—Donation—Onerous conditions.] — The charge imposed by donation on the donee to board, lodge, clothe and maintain a person named being appreciable in money constitute a hypothec though their value is not specified in the deed. Such a charge imposed on the donee and his legal representatives in respect to one of his brothers cannot be carried out by a third party to whom he sold the property donated, the beneficiary having a right to insist that it be fulfilled by the donee himself.

Pelletier v. Girard, Q.R. 34 S.C. 318. -Donation of immovable-Charges on donee—Penalty for alienation—Judicial sale.]—Where a deed donating an immovable subject to payment of rents, to services and other burdens provides that if it was conveyed away the donee should pay $1,000 to the donor; such payment does not form part of the burdens or obligations arising directly from the contract. Hence, a judicial sale under which the purchaser was to "pay, discharge and fulfil all the obligations imposed on the donee by the deed of donation, etc., did not make him liable to pay the above sum which liability the donee had incurred before the seizure under execution nor oblige him to reimburse the amount to a third party who has paid the donor with subrogation of the latter's rights.

GRAND JURY.

Power of summoning more than two grand juries-Order not showing jurisdiction on its face-Disqualification of sheriff -Crim. Code, s. 656.]-The prisoner was convicted at the circuit of the county of C., which opened on the second Tuesday in November, 1897. When the Court first met, as there was no criminal business, the grand jury was dischargea. After proceeding for a time with the trial of a civil cause the Court adjourned until November 30, before which time the prisoner was committed for trial. The sheriff, without any order, summoned a second grand jury for the adjourned Court. Objection having been taken, on an order made by the Court, the sheriff summoned a third grand jury, which was practically the same as the second. The jury found a true bill, and the prisoner pleaded guilty to two of the counts in the indictment. It then appearing that the sheriff was related to the prosecutor, the Court, without formally discharging the third jury, allowed the plea of guilty to be withdrawn and ordered a fourth grand jury to be summoned, the venire being addressed to a coroner. The order for summoning the last grand jury (which also directed the summoning of a petit jury) was brief in form and did not show on its face all the facts which necessitated its issue. Among the grand jurors summoned by the coroner were two who had been on the sheriff's third panel. The coroner's grand jury was all drawn from the parish of Woodstock:—Held (affirming the conviction), 1. The order to the coroner to summon the jury need not show on its face all the facts that made its issue a necessity. 2. The facts that the sheriff's jury had not been formally discharged, nor the indictment found by it in terms disposed of were immaterial-the whole proceedings being void by reason of the defect in the returning officer, 3. The power of the Court to summon grand juries is not exhausted by the summoning of two. 4. The disqualification of the sheriff sufficiently appeared. 5. It is not necessary that the grand jury should be drawn from all parts of the county, 6. The fact that some of the jurymen summoned by the coroner were also on the sheriff's panel was not material. 7. It is no objection to the order to the coroner that it directed him to summon both a grand and a petit jury, 8, Section 12 of c, 45 of the Consolidated Statutes applies to criminal as well as to civil matters. Per Tuck, C.J.. -The doctrine held in England that all the coroners of a county, when acting ministerially, constitute but one officer, is not applicable to this province. Per Hanington, J .:- The direction of a venire to a single coroner, and a return by him alone, is sufficient under s. 12 of c. 25 of the Consolidated Statutes, and if not the defect is cured by s. 656 of the Criminal Code.

-Irregularity-Grand juror admitted to jury room without being sworn.] - (1) The presence in the grand jury room of an unauthorized person, summoned as a grand juror but not impanelled, during the deliberations of the grand jury will not invalidate an indictment then under consideration, if such person was excluded from the grand jury before the presentment, unless it be shown that the accused was thereby prejudiced. (2) On discovery that a person summoned as a grand juror and coming into court with the grand jury to present an indictment had not been sworn and had been admitted to the grand jury room during their delibera-tions, the Court may exclude such persons and direct the grand jury to retire to reconsider the bill without requiring the grand jurors to be resworn.

provincial legislature has power to determine the number of grand jurors to serve at Courts of oyer and terminater and general sessions, this being a matter relating to the constitution of the Courts, but the selection and summoning of jurors, including talesmen, and fixing the number of grand jurors by whom a bill may be found, relate to procedure in criminal matters in respect of which the Dominion Parliament alone has power to legislate. -Justices' conviction for indictable offence-Absence of jurisdiction-Directing further detention.]-The defendant was brought before two justices of the peace and charged with issuing a false cheque. He pleaded "guilty," and they convicted him and imposed a sentence of imprisonment in the Central Prison at Toronto. The offence was an indictable one, and not one of those which two justices are, under Part XVI. of the Criminal Code. authorized to dispose of. Being taken to the Central Prison, the defendant obtained writs of habeas corpus and certiorari in aid, and, on the papers being returned thereunder, moved for his discharge before Clute, J., who made an order quasking the warrant of commitment, but, instead of discharging the defendant from custody, ordered that he should be remanded to the place where he was convicted, and brought before the two justices for a preliminary hearing on the charge:-Held, that the defendant was, when in the Central Prison, "in custody charged with an indictable offence, within the meaning of s. 1120 of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1906, c. 146, now amended by 7 and 8 Edw. VII, c. 18, s. 14; and an appeal from the order of Clute, J., was dismissed. Per Meredith, J.A .:-That the order could not be supported under s. 1120; but that, apart from that enactment, there was power to remand the defendant so that he might be dealt with according to law upon the charge originally made against him; that the proper order would be one discharging him out of his present custody and providing for his proper return to his former custody, so that the proceedings which were properly begun against him might be properly continued.

-Arrest in one province on warrant issued in another-Jurisdiction of Judge on habeas corpus application to inquire into facts.] -Where in the case of a charge under s. 475 of the Criminal Code intent to defraud and causation occur in one province and result in delivery of a telegram in another province, the offence is triable in either province: s. 888 Criminal Code. The word "defraud," as used in s. 475 of the Criminal Code, involves or implies something to the prejudice of the financial or proprietary rights of the party defrauded. On an application for a writ of habeas corpus, where the warrant on which the prisoner is detained was issued by a judicial authority without the province, the Judge has jurisdiction to inquire into the facts to such an extent as may be necessary to decide whether or not the judicial authority had jurisdiction to issue the process. A Judge of the superior Court of any province of the Dominion has jurisdiction to prevent removal of an accused prisoner from that province to another upon an information laid by a private individual before a magistrate in the latter province, if it is made to appear that the proceedings be-fore the magistrate are frivolous or vexatious or mala fide or otherwise are an abuse of the process of the Justice's Court, and to that end may inquire into the facts of the case. On this principle the Judge may on such an application consider the evidence in order to determine if there is such and sufficient evidence of the guilt of the accused as would upon an ordinary preliminary inquiry before a magistrate, make it proper for him to "put the accused upon his trial." . . . though it "does not furnish such a strong presumption of guilt as to warrant his committal for trial." The prisoner sent from Banff, Alberta, to Maizie McGregor (not the informant) at Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, the following telegram: "Get letter at Clayton Hotel, Regina. Come immediately. Ernest threw from horse this morning. Not serious. Have to stay here a week. (Signed) A. H. Matheson." It was shown that this telegram was signed without Matheson's authority. The statements in the telegram were true. Its purpose was to have the person to whom the telegram was sent meet the accused at Banff instead of at Regina:-Held, that it would be impossible to establish an intent to defraud from the sending of the telegram, and as the intent to defraud is an essential element of the offence alleged, the prisoner was discharged.

Arrest without warrant-Fresh pursuit.] -The police of one province can arrest without warrant a person charged with having committed a crime in another province only where the crime is one for which the accused could have been arrested without warrant in the province where the crime was committed, or where the accused is escaping fresh pursuit: Criminal Code, ss. 30, 33, 649. The coming to British Columbia in September of an officer from Quebec is not a fresh pursuit in respect of a crime said to have been committed on the 1st August. The charge was that the accused, in Quebec, received a ring from S., with directions to hand it to a third person, and that, instead, he converted it to his own use:-Held, that the offence charged fell within the definition of ordinary theft in s. 347 of the Code, and not within s. 355; and for ordinary theft an offender cannot be arrested without warrant. The accused, having been arrested without warrant in British Columbia, was discharged upon habeas -Adjournment-Expenses-Costs-Discretion.]—When the officer or other person to whom a writ of habeas corpus is directed has obeyed it by bringing up the body and making his return, the Judge or Court may make an order for payment by the applicant of the expenses of such officer or person. Dodd's Case (1857), 2 DeG. & J. 510, followed. The costs of proceedings by habeas corpus are governed by s. 119 of the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1897 c. 51, and are therefore in the discretion of the Court or Judge. Regina v. Jones, [1894], 2 Q.B. 382, followed. Where, in obedience to a habeas corpus, the person to whom it was directed produced the body of an infant before a Judge in chambers, and filed certain affidavits in answer to the writ, making his return thereto, and the applicant thereupon applied for an enlargement, which the Judge granted upon condition of the applicant paying to the respondent a sum for counsel fee and expenses, and the applicant appealed from the order embodying such condition to a Divisional Court, which dismissed the appeal, giving the applicant leave, however, to have her original application heard upon payment of the sum already ordered to be paid and a further sum, the Court of Appeal refused the applicant leave to appeal from the order of the Divisional Court.

The magistrate's return showed that he pleaded guilty and was committed for two years to the provincial reformatory. He was taken to the reformatory and sent on to the central prison and kept there in custody under the warrant of commitment to the reformatory. On a motion for his discharge on the return of a habeas corpus:-Helo', that there had been a miscarriage of legal directions in sending a lad of over 17 years of age to the reformatory and sending him on a sentence of two years to the central prison. Held also, that s. 785 of the Code is intended to comprehend summary trial "in certain other cases" than those enumerated in s. 783, and that when the offence is charged and in reality falls under s. 783 (a) it is to be treated as a comparatively petty offence with the extreme limit of incarceration fixed at six months under s. 787. Held, also, that under the circumstances this was not a case for further detention or the direction of further proceedings under s. 752, and an order for the defendant's discharge was granted.

The applicant did not appear in answer to the summons issued and the justice fined him $5 and costs, or, on default of payment, to fifteen days' imprisonment at hard labour. A warrant of commitment to jail was issued by the justice under Art. 783 Cr. Code, and the applicant was imprisoned. He at once procured a writ of habeas corpus and an ancillary writ of certiorari to be issued claiming that a single justice of the peace could not issue a warrant of commitment, and that the conviction was illegal:-Held, 1. That a single justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to convict under Art. 783 Cr. Code and that a commitment under such a conviction is bad. 2. When it appears on the face of the warrant that the justice has exceeded his jurisdiction recourse to an ancillary writ of certiorari is unnecessary. 3. The writ of habeas corpus was made absolute and the conviction and commitment were quashed.

(j) of s. 207 of the Criminal Code-and was committed to gaol for six months under a warrant signed by two of the justices. She obtained a writ of habeas corpus, and upon the return of it moved for her discharge, which was refused by a Divisional Court. She then appealed to the Court of Appeal, and, after the appeal had been argued and judgment reserved, the justices returned a further warrant of commitment signed by all three justices, which was received by the Court of Appeal. The offence was stated to have been committed in a city, for which there was a police magistrate. The warrant returned to the Court of Appeal was signed by all three justices, under their respective seals, and set forth a conviction by them, all acting in the absence of, and one at the request of, the police magistrate:-Held, that under s. 208 of the Criminal Code, as amended by 57 and 58 Viet. c. 57, one justice had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the charge, and by R.S.O. 1897, c. 87, s. 7, had authority to act in the city in the absence of the police magistrate; and if authority be given to one justice it may be executed by any greater number, and the fact that others join in making the conviction does not invalidate the proceeding. Held, also, that the conviction and commitment, following the language of sub-s. On November 11th he was brought before a justice of the peace of the city where the offences were committed, for preliminary investigation into the charges. There were then two informations before the justice, taken before the police magistrate on November 6th on which warrants of arrest had been issued, one being that on which the telegram had been sent directing the prisoner's arrest. Two further informations were taken on the same day before the justice for other alleged thefts. A remand was made to the 13th November, the justice issuing his warrant of remand, under his hand and seal, the warrant reciting the bringing of the prisoner before him as a justice of the peace, acting for, in the absence of and at the request of, one of the police magistrates of the city, there being two such police magistrates, and or. the depositions remands were noted without it being stated by whom. On November 13th a writ of habeas corpus was issued, to which, by a return, dated the 14th, the jailor returned, as the only cause of the prisoner's detention, the warrant of remand of the 11th November; but on the 16th November he made a further return of four additional warrants of re mand, dated the 13th November, under the hand and seal of the said police magistrate remanding the prisoner until the 17th November:—Held, that the circumstances under which the prisoner was brought back to Canada could not be enquired into, that being a matter to be raised by the government of the country whose laws were alleged to have been violated, or at the suit of the party injured against the person who had committed the alleged trespass against him. Held, also, whether or not the justice had jurisdiction to take the informations or to make the remand, by reason of it not appearing that he was acting in the absence of both police magistrates, and for other reasons, the detention of the prisoner was justifiable, for he was properly before the police magistrate on the 13th on the in-formations taken before him on the 6th November and was then duly remanded; and though the second return was made subsequently to the issue of the writ, it was valid, and could be looked at in support of the prisoner's detention.

— Certiorari in aid — Jurisdiction.]—A Judge of the Superior Court of the district where a person is restrained of his liberty has jurisdiction to entertain the petition for his discharge on habeas corpus. (2) Habeas corpus does not lie against detention in virtue of a conviction by a Court of competent jurisdiction, and in such a case there is no ground for the issue, as ancillary, of a writ of certiorari to bring up the record in the case in which the conviction was made.

-Substitution of valid for defective conviction.]—The prisoner was convicted un der sub-section (b) of section 177 of the Criminal Code, 1892, for an indecent ex posure of his person and sentenced to three months' imprisonment. Neither the conviction nor the warrant of commit ment stated, although the evidence tended to show, that the act had been done wilfully. He then applied for a writ of habeas corpus:—Helö, per Mathers, J., following Re Plunkett, (1895), 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 365, that the prosecution should be permitted, on the hearing of the application, to substitute a new conviction and warrant containing the omitted word; and the substitution having been made, that the application should be refused, but without costs. Held, also, by the full Court, that no appeal to the full Court lies in this province from the decision of a single Judge refusing a habeas corpus application, though a prisoner may make successive applications for the writ to one Judge after another, or he may make a direct application to the Court in banc.

-Court of Record-Right to issue writ of habeas corpus to.]-A prisoner charged with perjury elected to be tried without a jury at the county Judge's Criminal Court, and was tried there and convicted, the Judge refusing to state a case for the Court of Appeal; but postponing judgment to enable the prisoner to appeal. The Court of Appeal, however, refused leave to do so. The discharge of the prisoner was then moved for in the High Court under habeas corpus, and certiorari issued in aid thereof; which was refused on the ground that the habeas corpus, etc., had been improvidently issued, that writ not lying to the county Judge's Court, a Court of Record, and the prisoner was remanded for sentence, which was pronounced without any objection. Some time afterwards the sentence was objected to for alleged want of jurisdiction in the county Judge to pronounce it, because the papers which had been returned to but not filed in the High Court under the certiorari had not been brought back, but were in the hands of one of the High Court officers, and so did not repass to the county Judge's Court, a special order of transfer being necessary. The defendant procured a writ of habeas corpus, declining a certiorari in aid. Upon a motion made for the discharge of the defendant, counsel for the Attorney-General appeared and asked for a certiorari to bring up the papers. This was granted, subject to ail objections, and the motion for discharge adjourned till the return of the certiorari: -Held, that the Attorney-General is entitled to a certiorari of absolute right and absolutely in all cases; and that the recent statute, 8 Edw. Held, however, that the warrant was bad, and could not be cured or amended under s. 1123 of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1906, c. 146, nor under s. 105 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245. Obstruction - lnjury to pedestrian Liability of municipal corporation - Indemnity. |-The plaintiff was injured while walking at night upon the sidewalk of a street in a city by tripping over two pieces of scantling placed upon the sidewalk to protect a bit of cement 10 feet square, which had been put down to repair the sidewalk. A lighted lantern had been left at the spot, but it had gone out before the plaintiff came there. The plaintiff sued the municipal corporation for his injuries, and the corporation brought in P. as a third party, under s. 609 of the Municipal Act. P. had been instructed by the defendants' engineer to repair the sidewalk; there was no written contract; he was in the habit of doing repairs for the defendants; he carried on the business of putting down cement walks and roads; he had his own plant, materials, and men, and paid his men for the work they did: - Held, upon the evidence, that the defendants were liable to the plaintiff for his injury, and that P. was liable over to the defendants. P. was a contractor and not a servant.

—Maintenance of roads—Exception of front roads.]—A municipal corporation charged with the maintenance of roads by virtue of Art. 535 M.C. cannot by by-law, make any exceptions other than those specified in that Article. Therefore, it cannot except, for the maintenance of fences, a road opened by the Government (and handed over to the municipality) under a special Act by which the adjoining owners had received an indemnity for the maintenance for all time, by them and their heirs, of the fences upon it. A road which crosses obliquely and divides into two parts, land bounded by a front road is not a front road for the part of the land beyond which has become a distinct property on being acquired by a new owner.

Carden v. St. Michel de Rougemont, Q.R. 38 S.C. 42 (Ct. Rev.).

-Private lane-Dedication-Acceptance by municipality.]-About forty years before the action, G. laid out a lane in a city between building lots of his own on either side, leading eastward from a street, but blind at the east end. This lane had ever since been open. There was no formal dedication to the city, but the city had put a gas main, two gas lamps, a water main, and a hydrant upon the lane. The city had not assessed the lane; and it was apparently considered in all respects, save one, as a city street. But G. built a sidewalk upon the lane, after what he considered dedication, and also repaired it from time to time as required. In 1896 G. gave the property to his wife, the defendant, but continued to look after it for her. On the 22nd October, 1908, a person drove upon this sidewalk and broke it, but neither the defendant nor her husband knew this until after the plaintiff was injured on the 24th October. The plaintiff, thinking the lane was open at the east end, drove along it towards the east, and, having some trouble with his horse, jumped out upon the sidewalk at the point where it had been broken, and was injured. The part of the sidewalk which was broken had been put in by G. since the transfer to the defendant. In an action for damages for the plaintiff's injuries the jury negatived all negligence except the failure to repair from the 22nd to the 24th October, which they found to be negligence:-Held, that G. intended to dedicate the lane, and the city accepted the dedication, long before the defendant became owner of the property adjoining; the lane was, therefore, a public highway, the plaintiff was properly there, and there was nothing in his act in leaping upon the sidewalk in itself wrong; and the rights of the parties depended upon the duty of the defendant in respect of the sidewalk. Although the defendant did not prove any express permission or license from the city to place or repair the sidewalk, sufficient appeared to show that the city tacitly licensed and permitted what was done; the private liability to repair was co-extensive with that of the city, and not more onerous; there must be ordinary care and diligence-an absence of negligence; and the finding of the jury of negligence in not repairing within two days, a time which would not justify a Court in inferring notice, could not be allowed to stand.

Rushton v. Galley, 21 O.L.R. 135.

—Municipal corporation—Keeping roads in good condition.]—Unless there is a special by-law obliging a municipal corporation to repair a road, a mandamus does not lie to compel it to repair either a front road or a by-road.

Lichtenheim v. Pointe-Claire, 11 Que. P.R. 89.

-Obstruction at side of road-Injury to travellers.]-The plaintiffs on a dark night were driving in an overcrowded buggy upon a township line highway, the centre part, designed for vehicles, being in good repair, when the buggy upset upon the edge of the ditch at the side of the central travelled roadway, and the plaintiffs were thrown against some hard substance—they said, iron piping left uncovered by the defendant gas company upon the highway, beyond the ditch and next to the fence, on the part designed for pedestrians-and injured:—Held, assuming that the plaintiffs were thrown against the piping—and that, though not the cause of the injury, occasioned its serious extent-that the proximate cause was the upset of the buggy, which was facilitated at least by its overcrowded and top-heavy condition; that the plaintiffs were not exercising reasonable care; and, although the piping was an obstruction upon the pedestrian part of the way, it could not be said that the municipalities failed to exercise proper care for the safety of travellers upon the central part by permitting it to lie there uncovered. The action was dismissed as against all the defendants without costs, the uncovered condition of the piping being considered in dealing with the costs.

Everitt v. Township of Raleigh, 21 O.L.R.

Closing highway—Damage resulting.]—Defendant council closed a portion of a public highway leading to plainting's hotel. —Closing of portion by municipal corporation—By-law.] — Municipal corporation closed a portion of a public highway by by-law. Plaintiffs brought action claiming damages, and asked to have the by-law declared invalid or in the alternative to have it declared that one of the plaintiffs was entitled to a right of way over the north half of the portion of the highway so closed. Sutherland, J., dismissed plaintiff's action with costs, holding that the evidence was inadequate to establish that the highway in question was an original allowance for a road, therefore s. 660 (2) of the Municipal Act did not apply, and that it could not be said that the closing of that portion of the highway left plaintiffs without another convenient road to their lands, and that their remedy was under the arbitration proceeding initiated by plaintiffs.

Hanley v. Township of Brantford, 16 O.W.R. 812, 1 O.W.N. 1121.

-Right of company to place poles and wires on public road.]-The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants, without leave or license, entered upon a highway in the township and erected and maintained a number of poles and strung wires thereon for the purpose of transmitting electricity from one town to another; and the plaintiffs claimed damages for the trespass, and asked for the removal of the poles and wires. The defendants were incorporated under the Ontario Companies Act to acquire and carry on the electric light and power plant operated at New Liskeard, etc.:-Held, that R S.O. 1897, c. 200, did not apply to a company having such broad and general powers as were contained in the charter of the defendants. The defendants were in the same position as any other company for commercial purposes. They had no right upon the streets or highways without having received legislative sanction, either directly, or indirectly through the action of properly authorized municipal bodies. It was alleged that the plaintiffs were taking these proceedings mala fide and in order to compel the payment of an extortionate rental:-Held, that the Court had no concern with the motives of the plaintiffs; when they came to the Court, they were entitled to their legal rights, no matter what motive induced them to assert such rights.

Breen v. City of Toronto, 2 O.W.N. 87, 17 O.W.R. 41.

-Bridge - Maintenance - Cadastre.]-When the county council (bureau des délégués) has declared a local bridge to be a county bridge it is for the local corporation responsible for its maintenance to determine by procés verbal which of its ratepayers should contribute thereto the effect of the decision of the county council not being to impose upon all the local ratepayers the charge of such maintenance. Though it may be irregular to subject, for work on a bridge, all the owners of lots designated on the cadastre by different numbers without indicating the number of the lot on which the land drained is situated, such irregularity does not make the procès verbal a nullity when it is shown that the lots, though they bear different numbers, form one and the same tract (exploitation). As a municipal bridge should be a charge on all the ratepayers of the concession (rang) in which it is situated certain ratepayers cannot, by procès verbal be exempted from liability for its maintenance on the ground that they are already liable to maintain other bridges constructed on the water-courses which they have made to drain their own lands and in their exclusive interest.

Dupuis v. Parish of St. Isidore, 17 Que. S.C. 482 (Cir. Ct.), affirmed on review 28 April, 1900.

-By-law - Clerical error - Appeal to county council - Repugnancy.]-The municipal council of St. Grégoire had homologated a procés-verbal ordering the opening of a road. In his report to the council, the superintendent had given the date of his appointment as June 13th, whereas it was June 12th. An appeal was taken to the county council to have the proces-verbal quashed as being unjust and onerous to the parties interested. The petition in appeal gave the proper date of the superintendent's appointment, but did not set up the clerical error in his report. The appellant claimed that this error ousted the county council of jurisdiction. A motion was made to consider the procès-verbal on its merits as the objection as to the error was not raised before the local council and could not work any prejudice. An amendment declaring that the council had no jurisdic-tion and that the proces-verbal be quashed was adopted, and it was quashed without consideration of its merits. In an action to annul this resolution:-Held, that the decision of the county council was contradictory and illegal; that the error as to the date of appointment of the special superintendent was not material, and had not been invoked either before the local council or by the petition on appeal; and that the decision of the county council contradictory in form, was a denial of justice to the respondents, inasmuch as, after declaring it had no jurisdiction, the council quashed a procès-verbal, regular on its face, without inquiring into the merits as it was its duty to do.

-Non-repair - Defective sidewalk - Injury to pedestrian-Nuisance of long standing amounting to misfeasance.]-Plaintiff lost the sight of one eye by falling on a loose plank in a sidewalk, a spike from the end of the plank penetrating the eye, and the jury found negligence against the municipality and awarded the plaintiff damages. The municipality operated under a special charter, in which it was provided that every public street, road, square, lane, bridge, and highway should be kept in repair by the corporation:-Held, on appeal, per Macdonald, C.J.A., and Galliher, J.A., that under the provision in the charter for repair of highways, it was the intention of the Legislature that a person injured through an omission to repair should have a right of action. Irving and Martin, JJ.A., took a different view. The Court being evenly divided, the appeal was dismissed

1.]-The nion, an adgment avour of ages for injuries sustained from a defective sidewalk, was dismissed:—Held, per Macdonald, C.J.A., and Galliher, J.A., that an action based upon non-repair or non-feasance was maintainable; from the language of a clause in the defendants' act of incorporation providing that every public street and highway should be kept in repair by the corporation, it was intended that a person injured by a breach of the duty imposed should have an action. Irving and Martin, JJ.A., were of the contrary opinion; and were also of opinion that the Court of Appeal should follow the decisions of the full Court of British Columbia when it was the appellate Court for the province.

McPhalen v. City of Vancouver, 14 W.

-Trespass-Construction of road diversion-Unauthorized entry.]-The defendant M., acting as road-boss under instructions from the reeve and one of the councilmen of the defendant municipality. entered upon the plaintiff's land for the purpose of making a road diversion around a slough on the road allowance. The plaintiff forbade the construction of the road diversion on his land, but M. proceeded to make it. The preliminary steps necessary to give the municipality the right to enter and appropriate the plaintiff's land had not been taken:—Held, that the defendants were guilty of trespass and liable for the damage resulting therefrom. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to general damages for the trespass and deprivation of the use of the portion of his land taken, assessed at $75; but not to damages for having 9 acres separated from the rest of his farm by the road diversion-whatever loss he sustained in this connection was a matter for consideration in awarding compensation in the expropriation proceedings since taken. Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to special damages, assessed at $99, for the loss of flax and wheat destroyed by water backed on the land by reason of the construction of the road diversion without proper culverts. Held. also, that the defendant M. was the servant of the defendant municipality, and in constructing the road diversion was acting within the apparent scope of his authority, and, therefore, the municipality were liable for his acts. -Width of highways in Manitoba.]-The plaintiff municipality contended that the public travelled road through the defen-dant's property, instead of 66 feet wide, should be 99 feet in accordance with a survey made in 1886 by a Dominion land surveyor, pursuant to section 3 of 49 Vict. (D.), now section 9 of c. 19 of the R.S.C. 1906. In authorizing the surveyor to survey the road, the Surveyor-General had directed him to make the road 99 feet wide. This was done and, in 1900, an order-incouncil was passed by the Dominion Govern-ment approving the survey and transferring to and vesting the road in the Province of Manitoba for the purposes of a public highway. All the evidence, however, according to the finding of the trial Judge, showed that the road in question was only 66 feet wide for many years prior to the survey referred to:—Held, that the Surveyor-General had no authority to make the road of a greater width than it had been or to deprive the defendant of any of his land by giving such a direction, that the Dominion Government could not by legislation interfere with the rights the defendant had acquired, nor would it attempt to do so by order-in-council, that the approval of the survey by the Dominion Government could not deprive the defendant of any of his land, and that he was not bound to move his fence back so as to make the road wider than 66 feet.

-Proces-verbal-Obscure clauses-Action to annul.]-1. An action before the superior Court will not lie to annul a proces-verbal on the ground that clauses in it, relating to some of the work to be performed, are drawn in obscure, or even unintelligible language. The proper course for the parties interested is to have the instrument amended and its meaning made clear in the manner provided by law. 2. Actions to annul and petitions to quash are different remedies and while the latter may be resorted to, within the prescribed delay, to have informal proceedings set aside, the former will not avail for the purpose, after such delay has expired, and in a case in which the document impeached does not impose an illegal burden upon the plain-

Vinet v. St. Louis De Gonzague, 19 Que. K.B. 222.

-Agreement between municipalities-Building and maintenance of highway.]-The plaintiffs, a township corporation, alleged an agreement with the defendants, the corporation of an adjacent township, that, in consideration of the plaintiffs opening and building a road through the plaintiffs township to a point agreed upon in the boundary line between the two townships, and agreeing to maintain the same thereafter as a public highway, the defendants would open and build and thereafter maintain a public road or highway, in continuation of the plaintiffs' road, through the defendants' township. The plaintiffs then alleged that, relying upon this agreement, they built their road, expending thereon large sums of money, but the defendants refused to build the continuation, without which the plaintiffs' road was useless; and they claimed specific performance of the agreement, a mandamus requiring the defendants to build the road, or damages. There was no contract under seal or by-law of the defendants, but the plaintiffs relied on a resolution of the defendants' council authorizing the building of the continuation of the road, upon condition of the plaintiffs contributing $100 towards the cost, which the plaintiffs did:-Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to specific performance, or to a mandamus, or to damages: for, assuming in their favour that an agreement was proved, in its nature within the proper competence of the defendants' council, and a performance to the extent alleged by the plaintiffs on their part, it was not a case where a contract had been fully executed by the plaintiffs of which the defendants had had the benefit, as in Bernardin v. Municipality of North Dufferin, 1891, 19 S.C.R. 581. The plaintiffs were held entitled to recover the $100 paid, as upon a consideration which failed.

-Bridge crossing stream forming boundary between local municipalities-Assumption by county.]-A bridge spanning the Muskrat River, which forms the boundary line between the township of Pembroke and the town of Pembroke, was built by private persons; in 1875 it was repaired by a committee appointed by the county council, and the repairs were in 1876 paid for by the county, since which time the county council had done nothing to keep it in repair; it had been kept in repair, however, by private subscriptions, and had been constantly used by the public, the road of which it formed part being a public highway, accepted and used as such for more than forty years:—Held, that it had been assumed in 1875 as a county bridge; and the county corporation were not, by their subsequent neglect of duty, relieved from their obligation to maintain and repair it. Held, also, that, having regard to the provision in clause (a) of s. 622 of the Municipal Act, 1903, and upon a consideration of the provisions of secs. 613 to 618, the duty was imposed upon the county of maintaining the bridge, whether it was ever formally assumed by the county or not. O'Conner v. Townships of Otonabee and Douro, 1874, 35 U.C.R. 73, distinguished. Held, also, that the obligation can be enforced under s. 618. Quære, per Middleton, J., whether the decision of the county council can be reviewed by the County Court Judge. Judgment of the Judge of the County Court of Renfrew affirmed

-Jury-"Non-repair."] -In an action against a city corporation to recover damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff, the allegation in the statement of claim was that "the plaintiff tripped by reason of a hole in the boulevard caused by the negligence of the defendants taking up the old sidewalk and not filling in":—Held, that, whether the negligence alleged was misfeasance or nonfeasance, the action was "in respect of injuries sustained through nonrepair of streets, roads or sidewalks," within the meaning of s. 104 of the Ontario Judicature Act, and was, therefore, to be tried by a Judge without a jury

Brown v. City of Toronto, 21 O.L.R. 230.

—Liability of for non-repair of sidewalks—Winnipeg Charter, s. 722.]—Under s. 667 of the Municipal Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 116, or under s. 722 of the Winnipeg Charter, 1 and 2 Edw. VII. c. 77, a municipality is not liable for the consequences of an accident caused by the want of repair of a sidewalk unless negligence on its part is shown. The plaintiff was injured by the tilting up of a loose plank in a sidewalk only ten years old which had been regularly inspected by an officer of the city without the discovery of the defect, and no notice of the defect had been brought home to the city in any way. It appeared that the plank had got loose by the breaking of the nails and not by reason of age or decay of the wood:—Held, that the defendants were not liable.

Davies v. City of Winnipeg, 19 Man. R. 744.

-Public highway-Way of necessity.]-On the 8th Oct. Vincent signed power-of-attornev authorizing the execution and registration of a plan of lands including two lots owned by him, showing a street which occupied 33 feet in width of his two lots. On the 9th Oct. he himself agreed to sell the two lots to the G.T.P. without any reservation of any street or right-of-way over the 32 feet mentioned in the power. Vincent's attorney, without notice of the sale to the G.T.P., executed a plan which was executed by others showing the street, and the plan was registered without any of the signers of the plan being aware of the agreement with the G.T.P. The street shown on the plan did not communicate at either end with, nor was there any outlet anywhere to, any highway. In an action by the G.T.P. against Vincent for specific performance of the contract and against the other property owners for the cancellation of that portion of the plan affecting the two lots:-Held, 1. a parcel of land used by the public, terminating at one end as a cul de sac, can be a public highway. But a parcel of land closed at both ends cannot be a public highway. 2. The registration of a plan approved by the municipality in which the subdivided land is situate which shows as a street a parcel of land closed at both ends and from which there is no outlet to any ordinary highway, does not constitute

The mere right to a "way of necessity" until used or otherwise defined and located, cannot be said to apply to any particular place suggested for it. 4. The last clause of s. 188 of the Railway Act is intended to protect the railway company upon any agreement made by it with any owner, no matter what change of title may take place within a year and whether such change be with or without notice of the company's claim, and the railway company may enforce such an agreement as against any person, although he may be a purchaser for value without notice. 5. The words "set out and ascertained" (used in s. 188), are not restricted to their meaning to the filing of a plan, profile and book of reference by the railway company, which is necessary before expropriation proceedings may be taken; and where a railway company obtained an order of the Board of Railway Commissioners authorizing the construction of a railway according to a plan attached to the order and showing therein that portion of the land which was the subject of a contract made within one year before the order and which order and plan were registered within a year. 6. Held, that the lands required were by such order and plan sufficiently "set out and ascertained" within the meaning of s. 188, and that the contract could therefore be enforced as against the subsequent purchasers for value without notice. Vincent's agreement for purchase of land provided that conveyance should be "subject to any streets or right-of-way that might thereafter be laid out on said lands in order to provide exit to streets south and east of the property." No right-of-way was laid out and no definite locality was determined for such right-of-way. 7. Held, that this clause did not make the title subject to the implied reservation contained in s. 43 (g) of the Land Titles Act. The provision of that section is limited to a right-of-way already definitely located and fixed in some way both as to place and as to persons entitled to it.

Grand Trunk Pacific Rv. Co. v. Vincent, 2 Alta. R. 393.

-Highway-Obstruction-Raised crossing -Injury to person driving.]-The plaintiff in driving along a highway in a town, in order to pass a vehicle in front of him, turned somewhat to the side of the roadway, but was still upon the part of the highway designed for vehicles, when he encountered an obstacle and was thrown out of his waggon and injured. obstacle was a wooden crossing, raised at the side of the street to a height of 12 inches above the level of the roadway:-Held, that it was an obstruction in the highway; that leaving it there was misfeasance; and that the defendants, the town corporation, were liable at common law for the plaintiff's injuries. Held, also, that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

Williams v. Town of North Battleford, 14 W.L.R. 684 (Sask.).

- Dedication - Acceptance - Deposit of map-Obstruction of highway by building.]-The defendants were the owners of a block of land in the city of Victoria, fronting on Lime street. About 23 years before action the defendants' predecessor in title built a lean-to on the south side of his building, stretching over a portion of Lime street, and this had been maintained ever since by him and the defendants. The territory which included Lime street was not taken into the city until 1892, and prior to that it was under the direct control of the Crown. In 1861 the "Nagle map" was deposited in the land registry office, under the provisions of s. 54 of c. 3 of the British Columbia statutes of 1860, which enabled the registered owner of an absolute fee to subdivide his land for the purpose of selling the same in allotments, and deposit a map of the same, provided such map should exhibit all roads, streets, etc., set apart for public use. The lots owned by the defendants and Lime street were shown upon this map. The southerly portion of Lime street had been used by the public to a limited extent to gain access to a railway, but the road was not graded nor was any public money expended upon it before being taken into the city limits; since then its use had been about the same as formerly; it was still ungraded; but the plaintiffs in 1894 constructed a surface drain along the street, and in 1895 erected and had since maintained poles on the street, carrying city electric light and fire alarm wires:-Held, that there was a dedication of the street by the depositing of the Nagle map, and an acceptance by the acts of the plaintiffs, if an acceptance was necessary in view of the fact that the defendants' lots were originally purchased under the Nagle map, which furnished the original description by which they were known, and in view of the provisions of the Victoria Official Map Act, 1893. Held, also, that the defendants' claim to a title by prescription failed for want of time (20 years), as well as for want of possession of the necessary character. The plaintiffs ac-quired a title only in 1892, before which the title was in the Crown, against whom a possession of 60 years would have to be shown. The defendants' possession was of a very small portion of Lime street, was not an exclusive possession, and did not appear to have been under a claim of right-it might have been a mere indulgence. In order to acquire a title by prescription the possession must be an adverse one of such a character as to presuppose a grant. Held, also, that in face of the provisions of the Victoria Official Map Act, 1893, and the "Ralph map," deposited with the Registrar-General in 1894, showing upon it Lime street, with the same boundaries that were shown by the Nagle map, the defendants could not contend that they had any right to the use and occupation of Lime street. Section 21 of that Act provided for a board of 3 arbitrators to fix, in case of disagreement, the amount of any compensation payable by the plaintiffs; and the plain-tiffs asked in this action for a mandamus to compel the defendants to appoint an arbitrator under that section. By s. 3 of the Victoria Special Powers Act, 1907, the Legislature validated the Ralph map as an official map, and provided that ss. 13, 14, 15 and 21 of the former Act should apply to such map, and be binding on all persons affected thereby. But s. 3 went on to provide for the appointment of a sole arbitrator between the corporation and all persons affected. Held, that the Act of 1907 substituted a sole arbitrator for the board of 3 arbitrators, and, a sole arbitrator having been appointed, there was no necessity for a mandamus in this action. Held, also, that until the arbitrator had made his award and the plaintiffs had paid the defendants the compensation fixed, if any, the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction and mandamus in respect of the removal of the defendants' lean-to. Held, however, that, as the defendants went to trial on the issues as to whether Lime street was a public high-way and whether the plaintiffs' rights were barred by the Statute of Limitations, and all the evidence was directed to those issues, on which the defendants failed, they were not entitled to the costs of the action. Quære, whether, in view of the principle enunciated in London and North Western R. W. Co. v. Donellan, [1898] 2 Q.B. 7, the Court had jurisdiction to deal with any of the matters in question before arbitration. But, as the defendants had not raised that point, held, that the plaintiffs should have a declaration that the portion of Lime street lying between Mary and Catherine street was a public highway; this declaration not to hamper the proceedings or judgment of the arbitrator. No order as to costs.

—Non-repair of sidewalk—Injury to pedestrian—Notice.]—In an action by a person who was injured by tripping over a loose plank in the sidewalk of a city street to recover damages for her injuries, it was shown that the sidewalk had been constructed 10 years before the injury; that the nails in the plank had been broken; but no evidence was given to show how that happened, or for how long a period the plank had been loose. Evidence was given that there was an inspection every 7 or 10 days:—Held, that, though the sidewalk was out of repair, it was not shown that it was so to the knowledge of the defendants, and the evidence did not raise a presumption of knowledge from the existence of the defect for any stated length of time; the method of inspection was reasonable; and there was no evidence upon which negligence could be found. A nonsuit was entered.

Davies v. City of Winnipeg, 15 W.L.R. 22 (Man.).

—Non-repair—Notice.]—No action for damages or for a penalty based on failure to keep municipal roads in repair can be brought against a municipal corporation before fifteen days' previous notice in writing has been given to the secretary-treasurer and an action brought without such notice will be dismissed on exception to the form.

Bélanger v. Boucherville, 11 Que. P.R. 362.

—Dangerous road.]—A town corporation, subject to public law under the provisions of Art. 356 C.C. is civilly responsible for the consequences of an accident due to the improper condition of a road left open to traffic during the night where the lack of lighting enhances the risk.

Town of St. Louis v. McCray, Q.R. 19 K.B. 333.

-County council-Maintenance of road.]-The roads in village municipalities being front roads the county council cannot, by proces-verbal order them to be maintained. No more can it order that the road to which the proces-verbal refers be maintained by each municipality through which it passes. Where the council of a county declares that a local road shall be a county road it can impose upon the local municipalities the burden of its maintenance only; it cannot compel them, by proces-verbal to perform the work of opening them. A proces-verbal made under the above conditions of irregularity does not impose on a local municipality an imperative duty which it cannot be compelled by mandamus to perform. Beaudet v. Leclercville, Q.R. 38 S.C. 77 (Ct. Rev.), reversing 37 S.C. 276.

—County council—Opening of road in two municipalities.]—A county council has the power to have drawn up and homologated a proces-verbal for opening a road situate partly in one local municipality and partly in another within the county.

Regina v. City of London, 32 Ont. R. 326.

-Street-Plan-Dedication-Acceptance.] -The owners of two adjoining lots agreed between themselves to give twenty feet of each lot to form a street, and a plan of sub-division of the lots showing a street of this width was filed by them, the consent of the municipality being given by resolution. The line fence was then taken down and one owner fenced his land so as to leave twenty feet of the lot open to the public; but the other fenced his so as to leave forty feet. Without any by-law or further resolution the municipality did some grading on the sixty feet, and the sixty feet were used by the public for the purpose of a highway:-Held, that the giving of forty feet by one owner did not relieve the other owner from his obligation to give twenty feet, and that he could not, after its acceptance by the expenditure of public money upon it and its use by the public, retract the dedication of the twenty foot strip. Judgment of Boyd, C., 31 O.R. 499, affirmed.

Pedlow v. Town of Renfrew, 27 Ont. App. 611.

-Street-Reduction of proposed width-Ownership of the excess width-Dedication.]—The plaintiff, by petitory action, claimed the ownership of a strip of land under deed of purchase in 1897. It appeared that a street in the village of Hochelaga, was opened in 1874 or 1875, and the width proposed was 100 feet. In 1884, the village of Hochelaga was annexed to the eity of Montreal, and the city reduced the width of the proposed street from 100 feet to 60 feet, leaving a strip 40 feet wide which was not used, as originally contemplated, for street purposes. The question was, in whom did the ownership of this strip vest. The plaintiff relied upon her title by purchase from the parties who held the title prior to the proposed widening. The defendant called in her vendor, the Banque Jacques Cartier in warranty, and also pleaded possession for over ten years. The defendant further pleaded to the action, alleging ownership; that the strip in question had formed part of Ontario street for more than ten years; that when the width of the street was, in 1887, reduced to 60 feet, the excess, 40 feet, reverted to her as the adjoining proprietor, and that the defendant had ever since been in possession. To the action in warranty the defendant in warranty pleaded that when it bought the property subsequently sold to the principal defendant, it was bounded in front by the proposed street, and that the subsequent action of the city in reducing the width to 60 feet could not make the bank liable to an action in warranty:-Held (on the principal action), 1. That when the width of the street was reduced, the possession of the 40 feet deducted reverted to the parties who owned the land before the improvement was projected, viz., in this case, the plaintiff's auteurs, and that the title on which the plaintiff rests existed at the date of the sale by the bank to the defendant. 2. The special laws and usages applicable to the dedication of streets can only be resorted to where it is proved that the owner has, in fact, voluntarily and gratuitously abandoned his property to the public use. Otherwise, the principle that no servitude can be established without a title governs. 3. The plea of litigious rights cannot avail the defendant unless the price and incidental expenses of the sale, with interest on the price from the day that the buyer has paid it, be tendered with such plea (Art. 1582, C.C.). Gauthier v. Monarque, 19 Que. S.C. 93 Davidson, J. 4. (On the action in warranty). The de cision of Davidson, J., that the defendant in warranty having sold the land in question to the principal defendant, sous les garanties de droit, as fronting on the street, whereas, at the date of the said sale, a strip 40 feet wide intervened, is liable for the damage thereby occasioned to the principal aefendant, was reversed by the Court of Appeal.

Monarque v. Banque Jacques Cartier, 19 Que. S.C. 94.

-Railway-Bridge over highway-Height of-Injury to person-Railway Act.] The plaintiff was driving a load of hay on a public highway within the limits of a village, sitting on top of his load, A railway, at a point within the village, was carried over the highway by an iron bridge, and the plaintiff, while driving along the highway under the bridge, was struck on the head by the girders and knocked off the load and injured. The bridge when constructed was built at a height greater than required by s. 185 of the Railway Act, 51 Vict. c. 29 (D.), but the municipality and their predecessors, owners of the road, subsequently so raised its level as to leave less than the statutory space between the road and the bridge:-Held, that the section must be construed as compelling the railway company to construct their bridges in the first place

Gray v. Borough of Danbury (1887), 54 Conn. 574, specially referred to. Carson v. Village of Weston, 1 O.L.R.

-Non-repair-Opening in sidewalk-Injury to pedestrians-Want of guard.]-The plaintiff, whose eyesight was defective, was walking in a city street, when, stepping towards a doorway leading into a tavern, he stubbed his toe against the step or door-sill, and, stumbling back, fell into an area in the sidewalk, used by the tavernkeeper, by the permission of the municipality, for the purpose of putting beer into his cellar, and then open and being used for such purpose. A keg had been placed at each of the outside corners of the opening as a warning to passers-by:-Held, that the municipality were liable for negligence in leaving the opening without an adequate guard; that contributory negligence could not be imputed to the plaintiff; and that the tavernkeeper was liable over to the defendants.

Homewood v. City of Hamilton, 1 O.L. R. 266.

-Closing up road-Necessity for providing another convenient road or way -Farm divided by railway-Separate parcels.]-A farm lot occupied by the owner as one farm, was diagonally divided by a railway into two separate parcels, having a farm crossing provided by the railway, giving access from one parcel to the other. In addition to a road which afforded access to the parcel where his residence was, there was another road which gave access to the other parcel, and which, except by the farm crossing, was the only mode of access thereto:-Held, that the latter came within s. 629 (1) R.S.O. 1897, c. 223, and could not be closed up by the municipal council unless, in addition to compensation, another road or way was provided in lieu thereof.

-Street widening-Expropriation-Abandonment.]-The city commenced expropriation proceedings and forthwith took possession of plaintiff's constructed works thereon and incorporated it with a public street. Subsequently, in virtue of a statute granting permission to do so, the city abandoned the expropriation proceedings without paying indemnity or returning the lands so occupied and used:—Held, that the plaintiff had been illegally dispossessed of his property and was entitled to have it returned to him in the state in which it was at the time it had been so taken possession of and also to recover compensation for the illegal detention. Held, further, that, in the present case, the measure of damages, as representing the rents, issued and profits of the lands usurped by the city, should be the interest upon the value of the property during the period of its illegal detention.

City of Montreal v. Hogan, 31 Can. S.C.R. 1.

-Street railway-Removal of snow.]-By the provisions of a municipal by-law, to which a street railway company were bound to conform, the company were obliged to remove snow from their tracks in such a manner as not to obstruct or render unsafe the free passage of sleighs or other vehicles along or across the street. After a heavy snow-fall the company removed the snow from their tracks the result being that there was a bank of several inches at each side of the tracks to the level of the snow-covered portions of the street:-Held, that the company had not discharged their obligation and that they were liable to indemnify the city against damages recovered against the city by a person who had in con-sequence of the bank been upset while driving along the street. Judgment of Rose, J., affirmed.

Mitchell v. City of Hamilton, 2 O.L.R. 58 (C.A.).

-Obstruction in highway-Contributory negligence-New trial.]-An excavation made by defendants in the highway for the purpose of laying a small pipe, when filled in left a projection in the highway from four to five feet in width and from eight to nine inches above the surface. Plaintiff's horse, in passing over the place where the pipe had been laid and the earth filled in, stumbled and fell, throwing plaintiff out, and causing him to sustain serious bodily injuries. In an action by plaintiff claiming damages the evidence showed that plaintiff had driven over the place where the accident occurred, in daylight, a few hours before; that in returning he was driving at the rate of seven miles an hour; that his horse was seventeen years old, and was lame at times; that it had been known to stumble; that it was without shoes at the time of the accident, and that the springs of the plaintiff's wagon were in a defective condition:-Held, by the S. C. of Nova Scotia, that, on the whole case, the earth construction was not negligently made, and was not a more serious obstruction than was usual on such road's at such places, and that the stumbling was due to plaintiff not using proper care, with the horse and carriage he had, in approaching at that time of the night a place which he had seen before. On the trial, evidence had been given of the individual opinions of plaintiff's neighbours as to his general reputation for veracity, defendant's counsel proposed to ask the question, "Whose opinion do you know?" The evidence having been excluded, Held, that the learned trial Judge erred in doing so, and that the question should not have been disallowed. Held, notwithstanding, that as, assuming plaintiff's testimony to be perfectly true, no case was made out against the defendant, there was no necessity for sending the case back for a new trial for rejection of evidence. there having been no substantial wrong or miscarriage within O. 37, R. 6. Per Weatherbe, J .: - Held, that as defendant had undertaken to support the exclusion of evidence that was clearly admissible, there should be no costs.

Messenger v. Town of Bridgetown, 33 N.S.R. 291, affirmed 31 Can. S.C.R. 379

-Negligence-Maintenance of streets -Accumulation of snow and ice-Gross negligence. 1-About 10.30 a.m. on a morning in January a man walking along a street crossing in Toronto slipped on the ice and fell, receiving injuries from which he eventually aled. His widow brought an action for damages under Lord Campbell's Act, and on the trial it was shown that there had been a considerable fall of snow for two or three days before the accident, and on the day preceding there had been a thaw followed by a hard frost at night. There was evidence, also, that early in the morning of the day of the accident employees of the city had scattered sand on the crossing, but the high wind prevailing at the time had probably blown it away:-Held, affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeal (27 Ont. App. R. 410), that the facts in evidence were not sufficient to show that the injury to the deceased was caused by "gross negligence" of the corporation within the meaning of R.S.O. 1897, c. 223, s. 606 (2).

Ince v. City of Toronto, 31 Can. S.C.R.

—Dangerous sidewalk—Climatic conditions—Previous neglect of sidewalk by the city.]—(1) The obligation devolving upon a city corporation to keep the sidewalks of the city in a safe condition is temporarily suspended where the climatic conditions—such as heavy rainfalls accompanied by high temperature, followed by strong wind, sudden frost and low temperature—are such that the city could not, by the exercise of reasonable ciling ence, have remedied the condition of the sidewalk in question before the accident happened. (2) The fact that the sidewalk in question, which was in front of vacant lots, had not been properly attended to throughout the winter, does not affect the decision of such case, the city not being responsible for damages in consequence of negligence which does not apply to the particular circumstances when the damages were incurred.

D'Estimonville v. City of Montreal, 18 Que. S.C. 470 (confirmed in review).

-Powers of special superintendent.] -Under the provisions of Art. 794 M.C. if the special superintendent is of opinion that the petition demanding certain works to be done should be rejected he should so report; if on the contrary he considers it well founded he will be justified in preparing a proces-verbal to that effect. It is not necessary that the works demanded should be specified in the conclusions of the petition; it is sufficient to confer authority on the county council to take action that they be specified in the body of the petition as one of the things suggested to the council and as to which it has the opportunity of exercising its discretion. The Superior Court, by virtue of the powers conferred upon it by Art. 2329 R.S.Q. may exercise jurisdiction over the proceedings of municipal councils whatever they may be, and quash them. It may exercise such powers in the case of a decision of a county council sitting as an appellate tribunal notwithstanding the provisions of Art 1061 M.C. which refuses the right of appeal in such Piché v. County of Portneuf, 17 Que. S.C. 589 (C.R.).

-Acquisition-Dedication - Prescription.1 -In addition to the modes prescribed by the Municipal Code municipal corporations may acquire land for public works: (1) By dedication and abandonment by the owner of land with intent to open and establish it as a public road; (2) By use, possession and maintenance of said land by the public for 30 years; (3) By the opening and use by the public without opposition, of any road for 10 years and upwards under the provisions of 18 Vict. c. 100, s. 40, sub-s. 9. The enclosures and boundaries of a public road established by ancient owners are recognized under our customs and presumed to have been established by these owners with a view of separating their lands from the road in the interest of proper maintenance and also to protect their crops and the lands themselves generally, and such enclosures may serve to aid greatly in the question of dedication

Jones v. Village of Asbestos, 19 Que. S.C. 168 (S.C.).

—Private way—Dedication—Plan—Injunction.]—The plaintiff's predecessor in title bought a certain lot according to a plan (then unregistered), on which was shown a strip 33 feet in width, running along one side of the lot. The plaintiff claimed that this strip had been dedicated, either as a public highway or a private way for the use of the owner of the lot, and claimed at declaration to that effect and an injunction. On the evidence, the Court found for the plaintiff and gave judgment accordingly.

Daly v. Robertson, 1 Terr. L.R. 427.

Right of person from whose land the strip for a public road was originally detached -Art. 753 M.C.]-The appellant removed a fence and took possession of a strip of land which originally had been detached from his property, but which for many years had formed part of a public highway, and had served to give the respondent access to his property. The respondent brought suit asking that the appellant be ordered to cease his disturbance and replace the fence as it was:-Held (affirming the judgment of the Superior Court, Doherty, J., 20 Que. S.C. 26, but omitting one That it was incumconsidérant: 1. bent on the appellant, in order to make good his pretension that the strip in question had ceased to be a public road, to prove that by some act of duly constituted and competent authority qualified to act on behalf of the public, the road had been closed or abolished and the rights of the public thereto renounced, or, at least, such a total cessation of use by the public of the road as a public road, and such a conversion thereof to other uses acquiesced in by competent authority, as would constitute a total abandonment by the public and such competent authority of all right thereto as a public road. 2. A person owning land abutting on such road, and who is deprived of the öïrect access which he previously had thereto. suffers special damage by the closing and obstruction of the road, and has in consequence a right of action in his own name to compel the removal of the obstruction.

Meloche v. Davidson, 11 Que. K.B. 302.

—Trees on—Property in—Damages for injury.]—Trees planted on a public road in the city of Montreal with consent of the municipal authorities and in accordance with the city by-laws, become an appurtenant to the ownership of the immovable in front and for the advantages of which they were planted, and the owner of such immovable may maintain an action for compensation against his neighbours when, by reason of an industry carried on by the latter the trees have been destroyed.

L'Hussier v. Brosseau, 20 Que. S.C. 170 (Sup. Ct.).

-Negligence - Non-repair.]-A municipal corporation having placed a barrier round a portion of the sidewalk which they were repairing, the plaintiff at night going round, fell into a trench aug by a gas company, with consent of the corporation, under an agreement for indemnity and to properly warn and protect the public. No lights were put up by either defendant. The plaintiff brought this action against both for injuries sustained:-Held, that both the defendants were liable to the plaintiff, the corporation for non-repair and not warning the public, and the gas company under special contract with the corporation, and under R.S.O. 1897, c. 199, s. 26, but that the corporation should have judgment over against the company.

McIntyre v. Town of Lindsay, 4 O.L.R.

-Front roads-Maintenance-Evidence Repartition-Cost of work-Notice-Absent owner-Arts. 399, 400, 401, 824 M.C.] -It is the imperative duty of a municipal corporation and its officials to put the roads in good condition without ô'elay. The evidence of the inspector who has had work on roads done is proof sufficient, if uncontradicted, of its execution, that the sum claimed in an action against a rate payer is the value of the work, and that the defendant is the person liable to pay the cost thereof. A road, crossing the lots of the defendant and other lots in the fourth concession of Gosford having been for a great many years open and free to the public as a road in front of said lots and subject to a procès-verbal which declared it to be a front road, and at the charge as to its maintenance summer and winter, of each owner of land in the said concession in front of which it passed, should, therefore, be maintained by defendant for the portion traversing her lots, and there was no necessity for an assessment roll (acte de répartition) to execute this part of the proces-verbal as there were no works to assess. Even if there were need of an assessment roll as it was a front road open to the public, Art. 824 M.C. should be applied in preparing it. In this case there was no municipal notice to be given or addressed to defendant, residing in England, nor to her agent in Quebec as no writing had been deposited in the office of the council giving the address of either. The road inspector had the necessary work done on defendant's roads, she having failed to do it; he had made out the account for it in his own name as inspector without adding the 20 per cent .; he had done the work without first making the report required to and receiving authority from the council. Eventually the corporation paid him the amount:—Held, that the corporation had a right to make such payment, and in doing so had paid defendant's debt and could maintain an action against her to be reimbursed the sum so paid; but it had no right to recover the 20 per cent. from defendant, which belonged in this case, to the inspector, and which it had not paid. The corporation is entitled to the 20 per cent. for its own benefit only in the cases provided for by Arts. 399, 400, 401 M.C., and this was not one of them.

Corporation of St. Raymond v. Prior, 21 Que. S.C. 172 (Sup. Ct.).

-Public road-By-law-Notice-Arts, 755, 758 M.C.]-A notice given by a municipal body for the amendment of a by-law of the passing of another, relating to a publie road without identifying the road or specifying the proposed amendments or the nature of the new-by-law is not sufficient, especially if the parties objecting thereto will be prejudiced. Under Art. 755 M.C. a road between two local municipalities is a county road, and when under Art. 758 M.C. the county council has declared a local road to be under control of one of these municipalities, it has no longer jurisdiction to amend its by-law so as to declare anew that it is a local road but under control of the two municipalities jointly; but it has the right to make it a county road and then, under Art. 758, par. 3, it can distribute the work by a special declaration as to the land of the owners in each municipality bound to maintain said road. Corporation of St. André-Avelin v. Corporation of Ripon, 4 Que. Q.B. 167, followed.

Corporation of Nelson v. County of Megantic, 20 Que. S.C. 334 (Sup. Ct.).

-Opening road-Contribution from landowner-By-law-Action to quash.]-The defendant corporation cannot compel contribution, according to area, from the plaintiff's lands which have their own front road at a distance of less than 30 arpents, for the opening and maintenance of a road which is of no benefit to said lands and is only for the advantage of others; and a by-law passed by the council of the corporation for that purpose, causing great injustice to the plaintiff in action taken by plaintiff in the ordinary course in the Superior Court. The fact that plaintiff had previously appealed to the county council, which confirmed the by-law, does not deprive him of the right to bring the action. The remed'y given by the Municipal Code by petition to quash, does not exclude the present Therriault v. Corporation of the Parish of St. Alexandre, 20 Que. S.C. 45 (Sup. Ct.).

-Street-Dedication to the public-Servitude.]-The proprietors of certain land prepared an official sub-division plan of the property, dividing it into lots and tracing a street thereon. They registered this plan as the official plan and sold lots described as fronting on the street indicated in the plan. They also constructed a sidewalk along the street, and permitted the public to pass freely without objection. They also petitioned the municipal council to annex the property in accordance with the plan, which petition was granted:-Held, 1. That there was a valid dedication of the property as a public street, 2. In any case, the acts above mentioned constituteo at least a servitude of right of way over and through the property, in favor of the purchasers of lots described as fronting on such street, and the erection of platforms thereon was an illegal obstruction, and a violation of servitude.

Geoffrion v. Montreal Park and Island Railway Co., 20 Que. S.C. 559 (Archibald, J.).

-Road allowance-Obstruction-Railways -Fences-Municipal corporation-By-law -Railway Act of Canada-Railway committee of Privy Council-Injunction-Removal of obstruction-Jurisdiction.]-An action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from obstructing a highway in the township, by fences on both sides of the defendants' tracks where they crossed the highway, and for a mandatory order compelling the removal of the fences:--Held, that the allowance for the road in question, having been made by a Crown surveyor, was a highway within the meaning of s. 599 of the Municipal Act, and, although not an open, public road, used and travelled upon by the public, it was a highway within the meaning of the Railway Act of Canada, 51 Vict. c. 29. 2. That, although the road allowance had not been cleared and opened up for public travel and had not been used as a public road, it was not necessary for the muni cipality to pass a by-law opening it before exercising jurisdiction over it; the council might direct their officers to open the road, and such direction would be sufficient. 3. That the right of the railway company, under s. 90 (g) of the Railway Act to construct their tracks and build their fences across the highway was subject to s. 183, which provides against any obstruction to the highway, and s. 194, which provides for fences and cattleguards being erected and maintained; and, therefore, the defendants had no right to maintain fences which obstructed the highway or interfered with the public user or with the control over it claimed by the municipality. 4. That the Railway Committee of the Privy Council had no jurisdiction to determine the questions in dispute; s. 11 (h) and (q) of the Railway Act not applying. 5. That the Court had jurisdiction to grant the relief sought. Fenelon Falls v. Victoria Railway Co. (1881), 29 Gr. 4. and City of Toronto v. Lorsch (1893), 24 O.R. 227, followed. 6. That the highway being vested in the township corporation, who desired to open and make it fit for public travel, the plaintiffs were entitled to have the defendants enjoined from obstructing it, and ordered to remove the fences.

Township of Gloucester v. Canada Atlantic Railway Co., 3 O.L.R. 85, affirmed by C.A. 4 O.L.R. 262.

