached to the petition a certificate signed by and under the seal of the clerk of the Court that $1,000 had been deposited as security for the payment of costs, etc., in the matter of the petition against his return as member for the electoral division of Alberta. Held, that the first notice was bad, but that the certificate gave a notice sufficient to comply with the provisions of s. 10 of the Controverted Election Act, R. S. C. (1886), c. 9, although it was not signed by either the petitioners or their advocate. Ottawa Election Case (1898), 2 Ont. El. Cas. 64, referred to. Objection was taken that the evidence did not show that the security was given in bills of a chartered bank. Held, that the evidence was sufficient, and that the fact that the bank was a chartered bank sufficiently appeared from the Dominion Statute extending its charter. The cost of publishing the petition was not paid to the registrar at the time that the petition was presented. Held, that this was no objection to the proceedings. No evidence was given that any election had been held or that the respondent had been returned as elected. Held, that no such evidence was necessary. Objection was taken to certain paragraphs of the petition on the ground that even if true they would not justify a declaration that the seat was vacant or the disqualification of the member. Held, that the clauses should nevertheless not be struck on preliminary objection.

Re Alberta Election, 6 Terr. L.R. 329.

-Petition-Status-Preliminary objection.] -Every person whose name is on the list of electors for the district which was used at an election is qualified to petition against the return under the provisions of the Controverted Elections Act of Canada, R.S. [1906] c. 7. The respondent to the petition cannot, by preliminary objection, set up acts of corruption committed by petitioner during the election. The deputy prothonotary of the Superior Court has all the powers of the prothonotary respecting election petitions. He can, therefore, receive a petition and witness the accompanying declaration in the presence as well as in the absence of the prothonotary. deputy de facto has full powers, especially those above mentioned, notwithstanding the omission of a formality (e.g., affixing the prothonotary's seal) in the document appointing him.

-Protested election-Regularity of nomination.]-The respondent was declared elected as a member of the legislature, and a petition was filed against his return. On the trial it was proved that the respondent had been nominated by four persons, and it was sought to show that one of these was not qualified, not being on the voters' list, and not having resided in the province for one year. The nominator objected to was called and sworn, and stated that he could not remember when he came to the province, nor did he know if he was qualified to vote. The voters' list was also produced and showed his name erased:-Held, that in an action held under the provisions of ss. 269 to 284 of the Saskatchewan Election Act the entry of a voter's name on the list is not an essential qualification as a voter, and therefore the absence of the name of the nominator from the list did not in itself disqualify him as a voter. (2) That the receipt given by the returning officer under the provisions of s. 122 is conclusive evidence only as to the matters in such receipt contained, and does not apply to the qualification of the nominators. (3) That the onus of proving lack of qualification being on the petitioner, in the absence of positive evidence of lack of qualification, the negative evidence given by the party whose qualification was attacked was not sufficient to discharge the onus and prove lack of qualification.

-Motion to strike out particulars of corrupt practices.]-By an order under s. 11 of the Controverted Elections Act, the petitioner was directed to furnish particulars of the matters alleged in his petition, and it was further ordered that no evidence be given at the trial of any matter of which particulars were not delivered as ordered. The respondent moved to strike out the particulars delivered, on the ground that the order had not been sufficiently complied with, or for further and better particulars:-Held, that the legislature having made provision in the Controverted Elections Act for delivery of particulars, and having empowered the Judge to order that in default no evidence be given at the trial of any matters of which particulars were not given as ordered, and a Judge having made such order, no further or other order could now be made with respect to particulars. (2) That as the practice provided by the Controverted Elections Act in respect to delivery of particulars differed from that prescribed by the rules of Court, and the practice under the Act was sufficient, the provisions of the rules of Court could not be invoked to support the application and must be deemed to be excluded by the specific provisions of the Act.

-Preliminary objections-Order extending time for service of petition—Application after expiry of ten days from presentation of petition-Order for substitutional service.] - Under the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 7, a single Judge of the High Court of Justice has jurisdiction in Ontario to hear and determine all preliminary objections to a petition, where an order is made extending the time of service of a petition under the said Act and for substitutional service. Objections that there was no jurisdiction to make such order under the circumstances. and that, even if there were, the order made was not authorized by the facts, and that substitutional service made under it should not be deemed personal service or allowed, are preliminary objections within the meaning of the Act, or, at all events, objections which a single Judge of the High Court of Justice has, in Ontario, power to deal with. Montmagny Dominion Election Case (1888), 15 S.C.K. 1, followed. The time for service of notice of the presentation of a petition under the Dominion Controverted Elections Act may be extended on application made after the expiry of the ten days allowed for such service by s. 18 of the Act. Such order allowing further time is not bad by reason of substitutional service being also directed in it, notwithstanding the words of sub-s. 2 of s. 18.

-Preliminary objections - Cross-petition -Sufficiency of charge of corrupt acts-Particulars.] — By a preliminary objection to an election petition it was claimed that the petitioner was not a person entitled to vote at the election and the next following objection charged that he had disqualified himself from voting by treating on polling day:-Held, that the second objection was not merely explanatory of the first but the two were separate and independent; that the second objection was properly dismissed as treating only disqualifies a voter after conviction and not ipso facto; and that the first objection should not have been dismissed the respondent to the petition being entitled to give evidence as to the status of the petitioner. The respondent, by cross-petition, alleged that the defeated candidate personally and by agents "committed acts and the offence of undue influence." III. OFFENCES AND PENALTIES.

—Action for penalty — Conclusion.]—The Superior Court has jurisdiction over an action to recover the fine imposed on a candidate at an election, who is guilty of treating; the demand for the fine need not be made by a petition contesting the election. The conclusions of a penal action against the candidate elected, for treating, demanding that the election be avoided and the candidate disqualified, are illegal and will be struck out on inscription en droit. Bourbonnais v. Lortie, 11 Que. P.R. 145.

-Corrupt practices-Proceedings by summons-Limitations.]—The limitation of one year for bringing action prescribed by s. 195, sub-s. 3 of the Ontario Election Act applies only to actions for penalties under that section and not to proceedings by summons for corrupt practices under ss. 187-8, nor are the latter within the limitations of two years for actions prescribed by R.S.O., c. 72, s. 1. On such proceeding under ss. 187-8 the Judges may, if they see fit, hear the evidence on all the charges before giving judgment on any of them.

-Treating a meeting - Distinction between bribery and treating-Saving clause.] Where, after a meeting of electors had broken up, an alleged agent of the respondent had treated at the bar of the hotel, where it had been held, a mixed multitude comprised of some who had been at it, and others who had not :- Held (Maclennan, J.A., dissenting), that this was not treating "a meeting of electors assembled for the purpose of promoting the election, within s. 161 of the Ontario Election Act, R.S.O. c. 9. Per Maclennan, J.A.-Seeing that several persons assembled at the bar waiting for the meeting were treated before the meeting by the hotelkeeper, whom the respondent's agent had asked to treat "the boys" before himself leaving to attend a meeting elsewhere, and whom the agent afterwards paid, and that several who were treated after the meeting had been at the meeting, and then in company with the respondent went very much in a body to another hotel, where they were treated again. Held, that this was a treating of the meeting within the last mentioned section. Held, also, by the Court of Appeal, reversing the decision of the trial Judges, that such treating was not "bribery" within R.S.O. c. 9, s. 159. Corrupt treating in its nature runs very close to bribery on the part of the treater, but the circumstances in which a treat can be said to be a valuable consideration within s. 159 so as to amount to bribery on the part of the person accepting it, must be unusual. Where only two acts of bribery were proved, but the perpetrators were both active, and one an important agent of the candidate, neither of whom was called at the trial, and one of the bribes, though only $2, was paid out of a general election fund, to which the respondent had contributed $250, and the respondent's majority was 65 out of a total vote of about 5,000. Held, that the election was rightly avoided, notwithstanding the saving clause in s. 172 R.S.O. c. 9.

Election Act, ss. 164 (2), 168, 172.]-It was charged that a person had voted at the election, knowing that he had no right to vote, by reason of his not being a resident of the electoral district. He knew that his name was on the voters' list, and that it had been maintained there by the County Judge, notwithstanding an appeal, and he believed that he had, and did not know that he had not, a right to vote:-Held, affirming the decision of the trial Judges, that a corrupt practice under s. 168 of the Election Act, R.S.O. 1897 c. 9, was not established. Under that section the existence of the mala mens on the part of the voter, "knowing that he has no right to vote," not merely his knowledge of facts upon the legal construction of which that right depends, must be proved. The offence does not depend upon his having taken the oath; it may be proved apart from that; nor does the fact that he has taken the oath, even if it be shown in point of law to be untrue, necessarily prove that the offence has been committed. Haldimand Case (1888), 1 Elec. Cas. 529, distinguished. 2. Held, affirming the decision of the trial Judges, that the bribery by L. of two persons to abstain from voting against the respondent was established by the evidence, although it was not shown that anything was said to them about voting; L. having paid them, for trifling services which he engaged them to perform upon election day, sums considerably in excess of the value of such services, knowing them to be voters and to belong to the opposite political party. 3. As to the agency of L., it appeared that the respondent was brought into the field as the candidate of his party, having been nominated at a convention of the party as sociation for the electoral district; L. was not a delegate to, nor was he present at, the convention; and he was not upon the evidence connected with the association or its officers; he was not brought into touch with the candidate, nor any proved agent of his, either as regards his or their knowledge of the fact that he was working or proposing to work on behalf of the candidate, or as regards any actual authority conferred upon him to do so. But he was present at three meetings of electors when the voters' list was gone over; he acted as chairman of a public meeting called in the respondent's interest; he canvassed some voters; and, from his antecedents, the respondent hoped or believed or expected that he would be an active supporter. Held, affirming the decision of the trial Judges, Boyd, C., dissenting, that L. was not an agent of the respondent. Haldimand Case (1880), 1 Elec. Cas. 572, distinguished. 4. Three persons, T. being one of them, each lent $10 to R. L., knowing that the monies so lent were intended to be used by him, as he then told them, in betting on the result of the election. Any bet or bets which he made were to be his own bets, not theirs, and he was to return the money in a couple of days. He did not succeed in getting any one to bet with him, and he returned the money to each on the following day. Held, affirming the decision of the trial Judges, that this was providing money to be used by another in betting upon the election, and was a corrupt practice within the meaning of s. 164 (2) of the Election Act. 5. As to the agency of T., it appeared that he was one of the local vice-presidents of the party association above referred to: he had been association above retried to, he had been present at two meetings of local party men calling themselves a "Conservative Club," who were interesting themselves in the election and had contributed towards the cost of hiring the club-room; at these meetings he had gone over the voters' list with others, which was the only work done; at a meeting held by the respondent in the place where T. lived, he had presided, having been elected chairman by the audience, and he made a speech introducing and commending the respondent; before the meeting he had met the respondent in the street, had shaken hands with him, and asked him how things were going. The respondent did not know that T. was local vice-president, and had never heard of the "Conservative Club." T. was not a delegate to the nominating convention nor present thereat. The association, as such, was not charged with any definite duty in connection with the elec-tion except the selection of a candidate. Held, reversing the decision of the trial Judges, Burton, C.J.O., and Maclennan, J.A., dissenting, that T. was an agent of the respondent. 6. The total vote polled was over 4,500, and the majority for the respondent was 29. The trial Judges had re-ported one person guilty of an act of undue influence, three of being concerned in acts of bribery, and T. and two others of providing money for betting. Held, that s. 172 of the Election Act could not be applied to save the election.

The Judges, however, found that, as regards at least two of the said agents, the respondent had given no orders or cautions against the commission of corrupt practices, and that the circumstances were such as to throw upon him the suspicion of having sanctioned or connived at the corrupt practices committed by a third agent, although he denied on oath having been guilty of any such conduct:—He..., I. That the offences proved could not be deemed to have been ot a trivial, unimportant and limited character, and that the onus was on the respondent to prove affirmatively, for the purpose of saving the election, that the particular offences proved were committed contrary to his orders and without his sanction and that he had taken all reasonable means for preventing the commission of corrupt practices, and that, as he had failed to satisfy the Court in that regard, the election must be set aside under s. 123 of the Act. 2. That, as to disqualification of the candidate, the onus was on the petitioner to prove beyond a reasonable doubt the guilt of the respondent, and that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant an affirmative finding that he had personally been guilty of corrupt practice. -Hiring teams and conveyances-Wife's authority to contract on behalf of her husband—Evidence.]—The plaintiff, a livery stable keeper, sued the defendant on an account for horses and rigs furnished by him to the defendant, who was a candidate at an election for a member of the House of Commons of Canada. The evidence showed that to the knowledge of the plaintiff his account was for horses and rigs furnished by him to the defendant during the time he was a candidate and solely for the purposes of and in connection with the election:—Held, that the contract of hiring was an executory one and that it came therefore within the terms of s. 131 of the Dominion Elections Act, which is incorporated with the North-West Territories Representation Act by 57-58 Vict. (1894), c. 15, s. 10, and that the contract was therefore void in law, and the plaintiff could not recover. The plaintiff also sued the defendant on an account for horses and rigs furnished by one Pepper, some of them to the defendant, others to the defendant's wife, and some to both of them, which account Pepper had assigned to the plaintiff. These horses and rigs were not clearly shown to have been furnished in connection with the election, though the evidence led to a strong suspicion to that effect. Held, that when the defendant seeks to rely upon provisions of the statute to avoid liability upon an executory contract alleged to have referred or arisen out of an election, nothing should be intended in favour of such a defence, and it must clearly appear that such contract did refer to an election held under the Act.

Therefore the disabilities resulting from corrupt practices other than those enumerated in said ss. 8 and 9 annot be set up by preliminary objections. (It is otherwise in case of provincial elections.) Section 113 of the Dominion Election Act of 1900 should be construed strictly and cannot be enlarged by analogy. On the hearing of a contested

The respondent was nominated at a meeting of delegates from different portions of the constituency and, at a public meeting, after the close of the convention, he stated that he expected all the delegates to help at the election, and that he looked for assistance not only from them, but from all supporters of the Gov-ernment. Held, that these and other general remarks made by the respondent were not sufficient to constitute all his supporters his agents, but that the persons promoting his election from a central agency or committee room in Winnipeg recognized and visited by him and persons sent out from that agency should be deemed to be his agents for the purposes of the election. -Corrupt practices-Intoxicating liquor in vicinity of polls—Treating habit — Corrupt intent — Agency — Evidence of return.]— Where a person who was held to be an agent gave two bottles of whiskey to an elector the day before polling day, the inference of fact was drawn that they were given with the corrupt intent of influencing the voter, although there was no direct evidence to show the object for which they were given. Where a quantity of whiskey was obtained from one agent of the respondent and taken to the home of another in the vicinity of one of the polling places, where it was drunk freely on election day by the electors generally, the inference of fact was drawn that it was provided by both these agents for the purpose of influencing the electors, though there was not direct evidence to that effect, and it was held to be a corrupt practice notwithstanding that apparently it did not have that effect. The evidence also showed that a quantity of whiskey was taken to a place in the vicinity of another polling place by an agent, where it was consumed by the agent and others on polling day:-Held, that this showed a scheme on the part of the respondent's agents to influence the voters generally, and procure the election of the respondent by providing whiskey at each of the polling places. The following were held to be agents:—One who accompanied the respondent on a canvassing trip during which he spent a day canvassing for the respondent and spoke on his behalf at an election meeting at which the respondent was also present and spoke. One who accompanied the respondent on a canvassing trip, acting as interpreter (the respondent being under the impression that he was one of his supporters), and actually worked and canvassed for him with his authority. The son of the respondent, who took an active interest in the election on behalf of the respondent with his knowledge, acted as scrutineer, and was furnished with a sum of money by the respondent when leaving for the polling place at which he was to act. Quære, whether an agent accustomed to carry about with him a bottle of whiskey to treat those whom he should happen to meet; should not, if following this custom while actually engaged in canvassing, be held to have treated with a corrupt intent. It is not necessary that proof should be given that the respondent had been returned as a member.

—Agency—Delegates to nominating convention—Authorization — Treating by "candidate"-Previous habit of treating-Rebuttal of presumption — Absence of corrupt intent.]—The respondent was nominated as a candidate for election as a member of the Legislative Assembly for Ontario by a party convention, and, in acknowledging and accepting the nomination, he said:-"There are three things essential to success: first, a good cause; second, proper organization; third, hard work. The first we have; the second and third will largely depend on you":-Held, that the respondent by these words constituted every delegate who was present his agent, and became responsible for all that was afterwards done by them in organization and work for the purpose of the election. respondent requested M., who was at the convention as a 'clegate, to go with him to a factory and introduce him to the workmen, some of whom were voters. M. did this, and the respondent addressed the workmen on behalf of his candidature. After the meeting was over, and the workmen had dispersed, M. asked the foreman to have a drink at a neighbouring inn, which the foreman declined. M. also said that if the workmen who went home in that direction would come over, he would "leave a drink for them there." This conversation was not in the presence of the respondent, nor heard by him. When the men were leaving their work for the day, the foreman told them what M. had said, and eight or ten of them called at the inn and got a drink of beer without paying for it:-Held, that a charge of treating a meeting assembled to promote the election, under s. 161 of the Ontario Election Act, failed upon this evidence, for the meeting had come to an end before anything was said about the treating, and the men were not told anything about it till nearly three hours afterwards. Nor did the evidence support a charge under s. 162 (1) of corrupt treating of individuals in order to be elected, M. being a customer of the factory and following a previous habit in his intercourse with the men. Upon a charge of treating a committee meeting held at a hotel, the evidence was that McC., one of the delegates to the convention, brought into the room where the meeting was being held a bex of cigars for the use of the members of the committee. He said he did it at the request of the landlord. It was not shown by whom payment was made. Held, that the charge was not proved, for it is the person at whose expense the treat is supplied, or who pays or engages to pay for it, who alone is guilty of the offence. The respondent admitted that he had treated on the day of the convention, after the convention was over, several times, at at least two hotels, several persons, some of whom might have been electors. He denied, however, that the treating had any relation to the election. Held, that under sub-s. 2 of s. 162 (added by 62 Vict. (2), c. 5, s. 7 (O.), treating generally or extens-

If it be shown that the treating was not in fact done corruptly in order to be elected or for being elected or for the purpose of corruptly influencing votes, it is no offence any more than it was before the enactment of sub-s. 2. There may still be innocent treating, though, if it be general or extensive or miscellaneous, the onus of showing that it is innocent is upon the respondent. And an antecedent habit of treating must still help, among other things, to rebut the inference of corrupt intent. Held, also, that, although the respondent did not become a "candidate," within the meaning of s. 2, sub-s. 8, until the 27th March, yet if any corrupt acts in relation to the election were done by him before that date, they would affect the election, for the Act applies to everything done at any time before an election by a person who is afterwards elected. The respondent was a physician, with a large country practice, and constantly on the road. He was also a horse fancier, and, although an abstainer from liquor, a great consumer of cigars. It was not disputed that while on the road he was in the constant habit of treating, and he continued to treat after his nomination by the convention on the 1st February until the writ for the election was issued on the 22nd April. -Corrupt practices-Bribery - Treating-Furnishing transportation-Proof of agency of person guilty of corrupt practice-The Dominion Elections Act, 1900.]-1. A charge of bribery, whether by a candidate or his agent, is one which should be established by clear and satisfactory evidence, as the consequences resulting from such a charge being established are very serious. (2) To prove agency, the evidence should also be clear and conclusive and such as to lead to no doubtful inference. (3) To constitute agency in election cases, as in other cases, there must be authority in some mode or other from the supposed principal. It may be by express appointment or direction or employment or request, or it may be by recognition and adoption of the service of one assuming to act without prior authority or request. It may be directly shown, or it may be inferred from circumstances. It may proceed directly from the alleged principal or it may be created indirectly through one or more authorized agents. (4) The fact that a person is a delegate to, or member of, the convention or body which seleets a candidate does not of itself make such person an agent of the candidate chos-(5) Canvassing, speaking at meetings, or other work in the promotion of an election does not per se establish agency, although, according to degree and circumstances, it may afford cogent evidence of agency. (6) Accompanying a candidate in his canvass is not sufficient in itself to constitute agency. (7) S. 109 of the Dominion Elections Act, 1900, is new and goes far in advance of the former law as to treating voters at an election in omitting the element of corrupt intent, and should be strictly construed. Under that section the providing or furnishing of refreshments or drink would not be an offence unless done at the expense of the candidate. (8) The treating of electors prior to and on polling day by an agent of the respondent, although done on a liberal scale, will not be assumed to have been done with the corrupt intent necessary to make it an offence, when the Court is satisfied that he was accustomed to keep at all times con; siderable quantities of liquors on hand and to supply them quite freely to others in the way of hospitality or as a matter of business, and there is no other evidence to show that the treating was done in order to influence a voter or voters. The same rule applies to treating when done in compliance with a custom prevalent in the country and without express evidence of any corrupt intent in so treating; also to the supplying of meals at a private house to electors who have come from a distance, in the absence of evidence that this was done for the purpose of influencing the election. (9) The taking unconditionally and gratuitously of a voter to the poll by a railway company or an individual, or the giving to a voter of a free pass or ticket by railway, boat or other conveyance, if unaccompanied by any condition or stipulation affecting the voter's action in reference to his vote is not a corrupt practice, and the onus is on the petitioner to prove that the railway tickets supplied had been paid for. (10) Where a charge is made of an offer not accepted of money to influence a voter the evidence is required to be particularly clear, and conclusive.

He was not aware that a non-resident could not vote:-Held, that the defendant was not liable to the penalty imposed by s. 168 of the Ontario Election Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 9, for voting knowing that he had no right to vote. South Riding County of Perth (1895), 2 Ant. Elec. Cas. 30, followed. (2) That the defendant was not liable to the penalty imposed by s. 181 of the Act, for wilfully voting without having at the time all the qualifications required by law. "Wilfully voting" as in this section, and applying it to the facts of the case, was practically the same as voting knowing that he had no right to vote. (3) That the defendant was liable to the penalty of $400 imposed by s. 94, sub-s. 5, of the Act, for not having taken the oath of qualification required to be taken by agents voting under certificate; but, as the defendant was not asked to take the oath, the deputy returning officer not having been aware that it was necessary, and the plaintiff himself was present when the defendant voted, and did not object, the provisions of R.S.O. 1897, c. 108, should be applied, and the penalty reduced to $40. Smith v. Carey, 5 O.L.R. 203.

The defendant was found guilty of bribery, on the evidence, and the claim for a penalty was dismissed without costs. The defendant was held liable to a penalty of $400 under s. 94, sub-s. 5, of the Act, for voting at a polling place where he was acting as an agent of a candidate, under a certificate of the returning officer, without having taken the oath of qualification, but the penalty was reduced to $40. R.S.O., 1897, c. 9, the defendant having answered truly all questions put to him, was entitled to be indemnified against any penal results of his disclosures, and could not be convicted on his own testimony. -Ontario Election Act - Bribery - Recovery of penalty by action.]-The effect of this amendment of s. 159 (2) R.S.O. 1897, c. 9, made by 63 Viet. c. 4 (0.) by which persons committing various forms of bribery enumerated in the section (a to c inclusive) become on conviction liable to a fine of $200 and imprisonment is to take the penalties imposed by the amended clause out of the category of those which may be recovered by action under s. 195. Only one proceeding is contemplated by the amended section, and that is one in which both the penalty may be recovered and the imprisonment imposed. Both must follow on the conviction in one and the same proceeding taken to enforce them. Imprisonment cannot be adjudged in an action under s. 195 which intends a proceeding by action to recover the money penalty only. Judgment by Boyd, C., which followed that of Britton, J., in Carey v. Smith (1903), 5 O.L.R. 209, in dismissing the action varied; and the action held maintainable under s. 195 only for penalties imposed by ss. 162, 163, 165, 166.

Asseltine v. Shibley, 9 O.L.R. 327 (C.A.).

-Corrupt practices-Agency-Scrutineer -Disqualification of voter - Persons voting on transfer certificates.]-A. was found guilty of corrupt acts at H., a polling place, on polling day. Before that day his sole connection with the respondent was that, being a livery stable keeper, he had driven the respondent on a day before the nomination, from one place in the electoral division to another. The respondent on that occasion canvassed A. for his vote, but A. made no promise, and the respondent did not ask him to vote for him. On the day before the polling, A. and one G. drove to H., arriving there in the evening. The trip was undertaken at the instance of G., who was held not shown to be an agent of the respondent. In order to persuade A. to go to H., G. said he would procure a transfer of A.'s vote to H., and he afterwards brought and handed to A. a printed paper, signed by the respondent, apparently one of a number of scrutineer appointments which the respondent had signed in blank and left with one B., his agent. A.'s name was not inserted by the respondent, and there was no evidence to show by whom it was filled in. The number of the polling place was left blank, and never was filled in. G. was not examined as a witness, and there was no proof of the means by which he became possessed of this paper:-Held, Meredith, J.A., dissenting, that the petitioner had failed to establish that A. was an agent for whose acts the respondent was responsible. It was contended that the election should be set aside under the common law of Parliament because of the corrupt acts of A. and G. and of a number of irregularities in the conduct of the election by the officials, among which were the appointment of a non-voter as deputy-returning officer at one poll and of a clergyman at another, contrary to the statute. The operations of A. and G. were, however, confined to a small portion of the electoral district; A. was the only person found by the trial Judges to have been guilty of corrupt practices, and they also found that there was no reason to suppose that corrupt practices extensively prevailed at the election:-Held, that if, in such circumstances, an election could be avoided, it should only on overwhelming proof of corrupt acts of so extensive a nature as virtually to amount to a repression or prevention of a fair and free opportunity to the electors of exercising their franchise and electing the candidate they wished to represent them; and that all irregularities of the kind indicated, not affecting the result, were cured by s. 214 of R.S.O. 1897, c. 9. In request of votes attacked upon a scrutiny: Held, that a Crown land agent under the Free Grants and Homesteads Act, authorized to take entries and make locations for free homesteads, but not to sell or to receive moneys for the sale of public lands, was not disqualified as a voter by s. 4 of the Ontario Election Act. An elector engaged by a deputy returning officer to drive voters to the poll is not an agent within the meaning of the s. 94 (1) and (4) of the Act, who is entitled to the certificate of the returning officer enabling him to vote at a polling place other than the one where by law he is otherwise entitled to vote.

(2) A charge of conspiracy the particulars of which severally allege that the accused conspired to defraud a candidate at an election to the Saskatchewan Legislature, the electors of the division and the public, by illegally obtaining the return of the opposing candidate, does not disclose an offence under s. 573 of the Revised Criminal Code, for the acts alleged as the object of the conspiracy do not constitute an indictable offence either by statute or at common law. (3) Personation of a voter is not an offence at common law. (4) Particulars furnished under s. 859 of the Revised Code (former s. 616) have not the effect of amending or extending the scope of the original indictment or charge, and the inclusion of a separate and distinct offence as a particular under a charge of conspiracy will not authorize a conviction which would otherwise not be within the scope of the indictment.

that the particulars given were insufficient. Pigeon v. Chaurest, 28 Que. S.C. 469 (Archibald, J.).

ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER.

Rate chargeable to consumers-Act requiring schedule to be filed.]-By the Acts of 1907, c. 4, all companies supplying light were required on or before July 1st of that year, and of each succeeding year, to file with the provincial secretary a schedule of the prices then charged for light and energy, which were to be the charges collected, unless altered by the Governor-in-Council after a hearing in that behalf :- Held, July 1st being a statutory holiday, that it was a sufficient compliance with the Act, to file the statement on the following day. Also, that a statement addressed to the provincial secretary and signed by the chief officer, of the company stating the charges made by the company at that time, was a certificate within the meaning of the Act. Semble, that the only effect of the Act was that, after the filing of the certificate, the company could not, at least, before the date of a new filing, increase the charges as specified, and perhaps not even then, without the consent of the Governor-in-Council. Prior to the 1st July, 1907, the plaintiff company charged and collected a rate per M. k. w., making no charge for "readiness to serve," but subsequently to that date they adopted a new system, reducing the charge per M. k. w., and adding a readiness to serve charge based upon the requirements of the place using the fight. Held, that the two rates taken together, being simply a method of arriving at a fair rate for the energy supplied, based upon a different calculation as to the cost of supplying it, it was open to the plaintiff to make the change and to charge defendant for power or current ready for service, but which, in fact, was never supplied.

Chambers Electric Light Co. v. Cantwell, 43 N.S.R. 419.

Hydro-Electric Power Commission—Entry on private lands.]—Plaintiff brought action for trespass to her land. Defendants pleaded justification and relied on the legislation respecting the Hydro-Electric Com., 7 Ed. VII. e. 19, and 9 Edw. VII. c. 18, s. 10. The whole question resolved itself into the single question of whether the above statutes or either of them, authorized an entry, under the direction of the commission, upon private property, against the will of the owner before payment of compensation. At trial, Palconbridge, C.J.K.B., held, that the statutes were a good defence, and dismissed the action. The Court of Appeal dismissed plaintiff's appeal therefrom.

Felker v. McGuigan Construction Co., 16 O.W.R. 417.

-Electric current supplied by municipality-Defective system-High tension current.]-In 1903 the defendants, a town corporation, acquired an electric light plant then supplying the town and vicinity. In 1904 the defendants passed a bylaw constituting a Board of Commissioners under the Municipal Light and Heat Act, and the Municipal Waterworks Act, R.S.O. 1897, cs. 234, 235; and the Board, in and after 1905, took charge of the electrical plant, etc., of the defendants:-Held, that the liability of a body created by statute must be determined upon a true interpretation of that statute; and, upon the statutes referred to, the position of the defendants was that of principal, and that of the Board of agent; and the defendants were liable for damages occasioned by the act of the Board. Mersey Docks Trustees v. Gibbs (1866), L.R. 1 H.L. 93, followed. Held, also, that if it were beyond the powers of the Board to get their supply of electricity from a point 80 eight miles distant, it was not open to the defendants, who knew all about it and adopted it, to set up that they were not liable for the acts of the Board; and, even if this manner of procuring power were ultra vires the defendants, they could not set this up as an answer to a claim based upon the negligence of their servants, in a business carried on by them for the benefit and with the knowledge of the corporation; and in any case the causative negligence was within the municipality. On the 8th March, 1910, one of the plaintiffs, a boy, lying in bed in the house of his mother, the other plaintiff, was burned by a current of electricity from the town supply. Held, upon the evidence, that the system was a defective one; that the current which caused the injury was not a low tension current of about 110 volts-a current which, without negligence on the part of the defendants, might have been looked for-but a current of high tension which should not have been in the house at all. The defendants, having taken it upon themselves to conduct an electric light plant, must conduct it without negligence. Quære, whether the doctrine of Fletcher v. Rylands (1866), L.R. 1 Ex. 265, Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330, could be applied to electricity. Any one dealing in electricity is bound to the publie to exercise the utmost degree of care in the construction, inspection, repair, and operation of his apparatus and appliances; the defendants, on the evidence, were not careful in construction, they failed in inspection and in repair; and, without reference to the doctrine of Fletcher v. Rylands or the principle of res ipsa loquitur, the defendants should be considered liable for negligence. Held, also, that there was no contributory negligence; for, although the bed upon which the boy lav was in an iron bedstead, and the bedstead itself in contact with a radiator, the radiator being in contact electrically with the earth, there was nothing to indicate that such a state of affairs could be dangerous -it was usual and common, and no warning of danger to be anticipated from it had been given. Semble, that supplying the high tension electricity was a breach of contract with the owner of the house, the boy's mother, and she at least could sue in contract. Damages assessed at $2,250 for the mother's disbursements on account of the injury to her son and her trouble and inconvenience; and at $7,500 for the son's injuries-the loss of a hand and two holes burned through his skull to the brain.

Per Girouard and Anglin JJ:-The agreement was a contract for the sale of a commodity. Appeals from King's Bench, Quebec, dismissed, and respondent's action maintained.

-Authorizing municipal corporations to acquire and distribute electric energy-Validation of contracts with Hydro-Electric Power Commission.]-The statutes 6 Edw. VII. c. 15, as to electrical power, 7 Edw. VII. c. 19, superseding the former, except as to contracts already entered into, 8 Edw. VII., c. 22 and 9 Edw. VII. c. 19, both providing for the validation of by-laws and contracts made under the former Acts, are intra vires of the Ontario Legislature. By s. 8 of the last-mentioned Act, it is provided that every action theretofore brought and then pending wherein the validity of a contract or by-law validated by the Act was attacked, shall be forever stayed:-Held, that it was open to the Court, notwithstanding the wide -language used-referring to this very action-to inquire into the legislative competence to deal with the whole subject-The supply of light is a proper function of municipal administration; and a municipal corporation may be authorized to engage in the business of acquiring and distributing electric energy, as one of the incidents of municipal government, and coming within the words "Municipal Insti-tutions in the Province:" s. 92 (8) of the British North America Act. The Provincial Legislature has power to establish electrical works as a local work or undertaking under clause 10 of the same section; and consequently it has power to delegate this undertaking to a competent municipal body. This does not infringe upon "Trade and Commerce," as used in s. 91 (2)—these words point to political arrangements in regard to trade, regulation of trade in matters of inter-provincial concern and the like. The provisions of the statutes abovementioned, validating the by-law and contract of the defendants and staying the action, are within the competence of the Legislature. When the Provincial Legislature exercises plenary power within the consti-tutional limits of the Imperial Federation Act, any statute so enacted is not to be revised or supervised by the judicial body. Declaration that the statutes are within provincial competence, but no further order and no costs.

-Electricity-Supply for lighting purposes -Schedule of rates-Discounts.]-In an action by plaintiff company to recover for electric light supplied to defendant's place of business (wholesale), plaintiff's claim covered two periods of time during which light was supplied under different schedules. The charge for the first period included a charge per k.w. for the energy supplied and a "readiness to serve charge" of ten cents for each socket:—Held, (following The Chambers Electric Co. v. Cantwell, 43 N.S.R., 419, for the reasons there given) that the charges were recoverable. As to the second period plaintiff's schedule included among other subjects, "wholesale places, banks, offices, etc., using light up to six o'clock p.m. and a good deal in the evenings. Held, that defendants' place of business was clearly embraced in this description. Also, that it was not relevant that one or two other descriptions in the schedule, which had to do with other subjects, were not very definite. The schedule contained, at the end of it, provisions for certain options to be given to customers to enable them to come in and make special agreements in lieu of the rates previously fixed. Held, that this was valid in the absence of anything in the statute to prevent a cutsomer from contracting himself out of the first provisions, and that such offers to customers did not in any way invalidate the fixed rates, which were to prevail unless one of the options was accepted, and in the absence of anything in the evidence to show that the rates under the optional provisions were higher than the fixed rates. Held also, that where under the schedule, consumers were to be entitled to a discount of 10 per cent. "for payment of account within five days" defendant must show that no account was rendered to be entitled to claim the discount as of right.

City of London, 20 O.L.R. 133, the decision in that case was followed, and a declaration made that the statutes in question in both actions were intra vires of the Ontario Legislature: —Held, that the single point of difference, in that there was an exis.ing electric light company in Toronto, was not a material difference.

Moreover, an application to set it aside cannot be made by incidental demand in an action to which the grantees are not parties. The grant of a perpetual right, though not exclusive, made for the same purpose and in the same manner, is ultra vires of a town corporation and void.

Accounts, Re-opening of-Delay.] - The company appellant contracted with respondent to furnish them with electric lighting at three quarters of a cent per ampere hour, the bill to be rendered monthly. At this time the current was 52 volts, but it was soon after doubled, without any notice to the respondents and without any change in the lighting. Accounts were rendered at the original rate during about two years and a half, when the appellant pretended that in consequence of the increase of the voltage the quantity of the light furnished was doubled, and the action was to recover the value of the additional light from the date of the change:—Held, aftirming the judgment of the Superior Court, Davidson, J., 16 Que. —Commodity of a dangerous character Duty imposed by law.]—The respondent's husband was instantly killed by a shock received when he took hold of an electric lamp in his house, for the purpose of turning the light on. The light was furnished in the ordinary way by the company appellant. The cause of the unusual in-tensity of the electric current was not clearly established. The respondent claimed damages for the death of her husband: —Held (affirming the judgment of the Superior Court, Curran, J.) that however the current originated the appellants should be held responsible, having failed to exercise the special diligence, care, and skill required of a company carrying on a business recognized to be of a dangerous character. A company which holds itself out to the public as the supplier of electric current for lighting purposes and which contracts with individuals to furnish light or power over a system constructed and controlled by itself, is bound to a supervision and diligence proportionate to the peculiar character and danger of the commodity in which it deals.

—Electric companies — Concurrent powers — Distance between wires.]—When the legislative power given to two or more companies with similar powers comes to be exercised in the same territory, the Court should necessarily conclude that the legislature intended to give them concurrent power; in such a case the Courts being bound to submit to the power of the legislature, should only interfere between these different companies when one of them has encroached upon rights acquired by the other. Three feet between the wires should, according to the experts or persons skilled in such matters, be a sufficient distance to avoid any immediate danger.

precedent.]—Where under the terms of an agreement the plaintiffs were to supply the defendants with electric current "to the extent of fifty horse power" in the premises of the defendants, to be used by them for operating their machinery and for use in their business, and for no other purpose: —Held, that such limitation was for the purpose of confining the use of the power to the defendants' premises, and not to any existing mill thereon, and the fact that such mill was afterwards destroyed by fire did not dispense with the defendants' obligation to receive and pay for the power. Taylor v. Caldwell (1863), 3 B. & S. distinguished.

-Negligence-Electric plant - Defective appliances - Electric shock -Engagement of skilled manager—Contributory negligence.]—An electrician engaged with defendants as manager of their electric lighting plant and undertook to put it in pro-per working order, the defendants placing him in a position to obtain all necessary materials for that purpose. About three months after he had been placed in charge of the works he was killed by coming in contact with an incandescent lamp socket in the power house, which had been there during the whole of the time he was in charge, but, at the time of the accident, was apparently insufficiently insulated :- Held. that there was no breach of duty on the part of the defendants towards deceased, who had undertaken to remedy the very defects that had caused his death, and the failure to discover them must be attributed to him. The judgment appealed from, 14 Man. R. 74, ordering a new trial, was affirmed, but for reasons different from those stated in the Court below.

Can., 1904, c. 13.]-The Dominion Acts, 1894, c. 13, s. 13, sub-s. 2, enact that "Whenever a reading of a meter is taken by the contractors for the purpose of establishing a charge upon the purchaser the contractor shall cause a duplicate of such reading to be left with the purchaser. In an action by the plaintiff company seeking to recover for electric lighting and rent of meter:— Held, by the Court, that the burden was upon plaintiff to show compliance with the Act, and that non-compliance was not excused by the fact that the person to whom the duplicate reading was required to be delivered might not be able to understand it. Also, that an offer to compromise, made on the part of defendant, could not in any sense be treated as a waiver of the right conferred by the statute. Cape Breton Electric Co. v. Slayter, 36 N.S.R. 513.

—Allowing guy wires to hang loose —Contact with live wire.]—The defendants' workmen while straightening a pole to which a guy wire was attached, cut the wire, allowing it to hang loose, and, either by these workmen, or some third party, as to which there was no evidence, it was thrown across a power wire so as to become a live wire, whereby the plaintiffs coming in contact therewith were injured: —Held, that the original negligence of the workmen of the defendants was an effective cause of the injury to the plaintiffs and that the defendants were liable therefore.

Labombarde v. Chatham Gas Company, 10 O.L.R. 446 (Anglin, J.).

-Electrical installations - Cause of fire-Defective transformer - Improper installations.]-In an action to recover the amount of a policy of fire insurance paid by the plaintiffs upon the destruction of the premises insured by fire caused, as alleged, through the defective condition of a transformer of the defendant company, whereby a dangerous current of electricity was allowed to enter the insured building, the evidence failed to show conclusively that the transformer was out of order previous to the occurrence of the fire, and at the same time it appeared that the wiring of the building may have been defective:-Held, affirming the judgment appealed from, cf. Union Assurance Co. v. Quebec Railway, Light and Power Company, Q.R. 28 S.C. 289, that the onus of proof upon the plain-tiffs had not been satisfied and that they could not recover. Abrath v. Guardian Fire and Life Assurance Company v. Quebec Railway, Light and Power Company, 37 Can. S.C.R. 676.

-Quebec Act, 1 Edw. VII. c. 67-Construction - Powers of company - Purchase -Effect of resolution by an insufficient quorum.]-Held, that under Quebec Act, 1 Edw. VII. c. 67, the appellant company was empowered to acquire and hold for the purpose of its business real or immovable estate not exceeding a specified sum in yearly value in any part of the province except the judicial district of Quebec; and that, acting bona fide, it was the sole judge of what was required for that purpose. Where a purchase intra vires of the above Act had been effected by the company under a resolution of the directors at a meeting on July 17, 1901, which authorized the completion thereof, subject to an option of reconveying within a specified time:-Held, that after the lapse of the specified time the purchase was absolute and that the company which had furnished the vendor with a copy of the said resolution as one which had been duly and regularly passed, could not avoid it by showing that it had been passed by an insufficient quorum.

Montreal & St. Lawrence Light & Power Co. v. Robert, [1906] A.C. 196, 15 Que. K.B.

-Wires on public highway-Proximity to bridge — Injury to child.] — Several years ago the owners of land in the Township of York built a bridge over a ravine for access to and from the City of Toronto and about 1894 the Toronto Electric Light Co. placed wires across the ravine about ten feet from the bridge. In 1904 the bridge was reconstructed and made wider, being brought to within from 14 to 20 inches of the wires, which had become worn and ceased to be insulated. G., a boy under nine years of age, while playing on the bridge, put his arm through the railing and his hand touching the wire he was badly injured:-Held, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal, 12 Ont. L.R. 413, that the plans and deeds in evidence showed a dedication as a public highway of the bridge and land of each side of it and such highway included the land over which the wires passed. Held, also, that the wires in the condition in which they were at the time of the accident were dangerous to those using the highway and the company were liable for the injury to G. Gloster v. Toronto Electric Light Company, 38 Can. S.C.R. 27.

—Insulation of wires—Negligence in exercising statutory powers — Evidence.] — A derrick used in putting up a house in one of the streets of Montreal was brought into contact with the overhead wires of the respondent company, with the result that a current of electricity was diverted to the street and killed the appellant's husband:—Held, that the respondents, being authorized by Quebec Act, 1 Edw. VII. c. 66, s. 10, in the alternative to place their wires either overhead or underground, were not guilty of negligence in adopting one alternative rather than the other, or in neglecting to insulate or guard the wires in the absence of evidence that such precaution would have been effectual to avert the accident.

—Negligence — Electric current — Dangerous system — Protection of workmen.]— Where a company making use of electricity has allowed an unprotected wire, charged with a current of 11,000 volts, to remain in a position dangerous to persons employed in their power-house, they will be held responsible in damages for the death ich

-Loss by fire-Proof.] - A company furnishing electric light to a city which conducts its electricity over its wires by a primary current of 2,000 volts from its power house to its transformers where it is reduced to a secondary current of 110 volts before passing through the connections in-stalled in the houses by their owners is only responsible for a fire caused in one of these houses by the electric current in so far as it is due to its fault. Therefore, an action against it for damages in which it is established that the injury could have been produced in two ways, one imputable to the fault of the company and the other to that of the owner of the burned house without giving the Court the material necessary for conviction in either sense must be dismissed.

Quebec Railway, Light and Power Co. v. Union Assurance Society, Q.R. 15 K.B. 440, reversing Union Assurance v. Quebec Ry. Q.R. 28 S.C. 289.

-Dangerous currents-Trespass-Breach of contract - Surreptitious installations.] P. obtained electric lighting service for his dwelling only, and signed a contract with the company whereby he agreed to use the supply for that purpose only, to make no new connections without permission and to provide and maintain the house-wiring and appliances "in efficient condition, with proper protective devices, the whole according to Fire Underwriters' requirements." He surreptitiously connected wires with the house-wiring and carried the current into an adjacent building for the purpose of lighting other premises by means of a portable electric lamp. On one occasion, while attempting to use this portable lamp, he sustained an electric shock which caused his death. In an action by his widow to recover damages from the company for negligently allowing dangerous currents of electricity to escape from a defective transformer through which the current was passed into the dwelling:-Held, that there was no duty owing by the company towards deceased in respect of the installation so made by him without their knowledge and in breach of his contract and that, as the accident occurred through contact with the wiring which he had so connected without their permission, the company could not be held liable in damages.

Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company v. Laurence, 39 Can. S.C. 326.

--Supply of electric light—Cancellation of contract—Condition for terminating service—Interest in premises ceasing.]—The electric company and S. entered into an agreement for the supply of electric lighting in a hotel for ten years from 1st May, 1902, and it was provided that either party might cancel the agreement by notice in writing, if, after the expiration of five years, neither S nor his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns should be owner, tenant or occupier of the hotel, alone or with other persons, The lease to S. extended only until 1st May, 1907; it gave him no right to a renewal, and he had no other interest in the building. He sold a half interest in the lease to two persons with whom he formed a partnership in the notel business, which was carried on till 1904, when the partnership terminated by his death, and the defendants were appointed administrators of his intestate estate. The affairs of the partnership were settled between the defendants and the surviving partners who became transferees of the business, exclusive owners of the lease and sole occupants of the hotel for the unexpired term. They gave notice to the plaintiffs to cancel the agreement on 1st May, 1907, and, on that date, obtained a new lease of the premises under which they continued in occupation and possession: -Held, that after 1st May, 1907, the new tenants of the hotel were not assigns of S., and, consequently, were entitled to cancel the agreement for electric lighting by notice according to the proviso.

Deschenes Electric Company v. Royal Trust Co., 39 Can. S.C.R. 567.

-Municipal corporation - Hydro-Electric Power Commission Acts-Refusal of fiat by Attorney-General.]-The plaintiff, a ratepayer of a city corporation, brought an action against the corporation to have declared void a contract entered into between the corporation and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, for the supply of electrical power to the inhabitants of the city, and in his statement of claim alleged that the contract could be validly entered into by the corporation only with the assent of the electors, and that there was a material variation between the contract attacked and that set for in the bylaw which had been approved by the electors, inasmuch as the latter contained a limitation as to the price at which the power was to be supplied, which was not contained in the contract proposed to be entered into between the defendants and the Commission. The statutes by which the Commission was appointed provided that no action should be brought against it or any of its members without the consent of the Attorney-General, who refused to grant the plaintiff's application for a fiat permitting the joinder of the Commission as a defendant. The defendants having moved under Con. Rule 261 for an order that the statement of claim should be struck out, on the ground that it disclosed no reasonable cause of action, and for an order staying all proceedings until the Commission should be added as a defendant:-Held, that, as the statement of claim appeared to disclose a substantial cause of action (see Scott v. Patterson, 1908, 17 O.L.R. 270), it should not be struck out under the Rule in question, which applies only to pleadings which are obviously unsustainable, or to cases in which the Court is satisfied that a statement of claim discloses no cause of action at all. Held, further, that, even assuming the existence of a contract binding upon the corporation and the Commission, the Court should not, in the exercise of the discretion vested in it under Con. Rule 206, stay the action until the Commission should be added as a co-defendant, inasmuch as the plaintiff had done all in his power to have it so added, having applied to the Attorney-General for a fiat permitting such joinder, which application had been stren-uously opposed by the defendants, and re-fused. Con. Rule 206 (1), which provides that "an action shall not be defeated by reason of the misjoinder of parties," applies also to nonjoinder, which is expressly included in the corresponding English Rule; and the authorities upon the latter are therefore applicable in our Courts. Sem-ble, that, as the defendants' application should, under the practice, have been made before a Judge in Chambers, it was open to doubt whether they could have maintained their appeal to a Divisional Court without special leave under Con. Rule 1278.

Dumphy v. Martineau, 42 Can. S.C.R.

-Contribution or indemnity - Joint tortfeasors - Negligence - Injury by electric wire.]-The plaintiff recovered judgment against two of the defendants, a town corporation (the appellants) and an electric company, for damages for the death of her husband by contact with a live wire in a street of the town. The appellants carried their fire alarm wires upon the poles of a telephone company. The electric company carried their electric current by means of wires strung upon poles, at a lower level than the fire alarm wires. Through negligence on the part of the appellants the fire alarm wire was allowed to fall and remain upon or across the wires of the electric company, passing beneath. There were no guards between the two sets of wires, and the electric company's wires were either improperly insulated in the first instance, or had become worn, and were negligently left in that condition. The fire alarm wire resting upon the live electric wire, both were melted at the point of contact, and the severed live wire fell to the sidewalk and came in contact with the deceased. It was found that his death was due to separate acts of negligence on the part of the two defendants, the combined effect of which was to bring about the fatal result:—Held, that the appellants were not entitled at common law to contribution or indemnity from the electric company; nor were they so entitled under an agreement whereby the electric company undertook to indemnify and hold the appellants harmless against air damages, actions, etc., by reason of any danger or in-jury from the company's electrical system, if incurred by or consequent on the negligence of the company. Per Moss, C.J.O., that the rule against contribution between wrong-doers has not been qualified to the extent of entitling one who is himself a wilful or negligent wrong-doer to indemnity from another involved with him in causing the injury or wrong in respect of which judgment has gone against them. Per Meredith, J.A., that s. 609 (1) of the Municipal Act, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19 (O.), did not apply to the claim of the appellants against

Injury to person crossing track-Contributory negligence.]-In an action for damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff, owing, as he alleged, to the negligence of the defendants, whereby he was struck by a car operated by their servants, while crossing a highway on foot:—Held, that there was, at the close of the plaintiff's case, some evidence proper to be passed upon by the jury both of negligence on the part of the defendants and of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff; and that a nonsuit was properly set aside and a new trial directed. Judgment of a Divisional Court, 20 O.L.R. 71, affirmed. Per Garrow, J.A., that it is the well-established rule that, where reasonable evidence is given of negligence on the part of the defendant and of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, these issues must be determined by the jury. The cases which at first sight seem to qualify this rule are cases in which the Court was able to reach the conclusion that the negligence of the plaintiff was the sole cause, or that the conduct of the plaintiff was per se negligent, or the evidence so clear and undisputed that only the one inference could be reasonably possible.

side of Gerrard street, in the city of Toronto, and in attempting to cross the north track of the defendants, opposite the gate of the Toronto General Hospital, which he was about to visit, he was struck by a west-bound car and so injured that he died. In an action by R.'s executors to recover damages for his death, the jury, in answer to questions, found: that R.'s injuries were caused by the negligence of the defendants, which consisted in excessive speed; that R. could by the exercise of reasonable care have avoided the accident; that R. was negligent "by not looking for approaching car; that the motorman of the west-bound car, after he became aware, or, if he had exercised care, ought to have been aware, that R. was in a position of danger, could have prevented the accident by the exercise of reasonable care, and that in that respect the motorman's negligence consisted in "too great a speed":-Held, that, as the primary and ultimate negligence of the defendants were one and the same-excessive speedand as that negligence was concurrent with the negligence of the deceased, there could be no recovery. No question of ultimate negligence arose upon the findings of the jury. Upon the findings of the jury, the action was dismissed, but without costs. Per Boyd, C.:—At places like the Hospital the cars should not be driven at such a rate as to imperil those who have to cross the track in the visitation of the sick.

Toronto Railway Agreement - Ontario Act 8 Edw. VII. c. 112, s. 1-Construction.]—An order in council in pursuance of the judgment of the Judicial Committee [1907] A.C. 315, ordered that subject to certain conditions contained in their agreement it was for the respondents and not the appellants to determine what new lines should be laid down on streets within the city of Toronto. Thereafter an order was made by the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board that the respondents construct between ten and fifteen additional miles of single track, and the company selected certain streets for that purpose. Subsequently the Court of Appeal for Ontario affirmed a decision of the said Board that the company had the right to select:-Held, that the judgment in (1907) A.C. 315 was perfectly clear and that the order in council thereon was unaffected by the Ontario Act 8 Edw. VII. c. 112, s. 1.

City of Toronto v. Toronto Railway Co., [1910] A.C. 312.

—Contract for construction—Sanction of contract by shareholders.]—Action for damages for breach of contract for construction of electric railway. Plaintift proved execution of the contract under corporate seal signed by president and secretary. The contract was never carried out:—Held, that R.S.O. (1897) c, 209, s. 17, had enacted that no such contract should be of any force or validity until sanctioned by a resolution passed by the votes of the shareholders, in person or by proxy, representing two-thirds in value of the paidup stock, at a general meeting specially called, and not having been complied with, action should be dismissed, but under the circumstances without costs.

O.W.R. 751.

-Powers of provisional directors-Contract under seal-Sanction of shareholders.]-Section 9 of the special Act, 1 Edw. VII., c. 92 (O.), incorporating the defendant railway company, is an enabling en-actment, enlarging the powers of the provisional directors, and authorizing them to act for and on behalf of the company to an extent much beyond the scope to which provisional directors are limited by s. 44 of the Electric Railway Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 209. The language of s. 9 distinctly implies that the provisional directors are authorized, with the sanction of the shareholders, to engage the services of promoters or other persons for the purpose of assisting them in furthering the undertaking; and the power to engage servies implies the power to pay or agree to pay for such services. The services of the plaintiffs which were engaged under the agreement sued upon were within the class of purposes requiring the sanction of the shareholders if the agreement had been to pay in paid-up stock or bonds. If the sanction of the shareholders was necessary in order to make the agreement binding upon the company, it was given in substance. Monarch Life Assurance Co. v. Brophy (1907), 14 O.L.R. I, dis-tinguished. Apart from these considerations, the agreement being under the seal of the company, and the services having been rendered in fact by the plaintiffs and accepted in fact by the company, there was ample consideration to support the claim against them for the sum mentioned in the agreement. Township of East Gwillimbury v. Township of King (1910), 20 O.L.R. 510, followed. Judgment of a Divisional Court, 21 O.L.R. 109, affirmed. The defendant company having appealed from the judgment against them, and the plaintiffs, as the direct result of the company's appeal, having appealed from the dismissal of the action as against the individual defendants, both appeals were dismissed with costs, but the company were ordered to pay to the plain-tiffs the costs to be paid by the latter to the individual defendants.

Selkirk v. Windsor, Essex and Lake Shore Rapid R. W. Co., 22 O.L.R. 250.

—Street railway—Assumption by municipality—Principle of valuation—Operation in two municipalities—Compulsory taking.]—By s. 41 of the Ontario Street Railway Act

(R.S.O. [1897] c. 208), no municipal council shall grant to a street railway company any privilege uncreunder for a longer period than twenty years, and at the expiration of a franchise so granted, or earlier if so agreed upon, it may, on giving six months' previous notice to the company, assume the ownership of the railway and all real and personal property in connection with the working thereof on payment of the value of the same to be determined by arbitration:-Held, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal, Re Berlin Railway and Berlin, 19 Ont. L.R. 57, that the proper mode of estimating the value of the "railway and all real and personal property in connection with the working thereof," was not by capitalizing its net permanent revenue and taking that as the value, but by estimating what it was worth as a railway in use and capable of being operated, excluding compensation for loss of franchise. Held, also, that in view of the provisions in the "Street Railway Act" authorizing the municipality to assume ownership of a street railway operating in two or more municipalities the company in this case whose railway was taken over by the town of Berlin was not entitled to compensation for loss of its franchise in the municipality of Waterloo. On the expiration of its franchise the company executed an agreement extending for two months the time for assumption of ownership by the municipality, but did not relinquish possession until six month more had elapsed. During the extended time an Act was passed by the Legislature reciting all the circumstances, ratifying and confirming the agreement for extension and authorizing the municipality to take possession on payment of the award subject to any variation in the amount by the Court. Held, that though this Act did not expressly provide for taking possession on the same footing as if it had been done immediately on the expiration of the franchise its effect was, not to confer on the municipality a new right of expropriation in respect of an extended franchise, but merely to extend the time for assumption of ownership under the original conditions. The rights of the company to compensation are defined by statute, and there is no provision for an allowance of ten per cent. over and above the actual value of the property.

Town of Berlin v. Berlin and Waterloo Street Railway Co., 42 Can. S.C.R. 581.

—Personal injuries—Loss of business profits.]—The plaintiff, a married woman, was injured while a passenger on one of the defendants' cars, by reason of the negligence of the defendants' servants, as found by a jury, who assessed her damages at $1,900 for her injuries and $600 for loss of business. The separation of the two items was made by the jury, and the Judge entered judgment for $2,500:—Held, notwithstanding the form of the judgment, that the Court was enabled, by the division made by the jury, to consider the propriety of the allowance made for loss of profits. plaintiff was fifty-six years old, and was in business as a baker. After her injury she sold the business. Some evidence was given as to profits being earned in the business at the time of the injury, but there was nothing to show a reasonable certainty of future profits. Held, that the allowance for loss of profits was not supportable, the alleged damages being remote and conjectural, and the judgment should be varied by reducing the amount to $1,900. Held, as to the $1,900, that the amount was not so large as to show that the jury neglected their duty or were actuated by any improper motive or did not appreciate the grounds on which they might act in awarding damages.

Wright v. Toronto R.W. Co., 20 O.L.R.

-Refusal of passenger to pay fare-General and special Act-Inconsistency.]-The Ontario Railway Act of 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 30) is, by s. 5, made applicable to street railway companies incorporated by the Legislature, but, by the same section, if provisions of the general and special Acts are inconsistent, those of the latter shall prevail. By s. 116 of the general Act, a passenger on a railway train or car who refuses to pay his fare may be ejected by the conductor; and by s. 17 of the Act incorporating the Toronto Railway Co., a passenger in such case is liable to a fine only:-Held. that these two provisions are not inconsist-ent, and the conductor of a street railway car may lawfully eject therefrom a passenger who refuses to pay his fare. In this case the company was held liable for damages, the passenger having been ejected from a car with unnecessary violence. Appeal dismissed.

Toronto Railway Co. v. Paget, 42 Can. S.C.R. 488.

-Injury to person crossing track-Excessive speed-Failure to give warning.]-The plaintiff, who was somewhat hard of hearing, attempted to cross from the east to the west side of a highway on which the defendants' single track was laid. Before he began to cross he observed a car of the defendants standing upon a siding about 550 feet north of him, and, from his knowledge of the practice of the defendants, inferred that it was waiting there for a car from the south to pass it. He, therefore, just before crossing the track, looked south for a car, but did not look north, and had almost passed over the track when he was struck by a car coming from the north, and injured. There was evidence that the gong was not sounded nor the whistle blown nor the speed of the car slackened as he approached the track. He could have seen the car approaching had he turned and looked, and the motorman must have seen him approaching the track. Had the brakes been applied and the car delayed for a second or two, he would have escaped. There was evidence that it was going at from 16 to 18 miles an hour:-Held, that there was some evidence of negligence on the part of the motorman which should have been submitted to the jury; and a nonsuit was set aside. Per Mulock, U.J.Ex.D., that the plaintiff was not to as-Mulock, sume that the motorman would start his car from a point enabling him to see the plaintiff walking in a direction that would soon bring him upon the track, and, nevertheless, that the car would be driven at such a speed as to overtake him, and that without giving any warning of its approach. Per Clute, J., that there was evidence to submit to the jury of negligence on the part of the motorman in not sounding the gong, in not exercising more care in keeping an look-out, and in not applying the brakes before the car struck the plaintiff. He could not but see that the plaintiff was approaching the track, and it was to be inferred from the evidence that he ought to have known that the plaintiff was oblivious of the approaching car.

Jones v. Toronto and York Radial R.W. Co., 20 O.L.R. 71.

—Passenger fares—Ontario Railway and Municipal Board.]—The Ontario Railway and Municipal Board, upon an application by the Board of Trade above-named, made an order compelling the International Railway Company, owning and operating an electric railway along the bank of the Niagara River from Queenston to Chippawa, and incorporated by 55 Vict. c. 96 (O.), to comply with s. 171 of the Ontario Railway Act, 1906, by accepting a five-cent cash fare for conveying passengers for any distance not exceeding three miles, etc.:—Held, re-versing the order of the Board, that the company came within sub-s. 5 of s. 171, providing that "this section shall not apply to a company whose tariff for passenger fares is subject to the approval of any commissioners in whom are vested any park or lands owned by the Crown for the use of the public of the Province of Ontario; and, s. 171 being thus excluded, that the Board had no power, on an application such as was made in this case, to direct what fares the company should charge. The effect of the incorporation into the company's Act of s. 31 of the Railway Act of Ontario, R.S.O. 1887, c. 170, was not to abrogate clause 32 of the agreement with the Commissioners for the Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park, set out as schedule B to the company's Act. They should be read together in such a way as to give effect to both, and reading them as subjecting the company's tariff to the approval of both the commissioners and the Lieutenant-Governor in council (or the Board substituted therefor) was not inconsistent with the intention of the parties.

Re Niagara Falls Board of Trade and International R.W. Co., 20 O.L.R. 197.

-Powers of provisional directors-Contract -Sanction of shareholders.]-Section 9 of the special Act 1 Edw. VII. c. 92 (O.), incorporating the defendant company, enacts that the provisional directors may agree to pay for the services of persons who may be employed by the directors for the purpose of assisting the directors in furthering the undertaking, or for the purchase of the right of way, and any agreement so made shall be binding on the company:-Held, that the express language of the special Act prevails over the general provision (s. 44) of the Electric Railway Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 209, all the clauses of which, except so far as inconsistent, were, by s. 12 of the special Act, incorporated with and deemed to be a part of the special Act; and, therefore, the provisional directors had power to bind the company by making the contract sought to be enforced, a contract to pay the plaintiffs for services in furthering the company's undertaking. The special Act, s. 9, says that this can be done by the provisional directors "when sanctioned by a vote of the shareholders at any general meeting." Held, approving and following McDougall v. Lindsay Paper Mill Co. (1884), 10 P.R. 247, 252, that the plaintins' contract was not affected by the non-observance of this direction; and, apart from that, the contract was approved, before and after it was made, by the whole body of shareholders, though not formally assembled in general meeting. Judgment of Riddell, J., 20 O.L.R. 290, which was in favour of the plaintiffs against the individual defendants, reversed, and judgment directed to be entered for the plaintiffs against the company.

-Injury to passenger-Sudden jerk in starting car.]—The plaintiff, immediately after entering a car of the defendants, and before she had reached a seat, was, from some cause, thrown down backwards and injured. In an action against the defendants for damages, the negligence charged in the statement of claim as the cause of the fall was "the sudden jerking forward of the car," and this was supported by the evidence of the plaintiff herself and of two other eyewitnesses of the occurrence. Evidence was called for the defence to show that the car was new and in good condition, that only the lowest notch was used in putting on the power, and that there was no unusual jerk. The trial Judge in his charge practically withdrew from the jury the consideration of the alleged jerk as the cause of the fall, but told the jury to consider whether the conductor was negligent in starting the car before the plaintiff (an aged person) was seated. The jury found that the defendants' servants were negligent in starting the car before the plaintiff was in withdrew the case from the jury, and gave judgment for the defendants:—Held, that it did not follow that, because there were no facts in dispute, the matter to be decided was a pure question of law; it might be for the jury to say what they found to be the true inference from these facts, e.g., whether there was negligence causing the accident; there was at last one question which should have been submitted to the jury, viz., whether there was any negligence of the conductor in failing to hear or to countermand the unautnorized signal for starting the car, in time to have prevented injury to the plaintiff, particularly in view of what had previously taken place. And semble, that there was at least one other question which might be submitted to the jury, viz., whether the defendants failed in their duty in not taking due precautions to prevent the starting of the car through the unauthorized act of a passenger in ringing the bell, which might involve the question (not raised by the pleadings) whether the system adopted by the defendants was defective. Held, therefore, that there should be a new trial, with leave to the plaintiff to amend as she might be advised.

Haigh v. Toronto R.W. Co., 21 O.L.R. 601.

Negligence — Motorman — Workmen's Compensation Act (Ont.)—Injury to conductor.]—The motorman of an electric car may be a "person who has charge or control" within the meaning of s. 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (R.S.O. [1897] c. 160), and if he negligently allows an open car to come in contact with a passing vehicle whereby the conductor, who is standing on the side in discharge of his duty, is struck and injured, the electric company is liable in damage for such injury. Judgment of the Court of Appeal (Snell v. Toronto Ry., 27 O.A.R. 151) affirmed.

The Toronto Railway Co. v. Snell, 31 Can. S.C.R. 241.

—Maintaining a nuisance—Running cars without proper fenders—Negligence endangering life,]—The omission of an electric railway company operating their cars upon a highway to use reasonable precautions so as to avoid endangering the lives of the public using the highway in common with the company, is a breach of legal duty constituting a common nuisance under the Criminal Code, ss. 191 and 213, for which an indictment will lie.