-Defective sidewalk-Negligence-Notice of defect.]-Where a sidewalk on one of the principal streets of a town on which there was considerable traffic, and which had been down for so long a period as to become unsound, the scantling or stringers being so rotten as to be unable to hold the nails fastening the boards placed across them, its condition is such as to impose on the corporation a constant care and supervision over it; so that where one of the boards was missing for a week leaving a hole six or eight inches deep into which a person fell, and was injured, notice to the corporation of such aefect in the sidewalk was assumed and liability for the damage occasioned by the accident imposed on them, Maclennan, J.A., dissenting. The damages assessed at the trial, $1,500, were reduced to $900, the Court being of the opinion that the latter was the more reasonable amount for the damages sustained, a sprained ankle and an affection of the sciatic nerve, from which recovery might be expected at no distant date.

McGarr v. Town of Prescott, 4 O.L.R. 280 (C.A.).

-Establishments-Annulment of procesverbal.]-The Supreme Court of Canada has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal in a suit to annul a procès-verbal establishing a public highway notwithstanding that the effect of the proces-verbal in question might be to involve an expenditure of over $2,000 for which the appellants' lands would be liable for assessment by the municipal corporation. Arbec v. Lussier, 21 Que. S.C. 204 (Cir. Ct.).

-Public road-Discontinuation, proof of-Right of person from whose land it was originally detached-Art. 753 M.C.]-The defendant took possession of a strip of land which originally had been detached from his property, but which subsequently formed part of public highway. The plaintiff asked that the defendant be ordered to cease his disturbance and replace the fence as it was:-Held, that it was incumbent upon the defendant, in order to make good his pretention that the strip in question had ceased to be a public road, to prove that by some act of duly constituted and competent authority, qualified to act on behalf of the public, the road had been closed or abolished and the right of the public thereto renounced, or, at least, such a total cessation of use by the public of the road as a public road, and such a conversion thereof to other uses acquiesced in by competent authority, as would constitute a total abandonment by the public and such competent authority of all right thereto as a public road.

t in caricipality— The plaintiff busy street thirty feet seeding in a sarriageway. There was a hole or depression in the asphalt pavement from 11/2 to 11/8 inches deep at its deepest part, and the plaintiff slipped upon the edge and was injured. In an action against the city corporation for damages for negligence, the trial Judge found that the accident was caused by the defendants' negligence in allowing the pavement to be and remain dangerously out of repair; that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence in crossing the street diagonally; that the street was not sufficiently out of repair to be dangerous to horses or vehicles; and assessed damages to the plaintiff:-Held, Falconbridge, C.J., dissenting, that the plaintiff, using the carriageway when on foot, had no right to expect a higher degree of repair than would render the way reasonably safe to vehicles; and the last finding of the Judge put the plaintiff out of Court. Boss v. Litton (1832), 5 C. & P. 407, explained and distinguished. Semble, per Street, J., that the defect in question was not one from which a rea-sonable man would have apprehended danger to any person either on foot or in a carriage, and therefore the corporation could not be guilty of negligence in regard to it. Per Falconbridge, C.J., that the judgment ought to be upheld, as it was a question of fact, not of law, whether the depression was an actionable defect in the highway.

-Railway crossing—Negligence—Railway Act, s. 28s.]—Where the railway traffic at the crossing of a highway was very great, and there was no gate, guardian, lamp or other protection for the public, although the railway company had been notified of the dangerous condition of the crossing, the company is responsible under section 28s of the Railway Act of Canada, for a collision which caused the death of plaintiff's son driving along the highway, and, which occurred without any fault on his part, the railway company being obliged to take such precautions at crossings as the nature of the traffic requires for the protection of the public.

Girouard v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co., 19 Que. S.C. 529 (Curran, J.).

—Sidewalk thereon built by voluntary subscription and statute labour—Liability of municipality to repair.]—A township municipality was held liable in damages for an injury arising through the non-repair of a sidewalk on a highway within its limits, notwithstanding the fact that the sidewalk was built by voluntary subscription and statute labour, and although the municipality never assumed any control over it nor was any public money or statute labour expended on it with the knowledge of the council, where the latter was aware of the existence of the sidewalk and there has been opportunity to repair it.

Madill v. The Corporation of the Township of Caledon, 3 O.L.R. 66, affirmed, 3 O.L.R. 555 (C.A.).

-Crown lands-Trail-Dedication-Conditional dedication.] — The defendants' claiming under the original squatter on certain Dominion lands, erected a building thereon fronting on an old trail; the original squatter subsequently, in expectation of the Crown recognizing the claims of himself and his assigns, registered a plan of the entire land, whereon was shown a highway approximately conforming to the lines of the old trail, but so that the building in question projected into the highway shown on the plan. The Crown did, afterwards, grant a patent to the original squatter for the entire land, excepting the portions shown on the plan, as reserved for the defendants and others in like position. These excepted portions as they appeared on the plan approximately conformed in size and position to the portions which the squatter had assumed to convey to the defendants and others. Patents for these excepted portions were granted by the Crown to the defendants and others respectively:-Held, that the Crown, by issuing patents in accordance with the registered plan, had adopted it, and thereby dedicated to the public the highway as shown thereon; that the plaintiff municipality, within which the land lay, having demanded of the defendants the removal of the building, so far as it encroached on the highway as shown on the plan, and the defendants having refused to comply with the demand, the plaintiff municipality were entitled to a mandatory injunction to abate the building as being a nuisance. Held, also, that the defendants were consequently not entitled to compensation as owners or occupiers under the provision of the Municipal Ordinance. On appeal to the Court in banc, counsel for the defendants (appellants) having sought to raise for the first time the point that although there had been a decircation, such dedication was made and accepted subject to such constructions as existed upon it at the time of dedication, the Court, considering that the point was not covered by any of the grounds stated in the appellants' notice of appeal. Held, that the appellants were not at liberty to raise the point at this stage. Town of Edmonton v. Brown, 1 Terr. L.R. 454, Affirmed 23 Can. S.C.R. 308.

-Horse straying on highway-Injury to boy-Contributory negligence.] - Defendant's horse was on the highway, having escaped from a field which was fenced in, when a boy of twelve years of age tried to catch him by taking hold of a rope then around his neck, and in doing so he was kicked and injured. There was no evidence either that the defendant knew the horse was accustomed to stray or had any vicious propensity, or had any such fault, and there was evidence that it had been interfered with by several boys, of whom the injured boy was one, and that the latter had more than ordinary intelligence, and fully understood the risk he ran. In an action for the injury by the boy and his father:-Held, that they could not recover. Patterson v. Fanning (1901), 2 O.L.R. 462, distinguished.

On May 26th he gave notice to the defendants of the accident as having occurred on May 7th, instead of May 6th, but describing the circumstances, and also that he had sought the aid of a neighbour whom he named:-Held, that the cause of the accident was the negligence of the defendants in not providing a railing, and that the thunderstorm was one of those ordinary dangers which ought to have been thus provided against. -Duty of municipal corporation-Snow drifts—Temporary side track.]—Plaintiff in travelling on a highway within the corporation boundary with a team of horses and wagon came to a place where the road was impassable on account of drifted snow for more than half a mile. At the side of the road between the ditch and a frame fence was a temporary track made by the travelling public which was safe while the frost lasted and the snow was hard; but a thaw was in progress. which had commenced three days before. When those in the wagon sought to use the track the horses broke through, and the wagon was in danger of being upset. Plaintiff got out and in assisting the horses was injured by one of them:-Held, that under the circumstances it was the duty of the defendants to have opened up a way through the drifts sufficient to enable vehicles, such as wagons in which the plaintiff was travelling, to have passed in safety along this highway; that the defendants had notice that the high way was out of repair and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. -Municipal regulation - Underground telephone wires.]-The plaintiffs, whose system of communication had been in operation in the town of Owen Sound for some years, changed their office and in connection with the change wished to carry their wires to that office across the street in which it was situated, underground, in a conduit, instead of overhead by poles, and the defendants refused to consent:—Held, that the defendants' power under the statutes 43 Vict. c. 64 (D.) and 45 Vict. c. 95 (D.), to regulate the mode of user of the street must be exercised in good faith in the interests of the public and of the municipality, and not for ulterior purposes, and (as found on the evidence) not having been so exercised, was of no effect.

-Road laid out by private person-Assumption for public user-Expenditure by township corporation on sidewalk-Non repair.]-A highway in a township laid out by a private person had been used as such for many years, and a sidewalk had been built upon it by the defendants under the supervision of their pathmaster, and the council had by by-law appropriated money to pay for the construction of it, and payment had been duly made to the persons who built it:—Held, that this was sufficient to establish that the highway had been assumed for public user by the corporation within the meaning of s. 607 of the Municipal Act, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19 (O.). The purpose of s. 598 is to declare that certain classes of roads are public highways; and it has no bearing on the question whether an actual highway laid out by a private person has been assumed for public user. The highway had been for a long time in a very bad state of repair. so covered with water at certain seasons that it was impossible for a pedestrian to pass from one side to the other without wading through mud and water. The plaintiff was injured by reason of cinders which the third parties had, about a week before the accident, spread upon the road in order to afford a passage across it:-Held, that the defendants ought to have anticipated that some such means of passing from one side to the other would be adopted by the third parties, and were liable for negligence in the performance of their statutory duty to keep the highway in repair, but the third parties were liable over to the defendants.

with the result that by the strict grammatical construction of the by-law a former by-law dealing with the same road was declared closed, instead of the road itself:—Held, that certain words in the enacting clause should be regarded as a parenthetical expression and as descriptive of the portion of the road referred to, thus giving the by-law a sensible meaning and the one intended.

-Lands liable for road work-Legal interest in roads-Power of Superior Court over decisions of municipal councils.] --Held (confirming the judgment of Cimon. J.):--1. Municipal councils have no power to create servitudes on lands; they can only give effect to those already created by law. 2. Those lands only can be charged with servitude of road work which have an interest in such work. 3. The interest required by law is not the personal interest of the owner of the lands, but that arising from the situation of the lands. 4. Article 795 M.C. does not give to municipal councils the power arbitrarily to charge land's with road work, irrespective of any legal interest arising from the situation of the lands. 5. -Non-repair-Negligence of municipal corporation-Notice of accident-Reasonable excuse for want of.]-In an action against a municipal corporation to recover damages for injuries sustained by reason of non-repair of a highway, the ruling of the Judge at the trial as to whether there is reasonable excuse for the want or insufficiency of a "notice in writing of the accident and the cause thereof" and whether the defendants have been prejudiced in their defence, under section 606 of the Municipal Act, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19 (O.), is subject to appeal. A servant or servants of the defendants had actual knowledge of the accident to the plaintiff and its cause on the day it happened. It was caused by the cave-in of a welltravelled public street in the centre of a city. The plaintiff's left and only remaining arm was broken, and he sustained other injuries. He was in a hospital, suffering great pain, during the seven days allowed by the statute for giving notice, and notice was not given until the eleventh day after the accident:-Held, that there was reasonable excuse for the want of a notice in due time; and that the defendiants had not thereby been prejudiced in their defence. -Non-repair of bridge - Negligence -Notice of action-Misfeasance.]--(1) Under section 667 of the Municipal Act, R. S.M. 1902, c. 116, a municipality is liable for damages caused by a heavy traction engine breaking through rotten timbers in the approach to a bridge on one of its public highways on which work had been performed and improvements made by it, when such engines had, to the knowledge of the officials of the municipality, been passing over the bridge for the previous two years and no attempt had been made to stop such traffic or to warn those in charge of it of any danger, such bridge being the strongest one across the river within many miles. (2) Defendants could not be held to have been guilty of negligence amounting to misfeasance, so as to make them liable in damages independently of the statute, by reason of having failed to stop up a spike hole in one of the joists in the approach, in consequence of which it had rotted away more than the others on account of water lodging in the hole. (3) The notice of action required by the statute to be given to the municipality need not be signed by the claimant personally or show that she was claiming in her capacity of personal representative of the deceased. (4) The words "happening of the alleged negligence," in the section referred to, should either be construed to read, "happening of the injury or damages resulting from the alleged negligence," or it should be held that the negligence continued to "happen" up to the time that the damages resulted from it, otherwise no notice of the action or claim could be given, in compliance with the statute, in any case where the negligence had existed for more than a month before the injury resulted from it. (5) Plaintiff could recover nothing on behalf of a son of deceased who, in the circumstances and position of his father, could have had no reasonable expecta-tion of pecuniary benefit from the continuance of the life, nor on behalf of a nephew or an adopted child, as they do not come within the provisions of R.S.M. 1902, c. 31, or any other enabling Act.

Curle v. Brandon, 15 Man. R. 122.

-Non-repair-Notice of accident-Reasonable excuse for want of.]-While the plaintiff was engaged in driving a watering cart along the street, the surface suddenly gave way, and the cart falling, or partly falling, into the hole thus caused, the plaintiff was thrown out and injured. The break in the street was caused by the falling in of a sewer pipe which had been laid some 12 or 14 feet below the surface of the ground, about 20 years before and which for 18 years had given no indications of being out of repair. In an action to recover damages for the injuries, the negligence alleged was, that the street was at this time, and for a long time previous had been, out of repair and dangerous for travel, to the knowledge of the defendants; that the bed of the street was of quicksand; and that the sewer pipe had been improperly and negligently laid therein:-Held, upon the evidence, reversing the judgment of a Divisional Court, 8 O.L.R. 391, that there was not sufficient evidence of the existence of surface indications of danger below, which the defendants could be charged with negligence, in not having attended to before the day of the accident; and that, in the circumstances, negligence could not be imputed to the defendants either in the original construction of the sewer or the absence of subsequent examina-tion and inspection. Semble, as regards the question whether there was reasonable excuse for omission to give the statutory notice of the accident under s. 606 of the Municipal Act, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19 (O.), that what may constitute reasonable excuse is not defined and must depend very much upon the circumstances of the particular case. Where there is actual knowledge or verbal notice, it may be regarded as an element of the excuse, but something more is required. The fact of the accident, by itself, is not a reasonable excuse, if it is not accompanied by some disabling circumstance. The plaintiff was not misled by any one into not giving notice, and was under no disability except that of ignorance of the law. Armstrong v. Canada Atlantic Railway Co. (1902), 4 O.L.R. 560, referred to.

-By-law of council to close street and land-Street shown on registered plan but not taken over or improved by municipality.]-(1) When the owner of land has registered a plan of sub-divi-sion of it into lots and showing a street and has sold lots lying alongside and facing on the street, he is bound by the plan and cannot, without the consent of the purchasers, close up the street and retake the land composing it, and what he could not do himself the council of the municipality has no right to do for him by passing a by-law effecting that result. (2) When it clearly appears that a by-law of a municipal council has been passed for an improper purpose, it should be quashed as being an abuse of the powers conferred on the council by the Municipal Act. Re Morton and Township of St. Thomas (1881), 6 A.R. at p. 325, followed. (3) Under section 667 and subsection (d) of section 693 of the Municipal Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 116, the power of a council to sell roads stopped up by them is restricted to original road allowances and to public roads which have been duly dedicated as such and over which the council has established its jurisdiction, and is not conferred in the case of a street simply shown on a private plan of sub-division and which the council has not improved or assumed any liability to repair. (4) The approval by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, pursuant to subsection (c) of section 694 of the Municipal Act, has not the effect of making valid a by-law which is unauthorized by the Act. (5) The promulgation of a by-law, under the provisions of sections 425 and 426 of the Act, cannot have the effect of validating a by-law which the council has not power to pass. Such promulgation simply cures defects in the substance or form of the by-law and in the steps leading up to the passing of it.

— Dedication—Expropriation — Presumption—User.] — K. brought an action against D. and R. for trespass to her land in laying pipes to carry water to a public institution. The land had been used as a public highway for many years, and there was an old statute authorizing its expropriation for public purposes, but the records of the municipality which would contain the proceedings on such expropriation, if any had been taken, were lost:-Held, reversing the judgment of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia (20 N.S. Rep. 95), that in the absence of any evidence of dedication of the road it must be presumed that the proceedings under the statute were rightly taken and K. could not recover. Held, per Strong, J .:-Long occupation and enjoyment unexplained will raise a presumption of a grant not only of an easement, but of the land itself; and not only of a grant, but of acts of legislation and matters of record.

Dickson v. Kearney (1888), 1 S.C. Cas. 53.

-Streets-Power to raise the level-Liability for injury to owners of abutting property.]-The city of Saint John, by its charter, had power to alter and repair its streets. Under this charter the corporation frequently altered the level of streets. An Act of the legislature recited that, owing to irregularities of the ground upon which the city was situate, it had been found expedient to make alterations in the level of streets, that this had rendered it necessary for proprietors of houses to erect steps and stairways to obtain access to their properties, that the corporation had undertaken to authorize this being done, but doubts had arisen as to its power so to do. The statute thereupon proceeded to empower the council of the corporation to permit such steps to be placed upon the highway so long as they did not encroach beyond a certain distance. In 1874 the corporation raised the level of Church street supporting the work in front of the plaintiff's house by a wall and placing a fence thereon, cutting off his direct access to the street. The plaintiff claimed first, that the defendants had no statutory authority to do the work complained of, and, secondly, that, in the construction of the work, the defendants had acted arbitrarily and oppressively, even if they had the statu-tory power to raise the level of the street. At the trial the plaintiff was nonsuited, the Court holding that, in raising the level of the street, the corporation had acted within the powers granted by its charter and that there was no evi dence to support the contention that the council had acted arbitrarily. On appeal to the full Court it was held, the Chief Justice and Duff, J., dissenting, that the nonsuit should be set aside, and a new

On appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada:-Held, Fournier and Henry, JJ., dissenting, that the judgment of the full Court (18 N.B. Rep. 636) should be set aside, and the nonsuit granted at the trial restored. Held, per Gwynne, J. that by the Act of Incorporation and other Acts of the legislature, the power of altering and repairing the highway was restricted by no condition save the implied one that the work should be done so as not to constitute a public nuisance; and, if not a public nuisance, the convenience of all private persons, however great the damages suffered, had to yield to the public interest.

City of Saint John v. Pattison, (1880), 1 S.C. Cas. 537.

-General and long continued bad repair -Loss of profits thereby to owner of omnibus line.]—W. was the proprietor of an omnibus line plying in certain streets of the city of Halifax during the winter of 1881-2, under a license from the city. About the 10th January the snow fell very heavily, and by about the 20th, owing to the snow being thrown from the sidewalks into the street, the roadway became filled with pitch holes, some of which were four feet deep. Other severe snow storms through the winter aggravated the condition of the road. The plaintiff alleged that, by reason of this bad repair of the highway, he had suffered damages to a large amount by the wrecking of his carriages, straining of his horses, breaking of harness, etc., ana loss of profits through the diminution in traffic on his 'bus line. Plaintiff complained to the city authorities, asking that men be put to work to level the snow between the sidewalks, but his request was refused. The action was tried before McDonald, C.J., and a jury, when a verdict for the plaintiff for $600 damages was found. The defendants obtained a rule to set aside the verdict and for a new trial, which after argument, was discharged by the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia (16 N.S. Rep. 371). On appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada:- Held, the Chief Justice and Gwynne, J., dissenting, that the judgment of the Court below should be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs. Held, per Strong, J., that, under the Act incorporating the defendants and subsequent Acts amending the same, not only were the defendants liable to indictment for breach of their public duties in respect of the matters complained of, but the plaintiff could also maintain an action as a person especially injured thereby. Held, per Strong, J., that the evidence was amply sufficient to warrant the trial Judge in leaving the case to the jury, and the condition of the street being one which might have been remedied by levelling the hillocks which had been formed, and which caused the damage the respondent complained of, the verdict should be upheld. Held, per Strong, J., that the loss of profits claimed was not too remote, but was quite as much an immediate and natural cause of the injury as was the loss of custom in Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co. v. Gidlow, L.R. 7 H.L. 517. Held per Henry J., that the city of Halifax was liable for the negligence of the street commissioners although they were appointed by the city council and not by the Court of General Sessions as provided by R.S. N.S. (4 ser.) c. 49.

City of Halifax v. Walker, 1 S.C. Cas. 569.

-Boundary roads-Bridges-Deviation of boundary road-Liability of adjoining counties.]-The county of Victoria adjoins the county of Peterborough on the west, and, up to 1863, the counties were united for municipal and other purposes. The boundary line road between county of Peterborough, and the lots merely passed between the 10th concession of the township of Verulam in the county of Victoria and the 19th concession of the township of Harvey in the county of Peterborough, and the lots in the latter concession from 1 to 15 constituted a range of broken lots forming a narrow strip of land fronting on the west side of Pigeon Lake, and separated by that body of water from the rest of the township. The boundary line road between these counties deviated at several places, owing to natural obstructions, and near the village of Bobcaygeon, which was wholly situate in the township of Verulam, the road in deviating from the boundary line crossed the two outlets of Sturgeon Lake, and bridges were built there, during the union at the joint expense of the two counties, and were treated as subject to a joint control and liability. Viet. c. 47 (O.), which came into force on the 5th March, 1880, that portion of the township of Harvey, lying on the west of Pigeon Lake was detached from Harvey and joined to Verulam for all purposes. The bridges near the village of Bobcaygeon having got into disrepair, the defendants refused to admit any liability therefor, contending that, since the passing of 42 Vict. the repair of these bridges rested wholly with the county of Verulam. At the trial before Robertson, J., it was held, (15 O.R. 446) that, notwithstanding the provisions of 42 Viet., the bridges remained under the joint control and liability of the two counties. On appeal to the Court of Appeal, (15 A.R. 617), it was held that by virtue of the legislation, Verulam had become a township bordering on a lake, and that the boundary line between the two townships, which was also the county boundary line, had now become the centre line of Pigeon Lake, and not, as formerly, on the original road allowance between Verulam and Harvey. On appeal by the plaintiff to the Supreme Court of Canada:-Held, that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs. Per Taschereau, Gwynne and Patterson, JJ., that since the passing of 42 Vict. c. 47, the boundary line must be regarded as having always been as by that Act established, with the range of broken lots wholly in the township of Verulam in the county of Victoria, and with the boundary between Verulam and Harvey running along the centre line of Pigeon Lake; and that sections 535 and 538, c. 184 R.S.O. (1887), no application as those sections only applied to cases where the intention of the survey was that there should be a road upon the boundary line, but, viewing the boundary line as located by the Act of 1880 in and through Pigeon Lake, it could not be said that the bridges in question were upon the road between the two townships, or on a deviation from such road.

-Dangerous machine in highway - Use by independent contractors-Precautions -Injury to passerby-Liability of corporation and contractors.]-In a public and busy street of a city a horse which was being driven became frightened by a steam roller engaged in repairing an intersecting street, and swerving sud-denly upon the plaintiff, who was passing on a bicycle, injured him. The roller was the property of the city corporation, and was being used by paving contractors un-der a provision in the contract. The work was being done for the corporation, and it necessitated the use of the roller. It was shown that the roller was a machine likely to frighten horses of ordinary courage and steadiness; that of this the city corporation's servants were aware; and that proper precautions were not taken on the occasion in question to warn persons of the approach of the roller to the street on which the horse was passing:-Held, that the place where the work was to be done and the means by and the manner in which it was to be performed made it incumbent on the city corporation, if they had been doing the work otherwise than through a contractor, to see that proper precautions were taken to guard against danger to the public from the use of the roller; and the corporation could not rid themselves of this obligation by intrusting the work to a contractor, Penny v. Wimbledon Urban District Council, [1898] 2 Q.B. 212, [1899], 2 Q.B. 72, followed. Held, also, that the contractors were bound equally with the corporation to take notice that the roller was likely to cause danger to the public, and their failure to take proper precautions occasioned the accident. Judgment of Meredith, C.J.C.P., affirmed. Kirk v. City of Toronto, 8 O.L.R. 730

(C.A.).

-Highways-Deviation - Boundary line road.]-Held, Osler, J.A., dissenting, that the road in question was a boundary line road within the meaning of 3 Edw. VII. c. 19, s. 617, sub-s. 2, notwithstanding its deviation for the purpose of avoiding the expense of building bridges across a river.

-Dedication of highway-Public user -Crown lands - Locatee-Acquiescence -Subsequent grant without reservation.]-In 1834 an order of the quarter sessions was made under 50 Geo. III. for the opening of a highway through several lots, the title to one of which was still in the Crown, although it had been recently occupied under a license from the Crown. The road described in the order was never opened, but another road following the same general direction, was opened across this lot and others in 1835 or 1836 and was ever after regularly travelled and used as a highway, fenced off from the lot referred to, improved from time to time by statute labour and public money. and treated by the locatee and his successors in title as a public highway. In 1904 the plaintiff, claiming to be the successor in title of the original locatee, established his right, to the satisfaction of the Crown, and a patent was issued to him in which no reservation or mention of any road was made:-Held, that the road in question had become established as a public highway, the plaintiff had no right to close it, and the defendant, as one of the public, had a right to remove the plaintiff's obstructions, and Fraser v. Diamond, 10 O.L.R. 90 (Street. J.).

-Nuisance-Piling ties on highway.] -A number of worn out railway ties were taken from the line of railway during ordinary working hours by section men employed by the defendant company and were piled on a highway at a railway crossing, the foreman of the section men intending to take them to his house for firewood. It was the custom of the section men to get rid of the worn out ties either by burning them beside the track or by taking them home for firewood. The plaintiff's horse while being driven along the highway shied at the ties and the plaintiff was injured:—Held, that there was evidence to support the jury's finding that the ties had been placed upon the highway in the course of the employment of the section men and that the defendants were therefore prima facie responsible, but that there being no finding that the ties were a nuisance in the sense of being calculated to frighten horses generally, this being an essential element of liability, a new trial was necessary. Judgment of a Divisional Court reversed.

-Road inspector-Action against property owner-Declaration.]-A road inspector who sues to recover the price of materials for and work on a sidewalk and public road in front of defendant's property, must show in his declaration that the work was ordered by the municipal corporation, and if he does not set up a by-law to that effect, his action will be dismissed on inscription en droit.

-Negligence-Repairs-Want of warning-Proximate cause - Horse beyond control.]-Where two causes combine to produce an injury, both of which are in their nature proximate, the one being a defect in a highway and the other some occurrence for which neither party is responsible, a municipal corporation is liable in damages if the injury would not have been sustained but for the defect in the highway. The defendants were held liable in damages because while they were repairing a bridge on a highway they failed to give warning or put up a barrier, and an accident happened in consequence of a driver's attempt to turn suddenly off the highway when he came to the bridge, his horse at the time being almost beyond his control in consequence of a break in the harness.

Thomas v. Township of North Norwich, 9 O.L.R. 666 (D.C.).

- Elevated highway - Repair - Guardrails - Defective harness-Negligence of driver.]-The female plaintiff was being driven by her mother over a highway at a point where a hill had been partly cut down and the valley filled up making a good level road from 7 to 10 feet above the natural level of the ground. The horses and conveyance belonged to the mother and the neck-yoke and harness were defective to her knowledge, but there was no evidence that the daughter was aware of it. The neck-voke broke, the control of the horses was lost and the conveyance went over the bank and the daughter was injured:-Held, that it was the defendant's duty to keep the highways in such a condition of repair as the reasonable demands of the traffic over them from time to time required, having regard to their means of performing such duty; that the failure of the defendants to place guard-rails or a protection along the embankment was a breach of that outy, and that their fault was the proximate cause of the female plaintiff's injury. The driver was driving carelessly and the defective harness and her carelessness largely contributed to the accident. that although her contributory negligence would have been an answer to any claim by herself, it could not be said that it was the proximate cause of the daughter's injury. Held, also, that the mother's negligence should not be attributed to the daughter who was ignorant of the state of the harness, etc., and in the absence of such knowledge the defence of her contributory negligence failed.

Plant v. Township of Normandy, 10
O.L.R. 16 (Meredith, J.).

-Repair of sidewalk-Proper construction-Incomplete state - Misadventure.] -The defendants were taking up an old and putting down a new board sidewalk on a street and had completed the work up to a point somewhere in front of plaintiff's shop when the workmen wers taken away to perform some urgent work in another part of the town and were away about a day and a half. Plaintiff, who was aware of what was being done and of the incomplete state in which the work was left, drove up in a cart and in alighting slipped off the unfaished end of the sidewalk and was injured:—Held, that the defendants were not liable for the injury.

Belleisle v. Town of Hawkesbury, 8 O.L.R. 694 (Britton, J.).

-Crown reservation for road-Towns Incorporation Act, R.S. c. 71, s. 170-Effect of investing streets in town-Expropriation proceedings.]—Defendant, in making application for a grant of land from the Crown represented that the land applied for was "near" the town of Sydney, when in fact it was in said town. that the land was "unoccupied and unimproved," when in truth, to defendant's knowledge, it was then in the occupation of the Dominion Steel Co., being a part of land which had been expropriated by the town and conveyed to the company for use in connection with their works: -Held, affirming the judgment of Ritchie, J., in favour of plaintiff, that the Crown having been induced by false suggestions and fraudulent concealment to make a grant which it would not have made if the Crown officers had been properly in-formed, the grant must be set aside. The land in question was a portion of what was known as the "Cornish town road," being land reserved by the Crown many years previously for the purpose of a public road or highway, but which had never been used, and was wider than was required for the purpose, and out of which some grants had been made. By the provisions of the Towns Incorporation Act, R.S. c. 71, s. 170, all public streets, roads, highways, etc., were vested absolutely in the town, and the town council was given full control over the same. Quære, whether, after the passage of this Act, the Crown had any further control over the portion of the Cornish town road lying within the limits of the town. Held, that the statute was not to be construed as not applying to the road in question merely because it had not been used or was wider than was required. Also, that the grant was one which the Court had jurisdiction to vacate. The right of the town to expropriate the land in question was contested on the ground that, being Crown land, the Act enabling the expropriation to be made, (Acts of 1899, c. 84) did not apply. Held, that the absence of authority, if any, was removed by the Act ratifying and confirming the expropriation proceedings (Acts of 1900, c. 66).

-Road-Dedication to public use.] -Dedication of a road in a municipality as a public street or road is sufficiently established by the following facts: (1) Registration by the proprietor of a subdivision plan, and deposit of book of reference, on which the road is indicated and described as a street or road. (2) The opening and laying out of the land by the proprietor as a street, and the placing of sidewalks thereon. (3) The free and uninterrupted use of the street by the public for more than ten years; (4) Exploiting of the adjacent land by the proprietor and selling lots as bounded by a public street. (5) Use of the street by the public as the only direct access to the railway station. (6) Acceptance of the dedication by the public and the municipality-the uninterrupted use of the street being a sufficient acceptance.

Shorey v. Cook, 26 Que. S.C. 203 (Dunlop, J.).

-Deviation and closing street - Lands injuriously affected.]-The claimants alleged that their lands were injuriously affected by the doing of certain acts au thorized by Clause 2 of the Tripartile Agreement and two by-laws passed by the respondents—(1) Authorizing and permitting the Grand Trunk Railway Co. to place, maintain, and use certain tracks on the Esplanade opposite the claimants' premises; (2) deviating and closing a portion of Berkeley street. The premises of the claimants were 125 feet to the west of Berkeley street and south of the Esplanade. The Tripartite Agreement was validated by 55 Viet. (Ont.) c. 90, s. 2, the latter providing that the respondents should pay to any person whose lands are injuriously affected by any act of the corporation in the execution of said agreement, compensation, which, if not agreed upon, should be ascertained by arbitration. The arbitrators awarded $100 as damages for the deviation and closing of Berkeley street, and found that the other matters, for which compensation was claimed, were not acts done by the respondents in execution of the Tripartite Agreement, for which the claimants were entitled to any compensation from the respondents. The award also provided that the arbitrators' and stenographers' fees and costs of the award should be paid by the respondents in any event:-Held, 1. -Procés-verbal - Amendment-Notice.1 -Neither the plaintiff nor his land's were subjected to any charge in respect to the opening and maintenance of a street ordered by an homologated proces-verbal:

-Held, that the municipal council could not, by by-law, amend the proces-verbal so as to subject the plaintiff or his lands to a charge for these works unless public notice had first been given showing plainly that, by the contemplated by-law. they would be called upon to contribute therefor. A public notice addressed to "all whom it may concern" that the municipal council of the parish of St. Alexandre, at a sitting to be held on Tuesday, the 13th October, inst., at 8 o'clock a.m., would pass a by-law to amend the proces-verbal of . . . respecting the works to be done on the streets therein mentioned and the persons affected, is insufficient as regards the plaintiff who was not until then interested in the procès-verbal or the said streets, nor affected thereby. Consequently, the plaintiff could, by action in the Superior Court, cause the said by-law to be quashed as against him for illegality, since he had had no opportunity of being heard before the council and showing that he should not be subject to such charge.

Bouchard v. Corp. of St. Alexandre, Q.R. 25 S.C. 415 (Sup. Ct.), affirmed on review, 31 Oct., 1904.

— Work on road—Taxation—Default—Sale of land.]—The cost of work on a road done at the expense of an owner of land in default under Arts. 397 et seq. M.C., is only assimilated to a tax and recoverable as such when it has been established by a judgment given on proceedings taken under the Municipal Code.

The extract sent by the secretary-treasurer of a local municipality to the secretarytreasurer of the county, pursuant to Art. 373 M.C., and the notice given and published by the latter under Arts. 988-9 M.C., should, on pain of nullity, contain the amount of the taxes affecting the immovables mentioned therein. The sale, under Arts. 1000-1 M.C. of an immovable described in the said extract and notice as being charged with a sum exceeding that actually due for taxes, is void. The prescription of two years provided for by Art. 1015 M.C. applies only to voidable sales and not to those which are avoided by a radical defect.

-Non-repair of highway-Injury to pedestrian-Sidewalk - Supervision.] - In an action for d'amages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff from a fall upon a sidewalk in a town, it appeared that the defect in the sidewalk was slight in character-not conspicuous or notorious - on a street comparatively little frequented, over which there was weekly supervision, and that the defect had not existed more than six days before the plaintiff was hurt, was not actually noticed by any officer of the municipality, and that no complaint was lodged:-Held, that notice of the condition of the sidewalk was not to be attributed to the municipality.

McNiroy v. Town of Bracebridge, 10 O.L.R. 360 (Boyd, C.).

-Non-repair of highway—Jury notice.]—In an action for damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff from a fall upon a highway under the control of the defendant municipality, the statement of claim alleged that the accident to the plaintiff was caused by the faulty, improper and negligent construction of the pavement, which, being built upon an incline and having a smooth surface, "would call for the ordinary rough finish which it is customary and prudent to build under said conditions:"—Held, that the action was for "injuries sustained through non-repair" of the highway, within the meaning of s. 104 of the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 51, and that a jury notice was therefore irregular.

-Obstruction to street-Damages-Allegation of knowledge of obstruction-Nonfeasance.]-In an action against the city of St. John for damages sustained in an accident caused by an obstruction in one of the streets of the city, the declaration alleged that the defendant wrongfully and negligently allowed a sidewalk in one of the streets to be obstructed by a pile of lumber, and wrongfully and negligently allowed it to remain there for an unreasonable time, without lights or other signals thereon, whereby the plaintiff was thrown down and sustained the injury complained of:-Held, that as the declaration did not allege that defendants had knowledge of the obstruction, it disclosed a mere non-feasance, and was bad on demurrer.

Rolsten v. City of St. John, 36 N.B.R. 574.

—Closing highway—Property injuriously affected.]—A property on the west side of a street running north and south was held to have been 'injuriously affected'' within the meaning of section 437 of the Municipal Act, 1903, by the closing of a street running from the first street in an easterly direction opposite the property in question and an award of compensation by the official arbitrator to the owner of the property was upheld, the principle of Metropolitan Board of Works v. The lots were first sold under the plan in 1876. Subsequent legislation which was retroactive, declared that allowances for roads laid out in cities, towns and villages, fronting upon which lots had been sold, should be public highways:—Held, that the road in question was a public highway and subject to the juris-

Semble, section 617 (a) is not to be read as applying only to bridges crossing rivers, streams, ponds, or lakes, to the exclusion of bridges crossing ravines.

- Dedication-Acceptance by public --User.]-An action was brought by the city of Toronto against the G. T. Ry. Co., to determine whether or not a street crossed by the railway was a public highway prior to 1857, when the company obtained its right of way. It appeared on the hearing that, in 1850, the trustees of the General Hospital conveyed land adjoining the street describing it in the deed as the western boundary of allowance for road, and in another conveyance, made in 1853, they mention in the description a street running south along said lot. Subsequent conveyances of the said land prior to 1857 also recognized the allowance for a road: -Held, (Idington, J., dissenting), that the said conveyances were acts of dedication of the street as a public highway. first deed executed by the Hospital trustees, and a plan produced at the hearing, showed that the street extended across the railway track and down to the River Don, but at the time the portion between the track and the river was a marsh. Evidence was given of use by the public of the street down to the edge of the marsh. Held (Idington, J., dissenting). that the use of such portion was applicable to the whole dedicated road down to the river, and the evidence of user was sufficient to show an acceptance by the public of the highway.

The jury found, in answer to questions submitted to them, that the town was guilty of negligence in not properly guarding the excavation, but that the driver of the carriage could have avoided the accident by the exercise of reasonable care:-Held, on an equal division of the Court, that the judgment entered on the findings, in defendant's favour, must be affirmed.

-Negligence-Allowing piles of lumber to remain on highway.]-On the side of a road allowance in front of a saw mill large quantities of logs, bark and rubbish were allowed to be piled and to be left there. The plaintiffs were driving with their horse and buggy along the allowance; while passing the place in question, the horse became frightened and swerved from the beaten track in the direction of the pile, and in attempting to turn back again into the road the front wheel of the buggy came in contact with a log lying about two or three feet from the travelled way; whereby the buggy was overturned, and the plaintiffs thrown out and injured:-Held, that the defendants were liable therefor.

The plaintiff, who was not very familiar with the city, was walking after dark along the street, when he fell into the hole, and was so seriously injured that he had to be taken to the hospital, where he remained for over three weeks. two of which he was obliged to remain in bed, his condition being such that he was mentally incapable of giving to the city the notice of the accident within the seven days prescribed by section 606 (3) of the Municipal Act, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19 (O.). It appeared that the city was not prejudiced by the want of notice:—Held, that the street was out of repair, so as to render the city liable to the plaintiff; and that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff had shown sufficient excuse for not giving the notice, O'Connor v. -Repairs to highway-Bridge carried away by flood-Continuing cause of action.]-(1) A private individual who suffers special damages caused by the negle t of a municipal council to replace a bridge on a public highway that had been carried away by flood is entitled to recover for such damages in an action against the municipality under section 667 of the Municipal Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 116. (2) A mandamus to replace the bridge should not be granted in such a case, as there is another adequate remedy, viz.: to proceed by indictment, but the refusal of the mandamus should be without prejudice to the plaintiff's right so to proceed. (3) Under sub-section (b) of above section the plaintiff's claim for damages should be limited to such as he had suffered since one month prior to the service of his notice of action on the municipality. (4) The cause of action being a continuing one, damages should, under Rule 566 of the King's Bench Act, be assessed up to the date of the delivery of the judgment. (5) It is proper to bring such an action in the Court of King's Bench, even if the damages allowed should be within the jurisdiction of the County Court, and the plaintiff should have full costs.

-Repair-Notice.]-Sources of recurring and repeated danger on a street are to be watched and guarded against by a municipality. Where a contractor for taking down a building had laid planks on a sidewalk, which were fastened at both ends with iron straps to keep them together, which straps were raised from time to time by teams and wagons passing over them, leaving a space between the straps and the planks into which a passer-by put her foot and was thrown to the ground and injured:-Held, that when the normal condition of a sidewalk is disturbed, it is the primary duty of a municipality to see that in its altered state, it is kept in proper repair, and in a busy and much frequented place in excellent repair; and that when the source of danger has existed in a crowded street of a city for two weeks or even somewhat less, notice of the want of repair and of dangerous condition will be attributed to the authorities. In this case the corporation was held liable notwithstanding there was evidence of repair by nailing down the straps when discovered to be loose. Judgment of Britton, J., affirmed.

Gignee v. City of Toronto, 11 O.L.R. 611 (D.C.).

-Snow fences-By-law-Conditional undertaking by municipality to pay for fences.]—The defendants' council passed a by-law enacting:—"that where the road is liable to be blocked with snow in winter, and where in the opinion of the council such drifts would be prevented by the removal of any . . . fence and replacing the same by wire or other fence, the council may order the removal of such fence, and in the removal of such fence or fences by the owners and the erection of such wire or other fences as the council shall direct, the parties erecting such wire or other fences shall be paid out of the general funds of the municipality a sum not exceeding," etc. The plaintiff before erecting certain wire fencing submitted his contract for it to the council through A., and at a session of the council, and in the presence of the township clerk and several councillors, the reeve expressed to A, the opinion and order of the council that the plaintiff's existing fence should be removed, and its direction for or approval of the erection of the proposed wire fence; and A. communicated this order and direction to the plaintiff, and thereupon the plaintiff removed his existing fence and had the wire fencing in question erected:--Held, that the defendants were liable to pay for the wire fencing. The by-law was a conditional undertaking by them to pay, and the plaintiff had fulfilled the required conditions. By the Act respecting Snow Fences, R.S.O. 1897, c. 240, s. 1:-"If the council and the owner cannot agree in respect to compensation to be paid by the council, then the same shall be settled by arbitration in the manner provided in the Municipal Act and the award so made shall be binding upon all parties":-Held. that this did not preclude the jurisdiction of the Court where as here the parties were not merely unable to agree as to the amount of compensation, but the municipal corporation wholly repudiated —Street widening—Highway—Expropriation—By-law—Resolution.]—On suit by three ratepayers of a municipality to set aside a resolution of the council and for reimbursement of moneys paid as indemnity, in virtue thereof, for lands said to have been appropriated by the municipality for widening streets:—Held, that, in the absence of a by-law authorizing the expropriation of the lands for such purpose the resolution was invalid and should be anaulled and that the moneys so paid should be returned to the municipality.

Marsan v. Guay, Q.R. 28 S.C. 145 (Sup. Ct.).

-Township bridge-User by other municipalities-Repair and maintenance.]-By section 617a of the Con. Mun. Act. 3 Edw. VII. c. 19 (O.), where a township bridge is over 300 feet in length the township council may, by resolution, declare that by reason of such length, and that it is being used by inhabitants of municipalities other than the township, and is situated on a highway, being an important road and affording means of communication to several municipalities, it is unjust that the township should be liable for its maintenance and repair and that such liability should be imposed on the county, an application may be made to the county Judge to have it so declared:-Held, that such user need not be by the inhabitants of municipalities within the county, the material point being its extensive use for travel by neighbouring municipalities, whether in or out of the county; nor that the road which affords such means of communication should either be a line of

-Private road-User by the public with permission of the owner.]-A road originally opened as a private road on private property will not be presumed to have become a public road in the possession of the municipality in which it lies, merely because the owner has allowed the public the use of it for six years without objection. The municipal corporation cannot therefore proceed en complainte against the owner who closes the road.

Township of Onslow v. McGough, 30 Que. S.C. 256.

-Procès-verbal for maintenance of road-Notice of meeting of interested ratepayers -Insufficiency.]-(1) A public notice by a special superintendent of a meeting of interested ratepayers, under Article 796, M.C., that it will be held upon the ground in the said road, the length of the latter being four or five miles, is void for uncertainty of place. (2) A procès verbal and report deposited for homologation by a special superintendent must show on their face that all the formalities required by law were duly complied with. procès-verbal will be declared void after homologation when the report does not show that the notice for convening the meeting of the interested ratepayers was given and published seven clear days before the day appointed therefor. (3) A proces-verbal which imposes the maintenance of a front road on the owners of parcels of land of thirty arpents or less in width who already have one to maintain, is null and void. (4) A process-verbal which imposes the maintenance of a front road on the ratepayers, so that the portion of each is longer than twice the width of his land, is null and void. (5) A procèsverbal which lays the maintenance of a road on ratepayers who have little or no use for it and which is necessary and almost essential to other ratepayers of a different range of the municipality, as an outlet, and who are not made to contribute to it, is unjust and oppressive and the Court will quash it as such at the suit of the parties interested.

Beauchemin v. Township of Roxton, 31 Que. S.C. 86.

-Regulations-Quashing.] - Regulations as to highways are left to the discretionary power of municipal corporations in the mode provided by the municipal code. The recourse by action to annul them, tounded on the right of supervision and reformation by the Superior Court, by virtue of Article 50 C.C.P., is only open in the case of abuse and injustice, arising out of bad faith and so grave as to amount to oppression.

Pepin v. Village of Massueville, Q.R. 15 K.B. 261.

-- Mandamus-Municipal corporations.] --The recourse to the writ of mandamus to compel a municipal corporation to perform a legal duty is not open to another corporation which is equally bound to the performance of such obligation and which is also in default. Therefore, when two municipalities have the maintenance, in different proportions, of a bridge which connects them and is in need of repairs the one cannot proceed by mandamus against the other if it has not furnished its own share of the maintenance.

Village of Gatineau Point v. City of

Hull, Q.R. 15 K.B. 354.

-Compensation for lands injuriously affected-Closing road-"Advantage derived from contemplated work.'']—Under section 437 of the Consolidated Municipal Aet, 1903, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19 (O.), every council shall make to the owners of real property taken by the corporation or in-juriously affected by the exercise of its powers due compensation for any damages necessarily resulting from the latter "beyond any advantage which the claimant may derive from the contemplated work: -Held, that this means the "contemplated work" of the corporation alone, and that a person injuriously affected by the elosing of a road, part of a scheme for granting facilities to a lumber company, was entitled to compensation without any diminution because of the company's mills enhancing the value of his lands. Under section 629 no road established shall be closed whereby any person will be excluded from ingress or egress over such road, unless, in addition to compensation, some other convenient way is provideo:-Held, that a road need not, in order to come within the above section. actually form a boundary of land, provided there is ingress or egress to and from such land over it.

In re Brown and City of Owen Sound, 14 O.L.R. 627.

-Liability for non-repair of highway --Notice of action.]-Under section 722 of the Winnipeg Charter, which is the same in effect as section 667 of the Municipal Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 116, the corporation will be liable in damages for injury sustained by a person in consequence of a fall caused by stepping on and so breaking down a rotten plank in a sidewalk laid down by the corporation on a public highway, and the said sidewalk being very old and decayed underneath, it being shown that the defect, although not apparent, would have been detected if there had been a proper and adequate system of in-spection employed. The notice of the action given by the plaintiff, pursuant to sub-section (b) of the same section, stated that she claimed from defendants $1,000 damages with respect to the matters therein set out and that she would commence an action in the Court of King's Bench to recover that sum for injuries sustained by her through the omission and default of defendants to keep in repair a public sidewalk on the east side of Main street between Polson and Bannerman avenues in said city. The accident happened at a point between Polson avenue and Atlantic avenue which is between Polson and Bannerman avenues. It was given within a month from the date of the injury, but did not state such date or the nature of the injury or how it had occurred, or the place more specifically than as above. The trial Judge gave plaintiff a verdict for $3,000 damages:-Held, that the statute, which only requires "notice of any such claim or action," should receive a liberal construction, and requirements, not specifically stated and not necessarily implied, should not be read into it, and that the notice given was sufficient. Curle v. Brandon (1905), 15 M.R. 122; Jones v. Bird (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 837; Martins v. Upcher (1842), 3 Q.B. 662, and Bond v. Conmee (1889), 16 A.R. 398, followed, Clarkson v. Musgrave (1882), 9 Q.B.D. 386, and St. John v. Christie (1892), 21 S.C.R. 1, distinguished on the ground of differences in the wording of the respective statutes. Held, also, that, as plaintiff's injuries had resulted much more seriously after the notice was given than she anticipated, she was not precluded by the terms of the notice from claiming and recovering in the action a larger amount than $1,000.

Iveson v. Winnipeg, 16 Man. R. 352.

—Streets, property of corporation in —Vancouver Incorporation Act.]—Section 218 of the Vancouver Incorporation Act, 1900, provides, in part, that every public street... in the city shall be vested in the city (subject to any right in the soil which the individuals who laid out such road, street, bridge or highway may have reserved). In an action for an injunction to restrain the corporation from digging and blasting for the construction of a drain on a street within the corporate limits, plaintiff submitted that a proper construction of the word "vest" as used in section 218, did not authorize the corporation to dig to an excessive depth:— Held, adopting the ruling in Roche v. Ryan (1891), 22 Ont. R. 107, that the word 'vest' was not a vesting of the surface merely, but is wide enough to include the freehold as well, but, held, on the evicence, that it had not been shown by the plaintiffs that substantial or irreparable injury would be sustained by them through the construction of the drain.

Cotton v. City of Vancouver, 12 B.C.R. 497.

-Excavation-Non-repair of highway.]--Plaintiff's statement of claim, in an action for injuries sustained by falling into an open sewer dug in the street by the defendants, alleged that such injuries "were caused by the negligence of the defendants in not securely guarding said sewer and making same safe for passengers using said street:"--Held, that the failure of the defendants to guard the excavation was non-repair within the meaning of section 104 of the Judicature Act, and a motion to strike out the jury notice was allowed.

Burns v. City of Toronto, 13 O.L.R. 109.

-Procès-verbal in abeyance-Resolution of municipal council ordering works.]-(1) A proces-verbal for the opening of a municipal road, made and homologated before the statute 60 Vict. c. 27 (Que.), remains in force until it is abrogated by a subsequent procès-verbal or by-law. A municipal council has therefore the power by resolution to order the performance of work specified in such a procès-verbal which has been allowed to remain in abeyance for a period of over forty years. (2) A procès-verbal cannot remain in force for a part and become inoperative for another part under 60 Vict. c. 27, s. 7 (Que.). When therefore it is made and homologated for the opening of two roads, one a front road and the other a by-road, and its provisions are carried out in respect of the latter, it is in force as a whole and does not become prescribed in respect to the front road. (3) Prescription of a process verbal under the statute must be expressly pleaded by the party who seeks to avail himself of it. (4) The above statute has no retrospective operation and applies only to procès-verbeaux made after it came into force. (5) The rule of Article 825 M.C., that no one is bound to maintain more than one front road on the same lot of thirty arpents depth affords no ground of annulment of a proces-verbal, but only of application to the municipal authorities to shift the burden in conformity with it. (6) Irregularities of procedure are not sufficient grounds for an action to set aside municipal proceedings but of appeal or petition to quash provided in the Municipal Code for the purpose.

Liability for non-repair of road—Work done on part of road distant from place

-Liability for non-repair of road-Work done on part of road distant from place where accident occurs-Evidence of notice.]-(1) If work is performed on a publie road by a municipality to facilitate travel between points on both sides of the place where the work is done, so as to provide a completed road between such points for the use of the public, the municipality is liable, under section 667 of the Municipal Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 116, in case an accident happens by reason of nonrepair of the road at any place between those points, although no work has been done at or near that particular place. (2) When an obstruction in the shape of a barbed wire fence has been allowed to remain across part of a highway for more than three months at that season of the year during which road repairs would naturally be made, notice of its existence should be imputed to the municipality notwithstanding the absence of direct evidence of notice.

Couch v. Municipality of Louise, 16 Man. R. 656.

—Dedication—User by public.]—In an action for a declaration that a portion of the River road lying between Burgar and Dorothy streets, in the Town of Welland, was not a highway, but the private property of the plaintiffs:—Held, reversing the judgment of Anglin, J., 12 O.L.R. 362, that the evidence did not establish dedication, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed. Held, also, that the Attorney-General was not a necessary party.

Macoomb et al. v. Town of Welland, 13 O.L.R. 335 (C.A.).

-Obstruction-Municipal corporation -Mis-feasance-Liability for wrongful acts of committee of council-Injury to traveller.]-The municipal council of a township having decided to construct a ditch along a highway, under the provisions of the Ditches and Watercourses Act, appointed three of their number a committee to meet on the highway, and there to let the contract for the work by public competition. This the committee did, and, in order to indicate where the ditch was to be constructed, they drove stakes in the highway, one being near the centre of the travelled portion. The contract was let, and the stakes were left in position, projecting about six inches above the ground, and unprotected by barrier, light, or otherwise. One of the plaintiffs, in walking upon the highway struck her foot against one of the stakes, and was thrown to the ground, and injured:-Held, that the injury was caused by misfeasance, and that the municipal corporation were liable for the acts of the committee, who were acting within the scope of their authority. Damages were assessed for the plaintiff who was injured at $1,500 and for her husband at $500.

HIGHWAY.

Bibbar v. Township of Crowland, 13 O.L.R. 164 (Mulock, C.J. Ex.D.).

-Bridge over stream stopping flow of water-Destruction of highway-Duty of municipality to repair.]-Where the destruction of a highway is caused by the gradual encroachment of the sea or a take, arising from natural causes, the water occupying the former location of the highway, and whereby there is a change of ownership in the land encroachea upon, it becoming vested in the Crown, and available for purposes of navigation, there is no liability on the part of the municipality, by virtue of its duty to keep highways in repair, to replace the highway; but if the element of ownership does not arise, a duty to repair may exist where the destruction is of such a character, taking into consideration the cost of repair, that the restoration of the highway may not unreasonably be regarded as coming within the bounds of such duty. In a creek, in the Town of Dundas, a couple of dams built some sixty years ago had broken away, whereby large quantities of stones, sand and other debris were carried down and deposited in the channel adjacent to the plaintiff's land, the accumulation being added to by a bridge across the creek, built by a railway company, which choked the flow of water, the effect being that a portion of the highway in front of the plaintiff's land, and which was the only mode of ingress and egress to and from it, was washed away, rendering it difficult for two vehicles to pass each other. By removing the check to the flow of the water, caused by the bridge, and by the expenditure of $150, a roadway 30 feet wide could be furnished, while at a cost of $800 a permanent and satisfactory roadway could be provided: -Held, no question of ownership arising, and taking into consideration the cost of repair, the destruction of the highway was not of such a character as would relieve the municipality from their obligation to repair; and that they were liable to the plaintiff for the special damage he had sustained by reason of their neglect. A mandamus will not be granted in such a case. If the relief sought was as one of the public the remedy would be by indictment. An injunction was also refused, it not appearing that the municipality had interfered with the flow of the water. The judgment of Street, J., 10 O.L.R. 300, reversed.

Cummings v. Town of Dundas, 13 O.L. R. 384 (D.C.).

 Public lane—Strip of land adjoining used as part of.]—To constitute a legal possession of land, not only must there be a corporeal detention, or that quasi detention, which according to the nature of the right, is equivalent thereto, but also the intention to act as owner of the land; no legal possession is acquired by the exercise of a supposed right as one of the public. The rear portions of the plaintiff's and the defendant's lands abutted on a public lane, a strip of land between the fence erected on defendant's land and the boundary of the lane being unenclosed. The plaintiff, for over 20 years, believing this strip to be a part of the lane, had been accustomed to drive over it to get to his stable, doing so in the exercise of a supposed right as one of the public, and not as an easement to his land:-Held, that he had not acquired any right to use the strip.

Adams v. Fairweather, 13 O.L.R. 490

—Highways across railway — Right to construct.]—See Railway.

—Non-repair of streets—Right of action.]
—The provisions of the Municipal Ordinances in force in 1893, or subsequently relating to the repair of sidewalks, etc., are not applicable to the city of Calgary, although not expressly declared inapplicable by the special Ordinance incorporating the city, which was passed in that year. Although a duty to repair streets may be expressly imposed upon a municipality. no action lies against it for damages for injuries resulting from non-repair.

Clark v. City of Calgary, 6 Terr. L.R.

—Damages—Notice of action.] — When plaintiff proves that he has given the notice of action required by the Municipal Code, the failure to allege notice in his declaration is not a cause of prejudice to the defendant and not a ground for exception to the form.

Pageot v. St. Ambroise, 10 Que. P.R.

—Defective sewer—Duty of city to repair
—Notice—Misfeasance.]—If the city fails to repair a leak in one of its public sewers after notice of the defect, it is guity of a misfeasance, and is liable for damages by water finding its way from the leak into the cellar of an adjoining property. Curless v. Town of Grand Falls, 37 N.B.R. 227, followed.

McKay v. City of Saint John, 38 N.B.R.

—Action—Notice—Charter of Montreal — Unnecessary proceedings.] — The city of Montreal sued for damages caused by nonrepair of a sidewalk can set up that the notice required by its charter before bringing action was not given within the prescribed time. If the property owner whose duty it is to maintain the sidewalk in repair is sued in warranty by the city and enters a separate defence he will be obliged to pay his own costs even if the action fails as the city is not obliged to pay for two contestations when one would suffice.

Bray v. City of Montreal, 9 Que P.R. 167 (Sup. Ct.).

—Repair of road—Plea not proved—Ap peal.]—A municipal corporation which, in an action based on the bad state of its roads, pleads that said roads have been kept in good repair it will be ordered to pay its own costs if the bad state of the roads is proved though the action is dismissed on another ground. A Court of Appeal should not interfere on a mere question of costs unless the Court of first instance has violated some principle or committed a flagrant injustice.

Lauzon v. Township of La Minerve, 9 Que. P.R. 955 (Ct. Rev.).

-Contributory negligence-Notice of action-Remedy over against third party.] The plaintiff's claim was for damages caused by falling from his bicycle into a deep unguarded excavation in a lot owned by the defendant Luce on the corner of a public street and a lane in the city of Winnipeg. He was riding down an inclined part of the highway towards and close to a portion of it which was only about 30 feet wide, and which was obstructed for half its width by a pile of building materials in the possession of, and maintained there by, Luce, and, observing that the remainder of the roadway was at the moment occupied by a team with a loaded wagon, he attempted to stop by backpedalling. But the chain then came off the sprocket wheel, and, being unable to check his speed, he tried to turn into a lane on the hither side of the obstructions. His speed was too great, however, and he ran into the excavation at the edge of the lane, being seriously injured. It appeared that the proper city officials had notice of the obstructions being on the street for a considerable time previously and that they had requested Luce to remove them. It was contended on behalf of the city that the plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence, as he was aware of the condition of the street and of the chance that it might be wholly blocked at any time, and should not have run the risk of the chain slipping off whilst going down the incline. He was, however, an experienced bicycle rider, and had used the same wheel for several years without the chain having ever come off:-Held, that he was not guilty of contributory negligence in the matter, and that the city was

The city also set up that notice of the claim had not been served on the city clerk, as required by s. 722 of the Winnipeg Charter, 1 and 2 Edw. VII. c. 77. The notice relied on was a letter which the plaintiff delivered personally to the chairman of the board of works and which contained full particulars of the accident and of the injuries received and asked for payment of $350. This letter reached the city clerk within the time required by that section. Held, that the statute was sufficiently complied with to enable the plaintiff to recover. Held, also, that the city was entitled, under s. 728 of the charter, to relief over against Luce for the amount of the plaintiff's judgment and all its costs in the action.

Mitchell v. Winnipeg, 17 Man. R. 166.

-Purchase and dedication of land for a public highway by the municipality -Priority as against subsequent purchaser who registered his deed first.]-When land is purchased by and conveyed to a municipality under the Municipal Act for a road and thereafter dedicated and used as a public highway, it becomes vested in the Crown by virtue of s. 622 of the Act, and a subsequent purchaser, although he bought without notice of the prior conveyance or of the existence of the road and registered his deed before the registration of the aeed to the municipality, acquires no title to the road as against the Crown notwithstanding s. 68 of the Registry Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 150, which does not apply to the Crown, and notwithstanding the failure of the municipality to register the by-law establishing the road as required by s. 699 of the Municipal Act. Such purchaser, therefore, has no title to complain of the registration of the deed to the municipality as a cloud on his title. Pulkrabek v. Russell, 18 Man. R. 26.

-Dedication, as distinguished from conveyance-Acts from which dedication will be inferred-Condition in letters patent to open roads, if the land granted be laid out in building lots.]-Held, 1. Dedication of land to the use of the public, as a road, is distinguished from conveyance by the fact that the latter is express and by title, and the former is implied in acts, which must, however, clearly disclose the intention of the owner. When such acts appear to be in execution of a condition under which the owner has acquired the whole property they will bear out the inference more readily than if performed by an absolute owner, free to deal with his property as he chooses. Hence, the grantee under letters patent from the Crown of a beach lot, upon the condition that, if it be laid out for building lots, a sufficient number of cross streets will be left open, etc., who (a) sells a lot bounded on a given side to a lane or passage of twenty feet, with the right of way over it to the purchaser in common with the neighbouring proprietors; (b) describes this twenty foot strip as a road, in a notice of renewal of registration, though he renews his registration simultaneously as to the land it self of which the strip is a part, and (c) sells half a dozen lots by the numbers given on a plan which has no numbering of the strip, and with the actual mention of the continuation of it as being a reserved road, will be held to have dedicated the strip to the use of the public as a road. 2. When land is granted on the condition that if it be laid out for building lots, a road or roads will be left open, etc., the obligation arises as soon as any building lots are laid out and sold for which the roads may be required, and not only after the whole land granted has been so laid out and sold.

Rhodes v. Pérusse, 17 Que. K.B. 60.

—Notice of suit—Municipal corporation.]
—When damages are claimed from a municipal corporation because the highway in front of plaintiff's residence was obstructed by logs and lumber, the action must be preceded by the notice mentioned in Art. 793 M.C.

Pageau v. Corporation of St. Ambroise, 9 Que. P.R. 407.

—Maintenance of roads—Repairs by municipality in default of persons liable — County road.)—(1) A county road being under the control of the county municipality, the local municipality in which it lies has no power to repair it and no right to recover the cost of such repairs from persons in default. (2) The owner of a lot under thirty arpents in depth is not liable for the maintenance in repair of more than one front road.

Parish of Ste. Marthe v. Leblanc, 31 Que. S.C. 193.

—Repairing of a country road — Order closing road.]—A petition for a writ of mandamus to oblige a municipal council to repair a winter road will not be granted, if previous to the presentation of this petition, the municipal council had determined to close that road and an effective by-law to that effect had been passed.

Desjardins v. Ste. Rose, 9 Que. P.R. 257.

—Municipal corporation—Repair of roads —Negligence—Accident.]—Municipal corprograms are liable for the consequences of accidents resulting from the improper condition of the roads they are obliged to maintain. When an accident results from the concurrence of a fortuitores event and a quasi-delit the remedy of the person injured is none the less open against the author of the quasi-delit; but the Court in awarding damages should take into account the two causes of the accident and apply the rule as to common fault.

Parker v. Township of Hatley, Q.R. 33 S.C. 250 (Sup. Ct.).

— Opening of street—Obsolete procèsverbal—Irregularity.]—The existence of an old procèsverbal for opening a street which has never been acted upon is no hindrance to the passing of another for opening a street in front of the same lanös for a distance of thirty arpents. The Act, 60 Viet. c. 57, s. 7, which declares that any procèsverbal not acted upon within five years shall cease to be in force applies to those made before, as well as after, its passing. Failure in a procèsverbal to designate the portion of the work to be performed by each rate-payer is not a cause of nullity, but is at most, an irregularity which the council can cure by amendment.

Couture v. County of Megantic, Q.R. 31 S.C. 541 (Sup. Ct.).

— Municipal by-law — Maintenance of street—Unjust discrimination — Prescription.]—A municipal by-law which places upon an owner of land the obligation of doing work for maintenance of a street in front thereof to an extent exceeding, by more than half, the proportion of work to be done by owners of other lands of equal value is illegal and oppressive and the owner injured may maintain an action in the Superior Court to have it annulled. The prescription of thirty days provided for by Art. 708 M.C. has no application to such an action.

Roussin v. Parish of Ste. Dorothie, Q. R. 31 S.C. 520 (Ct. Rev.).

—Negligence—Obstruction of street.]—A person who leaves a vehicle in the street beside the sidewalk, even though space enough is left for traffic, is guilty of negligence and liable for the consequences of any accidents that may result therefrom. Chartrand v. Peck Rolling Mills, Q.R.

32 S.C. 419 (Ct. Rev.).

—Municipal corporation—Public road — Repair—Maintenance.]—A municipal corporation is liable for the consequences of an accident caused by the improper condition of a public road for the maintenance of which it is responsible. It cannot escape such liability by pleacing the difficulty of maintenance at the place where the accident happened, the imprudence of the victim thereof in using an unwieldly carriage and restive horse and his failure to drive with proper care.

Benoit v. Corporation of St. Stanislas de Kostka, Q.R. 31 S.C. 355 (Ct. Rev.). -Accident-Negligence-Want of repair -Notice of accident.]-In an action brought by the plaintiff against the corporation of a city for an accident by reason of alleged want of repair of one of its streets, such non-repair consisting in one of the granolithic blocks, where it joined another block, having sunk from three-quarters to half an inch, thereby causing the other block to be above it to that extent, but had been worn down at its edge about one-quarter of an inch. and had been in this condition from eight to ten years. There was no evidence of any prior mishap or complaint made regarding it, and though the city officials did not regard it as dangerous, they admitted it would be better to have it bevelled down:-Held, that there was no actionable negligence on the defendants' part. The notice of the accident required to be given within seven days thereafter, under s. 606 (3) of the Consol. Municipal Act, 1902, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19, is not dispensed with by reason merely of the defendants not being prejudiced by the omission to give it. There must be some reasonable excuse therefor: the plaintiff's illness, the result of the accident, must render him mentally or physically incapable of doing

Anderson v. Toronto, 15 O.L.R. 643.

— Municipal corporation—Maintenance of road — Drought.] — An unusual drought claimed as having prevented repairs to a road is not force majeure which relieves those charged with its maintenance from liability for accidents caused by its bad condition.

—Obstruction—Injury to traveller—Knowledge of danger—Negligence — Municipal corporation—Misfeasance or monfeasance].

—The mere fact that the plaintiff knew that a heap of dirt was standing upon a highway is not sufficient to disentitle him to recover damages from a municipal corporation for personal injuries sustained by him owing to the heap having been negligently left there unguarded:—Held, also, that the doing of a lawful act in such a way as to endanger the safety of the public was misfeasance—the whole was one act and an unlawful act.

— Icy condition of a road—Liability of municipality.]—(1) The defence of irresistible force (force majeure) to an action of damages for tort must be specially pleaded. (2) The icy condition of a road when it does not appear that it was due to a sudden change of temperature and that there had been no time to mend it, does not constitute force majeure which will avail to relieve a municipality from liability for accidents.

City of Montreal v. Guaranteed Pure Milk Co., Q.R. 17 K.B. 143.

—Reservation for highway—Opening first front road—Appropriation—Indemnity.]—In proceedings for the opening of first front roads for which reservations have been made in the grants of land by the Crown, the provisions of the Quebec Municipal Code requiring a description of the lands appropriated for the highway and the owners thereof are imperative and not merely matters of form which may be cured by the provisions of Art. 16 of that Code, and failure to comply with these requirements nullifies the proceedings. Judgment appealed from (Q.R. 17 K.B. 566), reversed.

Obstruction—Nuisance — Prevention of access to property—Individual injury.]—The right of ingress from and egress to a public highway parting a person's land is a private right differing not only in degree but in kind from the right of the public to pass and repass along such highway; and any disturbance of the private right may be enjoined in an action by the land owner alone.

Harvey v. British Columbia Boat and Engine Co., 14 B.C.R. 121.

-Dedication of highway-Conditions in Crown grant-Access to beach.]-A strip of land, extending from a public road to the River St. Lawrence, formed part of a beach lot granted by the Crown, in 1854, on condition that, in case of subdivision into building lots, "a sufficient number of cross streets shall be left open so as to afford easy communication between the public high road, in rear of the said beach lot, and low water mark in front thereof." Prior to 1865 the lot was subdivided and, on the plan of the subdivision, the strip of land was shown as a lane or passage. Reference to this lane or passage was made in a deed of sale executed by the owner, in 1865, and the cadastral plan of the municipality, made in 1879, for registration purposes, showed it as a publie road. In 1881, in connection with the registration of charges on the land, the owner made a statutory declaration and gave notice to the registrar of deeds, as required by the "Cadastral Act," describing the strip of land in question as "a road 20 feet wide." It was also shown that, during more than thirty years prior to the action, the strip of land had been used as a lane or passage by the general public:-Held, affirming the judgment appealed from (Q.R. 17 K.B. 60), Idington, J., dissenting, that these circumstances constituted complete, clear and unequivocal evidence of the intention of the owners of the beach lot to dedicate the strip of land in question for the purposes of a public highway, that no formal acceptance of such dedication by the corporation of the municipality was necessary to render such dedication effective in favour of the general public, and that, even if there had originally been any limitation reserved as to the use thereof by a special class of persons only, it had become a public highway by reason of long user as such. Although no right of ownership can be affected by cadastral plans, they must, in view of their publicity, be considered as having some probative effect in respect of persons having interests in the lands described therein.

Rhodes v. Perusse, 41 Can. S.C.R. 264.

—Defective sidewalk — Injury arising from.]—Plaintiff was injured by stepping on a wooden grating in a sidewalk, which grating, when put in was found on the evidence to be structurally defective. The grating was put in by the owners of the abutting property under a permit from the corporation:—Held, that, notwithstanding the statutory provision as to notice to the corporation of accident so happening, the corporation must be taken to have had knowledge of the originally defective construction of the grating, and were therefore liable.

Lionais v. Village of Lorimier, 10 Que.
P.R. 266.

—Action against municipality — Double remedy—Maintenance of highway.]—The action for a penalty and that for damages mentioned in Art. 793 M.C. are independent actions and the fact that the plaintiff has sued for the penalty for default in repairing a highway is no bar to an action for damages for the same default. In such an action for damages it is not necessary to allege that the notice required by Art. 793 M.C. has been given; if notice is necessary the irregularity can only be taken advantage of by exception to the form.

Pageau v. Corp. of St. Ambroise, 10 Que. P.R. 208.

erty. Salois v. Parish of St. Francois de Lac, Q.R. 36 S.C. 69.

-Public road-Space between ditch and fence.]-When a road is bordered by a ditch there is no presumption that the space between the ditch and the fences of the adjoining owners forms part of it Therefore an action for possession against the owner who has built a wall on such space only lies in favour of the municipal corporation when the latter can show possession of the land for a year. The existence of a sidewalk on such strip is no proof of possession by the corporation or the public when it appears that the same was placed there by the adjoining owner or his auteurs to give to customers a better access to their shop.

Parish of St. Francois Zavier de Brompton v. Salois, Q.R. 34 S.C. 238.

-County council - Appeal-Control of roads.]-An appeal lies to the county council from the decision of a local council rejecting a petition to "place the roads under the control of the council of the parish." The county council seized by way of appeal, of the above mentioned petition can, if the majority of members of the local council have a personal interest in the matter, exercise all powers of the latter which are applicable, Art. 136 M.C. A county council which in such a case. passes a by-law placing the maintenance of roads upon the municipality in the mode provided by Art. 535 M.C., exercise administrative functions and need not hold an enquête to establish the facts which are known to its members. A by-law providing that the roads of the municipality should be under the immediate control and charge of the corporation according to the provisions of Art. 535 M.C. "sufficiently conforms to the demand of the interested parties to place all the roads under control of the council of the parish as to all works to be done in future for the proper maintenance of said roads." It cannot be annulled on the ground that it provides for something not demanded.

-Procès-verbal for the opening of a road -Informalities.]-(1) A proces-verbal for the opening and maintaining of a road is null and void for all, or any one, of the following omissions or informalities: (a) When the resolution of the council appointing the special superintendent does not prescribe a delay for making it. (b) When the special superintendent has not been sworn before making it. When the special superintendent omits to give notice of the time and place of the public meeting of the interested ratepayers. (d) When no notice is given of the time and place at which the council is to make the examination of the procesverbal. (2) A procès-verbal that imposes on a ratepayer the obligation of erecting and maintaining fences on a third front road, when he has already two such roads to maintain, at a distance of less than thirty arpents from that in question, is illegal, unjust and oppressive and gives him a right of action in the Superior Court, to have it quashed.

owners or occupants obliged to keep them in repair only lies when there is default on the part of the latter to conform to the requirements of the statutes and city by-laws or non-performance of their duty in this respect. Hence, an owner or occupant sued in warranty can plead that at the time of the accident the sidewalk in question was in good repair and in the condition prescribed by the statute and by-laws; he is only obliged to intervene and defend the principal action or to indemnify the city against which judgment has been given after having been judicially declared garant.

City of Montreal v. Le Curé, etc., de Ste. Agnes de Montreal, Q.R. 18 K.B. 258.

—Jury trial—Defective sidewalk.]—The obligation of owners and occupants of property adjoining the public streets of the city of Montreal imposed by sub-s. 92 of s. 300 of the city charter (62 Vict. c. 58 (Que.)) to guarantee the city against liability for damages in consequence of accidents caused by defects in their sidewalks arises only from the provisions of this Act (Art. 1057 C.C.) and not from a délit or quasi-délit. The recourse in warranty which it provides does not fall within the terms of Art. 421 C.P.Q., so as to give a right to a jury trial.

Le Curé, etc., de Ste. Agnes de Montreal v. City of Montreal, Q.R. 18 Q.B. 263.

-Nuisance in the highway - Defective culvert.] - Plaintiff's horse stumbled through a rotten culvert on a public road within the municipal limits, and plaintiff and his wife were thrown from the vehicle and injured. The culvert, constructed of cedar, covered with a few inches of earth, had been placed there some 16 years previously, and it had never been inspected, repaired or renewed during that time: --Held, that the municipality had been guilty of misfeasance in allowing the culvert to become a nuisance, and was therefor liable. Borough of Bathurst v. Macpherson (1879), 4 App. Cas. 256, followed. Cooksley v. New Westminster, 14 B.C.R.

—Municipality—Roads—Depth of range.; —There is no statutory provision that a range shall be only thirty arpents in depth. It is merely provided that a rate-payer is not obliged to keep in repair, on land of thirty arpents in width, more than one front road. There is no limit to the extent of land nor number of lots in a range and the fact that one range considerably exceeds another in depth does not justify the Court in imposing on rate-payers the burden of maintaining the highway in repair.

Goulet v. Corp. of Ste. Anne, Q.R. 35 8.C. 289,

-Establishment of road-Special superintendent-Liability of landowners.]-The appointment of a special superintendent and inspection of the premises is not required for passing by-laws amending the procès-verbeaux for establishment of roads. Art. 774 M.C. respecting fences and ditches on front roads is intended to govern cases not otherwise provided for and municipal councils may derogate from its provisions by by-law or proces-verbal. A by-law which, in establishing a front road, has the effect of placing the obligation to repair more than one such road on owners of land of less than thirty arpents in width is not void for that reason. The owners can demand that the new road be maintained as a highway for the portion as to which they are charged and failing a declaration to that effect they are only liable for work on the road in nearest proximity to their respective residences, Art. 825 M.C. The Courts should only interfere with the exercise of their discretionary powers by municipal councils when it works injustice or is clearly illegal.

Blanchard v. Parish of St. David, Q.R. 35 S.C. 277.

-Maintenance of streets-Negligence -Climatic conditions.] - The obligation imposed on municipalities to keep the streets and roads in a condition suitable for traffic may be affected by climatic conditions and implies a reciprocal obligation on the part of the public to use them with care. Therefore, a carter who, in full daylight, undertakes to drive a heavy cart down a hill in Montreal, which, he sees, is covered with ice, and who, when the cart has begun to slip, adds to the impetus by an improper direction to the horses, is alone responsible for the accident which results therefrom, and has no recourse against the city.

Gougeon v. City of Montreal, Q.R. 34 S. C. 324.

—Closing of streets—Injury to adjoining owners—Access to property—Damages.]—A municipality in exercising its right to close a street or public way is liable for damage caused to adjoining owners by increasing the difficulty of access to their property. When the injury caused results in additional expense, varying from time to time, of conducting a business but without destroying it, the owner can recover only this excess in expenses so far as it is incurred. He cannot demand a round sum for depreciation in the value of his property and trade which is uncertain and impossible to determine.

City of Montreal v. Montreal Brewing Co., Q.R. 18 K.B. 404, varying 30 S.C. 280.

-Bridge-Duty of municipality to keep in repair-Use of traction engines on highways.]-The duty imposed upon a municipality, by s. 606 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19 (O.), of keeping its highways, inclusive of bridges and culverts, in repair, is, so far as relates to traction engines, subject to the requirements of s. 10 of R.S.O. 1897, c. 242, and the amendments thereto made by s. 43 of 3 Edw. VII. c. 7 (O.), and s. 60 of 4 Edw. VII. c. 10 (O.), whereby such engines, if of eight tons or over in weight, and not exceeding twenty tons. can only be run over a bridge or culvert subject to the condition that the owner must, at his own expense, first strengthen the bridge or culvert, and while so using them keep them in repair; but as to a threshing machine, if of less than eight tons in weight, the above obligation is not imposed; but the owner or person in charge is subjected to the obligation, which is imperative, and constitutes a condition precedent, that before crossing any such bridge or culvert, he must lay down thereon planks of such sufficient width and thickness as may be necessary to fully protect the flooring or surface of such bridge or culvert from any injury that might otherwise result thereto from the contact of the wheels of such engine, etc., and in default thereof the person in charge and his employer, if any, shall be liable to the municipality for all damages resulting therefrom to the flooring or surface of the bridge or culvert. Where, therefore, the owner of a threshing machine under eight tons in weight, was in the act of drawing it across such a bridge, without having first put down planks, and though the bridge as constructed was not of sufficient strength to sustain the weight of the engine, but would have been had the boards been used, thereby diffusing the weight of the engine, and it fell through the bridge, damaging it, it was held, in an action brought by the owner of the machine against the municipality, that no liability was imposed on the municipality, but that the owner was liable to the municipality upon a counterclaim for the damage so sustained.

Goodison Thresher Co. v. Township of McNab, 19 O.L.R. 188 (Reversed by Su preme Court of Canada, December, 1910.)

—Crown patent—Reservation of travelled road—Subsequent survey increasing width of road.]—The Crown patent under which the plaintiff held the land in question reserved all travelled roads crossing the same "existing as such on the 15th day of July, 1870, which by and under the laws of Assiniboia were or may be held to be legally public highways," and the evidence showed that the road in question had never extended south of a fence which the plaintiff had built along the south side of the road and he had been in undisturbed occupancy and enjoyment of the land south of the fence up to the time the defendants had removed it. The defendants, however, relied on a survey of the road in question made in 1886 by a surveyor named Dufresne alleged to have acted under instructions from the Dominion Government, of which instructions no proof was given. It appeared that Dufresne had, by his field notes, made the road 99 feet wide on the plan prepared by him, but it was not shown by whom he was sent to make the survey or what authority he had to make it. It also appear ed that the provincial government had, by order in council dated in 1899, approved of a report referring to the surveying and transferring to the province of certain thoroughfares or trails and amongst them the road in question as surveyed by Dufresne in 1886, and that the Dominion government had, by order in council dated in 1900, approved the above report and directed the said trail to be transferred to and vested in the Province of Manitoba:

-Held, following Pockett v. Poole, 11 M.R. 508, that the survey in question was not originally legal and binding and was not made so by the Dominion order in council passed 14 years thereafter, and that the Dominion government, after granting patents for the lands, could not afterwards interfere with the private rights of parties holding under them.

Heath v. Portage la Prairie, 18 Man. R.

-Closing part of highway extending into other municipalities.]-By s. 637 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903, the council of every county, township, city, town and village may pass by-laws, (1) for . . . stopping up roads . . . "wholly within the jurisdiction of the council":-Held, that the word "wholly" is used with reference not to the locality of the road, but to the jurisdiction of the council over it; and the council of a municipality has jurisdiction to pass a by-law closing part of a continuous highway passing through that municipality and extending into other municipalities. In re Falle and Town of Tillsonburg (1873), 23 C.P. 167, followed. Hewison v. Township of Pembroke (1884), 6 O.R. 170, commented on. Re Taylor and Village of Belle River, 18 and being desirous of creating a number of warehouse sites, the city decided to close the streets and lanes leading to block 197, and for that purpose passed a by-law. No notice of this by-law was given to the registered owner of the lot subsequently acquired by plaintiffs. The defendants, having passed the by-law, proceeded to sell block 197 and portion of the streets and lanes so closed, and buildings were erected which obstructed the way of egress and ingress to plaintiffs' lot, and plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the streets and lanes closed were public highways, and for the removal of the obstructions:-Held, that until notice is given to the registered or assessed owners of all land abutting upon any street or lane which it is proposed to close by bylaw, under the provisions of s. 5 of c. 28 of the Ordinances of 1903 the city council has no jurisdiction to pass any by-law closing such streets. (2) That if any bylaw is so passed without notice, the provisions of s. 101 of the Municipal Ordinance (c. 70, C.O., 1898) and 307 of the Regina charter (c. 46 of 1906), now s. 193, City Act, c. 16, of 1908, will not validate any act done under such by-law, the lack of jurisdiction to pass such bylaw without notice not being "a want of substance or of form."

Gesman v. City of Regina, 2 Sask. R. 50.

-Road allowance-Road opened up in lieu thereof.]-On a survey made in 1791, a road allowance was set out along the front of certain lots, which ran down to a lake. The road allowance, however, was not opened up, or used as a road, but some time prior to 1850 a road running along the lake shore, the land therefor being taken from these lots, was, as a matter of convenience, opened up and used in lieu of the original road allowance, and continued to be so used ever since, the township doing work and expending money thereon. No compensation was paid to the owners; but they took over and enclosed the road allowance as part of their lands, and have occupied it for a period of some sixty years. In consequence of the waters of the lake encroaching on the lake roadway, it had, from time to time, to be moved back, these owners giving the lands for the purpose without any compensation. In 1908, by reason of the expense occasioned in keeping this road in repair, through the encroachment, the township council determined to open up the original road allowance, and served a notice on the owners of the lots stating that a bylaw would be introduced for this purpose on a named day, but without making any offer of compensation:-Held, that the notice was sufficient; for even if the time of the meeting should have been stated in the notice, as it appeared that the applicants had either attended the meeting, or were represented by counsel, and were heard before the by-law was passed, they were now precluded from objecting thereto. Held, however, that as no compensa-tion was paid for the land's originally taken for the lake shore road, or from time to time therefor as the road was encroached upon, and the applicants being legally in possession of the lands constituting the original road allowance. such lands could not be taken away from them, for the purpose of opening up the road, without their being awarded compensation, as provided for in s. 641 of the Municipal Act, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19 (O.); and the by-law for the opening up of the road was therefore quashed.

Woodmen's liens-Time for filing-Last day falling on a "holiday."]—Claims of lien under the Woodmen's Lien for Wages Ordinance were filed on the 21st May, 1910, the 20th May being the last day for effective filing under ss. 6 and 7 of the Ordinance. By s. 21 of the Interpretation Ordinance, if the time limited by any Ordinance for any proceeding, or the doing of anything under its provisions, expires or falls upon a holiday, the time so limited shall be extended to and such thing may be done on the day next following:-Held, that the 20th May, being the day proclaimed by the Governor-General as a day of general mourning for King Edward VII., was not a "holiday" within the meaning of the Interpretation Ordinance nor of the Dominion Interpretation Act. Semble, that, if it had been a holiday, the plaintiffs would have been entitled to maintain their liens by the filing on the 21st. Held, also, that Rule 554 of the Judicature Ordinance did not apply, because the reference in that Rule to "Sunday or other day on which the offices are closed" means "or other day on which the offices are legally closed." The plaintiffs' actions to enforce their liens were dismissed, but the plaintiffs were awarded personal judgments for the amounts claimed, under the amending Ordinance of 1909.

HOMESTEAD LAWS.

Homestead-Lease by homesteader before patent-Transfer or assignment of homestead right.]-The plaintiff made homestead entry for certain Dominion lands. Before he was recommended for patent he leased the land to the defendant for one year, the defendant, on his part, covenanting to do certain things. After the expiration of the term, the plaintiff sued defendant, alleging breach of covenant, for which he claimed damages. It was objected that he could not recover, the lease being void, being an assignment or transfer of homestead rights prohibited by Dominion Lands Act:-Held, that a lease of homestead land is an assignment or transfer of the rights which a homesteader has by virtue of his entry, and, being so, is void under the provisions of the Act. 2. That, while a tenant is estopped from his questioning his landlord's title so long as he is in possession of the land, such estoppel lasts only so long as the lease is in force, and the term having expired, the tenant was no longer estopped. That, in any event, the estoppel would not be allowed to interfere with the proper carrying out of an Act of Parliament. 4. The contract being void, no action could be maintained in respect of the breach thereof.

Klinck v. Greer, 3 Sask. R. 157.

-Dominion Lands Act-Charge on land created by homesteader before recommendation for patent.]—A charge on land created by a homesteader before it is recommended for patent is absolutely void under s. 142 of the Dominion Lands Act. R.S.C. 1906, c. 55, and a declaration of the Minister of the Interior under that section waiving the forfeiture of the homestead right that would otherwise follow the giving of such a charge has not the effect of making it valid in the hands of the grantee. One who took a conveyance of the property from the homesteader after recommendation for patent is not estopped from setting up the invalidity of a charge created before recommendation by reason only that he had acted as the agent of the party in acquiring the prior charge, having ceased to be such agent before getting his deed.

HOTELKEEPER.

-Deposit of trunks by boarder - Negligence.]-1. The keeper of a hotel is responsible for the effects of a guest, who is boarding at his hotel, to the same extent as if he were a traveller, and parol evidence is admissible, as in the case of a necessary deposit. 2. It is negligence on the part of a hotelkeeper to store trunks of a boarder in an unlocked room. Greene v. Windsor Hotel Company, 26 Que. S.C. 97 (Trenholme, J.).

Neglect to provide fire escape in bedroom-Death of guest in fire.]-In an action by the widow of H. to recover damages for his death by reason of the negligence or default of the defendant, it appeared that H. was a guest in the defendant's hotel, and was in bed at night in a bedroom not provided with a fire escape, as required by s. 3, sub-s. 1, of "An Act for the Prevention of Accidents by fire in Hotels and other Like Buildings," R.S.O. 1897, c. 264, when a fire broke out; the fire completely destroyed the floorings of the hotel building, and H.'s body was found in the basement, but not under the room which he had occupied:—Held, that the evidence warranted the conclusion that the absence of a fire escape compelled H. to seek some other means of escape, and that in the effort he lost his life; and thus the defendant's failure to perform his statutory duty was the direct cause of the death. Held, also, that the object of the Act is to benefit the occupants of hotels and other buildings; and the plaintiff's cause of action arising from the breach of the statutory duty was not taken away by reason of the provision in the Act (s. 6) that the proprietor of an hotel shall, on summary conviction for neglect to observe any of the provisions of the Act, incur a fine, no portion of which goes to the injured person or his family.

-Loss of property of guest-Negligence-Contributory negligence.]-Appeal from verdict of County Court in favour of plaintiff. The plaintiff arrived at the city of Winnipeg, by train, and, intending to put up at defendant's hotel, delivered some of his luggage to the driver of a Baggage Transfer Company to be taken there. then walked to the hotel, registered his name, and was assigned a room where he left his valise which he had carried with him. Later in the same day, the Transfer Company's driver brought the plaintiff's parcels to the hotel, left them in the hall with other luggage and informed the hotel clerk in the office that he had done so. The part of the hall where the parcels were left was not visible from the office. The hotel was crowded, the city was unusually full of visitors, persons going to and from the hotel bar passed the place where the parcels were and it was not a safe place for unwatched luggage to be left in. The plaintiff noticed his parcels there about eleven o'clock the same night, but did not remove them or draw the attention of the hotel servants to them. The next day he noticed that the parcels were not in the hall, but said nothing about it until the third day after, when he asked for the parcels. They could not then be found, and the presumption was that they had been stolen. Neither the defendants nor any of their servants had paid any attention to the parcels or moved them in any way:-Held, per Richards, J., that the parcels got into the custody of the defendants when the driver who brought them reported to the hotel clerk that he had done so, that the plaintiff was justified in assuming, when he saw his parcels in the hall, that they were being cared for by the defendants, and that, when he missed them the next day, he had a right to suppose that they had been put into the defendants' baggage room, and that he had not been guilty of such negligence as to disentitle him to recover their value from the defendants. Per Perdue, J.—The plaintiff was guilty of such gross negligence, under the circumstances, in not calling the attention of the hotel keepers to his parcels, when he saw them lying in the hall, and taking no steps to have them removed to a safer place, as to relieve the defendants from their common law liability as innkeepers: Oppenheim v. White Lion Hotel Co., (1870) L.R. 6 C.P. 5155, Cashill v. Wright, (1856) 6 E. & B. 890, and Jones v. Jackson, (1873) 29 L.T. N.S. 399.

The Court being divided the appeal was dismissed without costs.

Barrie v. Wright, 15 Man. R. 197 (Richards and Perdue, JJ.).

-Deposit by traveller-Liability of innkeeper.]-A person making a prolonged stay at a hotel and lodging by the month, or otherwise, is a traveller within the meaning of Art. 1233 (4) of the Civil Code and may make proof by oral testimony as to the deposit of his luggage. This may be done under the first paragraph of that article where the innkeeper is a merchant and the deposit something in respect to matters of a commercial nature. (2) An innkeeper who places luggage of a traveller in an unlocked room, open to everybody, is at fault and guilty of negligence within the meaning of the second exception of Art. 1815 C.C. The loss of the luggage resulting therefrom renders him liable for damages exceeding $200 to the extent of the total value.

I. COMMUNITY OF PROPERTY.

Marriage contract—Mutual gifts.]—The capacity of a party as stated by error in a deed (e.g., universal legatee of her deceased husband) cannot be invoked against her as proof of her renunciation of a right incompatible with such capacity. The gift, to the survivor, of the usurfruct of all their property made by consorts in their marriage contract, which contains also a clause for making movable immovables includes immovables given to one consort after marriage on condition that they shall remain his separate property.

Blanchard v. Pepin, Q.R. 38 S.C. 302.

-Domicile-Business carried on by wife.]-The habitation of a married couple is such to the provisions of Arts. 173-5 C.C. respecting marital authority. The first paragraph of Art. 83 C.C. which prescribes a single domicile for consorts applies to domicile in fact as well as in law. Therefore, a wife separate as to property who, in her husband's absence but with his consent opens and carries on a boarding-house where she has her own domicile thereby establishes a domicile for her husband who, on returning, has a right to occupy it with her and, if necessary, to enter by force and occupy it. He has, besides, a right of action to have it declared that his wife, who refuses to submit to him, is deprived of her right to the gifts, donations of immovables, etc., which he made to her on their marriage and to judgment against her for the value thereof.

Robinson v. Gore, Q.R. 38 S.C. 97 (Ct. Rev.).

—Restitution of conjugal rights—Judgment against wife.]—A rule nisi will not issue against the wife condemned to admit her husband into the conjugal domicile when she has begun to comply with the judgment by permitting him to occupy a room therein. It is by application for a rule nisi and not by a direct action that the husband should proceed who wishes to compel his wife to execute a judgment condemning her to permit him to resume conjugal relations.

Robinson v. Gore, 11 Que. P.R. 179.

Action against wife-Authorization by husband-Service.]-A wife common as to property, defendant in an action, is only properly served if a copy of the writ and declaration is served on her husband as well as herself; service at the conjugal residence by leaving with the husband, for defendant, a copy of the writ in which mention is made of the husband "to give authority to his wife" is insufficient and a nullity. In an action for damages for verbal injuries against a wife under the control of her busband, want of authorization of the wife either by her husband or by the Court, avoids and annuls the judgment against her. The fact that the husband received from the bailiff the copy of the writ intended for his wife, that he retained the attorney for the defence, and that he took part in the enquête does not constitute a sufficient authorization and the husband has a right to set this up against a judgment against his wife in an action for damages being executed against the property of the community.

Thibaudeau v. Desilets, 10 Que. K.B. 183; 4 Que. P.R. 1 (Q.B.).

—Abandonment of community—Séparation de biens.]—The abandonment by the wife of the community, in an action en séparation de biens should be made to the prothonotary or before a notary; an abandonment before a commissioner of the Superior Court is void and of no effect. The wife authorized by the judge to take proceedings against her husband en séparation de biens does not require a fresh authority to abandon the community.

Trudeau v. Labossière, 4 Que. P.R. 46 (S.C.).

—Community—Personal injuries.]—A wife common as to property with her husband can join with him in an action for compensation for injuries to her personally. The wife common as to property sued with her husband may give evidence on her own behalf.

Sullivan v. Town of Magog, 18 Que. S.C. 107 (C.C.).

—Obligation of wife—Debt of community —Obligation after dissolution—Arts. 1301, 1369, 1370, 1371 C.C.]—The wife, after a judicial dissolution of the community, cannot become liable for a debt of the community, notwithstanding she may have accepted it, any such obligation being really incurred on behalf of her husband, who is liable to the creditors for the full payment of such a debt for which the wife is liable only for her proportion, and that only up to the amount of her benefit therefrom.

Bastien v. Filiatrault, 31 Can. S.C.R. 129, affirming 15 Que. S.C. 445.

—Action en partage.]—Held (on exception to the form:)—A married woman, common as to property, cannot take an action to account and en partage unless her husband be made a co-plaintiff with her in the suit. Giroux v. Giroux, 19 Que. S.C. 372 (Andrews, J.).

-- Continuation of community-Inventory-Proces-verbal de carence. 1-At the time of the dissolution of community by the death of one of the consorts in 1845, the common assets consisted of bare necessaries of small value and exempt from seizure. There was no inventory or proces-verbal de carence made and subsequently the survivor contracted a second marriage. In an action by a child of the first marriage claiming a share in continuation of community:-Held, that there was no necessity for an inventory of property of such insignificant value and that failure to make an invent-ory or proces-verbal de carence did not, under the circumstance, effect a continuation of communit.

-Action for injury-Wife common as to property—Wife and husband as co-plain-tiffs.]—1. Where there is community of property the husband alone has the right of action to recover damages resulting from verbal injury caused to his wife. Caron v. Larivè, 5 Que. P.R. 332.

-Judicial separation as to property-Execution of judgment—Abandonment of com-munity—Registry.]—A judgment for sepa-ration as to property is sufficiently exe-cuted by the declaration of the wife, which was authorized by the judgment, that she had no rights to exercise nor claims to make against her husband, but the separation takes effect against third parties only from the date of the judgment, and the wife can set up her abandonment of the community only from the time such abandonment was registered. Hence, a contract entered into by the wife before execution of the judgment for separation and registry of her abandonment, is for the benefit of the community, and monies due under such contract may be seized by creditors of the husband.

Berard v. Magnan, Q.R. 22 S.C. 217 (Ct. Rev.).

-Community of property-Wife's right of action-Absence of right, how pleaded.]-1. A wife common as to property has no right of action to reclaim rights which belong to the community. 2. The proper procedure to have an action dismissed as regards her is by demurrer, and not by exception to the form.

-Donation of usufruct by marriage contract to surviving consort-Registration Art. 1411 C.C.]-A contract of marriage provided that there should be universal community, and also stipulated a donation to the surviving consort of the usufruct. during life, of all property existing at the dissolution of the community by the death of the consort dying first. No property existed in the community, at the date of its dissolution, which would not have formed part of it by mere operation of law:-Held, affirming the judgment of the Superior Court, Archibald, J., 21 Que. S.C., p. 341), the stipulation, in such marriage contract, of usufruct in favor of the surviving consort, is not a donation but a marriage covenant, and is not subject to the formality of registration. Huot v. Bienvenu, 12 Que. K.B. 44.

-Liability of husband for debts contracted by wife before marriage-Evidence-Burden of proof.]-The Married Women's Property Act, R.S. (1900), c. 112, s. 25, makes a husband liable for the debts of his wife contracted by her before marriage "to the extent of all property whatsoever belonging to the wife, which he has acquired or become entitled to from or through his wife, after deducting therefrom any pay-ments made by him" in respect to any such debts, etc. In an action against the defendant R. for goods supplied to his wife before marriage, evidence was given by the plaintiff's solicitor to show that on the examination of the wife before a commissioner, the defendant R. was present and stated, among other things, that he had received from his wife three promissory notes, for amounts and due at dates which he mentioned:-Held (1), that the evidence was not admissible, the best evidence being that taken down by the Commissioner, and which he was required to return to the Court. (2) That there was nothing in the evidence to bring the notes referred to within the language "property belonging to the wife" which the defendant had "acquired or become entitled to" through the wife, or to discharge the burden resting upon the plaintiff, to show acquisition or title by or in the husband. Semble, where money was received and payments made by the husband, that plaintiff would have to show a balance remaining in his hands, and that he could not put in one side of the transaction without the other. Bauld v. Reid, 36 N.S.R. 127.

-Wife carrying on business as trader-Husband acting as manager, with general power of attorney-Notes signed by husband.]-Where a wife separated as to property is carrying on business as a trader, and the husband is acting as her manager under a general power of attorney, the wife is liable to bona fide holders for value of regotiable instruments signed or endorsed by the husband for the purposes of such business, and particularly where there is no pretension that the husband appropriated to his own use any part of the funds obtained on such negotiable instruments.

Quebec Bank v. Jacobs, 23 Que. S.C. 167 (Davidson, J.).

-Wife purchasing husband's bankrupt es tate.]—An agreement by the wife, separated as to property, of an insolvent trader, to pay one of his creditors $100, and also to compensate any loss he might sustain by the insolvency, in consideration of his assistance in financing the purchase by her of her husband's bankrupt estate, does not come within the prohibition contained in Art. 1301 C.C., where such purchase was carried out, and the wife continued the business in her own name.

Carter v. Walker, 23 Que. S.C. 123 (C.R.).

-Wife common as to property sued as a widow - Exception.] - An action taken against a boarding house keeper, who was held out and declared herself to be a widow will not be dismissed on an exception to the form, although defendant is married and common as to property.

Normandin v. Desrochers, 7 Que. P.R. 93 (Davidson, J.).

-Action by husband and wife-Incidental demand-Grievances personal to husband.] -That in an action taken by both husband and wife for attacks made upon them in common, whereby they jointly suffered, an incidental demand based upon the husband's dismissal, will be rejected upon exception to the form.

Villeneuve v. Anderson, 7 Que. P.R. 290, (Davidson, J.).

-Married woman-Obligation contracted before marriage-Community-Action by husband.]-The right of the husband to sue upon an obligation contracted in favour of the wife before marriage accrues to him solely as administrator of the community and, consequently, in an action based upon such obligation the marriage and the community of property resulting therefrom must be specially alleged. In an action upon such an obligation brought by the husband as if it had been made in his favour, the mere production of the deed and a marriage certificate is insufficient to establish his right to recover the debt.

Massicotte v. Pronovost, Q.R. 28 S.C. 44 (Ct. Rev.).

-- Community-Form of action. |-- Actions affecting the community must be brought in the husband's name only. Therefore, a saisie revendication by the wife was dismissed on exception to the form though it was authorized by the husband.

Marcotte v. Daoust, 8 Que. P.R. 310 (Fortin, J.).

-Separation a mensa et thore-Dissolution of community—Effect of judgment.]—(1) Dissolution of community of property among consorts, resulting in consequence of a judgment decreeing separation a mensa et thoro, has reference back to the date of service of summons. Consequently, an accountant named to make the inventory and ascertain the value of the dissolved community, should do so with reference to that date and ought not to take account of property acquired subsequently by either of the consorts. (2) The execution of a judgment of separation a mensa et thoro, in so far as the separation as to property is concerned, may be enforced at any time until it ceases to have force by virtue of the prescription of thirty years, the reconciliation of the consorts, or other legal cause.

-Deed by wife - Authorization.]-The "concurrence of the husband in the deed" required by article 177 C.C., to validate the conveyance of property by the wife must be understood in the common and or dinary sense of the word. Therefore, a sale of an immovable by a married woman alone, though her husband was in an adjoining room separated by a thin partition and heard all that passed, is void. The nullity being absolute, all parties having an actual interest resulting from the transaction can avail themselves of it, among others, those to whom the alleged sale was —Husband and wife—Payments to husband—Authority to receive on behalf of wife—Presumption.]—In an action against husband and wife for redemption of a chattel mortgage, it was contended by the plaintiff that money received by the husband from the plaintiff should be credited on the chattel mortgage, which was in favour of the wife:—Held, that it was necessary to prove that the husband was the wife's agent, or that she was estopped from denying his agency; the onus was on the plaintiff, and, upon the evidence, neither the agency nor the estoppel had been established. Held, also, that there was no evidence to establish that the wife was the ostensible and the husband the real mortgagee.

—Ante-nuptial contract—Sum payable to wife at death of husband.)—The plaintiff being about to be married to a man resident and domiciled in the Province of Quebec, in 1889, in that Province, entered into a marriage contract with him, whereby, "in the future view of the said intended marriage, he . . . for and in consideration of the love and affection and esteem which he hat for and beareth to the" plaintiff, "hath give, granted and confirmed, and by these presents doth give, grant, and confirm, unto the" plaintiff, "accepting hereof . . the sum of $25,000 . . . payable unto the" plaintiff "by the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of him. . . the payment whereof shall become due and demandable after the death of him due and demandable after the death of him . ." In the contract the plaintiff renounced community, dower, and right of dower, and agreed that she and her husband should each be separated from the other as to property. The marriage took place. The husband was at that time insolvent, but the plaintiff was not aware of it. The husband died in 1907, leaving an estate, but not sufficient to pay all his creditors in full, if the plaintiff was entitled to rank as a creditor of the estate for the $25,000 mentioned in the contract: Held, that the question of the right of the widow to rank must be determined by the law of Quebec; what that law is falls to be determined upon the testimony of persons skilled in it, but, where the evidence is conflicting and for that reason unsatisfactory to the determining tribunal, it may examine for itself the decisions of the foreign Courts and the statements of the textwriters in order to arrive at a conclusion upon the question of the foreign law. And held, upon the evidence and examination of the provisions of the Civil Code of Quebec and authorities cited, that the contract was an onerous one, and not gratuitous, and the plaintiff was entitled to rank as a creditor

—Crop grown on land of a married woman —Business carried on separately.]—The execution debtor being in default in payments due on his land and chattels, the owner of the land and the parties from whom he had purchased the same cancelled the contract and repossessed the chattels respectively. Subsequently they made ar arrangement for the sale thereof to his wife. She thereafter, though living with her husband, appeared to have entire direction of the farm and though he assisted at times he only did so at her request, and worked at his trade as a blacksmith whenever he could be spared. The crop grown on the lands having been seized by a creditor of the husband and claimed by the wife:—Held, that unless it can be shown that the husband has been carrying on the farming operations as head of the family or tenant of his wife, the wife is entitled to the crop grown on her land.

That the fact that the wife is living with her husband and that he may assist her in her business does not thereby deprive her of her profits therein under s. 4 of the Married Woman's Property Act, unless it be shown that the husband had some legal or equitable interests or right of interference as between himself and his wife.

R. 89, 13 W.L.R. 561.

-Married woman-Judgment summons-Judgment confined to her separate property.]-A married woman against whom a judgment has been obtained under the provisions of the Married Woman's Property Act is not a judgment debtor within the meaning of s. 147 of the County Courts Act.

Greenshields v. Reeves, 15 B.C.R. 19.

-Wife doing business in her own name-Filing husband's consent.]-The effect of the filing of a husband's consent to his wife carrying on business in her own name must be restricted to the terms of the statute. It only protects the wife from having her property seized as belonging to her husband, and the husband from being liable on the contracts entered into by his wife in connection with the business. It is not notice to any one that the business is the business of the wife, except for the pur-pose of affording protection from the consequences mentioned. In an action by plaintiff to recover an amount claimed for the board of defendant's horse, and for other services, it appeared that the largest amount in controversy was incurred under a contract made with plaintiff's husband, who agreed that defendant was to offset against it a note due by the husband:— Held, that plaintiff could not sue upon the contract for board of the horse, without being subject to any defence that defendant was entitled to in respect to the setoff, but that she could recover for other items incurred by defendant in the ordinary course of business. Also, that there could be no costs of appeal, plaintiff having failed in respect to a material item.

-Married woman's separate property.]-Interpleader issue between an execution creditor and the wife of the judgment debtor as to the ownership of horses and cattle. The evidence showed the wife had money of her own before she married, that with that money she, after the marriage, bought cattle, that she exchanged part of the increase of these cattle for other cattle and for horses, and that in that way, between purchases, exchange and increase, she had acquired the animals in question. The evidence also showed, however, certain isolated instances of the husband dealing with some of these animals, amongst others that he had given a chattel mortgage on some of them with the wife's consent, and that the farm was the property of her husband:-Held, that the wife was entitled to a ver-dict upon such evidence, and there would be no estoppel as against her except in favour of the chattel mortgagee.

- Wife pledging separate property for husband's debt — Independent advice — Undue inbuence.] — In an action by a wife living with her husband against the appellant bank to set aside a series of transactions in relation to a company spreading over eight years and resulting in her surrendering to the bank all her extensive estate, real and personal, and in her being left without means of her own, it appeared that the plaintiff, who was a confirmed invalid, acted throughout in passive obedience to her husband's directions, had no means of forming an independent judgment, and at the trial repudiated any misrepresentation or undue influence by her husband's distress; and that the solicitor who acted in all or most of the transactions was solicitor to the bank and to the husband, and was a director, secretary, shareholder, and creditor of the company:—Held, affirming the judg-ment of the Supreme Court of Canada, Stuart v. Bank of Montreal, but for different reasons, that these transactions could not stand, the wife being in fact wholly under the husband's influence and the solicitor in a position in which he could not advise fairly. -Insolvency of husband-Business carried on without change of name.]-The husband of plaintiff with his brother carried on business as Burton Bros. and the firm became insolvent. The brother retired and the husband, with the exemptions, resumed business as Burton Bros. & Co., it being alleged, however, that the business was carried on as the business of the wife. This continued for a great many years, the husband holding a power of attorney, carrying on the business apparently without reference to the wife, nor did it appear that she had contributed anything towards it. A creditor of the husband having seized the stock, the wife claimed the same:-Held, that in such a case it was purely a question of fact as to whether or not the wife was the true owner of the business, and under the circumstances of the case it did not appear that the wife was ever in fact the owner of the business, but that it was really the business of the husband.

-Marriage contract-Donation of future property.]-The clau e in a marriage contract by which the future husband gives to the future wife all the movables in the residence of the parties after marriage, although acquired by the husband during the coverture, the donation to become void in case of the pre-decease of the wife, constitutes a donation à cause de mort and only confers on the wife actual property in the movables possessed by the husband at the date of the marriage.

Newman v. Desfocas, 17 Que S.C. 477

-Donation by marriage contract-Afteracquired chattels-Art. 1265 C.C.]-Held, by the Court of Review, reversing the judgment of Archibald, J., 16 Que. S.C. 273, 1900 C.A. Dig. 156: A clause in a marriage contract, stipulating that all household effects and furniture which shall at any time be brought into the conjugal domicile by either of the consorts shall belong to the wife, is neither a gift of present prolerty, nor a gift of future property made in contemplation of death permissible in a marriage contract, but purports to be a gift of future property inter vivos, and is illegal and of no effect. Moreover, such stipulation is void inasmuch as it would enable the husband to confer benefits upon his wife during the marriage, contrary to the terms of Art. 1265 C.C. The husband has, therefore, a right, notwithstanding such clause, to oppose the seizure, by a judgment creditor of his wife, of articles of furniture acquired by him after the marriage and brought into the common domicile.

Desrochers v. Roy, 18 Que. S.C. 70.

-Ante-nuptial contract-Registry-Loan to Husband - Insolvency.] - A donation made by the future husband to his future wife in their marriage contract of a sum of money that the latter "shall have and take whenever she sees fit from the first available and convenient property of the future husband" is legal if it was made without fraud, if the husband was solvent at the time the contract was executed and if the debt of the contestant did not then exist; the wife, on the subsequent insolvency of her husband, may claim this sum and rank au mare la livre with his other creditors. The contract of marriage may be set up against subsequent creditors of the husband if it was registered at the domicile the contracting parties had when it was executed, though it was only registered later at the place where the insolvency was declared. A contract of loan between husband and wife is valid and the wife can claim the sum lent on the husband's insolvency ranking with the other creditors.

In Re Denis, 18 Que. S.C. 436 (S.C.).

-- Judicial separation — Abandonment of community—Registry—Droits et reprises.]

—The failure by the wife to register the abandonment of the community on judicial separation as to property does not affect the validity of the judgment for separation. In order that the absence of pretakings (droits et reprises) of the wife against her husband can excuse the latter from executing the decree for separation, it is not sufficient that this decree grants no pretakings to the wife, but it is necessary that the absence of such pretakings should be established by a report of a professional man or by a declaration of the wife.

Mailloux v. Brolet, 18 Que. S.C. 567

—Séparation de biens—Acts of administration—Sale of immovable.] — Although a wife separated as to property can alone enter into all writings and contracts concerning the administration for her property she cannot, without authority from her husband, commission a real estate agent to effect the sale of her immovables, such a contract not constituting an act of administration.

Bourdon v. Bourdeau, 18 Que. S.C. 136 (S.C.).

—Contract by wife—Arts. 1240, 1301 C.C.]
—The contractual obligation by a married woman, separated as to property, to pay the debts of her husband is void, even where she had represented to the lender that she was borrowing the money to pay her husband's lawful debts, and he had believed her.

Globenski v. Boucher, 10 Que. K.B. 318.

- Husband and wife - Advantage - Prohibition-Loan by one-Agency of husband.]-The prohibition in Art. 1265 C.C. of consorts to procure advantage during the coverture by deed entre vifs forbids every transaction by which one gives an advantage to or enriches the other at his expense or to the diminution of his property, but does not forbid one of them to lend money to the other in good faith; and a loan so made forms a valid contract which binds the borrower to reimbursement of the loan. The fact that one consort had lent money to the other, in the absence of proof of fraud, cannot taint the transaction with fraud as having been made in contravention of the prohibition against consorts procuring advantage for themselves during covertures. The law does not forbid the husband to act gratuitously as agent for his wife separated as to property in the purchase and sale by her of immovables nor for the administration of her immovable property; and purchases so made, when they are not merely colourable and do not diminish the property of the husband, to his decriment or that of his creditors, do not come within the prohibition contained in Art. 1265 C.C. The husband having become insolvent his curator brought an action to have the deeds and titles of the wife annulled and set aside and the husband declared the owner alleging that the lands had been purchased by his money and placed in his wife's name to secure her a benefit contrary to law:-Held, that the only recourse of the curator is a personal action against the wife to recover the money alleged to have been advanced to her by her husband.

Déry v. Paradis, 10 Que. K.B. 227.

Séparation de biens-Judgment not executed-Authorization of wife.]-The nullity of a judgment for separation as to property not executed is absolute, and third parties even are unable to take advantage of the fact that in the contract between them and the wife she was described as being judicially séparée de biens. Want of authorization of a wife common as to property is an absolute nullity in the summons; such nullity is one of public order and should be invoked by the court even where the wife has not raised it. An action against a wife common as to property who is erroneously represented as separated as to property in the contract on which the action is based, and who has not pleaded the nullity of the summons by exception to the form will be dismissed, but without Leclaire v. Robert, 3 Que. P.R. 549 (C.R.).

—Gift by husband to wife—Fraud—Undue influence.]—Where the wife had acquired such an influence over her husband, had inspired him with such a dread of her, and had obtained such a control over him, as to preclude the exercise by him of his free and deliberate judgment, the onus of proving that a gift obtained under such circumstances was the spontaneous offspring of a free and unbiased mind lay upon the defendant, and it was essential to the validity of a gift obtained under such circumstances that the donor should have had competent and independent advice.

-Action by wife to annul sale of immovable - Intervention - Death of party.] -Plaintiff, a wife séparée de corps, sued to have annulled a sale by her husband of an immovable of which she claimed to be owner. She died pending the action, her succession was declared vacant, and the curator took up the instance. The husband in tervened asking that the guardianship be set aside and himself substituted as curator and given possession of his wife's property. The curator opposed the intervention:-1. Because the husband was already in the cause as mis en cause. 2. Because the guardianship could only be set aside by direct action:-Held, without admitting that the intervention was well-founded, that it could not be dismissed on the grounds above stated.

Carrière v. Saint-Pierre, 3 Que. P.R. 299

-Sale of goods-Undisclosed principal-Judgment against husband and wife-Married Woman's Act, R.S.O. 1897 c. 163.]-A husband, as agent for his wife, purchased goods from the plaintiffs, who were ignorant that she was the purchaser. On becoming aware of it, and the goods not having been paid for, they sued both husband and wife, but on the husband giving a promissory note signed by him for part of the debt, and the wife paying the balance in cash, the action was not further proceeded with. The note not having been paid at maturity, an action was brought in the County Court for the balance due on the goods, being the amount for which the note had been given, and judgment was entered against both husband and wife:-Held, on appeal, that the proper inference was that the husband's note was not taken in satisfaction of the debt, nor was it an election to look to him alone for payment; and the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to sue on the original cause of action, but that they could not have judgment against both husband and wife; and must elect as to which they desired to hold it, and that they could properly hold it against the wife, a recovery against her being now maintainable under "The Married Woman's Property Act," R.S.O. 1897 c. 168. Wagner v. Jefferson (1876), 37 U.C.R. 551, distinguished. Held, also, that the debt was not cognizable by the Division Court, the claim not having been ascertained by the signature of the wife; that the note signed by the husband could not be treated as such, it not having been signed by the husband a: her agent, but as his own promise.

Globensky v. Boucher, 10 Que. K.B. 321.

—Separation de biens—Execution of judgment—Lease to wife—Authority to sign.] —The absence of execution of a judgment for separation as to property only deprives it of effect as against third parties and does not prevent the latter from setting it up against the wife who has obtained it. A wife separated as to property (séparée de biens) who undertakes to keep a boardinghouse (maison de pension) may, without being authorized by her husband, or the court, enter into a lease of a bailding intended to be used for such purpose.

Parizeau v. Huot, 19 Que. S.C. 379 (S.C.).

—Purchase by husband of wife's property at sheriff's sale—Resale for false bidding.] —The husband separated as to property may validly purchase at sheriff's sale an immevable belonging to his wife and, if he fails to pay the price of adjudication, is subject to the usual proceedings for folle enchère.

Buchanan v. O'Brien, 18 Que. S.C. 343 (C.R.).

—Damage caused by husband's dog—Responsibility of wife separate as to property.]—A wife, separate as to property, is liable for damages caused by a vicious dog belonging to her husband, and harboured at the common domicile, which is her private property, particularly when it is proved that the dog was so harboured not only without any objection or protest on her part, but with her full consent and approval notwithstanding that she had full knowledge of the dangerous character of the dog.

Hugron v. Stratton, 18 Que. S.C. 200 (White, J.).

—Séparation de biens—Obligations of wife for husband—Art. 1301 C.C.]—When a wife separated as to property, after registering, on demand of her husband, a declaration to the effect that she carries on business under a certain firm name, contracts obligations under this name for her husband such obligations are absolutely void under Art. 1301 C.C. The fact that the wife has received no personal benefit from the business carried on under this name, and that the business operations were principally employed to pay her husband's debts, raises a strong presumption that she carried it or for him and incurred liability on his behalf. The wife cannot employ her property to guarantee the obligations of her husband.

Honan v. Duckett, 19 Que. S.C. 418 (S.C.).

-Authority of wife to carry on business-Goods taken for husband's debt.]-Under the provisions of R.S.N.S. c. 94, s. 53, when a married woman does, or proposes to do, business on her separate account, in addition to filing her husband's consent thereto in the office of the registrar of deeds for the county, she shall record, in the office of the clerk of the city or town in which she proposes to do such business, a certificate in writing setting forth her name and that of her husband, the nature of the business, and the place where it is or is proposed to be carried on, and giving, if practicable, the street and the number on the street; and where the nature of the business, or the place where it is carried on, is changed, a new certificate shall be filed accordingly. Plaintiff who carried on business as a grocer in the city of Halifax under a license from her husband, enabling her to carry on such business separate and apart and free from his control, filed a certificate giving the particulars required by the Act, except as to the street and the number on the street, as to which it was set out that it was not practicable to do so as the premises had not yet been selected. Goods claimed by plaintiff as her separate property having been levied upon by defendant, as sheriff of the county, under a writ of execution:-Held (1) Affirming the judgment of the trial judge ir. defendant's favour, that it was incumbent upon plaintiff to select the premises before filing her certificate. (2) The words "the place" mean the place in the city, town, or municipality where it is proposed to do the business, and where the place is changed a new certificate must be recorded.

Pearce v. Archibald, 37 C.L.J. 128 (S.C. N.S.).

—Action against married woman—Whether necessary to prove separate property.]—It is not necessary in an action against a married woman under the N.B. Married Woman's Property Act, 58 Vict., c. 24, to allege or prove that she has separate property. Appeal from St. John County Court dismissed with costs.

Jack v. Johnston, 37 C.L.J. 509 (S.C. N.B.)

—Marriage contracts—Purchase by wife— Hypothec.]—A husband, by the marriage contract, had agreed to employ, within five years, a sum of $7,000 which he would give to his wife séparée de biens, in the purchase of an immovable in his wife's pame, but of which she would have only the revenue and the children the ownership. After the marriage the wife, with her husband's authority, purchased an immovable in her own name, but there was nothing in the deed, nor in any other document, to show that the purchase was made with the husband's money and as an employment of the sum given by the marriage contract, on the contrary, everything indicated the wife as purchaser for herself as sole owner, and with her own money, and it was thus that it appeared on the registry. Later the wife borrowed money from the plaintiff and with her husband's authority, hypothecated the immovable to the plaintiff as her sole property, and he having had it taken in execution against the wife, her children claimed title to it under the marriage contract and proved orally that the intention of both their parents at the time of the purchase was to make it in conformity with said contract, and that the husband had himself furnished the purchase money to fulfil his obligation thereunder. Held, that such cral testimony could not avail as against the plaintiff; that to be of avail it was necessary that the deed or some other registered document should state that the purchase of the immovable was made to serve in employment of the sum given by the husband to his wife. The plaintiff, therefore, had a right to the entire immovable sold as the absolute property of the wife.

Gaudreau v. Tétu, 20 Que. S.C. 402 (Sup. Ct.).

-- Donation--Articles 755 and 777, Civil Code.]—It is essential to a gift inter vivos that the donor should actually divest himself of his ownership in the thing given; and the following clause in a marriage contract does not constitute such gift:--'En considération dudit futur mariage ledit future fopous fait don à ladite 'future fopous d'une somme de $800 courant, à prendre sur ses biens les plus apparents, et avant tout autre créancier.' And such sum cannot be attached in the hands of the husband under a writ of saisie arrêt issued by a creditor, upon a judgment against the wife.

the husband, donor, who was insolvent at the time of marriage. 2. Dower, whether customary or conventional is not a gift but a debt, and is by onerous title. This rule applies to conventional dower even when it exceeds the customary dower which it replaces. 3. Renunciations to dower are to be very strictly construed in favour of the wife and even where, as in the present case, the marriage contract contains what purports to be a renunciation to dower whether customary or prefix, the stipulation of a life rent payable to the wife, which rent is expressly stated to be in lieu of dower, is in effect a stipulation of conventional dower, and is governed by the same rules which govern dower. Such stipulation cannot, therefore, be set aside by a creditor without proving knowledge by the wife of her husband's insolvency at the date of the marriage. 4. The wife has no legal hypothec to secure the payment of conventional dower, and the registration of a mere notice, as provided for legal hypothec, without description of the property affected does not charge the husband's property with a hypothec in favour of the wife.

Turgeon v. Shannon, 20 Que. S.C. 135 (Archibald, J.).

-Prefixed or conventional dower-Rights of wife who is entitled thereto as regards creditors of insolvent husband-Registration of notice by wife-Article 2029, C.C.] -1. Where by the marriage contract, a prefixed or conventional dower payable in one sum, has been stipulated in favour of the wife, she is not entitled to rank for that sum as a conditional obligation in competition with the creditors of her insolvent husband, before the opening of the dower by the death of the husband. 2. A prefixed dower, or any other right derived from the husband, does not come under the terms of Article 2,029 C.C. The only way in which such rights can be protected is by special conventional hypothec, which must describe the property affected. 3. The curator of an insolvent estate is entitled to bring action for the radiation of the registration of a hypothec affecting the insolvent's immovable property where such registration is illegal without waiting to see whether the estate is sufficient to pay all creditors in full.

to the Act for repairs thereto, and for the surrender of leasehold interests therein, where the expenditure was made solely to improve the property. The onus is upon the husband of establishing a resulting trust in his favour in land purchased by him in the name of his wife.

DeBury v. DeBury (No. 2), 2 N.B. Eq. 248.

—Note made by wife—Art. 1301 C.C.]—A bill or note signed by a married woman made payable to and indorsed by her husband is not, in the absence of proof that it was signed for the husband, a contravention of Art. 1301 C.C. as constituting an obligation entered into by the wife with her husband.

Dupuis v. McTavish, 21 Que. S.C. 455 (Ct. Rev.).

-Authority of wife to carry on business-Goods taken for husband's debt-R.S.N.S. (5th series), c. 94, s. 53.j-Under the provisions of R.S.N.S. (5th series), c. 94, s. 53, when a married woman does, or proposes to do, business on her separate account, in addition to filing her husband's consent thereto in the office of the registrar of deeds for the county, she shall re cord, in the office of the clerk of the city or town in which she proposes to do such business, a certificate in writing setting forth her name and that of her husband, the nature of the business, and the place where it is, or is proposed, to be carried on, and giving, "if practicable," the street and the number on the street; and where the nature of the business, or the place where it is carried on, is changed a new certificate shall be filed accordingly. Plaintiff, who carried on business as a grocer in the city of Halifax under a license from her husband, enabling her to carry on such business separate and apart and free from his control, filed a certificate giving the particulars required by the Act, except as to the street and the number of the street, as to which it was set out that it was not practicable to do so, as the premises had not yet been selected Goods claimed by plaintiff as her separate property having been levied upon by defendant, as sheriff of the county, under a writ of execution for the husband 's debt:-Held, affirming the judgment of the trial Judge in defendant's favour, that it was incumbent upon plaintiff to select the premises before filing her certificate, the provision being intended to apply not only to towns having streets named and numbered, but to towns which had not streets so named and numbered. Held, also, that the words "the place" meant the place in the city, town, or municipality where it was proposed to do the business, and that where the place was changed a new certificate must be recorded.

-Suit by one against the other-Married Women's Property Ordinance.]-In an action by a husband against his wife for a declaration that certain real and personal property claimed by both parties belonged to him, and for an injunction to restrain the wife from disposing of the same:-Held, that a husband can sue his wife in respect of both real and personal property as if she were a feme sole. Semble, the law in the Territories is practically the same as that in England, as to suits between husband and wife, except that in the Territories one may sue the other in respect of torts, while in England this is not so.

(2) This usufruct, however, ceases with the disappearance of the goods and does not extend to other goods purchased to replace those which were subject to the usufruct and had become worn out. (3) Where it appeared that a piano had been purchased by the husband of the opposant who gave in payment an old piano the opposant lending her husband the money necessary to pay the difference in price, her opposition to the sale of the piano was rejected. (4) An opposant contending to have been the purchaser of goods of which possession is claimed is bound to prove that the money paid for them actually was the money of the opposant; if she had mixed the funds coming from her parents with those she got from her husband, she could no longer contend that the goods were not the property of her husband.