R. v. Toronto Railway Company, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 4 (McDougall, Co. J.).

—Contract to construct—Prevention by effect of legislation—Unlawful occupation —Duty of municipality—Boud—Substituted agreement—Discharge of obligation.]— Specific performance of an agreement by a street railway company with a municipal corporation to construct, equip and a position to save herself from falling; and the trial Judge directed judgment to be entered for the plaintiff. There was some mention in the evidence of the premature starting of the car, but it was not put forward as an independent cause of complaint until the Judge emphasized it in his charge. Neither party made any objection to the charge. The defendants appealed from the judgment, but the plaintiff did not, by crossappeal or otherwise, raise an objection to the practical withdrawal from the jury of the chief cause of complaint:-Held, that the question of the jerk should not have been withdrawn from the jury; there was but one incident, made up of the conduct of the conductor in giving the signal and that of the motorman in obeying it; and it should have been left as one question to the jury. The finding actually made could not, upon the evidence, be supported. Held, also, that the circumstance that an objecalso, that the circumstance that an objection was not taken at the proper time was not necessarily fatal. Brenner v. Toronto R.W. Co. (1907), 15 O.L.R. 195, 198, and Woolsey v. Canadian Northern R.W. Co. (1908), 11 O.W.R. 1030, 1036, followed. Held, also, that it was to be inferred that the jury (influenced by the Judge's remarks) did not consider the evidence upon the question of the jerk, and that their finding did not imply that that question was determined in favour of the defendants. Held, also, that the real question in issue not having been passed upon by the jury, there was power to direct a new trial; Meredith, J.A., dissenting. Jones v. Spen-cer (1897), 77 L.T.R. 536, followed. Per Meredith, J.A., that the defendants' appeal

-Injury to passenger alighting from car-Unauthorized signal to start.]-The plaintiff was a passenger upon a crowded open car of the defendants, who operated an electric railway upon the streets of a city. The plaintiff wished to alight at N. street, and the car stopped there, upon the signal of the conductor, who was upon the foot-board, engaged in collecting fares. While the plaintiff was in the act of alighting. the car started, upon a signal given by an unauthorized person who was standing on the rear platform, and the plaintiff was thrown down and injured. The car had previously, on the same trip, been started, after a stop, by the same unauthorized person, and the conductor had not interfered or reprimanded him. The plaintiff alleged negligence in starting the car too soon and in overcrowding the car so that the conductor was not able to perform his duties, and claimed damages for her injuries. The facts were not in dispute, and the trial Judge

-- Mortgage-Future acquired property-Fixtures-Rolling stock-Execution-Company.]-An electric street railway company incorporated under the Ontario Joint Stock Companies Letters Patent Act, R.S.O. 1887, c. 157, and subject to the provisions of the Street Railway Act, R.S.O. 1887, c. 171, gave to trustees for holders of debentures of the company a mortgage upon the real estate of the company, together with all buildings, machinery, appliances, works and fixtures, etc., and also all rolling stock and all other machinery, appliances, works and fixtures, etc., to be thereafter used in connection with the said works, etc. The by-laws of the directors and shareholders (who were the same persons and only five in number) authorizing the giving of the mortgage directed it to be given upon all the real estate, plant, franchises, and income of the company, and the debentures stated that they were secured by mortgage of the real estate, franchises, rolling stock, plant, etc., acquired or to be acquired:-Held, that s. 38 of R.S.O. 1887, c. 157, does not restrict the power of mortgaging to the existing property of the company and that a company is invested with as large powers to mortgage its ordinary after acquired property as belong to a natural person; that the mortgage in terms covered after acquired property, and even if not authorized in this respect upon a strict reading of the by-laws had been acquiesced in and ratified and was binding. Judgment of a Divisional Court affirmed. Held, also, that the rolling stock, poles, wires, etc, formed an essential part of the corpus of what must be regarded as an entire machine, and were therefore fixtures and not seizable under execution to the prejudice of the mort-gagees. Judgment of Armour, C.J., affirmed.

Kilpatrick v. Cornwall Electric Street Railway Company (Limited); Bank of Montreal v. Kirkpatrick, 2 O.L.R. 113 (C.A.).

—Negligence—Frightening horse.] — The motorman of an electric car is not necessarily guilty of negligence because he does not at once stop the car at the first notice that a horse is being frightened either at the car or at something else. All that can be expected is that the motorman shall proceed carefully, and it is in each case a question whether that has been done. Upon the facts of this case the majority of the Court held that there was no evidence to justify a finding of negligence and set aside a judgment in the plaintiff's favour. Judgment of Falconbridge, CJ., reversed.

-Highway - Removal of snow from tracks.]-By the provisions of a municipal by-law, to which a street railway company were bound to conform, the company were obliged to remove snow from their tracks in such manner as not to obstruct or render unsafe the free passage of sleighs or other vehicles along or across the street. After a heavy snow-fall the company removed the snow from their tracks, the result being that there was a bank of several inches at each side of the tracks to the level of the snow-covered portions of the street:-Held, that the company had not discharged their obligation and that they were liable to indemnify the city against damages recovered against the city by a person who had in consequence of the bank been upset while driving along the street. - Negligence - Collision - Contributory negligence.]-The plaintiff, who was driving a horse and waggon very slowly along a street on the left side of a car track, turned to the right to cross the track, and the waggon was struck by a car which had been coming behind. The plaintiff said that about one hundred feet from the point at which he tried to cross he looked back, and that no car was to be seen, and he did not look again before trying to cross:-Held, that it was his duty to have looked, and that his not having done so constituted contributory negligence on his part, which disentitled him to recover damages. Danver v. London Street Rail-way Co. (1899, 30 O.R. 493, applied. Judg-ment of Britton, J., reversed. Per Boyd, C .: - A driver of a vehicle moving along a street in which cars are running, and who knows when and where he intends to cross the car tracks, is bound to be vigilant to see before crossing that no car is coming behind him. A greater burden in this regard rests on the driver than on the motorman, who is not to be kept in a state of nervousness and apprehension lest some one may at any moment cross in front of the moving car.

-Negligence-Neglect to give notice by pell-Excessive damages.]-The plaintiff travelling by electric railway along a country road on a dark night, got off at a regular stopping place. He then turned back along the road, and after he had walked some distance along it, and was moving towards the railway track, the car by which he had travelled, backing up, struck him. There was a light at both ends of the car, which was travelling at the rate of three or four miles an hour, but the current was very weak and the light slight, and the motorman came within four or five feet of the plaintiff before seeing him, and he did not sound the gong or give any other warning of his approach: -Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants, and the appeal from a trial judgment was dismissed and a new trial refused, on the plaintiff consenting to reduce his damages.

—Negligence—Findings of jury—Contributory negligence.]—In an action founded on presonal injuries caused by a street car the jury found that defendant's negligence was the cause of the accident, and also that plaintiff had been negligent in not looking out for the car:—Held, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal (2 O.L.R. 53, 1901, C.A. Dig. 340) that as the charge to the jury had properly explained the law as to contributory negligence the latter finding must be considered to mean that the accident would not have occurred but for the plaintiff's own negligence and he could not recover. Appeal allowed with costs.

—Negligence—Car running backwards—Jury—Answers to questions.]—The plaintiff was injured by a waggon in which he was being driven, being struck by an electric car of the defendants, which was running backwards in a southerly direction on the easterly track in a street, which track, according to the usual custom of the defendants, should have been used only by cars running in a northerly direction. The motorman was at the northerly end of the car, and no special precautions were being observed. The jury were asked, by the Judge presiding at the trial, to say, in the event of their returning a verdict for the plaintiff, what negligence they pointed to. The jury found that the defendants were responsible for the accident, for the reasons that the car was on the wrong track and the motorman at the rear end, and judgment was entered in the plaintiff's favour for the damages assessed:—Held, that this was a general verdict, which there was evidence to support, in the plaintiff's favour, with a statement of reasons which might be disregarded and was not merely a specific finding in answer to a question. Per Armour, C.J.O.:—Questions to the jury must be in writing. Per Osler, J.A.:—While it is more convenient that questions to the jury should be in writing, the Judge is not bound to adopt that course.

-Conductor's authority - Evidence.]-Plaintiff came to a platform station of the defendants and signalled an approaching car to stop. The car slowed down but did not stop, and as it was passing the conductor seized her hand and while attempting to help her on board signalled the car to go on again which it did and she was injured. The jury found that the plaintiff was injured by the conductor seizing her hand and trying to pull her on the car, and that he acted negligently:-Held, that it was the duty of the conductor to assist people in getting on and off the of his duty to assist those apparently about to get on a car while it was slowing up; that the scope of a conductor's author ity is one of evidence; that there was evidence to go to the jury, and that the effect of it was for them to consider, and that it should have been left to them to pass upon the circumstances of the case as to the scope of the conductor's authority. Judgment of Street, J., at the trial, reversed.

carry it out:-Held, that the company took the risk of a by-law being passed, and that they were not mislead; and that without the mayor's signature it was in-complete and invalid. Held, also, that two by-laws set out in the judgment of Mac-Mahon, J., as to the routes and speed of the plaintiffs' cars were, under the circumstances, valid as being within the defendants' power and authority under 59 Vict. c. 105 (O.), which validated a by-law of the defendants and an agreement between plaintiffs and defendants under which the plaintiffs built and operated their railway. By the original by-law, under which the read was authorized to be built and operated, as set out in the judgment of Mac-Mahon, J., the defendants were bound to establish new lines, as might be directed by by-law of defendants, in the proportion of one mile of track to every 2,000 inhabitants of the city then existing or thereafter extended, the population to be ascertained as mentioned in the by-law. and that in the event of any local municipality being annexed, the railways of the company within the annexed municipality, and the company in relation thereto should have all the rights and be subject to the terms of the by-law. A local municipality was annexed to the defendants' municipality in 1898, and at the time of annexation had a street railway trackage of 5,900 feet. The population of the city in 1901 was 39,183, being an increase of 4,183 and the proportion of additional trackage to population was 11,043 feet. By a subsequent by-law defendants were directed to construct 7,380 feet of additional track. -Held, Maclennan, J.A., dissenting, that under the original by-law the mileage of the local municipality must be added to the mileage of the lines in the city at the time of the annexation, and the amount deducted from the amount required by the last mentioned by-law, which was consequently bad as being in excess of the mileage the defendants could require.

-Extension of railway-Time tables-Open cars — Heating — Night cars — Rights of city as to—Specific performance.]-Under the agreement between the plaintiffs and defendants, which is set out in 53 Vict. c. 99 (O.), the right to determine what new lines should be established and laid down is vested in the city, and applies as well to the streets within the city as it existed at the time of the making of the agreement, as to the streets in the territory from time to time brought within it; and for the company's failure to establish and lay down such new lines, the city is not limited merely to the right provided for in the agreement of granting such privilege to others. The right, under such agreement, to settle the time tables, and to fix the routes of the cars. to determine when open cars should be taken off in the autumn or resumed in the spring, and as to when and how cars should be heated, is for the city engineer, subject to the approval of the city council. The city have no power to compel the company to continue to run after midnight any car which, having started before midnight, cannot in due course finish its route by that time. On a special case stated in an action only such questions will be answered as must necessarily arise in the action. The Court, therefore, in view of 63 Viet, c. 102, ss. 1 and 5 (O.), being made applicable to the city declined to answer a question raised in a special case as to the right of the city to have specifically performed those provisions of the agreement herein found in its favour; and an expression of opinion previously given against granting such specific performance, following Kingston v. Kingston Electric R.W. Co. (1898), 25 A.R. 462, was with-

There was evidence that the approaching car was going at the rate of 8 to 10 miles an hour, and that there was a bright electric light near by that the plaintiff, if careful, could have seen the car. The motorman did not apply the brakes or sound the gong before the plaintiff was struck:—Held, that a nonsuit was properly directed.

VII. c. 25, s. 1 (O.), it is provided that a street railway company, when operating any portion of their line by means of electricity, shall use "in the front of each motor car a fender'':--Held, that what is meant by the "front" of the car is that end of it which when the car is in motion is the furthest forward, that is to say, furthest forward in the sense that it would first meet a person or an object moving in the opposite direction; and the defendants operating a car for a distance of twelve hundred feet with the fender at the back instead of the front, as so defined, were liable to the penalty prescribed by the statute. -Negligence-Married woman - Personal injury to-Damages awarded husband-Excessive amount.]—The female plaintiff, 62 years of age, wife of the male plaintiff, who was 70 years of age, in attempting to alight from one of the defendants' cars, was through the defendants' negligence thrown to the ground and seriously injured. She was in the doctor's hands for several months, and her arm and hand which were injured were not likely to be as useful to her as before the accident. The jury awarded the wife $1,000 and the husband $1,200:—Held, that the amount awarded the wife could not be deemed to be unreasonable; but, as regarded the husband, after due allowance for the medical expenses and for nursing and attendance, and considering the age of the parties, the amount awarded him was excessive and there would have to be a new assessment unless he agreed that the damages be reduced to $400.

-Streets in newly annexed territory-Bylaw-Passing of, before date of Act-Engineer-Authority of-Stopping places-Right to fix.]-By s. 14 of the agreement entered into between the plaintiffs and defendants, set out in 55 Viet. c. 99 (O.) the defendants are required to establish and lay down new lines and to extend the tracks and street car service on such streets as may be from time to time recommended by the city engineer and approved by the city council within such period as may be fixed by by-law to be passed by a vote of two-thirds of all the members of the council; and all such extensions and new lines shall be regulated by the same terms and conditions as relate to the existing system, etc. A recommendation was made by the city engineer to the city council that a double line of tracks should be laid down and the car service extended on the continuation of one of the streets in the city, and a bylaw was passed duly approving thereof and fxing the date for such service, of which the defendants were duly notified. The continuation of said street was in territory brought into the city subsequently to the entering into of the sagreement:—Held, that the agreement applied as well to streets brought within the city subsequently to the entering into of the said agreement as to those then within its limits.

Corporation of Toronto v. Toronto R.W. Co. (1904), 5 O.W.R. 130, affirmed by Privy Council; Corporation of Toronto v. Toronto R.W. Co. (1904), 9 O.L.R. 333, followed. Held, also, that it was not essential that the city should pass a by-law as required by s. 16 of 2 Edw. II. c. 27 (O.) which provides that prior to the passing a by-law authorizing any electric railway company to lay out or construct its railway on, upon or along any jublic highway, road, street or lane, notice must be given similar to that required by s. 632 of the Municipal Act, for that section only applies to those electric railways which come within R.S.O. 1897, c. 209, and had no application to the defendants.

The by-law for the laying out and construction of the extension was passed on the 10th April, 1905, while the statute for the annexation of the territory in question was not passed until the 25th of May, 1905; but the Lieutenant-Governor's proclamation annexing the territory was issued on the 3rd March to take effect on the 10th March, 1905, to which no objection was ever taken:—Held, that the by-law was valid.

By s. 5 of 63 Vict. c. 102 (O.) it is provided that if the railway company neglect or fail to perform any of their chligations under the Act and the agreement, and an action is brought to compe! performance, the Court before whom the action is tried shall, notwithstanding any rule of law or practice to the contrary, enquire into the alleged breach, and in case a breach is found to have been committed, shall make an order specifying what things shall be done by the defendants as a substantial compliance with the Act and agreement: which shall be enforcible in the same manner, etc., as a mandamus:-Held, that an order could be made specifying what was necessary to be done to constitute a substantial compliance with the agreement.

Corporation of Kingston v. Kingston & Cataraqui St. R.W. Co. (1903), 25 A.R. 462, specially referred to:—Held, also, that the corporation could enforce the laying out of such extension notwithstanding the option given by s. 17 of the agree.

ment to grant to another person or company the right of laying down lines on streets, after failure of the defendants, though duly notified, to do so. Held, also that the engineer for the time being and not the engineer who held office when the agreement was entered into is the one referred to therein, and that he does not act in a judicial capacity but as the executive officer of the corporation, to whom he must make his recommendation, which the council may approve or reject, as they see fit.

By s. 26 of the agreement it is provided that the speed and service necessary on any main line, part of same or branch is to be determined by the city engineer and approved of by the council; and by s. 39 it is provided that the cars shall only be stopped clear of cross streets, and midway between streets, where the distance exceeds 600 feet:-Held, that the regulation of the places at which cars are to stop to take on and let off passengers is part of the service within s. 26, and, therefore, subject to the limitations of s. 39, the defendants might be required to stop wherever the city engineer and city council might agree in requiring them to do so. The engineer reported to the couneil recommending that the cars should be required to stop at certain specified points, and his report was adopted by resolution of the council:—Held, that this was a determination and not merely a recommendation of the engineer, for it must be assumed that before making his recommendation he had determined the matter so far as he could; and that it was not essential that the adoption of such recommendation should be by by-law.

—Determination of engineer,]—S. 14 of the agreement entered into between the plaintiffs and defendants, set out in 55 Vict. c. 99 (O.), whereby the defendants are required to establish and lay down new lines and to extend the tracks and street car service on such streets as may be, from time to time, recommended by the city engineer and approved by the city council, does not apply to territory city at the date of the agreement, but has subsequently been annexed to and become part thereof. Toronto R.W. Co. v. City of Toronto, 37 S.C.R. 430 (reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal, 10 O.L.R. 657), followed. By s. 26 of the agreement the "speed and service" necessary on each main line, part of same, or branch, is to be determined by the city engineer and approved by the city council; and by s. 39 the cars shall only be stopped clear of cross streets and midway between streets, where the distance exceeds six hundred feet:-Held, subject to the limitations of clause 39, that the regulating of the places at which cars shall be stopped came within condition 26 relating to the speed and service, and was therefore to be determined by the city engineer and approved of by the council. The engineer made a report to the council recommending that cars should be required to stop at certain specified points, which was adopted by resolution of the council:-Held, that the engineer did not occupy a judicial or quasi-judicial position between the parties to the agreement, and was not bound to consult with the defendants before determining what service should be supplied. and that such report, though somewhat informally expressed, was a sufficient determination on the part of the engineer, and that the adoption by resolution was sufficient, it not being essential that such adoption should be by-law. Held, also, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an order restraining the defendants from running the cars upon their railway, except in accordance with the determination of the engineer as to the stopping places.

An order by the Court below that the appellant company should pay arrears of track rentals within the limits of the respondent city, over and above their periodical payments already made, and should pay interest thereon, was affirmed.

Toronto Railway Company v. City of Toronto, [1906] A.C. 117.

—Piling snow at side of track—Contributory negligence—Plaintiff putting himself in peril.]—The plaintiff a telegraph messenger, was riding a bicycle in a southerly direction behind a street car of the defendants on the west track, and the car stopping, in order to avoid running into it, and because he found snow was piled up on the road on the right side he turned to the left side, and was struck by a car coming north on the east track, and injured. It did not appear that the latter car had sounded the gong or given any other warning. The plaintiff, however, was nonsuited at the trial:-Held, that the defendants were bound to adopt reasonable precautions to prevent accidents by sounding a gong or otherwise, although there was no statutory obligation; and although the plaintiff may have put himself in a position of peril, this was not per se an act of negligence; and there being evidence which might have satisfied the jury that the accident was caused by omission on the defendant's part to ring the gong, and also evidence from which they might have found that it was attributable to the plaintiff's own negligence, the case should not have been withdrawn from them. Preston v. Toronto R.W. Co., 11 O.L.R. 56, 5 Can. Ry. Cas. 30 (D.C.), affirmed, 13 O.L.R. 369.

-Street railway-Acquisition of land for car-barns-Right of city to expropriate-Action by company claiming declaratory judgment.]-The Toronto Railway Company, which has no powers of expropriation, acquired by purchase from the owners certain land in a residential locality, on which they proposed to erect car-barns, being a purpose authorized by the agreement with the city, as validated by 53 Vict. c. 90 (O.), and submitted the plans to the city for its approval, whereupon a petition was presented to the Board of Control, by the residents of the locality, asking the intervention of the city against such proposed use of the land, as well as against the laying of tracks on certain streets as a means of access to the barns, which was referred to the corporation's counsel for his opinion as to the city's powers. The city had at that time under consideration the acquisition of a specified block of land in the locality for park purposes, but subsequently to the presentation of the petition the Parks and Gardens Committee recommended the expropriation of the Company's land for such purpose, and under their instructions a by-law therefor was drafted by the city solicitor. On the matter coming before the council, the recommendation was struck out and the question of procuring park lands referred back to the committee, and on the following day, but after the plaintiffs had commenced this action, the architect was instructed by the board not to deal with the plans, pending the result of the proposed expropriation proceedings. There was nothing to show that the course pursued by the city was not actuated by good faith. In an action claiming a declaratory judgment of the company's right to so use the land:
-Held, that while there was undoubted power in the Court to grant declaratory judgments, it was a discretionary power; and that in this case, the exercise of the discretion by the trial Judge, in refusing to grant such a judgment, would not under the circumstances be interfered with.

-- Excessive speed-Gong not sounded-Contributory negligence.]-A passenger on a street car in Toronto going west alighted on the side farthest from the other track and passed in front of the car to cross to the opposite side of the street. The space between the two tracks was very narrow and seeing a car coming from the west as she was about to step on the track, she recoiled, and at the same time the car she had left started and she was crushed between two, receiving injuries from which she died. In an action by her father and mother for damages the jury found that the company was negligent in running the east bound car at excessive speed and starting the west bound car and not sounding the gong in proper time They found also that deceased was negligent, but that the company could, nevertheless, have avoided the accident by the exercise of reasonable care:-Held, that the case having been submitted to the jury with a charge not objected to by the defendants and the evidence justifying the findings the verdict for the plaintiffs should not be disturbed. The plaintiffs should not have had the funeral and other expenses incur-red by the father of deceased allowed as damages in the action.

Toronto Railway Company v. Mulvaney, 38 Can. S.C.R. 337.

-"'Ultimate' negligence-Injury to per son crossing track-Neglect of motorman to shut off power on approaching crossing.] -Negligence of a defendant incapacitating him from taking due care to avoid the consequences of the plaintiff's negligence, may, in some cases, though anterior ia point of time to the plaintiff's negligence, constitute "ultimate" negligence, rendering the defendant liable notwithstanding a finding of contributory negligence of the plaintiff. Such anterior default of the defendant is "ultimate" negligence when it renders inefficient to avert injury to the plaintiff means employed by the defendant after danger became apparent, and which would otherwise have proved adequate to prevent the mischief, or renders the defendant wholly incapable of employing such means, though time was afforded for his using them efficaciously but for such disabling negligence. Scott v. Dublin and Wicklow R.W. Co. (1861), 11 Ir. C.L.R. 377, approved. Radley v. London and North Western R.W. Co. (1876), 1 App. Cas. 754, applied. The plaintiff in crossing a city street in front of an approaching motor-ear of the defendants was admittedly guilty of negligence or contributory negligence,

There was evidence of a rule of the defendants that motormen were to shut off power at a certain distance before reaching a crossing and that the motorman on this oceasion did not do so and in an action for the defendants' negligence causing the plaintiff's injuries the trial Judge in his charge to the jury withdrew the evidence of this rule from their consideration:-Held, that the place where the plaintiff attempted to cross was a crossing, being opposite a street running at right angles to the street upon which the car was being operated, though not an intersecting street; and the withdrawal of the evidence as to the rule was misdirection, and misdirection which might have affected the result; the jury might, upon the evidence, have found that, but for the motorman's failure sooner to shut off power, or to reduce speed the momentum of the car would have been so lessened that he could, with the emergency appliance at his command, have avoided running down the plaintiff; and this fail ure, though anterior to the plaintiff's negligence, would be "ultimate" negligence, within the meaning of the rule which makes a defendant liable, notwithstanding contributory negligence of the plaintiff, if in the result he (the defendant) could by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the mischief.

-Sale and purchase of street railway system-Exclusive power of purchasers to operate-Construction.]-By agreement of sale and purchase between the Toronto City Corporation and the Toronto Railway Company dated September 1st, 1891, and confirmed by Ontario Act, 55 Vict. c. 99. the latter acquired, not merely the material of the railway undertaking in suit, but also, as was clearly provided, the exclusive right "to operate surface street railways in the City of Toronto'' in the fullest possible way within the period of the agreement:-Held, that on its true construction, territorial additions to the city made during the term of the agreement were not within its scope. By clause 14 it was provided that the company might be required to lay down new lines or extend tracks and car service as approved by the city, and by clause 17 it was provided that on the company's failing so to co the privilege so abandoned might be granted to any other person or company without any resulting claim to the purchaser for compensation. Held, that under these clauses construed so as not to dero gate from the exclusive right of the company the sole remedy in case of non-com-Pliance was that provided by the latter clause and that a claim for damages was not maintainable. Held, also, that the exclusive power to operate included the right to determine the route and stopping of the different cars and their interrelations, which was not displaced by other provisions. In particular, clause 26 gave the city power to determine the speed and service necessary on each main line. But it was included amongst sections headed track, etc., and roadways all referring to the physical condition of those entities and not to the course or direction of the cars and should not be construed as intended to derogate from the company's exclusive powers.

City of Toronto v. Toronto Ry. Co., [1907] A.C. 315, reversing the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, 37 Can. S.C.R. 430.

—Damages for personal injuries—Assignment of claim for—Chose in action.]—The plaintiff brought this action for damages for personal injuries sustained by his being run down by a car of the defendants, and for the killing of his master's horse which he was riding at the time, and in respect of which he claimed under assignment from his master:—Held, that the action was properly dismissed as to the latter claim upon the ground that it was not an assignable chose in action.

-Use of streets-Payment for-Percentage of receipts-Traffic beyond city.]-By agreement between the City of Hamilton and the Hamilton Street Ry. Co. the latter was authorized to construct its railway on certain named streets and agreed to pay to the city, inter alia certain per-centages on their gross receipts:-Hell, following Montreal Street Ry. Co. v. City of Montreal, [1906] A.C. 100, that such payment applies in respect to all traffic in the city including that originating or terminating in the adjoining Township of Barton. Held, also, that as, when the railway was extended into Barton the company agreed with that township to carry passengers from there into the city at city rates, the percentage was payable on the whole of such traffic and not on the portion within the city only. Held, further, that the power of the company to construct its railway was not derived wholly from its charter, but was subject to the permission of the city corporation; the city had, therefore, a right to stipulate for payment of such percentages and the agreement therefor was intra vires. The judgment of the Court of Appeal, 10 Ont. L.R. 575, affirming that of Meredith, J., at the trial, 8 Ont. L.R. 455, was affirmed -Injury to passenger alighting from car -Crossing behind car-Collision with car on parallel track.]-The plaintiff was a passenger on a car of the defendants, and stepped from it while it was in motion, as it reached a street crossing; the motorman had been signalled to stop, but failed to do so. The plaintiff alighted safely, but found himself in front of a horse and cab driven swiftly towards him. In order to avoid a collision with the horse, and also in order to cross to the west side of the street, the plaintiff turned behind the ear he had just left and passed on towards the other track; as he reached it, he became aware of a car coming towards him at a rapid rate, and to avoid being run down he flung himself on the fender, thus saving his life, but he was seriously in-In an action to recover damages for his injuries he was a witness at the trial, and said that it was imposible to get out of the way of the car; he did not hear the gong sound, although if it had been rung he would have heard it. By one of the regulations forming part of the agreement between the city corporation and the defendants, validated by 57 Vict. c. 76 (O.), under which the defendants operated their cars on the city's highways, it was provided that each car was to be supplied with a gong, to be sounded by the driver when the car approached to within 50 feet of each crossing. This was not brought to the attention of the Judge at the trial. The plaintiff, however, was aware that it was the usual practice to sound the gong at crossings, and he expected it to be done when a car was approaching a crossing:-Held, that even if the regulation had not the force of a statutory requirement, the proof of failure to comply with a precaution which the defendants had recognized as important for the safety of persons using the crossing on streets occupied by the railway, was evidence for the jury of negligence in the conduct of the car; and the question whether the gong was sounded was for the jury. Semble, per Moss, C.J.O., that the term "crossing" in the agreement, is intended to indicate any place on or along the streets occupied by the railway where there is a walk laid for the purpose of enabling foot pasengers to cross from one side of the street to another, and where the cars would stop to take up or let down passengers; and is not confined to the crossing of an intersecting street. The Court declined to interfere with the discretion of the Court below in withholding costs from the plaintiff, in setting aside a nonsuit and granting a new trial.

agement of their street car by their motorman, the jury found that the motorman was guilty of negligence in causing the accident and that the deceased was not guilty of contributory negligence and judgment was accordingly entered for plaintiffs. The Court of Appeal for Ontario set aside the judgment and ordered a new trial:-Feld, that the Court of Appeal erred in so doing, there having been evidence on both issues properly submitted to the jury. It is not valid ground for ordering a new trial that the Judges differ from the conclusion at which the jury have arrived or consider that the findings show that the defendants had not had a fair and unprejudiced trial. Toronto Ry. Co. v. King, [1908] A.C. 260, 7 Can. Ry. Cas. 408.

-By-law of municipality-Passenger fares -School children-Reduced rates.]-Under a municipal by-law governing a street rail way, it was provided that the ordinar cash fare should be 5 cents, children under five years of age, not occupying a seat and accompanied by its parent, to be carried free; and for every child under twelve years of age, except as aforesaid, the fare should not exceed 3 cents. Tickets were to be issued and sold at the following rates: Ordinary tickets, six for 25 cents, each ticket to be taken for an ordinary 5 cent cash fare; children's and school children's tickets, ten for 25 cents, each ticket to be taken for a 3 cent fare, as above provided; workingmen's special tickets, eight for 25 cents, to be taken for a 5 cent fare:-Held, reversing the order of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board, that the children entitled to school children's tickets were those under the age of twelve years, and not those under twenty-one, even though the latter were actually attending school.

Refusing the application, that the Board having already sufficient material before it, could authorize such deviation without the filing of further plans and profiles. 2. That the railway in question was one "to be operated as a street railway or tramway" within the meaning of s. 235 of the Railway Act and that the Board must either authorize the placing of the railway upon the street in Robertson v. Chatham, Wallaceburg and Lake Erie Ry. Co., 7 Can. Ry. Cas. 96.

-Accident-Negligence-Evidence-Leaning over to expectorate.]-The plaintiff, as a passenger, was, about midnight, standing on the back platform of one of the defendants' cars, smoking a cigar and leaning upon the railway gate or grating at the side, over which he leaned, from time to time, a distance from five to seven inches, and expectorated. Apparently, while doing so, he was struck by something and received the injuries complained of. plaintiff alleged, in his statement of claim, that he was struck by a post belonging to the defendants, and used by them for their trolley wire, but gave no evidence as to this. As a matter of fact, there were trolley poles along the line of the defendant railway on the side where the plaintiff was struck, but there was no evidence given by the plaintiff of their position, and the evidence for the defendants placed them about two feet from the overhang of the Car:—Held (reversing the judgment of the Divisional Court), that the plaintiff's action' should be dismissed, as there was no evidence of what caused the in-

-Accident - Negligence - Contributory negligence.]-The deceased, in attempting to cross over one of the streets of a city on which there were street car lines, passed behind one of the cars, and was just step ping on to the track on which cars coming in the opposite direction ran, when she fell and was struck by an approaching car and killed. In an action brought to recover damages therefor, the jury, while finding that there was negligence on the defendants' part in running at too high a rate of speed, and that there was contributory negligence on the plaintiff's part in not taking proper precautions before attempting to cross, also found that the defendants could have avoided the accident had the car been running at a reasonable rate of speed. Upon their answers judgment was entered for the plaintiff:-Held, that on these findings, the judgment could not be supported, and a new trial was directed.

—Removal of snowfalls—Electric sweeper—Construction of agreement,1—The agreement with the plaintiffs under which the defendant's railway is operated provides that the track allowances shall be kept free from snow at the expense of the defendants, so that the cars may be in use continuously; and that if the fall of snow is less than six inches at any one time, the defendants must remove the same from the tracks, and shall, if the city engineer so directs, evenly spread it on the adjoining portions of the roadway, but should the quantity of snow at any time exceed six inches in depth, the whole space occupied as track allowances shall be at once cleared of snow, and the snow removed and deposited at such points on or off the street as may be ordered by the city engineer. 55 Vict. c. 99, s. 25 (O.), passed to construe the above, enacts that the defendants shall not deposit snow on any street, square, highway or other public place in the city of Toronto without having first obtained the permission of the city engineer:-Held, that there was nothing in the above to prevent the defendants from sweeping the small snowfalls or the large to the sides of the road by means of an electric sweeper, and the purpose of the application being to prevent the use of the sweeper altogether, the appeal should be dismissed.

—Tramway—Protection of passengers.]—
The conductor of a street car who, after stopping the car to permit a passenger to alight, gives the signal to start again before satisfying himself that the passenger has safely departed is guilty of negligence and his employers are liable for any injury that results therefrom.

Dupuis v. Montreal Street Railway Co., Q.R. 16 K.B. 286.

-Rules-Contributory negligence-Motorman.]-Rule 212 of the rules of the London Street Ry. Co. provides that "when the power leaves the line the controller must be shut off, the overhead switch thrown and the car brought to a stop . car on which the lights had been weak and intermittent for some little time passed a point on the line at which there was a circuit breaker when the power ceased to operate. The motorman shut off the controller but, instead of applying the brakes, allowed the car to proceed by the momentum it had acquired and it collided with a stationary car on the line ahead of it. In an action by the motorman claiming damages for injuries received through such collision:-Held, that the accident was due to the motorman's disregard of the above rule and he could not recover.

Harris v. London Street Railway Company, 39 Can. S.C.R. 398.

—Injury to person crossing in front of car —Omission to stop at usual stopping place, when signalled.]—The plaintiff intending to take a street car going westerly, on arriving, shortly after midnight, at the southerly side of the street on which the particular car line was, saw a car coming westerly very rapidly, being then about 300 feet off. He saw two persons standing at the corner signal the car to stop, and believing that it would do so, it being the usual and customary practice to stop at the corner, when persons wished to get on or off the car, he, without again looking to see where the car was, attempted to cross in front of it, so as to get on it, when, instead of stopping, it ran past the corner, knocked down the plaintiff and injured him:-Held, that it could not be said that there was inexcusable negligence on the plaintiff's part in attempting to cross the street in front of the car, for he might reasonably assume that the car would stop at the corner in pursuance of the signal to do so, and that the case therefore could not have been withdrawn from the jury; and was properly submitted to them. Judgment of the Divisional Court (1907), 15 O.L.R. 438, reversed.

Tinsley v. Toronto Railway Co., 17 O.L.R. 74.

-Rules of company-Contributory negligence.]-A rule of the Toronto Ry. Co. provides that "when approaching crossings and crowded places where there is a possibility of accidents the speed must be reduced and the car kept carefully under control. Go very slowly over all curves, switches and intersections; never faster than three miles an hour . on the south side of Queen Street wished to cross to University Avenue which reaches but does not cross Queen. She saw a car coming along the latter street from the east and thought she had time to cross, but was struck and severely injured. On the trial of an action for damages the Judge in his charge said: "It is not a question, gentlemen of the jury, as to the motorman's duty under the rule, it is a question of what is reasonable for him to do." The jury found that defendants were not guilty of negligence; that plaintiff by the exercise of reasonable care could have avoided the injury; and that she failed to exercise such care by not taking proper precautions before crossing. The action was dismissed at the trial; a Divisional Court ordered a new trial on the ground that the Judge had misdirected the jury in withdrawing from their consideration the rules of the company; the Court of Appeal restored the judgment at the trial:-Held, affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeal, 15 Ont. L.R. 195, which set aside the order of the Divisional Court for a new trial, 13 Ont. L.R. 423, that the action was properly dismissed.

Brenner v. Toronto Railway Company, 40 Can. S.C.R. 540.

—Assumption of ownership by municipality—Award of arbitrators.]—Arbitrators were appointed under the Street Railway Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 208, to determine the value of the appellants' railway and all real and personal property in connection with the working thereof, the ownership of which had been assumed, under the provisions of s. 41 (1) of the Act, by a town corporation, part of the railway being laid within the town. The arbitrators in their award fixed on a certain sum as "the actual present value of the railway and of the real and personal property in connection with the working thereof," and stated that in arriving at that value they had "valued the railway as being a railway in use and capable of being used and operated as a street railway," and that they had "not allowed anything for the value of any privilege or franchise whatsoever," in either of the municipalities in which the railway was laid. They further stated that they had not been able to assent to the contention of the company that the proper mode of valuation should be to capitalize the amount of the permanent net earning power of the railway, and that they had not reached their valuation in any way on that basis, but had "considered only the actual present value '':-Held, that the arbitrators had erred in their method of valuation, and that in the case of a railway producing, as the appellants' railway did, a considerable permanent profit, the proper method of valuation was to take its net permanent revenue and capitalize that, the result representing its real value.

Re Berlin and Waterloo Street R.W. Co. and Town of Berlin, 19 O.L.R. 57.

-Pecuniary loss-Quantum of damage.]-The plaintiff, though not originally trained as a mining engineer, had by long experience become an expert examiner of gold mining locations; was 37 years of age, physically strong and healthy, and of excellent character. He was in receipt of a salary of $6,000 a year from employers interested in gold properties, who spoke very highly of his capabilities and prospects. He was permanently disabled by injury sustained on one of the defendants' ears through their negligence. A jury awarded him $30,000:-Held, on appeal. that the amount was not so excessive as to entitle the defendants to a new trial. Held, also, that by a reference in the charge to the jury to $25,000 as a sum which would not appear large to a man earning $6,000 a year, and by a mention of the sum claimed as $50,000 the jury were not, reading the charge as a whole, left under the impression that they were directed as to the amount they were to fix. Held, also, that counsel for the plaintiff, in opening to the jury, mentioning the sum claimed in the statement of claim, was not so objectionable as to be a ground for granting a new trial.

-Contract with municipal corporation-Construction.]-Upon appeal from a decision or order of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board upon the hearing of an application to it involving the same question as that dealt with by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in City of Toronto v. Toronto R.W. Co., [1907] A.C. 315:—Held, that, inasmuch as it could not be said that it manifestly appeared that the decision of the Judicial Committee was founded solely upon the effect of the provisions of the Act 55 Vict. c. 99 (O.), and not, to some extent at least, upon the language of the agreement validated and confirmed by that Act, the only course open was to affirm the order of the Railway and Municipal Board, notwithstanding s. 1 of the Act 8 Edw. VII. c. 112 (0.).

Re Toronto R.W. Co. and City of Toronto, 19 O.L.R. 396.

-Ontario Railway and Municipal Board-Jurisdiction-Agreement between municipalities-Enforcement-Possession of railway.]-Under an agreement made between two municipalities and confirmed by the statute 8 Edw. VII. c. 80 (O.), one of the municipalities was, on payment of the amount of an award, to become the owner of a part of an electric railway which theretofore had been owned by the other, although operated in both municipalities and the whole road was to be operated and managed by a board of commissioners constituted in the manner provided for in the statute and agreement. The amount awarded having been paid, and the appellants, a board of commissioners who had been operating the railway for the municipality which owned it, retaining control, management, and possession of the railway, and refusing to permit compliance with the provisions of the agreement and enactment in regard to its operation and management, the Ontaric Railway and Municipal Board was applied to, and such compliance was enforced by its order:--Held, that the Board did not thereby exceed the powers conferred upon it by the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board

Re Fort Arthur Electric Street Railway. 18 O.L.R. 376.

Entrance of passengers by rear of car—
Injury to passenger in attempting to enter by front door.]—In compliance with an order made by the Ontario and Municipal Board, the front vestibule doors of the defendants' cars were enclosed by a swing door, fastened by a spring lock on the inside, capable of being opened by the motorman to permit the exit of passengars. The plaintiff, not being aware of this order, attempted to get on a car so equipped at the front, and while so doing, the car started and she was thrown to the ground and injured. She asserted that the motorman saw her standing on the step, and notwithstanding started the car. There was no notice on the door notifying the public of the non-admission by that door. On a charge to the jury that they might find on one or all of the following grounds of negligence, namely, (1) the omission of a non-admittance notice, (2) starting the car while the plaintiff was on the step, and (3) in not opening the door and letting the plaintiff in, they found that the defendants' negligence consisted in the omission to have a non-admittance notice on the door, and did not make any finding as to the other alleged grounds of negligence. The Divisional Court, on appeal to it, while holding that the ground of negligence found by the jury was not tenable, in that the company were merely obeying the Board's order, which did not require any such notice, directed a new trial on the other alleged grounds of negligence. The Court of Appeal, while affirm. ing the judgment of the Divisional Court as to the ground on which the jury found not constituting negligence, reversed the judgment granting a new trial, holding that the finding of the jury was tantamount to a finding negativing negligence on the other alleged grounds.

McGraw v. Toronto R.W. Co., 18 O.L.R

-Negligence-Injury-Impairment of prospects of marriage. |- In an action of negligence, impairment of the prospects of matrimony, in the case of a young woman, by reason of physical injuries, may be taken into consideration by the jury in estimating the damages. In such a case of accident to a young woman of about 21 years of age. living with her father, but earning $6 a week as a stenographer, which accident resulted in the amputation of her left leg at the knee, paresis in a hand and arm, of which there might never be complete recovery, injury to her back, and a very serious shock to her nervous system:-Held, that a verdict of $5,500 damages was not so excessive as to necessitate a new trial.

—Power line—Protection of the public and owners of other lines.]—The Windsor, Essex & Lake Shore Rapid Railway Company incorporated by provincial statute to construct an electric railway through the town of Essex built its line on Talbot Street under the authority of a municipal by-law which provided that its poles and wires should not interfere with any then existing poles or wires of any other person or company. The railway works were declared to be for the general advantage of Canada.

The company's wires and poles when constructed interfered with existing telegraph, telephone and electric light poles and wires (the latter belonging to one Naylor, erected under an agreement with the town) and created danger by the escape of electrical current therefrom:-Held, that if the railway and power line were constructed before the passing of the Dominion Act no order was necessary to authorize their subsequent maintenance and use, but if not, then leave was required under secs, 235 and 237. Quære, if part only of the work was done before the Act and part afterward. Assuming that the work was lawfully done before the passing of the Dominion Act the Dominion Railway Board has power under s. 238 to require the company to execute such works or take such measures as appeared to the Board best adapted to remove or diminish the danger. An agreement having been made with the approval of the Board for the use by Naylor of the company's poles for carrying his wires, order accordingly, the company being ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings.

Bell Telephone Co. v. Windsor, Essex & Lake Shore Rapid Ry. Co., 8 Can. Ry. Cas.

-Crossing in front of approaching car-Negligence.] - The plaintiff was driving easterly in his carriage and pair of horses, at a moderate pace, along one of the streets of a city, and on arriving within thirty feet of a cross street, on which there was a street car line, he saw a car coming from the north, where there was a down grade, approaching at a rapid rate, the car being then about 300 feet distant. He consulted with his coachman, and, both being of the cpinion the speed of the car was not so great as to prevent their crossing in safety, he attempted to do so, when the carriage was struck by the car, and damaged, and he, himself, injured. No attempt was made by the motorman to slow down the car. On questions submitted to the jury, they found that the accident was caused through the defendants' negligence, such negligence consisting in the car not being under proper control, and that there was no contributory negligence on the plaintiff's part:—Held, that it could not be said in all the circumstances, the plaintiff acted so recklessly as to preclude the submission to the jury of the question whether or not he acted with reasonable care; and a finding by the jury in the plaintiff's favour was upheld.

-Injunction-Malice-Irreparable age.]-The plaintiff had obtained the right to operate a line of electric railway in certain streets within the limits of the municipality defendant, under a by-law of the town council and under a contract passed between plaintiff and defendant. The defendant, by the contract, reserved the right to take possession of the streets used by the plaintiff, for the purpose of changing the level and the performance of other necessary work. It was acting under these powers when the work was stopped by a temporary injunction order:—Held (affirming the judgment of the Superior Court, Archibald, J.): (1) Where one of two parties to a contract is doing a thing which, by the terms of the contract, he has specially reserved the right to do, the other party to the contract is not entitled to an injunction to restrain the doing of the thing, on the ground that the work is proceeding in a way which inflicts more damage than would be caused if another method, more expensive, had been adopted. So, in the present case, the municipality defendant, which had granted certain powers to the plaintiff, but had reserved the right to take possession of the streets when necessary for road operations, was not bound to adopt a more lengthy and expensive though less injurious method of performing the work. (2) In order to obtain an injunction in such circumstances, where there has been no invasion of a legal or equitable right, it must be established that irreparable injury will be caused if an injunction is not granted. (3) A temporary interruption of traffic and injurious method of removing the rails, causing a damage in the nature of a pecuniary loss, do not constitute an irreparable injury. (4) Although difficulties had existed between the parties, and defendant may have derived satisfaction from the thought that the exercise of its rights would cause the yet malice alone plaintiff damage, does not open any right of action, where, as here, there was a real intention to accomplish the work, and defendant was acting within its right.

Poisson v. Sherbrooke Street Railway Co., 5 E.L.R. 388 (Que.).

- Negligence - Precautions - Excuse -Notice of action.] - An electric tramway company should avoid everything which, not being absolutely necessary for the service, is a source of danger to the public, and if it does not do so it is guilty of imprudence for which it is responsible. The fact that a cause of danger could only be avoided by increased labour and expense is no excuse for allowing it to remain. The provision in the charter of the Montreal Street Railway Co., compelling any one desiring to bring an action against the company for damages to give 30 days' notice does not make such notice a condition precedent to the right of action; it is merely one of the prejudicial requirements the nonobservance of which should be invoked by a dilatory exception.

Mattice v. Montreal Street Railway Co., 20 Que. S.C. 222 (Sup. Ct.).

- Nuisance - Power house machinery -Vibrations, smoke and noise-Injury to adjoining property-Evidence-Assessment of damages-Reversal on questions of fact.] -Notwithstanding the privileges conferred by its Act of incorporation, upon an electric street railway company for the construction and operation of an electric tramway upon the public thoroughfares of a city the company is responsible in damages to the owners of property adjoining its power-house for any structural injuries caused by the vibrations produced by its machinery and the diminution of rentals and value thereby occasioned. Drysdale v. Dugas (26 S.C.R. 20) followed. In an action by the owner of adjoining property for damages thus caused the evidence was contradictory and the Courts below gave effect to the testimony of scientific witnesses in preference to that of persons ac quainted with the locality .- Held, Taschereau, J., dissenting, that notwithstanding the concurrent findings of the Courts below, as the witnesses were equally credible in evidence of those who spoke from personal knowledge of the facts ought to have been preferred to that of persons giving cpinions based merely upon scientific observations. In reversing the judgment appealed from, the Supreme Court, in the interest of both parties, assessed damages, once for all, at an amount deemed sufficient to indemnify the plaintiff for all injuries, past, present and future, resulting from the nuisance complained of, should she elect to accept the amount so estimated in full satisfaction thereof; otherwise, the record was ordered to be transmitted to the trial Court to have the amount of damages determined.

Gareau v. Montreal Street Railway Co., 31 Can. S.C.R. 463.

-Right to clear ice and snow into the streets - Electric sweeper.] - The City Council of Montreal being bound as the road authority to remove the ice and snow on the streets from curb to curb, including the snow thrown or falling thereon from the roofs of houses and removed thereto from the sidewalks:-Held, that the respondent street railway company, having contracted with the city to keep their track free from ice and snow, did not, having regard to the surrounding circumstances, and in the absence of words expressly or impliedly forbidding it, commit a nuisance by sweeping their snow into the street. Ogston v. Aberdeen District Tramways Co., [1897] A.C. 111, distinguished. Held, also, that the city having granted to the company all rights and privileges necessary for the proper and efficient use of electric power to operate cars in the streets in the manner successfully in use elsewhere, the latter could not be prevented from using the electric sweepers.

Montreal Street Railway v. Walker, Q.R. 13 Q.B. 324.

-Recovery of fine under by-law-Meaning of "outside municipalities" in covenant to extend a railway.]—(1) The Recorder's Court for the city of Montreal has jurisdiction to try an action for the recovery of a fine imposed for a breach of the conditions in a by-law to grant a street railway company certain privileges. The fact that a contract is entered into by the city and the company, to carry out the by-law, does not alter the nature of the duties prescribed by the latter, so as to convert them into contractual obligations. (2) When a municipal by-law has a proviso to be carried out upon an order to be given by the council, the adoption by the latter of a report of one of its committees empowered to deal with the matter, recommending performance and that instructions be given for the purpose, amounts to a substantive order, as required by the by-law. (3) A clause in a by-law imposing a penalty, that its enforcement shall devolve upon an officer named, makes it his duty to initiate and carry on proceedings, but does not mean that he must do so in his own name. (4) A covenant in a contract between a city and a street railway company, that the latter, in case of annexation by the former "of any of the outside municipalities, shall extend its system" thereto, is binding only as to the outside municipalities that were, at the time of the contract, contiguous to and adjoining the city. (5) A company cannot be compelled to execute a covenant into which it has no power to enter under its charter. (6) When a contract between a city and a street railway company, to build and operate a railway, designates the streets in which this is to be done, and a covenant is added that in case of the annexation of neighbouring territory, the company shall extend its railway to it, when ordered to do so, the order to be effective, must designate the streets in the new territory to which it is meant to apply. (7) A covenant to extend a railway into "outside municipalities" thereafter to be annexed, does not apply to "parts of outside municipalities" which are annexed. (8) Nor can the company be compelled to carry it out, until the city has complied with subsequent legislative enactments of a public nature, for the protection of interested par-

Hence, a trid by jury cannot be had in an action brought under the agreement by the city against the company, to recover the cost of removal of snow.

Montreal Terminal Railway Co. v. City of Montreal, 19 Que. K.B. 216.

- Negligence - Operation of tramway -Carriage of passengers - Crossing cars -Undue speed—Sounding gong—Findings of jury.]—Appeal from the judgment of the Court of King's Bench, appeal side (Q.R. 14 K.B. 355), affirming the judgment of the Superior Court, District of Montreal, entered upon the verdict of a jury, in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff was a passenger on a tramcar operated by the company, and, on approaching a crossing, signalled the conductor to stop the car and, when it slowed down, but before it reached the crossing, stepped off the car and attempted to cross to the other side of the street by passing in rear of the car on which he had been travelling. He was struck and injured by a car coming at a considerable speed from the opposite direction without, it was alleged, giving notice according to running regulations, by sounding the gong as it was meeting and passing the other car. The jury found generally for the plaintiff, without specifying any particular act of regligence, but that the plaintiff was also negligent and assessed the damages at $3,500, for which judgment was entered at the trial. By the judgment appealed from it was held that, upon the contradictory evidence, there was sufficient ground to support the verdict. On the appeal to the Supreme Court the company contended that there was misdirection, irregularity in the verdict and that the verdict was against the weight of evidence. After hearing counsel on behalf of the appellants and without calling upon the respondent's counsel for any argument, the Supreme Court of Canada dismissed the appeal with costs.

The appellant company having contracted with the respondent city to pay annually certain specified percentages on the total amount of their gross earnings arising from the whole operation of their railway, and it appearing from the rest of the contract that the city considered terricries of outside municipalities were not in cluded within its scope, and that it could only deal with streets within its jurisdiction, and that the company had to make separate arrangements with outside municipalities in respect of the operation of the railway within their limits:-Held, that by the true construction of the contract the city was only entitled to percentage on the gross earnings arising from the whole operation of the lines within its own limits.

- Negligence.] - In an action against a street railway company in which the plaintiff claimed that he had been obliged to shoot his horse injured by a car the action was properly dismissed at the trial on two grounds, one, that it was established by the witnesses called and the circumstances proved that at the moment when the collision took place plaintiff was driving his horse at a very fast gait in a place of danger, and the other, that he had failed to prove any negligence on the part of the company or its employees.

Montreuil v. Quebec Railway, Light and Power Co., Q.R. 30 S.C. 6 (Ct. Rev.).

-Usufruct-Expropriation for railway.]-The abandonment of the usufruct from land need not be made in any particular form. It may result from circumstances such as the conduct of the usufructuary, his failure to exercise his rights, etc., from which the Court may determine it. Expropriation for the purposes of an electric railway (Art. 5164 St. Seq. R.S.O.) does not affect the right of the owner expropriated to damages for injury to the land which is left by the substitution of a steam for an electric railway. Therefore, this right is independent of the enhanced value, if any, that is given to the land by the railway and the arbitrators' award fixing the indemnity, is not a bar to recovery of a claim, resulting from the expropriation. Such claim, moreover, is in no way based on the special provisions above referred to, but is founded on the common law liability stated in Art. 1053 C.C. Therefore it only applies to the damages actually suffered, to be revived in case of fresh damage afterwards and cannot be determined by a gross amount covering past and future damages.

Lapointe v. Chateauguay and Nor. Ry. Co., Q.R. 38 S.C. 139 (Sup. Ct.).

-Sale of securities-Right of way claims -Legal expenses incurred in settlement.]-The plaintiffs sold the defendants stock and honds of the P. & I. Ry. Co. with an agreement in writing which contained a clause stipulating as a condition that the vendees might declare the option of paying a further sum of $30,000 in addition to the price of sale, in consideration of which the vendors agreed to pay all the debts of the P. & I. Ry. Co. except certain specially mentioned claims, some of which were in respect of settlement for the right of way. The final clause of the agreement was as follows:-"'After two years from the date hereof the Montreal Street Railway Company will assume the obligation of settling any right of way claims which the vendors may not previously have been called upon to settle and will contribute $5,000 towards the settlement of any such claims which the vendors may be called upon to settle within the said two years. Any part of the said sum not so expended in said two years or required by the purchasers so to be, shall be paid over to the vendors at the end of the said period, it being understood that the purchasers will not stir up or suggest claims being made." The vendees exercised the option and paid the $30,000 to the vendors who reserved their right to any portion of the $5,000 to be contributed towards settlement of the right of way claims which might not be expended during the two years. An unsettled claim for right of way, in dispute at the time of the agreement was, subsequently, settled by the vendors within the two years. The question arose as to whether or not this claim, then known to exist, and legal expenses connected therewith was a debt which the vendors were obliged to discharge in consideration of the extra $30,000 so paid to them, and whether or not the $5,000 was to be contributed only in respect of right of way claims arising after the date of the agreement:—Held, affirming the judgment oppealed from, 15 Que. K.B. 77, that the agreement must be construed as being controlled by the provisions of the last clause thereof; that said last clause was not inconsistent with the previous clauses of the agreement, and that the vendees were bound to contribute to the payment of such claims and legal expenses in respect of the right of way to the extent of the $5,000 mentioned in the last clause.

-Sale of tramway by sheriff as "going concern''-Unpaid vendor-Lien for price of cars.]-A company operating an electric tramway, by permission of the municipal corporation, on rails laid on public streets vested in the municipality, to secure the principal and interest of an issue of its debenture-bonds hypothecated its real property, tramway, cars, etc., used in connection therewith, to trustees for the debentureholders, and transferred the movable property of the company and its present and future revenues to the trustees. By a provincial statute, 3 Edw. VII. c. 91, s. 1 (Que.), the deed was validated and ratified. On the sale, in execution, of the tramway, as a going concern:-Held, that whether, at the time of such sale, the cars in question were movable or immovable in character the effect of the deed and ratifying statute was to subordinate the rights of other creditors to those of the trustees, and, consequently, that unpaid vendors thereof were not entitled, under Art. 2,000 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada, to priority of payment by privilege upon the distribution of the moneys realized on the sale in execution. In the result, the judgment appealed Amyot v. Quebec Railway, Light & Power Co., Q.R. 36 S.C. 141.

—Specification of tortious acts and negligence—Evidence of acts not alleged—Changing nature of demand.]—(1) When a plaintiff in an action of damages specifically charges the tortious act or negligence that caused the injury, he is estopped from proving any other at the trial, and the admission of such evidence by the Judge is a sufficient ground to quash a verdict in his favour. (2) Leive to amend a declaration "so as to agree with the facts proved," will not be granted if the amendment changes the nature of the demand, or is such as to lead the defendant into error as to the facts intended to be proved. In an action of amanges caused by a collision with a tramax; in which it is alleged that "the car which struck the plaintiff was crossing another car moving on the same street, in the opposite direction," the plaintiff cannot, after trial, amend his declaration to make it set forth that the second car was stationary and not moving. Leave granted him to do so by the trial Judge is a sufficient ground to quash a verdict in his favour.

Lemieux v. Montreal Street Railway Co., 38 Que. S.C. 400.

-Use of streets-By-law-Penalty for breach of conditions-Repeal of by-law-Contractual obligation.]-The city enacted a by-law granting the company permission to use its streets for the construction and operation of a tramway, and, in conformity with the provisions and conditions of the by-law, the city and the company executed a deed of agreement respecting the same. A provision of the by-law was that "the cars shall follow each other at intervals of not more than five minutes, except from eight o'clock at night to midnight, during which space of time they shall follow each other at intervals of not more than ten minutes. The council may, by resolution, alter the time fixed for the circulation of the cars in the different sections." For reglect or contravention of any condition or obligation imposed by the by-law, a penalty of $40 was imposed to be paid by the company for each day on which such default occurred, recoverable before the Recorder's Court, "like other fines and penalties." An amendment to the by-law. by a subsequent by-law, provided that "the present disposition shall be applicable only in such portion of the city where such in creased circulation is required by the demands of the public: "—Held, that default to conform to the conditions and obligations so imposed on the company was an offence against the provisions of the by-law, and that, under the statute, 29 & 30 Vict. c. 57, s. 50 (Can.), the exclusive jurisdiction to hear and decide in the matter of such offence was in the Recorder's Court of the city of Quebec.

—Collision—Contributory negligence.]—A street railway compary is liable for the consequences of a collision caused by its curves being too sharp for the length of the cars. Passengers using the cars are not obliged to be on the lookout for accidents and the fact that a person injured was absorbed in reading a newspaper when the accident occurred was not evidence of contributory negligence.

-Street railway-Care of streets-Agreement with city—Removal of snow—Non-feasance.]—The Saint John Railway Company acquired the Saint John Street Railway in 1894, subject to the obligations of keeping in repair the streets in which the railway ran, as provided by s. 10 of 50 Vict. c. 33, and also the obligation of removing the snow and ice as provided by s. 10 of 55 Vict. c. 29. In 1895 the Act 58 Viet. c. 72, was passed, s. 6 of which authorized the company to agree with the city of Saint John to pay the said city an annual sum to be agreed upon as a consideration for taking care, etc., of the streets and the removal of the snow thereon, relieving the company from all liability for the same during the continuance of the agreement. Acting under the authority of this section, the company and the city entered into a contract by which the city undertook to do what, by the section, it is authorized to do:—Held (per Tuck, C.J., Hanington, Barker and McLeod, JJ.), in an action for damages caused by the defendants' negligence in not removing the snow in a street through which the railway ran, that s. 6, and the agreement made thereunder, imposes upon the city no greater liability in respect to the care of the streets than otherwise attaches to them as a municipal corporation, and neglect to remove the snow was a mere non-feasance for which they were not liable at the suit of a private individual, and a nonsuit should be entered. Per Gregory, J .: - That there was a statutory obligation on the railway company to level the snow and keep safe in that respect for public travel the streets where the railway runs. That while the Act 58 Vict. c. 72, does not impose a duty on the city, it authorizes it in this instance to become a contractor for the performance of the work, and to stand in the place of the company in respect to all its liabilities in regard to the removal of snow, and the city is liable to a private individual for damages caused by its failure to do so.

McCrea v. City of Saint John, 36 N.B.R.

-Collision at crossing-Rate of speed-Contributory negligence - Proximate cause.]-A waggon in which plaintiff was proceeding from Sydney to Glace Bay was struck by an electric tram car owned and operated by the defendant company, while attempting to cross the defendant's track, at a place known as Grand Lake Crossing, The evidence and plaintiff was injured. showed that near the crossing there was a down grade for a distance of about 3,000 feet, and then an up grade for 1,000 feet, terminating at a siding near which the crossing at which the accident occurred was situated. On the down grade it was usual to run cars at a speed of from 20 to 25 miles an hour, but when half way down the power was shut off and the speed on reaching the siding was 10 miles an hour. When plaintiff's team was first seen it was at a distance of from 35 to 40 feet from the crossing, and the car was distant from 50 to 75 feet. The motorman in charge of the car acted promptly in applying the brakes and reversing the current. but was unable to avert the collision. The whistle had been blown when 300 yards distant from the crossing, and the car was provided with suitable appliances for stopping it within a reasonable time. The rate of speed at which the car was proceeding was reasonable considering the time and place. Plaintiff heard a whistle blown which he supposed to be that of a Sydney and Louisburg train but did not see the car until his horse's head was distant about 20 feet from the crossing. There was also evidence to show that he failed to exercise proper care in approaching the crossing as the reins were lying loose, and one witness called for plaintiff testified that, at the time, the horse was being whipped and was galloping. Held, affirming the judg ment of the trial judge and dismissing the action, that the proximate cause of the accident was negligence on the part of the plaintiff. Held, that a point not raised by the statement of claim, or at the trial where evidence might have been given to displace the contention, should not be raised on appeal.

Livingstone v. Sidney & Glace Bay Ry.

Co., 37 N.S.R. 336.

-Liability for negligence in operating cars-Excessive speed-Nuisance caused by depositing snow on street.]-The defendant company removed from their tracks snow which accumulated there during a heavy snow storm, and deposited it upon the highway in such a way as to make it impassable to waggons, which were forced, in consequence, to make use of the company's track, of which the company had notice. Plaintiff's horse and waggon, while proceeding along the track, was overtaken by one of defendant's cars, and, before it could escape, was run into and the horse, waggon and harness, and the contents of the waggon injured. The evidence showed that the car, at the time, was being driven at an excessive rate of speed, and that the driver of the waggon made repeated efforts to attract the attention of the motorman, but failed to do so although there was sufficient light and there was an unobstructed view of the place where the waggon was at the time of the accident for a distance of four hundred yards. Held, in an action claiming damages for negligence, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Held, that the blocking of the highway by defendant constituted in fact as well as in law a nuisance, and, the common law having been infringed, there was no burden cast upon plaintiff to show a requirement by the local-authorities to level the snow to a certain depth over a certair area, and that such requirement had not been complied with. Held, also, that if contributory negligence was relied on, the case was one in which defendants must not only prove such negligence, but, also, that it was of such a character that they could not by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence nave averted the mischief which happened. Held, also, that the restrictions in the company's charter in relation to the levelling of snow placed upon the highway, amounted to a condition.

-Dangerous condition of car steps during storm-Duty of passenger to exercise more than ordinary caution.]-The steps of an electric car, owned and operated by the de fendant company, were in a slippery condition in consequence of exposure, while in use, to snow followed by rain, sleet and cold. The evidence showed that the car had been thoroughly cleaned in the morning, before being sent out, and that it would not have been practicable to operate it in such weather as that which prevailed at the time and to send it back constantly to the barn to have the snow and ice removed. Held, that passengers boarding and leaving the car at such a time were bound to exercise more than erdinary caution, and that it would not be reasonable to hold the company accountable for injuries sustained by plaintiff, a passenger on one of their cars who, in getting off the car, slipped and fell.

McCormack v. Sydney & Glace Bay Railway Co., 37 N.S.R. 254.

-- Negligence in operating-Injury to foot passenger - Excessive speed - Burden of showing means of escape.]-Plaintiff was proceeding along the track of the defendant company, on a public street in the City of Sydney, when he was overtaken, struck, and severely injured by an electric car, which was being driven at an excessive and dangerous rate of speed. At the time of the accident, plaintiff was prevented from escaping by a car of another line, which was obstructing the crossing in front of him, and by banks of snow, which had been thrown up by defendant's plow, at the side of the track upon which he was standing. Held, setting aside the judgment for defendant, and ordering a new trial, that the burden of showing that plaintiff had means of escape, was upon the defend-ant company. Also, that plaintiff having the right to be where he was, and the whole event, from the moment he discovered his danger to the time he was struck, having happened in the course of a few seconds, he was not to be held to the obligation of selecting the best possible means of escape. Ricketts v. Sydney and Glace Bay Ry. 37 N.S.R. 270.

-Destination of car-Sign-boards indicating-Unusual circumstances-Duty of passenger to inquire.] -- The defendant company had placed a number of special or extra cars on a portion of their line for the purpose of carrying a large number of persons who had assembled for the purpose of viewing a regatta. It was arranged that the cars in question should run from a point in the suburbs, near which the regatta was held, to a point in the centre of the city, and discharge their passengers there and return for others, those passengers who desired it being given transfers which entitled them to be carried on other cars to their destinations in other parts of the city. The point at which the special cars were stationed was passed at stated intervals by other cars carrying on a regular service to and from Quinpool Road. Plaintiff who had been attending the regatta, entered a car known as a "trailer," attached to another car which bore a sign at each end with the words "Quinpool Road," expecting to be carried to a point on the line near his residence, but was informed on reaching the central point that the car in which he was went no further, and that he would have to transfer. There was evidence that an agent of the company stationed at the point of departure announced, as passengers entered, that the car in question was for the city, but this was not heard by plaintiff:-Held, affirming the judgment for defendant, that, outside of the cars performing the regular service, there was no obligation on the part of the company to carry plaintiff through to his destination in any one particular car; that the only contract on the part of the company was to carry passengers in accordance with the usual modes and methods of running its trams; and that, under the circumstances existing at the time, it was plaintiff's duty to have protected himself by making inquiry as to the destination of the car he entered.

Nuisance — Removal of snow and ice from track to adjacent portions of street.]

—Defendant company, operating a tramway line in H., was empowered by its act of incorporation and the rules made thereunder to remove snow and ice from its tracks, to enable it to operate its cars, "provided" that, in case of such removal, it should be the duty of the company to level the snow and ice so removed to a uniform depth to be determined by the city engineer, and to such distance on either side of the track as the engineer should direct, or to remove from the street all snow and ice disturbed, ploughed or thrown out, etc within 48 hours of the fall or disturbance, etc., if the city engineer should so direct, In exercise of the power conferred upon it the defendant company swept snow from its tracks and piled it up on either side of the road in such a way as to form a ridge or bank which caused a sleigh driven by plaintiff to slew, throwing him out and severely injuring him:-Held, that the removal by the company, under the powers conferred upon it, of snow and ice, and placing it upon other portions of the street, was not to be treated as a nuisance for which the company would be responsible in damages. Semble, that, irrespective of any directions given by the engineer, it was the duty of the company, in removing snow and ice from its track and throwing it upon adjacent parts of the street, to do so in a reasonably careful manner, and with a just regard to the rights and interests of the public, and that if the question had been left to the jury in this way a verdict for the plaintiff based upon sufficient evidence could not have been disturbed. Also, that the company would be responsible for the consequences of failure on their part to carry out the directions and determination of the city engineer, but, in the absence of such directions and determination, they were only bound to act in a reasonably careful manner, and the adequacy of their performance of the duty cast upon them was to be determined by the circumstances of the case.

(See next case.)

-Negligence-Finding of jury-Exercise of statutory privilege.]-Where on the trial of an action based on negligence questions are submitted to the jury they should be asked specifically to find what was the negligence of the defendants which caused the injury, general findings of negligence will not support a verdict unless the same is shown to be the direct cause of the injury. Where a street car company has by its charter privileges in regard to the removal of snow from its tracks and the city engineer is given power to determine the condition in which the highway shall be left after a snow storm a duty is cast upon the company to exercise its privilege in the first instance in a reasonable and proper way and without negligence.