-Marriage contract - Property in movables - Revendication.]-When the plaintiff and defendant were married, the contract provided that all the movables for housekeeping (menage) which shall at any time be brought into the dwelling of the future consorts by either of them should belong to the future wife. A decree en separation de corps having been made, the defendant accompanied by her father, took away from plaintiff's domicile the movables which she claimed as hers under the above clause of her marriage contract, and the same were carried to the domicile of defendant's father where she was living. The plaintiff revendicated the movables from his wife and her father:-Held, the clause in question of the marriage contract provided for a donation à cause de mort of property acquired by the husband after it was executed and the movables remained his property for his lifetime. Under the circumstances of this case the plaintiff could direct his action for revendication against his wife's father and himself

Goyette v. Leclerc, Q.R. 23 S.C. 542 (Ct. Rev.).

-Contract of marriage-Opposition-Gift of goods present and to be acquired hereafter.]-(1) A gift to the wife of furniture and other movables in the future residence of the consorts is a donation of goods owned at present and to be acquired in the future which is not mortis causa and which may take effect at any time and is not a contract forbidden by law nor contrary to good morals. (2) In reply to a contestation of an opposition based upon such a donation, it may be alleged that certain of the goods were purchased by the husband after the marriage, for his wife, to replace similar goods which had been sold, such a reply being an explanation of an allegation of the opposition question in the contestation.

Allan v. Trihey, 5 Que. P.R. 298.

-Loan obtained by wife for the purpose of paying her husband's debt—Art. 1301 C.C.]—(1) Where a loan is obtained by a married woman separated as to property from her husband, with hypothecation of her real estate, it is sufficient to show that the money, although handed to her in the form of a cheque payable to her order, was not used by her, but was given to her husband, in order to bring the contract within the prohibition of Art. 1301, C.C. (2) The law does not require that the party from whom a wife obtains a loan should know that it is for the benefit and use of her husband. It is for the lender to exerci.e proper caution, and to see to the due employment of the loaned money for the purposes of the wife. Even in the case of a deception by the wife, as to the use to which the money is to be applied, the contract of loan is nevertheless null.

-Donation by marriage contract to surviving consort, of usufruct-Registration-Art. 1411, C.C.]-A contract of marriage provided that there should be universal community, and also stipulated a donation to the surviving consort of the usufruct, during life, of all property existing at the dissolution of the community by the death of the consort dying first. Nothing existed in the community, at the date of its dissolution, that would not have formed part of it by mere operation of law:-Held, the stipulation, in such marriage contract, of usufruct in favour of the surviving consort, although described as a donation, is not a donation but a mar riage covenant, and is not subject to the formality of registration.

—Separation de biens—Powers of husband.]—The wife separated as to property, may seize in revendication (saisir-revendiquer) her movable property without being first authorized by her husband. The rights of administration given to her husband by a wife separated as to property dees not confer the right to alienate. The husband although he may be in certain circumstances the administrator of the estate of his wife separated as to property has no right to alienate it without express authority.

-N.B. Married Women's Property Act, 58 Vict. c. 24—Woman married before the Passing of the Act—Conveyance of real estate without husband's concurrence—''Tenancy by the curtesy''—Husband's money expended on wife's property—Premoney expended on wife's property—Presumption of gift-Merger-Property acquired during coverture.]-Held, on appeal, affirming the judgment of the Court below, that where a husband, in the man-agement of his wife's property, of which he was receiving the benefit, purchased certain freehold lots with his own money, with a view of improving his wife's estate, and took the conveyance in her name, the purchase money is not a charge upon the property, and as between husband and wife the presumption is that a gift was intended, unless displaced by evidence necessary to establish a resulting trust in his favour. This onus is upon the husband of establishing a resulting trust in his favour in land purchased by him in the name of his wife. The changed condition in the husband's status brought about by the Married Women's Property Act, 58 Vict. c. 24, by which the marital rights of a husband in his wife's property have been materially curtailed, does not give him an equity to be compensated for the purchase of the surrender of leases of property of which the wife had acquired a reversionary interest, and for moneys expended in making useful and necessary repairs upon the leasehold premises. The effect of the surrender is a merger of the outstanding term of years in the greater estate. A woman, married before the passing of the Act, may make a conveyance, without her husband's concurrence, of her real estate not acquired from him during coverture, subject, however, to his tenancy by the curtesy consummate. A married woman can not during her husband's life-time. transfer either the title or possession of property acquired from her husband during coverture.

DeBury v. DeBury, 36 N.B.R. 57.

-Gift from husband to wife-Possession-Execution creditor-Married Woman's Property Act.]-The defendant purchased certain pictures between 1895 and 1898, and bringing them home handed them to his wife, telling her he gave them to her. She had one framed in a frame given her by her mother, and all were hung up in the house occupied by her and her husband. An execution creditor of the defendant now caused the sheriff to levy on them:-Held, that since the Married Woman's Property Act, 1884, R.S.O. 1897, c. 163, s. 3, a married woman is under no disability as to receiving and holding personal as well as real property by direct gift or transfer from her husband; and that here the subsequent possession of the picture was the wife's, although the house was occupied by her husband and herself. Held, also, that the effect of sub-s. 4 of s. 5 of R.S.O., 1897, c. 163, enacting that a woman married since 1889 may hold her property free from the debts or control of her husband, "but this sub-section shall not ex-

—Gifts to wife—Art. 598 C.P.Q.]—A man being obliged to furnish clothes for his wife necessary garments given to his wife during coverture do not come within the prohibition as to husband and wife conferring benefits on each other, and these garments from time to time delivered to the wife becomes her individual property, and are therefore not liable to seizure for her husband's debts.

Robertson v. Honan, Q.R. 24 S.C. 510 (Sup. Ct.).

—Civil Code (Que.), Art. 1301—Construction—Wife's mortgage of separate property for her husband's benefit void—Onus probandi as to husband's benefit!—By the true construction of Art. 1301 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada a wife's mortgage of her separate property is void both as to the debt contracted and as to the disposition if it is in any way for her husband's purposes. Ignorance on the part of the lender that the money was borrowed for the husband's purposes is of no avail, and the burden is on him to prove that it was not so borrowed.

Trust and Loan Company v. Gauthier, [1904] A.C. 94, affirming 12 Que. K.B. 281.

The King v. Forbes; Ex parte Bramhall, 36 N.B.R. 333.

—Notes signed by both husband and wife —Presumption — Burden of proof—Art. 1301 C.O.]—1. Although the obligation of the wife who is separate as to property, when she binds herself with her husband, is not null if the obligation be for her own business and profit, the burden of proof is on the creditor to establish that it was for her business and profit, and in the absence of such proof the presumption is that she bound herself for her husband. 2. The wife separate as to property will not be condemned on notes signed by her, which were either renewals of notes made and eigned by her husband alone, or which were given for goods furnished on the husband's order and charged to him in the books of the creditor.

McClatchie v. Gilbert, 24 Que. S.C. 387 (C.R.).

-Hypothec of wife's property.]-A hypothee given by a married woman upon her separate property to secure payment of a loan made to her husband to enable him to effect a composition with his creditors of whom the lender was one, is void as being in contravention of Art. 1301 C.C. (Que.). Such nullity being absolute, and of public order, involves the nullity of everything connected with it, and in this case the security given to guarantee the wife's obligation is a subsidiary obligation depending for its existence on the principal and, consequently, the nullity of the principal obligation necessarily comes with it the nullity of the security. An obligation prohibited by law is not a natural obligation and cannot be secured. Such nullity, which is of public order, is inherent in the debt; it is a defect in the debt which the surety may invoke as well as the wife herself.

On an appeal, where the judge in the Court below has trial the cause without a jury and entered a judgment for the respondent, and the return does not contain a statement of his find-ings on the facts, it will be assumed by the appellate Court that he found the facts in favour of the respondent, and the judgment will not be disturbed if there is evidence to justify such finding. Johnson v. Jack, 35 N.B R. 492.

-Ante-nuptial contract-Donation-Present and future effects.]-A clause in a contract of marriage, providing that "in consideration of the deep and sincere affection borne by the prospective husband towards his prospective wife he donates to her all the live stock and movable effects now in his residence as well as all the live stock and movable effects which he may acquire therein in future" does not constitute a donation operating in favour of the donee during the donor's lifetime, but should be considered as a donation in contemplation of death (à cause de mort) which can only have effect on the decease of the husband; consequent ly, the property so donated, only becoming the property of the wife from the date of her husband's death, may be seized and sold to satisfy a judgment obtained against the latter.

- Separate estate of wife-Personal property—Jus disponendi—Matrimonial domicil.]—The law of the matrimonial domicil regulates the rights of the husband and wife as to the movable property of either of them. Held, therefore, where the matrimonial domicil was Ontario that personal property, which by the law of Ontario was the separate property of the wife, remained such on the removal of the parties to the Territories; and furthermore was subject to the provisions of the Ordinances of the Territorial Legislature, subsequently passed relating to the personal property of married women.

Brooks v. Brooks, 2 Terr. L.R. 289, (Richardson, J.).

-Judgment against separate estate of married woman-Life policy.]-The plaintiff was a judgment creditor of the defendant, by virtue of a judgment payable out of her separate estate recovered on Bills of Exchange accepted by the defendant, a married woman engaged in trade, for her trade debts, subsequent to 13th April, 1897. Afterwards, on the death of her husband, she became entitled to the proceeds of a policy of insurance on his life which he had made payable to her as beneficiary:-Held, that the effect of s. 159 of c. 203 R.S.O. 1897 is to create a statutory trust of the money, payable under the policy, in favour of the wife without restraint on anticipation; that on the death of her husband, the absolute right to the money became vested in her, her original interest in the trust being separate property within the contemplation of The Married Woman's Property Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 163, and that the fruits of the trust must be regarded as separate property and as such liable to satisfy the plaintiff's judgment.

—Consent to wife carrying on business— Effect of filing as notice.]—The mere fact of a married woman filing her husband's consent to her carrying on b siness in her cwn name will not enable her to recover as an undisclosed principal against a third party who has purchased goods from the Lusband, believing that he is dealing with the husband alone, and has credited the price of the goods on an account against the husband for goods sold and delivered. Murray and Lapierre, 41 N.S.R. 122.

-Proceedings against married woman by judgment creditor of husband.]-Plaintiff sought to attach as a debt due the husband. a sum of money deposited in a chartered bank by a married woman in her own The evidence showed that the money in question, in whole or in part, was obtained from profits earned in carrying on the business of the husband during his absence, and it appeared that it was received by the wife and deposited in her own name, by arrangement with the husband, for the purpose of protecting it against the creditors of the husband:-Held, under these circumstances, that the amount in question was not a debt due by the wife to the husband, and therefore not attachable under garnishee proceedings by the hus-band's judgment creditor. St. Charles v. Andrea, 41 N.S.R. 190.

-Separation as to property-Sale of immovable.]-The nullity of a contract can only be declared in a case in which all the contracting parties are before the Court. The sale of an immovable with a clause for redemption agreed to by a wife separated as to property cannot be annulled in an action by her on the ground that the deed was in reality an obligation contracted on behalf of her husband in violation of Article 1301, C.C., especially if it is shown that the price of sale was employed in discharging debts due by her alone.

riage-Connlation of cession of contract of a consideraal dower by affection he f money, to s of his ese him, payth, monthly e, as a mar-er," with a e wife pressue, or havving predeave no right him the husband à titre de reversion," is not a stipulation of prefixed or conventional dower, nor a gift or grataitous disposition, but a synallagmatical agreement or bargain that the husband shall pay the sum in considera-tion of the renunciation by the wife of her dower rights. Hence, in the event of the predecease of the wife leaving children icsue of the marriage, and of such children being her heirs-at-law, she having died intestate, they have the right to be paid the sum out of their father's estate, not by r:ght of dower (à titre de douairriers), but as the representatives of their mother. To have and to hold both of said donation and settlement unto her . . . provided slways that she shall survive him for, in case she should pre-decease him, said settlement and said donation shall return and belong to him by title by reversion" does not constitute a future succession, but a gift entre vifs to be realized from the property of the husband at the wife's pleasure subject to the condition that, if she should die before him, the movables and money would be returned to the husband surviving her.

Fox v. Lamarche, Q.R. 16 K.B. 83.

—Contract of marriage—Donation.]—The donation of property made to the wife by a marriage contract in case she survives him only takes effect on the husband's death. -Contract by wife-Separate estate.]-In an action against a husband and wife for goods supplied to the wife before and after marriage, the evidence showed that, at the time of marriage, the wife had a separate estate which she still held, and the only evidence upon which the claim against the husband was founded was that after marriage he cut some timber upon the wife's property, which was sold and the proceeds used to purchase supplies for household purposes:-Held, that this did not constitute an acquiring or becoming entitled to property from or through the wife within the Married Woman's Property Act, R.S. 1900, c. 112, s. 25. Also, that debt due from the wife to the husband before marriage was extinguished by the marriage.

Any savings the result of her thrift, economy and good management belong to the husband, and can in no manner be the property of the wife, as earnings or otherwise.

Bruneau v. Lefaivre, 34 Que. S.C. 173.

--Ownership of goods in business carried on in wife's name.]—(1) The proceeds of the sale by the husband of a parcel of real estate owned by the wife, though they came into the husband's hands prior to 21st May, 1900, when it was enacted that married woman on that date should be deemed to be her property until the contrary is shown, and although the land had ben conveyed to her by the husband during coverture, belonged to the wife; for, apart from s. 21 of R.S.M. 1892, c. 95, which provided that a man might make a valid conveyance or transfer of land to his wife without the intervention of a trustee, a husband may make a gift of property to his wife, which property, if the gift be com-pleted, will in equity be considered as her separate property, provided that the husband is at the time in a position financially to make the gift, and does not do it with any intention of defrauding his creditors: Kent v. Kent (1892), 18 A.R. 352. (2) The profits made in the fur business started with such proceeds and carried on from the first in the wife's name, though managed chiefly by the husband (all goods required for the business having been sold to her and on her credit only as the husband had unsatisfied judgments against him) belonged to the wife and so did all goods purchased out of such profits and Int into such business. Dominion Loan. tete. Co. v. Kilroy (1887), 14 O.R. 468, followed. Ady v. Harris (1893), 9 M.R. 127, and other "farm" cases distinguished. (3) Such profits are protected for the married woman by the definition of the word "property" in sub-s. (b) of s. 2 of R.S.M. 1902, c. 106, as meaning "any real or personal property of every kind and description whether acquired before or after the commencement of this Act, and shall include the rents, issues and profits of any such real or personal property," and by s. 5 of the same Act; and such protection is not taken away by the further clause in said sub-s. (b) reading: "and includes also . . . all wages, earnings, money and property gained or acquired by a married woman in any employment, trade or occupation in which she is engaged or which she carries on separately from her husband, and in which her husband has no proprie-tary interest," although it was admitted that the business was not carried on by the wife separately from her husband. The word "profits" as used in those sections should be held to cover gains arising from a combination of skill or work with the earning property or capital as well as those arising only from investments without such combination.

Vopni v. Bell, 17 Man. R. 417.

-- Evidence to prove husband's agency for wife.]-Held, that a husband's authority to enter into a contract on behalf of his wife, for the construction of stone foundations on four lots of land beliging to her. was sufficiently established by proofs of the following facts: (1) Prior to the date of the contract the wife entered into what was called a building loan agreement in respect of each of the four lots. Each agreement provided, amongst other things, that she would forthwith proceed to erect a frame building with stone foundation on the lot named. These agreements were signed by the wife personally. Subsequently four several applications for loans on the several lots were made. These applications were signed by the husband in the wife's name and the wife acted upon them and recognized the loans made pursuant thereto. (2) During the progress of the plaintiff's work the wife came with her husband and saw the work proceeding but made no objection to it, and she and her busband went frequently to the loan company's office together and gave directions as to the buildings.

Gillies v. Gibson, 17 Man. R. 479.

-Examination of defendant's wife after judgment.]-When, after judgment, plaintiff moves for the examination of defendant's wife, he must allege in his motion that defendant and wife are separated as to property, or that defendant's wife has acted as his agent for the administration of property belonging to defendant. Nadeau v. Boulay, 10 Que. P.R. 217.

-Voluntary conveyance to wife-Fraudulent purpose.]-The plaintiff caused the land in question to be conveyed to his wife, the defendant, and registered the deed without her knowledge. His motive was to avoid payment of an anticipated claim against him :-Held, that he could not succeed in an action to compel her to reconvey the land to him.

McAuley v. McAuley, 18 Man. R. 544.

-Co-sureties for debt of stranger-Liability of wife-Absence of fraud.]-A married woman, when contracting otherwise than for the benefit of her husband, has all the capacity of a feme sole to bind her separate estate, and there can be no ground for presuming that the husband abused the confidence of his wife by exercising undue marital influence for the benefit of a stranger. Cox v. Adams (1904), 35 S.C.R. 393, distinguished. And, in the circumstances of this case, where the detendants, husband and wife, became sureties for the debt of a third person, and it was found by the trial Judge that the wife became co-surety with full knowledge of the nature of the obligation which she undertook and without anything in the nature of fraud, misrepresentation, or undue influence, she was held liable to the creditors, the plaintiffs, no circumstances being proved which would relieve the principal debtor from liability. There was evidence that threats were used to induce the wife to guarantee the debt, but the trial Judge found, upon consideration of the conduct and demeanour of the witnesses, that no such threats were made:-Held, that the Court could not, upon conflicting evidence, reverse this finding.

Sawyer-Massey Co. v. Hodgson, 18

O.L.R. 333.

-Separation as to property-Payment of husband's debt.]-The remittance by a wife separated as to property of a cheque to her husband the proceeds of which he deposits in a bank as collateral security for a debt due the latter, is a valid loan and not within the prohibition of Art. 1301 C.C. against a married woman binding herself, with or for her husband, otherwise than as being common as to property. The nature of the transaction and its validity are not affected by the following indorsement on the cheque by the bank manager: "To guarantee the payment of a draft for $1,027.38 on Linabury, O.K. this cheque will be available only if Linabury does not pay the draft in full or demand a reduction or make a claim after having sold the hay."

Augé v. La Banque d'Hochelaga, Q.R.

34 S.C. 481.

-Seizure of grain grown on wife's land-Farming operations carried on by wife.]-The sheriff seized a quantity of wheat grown on land the property of the claimant, a married woman, under executions against her husband. The latter was a farmer and owned a quarter section adjoining that of the claimant. It appeared in evidence that the claimant carried on the farming operations on her own land, hiring the necessary help and that she purchased the seed grain personally. She consulted her husband in regard to the working of the farm and he assisted in working the place; but it was shown that the men hired by her did more work for the husband on his farm than was done by him on the claimant's farm. On trial of an interpleader issue to determine the ownership of the grain:-Held, that as under the Married Woman's Property Act (c. 18 of 1907), the claimant was entitled to hold and deal with real and personal property as if she were a feme sole and as it was not shown that the husband was carrying on farming operations on her land as head of the household or lessee, she was entitled to the crop grown on her land. Lindsay v. Morrow, 1 Sask. R. 516.

III. ALIMONY AND SEPARATION.

-Judicial separation-Petition by wife-Omission to aver non-collusion.]-In the affidavit filed by the petitioner for a judi-cial separation it was not alleged that there was no collusion or connivance between the parties:-Held, that such allegation is a positive statutory requirement preliminary to the issue of a citation. Where the respondent has been served with a citation and has not appeared, service of notice of subsequent proceedings in the cause is not necessary.

Timms v. Timms, 14 B.C.R. 410.

-Judicial separation-Petition for by wife on account of cruelty.]-In a petition by a wife for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, the petition should shew specifically the series of acts of cruelty relied Alimony — Deserted Wives' Maintenance Act.]—Where plaintiff wife, within a week of the issue of the writ, obtained an order under the Deserted Wives' Maintainance Act, R.S.O. (1897), c. 167, for payment to her by defendant of $3 per week and $4.75 costs, the Master in Chambers dismissed a motion for interim alimony and disbursements, with costs.

Cowardine v. Cowardine, 2 O.W.N. 44, 16 O.W.R. 963.

-Judicial separation-Cruelty-Substituted service of petition.]—A wife petitioned for a judicial separation from her husband on the ground of cruelty, and attempted to establish her right by proving specific acts and a course of conduct amounting to cruelty. The parties were married in 1886 and had 6 children, and lived together until February, 1909, when they separated, but came together again after two months, shortly after which they again separated, and this petition was filed:—Held, that lack of harmony does not justify a judicial separation; there must be some substantial wrong-doing. The question of cruelty is one of fact, and is, whether the husband has so treated his wife as to inflict bodily injury upon her, or cause reasonable apprehension of suffering to her physically or mentally. Here the petitioner had no substantial grievance, or at least none which she had not unequivocally condoned. Striking his grown-up daughter, not in the presence of his wife, was not cruelty of the husband to the wife, within the meaning of the authorities. Recent cruelty set up at the trial, in refusing to supply medical attendance, was not specifically pleaded. and was not in fact proved. On the whole nothing was established which would justify a decree for judicial separation. Where the petitioner relies upon conduct amounting to cruelty, the petition should specifically set out a regular series of the acts relied on to establish the cruelty. The greatest possible care should be taken to see that the proceedings are brought to the notice of the respondent.

Timms v. Timms, 13 W.L.R. 636 (B.C.).

-Separation-Motion by wife for payment of disbursements.]-In an action in separation from bed and board, the wife must be allowed a certain amount for the necessary disbursements. But if the husband is unable to pay, the wife must then ask to be allowed to plea in forma pauperis; she being later granted sufficient money for the summoning and transporting of her wit-

Moisan v. Bilodeau, 11 Que. P.R. 248.

-Settlement in anticipation of marriage-Separation.]-The parties to an intended marriage (which was subsequently entered into) executed an indenture of settlement providing, inter alia, as follows: "The trusts and purposes for which the said respective trust funds shall be held as hereinbefore mentioned are as follows: Upon trust to pay the income thereof to the said Hugh Nelson so long as the said parties shall live together as husband and wife. In the case of death of either party in trust for the survivor absolutely, and in case for any reason whatsoever the parties shall cease to cohabit, then upon trust to sell and convert the said trust property and to hold onehalf of the proceeds of such sale and conversion upon such trusts as may be agreed upon between the parties for the children of the said marriage (if any) and to divide the other half of the said proceeds between the said parties equally and if there shall be no such child or children then to divide the proceeds of such sale and conversion between the parties equally." The defendant also joined in an instrument creating the plaintiff joint tenant with him in his real estate, which was duly registered:—Held, that the agreement was void as being against public policy.
Nelson v. Nelson, 14 B.C.R. 406.

-Alimony-Reduction.]-If a plaintiff has elected to seek, by a common law action. a reduction of the aliment fixed by a final judgment, he cannot by a motion obtain such reduction pending suit.

Weston v. Perry, 1 O.W.N. 155 (C.A.).

Alimony - Wife leaving husband-Conditional refusal to return - Costs -Disbursements. |- In an action for alimony it appeared that the plaintiff had voluntarily left the house where the defendant was living with his mother, and that she refused to return to him unless he guaranteed her a money allowance, which he said he was not in a position to do and refused to do. He had repeatedly offered in good faith to make a home for her if she would return unconditionally:-Held, that it could not be said that he was living apart from her without her consent; that, while insisting upon a guaranty, she could not be said to be calling upon him to resume marital relations; and that there was no ground for awarding alimony. Held, also, that the plaintiff, although there was no ground for the action, was entitled to have the cash disbursements of her solicitor paid by the defendant.

Forster v. Forster, 1 O.W.N. 93, 419 (D.

- Neglecting to provide necessaries for wife - Previous acquittal on like charge-Lawful excuse - Inability of prisoner.]-The defendant was in September, 1910, tried and convicted on a charge of refusing, neglecting, and omitting, without lawful excuse, to provide necessaries for his wife, by means whereof her health was then and was likely to be permanently injured. In July, 1909, the defendant had been brought before a magistrate on a charge of neglect and non-support of his wife, under the same provisions of the Criminal Code upon which the subsequent prosecution was founded, and, electing to be tried summarily, was, after trial, acquitted by the magistrate. At the trial in September, 1910, evidence was admitted, against objection on the defendant's behalf, tending to show harsh conduct towards and neglect of his wife by the defendant, before the former trial and acquittal, and the effect upon her health, the ground of admission being that such conduct might or would have some bearing on her then (September, 1910) condition of health:-Held, that the evidence was improperly admitted. The defendant gave evidence on his own behalf, and, amongst other matters, deposed as to his ability to earn money and the means at his command to enable him to support or provide necessaries for his wife. Held, that the trial Judge should have told the jury that, in case they were satisfied that the defendant had not the ability to provide necessaries for his wife, they could find him "not guilty," and the question of his ability should have been left to the jury. The question of lawful excuse is to be determined upon all the facts and circumstances, the onus being upon the Crown. Rex v. Yuman, 22 O.L.R. 500.

- Alimony - Legal cruelty.]-(1) The practice existing in England in the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes is not applicable to the Northwest Territories. (2) The Ordinance confers jurisdiction to grant alimony as an independent relief, notwithstanding that in England such relief could have been obtained only as incidental to a decree for judicial separation or for the dissolution of the marriage, or for restitution of conjugal rights. (3) In considering the question of legal cruelty, the station in life of the parties must be borne in mind. (4) A wife is entitled to her costs of an unsuccessful suit for alimony, unless she has separate means out of which to pay them, or unless her solicitor has been guilty of misconduct in countenancing improper litigation or takes oppressive and unnecessary steps in promoting the case. Harris v. Harris (No. 2), 3 Terr. L.R. 416.

Alimony - Jurisdiction - Implied authority of wife in relation to husband's affairs.]-Held, (1) The jurisdiction of the the Supreme Court of the North-West Territories is limited to the powers and authorities exercised by the Courts of Common Law, Chancery and Probate in England on July 15, 1870, and consequently it the absence of express legislation there is no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for ali mony. (2) A wife has no implied author ity to spend her money on her husband's behalf, and the husband is not liable unless such expenditure was made at his request. (3) A married woman is liable to pay costs in favour of her husband out of her separate estate, this being an incident to her status as a feme sole in respect of such property.

Harris v. Harris (1), 3 Terr. L.R. 289.

-Contravention of marriage contract.]-An agreement between consorts which contravenes the provisions of their marriage contract, even if made in proceedings to settle an action en séparation de corps is void.

O'Dell v. Gregory, Q.R. 19 K.B. 364.

-Alimony - Cruelty - Refusal to supply clothing-Wife living in husband's house. In an action for alimony, the plaintiff charged the defendant with cruelty. She was called as a witness at the trial, and it appeared that she was living under her husband's roof, though not occupying the same bed, and was supplied with food. She did not desire resumption of marital intercourse, but did want more than just her living; and the Court was asked to make an order that the defendant should pay her so much a month or so much a week, she living all the time under his roof, as she had no means of clothing herself, and the defendant had notified the tradesmen in the town where they lived not to supply her with clothing. Upon these facts appearing, and the nature of the claim being explained, the trial Judge refused to go on with the inquiry as to the alleged previous cruelty, etc.:-Held, that, in such circumstances, the wife was not entitled to alimony. The law, so long as a wife remains in her husband's house, enables her to enforce the marital obligation to supply her with clothing, only by a circuitous route, by pledging the credit of her husband for necessities.

-Action for alimony-Costs of unsuccessful plaint.]-If an action by a wife against her husband for alimony be dismissed, the wife's solicitor will not be entitled to costs against the husband if it does not appear that he believed on reasonable and proper ground that he was prosecuting a just cause. Keizer v. Keizer, 2 Alta. R. 354.

-Action by wife-Alimony.]-The husband sued en séparation de crops or for alimony alone should give his wife an alimentary allowance pending the action.

Lafleur v. Gagnon, 11 Que. P.R. 349.

Action by wife for alienation of her husband's affections.] - The plaintiff brought this action against another woman for alienating her husband's affections, committing adultery with him and inducing him to leave the plaintiff and go to the United States, whereby she was deprived of the services and support of her husband and of the exercise of the remedies provided by the Criminal law for the support of wives:-Held, that Lellis v. Lambert (1897), 24 A.R. 653, leaving nothing to be said in support of the plaintiff's action, the same must be dismissed with costs.

Lawry v. Tuckett-Lawry, 2 O.L.R. 162.

-Alimony-Lunatic-Admission to asylum --Removal.]-Held, affirming the decision of Meredith, C.J., 2 O.L.R. 289, that the plaintiff was not entitled to alimony. Held, also, that, upon a motion by the plaintiff for summary judgment under Rule 616, where all the facts were before the court, and the conclusion was against the platntiff, it was proper to pronounce judgment dismissing the action, instead of merely dismissing the motion.

Hill v. Hill, 2 O.L.R. 541 (D.C.).

-Abandonment of domicile-Aliment.]-The departure of the wife from the conjugal residence and her refusal to live with her husband, constitutes a serious offence against him, and warrants him in demanding séparation de corps with exemption from the obligation to maintain bis wife. Doyon v. Riopel, 17 Que. S.C. 488 (S.C.).

-Mourning expenses of widow-Separation for adultery-Art. 208 C.C.]-The claim by a widow for the value of her mourning depends on her surviving her husband as his wife. Therefore, when there had been a séparation de corps on account of adultery of the wife and the husband died without being reconciled to her, she could not claim the value of her mourning from his heirs.

Bradley v. Ménard, 18 Que. S.C. 382 (S.C.).

-Domicil-Jurisdiction - Alimony - Service out of jurisdiction.]-In an action for alimony the defendant was served with the writ of summons in November, 1900, in the State of California, where he had gone to reside in September, 1899. He was born in the State of Pennsylvania, and was married to the plaintiff in the State of New York in 1889. For seven or eight years before the marriage he had lived in Canada. After the marriage the plaintiff and defendant went to Europe for several months, and afterwards resided for short periods in different States in America. In 1891 they came to Canada, and bought property at a village in Ontario, which was their home from that time on, although during several winters thereafter they went to different places in the United States, where each did something to earn money, but they always came back to the Ontario home in the spring. The plaintiff still continued to reside there, and said she never at any time had any intention of changing permanently her residence or place of abode. The defendant swore that in September, 1899, he sold all the property he had in Canada, and went to the United States to reside, where he had ever since resided, was now residing, and intended to reside, and that he had no property of any kind in Ontario. The defendant had since going to California instituted proceedings there against the plaintiff for a divorce:-Held, that the defendant's domicil of origin was in the United States; that he acquired a domicil of choice in Ontario; that, upon the evidence, he had not abandoned that domicil; and therefore he was still domiciled within Ontario, within the meaning of Rule 162 (c), and service of Bonbright v. Bonbright, 1 O.L.R. 629.

—Wife a minor—Curator—Séparation de corps.]—Unless for reasons deemed sufficient the husband of a minor emancipated by marriage should be appointed her curator. The right of the husband to the guardianship of his infant wife is a result of the respective obligations of married persons and of their intimate relations. These reasons cease to exist when, for example, the parties are separated in reality and the wife has prepared to bring an action en séparation de corps. In such case the husband loses all right to the guardianship of the wife.

Ex parte Pauza, 3 Que. P.R. 570 (S.C.).

—Separation from bed and board — Provisional allowance—Residence of the wife.]
—Held, that a petition by the wife for provisional allowance, in an action for separation from bed and board, will not be granted until the wife's place of residence pending the suit, has been fixed by the court.

Lauzon v. Hebert, 3 Que. P.R. 448.

—Alimony—Action by lunatic—Right to raintain—Summary judgment—Con. Rule 616.1—On a motion to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal from the judgment of the Divisional Court, reported in 2 O.L.R. 541, affirming the decision of Meredith, C.J.C.P., (1) that the plaintiff in the action was not entitled to alimony, and (2) that on a motion for summary judgment under Rule 616 he could pronounce judgment dismissing the action, the Court of Appeal were of the opinion that the judgment was right, and leave to appeal was refused. Hill v. Hill. 3 O.L.R. 202 (C.A.).

-Separation from bed and board-Husband interdicted for insanity.]-The plaintiff, common as to property with her husband, alleged that they had been married in 1882, and had been living apart since the year 1884, and that since that time she had supported herself by her own work; that he had recently been interdicted for insanity, and that his curator had obtained a judgment for $3,500 damages for personal injuries suffered by the husband before the date of interdiction. She asked that she be authorized to ester en justice, in an action against the curator in his quality, for separation de corps et biens from her husband:-Held, the inability of a husband interdicted for insanity to receive or provide for his wife is not a ground to support an action by the wife for separation from bed and board, and no legal grounds were alleged for a judicial authorization of the wife to bring such action against the husband's curator.

Deneen v. McLeod, 21 Que. S.C. 54.

-Action for separation from bed and board.]-(1) In an action by the wife for separation from bed and board, in which the plaintiff also asks for an alimentary allowance and the care of the children, ollegations in the plea, charging that some of defendant's acts were caused by the misconduct of the plaintiff herself. are not demurrable, although not of a nature to defeat the action for separation, inasmuch as such allegations of misconduct might affect the other conclusions of the plaintiff, namely, as regards the care of the children and the alimentary allowance. (2) Under articles 196 and 197 of the Civil Code the plaintiff in an action for separation from bed and board is not entitled to adduce evidence regarding facts anterior to the last reconciliation between the consorts, without first having proved some fact which, if not of sufficient gravity alone to warrant a separation, should at least strongly support the demand therefor.

--Action for separation-Evidence-Arts. 1995, 1999, 1100 C.C.P.]—In an action demanding the forfeiture of matrimonial rights acquired by the marriage contract, proof of these rights will be ordered before the séparation en corps et de biens is decreed. Such proof should be made by producing the marriage contract and the certificate of marriage.

(Archibald, J.).

-Non-support of wife-"Wilfully refusing or neglecting to maintain"-Reasonable ground for believing that liability had terminated.]-1. To constitute a wilful refusal or neglect by a husband to maintain his wife (Cr. Code, s. 207), there must be an absence of any reasonable ground for believing the refusal or neglect to be lawful. 2. A husband who has been ordered by a civil court in an action brought by his wife for separation to pay to the wife an interim alimentary allowance, is relieved from that liability in the Province of Quebec on proof that the wife is supporting herself by immorality, and a criminal prosecution against him for non-support will be dismissed on the like proof.

Anonymous case (H--. v. H---), 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 163 (Hall, J.).

-Insanity - Separation.]-The fact that the husband is insane and unable to receive or provide for his wife is not a ground for a judicial separation from bed and board.

Dineen v. McLeod, 5 Que. P.R. 391, (Davidson, J.)

-Séparation de corps-Alimony.]-A married woman who is taking proceedings en séparation de corps is not entitled to ali-mony from her husband pending such proceedings if, without being judically authorized, she abandons the conjugal domicile and resides elsewhere.

Protain v. Prevost, Q.R. 23 S.C. 8 (Sup.

-Contempt of Court-Abandonment of domicile.]-A wife, who having been ordered by the Court to resume her marital relations, abandons the conjugal domicile after having returned to it, cannot in consequence of such act, be imprisoned for contempt of Court.

Tessier v. Guay, Q.R. 23 S.C. 75 (Sup. Ct.).

-Alimentary allowance-Indigent debtor -Art. 167 C.C.]-A husband who is uhable to earn his livelihood and possesses nothing but absolute necessaries of life, is not bound to pay an alimentary allowance to Dupuis v. St. Mars, alias Viau, 5 Que. P. R. 404.

-Custody of child-Costs.]-Where a wife leaves her husband without justification she is not entitled to her costs of unsuccessfully resisting his application by habeas corpus for the custody of children. In re C. T. McPhalen, 10 B.C.R. 40, (Hunter, C.J.).

-Separation from bed and board-Alimentary allowance to the husband.]-A merchant sued for separation from bed and board may claim an alimentary allowance from his wife, if the latter has obtained possession of the shop so as to deprive the husband of his resources.

Joly v. Garneau, 5 Que. P.R. 137.

-- Separation from bed and board-Dividing the enquete-Reconciliation-Motion to reopen enquete.]-If in an action for separation from bed and board, the parties have with the assent of the Court divided the enquete to permit the party alleging reconciliation to prove the facts constituting reconciliation, reserving the right to make proof of other facts alleged by the parties after adjudication upon the matter of the reconciliation, the opposite party cannot be permitted to re-open the enquete to make proof of facts against the reconciliation before the adjudication by the Court upon such first question

Christin v. Lafontaine, 5 Que. P.R. 198.

—Acknowledgment of debt by wife—Evidence.]—An acknowledgment of indebtedness on a sale of goods for more than $50, by a trader to a non-commercial purchaser cannot be proved by oral testimony if it has not been established that the whole or a part of the goods were delivered. In the absence of special authority a man is only liable for purchases made by his wife of things necessary for his family, such as provisions and clothing. Even in the case of goods bought by the wife for the necessities of the family the husband is not bound by acknowledgment of his wife of the indebtedness therefor, unless the same was made in the course of the sale. Pichette v. Morisette, Q.R. 25 S.C. 46 (Ct. Rev.).

—Separation from bed and board—Judgment declaring reconciliation proved. —In an action for separation from bed and board, a judgment declaring that the allegations of reconciliation have been proved, reserving the parties the right to discuss: the consequences of the reconciliation upon the proceeding pending between them is not an interlocutory judgment from which an appeal can be permitted under Art. 46 CP Christin v. Lafontaine, 6 Que. P.R. 297 (Hall, J.).

—Interim alimony—Inability of defendant to pay.]—An order for interim alimony will not be made against a defendant where it is not shown that he has the means to comply with suen an order if made.

Pherrill v. Pherrill, 6 O.L.R. 642 (M.C.).

-Separation from bed and board-Custody cf child—Omission to adjudicate upon plaintiff's demand for—Addition to judgment.]-1. Where the plaintiff, in an action for separation from bed and board, also prays for the custody of a minor child some order should be made by the Court of first instance, in delivering judgment, with respect to this portion of the plaintiff's conclusions. 2. Where the Court of first instance has omitted to make sucn order, the plaintiff is not entitled, by motion not served on the opposite party, to ask that an addition be made to the judgment, disposing of the prayer for the guardianship of the minor, it appearing in this case that the omission complained of was not a mere clerical error. 3. On an inscription in review from the first judgment, the Court of Review may either make such order, or, if it seems to be more desirable, may send the record book back to the Court of first instance, for such further proceedings as may be proper or necessary to enable the latter tribunal to adjudicate as to the custody of the

Smith v. Cook, 25 Que. S.C. 14 (C.R.).

--Succession—Judgment for maintenance.]

—The obligation to furnish maintenance is not transferable to the heirs as a debt of the succession of the person subject to it even when the latter has, in his lifetime, been condemned thereto by a judgment, in this case a judgment for maintenance in an action en séparation de corps brought by a wife against her husband condemning him to pay for an allowance during his life On this case the costs, even on appeal, were divided on account of the relationship of the parties, and because they had proceeded on a joint factum under Arts. 509 et seq. C.P.Q.

Davidson v. Winteler, Q.R. 13 K.B. 97.

Appeal to Supreme Court quashed, 34 S. C.R. 274.

-Séparation de corps-Reference to praticien-Report.]-The practising attorney (praticien) appointed to make inventory of the property appertaining to the community between a husband and wife after judgment granting séparation de corps between them, should confine himself in his report to making a complete and detailed statement of all the property of the consorts without taking upon himself to de-cide whether the same belongs to the comrunity or should be excluded therefrom as to which the Court alone should determine on the report being presented for homologation .- When the report states that certain property should be excluded from the community and a judgment is given or-dering the praticien to amend it by inserting a complete statement in detail of such property, the reason given for such order being that it should come into the community, such judgment is not chose jugée when the amended report is presented to the Court for final adjudication or its homologation.

Stewart v. Cairns, Q.R. 27 S.C. 1 (C.R.).

—Interim alimony—Husband's offer to pay for necessaries.]—It is not a sufficient answer to a motion for interim alimony where cruelty is alleged that the husband has offered to allow the wife to get whatcver is necessary for the house, in which both were living but not on friendly terms, and to pay for all such goods. Snider v. Snider (1885), 11 P.R 140, distinguished. Lovell v. Lovell (1905) 5 O.W.R., 401, 640, tollowed.

Theakstone v. Theakstone, 10 O.L.R. 186 (M.C.).

-Alimony-Interim alimony-Practice.]-1. Under Rule 433 of the King's Bench Act (Man.) an application for interim alimony may be made as soon as the defence is filed or the time for filing one to the original statement of claim has elapsed. 2. Unless the statement of claim makes a demand for a specific sum by way of interim alimony, as contemplated by Rule 601 of the King's Bench Act, it should only be allowed from the date of the order, not from the commencement of the action Peterson v. Peterson (1873), 6 P.R. 150 3. The merits of the defence set up should rot be looked into or considered on an application for interim alimony, Rae, (1899) 31 O.R. 321, that such offer, under the circumstances, was not sufficient to defeat the plaintiff's claim.

E— v. E—, 15 Man. R. 352 (Perdue, J.).

—Separation from bed and board—Judgment refusing the wife the custody of her children.]—A judgment refusing to the wife the custody of her children pending an action in separation from bed and board, it one from which leave to appeal will be granted, although such an appeal would appear to be unwise.

Lachapelle v. Lacroix, 7 Que. P.R. 307 (Hall, J.).

- Séparation de corps-Description of party-Exception to form.]-In proceedings against the husband en séparation de corps it is not a ground of exception that all the Christian names of the wife are not mentioned especially when the extract from the registry of baptisms is filed and the contract of marriage, also on the record shows that she was known by the name given in her petition for authority to sue (pour ester en justice). The fact that the wife instituting these proceedings describes herself as separated as to property, when the marriage contract which she has omitted to set up, stipulates for exclusion from the community, is not a ground for exception to the form.

Roy v. Quesnel, 7 Que. P.R. 136 (Sup. Ct.).

Interim alimony.]—An order for interim alimony is enforceable only by an order for the payment of money, and the defendant cannot be committed for disobedience of it, as for a contempt of Court.

Galley v. Galley (N.W.T.), 1 W.L.R 155 (Harvey, J.).

—Séparation de corps—Saisie gagerie conservatoire.]—The wife, in community as to property, who sues en séparation de corps should, to obtain saisie-gagerie conservatoire granted her by law, establish by her affidavit the facts which would entitle her to the saisie-careft before judgment or to the saisie conservatoire.

Mongeau v. Trudeau, 7 Que. P.R. 70 (Sup. Ct.).

—Nova Scotia Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes—Jurisdiction in respect to restitution of conjugal rights and alimony pendente lite.]—The Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in this Province has jurisdiction in respect to a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights and can order alimony for the wife pendente lite. An amendment altering the quorum of the Court of Appeal, making it unnecessary for the Judge Ordinary to sit as a member of the Appeal Court, is within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislature. Such intention is clear from reading the Act, as originally printed (Acts of 1866, c. 13, s. 6) and as reprinted in the appendix to the Revised Statutes (4th series) c. 126, appendix A.

King v. King, 37 N.S.R. 204.

--Separation from bed and board--Reconciliation — Deceit--Subsequent III-usage.]

--A mere general allegation as to deceit or force in regard to a reconciliation which took place between consorts, or as to subsequent iII-usage, is not sufficient to justify proceedings in separation from bed and board within a few days of the reconciliation.

Beauchamps v. Leduc, 7 Que. P.R. 91 (Davidson, J.).

-Necessaries for wife-Omission of hushand to provide-Injury to health-Necessity for proof of-Criminal Code, ss. 210 (2) 215.]-Under s. 210, sub-s. (2), of the Criminal Code, which deals with the non-support of a wife by a husband when a legal duty exists on the husband's part to provide necessaries for his wife, the criminal responsibility for the omission to do so only arises when it is proved either that her death has been caused or her life endangered, or her health is per-manently injured or likely to be by such When, therefore, the husband omission. was convicted on the charge of having "unlawfully omitted, without lawful excuse to supply his wife and child with the necessaries of life, whereby the health of each of them became, and was and is likely to become permanently injured," and the evidence showed that the wife and child were living with the wife's mother, who supplied all her needs:-Held, that the charge was not sustained, and the conviction was quashed.

The King v. Wilkes, 12 O.L.R. 264 (C.

--Reduction of alimentary pension-Action.]—The proper proceeding to obtain the reduction of an alimentary pension is by action and not by petition in the cause in which it was granted.

McCraw v. Vaillancourt, 7 Que. P.R. 396 (Fortin, J.).

--Alimony--Cruelty Insufficient evidence of --Non-revival of prior condoned acts.]—
The Courts scrutinize very closely retaliatory acts of alleged violence and cruelty on the part of a husband arising out of the wife's headstrong and irritating conduct, and will refuse, unless such acts are ience ts.]taliauelty ut of cons are accompanied by intemperate and excessive violence, to call them acts of cruelty, and so effective in reviving prior condoned acts of cruelty and misconduct. In 1895 the plaintiff and defendant, who prior thereto had been living together, were married, but thereafter only lived together at intervals, the plaintiff living apart from defendant, and carrying on what she called a hospital for pregnant women. In 1904, on the defendant insisting on it, the plaintiff returned to the defendant's house, everything going on satisfactorily until the plaintiff desired to carry on the alleged hospital business in the house, which the defendant refused to consent to. plaintiff then rented a house for herself, and during the defendant's temporary absence, stripped the defendant's house of rearly all the furniture, removing it to her own house. This greatly incensed the defendant, and on the plaintiff using foul and abusive language to him, he committed as the plaintiff alleged, an aggravated assault on her, and by his conduct rendered it unsafe for her to live with him, and revived prior condoned acts of cruelty and misconduct:-Held, that the defendant's acts were not of such an excessive and intemperate a character as would render it unsafe for the plaintiff to live with him, and revive the prior condoned acts, for not only did it appear that the alleged assault was grossly exaggerated, but was brought on by the plaintiff herself, whose whole object was to goad the defendant into acts of violence which would justify an action for alimony

Payne v. Payne, 10 O.L.R. 742 (D.C.).

-Separation from bed and board-Provision for costs of suit.]-It is only in exceptional cases that the wife can obtain an order to provide for her costs of suit in an action for separation from bed and board, such as the necessity of money to secure a special agent for the discovery of witnesses or to get information in respect to accusations brought against her or to give explanations of circumstances.

Lecavalier v. Labelle, 7 Que. P.R. 472 (Pagnuelo, J.).

-Separation a menso et thoro-Dissolution of community-Report of accountant.]--A defendant who has failed to make the inventory of the property of the community at the time of its dissolution is liable for the costs incurred for an accountant subsequently appointed, even where the plaintiff has nothing to be recovered out of the common property.

Brière v. Marcotte, 7 Que. P.R. 405 (Fortin, J.).

-Divorce-Affidavit of documents-Discovery tending to show adultery.]-In a petition for dissolution of marriage, the respondent applied for an affidavit of documents:-Held, on the respondent filing an affidavit showing that discovery is not sought for the purpose of proving the adultery of the petitioner, but for the purpose of discovering documents relating to the matters in question, other than the misconduct of the petitioner, that discovery ought to be ordered.

Levy v. Levy, 12 B.C.R. 60.

- Alimony-Misconduct of wife before marriage-Condonation.]-(1) Unchastity before marriage and concealment of it from the husband until the birth of a child is not sufficient to make the marriage null and void or to disentitle the wife to alinony. (2) Under s. 30 of the King's Bench Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 40, a wife will be entitled to alimony if, by the law of England as it stood on the 15th day of July, 1870, she would have been entitled to a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights. By that law nothing but cruelty or adultery on the part of a wife after marriage would be a bar to an order for such restitution or entitle the husband to a judicial separation. (3) Resumption of cohabitation is a necessary ingredient of eccedonation by the husband of any matrimonial offence committed by the wife, such as would prevent him from relying upon it as a defence to an alimony suit. (4) A wife abandoned by her husband is entitled to the engagement ring which he had given her before marriage, unless she had absolutely surrendered it to him; but she is not, under ordinary circumstances, entitled to demand and recover possession of wedding presents given by friends of the husband at the time of the marriage. A. v. A., 15 Man. R. 483 (Perdue, J.).

-Interim alimony-Jurisdiction of Court to grant.]-The Court has jurisdiction to grant interim alimony pending an action for divorce.

Mellor v. Mellor, 11 B.C.R. 327 (Martin, J.).

-- Separation from bed and board-Proof-Art. 1100 C.P.)-(1) An action in separation from bed and board by the husband against his wife for desertion, will not lie if taken four days only after the departure of the wife, while she was sick. (2) The Court will then fix a delay within which the wife should return to her husband, and in the meantime, no adjudication will be made for the custody of the child.

Tessier v. Bélanger, 7 Que. P.R. 335 (Doherty, J.).

-Alimentary allowance-Liability of a stepson.]-A child, issue of a precedent marriage, cannot be sued for an alimentary allowance by the widow of his father.

Oliver v. Woodfine, 7 Que. P.R. 444 (Davidson, J.).

-Separation from bed and board-Rights of consorts-Mutual recriminations.]-It is no answer to a petition for a writ in separation from bed and board for the husband to allege that his wife is keeping a disorderly house, etc.; every consort is entitled to take such action, and questions of mutual recriminations must be left to the merits of the trial.

Arcand v. Charruau, 8 Que. P.R. 25.

-- Separation from bed and board-"Movable effects''-Arts. 204-205 C.C.]-The meaning of the words "movable effects of the community" in Arts. 204 and 205 of the Civil Code is not limited to the furniture which furnishes the common domicile, but includes all the movable property which belongs to the community, of whatever nature it may be. Whether a saisie gagerie conservatoire could have been made under the provisions of Art. 204 of the C.C. or not, if the same is justified by the provisions of law concerning the issue of writs of seizure before judgment, a petition to quash said saisie gager e will be dismissed.

Lachapelle v. Gagné, 8 Que. P.R. 18 (Archibald, J.).

-Alimentary pension-Provisional allowance.]-While an action for alimentary pension is pending by the wife, she may, on petition, obtain an order granting her n provisional allowance.

Duckett v. Turgeon, 7 Que. P.R. 457
(Fortin, J.).

--Separation as to property—Taking accounts—Prescription.]—An understanding between husband and wife to avoid the appointment of an accountant in an action for separation as to property and a mensa et thoro can have no legal effect.

The right to have accounts taken is prescribed only by the lapse of 30 years.

Brière v. Marcotte, 7 Que. P.R. 352 (Lavergne, J.).

-Separation-Alimentary allowance.]-Where the husband renders life in common impossible, the wife has a right to remove from the conjugal domicile and demand an alimentary allowance without recourse to an action for separation à mensâ et thoro. In order to obtain an order for such allowance it is sufficient to show that the husband does not provide proper lodgings and is not in a position to maintain the wife in a safe and respectable manner.

Gravel v. Lahoulière, Q.R. 14 K.B. 385.

-Alimony-Wife leaving husband-Justification - Legal cruelty - Acts affecting mental condition.]-Legal cruelty, as re-gards the conjugal relationship, does not necessarily depend on physical acts or threats of violence, but may arise from acts or conduct operating entirely upon the mental condition of the aggrieved party. Where therefore such a course of harsh conduct, treatment and intimidation on the husband's part towards his wife, a woman of delicate constitution, created such mental distress as was sufficient to, and did impair her health; and where his language of threats and menace, and his habitual demeanour, were such as to create a wellfounded apprehension that the wife would suffer worse and more injurious treatment and hardship if she did not submit implicitly and submissively to anything the husband might choose to say or do:-Held, that there was such matrimonial cruelty shown as justified the wife leaving her husband, and entitled her to a judgment for alimony. Judgment of the Divisional Court, 11 O.L.R. 547, affirmed.

-Wife living separate from husband-Alimentary pension-Purchase of necessaries-Liability of husband. |-A wife living in actual separation from her husband and in receipt from him of an allowance for her needs cannot render him responsible for her personal expenses, particularly when they are merely of the character of ali-mentary necessaries. In such a case, parties furnishing supplies to her are placed upon inquiry as to the actual conditions and should obtain express authority from the husband in order to hold him liable.

Morgan v. Vibert, Q.R. 29 S.C. 297 (Ct

-Vacation-Separation de corps-Educa-tion of children-Family council.]-Article 15 C.C.P., providing that the Courts shall not sit between the 30th of June and the 1st of September of each year, does not deprive the Judges of the necessary powers and general jurisdiction which can and should be exercised at all times even during the long vacation. A Judge in Chambers may, in vacation, authorize a married woman to take proceedings against her husband en séparation de corps et de biens and to live away from the conjugal domi cile. In case of adultery of the husband at of the relatives. Such order may be made the conjugal domicile the Court will permit his wife (if she cannot herself provide for the children) to call a family council to advise upon their custody and will finally give its decision after receipt of the advice by the Court of Appeal suo motu if the order of the Superior Court appears to be insufficient.

A life rent bequeathed on condition of its not being seizable cannot be seized for a debt for maintenance due to a third person.

Dupuis v. Viau, Q.R. 30 S.C. 391 (Ct. Rev.).

—Alimony—Decree nisi for divorce.]—It is no objection to an application for permanent alimony that the wife has obtained a decree nisi for divorce on the ground of impotency.

Brown v. Brown, 13 B.C.R. 73.

-Conviction under Deserted Wives' Maintenance Act-Invalidity-Quashing conviction.]-Where an order was made by two justices of the peace, purporting to act under the Deserted Wives' Maintenance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 167, whereby the de-fendant, described as an Indian of the Six Nations, was directed to pay $1.00 a week for his wife's maintenance; but, it appearing that the information was laid under s, 242 of the Criminal Code, under which all proceedings were had, and that it was only at the last moment, when the justices were drawing up their minutes of the conviction, that they decided to proceed under the first named Act, without any notice thereof to the defendant, the conviction was quashed.

In re Woodruff, 16 O.L.R. 348 (D.C.).

—Separation—Presumption of marital relations—Resumption of condonation.]—The separation of husband and wife followed by renewal of cohabitation gives rise to a presumption of pardon for past offences but the continuation of marital relations after ill-usage does not raise the same presumption.

Labelle v. Lecavalier, Q.R. 16 K.B. 261.

—Alimony—Cruelty and desertion by husband.]—A wife is entitled to alimony when the husband has been guilty of legal cruelty, which is actual violence of such a character as to endanger personal health or safety, or of conduct causing a reasonable apprehension of such cruelty. (2) The Court may refuse alimony to the wife if she has herself been guilty of legal cruelty, or of acts which would justify the husband in leaving her, but may grant alimony in such cases if it should see fit so to do.

Patrick v. Patrick, 1 Sask. R. 44.

— Non-support — Deserted wife supported by relatives—Injury to health—Failure to Provide necessaries.]—(1) A charge of nonsupport made by a wife against her husband is not sustained under Cr. Code s. 242 where the wife was supplied with all necessaries for her support by her relatives and friends during the period for which the charge is laid. (2) The injury to the wife's health which is essential to constitute the offence of failing to provide necessaries to a wife under Cr. Code s. 242, must be due to deprivation of food, clothing, shelter or medical attendance, and an attack of nervous prostration suffered by the wife through mental worry because her husband deserts her and allows her relatives to support her is not sufficient. (3) The refusal of a deserted wife to again live with her husband unless he puts up security in money not to again desert her, is a "lawful excuse" for his omission to support her subsequently to his offer to return and while such refusal continues, unless it is shown that her return would be dangerous to her health.

The King v. Wolfe, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 246.

-Judicial separation-Cruelty-Residence within jurisdiction.]-The petitioner, owing to acts of cruelty and misconduct, left her husband in Montreal, where the parties were domiciled, and came to British Columbia, bringing her child of the marriage, a girl of eight years, with her. The husband followed and commenced proceedings in British Columbia for the custody of the While in British Columbia he renewed the acts of cruelty, and, apprehensive of further cruelty, the wife commenced proceedings for a judicial separation. He opposed the suit, on the ground that there was not jurisdiction in the Court inasmuch as he was not domiciled or resident in British Columbia:-Held, that the husband had established sufficient residence to give the Court jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

Jamieson v. Jamieson, 14 B.C.R. 59.

—Community—Desertion of domicile by wife—Maintenance.]—The wife, common as to property with her husband, who abandons the conjugal domicile when her husband declares his willingness to receive her back and support her but refuses, otherwise, to furnish her with the necessaries of life, is entitled to maintain an action en separation de corps.

Saultry v. Ferrel, Q.R. 31 S.C. 59 (Ct. Rev.).

—Liquidated demand—Necessaries supplied to wife after desertion by husband.]
—Held, that when a husband deserts his wife, or compels her to live apart from him, without properly providing for her, the wife becomes his agent, from necessity, to pledge his credit, and any debts so contracted by her are liquidated demands as against the husband.

Parkin v. Parkin, 1 Sask. R. 206.

—Alimony under foreign judgment—Arrears—Writ of summons—Special indorsement.]-An action lies for arrears of alimony past due upon a foreign judgment, and the claim therefor may be the subject of a special indorsement of the writ of summons under Con. Rule 138 and of a motion for summary judgment under Con. Rule 603. Swaizie v. Swaizie (1899), 31 O.R. 324, applied and followed.

Robertson v. Robertson, 16 O.L.R. 170.

- Alimony-Adultery on part of wife.]-Where adultery is proved to have been committed by a wife after her desertion by her husband, she will not be granted alimony.

Leib v. Leib, 6 Terr, L.R. 308.

-Alimony-Interim disbursements-Counsel fee.]-Where the counsel to be engaged is not the soliictor for the plaintiff or his partner, it is proper that a counsel fee should be allowed to the plaintiff as part of her prospective disbursements to be paid by the defendant in an action for alimony; and in this case an order was made before the trial for payment of a fee of $40, upon the undertaking of the plaintiff's solicitor that he would not himself act as counsel at the trial, and that he would account for any portion of such sum of $40 not actually and properly disbursed by him for counsel fee. Gallagher v. Gallagher (1897), 17 P.R. 575, followed.

Connolly v. Connolly, 9 Que P.R. 309.

-Separation-Temporary pension-Vacation.]-A husband is bound, at all times, to provide for the maintenance of his wife and permission given to the latter, in case of action en séparation de corps, to live apart from her husband does not do away with such obligation. During the long vacation the Judge can fix the amount of the provisional allowance to which the wife, suing or being sued en séparation de corps is entitled.

Prud'homme v. Goulet, 9 Que. P.R. 397 (Sup. Ct.).

-- Alimony -- Jurisdiction of Court to grant.]-The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover alimony on the grounds of desertion, cruelty and adultery, and on the trial it was established that the defendant had been guilty of cruelty to the plaintiff and of desertion, and also of adultery but whether before or after desertion did not clearly appear. It was also proved that the plaintiff after desertion had herself been guilty of adultery:-Held, that c. 29 of the Consolidated Ordinances of 1898, respecting actions for alimony and which gives jurisdiction to grant alimony; (1) to any wife who would be entitled to alimony by the law of England; (2) to any wife who would be entitled by the law of England to a divorce and to alimony as incident thereto, and (3) to any wife whose husband refused to support her without any sufficient cause under circumstances which would entitle her by the law of England to a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, had reference to the Imperial Act, 20 and 21 Vict. c. 85, and the word "divorce" as used in the Ordinance would have the meaning of "divorce" in the Imperial Act and being a vinculo matrimonii. (2) That the plaintiff, having herself been guilty of adultery would not be entitled under the law of England either to a judicial separation, a divorce or a decree for restitution of conjugal rights and therefore could not recover alimony.

Leib v. Leib, 1 Sask. R. 363.

-Separation from bed and board-Care of the children.]-The wife defendant in an action in separation from bed and board is entitled to the care of a child, one year old, whom she has nursed and cared for until shortly before the institution of the action, especially if she resides with her father and shows that the child will be well cared for. But the husband will be given the provisional care of a child, four years old, who is not so dependent upon a mother's care and affection.

Poitras v. Lafrance, 10 Que. P.R. 363.

- Separation-Defence of husband-Improper conduct of wife.]--In an action en séparation de corps the husband, defendant, cannot plead (a) that he had had intercourse with the plaintiff several months before their marriage at which latter time she was already enciente (b) that on the very morning of their wedding he saw in her bedroom a young man of doubtful reputation, (c) that she would give no explanation of the presence of this young man in her bedroom at that hour; all such allegations are foreign to the subject matter of the litigation and will be struck out on inscription en droit.

-Alimony-Legal cruelty-Condonation-Receipt by husband of income of wife's separate property.]-Plaintiff and defend-ant married in 1887. In 1892 an action for alimony brought by plaintiff was settled by the resumption of cohabitation and by defendant agreeing to pay her $3 per week during her life in addition to maintaining her according to his station in life. The parties lived together until April, 1908, and during all that period seemed on the whole to have got along fairly well together. times swore at her and he displayed none of that sympathetic consideration for his wife which a husband ought to show, but the only act of violence charged since the settlement of 1892 was one which had taken place in 1904 and had been provoked by the plaintiff who was quick-tempered and irritable and often made no attempt to control either her language or her actions:-Held, that the plaintiff had not neade out a case of legal cruelty, as defined by the decided cases, entitling her to live apart from her husband. When a husband receives the income of his wife's separate estate and disburses it for the purposes of their joint establishment, he cannot be called on for an account, unless the wife can prove that he received it by way of loan. The agreement of 1892 made the payments of $3 per week a charge on the defendant's lands. In 1900, in order to permit him to raise a loan on the land so charged, the plaintiff gave him a quit claim deed on the understanding that another agreement of similar tenor would at once be executed and registered after the mortgage. This was done, but nothing had ever been paid under either of these agreements. Held, that, in the absence of a plea based on s. 24 of the Real Property Limitation Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 100, the defendant was liable for the arrears of the annuity from the date of the first agreement with interest, however, for the last six years only, the whole being a charge on the lands referred to.