Mader v. Halifax Electric Tramway Co.,

37 Can. S.C.R. 94.

-Injury to infant-Failure of motorman to take proper precautions.]-In an action brought in the name of an infant, claiming damages for injuries occasioned through the alleged negligence of the defendant company in the operation of their electric tramway, the evidence showed that the infant, a child aged one year and eleven months, was seen approaching the track upon which one of defendant's cars was moving slowly The whistle was sounded and the child stopped for a moment and then moved quickly towards the car and was struck, and received the injuries for which the action was brought. Upon seeing the child stop when the whistle was blown, the motorman immediately applied speed without waiting to see whether the child was going to retreat or making any effort to remove it from its dangerous position:-Held, that this was a clear case of reckless conduct, for which defendant was responsible. Also, that the failure to take proper precautions to avert injury to the child was not to be excused by the alleged necessity of complying with the time table and preventing delay to passengers. Also, that the failure of defendant company to provide its car with a fender was clear evidence of negligence.

-Excessive speed-Duty of driver to have his car under control.j—Where plaintiff alighted from one of the defendant's cars at night time, at a point where the street was torn up for purposes of repair, and the bell on a car immediately behind that from which he alighted, was clanging; and going between the two cars, and looking up and down a parallel track before crossing, but seeing no car approaching, was nevertheless struck and injured by an approaching car, running at an excessive speed on such parallel track:-Held, that he was entitled to recover, as it was the duty of the driver to have his car under control.

Morton v. British Columbia Electric Railway Co., 15 B.C.R. 187.

-Excessive or punitive damages-Permanent injury.]-Plaintiff was injured in a collision between two cars of the defendant company, the collision having occurred admittedly through the company's negligence. No evidence was offered by the company at the trial. Plaintiff's hip was dislocated and permanently injured, rendering him unable to follow certain branches of his trade, that of tinsmith. There was some medical evidence that an operation might improve his condition so as to reduce the disability. He was, at the time of the accident, 24 years of age, and earned $4 per day when working. His medical and other expenses in connection with the accident amounted, roughly, to $500. Added to this should be loss of work on account of the accident. In an action for damages, the jury awarded him $11,500:—Held, on appeal, that the damages were excessive, and there should be a new trial

Farquharson v. British Columbia Electric Railway Co., 15 B.C.F., 280.

-Removal of trees on highway-Rights of owner of adjoining land-Injunction.]-The right of property in shade trees on highways and to fence them in conferred upon the owners of the land adjacent to the highways by s. 688 of The Municipal Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 116, is not taken away by an Act incorcorating a railway company with power to construct a line of railway along the public highway with the consent of the municipality and according to plans to be approved by the council of the municipality, even although such consent has been given and such plans approved. Douglas v. Fox (1880), 31 U.C. C.P. 140, and Re Cuno (1888), 45 Ch. D. 12, followed. The defendants' Act of incorporation provided that the several clauses of the Manitoba Railway Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 145, should be incorporated with and deemed part of it. And the Railway Act provides that the several clauses of The Manitoba Expropriation Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 61, with respect to the expropriation of land and the compensation to be paid therefor shall be deemed to be incorporated mutatis mutandis with the Railway Act:-Held, that the defendants had no right to cut down the trees on the highway or to lower the grade in front of the plaintiffs' land, although such action was necessary in carrying out the approved plans without taking the proper steps, under the Railway Act and the Expropriation Act, either to ascertain and pay the damage suffered by the plaintiffs to their land injuriously affected by the intended construction, or to procure an order from a Judge, under s. 25 of the Railway Act, giving them the right to take possession upon giving security for payment of the compensation to be awarded; and that the interim injunction secured by the plaintiffs should be continued until the trial unless the defendants should furnish security that they would proceed forthwith to settle the amount of such compensation.

Bannatyne v. The Suburban Rapid Transit Co., 15 Man. R. 7 (Perdue, J.).

—Injury to and consequent death of servant travelling on pass—Inference as to cause of collision.]—A man employed by the defendants as a painter was travelling to the place where he worked, upon a car of the defendants, into which a freight car of the defendants which had got loose from the motor which drew it, ran, and in consequence the man was killed. The man was travelling on a pass issued by the defendants to him, and upon the back of the pass was printed a condition re-lieving the defendants from liability in case of accident. The deceased had not signed his name on the back of the pass. as required by the condition. In an action, under the Fatal Accidents' Act, to recover damages for the death of the man, the jury found that he was travelling on the pass, but was not aware of the condition, and assessed damages to the plaintiff, but were not asked to make and did not make any other findings:-Held, that the relation of master and servant existed between the deceased and the defendants at the time he was killed. Quære, whether the rule res ipsa loquitur applied. But held, that the proper inference from the evidence was that the coupling between the freight car and the motor broke; and, no proof being adduced that the coupling was a proper one and in good repair, or that the defendants had in force a proper method of inspection and competent men to inspect, the defendants were liable at common law. Held, also, that there was evidence to sustain the finding of the jury as to the pass. Judgment for the plaintiff for the damages assessed.

-Injury to passenger in alighting from car—Direction of conductor—Dangerous place-Failure to give warning.]-A car of the defendants, upon which the plaintiff was a passenger, upon a dark and foggy night, stopped upon a bridge and remained there some time. The plaintiff stepped off, fell through the bridge, and was injured. The plaintiff's evidence, in an action for damages for her injuries, was that the conductor told her to transfer to a car ahead, but gave her no warning of the character of the place where she was about to alight, and the fog and darkness prevented her seeing for herself. There was no evidence to show the extent or limits of the conductor's authority. The trial Judge did not give the jury any direction upon the question of the conductor's authority. The jury gave a general verdict for the plaintiff. objection was taken to the Judge's charge: -Held, that there was evidence of negligence proper to be submitted to the jury, and therefore a nonsuit was properly refused; and the Court should not order a new trial on the ground of non-direction. Per Macdonald, C.J.A.:—There was no miscarriage by reason of the non-direction (if any), nor was it shown that the jury proceeded upon a wrong principle. the plaintiff to her destination. There was no necessity for obtaining a special finding that the conductor acted within the scope of his authority. The onus was on the defendants to show that he acted outside the scope of his authority. Beard v. London General Omnibus Co., [1900] 2 Q.B. 530, followed. Per Irving, J.A.:—The action arose from the con-tractual relations of the plaintiff and defendants. The jury would require no oral evidence to warrant them in concluding that a conductor was a person in authority; and evidence was not necessary to show his authority to tell the plaintiff to transfer to the car ahead. Per Martin, J.A.:—There was no definite evidence of the existence of any orders to the conductor, and the case could not have been withdrawn from the jury. As to non-direction, no objection was taken at the trial, and the effect of what was done was that the issues submitted were accepted on both sides as the only issues on which the jury was asked to pass, and, non-direction complained of not having produced a verdict against the evidence, there should not be a new trial.

-General verdict-Answers to questions -Doubt as to meaning of jury-New trial.]-In an action for damages for injury to a child who was run over by a car of the defendants, in which negligence was alleged, several questions were submitted to the jury by the trial Judge, but he also told them that they might, if they chose, find a general verdict. When the jury returned into Court, the foreman announced, "We award the plaintiff $300 damages." On being asked by the trial Judge whether they had answered the questions, they said they had answered 3, as follows: "1. Q. Was the company guilty of negligence? A. Yes. 2. Q. If so, in what did such negligence consist? A. Over-speed. 3. Q. Was the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence? A. Yes.' On this the trial Judge dismissed the action:—Held, that there should be a new trial; it was probable that the verdict was intended to be a general one, but the matter was not free from doubt; and the jury should have been asked to make the matter plain before being discharged. Among the questions that were not answered by the jury, was the following: "Could the motorman, after it became apparent to him that the boy was going to eross the track, by the exercise of reasonable care and skill have prevented the accident, if he had been running at a reasonable rate of speed." In leaving this question, the trial Judge said: "I want you to consider that last element, because it is not, 'Could he have pre-vented the accident if running at an unreasonable rate of speed?"" Held, that this question was not properly framed, and the jury were not properly directed. The unreasonable rate of speed was the original negligence, and the question which the jury had to consider, after finding such negligence, was whether, notwithstanding that unreasonable rate of speed, the motorman, after seeing the child committing or about to commit a negligent act, could, by the exercise of reasonable care, have avoided the consequences of it. Held, that the defendants should pay the costs of the plaintiff's appeal from the judgment dismissing the action (Martin, J.A., dissenting as to this); and that the costs below should abide the result of the new trial.

Rayfield v. British Columbia Electric R. W. Co., 14 W.L.R. 414 (B.C.).

-Injury to passenger after alighting from car-Contributory negligence.]-The plaintiff was a passenger on a crowded car of the defendants going westward along Portage Avenue, in the City of Winnipeg. Being near the front end of the car when it stopped at the street where he wished to alight, he made his way past a number of people in the passage and in the front vestibule to the steps at that end. on which another man was standing, and stepped off the car in the direction of the parallel track of the railway. Almost instantaneously upon alighting, he was struck by another car of the defendants proceeding eastwards on the other track, knocked down and very seriously injured. The distances between the sides of two cars, when passing one another on the two tracks, was 44 inches, and the height of the lowest step of the car from the ground was 151/2 inches There was no rule of the Company prohibiting passen-gers from alighting at the front entrance of cars, but a rule of the Company required motormen, when approaching another car on that Avenue, to slacken speed and ring the gong continuously un-til the car had been passed. It was the custom of the company to permit passengers to alight at the front entrance. The trial Judge found as facts that the motorman on the eastbound car did not sensibly slacken his speed or ring his gong as he approached the other car. plaintiff was not aware of the approaching car until it struck him:-Held, (1) That the motorman on the car by which the plaintiff was struck was guilty of negligence, rendering the defendants liable in damages for the injury done to plaintiff. (2) The plaintiff had not been guilty of such contributory negligence as to prevent his recovery of damages, as he had a right to expect that, as far as the acts of the defendants' servants were concerned, he might alight in safety and would have a reasonable time after alighting to look about so as to guard himself against injury from other cars of the defendants, but was not given that time. Oldright v. G. T. Ry. Co. (1895), 22 A.R. 286, and Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Lowell (1894), 151 U.S.R. 209, followed. (3) There is no binding authority for the proposition that, from the moment a passenger's foot touches the ground, a street railway's liability for injuries to him by their other car peases.

Bell v. Winnipeg Electric Street Railway Co., 15 Man. R. 338, affirmed, 37 Can. S.C.R. 515.

-Street car conductor-Transfer of passenger at dangerous place. [-Owing to fog disarranging the schedule time of defendant company's cars, they were not running on time. That which the plaintiff was riding in stopped on a bridge. There was another car immediately ahead which, in due course, would take plaintiff to her destination before that in which plaintiff was. The conductor asked or told her and another passenger to transfer to that car, and in doing so, she was injured by falling on the bridge in the darkness:-Held, that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be assumed that the conductor had authority to use his judgment in the circumstances to forward the passengers to their destination. The question of the scope of the conductor's authority having been twice brought to the notice of the Judge during the trial, yet he did not direct the jury on that point, and the case having been allowed to go to them without direction, and no objection taken to the charge on that account:-Held, that this brought the case within Scott v. Fernie (1904), 11 B. C. R. 91, and therefore the effect of what was done was that the issues submitted were accepted on both sides as the only issues on which the jury was asked to pass. Schnell v. British Columbia Electric Railway Co., 15 B.C.R. 378.

—Verdict—Doubt as to intention of jury—Misdirection — Contributory negligence — Ultimate negligence.—In submitting the case to the jury in an action for damages arising out of injury to a child by one of the defendant company's cars, five questions were submitted by the Judge, who also instructed the jury that they might if they chose, bring in a general verdict. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in $300 damages. On the Judge asking whether they had answered the questions, the foreman replied that they had answered three: "(1) Was the company guilty of negligence? Yes. (2) If so, in what did such negligence consist? Overspeed. (3) Was the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence? Yes." The trial Judge, on this, dismissed the action:—Held, that while it was probable that the jury intended to return a general verdict, yet the matter was not free from doubt, and should have been cleared up before the jury was discharged. There should, therefore, be a new trial. One of the questions not answered was "Could the motorman, after it became apparent to him that the boy was going to cross the track, by the exercise of reasonable care and skill, have prevented the accident if he had been running at a reasonable rate of speed?" The Judge said, in submitting this question: "I want you to consider that last element, because it is not: 'Could he have prevented the accident if running at an unreasonable rate of speed?" Held. that this question was improperly framed, and the jury were not properly directed; that the original rate of speed was the original negligence, and after finding such negligence the jury had to consider whether. notwithstanding the unreasonable rate of speed, the motorman, after seeing the boy commit or about to commit a negligent act could, by the exercise of reasonable care. have avoided the consequences of it. New trial ordered, costs of appeal to appellant, and costs of trial below to abide the event of the new trial.

Rayfield v. British Columbia Electric Railway Co., 15 B.C.R. 361.

—Riding on platform — Platform part of car.]—Plaintiff's husband was a passenger on one of the defendant company's cars, riding on the front platform, where it was customary for passengers to ride. The doors were open and there was no protecting bar across the opening, or other measures of safety taken On the car approaching a switch, at a speed of three or four miles an hour, he was jolted off the car and, falling under the wheels, was killed. A jury gave a verdict of $5,500, but the trial Judge entered judgment for the defendant company on the ground that there was no evidence of negligence on their part:—Held, on appeal, that there was evidence of negligence and that the verdict should stand.

far as it can be done by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, and the defendants should have put up guards such as were shown to be in use very generally in the United States and England to prevent such accidents. Hinman v. Winnipeg Electric Street Kailway Co., 16 Man. R. 16.

-Agreement between municipal corporation and electric railway company-Conditions in agreement repugnant to statute.]-By an agreement dated the 20th of November, 1888, made between certain persons (pre-decessors of defendant company) and the plaintiff corporation, authority was given to establish a system of street railways in the city of Victoria; but clause 25 of said agreement provided that the cars to be used should be exclusively for the carriage of passengers. In 1894 the Legislature passed an Act, c. 63, consequent upon a petition reciting an agreement, the incorporation of the persons named therein as a company, and the passage of an Act, c. 52 of 1890, giving the company power to build and operate tramways through the districts adjoining Victoria, and to take, transport and carry passengers and freight thereon. The petition further prayed for an Act consolidating and amending the Acts and franchises of the company then in force, and declaring, defining and confirming the rights, powers and privileges of the company. S. 16 of said c. 63, provides that "in addition to the powers conferred by the agreement the said Company are hereby authorized and empowered . . to take, transport and empowered . . . to take, transport and carry passengers, freight, express and mail matter upon and over the said lines of rail-. . subject to the approval and supervision of the city engineer, or other officer appointed for that purpose by the said corporation as to location of all poles, tracks and other works of the said company":-Held, that, the passage in the agreement being repugnant to the provision in the statute, the latter should prevail. City of Victoria v. British Columbia Electrie Railway Co., 15 B.C.R. 43, 13 W.L.R.

—Negligence—Highway—Use of by street car company—Collision—Motor car struck by tramear—Negligence of driver of tram-car.]—Plaintiff's motor car, proceeding along the highway, got partly between the rails of the defendant company, but owing to the condition of the road, was unable to get out of the way of an approaching tram-car. On seeing his difficulty, the driver signalled to the motorman of the tramear to stop, which he endeavoured to do, but was unable to avoid a collision, in which the motor car was damaged. The trial Judge gave judgment for plaintiff on the ground of negligence on the part of the defendant company in not having a car of the size which caused the collision equipped with air brakes, which would, he held, have enabled the motorman to have stopped in time to prevent the collision:—Held, on appeal, on the evidence, that there was no negligence on the part of the motorman. Per Martin, J.A., that there was no evidence to support the finding of negligence in the company's not having the car equipped with an air brake.

Winter v. British Columbia Electric Railway, 15 B.C.R. 81, 13 W.L.R. 352.

—Limitations of actions—Contract for supply of electric light—Neligence.]—The appellant company, having acquired the property, rights, contracts, privileges and franchises of the Consolidated Railway and Light Company, under the provisions of "The Consolidated Railway Company's Act, 1896" (59 Vict. c. 55 [B.C.]), is entitled to the benefit of the limitation of actions provided by s. 60 of that statute. The limitation so provided applies to the case of a minor injured, while residing in his mother's house, by contact with an electric wire in use there under a contract between the company and his mother. Judgment appealed from, 14 B.C. Rep. 224, 1909, C.A. Dig. 116, reversed.

—Liability for injury to person risking his life to save that of another.]—A statement of claim alleging, in effect, that a child about two years of age had fallen on the track of the defendants' street railway on a public street in the city; that one of the defendants' cars was approaching the child at a high rate of speed, and that, owing to the negligence of the motorman in charge of the car in not stopping it, the child's life was endangered without negligence on her part; that the plaintiff, observing this, necessarily rushed in front of the car in an attempt to save the child, and that, owing to the motorman's negligence in not stopping the car or reducing its speed, he was struck and injured by the car, discloses a good cause of action.

—Duty of company to put on wheel guards.]—(1) It is negligence in a company operating electric cars on the streets of a city not to have such guards for the front wheels as will prevent persons falling on the track from being run over, and the company will be liable in damages to any person injured in consequence of such negligence, unless there is sufficient contributory negligence on the part of such persons to constitute a defence. (2) No such contributory negligence could be attributed to a child under six years old. (3) A verdict for $8.000 damages in such a case, where one of the child's legs was cut off, is not so excessive as to warrant the Court in ordering a new trial.

Wald v. Winnipeg Electric Railway, 18 Man. R. 134.

—Statutory limitation of actions.]—The statutory exemption as to limitation of actions provided by s. 60 of the Consolidated Railway Company's Act, 1896, does not enure to the benefit of the British Columbia Electric Railway Company's operations as carried on in the city of Victoria. The name of E. & Co. had been forged to said note, which the bank had discounted. Two days after the notice was mailed at Toronto the proceeds of the note had been drawn out of the bank by the payees: -Held, affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeal, 7 O.L.R. 90 (Sedgewick and Nesbitt, JJ. dissenting), that on receipt of said notice E. & Co. were under a legal duty to inform the bank promptly that they had not made the note, and not doing so, they were afterwards estopped from denying their signature thereto.

action and that the same be dismissed with costs. Held, that the judgment entered was a complete defence to the action and that the judge of the County Court was in error in treating the plea as a preliminary objection merely, and in going on and hearing evidence on the merits. Semble, that while the judgment in the first action, until set aside, operated as an estoppel, the proper course for plaintiff to have adopted, as pointed out in Vint v. Hudspeth, 29 Ch. D. 322, was to have applied to the judge who heard the cause to set aside the judgment and for a re-hearing. Held, that the writ of summons in the previous action, being specially indorsed, was proper evidence for the Court that the previous judgment embraced the same claim as that now sued for.

-Estoppel by representation-Lien on land-Consideration.]-Action to recover balance due for a threshing outfit sold and delivered by the plaintiff company to de-fendants, Charles Hornby and his wife, Ellen Hornby, under a written agreement signed by defendants which provided that promissory notes were to be given on approved security for the amounts payable at the dates mentioned. When the machinery had been delivered at the defendants' farm, the plaintiffs' agent called there to take settlement for it. Defendants then signed the notes asked for and the agent demanded a lien on the farm as security for the notes and, relying on the representations of both defendants then made that the wife owned the land, accepted a lien on the land for the amount, signed by Mrs. Hornby in the presence of her husband, and did not insist, as be might have done, that the husband should also sign it. It appeared that the title to the land was then actually in the husband, and had remained so ever since. Renewal notes had been given by the defendants and the original periods of credit considerably extended, and during this time the husband wrote several letters in which the wife was spoken of as the actual owner. The chief contention at the trial was as to whether the plaintiffs were entitled to a lien on the land for the debt as against the defendant Charles Hornby:-Held, 1. There was ample consideration for the giving of the lien, as the plaintiff might have removed the machinery and refused to carry out the transaction if it had been refused. 2. Tha defendant Charles Hornby was estopped by the representations he had made, and subsequently repeated, from denying that the land in question was his wife's property and from claiming it as his own as against the plaintiffs. 3. Defendant Hornby was also thereby estopped from claiming it to be exempt as land occupied by him from proceedings under a registered judgment. Judgment declaring that the lien claimed forms a valid charge on the land referred to for the amount of the plaintiff's claim and costs of suit.

Subsequently he demanded a reconveyance from A. and his heirs and a controversy which arose was settled by the heirs of A. conveying to N. one portion of the land and N. executing to the heirs of A. what was intended as a release and quit claim of all his interest in the other portion of the land, including that in question:-Held, that although the release was badly drawn and failed to express in clear and distinct terms the nature of the transaction between the parties, as this was the clear inference to be drawn from the documentary evidence and the surrounding circumstances, the Court would give effect

It was sought to elucidate what was said by the defendant by calling witnesses who heard his words as spoken into the telephone receiver, though the witnesses could not affirm to whom he spoke or that he was in fact speaking to any person:-Held, that the evidence of the proposed witnesses was relevant, and therefore admissible, though the value of it might be little or nothing. (2) This section shall apply to wills and the probate and copies of wills proved elsewhere than in this province, provided that the original wills have been deposited and the probate and copies granted in Courts having jurisdiction over the proof of wills and administration of intestate estates, or the custody of wills":-Held, that a copy of a will executed before two notaries in the Province of Quebec under the provisions of article 834 C.C. certified by one of said notaries to be a true copy of the original in his possession, is admissible in evidence on the trial of an action of ejectment in Nova Scotia, as provided in s. 27.

-Findings of Judge on conflicting evidence-Denial of signature-Comparison of handwritings.]-The plaintiff sued the defendant for $2,000 said to have been lent, and produced two promissory notes for $1,000 each, said to have been written by the plaintiff and signed by the defendant. The notes were signed "Alec. Keiser," but the defendant's name was "John Keiser." The defendant denied the signatures, and swore that he never saw the plaintiff till the plaintiff endeavored to collect the money. The trial Judge-there was no jury-believed the plaintiff's evidence, which was corroborated to some slight extent, and was of opinion, from a comparison made by himself of the signatures to the notes with a signature made by the defendant in the witness-box, that the former were written by the defendant. He therefore gave judgment for the plaintiff:-Held, that the Court could not, in these circum-stances, reverse the judgment of the trial Judge, nor grant a new trial.

—Cross-examination at trial—Disallowance of irrelevant questions.]—The Judge presiding at the trial of a cause has a necessary discretion for the protection of witnesses under cross-examination and, where it does not appear that he has exercised that discretion improperly, his order ought not to be interfered with on an appeal. Hence, an appellate Court is not justified in ordering a new trial on the ground that counsel has been unduly restricted in cross-examination by a question being disallowed which did not, at the time it was put to the witness, have relevancy to the issues.

-Loss of document—Secondary evidence.]—
The party who brings an action founded upon a document sous semg prive is bound to produce it upon the trial. He will not be allowed to give secondary evidence of it by merely alleging that it has been lost. To obtain the benefit of par. 6 of Art. 1233

C.C. he must prove, not only that the document had existed, but the unforeseen event which caused its loss. When the defendant without denying the existence of the contract set up by the plaintiff, claims that the proceedings taken in the cause (saisie-revendication) are not justified by it proof of it becomes necessary to enable the Court to decide the issue. The plaintiff cannot rely on Art. 111 C.P.Q. as the express denial of the right to such remedy is a denial of the contract set up by him.

Motion for judgment - Admissions -Withdrawal - Leave.] - After all parties had agreed upon a statement of facts, and the plaintiff had served notice of motion for judgment theron, he delivered a statement of claim and served on the defendants a notice withdrawing the statement of facts and countermanding the notice of motion. One of the defendants then moved for judgment on the statement of facts, which had not been filed:-Held, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to make an independent motion to be relieved from his admissions contained in the statement of facts, which had not been acted upon or brought before the court. After the filing of the statement of claim and the notice of withdrawal, it was not competent for the plaintiff to get judgment on the statement of facts; and if the sanction of the court were needed for the course taken by the plaintiff, it might be given upon the defendant's motion.

East v. O'Connor, 19 Ont. Pr. 301.

—Defamation—Previous libel—Subsequent libel—Admissibility.]—In an action for libel evidence of a previous provocatory libel on the plaintiff's part is admissible in mitigation of damages; but (Rose, J., diss.) evidence of a subsequent libel by the plaintiff is not admissible. Nor can the defendant be permitted to show that the plaintiff has attacked the character and reputation of others. It having been elicited in cross examination of the plaintiff that the defendant had recovered damages for previous and subsequent libels before mentioned in an action against the proprietor of the newspaper of which the plaintiff was editor, the trial judge told the jury to take that fact into consideration:—Held, not misdirection.

Downey v. Stirton, 1 O.L.R. 186.

—Defamation—Previous libel—Subsequent libel—Admissibility.]—In an action for libel evidence may be given of a previous publication by the plaintiff connected with the libel complained of, but not of a publication subsequent to the libel, at any rate, where it makes no reference to the defendant. —Negligence—Horse at large on highway—Bight of action—Evidence of by-law.]—
The defendant knew that the fences of his field in which he let his horses loose were not in proper condition; and owing to such defect the horses escaped on to the public streets of a city, and being startled into running by mischievous conduct of a third person, knocked the female plaintiff down and injured her:—Held, that she was entitled to damages. Cox v. Burbidge (1863), 13 C.B. N.S. 430, discussed. In such a case evidence of a by-law of the municipality against running at large is admissible in aid of the plaintiff.

—Bank Act, s. 46—Inspection of customer's account—Company—Manager — Private liabilities.]—Section 46 of the Bank Act, 1890, 53 Vict., c. 31 (D), providing that "no person, who is not a director, shall be allowed to inspect the account of any person dealing with the bank," does not enable a bank to refuse to disclose its transactions with one of its customers, when the propriety of these transactions is in question in a court of law between the bank and another customer who attacks them, and shows good cause for requiring the information he seeks. The company had an account with the bank (claimant), and the manager of the company (who had power to sign notes for the company) had also an account at the same office of the bank. The claim of the bank against the company in winding-up proceedings included a number of promissory notes made by the manager and indorsed by the company. The liquidator showed that notes so made and indorsed had been charged at maturity to the company's account by the direction of the manager, and that renewals of these notes formed part of the bank's claim:—Held, that the liquidator, in examining the agent of the bank for the purpose of showing that the original consideration for several of the notes included in the bank's claim was an advance to the manager for his own private purposes, and that the agent, knowing these notes to be the private debt of the manager, had, at his request, charged them to the company's account, was entitled to refer to the manager's own account with the bank, though the manager was not a party to the proceeding; more especially as the bank had set up certain transfers of cash from one account to the other as justifying them in charging the company's account with the manager's liabilities. Held, also, that there was nothing to prevent the liquidator, who stood in the place of the company, from impeaching the consideration for the notes offered in proof by the bank, just as the company itself might have done, but no farther. Held, also, that periodical acknowledgments given by the manager to the bank of the correctness of the company's account could not be set up as a bar to an inquiry into the account, where specific errors in it were charged, to the knowledge of the bank.

Technical breach of trust — Opinion — "Honestly and reasonably"—Liability of trustees.]—The provisions of 62 Vict. (2) c. 15, s. 1 (O.) relieving trustees from the consequences of technical breaches of trust who have acted "honestly and reasonably" do not render competent as evidence the opinion of bankers or other financial men as to whether the trustee has so acted in the course he has taken or omitted to take in respect to collecting a debt due the estate. The general rule of evidence still applies that mere personal belief or opinion is not evidence, and the test of reasonableness is that exhibited by the ordinary business man or the man of ordinary sense, knowledge and prudence in the conduct of his own affairs. In an action of replevin brought by plaintiff against the defendant sheriff, who had levied upon a quantity of lumber on the premises, under executions issued at the suit of creditors of S., plaintiff tendered evidence to show that all lumber cut by S. was to be sold and the proceeds, after deducting certain disbursements, paid to plaintiff on account of the purchase money, and that the title to the land and lumber was to remain in plaintiff unt:1 the payments agreed to be made by S. were completed:-Held, that the evidence was not admissible, the effect of it being to vary the written contract.

- Collateral contract—Paro! evidence.]— The plaintiff sued on a promissory note, and tendered with his action a certificate of shares which he said the defendant had transferred to him as collateral security for the loan represented by the note. The defendant pleaded that the note was made in connection with a contract by which the defendant sold to the plaintiff eleven shares of Kensington Land Company stock subject to the right of redemption within six months on certain conditions, and that the note was only collateral to the contract, and made at plaintiff's request to enable him to obtain the money by discount. -Slander-Finding of trial judge on ques tion of fact.]-In an action claiming damages for certain slanderous words, alleged to have been spoken by the defendant, of and concerning plaintiff, during the progress of a trial before a justice of the peace, six witnesses called by the plaintiff. testified to the use of the words complained of, while four called on the other side, including the justice, testified that they had not heard the words used, and the defendant denied having uttered them. The learned County Court Judge treated the evidence for defendant as a contradiction of that for plaintiff and gave judgment in defendant's favou :- Held, that he erred in doing so, and that there must be a new trial. -Parol lease-Commencement de preuve par écrit.]-An annual lease with a rental of more than $50 cannot be proved by oral testimony, even against a third party. without a commencement of proof in writing, which will not be found in the allegation, by the third party, of a monthly lease. A confession of judgment by the lessee, in an action by his lessor, is no evidence of a parol lease against a third person who has been made a party (mis en cause).

-Witness' reputation for veracity.]-On the trial, evidence having been given of the individual opinions of plaintiff's neighbours as to his general reputation for veracity, defendant's counsel proposed to ask the question, "Whose opinion do you know?" The evidence having been ex-cluded:—Held, that the learned trial Judge erred in doing so, and that the question should not have been disallowed. Held, notwithstanding, that as, assuming plaintiff's testimony to be perfectly true, no case was made out against the defendant, there was no necessity for sending the case back for a new trial for rejection of evidence, there having been no substantial wrong or miscarriage within O. 37, r. 6. -Incompetent witness-Examination on the voir dire-Religious belief. |-In the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes the amount of credence to be given to the witnesses is entirely for the Judge who hears the case. Therefore on the trial of a libel filed by the wife for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii on the ground of the adultery of the husband, when the presiding Judge accepted the evidence of a single witness to prove the adultery, as to which fact she was not corroborated, though on other matters she was, and entirely rejected the uncontradicted statements of several witnesses called to prove immoral conduct on the part of the wife, it was held that he had a right so to do, and the Court on appeal would not on that account disturb the decree. A person offered as a witness upon being examined on the voir dire, stated that he believed in God but did not believe in a future state of rewards and punishments dependent upon his conduct while on earth, whereupon he was rejected as incompetent:-Held, that he was properly so rejected.

-Evidence of death-Certified copy of will.]—An action was brought by plain-tiffs, trustees under the last will of D. to recover possession of a lot of land bought by plaintiffs at sheriff's sale under execution on a judgment recovered by D. against M. The objection was taken that at the trial plaintiffs failed to give evidence of the death of D .: - Held, that the objection was one which under O. 21 r. 5, must be specifically taken. Held, also, that the reception in evidence, without objection, of a certified copy of the will of D. was an implied admission of his death.

He also claimed interest, as having been stipulated for at the time:-Held, that inasmuch as there was corroboration as to the main fact, namely, the borrowing of the principal, this was sufficient to entitle the plain-tiff to recover the interest claimed. When a promissory note is taken from a borrower as collateral security for money loaned to him, and not in payment, action can be brought for the money lent, notwithstanding that owing to the form of the note it may not be maintainable thereon.

-Proof of age-Life insurance-Onus-Bona fides of representation.]-A defence to an action on a policy of life insurance was that the insured in his application, made in 1891, stated he was forty-one, whereas in fact he was forty-four:-Held, that evidence of statements made by the insured many years before the application tending to show his belief that he was born in 1850, for the purpose of showing bona fides, was improperly rejected. The jury found that the statement in the application that the insured was born in 1850 was untrue and was material, and although there was no evidence to that effect, that it was made in good faith. For the defence, witnesses were allowed to give evidence showing that the plaintiff and his witnesses in respect to the same mineral claim, had been parties or privy to a fraudulent transaction involving perjury and conspiracy and tending to show that a like fradulent scheme was being attempted in this case, and the result was that the Judge was so influenced by this evidence that he gave judgment for the defendants:-Held, by the full Court, that the said evidence on behalf of defendants was properly ad-

-Claim against estate of person deceased.]-The class of evidence which is sufficient to prove any fact against the estate of a deceased person is sufficient to prove a donatio mortis causa. viz., any evidence which is believed and is corroborated as required by the statute.

Re Reid, 6 O.L.R. 420 (Street, J.).

-Executors and administrators-Matters occurring before death of deceased-Corroboration.]-The executor of the estate of H. was also the executor of the estate of M., in which H. was beneficially interested. In passing his accounts as executor of another estate after H.'s death, the executor credited himself with having received for H. on account of her share in such last named estate a specified sum of money. On subsequently proving his accounts in the H. estate, and being charged with this sum, as having been received by him for the deceased, he claimed that he had not then received it, but had in fact paid it out in small sums to H. during her lifetime:-Held, that this was not a matter occurring before the death of H., and therefore the evidence of the executor did not require to be corroborated under s. 10 of the Evidence Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 73.

Armstrong v. Gillies, 5 Que P.R. 423.

-Trial-Application for commission-Discretion of Judge to refuse not interfered with-Estoppel.]-During the progress of the trial, and after a number of witnesses on behalf of plaintiffs had been examined, defendants' counsel applied for a commission for the examination of a witness who was absent in British Columbia, and for a postponement of the trial. The witness in question was a son of one of the defendants, who was aware of his absence, but the fact was not brought to the attention of defendants' counsel until the day on which the trial was commenced. The learned trial Judge having refused both the commission and the postponement:-Held, that there was no reason for interfering with his discretion on these points. After the commission applied for had been refused, plaintiffs' counsel offered to agree to an adjournment for a reasonable time, to be fixed by the Court, to enable defendants to produce the witness, should they desire to do so, and the case was adjourned from the 8th of January to the 17th of February On the latter day, the case being called, defendants' counsel stated that he had no further evidence to offer, and judgment was given for plain-Held, that defendants, having accepted the offer made on behalf of plaintiffs, and obtained an adjournment of the case, were not in a position to revert back to their original rights, and claim a review of the judgment.

—Merchant's entries in books—Judicial admission.]—Entries made by a merchant in his books should be accepted as presumably representing the facts truly and correctly, and unless error be established by legal proof to the contrary, they are evidence against him (Acts 1226-7 C.C.). Oral testimony of the merchant himself cannot destroy such proof, and, as to him, is not legal evidence to the contrary. A notarial deed can be contradicted and its terms changed by the Judicial admission of the party against whom such admission is invoked.

Restlier v. Malte, Q.R. 13, K.B. 198.

—Acknowledgment of debt—Husband and wife.]—An acknowledgment of indebtedness on a sale of goods for more than $50, by a trader to a non-commercial purchaser cannot be proved by oral testimony if it has not been established that the whole or a part of the goods were delivered. In the absence of special authority a man is only liable for purchases made by his wife of things necessary for his family such as provisions and clothing. Even in the case of goods bught by the wife for the necessities of the family, the husband is not bound by an acknowledgment of his wife of the indebtedness therefor unless the same was made in the course of the sale.

—Sale of goods—Oral proof.]—Although the terms or conditions of a civil contract for a sum exceeding $50 (Art. 1235 C.C.) is not the subject of oral festimony, the acceptance of the contract and delivery of the thing sold can be proved orally by witnesses.

Hopkinson v. Perdue, 8 O.L.R. 228, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 286, —Documentary evidence—Refusal to produce—Inference from.]—On the trial of an action involving disputed accounts it is not a ground for a new trial that the Judge told the jury they might draw inferences favourable or unfavourable to the plaintiff's case from the fact that he refused to produce, under notice, documentary evidence in his possession, which, it was admitted, contained some account of the transaction in dispute.

Hale v. Leighton, 36 N.B.R. 256.

- Personal injury - Negligence - Statements of person injured-Res Gestae.]-In action brought by the father and mother of a young girl to recover damages in respect of her death which resulted, as was alleged, from a fall on a stone in a highway under the control of the defendants, it was proved that the stone in question had been allowed to remain for a long time in a part of the highway used by foot passengers; that several persons had tripped over it; that the deceased had left a house on a certain evening to go to her own house, the direct route to which would be by the highway in question; that a few minutes later she came to the house of a friend near the place where the stone was, apparently suffering great pain, and stated that she had tripped on the stone and hurt herself; that about the time she would in the ordinary course have been passing the stone in question a witness saw a young girl whose description answered to that of the deceased lying beside the stone, who statel to him that she had fallen on the stone and hurt herself; and that the girl died from peritonitis resulting, in the opinion of the doctor who attended her, from an injury such as would have been the result of a fall upon a stone. -Held, affirming the judgment of Mac-Mahon, J., that the statement of the deceased to her friends at the house to which she came, and, assuming that the identity had been proved, her statement while lying near the stone, were not admissible in evidence as part of the res gestae, these being at most statements made in reference to the accident after it had happened, and after the deceased had had time for consideration, distinguishable therefore from those involuntary and contemporaneous exclamations made without time for reflection, which alone are properly admissible as part of the res gestae. Regina v. Mac-Mahon (1889), 18 O.R. 502, applied. Held, however, reversing the judgment of Mac-Mahon, J., that the identity of the de ceased with the person seen by the witness lying near the stone was established; that excluding her statements, there was ample evidence to justify the conclusion that the deceased had received injuries by falling on the stone; and that as the highway was by reason of the presence of the stone in a dangerous condition and out of repair the defendants were liable.

-Parol-Commencement of proof in writing-Objections to testimony.]-A notary public, in the Province of Quebec, has not any actual or ostensible authority to receive moneys invested for his clients under instruments executed before him and remaining in his custody as a member of the notarial profession of that province. Admissions made to the effect that a notary had invested moneys and collected interest on loans for the plaintiff do not constitute evidence of agency on the part of the no-tary, nor could they amount to a commencement of proof in writing as required by Art. 1233 of the Civil Code, read in connection with Art. 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to permit the abduction of parol testimony as to the authorization of the notary to receive payment of the capital so invested or as to the repayment thereof alleged to have been made to him as the mandatory of the creditor. The prohibition of parol testimony, in certain cases, by the Civil Code, is not a rule of public order which must be judicially noticed, and, where such evidence has been improperly admitted at the trial without objection, the adverse party cannot take objection to the irregularity on appeal. Gervais v. McCarthy, 35 Can. S.C.R. 14.

-Certificate of baptism as evidence.]—The certificate of baptism attests only the filia-—Corroboration—Action against executor —B.C. Evidence Act Amendment Act, 1900, cap. 9, s. 4.]—The corroboration required by section 50 of the Evidence Act (B.C. Stat. 1900. Cap. 9, c. 4) must refer specifically to the contract on which action is based, and not to some part of it, so as to leave the effect of the whole unascertained.

Blacquiere v. Corr. B.C.R. 448 (Irving, J.).

Action by executors - Corroboration -E.S.O. [1897] c. 37, s. 10.]-In an action by executors to recover money due from C. to the testator it was proved that the latter when ill in a hospital had sold a farm to C. and $1,000 of the purchase money was deposited in the bank to testator's credit; that subsequently C. withdrew this money on an order from testator who died some weeks after when none was found on his person nor any record of its having been received by him. C. admitted having drawn out the money but swore that he had paid it over to testator but no other evidence of any kind was given of such payment:— Held, reversing the judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal, that a prima facie case having been made out against C. an t his evidence not having been corroborated as required by R.S.O. [1897] c. 73, s. 10, the executors were entitled to judgment.

Thompson v. Coulter, 34 Can. S.C.R. 261.

-Burden of proof-Rule as to adoption of positive against negative evidence.]-In an action against the defendant R. D. T., as indorser of certain promissory notes. the defence to which was non-presentation for payment and failure to give notice of dishonour, the defence was admitted, but plaintiff relied upon an admission of liability alleged to have been made by defendant in a conversation respecting the affairs of R. T., the maker of the notes. The trial Judge found in favor of defendant's contention that the conversation related to the affairs of R. T., and not to defendant's personal liability. Held, that the case was one in which the burden of proof rested upon plaintiff, and there was no reason for disturbing the finding of the trial Judge. Also, per Townsend, J., Graham, E.J., concurring, that the case was not one to which the rule in relation to the ad ption of the positive evidence of one witness against the negation of another could be properly applied.

—Admissibility — Harmless error — New trial.]—The Supreme Court of Canada reversed the judgment of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, 37 N.S.R. 361, and restored the verdict at the trial holding that the books were received on the taking of evidence under commission by the express consent of both parties, and their reception could not afterwards be objected to on the general ground that they were irrelevant and immaterial to the issue.

Carstens v. Muggah, 36 Can. S.C.R. 612.

-Improper admission of-Uncorroborated dence. —The plaintiff—Contradictory evidence. —The plaintiff claimed to recover from the defendant the price of certain goods delivered to the defendant's brother. alleging that defendant verbally agreed that notes at three months should be given in payment of the goods by the brother, and when they matured the defendant would give his own promissory notes at four months. The defendant denied that he ever made any such agreement, and said that any notes given by him were to help his brother in his business and were not made payable to the defendant. The trial Judge admitted evidence of the plaintiff of a statement alleged to have been made to him by the defendant's brother when bringing a note made by the defendant in favour of his brother to take up the latter's note. The jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff, and a new trial was refused by the court below. Held, the Chief Justice and Taschereau, J., dissenting, that the plaintiff's dealings with the defendant's brother were inconsistent with the plaintiff's statement of the transaction, and that there should be a new trial. Held, per Fournier, Henry and Gwynne, JJ., that the plaintiff was not entitled to give in evidence a statement made by the defendant's brother as to what the defendant had instructed him to say to the plaintiff when substituting the defendant's note for his

—Parol evidence varying written document—Reformation of agreement.]—In an action, by plaintiff, to recover certain personal property which, it was alleged, defendant unlawfully detained, defendant relied upon an agreement, entered into between plaintiff and defendant, whereby plaintiff, in consideration that defendant would provide him with sufficient and comfortable maintenance during his lifetime. agreed to convey to defendant his real and personal property. The document put in evidence in support of the defence set up contained no reference to personal property. Held, affirming the judgment below, that parol evidence could not be introduced to vary the terms of the writen document and that plaintiff was entitled to judgment. Held, nevertheless, that, as the amount awarded as damages was excessive, the order for judgment should be amended in that respect, and that, if the parties were unable to agree upon the anount to be recovered for the detention of the goods, the matter must be referred back for that purpose, to the Judge of the county court. Per Townshend, J., that if, through fraud or mistake, the personal property was omitted from the written agreement, defendant had his remedy in a proper action to have the agreement amended.

— Cross-examination of defendant — Disposal of property.]—In cross-examination of a defendant it is admissible to question him as to what disposition he has made of his property since the suit was begun or in anticipation of it, and a defendant so disposing of his property does an act which will be viewed with suspicion.

Also a certified copy of a plan found in the Crown Land Office, and supposed to relate to the property in dispute, was received in evidence. Held, that the evidence was wrougly received, and that the verdict for defendant, entered upon the findings of the jury, must be set aside with costs Held, further, that the statute, (Witnesses and Evidence Act, R.S. 1900, c. 163, s. 20), making admissible in evidence plans on file in the Crown Land Office, was one that must be strictly con-

Bartlett v. Nova Scotia Steel Co., 37 N.S.R. 259.

- Depositions in former action - Opportunity to cross-examine.]-Under Rule 263 (Yukon Terr.) it is provided that "an order to read evidence taken in another cause or matter shall not be necessary; that such evidence may, saving all just exceptions be read by leave of the Court or Judge." The evidence offered under this Rule was evidence taken in another action in which Chretien-the man hired by Frank, the defendant-sued both Frank and plaintiff for his wages In that action the evidence of two other witnesses was taken,-the men employed by Graham, the present plaintiff. Graham defended that action. Frank allowed judgment to go by default and did not appear either in Court or at the hearing. Held, that the evidence would have been admissible had he defened and been present with full opportunity to cross-examine. In this case there was neither the right to cross-examine nor the opportunity, because, having allowed the judgment to go by default, Frank had no right to appear in the action and crossexamine witnesses. He had not the opportunity, not being present; and there was no necessity for his presence. Depositions held inadmissible.

-Foreign law-Conflict of expert testimony-Determination by Court.]-The expert evidence as to the foreign law being conflicting, the Court examined the authorities upon which the experts respectively relied, and reading these with the aid of the explanatory, critical, and argumentative testimony adduced, and discharging functions analogous to those of a special jury, determine the question of legitimacy.

Hunt v. Trusts and Guarantee Co., 10 O.L.R. 147, affirmed. 18 O.I.R. 351.

-Commencement of proof.]-In an action to recover $95 balance of a note for $125 indorsed by plaintiff to defendant and who, plaintiff alleged, had agreed to reimburse him the amount thereof, and affidavit by defendant in another proceeding that the note had been so indorsed joined to the latter's admission that plaintiff had received no consideration therefor, constitutes a commencement of proof in writing of such alleged promise sufficient to permit oral evidence thereof to be given.

Jewell v. Latimore, Q.R. 26 S.C. 450.

- Written contract-Contemporaneous oral contract.]-In an action by a corporation to recover the amount alleged to have been subscribed by the defendant for shares in the corporation, the defendant testified that he was induced to subscribe by the representations of the plaintiff's agent that two other named persons had each subscribed $10,000 of shares upon the condition that subscriptions for $50,000 were obtained by a certain date; that the defendant's subscription was required to make up the $50,000; and that his subscription would not be binding unless the $50,000 was fully subscribed by the date named. It was proved that neither of the named persons had subscribed or promised to subscribe for $10,000 each, either conditionally or unconditionally, that they did not do so at any time after the defendant's subscription, and that $50,000 was not subscribed on or before the date named. The defendant's testimony was not cootradicted, the plaintiff's agent having died some years before the commencement of the action: and the trial Judge credited the testimony: -Held, that it was sufficient without direct corroboration, and, in the absence of facts or circumstances of countervailing weight should be accepted. Held, also, that the plaintiffs were bound by the material representations of the agent, who was duly authorized to solicit subscriptions for shares whether those representations were made in good faith and with a belief in their fulfilment or not. Where contempor aneously with a written agreement there is an oral agreement that the written agreement is not to take effect until some other event happens, oral evidence is admissible to prove the contemporaneous agreement. Ontario Ladies' College v. Kendry, 10 O.L.R. 324, C.A.

- Improper reception of - 'Harmless error' - Admission j - In an action for goods sold and delivered, to which the defence set up was that the goods in question were only delivered to defendant as manager of plaintiffs' business and not otherwise, books of account kept by plaintiffs were received in evidence against defendant:-Held, that the evidence in question was improperly received, and, the Court being unable to say with certainty that the evidence did not enter into the materials that produced upon the mind of the trial Judge the conviction expressed in his judgment in favour of plaintiffs, and the Court being unable to say with certainty what the judgment of the trial Judge excluding the evidence improperly received would lave been, Held, that there must be a new trial It was argued for plaintiffs that the reception of the books of account was 'harmless error,' inasmuch as they could only have been received to fix the value of the goods sold and delivered, and such alue was fixed independently of the books by the admission of defendant. The whole question in dispute being whether defendant was a purchaser or not, and there being evidence that defendant was not aware that plaintiffs were making a claim against him until shortly before the action was brought, the admission relied upon being vague in its character, and the amount of goods sold being only capable of being ascertained from plaintiffs' books. Held, that the admission was not of the nature or effect which such an argument required. Semble, if it were conceded that defendant was a purchaser of the goods sent, the evidence as to his admissions on this point would probably suffice to fix the amount. Carstens v. Muggah, 37 N.S.R. 361.

Sauve v. Charlebois, 7 Que. P.R. 442.

-Contract—Proof of making—Telegraph— Original message-Destruction-Secondary evidence. |- The plaintiffs, who were dealers in canned fruits in Ontario, wrote to the defendants in British Columbia a letter quoting prices of various canned goods. Proof of the loss of this letter was given, and secondary evidence of its contents received. It concluded with a request to the defendants to order by telegraph at the expense of the plaintiffs. The defendants telegraphed an order for specified quanti-ties of goods. The message as received by the plaintiffs specified "three-fifty Lombard plums," and the plaintiffs shipped 350 cases of plums, and the other goods specified, with the exception of 250 gallons of pears, which they proposed to send later. The defendants refused to accept the goods shipped, because they said they had ordered only "fifty Lombard plums" and because the pears were not sent. The defendants alleged that the telegraph company had made a mistake in the transmission of the message, but the original message as delivered by the defendants to the company at Vancouver was not proved:-Held, that, assuming the mistake to be proved by proper evidence, the defendants were not responsible for it, for, even if the telegraph company were the defendants' agents, the authority of the agents was limited to the transmission of the message in the terms in which the defendants delivered it; and the document handed to the company for transmission was the original order which must be proved to establish the contract. Henkel v. Pape (1870), L.R. 6 Ex. 7, and Kinghorne v. Montreal Telegraph Co. (1859), 18 U.C.R. 60, followed. The fact of the destruction of the message delivered by the defendants to the telegraph company was not shown, and, although secondary evidence of the contents was given by the defendants, it was inadmissible, and there was therefore no evidence that the transcript delivered to the plaintiffs was incorrect. But the burden of proving the contract was upon the plaintiffs, and the admission of the transcript in evidence without objection did not render its terms binding upon the defendants. The gra the is s are wri dence to prove that the order had in fact been transmitted and delivered to the plaintiffs; but its admission in evidence did not excuse the plaintiffs from making proof of the order by production of the original or by proof of its destruction or less and secondary evidence of its contents. Moreover, although secondary evidence was given of a portion of the contents of the plaintiff's letter quoting prices, the plaintiffs had omitted to prove what were the prices quoted, and this material element of a contract was lacking. Held. also, that the non-delivery of the pears or-ordered would have justified the defendants' rejection of the other goods sent. Flynn v. Kelly, 12 O.L.R. 440.

—Account stated—Admission of liability—Promise to pay—Collateral agreement—Parol evidence.]—On the dissolution of a partnership, the parties signed a statement showing a certain amount as due to the plaintiff for his share and declaring that "for the sake of peace and quiet and to avoid friction and bother." the plaintiff waived examination of the firm's books and agreed that the amount so stated should be deemed to be the amount payable by the defendants to the plaintiff:—Held, that a promise to pay the amount of the balance so stated to be due should be implied from the admission of liability.

In an action for the amount of the balance, the defendants alleged that the plaintiff had verbally agreed that he would not sue upon the account as stated, and that the document should be treated as merely showing what would be payable to him upon the collection of outstanding debts owing to the firm:—Held, that as the effect of the allegod collateral agreements was to vary and annul the terms of the written instrument they could not be proved by

O'Meara v. Ouellet, 23 Que. S.C. 418.

—Sale—Commencement of proof in writing—Admissions—Arts. 1238, 1235, C.C.]—The writing required in the case of paragraph 4 of Art. 1235 C.C. need not mention the full details of the contract of sale; it is sufficient when the essential conditions are stated and reference made to another writing containing the patieulars. (2)

The admission of the party may supply the place of the writing, but such admission must state all conditions and be complete in itself; further, as Art. 1235 C.C. provides an exception to Art. 1233 C.C., the case does not involve the question of commencement of proof in writing. (3) A writing signed by the person sued which conforms to the requirements of Art. 1235 C.C., aithough the party thereby contends that he is not liable, is nevertheless sufficient to admit proof of the contract of sale by parol testimony.

Molleur v. Mitchell, Q.R. 14 K.B. 74.

-Oral testimony—Pleading—Commencement of proof in writing.]—The allegation by a party in his pleadings 'hat a deed in the form of a sale is in fact a pledge, gives the opposite party the right of showing by parol testimony that the deed was of a different nature, as, for instances, a deposit.

(2) Under the impression that this exclusion of parol testimony was not of public policy, the neglect of the party against whom it is admitted to invoke the prohibition cannot allow it to be admitted except expressly and that the facts are incompatible with an intention to object and leave no doubt as to the consent of the party affected. Entries in a ledger, sworn to have been made in the usual course of business, from memoranda regularly made, which memoranda had been accidentally destroyed by fire, are not evidence. On a reference the clerk refused to receive further material evidence tender ed by the plaintiff after the close of the defendants' case:—Held, that the matter was in the discretion of the clerk, that in this case he had exercised such discretion reasonably, and that the case would not be referred back by a judge on appeal. -Deposition taken de bene esse-Evidence as to absence.]-Where the evidence of a witness taken de bene esse is tendered upon the trial, and the trial Judge, on being satisfied from the evidence before him that the witness is absent from the province, receives it, the fact that it is subsequently made to appear that the witness was at the time within the province, in the absence of any fraud practised upon the Court, is not ground for setting aside the verdict and ordering a new trial. The rules providing for taking the evidence of a witness about to leave the province, make the admission or use of the evidence so taken to depend not upon the absence in fact of the witness at the time the evidence is offered, but upon the trial Judge being satisfied as to his absence. Thibault v. Poulin, Q.R. 22 S.C. 371 (Sup. Ct.), 5 Que. P.R. 189.

-Application for commission to examine witness abroad-Material.] - Application was made for a commission to examine a witness resident in the United States, the application being based on an affidavit of the partner of defendant's solicitor, on in-formation obtained by him from M., de-fendant's agent. There was no affidavit from M., personally, and nothing to show that the evidence of the witness could not have been obtained before he left the jurisdiction, or that the facts said to be in the knowledge of the witness could not be supplied by other persons:-Held, that the application was properly dismissed.

-Rogatory commission-Motion referred to the trial judge.]-The judge to whom an application is made for a commission rogatoire may refer the same to the trial Judge, who will, in his discretion, after having heard the evidence, grant or refuse the motion, and, in the former case, postpone the trial in order to permit the execution of the commission.

Armstrong v. Gillies, 5 Que. P.R. 423.

-Trial-Application for commission-Discretion of judge to refuse not interfered with-Estoppel.]-During the progress of the trial, and after a number of witnesses on behalf of plaintiffs had been examined, defendants' counsel applied for a commission for the examination of a witness who was absent in British Columbia, and for a postponement of the trial. The witness in question was a son of one of the defendant's, who was aware of his absence, but the fact was not brought to the attention of defendants' counsel until the day on which the trial was commenced. learned trial Judge having refused both the commission and the postponement:-Held, that there was no reason for interfering with his discretion on these points. After the commission applied for had been refused, plaintiffs' counsel offered to agree to an adjournment for a reasonable time, to be fixed by the Court, to enable defendants to produce the witness, should they desire to do so, and the case was adjourned from the 8th of January to the 17th of February. On the latter day, the case being called, defendants' counsel stated that he had no further evidence to offer, and judgment was given for plaintiffs. Held, that defendants, having accepted the offer made on behalf of plaintiffs, and obtained an adjournment of the case, were not in a position to revert back to their original lights, and claim a review of the judgment.

Stephen v. Thompson, 35 N.S.R. 390.

-B.C. county courts-When commission will be granted.]-In a County Court action on a promissory note for $65.40, the defendant pleaded that the note was obtained from him under duress, and the plaintiffs, who lived in Ontario, applied for a commission to take their evidence there:-Held, that as the probable expenses of the commission would not exceed a quarter of the expenses of the plaintiff's attending the trial, and the application was made bona fide, it should be granted.

Thompson v. Henderson, 9 B.C.R. 540.

- Circuit court - Deposition taken by stenographer.]-The cost of a deposition taken with consent of parties by stenography before the trial, cannot be taxed in the Circuit Court, although the proceeding saved the expense of a commission.

-Evidence under commission-Use of by jury.]-On the trial of an accion on a promissory note, the evidence of a witness taken under a commission was, subject to the objection of counsel, given to the jury, and by them taken to the jury room when they retired to consider as to their verdict: -Held, by the majority of the Court, that the practice was not usual, and was not to be commended, but as the incident could not have had a prejudicial effect it was not a ground for a new trial.

Royal Bank of Carada v. Eale, 37 N.B.R.

- Foreign commission - Examination of defendants as witnesses on their own behalf-Terms.]-The defendants, a solicitor practising his profession in Ontario, and his wife, were still in Ontario when two actions were brought, one against both of them by a former client of the husband and the other against the husband alone. Shortly afterwards they removed to the North-West Territories to take up their permanent residence there. The actions were respectively for an account of moneys intrusted to the solicitor for investment, and to set aside assignments of life insurance policies:-Held, reversing the decisions of a Divisional Court and of a Judge and the Master in Chambers, that, in the circumstances shown by affidavits, the defendants should be allowed to have their evidence taken on commission in the Territories, as witnesses on their own behalf, for use at the trial of the actions. but upon terms advantageous to the plaintiff as to the expense of executing the commission.

Ferguson v. Millican, 11 O.L.R. 35 (C.A.).

--Vacation—Commission.]—An action to recover moneys paid does not fall within the provisions of article 15 C.C.P. and a commission to take evidence therein will rot be granted during the long vacation. Royal Trust Co. v. Robert, 8 Que. P.R.

391 (Loranger, J.).

On commission—Reading at trial.]-Whether all the evidence taken upon commission shall be read at length or read in part and stated in part or stated by counsel at the trial is a matter in the discretion of the trial Judge. Marks v. Marks, 13 B.C.R 161.

-Commission to take evidence of plaintiff abroad.]-A plaintiff suing in a foreign forum should not ordinarily be excused from appearing there and giving his evidence, and the proof that the interests of justice require the issue of a commission to take his evidence abroad should be of the clearest kind and best nature that can be got, affidavits sworn to on information and belief only being insufficient. The is sue of such a commission should be the exception and should only be resorted to when the inconvenience or expense caused by requiring the plaintiff's personal attendance at the trial would pretty nearly thwart the ends of justice. These principles applied upon an application by the plaintiffs, a company whose head office was in Ottawa, Ontario, for the Issue of a commission to take the evidence of a number of the company's officers at Ottawa, in spite of affidavits tending to show that the books of the company at the head office, which would have to be put in evidence, were in constant use there and could not be brought to Winnipeg without great inconvenience and loss, also that it would be practically impossible to carry on the business of the company if all the officers whose evidence would be necessary at the trial had to be absent from the head office for the time necessary to attend the trial at Winnipeg. The Court was of opinion that the material was not sufficient to show that all the books must be kept at the head office all the time and that, if the evidence were taken on commission at Ottawa, the defendant would probably have to go there himself in order to instruct counsel on cross-examination of the witnesses as to entries in the books. Order for commission set aside with all costs to the defendant in any event:—Semble, if a proper case were made, an order might go for the examina-tion of some of the officers of the company

Canadian Railway Accident Insurance Co. v. Kelly, 17 Man. R. 645.

-Rogatory commission—Party—Discretion.]—It is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Court to allow a petition asking that a party be examined under a rogatory commission; generally it will not be granted, for it is obviously far better that the party should give his evidence in cpen Court.

Deslandes v. St. Jacques, 9 Que. P.R. 213.

—Foreign commercial firm not registered—Interrogatories.]—The Court is without power to order that the clerk in charge of the head office in America of a commercial firm described as of New York City but whose head office is, after the issuance of a commission to New York, declared to be in France, be examined on arriculated facts in lieu of the personal defendants.

Timosi v. Moos, 9 Que. P.R. 250.

—Parties residing outside the Province.]—
A party to a suit in the Superior Court has no right, even though he resides outside the Province or at a distance of more than a hundred miles from the place where the Court is held, to obtain a commission rogatoire to have himself examined as a witness.

EVOCATION.

Lessor and lessee — Future rights.]—
Though an action asking for resiliation of a lease and, in addition, a sum for rent less than $100, should be brought in the Circuit Court, evocation to the Superior Court will be permitted if the future rights of the parties for a sum exceeding $100 are affected.

Poire v. Lavigne, 11 Que. P.R. 187 (Ct. Rev.).

Remission of cause to court below—Arts. 49, 1130 C.P.Q.]—The Superior Court canrot remit a cause to the Circuit Court for the reason only that the party asking for evocation has not inscribed therefor; the evocation must be ill founded to warrant such order.

Barber's Association of Quebec v. Lizotte, 4 Que. P.R. 70 (S.C.).

—Promissory notes given in part payment —Arts. 49 and 1130 C.P.]—Held, 1. That an action taken in the Circuit Court for promissory notes, may be evoked by the plaintiff to the Superior Cour' when the defendant pleads that those notes were given in part payment of a thing sold by the plaintiff, for over $100, and that the sale is null, the thing sold being defective and valueless. 2. That par. 3 of Art. 1130
C.P. is not limitative, but simply provides for a special case.

Tufts v. Dalton, 3 Que. P.R. 523.

—Mode of procedure—Art. 1130 C.P.]—A party may proceed for judgment by means of inscription or motion in cases evoked before the Superior Court, but it should always be stated in the inscription or motion that he desires a judgment on the validity of the evocation.

Roach v. Duggan, 5 Que. P.R. 43 (Sup. Ct.).

-Circuit Court to Superior Court-Annual rents-Future rights-Arts. 49, 1130, 1152 C.C.P.]-There is a right to evocation when the Circuit Court has jurisdiction over the action. When it has not there can be no evocation but jurisdiction must be declined (le declinatoire) An action by which plaintiff demands the resiliation of a lease with a total of $99 for damages and rent due, is within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court. When the lease is one of a grist mill and saw mill, and the rent is half the receipts and profts, and it has three years to run, and it is shown in the action that the half of the revenues belonging to the defendant for the three years represent a value of more than $100, then the defendant has a right of evocation to the Superior Court as his future rights in the matter might be more than $100.

Morneau v. Verret, 20 Que. S.C. 399 (Sup. Ct.).

—Friendly society—Benefits—Future rights —Arts. 49, 1130, C.C.P.]—An action to recover benefits due from a friendly society to one of its members is evocable to the Superior Court, as the action dealt with the future rights and interests of the plaintiff, and the judgment therein would decide his status for the future as a member of the scoitty.

Gagné v. Society of St. Jean Baptiste of Victoriaville, 4 Que. P.R. 382 (Cir. Ct.).

—Future rights—Aliments—Arts. 49, 1130 C.O.P.].—An action claiming an alimentary support of $2.25 per week for 47 weeks is evocable to the Superior Court as the judgment that would be given therein would affect the future rights of the parties.

Roach v. Duggan, 4 Que. P.R. 289 (Sup.

Ct.).

—Tenancy—Denial of possession.]—Evocation cannot take place where the tenant who is sued denies having taken possession of the immovable property leased, without questioning the right of ownership of the landlord.

Shearer v. Marks, 5 Que. P.R. 304.

—Future rights.]—There can be evocation from the Circuit Court to the Superior Court only in the cases mentioned in Art. 49 C.P.Q. When the right of evocation does not appear by the demand the declaration of evocation should allege it and should be accompanied by documents or by a deposition affording primā facie proof that the action is capable of being evoked. Evocation is allowed only for the future rights which appertain to the party asking for it.

—Procedure—Future rights.]—Under Art. 55 C.P.Q. there can be no evocation to the Superior Court of the district of the judgment in an action to recover $99 taken in the Circuit Court of the county even though it may affect future rights.

5 Que. P.R. 188.

—Action to recover taxes—Right of evocation and appeal—Town Corporations Act.]
—There can be no appeal from a judgment rendered in the Circuit Court in a municipal matter and, in consequence, a person sued for municipal taxes cannot, even on grounds that future rights are affected, evoke the case to the Superior Court.

Shearer v. Marks, Q.R. 22 S.C. 472 (Sup. Ct.).

—Time for filing—Arts. 49, 1130 C.C.P.]—A defendant wishing to evoke a suit should file his demand for evocation before filing his plea to the merits.

The Montreal Turnpike Road Commissioners v. Penniston, 5 Que. P.R. 445.

-Lease from wife separate as to property -Future rights-Art. 49 C.P.Q.]-A defendant sued for the sum of $20, to wit, $10 for rent due, and $10 for damages, pleaded that he had leased from the wife of the plaintiff who was separate from him as to property, and that she alone had a right of action against him; he also claimed that there should be evocation of the cause from the Circuit Court to the Superior Court :-Held, that a defendant pleading that he had leased a tenement from the wife, separated as to property, of the plaintiff, without stating how or in virtue of what instrument she was so separate, was, nevertheless, bound to pay the rent to the husband as chief administrator of the community. (2) Such a defence does not involve any danger that future rights may be bound such as would justify the evocation of the action for $20 for rent and dam-

EXCEPTION.

Status of plaintiff—Exception to form.]
—Grounds of defence based on the incapacity or lack of capacity in the plaintiff who brings an action should be invoked by an exception to the form, and when that has not been done or, if done, the excep-tion has been dismissed, the defendant will not be permitted to rely on such grounds in his defence on the merits.

Montreal Rolling Mills Co. v. Sambor, Q.R. 19 K.B. 318.

-Parties-Liquidator.]-It is not by an exception to the form but by a dilatory exception that the defendant should object that the liquidator is not a party to an action against an insolvent company. Failure to reply to an exception to the form is not an admission of the facts alleged therein; the party must prove that his exception is well founded.

Royal Bank of Canada v. Canadian Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 11 Que P.R. 265.

-Exception to form-Demise of Crown.]-An exception to the form based on the fact that the writ was issued in the name of a sovereign (Edw. VII.) when the latter had died and before his successor was proclaimed, will be dismissed seeing that the defendant is not prejudiced. Rosenberg v. Millman, 11 Que. P.R. 358.

-Action for doctor's fees-Service of detailed account-Exception to the form.]-Held, that the default of serving a detailed account upon the defendant is not a ground for an exception to the form and can have no other effect than to delay the judgment or proceedings until the account is served.

Perrigo v. Arcand, 3 Que. P.R. 350.

-Declinatory exception-Transmission of record-Security for costs-Tariff of fees.] -Held, 1. That the fee of the defendant's attorney on a declinatory exception which was maintained, the Court ordering the transmission of the record to another district, is that provided for by Art. 7 of the tarm. 2. That when a motion for security for costs is granted, costs to follow suit, and the record is subsequently transmitted to another district, the costs will follow the final judgment on the case and not the judgment maintaining the declina tory exception and ordering the transmission of the record. 3. That, where, in an action brought at Montreal, where the transmission of the record to Quebec was ordered, the prothonotary, at Montreal, taxed the defendant's bill of costs, the Judges of the district of Montreal are competent to revise such taxation, notwithstanding the judgment ordering the transmission of the record.

The provision in the charter of the Montreal Street Railway Co. compelling any one desiring to bring an action against the company for damages to give 30 days' notice does not make such notice a condition precedent to the right of action; it is merely one of the pre-judicial requirements the non-observ-ance of which should be invoked by a dilatory exception.

-Annulment of marriage-Description of defendant-Divorce in foreign country.]-In an action for annulment of marriage contracted by a woman who had obtained, in the United States of America, a divorce from her first husband, on the ground that such divorce was also null, such question cannot be decided upon issues raised on exception to the form setting out that the summons was illegal and that the woman should have been summoned as the wife of her first husband. However, as there appeared grounds for the fear on the part of the defendant that the omission to invoke the questions raised in limine litis might be construed as acquiescence, the exception was dismissed without costs, the matters therein brought in issue being reserved for adjudication upon the merits of the case.

Radford v. Hickey, 5 Que. P.R. 311.

—Exception to the form—Notice of deposit C.P. 165.]—The Court will not hear an exception to the form, when no notice of the deposit made therewith has been given to the opposite party.

The Merchants Bank of Canada v. Republic Consolidated Gold Mining Co., 5 Que. P.R. 202 (Lavergne, J.)

—Erroneous statement of defendant's domicile—Exception to the form.]—An exception to the form setting out that the defendant is described as being of the town of St. Louis, when he in fact resides in Montreal where the action has been served upon him will be dismissed with Brunet v. Tison, 5 Que. P.R. 450.

-Preliminary exception—Time for filing—Vacation.]—Although Art. 10 C.C.P. provides: "In reckoning delays for pleading or trial, the first day of September is deemed to be the next day after the thirtieth day of June," it does not follow that each day after the thirtieth of June should be considered as the first of September, and further, the three days fixed by Art. 164 C.C.P. for the service of preliminary exceptions, begin to run, in the case of an action returned during vacation, on the first and not on the second of September.

Barbeau v. Jobin, 5 Que. P.R. 457.

--Conciliation—Summons.]—The exception resulting from want of summons in conciliation is not covered by filing a defence au fonds. This law being of public order can be invoked at any time and the Court is obliged to judicially notice its application.

Fortin v. Vaillancourt, 6 Que. P.R. 66 (LaRue, J.).

-Leave to file preliminary exception after delay.]-1. The Court has discretionary power to enable the production of preiminary exceptions, and particularly of an exception to the form, after the delays, when sefficient reason for the delay is shown. 2. A jadgment allowing a defend ant to file an exception to the form after the delays, without adjudicating upon its merits, is not an interlocutory judgment from which leave to appeal can be granted. Lefebvre v. Everett, 6 Que. P.R. 188.

-Company in liquidation.]—An "exception to the form" filed by a company in liquidation will be dismissed unless the filing has been authorized by a Court or Judge under s. 4 of the Winding-up Act. Desjardines v. Laurie Engine Co., 7 Que. P.R. 228 (Taschereau, J.).

-Preliminary exceptions-Reply-Plea to merits-Art. 167 C.P.Q.]-Replying to preliminary exceptions does not prevent the plaintiff from demanding that defendant plead to the merits notwithstanding the exceptions.

Roy v. Quesnel, 7 Que. P.R. 148 (Sup. Ct.).

—Venue — Exception declinatoire.]—
Where an action is brought in one district against a person domiciled in another the plaintiff should state, in his declaration.
all the facts giving jurisdiction to the Court in which it is taken; to set forth these facts in the reply to a declinatory exception is irregular and, on motion therefor, this portion of the reply will be struck out of the record.

McKenzie v. Person, Q.R. 26 S.C. 521 (Sup. Ct.).

—Exception to form—Service.]—In serving an exception to the form it is not enough to serve with it a notice that the prothonotary's certificate that the deposit has been made will be filed when the motion is presented but a copy of the certificate itself should be served. The defendant will not be given leave to serve such copy of the certificate after the motion is made.

Roberge v. Bélanger, 7 Que. P.R. 80 (Sup. Ct.).

—Action on account—Declinatory exception.]—If a declinatory exception is taken to an action on an account the plaintiff cannot, in reply to such exception, allege that the defendant has admitted, in the district in which the action was brought, that he owed the amount of the account—The procedure for striking the allegation out of the reply is by motion and not by inscription en droit as the character of the allegation would support the conclusions of the reply.

-Exception to form-Hour of service.]-An exception to the form, served on the second day after the return, in summary matters, but after five o'clock in the afternoon, will not be received.

Préfontaine v. Wiseman, 7 Que. P.R. 135 (Davidson, J.).

-Misnomer of plaintiff-Exception to the form-Default to give plaintiff's true name/1-A defendant who complains, by exception to the form, that the plaintiff does not describe himself under his true name, but without setting forth such true name, will not be allowed to amend his exception, after the delays within which it must be filed, by adding thereto an assertion of the true name of the plaintiff.

Dufour v. Portier, 7 Que. P.R. 162.

-Declinatory exception - Conclusions -Amount of condemnation.]-When it may be found necessary to condemn one or the other of the defendants for such a proportion of the sum asked as will exceed $100, and the conclusions are broad enough to justify such a condemnation, the action is properly instituted in the Superior Court. City of Montreal v. Arnovitch, 7 Que. P.R. 351 (Davidson, J.).

-Exception to the form-Defendant impleaded personally and ês qualité.]-Where defendant sued personally obtains the dismissal of the action upon exception to the form, on subsequent proceedings 6s qualité, by an amendment but not personally, the same defendant may plead the same grounds of exception.

Cantlie v. Cantlie, 7 Que. P.R. 308 (Lavergne, J.).

-Exception to the form-Action by attorney in fact-Want of interest.]-An action instituted by the attorney in fact of the actual creditor will be dismissed upon exception to the form as the plaintiff has no interest in the action and cannot sue for the rights of another.

Meunier v. Drolet, 7 Que. P.R 426 (Lavergne, J.).

-Delay expiring on Saturday-Practice-Art. 8 C.P.Q. as amended by 4 Edw. VII. c. 45.]-Under art. 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended by the statute 4 Edw. VII. c. 45, when the delay for the service of a preliminary exception expires on a Saturday, such service may be validly made on the following Monday.

Martin v. Drew, 7 Que. P.R. 435.

-Exception to the form-Netice of action not alleged in declaration-Damages-Details.]-(1) In the case of suits against public bodies, the want of allegation that the required notice has been given is no ground for the dismissal of the action. (2) The absence of details in an action of damages is matter for a motion for particulars, not for an exception to the form Vary v. Bordeaux, 8 Que. P.R. 284.

-Premature action.]-The defendant who moves for dismissal of the action as premature can claim, by incidental demand, moneys due him under the contract sued on and is not obliged to establish his rights by a plea en compensation. Even if such incidental demand is an irregular proceeding it is by exception to the form and not by défense endroit that advantage can be taken of such irregularity.

Hendershot v. Locomotive & Machine Co. of Montreal, 8 Que. P.R. 145 (Ct. Rev.).

-Exception to form-Domicile of defendant.]-An exception to the form on the ground that the residence of the defendant is not stated or is incorrectly stated should indicate clearly where the residence really is or otherwise it will be dismissed.

Loumaneau Congregation v. Backman, 8 Que. P.R. 108 (Charbonneau, J.).

-Motion to amend-Contributories.]-A motion to amend a dilatory exception in order to summon additional contributories in a cession de biens, which motion does not alter the character of the exception will be allowed.

Sleeper Co. v. Jacobs, 8 Que. P.R. 436 (K.B.).

-Stamp on writ-Deposit-Particulars.]-A motion for dismissal of an action for want of sufficient stamps on the writ is in the nature of an exception to the form and should be accompanied by the required deposit. A motion demanding particulars will be refused if such particulars are given in a protest referred to in, and thereby becoming part of, the declaration.

Durand v. Lecours, 8 Que. 418 (Lafontaine, J.).

-Summary action—Amendment—Costs.] An action improperly brought as a summary proceeding may be attacked by exception to the form; an amendment will be allowed on plaintiff paying the costs of the motion to amend and the disbursements on the exception.

Coudron v. Gibbons, 8 Que. P.R. 438.

-Dilatory exception-Option-Joinder of causes of action.]-If plaintiff asks by his action the annulment of a bill and the dissolution of community and the rendering of an account, a motion to have him optate between those different heads of action will be granted.

Berger v. Clavel, 8 Que. P.R. 274.

-Personal and real action-Incompatibility.]-When an action is personal as to a defendant and real as to other defendants, so that the remedies sought are cumulative and incompatible in regard to methods of defence and nature of condemnation, plaintiff will be ordered to optate between these two demands.

McCaskill v. Larivière, 9 Que. P.R. 53.

—Dilatory exception—Warranty—Agreement by a third party.]—A plaintiff who has not been a party to an alleged agreement by which a third person undertook to pay him the amount of the notes, upon which he sues, cannot be delayed in his recourse by a dilatory exception by reason thereof, and such exception must be dismissed.

Garand v. Caron, 9 Que. PR. 84.

—Preliminary exception—Delays.]—Any procedure adopted in good faith though it has not, strictly, the character of a preliminary exception is a preliminary objection to proceeding with the instance; for example, a demand of particulars which operates as a suspension of the delay for pleading.

Biais v. Aubé, 9 Que. P.R. 390 (Sup. Ct.).

Levy v. Levy, 9 Que. P.R. 271.

—Dilatory exception—Deposit.]—A copy of the prothonotary's certificate that the deposit required with the preliminary exception has been duly made or notice of the deposit must be served with the exception or it will be rejected.

Karbage v. Malouf, 9 Que. P.R. 305.

--Dilatory exception—Incompatible causes of action.j—Plaintiff cannot by the same action ask for the annulment of a municipal by-law, and for damages caused by the passing of said by-law and for a separate and distinct condemnation for each, especially when it appears by the declaration that the alleged claim for damages was not existent at the time of the institution of the action, but was dependent for its existence on the annulment of said by-law.

Simon v. Village of Knowlton, 9 Que. P.R. 343.

-Dilatory exception—Delays.]—A dilatory exception served six days after the return of the writ cannot be received; the fact that raises grounds of exception to the form cannot change its nature nor render it receivable as a mere motion demanding particulars.

Whitworth v. Bergeron, 9 Que. P.R. 120 (Sup. Ct.).

—Preliminary pleading—Proof.]—If an order is made for proof on a preliminary pleading (in this case an exception to the form) the plaintiff will be allowed to send the articulated facts to the defendant.

Cullen v. Daly, 9 Que. P.R. 268 (Sup. Ct.).

--Dilatory exception--Service of motion.]
--Service of a motion containing a dilatory exception made within three days after the entry of the cause is sufficient. Filing of the motion within such time is not necessary.

O'Brien v. Heirs of D. Church, 9 Que. P.R. 92 (Sup. Ct.).

EXCHANGE OF LAND.

See SALE OF LAND.

EXECUTION.

Real property-Buildings placed thereon -Property in.]-An execution debtor placed certain buildings on land, the property of the defendant in the issue, for which it appeared a ground rent was paid. These buildings were of wood resting on loose stone foundations to which they were not affixed nor were the foundations let into the earth, but the earth had been levelled to make the foundation level. A cellar had been dug in the earth under one building. A judgment creditor seized these buildings, and the defendant, the owner of the fee simple, claimed them as part of the freehold, and an issue was directed:-Held, that to be a parcel of the freehold a building must be affixed to it or something connected with it, or there must be evidence to show that it was intended that the buildings should be part of the freehold; the buildings in question not being affixed to the freehold, and there being no evidence that they should be a part of it, the buildings were the property of the debtor and liable to seizure.

Hamilton v. Chisholm, 2 Sask. R. 227.

Sheriff's poundage - Railway lands -Equity of redemption - Settlement - Receiver.]-Writs of fi. fa. lands were placed in a sheriff's hands in 1893 to levy the amounts of judgment recovered in actions for interest on first mortgage bonds of a railway company. The sheriff advertised for sale the equity of re-demption in the railway lands, and the day of sale wasc adjurned 33 times. The railway extended through parts of three counties. In 1902 the bonds matured, and proceedings were taken to sell the railway. Judgment to that effect was pronounced in March, 1903. On the 14th October, 1902, a receiver was appointed, who was continued through all the subsequent proceedings. In 1906 the Master, upon a reference in the sale proceedings, reported that the mortgage bonds formed a first charge on and covered all the property belonging to the railway company. Early in 1907 the sheriff was notified to do nothing upon the executions, and the writs were all withdrawn in August, 1907. In September, 1906, a settlement was made by which all the bonds and coupons were bought by R. The executions were kept in the sheriff's hands till a satisfactory arrangement was made with R. The judgments were satisfied by the result of the settlement, and the execution plaintiffs were paid before the writs were withdrawn:-Held, that a settlement was arrived at, pending the executions, which was an equitable satisfaction of the judgments and executions; but as upon a sale nothing could have been realized, because a mere part of the road (that part in the sheriff's bailiwick) could not be sold, and because the equity had no value, there was no basis upon which the Court could say that any sum should be given as representing poundage. Con. Rule 1190 (2) is intended for the benefit of the sheriff when a settlement has been arrived at under pressure of an execution, which, if enforced, would be productive of beneficial results for the execution creditor; the settlement was induced not because of the writs being in the sheriff's hands, but for other more cogent reasons. The possession of the receiver in 1902 would effectually prevent the enforcement of any writ of execution.

Byers v. Murphy, 3 Terr. L.R. 169.

—Sheriff's fees — Money realized from goods.]—Executions, goods and lands were placed in the sheriff's hands in two cases. In one the money was made from goods, in the other by voluntary payment to the solicitor. The sheriff transmitted to the Registrar of Land Titles certificates of satisfaction, and charged the fees in respect thereof to the solicitor for plaintiffs. At the request of the solicitor such costs were taxed and by the taxing officer allowed. On review:—Held, that it was the duty of the sheriff to forward to the Registrar a certificate of satisfaction on the money being made, and to charge his fees in respect thereof. 2. That such fees not being payable by the debtor must be paid by the execution creditor, and were properly so charged by the sheriff.

In re Brown, 3 Sask. R. 94.

-Exemption - Homestead - Evidence of filing execution.]-Plaintiffs caused defendant's land to be seized under a writ of execution, and the defendant claimed the same as exempt, being his homestead. On an interpleader application by the sheriff, it appeared that the defendant acquired the land by homestead entry; that no buildings were ever erected thereon, nor did he ever live on the land, his duties as to residence having been performed by residing on purchased land. He swore, however, that it had always been his intention to make the land his permanent home. The Local Master before whom the application was heard, allowed the claim. The plaintiffs then applied for leave to appeal, and leave was given to serve notice of motion, the date fixed for leave to appeal, and leave was given to serve notice of motion, the date fixed for the return being the King's birthday, a statutory holiday, and when the motion was heard the following day, it was objected that the notice of motion was void, and it was also objected that no evidence was given that any execution had ever been filed against defendant's land, and that, unless such writ was so registered, the land was not bound:—Held, that the date for the return of the notice of motion having been fixed by the Judge granting leave to appeal, it must be held that this was tantamount to granting leave to make the notice returnable on a statutory holiday, and the notice was therefore good. 2. That while no evidence was given of the actual filing of the execution against the land in question, yet, the material disclosed that the seizure had been made, and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, such seizure would be deemed to be regularly made, and as it could not be so made unless the writ was regularly filed, it must be presumed to have been filed. 3. The mere fact that the debtor intends to make his permanent residence on land claimed as exempt does not constitute such land an exemption, but the land must be in the actual occupation of the debtor, and there must be thereon a dwelling-house in which the debtor lives.

Imperial Elevator Company v. Shere, 3 Sask, R. 197.

—"Wagon" includes buggy—Debtor's right to mortgage his exemptions.]—Where it appears that a debtor is not possessed of any ordinary farm wagon, but has two buggies, one of these buggies is exempt as a "wagon" under the Exemptions Ordinance, and the debtor has the choice of buggies. A chattel mortgage given by a debtor on a wagon which is exempt will not be set aside at the instance of a creditor, even if it is proven that the chattel mortgage was given under circumstances which would except for the exemption, constitute a fraudulent preference under the Assignments Act.

Asheroft v. Hopkins, 2 Alta. R. 253.

Seizure of goods by sheriff—Action against execution creditors.]—In an action against the sheriff and several execution creditors of A. O. for trespass in seizing the goods of the plaintiff under the writs of execution, the statement of claim did not allege that the defendants the execution creditors had interfered directly and ordered the sheriff to seize particular goods:-Held, that the statement of claim disclosed no reasonable cause or ground of action against the defendants the execution creditors; but, upon a motion by one of those defendants to dismiss the action, the plaintiff was allowed to amend by inserting an allegation that those defendants had specifically directed the sheriff to seize the particular goods.

Olsen v. Van Wart, 13 W.L.R. 661.

-Sale of land under writ of fi. fa.-Authority of sheriff-Change in territory of judicial districts.]-An application to confirm a sale of land made by the sheriff of Edmonton under a writ of execution against lands was opposed by a mortgagee of the land, upon the ground, among others, that the sheriff of Edmonton had no authority, because the land was in the judicial district of Wetaskiwin. The writ was issued before the creation of the judicial districts of Edmonton and Wetaskiwin, the action in which the judgment on which the writ was issued was obtained having been brought in the judicial district of Northern Alberta, By Ordinance c. 6 of 1903, 2nd sess., it was provided that the Lieutenant-Governor might alter the boundaries of judicial districts, and make such provision as he might deem necessary to protect the interests affected thereby. Under the authority of this Ordinance, by order in council of the 1st September, 1906, the judicial district of Northern Alberta was wiped out, and the area comprised therein divided into 3 districts, Calgary, Wetaski-win, and Edmonton. The order in council provided that "all writs . . . pending in the old judicial districts shall have effect and continue according to their tenor in the new judicial districts re-spectively within whose limits suit was first entered or proceedings begun." This suit was first entered in the sub-district of the Northern Alberta judicial district of the Deputy Clerk at Edmonton, which comprised the area of the two new districts of Edmonton and Wetaskiwin:-Held, that, as there was nothing in the order in council authorizing a sheriff of one district to exercise any of his powers outside of his own district, the sale made by the sheriff of the Edmonton judicial district, could have no local authority in the Wetaskiwin judicial district, unless he possessed such authority as the for-mer deputy sheriff of the Northern Alberta judicial district. Nothing was done by the deputy sheriff of Northern Alberta except to receive the writ. He could not make a seizure, for the debtor had no interest in the lands till long after the Northern Alberta district had ceased to exist. The writ was filed in the land titles office in July, 1906. Held, following Re Blanchard, 5 Terr. L. R. 240, that such filing, even if the debtor owned the land at the time, would not constitute a seizure or inception of execution of the writ. Held, therefore, that the sheriff of the Edmonton judicial district, either as such or as former deputy sheriff of the Northern Alberta judicial district, to whom the writ was directed and delivered, had no authority to sell these lands, which were in the district of another sheriff, who was the successor of the deputy sheriff of Northern Alberta, in so far as the lands in his district were concerned; and, in consequence, the sale was void, and the application to confirm it should be refused.

The guardian cannot be sentenced to imprisonment if the rule nisi does not give him the option of paying the amount due the seizing creditor or the value of the effects not produced and the Court cannot amend the rule by itself adding such option. The guardian who succeeds in having a rule nisi dismissed for irregularity, but who does not, in moving against the rule, offer to produce the effects placed in his care, will not be awarded costs.

-Judicial sale-Agreement between parties-Rights of purchaser.]-The judicial sale of movables made at 10.45 a.m., though announced for 10 o'clock, and to a single bidder, is valid even though there had been an agreement between the seizing creditor and the saisi that it would only be a matter of form to be cancelled by satisfaction of the judgment within a stated time. These facts, and the fact that the movables had been left in possession of the saisi who undertook to repay the price with an addition as indemnity cannot be set up by the saisi against the purchaser who has taken a saisie-revendication, especially when the original seizing creditor is not in the cause and does not offer to pay back the purchase money which he received.

—Seizure of movables—Caretaker—Action for remuneration.]—The caretaker appointed to the custody of movables seized under execution, to whom the bailiff making the seizure has agreed to pay a certain sum for such services, has a right of action against the seizing creditor to recover the amount. Against such action the creditor cannot set up the taxation in his bill of costs for a less amount as the prothonotary has power to tax the costs recoverable under judgment only and not those arising out of an agreement.

Fortin v. Simard, Q.R. 37 S.C. 470 (Ct.

-Homestead-Abandonment - Intention.] -The claimant acquired certain land by homestead entry, and, after completing his duties, he rented a farm some distance away to which he removed with his family, and where he remained until the sheriff seized the homestead under execution, when he returned and took up his residence, claiming it as exempt. It appeared that the rented farm had a much larger area of cultivated land than the homestead, and that the landlord assisted him to work it. and that during the two years preceding the seizure no work had been done on the homestead, nor was there anything to indicate that it was the home of the claimant beyond his statement that he considered it his home. The interpleader application was first heard before the Local Master at Arcola, who allowed the claim. and the creditors appealed. On appeal, it was argued that as the title to the land was involved, the Local Master had no jurisdiction to determine the question:-Held, that a Local Master has jurisdiction to hear and determine interpleader applications involving claims to land seized under execution if he is disposing of the claim in a summary way under Rule 440. 2. When the execution debtor is not living on the homestead claimed as exempt, the onus is on him to show that the place is still his actual and bona fide residence, and that he has not abandoned it as his residence. 3. That to satisfy this onus the debtor must show the new residence acquired was only of a temporary character for a definite purpose, with a constant and abiding intention to return to the original homestead. 4. That a mere statement of intention to return is not sufficient, but he must be able to show facts and circumstances from which it may be inferred that he intended to return. 5. That under the circumstances of the case, it must be held that the homestead had been abandoned and a new domicile acquired, with no evidence indicating an intention to return to the original domicile.

Re Hetherington, 3 Sask. R. 232.

-Registration against homestead-Effect.] -Defendant recovered a judgment against one D.W.F., and registered an execution against lands thereunder. After recovery of this judgment, D.W.F. transferred his homestead to his wife, the plaintiff, and the registrar endorsed upon her certificate of title a memorandum that the title was subject to such execution. The plaintiff thereupon brought this action for a declaration that the execution was not a charge upon the land and for an order that it be removed:-Held, that an execution against land charges only such lands as are not exempt from seizure, and, therefore, the land in question was not charged. 2. That, the land being exempt, the debtor could dispose of it as he pleased, and the plaintiff, therefore, took the same without any charge thereon.

Fredericks v. North-West Thresher Co., 3 Sask. R. 280.

-Execution against lands - Conveyance subject thereto-Discharge of execution upon payment.]-E. recovered judgment against L., and issued executions against his lands. L. subsequently conveyed to G., who in turn conveyed to H., who again conveyed to S., who mortgaged to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, desiring to have E.'s execution removed from the title, tendered the amount due thereon, and asked for a certificate of satisfaction. The sheriff at that time had other executions against L., and, claiming that the money tendered must be divided among all the creditors, under the provisions of the Creditors' Relief Ordinance, refused a certificate unless all executions were satisfied, which plaintiffs refused to do, and brought an action for relief :- Held, that, under the Creditors' Relief Ordinance, only moneys levied are to be distributed as therein directed, and money paid as the plaintiffs proposed paying it in this case, could not be said to be money levied, in as much as there had been no seizure, and without a seizure there can be no levy. 2. In any event this money was not realized out of the property of the debtor, but was the money of the plaintiffs, paid by it to discharge an encumbrance on its title, and therefore the Ordinance did not apply. Trust and Loan Company v. Cook, 3 Sask. R. 210.

-Execution against lands-Debtor owner of unregistered equitable interest—Transfer.]—Plaintiff sold certain land to defendant S. under agreement for sale, whereby he became entitled to a transfer upon payment of the agreed purchase price and compliance with stated conditions. Subsequently the American Abell Co. recovered a judgment against S., and registered execution in the usual form against his land. S., after such registration, assigned his whole equitable interest in such land to the defendant T. J. S. The legal title during this time remained in the plaintiff. In an action by plaintiff under the contract, the American Abell Co. claimed a right to intervene as having an interest in the land under their writ of execution:—Held, that, having regard to the provisions of the Land Titles Act, it was evidently the intention of the Legislature that writs of execution should bind only the interests of registered owners of land, and that the execution did not bind the equitable interest of the defendant S. That no lien is created by an execution against land, only such rights being acquired as are given by the Land Titles Act, and which are not available as against equitable interests.

-Sheriff-Sale of land under judgment and execution-Adverse possession.] -In an action brought by plaintiffs, trustees under the last will of D., to recover possession of a lot of land bought by plaintiffs at sheriff's sale under execution on a judgment recovered by D. against M., defendant relied, among other defences, upon the ground that, at the time of the sale by the sheriff, he was in adverse possession of the land:-Held, that a sheriff selling under execution is not within the class of cases which apply to a person selling land held adversely by another. The objection was also taken that at the trial plaintiffs failed to give evidence of the death of D:-Held, that the objection was one which under O. 21, r. 5, must be specifically taken. Held, also, that the reception in evidence, without objection, of a certified copy of the will of D. was an implied admission of his death. At the trial plaintiffs put in evidence a certified copy of the deed to M., the judgment debtor without showing that the original was not in plaintiffs' possession. Held, that this was a matter as to which plaintiffs should be permitted to amend by filing the usual statutory affidavit. Held, also, that defendant having failed on the only substantial question arising, his appeal should be dismissed with costs. Per McDonald, C.J. Held, that the registry of the judgment obtained by D. had the same effect, so far as his title was concerned, as if he held a mortgage. Held. also, the judgment being registered, and securing the title, that the statute of limitations would not begin to run until after the date of the recovery of the judgment. Doull v. Keefe, 34 N.S.R. 15.

-Sheriff's title-Good faith-Nullity absolute and relative-Arts. 412, 1484 C.C.]-The possessor of property under title from the sheriff is a holder in good faith up to the time when his title is declared void by the Court, and his title is valid through its subsequent annulment deprives it retrospectively of effect. A contract annulled for an absolute nullity is deemed never to have had a legal existence and to be incapable of producing any effect in law either in the past or the future; but a contract or title, which has been acted on and afterwards annulled, is, notwithstand ing Art. 412, C.C., sufficient to establish the good faith of the holder. Such holder has a right to retain the fruits he has received and to be reimbursed for the improvements he has made, as he will be liable for deteriorations he may have made on the property.

-Chattel mortgage-Creditors' Relief Ordinance-Priorities.]-Held (Wetmore, J, hesitante), that executions against goods placed in the hands of a sheriff subsequently to the making of a chattel mortgage by the execution debtor, on the goods seized, attach only on the equity of redemption and are not entitled under the Creditors' Relief Ordinance to share with executions placed in the hands of the sheriff prior to the giving of a mortgage. -Notice - Seizure - Custodia legis -Abandonment.]-Goods were seized under execution by the sheriff, who left them in possession of the judgment debtor's wife. who claimed to be the owner, upon her agreeing to hold them for him. Some months after the sheriff, under the same writ, took the goods, which were then in the possession of the claimants, Thompson & Nelson. They claimed to have bought from one Hodgson, who claimed to have bought from the wife after the original seizure:—Held, in view of "The Administration of Civil Justice Ordinance, 1884," s. 83, that there was no abandonment by the sheriff; that he was right in resuming actual possession, and that, therefore, the execution prevailed over the claimants'

-Chose in action-Seizure of-Execution -Creditor's action.]-The sheriff cannot sell under execution the interest of a partner in partnership assets; only the partner's interest in tangible property of the partnership on which he has levied can be sold. Whatever may be the case under R.S.O. 1897, c. 51, s. 58 (5), notice to the debtor of the assignment of a chose in action was not necessary under R.S.O. 1887 c. 122, ss. 6-12, in order to perfect the transfer as between assignor, assignee, and debtor, but it was to protect the assignee against further assignments or any other right of set off, and secure the debtor against other claims. A chose in action is not bound by execution put in the sheriff's hands, but only by seizure made thereunder. A creditor not suing on behalf of all but seeking preferential payment out of a chose in action assigned by a debtor not shown to have been insolvent at the time of transfer and held by a bank for a valid debt cannot impeach the assignment as contrary to the Bank Act.

-Receiver - Equitable execution - Claim against Crown — Voluntary payment.] — Held, by a Divisional Court, Boyd, C., and Lister, J.A., reversing the decision of Meredith, C.J., 19 P.R. 227, that payment of the money in question was to be made by the Crown to the judgment debtor purely out of bounty, and was not enforceable by any Court, and was not to be made in pursuance of any contract; and therefore the money could not be reached by the judgment creditor by means of a receiving

-Receiver-Equitable execution - Trustees-Rents.]-The Judicature Act, s. 58, sub-s. 9, does not give jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in cases where prior to that Act no Court had such jurisdiction. And, in order to justify the making of an order for the appointment of a receiver at the instance of a judgment creditor, the circumstances of the case must be such as would have enabled the Court of Chancery to make such an order before the Judicature Act. Where the plaintiffs were judgment creditors of the defendant, and were also the trustees entitled to receive the rents and other property in respect of which they asked that they should be appointed receivers, to which the defendant was beneficially entitled:-Held, that there was no impediment in the way of their receiving such rents and other property, and their motion for an order appointing them receivers was unnecessary.

-Sale under mortgage-Collateral security-Execution creditors.]-Execution creditors, though they probably cannot sell under their writs the interest of their excution debtor in land subject to more than one mortgage made by him, are nevertheless, encumbrancers, upon that interest, and upon the proceeds thereof in the event of a sale of the land by a mortgagee, and entitled to payment thereout according to priority. A mortgagee who sells the land and pays off an encumbrancer who holds, to his knowledge, collateral security, must take over that collateral security for the benefit of subsequent encumbrancers, including execution creditors, and is liable to them for the value thereof if he fails to do so.

The formalities prescribed by Arts. 706, 741 and 743 of the Code of Procedure, for the sale of immovables by the sheriff, are imperative, and the omission in the procèsverbal or minutes of seizure of the name of the street in which the immovable is situated is a fatal defect which annuls the sale. 2. Where the exceptions mentioned in Art. 741, C.C.P., do not apply, a sale of an immovable commenced at the registry office and terminated at the sheriff's office, instead of being made at the door of the parish church of the locality where it is situated, is null.  Fieri facias
 Goods
 Liquor licenses
 Covenant to assign license Covenant running with the land - Interpleader-R. S. O. 1897, c. 245, s. 37.]-A license under the Liquor License Act cannot be seized by a sheriff under a fieri facias against goods. The piece of paper upon which it is printed and written ceases to be seizable as an ordinary chattel when it is converted into a license. The right to sell liquor at a particular place under such a license is a personal one, and is not assignable by the holder of it except under the conditions imposed by s. 37 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245.—Semble, a covenant in the lease of an hotel by the lessee that he will from time to time apply for a license, and at the expiration of the lease assign to the lessor the license, if any, then held by him, is not a covenant binding on the assignee of the term as such, being merely personal and having nothing to do with the land or its tenure.

-Land Titles Act-Execution-Renewal-Refiling with registrar.]-The Land Titles Act, 1894, s. 92, sub-s. 1, is amended by 63-64 Vict. (1900) c. 21, s. 2 (assented to July 7th, 1900), by the addition of a proviso, "that every writ shall cease to bind or affect land at the expiration of two years from the date of the receipt thereof by the registrar . . . unless before ex-piration of such period of two years a renewal of such writ is filed with the registrar in the same manner as the original is required to be filed with him." This proviso is not retroactive so as to apply to a writ of execution, which would have expired, but was renewed before the 7th July, 1900; such a writ, therefore, remains in full force though a renewal thereof has not been filed with the registrar either be-fore or after that date. The execution creditor in such a writ should consequently be notified of an application for the confirmation of a tax sale of land of the execution debtor.

-Sale under fieri facias-Unassigned dower in equity of redemption-Share in equity of redemption.]-A right of dower in an equity of redemption before assignment is not exigible under a writ of fieri facias; nor is the share of one of several tenants in common of an equity of re-demption. Where a person dies possessed of lands mortgaged by him, his widow, before assignment of dower, though entitled to redeem, has no estate in the land, and is therefore not an "assign" of her husband, nor a " person having the equity of redemption" within s. 29 of the Execution Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 77, and her interest does not come within s. 30 of that Act, and therefore is not saleable under it, nor under s. 33. In such a case an execution creditor seeking equitable execution should proceed under Con. Rules 1016, 1017 and 1018, and not by action.

-Appeal-Removing stay of execution-Eule 827-Discretion-Grounds for removal.]-An appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from an order of a Judge thereof, in Chambers, under Rule 827, directing that the execution of the judgment appealed from shall not be stayed pending the appeal. Such an order is not a purely discretionary one; a proper case must be made out for allowing the respondent to enforce what has not yet become a final judgment, the appeal being a step in the cause. A Judge in Chambers, having ordered the removal of the stay upon the ground that the appellant's financial position was weak, his order was reversed by the Court, where the appeal appeared to be presented in good faith and on substantial grounds, and the effect of the execution would practically be to close up the business of one of the appellants.

The sheriff having before the return of the writ with his procedure and the opposition to the seizure of the movables, taken a copy of said writ and of the proces-verbal of the seizure of the immovable, may, without further authorization and without waiting for judgment on the opposition proceed to advertise the immovable for sale and to sell it.

On opposition to the seizure the coroner made return of the will, the opposition and all the proceed-

Afterwards the plaintiffs, under their judgment, caused a writ of fi. fa. to be issued against defendant addressed to the sheriff who seized thereunder the same immovables:-Held, that the ancient maxim "saisie sur saisie ne vaut" only remains in force as modified by the Code of Procedure; that the sheriff was not obliged to note the second writ upon that addressed to the coroner; that Art. 711 C.C.P. did not apply to this case; and that the sheriff, on receiving the second writ, had no recourse but to seize since he was not in possession of the first which, moreover, had never been addressed to him. P. Michaud had bequeathed his property with full ownership and in perpetuity, to L. Michaud without reserve, constituting him his "universal legatee and as owner" from the day of testator's death, on the condition expressed that he could only dispose of said property for the benefit of his children, in portions equal or unequal as he should deem just when he would make a partition of his other property. L. Michaud accepted the legacy, and afterwards by his will, bequeathed all his property (except that received from P. Michaud) to his son, J. B. Michaud, the present defendant, "on the express condition that he shall preserve the abovementioned property for his children, and divide it equally or unequally among them. And, further, the testator desiring to discharge the trust contained in the will of the late P. Michaud . . . makes choice of his said son to receive the property left by the latter, and he therefore gives and bequeathes to him all the said property," and he adds that he wishes and ntends that the property coming from the testamentary succession of P. Michaud "shall be preserved in the same manner as the property bequeathed by me under the present will." L. Michaud concluded his will as follows:—"I wish and intend that the enjoyment of the above property bequeathed to my son T. M shall be non seizable, and I declare that I give him this legacy for the purposes of mainten-ance (à litre d'ailments). L. Michaud, having died, his son accepted his will. Plaintiffs having obtained judgmen: against said T. Michaud, as universal legatee, for a debt contracted by his father, caused seizure to be made of immovables coming from P. Michaud. Defendant made opposition, claiming that this was substitué for his children and invoking also the clause against seizure imposed by the will of P. Michaud:-Held, that the substitution decreed by the will of L. Michaud as to the property coming from P. Michaud, in favour of the defendant's children was valid, but that the decree could not purge the substitution; that de fendant, who is the grevé, could not invoke this substitution by his opposition; that the clause against seizure of the goods coming from P. Michaud, imposed by the will of L. Michaud, was valid and within the powers of the latter, but it could not be invoked against the lawful debts of L. Michaud, which defendant, as his universal legatee, is obliged to pay.

Territories Real Property Act-Charging lands-Sale under execution-Indemnity to sheriff-Unregistered conveyances prior to execution.]-T. was the sheriff's advocate and also advocate for a judgment creditor. On behalf of the judgment creditor he delivered to the sheriff an execution and a requisition to charge lands then registered ir the name of the execution debtor as the said execution debtor's interest therein might appear. The lands were accordingly charged by the sheriff, under the provisions of the Territories Real Property Act as amended by 51 Vict. c. 20, s. 94, and advertised for sale under the execution. Subsequently, transferees of the lands registered deeds of conveyance dated prior to the execution, and served notices upon the sheriff forbidding the sale. T., following the decision given in re Rivers, 1 N.W.T. Rep. pt. iv. 66, which had not then been reversed, advised the sheriff to proceed with the sale notwithstanding the notices. Actions were them successfully prosecuted ty the transferees against the sheriff and execution creditor and an order obtained restraining the sale proceedings and cancelling the execution as a cloud upon the titles. In these suits T. appeared as advo-cate for both the sheriff and the execution creditor and filed a joint defence, without interpleading for the sheriff, on the ground that the unregistered transfers were inoperative as against the execution. He also applied, without success to the trial Court, and again to the Court in banc, to have the sheriff's name struck out as a defendant in these suits. The sheriff did not appeal against the judgment in favour of the transferees and brought the present action against T. to recover damages for the amount of his costs on the ground that T. had been guilty of negligence in advising as he did and in pleading the joint defence without interpleading:—Held, reversing the judgment appealed from, that T. had followed the approved practice in pleading the joint defence, that he was justified in assuming that the decision In re Rivers was correct, and, therefore, that he was not liable in an action for negligence. Held, also, reversing the judgment appealed from, that neither T. nor the sheriff was liable for tort in charging or advertising the lands for sale, as they were both acting in discharge of their respective duties, that as the proceeding by T. had been taken to secure to his client the fruits of his judgment, no implied indemnity arose on his part toward the sheriff in consequence of the proceedings taken, and, further, that neither the requisition nor the advice given by the advocate could be construed as an express indemnity by him to the sheriff against costs or damages in respect of the execution. In the action for damages, T. counterclaimed, first, for alleged overcharges made by the sheriff in bills previously paid to him for fees and charges in respect of matters in the sheriff's office wherein T. had acted as advocate for parties interested, and secondly, for costs in defending the sheriff in the suits brought by the transferees. In respect to the latter part of the counter claim it did not appear that T. had rendered a signed bill of his costs to the sheriff before filing the counterclaim. Held, that T. could not recover with respect to the first part of his counterclaim, as the moneys, if recoverable, did not belong to him but to the clients for whom he had acted, but that he was entitled to recover the reasonable charges in the second part of his counterclaim, notwithstanding the omission to render a signed bill of costs pursuant to the statute. Appeal allowed with costs.

—Garnishment before execution—Effect of.]—Where a creditor of the plaintif, before execution against the defendant, caused a writ of garnishment to be served on defendant, such writ does not suspend the proceedings under 'the execution, unless the defendant deposits into Court the amount of the judgment with interest and costs.

--Assignment of property -- Seizure of debtor's immovables and arts. 878, 879, C.O.P.J-After the assignment of property by a debtor for the benefit of his creditors, one of the creditors cannot in execution of the judgment that he has obtained against the debtor, cause to be seized and sold, without the consent of the curator of the other creditors, or of the Court, the immovables of such debtors, but the seizure and the sale of these immovables must be made on proceedings by the curator.

-Assignments and preferences-Judgment -Execution-Sheriff-Sale of land.]-Under a writ of fieri facias a sheriff seized the interest of a judgment debtor in certain lands and advertised the interest for sale. Three days prior to the time fixed for the sale the judgment debtor made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors pursuant to the provisions of R.S.O. 1897, c. 147. The assignee gave notice to the sheriff of the assignment and asked for a statement of the costs incurred to that time. No tender of the costs was made or undertaking given to pay them, and the sheriff proceeded with the sale and sold the land to the plaintiff. The assignee, notwithstanding the sheriff's sale, assumed to sell the lands to, and executed a convey ance in favour of, the defendant's son, who allowed the defendant to remain in possession as his agent:-Held, that the assignment for the benefit of creditors did not stand in the way of the sheriff proceeding to sell under the writ of execution, and that the sale by the assignee was nugatory and void and the sheriff's vendee entitled to possession of the land.

-Judge's order for costs-Direction for set-off—Service of allocatur—Production of order.]—Where a Judge's order requires the defendant to pay interlocutory costs to the plaintiffs, and the Judge makes an oral direction that costs previously awarded to the defendant should be set off pro tanto. the deduction should be made before execution issues on the Judge's order. It is not necessary to serve the certificate of taxation of the costs awarded by an order, where the party to pay has been represented upon the taxation and has notice of the amount payable. When execution is issued upon a Judge's order, the order itself or an office copy should be produce? to the officer issuing it; a mere copy is not sufficient, unless such officer is the one who has official custody or access to the book in which the order is entered.

Bradford v. Lasnier, 24 Que. S.C. 53, (Lynch, J.).

-Judicial sale-Irregularities-Addition nade to seized goods on day of sale-Sale en bloc at request of debtor.]-A portion of a debtor's stock-in-trade having been seized under a writ of execution, the bailiff, on the day fixed for the sale, added other goods of the debtor to the list of those seized, and, at the request of the debtor, who was desirous of repurchasing his stock-in-trade, sold the entire stock en bloc. The proceeds of the sale were distributed among the creditors in due course of law. The debtor having, shortly afterwards, made an abandonment of his effects, bis curator, by the present action against the purchaser at the bailiff's sale, sought to have the sale annulled as irregular and void, and the goods returned, or their value paid to the plaintiff:—Held, that, although the sale was irregular, and improperly included goods which had not been seized or advertised for sale, yet the purchaser having acted in good faith and even offered to retransfer the goods, the price being a reasonable one, and the proceeds distributed according to law, and the creditors, moreover, having suffered no injustice in consequence of the irregularity of the proceedings, the sale should not be annulled.

-Failure of sheriff to sell under-Reduction and measure of damages.]-A partnership existing between C. and S. was dissolved, C. taking all the assets and assuming all the liabilities of the firm:-Held that, in the absence of fraud, the goods of the firm were effectually transferred to C., and were subject to an execution placed in the hands of the defendant sheriff with instructions to levy upon and sell the goods of C. Defendant, after having levied upon the goods under plaintiff's execution, sold the goods under two executions placed in his hands subsequently, and paid over the Proceeds to the creditors at whose instance such executions were issued. Held, that he was liable to plaintiff in damages for so doing. Held, that defendant was not to be held liable for depreciation resulting from delay in selling occasioned by the act of the court. Held, that the case was not one for punitive damages, or for other damage than the actual value of the goods at the time of the sale.

-Costs distraits-Consent of attorney-Opposition.]-To enable a party to levy an execution against his attorney for costs distraits de plein droit in favour of the attorney of the execution creditor it is necessary that the consent of the attorney should appear in writing on the fiat, the writ of execution and the proces-verbal of the seizure. If the written consent does not appear as above stated the party levying is not the creditor of these costs and cannot make a seizure in his own name; hence an opposition to the seizure based on such default is well founded and must be maintained (Arts. 555 C.P.Q.; 59 R.P.S.C.) S.C. 297 (Ct. Rev.), reversing 22 S.C. 302. -Nullity of sale in execution-Sale after dismissal of opposition, but before expiry of time for appealing.]-The appellant company having its chief place of business in the Province of Ontario sold machinery to Kelly Bros. of Joliette, reserving the right of ownership thereof. This machinery was put into a mill which, with the nachines, was seized in a suit by the curator of the abandoned estate of Kelly Bros. and of a creditor of one of the insolvents, and appellant filed an opposition which was contested by the respondent and was dismissed by the Superior Court. About four months after the Superior Court judgment the present appellant took an appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench which maintained the opposition, this judgment being affirmed on further appeal by the Supreme Court (27 Cam. S.C.R. 406). Nevertheless in the meantime, between the judgment dismissing the opposition and the appeal, the execution creditor obtained a writ of venditioni exponas from the prothonotary by the intervention of a prete-nom of the respondent, the curator caused a decree to be made by the Judge for the sale of the mill and machines. The sale took place sub-sequent to the appeal, but the appellant had no knowledge of it till after having obtained the Supreme Court judgment and, at such sale, the respondent became purchaser of the mill and machines and subsequently disposed of them:-Held, reversing the judgment of DeLorimer, J. (Blanchet, J., dissenting), that the respondent, to which the appellant had made known his ownership of the machines and the nullity of the seizure thereof which had been made, could not by obtaining the decree and becoming purchaser, make title against the appellant, and that, by disposing of the machines as belonging to the bank, the respondent became responsible for their value towards the appellant.

Homestead Act—Thing seized of a value over $500.]—Held. in an interpleader issue, that the execution debtor was entitled, as an exemption under the Homestead Act, to $500 out of $1,000 realized by the sheriff on the sale of a steamship, the only exigible personalty of the debtor. — Sale by sheriff—Conditional debt—Opposition by execution debtor.]—Upon a sale by the sheriff the execution debtor has the right of contesting the collocation of a hypothecary creditor whose debt is conditional but who is collocated as an ordinary creditor, because, if the condition does not happen, the creditor having received the money and furnished no security as required from a conditional creditor, the debtor would possibly be left without recourse for the money thus paid over.

-Lien of execution creditor-Expiry of Writ-Preservation of Lien-Notice-Bona fide purchaser for value.]-In proceedings for partition under the Partition Act by a tenant in common, the fact that a judg-ment creditor having a fi. fa against the lands of another tenant in common in the hands of the sheriff is made a party respondent to the petition and that an order allowing the petition has been made and a certificate thereof registered is not sufficient to preserve a lien on the debtor's undivided share, the fi. fa. having in the meantime expired. The allowance of a retition has not the force of a judgment or order establishing the claims of any of the parties. At the date of the filing by the plaintiff of a petition for partition the defendant company had in the hands of the sheriff a writ of execution against the lands of the defendant L., who was entitled to an undivided interest in the lands sought to be partitioned, and their lien by virtue thereof was still in existence at the date of the allowance of the petition to which they were made parties, and the registration of a certificate thereof, but their writ, not having been renewed, expired before the date of a conveyance by the defendant L. to the defendant G., a bona fide purchaser for value:-Held, that the company's lien was not preserved by the proceedings taken before the convey ance to G., and that she was not affected with notice of the lien. The company were bound to keep alive the lien which they had at law, at least until there was some act or declaration of the Court recognizing their claim as an existing one against the —Seizure of books of account—Assignment of debts.]—A ledger or account book containing a list of debts which have been resigned in writing and which are described in the writing and which are described in the writing as "All the debts in a certain ledger marked A," is a mere incident to the debts, and is no longer a chattel as it was before the entries were made in it. It is, therefore, not seizable in execution against a judgment debtor, the former owner of the debts, as against the person to whom they have been so assigned by him.

-Exemptions Ordinance-Sale of homestead-Mortgage taken in part payment.] -The Exemptions Ordinance, C.O. 1898, c. 27, s. 2, sub-s. 9, declares the following real property of an execution debtor and his family free from seizure by virtue of all writs of execution, namely: (9) "The homestead, provided the same is not more than one hundred and sixty acres; in case it be more the surplus may be sold subject to any lien or incumbrance thereon: '-Held, that mortgage moneys, forming part of the proceeds of the sale of the defendant's homestead, do not come within this provision. This provision exempts the homestead only so long as it remains a homestead, and where the debtor has voluntarily disposed of it the language of the ordinance is not wide enough to extend the exemption to the proceeds, unless they are reinvested in other exempt property before a creditor has acquired a charge or lien —Gift from husband to wife—Possession— Married Woman's Property Act.]—The defendant purchased certain pictures between 1895 and 1898, and bringing them home handed them to his wife, telling her he gave them to her. She had one framed in a frame given her by her mother, and all were hung up in the house occupied by her and her husband. An execution creditor of the defendant caused the sheriff to levy on them:-Held, that since the Married Woman's Property Act, 1884 (R S.O. 1897, e. 163, s. 3), a married woman is under 1.0 disability as to receiving and holding personal as well as real property by direct gift or transfer from her husband; and that here the subsequent possession of the pictures was the wife's, although the house was occupied by her husband and herself. Held, also, that the effect of sub-s. 4 of s. 5 of R.S.O. 1897, c. 163, enacting that a woman married since 1889 may hold her property free from the debts or control of her husband, "but this sub-section shall not extend to any property received by a married woman from her husband during coverture," is not to make property received by the wife from the husband during marriage liable to the husband's debts.

—Sale by auction—Sale of real estate in several blocks.]—The sheriff cannot, under the provisions of Arts. 6 and 7 of the tariff and Art. 706 C.C.P., claim more than a fee of fifty cents for each additional immovable included in a seizure, and if different lots seized merely constitute one and the same immovable property he has only a right to charge a fee of fifty cents for each additional lot seized.

Gault v. Duford & The Sheriff of Montreal, 5 Que. P.R. 353.

-Reformation of judgment after opposition-Writ of execution-Return by Sheriff -Writ remitted by order of court.]-On 29th June, 1900, plaintiff obtained judgment against defendant, ex parte, for $500 damages and $78.36 costs. On 25th July, 1901, plaintiff seized lot No. 1010 St. Sauveur, in execution of this judgment for debt, interest and costs. On 3rd September, 1901, opposition to judgment was filed and certificate thereof left with the sheriff who, on 4th September, made his return on the writ accordingly. The opposition denied nearly all the allegations of the declaration in the action and confessed judgment for $50 and costs of an action for $1,000. On 15th April, 1902, the second judgment was affirmed, on review. On 17th July, 1902, the plaintiff caused the same immovable to be seized anew for the costs granted by the second judgment. On 21st August, 1902, the defendant paid these latter costs and obtained a discharge of this second seizure. On the same day (21st August, 1902), the opposant, Laberge, bought the lot from the defendant. On 22nd August, the sheriff on request of the plaintiff stayed his proceedings and returned the second writ. On 23rd August, the plaintiff's attorney delivered the first writ of execution again to the sheriff with an indorsement to the effect that the judgment of $500 had been reduced to $50, and that he required execution merely for the $50. On 10th September, 1902, Laberge made an opposition afin d'annuler as proprietor of the lot of which the sheriff gave notice of sale. The plaintiff contested this opposition. On 16th June, 1903, the Superior Court dismissed the opposition. The Court of Re view reversed this latter judgment and held (1), that the seizure in virtue of the writ of execution of the ex parte judgment for $500 had ceased to be valid and bind ing when that judgment was reformed on opposition by a second judgment which maintained the opposition and condemned the defendant only to pay the $50 which was confessed to be due. (2) Such seizure having become effete could not be executed under the same writ for the latter amount and the defendant could dispose of the lot notwithstanding such seizure after the judgment maintaining the opposition. (3) A writ of execution which has been returned into Court by the sheriff upon the filing of a certificate of production of an opposition to judgment, cannot, afterwards, be taken out of the record of which it forms part for re-delivery to the sheriff with instructions to continue his proceedings thereon without authorization of the Court or a Judge.

Demers v. Defresne, 5 Que. P.R. 465.

-Seizure of immovable-Opposition a fin d'annuler.]-The intervenant, having obtained judgment against one Vendette, caused to be seized under execution thereon, an immovable of which the latter was in possession and the plaintiff opposed the seizure by opposition a fin d'annuler, claiming to own the immovable by purchase from Vendette. The intervenant contested the opposition alleging the sale to the plaintiff to be fraudulent. The opposition was maintained by the Superior Court whose judgment, however, was reversed by the Court of Review, which dismissed the opposition, confirmed the seizure, and ordered the immovable to be sold under writ of venditioni exponas. In pursuance of this decree the immovable was sold to one Champagne, and sold by him to the defendant. After the judicial sale, but within the time limited for appeal, the plaintiff appealed to the Queen's Bench from the judgment of the Court of Review, and deeiring to give security for the costs of the appeal only, signed the declaration required by Art. 1214 C.P.Q. consenting to execution of the judgment against her The Court of Queen's Bench reversed the judgment of the Court of Review and restored that of the Superior Court. The plaintiff then brought the present action against the defendant for revendication of the immovable ordered to be sold, and the intervenant, seizing creditor, intervened and contested such action:—Held, that the seizure having been made against a person in possession animo domini and the decree pronounced after all the legal formalities had been observed, and before the plaintiff instituted her appeal, such decree was valid and deprived the plaintiff of her right of ownership which right was reduced to a claim for the price for which the preperty was sold.

Re Woodall, 8 O.L.R. 288 (D.C.).

-Sale of property en bloc-Discretion of sheriff.]-A quantity of gold mining machinery, consisting of boilers, engine, stamps, etc., was sold by the sheriff en bloc, under execution, against plaintiff company:—Held, that the method of sale, whether en bloc or otherwise, is a matter in the sound discretion of the sheriff, to be determined in each case by the particular facts, and that the question, whether, in view of the particular facts, he has acted oppressively, must be determined in an action against him. Also, that the equitable rule that where there is an adequate remedy at law, the court will not exercise its equitable powers, was applicable to the state of affairs in this case. Quaere, whether, even where the action of the sheriff is oppressive, the sale can be set aside as against an innocent purchaser, as irregular and void. Part of the property sold consisted of machinery ordinarily used in connection with a gold mining mill. The evidence showed that the boiler could only be lifted out of its place by pulling off the top of the wall and that portion of the wallover the lugs of the boiler; also, that the mortar was connected to a foundation of cement and timber extending down to bed rock by a number of iron bolts 30 inches in length. Held, reversing the judgment of the trial Judge on this point, that the mill was a fixture and part of the real estate, and therefore not liable to be levied upon and sold by the sheriff as personal property. Held, also, that the effect of the abandonment of their action as against the sheriff, by plaintiffs, was not to release their action against the remaining defendants.

Liscomb Falls Mining Co. v. Bishop, 36 N.S.R. 395.

—Interpleader—Interest of execution debtor as co-owner.]—A sheriff acting under the plaintiff's execution entered upon the lands of the claimant and seized hay and oats alleged to be the property of the execution debtor. The owner of the land asserted that he was absolute owner of all the hay and oats seized. The execution creditor alleged that the execution debtor was entitled to a one-half interest therein.—Held, that the sheriff was entitled to an interpleader order; the issue to be framed so as to determine whether the execution debtor had any, and if so what, interest in the hay and oats seized.

Lucas v. Holliday, 8 O.L.R. 541 (D.C.).

-Sheriff - Seizure of land - Mortgage-Prior assignment - Contestation.] - The right of a sheriff to an interpleader order depends upon either having the subject matter of the interpleader in his possession or having the right under an execution accompanied with the intention to take possession. And where an execution debtor, who was a mortgagee of lands, had assigned the mortgage, which was not registered until after the notice of seizure required by s. 24 of the Execution Act R.S.O. 1897, c. 77:-Held, that the mortgage could not be seized under the provisions of s. 23 et seq. of that Act, and that the sheriff could not proceed until the execution creditors had in an action obtained a declaration that the assignment was void and that he could not interplead.

Keenan v. Osborne, 7 O.L.R. 134.

-Land exemptions-Conveyance in trust.] -The defendant Mrs. Rea who lived on the property in question, conveyed it to her son without consideration because she thought she might thereby prevent the sale of the land to realize the plaintiff's claim, and both she and her son admitted that fact in this action and that the property was the mother's and that the son had no interest in it. The plaintiff sought a declaration that the land belonged to the mother and that the son held it only as trustee for her and asked a sale of the land to satisfy the lien of his registered judgment:-Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration asked for but not to a sale, as the property was exempt under s. 9 of the Judgments Act. R.S.M. 1902, c. 91, it being the actual residence and home of the judgment debtor, and not worth more than $1,500. Roberts v. Hartley (1902), 14 M.R. 284, and Merchant's Bank v. McKenzie, (1900), 13 M.R. 19, distinguished on the ground that there both the grantor and grantee united in asserting the reality of the transfer and neither alleged nor proved any trust in favor of the grantor.

Logan v. Rea, 14 Man. R. 543.

—Seizure of immovable—Sale subject to charges—Insufficient description.]—When an immovable seized is announced for sale subject to charges not sufficiently described—in this case to charges created by deed of which the date was mentioned, and the name of the notary with no statement of the nature of the charges—the defendant against whom the seizure was made may oppose the sale by way of opposition afin d'annular.

Corbeil v. Dangenais, Q.R. 13 K.B. 205.

—Exemption from seizure—Carter—Agri culturist.]—A contractor who uses his horse in carrying on the work under contract, is not a carter, and cannot, as such, oppose the seizure of the horse. A debtor eagaging in divers occupations can claim exemption from seizure only of the implements imployed in his main business. Exemption of two horses or two working oxen is only given by law to the agriculturist whose chief occupation consists in the culture of his farm.

-Seizures-Rights of two guardians.]-The second seizing creditor is only bound to appoint the same custodian as the first when the debtor has been dispossessed of the effects seized. The two custodians appointed on different seizures who have allowed the debtor to retain possession of the effects may, either of them, take possession at any time before sale. If they both wish to have possession, the court, on petition therefor, will determine their respective rights, granting such possession however, unless sufficient grounds against it are presented to the custodian appointed in the case in which the sale should have first taken place.

— Seizure of tools — Exemption — Opposition.]—The workman who demands the withdrawal of a seizure of necessary tools should not ask for costs against the seizing creditor, as the bailiff making the seizure could not distinguish between tools which the debtor was entitled to reclaim and other tools.

Cunningham v. Guilbault, 6 Que. P.R. 75.

--Effectual levy-Claimant's action for trespass.j-Goods seized by the sheriff under an execution, at the suit of B. v. R., were claimed by E. R., the wife of R., as her property. After a formal levy it was arranged between the sheriff and E. R. that she should hold the goods for the sheriff until they were required for sale under the execution. After the seizure. and before sale, a suit was commenced by E. R. against the sheriff, and a declaration was filed containing two counts: 1st, for seizing, taking away and converting the plaintiff's goods; 2nd, for detention. Part of the goods seized were sold, and part released:-Held, that a verdict for the full value of the goods sold was proper, though the sale did not take place until after the commencement of the action. That, as far as the sheriff was concerned, the levy was effectual and complete.

Rideout v. Tibbits, 36 N.B.R. 281.

—Possession—Undivided property.]—An execution creditor can only cause to be seized the movable property in possession of the debtor. A third party, one of the owners of undivided movables seized in proceedings against his co-owner, can prevent the sale of the same to the extent of his rights therein.

Turner v. Bradshaw, 6 Que. P.R. 184, (Mathieu, J.).

—Plaintiff acting for bailiff in seizing under execution.]—Under sections 82 and 83 of the County Courts Act. R.S.M. 1902, c. 38, before the amendment of section 83 at the session of 1904, a seizure under execution made by the execution creditor himself under the authority of the bailiff was not unlawful or invalid (Richards, J., dissenting). Where wood piles were seized under execution and notices of the seizure attached to the different piles, and a person living near asked by the plaintiff to look after them, and a week or two later the bailiff came and placed the same person in charge, it was held that there was no abandonment of the seizure.

—Judicial sale—Interest of owner.]—After the sale under deeree of the immovable of which he had been owner, the debtor has no interest to entitle him to have the immovable relieved of a hypothec which he claimed to have been illegally registered, and could not, therefore, maintain an action for such purpose.

—Necessaries—Gifts to wife.]—A fur coat may be a necessity for a man of a certain age and social standing, and, therefore, non-seizable under the provisions of Art. 598 C.P.Q. The right of retention claimed by one who has repaired such a coat does not authorize the creditor to cause it to be seized under writ of execution. A man besized under writ of execution. A man being obliged to furnish clothes for his wife, necessary garments given to his wife during coverture do not come within the prohibition as to husband and wife conferring benefits on each other, and these garments from time to time delivered to the wife become her individual property, and are therefore not liable to seizure for her husband's debts.

-Homestead exemption.]-The Exemption Ordinance, c. 45, R.O. 1888, s. 1, sub-s. 9, exempted from seizure under execution the homestead, to the extent of 160 acres, of the execution debtor. This sub-section having been declared ultra vires of the Legislative Assembly in Re Claxton, 1 Terr. L.R. 282, the Dominion Parliament by 57 & 58 Vict. (1894), c. 29 (D.), declared that the territorial legislation on this subject "shall hereafter be deemed to be valid, and shall have force and effect as law."-Held, that an execution filed against the homestead of the defendant prior to the passing of the validating statute constituted-but that an execution against the lands of the defendant filed subsequently to the passing of the said Act, did not constitute—a charge upon the homestead.

-Renewal-Seizure-Registration of writ -Transfer in fraud of creditors.]-The Judicature Ordinance (No. 6 of 1893), s. 327, enacted: "Every writ of execution shall bear date of the day of its issue, and shall remain in force for one year from its date (and no longer, if unexecuted, unless renewed), but such writ may, at any time before its expiration, and so on from time to time during the continuance of the renewed writ, be renewed by the party issuing it for one year from the date of such renewal, etc. This section was amend ed by Ordinance No. 5 of 1894, s. 12 (which came into effect 7th September, 1894), by substituting "two years" for "one year" in both instances:—Held, that the amend-ment could not be construed as reviving or enabling an execution to be revived which had expired before the amendment was passed, nor as continuing in force for two years an execution which had been renewed only for one year. The registration by the sheriff of a writ of execution against lands in the Land Titles Office under s. 94 of the Territories Real Property Act, as amended by s. 16 of 51 Vict. c. 20, cannot be construed as a seizure, and is not sufficient to continue the execution in force without renewal. An execution issued on 20th October, 1893, was renewed on 20th October, 1894. Held, that the renewai was made in time and the execution continued in force. In an action to set aside a conveyance of lands as a fraud upon creditors, if the action is not brought on behalf of all the creditors of the debtor, the plaintiffs must show that they have obtained both judgment and execution, and if their executions have lapsed for want of renewal before the commencement of the action, the action will fail. A. D. made a homestead entry on certain lands, but by mistake his homestead duties were performed on adjoining lands. The government cancelled his entry, but agreed to sell the lands to the nominee of A. D. at $1.00 an acre. In pursuance of this agreement the lands were sold by the government to one Alloway, as A. D.'s nominee, and Alloway received a patent for the same:—Held, that Alloway held the lands as trustee for A. D., and that a transfer of the lands from Alloway to the defendant, the wife of A. D., for which the defendant gave no consideration, and which was made at a time when A. D. was, to the knowledge of the defendant, in insolvent circumstances, should be set aside as fraudulent and void. A letter written by A. D. to one of the plaintiffs subsequently to the date of the transfer attacked, was held to be inadmissible as evidence against the defendant.

-Opposition afin de charge-Order for security.]-An order requiring opposants afin de charge to furnish security that lands seized, if sold in execution subject to the charge, should realize sufficient to satisfy the claim of the execution creditor was held to be interlocutory and non-appealable (33 Can. S.C.R. 340). Subsequently, upon default to furnish such security, the opposition was dismissed. On appeal from the judgment of the Court of King's Bench affirming the order for the dismissal of the opposition:-Held, that, under the circumstances, the order dismissing the opposition was the only one which could be properly made, and that the merits of the former order could not be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment.

Desaulniers v. Payette, 35 Can. S.C.R. 1.

-Seizure by notice-Exemption from seizure-Option of debtor.]—A seizure of goods under an execution and a notice that goods 20 miles away in the same bailiwick belonging to the same execution debtor are under seizure do not operate as a seizure of the latter goods. Quere, whether a debtor's right of exemption is absolute or a privilege to be exercised within two days: Sehl v. Humphreys (1886), 1 B.C.R. (Pt. 2) 257 and in re Ley et al. (1900), 7 B.C.R. 94, questioned in this regard. Semble, goods cannot be seized by telephone.

Dickinson v. Robertson, 11 B.C.R. 155.

-Sale of goods under fi. fa .- Liability of sheriff for acts of his bailiff-Satisfaction of judgment.]-1. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 21 of The Executions Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 58, a sale of goods by a sheriff's bailiff under fi, fa, was, under the circumstances of the case, held to have been good, although made immediately after seizure and without the notice required by that section. 2. A sheriff is responsible for all money realized by his bailiff by a sale under a fi. fa., though the money be stolen from the bailiff as a result of his carelessness and never comes to the sheriff's hands. 3. A seizure by a sheriff of sufficient goods to satisfy a judgment in part will be a discharge to the debtor as to such part. 4. When the goods seized are subject to a chattel mortgage the sale of the goods themselves, instead of only the equity of redemption, will be good unless objected to by the mortgagee. 5. It is not an absolute rule that a sheriff's sale under execution must be for ready money; but, if the sheriff does not comply with such rule, he will be responsible for the money if he fails to collect it. 6. The fact that the sheriff failed to comply with section 25 of The Executions Act, by advertising the amount realized and keeping the money to be distributed rateably, is no answer to the defendant's claim to have such amount credited upon the execution against him, when nearly three years have elapsed and there is no evidence that any other execution against the defendant has been placed in the sheriff's hands.

Massey-Harris Co. v. Mollond, 15 Man. R. 364, Dubuc, C.J., and Perdue, J.

Creditors Relief Ordinance-Execution -Expiry-Renewal - Priorities.] - Held, (1) The priorities of several executions against lands is not affected by the provisions of s. 94 T.R.P. Act, and that therefore such priorities are not determined by the order in which copies-execution and accompanying memoranda are deposited with the registrar, but by the dates of delivery to the sheriff. (2) The distribution of the proceeds of the sale was governed by the provisions of the Creditors' Relief Ordinance. (3) Although no question was raised before the Judge of first instance, as to the effect of the Creditors' Relief Ordinance, and it was there conceded that the respective execution creditors had the right to have the proceeds of the sale applied on the executions in the order of their legal priority, this could not be construed as a consent on the part of the claimants to the fund that it should be disposed of in the same manner as if the ordinance were not in force, but merely as a contention on their part that the whole fund should be applied on their executions, and in the absence of consent on the part of the sheriff and all the parties interested in the fund, the provisions of the ordinance must govern its disposal.

Limoges v. Campbell, 2 Terr., L.R. 356.

-Writ of attachment-Abandonment of seizure-Estoppel.]-A writ of attachment against the goods of M. in the possession of S. was placed in the sheriff's hands and goods seized under it. After the seizure the goods, with the consent of the plaintiff's solicitor, were left by the sheriff in charge of S., who undertook that the same should be held intact. The sheriff made a return to the writ, that he had seized the goods. The sheriff subsequently seized and sold the goods under executions of other creditors. In an action against the sheriff: -Held, reversing the judgment of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, that the act of leaving the goods in the possession of S was not an abandonment by the plaintiff's solicitor of the seizure, and if it was the sheriff was estopped by his return to the writ from raising the question. Held, also, that the act of plaintiff's solicitor acting as attorney for S. in a suit connected with the same goods was not evidence of an intention to discontinue proceedings under the attachment.