Willey v. Willey, 18 Man. R. 298.

Separation from bed and board-Reconciliation-Taxable costs.]-(1) The costs incurred by the wife in an action in separation from bed and board for the purpose of realizing her share of the community, having been authorized by the Court, can and must be levied upon the assets of the community and the husband must pay them if proceedings are stopped at his request. (2) When a woman is authorized to sue her husband in separation from bed and board, she is only authorized to oblige herself for the taxable costs in the said action: the extra services which she may require from her lawyer must be considered as requested by her without authorization.

—Séparation de corps—Professional services to wife.]—The costs for professional services rendered to a married woman in the course of an action for séparation de corps for negotiations brought about by her husband which resulted in a reconciliation, are a debt against the community and an action to recover the amount thereof lies against the husband as head.

Hannan v. Cooke, Q.R. 18 K.B. 127.

—Separation—Action by or against wife—Funds supplied by husband.]—A married woman, plaintiff or defendant in an action ca séparation de corps, has a right to receive from her husband the money required for her costs. It must be taken into account in settling the alimony provided for by Art. 202 C.C., but nothing prohibits her from making a special demand for finds ad litem when the alimony is insufficient.

Destroismaisons v. Tellier, Q.R. 35 S.C. 501.

IV .- WIFE'S AUTHORITY TO SUE OR DEFEND.

—Separation as to property—Action for alimony—Authority to sue.]—A married woman, separate as to property, from her husband by mutual agreement who is authorized by a Judge to bring an action for alimony and fails in the Superior Court, cannot inscribe in review without obtaining fresh authority for the purpose.

Donahue v. Donahue, 4 Que. P.R. 300 (Sup. Ct.).

— Married woman — Minor — Personal action.]—A married woman under age, emancipated by marriage, may ester en justice in a personal action (action personnelle et mobilière) without other assistance and authorization than that of her husband roade a party for the purpose, and has no need of the aid of a curator.

Galarneau v. Bertrand, 20 Que. S.C. 283 (Sup. Ct.).

-Hypothecary action against married woman-Absence of husband-Authorization of defendant-Art. 78 C.C.P.-Arts. 86, 177, 180, 183 C.C.]-Plaintiff. by hypothecary action, sued a woman separated as to property from her husband and the husband mis en cause to assist his wife. The action was personally served on the woman at Quebec, on 15th November, 1901, but was not served on her husband. It was entered in Court on November 21st. The same day defendant alone, without the aid of her husband and without any authoriza-tion, appeared by attorney. On November 23rd plaintiff served on the attorney a notice of petition to be presented on November 25th alleging that the husband of defendant had left the country not intending to return, that it was impossible to serve him, and asking the Court to authorize defendant à ester en justice as such in the cause:-Held, that a married woman Lot being able, in an hypothecary action, esten en justice without the aid or authorization of her husband, the plaintiff who had sued the woman assisted by her husband and could not, as the latter had left the country, serve the action on him, should, prior to the action, have obtained adicial authorization. This was refused him in the present cause seeing that the wife was not regularly before the Court, and the service on her, as well as the appearance she had filed by attorney, were radically null. How a married woman can be authorized or served discussed.

Credit Foncier Franco-Canadien v. Dufresne, 21 Que. S.C. 108 (Sup. Ct.).

—Wife separated as to property—Proceedings to protect property—Authorization—Arts. 14, 22, 176 C.C.]—A married woman separated as to property by contract, may take judicial proceedings for the preservation and administration of her movable property without the aid of, or aut'lorization from her hurband or from a Judge; taerefore, she can alone intervene in an action for the preservation of her movable property, such proceeding being merely an act of simple administration.

Beauchamp v. Beauchamp, 4 Que. P.R. 400 (Sup. Ct.).

—Married woman—Action for personal injuries—Authority to sue—Community.]—A married woman in community of property, authorized en justice on refusal of her husband, may bring an action in her own name to protect her person and honour against acts of violence of which she has been the victim. Although any indemnity she right obtain should fall into the community it is necessary above all to consider the principle of the action which is of a character affecting her person and honour which she has a right to protect even in spite of her husband.

Baker v. Gingras, 20 Que. S.C. 85 (Sup. Ct.).

-Authority to sue-Opposition-Oath-Costs-Community-Chose jugée.]-It is rot necessary to allege specially the authorization by a Judge to a married woman to take judicial proceedings if such authorization appears somewhere in the procedure in which it is required. An opposetion sworn to before the prothonotary of a district other than that in which it is filed is, nevertheless, sworn to before a competent official: art. 23 C.C.P. Although costs due were incurred in revendication of the property of a married woman, it does not follow therefrom that she is bound to pay them in any other capacity than as a member of the community when the judgment given against her for such costs did not determine the capacity in which she would be bound. Therefore, it cannot be claimed, in opposing an opposition alleging that the wife is only liable for the costs as a member of the community, under the judgment on the principal instance in which she was condemned therefor jointly and severally with her husband, there is chose jugée as to her liability in this respect; and a similar ground of opposition cannot be rejected as frivolous on motion therefor.

Tidal v. Latulippe, 21 Que. S.C. 219 (Sup. Ct.).

—Husband and wife—Ester en justice—Want of authority — Wife passing as widow.]—Want of authority in a wife under her husband's control to enter upon judicial proceedings (d'ester en justice) involves a nullity which cannot be cured and of which every person having an actual interest can take advantage. In this case, although the wife passed as, and represented herself to be, a widow, and had maintained this condition by certain public acts, her absolute incapacity to enter upon judicial proceedings without authority was in no way affected when she testified in the course of such proceedings that ber

O'Malley v. Ryan, Q.R. 23 S.C. 94 (Ct. of Rev.) reversing 21 Que S.C. 566.

--Action against married woman—Husband made party but not served.]—1. Where a married woman has been summoned and her husband, made a party for the purpose of authorizing her, has not been served with the writ and process, she may, upon being judicially authorized to act, cause the action to be dismissed with costs on an exception to the form. (2) In such a case, the plaintiff cannot have leave afterwards to serve the husband who has been so made party to the action.

Jarvis v. Allaire et vir, 5 Que. P.R. 316.

--Married woman — Action against as widow—Costs.]—A person whose action has been dismissed because the party sued as a widow was still married cannot claim from such party, by way of damages, the costs of the action so dismissed, and this although said party permitted herself to be regarded as a widow.

--Community--Action by wife.]—A marred woman common as to property, assistcd by her husband, or, upon his refusal by the judge, may maintain a personal action to guard her honour, and sue in her own name for defamation. Such action does not pertain solely to the husband as head of the community, and an exception to the form on such ground was dismissed. Girard v. Tremblay, 6 Que. P.R. 63 (La-Rue, J.).

-Institution of action by divorced wife-Judicial authorization-Divorce-Decree by foreign tribunal — Comity of nations.] —S. and F., both being domiciled in the State of New York, were married there in 1871 without ante-nuptial contract. Shortly after the marriage F. received his wife's fortune from her trustees. Subsequently F. established a business in the city of Mentreal and resided there when the action was instituted. S. followed her husband to Canada, but only resided there a short time. In 1876 S. was granted a decree of divorce from F. by the Supreme Court of New York and, in 1881, brought this action for an account of his administration and management of her property, but without obtaining the authorization of a judge as provided by Art. 178 of the Civil Code. The defence was that the divorce obtained in the United States was invalid in the Province of Quebec, and secondly that S. was not authorized to institute the action. The Superior Court overruled the pleas and held that the divorce alleged in the declaration was good and valid in the Province of Quebec (5 Leg. News 79), but the Court of Queen's Bench reversed this judgment on the ground that the alleged divorce had no force in the Province of Quebec and that consequently S., being still the wife of F., could not institute her proceedings without marital or judicial authorization (6 Leg. News 329). On appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada: Held (Strong, J., dissenting), per Ritchie, C.J., and Henry and Gwynne, JJ., that S., having obtained without fraud or collusion a decree for divorce from the Supreme Court of New York, this decree, upon the principle of the comity of nations, should be recognized as valid in the courts of the provinces of Canada. Per Ritchie, C.J. and Henry and Gwynne, JJ., that F. having submitted to the jurisdiction of the Su-preme Court of New York when served with the proceedings in the action, could not now be allowed to affirm that that Court had no jurisdiction. Per Fournier, Henry and Gwynne, JJ.—The fact being established that in the State of New York, where the parties were married, S. could have sued her husband without previous authorization, Art. 14 C.C.P., which to all persons having the right to sue in their own country the like power in the Province of Quebec, had the effect of clothing the plaintiff with the same right to sue as a feme sole in the Province of Quebec as she had in her own country, notwithstanding the provisions for authorization contained in Arts. 176 and 178 C.C. Stevens v. Fisk, (1885) 1 S.C. Cas. 392.

--Married woman—Authority to sue.]—A narried woman cannot take judicial proceedings nor make an exception to judgment or to the form without being authorized. When her husband, duly summoned with her to confer authority fails to appear he is deemed to refuse it. In such case the authority must come from the judge.

—Second marriage before dissolution of the first—Good faith of parties—Civil effects—Authorization of wife by husband to appear in judicial proceedings.]—A second marriage contracted in good faith, before the dissolution of the first, produces civil effects, and, until it is declared null, the wife cannot appear in judicial proceedings (ester en justice) without her de facto husband, or his authorization An action brought by her alone and unauthorized will therefore be dismissed on exception to the Fitzallen v. Rieutard, 27 Que. S.C. 296 (O.R.).

—Woman sued as a spinster—Marriage between issuance and service of writ,]—An action directed against a woman described as a "fille majeure" will not be dismissed on exception to the form because, between the issuance and the service of the writ, the defendant contracted marriage, if the plaintiff was not made aware of her change of status. The Court will, however, allow the plaintiff to call in the defendant's husband as a defendant, as head of the community.

Melloon v. Coffey, 7 Que. P.R. 436 (Lemieux, J.).

—Wife separated as to property—Public trader — Authorization by husband.]—A married woman, separate as to property and a public trader, may, without the authorization of her husband, file a declinatory exception to an action brought against her where it is a matter of mere administration in connection with her affairs.

Bernsteir v. Synch, 7 Que. P.R. 443 (Lavergne, J.).

— Married woman — Right of appeal — Authorization.]—A married woman separate as to property has no right to appeal from a judgment rendered against her in a hypothecary action without authorization by her husband. An inscription in review from such a judgment made by her alone will be quashed upon motion to that effect. Renaud v. Lebeau, Q.R. 27 S.C. 360 (Ct. Rev.).

—Married women — Legal community— Right, of action.]—The action was instituted by Léocadie Vézina, widow of Napoleon Raymond, deceased, who died from injuries sustained from the neglect of the company. By the action, the widow elaimed damages, as well on her own behalf as in her capacity of tutrix to her minor children, issue of her marriage with deceased While the action was pending and before judgment on the merits, she was married a second time to Albert Duguay, became common as to property with him under the law respecting legal community, and she and her second husband were subsequently appointed joint-tutors to the minor children. By the judgment of the Superior Court affirmed on review the defendants were adjudged to pay to the plaintiffs, personally, damages in the sum of $300 for the female plaintiff personally, and in the sum of $2,700 to the plaintiffs in their capacity of joint-tutors to the children. At the hearing of the appeal an objection, not taken in the factum nor raised in the Courts below, was for the first time urged by the appellants, that, upon her second marriage, the female plaintiff was deprived of her right of action for the recovery of the damages claimed by her personally, that in respect to this part of the action there had been no reprise d'instance in the name of her second husband and that, consequently, the judgment appealed from was invalid in so far as it awarded personal damages to her. The appeal was dismissed, but the Court, under the provisions of sections 63 and 64 of the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, ordered that the record should be amended so as to show that the amount for which the judgment was rendered is payable to both Duguay and his wife as communs en biens.

The North Shore Power Company v. Duguay, 37 Can. S.C.R. 624.

—Authorization of married woman—Confession of judgment and choice of counsel.]

—When a married woman has not been authorized to ester en justice, where such authorization is necessary, she cannot choose a counsel, and a motion served upon said counsel, even after she has been judicially authorized, will be dismissed, but without costs.

Laverdière v. Drouin, 8 Que P.R. 207.

—Action by wife—Exception to form—Art. 83 C.C.]—If a married woman in an action against her on a lease in which she is not described as such, objects that she was not served at her domicile—that of her husband—an objection to the form will be maintained, but without costs

Pattle v. Renaud, 8 Que. P.R. 389 (Mathieu, J.).

—Wife separate de facto—Authority of wife to bind husband for necessaries.]—A married woman separated de facto and living apart from her husband and in receipt from him of a monthly allowance sufficient for her support, has no implied authority to bind him for purchases of clothing.

Morgan v. Vibert, 15 Que. K.B. 407.

—Appearance of the wife without the authorization of her husband.]—When a female defendant whose husband has been made a party to the suit, appeared and filed a plea without the authorization of her husband, the plaintiff may ask that she be authorized to ester en justice, and that the appearance and the plea already filed be rejected from the record.

Pichette v. Lavallee, 9 Que. P.R. 241.

—Authority to sue.]—Authority to a married woman to bring an action may be validly given by a Judge of the Superior Court between June 30th and Sept. 1st. The Court of King's Bench, sitting in appeal, in confirming a judgment submitted to it has the right and should add to the dispositif of said judgment whatever the circumstances require. Therefore when a judgment en séparation de corps providing only for the custody of one of several children is appealed against the Appeal Court can, on affirming it, order what it deems necessary in this respect as to the other children.

Edward v. Belleau, O.R. 16 K.B. 341.

—Authority to sue.]—When a woman applies for interdiction of her husband she should be authorized to do so by the Judge; the order to convoke a family council will not be regarded as the equivalent of such authorization the want of which involves a nullity which nothing can cover.

Barbier v. Arcaud, 9 Que. P.R. 332 (Sup. Ct.).

—Action against wife—Summons to hushand—Failure to appear.]—The failure of the husband to appear on summons requiring his authorization for his wife a ester en justice is equivalent to want of author ity. In such ease notice of motion to the Court to authorize the wife need not be served on the husband.

Morisette v. Pouliot, 9 Que. P.R. 334 (Sup. Ct.).

—Authorization for suit.]—If the husband refuses to authorize his wife to ester en justice and files of record a declaration to that effect, the Court may grant such authorization.

Levesque v. Fortin, 9 Que. P.R. 423.

—Married woman—Authority.]—An exception to the form is well founded if it asks for dismissal of an action brought by a married woman separée de corps and not authorized by the Court. However, if she applies therefor the Court will grant the authorization on payment of the costs of the exception.

O'Brien v. Clavel, 9 Que. P.R. 217 (Sup. Ct.).

—Action by married woman—Authorization—Costs.]—Want of authorization by her husband for an action by a married woman where such is required by law is a fatal defect and an action against a wife cummon as to property without the authority and assistance of her husband is an absolute nullity, in such case the plaintiff will not be allowed to amend his writ and declaration. If the wife common as to property pleads to the merits without her husband's authority the action will be dismissed each party paying his own costs.

Martin v. Rankin, 9 Que. P.R. 192 (Sup Ct.).

-Judicial proceedings by wife.]—The authorization by a Judge of a married woman to institute judicial proceedings without proof of the refusal of the husband to give her authority and without previous notice to him of the application is a nullity. The wife may, however, in the course of her proceedings and before judgment is given, on furnishing the proof and giving the required notice, obtain a valid judicial authorization. An exception to the form based on the above irregularity should be rejected, after proper authority has been obtained, but with costs against the wife.

Euglar v. Rosenbloom, Q.R. 35 S.C. 428.

V .- DOWER.

Agreement by husband to convey wife's land—Conveyance by husband—Wife joining to bar dower—Mistake.]—The defendants were husband and wife. The husband, on the 17th October, 1904, being the owner of land, mortgaged it for $2,800, the wife joining to bar dower. On the 4th August, 1905, he executed another mortgage upon the land for $1,000, the wife again joining for the same purpose. On the 16th November, 1906, he conveyed the land, subject to the mortgages, to the wife. This conveyance was registered on the 7th December, 1906. The defendants lived together, occupying the land. On the 13th March, 1908, the plaintiff made an oral agreement with the husband for the purchase of the east half of the land for $3,-200. The plaintiff was to assume the $2,-800 mortgage and give his promissory note for $400 and interest. Nothing was said about the $1,000; apparently it was to be paid off by the husband. The wife was present during the negotiation and took part in it, not as a contracting party, but as assenting. Upon the same day a conveyance from the husband to the plaintiff, the wife joining to bar dower, was executed by the defendants, and delivered to the plaintiff, and the note signed and given to the husband. This action was brought for rectification of the deed:—Held, by Britton, J., the trial Judge, that, upon the evidence, there was no fraud on the part of either of the defendants; but that, at the time of the negotiation with the plaintiff, the wife had absolutely forgotten the deed of the 16th November, 1906; that she did not stand by and allow her husband to sell, knowing that the land was hers, and she was not, therefore, estopped from set-ting up any defence that was available to her. Treating the action as one for specific performance of a contract, it must fail against the wife, the owner of the land; there was no contract with her; the Statute of Frauds was, as to her, a good defence; for the deed signed by her merely to bar dower was not intended by her to authenticate any contract for the sale by her of land to the plaintiff; and there was no part performance by her. Held, also, per Britton, J., that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages against the quiet possession contained in the conveyance of the 13th March, 1908. Held, by a Divisional Court, affirming the judgment of Britton, J., that the plaintiff could not seek relief on any other ground than that of estoppel; and, no tangible detriment having resulted to the plaintiff, the defendants should not be prevented from proving what was the real transaction. There was a mistake common to both sides-a misunderstanding arising out of ignorant silence on the part of the wife—and it has not yet been decided that a married woman is to be held bound by an innocent misrepresentation. The conveyance not having been registered, the note being returned to the plaintiff, and no loss having been sustained by the plaintiff, or attempted to be shown, neither party had suffered except from the litigation, and the Court should leave them as they were.

VI .- DIVORCE AND ANNULMENT.

—Divorce a mensa et thoro—Suit money on appeal.]—In a suit by a wife for divorce a mensa et thoro the libel was dismissed with costs. Pending an appeal to the Supreme Court an order was made by the Judge of the Divorce Court for alimony, but an application for suit money pending the appeal was refused. The appeal was bona fide and it appeared that the plaintiff had no means to prosecute such appeal:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to suit money as well as alimony pending the appeal, and the matter was referred back to the Judge of the Divorce Court to fix the amount of the suit money.

Currey v. Currey, 39 N.B.R. 440.

-Marriage of minor-Domicile. 1-The domicile of a minor is that of his parents whatever may be his residence for purposes of education. The residence of a minor for educational purposes cannot become his conjugal domicile from the mere fact of his contracting marriage there. Summons of the wife in an action to annul the marriage can be made at the domicile of her husband when such domicile is that of the plaintiffs can only be made by personal service on her. If, in fact, she lives out of the province she can be summoned in the manner provided by Art. 136 C.P.Q. An action to annul a marriage of a minor for want of consent by his parents may be brought by the latter within six months from the time it came to their knowledge though the minor may have come of age in the meantime. The consent of the parents to a minor's marriage is not a formality within the meaning of Art. 135 C.C. It is an element essential to the capacity of the minor to contract marriage even out of the province.

Agnew v. Gober, Q.R. 38 S.C. 313 (Ct. Rev.).

-Action for declaration of nullity of marriage-Jurisdiction.]-The High Court of Justice has no jurisdiction to declare a marriage invalid and void upon the ground that the parties are related within the prohibited degrees-as, in this case, that the husband is the brother of the wife's deceased husband. The dictum of Boyd, C., in Lawless v. Chamberlain (1889), 18 O.R. 296, is obiter, and is not to be extended to such a case as this. Hodgins v. McNeil (1862), 9 Gr. 305, approved. When the Ontario Legislature, by 7 Edw. VII. c. 23, s. 8, assumed to confer jurisdiction upon the Court to declare that a valid marriage was not effected, in such a case as there specified, it went to the extreme limit, if it did not overstep its powers, Judgment of Latchford, J., dismissing the action, affirmed, upon grounds other than those stated by him. Per Latchford, J.:—Proper service upon the defendant of the writ of summons was not effected; and, the case being heard in his absence, the uncorroborated evidence of the plaintiff, who appeared to be an unreliable witness, did not justify a judgment declaring the marriage void.

May v. May, 22 O.L.R. 559.

Divorce—Disregard by husband of marital duty—Wife's misconduct caused by.]—Where a husband separates from his wife on account of her intemperance, but makes no provision for her, thereby leaving her without any means of support, he is not entitled to a divorce on the ground of adultery committed by her after the separation.

Forrest v. Forrest, 8 B.C.R. 19.

—Nullity of marriage—Impotence in the man—Non-consummation.] — Where consummation of the marriage is, on the part of the husband, a practical impossibility, wife is entitled to a decree of nullity of marriage.

P. v. P., 11 B.C.R. 369 (Martin, J.).

—Appeal—Declinatory exception.]—When, in action to annul a marriage, the defendant pleads want of jurisdiction in the Court before which he is summoned, the Court of King's Bench will allow an appeal from a judgment dismissing such declinatory exception.

Gober v. Agnew, 8 Que. P.R. 198 (K.B.).

—Second action—Costs of discontinued action—Annulment of marriage.]—When the costs of an action which has been discontinued have been tendered to the defendant's attorney and deposited in Court on his refusal to accept them, the defendant cannot object to a second action being brought on the ground that the costs of the first have not been paid. The right of a party to ask that a marriage be annulled can only be brought in question by a plea to the merits. The general allegation of irregularities in a preliminary exception cannot be regarded; it is necessary to show in what respect the summons and description of the defendant are irregular.

—Marriage — Declaration of nullity—Impotence—Jurisdiction.]—The High Court of Justice has not jurisdiction to entertain an action to have a marriage declared null and void by reason of the alleged incapacity and impotence of one of the parties. Lawless v. Chamberlain (1889), 18 O.R. 296. distinguished.

T. v. B., 15 O.L.R. 224 (Boyd, C.).

—Divorce—Appeal—Jurisdiction of B. C. Full Court.]—The Full Court of the Supreme Court of British Columbia possesses no jurisdiction to hear appeals, final or interlocutory, in divorce matters. Scott v. Scott (1891), 4 B.C.R. 316, followed.

Brown v. Brown, 14 B.C.R. 142.

—Divorce—Foreign, matrimonial—Domi-cil.]—Petitioner in 1895, when aged about 19, came from Ontario to British Columbia, where he spent some three or four years in different places. In 1899 he married and at once removed to the North-West Territories. In 1907, satisfied of his wife's infidelity, he "made her go away," and after some financial arrangements between the couple, she left for New York, since which time no communication has passed between them. In the autumn of 1908, he came to Vancouver, B.C., and took a position in a mercantile house, and in January, 1909, filed a petition for divorce, alleging that he and the respondent were domiciled in British Columbia:-Held, that he had not acquired a domicil in British Columbia to entitle him to a divorce.

Adams v. Adams, 14 B.C.R. 301.

—Divorce — Damages—Assessment of.]—
The parties in an action for divorce consented to an order that the trial should take place before a Judge without a jury. A decree for divorce having been pronounced, the Judge proceeded to assess the damages, when the co-respondent invoked s. 33 of the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85 (Imperial), which provides that the damages to be recovered in any such petition (for divorce) shall in all cases be ascertained by the verdict of a jury:—Held, that, having consented to a trial without a jury, he was estopped from availing himself of this provision.

Williams v. Williams, 14 B.C.R. 313.

-Marriage-Action for declaration of invalidity—Suspicion of collusion.]—The plaintiff, a girl under 19 years of age, brought this action, by her next friend, against a man with whom she went through a ceremony of marriage when only 15, to obtain a declaration that a valid marriage was not effected or entered into. The action invoked the jurisdiction conferred by 7 Edw. VII. c. 23, s. 8 (O.), and by the statement of claim the plaintiff alleged such facts as brought her claim within that enactment. The defendant did not appear or defend, and the plaintiff moved for judgment upon the statement of claim, supported by affidavits of herself, her mother, and the defendant. The defendant stated that he procured a marriage license without obtaining the consent of either of the plaintiff's parents; and it was shown by a certificate that the return of the marriage contained the information that the plaintiff was then 18 years of age:-Held, that, in the circumstances, the motion for judgment was properly refused, and the plaintiff left to proceed to trial in the ordinary way. Per Russell, J .: - No ceremony of marriage should be declared invalid, as a rule, unless the circumstances establishing the invalidity are proven in open Court, coram, populo, by vivâ voce evidence. Menzies v. Farnon, 18 O.L.R. 174.

-Divorce-Petition for dissolution of marriage signed by solicitor-Petitioner within the jurisdiction.]-Where the petitioner for divorce resides within the jurisdiction, the petition must be signed by the petitioner personally, except when cause is shown to justify the Court in dispensing with that formality.

Plowman v. Plowman, 14 B.C.R. 164.

-Divorce-Petition by husband-Infidelity of wife-Husband also leading an immoral life.]-The Court will not, unless under very exceptional circumstances of excuse or palliation, grant a divorce to a petitioner guilty of adultery.

- v. A---, 14 B.C.R. 165.

VII. FORM OF MARRIAGE. See MARRIAGE LAWS.

VIII. HUSBAND'S LIABILITY FOR WIFE'S TORTS.

Liability of husband for torts of wife.]-Held, affirming the judgment of Street, J., that a husband is still liable for the torts of his wife if the marriage takes place before July 1, 1884. The provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1884, 47 Vict. 19 (O.), applicable to persons married before that date, do not relieve him from liability. Earle v. Kingscote (1900), 2 Ch. 585, applied and followed. Amer v. Rogers, 31 U.C.C.P. 195, overruled. Lee v. Hopkins, 20 O.R. 666, approved. Traviss v. Hales, 6 O.L.R. 574.

-Libel committed by wife-Liability of husband.]-In an action against husband and wife for damages for a libel published by the latter, the jury returned a verdict for $10.00:—Held, by Martin, J., that the husband was liable and that the costs should follow the event.

Mackenzie v. Cunningham, 8 B.C.R. 206.

Slander by wife—Claim against wife and husband.]-Per White, J., in an action in damages for slanderous words uttered by a married woman, the defendant's husband cannot be jointly condemned unless he is alleged to have become in some way responsible for his wife's statements, and the conclusions against him personally will be struck out on demurrer. Camiré v. Bergeron, 3 Que. P.R. 281.

HYPOTHEC.

Action paulienne - Transfer fees - Bad faith - Insolvent debtor.] - On December 7th, 1888, the defendant hypothecated in favour of C., mis en cause, lot No. 7, in the 8th concession of Broughton, for $127, and on 27th July, 1899, gave C. a new hypothec on the same lot for $123. On 31st July, 1889, P. also mis en cause, who was in possession of the lot, sold his improvements for $70 to C. On the same day the plaintiff, judgment creditor of P., caused said lot to be seized as against the latter. On August 17th defendant by opposition to the seizure claimed the lot as his property and on the same day sold it for $25 to C., his hypothecary creditor. Plaintiff contested the opposition and set up a sale in writing in 1894 at Stratford, U.S., by defendant to P. of said lot for $500, the receipt of which was thereby acknowledged. As against this defendant claimed that the sale in 1894, being null of a nullity radical and absolute, P. as purchaser not having paid the charg-es required on a transfer of property by 55 & 56 Vict. c. 17, ss. 2 and 4, and 57 Vict. c. 16, s. 3, said sale did not pass the property to P. but defendant remained its owner. This claim was maintained by the Su-perior Court in January, 1900. On 9th perior Court in January, 1900. On 9th February, 1900, C. registered in the registry office of Beauce County, the deed of sale of improvements on said lot from P. in July, 1899. Plaintiff attacked the sale of August, 1899, as made in violation of his rights, alleging that his debtor, P., was ir. possession in good faith of said lot, and even assuming the sale in 1894 to be void, P. having apparently paid the sum of $500 was entitled to demand it back, and plaintiff was within his rights as against him, and that collusion among defendant P. and C. on or about the 17th of August, 1899, had the effect, by a sale made on that day, of fraudulently depriving him of means which he had of reimbursing himself for the outlay of P. Defendant and C. as mis en cause denied fraud and collusion, claimed that the said sale was valid, and the possession of P. in bad faith, and that neither plaintiff nor P. was entitled to compensation:—Held, that the deed of sale in 1894 was void of a nullity radical and absolute, and should be deemed not to exist because the transfer charges were not paid. That such nullity not only prevented the transfer of the property but deprived the deed of all value as evidence of the sale; and that such a deed, having no existence in the eye of the law, was not even proof of payment and receipt of monies mentioned in it. That C. had committed no fraud in buying the immovable from the defendant. That, moreover, the plaintiff, creditor of P., soi-disant original purchaser, alleging in his action that his said debtor had taken on himself with the hypothecary debt of the vendor (defendant) to C. even affirmed thereby the bad faith of his auteur, who, not having paid such debt, could not set up his lien for improvements, the hypothecary debt of C. embracing in law these improvements. It is not unlawful for an hypothecary creditor to pay for improvements on a property for the purpose of protecting his hypothec, even if the person to whom it is paid is insolvent, as it is not fraudulent for a debtor to pay his insolvent creditor.

Nadeau v. Roseberry, 18 Que. S.C. 542 (S.

-Registration of judgment.]—A judgment may be registered and create hypothec on property acquired by the judgment debtor after it has been rendered.

McClure v. Croteau, 18 Que. S.C. 336.

—Judicial hypothec — Registry or judgment—Transfer of title.]—The creditor of the purchaser at a judicial sale of an immovable cannot obtain a judicial hypothec by registering, before the title of the purchaser has been obtained and registered, a judgment recovered against the latter. Therefore, such creditor cannot proceed by action en déclaration d'hypothéque against a third party to whom the purchaser has conveyed his purchase, and who, by virtue of such conveyance, has himself obtained from the sherift, on payment of the purchase money, a title to the immovable in question.

Lemieux v. Mitchell, 18 Que. S.C. 528 (S.C.).

—Registry — Saisie-arret.] — The right of hypothec or privilege mentioned in Art. 2013 Lc.C. is not subsidiary to the saisie-arrêt mentioned in Arts. 2013h and 2013i, nor made subordinate to the existence and validity of such saisie-arrêt, but is separate and distinct from, and independent of, the same. This hypothec or privilege is only subject to the conditions of notice provided for by Art. 2013g and to registry under Art. 2103.

Maclaren v. Villeneuve, 11 Que. K.B. 131.

—Lien—Privilege—Delegation of payment.]
—Although a deed of sale or donation contains no stipulation for an hypothecary guarantee the immovable donated or sold remains burdened with the hypothecary privilege of baillem de fonds for the charges appreciable in money provided for in the deed of donation or for the balance of the purchase money. This hypothec exists either in favour of the vendor or donor or of a third party to whom it was stipulated in the deed that the charges of the donation or the price of sale should be due. The filing with the liquidator of his claim by a creditor to be collocated on the proceeds of the sale of an immovable of which the price is due, as to the creditor named in the deed of sale, constitutes on his part a sufficient acceptance of the stipulation.

Canadian General Electric Co. v. Shipton Electric Light and Power Co., 21 Que. S.C. 83 (Sup. Ct.).

—Registry — Renewal — Irregularities.]—
A notice of renewal of registry of a deed of sale, which does not give the date of the original registration, which thoroughly states the number of the registry as well as the register and volume, and which inverts the names of the vendor and purchaser—giving that of the vendor for the purchaser and vice versa—is informal and irregular, and will not suffice to preserve the hypothec created by the deed.
Giard v. Lachance, 19 Que. S.C. 103 (Sup.

Ct.), affirmed by K.B. 29, April, 1902.

—School taxes — Registration — Prescription.] — 1. School rates constitute a privileged claim upon immovables (Arts. 2009, 2011 C.C.), and are exempt from the formality of registration (Art. 2084 C.C.). 2. Where, under a specific provision of the law, a hypothee exists without registration, a judgment upon the debt does not need to be registered in order to preserve the hypothee, nor does sale purge the property therefrom. 3. The hypothee also covers interest and the costs of a personal judgment against the debtor, such interest and costs being accessories of the debt (Art. 2017 C.C.). 4. An action and judgment against the principal debtor interrupt the three years' prescription as against those who acquire the property from him.

School Commissioners of Westmount v. Pitts, 24 Que. S.C. 7 (Davidson, J.).

-Issue of bonds - Second issue of bonds without payment of first issue.]-Held (on the inscription of the defendant):-(1) Where a valid issue of bonds has been made by a railway company under the dispositions of the Quebec Railway Act, which at the time of their issue governed the company defendant,—the validity of the bonds so issued not being affected by the bringing of the company under the legislative control of the Parliament of Canada and the Railway Act of Canada by 57-58 Vict. (Can.) c. 84—the company cannot, in view of the dispositions of s. 93, sub-s. 4, of the Act above-mentioned, exercise again the bond-issuing power, unless the bonds first issued have been withdrawn and paid or duly cancelled. (2) (On the inscription of the plaintiff):—The obligation to grant a conventional hypothec constitutes an obligation to do an act (execution of an authentic instrument) which can only be performed by the debtor himself or some person authorized by him, and whereof the Court has no means of compelling specific performance, and the law nowhere authorizes the substitution by the Court of its own judgment for the authentic act executed by the debtor personally, or his authorized agent, which is essential to the creation and existence of a conventional hypothec. (3) The only hypothec which can result from the judgment of a Court is the judicial hypothec, which results from such judgments only as contain a condemnation to pay a specific sum of money, (4) An order to execute a conventional hypothec, unaccompanied by any alternative condemnation,-no alternative condemnation being asked in the event of failure to obey the order-would constitute a judgment not susceptible of execution, in contravention of Art. 541, C.C.P. (5) Where the plaintiff asks that a property be declared hypothecated, but does not indicate or sufficiently describe the property, either in the allegations or conclusions of his declaration, the Court cannot take upon itself to ascertain and determine what specific pro-perty should be declared hypothecated.

Connolly v. Montreal Park and Island Railway Co., 22 Que. S.C. 322 (C.R.).

-- Hypothecated ship - Seizure - Consent or order.]—An hypothecated ship cannot, to the prejudice of the hypothecary creditor and without his consent or the order of a competent Court, be attacked at the suit of an ordinary creditor of the owner. The fact that the ordinary creditor had an-nounced the sale of the ship to be subject to all registered hypothees does not obviate the necessity of obtaining such consent or order.

Daignault v. Brulé, Q.R. 22 S.C. 20 (Cir.

--Seizure of immovables - Hypothecary creditor — Registered lease — Opposition to secure lease charge.]—1. The hypothecary execution creditor, whose hypothec has been registered prior to the registration of a lease of the hypothecated immovable may, when the lessee files an op-position requiring that the sale of the immovable should be made subject to his lease as a charge thereon, require security that the immovable shall sell for a price sufficient to satisfy the amount due to him (Art. 726 C.C.P.) (2) This security may be demanded as soon as the opposition is filed and without even admitting that the opposition is well founded.

Desaulniers v. Payette, 12 Que. K.B. 445. Note.—The Supreme Court quashed an appeal from this judgment on the ground that it was interlocutory only (33 Can. S. C.R. 340).

- Insolvent - Preference-Fraud.]-(1) A judgment, and a judicial hypothec created thereby on the property of the debtor while he was insolvent, and procured for the purpose of obtaining a fraudulent pre-ference over the debtor's other creditors, is a proceeding which must be attacked within the delay provided by Art. 1040 C.C. (2) A judgment is a judicial contract. (3) The delay for contesting the fraudulent deed of a debtor does not run only from the date of distribution of his assets, establishing his insolvency, but from the date of the knowledge by the creditor of the fraud, that is of the prejudice to him which results from the fraudulent deed.

La Banque Nationale v. Common, Q.R. 22 S.C. 284 (Sup. Ct.),

-Hypothec - Subsequent sale a remere Act of insolvency.] - The debtor having, on 8th May, 1901, placed upon his immovables an hypothecary debt payable at the end of three years, was afterwards obliged, to meet the payment of costs of proceedings of the existence of which his creditor had knowledge at the time of the loan and which were decided against him after that time, to borrow from another person the sum necessary to pay said costs and make to the latter a sale à réméré of the hypo-thecated land. His first creditor took action against him on the hypothec, payment of which was not due, and for a decree declaring that he had become insolvent and had diminished the value of the security he had given:-Held, that in agreeing to the sale à réméré the debtor did not become insolvent, that it had not affected the guarantee given to the first creditor, and that it did not fall within the provisions of Art. 1092 C.C.

(Sup. Ct.).

- Hypothec - Preference.] - An hypothecary creditor is entitled to be paid in preference to chirographic creditors, in accordance to the oruer in which his hypothec stands, from the proceeds of movables, immovables by destination and hypothecs as such sold judicially as movables separated from land to which they are attached subject to his charge.

McCaskill v. Richmond Industrial Co., Q. R. 23 S.C. 381 (Sup. Ct.), affirmed by Ct. of Rev., 20th May, 1903.

-- Substitution -- Deed authorizing -- Power to sell property substituted.]-F. Leclaire (deceased) bequeathed his property to defendant charged with a substitution in favour of the latter's children and with a provision against seizure and alienation of the enjoyment of the charge (grevé). The will, however, permitted the executors, of whom the defendant was one, to sell the property and employ the proceeds of sale in the purchase of real estate of the same value as the property sold, which real estate would take the place of the latter. The defendant, in 1869, sold one of the substituted immovables, and in 1873 bought in his own name a piece of land on which he built a house. In 1895 he assigned, and hypothecated the latter immovable for benefit of his children to the amount of $10,440, the sum which it cost, to serve and be held, said the deed, as a reinvestment for his children according to the terms of the will to the extent of the price, the sum paid and that remaining due, of sale of the substituted immovable, and of the sale of securities for an equal amount substituted. This deed of hypothecation reserved to defendant the right to discharge the hypotheque and place the said sum elsewhere either by the purchase of real estate or other sufficient securities:—Held, that the hypothec was not a valid reinvestment of the proceeds of sale of the substituted immovable and that the revenge from the immovable acquired by defendant in his own name could be seized by his creditors.

De Serres v. Leclaire, Q.R. 23 S.C. 454 (Ct. Rev.), affirmed by King's Bench, 28th April, 1903.

-Legal subrogation - Registry - Tiersdetenteur.]-F. Boissonnault, on May 13th, 1893, hypothecated for $800 to one Boucher lots of land numbered 87, 119, 130 and 132. A. Boissonnault afterwards became possessed (tiers-detenteur) of lot No. 87 and of the undivided half of No. 130. Later still J. Boissonnault obtained possession of lots 119 and 132 and the other undivided half of No. 130. Neither of the latter appears to have been charged with payment of Boucher's debt. On 22nd April, 1899, and 12th May, 1900, J. Boissonnault borrowed $500 from one Belanger, and mortgaged to him the lots which he held. On November 9th, 1901, in order to obtain a legal subrogation Belanger paid Boucher's debt and the latter gave him a discharge which carried with it the conventional subrogation. On November 23rd, 1901, A. Boissonnault sold the land of which he was possessed to one Morin, who covenanted to discharge, as the price of sale, the claim of Boucher to which Belanger was subrogated. On November 26th, in conformity with his deed, Morin paid to Belanger the Boucher claim and obtained a discharge stating that such payment was made as the price of purchase from A. Boissonnault, and according to the intention of the deed of sale and discharge concluded by saying: "Being a general and final discharge for such purchase money and for radiation of the hypothec." The lots of which J. Boissonnault was possessed were sold by the sheriff and the amount realized is to be apportioned:—Held, (1) that the right and interest of A. Boissonnault (or of Morin) to obtain the legal subrogation for A. Boissonnault being hypothecary debtor, had an interest in making payment to relieve his immovable from the charge upon it. (2) That A. Boissonnault, through the payment of his vendee, in discharge of the price of sale to Belanger had obtained the legal subrogation to Boucher's claim and that notwithstanding the terms of the discharge signed by Belanger. (3) But the immovable of A. Boissonnault sold to Morin being equally charged with Boucher's claim,
A. Boissonnault could only demand, on the price of the lands of the other tiersdetenteur, J. Boissonnault, a deduction of the proportion of the Boucher claim for which his lands should contribute, that is, that the lands of A. Boissonnault should contribute with those of J. Boissonnault in payment of the Boucher debt according to their respective value, and that, in the present case, was the extent of the legal subrogation obtained by A. Boissonnault.
(4) That Belanger not being a transferee, or subsequently subrogated, could not complain of want of registry of the legal sub-rogation obtained by A. Boissonnault. (5) That mistakes of the registrar, or his omissions, irregularities or wrong construction of documents properly filed could not injure A. Boissonnault. (6) That to obtain the registration by transcription of the discharge given by Belanger, it is sufficient to file a copy with the registrar, which has been done, and this discharge establishes the legal subrogation.

Belanger v. Boissonnault, Q.R. 22 S.C. 53 (Ct. Rev.).

-Transfer of hypothecary claim - Signification — Acceptance by personal debtor.]
—(1) When the transfer of an hypothecary claim has been duly registered and signification of it has been made with de-livery of a copy bearing a certificate of its registration to the possessor (détenteur) of the hypothecated property; a tender by the personal debtor to the transferee of a part of the claim as the balance due is a sufficient acceptance by such personal debtor of the transfer under Art. 1571 C.C., and relieves the transferee from the obligation to serve the transfer upon him. (2) When an action is brought by a minor who comes of age pending the suit, and before plea filed, the defendant cannot at the hearing or the merits ask for its dismissal on that ground. The provision of law that the actions of minors are brought in the name of their tutors is for the protection of the minors who can cure such a departure from it by continuing the suit after coming of age. At most, a defendant can take advantage of it by exception to the form; it is too late to do so after issue joined on the merits.

Parliament not having made the examination by the immigration officer final, the statute is not to be construed as ousting the jurisdiction of the Court to examine into the legality of the detention on a proper application. -- Chinese Immigration Act-Evading payment of tax.]—Defendant was tried and convicted before the County Court Judge for district No. 7 for violating the provisions of R.S.C. c. 95, ss. 7, 30 (respecting Chine Chinese immigration) in that he being a person of Chinese origin did enter Canada without paying the tax required by s. 7 of the said Act. The learned Judge reserved several questions for the opinion of the Court including the following: "Does the accusation sufficiently charge the defendant with an indicable offence under ss. 7 and 30 of c. 95 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906":-Held, that while the statute imposes a tax upon persons of Chinese origin entering Canada, with certain exceptions, and provides machinery for the col-lection of the tax, it does not make the entering Canada by such persons without payment of the tax a criminal offence, and that the defendant not being charged with any criminal offence his conviction was unwarranted and must be set aside and that he was entitled to his discharge.

IMPROVEMENTS.

- Locatee - Improvements Claim for.]-On an application being made for the patent to certain lands, a claim was made by the defendant, who had married the widow of the locatee, and had improved the land, to be allowed the value of such improvements, whereupon the Commissioner of Crown Lands directed that before the patent issued the amount, if any, payable to the defendant for his improvements and work on the land, after proper deductions, should be ascertained. A consent judgment was obtained referring it to the Master to enquire and report as to what sum, if any, the defendant was entitled to for permanent improvements and work done upon the land; for maintenance of the family of the locatee; and for any advances made to them, after making all proper deductions:-Held, that while the consent judgment was silent as to the prin-ciple to be applied in ascertaining the amount payable to the defendant for improvements, etc., having regard to the object of the Crown Lands Department, the proper mode was to award such sum as in toro consciention the defendant ought to reseive.

Highland v. Sherry, 32 O.R. 371.

-Demand of possession - Subsequent improvements - Mistake of title.] - The defundant and a life tenant of certain lands lived together thereon, the defendant bona fide believing that the land was or would be hers on the life tenant's death. After the life tenant's death the defendant continued living on the land and made improvements thereon. About a year and a half after the life tenant's death the defendant was served with a notice demanding possession, and stating that unless possession was given within a reasonable time a writ would be issued. No action was taken upon the demand, and the defendant, who was an illiterate woman, remained in possession, and under such belief of title continued to make improvements; and it was not until some seven years afterwards, when another notice had been served upon her, that an action was brought to recover possession, the bulk of the improvements having been made during the period be-tween the two notices:—Held, that under the circumstances the defendant was entitled to the value of her improvements. Corbett v. Corbett, 12 O.L.R. 268 (Mabee, J.).

-Claim for improvements - Notice of title being disputed.] - Good faith is the essential condition to the right of the possessor of immovable property to claim the value of improvements upon it. When he claims it by plea to a petitory action, it is a good answer that the improvements were made after notice to him by protest that his title was disputed.

INCEST.

Evidence-Proof of blood relationship on charge of incest.]-On a trial for incest, the only evidence against the accused was that of the child, a girl of 11 years, and of a woman who had known accused and the girl living together as father and daughter for some seven or eight months. This evidence was not rebutted:-Held, on appeal, that this was not sufficient proof of relationship to justify a conviction. Rex v. Smith, 13 B.C.R. 384, 13 Can. Cr.

Action en garantie - Contract - Liability of owner to contractor.]-A contractor who has undertaken work for a fixed price, by a contract containing no stipulation for construction of the necessary scaffolding, and when the same had been pre-viously put up by the owner of the premises for other work being carried on at the same time, will be deemed to have contracted on the tacit understanding that he can make use of such scaffolding, especially if he uses it with the knowledge and approbation of the owner. Consequently, if through defects in the construction of such scaffolding an accident happens and an action is brought against the contractor therefor, he has a right to call in the owner in warranty. (2) The cost of constructing new scaffolding compared with the contract price, as well as the uselessness of such a course are elements of proof in such a case.

-Landlord and tenant - Warranty.] -When a tenant has brought an action against another tenant of his landlord, in consequence of an act of violence committed to his injury, and the defendant pleads that the plaintiff has not the right in the land which he claims under his lease, but that he (defendant) has the sole right of enjoyment thereof, the plaintiff may bring in his landlord in warranty to defend him against the defendant's claim.

—Joint tort-feasors — Action maintained as to the one and dismissed as to the other.] — A party sued jointly with another in damages for a tort, who is condemned alone, the action being dismissed as to the other, and who pays the plaintiff the amount of the judgment, has an action against his co-defendant to recover the whole or part of the amount so paid, accordingly as it is proven at the trial of such action that the tort was caused solely or in part by such co-defendant. The judgment in the original suit is not chose jugée between the joint tort-feasors and their liability to one another is not affected by it, nor by the payment made by the one against whom it was rendered.

Property vested in trust for benefit of Indians—Right of their chiefs to sue.]—
A statute passed before the abolition of the feudal tenure in this province, to vest a fief or seigniory in an ecclesiastical corporation, in trust, "for the instruction, and spiritual care of the Algonquin and Iroquois Indians," does not give the chiefs elected by them, a right of action against the corporation, on the ground that it grants lands of the fief to "whites," or others than Indians, and that it interferes with the exercise, by the Indians, of pretended rights of pasturage and to cut wood in the seigniory.

Selling liquor to Indian — Appeal — Rehearsing on new evidence.]—
R. v. Russell, 4 W.L.R. 16 (N.W.T.),

Property exigible under execution against Indian,—The primary debtor, who was an Indian, a member of the St. Regis band of Indians, sent his milk out of his reserve to the factory of the garnishees. The garnishees were to manufacture the milk into cheese, sell the cheese, and after deducting charges of manufacture and sale, were to account to the Indian for the value of the milk. Frimary creditor issued garnishing summons, attaching this milk money. Garnishees paid the money into Court, and primary debtor made apinto Court, and primary debtor or made apinto.

plication for payment out to him, claiming that the money was not exigible under execution:—Held, that the milk money in question was not personal property outside the reserve liable to taxation, and therefore was not exigible under the Indian Act, s. 102. Action dismissed; money to be paid over to primary debtor. Simkevitz v. Thompson. 16 O.W.R. 865.

-Notice of appeal served on one justice only-Condition precedent - Costs.]-By the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 81, s. 135, jurisdiction to try offences against the Act is given to two justices of the peace. Section 750 of the Criminal Code provides that notice of appeal shall be given by serving the respondent or the justice who tried the case with a copy thereof. By s. 2 (18), of the Criminal Code, "justice" includes two or more justices if two or more justices act or have jurisdiction :-Held, therefore, where a conviction for an offence against the Indian Act was made by two justices of the peace, and notice of appeal from the conviction was served upon only one of the justices, that there was no jurisdiction to hear the appeal, the provisions of s. 750 being imperative, and compliance therewith being a condition precedent which could not be waived; and the appeal was dismissed, but without costs, because, by s. 755 of the Code, costs should only be allowed upon proof of notice the appeal having been given to the son entitled to receive the same.

-Indian Act-Vendor's lien.]-Indians in Canada are British subjects and entitled to all the rights and privileges of such, except so far as those rights are restricted by statute, and, notwithstanding sub-sec. 24 of s. 91 of the British North America Act, 1867, they are subject to all provincial laws Reg. ex rel. Gibb v. White, 5 P.R. 315, and Rex v. Hill, 1907, 15 O.L.R, 410. An Indian has the same right to sell or dispose of land which has been allotted to him by the Dominion Government as his own individual property as any other British subject has and neither section 102 of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 81, which prevents any person acquiring any lien or charge on real property of an Indian not subject to taxes under the last three preceding sections, nor any other provision of the Act imposes any restriction on the right of selling outright any of his individual property. The Estoppel Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 56, applies to conveyances made by Indians as well as others and, where an Indian has given a deed of his land with the covenants mentioned in that Act, the subsequent issue of the Crown patent to him vests the title in the grantee in fee simple. Dismissal of petition following caveat under the Real Property Act delayed to enable petitioners to take proceedings to establish a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money under prayer for general relief.

Sanderson v. Heap, 19 Man. R. 122.

Indian Act — Half-breed — Meaning of "Indian."] — The Indian Act, R.S. (1886), c. 43 defines (s. 2 h) "Indian" as meaning inter alia "any male person of Indian blood reputed to belong to a particular band":-Held, (1) Against the contention that "of Indian blood" means of full Indian blood, or at least of Indian blood ex parte paterna-that a half-breed of Indian blood ex parte materna is "of Indian blood."
(2) Against the contention that the defendant having been shown to have actually belonged to a particular band, this disproved, or was insufficient to prove, that he was reputed to belong thereto-that the intention of the Act is to make proof of mere repute sufficient evidence of actual membership in the band. (3) Against the contention that by virtue of s. 11 the mother of the defendant by her marriage to his father, who was a white man, ceased to be an Indian, and that therefore the defendant was not a person of Indian bloodthat while the mother lost her character of an Indian by such marriage, except as stated in that section, it did not affect her blood which she transmitted to her son.

Boucher v. Montour, 20 Que. S.C. 291 (Sup. Ct.).

—Indian Act — Sale of liquor to half-breed —Mens rea.] — S. 94 of the Indian Act (R.S.C. 1886, c. 43) provides that, "Every person who sells, exchanges with, barters, supplies or gives to any Indian or non-treaty Indian, any intoxicant . . shall on summary conviction . . . be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months . . .":—Held, following Regina v. Howson, 1 Terr. L.R. 492, that a half-breed who has "taken treaty" is an Indian within the meaning of the Indian Act. A conviction of a person, licensed to sell liquor, for the sale of an intoxicant to such a half-breed was, however, quashed because the licensee did not know and luad no means of knowing that the halfbreed shared in Indian treaty payments. Mens rea must be shown.

—Indian lands — Sale of timber — Registration — Notice.j — The locatee of Indian lands is, except as against the Crown in the same position as if the land had been granted to him by letters patent, and can assign his interest in the land or in the timber. Actual notice of such an assignment, even though the assignment has not been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Act, is sufficient to prevent a subsequent assignee from obtaining priority. Bridge v. Johnston, 8 O.L.R. 196 (D.C.).

-Indians - Mississauga band - Claim for restitution of moneys to trust fund — De-clarations of right — Discretion of Superintendent-General - Crown as trustee.] --A claim against the Crown based upon the 111th section of the British North America Act, 1867, and upon Acts of the Legislature of the Province of Canada and of the Parliament of Canada, is a claim "aris'rg under any law of Canada" within the meaning of clause (d) of s. 16 of the Exchequer Court Act. Yule v. The Queen, 6 Ex. C.R. 123; 30 S.C.R. 35, referred to. (2) Where the Court has no jurisdiction to grant relief in an action, it has no authority to make a declaration binding the rights of the parties. This rule should be strictly followed in all cases where the jurisdiction of the Court depends upon statute and not upon common law. Barraclough v. Brown [1897] A.C. 623, referred to. (3) It does not follow that because the Crown is a trustee the Court has jurisdiction to enforce the trust or to make any declaration as to the rights of the parties interested. That authority, if it exists, must be found in the statutes which give the Court jurisdiction. The real question in any such case is not that the Crown may or may not be a trustee; but whether the Court has any jurisdiction with respect to the execution of the trust. (4) While under the provisions of certain treaties and of certain statutes of the Legislature of the Province of Canada, and of the Par-liament of Canada, the Crown stands in the position of trustee for the Indians in respect of certain lands and moneys, such position is not that of an ordinary trustee. The Crown does not personally execute the trust; the Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs having, under the Governor-in-Council, the management and control of such lands and moneys. For the manner in which the affairs of the Indians is administered the Dominion Government and the Superintendent-General are responsible to Parliament, and Parliament alone has authority to review the decision arrived at or the action taken by them. In all such cases the Court has no jurisdiction to review their discretion. Then there is this further difference between the Crown as a trustee and an ordinary trustee, viz.:

that the Crown is not bound by estoppels. and no laches can be imputed to it: neither does it answer for the negligence of its officers. (5) Under the treaty of February 28th, 1820, there is nothing to prevent the Crown from making provision for the main-tenance of the Mississauga band of Indians out of any capital moneys arising from the sale or leasing or other disposition of surrendered lands. (6) Under Treaty No. 19, made on the 28th October, 1818, the Crown's obligation is to pay the Mississaugas of the Credit a fixed annuity of $2,090. So far as this treaty is concerned the Crown is not a trustee, but a debtor: and the right of the Indians to such annuity cannot be impaired by any departmental adjustment of the Indian funds to which the Indians themselves are not parties.

—Indian, sale of liquor to—Person following Indian mode of life.]—A quarter-breed is as much entitled to purchase liquor as a white man, provided he does not come within the purview of the amendment to the Indian Act enacted by section 6, chapter 32, 1894. In this case, there being nothing to show that the defendant knew or had cause to suspect that the person to whom he sold the liquor was reputed to belong to a particular band, or followed the Indian mode of life, the defendant only acted reasonably in the circumstances. INDUSTRIAL DESIGN

Cook stove — Imitation — Infringement — Injunction—Cancellation of conflicting design.]—The plaintiffs were registered owners of an industrial design for a cook stove, called the "Royal Favorite, 9-25," which, as a special article of their manufacture, had become well known to the trade. The defendants procured one of the said stoves, caused a model to be made of it, and with some minor alterations, chiefly in the ornamentation, manufactured a stove called the "Royal National, 9-25," and subsequently registered it as an industrial design. In an action by the plaintiffs for infringement and for an order to expunge defendants' design from the register, the weight of ovidence established that the defendants' design was an obvious imitation of that of the plaintiffs' design, and that the registration of that of the defendants should be expunged from the register.

Natural children — Maintenance by flatch.]—The father who voluntarily acknowledges his natural children is bound to support them and the mother, appointed tutrix, may maintain an action for the cost of such support. It is the tutor's duty to attend to the education of the minor and to bring an action to recover the cost of the latter's maintenance. The father against whom such an action is brought cannot rely, as a defence, on grounds calling for the removal of the tutor from such position. He must bring an action expressly for such removal.

Custody of-Children's Aid Society-Foster parent.]-An infant duly committed to the care of the Children's Aid Society of Vancouver under the provisions of the Children's Protection Act of British Columbia, was by such society placed with P. as a foster parent. Subsequently another society, upon notice to the Children's Aid Society of Vancouver, but without notice to P., applied to the magistrate who made the order originally, and, under s. 39 of the Act, obtained an order for the surrender of the child, on the ground that it was of a different religion from the society with which it was first placed. Upon said application the fact was ascertained that the child had been placed in a foster home, but its whereabouts was not disclosed by the officer appearing for the society. Later the second society, on obtaining this informa-tion procured an order for and served a writ of habeas corpus on P., directing him to produce the child. He appeared and moved to set aside the writ and the order: -Held, that although the first society was the legal guardian of the child when the second order was made, yet P. could not be deprived of his legal rights without notice and without an opportunity of being heard, that under s. 7 of the Act, the contract placing the child with P. divested the society of any authority to interfere with his rights unless the child's welfare de-manded that it should be withdrawn from —Custody—Paternal rights—Agreement to surrender.]—An agreement to surrender his paternal rights cannot bind or relieve a father. The Queen v. Barnardo. 23 Q. B.D. 305, followed. Upon an application by a father for the custody of his infant son, 11 years of age, nothing was alleged against the applicant beyond the fact that his circumstances, without fault on his part, had caused a separation between the boy and himself; and an order was made for the restoration of the boy to the father by those who had the custody during the separation.

Employer and workman — Employment of children—Protection.]—The owner of a factory who employs children in it should take all necessary precautions to protect them from the consequences of acts which, though imprudent on the part of adults, are such as might be expected from children, but he is not responsible for accidents that the prudent restraint that could be looked for from a child would have prevented.

S. 18 of 63 Vict., c. 17 (O.), does not apply, such guardian not being a trustee within the meaning of the section:—Hield, also, that under the circumstances of this case, six per cent. interest was a fair rate to charge the guardian on the moneys in his hands.

-Habeas Corpus - Adjournment - Expenses.]-When the officer or other person to whom a writ of habeas corpus is directed has obeyed it by bringing up the body and making his return, the Judge or Court may make an order for payment by the applicant of the expenses of such officer or person. Dodd's Case (1857), 2 DeG. & J. 510, followed. The costs of proceedings by habeas corpus are governed by s. 119 of the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 51, and are therefore in the discretion of the Court or Judge. Regina v. Jones, [1894] 2 Q.B. 382, followed. Where, in obedience to a habeas corpus, the person to whom it was directed produced the body of an infant before a Judge in Chambers, and filed certain affidavits in answer to the writ, making his return thereto, and the applicant thereupon applied for an enlargement, which the Judge granted upon condition of the applicant paying to the respondent a sum for counsel fee and expenses, and the applicant appealed from the order embodying such condition to a Divisional Court, which dismissed the appeal, giving the applicant leave, however, to have her original application heard upon payment of the sum already ordered to be paid and a further sum, the Court of Appeal refused the applicant leave to appeal from the order the Divisional Court.

-Custody of-Mother of illegitimate child.] -Application on return to a writ of habeas corpus by the mother for the custody of an illegitimate child, a boy of twelve years of The mother who was only seventeen years old when the child was born was unable to support him and arranged with one Setter to take the child and a formal document was drawn up and executed by which the mother released and abandoned the child and all her right and title as his mother to the custody, control and possession of the child to Setter forever, and Setter on his part agreed to maintain, care for and educate the child. The mother married in 1893 and there are now five children of the marriage. She never interfered with the control of the child by Setter and his wife, or manifested any interest in him until a few weeks before the application when she made a demand upon Setter for his custody. He had in the meantime been maintained and brought up by Setter and his wife as their own. They had no other children and were in fairly comfortable circumstances. The reason given by the mother for now wanting to take back the child were that he was made to do work too hard for his age and that Setter had not educated him; but the Judge found that although the boy had never at-tended any school it was because there was no school near enough, and that Mrs. Setter had herself taught him and his education had not been neglected, also that there was no foundation for the charge of his being overworked. The Judge also found that the Setters had brought up the child with the same care and affection that they would have bestowed on a child of their own, and expressed himself as satisfied that if he had a discretion to exercise in the matter it would be in the best interests of the child to leave him with the Setters:—Held, following Reg. v. Nash, 10 Q.B.D. 454, and Barnardo v. McHugh (1891), A.C. 388, that although the mother of an illegitimate child has prima facie a right to his custody notwithstanding any agreement she may have made to the contrary, yet the Court has a discretion to refuse to accede to her wishes if it is shown that it would be detrimental to the interests of the child to return him to her control, and that under the circumstances in this case such discretion should be exercised by leaving the child with the Setters.

The defendant was an infant when he executed the bond:-Held, that the bond was not void ab initio; that it was only voidable; and, upon the evidence, that it was adopted and ratified by the defendant after he had attained full age. (2) That the shares held by the plaintiff not being of any value, the plaintiff's damage by reason of the breach of the bond was $495, the price of the 11 shares, less 10 per centum. (3) That the recovery was not for a debt or liquidated demand, and the plaintiff was not entitled to interest, the amount not having been ascertained until judgment.

Judgment of Meredith, C.J.C.P., affirmed by Divisional Court. An order for the examination of an infant for discovery should not give to the examiner a discretion to determine the capacity of the infant; the proper manner of raising any question as to the capacity of the infant is by motion to set aside the appointment, or, if there is no time for that, then upon the motion to commit for non-attendance, so that the question of capacity may be considered by the Court itself.