Duffus v. Creighton (1887), 1 S.C. Cas.

-Sheriff's sale of lands-Opposition afia de charge-Default in furnishing security -Res judicata.]-In proceedings for the sale of lands under execution, the appellants filed an opposition to secure a charge thereon and, under the provisions of articles 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a Judge of the Superior Court ordered that the opposants should within a time limited furnish security that the lands, if sold subject to the charge, should realize sufficient to satisfy the claim of the execution creditor. On failure to give security as required the opposition was dismissed, and, on appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, the judgment dismissing the opposition was offirmed (35 Can. S.C.R. 1). Subsequently the proceedings in execution were continued and, on the eve of the date advertised for the sale by the sheriff, the opposants filed another opposition to secure the same charge, offered to furnish the necessary security, and obtained an order staying the sale. The judgment appealed from maintained a subsequent order made under art. 651 C.P.Q. which revoked the order staying the sale and dismissed the opposition. Held, that, the judgment dismissing the opposition on default to furnish the required security was chose jugée against the appellants and deprived them of any right to give such security or take further proceedings to secure their alleged charge upon the lands under seizure. Per Taschereau, C.J.—In a case like the present an appeal to the Superior Court of Canada would be quashed, on motion by the respondent, as being taken in bad faith. Per Girouard, J .- As the order by the judge of first instance was made in the exercise of judicial discretion, the Supreme Court of Canada, under section twenty-seven of the Act, was deprived of jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.

Fontaine v. Payette, 36 Can. S.C.R. 613.

—Execution de bonis—Bailiff's return—Motion to compel same.]—A bailiff who has made a sale of movables is bound to make a return of the writ and the proceedings had thereon, and at least the duty due to the government, and he cannot make the payment of the government duty by the party asking for the said return, a condition precedent thereto.

Dubuc v. Duclos, 7 Que. P.R. 168 (Davidson, J.).

-Exemptions from seizure-Debtor who has ceased to carry on trade.]-1. The privilege granted the debtor by Art. 598 C.C.P., paragraph 10, of selecting and withdrawing from seizure "tools and implements and other chattels ordinarily used in his profession, art or trade to the value of $200," only exists while the debtor is carrying on his profession, art or trade. When he has ceased to do so, his right to make the selection is at an end, and, therefore, his creditor can have no right, under Art. 1031 C.C., to make such selection. 2. In any case the right of the creditor, under the last mentioned article, is merely to bring back certain effects to the patrimony of the debtor, for the benefit of his creditors generally, and cannot be exercised for the exclusive benefit of the creditor seeking to avail himself of the provisions of the -Moneys made under execution-Reversal of judgment-Liability to refund-Interost.]-Under a judgment against the de fendant, the plaintiff issued execution and realized a sum of money which was in his hands when the judgment was reversed, and he became liable to repay it to the defendant. The money, however, was claimed by another execution creditor, and the plaintiff gave notice of an application for an interpleader order, but did not proceed with it. By consent of all parties the money was paid to the solicitor for the defendant, but without interest:-Held, that the plaintiff was liable for interest, notwithstanding the conflict as to who was entitled to the money, for he could have protected himself by paying the money into court or obtaining a waiver of the right to interest; and the interest should be at the legal rate of 5 per cent., for the same reason.

-Execution-Exemption from seizure-Exemption by will-Registration-Substitation of property.]-The legal axiom that goods in possession of a debtor are the common pledge of his creditors only creates a presumption which may be rebutted. Therefore, a provision in a will that property devised shall be exempt from seizure can be opposed to a creditor of the devisee notwithstanding that the will was not registered until after the debt was contracted. The following clause in a will, "my intention in making the bequests aforesaid being that the said property or that by which it shall be represented shall be insaissable the same being given to secure a provision for the support of the said beneficiaries'' is not contrary to the pro-visions of Art. 599 of the Code of Civil Procedure pars. 3 and 4, as the law empowers a donor or testator to declare exempt from seizure not only the immovables devised by the will but also those acquired in substitution therefor.

—Chose in action—Book debts.]—Rule 356 of the Judicature Ordinance provides that writs of execution against goods and chattels shall bind "all the goods and chattels" of the judgment debtor, book debts are bound. Rule 359 sets out what character of choses in action may be seized under execution, and they consist of "any money or bank notes, any cheques, bills of exchange, promissory notes, bonds, mortgages, specialties, or other securities for money belonging to the execution debtor.' Held that book debts are not liable to seizure under those rules or at common law. Jobin-Marrin Co. v. Betts, 1, W.L.R. 369 (Wetmore, J.).

—The description in the notice of sale, published by the sheriff, of a railway by name and mentioning the route covered by stating the points of departure and termination and also the numbers, according to the registered cadastres of the several lots of which it is composed, is sufficient especially when the seizing creditor has obtained an order, under Art. 754 C.P.Q. for the sale of the said property en bloc.

—Judgment — Transfer — Execution in name of original plaintiff.]—The transferee of a judgment has a right to sue out an execution in the name of the original plaintiff. An opposition afin d'annuler founded on the fact that the judgment was transferred for a consideration which was paid by the transferee, will be dismissed for want of interest in the opposant.

Deserres v. Atlantic & Lake Superior Ry. Co., 7 Que. P.R. 383.

—Sale of immovables—New advertisement and new grouping of lots.]—A new grouping of lots in the sheriff's notice of sale, Canada Industrial Co. v. Kensington Land Co., 7 Que. P.R. 463 (Davidson, J.).

—Building on substituted lands.]—The ownership of a building may be in a person other than the owner of the land on which it is constructed. Art. 415 of the Civil Code establishes a rule different from that of the Roman law, ædificium solo eedit, which it superceded. Consequently, a house built by a substitute on substituted lands, declared exempt from seizure, belongs to him, and may be seized and sold under execution by his creditors.

Lacombe v. Brunet, Q.R. 14 K.B. 465.

—Land Titles Act—Execution—Equitable mortgage—Unregistered charge—Priority.]
—Notwithstanding that by the Land Titles Act, 1894, differing in this respect from the Territories Real Property Act, an execution is declared to be an 'instrument,' the principle established in Wilkie v. Jellett, 2 Terr, L.R. 133, 26 S.C.R. 283, still applies; and therefore an unregistered equitable mortgage takes priority over a writ of execution against lands delivered to the Registrar subsequently to the creation of the equitable mortgage.

—Sale under execution—Warranty—Obligations of prosecuting creditor,]—(1) The purchaser at a forced sale of the rights of the judgment debtor in an immovable who sells them, as they are conveyed to him in the sheriff's title, is bound to indemnify the buyer for loss from eviction of the immovable by reason of its never having belonged to the judgment debtor. (2) The prosecuting creditor is only bound to warrant the purchaser at a forced sale against eviction by reason of informalities in the proceedings or of the property scied not ostensibly belonging to the debtor.

which he appears to be owner thereof, is reputed to possess them animo domini within the meaning of Art. 699 C.P.Q., more particularly when such lands are uncultivated and that no person may have ostensibly done any act of possession in respect thereof. Consequently, where such lands have been seized and sold in execution for taxes charged thereon, at the suit of a municipal corporation against such ostensible owner, the adjudication is valid and a third party who claims a better title than that of the execution debtor cannot have it annulled in an action against the municipality. (2) An unregistered right to real property is of the class of claims which are purged by judicial sales. (Charbonneau, J., dissented.)

—Writ of seizure—Renewal.]—When a writ of seizure of movables and immovables (de bonis et de terris) is issued on execution of a judgment it remains in force so long as it is not satisfied which prevents the issue of a new writ. In consequence the seizure of an immovable under a second writ issued before the first has run out (eruisé) is null.

-Sheriff's sale-Erroneous designation of the immovable.]-A party has no right to have a sheriff's sale set aside for the reason that the notices of sale were for the whole lot whereas the party whose property was sold, was the owner of but onehalf of the lot; the buyer being the only one who could complain.

Orr v. Barry, 10 Que. P.R. 34.

-Judgments Act, B.C.-Non-registration of conveyance-Execution debtor.]-Execution creditors registered their judgment in April, 1907, against the lands of the judgment debtor, pursuant to the Judgments Act. Previous to this, in January, 1906, the debtor conveyed a certain lot to plaintiff, who neglected, through ignorance of s. 74 of the Land Registry Act, to register his conveyance until August, 1907, when he found this judgment registered against the lot. In an action to set aside this cloud upon his title, the learned triai Judge ruled that s. 74, making registration of conveyances a sine qua non to the passing of any title, at law or in equity, to lands, governed:—Held, on appeal, that the Judgments Act gives the judgment creditor only a right to register against the interest in lands possessed by the judgment debtor; and that in this case the debtor, having conveyed the land to plaintiff so long before the execution creditors judgment was obtained, was a dry trustee of the land for plaintiff. -Exemption from seizure-Tools of trade. -The horse used by a butcher in delivering meat to his customers does not come under the designation of "tools, implements and other 'chattels' " in par. 10 of Art. 598 C.C.P. An opposition with the object of having it withdrawn from the movables seized under execution, on the ground that it was employed in carrying on his business, should be dismissed on motion therefor under Art. 651 C.C.P. Lecavalier v. Brunelle, Q.R. 33 S.C. 145

(Ct. Rev.), 9 Que. P.R. 209.

-Execution of judgment-Payment of debt-Seizure for costs-Opposition.]-Where a judgment orders payment of a sum with costs the debtor, by sending to his creditor by mail a cheque for the debt is not discharged from liability for the costs. The seizure of movables four days later in the name of the creditor is therefore valid for the amount due. A telegram from the creditor saying "have instructed solicitor to withdraw" is not a remission of the costs nor an engagement by him to pay them. Therefore, an opposition by the debtor to the seizure based on payment should be dismissed.

Canada Wood Specialty Co. v. Henry,

Q.R. 33 S.C. 140 (Ct. Rev.).

- Staying execution pending appeal and trial of counterclaim.]-By s. 70(2) of the Ontario Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 51, a Judge is disabled from sitting as a member of the Divisional Court hearing an appeal from a judgment or order made by himself, and he has therefore no jurisdiction, after the setting down of an appeal from his judgment, to make an order that execution shall not be stayed. In an action for goods sold and delivered the defendant counterclaimed for trespass. The plaintiff recovered judgment at the trial of his claim, and the trial of the counterclaim was adjourned. The defendant appealed to the Divisional Court, on the ground that the amount for which the plaintiff had recovered judgment should be reduced by $214.50 as damages for breach of warranty:-Held, on application, under Con. Rule 827 (2), to the Judge at the trial, to stay execution on the judgment, that he had no right to make any order, but that as the order was a proper one on the merits, it was ordered by the Divisional Court that execution should not be stayed save as to the $214.50, as the counterclaim was not one which should have been joined with the action, and it was not shown that if a verdict were obtained on the counterclaim, there would be any danger of the amount not being recoverable from the plaintiff; and that, as to the $214.50, it was proper to stay execution, notwith-standing affidavits on behalf of the plaintiff of his belief that the defendant's appeal was merely for delay, and as to his uncertainty in respect to the defendant's financial ability to pay the claim, there being no suggestion or evidence that by staying the execution to this extent the plaintiff would pobably lose his claim. -Life rent-Alimentary provision-Cessation of payment-Rights against third party.]-A life rent, payable as part of the price of an immovable sold by a father to his son, cannot be held free from liability to seizure on the ground that it is an alimentary provision. Such exemption could not have been effectually stipulated for being in the nature of an onerous title. Evidence that the creditor of a life rent payable by his son had taken up his abode with the latter since which time he has not demanded payment does not establish extinction, by abandonment, of the obligation to pay as against a third party who has taken out a saisie arrêt.

VII. c. 7, s. 18 (O.), a fi. fa. goods does not bind goods of the execution debt or, which at the time of the delivery of the writ to the sheriff are subject to an overdue chattel mortgage, until actual seizure under the writ, and a bona fide purchaser from the execution debtor, before seizure. will acquire his interest in the property free from the execution.

give security shall be paid by the party asking leave to put in such security. Rennie v. Mace, 9 Que. P.F. 165.

Seizure-Costs of caretaking.]-When a bailiff, after the seizure of certain animals, has appointed a guardian to take care of them, he cannot afterwards apply for monies necessary for the safekeeping of these animals; he has no interest to justify this application, for his responsibility ceased when he appointed the guardian at defendant's suggestion and without objection by plaintiff.

Boulanger v. Martineau, 9 Que. P.R. 405.

-Exemption-Buildings.]-Where the property seized under a writ of execution against goods consisted of a blacksmith's shop in the occupation of the execution debtor:-Held, that the question whether the shop was or was not part of the freehold could not be raised upon an interpleader by the sheriff. Held, also, that the building was not exempt from seizure by virtue of the Exemptions Ordinance, not being the residence of the execution debtor or a building used in connection with his residence.

Eastern Townships Bank v. Drysdale, 6 Terr. L.R. 236.

-Homestead - Exemption - Proceeds of under mortgage.]-An execution against lands does not bind the homestead of the execution debtor, and mortgagees of the land subsequent to the executions are entitled to sell it free from the executions. Such a mortgagee may invoke the provisions of the Exemption Ordinance for the purpose of securing his priority. The sale of a homestead under a mortgage is a compulsory sale and consequently the proceeds after payment of the mortgages are exempt from seizure under execution to the same extent as the land. The rights of the par ties appearing to be interested in the land nay be determined upon an originating summons for sale under a mortgage.

-Petition to set aside sheriff's sale-Seiz ure super non domino-Registration.]-When a party wishes to have the seizure. sale, adjudication and sheriff's title of an immovable set aside and declared null as having been made super non domino, he must proceed by a petition in nullity of sale; an exception to the form alleging that the plaintiff should have made an opposition to the seizure will be dismissed.

-Contest between assignee and receiver by way of equitable execution of fund.]-Where the application of a judgment creditor for a receiver by way of equitable execution of a fund is opposed by a party claiming under a prior equitable assignment by proceedings (e.g., chamber sum-mons) analogous to interpleader, the assignor is not a necessary party. A valid equitable assignment may be made by parol and may be enforced notwithstanding J. A. (1873), s. 25, sub-s. 6 (England). When moneys have been paid out of a fund under an order which is subsequently reversed, the party who has received them may be ordered to refund them, in whole er in part, under "Judicature Ordinance," s. 8, sub-s. 5.

-Homestead-Exemption for benefit of execution debtor and his family-Contest between execution creditors and mortgagees.] -The exemption of a homestead from seizure under execution is for the benefit of the debtor and his family only, and the claim of execution creditors to the proceeds of the sale of the land will consequently be preferred to that of mortgagees subsequent to the registration of the writs of execution where the execution debtor can in no event have any interest in such

-Homestead - Exemption - Advertisement of sale under execution.]-A quarter section of land, although all the land owned by an execution debtor, is not his "homestead" within paragraph 9 of s. 22 of the Exemptions Ordinance, where he has not eccupied it for nine years and appears to have no animus revertendi. Where the advertisement of a sale under an execution had been published in a weekly paper, and had appeared in every issue of the paper published during two months, but there had been no issue in two weeks of the period:-Held, that, it not appearing that the sale of the property had been affected in any way, there had been a sufficient compliance with the provisions of rule 364 of the Judicature Ordinance. Proceedings to confirm a sale of lands under a writ of execution are proceedings under the Land Titles Act, 1894, not in the cause in which the writ issued, but that the proceedings are entitled in the cause and not "In the matter of the Land Titles Act," is nevertheless no objection to them. An affidavit of execution of a transfer upon a sale under a writ of execution sworn before the clerk of the Court, is bad, but leave may be given to reswear it pending an application to confirm the sale.

-Lands-Sale by sheriff-Action to set aside—Purchase by execution creditor—Agreement for re-sale.]—A firm of solicitors, defendants in this action, recovered judgment against the plaintiff for $97, and placed in the hands of the sheriff a fi. fa. lands, under which the plaintiff's life estate in land said to be worth $3,500 was sold, subject to certain charges, for $70, to one of the solicitors, who had previously made an arrangement with their co-defendant, wife of the plaintiff, to allow her the benefit of the purchase. In an action to set aside the sale or to declare the defendants trustees for the plaintiff:-Held, that the execution creditor had the right to purchase, and was not affected by any irregularities or omissions on the sheriff's part; nor could a sale under process of law be successfully attacked for mere inadequaey of price, unless, perhaps, it was so grave and extreme as to compel a conclusion of fraud or malversation. Where the conveyance has been executed by the sheriff, the fact that the purchaser has entered into a binding agreement to sell at an advance to another, does not afford ground for invalidating the deed. Semble, that the sheriff (since deceased) might have been guilty of negligence in disposing of the property; and, if there were evidence to support an action against his estate or his sureties, such an action would not be barred by this action.

McNichol v. McPherson, 15 O.L.R. 393.

Upon an interpleader issue in the County Court between the plaintiff and sheriff:-Held, that the bailiff in making the sale was really acting for the sheriff, who there-

-Buildings placed on land by tenant-Property in.]-An execution debtor placed certain buildings on land, the property of the defendant in the issue, for which it appeared a ground rent was paid. These buildings were of wood resting on loose stone foundations to which they were not affixed nor were the foundations let into the earth, but the earth had been levelled to make the foundation level. A cellar had been dug in the earth under one building. A judgment creditor seized these buildings, and the defendant, the owner of the fee simple, claimed them as part of the freehold, and an issue was directed:-Held, that to be a parcel of the freehold a building must be affixed to it or something connected with it, or there must be evidence to show that it was intended that the buildings should be part of the freehold; the buildings in question not being affixed to the freehold, and there being no evidence that they should be a part of it, the buildings were the property of the debtor and liable to seizure.

-Exemption-Seizure of a horse-Carter.] -An opposition to the seizure of a horse by the defendant on the ground "that he is the agent of a company dealing in gas fixtures, that he installs the same and that the said horse is necessary to him to carry on his business," will be dismissed, the opposant being neither a carter nor a coachman.

-Movables in lodging house-Lien.]-One who lives in a lodging house has his domicile there and a bailiff having a writ of execution against him can levy on his movables there. The proprietor of the house cannot, after the seizure, by opposition, claim that the saisi is a third party within the meaning of Art. 677 C.P.Q. and that the seizing creditor should have proceeded by way of saisie-arrêt. -Possession by judgment debtor-Procedure by bailiff-Adjudication upon invalid seizure.]-The hull of a steamer sunk in a canal had been attached under judicial process and, while standing on the bank at a distance from which he could not see or touch the materials, a bailiff assumed to make a second seizure, gave no notice of his proceedings to those on board the hull, and appointed a guardian other than the one placed in charge of the hull at the time of the first seizure. The execution debtor, named in the second writ, had made a bargain for the purchase of the hull subject to the price being paid before delivery. but had not paid the price nor had the property been delivered into his possession. Subsequently, the bailiff adjudicated the hull to the appellant by judicial sale at auction:-Held, that there had been no valid seizure under the second writ: that the purchaser acquired no title to the property, by the adjudication, and the sale to him should be rescinded; that, under the circumstances, there could be no applica-tion of the maxim "en fait de meubles possession vaut titre" and that the maxim "main de justice ne dessaisit pas" must be taken subject to the qualification that a seizure under judicial process places the goods seized beyond the control of an execution debtor. Connecticut and Passumpsic Rivers Railroad Co. v. Morris (14 Can. S.C.R. 319), distinguished, and the judgment appealed from (Q.R. 17 K.B. 193), affirmed.

-Interpleader-Application by sheriff.]-The sheriff, under writs of execution, seized certain goods of the defendant, such goods being claimed by the wife of the defend-The sheriff thereupon notified the execution creditors of the claim, and applied for an interpleader summons. The material in support of the sheriff's application did not show when the notices of claim were served, but it appeared by affidavits filed on behalf of one of the execu tion creditors that such notices were served on the 26th of October, while the summons was issued on the 29th of October. On the return of the summons objection was taken that the summons was issued too soon:-Held, that the provision for interpleader on the part of the sheriff being purely statutory, the sheriff must show that all notices have been given, and that the time required by the rules has expired, before he is entitled to interplead, and that, as the material did not show this and as it appeared that the necessary time had not elapsed, the proceedings were irregular.

Sanderson v. Hotham, 1 Sask. R. 501.

-Land exempt as homestead-Right of mortgage to plead exemption.]-Plaintiff applied for foreclosure or sale of a quartersection of land against which a number of executions were registered in priority to the mortgage in question. The mortgagee contended that the land in question was, when the mortgage was given, the homestead, and still was the homestead, of the debtor, and that the executions in question did not charge the land. The creditors, in addition to denying that the land was a komestead, also contended that only the debtor could avail himself of the exemption:—Held, that the execution in question never charged the land if it was a homestead, and that the mortgagee was in as good a position as the mortgager, and could invoke the provisions of the Exemption Ordinance to procure priority for his mortgage.

Baker v. Gillam, 1 Sask. R 498.

--Homestead--Exemption-Sale of home stead under mortgage-Rights of prior execution creditors.]-Three-quarters of a section of land were sold under a mortgage and after satisfying the mortgagee's claim the balance was paid into Court. The title was subject in addition to the first and second mortgages to a number of executions and third and fourth mortgages. The mortgagor claimed one of the quarters sold as his homestead and that the proceeds of the sale of such homestead were not available for the purpose of satisfying the executions, and the subsequent mortgagees contended that as such moneys were not available for the purpose of satisfying the executions they should be applied in payment of their respective mortgages:-Held, that as the executions bound only the portions of the land not exempt subject to encumbrances thereon and it appearing that the amount realized for the portions not so exempt was not sufficient to satisfy the prior encumbrances the money in Court must be held to be the proceeds of the homestead and not available for the purpose of atisfying the executions. That the fact that the mortgagor would not benefit by the allowance of the exemption in as much as the subsequent mortgagees would secure the whole sum did not cause such fund to lose its character of an exemption in as much as the execution debtor had a right to mort-gage or otherwise dispose of his exemption so long as he did not convert it into property which would not be exempt. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Ontario.

Accounts-Surrogate Court-Estoppel.] -The Surrogate Courts of Ontario are invested with the authority and jurisdiction over executors and administrators, and the rendering by them of inventories and accounts, conferred in England on the Ordinary under 21 Henry VIII. c. 5, the effect of Rule 19 of the Surrogate Court Rules of 1892, as limited by s. 73 of the Surrogate Courts Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 59, being to bring the practice back to that in force under the ancient statute. It is not only the duty of an executor or administrator to file an inventory and render an account when duly called upon to do so, but it is his privilege to do so voluntarily in any case in which he is liable to be called upon, and this privilege, in case of his death, extends to his personal representative, though not at the same time the representative of the original testator, and where there is a surviving representative of the original testator. Where, therefore, the executors of an executor brought into the proper Surrogate Court an account of the dealings of their testator with the assets of the estate of the original testator, treating in the account as cash received by the accounting executor the amount of a certain promissory note, and the account was audited and approved after due notice to the surviving executor of the original testator, it was held in an issue in the High Court between the surviving executor of the original testator and the executors of the deceased executor, upon pleadings so framed as to raise not only the question of the property in this note but also the question of the right to the proceeds thereof, that the audit and approval of the account were a binding adjudication as against the surviving executor, that the proceeds of the note were payable to the estate of his deceased coexecutor, Judgment of Falconbridge, C.J.,

Cunnington v. Cunnington, 2 O.L.R. 511.

—Purchase by executor.]—A testator died possessed of shares in a company. Afterwards, upon fresh allotments of stock being made, his executrix took up the additional shares, paying the premium out of her own money as to some of the shares and selling her right to others:—Held, that she was not entitled as against the estate to such new shares, but only to a lien thereon for the amount advanced by her to take them up.

Re Sinclair, Clark v. Sinclair, 2 O.L.R.

—Devolution of Estates Act—Partial intestacy—Widow's statutory preference.]—Section 12 of the Devolution of Estates Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 127, as to the widow's statutory claim for $1,000, does not apply where there is partial intestacy, as in this case, where a testator failed to dispose of his residuary estate. Re Twiggs' Estate, [1892] 1 Ch. 579, followed.

Re Harrison, 2 O.L.R. 217.

-Goods exempt from execution-Right of widow to-Effect of provision for wife in will-Gift of property belonging to wife-Election. 1-Goods of a deceased husband exempt from seizure under the Execution Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 77, are not, except as to funeral and testamentary expenses, assets in the hands of his executors for the payment of debts, the effect of s. 4 of that Act being to give his wife a parliamentary title thereto. The fact of the wife being residuary devisee, under the husband's will, does not put her to her election as to taking such goods either under her statutory title or under the gift of the residue, unless the testator clearly assumes to deal with them as part of the residue, and the fact that under the terms of the will the provision made for her should be in lieu of dower does not create a presumption that he is dealing with the goods. Section 4 of the Devolution of Estates Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 127, which makes all the personal property of a testator in the hands of his personal representatives subject to the payment of his debts, must be read as being subject to s. 4 of the Execution Act. A piano belonging to the wife, who was the residuary devisee of the real and personal estate, was dealt with by the husband under his will, as part of his estate, by giving it to his son:—Held, that the wife must elect either to allow the son to retain it, or to take it herself, making good to the son the value thereof out of the provision made for her in the will.

Re Tatham, 2 O.L.R. 343.

—Devolution of Estates Act, (Ont.)—Payment of debts—Distinction between real and personal property.]—The Devolution of Estates Act, R.S.O. c. 127, vests the real as well as the personal estate of a deceased person in his personal representatives for the purpose of paying his debts; but, except in the case of a residuary devise specially provided by s. 7, the order in which different classes of property are applicable to the payment of debts has not been changed by the Act.

Re Hopkins Estate, 32 O.R. 315.

—Surrogate Courts—Administration—Application for in more than one Surrogate Court—Jurisdiction.]—When applications for letters of administration to the estate of a deceased person are made in more than one Surrogate Court, preference will be given to that made by the party nearest in the order in which administration is usually granted, and jurisdiction to proceed was conferred on the Surrogate Court in which application was made by a mother as next of kin against that of behalf of creditors, in another county. R. 1897, 194, 195.]-R.S.O. 1897, c. 129, s. 11, providing that a person wronged in respect to his person or property by one, since deceased, may maintain an action against the administrators or executors of the latter, does not authorize such an action against an administrator ad litem merely, but only against an executor or general administrator, clothed with full power to collect the assets, pay the debts, and divide the estate which he represents:-Held, therefore, that for this, apart from other reasons, the appointment of an administrator ad litem should be refused in this action, which was brought against five persons for malicious prosecution, one of whom had died after issue joined but before trial, and whose widow and children refused to administer to the estate. Judgment of Lount, J., reversed. Hunter v. Boyd, 3 O.L.R. 183.

-Mortgage-Notice of sale-Service of -"Assigns"-Devolution of Estates Act-Caution-Non-registration of-Service of notice of sale on infant heir.]-By a provision in a mortgage of realty no want of notice required by the mortgage was to invalidate any sale thereunder, but the vendor was alone to be responsible. The conveyance made on a sale under the power of sale in the mortgage contained a recital that service of the notice had been duly made on the mortgagor and his wife, who had joined to bar her dower, and there was no evidence of the untruth of such recital and the purchaser's knowledge of its untruth:—Held, that a subsequent vendor of the land in making title on a sale thereof could not be called on to furnish any other evidence of such service. Held, also that the objection being as to proof of service on the wife no such evidence was in any event required, for by the terms of the power of sale in the mortgage which was made in pursuance of the Short Form Act service was to be made on the mortgagor, his heirs or assigns, and the wife was not an "assign" within the meaning of the power. After the coming into force of the Devolution of Estates Act and after the expiration of a year from the death of the mortgagor a married woman, no caution having been registered, sale proceedings under the power were taken on the mortgage. Held, that service of notice of sale on the husband and the heirs of the mortgagor, two infant daughters, was sufficient, it not being necessary under such circumstances to serve the personal representatives.

-Devolution of Estates Act-Real representative-Sale of land-Lapse of year-Vesting in heirs-Injunction-R.S.O. 1897, c. 137.]-Letters of administration to the real estate of an intestate who died on October 18th, 1900, were issued to the defendant on October 14th, 1901. Prior to the latter date the defendant had advertised the lands for sale on October 22nd, 1901, on the day preceding which date, the plaintiff, one of the heirs, applied for an injunction to restrain the sale. No caution had been filed within the year nor did it appear that there were any debts of the deceased:-Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction, for when the defendant advertised the lands for sale he had no right to do so, and at the proposed time of sale he had no right to sell since by the operation of the Devolution of Estates Act the property had vested in the heirs.

-Direction to set aside certain sum and pay income to life tenant-Productive and unproductive assets-Rights of life tenant.]-A testator directed his executors to set apart and invest $50,000 out of his estate, and pay the income semi-annually to his wife during her life, with power to appoint, and in default of appointment, over. He then gave the residue equally among his children. The estate consisted of income producing securities to the value of $30,000, and a large amount of unproductive land:-Held, that the executors were bound to reserve sufficient productive assets to secure an income adequate to the payment of taxes and other necessary expenses, and the widow was entitled, from the expiration of a year from the testator's death, to a first charge on the unproductive assets for the income so taken, and to the balance of the income from the productive assets, and to have the principal producing such balance, set apart towards the fund of $50,-000, ultimately to be made up as the lands were sold, according to the following rules: As lands or other assets were sold the proceeds should be apportioned between capital and income by ascertaining the sum which, put out at interest at the expiration of a year from the testator's death, and accumulated at compound interest with half-yearly rests, would, with accumulations of interest, have produced at the day of receipt, the amount actually received from the sale of the lands or other assets; the sum so ascertained to be treated as capital, and added to the sum theretofore set apart towards the $50,000; and the residue to be treated as income and paid over to the widow. -Grant of administration-Nominee of next of kin in Ontario-Discretion-Revocation-Fraud.]-Only one of the next of kin, the sister, of an intestate, resided in Ontario, and, upon the consent of the sister and her children, letters of administration were granted by a Surrogate Court in the defendant's petition that all of the ter's daughter. A brother of the intestate, resident in the United States, brought this action to revoke the grant. It was stated in thed efendant's petition that all of the next of kin had renounced in his favour, but it was plain from the renunciation, which was filed, that this statement was intended to refer only to the next of kin resident in Ontario:-Held, that the Surrogate Court had before it all those who were required by s. 41 of the Surrogate Courts Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 59, to be cited or summoned, and the consent and request of all of them that the defendant should be appointed administrator, and, having regard to the nature of the property of the deceased, and the advanced age and illiteracy of his sister, that the Judge had not exercised his discretion improperly in directing the grant to be made to the defendant. Semble, that, even if the discretion had been improperly exercised, the grant would not have been revoked. The practice of the Surrogate Courts in this province is to apply the provisions of s. 59 of the Act more liberally than do the English Courts the corresponding provision of the English Probate Act. Held. also affirming the finding of the Surrogate Court, that the defendant had not made false suggestions nor concealed material facts for the purpose of obtaining the grant.

—Administrator ad litem—Locus standi—Con. Rules 194, 195.]—The only living issue and heir at law of an intestate who had brought this action to set aside on the ground of undue influence a transfer of her property (heretofore made by the intestate to the defendant), applied for an order under Rules 194 or 195 appointing him administrator, or administrator ad litem of the deceased:—Held, that the order could not be made either under Rule 194, for reasons given in Hughes v. Hughes (1881), 6 A.R. 373, 380; nor under Rule 195, which is not applicable to a case of a plaintiff who, without right or title, has commenced an action and then seeks to legalize his illegal act by an order of the Court.

Fairfield v. Ross, 4 O.L.R. 534.

-Statute of Limitations-Right of retainer.]-In 1876 the plaintiff advanced to her husband the purchase money of certain land subject to a mortgage and which was accordingly conveyed to him. The existing mortgage was paid off and a fresh mortgage was subsequently executed, the plaintiff joining to bar her dower in it. On his death in 1893 he devised the land to the plaintiff and one of his sons in equal shares. In 1901 the plaintiff obtained an order for partition or sale of so much of the land as had not been sold and a sale being made, she filed a claim upon the proceeds as a creditor for the amount originally advanced by her to purchase the lands. The plaintiff alleged that the land was conveyed to her husband to enable him to vote:-Held, that assuming the purchase money was entrusted by the plaintiff to her husband to invest for her in the purchase of land, that express trust was performed and was at an end when the land was conveyed to him. Held, also. that even assuming the money had been advanced by her by way of loan, her claim was barred by the Statute of Limitations, for there is no reason why the Statute of Limitations should not be applied to such a claim by a wife against her husband in the same way as if she were not his wife. Held, also, that though she was her husband's executrix, she had no longer any right of retainer in respect to her alleged debt, as by her own acts, by registering no caution within twelve months and then treating the property as vested in the defendants, the heirs of her codevise, she had put the assets out of her own possession and control. Under all the circumstances of the case, and in view of the conduct of the plaintiff, held, however, that the transaction was not a loan but a gift by the plaintiff to her husband.

-Devolution of Estates Act-Sale of land by administrator-Non-concurring adult heirs-Approval of official guardian.]-An administrator desired to sell certain lands pursuant to his powers under section 16 of the Devolution of Estates Act, R.S.O. 1897. c. 127. There were certain heirs who were sui juris, but whose concurrences in the sale had not been sought or obtained because of the delay and expense which would be involved in so doing:-Held, that nevertheless, it was proper for the official guardian to approve of the sale, pursuant to his powers so to do under that section, if, after he had made the usual enquiries as in a case of infant heirs or devisees, no good reasons were advanced or discovered for his refusing to do so.

passing his accounts as executor of another estate after H.'s death, the executor credited himself with having received for H. on account of her share in such last named estate a specified sum of money. On subsequently proving his accounts in the H. estate, and being charged with this sum, as having been received by him for the deceased, he claimed that he had not then received it, but had in fact paid it out in small sums to H. during her life-time:-Held, that this was not a matter occurring before the death of H., and therefore the evidence of the executor did not require to be corroborated under s. 10 of the Evidence Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 73. A testatrix by her will devised to her brother, naming him as such, certain lands free from incumbrances, with a direction for the payment out of her general personal estate of any incumbrance thereon, and she appointed him her executor, and provided for the appointment of a successor in such office, in case of a vacancy, without in such an event diverting the benefit from him. Held, that the devise was not given to him in his capacity as executor, but in his personal capacity, and did not preclude him from claiming compensation for his services to the estate. Compton v. Bloxham (1845), 2 Coll. 201, distinguished. The fact of an executor being guilty of acts of negligence, mismanagement, and breach of trust in his management of the estate, there being nothing of a dishonest or fraudulent character, while the losses resulting therefrom were capable of being compensated for, and made good in money, does not deprive him of his right to compensation. McClenaghan v. Perkins, 5 O.L.R. 129 (C.A.).

-Claim against estate of deceased person-Corroboration-Special agreement-Running account-Terms of credit-Demand.] -The plaintiff claimed from the executors of his father-in-law payment of a running account for work done and goods supplied to the testator from 1888 till his death in 1895. No demand for payment was ever made upon the deceased, nor was any account rendered until one was sent in to the defendants on the 16th May, 1895. This action was begun on the 4th May, 1901. The plaintiff and his wife gave evidence of an agreement with the deceased that the plaintiff should keep the account separate from his other accounts, that he should try, if possible, to get on without the money and to leave it in the hands of the deceased, who said he would save it for the plaintiff, and put it in a house for him or his wife. The plaintiff did keep the account in separate books, which were produced, as also the general books. A witness said that the deceased told him about a year and a half before his death that he had requested the plaintiff to keep the account between them in a little book at home, not in the regular day book, so that, if anything happened, the account would not go in to the wholesale men, and that he intended to buy a house for the plaintiff's wife. Similar evidence, although less distinct, was given by another witness:-Hela, that there was sufficient corroboration of the plaintiff's statement. Held, also, that the plaintiff was not obliged to prove a definite term for which credit was given; the agreement was in effect one that the testator was to hold the money at least until the plaintiff demanded it; and, as there was no demand before the 16th May, 1895, the action was in time. Held, also, that the agreement was not one which offended against the law relating to fraud's upon creditors; and the defendants were not in a position to raise such a question, not having pleaded

-Irregular judgment-Refund by executors.]-A testator by his will gave to two trustees his estate real and personal and directed the trustees to pay, (1) to a sister a legacy of $500, and in case of her death to her daughter, and in case of the death of the daughter, to the daughter's children in equal shares; (2) to a niece a legacy of $500; (3) to the children of another niece a legacy of $500; and (4) to a charitable institution a legacy of $500; with a direction that should there not be sufficient to pay all the legacies there should be a proportionate abatement; and then directed that should there be any residue after payment of the legacies it should be divided and paid "to and among my legatees hereinbefore named and referred to, and my said trustees or the survivor of them in even and equal shares and proportions:-Held, that the children of the niece, who were five in number, were entitled between them to one-fifth of the residue and not to one-ninth each. Proceedings were taken in the year 1882 for the administration of the estate, and without, as was held in the previous judgment of this Court, 27 A.R. 242, proper proceedings being taken whereby they might have been bound, the children of the niece were ignored and their legacy and their share in the residue were divided between the charitable institutions, the trustees, and one of the other legatees:-Held, that the trustees and the charitable institution were bound to re-pay the excess which they had received, with interest from the date of the proceedings taken by the children of the niece. -Fatal Accidents Act-Action before administration.]-An action was brought to recover damages because of the death of a workman, the plaintiff alleging that she was his widow. Her status was put in issue, and she obtained letters of administration as the deceased's widow, and by amendment claimed also as administratrix: -Held, that having failed to prove her status as widow she could not succeed as administratrix, the rule that letters of administration relate back to the time of the bringing of the action not applying where the person setting them up was not really entitled to obtain them. -Administration-Cash on deposit-Rate of interest-Bequest of use of chattels for limited period—Land partly in state of nature — Right to dower—Payment to widow for release-Compensation of executors-Infants-Contingent legacies - Interest as maintenance.]-Executors found a sum of money belonging to the testator in the hands of a loan company upon savings bank account, and allowed it to remain there at 31/2 per cent. per annum, for more than two years after obtaining probate of the will. In January, 1902, they closed the savings bank account and invested the money at 4 per cent. in a de-benture, but, 20 days later, fearing that they would be called on to distribute the money, they took over the debenture themselves as from its date, and put the money into a chartered bank at 3 per cent. The trusts of the will, so far as the property not specifically devised was concerned, were to provide for annuities and to divide the surplus amongst the residuary legatees:-Held, that the executors would not have been justified in making long or permanent investments of the money which came into their hands; in strictness they should have deposited it from the beginning in a chartered bank, where it would have earned only 3 per cent.; and, in accounting, they should not be charged with more interest than they actually received, that is, 31/2 per cent., while the money was on deposit with the loan company, 4 per cent. for 20 days during which it was invested in a debenture, and 3 per cent, thereafter until distributed. Inglis v. Beaty (1878), 2 A.R. 453, and Spratt v. Wilson (1890), 19 O.R. 28, distinguished. (2) A part of the will was as follows:-"'I leave my stock and implements to my son H .: he to have the use of them for ten years; at the end of that time to replace them." The stock and implements were sold by the executors, at H.'s request, and the proceeds were paid to him:-Held, that the bequest was mercly of the use of the chattels for ten years, with the right of possession vested in H. for that period only; but the executors, with H.'s consent, having done what they should have done at the end of the period, all that he could have was the interest for ten years upon the proceeds of the sale; and, therefore, H. should repay the proceeds, for which the executors were bound to account. (3) The testator was the owner in fee at the time of his death of a timbered lot containing 100 acres. from 15 to 20 acres of which he had taken the timber; a part of the cleared land had been prepared for cultivation, and seeds planted, but, owing to the nature of the soil, with little or no result. The testator had contracted to sell the whole lot for $2,000, and after his death the purchaser called on the executors to receive the halance of the purchase money and to make title. The widow claimed her dower, and her claim was compromised by the executors at $390, which they paid her, and she released her dower; they then conveyed to the purchaser under section 24 of the Trustee Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 129:-Held, that as the lot was not in a state of nature at the time of the death, the widow's dower attached upon the whole of it; she was entitled to have one-third of such part as was not woodland assigned to her, and one-third of such part as was woodland, with the right to take from the woodland firewood for her own use and timber for fencing the other part, and the executors had the right, under section 3 of R.S.O. c. 129, to apply the money of the estate in the purchase of a release of the widow's dower; and were entitled to charge the estate with the $390. (4) The estate was not a simple one to deal with, owing to conflicting interpretations of the rights of the beneficiaries under the will, the nature of the trusts, their number and complication, and, to a more limited extent, the character of a portion of the assets. The executors took over about $60,000 worth of property in cash, mortgages, notes, farm property, and furniture. Of this they distributed a little less than half, and set apart the remainder for payment of annuities, legacies not matured, etc. They collected about $6,500 of interest. They managed the estate for a period of a little more than four years down to the date of a report providing for their remuneration:-Held, that they were not entitled to an allowance upon taking over the estate, but should be allowed 21/2 per cent. upon such portion of the corpus of the estate as they had taken over and distributed, and when the remainder of the corpus taken over should be distributed, they should have a like allowance upon the portions distributed from time to time; they should be allowed 5 per cent. on the interest collected, and to be collect. ed; and $100 a year in addition for the first two years, and $75 a year for the last two years, for management of the estate and services not covered by the other charges, including the care and preservation of the corpus. (5) The testator bequeathed to his two infant sons $4,000 each, contingent upon their attaining 25 years of age; the only other provision for them was a gift to each of one-tenth of the residuary estate:-Held, that interest as a means of maintenance is payable out of the general residue of an estate, upon a legacy which is merely contingent, when the legatee is the infant child of the testator, and no other maintenance is provided; and it was proper in this case that an allowance should be made for the maintenance of the infants until their majority, out of the interest on sums set apart to answer the legacies; the gift of a share in the residue was not intended as a provision for maintenance. The will was to be read as directing the executors to apply the income of each legacy for the benefit of the infant during minority, to the extent required for maintenance, and this involved the reserving and investing of an amount equal to the amount of each legacy, not as the legacy, but to secure the amount of it in case it should become payable.

—Surrogate Courts—Jurisdiction—Accounting—Falsifying inventory of assets.]—
The jurisdiction of the Eeclesiastical Court as to accounting was of a very restricted character, and no greater measure of jurisdiction in scope, though there may be in details, is now vested in the Surrogate Courts of Ontario. For full inquiry and accounting resort must be had to the administrative powers of the High Court. Where, upon an accounting by executors before a Surrogate Court Judge it was objected by the residuary legatees that a certain sum of money, not included in the executors' inventory of the assets of the estate, should have been included, and it appeared that the widow of the testator, who was one of the executors, claimed the sum as a gift from the testator in his lifetime:—Held, that the Judge had no jurisdiction to pass upon the question thus raised; all that he could do was to report that a claim had been made that there was another asset of the estate, stating what it was, which he was unable to investigate, and could, therefore only approve of the rest of the accounts submitted to him.

The order of the Judge of the proper Surrogate Court, on the day this action was begun by the issue of the writ of summons, that letters of administration should be issued to the plaintiff, was such a declaration of the plaintiff's right to obtain letters as would make them, when issued, relate back to the date of the order. There was no evidence that he was in fact dead, nor that he survived the testator. Letters of administration to his estate were granted in 1903, upon the presumption that he was dead:-Held, that the onus of proof that he survived the testator lay upon those who claimed under him; and, there being no evidence that he survived, the administrator of his estate failed to establish any right to share in the testator's estate; and distribution among the other legatees or their representatives was ordered, subject to their undertaking to refund should it be established at some future time that the absentee or his representative was entitled. —Distribution of estates—Absentee next of kin—Advertisement for creditors and others.]—The administrators of the estate of an intestate, who died in 1906, inserted three times in a newspaper published at the place in Ontario where the intestate was residing at the time of his death, an advertisement headed "Notice to Creditors," given pursuant to R.S.O. 1897, c. 129, calling upon "all creditors and others having claims against the estate" of the deceased to send them in to the solicitor for the administrators by a named date, and stating that after such date they would not be liable to any person of whose claim notice should not have been received. One of the next of kin, who would, if alive, have been entitled to a distributive share of the estate, had left Canada, in 1876, and no communication had since been received from him or information about him, except that soon after his departure a sister of his heard that he was in Oregon, and in 1895 an aunt heard that he was dead. Diligent inquiry was made for him in 1882, but he was not then found. No one had ever heard of his marrying. No claim was made on his behalf upon the estate:-Held, that the advertisement was sufficient; that it covered next of kin; and that the absentee would be barred if he was hereafter to make any claim; and therefore the administrators should divide the assets amongst those entitled as though the absentee were assuredly dead without ever having had issue.

-Surrogate Courts-Taking accounts Jurisdiction to rescind order on account of mistake.]-A Surrogate Judge acting as the Surrogate Court has inherent jurisdiction to set aside an order which he has been induced to make by fraud of the applicant, and also to set aside or vary an order which he has made by mistake, though not to correct errors made in the judicial determination by him of any question; thus in this case it was held that he had jurisocition to vacate an order made by himself upon the taking of executors' accounts and to reopen the accounts and further investigate them without reference to the order made. The acts of the Surrogate Judge in passing accounts of executors are those of the Court and not of the Judge as persona designata. Consolidated Rule 642, which substitutes a proceeding by petition for the practice of filing certain kinds of bills abolished by the General Order of 1853, does not apply to a petition to a Surrogate Judge to vacate an order made by him on the passing of executors' accounts, but must be confined to cases in which under the former practice such relief as is mentioned in it could be obtained by one or other of such bills.

tor is subsequently required to pass his accounts in the High Court, such approval except in so far as fraud or mistake is shown, shall be binding upon any person who was notified of the proceeding taken before the Surrogate Judge, or who was present or represented therein, and upon every one claiming under such person." Subsequently the plaintiff brought an action in the High Court, and without any pleadings being delivered, an order was made, by consent, for the removal of the executor and the appointment of a trust company in his place, and for the passing of the accounts, adopting the common form of the order for such purpose:-Held, that on the taking of the accounts in the Master's office the account taken and passed by the Surrogate Court Judge was under section 72. no mistake or fraud having been shown, binding on the plaintiff, for notwithstanding such consent the judgment must be construed as if made in invitum, and the usual rules of law and procedure, statutory and otherwise, applied thereto. 63 Vict. c. 17, s. 18 (O.), 5 Edw. Gibson v. Gardner, 13 O.L.R. 521 (C.A.).

-Accounts-Surrogate Court - Approval by Judge-Fraud or mistake-Application to re-open accounts.]-A petition by the cestui que trust to the Judge of a Surrogate Court to set aside an order made by him upon the passing of the accounts of the trustees and to reopen the accounts, was dismissed with costs, subject to the petitioner being allowed to surcharge the accounts of the trustees upon two items, viz., premiums paid by the trustees for fire insurance, from which they should have deducted rebates or commissions allowed to them by the insurance companies, and an overcharge of one cent a share upon a purchase of 3,000 shares of mining stock by former trustees:—Held, affirming the judgment of the Judge of the Surrogate Court (York), that he had properly refused to open up the accounts in regard to the purchase of the mining stock referred to, in regard to an alleged overcharge of interest, in regard to the sale of a property without notice to the petitioner, in regard to certain mortgage accounts, and in regard to other matters. It was contended for the petitioner that the non-disclos-ure of the fact that the rebates had been allowed amounted to fraud on the part of the trustees entitling the petitioner to have the accounts re-opened and taken de novo, and that, at all events, coupled with the overcharge as to the mining stock, she was so entitled. The accounts approved by the Judge were brought before him under the provisions of s. 72 of the Surrogate Courts Act, as amended by 2 Edw. VII. c. 12, s. 11, and 5 Edw. VII. c. 14, s. 1. Held, that, under that section, it is only so far as mistake or fraud is shown, and not where mistake or fraud is shown, that the binding effect of the approval is taken away; and the language of the section plainly indicates that it was not intended that the whole account should be opened up, but that the account should be opened up so as to remove from it anything which, owing to fraud or mistake, had not been charged or had been allowed to the accounting party. The principle applicable to the opening of an ordinary stated account, and the consequence of such an account being opened, do not apply to an account taken by the Court in the presence of the parties, where the persons to whom the accounting is being made are brought before the Court for the purpose of enabling them to challenge, if they will, the correctness of the account. While the failure to credit the rebates was not due to a mere accidental omission of them from the account, the intentional retention of the small sum not credited, apparently under the mistaken idea that the trustees were entitled to it, did not amount to fraud, or at all events not to such fraud as would entitle the petitioner to the relief which she claimed or to any further relief than that given to her by the order of the Judge. The petitioner should not have been ordered to pay all the costs of the trustees in the Court below, as she had succeeded to a trifling extent. No costs of the appeal were allowed to either party, but without prejudice to the trustees' right to claim their costs as proper disbursements in accounting thereafter to the peti-

-Administration order - Practice.]-With the wide powers now possessed by personal representatives for the disposition of the property of deceased persons and the distribution of the proceeds among creditors and persons entitled, it can very seldom happen that an administration in Court is necessary; and the practice of the Court is not to make an order for administration unless a clear case showing the necessity of it is made out. the main objects of the Devolution of Estates Act was to render the administration of an estate in Court, in ordinary cases, unnecessary - an object which would be defeated unless the Court was slow to make administration orders. In the circumstances of this case, while it was doubtful whether an administration order should have been made, the doubt was not sufficiently strong to warrant the depriving the parties of the commission and disbursements allowed. The practice of a local Master making an administration order, with reference to himself, is not a satisfactory one. The Master acted without authority in sanctioning arrangement between the testator's widow and the creditors, and in dispensing with payment of money into Court; and his action, in both cases, was, in the special circumstances, confirmed by the Court.

the State of California, when on a visit to the Province of Ontario, bought from the Bank of Montreal there two drafts, for $1,000 each, upon a new York bank, and when he died in California they were found among his effects, never having been presented for acceptance or payment. The plaintiff was appointed by a California Court administrator of Y.'s estate, and presented the drafts for payment to the New York bank, who refused to accept, the Bank of Montreal having stop-ped payment of them. The plaintiff then claimed the amount of the drafts from the Bank of Montreal, and the defendant, the Ontario administrator of Y., also making a claim and bringing an action against the bank, the bank paid $2,000 (less costs) into Court, and an issue was directed between the plaintiff and defendant:-Held. that the Bank of Montreal by becoming the drawers of the bills did not undertake that the New York bank would accept and pay in New York, but ond guarantee that if the New York bank did not do so, they themselves would, if duly notified, reimburse the holder; this was a contract with Y., and he might enforce it; it did not die with Y.; and the plaintiff, the duly appointed representative of Y. in California, where the drafts passed into his hands, was the holder in the legal and mercantile sense; and the money paid into Court represented the drafts and was in the same ownership. As the defendant was the next of kin of Y., and all the money was not required for payment of aebts, it was considered not advisable to pay money out of Court to a foreign administrator, who would necessarily repay some of it to the defendant in Ontario; consequently the latter was allowed the option of a reference to determine the amount which should be sent to the plaintiff; and the costs of both parties were ordered to be paid out of the fund, those of the plaintiff in priority.

The plaintiff's father, the issue of this union, was born in 1829. The wife alway remained unaware that her husband was not dead, and acted in good faith. He, in fact, survived her. All the events took place in the State of New York, where the parties were domiciled. The intestate died in Ontario, and his estate consisted entirely of personalty:-Held, that the question of the legitimacy of the plaintiff's father and the right of succession of his descendants to the intestate's property, depended upon the law of the State of New York. The expert evicence as to the law being conflicting, the Court examined the authorities upon which the experts respectively relied, and reading these with the aid of the explanatory, critical and argumentative testimony adduced, and discharging functions analogous to those of a special jury, determined that by the law of the State of New York, referred to in the jucyment, the plaintiff's father was legitimate.

-Registration of caution after expiry of three years—Approval of official guardian.]—Sections 14 and 15 of the Devolution of Estates Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 127, as amended by 2 Edw. VII. c. 17, apply where the interests of infants as well as those of adults are to be affected; and where, upon an intestacy, land has vested in an adult and an infant (the heirs of the intestate), after three years from the death of the intestate, the land not having been disposed of or conveyed by the administrator, and no caution having been registered, within that period, a caution may be registered, under s. 14, after the expiry of that period, upon the certificate of the official guardian approving of and authorizing the caution to be registered being given and registered with the caution; and the effect, under s. 15 is to revest the land in the administrator, just as it would have been or remained vested if the caution had been registered within the three years; and the administrator, with the consent of the official guardian, acting on behalf of the infants, may then sell and convey as provided in s. 16.

-Donatio mortis causa-Ratification by will.]-C., the father of the respondent, had sold an immovable to A.W. and C.B. Morris, for the sum, secured by privilege of bailleur de fonds, of $150,000, of which $50,000 was payable to the respondent after the decease of the vendor, and subsequently he made a will in which he ratified the said donation and delegation of payment. Messrs. Morris were appointed executors of this will. The appellant having become proprietor of the immovable by virtue of a title which obliged her to pay the debts of the respondent, Messrs. Morris, in their quality of testamentary executors of C., granted her a discharge of this debt, and a withdrawal of the hypothec which secured it. On an action in declaration of the hypothec of the respondent, demanding the nullity of the discharge granted by the testamentary executors:—Held, 1. Even if the delegation of payment stipulated in favour of the respondent by the deed of sale was null as containing a donation à cause de mort. made by a deed entre vifs, this donation became valid by the subsequent will of C., and the debt in question passed to the respondent with its accessories, and especially with the hypothec and privilege of bailleur de fonds. 2. A testamentary executor only having possession for the purposes of the execution of the will, that is for the payment of the debts and legacies specified, Messrs. Morris had no power in this case to give a discharge to the appellant, there being nothing to show that they required this sum to satisfy the debts of the succession, on the contrary, one of the said executors, assignee of the other, had sold the immovable to the auteur of the appellant, with a charge to pay the amount of the legacy in question to the respondent herself.

—Domicil—Place of service.]—An action concerning a succession against a testamentary executor as such is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Court for the district in which the succession was opened, that is to say, of the deceased's last domicil, though he may have died in another district or have temporarily dwelt there at the time of his death; advantage cannot be taken of the provisions of Art. 94 C.P.Q., to take the executor out of the jurisdiction of his proper Judges by serving the action upon him personally in the district in which he happens to be.

-Appointment of new executors - Account of property.]-Although executors appointed to act jointly and having equal powers, should act in concert, one of them -when they are proceeded against by those replaced to compel the acceptance of an account rendered by the latter and a declaration that all property of the succession has been transferred - may alone contest such action for the purpose of opposing the approval of such account and the declaration that he and his coexecutor have received all the property of the succession, but he cannot demand the reformation of the account nor a condemnation for the benefit of the succes-

Desjardins v. Masson, 11 Que. K.B. 195.

-Executor-Possession of estate-Reddition de compte-Year and a day-Reprise d'instance.]-The fact that a debtor of the succession defends an action en reddition de compte brought by an executor claiming that he is not accountable to the succession, does not prevent the executor from taking possession of the property any more than if the debtor, being condemned to render an account to the executor, renders one which brings him in debt, even though the executor has contested it. Hence, the delay of a year and a day runs from the date of the testator's death, the executor being assumed to have knowledge of the will from that date. When the year and a day has passed pending proceedings on examination of the account then there is de plein droit a cessation of the functions of the executor, and the proceedings are suspended de plein droit until the legatee or heir has taken up the instance in the place and stead of the executor.

Mallette, 5 Que, P.R. 422.

-Time for making inventory and deliberating-Act of administration. 1-A claim made by a testamentary executor for a sum due to the succession which he is administering does not constitute, on his part, acceptance of a legacy as beneficiary heir and does not deprive him of the time allowed to make an inventory and to deliberate as to acceptance.

-Contestation of account-Grounds of contestation-Negligence and maladministration of accounting party-Amendment.]—(1) Neglect to have an inventory made with due diligence, failure to sell movable property and allowing it to deteriorate and depreciate in value, carrying on an unprofitable business instead of winding it up, neglect to collect moneys due, and, generally, negligence and maladministration resulting in the loss or shrinkage of the assets of an estate, are legal grounds of contestation of an account rendered by executors of their executorship, pursuant to a judgment in an action to account. (2) When the conclusions of a contestation of an account are that the accounting party be condemned to pay the contestant a sum stated to be the balance of the account, the Court, at the final hearing, has power, on motion of the contestant, to allow him to amend them by adding thereto a prayer that the judgment declare the account illegal and false, that no substitution exists of the movable property, and that its proceeds should be distributed, and that the accounting party was guilty of negligence and maladministration causing loss to a stated amount which should be refunded to the interested parties. (2) Residence abroad by a person having property in Quebec does not affect the jurisdiction of the Quebec Courts even when the accounts may be in respect of a succession, the opening of such succession having taken place in a foreign country. —Seizin of movable property of succession—Rents of immovable property.]— The seizin of movable property of successions by testamentary executions, under Art. 918, C.C., carries with it the right to collect during the year and a day of its duration, the revenues of the immovable property. Hence, in an action for rent and damages, under a lease by the legatees of the lessor against the lessee, the latter may lawfully plead matter of agreement respecting such rent and damages between himself and the testamentary executors of the lessor, during the period of seizin of the latter.

—Testamentary executor—Account—Writ of summons.]—An account can only be demanded from a testamentary executor by action at law, instituted by means of a writ of summons, and not by petition.

O'Borne v. Lemay, 7 Que. P.R. 333 (Doherty, J.).

Mandamus—Cemetery company—Body of testator.]—An executor is not entitled to a mandamus to compel a cemetery company to deliver to him the body of the testator, which had been deposited in a vault in the cemetery and afterwards, in good faith and in ignorance of the petitioner's capacity, had been delivered by the company to the testator's son; in such case the writ would have no effect as it would not be possible to comply with the demand.

Valin v. Mount Royal Cemetery Co., 8 Que. P.R. 379 (Tellier, J.).

—Resignation of executor.]—The following clause in a will, 'I' desire that there shall always be two executors of my succession and that in case of the death of one of my two executors... or in case of refusal of one to act or to continue to act another should be appointed in his place, and so in this way there may always be two...'' does not relieve an executor who wishes to renounce from the necessity of having his renunciation accepted by a Judge, the parties mentioned in Art. 911 C.C. being present or duly called. The testator in directing that the substitute for an executor renouncing ''shall be chosen en justice on advice of the family council'' did not intend to derogate and did not dero

Rodier v. Rodier, 9 Que. P.R. 429 (K.B.).

Executor—Application for discharge—Service of notice.]—Notice of application by the executor of a succession subject to substitution devised to universal legatees for a judical order discharging him from the executorship should on pain of nullity, be served on each of the legatees as also should a Judge's order calling the latter together to choose an executor in place of the one discharged. Failure to serve the notice and Judge's order on one of the legatees makes void the order granting the application and that appointing a new executor.

Rodier v. Rodier, Q.R. 18 K.B. 1.

—Executor — Declaration—Penalty.]—The executor from whom a penalty is claimed for default in making, within the time prescribed, the declaration as to the testator's property cannot plead that he has prepared a statement so far as he was able, but has been prevented from completing it owing to the difficulties in his way and has applied for further time to do so. Rainville v. Coutlée, 10 Que. P.R. 187.

-Action of account.]-(1) A judgment of the Court of Review, reversing that of the Superior Court which had dismissed an action, on the ground that the evidence tendered by the plaintiff was inadmissible, and ordering a retrial with leave to adduce the same exidence, is not conclusive, nor binding on the Court, when dealing with the case upon its merits, but is subject. like all other interlocutory judgments, to be then set aside. (2) A party sued to account for his administration of an estate as trustee, cannot, while admitting his acceptance of the trust and the performance of such acts as paying small debts and funeral expenses, deny his accountability on the ground that he never was possessed with any money or property of the trust to administer or account for. An account rendered, judicially closed, is intended, not only to cover and dispose of the matters in it, but also to establish that there is no further accountability.

—Settlement of estate—Parties—Improper rejection of evidence—Costs.]—In settling the estate of W. in the Probate Court the Judge of the Court, at the instance of next of kin of the deceased, undertook to dispose of the sum of $1,000 which the administrator—a brother of the deceased.

contended had been given to him by the deceased, two years before her death as a gift for his two sons. Evidence was tendered by the administrator, for the purpose of showing that the money received by him from the deceased had been invested for the two boys, by aying off a mortgage held by R., and that the fact of the investment had been communicated to the donees. The Judge declined to receive the evidence on the ground that, at the time it was tendered, the Court had been adjourned solely for the purpose of hearing argument by counsel, and that he could not receive further evidence:-Held, that the Probate Judge had power to hear and consider evidence at any time before making his final decree, and that he was wrong in refusing to receive the evidence tendered. Per Townshend, J., Ritchie, J., concurring:-Held, that the Judge went beyond his jurisdiction in dealing with and deciding the question of gift or no gift, where the rights of third parties had intervened who were not before him, and to compel the appearance of whom he had no process, and his decree must be set aside. R. and R. K. S. K., by deed, assigned all her interest in the personal property to E. R. and R. K., and by the same deed, purported to renounce all her right, authority and power as administratrix of the estate. E. R. and R. K. obtained from the Judge of the County Court for District No. 2, an order permitting them to issue execution on a judgment obtained by H. N. K. in his lifetime against defendant:-Held, following Jost v. McNeil, 20 N.S.R. 156, that S. K., having accepted letters of administration, could not renounce without the order of the Court of Probate, and that the order made on the application, and in the names of E. R. and R. K. only, was bad and must be set aside. Held, that the order was bad, further, for want of jurisdiction, because it permitted execution to issue on the judgment "for the benefit of the said E. R. and R. K.," instead of requiring any sum realized to be applied according to law under the direction of the Court of Probate. Held, that as the appellant had failed on the merits, a larger amount appearing to be due on the judgment than was claimed, there should be no costs to either party, either in this Court or in the Court below.

-Deficiency of personal estate-Order to sell real estate-Petition for.]-A party aggrieved by a decree of a Judge of Probate may appeal therefrom, although he did not appear in the Court below. An order extending the time for appeal made ex parte is not a nullity, and if not set aside the Court will hear an appeal taken under it. A Judge of Probate is not warranted in granted a license to sell real estate to pay debts, unless he is judicially satisfied by proof, and finds the amount of the personalty and the amount of the debts, and thus ascertains what the deficiency is. A bald adjudication that there is a deficiency based on a list of attested accounts, and the evidence of the petitioner that they were filed against the estate is not sufficient.

-Administrator-Responsibility in paying claims-Corroborative proof of claims-Declaration proving claims.]-A Judge sitting on the probate side of the Court passing accounts is not bound by the rule of procedure requiring claimants against the estate to give corroborative proof of their claims. This rule of procedure is applicable only when the claim comes to be contested in Court:-Semble, a Judge sitting without a jury is not bound any more than is a jury to apply it under all circumstances. The responsibility of paying claims falls upon the administrator; he must use care and judgment in considering them, and if he does so fairly and honestly, and in the interest of the estate, he will on passing his accounts be allowed such as he has thought fit to pay.

—Liability of executor for goods supplied for business of testator carried on for benefit of estate under authority in will— Estoppel—Subrogation.]—The estate of John N. Braun deceased, was being administered in this action commenced in May, 1892, and Velie brought into the Master's office in 1901 a claim for good's supplied to the executor, Henry Braun, between July, 1890, and March, 1892, for use in carrying on the hotel business of deceased under authority conferred by his will. Velie had, in May, 1893, sued the executor in a County Court for the price of the goods in question, but the County Court Judge dismissed the action on the ground urged by the defendant that he was not personally liable, but that the claim should be against the estate. The executor claimed in the administration proceedings that the estate was insolvent, but in April, 1894, an order was made by consent for the transfer of all the assets to him personally upon his undertaking to pay or settle with all the creditors of the estate and paying $1,200 into the hands of trustees for the benefit of the children of the deceased and certain costs, and this order was carried out on both sides. The order contained provisions that the Master should forthwith adjudicate upon and settle all claims against the estate, that the executor should indemnify and save harmless the estate from all such claims and that he should carry out and perform all the terms and provisions of the settlement:-Held, 1. A person supplying goods to an executor under such circumstances has no right against the estate, but he may sue the person who incurred the debt, and he also has a right to be subrogated to any right of indemnity which the executor has against the estate in respect of the liability so incurred: In re Frith, Gorton, [1902] 1 Ch. 342; Dowse v. Judgment against estate.]-In view of the statutory provisions in Alberta the proper judgment against administrators or executors, where assets are not distinctly admitted, is a judgment for payment in due course of administration. If there is a distinct affirmative admission of assets on the part of the executor or administrator, the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment against the administrator or executor personally, or, at his option, for payment in due course of administration. In case of the judgment for payment in due course of administration the formal judgment will be a declarative one to the effect that the defendant is liable to pay the amount ascer tained at the trial, with interest and costs to be taxed in the due course of the administration of the estate, with liberty to the plaintiff to apply. A judgment in due course of administration is conclusive against the executors, and it is at least prima facie evidence against all the creditors of the estate. If the amount of the judgment is not paid the plaintiff may apply for and obtain the usual administration order ex parte, and if occasion should arise. may obtain the appointment of a receiver of the estate. Forbearance, in fact, is a sufficient consideration to support a promise made upon condition of such forbearance, although the facts may not constitute a binding contract to forbear. The guarantor of a lien note, one of several, given for purchase price of goods, is entitled, upon seizure and sale of the article for which the notes were given, to insist that the amount realized from the sale will be applied pro rata on all the notes.

Executors and administrators—Title to land.]—P. L. died, owning land in fee simple; letters of administration of his estate were granted to J. L.; J. L. died, and letters of administration of her estate were granted to the plaintiffs, who sought by this action to recover possession of the land of P. L., upon the title thus set forth:—Held, that the legal estate passed to J. L. as administrativa of the estate of P. L., but was vested in her solely for the purposes of administration; and, there being no evidence to indicate that J. L. had, in the course of her administration, conveyed the land to herself for her own benefit, the plaintiffs had no title. The objection to the plaintiffs' title being apparent upon the pleadings, while the action should be dismissed, the defendant's costs should be limited to the amount he would have received had he raised the point of law and had the action disposed of in that way, instead of going to trial.