-Hypothecation of the property of minors -Liability of minors for debts due by their deceased father.]-Xavier Rosseau gave his property to his son on condition that he would pay the donor's then existing debts. The donee died shortly afterwards, leaving a widow and two children (minors). The widow and children went to the United States to live. A tutor ad hoc was appointed to the children and he retroceded the property to the donor, who borrowed $500 from plaintiff, hypothecating the property as security. The widow of the done re-married and she and her husband took possession of the property as tutors of the children. The donor subsequently died and the plaintiff sued the donee's children, as represented by their tutors, to recover the $500 with interest:-Held, (reversing the judgment of the Superior Court at Montmagny, Pelletier, J.) 1. The retrocession of the property of the minors to the donor and its hypothecation by him were illegal. 2. The donee's minor children were not liable to plaintiff for the repayment of his loan to the donor. 3. The payment of the $500 to the donor did not enrich the minors, but simply operated a change in their creditor. 4. The plaintiff's remedy is an action against the representatives of the donor, and an attachment in the hands of the defendants, as tutors of the children, of what they may owe to the donor who paid debts for which they were liable.

-Mortgage by infant-Voidable contract-Repudiation of-What amounts to-Infants' Contracts Act.]-A mortgage executed by an infant before the passing of the Infants' Contracts Act, is not void, but voidable, and if the infant wishes to avoid it he must expressly repudiate it within a reasonable time after coming of age. R., in 1896, being then an infant, executed a mortgage in favour of S. R. came of age on 27th January, 1900, and at that time, on account of default having been made in the payment of the loan, S. was proceeding to sell under power of sale in the mortgage. R.'s solicitors, on 13th February, 1900, wrote S., saying that no valid mortgage had ever been executed by R., and threatening proceedings to protect their client's interests, and on 2nd March they issued a writ on behalf of R. against S., claiming a declaration that the mortgage was null and void, and an injunction restraining sale. On cross-examination on an affidavit made by R. in support of a motion for an interim injunction he said in substance that the reason he did not pay was because ne couldn't, and that he had never repudiated his contract, and in October, 1900, he discontinued his action. On 2nd November, 1900, S. commenced his foreclosure action, and in defence R. pleaded infancy:—Held, that the solicitor's letter and the writ in Russell v. Saunders did not constitute repudiation, as they were qualified by R.'s statement that he did not intend to repudiate. Judgment of Irving, J., dismissing the action, reversed.

The widow, however, used the shares in good faith, and to the best advantage of the minors, in settling debts of the estate, which was virtually insolvent:-Held, that the children having benefited to the full value of the shares, or more, and having made no offer of restitution of such benefit, had no claim against the transferor, or against the company itself, to recover the shares or their value (Arts. 1011, 1139, 1144 C.C.).

Under the circumstances set forth in the judgment, it was held that such discretion should be exercised by leaving the child where the mother had originally placed him.

In such cases the amount to be allowed for maintenance must be governed by a consideration of the other circumstances, and a due regard to such other sources or funds as may be properly

-Avoidance of bill of sale given to secure loan - Action for conversion of goods.]-Defendant advanced to plaintiff, who, to his knowledge, was an infant under the age of 21 years, a sum of money to be em-ployed in the purchase of a horse, taking as security for the loan a bill of sale, which was properly executed and filed in the office af the Registrar of Deeds. Defendant, hearing that plaintiff was about to sell the horse, took possession under the bill of sale and sold to a third party:-Held, affirming the judgment of the County Court Judge, that plaintiff was entitled to recover in an action for conversion; that the repudiation of the bill of sale by the infant avoided it, and that defendant had no protection under it for the act which he committed. Also, that the ownership of a horse by one in plaintiff's circumstances did not come within the term "necessaries." Also, that the fact that plaintiff stood by and allowed the horse to be sold without objection did not assist defendant, as an infant could no more estop himself by conduct of this sort than he could contract. Also, the trial Judge having deprived plaintiff of costs, on the ground that he had sworn falsely during the course of the trial, that his discretion in this particular should not be interfered with Verrier v. Mulvena, 7 Que. P.R. 414 (Lemieux, J.).

—Custody — Rights of father — Fitness — Religious faith.] — Upon an application by the father of a girl of eleven years for an order against the maternal grand-mother for delivery of custody, it was shown that the mother of the child was dead, that the child had lived with the grandmother since she was three years old, and had been brought up as a Protestant, while the father had become a Roman Catholic and desired to educate the child in that faith:-Held, upon the evidence, that the applicant was not an unfit person to have the custody of his daughter; that there was no agreement that the child should remain with the grandmother always or until her death, and the father had not abandoned his parental rights; that the child herself had no serious religious convictions; that she would have a better home and a better education in her father's house than with her grandmother; that it would be for her advantage to be brought up in the same home with her only brother; and that no case had been made out which would justify a refusal to give effect to the father's right to the custody of his child. While the welfore of the infant is in one sense paramount, the paternal right to custody and control is supreme, unless a very extreme case can be made out showing that it is imperative for the protection of the child that the Court should interfere with that right. The reluctance of the Court to separate brothers and sisters is very great. It is the duty of the Court to enforce the wishes of the father as to the religious education of his children, unless there is strong reason for disregarding them. The Court has jurisdiction to interfere, even against the father's wishes, to prevent the religious convictions of his child being interfered with; but the circumstances must be such as to satisfy the Court that there has been an abandonment or abdication of the paternal right, or at least that the training of the child has imbued it with such deep religious convictions that to disturb them would be clearly dangerous to its moral welfare. The Children's Protection Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 259, has no application to the case of a child situated as this one was.

Part of the plaintiff's claim was for the loss of a stable on land which he had agreed to sell. The stable had been placed on the land by the purchaser, but the plain-tiff had taken possession of the stable and was using it at the time of the fire:-Held, that the plaintiff's possession of the stable was evidence of title as against a wrong-doer, and that the defendant could not rely on the purchasers rights as against the plaintiff, but was liable to the plain-tiff for the value of the stable as well as of the other property destroyed by the fire.

-- Custody-Adoption-Rights of parent.]-The law of this province knows nothing of adoption; and an agreement by parents to deprive themselves of the custody of their child is not legally binding upon them. B7 R.S.O. 1897, c. 259, s. 12, where the parent of any child applies to the Court for an order for the production of the child, and the Court is of opinion that the parent has abandoned or deserted the child, or that he has otherwise so conducted himself that the Court should refuse to enforce his right to the custody of the child, the Court may, in its discretion, decline to make the order:-Held, that "abandoned" and "deserted" involve a wilful omission to take charge of the child, or some mode of dealing with it calculated to leave it without proper care; and leaving a child with those who had contracted to take proper care of it could not be called "abandonment" or "desertion," nor could the subsequent act of giving up all claim to the child. Therefore, where the parents of an infant placed her in charge of a stranger, agreeing to pay for her maintenance, and afterwards signed an agreement to give up all claim to the child, an order was made, upon the father's application, for delivery of the child to him, upon an undertaking to pay to the person who had assumed to adopt the child the expense incurred by that person.

The defendant, being the father of an illegitimate child, entered into a contract with the child's mother, the plaintiff, to pay for its mainten-ance. The plaintiff's solicitor, before the defendant executed the agreement, inquired of the defendant whether he was of full age, informing him that if he was not, an affidavit of affiliation, aircaus the plaintiff, would be filed in order to preserve her rights under the statute. defendant falsely assured the solicitor that he was of full age, and executed the agreement; and, in consequence of the representation, the solicitor did not file the affidavit; and, the time for filing it having expired, the plaintiff sued upon the contract:-Held, that the defendant obtained nothing under the contract; the benefit accruing to him from the non-filing of the affidavit was not obtained as a term of the contract; but because of his fraudulent conduct dehors the contract; and the plaintiff was not, therefore, entitled to equitable relief; nor was the defendant estopped by his fraud from pleading infancy. -Custody of - Children's Protection Act-Religious persuasion of parent-Order of magistrate awarding custody — Change of such order.] — A magistrate made an order under the provisions of the Children's Protection Act of British Columbia awarding the custody of an infant to the Children's Aid Society of Vancouver, an undenominational society, but, upon further evidence being submitted, made a second order committing the child to the care of the Children's Aid Society of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, a Roman Catholic institution:—Held, on appeal, that the magistrate had power to make the second order in the circumstances.

In re Howard, 14 B.C.R. 307.

—Sale of land — Tutrix — Married woman —Creditors.] — The declaration by a married woman tutrix to her infant children that an immovable sold to her had been paid for by their money and is their property is equivalent to alienation and, if made without authority from her husband is a radical nullity. It is also without effect as against creditors of real rights, duly registered, in the immovable notwithstanding that the property was accepted for the minors by a tutor judicially authorized on advice of a family council. Martin V. Hébert, Q.R. 35 S.C. 148.

—Tutor—Acquisition of minor's property.]
—The prohibition in Art. 390 C.C. against a tutor purchasing or leasing under rent the property of the minor is absolute, and the appointment of a tutor ad hoc, the approval of a family council and its homologation by the prothonotary in order to effectuate the location of the minor's immovable in the tutor and the lease prepared for the purpose are all radically null.

Bélanger v. Beauchamp, Q.R. 36 S.C. 1.

—Contributory negligence—Common fault —Measure of damages.] — The negligence of the victim which contributes to an accident becomes a fortuitous event when such victim is an infant too young to know the consequences of his actions. It is taken into account in the same way as common fault in assessing the damages. Thus, when a child three years old was injured by a tram car through his own fault combined with that of the motorman who was not looking ahead at the moment, and did not see the child in time to apply the brakes the damages should be divided and the company only can demand for half. (See Winnipeg Elec. Ry. Co. v. Wald, 41 Can. S.C.R. 431, and cases there cited.) In awarding damages in a case of the civil liability provided for by Art. 1053 C.C. the Court should have regard to the gravity of the fault and apportion them accordingly. Cf. Parker v. Corp. of Hatley, Q.R. 33 S.C. 520.

Champagne v. Montreal Street Railway Co., Q.R. 35 S.C. 507.

INJUNCTION.

Motion to commit for contempt-In-junction till certain date or disposition of motion to continue.]-Plaintiffs applied for and obtained an interim injunction order and obtained an interim injunction order restraining the defendants from, among other things, interfering with the crop on certain land "until the 27th day of September or until the disposition of the mo-tion to continue the same." With this injunction was granted a summons, returnable on the 24th day of September, to continue the injunction until the trial of the action. The order and summons were served on the defendant personally, and he retained a solicitor to appear and oppose the motion, which the solicitor did. An order was, however, on the 25th of September, made to continue the injunction. The order was served on the defendant's solicitor on the 16th of October, and on the defendant on the 21st of October. In the meantime the defendant, on the 20th of October, went to the land in question, and, finding the plaintiff's servants gathering the crop, drove them off and removed it himself. The plaintiffs and removed it himself. The plaintiffs then moved to commit him for contempt. and an order for committal was made. The defendant appealed, contending that the order was made in error (a) because he had not received notice of the injunction, and (b) that there was no evidence that the crop removed was the crop grown in the year 1909, which he was enjoined from removing. Per Lamont, J.:-The plaintiffs, to secure committal for breach, must show beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew of the existence of the injunction when he committed the breach, and the facts in this case were not sufficient to charge the defendant with such notice. 2. That, involving as it does the liberty of the subject, the plaintiff in this motion should establish strictly the breach complained of, and the Court should not infer from the facts that the crop removed was the crop which the defendant was enjoined from removing, but such facts should have been affirmatively established. The material filed on the motion to commit showed that the affidavits in support thereof were not actually filed until after the order for committal was made: -Held, per Johnstone, J., that a motion of the kind involving the liberty of the subject is strictissimi juris, and as the strict practice requires that all affidavits for use on a motion be filed before the hearing, the order should not have been made, and should now be set aside, notwithstanding that no objection was made on this ground. Moose Mountain Lumber and Hardware Co. v. Paradis, 3 Sask. R. 312.

Defamation—Libel — Injunction.]— The Court cannot grant an interim injunction restraining the publication of libels generally. The most that can properly be asked for in any case is an injunction restraining further publication of particular

Natural Resources v. Saturday Night, 2 O.W.N. 9, 16 O.W.R. 927.

Interim order — "Just and convenient"— Distress for rent—Remedy by replevin.]— Before the Judicature Act, when a tenant desired to dispute his landlord's right to distrain, his only remedy, if he desired to prevent a sale, was to replevy the goods; he could not resort to equity for an injunction. And even since the Judicature Act, although the Court has the power, by s. 58 (9), to grant an injunction when "just and convenient," it will only do so when formerly the Court of Chancery would have done so. Shaw v. Earl of Jersey (1879), 4 C.P.D. 120, and Walsh v. Lonsdale (1882), 21 Ch. D. 9, are not now to be regarded as authoritative upon the right to an injuncauthoritative upon the right to an injunc-tion. North London R.W. Co. v. Great Nor-thern R.W. Co. (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 30, and Kitts v. Moore, [1895] 1 Q.B. 253, specially referred to. Of the grounds stated for continuing an interim injunction restraining a landlord from proceeding with a distress, the first depended upon a disputed question of fact, the second was as to an omission which the landlord could remedy, and the third rested upon a legal proposition which was not clear or indisputable: -Held, that in these circumstances, it would not be "just and convenient" to grant an injunction and deprive the landlord of his security, unless some other equally good were substituted; replevin was a cheaper, more just, and more convenient remedy. Quære. whether there is a right to distrain when the rent is not payable at a time certain. Neal v. Rogers, 22 O.L.R. 588.

-Restraining public corporation tory trust - Interference with public utilities. 1-An injunction will not lie to restrain a public corporation, such as the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, from carrying on statutory works in discharge of their trust, even though such works should interfere with, or obstruct, the operation of a public utility (v.g., drainage) by the municipality in which they are performed. More particularly will such be the case, if it be made to appear that any immediate danger of ill consequences is obviated by the consent of the commissioners to allow the municipality to operate the utility (v.g., to extend its sewers), through their works, in any manner approved of by their engineers.

-Injunction-Contract to play hockey-Breach of contract.]-The breach of a contract to render personal services to another will not be enjoined except when the services are of such a special, unique or unusual character that their loss cannot be reasonably compensated for in damages. So an injunction will not be granted against a hockey player for breach of contract, if he is not a player of such prominence that he could not be replaced by other players equally as expert in hockey as himself.

Pitre v. National Athletic Association, 11 Que. P.R. 336.

-Interlocutory injunction-Blasting operations.]-It is not necessary to issue a writ of summons in the province of Quebec before applying for an interlocutory injunction. 2. An interlocutory injunction will be granted to enjoin the respondent from so conducting his blasting operations as to allow rocks and stones to be hurled on petitioner's property.

Rhéaume v. Stuart, 11 Que. P.R. 434.

-Motion to continue-Withholding material facts.]-Plaintiff obtained an interim injunction restraining defendant from dealing with certain land, and by the order leave was given the plaintiff to move on notice on a certain day to continue the injunc-tion. On the motion it appeared that the plaintiff had previously filed a caveat against the land in question, but the right set out in the caveat and that in the statement of claim were not identical. This fact did not appear in the material on which the injunction was obtained. It was objected that the application to continue could only be made by summons, and that the injunction should be dissolved, on account of suppression of material facts:-Held, that when leave is reserved in the order granting an injunction to move by way of notice to continue it, a motion to way of notice to continue may properly be entertained upon notice. 2. That, while withholding of a material fact on an ex parte application for an interim injunction may be ground for refusing to continue it, still it is a matter in the discretion of the Court, and the fact here alleged to have been withheld did not so affect the case as to justify refusal to continue the injunction.

Bashford v. Bott, 2 Sask. R. 461.

-Disobedience-Contempt of Court-Leave to appeal.]-Defendant had been committed to prison for contempt of Court by disobeying an order forbidding him to interfere with the crop on certain lands. He applied for leave to appeal from the order of commitment:—Held, that while in a case of wilful disobedience the Court will not entertain any application on behalf of the person in contempt, yet, if there are any facts which might lead to a conclusion that he had not wilfully disobeyed the order, the Court will give leave to appeal from the order of commitment. 2. That disobedience of an order in a civil proceeding is not a criminal act so as to preclude any appeal in respect of the order for commitment.

Moose Mountain Lumber and Hardware Co. v. Paradis (No. 2), 2 Sask. R. 457.

-Restraining disposition of personal property—Fraudulent conveyance.] — Plaintiff claiming as creditor under a bond conditional upon delivery of certain grain to them, which, it was alleged, had not been done, brought action to set aside a conveyance of that grain. In the claim it was alleged that the plaintiff sued on behalf of all creditors of defendants, but it was not alleged that there were creditors other than plaintiff, nor was it alleged that defendants were insolvent. An injunction was obtained from the local Master restraining the party to whom the grain had been sold from disposing of same, and restraining the defendants from dealing with any securities given in respect of the purchase price thereof. There was no allegation in the claim that the plaintiff did not have an adequate remedy on the bond. On a motion to continue the injunction:-Held, that an injunction should not be granted to restrain actionable wrongs where there is an adequate remedy at law, and as there was nothing to indicate that the plaintiff had not an adequate remedy on the bond, the injunction should not be continued. 2. That a simple contract creditor, who has not obtained a judgment and issued execution thereon, cannot maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance unless he sue on behalf of all creditors. 3. To support such an action it should appear and be alleged that there are other creditors of the defendant.

Lankin v. Walker, 2 Sask, R. 453.

-Restraining order-Disobedience-Motion for attachment for contempt.]—An order was made in this action restraining the defendant from interfering with the crop on certain land until further order, and a summons was granted with the order calling on the defendant to appear and show cause why the injunction should not be continued until the trial of the action. A copy of this order was served upon the defendant personally, and he appeared by counsel on the return, and after hearing the injunction was continued until trial. defendant afterwards entered on the land, drove off the plaintiffs' servants who were threshing the crop, and removed it. On a motion for attachment it was objected by the defendant that no memorandum under Rule 330 of the Judicature Ordinance was indorsed on the copy of the order served; that it did not appear that a copy of the original order was exhibited to the defendant when service was affected, and that, as the order continuing the injunction was made on the 25th of September and was not served until the 21st of October after this alleged contempt, there was undue delay on the part of the plaintiff:— Held, that it is not necessary to indorse the memorandum required by Rule 330 of the Judicature Ordinance on a restraining order, the provision only applying to mandatory orders. 2. While inclining to the opinion that it was necessary to exhibit the original order when making service, yet as it appeared that the defendant was aware of the terms of the injunction order, and as in such circumstances there may be a contempt without service, the objection was not a valid one. 3. That while the plaintiffs had been guilty of undue delay in serving the order continuing the injunction, yet, inasmuch as the original order restrained the defendant until further order "it was the duty of the defendant to ascertain if the order was still in force before interfering with the property.

—Acquiescence—Prejudice.]—An interlocutory injunction will be refused if it is proved that the applicant has authorized the commission of acts similar to those which he wishes to prevent. Nor will it be granted if it is likely to cause considerable damage to the public and to certain neighbouring municipalities and if it is not shown that the applicant will suffer prejudice if it is refused.

Interlocutory injunction — Appeal from refusal to dissolve — Trial pending when appeal brought on to be heard.]—Where a motion to dissolve an interlocutory injunction has been refused and notice of appeal given before trial, but not brought on to be heard until after the trial has commenced, but not concluded, the Full Court refused to interfere, but ordered that the costs of the appeal should be costs in the cause.

Dunlop v. Haney, 7 B.C.R. 455.

-Municipality - Injunction against carrying out illegal contract - Ultra vires.] The city of Winnipeg having by resolution of its council proposed to enter into a contract of purchase of certain land to be paid for in five yearly instalments, not-withstanding the provisions of s. 396 of the Municipal Act, R.S.M. c. 100, this action was brought by a ratepayer and a motion made for an injunction to prevent the proposed purchase. After several adjournments of the motion, and before it finally came on for hearing, a new arrangement was entered into so far varying the original proposition that the injunction was not pressed for on the argument, and the only question for decision was as to the disposition of the costs:—Held, following Hoole v. The Great Western Railway Co., (1867) L.R. 3 Ch. 262, that a suit for an injunction was proper in such a case and that the defendants should pay the costs. It is not necessary that such a suit should be brought in the name of the Attorney-General. Smith v. Raleigh (1882), 3 O.R. 405; and Wallace v. Orangeville (1884), 5 O.R. 37, followed.

—Stay of proceedings—Order for security for costs.] — An order for security for costs made pursuant to Rule 1199, and issued according to Form 95, has the effect of staying all further proceedings until security is given; and while such order stands it is not competent for the plaintiff to proceed with a pending motion for an injunction against the defendant who has obtained the stay, but such motion should be enlarged till the security is prefetched.

ed the stay, but such motion should be enlarged till the security is perfected. Weeks v. Underfeed Stoker Co. of America, 19 Ont. Pr. 299.

—Injunction against persons not parties to a suit.] — 1. Injunction proceedings can be taken against parties to a suit only. 2. Such suit may be instituted simultaneously with the application for the injunction. 3. The service of a petition or notice of any kind, without a writ, does not suffice to constitute the person upon whom such service is made a party to the suit.

vice is made a party to the suit.

Paradis v. Paradis, 19 Que. S.C. 375 (Andrews, J.).

-Leave to appeal - Interlocutory injunction.] - The judgment granting an interlocutory injunction does not fall under

Art. 46 C.P. and leave to appeal therefrom will not be granted.

Wright v. City of Hull, 4 Que. P.R. 52.

-Electric railway-Malice - Irreparable damage.]—The plaintiff had obtained the right to operate a line of electric railway in certain streets within the limits of the nunicipality defendant, under a by-law of the town council and the town council and under a contract passed between plaintiff and defendant. The defendant, by the contract, reserved the right to take possession of the streets used by the plaintiff, for the purpose of changing the level and the performance of other necessary work. It was acting un-der these powers when the work was stopped by a temporary injunction order: Held (affirming the judgment of the Superior Court, Archibald, J.):—1. Where one of two parties to a contract is doing a thing which, by the terms of the contract, he has specially reserved the right to do, the other party to the contract is not entitled to an injunction to restrain the doing of the thing, on the ground that the work is proceeding in a way which inflicts more damage than would be caused if another method, more expensive, had been adopted. So, in the present case, the municipality defendant, which had granted certain powers to the plaintiff, but had reserved the right to take possession of the streets when necessary for road operations, was not bound to adopt a more lengthy and expensive though less injurious method of performing the work. 2. In order to obtain an injunction in such circumstances where there has been no invasion of a legal or equitable right, it must be estab-lished that irreparable injury will be caused if an injunction be not granted. 3. A temporary interruption of traffic and an injurious method of removing the rails, causing a damage in the nature of a pecuniary loss, do not constitute an irreparable injury. 4. Although difficulties had existed between the parties, and defendant may have derived satisfaction from the thought that the exercise of its rights would cause the plaintiff damage, yet malice alone does not open any right of action, where, as here, there was a real intention to accomplish the work, and defendant was acting within its right.

of furnishing bail, the Court may, by a subsequent judgment, fix the time within which such bail shall be furnished, on pain of nullity of the injunction granted. Moore v. Bullock, 5 Que. P.R. 464.

—Discretion of Court of first instance as to refusal.] — Although the Court of King's Beneh sitting in appeal has power to overrule the discretion exercised by the Court of First Instance in refusing a petition for an interim injunction, it is a power which will be used only in an extreme case, where the right of the petitioner is clear and unmistakeable, and where there has been manifest error in refusing his application.

The South Shore Railway Company v. Grand Trunk Railway Company, 12 Que. K.B. 28.

-Breach of contract to sell bricks to plaintiff only - Remedy by action for damages.] -Appeals from orders restraining defendants until the trial from delivering bricks manufactured by them except in accordance with the terms of a contract between the plaintiff and the defendants and other brick manufacturers who had severally agreed to sell to the plaintiff the outputs of their respective brickyards for the pres-ent season and not to sell any of such bricks to any one else. The contract recited that the plaintiff, in conjunction with others, was forming a company to be incorporated and that the plaintiff was desirous of purchasing the bricks for the benefit of the proposed company, and set out the intention of the plaintiff to assign al! his interest in the contract to the company upon its incorporation, and stipulated that, upon such assignment, the company should be substituted for the plaintiff in the contract, and the evidence showed that the defendants did not intend to enter into such an agreement for the benefit of the plaintiff and his associates personally, but that the formation of the company and its interest in the proposed purchases were material parts of the arrangements. The orders had been only formally made, without argument, to facilitate the appeals, upon the understanding between counsel for all parties and the Court that they were not to be taken as made in the exercise of a judicial discretion, but were to be fully open to appeal on all points, as it was admitted that the trials of the actions could not, in the ordinary course, take place till after a great part of the brick-making season would have elapsed and the continuance of the injunctions would have been equivalent to granting orders for actual specific performance of the contract during that period. The statement of claim in each case alleged that, relying upon the contract and upon the supply of bricks under it, the plaintiff, together with others, entered into a number of building contracts requiring the use of bricks, that the plaintiff would require for the purposes of his business during the present year all the bricks called for by the said contract, that the plaintiff and the said company were tendering for and expected to obtain a large number of other building contracts requiring bricks, that the plaintiff expected to sell bricks to other builders at a profit, and that, unless the defendants supplied the bricks called for by the contract, it would be impossible for the plaintiff to get bricks in time to carry out these contracts, or to complete the works in the manner and within the time mentioned in said contracts. The evidence adduced supported these statements in the main, but did not show that the contracts referred to had been made for the benefit or on behalf of the company, or that the company had acquired any interest or incurred any liability in respect of them. Held, that the plaintiff should, under the circumstances, be left to his claim for damages, if any arising from the alleged breach of the contract and that the injunctions should be dissolved.

Cass v. Coutre, 14 Man. R. 458 (Killam, C.J., Dubuc and Richards, JJ.).

—Damage to building caused by blasting operations on adjoining land—Non-disclosure of material facts. 1 — 1. When evidence is given to the satisfaction of the Judge that there is a strong probability of injury to the plaintiffs' building by the continuance of blasting operations for the loosening of frozen earth on adjoining land, it is proper, on motion to continue an ex parte injunction, to grant an interlocutory injunction restraining the contractor until the hearing of the action from carrying on such blasting in such a marner as to injure the plaintiffs' building, although there is no proof that any actual injury to such building has already resulted. 2. There is a discretion in the Judge on the hearing of such a motion to allow affidavits in reply which contain statements going merely to strengthen the original case; and, when an opportunity is given to the defence to answer the affidavits in reply, the Full Court on appeal will not interfere with such discretion. 3. The non-disclosure of material facts on the application for an ex parte injunction for a limited time, although a ground for discharging it, will not necessarily disentitle the plaintiffs to succeed on a motion to continue the expiring injunction when both sides present their cases fully, and the Court is not bound to specifically discharge the interim injunction or to award costs to the defendants. 4. An offer or suggestion on the part of the plaintiffs, before commencing the action, to accept a bond to secure them against damages caused by the operation complained of, even if distinctly proved, would not necessarily preclude them from claiming an injunction afterwards, though it would be a fact to be taken into consideration in determining whether a remedy by action for damages would not be adequate.

Miller v. Campbell, 14 Man. R. 437 (Killam, C.J., Dubuc and Richards, JJ.).

-Debtor disposing of property - Status of creditor-Verdict for damages-Fraud.1 The plaintiff in an action of tort who has recovered a verdict, the entry whereon the defendant, of judgment had been stayed, is not a creditor of the much less and is not entitled to have the de. 19 not entitled to have the de-fendant enjoined from disposing of his property, even where the plaintiff shows upon affidavit the intent of the defendant to defraud the plaintiff and to leave the country with the proceeds of the sale of property.

—Contempt of Court—Breach of injunction order.] — Where, in a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff and detendant were partners, the defendant, in breach of an interim injunction order, collected debts due the alleged firm, but which, subsequently to the service of a notice of motion for his commitment, he paid to the receiver in the suit, he was ordered to pay the costs of the motion.

-Noise-Teaching music - Nuisance.] -Defendant hired rooms in a business part of the city, and gave lessons in music to a large number of pupils between the hours of 9 a.m. and 10 p.m. The plaintiff was an occupant of rooms on the opposite side of the hall, in the same building, taken by him subsequently:-Held, on the evidence, on a motion for an injunction, that the noise made in giving music lessons, which objection was taken by plaintiff, was reasonably connected with and incidental to the teaching, and the defendant's use of the premises not an unreasonable one; that teaching music in such premises must, in order to afford ground for granting an injunction, be done in a manner which, beyond fair controversy, ought to be regarded as unreasonable; and that an injunction would break up defendant's business, while the plaintiff could be compensated in damages if entitled to recover. Injunction refused.

-Interlocutory injunction - Undertaking as to damages - Order for assessment.] -Claims for small damages by some defendants were ordered to be included in an order for assessment of damages of other defendants under an undertaking given on obtaining an interlocutory injunction, where they arose from the restraint of acts the injunction was obtained to prevent from being done.

Wood v. LeBlanc, 3 N.B.Eq. 116.

-Interim injunction - Receiver - Balance of convenience - Incorporated company.]-An application to continue until trial an interim injunction granted ex parte, and to appoint a permanent receiver, was dismissed, where the plaintiff's right of action was not entirely free from doubt, and it appeared that the injury that would be occasioned to the defendants by the granting of the injunction and the appointment of a receiver, if the plaintiff ultimately failed, would be very great, while that which would result to the plaintiff by its refusal, if he ultimately succeeded, would be comparatively small. Application of this principle to an incorporated company. Reynolds v. Urquhart, 5 Terr. L.R. 413

(Scott, J.).

-Price restrictive agreements-Interlocutory injunction—C.P. 957.] — An interlocutory injunction will be granted to enforce an agreement whereby the respondent purchased certain goods at a specified price, with the condition that he would not sell at less than a certain other price, which agreement he deliberately violated.

junction to restrain the expulsion of a member of a club or association it must appear that he has some right of property therein. The right to use the club or association rooms, property and effects, on payment of a subscription, without any right to participate in the assets, if distribution ensued, is merely a personal one. The only remedy in such case, if the expulsion is wrongful or injurious, is by an action for damages. Where, therefore, an injunction was granted restraining a hockey association from expelling one of its members, whereby he would be debarred from playing in a specified game, there being no al-legation or proof of his having paid any subscription, or that he had any right of property in the association, the injunction was set aside and the action therefor dismissed with costs.

—Writ issued on petition — Time for service—Motion for costs.] — A party who has obtained the right to issue a writ of injunction upon a petition, has the same time for serving the writ that he would have had in the case of obtaining it de plano. (2) Before presentation of a motion for an adjudication as to costs reserved upon a petition for a writ of injunction, the defendant is obliged to proceed, under Art. 150 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to compel the plaintiff to serve the writ of injunction.

Gauvreau v. Hauterive, 7 Que. P.R. 483 (Fortin, J.).

—Jurisdiction of Judge on application.] —The Judge who grants an interlocutory injunction under Art. 957 C.P.Q., remains seized of the matter in issue until such time as the necessary bond for its execution has been furnished. Consequently, he can suspend its effect, re-hear the parties, allow a contestation and revoke the order. (2) Proceedings commenced before one Judge may be continued before another. Wampole v. Lyons, Q.R. 14 K.B. 53.

—Suppression of material facts—Affidavit denying collusion.]—The rule that on an application for an ex parte injunction order a full and truthful disclosure must be made of air material facts, must be strictly observed. Where, in an interpleader suit, an exparte injunction order was dissolved for suppression of material facts, leave was granted to move again for the order, together with the right to file an affidavit denying collusion.

Canadian Pacific Railway Company v. Nason, 3 N.B. Eq. 476.

—Discretion — Inconvenience.] — The injunction is a proceeding temporary and auxiliary to the main action and a Judge has discretionary power to grant or refuse it according to circumstances. He should consider, in the exercise of this power, any inconvenience which could result to either of the parties, or even to third persons, and when the issue of the writ may cause more harm to any of these than the refusal to issue it would to the applicant the demand should be refused.

La Société Anonyme des Théatres v. Lombard, Q.R. 15 K.B. 267.

—Requete civile.] — When an interim injunction was set aside on documentary evidence afterwards discovered to be false a requête civile asking that the judgment setting it aside be annulled will be granted and the parties will be restored to the position in which they were before the injunction was dissolved.

Yaphe v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., 8 Que. P.R. 383 (Mathieu, J.).

—Pending appeal — Application in High Court — Jurisdiction.] — In an action for a declaration that a partnership existed and for a dissolution and an account, in which judgment was obtained by the plaintiff, and in which an appeal to the Court of Appeal was pending, the usual security therefor having been given:—Held, that an application to a Judge of the High Court for an injunction to restrain the defendant from dealing with partnership moneys was "a further proceeding... other than the issue of the judgment or order and the taxation of costs thereunder," under Con. Rule S29, which a Judge of the High Court could not entertain.

—Cost of complying with order—Liability of plaintiff — Discontinuance of suit.] — A plaintiff, in an action of damages for a wrongful publication against the author of it, who obtains an interlocutory injunction ordering the publisher, mis en cause, but not as a joint tort-feasor, to suppress the publication, and who, having attained his object by the execution of the order, discontinues his suit and pays the costs, is further liable to the publisher for the expense of so complying with the injunction.

Bell Telephone Company v. Canada Asbestos Company, 29 Que. S.C. 104 (C.R.).

—Interim injunction restraining disposition of property before judgment — Extending statutory remedies — Fraudulent dispositions of property.]—Semble, per Richardson and Wetmore, JJ., that a plaintiff is not entitled before judgment to an interim injunction to restrain a disposition of property by a defendant. To obtain any relief of that nature before judgment, a plaintiff must make out a case within the statutory provisions dealing with garnishee and attachment proceedings:—Held, by the Court, that in this case the material was in any event insufficient and that no injunction should be granted upon it.

Pacific Investment Co. v. Swan, 3 Terr. L.R. 125.

-Appeal to-Stay of execution of injunction - Disobedience of injunction - Contempt of Court — Stay upon terms.] —
The rule that a party to an action guilty of contempt can take no step, is subject to several exceptions, and one of these is that the party is entitled to prosecute an appeal from the order or judgment which it is alleged he has been guilty of disobeying. Upon an application by the defendants to a Judge of the Court of Appeal, under Con. Rule 827 (1) (d), for an order staying the execution of an injunction awarded by a judgment of the High Court, pending an appeal from that judgment to the Court of Appeal, where it is alleged that the defendants are in contempt for disobedience of the judgment, but they have not been so adjudged, the Judge will not determine whether a contempt has been committed. Where the defendants were appealing in good faith, execution of the injunction was stayed, upon terms, pending the disposition of the appeal.

—Interlocutory motion — Costs.] — A motion for an interlocutory motion or application and, although an appeal from an order granting it is taken to the Court of Appeal and there allowed with costs, such costs and all other costs of the action payable by the opposite party are limited to $300 and actual disbursements by s. 1 of the Act 7 & 8 Edw. VII. c. 12. S. 2 of the Act only applies to appeals to the Court of Appeal from the final disposition of an action or proceeding in the Court of King's Bench and therefore does not apply to an appeal from an order granting an interim injunction.

—Interlocutory injunction — Status quo.]
—The object of the interlocutory injunction is to maintain the statum quo of the parties until otherwise ordered by the Court; the law does not authorize its issue to change the relations between the parties.

Houle v. Beaumier, 9 Que. P.R. 110 (Sup. Ct.).

— Interim injunction — Undertaking as to damages — Party applying non-resident.]—

Held, that an applicant for an interlocutory injunction must in all cases as a condition of obtaining the injunction give an undertaking to be answerable in damages, and when the party so applying is a nonresident such undertaking must be given by his counsel personally, or by some responsible person within the jurisdiction. INLAND REVENUE.

Excise-Distillery-Grain in mashtubs.] -Revenue statutes are not to be construed strictly against the Crown and in favour of the subject, but are to be interpreted the same way as other statutes; and if on a proper construction of the statute the defendant in a proceeding by the Crown is liable, the Court has nothing to do with the hardship of the case. The duty must be assessed and levied on the quantity of grain so determined, in the proportion of one gallon of proof spirits to every twenty and four-tenths pounds of grain:—Held, that defendant R., having accepted his license with a knowledge of the provisions of the Inland Revenue Act was not entitled to relief from the method of assessment fixed thereby.

The King v. Robitaille, 12 Can. Exch. R.

Illicit still - Jurisdiction of stipendiary magistrate to convict - Misdemeanour.] The defendant, in this case, was convicted for a like offence, committed at the same time, as that referred to in the case of The King v. Brennan, ante. In addition to the grounds relied on in the Brennan case, in support of the application to set aside the conviction, and for the prisoner's discharge, the further objection was taken that the jurisdiction of the magistrate, by s. 113, was limited to cases where the penalty, or forfeiture was not in excess of $500, whereas, reading ss. 124, 159 and 160 together, the penalty, in this case, would be in excess of that amount. Also, that, under the commitment, the prisoner was required to be detained until he paid a larger amount than he was adjudged to pay. It being admitted that there was a good conviction:-Held, that ss. 886, 896 of the Criminal Code applied, and that the objections taken afforded no ground for the prisoner's discharge. rield, also, that calling the offence a misdemeanour would not affect the jurisdiction of the stipendiary magistrate, which was clearly given under the Inland Revenue Act, R.S.C. e. 34, s. 113. Held, also, following The Attorney-General v. Flint, 16 Can. S.C.R. 707, that the Dominion Parliament had power to create such a Court.

Seller's obligations respecting the property sold—Premium of insurance—Divisibility.]—A premium of insurance, though paid in advance, is a debt that accrues day by day during the period of insurance and, therefore, is divisible into as many parts as there are days during that period. Hence, a purchaser who agrees to discharge the obligations of his seller respecting the property sold, is bound to refund him the proportion of a premium of insurance for the current year, paid before the sale, which represents the number of days during which he, the purchaser, is owner by virtue of the sale.

-Condition in policy as to subsequent insurance-Consent of insurer.]-(1) A condition in a policy of fire insurance that the insurer will not be liable for loss if further and subsequent insurance on the same property is affected without his consent, express or implied from his not expressing dissent after notice, is binding, and a breach of it is a bar to a claim by the insured under the policy. (2) A representation in an application for insurance against fire, or a clause in the policy, that there exists concurrent insurance on the property insured, does not involve a warranty that such insurance is absolute and will be effective in case of loss. Hence, a party insured in two companies, under policies that lapse in case of subsequent insurance effected without their consent, who, in his application to a third one, declares that he has concurrent insurance, makes no false representation although his failure to obtain the consent of the two first companies to insurance with the third, should relieve them from liability in case of loss.

Stevenson v. North British & Mercantile Insurance Co., 38 Que. S.C. 350.

Statutory conditions — Gasoline on premises — Illuminating oils insured — Notice of loss.]-By the Manitoba "Fire Insurance Policy Act" (R.S.M. (1902) c. 87, seh.), an insurance company insuring against loss by fire is not liable "for loss or damage occurring while . . . gasoline . . . is stored or kept in the building insured or containing the property insured unless permission is given in writing by the com-pany." Insurance was effected "on stock consisting chiefly of illuminating and lubricating oils, etc., and all other goods kept by them for sale." A quantity of gasoline was in the building containing the stock when destroyed by fire:—Held, that gasoline, being an illuminating oil, was part of the stock insured and the above statutory condition could not be invoked to defeat the policy. Held, per Anglin, J., that if gasoline was not insured as an illuminating oil it was within the description of "all other goods kept for sale." By s. 2 of the Act "where, by reason of necessity, accident or mistake, the conditions of any contract of fire insurance on property in this province as to the proof to be given to the insurance company after the occurrence of a fire have not been strictly complied with . . . or where from any other reason the Court or Judge before whom a question relating to such insurance is tried or inquired into considers it inequitable that the insurance should be deemed void or forfeited by reason of imperfect compliance with such conditions," the company shall not be discharged from liability. By statutory condition 13 (a) in the schedule to the Act every person entitled to make a claim "is forthwith after loss to give no-tice in writing to the company." Held, Fitzpatrick, C.J., dissenting, that the above clause applies to said condition and under it, in the circumstances of this case, the insurance should be held not to be forfeited by reason of the failure to give such notice. Judgment appealed from (19 Man. R. 720) reversed, Fitzpatrick C.J., dissenting.

Prairie City Oil Company v. Standard Mutual Fire Insurance Co., 44 Can. S.C.R. 40.

-Premises "occupied as a sporting house" —Public policy — Higher rate charged — Increased risk — Variation — Change in situation of insured building.]-Defendant company issued a fire insurance policy to H., loss, if any, to be payable to W. The latter assigned his interest to plaintiffs. The policy covering a building situated, detached, 100 feet from any other building. "while occupied as a sporting house." The rate charged for insurance on dwellinghouses in that locality was one per cent., while on the class of houses such as that in question the rate charged was two and a half per cent. After the issue of the policy a building was erected within 30 feet of the premises insured. It was provided in the policy that any change material to the risk should be communicated, in writing, to the local agent. The insured mentioned to the local agent the fact of the new building being put up, and was in-formed by him that it made no difference as he had charged a rate sufficient to cover the increased risk. There was also a provision that no agent could waive any condition in the policy, except by a document in writing, signed by him. On a claim arising under the policy, the company set up illegality on account of the premises being used for immoral or unlawful purposes, and also that the policy became void by reason of the construction of the new building and the omission to communicate the fact, in writing, to the local agent. At the trial an amendment was allowed making H., the assured, a party plaintiff: -Held (Irving, J.A., dissenting), that the policy was not void merely because it was issued in respect of premises used as those in question had been; that the insurance of property against loss is one of the things useful and necessary for the ordinary purposes of life, and that the owner of such property is just as much entitled to protection from loss by means of a fire policy as by other means. Per Martin and Galliher, JJ.A., that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue on the contract of insurance, there being no evidence of privity of contract between them and W., their assignor, and that H. had not been properly added as a party.

a "sporting-Premises occupied as house'' - Statutory conditions - Variation.]-In an action on a fire insurance policy the first defence was that the policy was void because the building insured was, at the date of the policy, being used as a bawdy-house, being described in the policy as "occupied as a sporting-house":-Held, that the rule established by Clarke v. Hagar, 22 S.C.R. 510, is that any instrument purporting to pass title and any instrument purporting to secure purchase money are respectively void, if there was in the mind of the vendor the intent and purpose that the property should be applied by the transferee in the accomplishment of the illegal or immoral purposes; but mere knowledge on the part of the transferor of the intent or purpose of the transferee to use the property for an illegal or immoral purpose is insufficient. And a contract for the insurance of a build-ing cannot fairly be taken to be a participating in the purpose for which the thing is used—the purpose being a matter of indifference to the insurer, and one not induced or furthered by the fact of the creation or existence of the insurance. The question of insurance or no insurance upon the building can have no bearing by way of encouragement or otherwise upon the business carried on in the building insured—the insurance is wholly collateral to and independent of the immoral business-and the policy was valid as against this objection. Distinction as to policies or marine insurance pointed out. second defence was, that, in breach of the 3rd condition of the policy, the building was vacant and unoccupied for a period of 30 consecutive days prior to the fire. Held, that the addition made to the 3rd statutory condition was not binding on the assured, not being printed in accordance with the provisions of the statute with reference to variations; and, assuming that there was a vacancy, that fact was not material to the risk within the meaning of the 3rd statutory condition; and the circumstances of the case did not make it so. Boardman v. North Waterloo Insurance Co., 31 O.R. 525, followed. The third defence was, that, in breach of the 3rd condition, there were changes material to the risk within the control or knowledge of the insured, namely, agreements for the sale of the premises. Held, that this would not be a breach of the 4th statutory condition, nor a change material to the risk under the 3rd statutory condition.

—Statutory conditions—Notice of loss— Effect of notice by company's agent.]— Plaintiffs insured certain property with defendant company against loss by fire. The policy contained the usual statutory conditions, among them a provision that the insured should forthwith, after a loss, notify the company in writing. also provided that none of the conditions of the policy could be deemed to be waived by the company, unless the waiver should be in express terms in writing signed by the secretary. The property insured was de-stroyed by fire. The plaintiffs gave no notice of loss, but the company's agent gave notice. On receipt of the notice from the agent the company furnished forms for proof of loss, and also participated with other companies in making an adjustment. The company refused to settle, and the plaintiffs brought action:-Held, that the condition requiring notice was equivalent to a stipulation that before anyone could make any demand against the company or bring any action to recover thereunder, he must forthwith give notice of loss, and such notice was a condition precedent to right to recover. 2. That the notice given by the company's agent was not a compliance with the condition which required notice by the assured or in his absence by his agent, and only such notice could satisfy the terms of the policy. 3. That waiver could not be relied upon by the plaintiffs, inasmuch as the policy itself provided that the conditions could not be waived, except in writing signed by the secretary. 4. That sec. 2 of the Fire Insurance Policy Ordinance did not assist the plaintiff, as this related only to the proof of loss, and the notice was not a part of the proof.

Bell v. Hudson Bay Insurance Co., 3 Sask, R. 219.

-Misdescription in application-Correction in policy—Rate of premium.]—The furniture in the plaintiff's hotel, consisting of a brick building and a frame addition, was insured by the defendants for $2,000. The application was dated the 2nd March, 1907, and an interim receipt was issued by the agents on the same day for the premium of $48 for one year from the 20th February, 1907. In the application the building was described as "the brick building only." A policy was issued by the defendants from their branch office at Winnipeg, dated the 6th March, 1907, in which the building was described as "the three-storey brick metal-roofed building and two-storey frame addition," and other changes were made in the description of the property insured, etc., corresponding changes being made in pencil in the application, at the defendants' Winnipeg office. On the 11th February, 1908, a renewal receipt was issued, signed by the Winnipeg manager, for $50, being for the renewal of the policy for 12 months from the 20th February, 1908. The local agent called attention to the fact that the premium should be only $48, and that was the amount actually paid by the plaintiff. With regard to the rate and a proposed change in the policy there was correspondence between the local agent and the manager at Winnipeg, and the former called on the plaintiff suggested that the insurance should be allowed to stand on the furniture in the brick part only, and the agent said that the plaintiff agreed to that. The plaintiff the plaintil agreed to that. In plaintil denied it, however. No change was made in the policy, and shortly afterwards a fire occurred; the damage was adjusted at $650, made up of $155 on furniture in the brick building and $495 on furniture in the frame addition:-Held, that the policy was not invalid by reason of the misdescription in the application; there was no mistake on the part of the defendants, and the policy was exactly what was intended by both insured and insurers. Held, also, that the validity of the policy was not affected by what took place between the local agent and the plaintiff, and at the time of the fire it remained effective as regards all the furniture in both parts of the building.

Malin v. Union Insurance Society, 13

-Assignment of policy for benefit of creditors.]-Plaintiff company assigned a policy of fire insurance for the benefit of its creditors. Loss occurred and defendants set up the defence that clause 4 of the statutory conditions voided the policy. That clause provides that "If the property insured is assigned without the written permission of the company, the policy shall be void," but this condition does not apply to a change of title by succession or by the operation of law, or by reason of death." There was no consent and the assignment did not come within the exception:-Held, that the words of this condition must be construed strictly and all that they prohibit is an absolute assignment which divests the insured of all his property in the goods, and by which he does not retain to himself an insurable interest. That here there did remain a beneficial and insurable interest in the assignor, his debts were to be paid and the residue was to be held in trust for him. Judgment for plaintiff for $2,402 and interest from time when it became payable, and costs.

Wade v. Rochester German Fire Ins. Co., 2 O.W.N. 59, 16 O.W.R. 1004.

-Contents of dwelling-house-Ownership of property-Wearing apparel.]—In an action upon a policy of insurance issued by the defendants by which they insured the household goods, etc., of the plaintiff contained in a certain dwelling-house, against loss or damage by fire to the amount of $1,000:—Held, upon the evidence, that the household goods destroyed or injured by fire were the property of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff claimed for the loss of furs and wearing apparel of a woman who lived in the house with him, and was said to be his wife; there was some doubt about this; and the defendants alleged that the articles belonged to the woman, and that she kept a house of ill-fame. The plaintiff swore that he was her husband, and that he supported her:-Held, that the Court was not concerned as to the validity of the plaintiff's marriage, and that the plaintiff had an insurable interest in the articles. Semble, that allegations as to the character of the woman should have been stricken from the record as scandalous and irrelevant. Held, on the evidence, that, although there were peculiar and suspicious circumstances connected with the fire, the defendants had failed to establish that it was caused by the wilful act or procurement and con-nivance of the plaintiff. Held, also, that proofs of loss were duly furnished; and that inflation of the value of the goods destroyed was not fraudulent to the extent of vitiating the policy. Held, also, that keeping a small quantity of gasoline upon the premises for domestic purposes did not avoid the policy under statutory condition 10. Held, also, that a clause in the policy providing for arbitration in the event of a difference as to the amount of the loss did not make an ar-bitration a condition precedent to the bringing of an action. Quantum of loss computed at $400.

-Premium-Payment by bill of exchange-Default-No notice of loss.]-Plaintiffs insured in the defendant company against loss by fire a stock of goods for $2,000. The application contained a clause that if the premium was not paid as agreed the insurance should be void until "such settlement is made." The premium was never paid in cash, but a bill of exchange was drawn upon plaintiffs and accepted by them, but this was never paid. The property was shortly afterwards destroyed by fire. The policy contained one of the statutory conditions, namely, that the insured should forthwith after loss give notice to the company in writing. No such notice was given by the insured, although the company's agent gave notice and told the plaintiffs he had done so. It was contended, however, that notice had been waived: First, because the company did not draw attention to the omission; second, because they sent an adjuster to adjust the loss; and third, because the manager of the company made an appointment to discuss the claim. The policy, however, contained a clause that no condition should be waived except in writing. The policy also required that the proofs of loss should show when and how the fire originated to the best of the claimant's belief, while in the proof of loss filed the claimant stated the cause of fire to be unknown, while from his examination for discovery it appeared that he be-lieved it started from an explosion of the In an action to recover the amfurnace. ount of the policy:-Held, that the defendant, having drawn a bill of exchange upon the plaintiffs which was by them accepted and became a floating security which might be passed from hand to hand, must be deemed to have accepted "settlement" within the meaning of the terms of the application. 2. That compliance with the term of the policy requiring notice of loss was a condition precedent to the right to recover, and while if some sort of notice had been given which was defective the Court might possibly relieve, yet no such relief could be granted where there was an absolute non-compliance. 3. That the acts pleaded in support of waiver were not sufficient to support the plea, but in any event the policy provided that no waiver should be effective unless in writing, and there being no writing that would constitute a waiver, the plaintiffs could not succeed on that ground. 4. That the proofs of loss were insufficient, as the statement of the cause of the fire being in the belief of insured unknown, was untrue.

Apprehension of incendiary danger-Application filled in by local agent-Untrue answer.]-An application for insurance on the contents of a barn, contained the question "Is there any incendiary danger threatened or apprehended?" to which the enswer was "No." The plaintiff, who had not previously carried any insurance, stated that he effected the insurance, having learned that the owner of the barn had placed a high insurance on it, as well as on the adjacent dwelling-house. This was told by the plaintiff to the company's agent, who filled in the application and the answers to the questions. The application was then signed by the applicant, who was not an illiterate man, but he did not read over the application, and was not told that the question had been answered in the negative:-Held, that the plaintiff was bound by his untrue answer to the question, it being material to the risk, for the reasonable inference was that the apprehension of incendiary danger as a fact existed. Graham v. Ontario Mutual Ins. Co. (1887), 14 O.R. 318, Chatillion v. Canadian Mutual Fire Co. (1877), 27 C.P. 450, considered and commented on. Quere, whether the enquiry raised by the question was not as to the apprehension of the applicant of incendiary danger and not whether, as a fact, any incendiary danger was to be apprehended.

Kniseley v. British America Assurance Company, 32 O.R. 376,

-Condition in policy-Interest of insured -Mortgagor as owner-Further insurance -Estoppel-Pleading.]-By a condition in a policy of insurance against fire the policy was to become void "if the assured is not the sole and unconditional owner of the property . . or if the interest of the assured in the property whether as owner, . mortgagee, lessee or otherwise is not truly stated: "-Held, that a mortgagor was sole and unconditional owner within the terms of said condition. By another condition the policy would be avoided if the assured should have or obtain other insurance, whether valid or not on the property. The assured applied for other insurance but before being notified of the acceptance of his application the premises were destroyed by fire. that there was no breach of said condition. Commercial Union Assurance Company v. Temple, 29 Can. S.C.R. 206, followed. In one count of his declaration plaintiff admitted a breach of said condition but alleged that it was waived. On the trial counsel agreed that the facts proved in the case against the Commercial Union should be taken as proved in the present case. These facts showed, as held by the decision in the previous case, that there was no breach. Held, that the agreement at the trial prevented the appellant company from claiming that respondent was estopped from denying that there had been a violation of the condition.

Western Assurance Company v. Temple, 31 Can. S.C.R. 373, affirming S.C. of New Brunswick.

Subrogation — Mortgage — Machinery— Vendor's lien-Priorities.]-Under a contract with the owner of a mill and machinery which was subject to three mortgages (the second and third in favour of the same mortgagees), each containing a covenant to insure, the plaintiffs took out the machinery, replacing it with new machinery, reserving a lien thereon for the balance of the price, the lien agreement providing that the mill-owner should insure the machinery for the plaintiffs' benefit. Before any further insurance was effected the mill and machinery were destroyed by fire:-Held, upon the evidence, that the second mortgagees had consented to the purchase of the new machinery upon the terms specified, and, as a result of that finding, that the plaintiffs were entitled, subject to the first mortgagee's claim, to payment of the insurance money on the machinery and to be subrogated to the first mortgagee's rights against the land to the extent to which that insurance money was exhausted by him. Judgment of Meredith, C.J., 31 O.R. 142, affirmed.

Goldie v. Bank of Hamilton, 27 Ont. App. 619.

-Insurance by tenant for life-Loss-Remainderman.]—S.C., the tenant for life of a house and lot of land, insured the house against loss or damage by fire, paving the insurance premiums out of her own funds, and taking the policy in her own name. S.C. was not in any way bound to repair, or rebuild, or insure. The house was totally destroyed by fire, and the amount of the insurance paid over to S.C., who placed it in the bank, on deposit receipt, to her own credit:-Held, that the amount received from the insurance company belonged exclusively to S.C., and that her executors were entitled to judgment for the amount of the deposit receipt, with interest from date, and costs, against the devisee of W.C., to whom the lot and house were devised subject to the life estate of S.C. Re Estate of Susan Curry, 33 N.S.R. 392.

—Statutory conditions—Variations—Co-insurance.]—The co-insurance clause printed as a variation from the statutory conditions in a policy of insurance against fire, requiring the insured in consideration of a reduced premium to keep the property covered by other policies to at least 75 per cent. of its value, will not be pronounced unjust and unreasonable, within the meaning of s. 115 of the Ontario Insurance Act, (R.S.O. [1887] c. 167). Judgment of the Court of Appeal for Ontario, 27 Ont. App.

373, affirmed. Eekhardt & Co. v. Lancashire Insurance Co., 31 Can. S.C.R. 72. —Sale of realty—Insurable interest—Unpaid vendor.]—An unpaid vendor who, by agreement with his vendee, has insured the property sold, may recover its full value in ease of loss though his interest may be limited if, when he effected the insurance, he intended to protect the interest of the vendee as well as his own. The fact that the vendor is not the sole owner need not be stated in the policy, nor disclosed to the insurer. Judgment of the Court of Appeal (26 O.A.R. 277) reversed, and that of the trial Judge (29 O.R. 394) restored.

Keefer v. Phonix Insurance Company of Hartford, 31 Can. S.C.R. 144.

-Conditions-Variations from statutory conditions-The Fire Insurance Policy Act, R.S.M. c. 59-Proofs of loss-Interest-Valuation of property.]-Defendants objected to the plaintiff's claim for loss of property insured under a policy of fire insurance issued by defendants on the ground that at the time of the loss a portion of plaintiff's note given for the premium for the insurance was unpaid, and relied on a condition indorsed on the policy that the company should not be liable for any loss or damage that might occur to the property mentioned while any promissory note or obligation or part thereof given for the premium remained due and unpaid. What purported to be the statutory conditions prescribed by the Fire Insurance Policy Act, R.S.M. c. 59, were printed on the back of the policy, and following there, under the heading "Variations in Conditions," were several other conditions including the one relied on by defendants printed in ink of a different color but in type of apparently the same size as that of the statutory conditions and which the Judge held was not conspicuous type within the meaning of the Act. The conditions printed on the policy also differed in several important particulars from the words found in the statute; and after the heading "Varia-tions in Conditions," the company had omitted to print the part of the heading prescribed by s. 4 of the Act, "This policy is issued on the above statutory conditions. with the following variations and additions," or any other words to the same effect:-Held, following Sly v. The Ottawa Agricultural, etc., Co. (1878), 25 U.C.C.P. 28; Sands v. Standard Insurance Co. (1879), 27 Gr. 167, and Ballagh v. Royal Mutual Fire Insurance Co. (1880), 5 A.R. 87, that the requirements of the statute were imperative, and that plaintiff was not bound by the condition on which the defendants relied. The policy contained in the body of it the words, "The company is not responsible for loss caused by prairie fires," and defendants contended that, as plaintiff had alleged the contract of insurance to be an absolute one, he could not recover without an amendment setting up the policy correctly and proof that the loss was not caused by a prairie fire. Held, that such qualification or exception to the absolute contract of the company must be regarded as a condition of the insurance within the meaning of the Act, and that as it was not one of the statutory conditions it would be legal and binding on the assured only if it were indicated and set forth on the policy in the manner prescribed by the Act, which it was not, and in pleading the plaintiff might ignore it altogether as he had done. The defendants also objected at the trial to the sufficiency of the proofs of claim, but although they had objected to payment of the loss on other grounds than for imperfect compliance with the conditions regarding proofs of loss, they did not notify the plaintiff in writing that his proof was objected to. Held, that, under s. 2 of the Act, they could not now take advantage of any defect in the proofs. Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled, under 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, s. 29, to interest on the insurance money, but only from the expiration of thirty days from the time he sent in his corrected and completed proofs of loss, as he thereby admitted that his first proofs were imperfect. Held, further, that the insured was not precluded from showing what the real value of the property insured was by the fact that he had, under peculiar circumstances, offered to sell it for less than the amount insured on it.

Green v. Manitoba Assurance Company, 13 Man. R. 395.

-Loss payable to third party-Condition against other insurance - Breach.] - On March 13th, 1889, the appellant entered into an agreement for sale of property situate at St. Sauveur de Quebec to one Lachance on condition that the vendee should insure it in the sum of $800 for appellant's benefit. Lachance effected such insurance with the respondent company, making the loss payable to the appellant as his interest might appear, the policy containing a condition that it should be void if the assured had then, or should afterwards, obtain any other insurance on said property or any part of it. In violation of this condition Lachance had, at the time a fire occurred on the property, another policy taken out without the knowledge or consent of the company, and also without the appellant's knowledge:-Held, that the prohibition of the assured to have, either before or after the issue of the policy, any other insurance without the company's consent avoids the policy if the insured, in violation of the condition, takes out another policy on the same property. Held, also, that the indication in the policy of payment to a third party is subject, as regards the payee, to all the conditions in the policy; the insurer cannot be subjected to other obligations than those which he assumed by his contract. Migner v. St Lawrence Fire Ins.

Co., 10 Que. Q.B. 122, affirming the judgment in review which reversed 17 S.C. 586.

—Mutual company—Non-payment of premiums—Forfeiture—Notice,]—The forfeiture declared by Art. 5321 R.S.Q. against the insured in a mutual insurance company for neglect to pay his assessments within six months after they are due, only takes place when the company, after the notice required to render the assessment exigible, has addressed to the insured another notice informing him that in default of payment within the specified delay he will lose his right to an indemnity; and this is especially so when the company, after the expiration of the delay, have accepted payment of the premiums in arrear.

Thuot v. Montmagny Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 10 Que. Q.B. 104.

-Conditions-Limitation of risk-Amount of loss to be determined by arbitration.]-(1) Where it is a condition of the policy that the total insurance on each item of the property insured shall not exceed twothirds of the cash value of such item, and that notice shall be given of all previous insurance effected by the insured on the same property, and it appeared that the insurance exceeded two-thirds of the cash value, and that other insurance, on two items, to the amount of $100, existed without having been declared to the company, the policy is void. (2) The condition that, in case of a loss by fire, the amount of the damages shall be determined by arbitrators, and that no action shall be brought until the amount of the loss is so determined, is a legal condition.

Pharand v. Lancashire Insurance Company, 18 Que. S.C. 35.

-Insurance by mortgagor-Loss payable to mortgagee-Release of equity of redemption-Cessation of mortgagor's interest-Right of mortgagee.]-A mortgagor who had made a mortgage, under the Short Forms Act, containing a covenant to insure the mortgaged premises against fire, effected an insurance thereon with defendants, the loss, by the policy, being payable to the plaintiff, the mortgagee, as his interest might appear under the mortgage. Subsequently the mortgagor conveyed his equity of redemption to the mortgagee without the consent of the insurance company having been obtained therefor. The premises having been afterwards destroyed by fire:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the insurance moneys, for (1) the fact of the conveyance made by the mortgagor to the plaintiff, whereby he ceased to have any interest at the time of the fire, was a good answer to the claim; and (2) such conveyance constituted a breach of the fourth statutory condition, which provides against the insured premises being assigned without the insurance company's consent.

Pinhey v. The Mercantile Fire Insurance Co. 2 O.L.R. 296.

—Furniture in house of ill-fame—Illegal and immoral contract—Promissory note.]—
Insurance upon the furniture in a house of ill-fame is an illegal and immoral contract, and the premium note will not be enforced by the courts.

Bruneau v. Laliberté, 19 Que. S.C. 425. Andrews, J. (Cir. Ct.).