In 1909 the administrator realized a further sum for the estate upon an asset then recently discovered. There had been no payment on account or written acknowledgment made by the administrator to any creditor since 1896:—Held, notwithstanding sub-s. (a) of s. 39 of the King's Bench Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 40, that the claims of the creditors were barred by the Statute of Limitations, that it would be the duty of the administrator to plead the Statute in any action by a creditor and that the administrator should forthwith distribute the remaining funds of the estate amongst the next of kin. -Administration - Application - No evidence as to grant of administration by Court of domicile.]—Deceased in his lifetime resided in the State of North Dakota and died leaving property in Canada. His widow made application to this Court for letters of administration, but it did not appear that she was the person entitled to administration by the law of the place of domicile; or that any administration had been granted in North Dakota; and on this ground the Surrogate Judge refused the application. The applicant appealed:— Held, that when an intestate dies ex juris leaving property in juris the Court should grant administration to the person clothed by the Court of the country of domicile with the power and duty of administering the estate no matter who he may be, and in the absence of evidence of appointment of an administrator in the place of domi-cile, or as to the party entitled there to such administration, the application should be refused.

-Probate-Application for ancillary letters -Exemplification.]-On appeal from the decision of a Judge of the Surrogate Court refusing a petition for ancillary letters pro-bate upon petition of the executor supported by an exemplification of letters probate under the seal of the High Court of Justice for England:—Held, that the production of an exemplification of probate under the seal of the High Court of Justice for England, together with the affi-davits under the Succession Duty Ordinance, was sufficient to entitle the executor to ancillary letters probate. -Executors and administrators-Option to purchase contained in lease.]—The provisions of s. 47 of the Land Titles Act do not apply to the case of an executor or administrator who is registered as owner of the lands belonging to the deceased under the provisions of the L. T. A., as s. 76 sets out the special incidents of his estate; and the last clause of s. 76, qualifying the ordinary incidents of the administrator's title, applies only to registered dealings with land; and notwithstanding the provisions of s. 54, which permits an option of purchase to be inserted in a registered lease, and of s. 135, which negatives the effect of any notice of trust or unregistered interest in the land, an option to purchase contained in a lease by an administrator is invalid and void in the hands of the original grantee, even after registration of lease, as being a breach of the trust upon which the administrator holds the land of the deceased intestate. The fact that the grantee of the option has, relying upon such option, spent a large sum of money in improving the property will not affect the legal right of the next-of-kin to have the option declared void. The plaintiff brought action, while an infant, in the name of her next friend; a consent of the next friend was executed but not filed. On application at the trial by the defendant for the dismissal of the action on the ground of the consent not being filed, an affidavit was read proving the plaintiff had arrived at the age of 21 years since the action was commenced and that she now adopted the action:—Held, that the trial should proceed.

-Application for administration-Order to render proper account-Affidavit verifying.]-Upon an application for administration an order was made under English O. 55, R. 10a, (Judicature Ordinance 1898, Rule 487), that the application stand over for six weeks, and that the defendant within one month render to the plaintiff a proper statement of his accounts and dealings with the estate, which was duly furnished and verified by affidavit. The plaintiff did not appear on the further hearing of the application, and some months had elapsed when this application was made to cross-examine the defendant on the affidavit:-Held, that as the affidavit was not filed when notice of the application was served, but only (if at all) by the plaintiff himself on the return, the application must be refused. Quære, whether the rule authorizes a direction that such accounts be verified under oath, and whether such an affidavit is an affidavit "usea" or to be used on any proceeding in the cause or matter." (J.O. 1893, s. 261, now R. 282, J.O. 1898). The proper practice in order to obtain explanations of any of the items of accounts so furnished seems to be to formulate objections on the further hearing and have the disputed items adjudicated upon in Chambers.

Such compensation, while fair and just, must be reasonable but not necessarily liberal. The duties of the exccutors in this case were to realize on the real estate of the testator in Manitoba and transmit the proceeds to the Ontario executors. It took nine years to complete the work, and it appeared that the executors had carried out their duties with great faithfulness and unusual success, assisted by the great advance in the values of real estate during that period, and that the total amount of money realized was over $300,000, also that Mr. Riley who had had the chief management of the work, had already received under orders of the Court $19,500 on account:-Held. that an additional compensation to Mr. Riley of two per cent, of the gross amount realized would be fair and reasonable, and that the other two executors should together have two per cent. of the same. Held, also, that Mr. Riley was not entitled to commission as a real estate agent on sales of lands to purchasers secured by him personally, although he might have employed another person at the expense of the estate to perform such services.

Homestead-Judgments Act, R.S.M. c. 80, s. 12.]-The plaintiff claimed a right to have two village lots owned by defendant sold to satisfy a judgment of which he had a registered certificate. Defendant occupied as his dwelling the upper floor of a two-story building on one of the lots. the ground floor having been built for use as a store. There was a stairway inside the building connecting the two floors, also a stairway from the outside to the dwelling. The two lots were occupied as one property and some use was made of the vacant store for storage of articles used in connection with the dwelling. The Judge at the trial found that the value of the property was $3,000, and that there was a mortgage upon it for an amount exceeding $2,000:—Held, that the defendant was bona fide using the whole premises as his residence and that, under s. 12 of the Judgments Act, R.S.M. c. 80, the property was free from sale under the judgment. -Tools and implements of trade-More than one trade-Land and buildings -Division or sale-Incumbered land-Exemption out of excess.]-A general assignment for the benefit of creditors was made of all the assignor's real and personal estate, except what was exempt from seizure and sale under execution. The land was not specifically described, but the assignment contained a covenant on the part of the assignor to execute such instruments as should be required to effectuate the assignment. An order for the administration of the estate was subsequently made, and this was followed by the sale of the land under the direction of a Judge, and a transfer by the assignor to the purchaser. The land was subject to two mortgages; and $1,530, the surplus of the price in excess of the mortgages, was paid into Court. The assignor was an alien friend resident in the Territories:-Held, per Richardson, J .: -1. That an alien friend resident in the Territories is entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the Exemptions Ordinance, notwithstanding the provisions of the Naturalization Act, R.S.C. (1886), c. 113, s. 3. Affirmed on appeal to Court in banc. The assignor being by trade a repairer of watches and jewellery, and having received the tools and implements appertaining to that trade, exempt under the Exemptions Ordinance, C. O. 1898, c. 27, s. 2, sub-s. 7. 2. That he could not maintain a claim for such tools and implements as were used in connection with a steam laundry run for him by an expert, "though he sometimes tinkered about the laundry," he himself not being by trade a laundryman. 3. That the assignor was entitled as an exemption to the extent of $1,500, out of the $1,530, the excess of the price of the land beyond the mortgages to which it was subject. Affirmed on appeal to Court en banc. 4. That an execution creditor whose execution was registered subsequent to the mortgages, and was the only one registered prior to the assignment, though other executions were registered prior to the administration order and the execution of the transfer by the assignor, was entitled to the $30 in priority to these subsequent executions. On appeal to the Court en banc, the whole sum of $1,530 was held to be subject, in priority to the first execution creditor, to the claim of the holder of a mechanics' lien, who had obtained judgment, and to his costs, which exhausted his $30. The subsequent execution creditors claimed to be entitled to be paid out of · the $1,500 in view of s. 4 of the Exemptions Ordinance, which excepts from its effect "any article . . . the price of which forms the subject matter of the judgment upon which the execution is issued." Their action was upon promissory notes made by the assignor to the plaintiff. These notes were given to and discounted by the assignor for the purpose of paying certain moneys, for which the C. P. R. withheld delivery of certain machinery which went into the building on the land as fixtures, and were sold as part of the land; and the moneys so raised were partly so applied. 5. the subsequent execution creditors did not come within the provisions of s. 4. 6. That the $1,500 was subject to the payment of a claim under a mechanics' lien which was registered, and on which action was commenced before the date of the assignment; but that it was not subject to the payment of either of two other claims un-der mechanics' liens registered before the assignment, on the ground (without deciding on the objection that no action to enforce these liens had been commenced, it appearing, however, that the time limited for that purpose had not expired at the date of the assignment), that the claimants had, in their statutory declarations proving their claims against the estate, stated that they held no security for their claims. No fund being left to pay the general creditors. 7. That the petitioning creditors were entitled to their costs out of the $1,500, as it was in consequence of their proceedings, which the assignor's conduct forced them to take, that the rights of the various parties were determined and the fund distributed; that the assignee was entitled out of the same fund to his costs and his compensation and expenses as assignee, that the execution creditor, who was entitled to the excess $30, was also entitled to his costs in these proceedings out of the same fund; and that the assignor's advocate was entitled to a lien for his costs as between advocate and client on the same fund. On appeal to the Court en bane it was held, per Curiam (reversing the decision of Richardson, J.) that the petitioning creditors and the assignee must bear their own costs; that the petitioning creditors were liable to pay the costs of the assignor and the assigned, both before the Judge and in the appeal; and that the assignor was entitled to the $1,530 after payment thereout of the amount of the claim and costs of the lien holder whose claim had been allowed. The costs allowed to the various parties by the Judge, having been paid out to their respective advocates upon their undertakings filed to repay the same if so ordered, the Court, in giving judgment on the appeal, ordered payment accordingly. The Exemptions Ordinance discussed as to the right to call for, and the obligation to submit to, a division of land and buildings claimed to be exempt. Per McGuire, J .: - The sheriff is bound to leave a debtor what is exempt, the debtor having the right, if he chooses to exercise it, to a choice from a greater quantity of the same kind of articles as are exempt. If he does not see fit to make the choice, it is probable he would not be heard to complain that the sheriff had not made the choice most favourable to the debtor.

Expropriation - Public harbour - Piers and channel fallen into disrepair.]-For the purpose of forming a public harbour certain uplands together with certain beach lands were expropriated from the defendants by the Crown. Some years before, the defendants had constructed two piers, and had dredged an entrance from tidewater to the pond where such piers were situated; but at the time of the expropriation both of the piers had been allowed to fall into disrepair and the entrance or channel had been completely filled up with sand. The defendants claimed compensation, amongst other things, for the special adaptability of the property expropriated for harbour purposes, and for the value of the stone remaining in the piers at the time of the expropriation. There was no evidence to show that there was any competition of purchasers for the purpose for which the land had been taken by the Crown, or that there was any possibility of the defendants obtaining a purchaser who would use the land for that purpose: -Held, (following in re Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board (1909) 1 K.B. 16) that the defendants had not made out a case for compensation in respect of their claim for special adaptability. 2. Held, (following Streatham and General Estates Co. v. Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings) 52 J. Being unable to agree as to the amount of compensation that should be paid the claimants, a reference was had before three arbitrators, who allowed $1,200 to one claimant and $25 each to the other two. On appeal, Britton, J., held, that upon the evidence, the amount of $1,200 should be increased to $2,000, and that sum should be paid with interest at 5 per cent. from June 14, 1909, the date of passing the by-law; that the award should be dealt with under s. 464 of the Mun. If it were an award not requiring adoption by the council, then s. 462 (1) applied, and by s. 464, the Court should consider not only the legality of the award, but the merits as they appear from the proceedings so filed, and the Court could increase or diminish the amount awarded or otherwise modify the award as the justice of the case might seem to require. -Water lots-Expectation of enhanced value-Crown grant-Statutory authority.] -Land in Halifax, N.S., including a lot extending into the harbour, was expropriated for the purposes of the Intercolonial Railway. The title to the water lot was originally by grant from the Government of Nova Scotia, but no statutory authority for making such grant was produced. The lot could have been made much more valuable by the erection of wharves and piers for which, however, as they would constitute an obstruction to navigation, a license from the Dominion Government would have to be obtained. $10,000 was tendered as the value of all the land expropriated and the owners, claiming much more, appealed from the judgment of the Exchequer Court allowing that amount:-Held, Duff, J., dissenting, that the owners were not entitled to compensation based on the enhanced value that could be given to the water lot by the erection of wharves and piers and the expectation that a license would be granted therefor, and if they were the amount tendered was, in the circumstances, sufficient. Quære. Can a Crown grant of lands be made without statutory authority? Held, per Duff, J., that there was such authority in this case. Judgment of the Exchequer Court (12 Ex. C.R. 414) affirmed.

-Special adaptability for apartment purposes - Compensation.]-Certain premises situated on a city street were expropriated by the Crown for the erection thereon of public buildings. The house, although not a new one, was well and solidly built, and the owner claimed that it possessed special adaptability for the purpose of being used as apartments or flats:-Held, that the compensation for the property was to be assessed in respect of its market value, and that upon the facts the alleged special adaptability was not an element of such value. The King v. Hayes, 12 Can. Exch. R. 395.

-Sales of adjoining property - Basis of valuation.]—In assessing compensation in a case of expropriation of land, the sales of adjoining properties affords a safe prima facie basis of valuation.

-Compensation -- Market value -- Good will.]-In addition to full and fair compensation for the value of lands and premises expropriated the owner carrying on business thereon is entitled to compensation for the goodwill of such business. 2. The market price of the lands taken ought to be regarded as the prima facie basis of valuation in awarding compensation for land. Dodge v. The King (38 S.C.R. 149) followed. 3. In this case there was a passage from a street in the rear of the premises where one of the defendants carried on a licensed liquor business, by which customers who desired to visit the bar without attracting notice could do so:-Held, that such passage enhanced the value of the property for the purposes of a bar, and so constituted an element of compensation.

The King v. Condon, 12 Can. Exch. R.

-Wharf-Foreshore-Title.]-In this case certain lands which fronted on a public harbour owned by the Crown in right of the Dominion of Canada were expropriated for the purpose of forming the shore end of a wharf extending out into such harbour. The suppliants had no grant and claimed no title to the beach or the land covered with water at medium high tide. The suppliants claimed that the special adaptability of the lands for wharf purposes should be considered as adding a very large value to the same in assessing compensation:-Held, that as the suppliants did not own the land covered by water nor the beach, that such special adaptability was not to be considered.

Gillespie v. The King, 12 Can. Exch. R. 406.

—Consent of owner—Discontinuance.]—The petition for expropriation is not an offer to purchase but the institution of a real action which may be begun and carried on without the owne.'s consent. A municipal corporation has, then, an absolute right to discontinue its proceedings for expropriation so long as the award is not delivered, such award only creating a right in favour of the owner.

-By railway.]-See RAILWAY.

Expropriation of demised property — Lessees' loss of profits—Increased cost of carrying on business—Measure of damages.]—The suppliants were lessees of certain land and premises expropriated for the Intercolonial Railway. The premises had been fitted up and were used by them for the purposes of their business as coal merchants. By the terms of the lease under which they were in possession the term for which they were in possession the term for which they held could at any time be determined by the lessors by giving six months' notice in writing, in which event the suppliants were to be paid two thousand five hundred dollars for the improvements they had made:---Held, that the measure of compensation to be paid to the suppliants was the value at the time of the expropriation of their leasehold interest in the lands and premises. Apart from the sum payable for improvements there was no direct evidence to show what the value was. But it appeared that the suppliants had procured other premises in which to carry on their business, and that in doing so they had of necessity been at some loss and that the cost of carrying on their business had been increased. The amount of the loss and the increased cost of carrying on business during the six months succeeding the expropriation proceedings was in addition to the sum mentioned taken to represent the value to them or to any person in a like position of their interest in the premises. The suppliants also contended that if they had not been disturbed in their possession they would have increased their business, and so have made additional profits, and they claimed compensation for the loss of such profits, but this claim was not allowed.

Gibbon v. The Queen, 6 Can. Exch. R

-Damage to remaining lands-Access -Undertaking to give right of way-Effect of in estimating damages-Increased value by reason of public work.]-Defendants owned a certain property situated in the counties of Vaudreuil and Soulanges, a portion of which was taken by the Crown for the purposes of the Soulanges Canal. Access to the remaining portion of the defendants' land was cut off by the canal, but the Crown, under the provisions of 52 Vict. c. 38, s. 3, filed an undertaking to build and maintain a suitable road or right of way across its property for the use of the defendants. The evidence showed that the effect of this road would be to do away with all future d'amage arising from deprivation of access; and the Court assessed damages for past deprivation only. 2. It having been agreed between the parties in this case that the question of damages which might possibly arise in the future from any flooding of the defendant's lands should not be dealt with in the present action, the Court took congizance of such agreement in pronouncing judgment 3. In respect to the lands taken the Court declined to assess compensation based upon the consideration that the lands were of more value to the Crown than they were to the defendants at the time of the taking. Stebbing v. The Metropolitan Board of Works, L.R. 6 Q.B. 37; and Paint v. The Queen, 2 Ex. C.R. 149: 18 S.C.R. 718, followed.

The Queen v. Harwood, 6 Can. Exch. R. 420.

-Of land - Damages - Valuation-Evidence.]-The Crown expropriated land of L. and had it appraised by valuators who assessed it at $11,400, which sum was tendered to L., who refused it, and brought suit by petition of right for a larger sum as compensation. The Exchequer Court awarded him $17,000. On appeal by the Crown:—Held, Girouard, J., dissenting, that the evidence given on the trial of the petition showed that the sum assessed by the valuators was a very generous compensation to L. for the loss of his laud and the increase by the judgment appealed from was not justified. The Court which, considering that a less sum than that fixed by the valuators should not be given in this case, expressly stated that the same course would not necessarily be followed in future cases of this kind. The King v. Likely, 32 Can. S.C.R. 47.

-Of land by railway.]-See RAILWAY.

-Prospective value for purposes other than present use—Assessed value.] Where lands at the time of the expropriation had a prospective value for residential purposes beyond that which then attached to them as lands used for farming or dairy purposes such prospective value was taken into consideration in assessing compensation. (2) In assessing compensation in this case the Court looked at the assessed value of the lands, not as to determining consideration, but as afforcing some assistance in arriving at a fair valuation of the property taken. The King v. Turnbull Real Estate Company, 8 Can. Exch. R. 163.

-Leasehold property-Tenants' improvements-Expense of removal to new premises-Compensation.]-The suppliant was tenant of certain buildings and wharves erected upon the lands of which he had acquired possession as assignee of two leases. He there carried on business as a junk dealer. The terms for which these leases were made had expired at the time of the expropriation of the said lands by the Crown; but the leases contained a proviso that the buildings and other erections put on the demised premises should be valued by appraisers, and that the lessor or reversioner should have the op tion of resuming possession upon payment of the amount of such appraisement, or of renewing the leases on the same conditions for a further term not less than three years. No such appraisement had been made, and the suppliant continued in possession of the property as tenant from year to year. The evidence showed that the lessor had no present intention of paying for the improvements and resuming possession of the property:-Held, that in addition to the value of his improvements, the suppliant should be allowed compensation for the value, under all the circumstances, of his possession under the leases at the date of the expropriation.

-Continuing damages.] -See Damages.

-By municipal corporation-Public way -Action petitoire.]-The respondents are owners of houses on St. Louis Street in the city of Quebec, to the west of the old Academy of Music. The ground at this placing is sloping and the houses were originally built on the line of the street, that is, except those of the respondents; they were not square. The consequence is that the western corner of their houses on the street is 13 feet back of the adjoining house to the west. The corner is in line with the properties to the east. It follows that there was, between the line of the street and the front of the houses, a piece of land in the form of a triangle upon which there had been erected two landings with steps to afford access to the houses. In 1896 the appellants, in order to enlarge and regulate the street, acquired the Campbell property adjoining the respondents' houses at the west, pulled it down, and a new building had been erected in line this time with the houses of the respondents. The appellants laid the sidewalk of the street up to the new Campbell house and at the same time laid it in front of the respondents' property up to their houses, taking possession in doing so of the triangular piece of land, but without touching the landing. The respondents by their action claimed the value of the land so expro-priated and the appellants pleaded that it did not belong to the respondents, but formed part of St. Louis Street, the sidewalk of which extended to the front wall of the houses and had so extended for more than 30 years. The claim of the appellants to such 30 years' prescription had been set aside by the Superior Court, and by the unanimous judgment of the Court of Appeal.-Held, that under the circumstances above set out the respondents could claim from the city of Quebec the value of the land of which the latter had so taken possession and this without the necessity of having recourse to a petitory action. -Statutory authority - Manufacturing site - Survey-Location - Trespass.] The town of Sydney was empowered by statute to expropriate as much land as would be necessary to furnish a location for the works of the Dominion Iron Steel Co., a plan showing such location to be filed in the office for registry of deeds and on the same being filed the title to said lands to vest in the town. Engineers of the company were employed by the town to survey the lands required by the statute. M., two years later, after the company had excavated a considerable part of the land, brought an action for trespass claiming that it included five chains belonging to him, and, at the trial of such action, the main contention was as to the boundary of his holding. He obtained a verdict which was affirmed by the Full Court:-Held, reversing the judgment appealed from (36 N.S.R. 28) that the only question to be decided was whether or not the land claimed by M. was a part of that indicated on the plan filed; that the sole duty of the engineers was to lay out the land which the town intended to expropriate; and whether it was M.'s land or not was immaterial as the town could take it without regard to boundaries.

-Municipal expropriation - Report of commissioners-Appeal.]-In a matter of expropriation at Montreal under the provisions of 54 Vict. c. 78, s. 11 (Que.), the report of the commissioners has no more the character of chose jugée than it had before the Act was passed; and upon appeal from the decision of the commissioners to the Court of Review the Court, in order to appreciate the award, should have the assistance of the evidence on which it was founded; but the Court of Review can only change the amount of the indemnity awarded because of some omission on a part of the claim or some manifest error in the appreciation of the value of the property. The Court should not base its judgment on the valuation made by the witnesses called by the parties. In estimating the value of an immovable and the damages caused by expropriation the revenues of such immovable and the nature of sales made in the neighborhood should be taken into account.

-Government railway-Crossing at embankment and cutting-Riparian rights --Access to shore.]-K. was the owner of certain lands bounded on one side by Halifax harbour, and the Government of Canada constructed its railway through the land cutting off her access to the shore and gave her no crossing. Proceedings having been taken in the Exchequer Court to fix the compensation to which K. was entitled, she was awarded (2 Ex. C.R. 21) for damages occasioned by reason of the absence of the railway crossing, the sum of $500. On appeal by K. to the Supreme Court of Canada:-Held, Gwynne, J., dissenting, that the Judge of the Exchequer Court erred, on the question of fact, in not taking into consideration that the character of the embankment and cutting made and the nature of the ground on each side would forbid the making of a reasonably practicable crossing, and that the consequence of the severance would remain notwithstanding all that under the circumstances could be done towards making a crossing, and also had erred, in law, in not giving compensation for the severance once for all, and that, instead of allowing K. $125 a year for four years' severance, he should have awarded her a sum which would produce $125 a year for all time. Held, that there is not obligation in law to construct a crossing over a government railway apart from contract. Kearney v. The Queen (1889), 1 S.C. Cas. 344.

-Municipal expropriation-Indemnity -Costs.]-Although the charter of the city of Montreal contains no express provision on the subject in a matter of expropriation by the city the costs incurred by the party expropriated in order to establish his claim for indemnity form part of the damages suffered and should be comprised in the compensation awarded, but the expropriation commissioners should confine themselves to stating in their report that the party has incurred such costs and file a statement thereof; they have no right to determine and tax the amount. The costs thus incurred by the party expropriated are taxed according to law and the ordinary course of practice upon a bill drawn up under the tariff established by the Judges of the Superior Court respecting expropriation proceedings and actually in force at the time and the amount of the bill when taxed should be added to the indemnity. The sole fees which can be taxed against the city in such cases are those allowed by the tariff.

City of Montreal v. Poulin, 6 Que. P.R. 457 (Ct. Rev.).

-Tenant at will-Indemnity.]-The tenant whose term has expired and who, after the by-law authorizing expropriation of the land was sanctioned and public notice given nearly a year before such expropriation takes place, continues to occupy the permises as tenant at will of the owner who, threatened with expropriation, is unwilling to renew the lease, has only a precarious occupation liable to be terminated at any moment; he cannot, therefore, be considered an occupant within the terms of Art. 1608 C.C. and cannot claim indemnity for interruption of his occupation. Such an occupant can only recover damages for loss of profits between the time at which the by-law was sanctioned and that at which his lease expired and has no right to claim for the expense of moving, the cost of transfer of his hotel license, and for deterioration in value of his effects, as these losses are not occasioned by the expropriation, but arise only from the expiration of his tenancy at will. City of Montreal v. Poulin, Q.R. 26 S.C. 367 (Ct. Rev.).

-Entry by Parks Board on land prior to expropriation - Arbitration - Injunction.]-(1) Section 755 of the Municipal Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 116, giving power to a council of a city to acquire by purchase or expropriation land for park purposes, read together with section 769. does not authorize the council to enter upon the land, without the consent of the owner, without first taking steps to expropriate the land and obtain an award of arbitrators and paying the amount awarded for compensation to the County Court Clerk. (2) Section 44 of the Public Parks Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 141, giving the Parks Board of a town all the powers of the council under the Municipal Act in regard to all expropriations of lands and property deemed necessary to be taken or entered upon for the purposes of a park, does not warrant the board' in entering upon land, or doing anything to injuriously affect it, without the consent of the owner, until after they have regularly expropriated and paid for the property; and a person whose land has been thus entered upon or injuriously affected has a right of action for damages against the Parks Board, and is not restricted to the remedy by arbitration under the expropriation and arbitration clauses of the Municipal Act. (3) Statutes which encroach upon the rights of the subject in respect of his private property, or which enable public corporations to take his property without his consent, must be construed with the greatest strictness. -Public work - Damages.]-Upon an appeal from the report of special referees, on the ground that the amount of damages reported by them was excessive, and it appearing to the Court that the matter was one in which it was expedient that there should be a reference back to the referees under the 19th Rule of Court of the 12th December, 1889, an order was made therefor, in which the following directions were given to the referees: (1) To find what in September, 1902, was the value of the wharf, land and premises taken by the Crown as mentioned in the information. In finding that value the referees were directed to exclude from their consideration the value of the same to the Crown, in the way of saving expense in the construction of the public work, or otherwise, and to determine its value at that time to the owner, or any other person, for any purpose to which in the ordinary course of events it could be put. In finding that value the referees were also directed to take into account the condition, situation, and prospects of the property taken; but that such value should be one that the property had at the time it was taken, and not one that the referees might think that it might have at some future time by reason of its condition, situation or prospects. (2) With regard to the remainder of the property, of which that taken formed part. the referees were directed to find the amount of damages, if any, that had been occasioned to the portion not expropriated by the taking of the part mentioned, and the construction of the public work. referees were further directed that if the construction of the public work benefited and increased the value of the portion of the property not expropriated, that was to be taken into account and set off against the damages occasioned by the severance.

-Market value-Potential value.] - D. purchased at different times and in sixteen different parcels 623 acres of land, paying for the whole nearly $7,000, or about $11 per acre. The Crown on expropriating the land offered him $20 per acre, which he refused, claiming $22,000, which on a reference to ascertain the value was increased to $45,000. The referee allowed $38,000, which the Exchequer Court reduced to the sum first claimed:-Held, reversing the judgment of the Exechequer Court, 10 Ex. C.R. 208, that there was no user of the land nor any special circumstances to make it worth more than the market value, which was established by the price for which it was sold shortly before expropriation. D. claimed the larger price as potential value of the land for orchard purposes to which he had intended to devote it. Held, that as he had not proved the land to be fit for such purpose and the evidence tended to disprove it he could not receive compensation on that ground. Dodge v. The King, 38 Can. S.C.R. 149.

-Expropriation-Appointment of arbitrator.]-(1) Under section 796 of the Winnipeg Charter, 1 and 2 Edw. VII. c. 77. the appointment by the city of an arbitrator to determine the compensation to be paid for land sought to be expropriated must be signed in the same manner as a by-law, that is, it must be under the corporate seal and signed by the mayor or acting mayor and the clerk or acting clerk, and it is not sufficient that a regularly signed by-law had been passed authorizing the mayor to appoint a named person as arbitrator, and that the appointment had been signed by the mayor alone under the corporate seal. (2) The city charter contains no provision enabling the city to carry on arbitration proceedings to enforce the expropriation of land unless the amount claimed by the landowner does not exceed one thousand dollars, and then only in the manner pointed out by section 789. — City charter — Special provisions.] — When the charter of a city contains general provisions respecting the expropriation of immovables and special provisions authorizing it to make a plan of the city indicating streets and their alignment, and imposing upon it the duty of giving effect to such indications after homologation of the plan by the Court, these provisions are deemed to be an exception to the former. Therefore, the municipality can be mere resolution, authorize the payment for the lands indicated and negotiation with the owners pursuant to the resolution without observing the formalities prescribed by the general provisions.

Guay v. Marsan, Q.R. 16 K.B. 6, reversing 28 S.C. 145.

-Land expropriated for civic work -Compensation-Limitation of right.]-By Act 63 Vict. c. 59, the City of Saint John is empowered to take the lands, tenements, rights, property and premises of persons or corporations for needed public civic works, and provision is made for compensation. By Act 1 Edw. VII. e. 55, the power of the city as to its right to expropriate for a water supply is extended, and the sections in 63 Vict. c. 59, providing for compensation are made to apply. By Act 5 Edw. VII. c. 59, passed for the purpose of further carrying out the provisions of the Act or Acts of the Legislature empowering the City of Saint John to extend its water supply, the city is authorized to take by expropriation or purchase any land that may be needed for the purpose, but no provision is made for compensation, except in the case of certain riparian owners on the Mispec River, and no reference is made to the compensation sections in the other Acts:-Held, that persons other than those specially provided for in the Act 5 Edw. VII., are entitled to compensation, and for this purpose the provision in the other Acts as to assessing and paying damages might be read into 5 Edw. VII.; that the city might expropriate either the land and vest the title or an easement to lay and maintain its pipes, but could not expropriate an easement to erect and maintain telegraph and telephone lines upon the land. Chittick v. City of Saint John, 38 N.B. R. 249.

—Lease of mud flats—Covenant to pay for buildings and erections—Damages.] — Where the city of Saint John expropriated land under lease from it, consisting mostly of mud flats, to be used for manufacturing purposes only, and the lease contained a covenant to pay at the end of the term for ''the buildings and erections that shall or may then be on the demised premises,' pling flatened with stringers necessary to make it available for buildings may be a subject of damages for which the city would be bound to pay on expropriation under 63 Viet. c. 59, and should not be excluded from consideration on an assessment of damages.

Sleeth v. City of Saint John, 38 N.B.R. 542. (Same case, 39 N.B.R. 56).

-Third arbitrator-Appointment-Notice of view of land-Award-Form and service.]-For an expropriation under Art. 916 par. 1 M.C., the third arbitrator may be appointed by the prothonotary on application of one party without notice to the other. The five days' notice to the party whose land is to be taken prescribed by Art. 912 M.C. is not required on pain of nullity. Hence, the party who receives only a two days' notice can demand fur-ther delay and if he does not he cannot complain of the irregularity. The view of the land provided for by Art. 913 M.C. is only for the case where the arbitrators do not sufficiently know it. When they do the view may be dispensed with. The arbitrators are not obliged to have their award served. The certificate they deposit in the municipal office suffices to bring it to the knowledge of the parties. No particular form is prescribed by law for the award. It is sufficient if the certificate deposited announces the amount fixed by the arbitrators to represent the value of the expropriated land. The provisions of Art. 16 M.C. applies to expropriations as well as to other municipal proceedings. Therefore, the person who claims that he is damnified can only complain of the omission of formalities which have caused him a substantial injustice, proof of which lies -Colonization road - Indemnity.] - The possessory action lies against those who shelter themselves behind orders of public authority, e.g., contractors and inspectors of works directed by the Minister of Colonization to open a colonization road under the provisions of Arts. 1715 et seq. R. S.Q. The provisions of s. 1718 R.S.Q. that "the lands on which colonization roads are traced and laid out become the property of the Crown and when the work is situated in a township no indemnity is payable for the ground, is subordinate to Art. 407 C.C. and does not relieve the minister and his representatives from the necessity to expropriate in the manner prescribed by law. The owner expropriated can be deprived only by an express enactment of the guarantee against illegality given to him by the formalities of expropriation and the indemnity to which he is entitled extends beyond the value of the lands.

—City lease of mud flats—Covenant to pay for buildings and erections—Piling and filling in—Damages.]—On expropriation under 63 Viet. e. 59 of lands under lease, containing a covenant to pay at the end of the term for "any buildings or erections for manufacturing purposes" which should or might then be on the demised premises:—Held, that damages should be assessed for the value at the time of expropriation of all piling and filling in intended for and forming a necessary part of the foundation of such buildings.

Sleeth v. City of Saint John, 39 N.B.

- Expropriation by municipality - Misdescription of lot-Rectification.]-The description of an immovable as "part of cadastral number 160" instead of "number 174," and as being the property of the Montreal Gas. Co., instead of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., in a roll for collection prepared under authority of the Act 62 Vict. c. 58, s. 450 (Que.), is not a clerical error, omission or defect in form which the Superior Court or a Judge thereof can, at his discretion, permit to be rectified under the provisions of s. 457 of said Act. Especially so when more than three years have elapsed since the roll was deposited and brought into force and the conditions on which the real owner would be called upon to contest are not such as existed when it was prepared.

City of Montreal v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co., Q.R. 18 K.B. 294.

—Lowering grade—Right of owner of abutting property to take arbitration proceedings.]—The owner of property abutting on a street, the grade of which has been lowered by the corporation, is entitled to arbitration for determining whether his property has been injuriously affected.

The Bishop of New Westminster v. City of Vancouver, 14 B.C.R. 136.

—Appeal—Insufficient indemnity.]—As a rule an appeal from an award of arbitrators based on the insufficiency or excess of the indemnity will not be granted. But it will be when the evidence is clearly in favour of the appellant or when misconduct, partiality or prevarication on the part of expert witness is apparent. The municipal valuation of lands is only for municipal valuation of lands is only for municipal revenue; it does not represent the real or selling value. Municipal titles or valuations cannot and should not, as a rule, be taken as a guide in valuing property expropriated especially as to part only of an immovable.

Canadian Northern Quebec Ry. Co. v. Frenette, 10 Que. P.R. 318.

—Omission to indicate proprietors of land expropriated.]—The omission by valuators appointed for the purposes of an expropriation under the municipal code, to indicate, in their award, the proprietors of lands taken for a first front road on a lot, or reserved for a public road, does not make it void, and, if no substantial injustice arises (Art. 16 M.C.), will not avail as a ground of nullity against the expropriation proceedings.

King's Asbestos Mines v. Township of Thetford South, 17 K.B. Que. 567.

— Passing of title — By-law — Registry.]—The adoption of a by-law, under R.S.L.C. c. 24, ordering the expropriation of land for municipal purposes does not operate as a conveyance of the property; it is only by the payment of the indemnity and delivery of the receipt to the secretary-treasurer that the legal title passes to the municipal corporation. Where two parties revenceate immovable property under different titles not coming from a common auteur the priority of registry of one does not strengthen his case as against the other.

EXTORTION.

Extorting money by accusing a person of an offence-Admissibility of documents.]-On the trial of a charge for extorting money by threatening to accuse of an offence a letter written to a third party by the person threatened at the time of the threats and at the instigation of the accused, but not read by him, is not admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ or otherwise. A summons issued by a justice of the peace citing the accused to appear and answer a criminal charge is a "document containing an accusation" within the meaning of s. 406 (c) of the Criminal Code, 1892. A summons is-sued as above need not have been issued at the instigation of the informant with the intent aforesaid, but the offence is complete if the summons is used by a third person for the purpose of extortion. A charge that A.B. "did unlawfully abuse a mare, the property of C.D., contrary to the Statutes of Canada, s. 512," is sufficiently stated.

the United States and disclosing fraudulent appropriation by a trustee and agent, the Canadian Court may assume that "grand larceny" is a species of larceny within the extradition treaty. 2. Section 686 of the Criminal Code is substantially complied with in extradition proceedings where the Commissioner at the close of the case for the prosecution calls upon counsel for the accused for his defence, whereupon the argument was proceeded with, without specifically asking the accused if he wished to call any witnesses. 3. Affidavits may be received in extradition proceedings under section 16 of the Extradition Act in the discretion of the Commissioner, but where the oral evidence alone does not justify a committal, the prisoner will be discharged if the ex parte affidavits and depositions from the foreign state tending to show the commission of the crime are not supplemented by the documentary proof which the circumstances demand and are defective in not disclosing the source of information as to the conduct of the accused after receiving the money in question which was re-lied upon to establish a fraudulent appropriation thereof.

—Evidence to justify — Offence under both foreign and Canadian law.]—(1) The duty of an extradition Judge in hearing an information for an extraditable offence is to order extradition if the evidence adduced, in the absence of contradiction, is such that a magistrate holding a preliminary enquiry in a similar case should commit for trial. (2) Semble, the extradition Judge must be satisfied that the offence disclosed in the information is criminal both under Canadian law and under the law of the demanding country and that it is within the extradition treaty.

-Requisition from foreign government -Extradition treaty with Russia. | - When, under the terms of an extradition treaty with a foreign government, as in the case of the treaty with Russia, printed in the Canada Gazette, for 1887, at p. 1918, Art. VIII. and IX., a requisiton from that government for the surrender of a fugitive is provided for as preliminary to any proceedings for the arrest of the fugitive, any such proceedings taken without such requisition having been made are entirely unauthorized, and the fugitive, even atter he has been committed for extradition by a Judge of this Court, should be discharged upon habeas corpus. Ss. 3 and 10 of our Extradition Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 155, distinctly provide that nothing in the Act which is inconsistent with any of the terms of an extradition treaty shall have effect to contravene the treaty. Re Lazier, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 167, 26 A.R. 260, distinguished on the ground that there was no corresponding provision in the extradition treaty with the United States.

-Extradition - Murder - Russia-Treaty -Political character of crime. 1-At a village in Russia, one F. shot and killed a watchman, in circumstances which, according to the law of Canada, would make the act murder. F. fled; a man of the same name was arrested in Manitoba, and his extradition to Russia to answer a charge of murder was sought:—Held, that the prisoner's identity with F. was sufficiently established by the evidence. 2. That the crime of the accused was not committed in the furtherance of a political object, within the meaning of the Treaty with Russia of the 24th November, 1886. The accused was a member of a political society whose object was to alter the form of government and to do away with private ownership of property-a society by which revolutionary outrages had been perpetrated. In the district where the crime was committed, martial law had been proclaimed, and was in force. F. was in charge of the watchman on his way to the village administrative office, having been asked to give an account of himself, because he was a stranger in the village, when he shot the officer. The crime would, in Russia, be called a political crime and be tried by a special tribunal. But that did not make it a crime of a political character within the meaning of the Treaty. Extradition ordered.

Contempt of foreign divorce judgment-Parent stealing his own child-Evidence of foreign law-Onus-Criminal Code, s. 284.]-The prisoner and his wife were absolutely divorced in the State of Illinois. U.S., where they were domiciled, by a decree which gave the custody of their child, five years of age, to the wife, with permission to the prisoner to take it out in the day time, returning it the same day. The prisoner having thus obtained the child, carried it away to Canada:-Held, on extradition proceedings, that "child-stealing" is an extraditable offence, and the evidence taken before the extradition commissioner showing this to be a case of child-stealing under s. 284 of the Criminal Code, 55-56 Vict. c. 29 (D.), was safficient to warrant the extradition of the prisoner in the absence of evidence of foreign law, as the Court would assume the crimes to be identical in the two countries. In re Murphy (1894-5), 26 O.R. 163; 23 A.R. 386, followed. Section 234 of the Criminal Code does not exclude the case of a father and child. A crime does not become any the less a crime because it also happens to be a contempt of Court, as in this case. Held, also, that the prisoner's contention that he had acted in good faith because he had been advised that the divorce decree, having been obtained collusively, was a nullity, would be proper matter of defence on the trial, but could not be dealt with by the magistrate, who had before him the foreign decree and the wife's oath that she did not collude.

-Bail-Appeal-Single Judge.]-An application to a single Judge of the Court of Appeal to admit to bail a person committed for extradition, pending an appeal to that Court, was refused by him on the grounds, (1) That it did not appear that the applicant was in actual custody, and (2) it was doubtful if a single Juage of such Court had power to make the order, a matter of bail not being regarded as incidental to the appeal, and so capable of being dealt with by a single Judge under s. 54 of the Judicature Act. -Foreign warrant-Proof of-Proof of warrant being in force - Return - Discharge.]-A warrant under the Extradition Act (R.S.C. 1886, c. 142, s. 6) for the apprehension of a fugitive was issued upon duly authenticated copies (1) of an indictment found by a grand jury in a foreign country charging the accused with an extradictable offence, (2) of a bench warrant issued upon the said indictment, accompanied by a copy of a return thereto by the sheriff dated 10th April to the effect that he could not find the accused and believed that he was without the jurisdiction, and (3) of depositions of witnesses tending to show that the accused was guilty of the offence charged. On the hearing, the proceedings above mentioned were put in as evidence subject to objection, and the said sheriff gave evidence that the accused, whom he identified, had been in custody from about the 1st May until the sittings of the Court at which he was indicted, and that he was at that sittings discharged from his custody.—Held, 1. That, in order to give jurisdiction to a Judge to issue such a warrant, either a foreign warrant of arrest must be proved or an information or complaint must be laid before the Judge at or before the time of the issue of the warrant. 2. That, in case of a foreign warrant, it must be shown to be outstanding and in full force, and that the evidence failed to establish this. Semble, that in case of a foreign warrant, the original must be produced. The accused was therefore discharged.

-Right of extradition commissioner to issue warrant for arrest-Jurisdiction of Judge of Superior Court over extradition commissioner-Certiorari-Right of foreign country to intervene.]-(1) Foreign sovereigns and states have the right to appear and intervene in cases before the Courts of the Province of Quebec. (2) A commissioner of extradition, acting under the authority of the Extradition Act, has equal authority with a Judge of the Superior Court; and it is only when, assuming to act as a commissioner, he does something which is ultra vires of his powers, or otherwise acts illegally, that Superior Courts, or Judges thereof, become seized with revisory, amendatory or appellate powers over his acts. (3) When a prisoner, whose extradition is sought, has been brought before a Judge of the Superior Court on a writ of habeas corpus, issued before the committal of the accused and before the conclusion of the enquiry before the commissioner, the powers of the Judge are limited to determining whether the commissioner has jurisdiction to make the enquiry, i.e., whether he is legally seized of the case; when, however, the writ of habeas corpus was issued after the committal of the accused, the Judge has the power to review the case against him. (4) The jurisdiction of an Extradition Judge or commissioner, extends over the whole province for which he has been appointed; he may therefore order a prisoner to be brought before him from any part of the province in which he has been arrested. (5) A Judge of the Superior Court before whom a prisoner, whose extradition is sought, has been brought on a writ of habeas corpus, has absolute control over him until he has passed from the hands of such Judge; and until then no other Judge has the right to interfere in the matter by habeas corpus or otherwise charges in the petition on which the second writ was issued; (b) the petitioner abandoned his first writ before judgment and set out such abandonment in his second petition; (c) the second writ was not addressed to the same gaoler as the first and was executed in another district. (2) The petitioner may lawfully abandon proceedings on a writ of habeas corpus at any time before judgment therein, and if notwithstanding such abandonment judgment is rendered it will be chose jugée and cannot be set up against a second writ. (3) After the issue of a writ of habeas corpus in an extradition case the Judge seized of the proceedings thereon may cause an auxiliary writ of certiorari to be issued addressed to the extradition commissioner who issued the warrant requiring him to return the whoe record including the complaint or information and the documents relating thereto. (4) In dealing with the merits of the habeas corpus the Judge, after the return of the record, under certiorari has been made, is not restricted to examination of the warrant of arrest in order to ascertain if the commissioner had jurisdiction, but may go behind it and examine the grounds on which it issued. (5) An extradition commissioner has jurisdiction to proceed to extradition only if his warrant, as well as the documents on which he issued it, are legal and contain the legal description of an offence provided for by treaty. (6) In an extradition case the date of the commission of the offence is an essential element in describing it, and if the warrant does not mention such date it is defective.

(7) The warrant, the information and the other documents relating thereto should make it clearly appear that the offence charged is provided for by extradition treaties. (8) The extradition commissioner cannot, in his warrant, make an altera-tion as to the offence charged by the information so as to make it fall within the provisions of the treaty.

-Recovery of stolen property-Evidence —Inference—"Money, valuable security or other property."]—Upon a motion for the discharge of a prisoner committed for extradition no evidence can be considered except that upon which the prisoner stands committed, and into the weight of that evidence or even its suffi ciency to sustain the charge no inquiry can be made. The fact of the silence of a person accused of receiving stolen property upon hearing statements made as to his alleged guilt by the person who stole the property is admissible in evidence as leading to the inference of his guilty knowledge. Having regard to the interpretation clauses of the Extradition Act, R.S. C. 1886, c. 142, crimes referred to in the "extradition arrangement" of 1890 between Great Britain and the United States come within the Act. The words "other property" used in that arrangement as to the crime of "receiving any money, valuable security, or other property, knowing the same to have been embezzled, stolen, or fraudulently obtained" must be construed as relating only to things of the same type as "money" or "valuable security" and a prisoner accused of receiving a stolen pair of shoes was discharged from custody.

-Forgery - Uttering forged document-Letter of introduction-Intent-Criminal Code, ss. 422, 424.]—There was evidence that the prisoner handed to a young woman in charge of an office of the Western Union Telegraph Company a letter purporting to be signed by a vice-president of that company, in these words: "To any employee, Western Union Telegraph Company: This will introduce Mr. J. O. Goelet, a personal friend of the management of this company. Any favours shown him will be duly appreciated by the corporation and myself." vice-president whose name was used did not himself sign it, nor authorize any one else to sign it for him, nor was he aware of it. There was evidence that the prisoner shortly afterwards gained the affections of the young woman, and proposed, under the name of J. O. Goelet, to marry her, although he had a wife living. There was no evidence that any person named J. O. Goelet existed. There was no evidence to show that the prisoner had himself written any part of the document:

—Held, that the facts were sufficient to make out a prima facie case that the prisoner presented the document with the intention that the young woman should believe and act upon it as genuine, to her own prejucice, within the meaning of s. 422 of the Criminal Code; and therefore a prima facie case of uttering a forged document, within the meaning of s. 424; and an order for extradition was right. The language used in s. 422 is intended to extend to cases which would not have come within any former common law or statutory definition of forgery in force in Canacia.

Re Abeel, 7 O.L.R .327, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 189 (Street, J.).

—Larceny—False pretences.]—In extradition proceedings the Judge is to find (1) whether there is prima facie evidence of the commission by the accused of an offence, which if committed in Canada would be an indictable offence by the law of Canada; and, if it be so found, then (2) whether there is prima facie evidence that the offence is one of the erimes described in the extradition arrangement with the foreign country seeking extradition. "Grand larceny in the second degree" is an extradition erime under the extradition arrangement between Great Britain and the United States of 1889-90.

Re F. H. Martin (No. 1), 2 Terr. L.R. 301 (Richardson, J.); 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 326

—Larceny—False pretences—Form of warrant.]—''Obtaining money or property by false pretences'' is an extradition crime within the meaning of the extradition crime within the meaning of the extradition Act, and the extradition arrangement between Great Britain and the United States of America. A warrant of committal under the Extradition Act which recited the Judge's determination that the prisoner should be surrendered in pursuance of the A.t. ''on the ground of his being accused of grand larceny in the second degree within the jurisdiction of the State of Minnesota,'' was held sufficient.

-Participation in larceny-Overt act in conspiracy to defraud—Effect of proceeding with charge of conspiracy in the foreign country—Remand pending inquiry before extradition Judge.]—(1) Conspiracy to defraud is in itself not an extradiciable offence between Canada and the United States, but extradition will lie as for a separate crime in respect of any overt act of a conspiracy which constitutes one of the crimes mentioned in the extradition arrangement. (2) The extraditable offence of larceny or participations.

pation in larceny is charged sufficiently in an information laid on instituting extradition proceedings therefor, if, following a charge of conspiracy to defraud between the accused and another person and an embezzlement and theft by such person in pursuance thereof, the information alleges that the accused "did participate in the said offence of embezzlement and theft. (3) Where extradition is sought upon a charge of participation in a theft alleged to have been committed with respect to property of the gov-ernment of the demanding country, and the demanding country produces, in support of the extradition charge, an indictment found in that country upon a charge of conspiracy wherein acts of theft are charged as overt acts of the conspiracy, the demanding country is not thereby estopped from treating such overt acts as independent acts of larceny for the purposes of extradition. (4) Where a prisoner is brought before an extradition Judge in pursuance of a warrant of arrest, and charged with an extraditable offence, he may be remanded for the purpose of affording the prosecution an opportunity of adducing evidence. (5) A return to a writ of habeas corpus issued pending such remand is good if it discloses an information duly laid before an extradition Judge having jurisdiction over the subject matter of the inquiry, the appearance of the accused before such Judge and a warrant under the hand and seal of such Judge remanding him into custody until the same fixed for proceeding with the hearing. (6) Semble, the omission to show in a warrant of remand that the alleged offence was subsequent to the extradition convention which had no retroactive application, is not a ground for holding the detention to be invalid. Ex parte Greene and Gaynor (No. 2), 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 389, reversed.

(2) In the province of Quebec, habeas corpus must be applied for in the judicial district in which the prisoner is incarcerated, and, in the absence from the Montreal aistrict of the Judges of the Court of King's Bench during the term sittings in Quebec, habeas corpus applications cannot be heard in Quebec in re-spect of prisoners in the Montreal district, but must be brought before a Judge of the Superior Court. (3) Semble, an extradition commissioner has a discretion to admit to bail pending the extradition enquiry the person charged before him; but, if it is proved that the accused is a fugitive from the foreign country demanding him, that fact will have weight, with the other circumstances, against the application. (4) Per Lacoste, C.J.:—A Judge of the Court of King's Bench of the province of Quebec has no jurisdiction while sitting at Quebec City to entertain an application for bail, under Cr. (3) A charge of "grand larceny" is within the extradition arrangement with the United States as a species of "larceny." (4) Unless the evidence before the extradition Judge of an alleged confession by the accused was clearly inadmissible, another Judge, hearing the case upon a habeas corpus after committal, should not discharge the prisoner upon the ground of its inadmissibility. (5) Semble, where a witness called to prove a confession alleged to have been -Perjury - Self-imposed oath-Warrant of committal-Jurisdiction of extradition commissioner - Description of offence -Particulars.]-(1) Perjury is an extradition crime within the meaning of the treaty and the Act. (2) Where the alleged crime is perjury, it is sufficient if the oath was administered in compliance with the formalities of the demanding country. (3) A warrant of committal remanding a prisoner for extradition is sufficient if it states the offence for which he is committed. (4) Such warrant, issued by an extradition commissioner under the authority conferred by the Extradition Act, is valid if issued in the form prescribed by the Act. (5) The ordinary technicalities of criminal procedure are applicable to proceedings in extradition to only a limited extent. (6) Where the proceeding is manifestly taken in good faith, a technical non-compliance with some formality of criminal procedure should not be allowed to stand in the way. (7) Where the demanding country is one of the States of the United States of America, it is sufficient if the imputed crime be a crime according to the law of that State, although not an offence against the general laws of the United States. In re Winsor (1865), 6 B. & S. 522, commented upon. (8) One test of determining whether the evidence is such as would justify the committal of the accused for trial if the crime had been committed in Canada is to conceive the accused pursuing the conduct in question in this country, and then to transplant along with him his environment, incluging, so far as relevant, the local institutions of the demanding country, the laws affecting the legal powers and rights, and fixing the legal character of the acts of the persons concerned, always excepting the law supplying the definition of the crime which is charged.

As a consequence, it need not state that the charges laid have been inquired into, that they relate to extradition crimes, that prima facie proof of guilt has been made, nor provide specifically for the discharge or surrender of the prisoner. (2) The commissioner for extradition, in dealing with the information and evidence in the case, is governed by the same rules as the magistrate before whom a preliminary investigation in respect of an indictable offence is held; he issues his warrant for committal upon evidence that would justify the magistrate in committing for trial, and as the latter may commit for an offence or offences different from those for which the accused was arrested, so also a variance between the charge in the information and the crime or crimes (whether one or more is of no consequence) stated in the committal as the ground for extradition, provided they are extraditable, is immaterial, (3) Participation in fraud by an agent, participation in embezzlement, and the receiving of moneys knowing the same to have been fraudulently obtained, are extradictable crimes. Greene v. Vallée, 14 Que. K.B. 261 (Ouimet, J.).

-Prohibition - Appeal - Jurisdiction.] -The refusal by a Judge of the Superior Court to grant a summons in a matter of prohibition is a judgment and an appeal therefrom lies to the Court of King's Bench. (2) The powers of the Superior Court as to superintending and reforming proceedings in the Courts and by the Judges and persons mentioned in Art. 50 C.P.Q., do not extend to Dominion Courts for administering the laws relating to extradition for criminal offences and prohibition does not lie in respect to such Courts or its officers. (3) The Parliament of Canada has power to establish Courts and authorize the appointment of officers to administer the extradition laws.

Gaynor v. Lafontaine, Q.R. 14 K.B. 99. [See also 36 Can. S.C.R. 247].

-Extradition - Habeas corpus - Re-arrest for same offence after discharge-Res judicata-Affidavit on information and belief.]-On an application for a habeas corpus on the grounds: (1) That the prisoner was arrested a second time for the same offence after his release on a habeas corpus; (2) That the matter was res judicata; (3) That the complaint against him was on information and belief only; (4) That no evidence was received by the Judge, and (5) That neither information and complaint nor the warrant was transmitted to the Minister of Justice:-Held, that, although the prisoner had been discharged from custody on the ground that there was no proper evidence of the commission of the alleged offence or identifying the alleged forged document, he could be re-arrested when further and new evidence had been discovered and was forthcoming to supply the deficiencies, and that the doctrine of res judicata or of former jeopardy or of autrefois acquit was inapplicable to such an enquiry. The inapplicable to such an enquiry. Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Charles II. c. 2, s. 6, does not apply to extradition proceedings:-Held, that an afficiavit upon which the arrest was made being on information and belief was sufficient. Held, also, that the other objections should not be investigated on appeal as the enquiry was still pending and was to be prosecuted before the extradition Judge. Quære, whether the Divisional Court would have acted as on an appeal if objection had been taken to its jurisaiction.

against the prisoner upon his discharge. Semble, also, that, in the present state of the authorities, an extradition Judge should require proof that the crime is an extradition crime as well by the laws of the demanding state as by our own.

Re Harsha (No. 2), 11 O.L.R. 494, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 62. [An appeal taken to the Privy Council was dismissed.]

—Evidence in support of charge — Ex parte affidavits—Fraud by an agent.]—(1) The omission to mark a writ of habeas corpus in the manner prescribed in s. 3, c. 95, C.S.L.C., is not a ground of objection that can be taken by the party prosecuting the prisoner or opposing his discharge, more particularly after the merits of the cause of detention have

-Evidence of commission of offence-Irregularities in proceedings before extradition Judge-Discharge of prisoner-Fresh proceedings.]-The prisoner was committed by a Judge for extradition to a foreign state for the offence of forging tickets of admission to an entertainment. The evidence before the Judge consisted of a certified copy of the indictment of the prisoner in the foreign state, the information of a police detective taken before the Judge himself, and five deposi-tions or affidavits sworn in the foreign state, consisting in great part merely of hearsay statements made by other persons to the deponents, not in the presence of the prisoner. These depositions proved some relevant facts, and raised a strong suspicion against the prisoner of having forged something, of having committed an offence which, if committed in Canada, would be forgery at common law, as well as under the Criminal Code, ss. 419, 421, 423; but neither a genuine ticket nor one of those with the forging of which the prisoner was charged was produced with any of the depositions, nor produced or identified before the extradition Judge: Held, Meredith, J.A., dissenting, that there was no proper evidence of the commission of the alleged offence; and the prisoner was entitled to his discharge upon habeas corpus. Semble, per Osler, J.A., that there were grave irregularities in the proceedings before the extradition Judge; his warrant for the apprehension of the accused was issued without any information or complaint taken in this country, or a foreign warrant duly authenticated, having been before him; the prisoner was arrested on the strength of a telegram. and the depositions on which he was committed were not forthcoming pending their authentication until the day upon which the order was made remanding him for extradition; and s. 6 (2) of the Extradition Act could not have been complied with. Semble, also, that there was nothing to prevent fresh proceedings being taken against the prisoner upon his discharge. Semble, also, that, in the present state of the authorities, an extradition Judge should require proof that the crime is an extradition crime as well by the laws of been inquired into. The formality is one required for the instruction of the sheriff, gaoler or officer detaining the prisoner. (2) Affidavits taken ex parte in the manner provided in section 10 of the Extradition Act, R.S.C., c. 142, are admissible as evidence in support of the charge for which the extradition of a fugitive is sought. (3) The sufficiency of such evidence is a matter for the judicial dis-cretion of the extradition commissioner and his decision thereon is not subject to review in habeas corpus proceedings. (4) the expression "fraud by an agent" in section 4 of Article 1 of the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the United States (Convention of 1889-90) is not confined to agents who misapply trust moneys, but is of general purport and extends to servants or employees of the Government, such as appraisers of imported goods subject to customs' duties.

Browne v. United States of America,
30 Que. S.C. 363 (Taschereau, J.).

-Extraditable crimes-Conspiracy to defraud-Fraud by an agent.] — (1) The offence or crime of conspiracy to defraud is not an extraditable crime under the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the United States. (2) Evidence of a conviction in the United States of conspiracy to defraud and consisting of copies of an indictment for that offence, of a verocity of a verocity and of the sentence to fine and imprisonment in consequence, affords no grounds for a committal for extradition on a charge of fraud by an agent, even though overt acts of fraud by the prisoner as an agent be set out in the indictment, in conformity with the rules of criminal procedure in the United States.

United States v. Browne; Exparte Browne, 16 Que. K.B. 10, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 161 (Lavergne, J.).

-Embezzlement-Depositions taken in demanding country-Proof of foreign law-British-Russian treaty.]—(1) A committal for extradition on a charge of embezzlement is not justified on evičence only of errors or irregularities in bookkeeping in books kept by the accused for his employers, such evidence alone not being sufficient to establish a prima facie case of thetr or conversion of money.

Re Kalke, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 253.

—Bribery—Retroactive legislation.]—The prisoner who was the assistant city engineer of a city in the State of Ohio, U.S., with the supervision over certain of the streets which were being improved by a firm of contractors, accepted from the firm the sum of $50 for the purpose of influencing him in his work of supervision:—Held, that the offence did not amount to bribery at common law, where it could only be predicated of a reward given to a Judge or other person concerned in the public administration of justice; but that it constituted bribery both under the laws of the State of Ohio, as well as under subsection (c) of section 161 of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1906, c. 146. The crime of bribery was not included in the list of offences contained in the extradition treaty of 1889, nor in that of 1890, but by Art. 1 of the treaty of 1907, it was added to such list, and was by Art. 2 to be considered as an integral part thereof, and as if the original list of crimes had comprised the additional crimes specified in Art. 1. The offence here was committed before the coming into force of the treaty of 1907. Held, that Art. 2 had a retroactive effect, and notwithstanding that the offence was committed before the coming into force of the treaty of 1907, the offence of bribery was to be treated as if originally in the list of offences contained in the treaty of 1889, and therefore came within the treaty and that the prisoner was extracitable.

-Evidence-Prima facie case-Accessory]-The accused was arrested at the instigation of the United States authorities charged with having procured an unlawful operation to be performed upon a woman. In support of the charge a deposition of the woman was presented which set out that she was seduced by the accused and become pregnant; that he had taken her to St. Paul to have an operation performed; that he took her to a physician who made an examination of her; that afterwards the accused left St. Paul, and after his departure an operation was performed by the physician and a miscarriage resulted:-Held, that as the deposition did not set out that the operation which was to be performed and which the accused took the complainant to St. Paul to have performed was the unlawful operation which was performed. and as there was no evidence to connect him with the unlawful operation, he must be discharged.

Re McCready, 2 Sask. R. 46, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 481.

-Practice when evidence taken in shorthand.]—Under s. 13 of the Extradition Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 155, which providethat the Judge before whom the fugitive is brought should hear the case in the same manner as nearly as may be as if the fugitive was brought before a justice charged with an indictable offence, the proceedings are regulated by ss. 682-686 of the Criminal Code and under s. 683, if the evidence is taken in shorthand, it is imperative that the transcript be signed by the Judge and be accompanied by an affidavit of the stenographer that it is a true report of the evidence before there can be a committal of the accused for extradition, and, if these be lacking, the prisoner is entitled to his discharge on habeas corpus, although there would be nothing to prevent fresh proceedings being taken against him.

FACTORIES ACT.

Master and servant — Negligence.] — Employing a girl under eighteen years of age to work between the fixed and traversing parts of a self-acting machine while it is in motion, in breach of the provisions of s. 14 of the Ontario Factories Act, R.S. O. 1897, c. 256, is in itself sufficient to render the master prima facie liable in damages for an accident which happens in the course of such employment, and negligence on his part directly conducing to the accident need not be shown. Roberts v. Taylor (1899), 31 O.R. 10, overruled. Judgment of Street, J., 1 O.L.R. 18, reversed. Fahey v. Jephcott, 2 O.L.R. 449.

-Employer's liability.j-See Master and Servant.

-Factories Act - "Owner." |-Held, that a store occupied by merchant tailors, the rear part being used as a tailoring department and the front as a retail sale department, fourteen persons being employed in the former, is a "factory" as defined by s. 2, sub-s. (i) (c), of the Ontario Factories Act, K.S.O. 1887, c. 256, and the amendments thereto. Under s. 15, as amended by 4 Edw. VII. c. 26, s. 3, which provides that the "owner" of every factory shall provide a sufficient number of privies, etc., the owner of the building is plainly intended, who may or may not be also the employer. Rex ex rel. Burke v. Ferguson, 13 O.L.R. 479 (Falconbridge, C.J.B.).

-Industrial establishment - Transfer of control - Liability for accidents.] - The owner of an industrial establishment who transfers the right to operate it, for which purpose the transferee takes charge and control of it and hires the workmen, is not responsible for accidents through defective implements. There cannot be invoked against him the obligations created by the Industrial Establishment Act of Quebec to maintain the premises and apparatus in the best condition possible for the security of workmen. These are imposed only on the person who maintains the establishment and not on an owner who transfers to another, by lease, assignment or otherwise, the operation and, therefore, the care and control of it.

FALSE ARREST.

False arrest in civil proceedings-Want of malice-Set-off.]-Where T. Co., by a regular process issued out of a Court of competent jurisdiction, caused the arrest of McD. for debt in a civil proceeding, which debt had been paid before action commenced:-Held, in the absence of malice, no action would lie against T. Co. for false arrest. Ss. 117 and 118 of the Supreme Court Act, C.S. 1903, c. 111, enable defendant to set-off a claim for unliquidated damages in the same way as an ordinary debt but only in cases where the law of set-off is applicable. Therefore, where the plainheld, defendant could not plead a set-oif.

McDonough v. Telegraph Publishing Co.,

39 N.B.R. 515.

-Offence against city by-law-Arrest by peace officer without warrant.]-The defendant was a police constable in a city; without a warrant he arrested the plaintiff for a breach of a by-law of the city, and the plaintiff brought this action for assault and false imprisonment:-Held, that the direction to the jury that the defendant had a right without a warrant to arrest the plaintiff if he found him committing a breach of a city by-law, was erron-eous; and a verdict for the defendant founded thereon was set aside. The power of a constable to make arrests without warrant depends either on the common law or on statute. At common law he may arrest a person whom he finds committing a felony, misdemeanour, or breach of the peace, or whom on reasonable grounds he suspects of having committed a felony; and by the Criminal Code, s. 648, he may arrest any person whom he finds committing a criminal offence. But neither at common law nor by statute is there any authority for arresting a person without warrant found committing a breach of a city by-law. S. 35 of the Criminal Code protects a constable only in cases in which he is authorized to make an arrest. Held, also, that, there being nothing in the by-law which authorized the defendant to arrest the plaintiff, the defendant was not acting under its provisions, and was not protected by s. 404 of the City Act. Held, also, per Lamont, J., that the direction given to the jury that the plaintiff, while the conviction against him remained unreversed, was estopped from setting up that he was not guilty of that offence, was right. Per Lamont, J., also, that the provincial legislature had power to authorize arrest without a warrant for breach of a provincial statute; and, as that power had not been exercised, the right to arrest did not exist. Plested v. McLeod, 15 W.L.R. 533 (Sask.).

—Constable arresting without warrant — Offence not committed in constable's presence.]—

-Liability of person preferring charge— Charge not criminal—Chinese Immigration Act.]-A number of persons of Chinese origin, who were suspected of attempting to enter Canada without payment of the head tax, in contravention of the provisions of the Chinese Immigration Act, R.S.C., c. 95, were arrested by a constable without a warrant, and were detained for a time in a lock-up. This was done at the instance of defendant, a preventive officer, who was acting under instructions received from the collector of customs. Subsequently there was an information made by defendant and a warrant issued, and a preliminary investigation held, as the result of which the plaintiff and seven other persons were committed for trial. He elected to be tried before the Judge of the County Court, and was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of $100, which was paid. The conviction was afterwards set aside, on a case stated for the opinion of this Court, and the return of the fine ordered. Plaintiff, thereupon, brought an action claiming damages for false imprisonment, in connection with his detention without a warrant, and the trial Judge awarded him, as part of such damages, the sum of $100 paid as a fine under the judgment in the County Court, and the sum of $16 additional for legal and other expenses:-Held, that while defendant might be responsible in damages for the detention up to the time of the issue of the warrant he was not responsible after that in the absence of evidence of direct interference on his part; also, that he was not liable in respect to the fine which never reached him, and that his appeal, to that extent, must be allowed with costs. That the additional amount of $16 allowed plaintiff for damages was not unreasonable under the circumstances, and, with respect to that amount, the appeal must be dismissed with costs, costs to be set-off.