-Policy-Notice of other insurance-Mortgagee-Title.]-A policy of insurance on a mortgaged property contained a condition that the insured should give notice of any other insurance already made, or which should afterwards be made elsewhere on the same property, whether valid or not alid, and whether concurrent or otherwise, so that a memorandum of such insurance might be indorsed on the policy. The mortgagee, without such notice or endorsement, effected another insurance with another company in the name of the plaintiff's wife, with the loss, if any, payable to himself as his interest might appear:— Held, that the mortgagee's insurance, without the notice and endorsement, voided the plaintiff's insurance.

Perry v. Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company, 34 N.B.R. 380.

-Conditions in policy-Subsequent insurance-Application for not accepted until after destruction of property insured-Whether or not mortgagor is sole and unconditional owner of property insured.]-A policy of insurance against fire contained the following condition: "If the assured have or shall hereafter obtain any other policy or agreement for insurance, whether valid or not, on the property above mentioned, or any part thereof, . . . this policy shall become void, unless consent in writing by the company be endorsed hereon: ''-Held, following the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in Commercial Union Insurance Co. v. Temple, 29 S.C.R. 206, that where additional insurance was applied for, but not accepted until after the property insured was destroyed by fire, the condition had no application. A mortgagor is the "sole and unconditional owner" of property within the meaning of a condition in a policy of insurance against fire stipulating that the policy shall become void if the assured is not the sole and unconditional owner of the property insured. The policy also contained a condition that it should become void if any building intended to be insured stood on grounds not owned in fee simple by the assured. The land upon which the buildings insured stood was subject to a mortgage: -- Held, that the defence that the lands were not owned in fee simple by the assured mortgagor was not available under a plea charging that the plaintiff had been guilty of misrepresentation in the application for insurance, in that he stated that the property insured was not mortgaged or otherwise encumbered, whereas, etc., it was mortgaged.

Temple v. The Western Assurance Co., 35 N.B.R. 171.

-Mutual plan-Annual renewal-Proposal for increased premium—Non-acceptance— Condition of payment in advance—Delivery of receipt—Waiver.]—Two policies on the mutual plan, issued in 1898 and 1899, provided for insurances for the original period of one year and "during such further period or periods for which the assured shall from time to time have paid in advance the renewal premium or premiums required by the company, and for which the company shall have issued a renewal receipt or receipts." The policies were delivered to the plaintiffs, without prepayment of any cash premium, and without the previous delivery of the premium notes in consideration of which the policies purported to be issued: but the cash was paid and the notes delivered soon afterwards. On the 27th October, 1900, the executive officer of the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs enclosing a receipt for $363.23, being the amount of the cash premium for the renewal of both policies. The letter was on a printed form, stating that a receipt "renewing" the policies was enclosed, and asking the plaintiffs to remit the amount of the cash premium. It also asked for new premium notes, and stated that the old ones were enclosed, as they were. The plaintiffs retained the receipts, but did not send the money or the notes until about the 20th December, 1900. On the 28th October, 1901, the same officer again enclosed renewal receipts in a letter on the same form as above, but the amount of the cash payment was higher, and on the 6th November, 1901, the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants calling attention to the increase; the officer answered the next day that the defendants had been obliged to increase the rate; and on the following day the plaintiffs wrote as follows: "If you cannot do better we will have to accept, but we are going to ask you to reconsider the matter and meet us in this if at all possible. . . . Kindly give this your consideration and let us hear from you." On the 11th November the officer wrote to the plaintiffs: "The consulting board carefully considered your risk before making the advance in rate they did, and had no alternative but to do so to procure the re-insurance we required. Trusting this explanation will prove satisfactory to you." No answer was made by the plaintiffs to this. On the 16th November, 1901, a fire took place, and damage was done to the property covered by the defendants' policies. Two days afterwards the plaintiffs sent the defendants a cheque for the amount of cash demanded and new premium notes, but the defendants returned them. The defendants re-insured their risk as soon as the premiums became payable, and had not cancelled these reinsurances down to the time of the trial: Held, that no contract existed between the plaintiffs and defendants for an insurance for the year beginning on the 31st October. 1901. Semble, that if the plaintiffs had unqualifiedly accepted the renewal terms, the condition providing for payment in advance of the cash premium would have been waived: for the intention of the defendants in delivering the receipt, where the money had not in fact been paid, was to keep the policy in force and to give the plaintiffs credit for the amount.

Doherty et al. v. Millers and Manufacturers Ins. Co., 4 O.L.R. 303 affirmed, 6 O.L.R. 78.

—Condition of policy—Proof of loss—Waiver—Acts of officials.]—An insurance company cannot be presumed to have waived a condition precedent to action on a policy on account of unauthorized acts of its officers.

Hyde v. Lefaivre, 32 Can. S.C.R. 474.

-Writ of summons-Service on insurance company-Power of attorney-Removal of office from province.]-An English insurance company which had carried on business in Canada and whose head office was then at Toronto, had by two powers of attorney appointed its general agent at Toronto attorney to receive process both under R.S.O. 1897, c. 293, s. 66, and R.S.C. 1886, c. 124, s. 13. It afterwards transferred its Canadian business to another company and closed its Canadian offices, but the deposit under the Dominion Act had not been released, and neither of the powers of the attorney had been cancelled. On a motion to set aside the service of a writ of summons which was accepted by solicitors as if served on the Toronto agents of the company, subject to the right to move against it on the ground that the company was not within the jurisdiction:-Held, that a writ of summons upon a policy issued in Quebec in respect of a loss upon property there was properly served upon the agent named as attorney at Toronto under Con. Rule 159, and that therefore the Court in Ontario had jurisdiction to entertain the action. Semble, that the power of attorney required to be filed under R.S.C. c. 124, s. 13, is to receive service of process in any suit instituted in any Province of Canada in respect of any liability incurred in such province.

Armstrong v. Lancashire Fire Ins. Co., 3 O.L.R. 395.

-Fire insurance company-Agent of-Tax -Fire Companies' Aid Ordinance, 1869 (No. 121) and Fire Companies' Aid Amendment Act 1871 (No. 154).]-In an action against defendant company under the Fire Companies' Aid Amendment Act of 1871, which applies only to Victoria, for taxes due by it as a company issuing policies within the city limits, it was held by Martin, J., at the trial, dismissing the action, that the plaintiff had failed to establish agency:-Held, by the full Court, dismissing plaintiff's appeal, that the action was misconceived; that the tax sought to be recovered was not on the company directly, but in respect of a special form of agency. described in the statute; and the evidence negatived the existence of such an agency. Dowler v. Union Ass. Society of London, 9 B.C.R. 196.

-Fire insurance-Principal and agent-Payment of premium-Interim receipt-Repudiation of acts of sub-agent.]-The lex fori must be presumed to be the law gov-erning a contract unless the lex loci be proved to be different. The appointment of a local agent of a fire insurance company is one in the nature of a delectus personæ, and he cannot delegate his authority nor bind his principal through the medium of a sub-agent. Summers v. The Commercial Union Ass. Co., 6 S.C.R. 19, followed. The local agent of a fire insurance company was authorized to effect interim insurances by issuing interim receipts, countersigned by himself, on the payment of the premiums in cash. He employed a canvasser to solicit insurances who pretended to effect an insurance on behalf of the company by issuing an interim receipt countersigned by him (the canvasser) as agent for the company, taking a promissory note payable in three months to his own order for the amount of the premium:-Held, that the canvasser could not bind the company by a contract on the terms he assumed to make, as the agent himself had no such authority. Held, further, that even if the agent might be said to have power to appoint a sub-agent for the purpose of soliciting insurances, the employment of the canvasser for that purpose did not confer authority to conclude contracts, to sign interim receipts, nor to receive premiums for insurances. Appeal from the K.B. Quebec allowed with costs.

-Policy-Condition - Waiver - Proof of loss—Adjuster—Agency.]—(1) A condition of the policy required that proof of loss "shall be made by the assured." The son of the assured filled in and signed the statement of loss, under the general authority of a notarial power of attorney:-Held, that this was a sufficient compliance with the condition of the policy. (2) Where the insurer retained the proof of loss, without objection as to its sufficiency, for more than sixty days before action was taken, the company will be considered to have waived the condition which requires a delay of sixty days after filing claim before the institution of suit; and the fact that a blank in the statement was filled in, at the request of the company, within the period of sixty days before suit, will not affect the right of action. (3) The condition which requires proof of loss to be furnished within thirty days after the fire may be waived either expressly or impliedly; and the assured is held to be relieved from this condition if the presentation of the claim has been delayed by the company's investigation of the loss, or if the representations of the company's authorized agents have led the assured to understand that compliance with this condition will not be required. (4) While adjusters of fire losses are not, as a general rule, agents of the companies under an authority sufficient to make their statements binding upon the companies for whom they act, yet an adjuster may become a duly authorized agent of the company by the course of procedure in a particular case, e.g., where the adjuster was the only medium of communication after the fire between the company and the assured, and was engaged by the company to look over the proofs, advise as to a settlement, etc. Western Ass. Co. v. Pharand, 11 Que.

K.B. 144.

-Conditions-Prior insurance-Subsequent insurance - Substitution of policies - Implied assent—Adjustment of loss—Waiver.] -In an application for insurance, particulars of prior insurance in two other companies of $4,000 in each company were given, but in the policy in question prior insurance of only $4,000 was assented to. neither company being named. The defendant pleaded as a breach of the statutory condition non-disclosure of prior insurance for $4,000 in one of the two companies:-Held, that the plea must be read strictly and without amendment and that so read the assent in the policy to insurance of $4,000 might be treated as an assent to the prior insurance complained of in the plea; and semble, that had the defendants not intended to assent to the prior insurance of $8,000 they would have been bound under the second statutory condition to point out in writing the particulars wherein the policy differed from the application. Held, also, that to a subsequent insurance for $4,000 in another company in substitution for a prior insurance to that amount in one of the two companies mentioned in the application, the assent of the defendants was rot necessary. Assent, express or implied, to subsequent insurance, is sufficient even if given after the loss has occurred. In this case such assent was held to be sufficiently shown by the defendants joining in the adjustment of the loss and allowing the insured to accept from the subsequent insurers their proportion of the loss so adjusted. Judgment of Ferguson, J., affirmed.

Mutchmor v. Waterloo Mutual Fire Insurance Co., 4 O.L.R. 606 (C.A.).

—Insurance agent—Gratuitous undertaking—Mandate.]—The defendant, a general insurance agent, gratuitously undertook to have an additional policy placed on the plaintiffs' property, and also to notify the companies already holding policies of this additional insurance. A loss occurred, and, owing to defendant having neglected to give the notice, the plaintiffs had to compromise their claim at $1,000 less than they otherwise would have recovered:—Held, that the defendant having undertaken, though gratuitously, to perform the business, and having actually entered on the execution of, was liable for the negligence which had caused loss to the plaintiffs. Coggs v. Bernard (1703), 2 Ld. Raym. 909, specially considered.

Baxter v. Jones, 6 O.L.R. 360 (C.A.), affirming 4 O.L.R. 541.

-Cancellation-R.S.O. 1897, c. 203-Statutory condition 19(a)-Notice of cancellation received after loss.]-The insured sent to the company his policy with an indorsed surrender clause, and a letter asking that the insurance be terminated and the unearned proportion of the premium repaid. Owing to its misdirection by the insured, the letter was delayed in the post office and did not reach the company till the morning after the insured property had been destroyed by fire:-Held, that the letter did not take effect from the time of its being posted, but only from the time of its receipt, and that the relationship of the parties had been so changed by the occurrence of the fire before its receipt, that the attempted surrender did not operate, and therefore the company was liable for the loss. Judgment of Lount, J., 4 O.L.R. 123, Skillings v. Royal Ins. Co., 6 O.L.R. 401 (C.A.).

—Policy on goods—Partial loss—Other insurance—Proportionate payment—Conditions of policy—Construction.]—The insurance was upon goods valued in the application at $15,000. The policy was dated the 11th June, 1902, and the fire occurred on 12th July following, with the loss of $6,250. The defendant's policy was for $5,000; there was other insurance to the amount of $7,000, and the total value of the goods at the time of the fire was $9,274.62. Statutory condition No. 9 provided that 'in the event of any other insurance on the property herein described having been assented to as aforesaid, then this company shall, if such other insurance remains in force, on the happening of any loss or dameters.

age only be liable for the payment of a ratable proportion of such loss or damage, without reference to the dates of the different policies." A special condition was endorsed on the policy as follows: "The assured shall not be entitled to recover from this company more than two-thirds of the actual cash value of any building, and in case of further insurance then only the ratable proportion of such two-thirds of the actual cash value, unless more than such two-thirds value, as represented in the application, shall have been insured, in which case the company shall be liable for such proportion of the actual value as the amount insured bears to the value given in the application. In the case of property other than buildings, if the property insured is found, by arbitration, or otherwise, to have been overvalued in the application for this policy, the company shall be liable (in the absence of fraud) for such proportion of the actual value as the amount insured bears to the value given in the application:"—Held, that the special condition was inapplicable to the case of a partial loss, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendants three-tenths of the amounts of his loss in accordance with statutory condition

—Policy — Countersigning by agent.] —A policy contained a stipulation that it should be valid only when countersigned by the duly authorized agent of the company:—Held, that defendants were not bound by a policy signed by the general manager and countersigned in the name of one who had been their agent, by one of his clerks, but without any authorization by him, even though the insured may not have known of the cessation of the agency.

Walkerville Match Co. v. Scottish Union Co., 6 O.L.R. 674, 40 C.L.J. 28 (Ont. C.A.).

-Conditions-Refusal to arbitrate-Statement, of loss-Waiver of conditions.]-The contract for insurance between the plaintiff and the defendant provided:-That in case of loss the damages would be ascertained by agreement of the parties or by arbitration; that the insured would, whenever called upon to do so, produce for inspection by any person named by the company. all the property saved, whether damaged or not; that he would likewise produce for examination all his books, invoices and other documents or certified copies thereof if the originals are destroyed; that the company should not be considered as having waived any condition unless such waiver is expressed in writing and signed by one of its agents. A fire having partially destroyed the plaintiff's stock, the company's agent visited the premises, and plaintiff having proposed to leave the question of damages to arbitration, the agent stated that he did not wish to do so, and requested the plaintiff to prepare, himself, with the aid of his clerks, a statement of the loss, and send the same to him, adding that if it was satisfactory he would pay the amount claimed. He said at the same time that the premises could be put in order and the plaintiff continue his business. The plaintiff prepared a statement, and, on demand of the agent, put his claim in writing. The agent sub-mitted his claim to the adjusters, who went to the plaintiff's place of business to examine into the loss, but the plaintiff refused to produce the goods damaged, most of which were still in his possession, stating that everything had been put in order, and he could not say what damage they had sustained. The company then refused payment, but did not claim that the plaintiff's demand, which was, moreover, justified by the subsequent evidence, was excessive:-Held, (1) That the contract of insurance being of a commercial nature, oral testimony was admissible to prove these facts, it not being a question of contradicting a written instrument, or one of a breach of the condition of the policy which required a waiver in writing, because the policy provided for a settlement by mutual assent, and the plaintiff could prove such assent by oral testimony. 2, On account of the refusal of the agent to submit the question of compensation to arbitration, and his proposal that the laintiff should himself prepare a statement of the loss, the latter could not then be required to exhibit the damaged goods to the adjusters.

Duffy v. St. Lawrence Assurance Co., Q.R. 23 S.C. 181 (Sup. Ct.), affirmed by the Court of King's Bench, 20th January, 1903.

- Void policy - Renewal - Mortgage clause.]-By s. 167 of the Ontario Insurance Act, a mercantile risk can only be insured for one year, and may be renewed by a renewal receipt instead of a new policy: -Held, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal (3 Ont. L.R. 127) and restoring that at the trial (32 O.R. 369), Girouard, J., contra, that the renewal is not a new contract of insurance. Therefore, where the original policy was void for non-disclosure of prior insurance, the renewal was likewise a nullity, though the prior insurance had ceased to exist in the interval. Held, per Girouard, J., that the renewal was a new contract which was avoided by non-disclosure of the conceal-ment in the application for the original policy. The mortgage clause attached to a policy of insurance against fire, which provided that "the insurance as to the interest only of the mortgages therein shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property insured, etc., ' applies only to acts of the mortgagor after the policy comes into operation and cannot be invoked as against the concealment of material facts by the mortgagor in his application for the policy. Quære, would the mortgage clause entitle the mortgage to bring an action in his own name alone on the policy?

The Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company v. Agricultural Savings and Loan Company, 33 Can. S.C.R. 94, reversing Agricultural v. Liverpool Co. 3 Ont. L.R. 127.

—Insurance against fire—Application—Untrue statement—Materiality—Statutory condition.]—In an application for insurance against fire among the questions to the applicant were: "Have you aver had any proposity destroyed by $50.5.

the applicant were: "Have you ever had any property destroyed by fire?—
Ans. Yes. Give date of fire, and, if insured, name of company interested.—Ans.
1892. National and London and Lancashire.' The evidence showed that there was a fire on the applicant's property in 1882, and two fires in 1892, and the insurance by the policy granted on this application was on property which replaced that destroyed by the latter fires:—Held, reversing the judgment appealed from (Harrison v. Western Assurance Co., 35 N.S.
Rep. 488) that the above questions were material to the risk and the answers untrue. The first statutory condition therefore precluded recovery on the policy.

Western Assurance Company v. Harrison, 33 Can. S.C.R. 473.

-Condition of policy-Double insurance-Application-Representations and warranties-Substituted insurance-Condition precedent-Lapse of policy-Statutory conditions-Estoppel.]-B., desiring to abandon his insurance against fire with the Manitoba Assurance Co., and, in lieu thereof, to effect insurance on the same property with the Royal Insurance Co., wrote the local agent of the latter company stating his intention, and asking to have a policy in the "Royal" in substitution for his existing insurance in the "Manitoba." On receiving an application and payment of the premium, the agent issued an interim receipt to B. insuring the property pending issue of a policy, and forwarded the application and the premium, with his report, to his company's head office in Montreal, where the enclosures were received and retained. The interim receipt contained a condition for non-liability in case of prior insurance unless with the company's written assent, but it did not in any way refer to the existing insurance with the Manitoba Assurance Co. Before receipt of a policy from the "Royal" and while the interim receipt was still in force, the property insured was destroyed by fire, and B. had not in the meantime formally abandoned his policy with the Manitoba Assurance The latter policy was conditioned to lapse in case of subsequent additional insurance without the consent of the company. B. filed claims with both companies which were resisted, and he subsequently assigned his rights to the plaintiffs, by whom actions were taken against both companies:—Held, reversing both judgments appealed from, Whitla v. Royal, 14 Man. R. 90, that, as the Royal Insurance Company had been informed, through their agent, of the prior insurance by B. when effecting the substituted insurance, they must be assumed to have undertaken the risk notwithstanding that such prior insurance had not been formally abandoned, and that the Manitoba Assurance Co. were relieved from liability by reason of such substituted insurance being taken without their consent. Held, further, that, under the circumstances, the fact that B. had made claims upon both companies did not deprive him or his assignees of the right to recover against the company liable upon the risk.

Manitoba Assurance Company v. Whitla, 34 S.C.R. 191.

-Transfer of insurance claim-Signification-Valuation of goods insured-Undisclosed insurance-Waiver of time limit for proofs.]-(1) A transfer of a contract of insurance, by a private writing made in duplicate, signed by the transferor and transferee in the presence of two witnesses, is good and valid. (2) The admission of the debtor that he received a duplicate of such transfer is a sufficient signification (1571 C.C.). (3) An estimate by the insured in round figures of the value of the stock, at the time of the application, should not be considered a ground or nullity, unless it contains such an exaggeration as creates a suspicion of fraudulent intention. (4) The fact that an interim re-ceipt had issued for an insurance in ancther company, which insurance was afterwards declined by that company, does not establish a plea of undisclosed insurance. (5) The time limit for turnishing statement of loss is waived by a letter from the company to the insured, dated after the expiration of the delay, and enclosing a blank form of policy in order that the insured might know exactly what it was necessary that he should do.

Western Assurance Co. v. Garland, 12 Que. K.B. 530.

—Contract—''Valid in Canada''—Meaning of—Policy in company not licensed in Canada.]—A contract to procure fire insurance in some office valid in Canada means in some company licensed to do business in Canada; and a premium paid under such a contract may be recovered back, as upon a failure of consideration, if the insurance is effected without the knowledge of the insured in a company not so licensed.

Barrett v. Elliott, 10 B.C.R. 461 (Full Court).

-Ownership-Lease-Sheriff's sale-Title to land-Instrable interest-Trust.]-The lessor of real estate insured the leased property "in trust," and notified the insurers that the lessee, his son, was the real beneficiary. The lessee paid all the pre-miums, and, the property having been seized in execution of a judgment against the lessor, the lessee purchased at the sheriff's sale and became owner in fee. He afterwards increased the insurance, the insurer acknowledging, in the second policy, the existence of the first in his favour. The property having been destroyed by fire, payment of the amount of the first policy to the lessee was opposed by a judgment creditor of the lessor and the money attached in the possession of the company:-Held, affirming the K.B., Montreal, that the lessee having had an insurable interest when the first policy issued, and being, when he acquired the fee and when the loss occurred, the only person having such interest, he was entitled to the payment of the amount of the policy insured upon the application of the lessor. Held, also, that even if the lessor knew that his father was embarrassed at the time he took the lease and when he purchased the property at the sheriff's sale, that would not make the transaction fraudulent as against the tather's creditors. A creditor who was a party to the action against the lessor in which the property was sold in execution subject to the lease, and who did not oppose such sale, could not, afterwards, contest payment of the amount of the policy on the ground of fraud.

Langelier v. Charlebois, 34 Can. S.C. R. 1.

-Mutual fire insurance-Misrepresentations as to title of assured.]-(1) In a contract of mutual fire insurance, where the application forms part of the contract, representations in the application as to the title of the insured are to be strictly interpreted, and the rules of ordinary fire insurance do not apply. So, where the insured stated in the application that he was owner of the immovable sought to be insured, whereas his father-in-law was the registered owner, his pretension that he was the real owner, and that his fatherin-law was merely his agent in respect of the property, could not avail, and the contract was absolutely null and void. (2) Where the insured has made a material false statement in his application, as to one of the subjects insured, the whole contract is void. (3) An inadvertent mis-statement by the insured, in his application, as to the name of the company in which an insurance existed, is immaterial, and would not void the contract. (4) The insured is not bound by sketches or additions made by the company's agents on the back of the policy, after he has signed the same.

Lambert v. Foncière Compagnie D'Assurance, 25 Que. S.C. 169 (Davidson, J.).

-Loss payable to mortgagee-Appraisement—Statutory condition 16.]—Where a policy of fire insurance, not containing any mortgage or subrogation clause, nor any direct agreement with the mortgagee, is effected by a mortgagor pursuant to a covenant in the mortgage, and by the policy the loss, if any, is made payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, an appraisement of the loss under statutory condition 16 of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, s. 168, is, in the absence of fraud or collusion, binding on the mortgagee, although he has not been consulted in, nor notified of, the appraisement. In such a case, under Greet v. The Citizens' Insurance Company (1879), 27 Gr. 121 (1880), 5 A.R. 596, the mortgagee can sue the insurance company in his own name for the amount due under the policy.

Haslam v. Equity Fire Insurance Co., 8 O.L.R. 246 (Teetzel, J.).

-Certificate of magistrate most contiguous to the place of fire-Condition precedent-Proof of loss.]-A policy of insurance contained a condition requiring the assured, in case of loss, to procure a certificate as to the matters contained in the statement of loss under the hands of two magistrates most contiguous to the place of the fire. A further condition provided that no condition should be deemed to have been waived unless the waiver was expressed in writing indorsed on the policy:-Held, per Tuck, C.J., Hanington, Barker and Gregory, JJ., that the production of the certificate of the magistrates most contiguous to the place of fire was a condition precedent to the assured's right to recover. Per Landry and McLeod, JJ., that the magistrate most contiguous qualified to act is the most contiguous within the meaning of the condition, though not the nearest in point of distance to the place of the fire. Per curiam, that if there could be a waiver under the condition without indorsement on the policy, the acceptance of the proof of loss by the company, without objection, was not a waiver.

LeBlanc v. Commercial Union Insurance Company, 35 N.B.R. 665.

-Application for insurance-False statements-Duty of agent.]-In an action by the plaintiff company against the defendant, the first count of the declaration alleged that the defendant was hired for the purpose of receiving and forwarding to the company applications for fire insurance, yet the defendant, not regarding his duty, so negligently and wrongfully received and forwarded to the company an application for insurance containing statements which he knew at the time to be false, and material to the risk, and said company, relying upon the truth of the application, accepted the risk, and issued a policy thereon which became a claim, and said company were put to great costs in defending an action at law. The second count alleged the false statements were received and forwarded to the company by the defendant fraudulently and in collusion with the applicant against the company:-Held, per Tuck, C.J., Landry, Mc-Leod and Gregory, JJ., that both counts stated a cause of action and were good on demurrer. Per Hanington, J., that the defendant's duty, under the contract, was to receive and forward all applications, whether the statements therein were true or false, and as the first count did not charge any duty beyond that, or fraud, it was bad on demurrer; that he was in doubt as to the second count, because it did not allege that the damage suffered was directly caused by the fraud and collusion of the Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society v. McAlister, 35 N.B.R. 691.

-Foreign company-Delivery of policy-Cause of action enforceable in Ontario-Place of payment.]-The insured residing in Ontario applied through an insurance broker in Montreal for an insurance policy on property in Ontario in the defendant company, which was incorporated under the laws of one of the United States and had its home office in that State. The evidence of the insured was that he received the policy through the mail from the broker-and the evidence of the company was that it was delivered to the broker as the assured's agent and who was not an agent of the company which had no agent or officer in Ontario. No place of payment was named in the policy:-Held, that the plaintiffs had not proved a cause of action upon which they were entitled to sue the company in Ontario; and that in the provision as to committing a policy to the post office the words "to be de-livered or handed over to the assured, his assign or agent in Ontario'' in s. 143 of c. 203, R.S.O. 1897, contemplates a committing to the post office of the policy by the insurer addressed to the insured, his assign or agent in Ontario; and the provision therein that in such event the money should be payable at the office in Ontario shows that the section was intended to apply to companies having an office or agent in Ontario and not to a company which has in no way brought itself or its business within the limits of the province. Held, also, that the company, not having complied with the Insurance Act R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, in regard to license or registration, it was precluded by s. 85 of that Act from entering into any contract with any one in Ontario. Burson v. German Union Insurance Co.,

10 O.L.R. 238 (Teetzel, J.).

-Insurance by mortgagee-Subrogation.] -Mortgagees of real estate insured the mortgaged property to the extent of their claim thereon under a clause in the mortgage by which the mortgagor agreed to keep the property insured in a sum not less than the amount of the mortgage, and if he failed to do so that the mortgagees might insure it and add the premiums paid to their mortgage debt. The policy was issued in the name of the mortgagor who paid the premiums, and attached to it was a condition that whenever the company should pay the mortgagees for any loss thereunder, and should claim that as to the mortgagor no liability therefor existed, said company should be subrogated to all the rights of the mortgagees under all securities held collateral to the mortgage debt to the extent of such payment. A loss having occurred the company paid the mortgagees the sum insured, and the mortgager claimed that his mortgage was discharged by such payment. The company disputed this, claiming that they had a valid defence against the mortgagor by reason of breaches of a number of the statutory conditions, and were subrogated to the rights of the mortgagees. The Court of Appeal (15 Ont. App. R. 421) and the Divisional Court (14 O.R. 322) held that, the insurance company having failed to establish its defence, that the policy had been voided by the acts of the mortgagor, the latter was entitled to the benefit of the money paid by the insurance company to the mortgagees and to have his mortgage discharged:—Held, per Strong, Fournier, Taschereau and Gwynne, JJ., that the judgment of the Court of Appeal for Ontario, 15 Ont. App. R. 421, should be affirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs. Held, per Taschereau and Gwynne, JJ., that the insurance effected by the mortgagees must be held to have been so effected for the benefit of the mortgagor under the policy, and the subrogation clause which was inserted in the policy without the knowledge and consent of the mortgagor could not have the effect of converting the policy into one insuring the interest of the mortgagees alone; that the interest of the mortgagees in the policy was the same as if they were assignees of a policy effected with the mortgagor, and that the payment to the mortgagees discharged the mortgage. Held, per Tas-chereau and Gwynne, JJ., that the com-pany were not justified in paying the mortgagees without first contesting their liability to the mortgagor and establishing their indemnity from liability to him; not having done so they could not, in the present action, raise any questions which might have afforded them a defiance in an action against them on the policy.

Imperial Fire Insurance Company v. Bull (1889), 1 S.C. Cas. 1 (Revision of report in 18 Can. S.C.R. 697).

-Declarations of assured - Previous fires.]-Property insured against fire had been burned three times but the assured, on applying for the policy stated, in answer to a question in the application, that he had property damaged or destroyed by fire only once:-Held, that this statement was material to the risk and avoided the policy. The following clause in the application, "and the said applicant hereby covenants and agrees to and with the same company that the foregoing is a just, true, and full exposition of all the facts and circumstances in regard to the condition, situation and value of the property to be insured so far as the same are known to the applicant and are material to the risk, and agrees and consents that the same be held to form the basis of the liability of the company and shall form a part and be a condition, of the insurance contract," does not constitute an absolute warranty but the answers given by the assured only amount to warranties under said clause in so far as they are material to the risk.

Gillis v. Canada Fire Assurance Co., Q.R. 26 S.C. 166 (Sup. Ct.).

—Mutual company — Assessments — Premium notes—Lien.]—To secure the payment of assessments imposed on premium notes given by members of mutual fire insurance companies in the counties of Quebec the said companies have a special lien on the movable property only of the assured; upon immovables they have merely an ordinary hypothee ranking according to the date of the premium note and not a lien taking rank after the municipal taxes.

Cantwell v. Wilks, Q.R. 26 S.C. 149 (Ct. Rev.).

-Variations to the statutory conditions-"Just and reasonable" -- Encumbrances-Notice to local agent.]-A policy provided, by the way of variation of statutory condition 1, that any encumbrance by way of mortgage should be deemed material to be known to the company within the meaning of the said statutory condition: -Held, that this was too wide to be just and reasonable, and that the Court had to determine whether the non-disclosure of the mortgage was a material fact, the onus being on the defendants who asserted its materiality. By another variation of the statutory conditions it was provided that the words "or its local agent," in the 3rd statutory condition, which provides that any change material to the risk must be notified in writing "to the company or its local agent," were struck out, and that wherever the words "agent" or "au-thorized agent" occurred elsewhere in the statutory conditions, such "agent" or "authorized agent" should be held to mean the company's secretary only:-Held, where a company had its head office in Ontario, a valid variation since it was not unjust or unreasonable to stipulate that notice of important changes in the character of the risk should be communicated to the head office. Where, in a policy, varia-tions from the statutory conditions were printed in type of the same size and shape of the statutory conditions, but in bright scarlet, whereas the latter were in black ink:-Held, that the requirements of s. 169 of the Ontario Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, were sufficiently complied with.

Lount v. London Mutual Fire Insurance Co., 9 O.L.R. 549 (Street, J.).

Variations from statutory conditions—Notice to agent.]—A variation from the statutory conditions striking out from the third statutory condition the words "or its local agent" in the clause requiring notice of a change material to the risk to be given to "the company or its local agent" and providing that wherever the words "agent" or "authorized agent" occur in the statutory conditions such agent or authorized agent shall be held to mean the company's secretary only, was, in the case of a company having its head office in the Province of Ontario and more than four hundred local agents in the Province held, as to the third statutory condition, to be just and reasonable, and notice to a local agent insufficient. Judgment of Street, J., 9 O.L.R. 549, affirmed.

Lount v. London Mutual Fire Insurance Company, 9 O.L.R. 699 (D.C.).

-Standing timber-"Property." - The defendants, an insurance company incorporated under the laws of Ontario, insured the defendants, a railway company having a branch line in the State of Maine, "against loss or damage by fire . . . on property as follows: on all claims for loss or damage caused by locomotives to property located in the State of Maine not including that of the assured." By the statute law of the State of Maine, where "property" is injured by fire communicated by a locomotive engine, the railway company is made responsible and it is declared to have an insurable interest in the property along its line for which it is responsible:-Held, that the policy in question was, in consequence of this statutory provision, a valid policy of fire insurance, and not an ultra vires policy of indemnity, but that the property in respect of which the insurance attached was that defined by the enabling section of the Ontario Insurance Act (R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, s. 166), and that standing timber was not included.

Canadian Pacific Railway Company v. Ottawa Fire Insurance Company, 9 O.L.R. 493 (Clute, J.).

-Oral application-Ownership of goods insured -Lessees - Notice to agents -- Policy differing from application.]-The plaintiffs having an insurable interest as lessees in machinery applied verbaily to the defendant's agents for insurance to whom they communicated the state of the title. the name of the owners, and the nature of their interest in the machines. The agents had authority to accept the risk, receive the premium and issue an interim receipt, which they did. They also partly filled up an application form, not containing any statement as to the nature of the ownership and signed it in the name of the plaintiffs, but without the knowledge, consent or authority of the latter. A policy was issued and sent to the plaintiffs, which contained the statement that "the property is being held by the assured as owners." Statutory condition 10 provides that the company is not liable for loss of property owned by any other party than the assured, unless the interest of the assured is stated in or upon the policy:-Held, that the plaintiffs were not precluded from recovery by this condition inasmuch as the defendants had notice through their agents of the real interest of the plaintiffs, and it was their duty to have indorsed on the policy the necessary statement as to it, or at all events they were estopped from setting up the condition. Held, also, that the plaintiffs could invoke the 2nd statutory condition, under which, after application for insurance, it shall be deemed that any policy sent to the assured is intended to be in accordance with the terms of the application, unless the company points out in writing the particulars wherein the policy differs from the application. There is no reason for confining the operation of this condition to a written application.

Davidson v. Waterloo Mutual Fire Ins.
Co., 9 O.L.R. 394 (D.C.).

—Parol contract—Interim receipt limiting duration of contract—Incumbrance—Omission to notify company—Absence of written application with questions and answers.]—The plaintiffs on Nov. 7th, 1901, applied through an agent of the defendants to their general manager for an insurance of $2,800 on certain machinery and stock in frade which he accepted, and the usual interim receipt was issued by its terms limiting the insurance to thirty days, but of such limitation no notice in writing was given to the plaintiffs. On November 30th the plaintiffs, in the belief that the insurance was for a year, paid the annual premium to the agent, who, according to his usual course, paid it over to the defendants in January following, when it was duly accepted by the defendants. No policy, however, was issued, and a fire subsequently occurring some ten months after, whereby the goods were destroyed, the defendants repudiated liability on the ground that the insurance was for thirty days only:-Held, that there was a valid parol contract for insurance for a year, and that nothing subsequently took place to modify or impair it, the interim receipt under the circumstances not having such effect. Held, also, that under the parol contract an implication was raised that a proper policy would be issued subject to the statutory conditions and such variations thereof as were just and reasonable, and that was substantially the effect of the interim receipt, which, though ineffective to restrict the duration of the contract, was to be looked at as part of the evidence surrounding it. Under the first statutory condition the applicant for insurance is not to misrepresent or omit to communicate any circumstances material to be made known to the company to enable it to judge of the risk, while a variation thereof on the company's policies required the applicant to communicate the existence of a mortgage or other incumbrance and the amount thereof, and it was objected that the applicant had omitted to communicate the existence of a mortgage on the insured property whereby the insurance was vitiated:-Held, that whether the first statutory condition was alone considered or the variation thereof, which was in effect the same, the object was to obtain information as to the risk before accepting it, which information is usually obtained by questions and answers in a written application, and as there was no such application here and no question put at all, either written or verbal, there was no duty imposed on the insured to communicate the fact of the existence of the mortgage; and, semble, the existence of the mortgage was not, in the circumstances of this case, a fact material to be made known to the company. Judgment of Meredith, C.J.C.P., 7 O.L.R. 180, affirmed.

Coulter v. Equity Fire Insurance Company, 9 O.L.B. 35.

—Fire insurance—Goods in existence at time of fire—''120 sacks of green coffee'' —Termination of insurance—Notice of—Variation in limitation condition—Unreasonableness.]—Where a policy of insurance against fire was effected by the owners, wholesale dealers in coffee, etc., on ''120 sacks of green coffee'' stored in a specified warehouse, and which policy was a renewal of a similar insurance in force for some years:—Held, that such insurance was not limited to the particular times.

lar 120 sacks on hand when the policy was effected, but covered similar stock to the specified number of sacks in hand at the time of a fire which subsequently occurred. About a week before the fire occurred the insured wrote to the company's local agent that they had decided to cancel the existing policy and to have a new one issued for a reduced amount, but this was never communicated to the nead office, or any action taken upon it until after the fire had occurred:-Held, that this was not such written notice terminating the insurance as was required by 19a of the statutory conditions, being merely an intimation of the insured to have the existing policy cancelled when a new one was substituted for it, but which was never carried out. A variation of statutory condition 22 reducing the time for bringing an action to six months is an unjust and unreasonable condition.

Merchants Fire Insurance Company v. Equity Fire Insurance Company, 9 O.L.R 241 (Meredith, C.J.).

-Company re-building after loss-Defective work-Damages-Measure of.]-The defendant company instead of paying to the plaintiff the amount of damages sustained by a fire in her bakery, undertook to repair the damage, and for the faulty manner in which the work was carried out plaintiff sued for the amount of the damage caused by the fire, and also, for damages in respect of loss occasioned by reason of being unable to carry on the business. The plaintiff's chief witness stated that the injury to the business was $3,000, and the jury returned a verdict for her for that amount. On appeal, the Full Court being of the opinion that the amount of damages was excessive, with plaintiff's consent, reduced it to $1,000. Precise directions should have been given to the jury as to what they should have taken into account in estimating the damages, and as the case had been allowed to go to the jury without such directions without objection by defendants' counsel and without con-tradiction of the statement as to the damage being $3,000, no costs of the appeal were allowed.

Murray v. Royal Insurance Company, 11 B.C.R. 212.

—Alterations in property insured—Increase of risk—Burden of proof.]—Alterations made without notice by the owner in the property insured after the issue of a policy of fire insurance, which do not increase the risk, do not affect the policy, and the burden of establishing the increased risk is on the insurer.

Bachand v. Compagnie d'Assurance Mutuelle, 27 Que. S.C. 500 (C.R.).

—Arbitration — Amicable inquiry — Appraisement.]—The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as to arbitrations do not apply to amicable inquiries, under the conditions of a policy of insurance, as to the cause of the disaster. The arbitrators or appraisers, and umpire are, consequently, tot subject to judicial formalities as to notice, hearing, swearing of witnesses, report, etc., but act merely as amicable valuators. (2) A defendant admitting part of the claim in his plea is to be considered as confessing judgment for that amount and making a deposit thereof in Court; on default of so doing the defendant is liable for the costs of an action for the amount in dispute.

Town of Beauharnois v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., Q.R. 28 S.C. 68 (Ct. Rev.).

-- Breach of statutory condition-Subsequent insurance-Notice-Knowledge of sub-agent.]-By a condition of a policy of fire insurance (statutory condition No. 8) the insurance company were not to be liable if any subsequent insurance were effected unless and until the company should assent thereto, etc. A subsequent insurance was effected by the insured, and no notice in writing thereof was given nor any communication made to the company nor to any agent having power to receive such notice, and the fact of the existence of the subsequent insurance was not disclosed to the company until after the insured premises were injured by fire:-Held, that the circumstance that the subsequent insurance was effected by a sub-agent of the company's general agent, who had also acted in procuring the prior insurance with the company, should not be regarded as affecting the company with constructive notice of the subsequent insurance. An action upon the policy being dismissed, the company were ordered to refund the last payment of premium, which was received in ignorance that the policy was no longer in force.

Imperial Bank v. Royal Insurance Co., 12 O.L.R. 519 (Boyd, C.).

—Broker — Representations — Circumstances increasing risk.]—Where an insurance company has acted in such a manner as to lead the insured to believe that the broker soliciting his insurance was the agent for the company, and he was thereby induced to depend upon such agent complying with all formalities, the company cannot, afterwards, set up failure to make representations of circumstances increasing the risk as a reason for avoiding the policy of insurance.

Abousamra v. Cie. Equitable d'Assurance Mutuelle contre de Feu, Q.R. 27 S.C. 252 (Ct. Rev.).

—Contract of insurance—Interpretation—Misdescription—Alteration in use or condition of thing insured.]—(1) A statement in an application for insurance that "if answers to the questions are made by the agent of the company, soliciting the insurance, he shall be considered for those purposes the agent of the applicant and not that of the company," must be construed strictly and cannot therefore be extended to a diagram of the premises made by the agent on the back of the application. (2) A statement in an application that a diagram on the back of it disclosed the exact situation of the property insured, when it showed another building as distant thirty feet instead of twenty-three, and the company charged the premium at a higher rate such as would have been charged had the distance been correctly given, is not a material misdescription sufficient to vitiate the policy. (3) When the owner shortly before the fire, left the house insured to work in the lumber shanties, and his wife during his absence went to reside with her parents, the policy containing no special prohibition in this respect, the fact that the house was unoccupied at the time of the fire, without notice to the company, did not amount to such an alteration in the use or condition of the premises insured as would vitiate the policy.

Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Canada v. Mercier, 14 Que. K.B. 227.

—Lease of machine—Insurance against fire—Indemnity substituted for thing leased—Revendication.]—The owner of a thing leased, under condition that the lessee should insure it for the benefit of the owner, who receives the amount of such insurance after a fire in which the thing so leased was supposed to have been destroyed, is presumed, by accepting such indemnity, to have renounced his right of property in the thing leased. Consequently, he cannot subsequently revendicate the thing in the possession of a third party without making a tender of the price paid therefor by the latter.

United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Caron, Q.R. 14 K.B. 437.

—Notice and proof of loss—Waiver by insurer — Conflicting evidence.]—(1) The condition in a policy of insurance against fire, that notice and proof of loss must be given within a stated delay, is not one of liability but of recovery and is imposed in the interest of the insurer. The assured may therefore be relieved from it either expressly, or impliedly, e.g., by the insurer putting him off when applying for a settlement, on the ground that the insurer is himself investigating the circumstances of the loss. (2) The finding of the trial Judge in such matters as the representations by the assured as to the value of the property insured and the extent of the loss will not be interfered with on appeal when the evidence is contradictory.

noit, 15 Que. K.B. 90.

-Standing timber - Property.]-The defendants, an insurance company, incorporated under the laws of Ontario, insured the plaintiffs, a railway company, having a branch line in the State of Maine, the policy stating the insurance to be against loss or damage by fire . . . on property as follows: On all claims for loss or damage caused by locomotives to property located in the State of Maine not including that of the assured." By the statute law of Maine when "property" is injured by fire communicated by a locomotive engine, the railway company is made responsible, and it is declared to have an insurable in-*grest in the property along its line for which it is responsible:-Held, that the policy was a valid policy of fire insurance, but did not, under the company's statutory powers cover standing timber along the defendants' line of road; that the policy was not therefore ineffective, for there was abundance of other property covered by it in which the plaintiffs had an insurable interest. Judgment of Clute, J., 9 O.L.R. 493, affirmed.

Canadian Pacific Railway v. Ottawa Fire Insurance Co., 11 O.L R. 465, 39 Can. S.C.R. 405, affirmed.

-Action for damages suffered by fire-Payment by insurance-Want of interest-Art. 77 C.P.]-A defendant sued for damages alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiffs from a fire claimed to have been caused by defendant's fault, cannot plead want of interest of the plaintiffs, because they have been compensated for their loss by insurance moneys received by them.

Burritt v. Pillow & Hersey Mfg. Co., 7 Que. P.R. 461.

-Notice of loss-Waiver of formalities.]-A notice of loss by fire in the words, "Je vous donne avis que mon ameublement de maison est brûlé le 10 de ce mois. Veuillez y voir," receipt of which is acknowledged by the insurer and followed by an offer by the latter of a sum in payment, is sufficient. The offer is a waiver of the requirements in the conditions of the policy and in the provisions of a law respecting the form and contents of notices, intended to give the insurer information, which he may exact or dispense with, as he chooses

Labbe v. Equitable Mutual Fire Assurance Co., 29 Que. S.C. 274 (C.R.). -Appraisement bond-Notice-Award.]-

An arrangement for determining the amount to be paid by insurers to the insured by means of an "appraisement bond" containing certain clauses defining the duties of the appraisers and the mode of procedure before them is an agreement for arbitration and the rules prescribed by

Mount Royal Insurance Company v. Be- | arts. 1431 et seq., C.C.P., apply to it as well as to the subsequent operations of the appraisers who are really arbitrators. Hence, failure by the latter to notify the parties or one of them of the time and place of their proceedings is a contravention of article 1436 and nullifies their award.

Concurrent policies-Contribution to loss General policies and special policies.]-An insurer of a stock of merchandise under a general policy, who has to contribute to a loss with insurers under special policies, each upon a part of the same stock, is liable in proportion to the loss in each part. For this purpose the general policy is divided into as many parts as there are special insurances and proportionately to the losses on each, and each such part contributes rateably with the special insurances

Bloomfield v. London Mutual Fire Insurance Co., 29 Que. S.C. 143 (Archibald, J.).

-Determining loss by arbitration-Powers of arbitrators—Misrepresentation—Setting aside award.]—An agreement was entered into between plaintiff and the defendant company for the appointment of two arbitrators to appraise the loss to property damaged and destroyed by fire, the arbitrators appointed being empowered to select a third who should act with them in matters of difference only. The arbitrators first appointed made an award which was good upon its face, but failed to comply with one of the material terms of the submission, in failing to make an estimate of the value of goods actually destroyed, or to determine the sound value of goods not destroyed:-Held, that when the award was signed the authority of the arbitrators ceased, and that it was not within the power of either of them to re-open it or to deal further with the matter. Also, that the fact that one of the arbitrators was misled by his co-arbitrator in connection with the signing of the award, if true, would form good ground for an application to the Court to set it aside, but did not justify him in calling in the third arbitrator and making another award different from that to which he was already a party. Also, that a difference between the arbitrators arising after the filing of the award was not a difference within the meaning of the submission which justified the calling in of the third arbitrator. After the making of the award, plaintiff made an assignment under the Collection Act to a bank which subsequently reassigned to plaintiff. In the meantime, before the reassignment, plaintiff made an assignment, also under the Act, to M., who notified the company. Quære, whether the action could be brought in the name of plaintiff, and whether any legal interest passed to M. under the assignment.

Hall v. The Queen Insurance Co., 39 N.S.R. 295.

—Undertaking of mortgage company to keep up insurance on mortgaged property.]
—(1) If a mortgage company through its manager undertakes with the mortgaged roperty, and takes with the mortgaged property, and takes steps towards earrying out such undertaking, but fails to earry it out, it is guilty of such negligence as to render it liable in damages to the mortgagor, if ignorant of such failure, for the amount of such insurance in case the property is burned after the policy lapses. Skelton v. L. & N. W. Ry. Co. (1867), L.R. 2 C.P., per Willes, J., at p. 636, followed. (2) It is not necessary in such a case that the company's undertaking should be under seal.

Campbell v. Canadian Co-operative Investment Co., 16 Man. R. 464.

-Lease-Change in nature of risk-Absence of notice or knowledge by landlord-Control of landlord-Omission to notify insurance company.]-After the owner of dwelling-house property had effected an insurance thereon he leased the premises to a tenant who, without the owner's knowledge, changed the occupation thereof, by bringing in a stock of goods, which he sold out to pedlars:-Held, that the owner was not affected by the third statutory condition, R.S.O. 1897, ch. 203, sec. 168 (3), which requires notice of any change material to the risk within the control or knowledge of the insured, to be given to the company, for, being under lease, the premises were not under the owner's control while the change in the occupation was without his knowledge, and the fact that the change was made by the tenant after the making of the policy was immaterial.

London and Western Trust Co. v. Canada Fire Insurance Co., 13 O.L.R. 540, affirmed 16 O.L.R. 217.

-Re-insurance-Limitation clause imported from original policy-Construction clause held to be unreasonable and inapplicable.]-In a contract of re-insurance which was engrafted on an ordinary printea form of fire insurance policy, and incorporated all its terms, there was a clause which purported to prohibit an action thereon unless commenced within twelve months next after the fire:-Held, by the Privy Council, that, having regard to the true construction of the contract, which carelessly purported to include many conditions inapplicable to re-insurance, the above clause must also be regarded as inapplicable. Such a clause is reasonable in the original policy where the assured can sue immediately on incurring loss; it cannot apply where the insured is unable to sue until the direct loss is ascertained between parties over whom he has no control. Judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada dismissing the appellant's action, 35 S.C.R. 208, reversed and judgment of the Quebec Court, 27 Que. S.C. 494, restored.

Home Insurance Company v. Victoria-Montreal Fire Insurance Company (1907), A.C. 59, 16 Que. K.B. 31,

Statutory conditions-Arbitration Act-Motion to stay proceedings.]-After issue had been joined in this action against the defendants, a fire insurance company, on a policy containing the statutory condition as to reference to arbitration, a motion was made on their behalf to stay the action. On the motion all defences were withdrawn, and it was represented that the whole matter in dispute was the amount of the loss: -Held, that under sec. 6 of the Arbitra-tion Act, R.S.O. 1897, ch. 62, the application, being made after delivery of the statement of defence, was too late. (2) This was not a case within the powers of the Court to stay an action under the O.J.A. sec. 57.

Cole v. Canadian Fire Insurance Company, 15 O.L.R. 336.

—Representation of ownership of property insured—Insurance by husband of property belonging to his wife—Insurable interest.]
—A contract of insurance of movables in favour of a husband who represents himself to the insurer as the owner of them, whereas they belong to his wife, is null and void for false representation.

Lemieux v. Equitable Fire Assurance Co., 30 Que. S.C. 490.

Statutory conditions - Variation - Appraisement in place of arbitration.]-In a policy of fire insurance, it was provided, by way of variation of statutory condition No. 16 providing for reference under the Arbitration Act in case of differences, that if any difference arose as to the value of the property insured, of the property saved, or the amount of the damages or loss, the same should be submitted to and ascertained by appraisers, one to be appointed by the assured and one by the company, who were to select an umpire and that the assured and the company should pay the appraisers respectively selected by each of them, and that each should pay one half the expenses of the umpire:-Held, that the variation was not binding upon the assured, not being "just and reasonable to be exacted by the company," inasmuch as it was more stringent and onerous than the statutory condition, both because (1) the plaintiff would be bound by the findings of the majority of the appraisers as the result of their own personal opinions only, and would be deprived from examining witnesses on oath touching the amount of his loss; and because (2) it imposed upon the insured the payment of certain of the expenses in any event, whereas the statutory condition provides that where the full amount of the claim is awarded costs shall follow the event, and in other cases be in the discretion of the arbitrators. Semble, that if the language of the variation was to deprive the insured of the benefit of the provisions of the Arbitration Act, which the statutory condition expressly made applicable to the reference, it would be manifestly unjust, as more stringent and onerous than the latter.

Cole v. London Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 15 O.L.R. 619.

-Policy-Condition for occupancy-Reasonableness.]-In an action for a loss on a fire policy containing a condition that any change material to the risk should avoid the policy, unless promptly notified to the company, and that any change of occu-pancy or non-occupancy should be deemed material to the risk, it was proved that the premises insured had been vacant for some months during the currency of the policy, but were occupied at the time of the loss, and it did not appear that the loss was in any sense due to the non-occupancy. Under a proviso in the policy that certain conditions (including the one in question) should be in force only so far as the Court or a Judge should declare it to be just and reasonable to be exacted by the company, the trial Judge declared the condition as to occupancy made at the time the policy issued, but tested with relation to the circumstances which afterwards arose, to be unjust and unreasonable. He submitted to the jury the questions whether the change from occupancy to non-occupancy was material to the risk in this case, and whether it was material generally. To the former question the jury answered, "No," and to the latter, "Yes." On these answers verdict was entered for the plaintiff:-Held, that the condition as to occupancy was to be tested as to its being just and reasonable in the light of circumstances at the time the policy issued and not at the time of the loss, and being so applied was just and reasonable, and the breach of non-occupancy avoided the policy, and a verdict should be entered for the defend-

Payson v. Equitable Fire Insurance Co., 38 N.B.R. 436.

— Concealment — Mortgaged property — Waiver—Second policy.]—The statement in an application for insurance against fire that the immovable to be insured is mortgaged for an amount less than is really the case is not a ground for avoiding the contract. Even if it is offers of payment made by the insurers after the loss is a waiver by them of the right to invoke it.

Failure by the insured to make known to the insurers the fact that an application for further insurance had been accepted by another company is not a reason for avoiding the first contract. The plaintiff who sets up acknowledgments and promises to pay by the defendant in a replication to the pleas cannot be prevented from giving evidence thereof on the ground that the same should have been alleged in the declaration.

Fiset v. Equitable Mutual Fire Ins. Co., Q.R. 31 S.C. 334 (Sup. Ct.).

—Action on policy—Proof of claim—Application—False declaration.]—The observance of the formalities required by the law respecting mutual fire insurance companies as to filing proofs of claim in case of loss is a condition precedent to an action on the policy. If the assured in his application states that be is owner of the property to be insured when he holds merely an agreement for the sale thereof he makes a false declaration which avoids the contracts of insurance.

Ouellette v. La Jacques Cartier, Q.R. 31 S.C. 29 (Sup. Ct.).

-Application — Misrepresentation in -Knowledge of false representation by agent of company.]-Plaintiff insured a building with defendant company, and made certain statements in the application as to fires used on the premises which were found to be false. The premises were destroyed by fire, and the company disputed liability. In answer to the defence of misrepresentation, the defendant pleaded that the company's agent, who had filled out the application, was aware of the condition of the premises: -Held, that the policy was void on account of the mis-statements contained in the application. (2) That even if the plaintiff's agent had been aware of the condition of the premises, as it appeared that he had filled out the application and had filled in the answers to the questions upon which the misrepresentations were based, he would be acting as agent of the plaintiff and in fraud of the company, and the company would not be bound by the policy or affected by his knowledge.

Parsons v. Alberta-Canadian Insurance
Co., 2 Sask. R. 76.

—Premium—Payment by bill of exchange —Default in payment.]—Plaintiffs insured in the defendant company against loss by fire a stock of goods for $2,000. The application contained a clause that if the premium was not paid as agreed the insurance should be void until "such settlement is made." The premium was never paid in cash, but a bill of exchange was drawn upon plaintiffs and accepted by them, but this was never paid. The property was shortly afterwards destroyed by fire. The policy contained one of the statutory conditions, namely, that the insured should forthwith after loss give notice to the company in writing. No such notice was given by the insured, although the company's agent gave notice and told plaintiffs he had done so. It was contended, however, that notice had been waived: first, because the company did not draw attention to the omission; second, because they sent an adjuster to adjust the loss; and third, because the manager of the company made an appointment to discuss the claim. The policy, however, contained a clause that no condition should be waived except in writing. The policy also required that the proofs of loss should shew when and how the fire originated to the best of the claimant's belief, while in the proof of loss filed the claimant stated the cause of fire to be unknown, while from his examination for discovery it appeared that he be-lieved it started from an explosion of the furnace. In an action to recover the amount of the policy:-Held, that the defendant, having drawn a bill of exchange upon the plaintiffs which was by them accepted and because a floating security which might be passed from hand to hand, must be deemed to have accepted "settlement" within the meaning of the terms of the application. (2) That compliance with the term of the policy requiring notice of loss was a condition precedent to the right to recover, and while if some sort of notice had been given which was defective the Court might possibly relieve, yet no such relief could be granted where there was an absolute non-compliance. (3) That the acts pleaded in support of waiver were not sufficient to support the plea, but in any event the policy provided that no waiver should be effective unless in writing, and there being no writing that would constitute a waiver, the plaintiffs could not succeed on that ground. (4) That the proofs of loss were insufficient, as the statement of the cause of the fire being in the belief of insured unknown, was untrue.

Bell Brothers v. Hudson's Bay Insurance Co., 2 Sask, R. 355.

-Misdescription-False declaration-Vacant premises.]-An error, in an application for insurance against fire, in the name of the place given as that in which the property is situated (e.g., that the mill to be insured is in the parish of St. Honore du Canton Armand when it is in St. Hubert du Canton Demers); which does not affect the nature nor extent of the risk is not a ground for avoiding the policy. In order that a false declaration by the assured should work a forfeiture of the policy it is necessary that it should relate to a ma-terial fact of a nature to aggravate the risk. The insurer who invokes this objection must prove its materiality and if he fails to do so the fact that the application was untrue in respect to the subject matter of the objection, that is, that it was untruly stated there was no stove on the premises, does not work a forfeiture. Nor does it when the insured had previously lost an insured mill though he denied the fact in his application. In the absence of agreement to the contrary the non-occupation of the insured premises at the time of the loss without proof that it aggravated the risk, does not cause forfeiture. Nor additions made to the insured mill without notice to the insurer. Insurance on articles specified in the policy covers others of the same nature which replaced them at the time of the loss. The insured is justified ir effecting the insurance though his title is imperfect if it results from circumstances that he has the same legitimate interest in the preservation of the property that an owner under an incontestable title would have had. The insurer sued on the policy cannot at the trial on the merits set up a want of interest not mentioned in his pleas. Moreover, having accepted the premiums for several years, he is not in a position to rely on this ground as arising from the loss.

Equitable Assur. Co. v. Saint Aubin, Q.R. 18 K.B. 345.

-Conditions of forfeiture-Knowledge of insurer - Factory - Machinery.] - In an action on a policy of insurance against fire effect must be given to provisions for forfeiture though it is proved that the conditions under which they were inserted could have had no effect on the origin and development of the fire causing the loss. Thus, the insured forfeits his policy by a breach of a condition forbidding him to leave the premises unoccupied without notice to the insurer and of another requiring him to furnish proofs of his loss within a stated time. Whereby a condition in a policy on a factory and its machinery makes it void in case of non-occupation or of cessation of work, a breach causes forfeiture even though the insured premises were under the centinual surveillance of the owner or his foreman and visited daily by one or the other. Knowledge acquired by the agent of the insurer of the increased risk in such case will not prevent the forfeiture. Such forfeiture is incurred with respect to insurance on the building as well as that on the machinery insured separately, as the machinery incorporated with the factory or consisting of implements required to work it form part of the immovable, the first by nature (see Art. 379 C.C.) and the second by destination. The insurer sued on the policy who pleads forfeiture need not ask that the policy be annulled. His defence is not based on grounds for avoiding the contract, but on those which relieve him of his obligations while those of the insured remain.

Village of Masson v. Liverpool, London & Globe Ins. Co., Q.R. 35 S.C. 455.

-Property subject to agreement for sale-Insurable interest.]-(1) The owner of property covered by insurance policy and subject to an agreement for sale has an insurable and beneficial interest in the property. (2) Where the insurance policy is claimed to be for a larger amount than the value of the property insured, the judgment, in the absence of fraud, will be in favour of the plaintiff for the value, with a reference to the clerk to ascertain such value. (3) The insured, having a beneficial interest in the property covered by the policy, is entitled to the insurance money, and the insurance company will not be subrogated to the insured's right to claim from the purchaser the balance of the purchase price, if the contract for sale specially provides that the insured (the vendor) is not to be liable to the purchaser in the event of loss of property by fire.

Hoffman v. Calgary Fire Insurance Co., 2 Alta. R. 1.

-Application - Untrue answer - Warranty.]-The first statutory condition makes fire insurance of no force in respect to property in regard to which the insurer has misrepresented any circumstance material to the risk. By variation or added condition, the insurers declared, in their policy sued on in this action, that any mortgage or other lien should be deemed material to the risk within the above condition:-Held, that it still remained for a Judge or jury to determine the fact of the materiality or immateriality; and that if the added condition was intended otherwise, it could not be upheld as reasonable or just. The insurance in question was on the "ordinary contents" of a barn and stable. Held, that the fact that there were vendors' liens on implements, part of such contents, which were not communicated to the insurers, was not material to the risk; and the fact that the plaintiff's application for insurance contained a warranty of the truth of his answers therein, and expressly stated that any untrue answer should avoid the policy, and the plaintiff falsely stated therein that nobody had any legal or equitable claim to the property insured, made no difference, the insurers not having made the warranty any part of the policy or of the contract of insurance, save as above mentioned. At the annual meeting of the insurance company, the authority to issue policies was taken from the president and manager and vested in an executive committee. Held, that this applied only to policies to be issued on future applications or then unaccepted applications, and not to cases where, as here, there was a complete contract to insure.

Fritzley v. Germania Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Co., 19 O.L.R. 49.

-Condition in policy as to salvage in case of fire.]-Failure by the insured to comply with the condition of the policy that he will use all means in his power to save the goods insured, in case of fire, is a bar to his right to recover any insurance at all.

Parent v. Providence Assurance Co., 36 Que. S.C. 377 (C.R.).