-Action against justice of the peace-Notice -- Pleading insufficiency -- Probable cause.]-In an action against justices of the peace for false imprisonment the defendant at the trial applied to amend by pleading not guilty by statute:-Held (following Gesman v. City of Regina, 1 Sask. L.R. 39), that such an amendment should not be allowed at this stage. The defendants then claimed to have the right to avail themselves of the statutes in question without pleading same; particularly as to no notice of action being given, the notice which had been given being, it was claimed, defective. Held, that this could not be allowed and in any event the defendants not having pleaded that the notice was defective could not attack the same. In an action for false imprisonment against two justices of the peace it appeared that a dispute was pending as to the ownership of a certain building, to the knowledge of the defendant Tedford. The plaintiff having attempted to remove this building the other claimant laid an information before the defendant Tedford charging the plaintiff with entering on the premises of the claimant and attempting to remove a house. It also appeared that before acting on the information Tedford was notified by the plaintiff that he owned the house in question and there were other circumstances to his knowledge from which he might reasonably believe the plaintiff's claim to be well founded. He was also advised by a police officer that the dispute was not within his jurisdiction; but notwithstanding he issued a warrant for the arrest of the plaintiff who was brought before the two defendants in custody and after various irregular proceedings was committed to gaol to stand his trial, being released by the agent of the Attorney-General as soon as possible, but not until he had been subjected to all the indignities attendant on arrest and imprisonment. There was no evidence that the defendant Hossie was aware of the circumstances set out. In an action for false imprisonment: -Held, that in an action for malicious prosecution the existence or non-existence of probable cause must be determined by the Court although the facts from which the Judge is to draw the inferences are matters for the jury, except where the facts are not in dispute when the Judge decides such matters himself. 2. That upon the facts set out and undisputed there was no evidence of reasonable and probable cause justifying the action of the defendant Tedford to go to the jury.

-False arrest-Notice of action-Acts of police officers-Liability of corporation.]-The action to recover damages for being illegally arrested and charged with a criminal offence is not subject to the prior notice to be given within fifteen days after the commission of the Act complained of, provided for by Art. 536 of the charter of the City of Montreal (62 Vict. c. 58 amended by 7 Edw. VII. c. 63, s. 45). Though a city municipality is not responsible for the acts of its police officers in arresting or laying a charge against those whom they suspect of criminal offences, since they are not then acting as its agents, but as those of the Crown, yet if it defends an action brought against it for recovery of damages in consequence of such acts on the ground that the police officers acted without malice and with probable cause, it makes itself liable for the acts complained of and, failing to establish such defence, must submit to a judgment for the damages suffered.

-Notice of action-Particulars.1-In an action for damages for false arrest against the City of Montreal it is not necessary to give previous notice thereof. If, in defending an action for damages, the defendant sets up contributory negligence by the plaintiff, and in support thereof cites certain statements in the declaration, he cannot be compelled to give particulars other than those contained in such statements.

Dupuis v. City of Montreal, 11 Que. P.R.

Responsibility of city for act of policeman-1654 C.C.]-The city of Sherbrooke is responsible for the damages caused by an arrest made without reasonable or probable cause by a policeman in the employ of, and wearing the uniform provided by the city. The fact that, at the time the arrest was made, the policeman had been relieved and was off duty, is no defence to the action.—(Rosseau v. Town of Levis, 14 Q.L.R. 376, and Corporation of Quebec & Oliver, 15 R.L.Q. 319, distinguished.)

Bourget v. City of Sherbrooke, Q.R. 27

-Termination of prosecution.]-In an action for damages for false arrest, it is not necessary to allege in the declaration that the prosecution has been terminated or that the plaintiff has been acquitted. McDowell v. U. S. Thread Co., 7 Que. P.

R. 326 (Charbonneau, J.).

-Liability of town for acts of police officer-By-law-Respondeat superior - Ratification.] - A municipal corporation can not be made to answer in damages for the unlawful acts of one of its police officers while attempting to perform a public duty. The plaintiff, who was temporarily in the town of C., collecting subscriptions for a newspaper published in the city of S., was arrested by a police officer of the town for a breach of one of its by-laws, which required all persons, who were not ratepayers of the town or non-residents of the county of N., to pay a license fee before engaging in any calling, occupation or employment in the said town. The arrest was made by the officer without any warrant, and the plaintiff was only released upon his paying to the town treasurer the fee demanded, which was retained. In an action for false imprisonment against the town for the alleged unlawful arrest by the police officer, it was held, following Mc-Cleave v. The City of Moncton (35 N.B.R. 296 and 32 S.C.R. 106), that, assuming the arrest to have been unlawful, the doctrine of the respondent superior did not apply, and the town was not liable. Held, further, that the fact that the police officer, in making the arrest, was endeavouring to enforce a by-law of the town made for revenue purposes only was not sufficient to take this case out of the rule laid down in the McCleave case; and that the payment of the license fee to the town treasurer, and its retention by him, in the absence of any evidence of knowledge on the part of the town of the circumstances surrounding such payment and retention, was no proof of any intention on the part of the town to ratify the acts of the police Woodforde v. Town of Chatham, 37 N.B.

-Arrest without warrant-Verbal charge-Probable cause — Liability for tort.]—(1) A constable or peace officer, in a case of homicide, is justified, upon the verbal charge of the daughter of the deceased, in arresting, without a warrant, a party found in his bed, at his home, a short distance away, whose blood-stained hands and clothes lend colour to the charge. (2) The officer, and the city, in whose police service he is employed, incur no liability for false imprisonment, through the arrest and detention of the party as aforesaid.

Hubbard v. City of Montreal, 28 Que. S. C. 221 (Dunlop, J.).

-Action against justice-Want of jurisdiction — Malice.] — In an action for false imprisonment where the justice who issued the warrant acted wholly without jurisdiction, proof of malice or want of probable cause is unnecessary. A complaint in writing under oath for a search warrant under which a warrant was issued, and goods named therein were found in the possession of the accused, will not justify arrest without any further or other com-plaint. The expense to which a party complaining may have been put by an illegal arrest is a proper element of damage. Melanson v. Lavigne, 37 N.B.R. 539.

-Damages-Allegations of probable cause.] -Reasonable and probable cause being a good defence to an action for false and malicious arrest, paragraphs containing allegations explanatory of this reasonable and probable cause will not be struck out as irrelevant.

Hawk v. City of Montreal, 9 Que. P.R. 144.

—Habeas corpus — Discharge of prisoner—Condition of not bringing action against magistrate.]—Where a prisoner is entitled to his discharge, under a writ of habeas corpus, by reason of no offence being disclosed in the material under which he was committed, such discharge cannot be made conditional on no action being brought against the magistrate or other person in respect of the conviction, or anything done thereunder.

Rex v. Lowery, 15 O.L.R. 182, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 105.

-False arrest and imprisonment - Action against police officer.]-Two persons having died under circumstances suggesting murder, suspicion was directed against two Chinamen, one of whom was arrested, but the other could not be found. The police made search diligently for some time, but could obtain no trace of the suspected man. Believing that he was being harboured by his fellow-countrymen in the city and that if a general search was made they would conceal him, it was determined to visit every Chinese resort in the city and take the occupants to the police station keeping them there until the search was completed and so ascertain if the man for whom they were searching was in the city. This plan was carried out, a man being stationed at each entrance to the various buildings, and a search made and the occupants removed in a conveyance accompanied by an officer and placed in charge of another officer at the station, and not permitted to depart until all places had been visited. The police had no warrant authorizing a search, nor had they any strong reason for suspecting any particular person of harbouring the suspected man. Actions were brought by some of the Chinamen against the officers for false arrest and imprisonment. The defendants pleaded that they had not detained the plaintiffs and also "not guilty by statute," under which it was proposed to plead want of notice of action:—Held, that the right violated by false imprisonment is freedom of locomotion and the gist of the offence is a restraint whereby the party complaining is hindered and prevented from going where he pleases and therefore as the evidence showed that the plaintiffs were prevented from going where they pleased they must be held to have been imprisoned. (2) That as the police officers had no warrant nor any reasonable ground of belief that the plaintiffs were harbouring a fugitive from justice they could not be said to be acting in pursuance of any statute or discharge of their duty, and were not therefore entitled to notice of action.

Mack Sing v. Smith, 1 Sask. R. 454.

-False imprisonment-Pleading-Not guilty by statute - Amendment by pleading-Claiming benefit of statute without pleading—Action against justice of the peace — Notice of-Sufficiency - Pleading insufficiency-Probable cause as a defence-Malice.]-In an action against justices of the peace for false imprisonment the defendant at the trial applied to amend by pleading not guilty by statute:—Held (following Gesman v. City of Regina, 1 Sask. L.R. 39), that such an amendment should not be allowed at this stage. The defendants then claimed to have the right to avail themselves of the statutes in question without pleading same; particularly as to no notice of action being given, the notice which had been given being, it was claimed, defective:
--Held, that this could not be allowed and in any event the defendants not having pleaded that the notice was defective could not attack the same. In an action for false imprisonment against two justices of the peace it appeared that a dispute was pending as to the ownership of a certain build-ing, to the knowledge of the defendant Ted-ford. The plaintiff having attempted to remove this building the other claimant laid an information before the defendant. Tedford charging the plaintiff with entering on the premises of the claimant and attempting to remove a house. It also appeared that before acting on the informa-tion Tedford was notified by the plaintiff that he owned the house in question and there were other circumstances to his knowledge from which he might reasonably believe the plaintiff's claim to be well founded. He was also advised by a police officer that the dispute was not within his jurisdiction; but notwithstanding he issued a warrant for the arrest of the plaintiff who was brought before the two defendants in custody and after various irregular proceedings was committed to gaol to stand his trial, being released by the agent of the Attorney-General as soon as possible but not until he had been subjected to all the indignities attendant on arrest and imprisonment. There was no evidence that the defendant Hossie was aware of the circumstances set out. In an action for false imprisonment. Held, that in an action for malicious prosecution the existence or non-existence of probable cause must be determined by the Court although the facts from which the Judge is to draw the inferences are matters for the jury, except where the facts are not in dispute when the Judge decides such matters him-self. (2) That upon the facts set out and undisputed there was no evidence of reasonable and probable cause justifying the action of the defendant Tedford to go to the jury.

Baker v. Tedford, 2 Sask. R. 307.

-Warrant of arrest-Delay in issue - Convict out on bail-Commencement of term of imprisonment.]-On the 17th January, 1907, the plaintiff was convicted by the police magistrate for the town of North Toronto as for a second offence of having sold intoxicating liquor without a license contrary to the provisions of the Liquor License Act, and was adjudged to be imprisoned therefor for four months. He was allowed to go at large, upon his own recognizance to appear when called upon, until the 28th March, when he was arrested by M., a constable of the town of North Toronto, under a war-rant of commitment issued by the magistrate (without notice to the plaintiff) on the 27th March, and delivered to the keep-er of the gaol, who was thereby directed to receive the plaintiff and keep him in custory for four months. On the 28th June, 1907, the plaintiff was discharged (Rex v. Robinson, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 447, 14 O.L.R. 519), on the ground that the term of his imprisonment had expired on the 17th May, 1907. This action was brought against M. and the town corporation for trespass and false imprisonment. A notice of action was served on the 18th September, 1907, the cause of action stated being the assault and false imprisonment of the plaintiff from the 17th May until his discharge:-Held, that, if s. 3 of the Prisons and Reformatories Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 148, did not apply to a commitment on summary conviction for an offence against an Ontario Act, the term of imprisonment under the conviction would not commence until the plaintiff's arrest or his lodgment in gaol; but, if the enactment did apply, the plaintiff was in fact out on bail-whether regularly and properly or not-from the date of the sentence till the 28th March, and, by the very terms of the section, the intermediate period was not to be reckoned as part of the term of imprisonment. The imprisonment was, therefore, lawful, and the action failed. Rex v. Robinson (1907), 14 O.L.R. 519, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 447, overruled. The King v. Taylor (1906), 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 244, approved. M. was not the servant or agent of the town corporation in executing the warrant, and there was no ground for making the corporation a party.

Robinson v. Morris, 19 O.L.R. 633.

-Remoteness of damages for false arrest.] -A party suing in damages for false arrest may allege that neither the defendant, who was the complainant, nor the company of which he is the manager, was the pro-prietor of the goods alleged to have been stolen. But he cannot allege that his mind was impaired by the serious illness of his mother, when learning his arrest, these damages being too remote. Fournier v. Shier, 10 Que. P.R. 381.

Protection of justices-Plaintiff's innocence of the charge-By what evidence determined-Con. Stat., N.B., c. 90, s. 11.]-By Con. Stat., c. 90, s. 11, it is enacted that, "where the plaintiff shall be entitled to recover in any action against a justice he shall not have a verdict for any damages beyond two cents, or any costs of suit, if it shall be proved that he was guilty of the offence of which he was convicted, etc.' In an action of false imprisonment brought against a magistrate, who without jurisdiction had committed to prison the plaintiff for making default in the payment of a fine imposed upon him for selling liquor without a license, evidence was offered and admitted in proof of the plaintiff's innocence of the charge:—Held, that the evidence was properly received and that the plaintiff, in order to prove his innocence, was not confined to such evidence as had been given before the magistrate on the trial of the information.

Labelle v. McMillan, 34 N.B.R. 488.

-Invalid warrant-Indemnity resolution by municipal corporation - Ultra vires-Constable—R.S.O. 1897, c. 88, ss. 1 (2), 13, 14— Cr. Code, ss. 975, 976, 980.]—The plaintiff's on the information of the defendant, a constable, and another constable were summoned before a magistrate charged with wilfully damaging a spring of water on a highway, but did not attend, and in their absence were convicted and jointly fined. A question having been raised as to the regularity of the proceedings, the magistrate hesitated about issuing a warrant until the defendants, the township council, passed a resolution indemnifying him against costs, which they did. The warrant, directed "To all or any constables," etc., was issued, following the form of the conviction, and handed to the defendant constable and another constable, who between them arrested the plaintiffs, who were imprisoned until the fine and costs were paid. In an action against the township council and one of the constables for maliciously enforcing an illegal warrant:-Held, that the defendant constable had acted as such in the execution of the warrant, and was entitled, although he had laid the information, to the protection extended by law to public officers or the peace, that the warrant being bad on its face, he was by virtue of s. 21 of the Code exempt from all criminal responsibility, and was protected from a civil action by virtue of R.S.O. 1897. c. 88, ss. 1 (2), 13 and 14, and ss. 975, 976 and 980 of the Code; the action not having been brought within six months, and no notice of action having been given. Ex parte Mc-Cleave (1900), 35 N.B.R. 100, distinguished. Held, also, that there was no proof of knowledge on the part of the council that either the conviction or warrant was illegal or that they were acting other than bona fide for the protection of the spring, and no evidence of malice; that even assuming knowledge by the council of the invalidity of the conviction and warrant, the

-Justice of the peace-Action against for causing plaintiff's arrest under warrant -Question of jurisdiction-Defective notice.] -- Plaintiff caused to be served upon defendant, a justice of the peace, notice of action claiming damages for maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause, causing plaintiff to be arrested and confined in the common gaol under a warrant issued in a civil action, brought and tried before defendant, in which one C. was plaintiff and the present plaintiff defendant, said warrant having been issued without authority, and after the debt for which said suit was brought, and said warrant issued, was paid and satisfied to the satisfaction of the plaintiff, by giving new securities there-Plaintiff's statement of claim was framed on the theory that the justice had jurisdiction, but that he acted maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause. There was no count or paragraph against the justice founded on want or excess of jurisdiction. Per Graham, E.J., Meagher, J., concurring:-Held, that it was not necessary, under the circumstances, to consider whether the justice had exceeded his jurisdiction or not. Held, also, the war-rant having been properly issued, and the only question being whether or not it could be enforced after the debt was paid, that this question was not covered by the no-tice, and that the action must be dismissed. R.S.N.S. c. 101, s. 12. Per Weatherbe, J. —Held, that the plaintiff could not succeed, the jury having found that defendant acted in good faith, and that he had reasonable and probable cause for directing the arrest of plaintiff, and that he was not actuated by malice. Quære, whether, after the warrant was issued, plaintiff could adjust the debt by giving new securities. Per Ritchie, J.—rield, that plaintiff could not succeed, the notice of action being defective. FALSE PRETENCES.

Charge of false pretences-Cross-examination of defence witness-Asking witness if accused had served term in gaol.] -1. Where the defence has offered no character evidence, notwithstanding which the Crown asks a defence witness whether the accused had not been in gaol for a year in a foreign city, which the witness neither affirmed nor denied, there is a mis-trial because of the suggestion implied in the question of the Crown counsel upon a fact not relevant to the issues but likely to prejudice the accused with the jury. 2. Under such circumstances the jury should be discharged before verdict and the case traversed to the next sittings when a new panel of jurors would be available. 3. It was not admissible for the Crown to give evidence of a prior conviction unless the defence offered evidence of good character.

Obtaining goods by false pretences — Representation of fact.]—A conviction for obtaining goods unlawfully, and by false pretences, cannot be supported (a) where the prosecutor is not induced and does not intend to part with his right of property in the goods, but merely with the possession of them; (b) Where there is no representation as to a present or past matter of fact. Where the defendant hired a bicycle, of the value of $20, representing that he wished to use it to go to L., for the purpose of visiting his sister, and, instead of returning the bicycle, sold it to C.:—Held, that evidence which showed these facts was not sufficient to support a conviction for having "unlawfully, and by false pretences, obtained from L. one bicycle, of the value of $20."

The common law rule is not displaced by a joint liability to keep up fences. The injured crops were raised by plaintiff who was in possession, but another person had a half interest in the erop:-Held, that sole possession by plaintiff was sufficient to support an action of trespass, and it was not necessary to make the co-owner a party, or to obtain any release from him.

Grant of ferry-Breach of - Subsequent lease to railway companies - Damages.]-Under the provisions of R.S.C. c. 97 and amendments, the Governor in Council duly issued to the suppliant a ferry license within certain limits over the Ottawa River between the cities of Ottawa and Hull. Subsequently the Crown leased certain property to two railway companies to be used for the construction of approaches to the Interprovincial bridge across the said river between the said cities, and also granted permission to the Ottawa Electric Railway Company to extend its tracks over certain property belonging to the Dominion Government on the Hull side of the river, to enable the latter company to make closer connection with the Hull Electric Company. The suppliant claimed that the construction of the said approaches interfered with the operation of his ferry, and enabled the said company to divert traffic from his ferry, and constituted a breach of his ferry grant for which the Crown was liable:-Held, that the granting of the said leases and permission did not constitute a breach of any contract arising out of the grant or license of the ferry; and that the Crown was not liable to the suppliant in damages in respect of the matters complained of in his petition. Windsor & Annapolis Railway Co. v. The Queen (10 S.C.R. 335; 11 App. Cas. 607), and Hopkins v. The Great Northern Railway Co. (2 Q.B.D. 224) referred to. Semble, that if the said leases and permission prejudiced the rights acquired by the suppliant under his ferry license, he would be entitled to a writ of seire facias to repeal them.

Marie in the Province of Ontario, and the town of Sault Ste. Marie in the State of Michigan, U.S.A., granted by the Dominion Government, was declared to be invalid:—Held, also, that even if the St. Mary's River at the point in question were a public harbour, yet this would not give the Dominion Government any right to grant any exclusive right over it, such as the ferry in question. Held, however, that the St. Mary's River at the point in question is not a public harbour. Something more is neces-sary to convert an open river front into a public harbour, within the meaning of

s. 108 of the B.N.A. Act, than the erection along it of four or five wharves projecting beyond the shallows of the shore for the convenience of vessels receiving and discharging passengers and goods. Held, also, that the existence of improvements belonging to the Dominion Government in the river bed in front of the town of Sault Ste. Marie afforded no reason for the entire control of the ferry across the river being held to be in the Dominion Government, though the Dominion Parliament or Government have undoubtedly a right to make laws or rules with regard to the ferry in question, or other ferries, for the purpose of regulating them and of preventing them from interfering with public harbours and river improvements of the Dominion. The Dominion ion statute incorporating the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company, authorizes it for the purposes of its under-taking to acquire and run steam and other vessels for cargo and passengers upon any navigable water which its railway may connect with. Held, that under the very large and general words of this clause the railway company was not bound to restrict the passengers and cargo transported by its vessels to persons and goods intended to be carried on its railway line. Semble, also, that on proper construction of the Dominion Act respecting ferries, R.S.C. c. 97, s. 11, any vessel which is regularly entered or cleared by the officers of His Majesty's customs at any port in Canada, may convey passengers and goods for hire and profit, notwithstanding that an exclusive right of ferry has been granted within the limits within which it does so.

FIRE LAWS.

Prairie fires ordinance-"Permitting fire to escape."]-Plaintiff's buildings and other property were destroyed by a prairie fire alleged to have spread from the ashes of a stack of straw burned by the defendant. The evidence showed that before the stack was fired a guard of about 40 yards in width was burned around it, and there was also a fire guard three furrows in width about 300 yards to the west. The prairie fire did not occur until four days later, on which a high wind was blowing and indications pointed to the remains of the straw stack as the origin of the fire:-Held, that in view of the climatic conditions prevailing in the province, a man bringing fire upon his land must exercise the greatest cagtion, and under those conditions precautions must be taken to prevent the fire spreading until such time as it is absolutely extinguished, and the defendant, having failed to take such care, was liable to the plaintiff in damages. That if a person does not properly watch a fire started by him and see that it does not get away, and it escapes, he thereby "permits" it to escape within the meaning of s. 2 of the Prairie Fire Ordinance (c. 87, C.O. 1898).

Roberts v. Morrow, 2 Sask. R. 15.

Prairie Fires Ordinance - Burden of proof.]-In an action for damages for permitting a fire to escape from the defendant's lands, contrary to the provisions of the Prairie Fire Ordinance, the plaintiffs alleged that the fire had been set or caused to be set by the defendant. It was proven that the defendant had a fire on his property the day previous to the damage being done, and the plaintiffs' witnesses swore that they saw smoke on the defendant's premises the following morning. The de-fendant and his witnesses swore that no fire whatever was on the defendant's premises during the morning of the day the fire escaped and did damage, and the Judge in his judgment stated that he was "entirely satisfied of the truthfulness, indeed of the candour" of the defendant and his witnesses; and the Judge, attempting to reconcile the inconsistencies, conjectured that the smoke seen by the plaintiffs' witnesses came from embers of fire which the defendant had on his premises the day before, the trial Judge dismissing the action as no negligence was proven on the part of the defendant:-Held, per Sifton, C.J., and Harvey, J., that a finding of fact must be based on something more than mere conjecture; and the trial Judge having found that the witnesses for the defence were to be believed, their evidence should be accepted, and there being no evidence not inconsistent with their evidence from which it could be reasonably inferred that the defendant had caused the fire, the plaintiff's action must fail. Setting out on defendant's land-Escape to plaintiff's land-"Permitting" escape.] -In an action for damages for loss sustained by the burning of the plaintiff's pasture on the 4th May, 1909, by a fire set out by the defendant on his land, which escaped to the plaintiff's adjoining land, through the negligence of the de-fendant's servants:—Held, on the evidence, that the fire which consumed the plaintiff's pasture had its origin in the fire set out by the defendant. Held, also, that the defendant did not, in setting out the fire, observe the precautions required by ss. 4 and 6 of the Prairie Fires Ordinance. The statute requires that the fire shall be "guarded" during the whole period of its continuance by 3 adult persons. The defendant's servants took a load of straw on a waggon to the north-west corner of the defendant's land, and scattered some of the straw on the ground and then set fire to it. There being a very strong wind from the west or north-west, this fire was driven eastward. The defendant's servants, instead of following up this fire and guarding it, let it go, while they continued to spread straw and fire it along the whole west side of the defendant's stubble, with the result that the fire which they first started was soon more than half a mile distant from them, burning with great fury. The requirement of the statute as to guarding by 3 adult persons means that they shall stand guard over it so as to prevent its escape-that is, accompany it so as to be on hand to extinguish it in case it should leave the defendant's land. The defendant, therefore, was guilty of permitting a fire in charge of his servants to pass from his own land, within the meaning of s. 2 of the Ordinance, and was liable for the damage caused by such fire. McCartney v. Miller, 2 W.L.R. 87, followed. Held, also, that, apart from non-compliance with the statute, the defendant was guilty of negligence in setting out the fire on a day on which the wind was blowing so strongly as the evidence shows it was blowing on the 4th May. Kennerman v. Canadian Northern R. W. Co., 13 W.L.R. 191, followed. Damages assessed for the loss of the pasture and for extra expense incurred in taking care of the plaintiff's cattle.

Armour v. Marshall, 15 W.L.R. 173 (Sask.).

-Threshing-Escape of sparks from engine.]-The defendants were threshing for the plaintiffs upon the plaintiffs' farm, when the wind changed and increased in velocity, and sparks, escaping from the defendants' engine, set fire to the plain-tiffs' buildings, hay, and grain:-Held, that the defendants were liable for the plaintiffs' loss, by reason of their (the defendants') negligence in continuing to thresh after the change in the direction and velocity of the wind, which obviously endangered the plaintiffs' property. Held, also, upon the evidence, that the plaintiffs were not guilty of contributory negligence. Damages assessed for injury to buildings and destruction of hay and grain. Spratt v. Dial, 15 W.L.R. 185 (Man.).

-Fire-Negligent setting out-"Permitting" to pass from defendant's land.]-Held, upon the evidence, that the plaintiff's property was destroyed by fire which originated from a fire set out on the defendant's land; and that the defendant, within the meaning of s. 2 (b) of the Prairie Fires Ordinance, "permitted the fire to pass from his land; he took no proper precautions to prevent its escape; the fireguard ploughed by the defendant, being only about 6 feet wide, was insufficient; the fire should not have been set out when it was, as the wind was too high; and this was negligence. McCartney v. Miller, 2 W. L.R. 87, followed. M., who set out the fire on the defendant's land, was employed by the defendant to do farm work, and he had to do anything the defendant told him to do:-Held, that M. was the defendant's servant, that he was acting in the course of his employment, and that the defendant was liable for M.'s negligence. Owen v. Dingwall, 14 W.L.R. 730.

—Prairie Fire Ordinance—Letting, permitting and allowing fire to run.]—On contradictory evidence it was found that the defendant, by dropping a lighted eigar in dry grass on his own land on a dry, windy day, set a fire, which escaped to the plaintid's land, doing considerable damage. This was not done deliberately, but carelessly and thoughtlessly. In an action for damages:—Held, that on the facts the defendant was guilty of gross negligence, and by starting a fire in such a way he "permitted" it to pass from his land within the meaning of the Ordinance, and was liable in damages. Moseley v. Ketchung, 3 Sask. R. 29.

-Provincial foreshore limits-Dominion license for exclusive right invalid-Federal regulations of fisheries-"Trap net" defined.] -(1) A fishing net having the usual accessories of a trap net, except that it has not a twine floor or bottom, is none the less a "trap net" within the meaning of the Fisheries Act (Can.). (3) The Dominion Fishery officers have the right to regulate the kinds of nets and traps to be used in the Provincial foreshores and to control the manner of fishing, but without compelling the payment of a license fee. Illegal fishing-Boundary line-Evidence of vessel's position.]-An American vessel was seized by a Canadian cruiser for alleged fishing on the Canadian side of Lake Erie. The Crown brought an action to have her declared forfeited. The Supreme Court reversed this judgment and condemned the vessel:-Held, on further appeal by the owners to the Privy Council, that the judgment of the Supreme Court, R. v. "Kitty D.," 34 Can. -Exclusive right to fish in provincial waters-Dominion legislation authorizing -Grant of, ultra vires.]-Plaintiff and defendant obtained from the Marine and Fisheries Department of Canada, under the provisions of the Fisheries Act, R.S.C. c. 95, s. 4, special fishery licenses authorizing them to use trap-nets having leaders of 10 fathoms for the purpose of taking deep sea fish other than salmon, in the public waters of St. Margaret's Bay, in the Province of Nova Scotia, at points named. By the general fishery regulations of Nova Scotia, it is provided that no net shall be set within 110 fathoms (one-eighth of a mile) of any weir, trap or net of any kind, under penalty provided by the Act. In an action by plaintiff claiming damages for an invasion of his rights by defendant in setting his net within the prohibited distance:— Held, allowing defendant's appeal and dismissing plaintiff's action with costs, that the Act, so far as it empowered the granting of exclusive rights of fishery over provincial property, was ultra vires. The fact that plaintiff had a leader of 25 fathoms length attached to his trap, whereas he had only paid license ees in respect to one of 10 fathoms, was not an illegality relevant to plaintiff's case, and was too remote to prevent recovery of damages.

Young v. Harnish, 37 N.S.R. 213.

-Canada Fisheries Act - Conviction Penalty and costs - Authority of minister of marine to remit—Recovery of costs where penalty remitted.]—S. 18 of The Fisheries Act, as amended by the Act of 1898, enacts: "Except as herein otherwise provided, every one who violates any provision of this Act or of the regulations under it shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $100 and costs, and in default of payment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months; and any fishery officer or justice of the peace may grant a warrant of distress for such penalty and costs." R. was convicted under this section and fined $20 and costs. Both fine and costs were remitted under sub-s. 6 of s. 18 which provides that "Persons aggrieved by any such conviction may appeal by petition to the minister of marine and fisheries who may remit penalties and restore forfeitures under this Act." G., the prosecutor, applied to the convicting magistrate for a warrant of distress for the costs, claiming the minister of fisheries and marine had no power to remit the costs. The magistrate refused to issue the warrant, and a mandamus was moved for. Held, per Tuek, C.J., Hanington and McLeod, JJ., that the minister had no power to remit the costs, and, it was the duty of the magistrate to issue the warrant of distress for their recovery, and that the mandamus should go. Per Barker and Gregory, JJ., that, the penalty having been remitted, the magistrate had no power to proceed to collect the costs, or, at all events, his right was so doubtful that the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, should refuse the mandamus. Per Landry, J., that as in the section in question the term "penalties" included the costs as well as the fine, the writ ought not to issue.

—Bed of the sea below low water mark—Right of property in—Foreshore leases for fishing purposes.—Held, that the provisions of s. 41 of the Land Act, B.C., as enacted in 1901, do not confer on the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works authority to grant leases of the bed of the sea in territorial waters.

Capital City Canning and Packing Company v. Anglo-British Columbia Packing Co., 11 B.C.R. 333 (Duff, J.).

-Foreign vessel fishing within three-mile limit—Capture outside limit — Continuous pursuit.] - The American schooner North was discovered by the Dominion Government steamer Kestrel, hove-to engaged in halibut fishing in Quatsino Sound, Vancouver Island, and within the three-mile limit. She had at the time all her fishing boats out, but on observing the approach of the Kestrel some four or five miles off, but also within the three-mile limit, the schooner picked up two of her dories and stood out The Kestrel made pursuit, deviating slightly from her course in such pursuit to pick up one of the schooner's fishing boats with its crew, and overhauled and seized the schooner about one and threequarter miles outside the three-mile limit. At the time of seizure there were freshlycaught halibut lying about on the schooner's decks:-Held, that the pursuit having been begun within the three-mile limit, and having been continuous, the seizure was lawful. The stopping to pick up the fishing boat and its crew, as evidence of the offence committed by the schooner, was not a break in the continuity of the pursuit.

The King v. The Ship North, 11 B.C.R. 473, 11 Can. Exch. R. 141.

—Canadian waters — Three-mile zone — Fishing by foreign vessels—Legislative jurisdiction — Seizure on high seas — Pursuit beyond territorial limit—International law.] Under the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, s. 91, sub-s. 12, the Parliament of Canada has exclusive jurisdiction to legislate with respect to fisheries within the three-mile zone off the sea coasts of Canada. A foreign vessel found violating the tishery laws of Canada within three marine miles off the sea coasts of the Dominion may be immediately pursued beyond the three-mile zone and lawfully seized on the high seas. Girouard, J., dissenting. The judgment appealed from (11 B.C. Rep. 473) was affirmed.

The Ship North v. The King, 37 Can. S. C.R. 385.

—Grant from the Crown—Claim of grantee to exclusive right to fish from the foreshore—Construction.]—The appellant, as grantee of the lands in suit from the French king "with all the fishing and hunting and other rights and privileges which the vendor had or might have as seignior, or along its frontage on the seashore," claimed the exclusive right to fish salmon from the foreshore along their boundary:—Held, that, on the true construction of the grant, the claim could not be sustained. The above clause was ineffectual to pass the exclusive use of the foreshore so far as fishing is concerned.

Seizure by United States revenue cutter.]— Defendant schooner was on the 29th of May boarded by an American revenue cutter in pursuance of the Behring Sea Award Act, 1894, within the prohibited area defined in the Act. She then had among the seal skins on board six skins of freshly killed seals, which the master contended had been killed before the close season commenced (1st of May), and outside the prohibited zone, viz.: on the 27th of April:—Held, on the evidence, that the skins were taken during the close season.

The King v. The Carlotta G. Cox, 13 B.C. R. 460, 11 Can. Exch. R. 312.

—Ownership between high and low water mark—Digging clams.] — Plaintiff claimed damages from defendants for the conversion of a dory, its oars, and a quantity of clams. Defendants paid a sum of money into Court in respect to the dory and oars, but counterclaimed for the clams which they claimed were dug upon flats of which they were owners from high to low water mark: —Held, dismissing defendants' appeal, and affirming the judgment of the trial Judge that the digging of the clams in question was done in the exercise of a public right

Donnelly v. Vroom, 42 N.S.R. 327, affirming 40 N.S.R. 585.

FIXTURES.

Conditional sale-Windmill and appurtenances-Machinery attached to freehold by purchaser under contract for sale-Cancellation by vendor.]-Defendant sold certain land to one P. under contract for sale upon deferred payments, and B. went into possession. While so in possession he purchased from plaintiff a windmill, pump, tank, piping and a sawmill for the operation of which shafting was attached to the windmill. This machinery was not paid for, but was sold upon terms that the property therein should not pass until paid for. The machinery was set up on the land, being affixed by bolts to posts set into the soil and fastened there, and could not be used unless so fastened. The defendant cancelled P.'s contract for purchase of the land and took possession. The plaintiff demanded delivery of the windmill and appurtenances and the defendant refused, whereupon the plaintiffs brought action for detention:-Held, that the windmill in question having apparently been intended to be a permanent improvement and to enhance the value of the premises, and being affixed thereto, became part of the freehold, and while the contract whereby the property therein was to remain in the plaintiff until payment would be enforceable as against P., it was not enforceable as against the owner of the freehold in possession after P.'s contract had been cancelled. 2. That the sawmill being part of the windmill, also went with the land.

Bing Kee v. Yick Chong, 10 W.L.R. 110 (B.C.).

-Machinery attached by bolts and screws -Mortgage of "land and premises," "build-ings, fixtures."]-By two separate instruments, at different dates, plaintiff obtained mortgages on certain "land and premises, including all buildings, fixtures," etc., such land and premises comprising a sawmil, built on mud sills, spiked to piles. The mill having been seized for debt, the plaintiff claimed the plant and machinery under his mortgage as part of the freehold. The plant was in general affixed to the structure by heavy bolts going through the beams or sills, and apparently could have been removed by unscrewing without injury to the building:—Held, that the method of attachment of the machinery adopted showed that it was the intention that the machinery was to be, and in fact did become a part of the mill building, which was it-self part of the land; and, further, that the form of the mortgages showed that it was the intention that the mortgagee should take under them certain rights in the fixed plant in addition to his rights as grantee of the land. Kilpatrick v. Stone, 15 B.C.R. 158.

-Immovables-Title to buildings-Hypothec.]-Buildings can be acquired by deed sous seing prive as property distinct from that of the subjacent soil. In such case, if a hypothec is placed on a cadastral lot, without excepting the buildings, by the owner of the land alone, the owner of the buildings under a sale sous seing prive not registered has a right of action for radiation of the hypothec against the creditor who has registered his title. A building erected on another's land becomes the immovable property of the person erecting it under the suspensive condition that the owner of the land will not decide for the accession. Proceedings for radiation of a hypothec should be taken against the creditor or those who were qualified to agree to it without making the debtor who con-

Reed v. Belavance, Q.R. 19 K.B. 369, affirming 36 S.C. 392.

—Buildings placed on leased land—Onus of proof.]—In a dispute as to the degree and object of the annexation of buildings erect-ed upon leased land by the tenant in occupation under the lease, the onus of showing that in the circumstances in which they were placed upon the land there was an intention that they should become part of the freehold lies upon the party who asserts that they have ceased to be chattlels.

Bing Kee v. Yick Chong, 43 Can. S.C.R.

Mortgage—Plant and machinery.] — A mortgage of an electro-plating factory "together with all the plant and machinery at present in use in the factory" does not cover patterns used in the business, sent from time to time from the factory to foundries to have mouldings made, and not in the factory at the time of the making of the mortgage. Judgment of Ferguson, J., 1 O. L.R. 229, reversed.

-Vendor and purchaser - Shop fittings - Gas and electric light fittings.]-Shop fittings, consisting of shelving made in sections, each section being screwed to a bracket affixed to the wall of a building, the whole being readily removable without damage either to the fittings or the building, and gas and electric light fittings, consisting of chandeliers, which were fastened by being screwed or attached in the ordinary way to the pipes or wires by which the gas and electric currents were respectively conveyed, and were removable by being unscrewed or detached without doing damage either to the chandeliers or the building, were placed in it by the owner of the freehold land on which it stood:-Held, that these articles became part of the land and passed by a conveyance of it to the de-fendants. Movable property which, had it been owned by the proprietor of the real estate upon which it was placed, would have been immovable by destination, may, even after a sheriff's sale of the immovable while the movable property was so attached to it, be revendicated by its owner. 3. The title to such movable property preserved under a suspensive conditional sale providing that the ownership shall not pass until full and final payment of the price, and that the property shall not become immovable until that time, and with a stipulation that any monies paid on account shall be imputed as rent, is, without registration, a valid and sufficient

-- Machinery leased to company - Annexation to freehold - Rights of lessor against mortgagee .. - Certain articles of machinery were leased by the plaintiff for one year to a manufacturing company, and placed upon the company's premises. There was no agreement for purchase. Previous to this the company had mortgaged to the defend-ant their lands, including these premises, with all the plant and machinery thereon or which should be brought thereon during the continuance of the mortgage. The plaintiff's articles of machinery were in some degree attached to the buildings in which they were placed, but all could be detached at a trifling cost, without doing substantial damage to the inheritance:—Held, upon the evidence, that the articles were so annexed to the freehold as prima facie to constitute them, as between the company and the defendant, fixtures; and, the defendant not being a party to the agreement between the plaintiff and the company, that agreement, though it was merely one of hiring, and not the usual hire-purchase agreement, afforded no evidence to alter the prima facie character of the annexed property; and the plaintiff was not entitled to the articles as against the defendant. Hobson v. Gorringe, [1897] 1 Ch. 182, and Reynolds v. Ashby, [1903] 1 K.B. 87, [1904] A. C. 466, applied and followed. Seeley v. Caldwell, 18 O.L.R. 472.

-- Conditional sale of chattels-Lien note.]-If a purchaser of a chattel such as a furnace annexes it to land in such a manner that it would ordinarily become a part of the realty, it cannot be deemed to remain a chattel because of an agreement between the purchaser and the vendor that, until paid for, the property in it should remain in the vendor and that in case of default of payment, the vendor might detach it and take it away. Such an agreement merely confers a license to enter on the land and sever what is no longer a chattel so as to make it again a chattel and to remove it, and a purchaser of the realty without notice of the agreement is not bound by it, nor can the vendor of the chattel recover possession of it or damages for its conversion from him. FORCIBLE ENTRY.

Forcible entry of dwelling house-Apprehension of breach of peace-Absence of actual force.]-(1) Forcible entry of a dwelling house may consist of an entry made with such threats and show of force as would, if resisted, cause a breach of the peace, although no actual force was used.

(2) On a charge of forcible entry, evidence relating to the title of the occupant is not admissible; and a statement in the crossexamination of the accused denying that he had previously stated that he had sold the land to complainant is not one "relative to the subject matter of the case" (Revised Evidence Act, s. 11, formerly Cr. Code, s. 701), but as to a collateral matter, and evidence to contradict his denial was improperly received in reply,

FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

Action on foreign judgment-Original consideration - Ontario Judicature Act - Promoter of company - Loan to - Personal liability.] — Under the Ontario Judicature Act, as before it, the declaration in an action on a foreign judgment may include counts claiming to recover on the original consideration. A promoter of a joint stock company borrowed money for the purposes of the company, giving his own note as security. The lender was informed at the time of the manner in which the loan was to be, and was, applied:-Held, that as the company did not exist at the time of the loan it could not be the principal debtor nor the borrower a mere guarantor. The latter was, therefore, primarily liable for repayment of the loan. Judgment of the Court of Appeal, Bugbee v. Clergue, 27 Ont. App. 96, affirmed.

Foreign judgment-Action on-Defence-Jurisdiction-Domicile.] - In an action upon a judgment for the recovery of money obtained by the plaintiff in 1908 in the Supreme Court of British Columbia the defence was that that Court had no jurisdic tion in respect of the subject-matter of the action in which the judgment was obtained, as the defendants were not at any time resident or domiciled in British Columbia, and they did not appear or consent to jurisdiction; that the cause of action did not arise in British Columbia; and that the action was barred by the Statute of Limita-tions in force in Ontario, where the de-fendants resided. The plaintiff first recovered judgment in British Columbia in 1889, and the judgment of 1908 was upon the same cause of action, for money lent:-Held, that the plaintiff was in no better position than if the action was upon the judgment recovered in 1889 or upon the original cause of action; the binding effect of the judgment sued upon depended on the rules of international law; and, the defendants not having been domicied or resident in British Columbia when served with the writ of summons, the judgment must be treated as a nullity.

Brennan v. Cameron, 1 O.W.N. 430 (D.C.).

- Title to a movable - Exemplification of judgment.]-In law a judgment of a foreign Court of competent jurisdiction, pronouncing as to the ownership or title of a moveable, is conclusive against all persons. So a foreign judgment declaring an opposant proprietor of a number of shares of a company seized upon the defendant makes proof prima facie of such title, if the validity of such judgment is not attacked and the competency of the Court to pronounce it is not questioned.

-Constitutional law-Resident of one province sued in another-Jurisdiction-B.N.A. Act, s. 92.]-No province can pass laws to operate outside its 'own territory; and no tribunal established by a province can extend its process beyond the province so as to subject persons or property elsewhere to its decisions; and consequently a judgment obtained in one province by service of process out of the jurisdiction against a domiciled resident of another province, who has not in any way attorned to the jurisdiction, has no extra territorial validity, even though regularly obtained under the procedure of the former province. Ali-ter, where the rule or judgment of such other province has been obtained upon the non-resident's own application.

Deacon v. Chadwick, 1 O.L.R. 346.

-Warrant of attorney-Confession-Jurisdiction.]-The general rule is that a judgment valid by the laws and practice of the state where it is rendered or confessed may be sued upon as a ground of action in any other state. A judgment by confession is an instance of a party voluntarily submitting himself to the jurisdiction of the Court whereby competence is acquired to deal with the matter submitted: -Held, that a judgment recovered in the State of Pennsylvania, after the defendant had ceased to reside in that State, upon a warrant of attorney in favour of any attorney of a Court of Record, executed while the defendant was a resident of the State, was valid, and that the Courts there had jurisdiction to deal with the matter, and over the person of the defendant.

Ritter v. Fairfield, 32 O.R. 350.

-Proof of - Exemplification - Judgment founded on void contract.]-A default judgment obtained in a foreign jurisdiction, though liable to be set aside, so long as it stands, is "final and conclusive" within the meaning of that expression as applied to foreign judgments, and consequently it may be sued on in this province. In an action on a foreign judgment the defendant is entitled to challenge the validity of the judgment on the ground that it is manifestly erroneous such as being founded on an ex facie void contract. The province may create a company with power to undertake extra-territorial contracts of carriage and so it is not ultra vires of a company incorporated in British Columbia to contract to carry goods from British Columbia to a point in the Yukon Territory. Per Martin, J .: - An exemplification of judgment under the seal of the Court in which the judgment was pronounced is equivalent to the original judgment exemplified, and notice under the Evidence Act of intention to produce it in evidence is unnecessary.

Boyle v. Victoria Yukon Trading Co., 9 B.C.R. 13.

-Particulars-Exception to form - Arts. 123, 174, 211 C.C.P.]-A defendant sued on a foreign judgment cannot, by exception to the form, demand that the plaintiff be compelled to furnish to him and specify the causes of action in the suit on which the judgment was given, seeing that it was stated in the certificate of the prothonotary of the foreign Court that the account had been personally served on the defendant with the writ in the action.

-Declaratory judgment - Simple contract creditor - Preliminary relief - Statute of Limitations.] - A creditor under a Quebec judgment asked a declaration that the judgment debtor was beneficial owner of a certain claim against the Dominion Govern-ment:-Held, that, being in this Province in the position of a simple contract creditor only, he was not entitled to such preliminary relief, for the same reasons which debar a simple contract creditor from taking garnishee proceedings or proceedings for equitable execution; and also because the claim being one against the government no consequential relief was or could be asked. Held, also, that being more than six years old, the judgment, being in this Province merely a simple contract debt, would under ordinary circumstances have become barred, yet since the judgment debtor was not at the time of their recovery, nor had been since, in this Province, the plaintiff's remedy on it was saved by R.S.O. 197, vol. III., c. 324. s. 40.

-Lis pendens - Judgment in another province.]-See LIS PENDENS.

-Action on - Defence of merits under -Pleading.]-The declaration charged that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in $326, by virtue of a judgment recovered in the Superior Court of the district of M. in the province of Q. Plea, that the defendant was not personally served with the first process in the suit within the jurisdiction of the Court where the said judgment was obtained, and that the defendant was never indebted to the plaintiff in the c'aim on which the judgment was obtained. Replication that the contract on which the judgment was recovered was made at M. within the jurisdiction of the Superior Court of the district of M.; that the said Court had jurisdiction of the subject matter of the said suit, and the said judgment was regularly obtained according to the practice of the said Court, and that the sum mentioned in the said judgment and ordered to be paid is justly and truly due and payable by the defendant to the plaintiff. Demurrer to the replication, and notice of objection to the plea:—Held, that the plea as a defence that the enforcement of the judgment by this Court was contrary to natural justice was bad, as it did not negative the existence of all facts which, if proved, would render the judgment enforceable. That it was not sufficient to enable the defendant to go into the merits of the original cause of action under Con. Stat. N.B. c. 48, as it did not set out the cause of action. That the replication was bad, as it did not join issue on the conclusion of the plea "never indebted," and merely reiterated in another form the right to enforce the judgment. Shearer v. McLean, 36 N.B.R. 284.

-Proving identity of defendant.]—In an action on a foreign judgment, identity of name of the debtor, combined with the fact that he pleads in confession and avoidance is sufficient to constitute a prima racie case of identity.

-Pleading defences that had been set up in the original action.]-The defences that may be set up in an action in Manitoba on a foreign judgment by virtue of sub-s. (1) of s. 38 of the King's Bench Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 40, are not limited to such as might have been, but were not, pleaded in the original action, but include such as were actually pleaded there, subject to the power of the Court or a Judge to strike them out on the ground of embarrassment or delay. In answer to the plaintiff's application to strike out such defences, the defendant set up by affidavit that he had fully intended to defend the Cape Breton suit, but that, owing to misunderstandings, he was unable to be present when it came on for trial and that, as a result, judgment went against him by default. Held, that the defences should not be struck out on the ground of embarrassment or delay, and, being allowed by the statute, must be allowed to stand. Gault v. McNabb, (1884) 1 M.R. 35, distinguished on the ground that, in that case, the defences sought to be raised in this Court had been set up in the original action and had been fully gone into at the trial and finally decided in favour of the plaintiff, and therefore, when pleaded in this Court, had probably been struck out on the ground of embarrassment and delay. Meyers v. Prittie, (1884) 1 M.R. 27, not followed. British Linen Co. v. McEwan, (1892) 8 M.R 99, discussed.

Hickey v. Legresley, 15 Man. R. 304 (Richards and Perdue, JJ.).

-Proof of - Seal - Certificate.]-A document purporting to be a transcript of the judgment roll of the Circuit Court for Walworth County, South Dakota, was tendered in evidence. The seal affixed was engraved "Clerk of the Circuit Court, Sixth Judicial District, South Dakota, Walworth County" the certificate appended under the hand of the clerk of the Court stated, "I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the said Court:"-Held, that the certificate, signed by the officer who would ordinarily have the custody of the seal of the Court was prima facie proof that the seal was that of the Court; and that the judgment purported to be under the seal of the Court as required by section 10 of the Canada Evidence Act.

Beebe v. Tanner, 6 Terr. L.R. 13.

—Judgment of Quebec Court—Company not domiciled or resident in Quebec.]—In an action brought in a County Court in the Province of Ontario upon a judgment recovered in a circuit Court in the Province of Quebec, against an incorporated company, who, at the time the Quebec action was begun, had no office or agent in the Province of Quebec:—Held, that the Act of the Legislature of the Province of Canada, 22 Vict. c. 5, s. 58, is not now in force, and Court v. Scott (1881), 32 C.P. 148, is no longer applicable; the binding effect of the judgment sued on depended upon the rules of international law; and the defendant company not having been domiciled or resident in Quebec when served with a writ of summons, the judgment there obtained nust be treated in the Courts of Ontario as a nullity.

-Foreign Court, jurisdiction of-Judgment obtained in an undefended action for statute-barred claim.]-Judgment was given against defendant in Ontario in January. 1906, on a claim arising out of a promissory note signed in that Province in 1898. The action was undefended, although defendant was duly served in British Columbia. He left Ontario in 1899 for Winnipeg and afterwards came to British Columbia, where he has since resided. Plaintiff sued in British Columbia on this judgment, and at the trial evidence was given of a payment made after the British Columbia action had been commenced:-Held, by the Full Court, following Sirdar Gurdyal Singh v. Rajah of Faridkote (1894), A. C. 670, that defendant had acquired a British Columbia domicile, and was not subject to the Ontario Courts. Held, also, following Bateman v. Pinder (1842), 11 L.J.Q.B. 281, that the payment made could not operate to defeat a plea of the Statute of Limitations; and that it was a mere conditional offer of compromise which was declined.

Walsh v. Herman, 13 B.C.R. 314.

-Foreign judgment-Proof of-Exemplification. |-On the trial of an action upon a foreign judgment the plaintiff, without giving any notice under the Canada Evidence Act, s. 19, tendered in evidence a copy ot the judgment sued on certified under the hand of the clerk and by the seal of the Court in which it was recovered, and this was received subject to objection. defendant adduced no evidence and judg-ment was reserved. The rial Judge held that the document was improperly admitted, no notice having been given, but adjourned the case to give the plaintiff an opportunity of proving his judgment: -Held, that the copy of judgment tendered was not an exemplification and notice of intention to use it should have been given under s. 19 of the Canada Evidence Act before it could be admitted, in spite of the provisions of s. 11 of Imp. Stat. 14 and 15 Vict. c. 99, to which the Canada Evidence Act is not repugnant, but only adds a condition. Held, further, that the trial Judge properly exercised his discretion in giving the plaintiff a further opportunity to prove his judgment by adjourning the trial. Held, further, that the similarity of the name of the defendant in this action and that of the defendant named in the foreign judgment taken with the present defendant's pleas in confession and avoidance was sufficient prima facie evidence of the identity of the two defendants. After the adjournment of the trial the plaintiff had secured an order for the examination of the defendant for discovery. Held, that the trial having been commenced and adjourned the plaintiff was not entitled to examine the defendant for discovery.

Stevens v. Olson, 6 Terr. L.R. 106.

—Jurisdiction of foreign Court — Citizenship.]—In an action to enforce a personal judgment obtained in a State Court of the State of Dakota, where it appeared that the defendant had been born in the State of Wisconsin, had been living, at the time of the judgment, and for many years previously, in the North-West Territories, and had not appeared in the Dakota Court or submitted to its jurisdiction:—Held, that the defendant was not bound by the judgment, although the covenant sued upon had been executed in Dakota, when defendant was resident there.

-Preliminary objection-Want of jurisdiction.]-The plaintiffs had recovered a judgment in Ontario against W. J. McGrath & Co.—a firm name for one W. J. Magrath. They brought an action in Alberta on this judgment, naming W. J. McGrath & Co. as the defendants. The writ was served on W. J. Magrath, a resident of Alberta. W. J. Magrath entered an appearance. On notice to strike out appearance, and enter summary judgment, under J. A. Rule 103, an affidavit stating that "the defendant is justly and truly indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of $-- upon a certain judgment recovered by the plaintiffs against the defendants in the High Court of Justice for Ontario on the 8th day of October, 1904," although not stating that this is the judgment sued upon, or in any way referring to the statement of claim: -Held, a sufficient verification of the cause of action. Held, that under Rule 37, sub-s. 2, a person having carried on business in the name of a firm, elsewhere than in Alberta, may be sued in Alberta in such firm name, and it is no answer that the defendant has long since ceased to use such firm name, and has never carried on business within this jurisdiction under such firm name. An objection going to the jurisdiction of the Court or Judge is not waived by appearance, or by the defendant's filing affidavits and appearing to oppose a motion for summary judgment.

the English rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, which corresponds substantially with Rule 162 (e) of the Ontario Consolidated Rules of 1897, providing that service out of the jurisdiction of a writ of summons may be ordered whenever the action is tounded on any breach or alleged breach within the jurisdiction of any contract wherever made, which, according to the terms thereof, ought to be performed within the jurisdiction, it is not necessary, in order to confer jurisdiction, to show that the whole of the contract is to be performed within the jurisdiction; it is sufficient if there is a breach of that part of it, if any, which is to be performed there; but the action must be based on such a breach, and the jurisdiction of the home Court is not attracted in respect of a breach of that part of the contract which is to be performed abroad, by reason of a breach of another part of it which is to be performed within the jurisdiction. The plaintiff, living in England, brought an action in England against the defendants, an incorporated company, doing business in Ontario, for damages for breach of contract to deliver certain goods. By the terms of the contract the delivery was to be at the port of shipment in America, and payment was to be made on receipt of and in exchange for shipping documents in England:-Held, that the breach upon which the action was based took place at the American port, and the defendants, not having been subject to the English Court, either by residence or by submission in the contract, there was no jurisdiction in that Court under Order XI. to summon the defendants to appear before it, or to entertain the action; and the judgment obtained in England in that action (the defendants not appearing), however effectual it might be in England, not having been moved against there, was of no avail to support an action upon it in Ontario. Held, however, that the original cause of action had not merged in the judgment; and the plaintiff was entitled to succeed upon an alternative claim thereupon, made in the action brought in Ontario. The trial Judge held both cases of action to be proved, and the plaintiff elected to take judgment in respect of the claim based upon the English judgment. Held, that the plaintiff was not so bound by his election that he was prevented from having judgment upon the alternative claim when he was held by the Court of Appeal, upon the defendants' appeal, not entitled to succeed upon the English judgment. Held, also, that an order was properly made at the trial adding as plaintiffs the personal representatives of the original plaintiff, who died after the commencement of the action, and that the action was properly constituted.

Moritz v. Canada Wood Specialty Co., 17 O.L.R. 53, affirmed; Canada Wood Co. v. Moritz, 42 Can. S.C.R. 237. -Defence that judgment obtained by fraud on foreign Court.]-The plaintiffs brought an action against the defendants, an Ontario corporation, in the Province of Que-bec, to recover money alleged to be due from them for services rendered. The defendants appeared in the Quebec action and defended on the merits and judgment went against them. The plaintiffs having brought an action in Ontario on the Quebec judgment, and moved before the Master in Chambers for speedy judgment under Rule 603, the defendants opposed the motion upon affidavit that the Quebec judgment was recevered by fraud and deception practised upon the Court by the plaintiffs, and that they the defendants, had a good defence to the action upon the merits:-Held, affirming the orders of the Master in Chambers and Britton, J., and reversing the decision of the Divisional Court, that the motion for judgment must be dismissed, and that in an action founded upon a foreign judgment the defendant is at liberty to plead, and prove if he can, that the judgment was recovered by fraud and deception practised upon the Court. Codd v. Delap. 92 L.T. 510. followed. Per Moss, C.J.O., Osler and Garrow, JJ.A.: - There is no conflict between the above dicision and the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Woodruff v. McLennan, 14 A.R. 242, as that case turned upon a different state of facts and did not call in question the principle of the decision of the English Court of Appeal in Abouloff v. Oppenheimer, 10 Q.B.D. 295. Per Moss, C.J.O., and Osler, J.A .: - A decision of the highest Ccurt of this province, while it remains un-reversed by a tribunal having appellate jurisdiction over it, ought not to be set aside or ignored, simply because other Courts, not possessing appellate jurisdiction over it, and themselves subject to reversal by higher Courts, have subsequently expressed views that may appear to be not in harmony with the decision. Trimble v. Hill, 5 App. Cas. 342, referred to.

Jacobs v. Beaver, 17 O.L.R. 496.

-Foreign judgment - Defendant not in jurisdiction of Court - Sale of goods False representations.]-Defendants ordered certain butter making machines from plaintiff on the representation that with these machines butter could be made from milk fresh from the cow. On receiving the machines they found that they would not make butter as represented and immediately returned them. The representation in question was made by the plaintiff's agent who did not give evidence, but it did not appear that he had any ground for believing the representations to be true. In fact the plaintiff's own literature showed the representations to be untrue. The plaintiff recovered judgment in the Supreme Court of Alberta for the price of the goods, the defendants not being residents in Alberta and not appearing and now sued upon the foreign judgment or alternatively for goods sold and delivered:—Held, that the representation being untrue and the agent having no ground for believing it to be true the Court could infer that it was fraudulently made and the defendants were therefore entitled to reseind the contract and return the goods. (2) (Following Gurdyal Singh v. Rajah of Faridkote (1894), A.C. 670), the defendants not being residents of or domiciled in Alberta and not having appeared in the action there the plaintiff could not now recover upon the foreign judgment recovered by default.

A. M. performed work for his father M. and on May 20th, 1908, the latter was indebted to him in the sum of $400, which with the mortgage for $500 made up the sum of $900, the consideration for which M.'s property was conveyed to A. M. M. was not insolvent at the time he made the conveyance to his son A. M. The only creditors he had besides his son were the plaintiff, and his solicitor to whom he owed a small amount for professional services rendered in connection with D.'s suit against him:-Held, that the conveyance would not be set aside and the bill must be dismissed, as the evidence showed that the sale was made bona fide for a valuable consideration with the intent to pass the property, and in such a case it was immaterial whether or not there was an intention to defeat or defraud a creditor.

Dyer v. McGuire, 4 N.B. Eq. 203.

Voluntary conveyance—Ex post facto consideration — Subsequent purchaser.]—The defendant N. made a contract with the plaintiff to sell to the plaintiff an equity of redemption in land which N. had a year earlier conveyed to his brother-in-law, the defendant P., in trust for the maintenance of N.'s infant children. P. had taken the children about 8 months before the conveyance, and had been maintaining them. The action was for specific performance of the contract and to have P. declared a bare trustee for N. It was contended that the conveyance to P. was voluntary under 27 Eliz. c. 4:—Held, that the conveyance was not voluntary in its inception; and, even if it were, there was an ex post facto consideration sufficient to support it.

Eggertson v. Nicastro, 15 W.L.R. 106 (Man.).

-Fraudulent conveyance - Husband to wife.]-On the 29th January, 1896. mortgaged land to his wife to secure $3,-750, and on the 23rd March, 1907, he transferred his interest in the land to her. This transfer was made without consideration, and solely at the suggestion of J., who said that he told his wife that there was then about $7,000 due on the mortgage, and the property was of about that value. The wife knew nothing of the transaction, and could not remember whether her husband spoke to her about it before he made the transfer. At the date of the transfer J. was indebted to the plaintiffs in a large sum, and was in insolvent circumstances. The plaintiffs, having obtained judgment against J., sought, in an action against him and his wife, a declaration that the transfer was void as against them and J.'s other creditors, and also asked that the transfer should be set aside and the registration thereof vacated:-Held, on the evidence, that, at the date of the transfer, J. believed that the property was worth more than the amount due upon the mortgage, and that his sole object in making the transfer was to put his interest in the property beyond the reach of his creditors; and, therefore, the transfer should be declared void as against the plaintiffs; but the plaintiffs were not entitled to a judgment setting the transfer aside or vacating its registration. With the above declaration the plaintiffs would be in a position to proceed to realize under execution upon their judgment, and a purchaser at a sale under the execution would be entitled to be registered as owner, subject to the mortgage to the wife.

Union Bank v. Johnson, 13 W.L.R. 519.

-Fraudulent conveyance-Proceedings to set aside.]-1. A motion under Rules 742 or 743 of the King's Bench Act for an order to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of land, and for the sale of the land to realize the amount of a registered judgment, is not an interlocutory riotion within the meaning of Rule 507, and affidavits grounded merely on information and belief are not sufficient to support such motion. 2. The only proper evidence of the registration of a certificate of judgment is a certified copy of it; Massey Harris v. Warener, (1897) 12 M.R. 48, followed. 3. Where the debt for which a judgment was recovered was incurred more than a year after the gift from the debtor to his wife complained of, and it was not shown that the property conveyed constituted the whole or even a substantial part of the property owned by the debtor at the time, the conveyance should not be held to be fraudulent.

Canada Supply Co. v. Robb, 20 Man. R.

—Fraudulent conveyance—Statute of Elizabeth—Intent.]—Defendant McDonald being indebted to the plaintiffs and others, conveyed a farm to his co-defendants, his wife and father-in-law, for an expressed consideration of $4,000.00 to be paid in cash, notes, and by the proceeds of a loan. The evidence as to payment was contradictory, but the weight of evidence seemed to show that $1,400.00 was paid. Beyond contradictory evidence between the defendants as to the mode of payment there was no evidence of fraud:—Held, that no actual and express intent to defraud or delay creditors being shown in both parties, the transfer, being for valuable consideration, ought not to be set aside.

Manitoba Brewing & Malting Co. v. Mc-Donald, 2 Sask. R. 223.

—Transfer made fraudulently—Injunction to prevent further transfer.]—The Court will not, at the instance of a creditor who is not a judgment creditor, interfere by injunction to prevent a transfer of property by a debtor, but where the debtor has fraudulently transferred property, the Court will enjoin further transfers until the creditor can obtain judgment in his action to impeach conveyance. Fairchild v. Elmslie, 2 Alta. R. 115.

-Motion for judgment before defence-Sufficiency of evidence.]-In an action to set aside a bill of sale as being fraudulent on motion for judgment pursuant to leave granted under R. 326, the plaintiff relied on the transcript of the evidence of the defendants given in an interpleader proceeding before a District Court Judge, in which proceeding the District Court Judge had expressed the opinion that the bill of sale was fraudulent:—Held, that the opinion of the District Court Judge should not be considered on this application, and in the absence of a direct admission of fraud in the defendants' evidence the case should not be summarily disposed of.

Varley v. Duvall, 2 Alta. R. 329.

-Sale by father to daughter-Presumption of fraud.]-No presumption of fraud attaches to a sale of immovables by a father to his daughter if he is possessed of movables which can be taken under execution and his creditors can have the sale set aside for fraud only by proving that the vendor was insolvent at the time to the knowledge of the purchaser. The plaintiff who seeks rescission, for fraud, of a con-tract executed several years previously must prove that it only came to his knowledge during the year preceding the institution of his action.

Deslaudes v. Saint-Jacques, Q.R. 19 K.B. 289.

Fraudulent conveyance-Purchase of land by debtor in name of another-Evidence-Presumption.]-The plaintiff claimed a deciaration that a certain piece of land pur-chased from the Dominion Government in the name of the defendant J. was the property of his brother, the defendant R., and should be sold to realize the plaintiff's registered judgment against R. At the time of the purchase in 1888 R. was indebted to the plaintiff in a sum of over $1,800 and to another person for over $4,000, and it was shown that J. had never paid anything on the land either for purchase money or taxes and never received anything by way of rents or profits; also that the money for the first instalment had been advanced by another brother, that R. had paid the rest of the purchase money from the proceeds of the land, of which he had always enjoyed the use and occupation, and that the Crown patent for the property was issued to J. in 1892 without his having applied for it. The defendants at their examination for discovery before the trial swore that the whole transaction was bona fide and that R. was J.'s agent throughout in respect of the property, but R. was not called as a witness for the defence. J., also, in a letter to R. written in 1899, had referred to the property as "your land":-Held, that the proper conclusion upon the whole evidence was that the land was really R.'s property and had been purchased and held in J.'s name for the purpose of preventing creditors from realizing out of it, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief asked for. Semble, that when a defendant who is in Court does not give evidence to support his case, the Judge is entitled to make every reasonable presumption against him. Barker v. Furlong, [1891] 2 Ch. 172, per Romer, J., at p. 184, approved.

Miller v. McCuaig, 13 Man. R. 220.

-Fraudulent preference-Secret benefit -Bribery - Promissory note - Illegal consideration.]-A secret arrangement whereby the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure respecting equal distribution of the assets of insolvents are defeated and advantage given to a particular unsecured creditor is a fraud upon the general body of creditors notwithstanding that the agreement for the additional payment may be made by a third person who has no direct interest in the insolvent's business. A promissory note given to secure the amount of the preference payable under such an agreement for a payment to an inspector of an insolvent estate to influence his consent to an arrangement which is not for the general benefit of the creditors is a bribe which is, in itself, sufficient reason to adjudge the transaction, to induce which it was given, corrupt, fraudulent and void. La Banque Jacques Cartier v. Brigham, 16 Que. S.C. 113, reversed.

Brigham v. La Banque Jacques Cartier,

30 Can. S.C.R. 429.

-Voluntary conveyance of land-13 Eliz., c. 5 (Imp.)-Solvent vendor-Action by mortgagee.]-A voluntary conveyance of land is void under 13 Eliz., c. 5 (Imp.) as tending to hinder and delay creditors though the vendor was solvent when it was made if it results in denuding him of all his property and so rendering him insolvent thereafter. A mortgagee whose security is admittedly insufficient may bring an action to set aside such conveyance and that without first realizing his security. Judgment of the Supreme Court of British Co-lumbia (7 B.C.P. 189), reversed.

Sun Life Assurance Company v. Elliott,

31 Can. S.C.R. 91,

-Action to set aside transfer-Compromise obtained by fraud.]—The plaintiff in this action sought to set aside a transfer of land which the defendant had obtained from him by the exercise of what the Judge held to have been both fraud and undue influence, but the defendant contended that the plaintiff had, after the commencement of the action, compromised and settled it by signing an agreement. --Contract - Avoidance of - Art. 1040 C. C.]-Inasmuch as an action by a creditor to set aside a contract for fraud must, under Art. 1040 C.C. be brought within one year from the time of his obtaining a knowledge of such contract, and inasmuch as the article above cited is prohibitory in its terms and denies absolutely the right of action unless exercised within the year, it is essential whenever the fact does not appear by the dates of the contract attacked and of the institution of the suit or proceeding, that the party seeking the avoidance of the contract should allege and prove that he only obtained knowledge thereof within the year preceding the institution of his suit or proceeding. Where not pleaded, the objection based on the omission of such allegation may be raised at any stage of the case.

Gagnon v. Dunbar, 20 Que. S.C. 515 (Doherty, J.).

-Fraudulent conveyance - Validated by assignment for valuable consideration -Giving time - Right to priority - Future support not sufficient to support deed.]-In 1877, C. made a conveyance, by way of mortgage, to H. The conveyance was made without consideration, and in fraud of creditors, and was voidable as against creditors and subsequent purchasers for valuable consideration. In 1896, H., at the request of C., assigned the mortgage so made to W., who was a creditor of C., and pressing for payment:-Held, that the mortgage, although fraudulently made in the first instance, was validated by the assignment to W., for valuable consideration. Held, that the giving of time by W. to C., in connection with the antecedent indebtedness, was sufficient consideration to support the assignment. Held, nevertheless, that the validating of the mortgage would not affect the right to priority of the party claiming under a second mortgage made by C. previously to the assignment to W. Held, also, following McNeil v. McPhee, 31 N.S. R. 140, that a deed made by C., the sole consideration for which was the future support of the maker and his wife by the grantee, was not founded upon valid consideration within the Statute of Elizabeth. Conrad v. Corkum, 35 N.S.R. 288.

-Mortgage — Pretended sale under power —Fraud — Sale by trustee — Acts of parties to fraud — Damage.]—On appeal from the judgment, reported 2 O.L.R. 134:—Held, that the defendant D. was not personally liable, as he committed no wrong in taking the assignment of the plaintiff's mortgage, and the sale by him under the power of sale therein wrought no change in the plaintiff's rights, as H., the purchaser, became merely trustee for R., the mortgagee, and in his hands the property was redeemable, unaffected by the sale. But held, that the defendant H. was personally liable, as well as the defendant R., for the damage caused by the subsequent sale by him, as he was possessed of the legal title and had the legal power and control, and it was his sale and his act that prejudiced the plaintiff. Judgment of Meredith, C.J.C.P., varied.

Smith v. Hunt, 4 O.L.R. 653 (C.A.).

—Misrepresentation as to principal consideration of contract.]—The defendant, by falsely stating to the plaintiffs that he had obtained a lease of a similar mica property from another property for 830 per ton on the mica extracted, which statement he supported by producing a pretended copy of the lease in his own writing, induced them to lease their mica property to him on the same terms. The plaintiffs would not have agreed to the lease but for the deceit practiced:—Held (reversing the judgment of the Superior Court, Loranger, J.)—The representation that defendant had obtained a lease of a similar property for 830 per ton, being a principal consideration for entering into the contract, the plaintiffs were entitled, under Articles 992 and 993 C.C., to obtain its resiliation. Barnard v. Reindeau, 31 Can. S.C.R., p. 234, followed.

Doucet v. Clerex, 23 Que. S.C. 107 (C.R.).

-Fraudulent conveyance - Exemptions -Lien of registered judgment as against land -Declaration of right without order for sale.] - This action was brought to have it declared that a certain parcel of land conveyed by the debtor to her son before the recovery of the plaintiff's judgment, in reality belonged to the debtor, and that the son held the land only as trustee for the mother, and had no interest in it, and that the judgment formed a lien or charge on the land, and asked that the land be sold to satisfy the judgment. Defendants admitted that the land was the mother's and that the son had no interest in it and that the conveyance had been made solely because the mother thought she might thereby prevent the sale of the land to realize the plaintiff's claim, but they set up and proved that it was her actual residence and home, and claimed that as it did not exceed $1,500 in value it was exempt from the proceedings, by virtue of R.M.S. 1902, c. 91, s. 9. It was urged on behalf of the plaintiff that the conveyance was fraudulent and void as against him, and that the debtor had by conveying the land to her son deprived herself of the benefit of the exemption, according to Roberts v. Hartley, 14 M. R 284, and Merchants' Bank v. McKenzie, 13 M.R. 19:-Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration that the land was the property of the debtor, so that, if the exemption should at any time lapse, the judgment might be enforced against the land, but was not entitled to a present sale of the land to realize his judgment. Roberts v. Hartley distinguished on the ground that there both the grantor and grantee united m asserting the reality of the transfer and no trust in favour of the grantor was al-leged or proved by him. The right given by the Judgments Act to a debtor to claim exemption in respect of his actual residence is clear and positive and applies to his interest in the property so long as he continues to occupy it, whether that interest is legal or only equitable; and if the debtor, having an absolute interest, converts it into an equitable one, but still continues to hold and reside on the land, the exemption is not lost. Even if the debtor's object in making the conveyance was to obtain a protection which the law had already conferred on him, he does not thereby lose the right given him by the statute, as the plac-ing of the property in the name of a trustee for him would not injure the present rights of the creditor as long as the trusteeship is admitted.

Exhibition prizes—Horse racing—Classification—Fraudulent entry—Ontario statute respecting.]—(1) The Ontario statute respecting the traudulent entry of horses at exhibitions is one regulating the rights between individuals by preventing unfair competition, and is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature. (2) The statute applies whether or not the horse entered at the exhibition had a previous "record" of speed or not, and a classification of the horses by their age is within the Act.

Collins v. Horning, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 514 (Snider, Co.J.).

—Setting aside deed — Notorious insolvency —Parties.] — 1. Notorious insolvency of a debtor is not sufficient for the setting aside of a deed made by him if neither he nor the third person with whom he contracted were aware of it. (2) A deed made in fraud of creditors of the person who executed it cannot be set aside unless all the parties to the deed have been made parties to the action. (3) Want of consideration for a deed of sale is evidence of simulation and a ground of nullity.

—Fraudulent conveyance — Exemptions — Lien of registered judgment — Taking proceedings under, while debtor in occupation.] —I. The registration of a certificate of judgment, under ss. 196 and 19 70f The County Courts Act, R.S.M., c. 33, as amended by 55 Vict. c. 7, s. 5, binds and charges the land of the judgment debtor, though it may be his actual residence or home, and the creditor may take proceedings to realize whenever the defendant ceases to be entitled to claim the property as his exemption. Frost v. Driver, 10 M.R. 319, followed. (2) When debtor has absolutely conveyed all his interest in the land on which he resides by a conveyance valid and binding on him, even when set aside by the Court as against creditors, the claim that the land is an exemption of his under s. 12 of The Judgments Act, R.S.M., c. 80, can no longer be maintained. (3) Under such circumstances, when the debtor has made a conveyance of his home. which is fraudulent against creditors under 13 Eliz., c. 5, the creditor is entitled to an immediate order for sale of the property to realize the amount of the judgment and costs. -Fraudulent conveyance - Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5-Interim injunction-Deposit in government savings bank--Injunction to prevent withdrawal.]-A conveyance by an insolvent debtor in good faith and for valuable consideration, though made with intent to defeat creditors to the knowledge of the purchaser, is not void under the Statute 13 Eliz., c. 5. An interim injunction granted restraining the transfer of land by the grantee in a suit by a judgment creditor of the grantor impeaching the conveyance as fraudulent under the Statute 13 Eliz., c. 5. Application refused of a judgment creditor for an injunction order restraining the wife of the debtor from withdrawing money on deposit in her name in the Government savings bank alleged to belong to the husband, there being no mode of enforcing the order as against the Crown.

Moneys advanced to wife-Unjust preference - Supposed right to dower-Payment to obtain bar.]-In 1906 the plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant J. C. for $525 and costs. The defendant J. C. disposed of his farm and chattels to H., almost immediately after the trial of the action in which the judgment was recovered for $2,400 over and above the mortgages upon the farm, and $993 for the chattels, leaving J. C. without property except the purchase-money. An action against J. C. and H. to set aside the sales was dismissed. The defendant E. C., the wife of J. C., joined in the deed to H. to bar her dower, and E. C. received from H. part of the purchase-price, three notes of $200 each and one of The plaintiff brought this action against J. C. and E. C., alleging that E. C. received notes for $700 from H., that this was done to defeat the plaintiff, and was in pursuance of a corrupt compact, and that E. Husband ment — Pa applied to meet the plaintiff's claim. The trial Judge found that E. C. advanced to her husband, in 1902 or 1903, $300; that she toiled hard upon the farm; that all par-ties believed that she had dower in the farm (although the mortgages were created before her marriage to J. C.); and that she positively refused to sign the deed to H. unless her claims were recognized; and that the making of notes for $700 by H. to E. C. was in reality a payment to her of $400 for barring her dower and a payment by J. C., through H., of $300 which he owed his wife; that, of the $300, $200 was not an unjust preference, as it went to relieve a mortgage on the land, leaving $100 which might be impeached under R.S.O. 1897, c. 147, s. 2 (2); but this action was not framed on the ground of fraudulent or unjust preference; and an amendment was refused:-Held, by a Divisional Court, on appeal, that an amendment was properly refused, but the judgment in this action should be without prejudice to a new action: — Held, also, following Forrest v. Laycock, 18 Gr. 611, that where a wife in good faith claims to be entitled to dower. and refuses to join in a conveyance without a reasonable compensation being made to her, a payment made to her by the purchaser to induce her to join in the conveyance is valid against the creditors of the husband. -Fraudulent sale of land subject to equity of redemption - "Privilege."]-A charge was laid against the detendant under s. 421 of the Criminal Code, "for that he did, knowing of the existence of an unregistered privilege, being an equity of redemption in favour of J. W. in" certain land, "fraudulently make a sale of the same with intent to defraud:"—Held, by the Court, that the acts of the defendant, as stated in the evidence, did not constitute any offence within the meaning of s. 421. Per Meredith, J.A., that an equity of redemption is not embraced within any of the words, "sale, grant, mortgage, hypothec, privilege, or incumbrance." in s. 421. Per Magee, J. A conveyance of the farm was thereupon made to him for $500, his contributions from his earnings being placed at $300, and the balance being paid by cash and a horse. Smith v. Wright, 2 N.B. Eq. 528.

-Misrepresentation inducing contract-Security for debt-Husband and wife-Parent and child.]-C., a man without means, and W., a rich money lender, were engaged together in stock speculations, W. advancing money to C. at a high rate of interest in the course of such business. C. being eventually heavily in the other's debt it was agreed between them that if he could procure the signatures of his wife and daughter, each of whom had property of her own, as security, W. would give him a further advance of $1,000. Though unwilling at first the wife and daughter were induced by misrepresentation to sign notes in favour of C. for sums aggregating over $7,000, which were delivered to W. Neither of the makers had independent advice: - Held, reversing the judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal (Taschereau, C.J., dissenting), that though the daughter was twenty-three years old she was still subject to the dominion and influence of her father and the contract made by her without independent advice was not binding. Held, also, Taschereau, C.J., and Killam, J., dissenting, that his wife was also subject to influence by C. and entitled to independent advice and she was, therefore, not liable on the note she signed. Held, per Sedgewick, J., that the evidence produced disclosed that the transaction was a conspiracy between C. and W. to procure the signatures of the notes and that the wife of C. was deceived as to his financial position and the purpose for which the notes were required, therefore the plaintiff could not recover.

—Homestead exemption.]—Where there is an exemption from seizure under execution of the debtor's homestead not exceeding 160 acres (C.O. c. 27), a conveyance of the same by the debtor to his wife will not be set aside at the suit of an execution creditor. The statute 13 Elizabeth only extends to assignments of such property as is liable to be taken in execution, and this property was not available to creditors up to the very time of the execution of the transfer and could not be afterward.

—A sale à rémèré (with right of redemption), which leaves the vendor no effects save such right of redemption with which to pay his creditors, is a contract causing prejudice to the creditors which may, therefore, be set aside as made in fraud of their rights:—The fact that the purchaser furnished the vendor with money to pay a portion of his debts showed that he was aware of the vendor having creditors and that he acted in fraud of their rights.

Smith v. Bouffard, 25 Que. S.C. 448 (Rochon, J.).

-Customers of former employer - Action -Scope of employment-Joint tort feasors.] -The plaintiff company were the publishers of a Christmas annual, and had for years been selling it at a considerable profit, the defendant T. being in their employ as a salesman or agent, and as such had visited customers and sold the annual to them. T. left their employment and entered that of the defendant company, who decided to issue a similar annual, and sent T. out as a sales ian. He went to some of the custome s of the plaintiffs and by untrue representations, amongst others that "the defendant company had taken over that part of the plaintiffs' business, and that the plaintiffs were going out of that branch of business," sold annuals to those customers to the detriment of the plaintiffs' business and to the profit of the defendant company, who accepted and filled the orders and collected the price. On the answers to the questions put to the jury, the trial Judge gave judgment against T. for the damages found, and granted an injunction against him and dismissed the action as against the defendant company. Held, that T. was acting within the scope of his employment in seeking to procure orders, and that the defendant company having availed itself of his acts, was liable for the represcntations made by him. Held, also, that the action was not one of slander but an action on the case for false and malicious statements made in reference to the plaintiffs' business, and resulting in loss to the plaintiff, and that the defendant company, although incorporated, was liable. Held, also, that the true measure of a master's liability is the same as if the act had been committed by himself, and the fact that the defendant company had made no profit out of the transaction made no difference as to the amount of the damages against them. Although if one of two joint tort feasors be sued and judgment recovered against him, that is a bar to further action against the two, here the action was brought against both and judgment obtained against one and a motion for judgment was made against the other:—Held, that both the company and the agent T. were liable. The jury, in answer to a question in which they were asked in effect whether T. in uttering the words he did, was acting within the scope of his employment by the company for their benefit, answered "No":-Held, that the finding could not be sustained, and there being no reason to suppose that new light could be thrown on the case by a new trial, and the Court having before it all the materials necessary for determining the question in dispute, under Con. Rule 615, judgment was directed to be entered against both the defendants. Sheppard Publishing Company, v. Press Publishing Company, 10 O.L.R. 243, D.C.

-Collection Act - R.S. (1900), c. 182, s. 28 -Rights of assignee as against sheriff levying under execution.] - The assignment made by a debtor under the provisions of the Collection Act, R.S. (1900), c. 182, s. 28, is to be regarded as part of the legal process provided by the statute to enable the creditor to enforce payment of his debt, and essentially differs from, and is in no way analogous to a voluntary assign ment, and is not subject to the provisions of the Bills of Sale Act requiring an affidavit of bona fides or other requirements of the Act. The assignee in such case does not take his rights under the assignor, so as to be bound or affected by his fraudulent act, but as a judgment creditor enforcing his statutable remedy, and he may in that capacity attack any previous fraudulent conveyance made by his assignor. The assignment so obtained confers upon the judgment creditor an absolute title to the property assigned in trust to satisfy his judgment, and, in the next place, to hold the balance for the benefit of those beneficially entitled thereto. An assignee under the Act, who has taken possession under his assignment, is entitled to recover against the sheriff levying under executions placed in his hands subsequently to the date of the assignment. Farlinger v. Ingraham, 38 N.S.R. 467.

-Fraudulent transfer-Action to set aside - Conspiracy - Damages. J - In an action by creditors to set aside as fraudulent and void a conveyance of land and a bill of sale made by an insolvent debtor to his sister-in-law, there was judgment for the plaintiffs at the trial, but on appeal by the defendants, the Court of Appeal, deeming the evidence unsatisfactory, ordered a new trial upon payment by the defendant gran-tee of the costs of the former trial and of the appeal, notwithstanding the danger which attends the opening up of a case af-ter the attention of the parties has been directed to the defects in their proofs. A brother of the debtor was made a defend-ant, as well as the debtor and his grantee, it being alleged by the plaintiffs, who sued on behalf of themselves and all creditors, that all the defendants entered into a conspiracy to defeat and defraud the creditors:-Held, that the plaintiffs could not succeed upon the conspiracy claim, for they could show no special damage accruing to them, and could not recover damages on behalf of a class. And that claim failing, there was no ground for making the debtor's brother a party, and he could not be ordered to pay costs, but the plaintiffs should pay his costs.

— Fraudulent conveyance — Settlement of plaintiff's debt — Addition of new creditor as co-plaintiff.]—Where a creditor, who has brought an action on behalf of himself and other creditors to vacate a transfer of property, has before judgment received payment of his debt, but not of his costs, the Court will not sanction the addition of another creditor as a co-plaintiff, but will allow the controversy to be settled as between the puintiff and the defendants, leaving the creditor seking to intervene to begin an independent action.

Driffll V. Ough, 13 O.L.R. 8 (Boyd, C.),

—Interpleader — Crops raised by claimant on land alleged to have been transferred by defendant fraudulently.]—The sheriff seized crops grown on property of the claimant, son of the defendant. Part of the property was the defendant's homestead transferred to the claimant, and part was the property of defendant's wife, leased by him verbally to the claimant, under authority from the wife. The claimant purchased the seed grain, hired and paid for the help, and paid for twine and harvesting. The defendant did a small amount of work on the farm:—Held, that the question of bona fides of the transfer from father to son did not materially affect the ownership of the crops; that on the evidence the claimant was entitled to the crops. Kilbride v. Cameron, 7 U.C.C. P. 373, followed. Massey-Harris v. Moore, 6 Terr. L.R. 75.

-Fraudulent transfer - Interpleader Garnishee proceedings - Husband and wife -Exemptions.] - In an interpleader issue between the wife of the execution debtor and the execution creditors in which the question was whether the goods seized by the sheriff were then the property of the wife as against the execution creditors, the trial Judge found, and the Court en banc sustained his finding, that the goods or their purchase price being in reality the property of the husband, had been fraudu-lently transferred by the husband to the wife, and therefore were the property of the execution creditors against the wife:-Held, Wetmore, J., dissenting, that notwith-standing the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Donohoe v. Hull, 24 S.C.R. 683, evidence of fraud as affecting the question of property was admissible on the issue. Per Richardson and McGuire, JJ., the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Donohoe v. Hull, 24 S.C.R. 683, was not applicable; it was not intended or contemplated to apply where, as in an inter-pleader issue, the question is whether or not a sale or transfer of goods is a mere sham or device to defeat execution creditors. Per Scott, J.—The decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Donohoe v. Hull, 24 S.C.R. 683, extended only to proceedings by way of attachment of debts, in which, in order to enable the judgment creditor to succeed, it must appear that a debt exists for which the judgment debtor might have brought an action against the garnishee.

-Judgment - Procurement by fraud and Perjury - Right to attack in subsequent action - Fraudulent assignment - Action to set aside - Res judicata.]-When it can be shown that a judgment, whether foreign or domestic, has been obtained by fraud, it cannot be held binding upon the perty against whom the fraud has been practised; and such fraud may be shown although it may involve a reconsideration of the very facts upon which the former judgment was recovered, and although it may consist in the presentation to the Court of evidence that the judgment impeached was obtained by perjured evidence to which the Court upon the first trial gave credit. There is no distinction between the fraud which consists in presenting perjured evidence to the Court, and that which is collateral to the merits of the case. In an action to set aside as fraudulent and void an assignment of salary by one defendant to the other, the defendants pleaded res judicata, upon which the plaintiff joined issue. At the trial the defendants proved a judgment of a Division Court, in a garnishee proceeding, to which the plaintiff and defendants were parties, and in which the validity of the same assignment was the question for determination. The trial Judge found that by suppressing material facts and by giving evidence that was wilfully false, the claimant in the Division Court proceeding, who was one of the defendants in the action, procured from the Judge in the Division Court an adjudication that the assignment was valid:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to impeach the pludgment in the Division Court, though he had not directly attacked it, as he should have done by amendment when res judicata was pleaded; and, upon the evidence, that the assignment was fraudulent and void. Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (1882), 10 Q.B.D. 295, and Vadala v. Lawes (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 310, followed. Woodruff v. McLennan (1887), 159 U.S. 113, not followed. Judgment of Anglin, J. reversed.

-Fraudulent conveyance - Statute of Limitations — Registration of certificate of County Court judgment.]—(1) An instrument in the form usually called a lien note is not a negotiable promissory note: Bank of Hamilton v. Gillies (1899), 12 M.R. 495, and the right of action upon it is barred by the Statute of Limitations in six years from the due date of it without adding any days of grace. (2) A voluntary conveyance of land cannot be successfully attacked under the Statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, on the basis of a debt due at the time of the conveyance but barred by lapse of time be-fore the commencement of the action to attack. Struthers v. Glennie (1888), 14 O.R. 726, followed. (3) A voluntary conveyance of land, if meant to be absolute as between the parties, so that the grantee holds it free of trust for the grantor, leaves no interest in him which can be affected by the registration of a certificate of a subsequentlyrecovered County Court judgment against the grantor. A debt of the grantor, though owing at the time of the making of such voluntary conveyance, became afterwards barred by the Statute of Limitations, before the creditor sued the grantor upon it. The grantor neglected to plead that statute and judgment was recovered against him: -Held, that, as against the grantee, such judgment does not relate back to the original debt so as to form the basis for an action under 13 Eliz. c. 5. The grantee, having once gained the right to plead the Statute of Limitations in such last-named action, cannot be deprived of that right by the act or omission of the grantor.

the farm and supporting him and their mother, and paying to their two sisters $1,000 each, that the farm and his personal property should be theirs. The farm consisted of adjoining pieces of land, each worth about $3,200. Subsequently the sons paid about $3,000 in paying off balances of purchase money due on the farm, paid $2,-000 to the sisters, and supported the father and mother. On July 19, 1899, the father, in performance of the agreement, conveyed the farm to the sons for an expressed consideration of one dollar. At that time he was not in debt, but he was surety with others for loans amounting to $14,000 to a company, of which he and they were directors, the last loan being for $3,000, and made June 7, 1899. On May 3, 1901, the company went into liquidation, and the amount for which the directors were sureties was paid by them, except E. S. In a suit by them to set aside the conveyance as fraudulent and void under the statute 15 Eliz. c. 5:-Held, that the bill should be dismissed.

Baird v. Shipp, 3 N.B. Eq. 258.

-Parent and child-Conveyance of farm by father to daughters - Agreement for maintenance.]—A farmer, 77 years old, conveyed his farm to two of his daughters, subject to a charge for the maintenance of himself and his wife and of a money payment to another daughter. The evidence showed that he understood what he was doing and approved of it afterwards till his death, four years later. This action was brought by one of his sons, after his death, to set aside the conveyance to the defendants, the two daughters:-Held, that the transaction was a righteous one, and that the conveyance, being executed voluntarily and deliberately, with knowledge of its nature and effect, should not be set aside; the advice of an independent solicitor or other person was not a sine quâ non, it appearing that the transaction was not promoted or obtained by undue influence, and was in itself a reasonable one, having regard to all the circumstances.

Empey v. Fick, 13 O.L.R. 178 (D.C.).

-Conveyance of farm by father to daughters - Agreement for maintenance - Action to set aside transaction - Understanding and capacity of grantor.]-The decision of a Divisional Court, 13 O.L.R. 178, dismissing an action by one of the heirs at law of the grantor to set aside a conveyance of a farm by a father to his daughters, for undue influence, improvidence, etc., was affirmed, the majority of the Court of Appeal agreeing with the reasons given by the Court below. Per Meredith, J.A.—If the transaction had been attacked by the grantor in his lifetime, it would have been set aside; it was not so attacked, but rather confirmed; and (per Riddell, J., also) no one representing or claiming under the grantor could successfully attack it. Per Riddell, J .- Since the Devolution of Estates Act, the right of the heir at law to sue to set aside a transaction of this kind is not higher than the right of a residuary legatee to sue in respect of personal property; the plaintiff had no right to bring the action at all until the expiration of the period of the three years fixed by 2 Edw. VII. c. 17, s. 3, amending R.S.O. 1897, c. 127, s. 13; and the fact that the personal representative was made a defendant did not assist the plaintiff.

-Fraudulent conveyance - Marriage settlement - Bona fides - Suspicious circumstances.] - On the 31st October, 1906,, the plaintiff obtained a verdict for $1,000 damages against the defendant G.H.W. in an action for breach of promise of marriage; there was an appeal, which was dismissed by consent on the 25th January, 1907; judgment was entered for the plaintiff on the 26th January, and execution placed in the sheriff's hands on the 6th February. Early in October, 1906, G.H.W. had proposed marriage to Miss C.; she took time to consider, and on the 16th January, 1907 (never having seen him in the meantime), wrote him a letter in which she alluded to the "trouble" he was in (meaning the action), and accepted his proposal on condition that he should settle upon her and her children (if any) $2,500 in money or property. On the 28th January he instructed a solicitor to prepare a marriage settlement, which he did, and this was executed at the solicitor's office, where G.H.W., Miss C., and the trustees named in the instrument, his brother and sister-in-law (whom Miss C. had never seen before and whose home was in a distant province) met, on the following day. The property of G.H.W. included in the settlement was $1,000 in money and an equity in land of the value of $800, being practically the whole of his property. The marriage took place on the same day. In an action against G.H.W., his wife, and the trustees, to declare the settlement fraudulent and void: - Held, that there were circumstances of grave suspicion surrounding the transaction; if the letter were part of a scheme, the fact that G.H.W. was in difficulty, and that the action was pending against him, and that the effect of making the transfer of the property would be to prevent recovery by the plaintiff upon her judgment, would make the transaction void under the Statute of Elizabeth; but, the trial Judge having found that there was an honest offer of marriage. that the letter was genuine, and the wife (then Miss C.) honest in her statement of the condition upon which she would accept the offer, the plaintiff could not succeed. Bulmer v. Hunter (1869), L.R. 8 Eq. 46, distinguished.

Poitras v. Pelletier, 38 N.B.R. 63. -Fraudulent conveyance - Pleading - Injunction.] - The plaintiffs, in an action before judgment to set aside alleged fraudulent conveyances of his property by the defendant Wright to his wife, obtained an interim injunction to prevent further transfers of the property by either defendant:
Held, that the injunction should be dissolved, because the statement of claim contained no distinct allegation that the grantor was indebted to the plaintiffs at the time of the alleged fraudulent conveyance. Leave to amend the statement of claim was granted; but, as it contained no sufficient allegation of the indebtedness of the grantor to the plaintiffs or any claim for an order against him for payment and it could not, therefore, be determined, until after the amendments were made, what relief would be claimed against the alleged fraudulent grantor which might make him a proper party or whether he would or would not be retained as a party. Held, that the plaintiffs should be ordered to pay the defendants' costs of the motion for injunction and of the appeal forthwith.

Traders Bank v. Wright, 17 Man. R. 614. - Ejectment - Counterclaim to enforce trust and to set aside conveyance as fraudulent-Statute of Frauds-Improper joinder of causes of counterclaim. | - The plaintiff sought to recover possession of land; and the defendant, by way of counterclaim against the plaintiff and the plaintiff's grantor (her son), alleged that the latter held and conveyed the land subject to a trust in her (the defendant's) favour; and also that his conveyance to the plaintiff was voluntary and without consideration and made for the express purpose of defeating and delaying the defendant and the other creditors of the son, and was frauding and delaying the defendant and the directly allege that she was a creditor, nor did she state that she counterclaimed on behalf of all creditors:-Held, that, the trust, if there was any, resting in parol, there was nothing to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and it necessarily failed. Held, also, that if a counterclaim could be asserted on behalf of the defend-ant and all other creditors of the grantor, the two claims could not be joined in one action or counterclaim; and leave to amend should not be given to enable the defendant to abandon the claim to enforce the trust, and proceed upon the other claim on behalf of all creditors; but the dismissal of the action should be without prejudice to any action which the defendant might bring to set aside the conveyance. Judgment of Boyd, C., affirmed.

— Setting aside conveyance — Fraud.]—rield, that if a person executes a transfer with a mind and intention to execute it, though his assent may have been obtained by fraud, he is estopped from denying its validity as against subsequent purchasers bona fide for value and without notice; but, that when fraud has been established, the onus is upon such subsequent purchaser to establish that the transfer to him was bona fide, and the Court in determining whether such defence is established will take into consideration all the facts and draw inferences therefrom as to whether or not the transaction was in fact bona fide.

McInnis v. Getsman, 1 Sask. R. 172.

-Exchange of lands - Creditors' action to set aside - Judgment against debtor de-fendant - Subsequent registration of conveyance to him.] - The defendants A. and B exchanged lands by contemporaneous conveyances, and the plaintiff suing on behalf of himself and all other creditors of A. brought action to set aside the conveyance of A.'s lands to B. The trial Judge found that the conveyance of A.'s lands to B. was fraudulent and void as against A.'s creditors, and ordered that it should be set aside and the lands revested in A. for the benefit of his creditors, but refused to make any direction as to the lands conveyed by B. to A. The conveyance of the last mentioned lands was subsequently registered by the plaintiff's solicitor, and it was contended that the plaintiff was also entitled to claim the proceeds of the property thereby conveyed:-Held, that the registration of the deed of B.'s lands to A. should be vacated and the lands re-vested in B. free and clear of any cloud thereon caused by the registration of the deed.

Pringle v. Olshinetsky, 17 O.L.R. 38.

—Fraudulent transfer of land—13 Eliz. c. 5—Homestead — Exemption.]—Held, that a transfer of a homestead exempt from seizure under execution was not by reason of the exemption a fraudulent transfer of property under the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5:—Semble, the right to claim the benefit of an exemption is not confined to the execution debtor, but extends at least to members of his family.

Meunier v. Doray, 6 Terr. L.R. 194.

— Collection Act — Assignment obtained collusively.] — Where an assignment under the Collection Act is obtained by collusion between the creditor and debtor, such assignment comes within the category of transfers, made "with intent to defeat, hinder and delay creditors," or "with intent to give the creditors an unjust preference over other creditors," and will not give the assignment.

Zwicker v. Ross, 41 N.S.R. 332.

- Antecedent debts - Scheme to defraud subsequent creditors - Husband and wife. l -Where a conveyance is attacked as fraudulent under 13 Eliz. c. 5, it must be shown that debt of the grantor was in existence at the time of the conveyance, or that a scheme had then been entered into to defraud possible subsequent creditors. A license, under the Liquor License Ordinance is not an asset available to creditors, and the fact that it stood in the name of the husband (the grantor), while the property and business was in the name of the wife, is not a badge of fraud. To constitute a fraudulent scheme on creditors, the debts anticipated must be such as would probably arise out of the conduct of the business:-Semble, (a) that in an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance the grantor is a necessary party. (b) That in an action to declare a party a trustee for another person the cestui que trust is a necessary party. Held, in the absence of fraud, a husband can make a valid gift or gifts, from time to time, of the earnings and profits of a business claimed by the wife as her separate estate, although the husband may have been allowed to interfere in the manage-ment of the business. Held, an action is not maintainable based on alleged false representations whereby a person is induced to sue the wrong defendant, and for the time being, to forego his remedy against the party really liable. There is no precedent for such an action. Held, an examination of a judgment debtor under Rule 380 cannot be given in evidence, against a third party (even an alleged transferee from the judgment debtor) who was not present, and had no opportunity of cross-examining, notwithstanding sub-s. 3. Clinton v. Sellars, 1 Alta. R. 135.

-Fraudulent conveyance action - Interim injunction.]-The Court has power to grant an interim injunction, quia timet, in a fraudulent conveyance action brought by an execution creditor. An interlocutory injunction order will only be granted over an "interim"; and an order final in form and effect, though reserving liberty to the defendant to move to vacate it, will be set aside or varied. Where persons not parties to the action are enjoined, as an auxiliary remedy. to the injunction against the defendant, the defendant cannot object merely on the ground that they are not parties. The Court will not by injunction tie up more property than actually necessary for plaintiff's protection. A defendant succeeding in substantially varying an ex parte order on motion to set it aside, will be given costs of the motion in any event.

-Intention to defraud - Presumption -Rebuttal - Insolvency.] - A sale can be set aside at the suit of a creditor of the vendor only when the latter has made it with intention to defraud, and the presumption of such intention drawn from his insolvency can be rebutted by proof of circumstances which establish that it never existed.

Forest v. Girouard, Q.R. 33 S.C. 193 (Ct.

-Sale of business by husband to wife -Knowledge of wife of husband's intention to prefer certain creditors.] - An insolvent trader sold out his business to his wife, who was one of his creditors, having means of her own, and who actually raised the money to make the purchase:-Held, that the sale and transfer were valid, not-withstanding that the wife knew of her husband's insolvency and that he intended to prefer certain of his creditors to others by payments out of the purchase money. The whole of the purchase money of the business was paid over to the husband on the understanding, however, that the wife would at once be repaid the amount owing to her, which was done:-Held, that the transaction must be considered as an advance of the purchase money less the amount owing to her, and that as to that amount it was fraudulent and void, and she was a debtor to her husband's estate for the portion of the purchase money thus paid back to her, and must account for the same to her husband's assignee for credi-

Langley v. Beardsley, 18 O.L.R. 67.

-Statute of Elizabeth - Intent.1 - Defendant McDonald being indebted to the plaintiffs and others, conveyed a farm to his co-defendants, his wife and father-inlaw, for an expressed consideration of $4,-000.00 to be paid in cash, notes, and by the proceeds of a loan. The evidence as to payment was contradictory, but the weight of evidence seemed to show that $1,400.00 was Beyond contradictory evidence between the defendants as to the mode of payment there was no evidence of fraud:-Held, that no actual and express intent to defraud or delay creditors being shown in both parties, the transfer, being for valuable consideration, ought not to be set aside.

Manitoba Brewing & Malting Co. v. Mc-Donald, 2 Sask. R. 223.

-Application to sell property alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed - Parties -Necessity of naming in originating summons.]—The plaintiff applied by originating summons under Rule 245 Judicature Ordinance for an order for the sale of a certain interest in the estate of one Broley. "amounting to upwards of $1,000," to which it was alleged the defendant was entitled and which he had fraudulently conveyed to his wife who was served with a copy of the summons but who was not specifically named therein:—Held, that as Lila Jones, the wife of the defendant, was the person principally interested in the application, she should have been specifically cited to appear and the general direction "to all parties concerned" with service on Lila Jones, was not a sufficient compliance with the rule. (2) That the property to be sold was not described with sufficient certainty.

Lamb-Watson Lumber Co. v. Jones, 1 Sask. R. 386.

—Action to set aside—Debtor made party.]
—Plaintiff sued to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance made by Hudsons, Ltd., and joined the latter as a party defendant. The plaintiff alleged that judgment had been recovered against Hudsons, Ltd., for large amounts, but that the latter were still indebted in other amounts, for which judgment had not been recovered. On an application to strike out Hudsons, Ltd., as unnecessary parties to the action:—Held, that, while the plaintiff was a creditor for an amount for which judgment had been recovered against Hudsons, Ltd., yet, as he was also a creditor in respect of an amount for which judgment had been recovered, Hudsons, Ltd., were properly parties to the action.

Belcher v. Hudsons, 1 Sask. R. 474.

—Fraud on creditors—Prescription.] — A deed of conveyance which is simulated and brings about no change in possession nor has any other effect as between the parties the sole object being to withdraw the property conveyed from attack by the creditors of the owner is void as to the latter and their action to have it declared so is not subject to the prescription of one year under Art. 1040 C.C. Registration of a deed is not a public act and cannot be admitted to prove that the creditors of the parties had the knowledge of it required by Art. 1040 C.C.

Lemay v. Dufresne, Q.R. 18 K.B. 132.

—Deed — Simulation — Evidence.] — A simulated deed has no existence and is a nullity. Evidence is admissible to establish that the sale of an immovable by a man to his wife's father and another to her by the heirs of her deceased father conceals in reality a gratuitous conveyance by the husband for his wife's benefit in contravention of Art. 1265 C.C. The nullity of these deeds can be adjudicated in an action to which the husband and wife are parties and the representatives of the deceased father of the wife need not be added.

Augé v. La Banque d'Hochelaga, Q.R. 34 S.C. 481.

FRIVOLOUS ACTION.

Action by wife for alienation of her husband's affections—Cons. Rules 259-261.]
—The plaintiff brought this action against another woman for alienating her husband's affections, committing adultery, with him and inducing him to leave the plaintiff and go to the United States, whereby she was deprived of the services and support of her husband and of the exercise of the remedies provided by the Criminal Law for the support of wives:—Held, following Lambert, 24 A.R. 653, that the plaintiff's action must be dismissed with costs.

Lawry v. Tuckett-Lawry, 2 O.L.R. 162.

—Dismissal of action as frivolous and vexatious.]—On an application to dismiss an action as frivolous or vexatious, if the plaintiff does not answer the affidavits filed in support, they must be taken as true.

FRUIT MARKS ACT.

Fruit Marks Act, 1901, 1 Edw. VII. c. 27 (D.)—Fraudulent packing—Possession for sale—"Faced or shown surface."]—
The mere having in possession, for the purpose of sale, packages of fruit fraudulently packed, within the meaning of s. 7 of the Dominion Fruit Marks Act, 1 Edw. VII. c. 27, is an offence under the Act, and it is immaterial that no one was imposed on, and no fraud intended by the person charged with the offence. "The faced or shown surface" of the package mentioned in the said section is not limited to the branded end of such package, but applies to any shown surface thereof. Rex. v. Jones, 4 O.L.R. 537.

charge of embezzlement, on a provisional warrant under the Fugitive Offenders Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 154, pursuant to a warrant for his apprehension issued by a justice of the peace for a county in Ireland, where the offence was alleged to have been committed, and, after an inquiry before the police magistrate for the city of Toronto, was committed by him to prison, to await return under the Fugitive Offenders Act, R.S. C. 1906, c. 154. The prisoner was apprehended and brought before the police magistrate and so committed without the warrant having been indorsed as provided by s. 8 of the Act. The prisoner obtained writs of habeas corpus and certiorari in aid, and by the return thereto it appeared that he was detained under the authority of the police magistrate's warrant of commitment. Upon the application for the prisoner's discharge, the irish warrant was indorsed by the Judge of the High Court who heard the application:-Held, Meredith, J.A., dissenting, that the police magistrate had no jurisdiction to enter upon the inquiry, and therefore no jurisdiction to commit the prisoner under s. 12 of the Act; and the prisoner should be discharged. Per Moss, C.J. O .: - A provisional warrant may be issued either before or after the indorsement of the warrant issued outside of Canada; but s. 14 makes it plain that a magistrate before whom a person apprehended under a provisional warrant is brought cannot immediately proceed with an investigation. He can only remand from time to time pending the production of an indorsed warrant, which is his authority to enter upon the investigation. The expression "indorsed warrant," frequently occurring in the Act, has more significance than as a term used merely to distinguish it from a provisional warrant. If it was intended to constitute a warrant without indorsement a sufficient authority to the magistrate to proceed, some other expression more distinctly suggestive of that intention would have been used. At all events, it is safer, in dealing with a matter involving restraint of liberty, to adhere to the primary meaning of the language used, in the absence of a context manifestly controlling it and pointing to a different meaning. Per Meredith, J.A .: - Upon the proper construction of the Act, an indorsed warrant was not essential to the magistrate's jurisdiction; and, even if s. 12 required the production, before the magistrate, of an indorsed warrant for apprehension before committing him, the prisoner would not be entitled to his discharge; the warrant having been indorsed by the Judge of the High Court who heard the application for the prisoner's discharge upon the return to the writs, the prisoner was rightly in custody. Judgment of Meredith, C.J. C.P., reversed.

GAME LAWS.

Review of summary conviction—Jurisdiction of County Court Judge.]—Where the County Court Judge of York County quashed on review a conviction made by a magistrate of Northumberland County under the Summary Convictions Act, C.S. 1903, c. 123, for taking one caribou contrary to the provisions of the Game Act, C.S. 1903, c. 33, s. 3 (1) (a), on the ground that mens rea was a necessary part of such offence, and was not proved:—Held, (1), a County Court Judge has jurisdiction to review such conviction, though the offence was committed and the case tried in a county for which he is not a County Court Judge. (Ex parte Graves, 35 N.B.R. 587, followed.) (2) under the facts the order of the County Court Judge should not be disturbed. Per Barker, C.J., Barry and McKeown, JJ.:— Where there is no want or excess of jurisdiction the judgment of a County Court Judge on review should not be disturbed. Per Landry, McLeod and White, JJ.:—The Supreme Court in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction to supervise the proceedings of inferior tribunals may set aside the order of a County Court Judge on review in order to prevent a gross miscarriage of justice.

—"Hunt," meaning of.]—A conviction under s. 14 of the Game Protection Act, 1898, as re-enacted by c. 20, s. 8 of 1909, for hunting any animal must be supported by evidence showing the species of animal hunted.

Recovery of penalty-Cumulated penalties.]-(1) A conviction for a fine by a justice of the peace under the Quebec Game Laws, made, according to its tenor, in a non-existent district, is void, e.g., a conviction in the "District of Abittibi." (2) A conviction by a justice of the peace for a fine "payable to himself to be applied according to law,' when the statute under which the information was laid declares that it belongs wholly to the prosecutor, is voia. (3) A conviction by a justice of the peace for a fine and $14 costs is void, such sum being in excess of that provided by the tariff in virtue of section 871 of the Criminal Code. (4) An order in a conviction by a justice of the peace to levy the fine imposed, in default of payment, by seizure and sale of the goods of the person convicted, in a case where the law provides imprisonment as the sole alternative, renders the conviction void. (5) The Quebec Game Laws, by Articles 1405 and 1410, in imposing a fine upon any person found in possession of an animal or part of an animal killed during close season, does not create as separate offences the possession by such person, at the same time, of several of such animals and of their skins. Consequently the person in whose possession are found 775 skins of beavers killed during close season, is liable for one offence only and subject merely to one penalty of from $10 to $25, and a conviction against him for 775 offences and 775 penalties is void. (6) Recourse may be had by action in the Superior Court to have convictions by justices of the peace declared void, in virtue of Article 50 C.P.Q., notwithstanding that an appeal to another tribunal may lie in virtue of the laws under which the convictions may have been made.

Selby v. Clark, 38 Que. S.C. 287.

Broker-Gambling in wheat - No real business transactions-Action for loss.]-Plaintiff brought action to recover from defendant $229.37 alleged to be due him, pursuant to an agreement between them for purchase and sale of wheat on the Chicago wheat market:-Held, that there were no real business transactions between the parties; that any indicia of reality, such as payment of storage of the grain or payment of interest upon bank loans or brokers' advances, were lacking; that their dealings were merely gambling on the Chicago wheat market and prohibited by Criminal Code s. 231 and the contract could not be enforced. Action dismissed. Kaufman v. Gibson, [1904], 1 K.B. 598, followed.

Trench v. Brink, 1 O.W.N. 789, 16 O.W. R. 161.

—Keeping common gaming house—''Fan tan''—Failure to prove unlawful playing for money.]—I. On a seizure, under a search warrant for gaming instruments under Code s. 641 of articles used for playing ''fan tan,'' but without finding any money employed in connection with the game, the prosecution must show that the method of playing was within the prohibition of Code s. 226 as to games of chances and mixed games of chance and skill as ''fan tan'' is not per se an unlawful game. 2. Code s. 985 does not apply to shift the onus of proof from the prosecutor, unless it appears that the game being played was an unlawful one. 3.

The confession of another person arrested with the accused in a gaming-house case, but not jointly charged, is not admissible on the trial of the accused; such person should be called as a witness for the prosecution if it is desired to prove the facts which he professes to confess.

—Criminal law — Vagrancy — Gaming —Betting.]—The defendant, being charged with vagrancy, admitted that he made his living, for the most part, by betting on horse races in the streets, having no fixed place for taking bets or paying them:—Held, that he could not, upon this admission, be convicted as a vagrant, under s. 238 (1) of the Criminal Code. "Gaming" in clause (1) does not include betting. Rex v. Ellis, 20 O.L.R. 218.

GAS.

Liability for damage caused by escape or explosion — Municipal corporation — Powers and liabilities in respect of natural gas.]—A municipal corporation invested with statutory powers to develop or manufacture a dangerous substance—e.g., inflammable gas—is not liable in the same way as an individual, without proof of negligence, for damages occasioned by the escape or explosion of such substance. Where there is evidence reasonably sufficient to support the verdict of a jury, the Appellate Court will not set it aside as perverse or against the weight of evidence.

Purmal v. City of Medicine Hat, 1 Alta.

— Independent contractor — Liability — Natural gas company—Exercise of statutory powers.]—The defendant company, acting within their corporate powers and under the statutory powers conferred by R.S.O. 1897, c. 200, s. 3, and c. 199, s. 22, on such companies, instructed a contractor with whom they had a contract to do such work for them, to make connection with the place of business of the plaintiff's tenant for the supply of natural gas thereto. The contractor's employees negligently allowed gas to escape while constructing a trench for the service pipe from the defendants' main line, which had been laid along a public street, thus damaging the plaintiff's property:—Held. that the defendants were liable. The statutory power to break up and dig trenches in streets implied the duty of seeing that the gas was not allowed negligently to escape in cangerous quantities, which duty the defendants could not rid themselves of by delegating it to another. Such negligence was not merely collateral, but was negligence in the very act the contractor was engaged to perform for the defendants.

-Contract to supply gas to public-Measure of damages for breach of contract.]-(1) Under a contract between a municipal corporation and a gas company for the supply of gas to the inhabitants, each one of the latter has an action against the company, to recover damages caused him by breach of the contract. (2) Such damages, in the case of a laundry establishment run by gas, include the wages paid to the employees during the stoppage of the work, but do not extend to profits of merely possible realization. (3) The burden of proof of irresistible force is on the party who sets it up as a defence, and such proof must establish the absolute impossibility of discharging the obligation. Proof of circumstances that merely render it more onerous or difficult, is insufficient.

Markham v. Montreal Gas Co., 34 Que. S.C. 10.

— Tort—Asphyxiation by gas—Defective pipes.]—(1) The owner or operator of an illuminating gas system in a city is liable in damages for asphyxiation of dwellers in a house, into which gas penetrates through the ground, from an escape in a defective portion of the pipes in the street. (2) Irresistible force, force majeure, must be expressly proved and will not be inferred from circumstances.

—Gas Inspection Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 87— Liability of consumer to pay for gas when no certificate posted up.]—(1) Section 34 of the Gas Inspection Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 87, only makes the sale of gas illegal after notice to the undertaker of the location of the testing place prescribed by the Department of Inland Revenue, and until the connections specified in that section are made. (2) Section 44, requiring the posting up of the certificates of tests made by the inspector, does not become operative till s. 34 has been acted on and a testing place prescribed and notified by the undertaker. (3) The penalties provideā for by ss. 59 and 60 for failure to procure and post up the certificates of tests required by section 44, and for selling gas before connections have been made with the testing place, etc., are not incurred when s. 44 has not become operative by notification to the undertaker of the prescribing of a testing place. Per Phippen, J.A.:—Sections 34 and 44 are both subsidiary to s. 31 which limits the obligations therein imposed to undertakers 'in any city, town or place for which there is an inspector of gas.' and the provisions of ss. 31 to 47 inclusive are not applicable to places for which there is no local inspector.

Carberry Gas Co. v. Hallett, 17 Man. R.

—Negligence—Gas works—Explosion—Verdict—Usual course of work.]—The verdict of a jury that an explosion in a gas works causing the death of an employee was one to the negligence of the employees because they lit by gas and not by electricity the room in which an explosion took place by the contact of an escape of gas with the flame from the gas jet, although it was proved that such mode of lighting is universally adopted and used in gas works, is not so unreasonable that the Court can set it aside or give judgment without regard to it.

-Negligence-Contractor.] - In actions for damages in respect of an accident against the appellant gas company, it appeared that the appellants were not occupiers of the premises on which the accident had occurred and had no contractual relations with the plaintiffs, but that they had installed a machine on the said premises, and the jury found that the accident was caused by an explosion resulting from gas emitted, owing to the appellants' negligence, through its safety valve direct into the closed premises instead of into the open air:-Held, that the initial negligence having been found against the appellants in respect of an easy and reasonable precaution which they were bound to have taken, they were liable unless they could show that the true cause of the accident was the act of a subsequent conscious volition, e.g., the tampering with the machine by third parties.

Money in bank-Transfer to joint credit of donor and daughter-Death of donor-Right of survivor.]-J. S. and his wife had money deposited in a bank to their joint credit. The wife died; and thereafter J. S. delivered to the bank a written memoran-dum, addressed to the bank, and signed by himself, as follows: "This is to certify that I transfer this money in my name J. S. and M. S. in our savings bank account number S. 27 in your bank to the joint credit of myself, the sole survivor, and my daughter M. S., to be drawn by either of us. The money lay wholly undisturbed in the bank until the death of J. S., when it was claimed by the plaintiff, one of the executors of J. S., as part of his estate, and by the defendant, the daughter named in the memorandum, as her own:-Held, that the defendant's story, that her father intended that the money should be at the call of either her or himself, and that, if any were left at his death, she should have it all. was corroborated by the document so as to satisfy the requirements of R.S.O. 1897, c. 73, s. 10, and should be accepted, as against the evidence of the plaintiff and another witness. And held, notwithstanding the general rule that a parol gift of a chattel without delivery is ineffective, that, in the circumstances, the money was during the joint lives joint property with right of survivorship. Interpleader issue found in the vivorship. defendant's favour; the plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs; those costs and his own costs not to come out of the estate in such a manner as that the defendant would be in fact paying part of them herself (subject nevertheless to the discretion of the Surrogate Judge, when passing the plaintiff's accounts, to allow these costs out of the remainder of the estate).

—Donation mortis causa—Holograph will—Trust.]—The donation à cause de mort is not a mode of disposing of property which is expressly prohibited by law. It is only prohibited by implication and through an omission in the enumeration of the modes of disposal by gratuitous title. (Art. 754 C. C.) That article declares it void only when it is not valid as a will or is contrary to the terms of a marriage contract. (Art. 758 C. C.) Hence, the Courts can give to such a donation the effect of a will if satisfied that it contains the essential conditions. It is thus that they can declare that a disposal of property by letter, the writer of which died with revoking it, is a legacy in trust by a holograph will though expression.

—Donation—Maintenance of donor—Commutation.]—The donor of property for the consideration that the done shall furnish him with board, lodging, clothing and other necessaries has, in case of incompatibility of character, a right to an action for authority to live apart from the donee and to have a pension in money substituted for the charges agreed to as above.

Laplante v. Fontaine, Q.R. 37 S.C. 128 (Ct. Rev.).

Conveyance of land - Lack or independent advice - Absence of power of revocation - Execution by marksman.] tion by the administrators of M. to set aside a conveyance of land by M. to the defendant, upon the grounds that it was prepared at the instance of the defendant and executed by M. without independent advice and without full and proper explanation: that it was not in fact his deed; and was procured by undue influence and fraud. There was no evidence of direct influence or of fraud, but M. was an old man, who could neither read nor write, and the evidence left it doubtful whether M. knew that he was putting his mark to a deed. and not to a will (for which he had given instructions) and whether the deed was ever read over or explained to him or not. There was no power of revocation. The conveyance was in effect a gift to the defendant: -Held, that the onus was upon the defendant to establish the perfect fairness of the transaction, and that the donor clearly understood what he was doing, and that onus had not been satisfied. The plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to have the conveyance set aside and the registration thereof cancelled. The registration is prima facie evidence of the execution as a fact, not that the grantor understood the same. A strong inference against the defendant ought to be drawn from the fact that he did not see fit to put in the box the witnesses who could have explained what took place when M. put his mark to the deed.

Money transaction between man and woman living together in adultery.]-Action for money received by defendant for the use of the plaintiff. Plaintiff, an infant, and defendant lived together as wife and husband, though not married. Plaintiff handed to defendant various sums of money obtained by prostitution while they were thus living together. Part of this money defendant used in purchasing an interest in a hotel property. Defendant simply denied the allegation in the statement of claim:-Held, 1. There was no presumption of a gift under the circumstances, and, as the defendant had set up no other defence than a denial of the debt, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment. 2. Plaintiff was entitled to a charge and lien on defendant's interest in the hotel property for the money and costs and to have the same sold to satisfy her claim.

Desaulniers v. Johnston, 20 Man. R. 64.

-Gift-Undue influence-Duress-Absence of independent advice.]-F., being an unmarried man, a Roman Catholic, and an inmate of a hospital governed by members of a Roman Catholic society, and having an insurance of $1,000 upon his life, payable to his father and brother, a few days before his death declared to the parish priest that he wished the hospital, the defendants, to have the insurance moneys, and that he intended to carry this out by making the plaintiff his wife and appointing her the beneficiary of the policy, she undertaking to pay $500 to the defendants. The marriage ceremony was performed by the priest; F. made a will in favour of the plaintiff, and designated her as beneficiary under the insurance policy, in lieu of his father and brother. After the marriage, F. stated to the parish priest, in answer to a question put by the latter, in the presence of the plaintiff, that it was his (F 's) wish and intention that $500 of the insurance money should go to the plaintiff and $500 to the hospital, and the plaintiff assented to this. After the death of F., the plaintiff, who was also a Roman Catholic, under pressure from the Mother Superior of the society and the priest, executed an irrevocable nower of attorney, in favour of a solicitor, instructed by the Mother Superior; the solicitor collected the insurance moneys and paid $500 to the plaintiff and $500 to the defendants, less expenses. The plaintiff had no independent advice, did not know what her rights were, and said that when she was asked to execute the power of attorney she remembered that the priest had told her not to "damn her soul for money" and was "scared":-Held, assuming the existence of an ante-nuptial agreement, that, not being in writing, it was void under s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and the benefit of the appointment in the plaintiff's favour passed to her free from any obligation or trust arising out of the parol agreement. The plaintiff, by executing the power of attorney and acquiescing in her attorney paying half of the insurance moneys to the defendants, made a gift to the defendants; the relations of the parties and the circumstances cast the onus on the defendants of showing that this gift was the free act of the plaintiff; that onus had not been discharged; on the contrary, the evidence showed that an undue advantage was taken of the plaintiff's situation; she was not a free agent, and had not that protection to which she was entitled; and, in such circumstances, it was the duty of the Court to afford her such protection by undoing the transaction. Judgment of the County Court of Leeds and Grenville reversed.

-Simulated donation-Contestation-Art. 1039 C.C.]-Held (reversing the judgment of the Superior Court, Curran, J.):-(1) Where the aonor does not intend to give and does not divest himself of the thing given, and the donee does not intend to receive the thing as a gift, there is no real donation, and Art. 1039 C.C. does not apply-this article applying only where there is a real contract, and not where the contract is simulated. thing which is nominally given may be seized, therefore, as being still in the possession of the donor. (2) A person who only becomes a creditor subsequent to the execution and registration of a simulated deed of donation of movables by his debtor, may nevertheless allege and invoke the fact of simulation, in his contestation of an opposition, based on such pretended deed of donation, made to a seizure effected by the creditor. -Revendication-Seizure of goods donated-Nullity of donation-Sale with right of redemption.]-Held, 1. That in an action to revendicate goods which have been the object of a gift it is permissible to plead that one of the donors was living in concubinage with the donee at the time of the gift. 2. That, as against the donee, it cannot be pleaded that the gift was invalid because it had been made by the aonor with the object of impeding his creditors. 3. That in revendicating things given by a firm all the members of the firm must be made parties to the cause if one of them only holds the things in question, 4. That in an action for revendication it is not permissible to plead that other creditors are claiming rights upon the same things. 5. That proof on the merits before decision of points of law will be ordered upon an allegation by the donor that he sold the things sought to be revendicated with the right of redemption and this with the consent of the donee.

Rousseau v. Verdon, 5 Que. P.R. 219.

-Moneys on deposit-Form of deposit receipt - Survivorship - Testamentary gift.]-The plaintiff's father owned $400 on deposit in a bank to his credit. procured from the bank a deposit receipt for the amount, payable to himself and the plaintiff, or either, or the survivor. The understanding between the father and son was that the money should remain subject to the father's control and disposition while living, and that what-ever should be left at his death should then belong to his son. He retained the receipt intact in his own possession, and it was found amongst his papers at his death:—Held, upon the plaintiff's own evidence, that the purpose of the father was to make a gift to the plaintiff in its nature testamentary, which he could not effectually do except by an instrument executed as a will. Nor could the receipt be regarded as equivalent to a voluntary settlement, reserving to the settler a life interest, with a power of revocation. tive of the father for a declaration of the plaintiff's ownership of the fund was dismissed, but the costs of both parties were ordered to be paid out of the fund. Hill v. Hill, 8 O.L.R. 710 (Anglin, J.)

—Venue—Donation—Maintenance.]—If a son in consideration of a deed of donation from his parents, has undertaken to support and maintain them during their lives, an action against him by a person appointed to discharge this duty in his stead should, assuming it to be well found, be brought in the place where the contract was made and not in that in which the services were rendered.

Théoret v. Brunet, 7 Que. P.R. 138 (Sup. Ct.)

—Parent and child—Contract by son —Support of sister.]—A note or writing, signed voluntarily by a son who had already received advances from his father by which the former, at the request of his father, who was dying in poverty and wished to secure the future of his daughter, undertook to pay to the latter a sum of money or annual income for a stated period, is based upon a legal consideration and should not be considered a donation by the father to his daughter, made during an illness deemed mortal and, therefore, void as having been agreed to in contemplation of death.

Brulé v. Brulé, Q.R. 26 S.C. 77 (Sup. Ct.), affirmed by King's Bench, May, 1904.

-Donation-Prohibition against alienation-Substitution.]-By deed of donation entre vifs, the donor gave to the donee for himself and the heirs of his body estoc et ligne a certain immovable of which the donee was to enjoy the usufruct during his life but to have no power to alienate the same at any time, the property to go, on his death, to the issue of his marriage. On these conditions the aonor transferred all his rights in the said immovable "to be vested in the donce and the heirs of his body in the direct line'':-Held, that the deed of donation created a substitution and on the death of the grevé (the donee) without children such substitution became effete (caonque) and the disposition of the immovable by the will of the grevé was valid. Held, further, that such substitution applied to no relations of the donee other than his chiidren and that the claim de propre "for him and the heirs of his body in the direct line" did not constitute a trust even under the law in force when the donation was made (in 1844) the sole effect of the clause being to create a destination of the thing donated in favour of the heirs who would have entered into the succession of the donee if he had not disposed of it otherwise. Held, also that, the prohibition against alienation only applied to the enjoyment of the usufruct by the grevé and haö no effect on the substitution created in favour of his children nor on his power to dispose of what was donated in case the substitution fail ed.

Crevier v. Cloutier, Q.R. 26 S.C. 373 (Ct. Rev.).

Fenoglio v. Ouellette, 7 Que. P.R. 158 (Davidson, J.).

—Donation—Benefit of third party—Revocation.]—A stipulation by a donor for the benefit of a third party as a condition of his donation may be revoked without the consent of such third party so long as the latter has not signified his intention to avail himself of it. The renunciation by the donee of the charges in her favour is to be deemed also a renunciation of this stipulation in favour of the third party.

-Donatio mortis cause-Evidence-Delivery for safe-keeping.]-A person on his death-bed handed to his wife out of a satchel which he kept in a closet of his bedroom, $2,000 in bonds and $1,550 in cash, telling her to "take them and put them away; wrap them up and lock them up in your trunk." At the same time he handed to her a pocket book containing $150, saying that it was for present expenses. A few minutes later he handed to his business partner the remaining contents of the satchel, consisting of $1,000 belonging to the firm. Subsequently made a will bequeathing to his $3,000, a horse, two carriages, and all his household effects; to his partner his interest in partnership property; to two grandnephews $500 each; and to nieces and nephews the residue of his estate. His private estate was worth $7,500. When giving directions for the drafting of his will, on the amount of the legacies to his wife and grand nephews being counted up, he said, "there is more than that":-Held, that there was not a donatio mortis causa to the wife, the deceased intending no more than a delivery for safe-keeping.

-Fund deposited with trust company in names of donees-Executed trust.]-Mrs. P. deposited with the aintiffs, $3,000 in the names of three of her relatives, the defendants, $1,000 for each, and obtained from the plaintiff three documents act knowledging the eipt from each of the defendants of $1,000 "in trust for investment," and guaranteeing the payment of interest. Mrs. P. informed the three defendants of what she had done, saying that the money deposited was theirs and they could araw it. She, however, retained the receipts in her own possession, where they remained until her death, and did not inform the defendants of their existence. The cheques for the interest which accrued during Mrs. P.'s lifetime were made payable to the three defendants, but were indorsed by them in favour of Mrs. P., and were cashed by her for her own benefit:-Held, that there was a complete and executed trust created by Mrs. P., enforceable by the defendants, the cestuis que trust.

Toronto General Trusts Corporation v. Keyes, 15 O.L.R. 30 (Anglin, J.).

-Donation-General donee - Common domicile.]-Article 797, C.C., in declaring the general donee "held personally for the total amount of the debts" does not make these donees joint and several debtors for the whole of these debts. Therefore, the acknowledgment, by a promissory note signed by the donor after the donation, of a debt due by him at the time of the donation does not interrupt the prescription as against the donee. The common domicile of the donor and donee does not bring about any obligation on the latter's part to pay the former's debts. The seller of effects to the donor even for the joint use has, therefore, no recourse against the donee for the price. When the property donated represents the value of charges imposed by the donation the latter constitutes a contract equivalent to sale and does not give rise to the obligation existing under Article 797, C.C.

Barbe v. Ellard, Q.R. 15 K.B. 526, reversing Ellard v. Barbe, 29 S.C. 165.

-Donation inter vivos-Breach of conditions.]—Default by the donee to furnish the donor (his blind, needy and impotent father, and his wife), "the use of a furnished room and fuel for heating," as stipulated in the deed of donation, gives rise to an action for revocation of the donation under the provisions of Article 811, C.C.

Coté v. Coté, Q.R. 29 S.C. 388.

-Donation - Conditions - Restrictions against sale, seizure or garnishment.] -The condition imposed by a deed of donation that the property donated "shall not be sold, seized or garnished for any general consideration whatever during the life of 'the donees' applies to a judicial sale and does not prevent a contractual sale of said property. Oral evidence is not admissible to establish that, when an agreement was executed in writing for sale of a cut of logs on "lot No. 15, range 13th, Magog, Hattley, and lying on the east side of the road called Beach Road" the proposed vendor had represented to the purchaser that the lot contained from 125 to 150 acres, when, in fact, the extent of it was only 75 acres.

-Delivery - Possession-Presumptions-Oral evidence.]—The universal who sues to recover a sum exceeding $50 from a person who claims it as a gift by delivery (don manuel) from the testator, can establish the doubtful character of the defendant's possession by presumptions supplemented by oral evidence when it is proved, by the admission of the defendant, that his possession is equivocal, e.g., when the sum at the time it was sent to him was placed by him in a movable belonging to the testator and left at his house and did not withdraw it therefrom until after the testator's death.

-Revocation of donation - Affidavit.]-An affidavit stating the facts which authorize an action to revoke a donation without indicating the nature of the action which the plaintiff proposes to bring is irregular and a conservatory seizure founded on such affidavit will be set aside. The Court in deciding as to the validity of a conservatory seizure should only consider the statements in the affidavit and should not consider whether or not the declaration sufficiently shows what remedy the plaintiff wishes to obtain nor if the defendant has suffered prejudice from the insufficiency of the affidavit or has waived the benefit of such insufficiency by pleading to the merits.

Cusson v. Cusson, 9 Que. P.R. 174 (Sup. Ct.).

—Gifts inter vivos—Gifts made in trust—Revocation—Non-fulfilment of obligations of donee.]—A gift inter vivos of immovable property, made in trust in the manner provided in chapter IV. (a) of title II. of book III., Art. 981a to 981n in C.C., intituled "Of trusts," is subject to the general rules which govern gifts inter vivos, and, among them, to that of Art. 816 C.C., respecting the revocation of gifts. Hence, the right of revocation for non-fulfilment of the contractual obligations of the donee exists only when it has been stipulated in the deed of gift in trust.

Mathison v. Shepherd, 35 Que. S.C. 29.

-Gift of immovable with substitution to children of donee.]-(1) A gift inter vives of immovable property, with substitution to the children of the donee, made in 1849, and at any time previous to the Act 18 Vict, c. 101 (1855), could only become valid and effective, though registered, by publication and transcription (insinuation) of the deed, in the office of the Superior Court, in the district in which the property was situated. (2) In an action brought by one of the substitutes. founded on the gift as his title, the nullity of the substitution, for want of publication and transcription (insinuation) of the deed, being absolute, the defendant is not bound to invoke it by special plea. but may do so at the hearing on the merits, under a plea of general issue. (3) A successor by particular title, whose possession joined to that of his author, under a clear title to property, extends over a period of thirty years, acquires ownership by prescription, although the title of a possessor, anterior to the thirty years and from whom subsequent titles were derived, was a precarious one. Thus, when J. B. S. acquired only the usufructuary rights (le droit d'usufruit) to an immovable in 1867, but sold the property without reservation to N.S., in 1869, a subsequent purchaser under an equally clear title who possessed down to 1899, acquired ownership by prescription, interversion of title having taken place.

Saint-Denis v. Trudeau, 18 Que. K.B.

—Delivery.]—Actual delivery of the thing is a necessary ingredient of a valid parol gift or, in other words, a gift is a transaction consisting of two contemporaneous acts, the giving and the acceptance, and these acts cannot be completed without an actual delivery of the subject of the gift.

Hardy v. Atkinson, 18 Man. R. 351.

-Gift to hospital.]-The following provisions in an Act of the legislature, "All the movable and immovable property given to l'Institut du Bon Conseil by Mgr. Guay or others . . . will be conveyed to the corporation of the hospital Guay de St. Joseph de Lévis to be by it enjoyed, used, disposed of, etc., according to the intention of the donors and testators," comprises a declaration that the property given to the defendant was at once transferred to the hospital and actually conveyed without formal action, the statute prescribing none. The future tense used in the Act is equivalent to the present. It is clear that by the said Act the hospital and not the institute is owner of an immovable given to the latter by Mgr. Guay and an action en bornage by the adjoining owner will not lie against the institute. Guay v. Institut du Bon Conseil, Q.R. 34 S.C. 346.