II. LIFE INSURANCE.

-Presumption of death of insured-Proofs of death—Return of premiums paid after supposed death.]—In an action upon two policies of insurance on the life of S., the plaintiff, his wife or widow, alleged that he died before the action was commenced and within a year after the 20th December, 1897, when he was last heard from; and she also claimed a return of the premiums paid by her upon the policies since the 20th December, 1898. Under each policy the insurance money was payable "within ninety days after due notice and proof of the death;" and by the Ontario Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, s. 80, insurance moneys are payable in sixty days after "reasonably sufficient proof." There was no direct evidence of the death, but the plaintiff rested upon the presumption arising from the fact that S. had not been heard of since the 20th December, 1897. S. left his home in Toronto in November, 1897, and went to Chicago, with a view of seeking employment. During the six or seven weeks next after his departure he wrote three letters to his wife. In the last dated the 20th December, 1897, written in Chicago, he stated that he was leaving Then all communications ceased, and since then nothing had been heard from or of him by the plaintiff or any of his family, who took no steps to trace him or ascertain whether he was living or not. In December, 1906, the plaintiff first made claim for the insurance money, and forwarded to the defendants proofs of loss, which consisted of her own statutory declaration setting out the above facts, exhibiting copies of the three letters, and stating her belief that if he were living he would have continued to correspond with her. There was no proof of search or inquiry. The action was begun on the 23rd March, 1907. After the action had begun the defendants advertised and made inquiries for S., but without success:-Held, upon the evidence given at the trial, and especially considering the efforts made by the defendants, that S. should be presumed to be dead before the 13th May, 1908; the probability of his sending intelligence of himself was not rebutted by anything in the evidence so as to prevent the presumption of his death arising. But held, that the defendants had not received reasonably sufficient proof thereof before action, and upon that ground the action failed, and should be dismissed, but without prejudice to another action. Held, as to the claim for return of the premiums, that no presumption arose as to that, and the plaintiff had not established that the death took place before the date of payment of any of the premiums accruing before action; and they were not paid negligently or under mistake, but voluntarily, with full knowledge of the doubt as to their being payable at all.

Somerville v. Ætna Life Insurance Co.,

Beneficiary certificate - Will.]-Testator held a beneficiary certificate in Canadian Home Circle, payable to his wife. made a will directing that real and personal estate "be sold and converted into cash and divided as follows: one-third of the same (which includes the money that shall come from the Home Circle) to be invested for my present wife, and the interest arising therefrom paid her during her lifetime, and after her death the principal to be equally divided among my children share and share alike ":-Held, that there was nothing in the will which operated to change the beneficiary, and the policy was not affected by the will. Benefit association - By-laws and regnlations - Transfers between lodges-Member in good standing — Regularity of affiliation.]—Where the constitution of a benefit association provides that members shall not be transferred from one lodge to another unless all dues and assessments have been paid, up to and including those for the month in which the application for affiliation is made, the fact that, upon such an application, a member was transferred from one lodge to another involves the presumption as against the association that the transfer was regularly made when the member was in good standing and in accordance with the regulations. Judgment of K.B., Quebec, affirmed.

Ancient Order of United Workmen v. Turner, 44 Can. S.C.R. 145.

-Life insurance in favour of wife-Bequest of insurance moneys in trust for wife during life.]-The testator had insured his life for the benefit of his wife, and the policy was in force at his death. By his will he purported to give the insurance moneys, sufficiently describing the policy to identify it with that in favour of his wife, to his executors to be held in trust by them for the maintenance of his wife as long as she should live; he also gave other property upon the same trust; and directed that, after her death, the residue of his estate should be divided among certain named persons, none of whom came within the preferred class of the Insurance Act. R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, s. 159 (2):-Held, that the testator could not make any such disposition of the insurance moneys as he had attempted to do by his will-the trust declared by s. 159 (1) of the statute not being displaced by an effective declaration under s. 160; and the wife was, at his death, entitled to receive the insurance moneys. It was contended that the will raised an election, and that the wife must either allow the insurance moneys to be disposed of as the will directed or lose all benefit under the will. Held, that the case fell within the "notable exception'' referred to by James, V.-C., in Wollaston v. King (1869), L.R. 8 Eq. 165; the testator, having the power to appoint to any within the class of preferred beneficiaries, first gave the insurance moneys in trust for the wife as long as she lived -and then over; that he could not do; and the wife was entitled to the insurance moneys, as well as to the other benefits under the will. Semble, that the case would have been different had the insurance moneys been disposed of away from the wife. Griffith v. Howes (1903), 5 O.L. R. 439, and In re Anderson's Estate (1906), 16 Man. —Conditions avoiding policy — "Serious disease or complaint."]—A policy of lite insurance was made subject to conditions "below and on page two hereof":—Held, good within R.S.C., c. 54, s. 71, notwithstanding the words of the Act that no such conditions shall be good or valid unless "set out in full on the face or back of the policy." Also, that acute bronchitis, of such a character as to be mistaken and treated for chronic bronchitis, was a "serious complaint" within the condition of the policy, avoiding it if the insured, before its date, had been attended by a physician for "any serious disease or complaint."

Leonard v. Metropolitan Life Insurance

-Assignment of policy to stranger-Gift -Delivery.]—The plaintiff, in December, 1896, signed a document (not under seal) by which he purported to assign to the defendant a certain twenty-year endowment policy of insurance on his life, effected in 1888, by which the insurance company promised, in consideration of an annual premium of $256.50, to pay at the death of the plaintiff, or at the maturity of the policy in 1908, the sum of $5,000. The assignment stated that "for one dollar" and "for other valuable considerations," the plaintiff assigned, transferred, and set over to the defendant (naming her and describing her as "fiancee") all his right, title, and interest in the policy (describing it), "and, for the consideration above expressed, I do also, for myself, my executors and administrators. guarantee the validity and sufficiency of the foregoing assignment to the above named assignee, her executors, administrators, and assigns, and their title to the said policy will forever warrant and defend." There was in fact no consideration for the assignment. The plaintiff did not, at the time he executed it, inform the defendant of it; but in February, 1897, he wrote to her about it, and in March he sent the assignment to the insurance company, and they registered it in their books, and notified the defendant of it. In April the plaintiff wrote to the defendant saying that he enclosed her the assignment, and telling her not to lose it, but he did not in fact enclose it, and she never had the policy or the assignment in her possession. The plaintiff paid the premiums and kept the policy on foot. In January, 1909, he executed a document purporting to revoke the assignment, and brought this action for a declaration that the assignment was duly revoked and the plaintiff entitled to the insurance moneys, the policy having matured:-Held, that, even if evidence of the plaintiff's intention was admissible (and, semble, it was not), there was nothing in the evidence to warrant a finding that it was not the intention of the plaintiff to give the policy absolutely and irrevocably to the defendant, nor that it was his intention to make the policy payable to her at his death, should that occur before maturity of the policy, and subject to any change he might desire to make before death or maturity. the assignment was transmitted to the insurance company and the defendant notified of the transfer of the policy to her she was, to all intents and purposes, owner of the policy. Delivery was not necessary, but, if it were, there was a constructive delivery by the formal acts of registration with the insurance company and notice to the defendant. Held, also, that the assignment did not operate merely as a designation of a beneficiary, under the Ontario Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, s. 151, which the plaintiff would have a right to change, but was an absolute, irrevocable assignment outside of the statute.

Wilson v. Hicks., 21 O.L.R. 623.

—Application—Answer to questions—Mutual company—Condition in policy.]—A general expression added to a question on a special subject in the application for a life insurance policy should be construed as relating to things of the same nature as those mentioned. Thus, in the question "have you suffered from chronic dyspepsia or any other malady," the latter words must be understood to refer to maladies of the same nature and gravity as chronic dyspepsia or which can enhance, in the same manner, the risk of insurance. Therefore the applicant's answer in the negative, though he has had attacks of acute dyspepsia and indigestion, is not a concealment avoiding the contract. Nor is it avoided by the answer "Never sick" to the question "for what maladies have you consulted a physician or been under one's care, or undergone any treatment whatever within five years?" The condition in a contract for life insurance resulting from admission into a mutual society, that the member or his beneficiary will only have the remedies provided by the by-laws, and particularly, that failure to appeal within twenty days from the adverse decision of the official appointed to give it, does not give the society an absolute defence to an action for the insurance money if it is established that the decision of the said official was given without notice to the beneficiary as giving him an opportunity to establish his rights.

Assassination of insured by beneficiary—Knowledge of insured—Rights of hoirs.]
—The fact that the beneficiary under a life insurance policy intended to assassinate, and did in fact assassinate, the assured will not—when it is not shewn that the assured knew of such intention when he effected the insurance nor that the beneficiary was his agent in effecting it—discharge the insurer from the obligation to pay the amount of the policy to the heirs of the assured after judicial revocation of the benefit stipulated for in favour of the assassin.

June, 1900, 31 Can. S.C.R. 376.

-Beneficiary certificate - Condition - Change of occupation - Failure to notify insurers.]-In 1905 W. became a member of the defendant society, beneficiary department, and received a beneficiary certificate, which directed payment of $1,000, in case of his death, to his wife, the plaintiff. He was then a carter, but later became a brakesman, without notice to the defendants, and was killed in a collision while a brakesman. In his application he agreed that compliance on his part with all the laws, regulations, and requirements enacted or which might thereafter be enacted by the society was the express condition upon which he was to be entitled to participate in the beneficiary fund, and this was recited in the certificate, and W. accepted the con-dition and agreed, for himself and those claiming through him and under the certificate, to be bound by it. The constitution, as enacted in 1908, separated holders of certificates into classes, a carter being in the ordinary class and a brakesman in the hazardous; it provided also that if a member changed his class he should notify the society, and his rating would be increased, and provided, in default of notice, for forfeiture of all benefits; and that, in case of death during the continuance of the forfeiture, the beneficiary should not be entitled to any benefit, notwithstanding continued payment of the ordinary class rates. W. changed his occupation, but did not notify the defendants, and went on until his death paying the lower rate:—Held, that the constitution of 1908 applied, and the defendants were not liable at all.

In his application, upon which it was declared the certificate was founded, the plaintiff gave his age as fifty-four when it was in fact fifty-five, the latter age being within the age allowed for entrance and the assessments and fees chargeable being the same for both ages. The plaintiff attained the age of seventy on the 10th December, 1899, and brought this action on the 15th of May, 1900, asking for payment of $1,000. The jury found that the plaintiff's age was not material to the contract, and that the statement as to age was made in good faith and without any intention to deceive:-Held, that the certificate was binding, and that the plaintiff was entitled to payment thereunder upon, in fact, attaining the age of seventy, but that the 'laws governing the fund' ap-plied, though not set out, and that under them the plaintiff was entitled at the time of action brought only to a benefit of $225.

-Embarrassing pleadings-Setting aside of-Setting out of foreign law-Want of particularity.]-To the two counts of a declaration upon a policy or certificate of life insurance defendants pleaded thirtyfour pleas. The first and eighteenth were alike and were as follows: "The defendants say that no demand of the said sum of two thousand dollars was made at the Association's office in Galesburg, Illinois, and by reason thereof, and by the laws of the State of Illinois, the plaintiff cannot recover upon the said certificate." The third and twentieth pleas were also alike and were as follows: "The defendants say that the death of the said August P. B. LeBlanc was from a cause exempted by the provisions and agreements contained in the said certificate." An order was made by Landry, J., in Chambers, striking out these four pleas as being embarrassing. Upon a motion to rescind said order:Held, 1. That the first and eighteenth pleas were bad for not averring what the law of the State of Illinois was by reason of which the plaintiff could not recover; and 2. That the third and twentieth pleas were good-it being unnecessary to specify the particular cause relied upon by defendants as exempting them from liability.

Re The Merchants' Life Association, Vernon Cases, 1 O.L.R. 256 (D.C.). The ascertainment of the present value of the reversion in the sum assured by the policy at the decease of the life insured, as directed by the judgment in 1 O.L.R. 256, is a matter of simple calculation from the ordinary life insurance tables; the premium actually paid by the insured has nothing to do with the calculation. The statute 1 Edw. VII. c. 21 (O.), assented to on the 15th April, 1901, altering the manner of valuing unmatured policies, and enacting that the alterations declared the law of the Province as it existed on the 14th April, 1892, did not affect the rights of the claimants under their policies, because those rights had been declared by the judgment in 1 O.L.R. 256 before the Act was passed, and judgments are not reopened even by such legislation.

and in 1892 became registered as a friendly society in Ontario under the provisions of the Insurance Corporations Act, 1892, and had since kept their registry in force as a friendly society, and had not at any time been registered as an insurance company. A member of one of the Ontario branches was the holder of a certificate of the society whereby they promised to pay to the defendant, a brother of the holder, $1,000, upon satisfactory proof of his death. The holder was resident in Ontario; the application for the certificate was made in Ontario; and the certificate was delivered in Ontario. The holder made a will whereby he bequeathed the certificate to the wife of one of the plaintiffs, naming the plaintiffs executors:-Held. that the Order were legally entitled to do business in Ontario; that the certificate in question was a "contract of insurance" within the meaning of the Ontario Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203; that the rules of the Order, so far as they were inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, were modified and controlled by such provisions; and therefore the benefits of the certificate passed by virtue of the will to the legatee, although the rules of the Order provided that no will should be permitted to control. Policy inconsistent with application-Repayment of premiums-Laches.] - The plaintiff applied to the defendants for insurance at a fixed annual premium for life, but the policy sent to him contained a provision that the premium might be increased. The plaintiff did not read the policy, and, pursuant to notices from the defendants, paid them seven annual premiums at the original rate. In the eighth year the defendants demanded a larger premium:-Held, that the policy, not being in accordance with the application, was a mere counter-proposal, and that there was no contract; that the plaintiff was under no obligation to read the policy, which he was entitled to assume, in the absence of anything done by the company to call his attention to the provision in question, to be in accordance with the application; that he was, therefore, not barred by acquiescence or delay, and that he was entitled to repayment of the premiums with interest.

plovided that if any premium, or note given therefor, was not paid when due, the policy should be void. A note given, payable with interest, in payment of a premium, provided that if it were not paid at maturity the policy should forthwith become void. On the maturity of the note it was partly paid, and an extension was granted, and on a part payment being again made a further extension was granted. The last extension was overdue and balance on note was unpaid at the death of the assured. A receipt by the company, given at the time of taking the note, was of the amount of the premium, but at the bottom of the face of the receipt were these words: "Paid by note in terms thereof." While the note was running the policy was assigned for value with the assent of the company, to the plaintiff, to whom the receipt was delivered by the assured:-Held, that no estoppel was created by the receipt; that there was no duty upon the company to have afforded the plaintiff an opportunity of paying the premium; and that the policy was void.

-Premium note-Condition as to non-payment not indorsed on face of policy-R.S. C. c. 124, s. 27.]-G. made application for a policy of insurance upon his life in the defendant company, the amount insured to be paid in case of the death of the insured to plaintiff. The defendant com-pany accepted the risk, and issued and delivered the policy, the premium upon which was to be paid half-yearly in advance. G. paid the first premium partly in eash and partly by giving his promissory note payable two months after date. The form of application signed by G. contained an agreement on his part that if any note given for the first or any subsequent premium or any part thereof were not paid when due, any policy issued under said application should cease to be in force without any notice or action on the part of the company. The note given by G. fell due on the 18th July and was not paid. G. died on the 7th August, and after his death the amount due on the note was tendered to the company and refused:-Held, 1. The stipulation avoiding the policy for non-payment of the note was inoperative, not being set out on the face of the policy in compliance with the provisions of R.S.C. c. 124, s. 27. 2. Under all the circumstances of the case the note given by G. and accepted by the company was an absolute payment. 3. The day before his death (in 1902) the assured made a will by which he directed that the whole of his estate should be divided amongst his childrenthere being both adult and infant children -in equal shares, but made no reference whatever to the benefit certificate or to the moneys payable thereunder:-Held, that the infant children of the assured were entitled to the whole of the moneys, by virtue of the amendment made to the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, s. 151, sub-s. 6, by 1 Edw. Held, also, that the plaintiff was not bound to exhaust, before the action, the appeals within the society provided for by the rules, for under R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, s. 80, every lawful claim against an insurance corporation under an insurance contract shall become legally payable 60 days after proper proof of loss, and any rules, conditions, or stipulations to the contrary shall, as against the assured, be void. A pro-vision of the defendants' constitution provided that the plaintiff must sign an acceptance subscribed thereto, which he had not done until shortly before the action brought. Held, that the defendants, having assessed the plaintiff and accepted payment of the assessments on the footing of an existing certificate, and having accepted proofs of claim and paid part on account thereof, had waived this requirement. Held, also, that the optional or special benefit which the plaintiff was claiming being payable in full and not by instalments, he was not estopped from insisting that the whole of the benefit was due, merely by reason of having accepted a cheque expressed to be for the full amount of the first instalment thereof. Judgment of MacMahon, J., varied.

—Condition of policy—Payment of premium—Delivery of policy—Evidence—Art. 1233 C.O.]—The production from the custody of representatives of the insured, of a policy of life insurance, raises a prima facie presumption that it was duly delivered and the premium paid, but where the consideration of the policy is therein declared to be the payment of the first premium upon the delivery of the policy, parol testimony may be adduced to show that, as a matter of fact, the premium was not so paid and that the delivery of the policy to the person therein named as the insured was merely provisional and conditional. The reception of proof, cannot under the circumstances, be considered as the admission of oral testimony in contradiction of a written instrument, and in the Province of Quebec, in commercial matters, such evidence is admissible under the provisions of art. 1233 of the Civil Code.

-Application-Issue of policy-Completed contract-Antedating policy-Policy not to take effect before first payment of premium-Due dates of premium.] - The initialing of an application for insurance by officers of an insurance company, though indicating acceptance of the risk, does not without communication of the fact to the applicant constitute any contract with him. If a policy is afterwards prepared and the applicant informed that it is ready for him, this will constitute an acceptance of the original application; and such policy may be properly antedated to the date of the application. A provision in the applieation and policy, that the insurance shall not be binding on the company, or the policy go into effect until payment of the first premium, will not postpone or affect the due dates at which the respective premiums will fall due, so as to make them different from those mentioned in the policy. Per Boyd, C.: Acceptance of the policy by the applicant without objection after paying his first premium and a subsequent payment of the second premium by him according to the terms of the policy, is cogent, and after his death conclusive evidence of his contract as expressed in the policy.

—Life insurance—Revocation by assured of benefit declared in policy—By what law governed—Bevocation by will—Lien for premiums.]—A contract of life insurance entered into between a company whose head office is in Ontario, the policy having issued from the head office and providing for payment of the insurance money there. as an Ontario contract, and must be interpreted and carried out in accordance with Ontario law, although the assured lived in Manitoba and made application there to a local agent for the insurance, but an assignment of or dealing with the benefits of the policy made by the assured in Manitoba will be governed by the law of this province relating thereto. Deceased, who was a resident of Manitoba, insured his life with the London Insurance Co. of Canada. whose head office was in Ontario, and by tne policy the insurance money was appro-priated in favour of his wife, but by his will he absolutely revoked this appropriation and directed that the money should become part of his estate and should be paid to his executor. Sec. 12 of the Life Assurance Act, R.S.M., c. 88, as re-enacted by 62 & 63 Vict. c. 17, permits such a revocation and new disposition of the insurance money, but the corresponding statutory provision in Ontario (R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, s. 160) forbids it:—Held, that the law of Manitoba must be applied to the determination of the question as to the right of the assured to make such new disposition, and that the insurance money must be paid to the executor as part of the de-ceased's estate. Toronto General Trusts Co. v. Sewell (1889), 17 O.R. 442, and Lee v. Abdy (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 309, followed. Held, also, that a will is an instrument in writing within the meaning of the Manitoba Statute above referred to. dowment as well as to an all lite policy. In an action by the company for cancellation of the policy under said Act a return of the premiums paid will not be made a condition of obtaining cancellation. Judgment of Court of Appeal, 2 Oat. L.R. 559, varied.

Brophy v. North American Life Assurance Co., 32 Can. S.C.R. 261.

Condition in policy-Payment of premium-Delivery of policy-Art. 2481 C.C.1-On February 24th, 1900, plaintiff's husband applied to the defendant company for insurance on his life, the application containing this stipulation: The policy asked for, if issued, will only come into force when the first premium has been actually paid to the company and accepted while the applicant for insurance is alive and in good health." When making the application the applicant paid $4 on account of the first premium, and the medical examination having been satisfactory the company issued the policy at New York on March 8th, 1900, and mailed it on the 9th March to its agent at Montreal, who re-ceived it in the daytime on Saturday. March 10th. On March 8th the applicant was attacked with congestion of the lungs, from which he died on March 10th between 9.30 and 10 o'clock a.m. The plaintiff afterwards tendered the balance of the premium to the agent, who refused to deliver up the policy:—Held, that if in principle, the acceptance of the application constitutes a valid contract of insurance (art. 2481 C.C.) in this case, such acceptance was made subject to the above condition and that not having been complied with no contract for insurance existed. Held, also, that in view of the said condition the deposit of the policy in the post office at New York did not constitute a delivery of it to the assured.

-- Medical examination-Misstatements and concealments-Materiality-Breach of warranty-Cancellation of policy.]-In the plaintiff's application to the defendants for a policy of life insurance, he warranted, amongst other things, that the answers in the medical examination which formed part thereof, were full, complete and true, and without any suppression of facts, so far as such answers were material to the contract of insurance to be based thereon. In the examination the plaintiff stated that he had not consulted or been attended by a physician for six years prior thereto, whereas he had consulted four physicians within four months immediately before the examination. He also stated that he had not had any illness, except a slight attack of la grippe, for three years next before his examination, whereas he had been ill for two months immediately before his examination, and had consulted two doctors, who told him that he was suffering from, at any rate, anemia. The plaintiff also concealed several symptoms of phthisis or tuberculosis from the examining doctor, which he afterwards admitted to him that he had at the time of examination. He also warranted that he was free from disease, whereas he had phthisis or tuberculosis, which though undeveloped by physical signs, was existing:—Held, that these statements and concealments were material and constituted a breach of warranty, and, therefore, the policy was void. Judgment was given for the defendants in their counterclaim for delivery up of the policy to be cancelled.

Montreal Coal & Towing Co. v. British Empire Mutual Life Co., 5 Que. P.D. 302 (Davidson, J.).

- Note given for premium-Right to recever on-Consideration.]-An application for a policy of life insurance in the plaintiff company contained the following provision: "In consideration of the acceptance of this application and the expense incurred in connection therewith, I will accept said policy, when issued, and pay the first annual premium thereon, and if . or renewal or renewals thereof, given for the first or any subsequent premium, or any part thereof, be not paid when due, and policy issued hereunder will cease to be in force without any notice or action on the part of the company, but nevertheless the liability to pay such note . . shall continue and be enforceable, provided the company will revive the policy in its terms, on production of satisfactory evidence of continued good health." A promissory note, given by defendant, for one-half of the premium on the policy issued by the plaintiff company, was not paid at maturity, and the company notified plaintiff that the policy was forfeited, and made an entry to that effect on their books. The defence to the action on the note was failure or want of eonsideration. It appearing that, in addition to the considerations mentioned in the application, defendant had been insured for at least five months:-Held, dismissing defendant's appeal, with costs, and affirming the conclusion of the County Court Judge, that there was valuable consideration for the note, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover. Also, that the effect of the words in the application "provided the company will revive," etc., was merely to signify the terms upon which a policy forfeited under the rules of the company could be revived, and formed an agreement on the part of the company independent of the payment of the premium. Per Graham, E.J., that if the provision in the apprication was void, not being endorsed on the policy, the policy remained in force, and there was no failure of consideration; while, if, on the other hand, the provision was valid, although not indorsed, it was binding upon defendant, and he must pay the note whether the policy remained in force or not.

Home Life Association v. Walsh, 36 N.S. R. 73.

-Condition of policy-Premium in arrear -Acceptance of payment.]-When by the condition of a policy of life insurance the non-payment of a premium when due will avoid it, and it is likewise provided that payment of a premium in arrear will only be accepted on the consent in writing of the President, Vice-President, or Secretary being given thereto, acceptance of payment after it became due, and transmission of a receipt signed by the Secretary amounts to such consent and validates the payment. The fact that the insured was dying when such payment was made, the company having made no enquiries as to his state of health, and no false representation having been made, does not invalidate it.

-Friendly society-Altering beneficiary-Privileged beneficiary-Statutory restrictions.]-The designation of a beneficiary in an Ontario contract of insurance can be revoked, and the benefit diverted to another, only within the limits laid down by the Ontario Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1397, c. 203, s. 151, even though the original designation of the beneficiary be expressly made subject to power of revocation and substitution reserved, and to the by-laws of the insurers, which by-laws permit the desired change. Thus in such a case the attempted diversion of the benefit from a beneficiary of a privileged class to a beneficiary not belonging to that class was held invalid by reason of sub-s. 3 of s. 151 of the Act.

—Premium note—Suit by agent of the company — Consideration — Onus probandi.]
—Where a promissory note was given to the agent of an insurance company in payment of a first premium on a policy; and a policy was issued and sent to the insured and retained by him, containing provisions to the effect that the insurance should not take effect or be binding until the first premium had been paid to the company or a duly authorized agent; also, that if a promissory note or obligation were given for the premium, and should not be paid at maturity, the policy should not be in force while the default continued. but the party should be liable on the note. the Court refused to set aside a verdict for the agent of the company on the note, on the plea that there was no consideration.

-Arbitration before action-Condition in policy.]-In an action on a policy, on which was endorsed a condition that in case any question should arise "it is a condition of this policy, which the assured by the acceptance thereof agrees to abide by, every such difference shall be referred to the arbitration and decision of a mutual person . . . and the decision of the arbitrator shall be final and binding on all parties, and shall be conclusive evidence of the amount payable, . . it is hereby expressly stipulated and declared that the obtaining of an award by such arbitrator shall be a condition precedent to the liability or obligation of the corporation to pay or satisfy any claim under this policy," etc. "Provided, also, that compliance with the stipulations endorsed hereon is a condition precedent to the right to recover on this policy'':- Held, that an action did not lie on the policy, nor did the amount payable under it become due, until the determination of the arbitrator to be appointed under the agreement to refer contained in the condition. Held, also, that the condition was not in contravention of s. 80 of The Ontario Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203. Spurrier v. La Cloche, [1902] A.C. 446, followed.

—Benevolent society—Certificate—''Legal heirs designated by will''—Election.]—A certificate issued by a benevolent society to a married woman on the 25th of October, 1892, provided that the benefit was to be payable to her "legal heirs as designated by her will." She died on the 14th of November, 1892, leaving her husband and her three children surviving her. By her will, dated the 30th of September, 1892, she gave specific properties and legacies to her husband and each of her three children by name, the insurance to her executors "for the purpose of paying thereout all debts due by me," and the residue to her children:—Held, that the bequest of the insurance money to the executors was in-operative; that it was payable to the three children as "legal heirs designated by will," and that the children were not bound to elect between the benefits specifically given to them and the insurance

-Life insurance-Delivery of policy-Escrow-Incontestability-Operation of conditions.]-An application for life insurance, dated 16th September, 1894, and made part of the contract to be effected, provided that the issue and delivery of a policy in the usual form should be the only acceptance thereof, and that the place of contract, for all purpose, should be the head office of the company at Toronto. The policy insured the applicant's life to the 5th day of October, 1895, and provided that it would not be in force until the first premium had been paid and accepted and the first receipt delivered to the insured, and the attesting clause stated that the company affixed its seal and the President and Managing Director signed and delivered this contract "at the City of Toronto this 27th day of September, A.D. 1894." The insured lived in British Columbia, and the policy and receipt were mailed at Toronto on September 27th to the company's agent at Winnipeg, and forwarded by him on October 1st to the insured, who would not receive it before October 7th. The insured died on 30th September, 1897:-Held, Taschereau, C.J., dissenting, that the policy and receipt were delivered and the contract of insurance was completed, at least as early as 27th September, 1894, when the papers were mailed at Teronte. The policy provided that, after being in force for three years, only certain specified conditions therein should be bind ing on the holder, and in all other respects the liability of the company thereunder should not be disputed. The insured violated a condition, but not one so specified, that would have avoided the policy for this clause:—Held, that said provision covered breaches of conditions made during the three years the policy was in force. and was not confined to those committed subsequently thereto, and as the three years expired on 27th September, 1897, the insured dying three days later, the company was liable.

The North American Life Assurance Company v. Elson, 33 Can. S.C.R. 383.

-Application — Materiality of answers-Evidence-Onus-Bona fides.]-A defence to an action on a policy of life insurance was that the insured in his application, made in 1891, stated he was forty-one, whereas in fact he was forty-four:-Held. that evidence of statements made by the insured many years before the application, tending to show his belief that he was born in 1850, for the purposes of showing bona fides, was improperly rejected. The jury found that the statement in the application that the insured was born in 1850 was untrue and was material, and although there was no evidence to that effect, that it was made in good faith:-Held, that on these answers judgment should have been entered for the defendants, the onus being on the persons seeking to uphold the contract to prove the bona fides of the answers. New trial ordered to permit plaintiff to adduce evidence of good faith which had been rejected.

Dillon v. The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, 5 O.L.R. 434, 2 C.L.R. 10 (C.A.).

-Policy-When complete-Insured taking hazardous employment without permission -Retention of premium paid-Estoppel.]-A policy of insurance "signed, sealed and delivered" by the President and Managing Director of an insurance company is complete and binding as against the company from the date of execution, though in fact it remains in the company's possession, unless there remains some act to be done by the other party to declare his adoption of it. A life policy was subject to a condition making it void if the insured took a hazardous employment without the written permission of the President, Vice-President or Managing Director of the Company. The assured did take such employment without the written permission of any of the officers named, but with the assent of the company's provincial agent, and after the change of occupation paid a premium which was retained by the Company with knowledge of the change of occupation:-Held, Company was estopped from taking advantage of the forfeiture clause.

Bouchard v. Hétu, 6 Que. P.R. 44 (Charbonneau, J.).

—Policy payable to mother—Surrender—New policy—Change of beneficiary.]—In 1888 the deceased insured his life for $1,000, payable at death, in favour of his mother as sole beneficiary. In 1894 he assumed to surrender that policy in consideration of a sum of money and a paid-up policy for $500, payable at his death. By the latter policy it was provided that the sum insured was to be paid to his mother, or, 'in the event of her prior death,' to a sister, or, if the insured should survive the aforesaid beneficiaries, 'to his legal representatives or assigns.' The mother died in 1901 and the assured in 1903—Held, that the sister was entitled to the insurance money as against the executors of the mother.

—Application for insurance—Misrepresentation.]—One who has signed a document containing an agreement to take out an insurance policy and pay the first premium without first reading it, and believing, on the representations made by the person who procured his signature, that it only contained a request for information in view of insurance upon his life to be effected, can prove by oral testimony the error which induced him to sign it.

Imperial Life Assurance Co. v. Aigneault, Q.R. 25 S.C. 75 (Sup. Ct.).

—Application for insurance—Withdrawal—Company's receipt—Note to agent for premium.]—The defendants signed in application to the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York for insurance on the lives of S. F., R. F., E. F., and G. H. W., members and directors of the defendant company. When the application was given the plaintiff, the agent of the company took from the defendants their note, payable to his own order for the amount of the premium, and gave the defendants a receipt on one of the company's forms, which contained this provision: "The insurance so applied for shall be in force from this date, provided that the said application shall be accepted and approved by the said company at its head office in the City of New York, and a policy there on duly issued. In case the application is not so accepted and approved and no policy is issued, or should the applicant receive no notification from the company within thirty days from the date of this receipt of any application, then in every such case no incurance shall be effected, and it shall be understood and agreed that the company declines the risk, whereupon all moneys paid hereunder shall be returned on the delivery of this receipt." The plaintiff discounted the note and placed the amount to his own credit, and paid the amount of the premiums, less his commission to his principals. After the note was discounted, but before the application was accepted, the defendants notified the plaintiff and his principal at its head office in New York that they withdrew the application:-Held, in an action on the note by the agent, that the application was a mere proposal for insurance, and might be with-drawn at any time before acceptance; that the consideration for the note having failed, defendants were not liable in an action by the payee.

Johnson v. Flewwelling Manufacturing Company, 36 N.B.R. 397.

-War risk-Service in South Africa-Extra premium-Special condition-Consideration for premium.]-Policies on the lives of members of the fourth contingent for the war in South Africa were issued and accepted on condition of payment in each case of an extra annual premium "whenever and as long as the occupation of the assured shall be that of soldier in army of Great Britain in time of war." Each policy also provided that the assured "has hereby consented to engage in military service in South Africa in the army of Great Britain, any restriction in the policy con-tract notwithstanding." The restrictions were against engaging in naval or military service without a permit, and travelling or residing in any part of the torrid zone. The contingent arrived at South Africa after hostilities ceased and an action was brought against the company for return of the extra premium on the ground that the insured had never been soldiers of the army of Great Britain in time of war:-Held, Girouard and Davies, JJ., dissenting, that the risk taken by the company of the war continuing for a long time an the insurance remaining in force so long as the annual premiums were paid, was a sufficient consideration for the extra premium, and it could not be recovered back. Held, also, that the permission to engage in war in South Africa was a waiver of the restriction against travelling in the torrid zone. Provident Savings Life v. Bellew, 35 Can. S.C.R. 35.

—Husband and wife—Proceeds of life pollicy payable to her—Separate estate.]—The plaintiff was a judgment creditor of the defendant, by virtue of a judgment payable out of her separate estate, recovered on bills of exchange accepted by the defendant, a married woman engaged in trade, for her trade debts, subsequent to 13th April, 1897. Afterwards on the death of her husband, she became entitled to the proceeds of a policy of insurance on his life, which he made payable to her as beneficiary:-Held, that the effect of s. 159 of c. 203 R.S.O. 1897 is to create a statutory trust of the money, payable under the policy, in favour of the wife without restraint on anticipation; that on the death of her husband the absolute right to the money became vested in her, her original interest in the trust being separate property within the contemplation of The Married Woman's Property Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 163, and that the fruits of the trust must be regarded as separate property and as such liable to satisfy the plaintiff's judgment.

Doull v. Doelle, 10 O.L.R. 411 (D.C.).

Benefit of wife and children-Declaration by will-Identification of policy.]-A testator, being the holder of a policy of life insurance, payable to "his order or heirs," made his will by which he devised real estate, and proceeded: "I give the residue of my property, including life insurance, to my wife . . . and to my youngest children . .: -Held, that the will sufficiently identified the policy within the meaning of s. 160 of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, and operated as a valid declaration under the statute in favour of wife and children to the exclusion of creditors. Re Cheesborough (1897), 30 O.R. 639, applied. Held, also, that the word "including" in the will did not mean that the life insurance was a part of the residuary estate, but that it was given in addition to the residuary estate.

Re Harkness, 8 O.L.R. 720 (Teetzel, J.).

—Bequest to wife—Subject to payment of debts.]—Policies of life insurance were, by the terms thereof, made payable to the insured's personal representatives, but, by his will, after directing the payment of his just debts, etc., out of his general estate, he devised and bequeathed to his widow, all his estate, including the policies, subject to the payment of said debts:—Held, that the widow only took the policies subject to the payment of the debts.

-Application for-Withdrawal before acceptance-Contract-Recovery of premium.]-The plaintiff signed an application to the defendant company for an insurance on his life and paid the first year's premium. In the premium receipt the following words were printed: "The insurance will be in force from the date of approval of the application by the medical director," and the application contained statements of the payment of the premium, and that a receipt had been furnished "to make the insurance binding from make the insurance . . . binding from the date of approval by the company's medical director" and that the contract should not take effect until accepted by the head office. Before the approval of the application by the medical director the plaintiff withdrew the application:-Held, that what took place was a mere offer of a risk on the plaintiff's life and that he was entitled to withdraw it and to recover the premium paid. North American Life Assurance Co. v. Lamothe, 7 Que. P.R. 159 (Davidson, J.).

-Beneficiaries, designation of-Legal heirs -Preferred beneficiaries]-By a beneficiary certificate issued in 1901, a benevolent society agreed to pay $2,000 to the beneficiary or beneficiaries designated therein, with a reservation of powers of revocation and substitution. The beneficiaries were designated by an endorsement whereby payment was to be made to three named persons, "executors in trust for legal heirs," the insured having at this time a son and grandson living. In 1902, after the death of the son, the insured by a declaration in writing directed the moneys to be paid to a daughter-in-law, and by his all he also so assumed to dispose of the moneys. The insured died in 1904, leaving him surviving his grandson and several brothers and sisters. On a claim made by the grandson as the legal heir:-Held, that by the use of the words "legal heirs" an irrevocable declaration was not created in favour of the persons who would answer that description on the death of the insured as preferred beneficiaries under s. 159 of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, for, according to the true construction of the contract, "legal heirs" meant children, and on the death of the insured's only son the designation failed, and the insured had therefore the right to designate another beneficiary, which was properly exercised in favour of the daughterin-law. Judgment of Meredith, C.J.C.P., 9 O.L.R. 517, affirmed. Re Farley 10 O.L.R. 540.

-Warranty--Misstatement and concealment in application.]-The action was to recover indemnity payable under a bond issued by the defendants to W. The defence alleged that deceased warranted that he was confined to his house by sickness five years before the application, when in fact he had been confined to the house by a severe atack of apoplexy within four year, of the application. All the issues were found by the trial Judge in favour of the plaintiffs except that as to the date of the attack of apoplexy, and, on the ground that there was misrepresentation as to this fact, he gave judgment for the defendants. On appeal to the full Court this judgment was set aside and judgment directed to be entered for the plaintiffs. On appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada: -Held, Gwynne and Paterson, JJ., dissenting, affirming the judgment appealed from, (20 N.S. Rep. 347), that there was no statement made by the deceased, although so found at the trial, that the attack of apoplexy occurred five years before the application, nor was that issue raised by the pleadings. Per Strong, J., that upon the evidence, the merits of the case were not such as to warrant the Supreme Court in allowing a new defence by way of amendment to be set up at this Mutual Relief Society v. Webster (1889), 1 S.C. Cas. 463.

-Thirty days' grace-Condition as to payment of premium - Estoppel.]-An insurance for $4,000 in the defendant company effected on the life of the plaintiff's husband and payable to her, was some time afterwards, in consideration of an annuity of $1,500, made payable to her, assigned by her to her husband with a proviso that if he predeceased her, such annuity was to be a charge on the proceeds. By one of the conditions thirty days' grace for payment of a premium was allowed, if the insured were unable to do so when it became due, which the plaintiff stated was the fact, while by s. 148 (1) of the Insurance Act, R.S.O., c. 203, payment of any premium, not being an initial premium, might be made within thirty days after becoming due, by the insured or her beneficiary under the contract, when it would ipso facto be revived or renewed, any stipulation to the contrary notwithstanding. The insured died about ten days after a premium had become due, leaving the premium unpaid. A firm of solicitors, acting for the insured's family, at once notified the company of the death, and not knowing whether or not the premium had been paid, but thinking that payment might have been overlooked, asked, if it had not, to advise them, and they would pay it. Subsequently, on the same day, the plaintiff called at the head office and saw the secretary, who, with full knowledge of the fact of such non-payment; stated, in answer to her enquiry, that the policy was all right as far as he knew. The solicitors' letter had been handed over to the company's solicitor with instructions to answer it, which he did, by merely asking them to send in proofs of loss, and that the matter would receive prompt attention, making no answer to the enquiry as to non-payment. Administration was taken out by the plaintiff and proofs duly furnished, and it was not until some months afterwards, on the solicitors enquiring when the amount of the policy would be paid, that they were informed that the company contested payment for non-payment of the premium:—Held, that the plaintiff was a beneficiary under the contract and entitled to make a claim under the policy; and that the company were estopped by their conduct from setting up the non-payment of the premium.

Tattersall v. People's Life Insurance Co., 9 O.L.R. 611 (D.C.).

-Conditions of contract-Misrepresentation-Non-disclosure - Accident policies-Warranties.] - Unless the evidence so strongly predominates against the verdict as to lead to the conclusion that the jury have either wilfully disregarded the evidence or failed to understand or appreciate it, a new trial ought not to be granted. On an application for life insurance, the applicant stated, in reply to questions as to insurances on his life then in force, that he carried policies in several life insurance companies named, but did not mention two policies which he had in accident in-surance companies insuring him against death or injury from accidents. The questions so answered did not specially refer to accident insurance, but the policy provided that the statements in the application should constitute warranties and form part of the contract:-Held, affirming the judgment appealed from, the Chief Justice dissenting, that "accident insurance" is not insurance of the character embraced in the term "insurance on life" contained in the application and, consequently, that the questions had been sufficiently and truthfully answered according to the natural and ordinary meaning of the words used, and, even if the words used were capable of interpretation as having another or different meaning, then the language was ambiguous and the construction as to its meaning must be against the company by which the questions were framed. Subsequent refusal to give such writing does not create a right of conservatory seizure.

-Natural premium system-Level premium-Mortuary calls-Rate of assessment -Fraud-Rescission of contract-Estoppel.]-A took out a policy on his life in a mutual association relying on statements contained in circulars issued by the association stating that interest on the reserve fund would be sufficient to cover increases in death rates and make the policy, after a certain period, self-sustaining. The rates having been increased, A. paid the assessments for some years under protest and then allowed his policy to lapse and sued for a return of the payments he had made with interest and for a declaration that the contracts were void ab initio:-Held, (Sedgewick and Nesbitt, JJ., dissenting), that the statements in the circulars only expressed the expectation of the managers of the association as to the future and did not prevent the rates being increased in the discretion of the directors. The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association v. Foster (20 Times L.R. 715) distinguished. The Provident Savings Life Assurance Society v. Mowat (32 Can. S.C.R. 147) referred to. Per Taschereau, C.J. Agent." This memo. was not filled up and the policy was not, in fact, counter-signed by the agent. The case was first tried before McDonald, C.J., without a jury, and a judgment entered in favour of the plaintiff was affirmed by the Su-preme Court of Nova Scotia, but on appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada the judgment was set aside and a new trial ordered (10 Can. S.C.R. 92). The second trial was before McDonald, C.J., and a jury when a judgment was entered in favour of the plaintiff on the fudings of Upon appeal to the Supreme the jury. Upon appeal to the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia this judgment was affirmed, but a further appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada was allowed, and a new trial ordered (13 Can. S.C.R. 218). The third trial was before Townshend, J., and a jury, and a judgment was again given for the plaintiff upon the findings of the jury. This judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, and on appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada: —Held, Gwynne, J., dissenting, that the judgment of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia should be affirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs. Held, per Strong, J., that nothing but strictly legal evidence having been submitted to the jury, and the whole question being one of fact, the third verdict in favour of the plaintiff should be sustained.

—Assignment of policy—Assignee's selection of option—Revocation of selection.]—The assured assigned shortly before its maturity an endowment policy to a creditor by an assignment absolute in form, there being an agreement however that the creditor should apply to the company for the cash surrender value and should pay the surplus thereof over his indebtedness to the assured's wife. The assignee after the time limited by the policy for the purpose elected to take the cash surrender value. After this judgment creditor of the assured obtained an attaching order against the company. The assignee then before an action had been taken by the company in respect of the election made by him revoked it and the husband executed a declaration that the policy was to be held, subject to the assignment, for the benefit of his wife:—Held, that the assigne's election not having been made within the time limited was a mere proposal to the company; that his revocation before action taken by the company put an end to it; and that the cash surrender value was not payable by the company. Held, also, that in any event, notwithstanding the attaching order, the assured's declaration in his wife's favour took effect and defeated the attaching creditor's claim. The principle of Weeks v. Frawley (1893) 23 O.R. 235, approved and applied.

-- Preferred beneficiaries -- Survivorship-Onus of proof.]-The insured in a policy effected by him in favour of his wife and two of his children, which had not been varied by him, perished with his wife in a storm on one of the Great Lakes, and there was no evidence of survivorship. The personal representatives of the wife claimed a third share of the policy moneys, which had been paid into Court:-Held, that, apart from the operation of sub-s. 8, s. 159, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, as amended, a preferred beneficiary under a policy within sub-s. 1 of that section, only acquires an interest contingent upon being alive when the insured dies; and that the wife's representatives being unable to prove that she was living at the time her husband died, were not entitled to the share claimed by them Order made declaring the fund to be the property of the two children in equal shares.

—Benefit certificate—Attempt to change beneficiary—Necessity of consent—Trust.] —Under an insurance certificate for $3,000, issued by a society in 1882, the insured's wife was made the beneficiary, and the certificate was delivered to her and always remained in her possession. In 1886 the husband purported to surrender the certificate, procuring another one to be issued in favour of his son and daughter, which was delivered to the daughter, who had always retained it. In 1887 the wife procured a divorce from her husband, which was admitted to be invalid; and in 1889 the husband went through a form of marriage with one E., when he purported to surrender the last-mentioned certificate, procuring another one to be issued in E.'s favour, to whom it was delivered, and who always retained possession of it. On the husband's death a claim made by E. was settled, and the question was as to the rights of the wife and children under the respective certificates:-Held, that under the statute then in force, 47 Vict. c. 20 (O.), the first certificate became a trust in the wife's favour, over which, so long as she lived, the husband had no control except under ss. 5 and 6 of that Act, which, however, did not empower him to surrender and replace it by another, for this only could be done with the wife's consent under 48 Vict. c. 28, s. 1, sub-s. 3 (O.), and that the wife's rights were not affected by sub-s. 5 of s. 160, R.S.O. 1897, the assured not having availed himself of the power conferred by that section.

Cartwright v. Cartwright, 12 O.L.R. 272 (Teetzel, J.).

-Thirty days' grace-Payment of premium - Estoppel - Beneficiary.] - Held, affirming the judgment of the Divisional Court, 9 O.L.R. 611, that, under the circumstances there fully set out, the plain-tiff was a beneficiary under the contract and entitled to claim under the policy; that under s. 148 (I.), if a policy is kept alive or renewed by payment of the premium by the assured or any of the beneficiaries within 30 days after default, although the insured may have died during such period of grace, and that here the assured was "unable to pay" the renewal premium within the meaning of condition 5 of the policy, and that the company was estopped by their conduct rrom setting up the non-payment of the premium.

Tattersall v. People's Life Insurance Co., 11 O.L.R. 326 (C.A.). [Affirmed by S. C. Canada, 37 Can. S.C.R. 690]

-Note given for premium-Failure to meet-Termination of contract.]-A policyholder in the defendant company gave to one of the company's agents a promissory note for a premium which he was unable to pay. The note was discounted and the proceeds paid into the agent's private account, the receipt for the premium being attached to the note to be handed over on payment at maturity. The note was not paid, and a renewal note was given for a smaller amount, the difference being paid by the agent. When the latter note fell due the assured was again unable to pay, and a second renewal note was given, subject, as both giver and taker both fully understood and agreed, to a further arrangement or undertaking, to be come to at the end of the then current month, when the premium would have to be reported by the agent. Subsequently the assured told the agent that he could not pay the difference due on the original note, and would have to let the policy go, and was informed that, in that case, there was nothing for the agent to do but send the receipt back, which he did. The assured died some time afterwards, and later, the note fell due and was retired by the agent. The jury having found under these circumstances, in an action brought by the assured's widow, that the premium due under the policy was paid to defendant's agent in each when the first note was discounted, and that payment was made at the head office of the company:-Held, that the findings must be set aside, and judgment entered dismissing the action. Semble, that the acceptance of the notes, under the circumstances stated, amounted, at most, to an extension of the time for payment, Hutchings v. National Life Assurance

-Condition of policy-Premium note-Payment of premium.]-When the renewal premium on a policy of life assurance became due the assured gave the local agent of the insurance company a note for the amount of the premium, with interest added, which the agent discounted, placing the proceeds to his own credit in his bank account. The renewal receipt was not countersigned nor delivered to the assured and the agent did not remit the amount of the premium to the company. When the note fell due it was not paid in full and a renewal note was given for the balance, which remained unpaid at the time of the death of the assured. The conditions of the policy declared that if any note given for a premium was not paid when due the policy should cease to be in force:-Held, affirming the judgment appealed from, 38 N.S.R. 15, Davies and Maclennan, JJ., dissenting, that the transactions that took place between the assured and the agent did not constitute a payment of the premium and that the policy had lapsed on default to meet the note when it became due. -Benefit society-Rights of member-Action to establish-Domestic forum.]-An action to establish the right of a person to membership in a benefit society will not be entertained by the Court, even where the society submits to the jurisdiction, until the remedies provided by the constitution of the society have been exhausted. A dispute arose as to the plaintiff's right to continue to be a member of the defendant society, and a body of officials of the society decided against him; the plaintiff, instead of appealing to the Grand Lodge, as permitted by the constitution (by which he was admittedly bound), brought an action against the society. The action was dismissed, but without costs, and without prejudice to any other action being brought after the remedies provided by the constitution should be exhausted.

Zilliax v. Independent Order of Foresters, 13 O.L.R. 155 (Riddell, J.).

—Application—Speculative purpose—Agent—False declaration.]—A contract of insurance, on the life of a person who makes application therefor without intending to benefit by it himself or to perform the obligations of an assured, but for purposes of speculation and of assigning the policy to a third party, is void. The assured who signs an application prepared or written by the agent of the insurer makes the latter his own agent for the purposes of such application. Therefore the contract embodying concealments and false declarations contained in said application may be annulled.

—Non-payment of premiums—Lapse—For-fetture.]—Held, reversing the judgment of Mabee, J., 14 O.L.R. 613, that upon the proper construction of the policies sued upon, in the circumstances disclosed in the evidence, both policies had lapsed and ceased to be in force at the time of the death of the person insured, and there could be no recovery thereon.

—Liability on note for premium when policy voided by non-payment.]—A person who applies for and receives a policy of life insurance and gives his promissory note for the amount of the first premium, payable in three months, cannot, by refusing to pay the note, and returning the policy, avoid liability for the full amount of the note, although the policy becomes void by reason of such non-payment. —Benevolent society—Appropriation of insurance benefit by will—Election.]—Interpleader at the instance of a benevolent society incorporated under 40 Vict. c. 25, now R.S.M. 1902, c. 18, the subject matter being the proceeds of a life insurance certificate or policy which the insured had made payable to his wife. By his will the insured made other provision for her and directed that the money in question should fall into and form part of his general estate:-Held, (1) That the case was not governed by the Life Insurance Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 83, and that the will did not operate as a good appointment of the fund under the rules of the society, which did not allow such an appropriation, that the direction of the will could not operate so as to make the money part of the general estate, and that the widow was entitled to it. (2) The widow was not put to her election, and was entitled to the full benefit of the will as well as to the moneys payable under the certificate.

-By-laws of association part of contract -Appointment of beneficiary-Failure of appointment.]-(1) A contract of life insurance arising out of membership in a foreign mutual benefit association is governed by the by-laws of the association, not incompatible with or contrary to the laws of this province, which are embodied in it. So, when the by-laws provide that the insurance is to be paid at death to the beneficiary or beneficiaries appointed by the member insured, from a stated category of relatives, and in case of no appointment, or of one that fails through appointment, or of the arrows that rais strongs the predecease of the appointee, then the amount shall be paid to his widow, the latter is entitled to it, to the exclusion of the testamentary or legal heirs of the member, even though, during life, he has revoked a former appointment of his wife as beneficiary. (2) An action in warranty by a defendant against his warrantor in a case of garantie simple brought before adjudication on the principal demand which is afterwards declared unfounded, will be dismissed with costs.

Chevalier v. The Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, 29 Que. S.C. 399 (Dunlop, J.).

—Qualified assignment—Interest of assignee—Declaration by legal representatives of the insured.]—An assignment of a policy of life insurance with a direction that in the event of death the amount be paid to the assignee, as his interest may appear, is a qualified assignment and casts on the assignee when claiming under the policy the obligation to establish an indebtedness of the assured to him. A declaration by the legal representatives of the insured that they do not pretend to have any claim under the policy will nittle the assignee to the full amount.

Dubrule v. Sun Life Insurance Co., 29 Que. S.C. 457 (Curran, J.).

-Surrender value of policy-Lapse of insurance.]-(1) When a policy of life insurance provides for a benefit to the insured or his representatives upon surrender of the policy, such a surrender means a giving up of the policy with an express or implied consent that it be cancelled. The deposit of the policy in the hands of the insurer for the purposes of a loan will not avail as a surrender under the covenant. (2) When it is provided in a policy that after the insurance has been maintained for two years, if it lapses by non-payment of the premium and application is made within six months thereafter, a benefit will still accrue, at the death of the insured, to his representatives, and the insured dies and his representatives apply for payment of the insurance within six months of the lapse thereof, such an application is sufficient to entitle them to the benefit of the proviso, though not made specifically there-

-Varying apportionment-Postponing payment till after full age-Ineffective provision.]-By her will a testatrix assumed to reapportion her insurance, reducing the interest of a "preferred beneficiary" from $500 to $250, and further directed that he should not be paid his share till the age of twenty-five. At the age of twenty-one, however, he claimed the right to immediate payment:-Held, that even if section 160 of the Insurance Act as to altering or varying apportionments of insurance moneys authorized such attempted postponement of payment, the provision was ineffective, for all persons who attain twenty-one are entitled to enter upon the absolute enjoyment of property given to them by will, notwithstanding any direction by the testator to the contrary, unless between twenty-one and the specified later age the property is given for the benefit of another, or so clearly taken away from the devisees up to the time of their attaining such greater age as to constitute an intestacy as to the previous rents and profits; and it is impossible to distinguish between such a provision in regard to insurance and a like provision in regard to personal property bequeathed by will.

-Payment at head office-Demand at-Ancillary probate.]-In an action against an insurance company on a life policy a verdiet was entered for the plaintiff on answers of the jury to questions submitted by the Court and counsel. Some of the answers on material issues were inconsistent and unsatisfactory, and some pertinent and relevant questions were not answered:--Held, that there should be a ew trial on the ground that the findings were incomplete, unsatisfactory and inconsistent. By the terms of the policy the defendants agreed to pay at its head office at the City of Hamilton in the Province of Ontario. Held, per Tuck, C.J., that a non-suit should not be granted on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove a demand at the head office, or on the ground that no ancillary probate had been taken out in Ontario before action brought.

Seery v. Federal Life Assurance Company, 38 N.B.R. 96.

-Benefit society-Change of beneficiary-Wife of member-Foreign divorce-Remarriage.]—The deceased was married in 1860, in Massachusetts, U.S., to M., where they both resided until 1886, when, in consequence of his becoming amenable to the criminal law, he left, and came to Can-ada, where he resided until his death, M. remaining in the State. In 1891, on proceedings taken by M., the deceased not appearing, she obtained a decree of divorce a vinculo upon the ground of desertion and cruelty. In 1896 the deceased went through a form of marriage with one C., and thereafter continued to live with her as his wife down to the time of his death. In 1889 the deceased insured in a fraternal society for $2,000, which by the certificate was made payable to his wife M., and was so continued until 1896, when he endorsed on the certificate a revocation of the payment to M., and procured a duplicate certificate to be issued, stating that M. was dead, and having the amount made payable to C. and an adopted daughter, and the insurance so continued until his death, C. for several years before his death paying the premiums: - Held, without deciding whether or not the divorce obtained by M. was valid, that she could not be heard to impugn the jurisdiction of the Court of the United States she had invoked to grant the divorce. Held, also, that it was not necessary to decide whether or not C.'s marriage was legal or the adopted daughter entitled, as the society had not contested their claims, and it was not open to M. to do so, and that C. and the adopted daughter were entitled to the moneys.

-Assignment of policy-Informal assignment-Security for debt.] - The holder of a policy of insurance on his own life intending to secure payment of a loan to him, signed a document addressed to the lenders in which he stated: "For collateral security I have placed aside and assigned to you a policy of insurance in the Standard Life Assurance Company for $2,000": -Held, that the effect of the document was to give the equitable right and title to the policy to the lenders of the money; and that other creditors could not claim as against them, for they could take no higher rights than the insured had at the time of his death.

-Bequest of proceeds of policy on testator's life-Several policies answering description-Preferred beneficiaries-Designation.]-A testator by his will bequeathed all his estate to his wife, subject to payment of his debts and four legacies of $50,000 each to his four children. The will also contained the following provision: "I also bequeath to each of the above named children one-quarter of the proceeds from a 5% gold bond policy issued by the Travellers of Hartford, Conn." The testator had four such policies, bearing the same date and in identical terms, in the Travel-lers' Insurance Company of Hartford, each for $25,000. Evidence was tendered to shew that the testator regarded the insurance as one contract for $100,000:-Held, that, even if such evidence were admissible, the bequest must be regarded as a gift of a bequest must be regarded as a girl of a single policy. Held, also, that a bequest of one of four policies, any one of which may be selected to answer the bequest, is not such a designation, even in favour of preferred beneficiaries, as meets the requirement of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, s. 159, that in a designation by will the policy shall be identified "by number or otherwise."

Benefit certificate—Disposal of fund— Wife and children-Income-Corpus.]-The whole of the deceased's estate consisted of $2,000, secured by a benefit certificate, by which it was made payable to his executors to be put at interest, to be paid to his wife, for the benefit of herself and children until her death or marriage, when it was to be paid to his children until the youngest attained twenty-one, when the principal was to be equally divided amongst them:-Held, that the intention was not that the wife and children should be jointly entitled to the interest, but that, until the wife's death or marriage, the whole should be payable to her, giving her a discretionary power as to its disposal according to the family needs and requirements, and that the corpus should not be distributable until her death or marriage, and until the youngest child attained twenty-one years of age.

-Declaration in favour of wife and children-Variation in favour of beneficiary who is also a creditor—Intention to exonerate estate from the debt—Invalidity.]—By sub-sec. 1 of s. 159 of the Ontario Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, the insurance money payable under a benefit certificate to preferred beneficiaries is constituted a trust fund therefor, and so long as any object of the trust remains shall not be subject to the control of the assured or his creditors or form part of his estate. By ss. 1 of s. 160 the insured is empowered to vary the apportionment in favour of one or more of the preferred beneficiaries. and by ss. 2 no authority is deemed to be conferred to divert the moneys from the class to a person not of the class or to the assured himself or to his estate. Under a benefit certificate in a fraternal society, the sum insured, $2,000, was made payable on the insured's death to his wife and children. Being indebted to a daughter in the sum of $3,000, he endorsed on the certificate a transfer of the insurance to, and surrendered the certificate and obtained a new one in favour of, such daughter, he undertaking to keep the insurance in force, and she, on being apprised thereof, acquiesced in the transfer, and agreed to release the insured from the debt:-Held, reversing the judgment of the Divisional Court, 14 O.L.R. 424, and restoring the order of Falconbridge, C.J., that the transfer was not invalid, either under the statute or as an improper exercise of a power of appointment, and that the other beneficiaries were debarred on equitable grounds from contesting the claim of the daughter to the insurance money. Re Kemp, 15 O.L.R. 339 (C.A.).

-Fraternal order-Secession of Grand Lodge from Supreme Lodge-Right of Supreme Lodge to operate in territory of seceding Grand Lodge.]—Up to the year 1904, the plaintiff Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, which had been incorporated under that the Province of Manitoba, had been carry-ing on the business of life insurance amongst its members in subordination to, and under a charter granted to it by, the defendant Supreme Lodge of the same order, which had its headquarters in Texas. In that year the plaintiff Grand Lodge refused any longer to be subject to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Lodge, or to levy or remit to the latter the special assessments demanded by it for a guarantee fund created for the purpose of meeting any excess over estimated death losses that might occur in any of the jurisdictions under the Supreme Lodge. In 1905 the Supreme Supreme Lodge. Lodge suspended the plaintiff Grand Lodge and organized a new Grand Lodge for Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta with subordinate lodges, all working in harmony with and under the control and supervision of the Supreme Lodge, and all using the words "Ancient Order of United Workmen" as part of their names. These newly created bodies at once commenced and thereafter carried on the business of fraternal life insurance in the same way as it had been carried on by the plaintiff Grand Lodge. They issued circulars and sent them to the members of the plaintiff Grand Lodge who still adhered to it as well as to other persons, and carried on an active propaganda in opposition to the plaintiffs:— Held, (1) The plaintiff Grand Lodge was not entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from using the name "Ancient Order of United Workmen" in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, or from earrying on business there in the name of the Supreme Lodge, A.O.U.W., or from collecting any money for life insur-ance from the members of the plaintiff Grand Lodge, or from soliciting such members to join or contract with the defendant Supreme Lodge or any of its subordinate lodges. (2) Although the plaintiff Grand Lodge had for a number of years levied and collected special assessments for the general guarantee fund created by the Supreme Lodge as above mentioned, and had voluntarily remitted some of these moneys to the treasurer of the Supreme Lodge, yet the evidence failed to shew that there was any contractual relationship existing between the two bodies by which the former was under any legal obligation to pay over to the latter any of the money raised by these assessments which had not been already paid over. (3) The defendant Supreme Lodge was not entitled to an injunction forbidding the plaintiffs, their members, servants or agents, to use the name "Ancient Order of United Workmen," as the plaintiff Grand Lodge had been legally incorporated in 1893, with the knowledge and consent of the Supreme knowledge and consent of the supreme Lodge, and had issued a great many bene-ficiary certificates for life insurance, a great proportion of which were still in force. The Supreme Lodge incurred no liability under these certificates, and to restrain the plaintiff from the use of its own name would be practically to nullify the powers conferred upon it by our Provincial laws for the benefit of a foreign corporation not even licensed to do business in Manitoba.

-Beneficiary-Revocation by will-Acceptance of benefit.1-Where a son insures his life and names his mother as beneficiary he can, afterwards, having married in the interval, revoke such stipulation by his will and bequeath the amount of the policy to his wife provided that his mother had not previously accepted the benefit. The fact that she had the policy in her possession and paid the premiums is not sufficient to establish that the mother had accepted the benefit when the surrounding circumstances did not show that she had made the payments for herself, for her own benefit and as having accepted, and do show that the policy had been placed in her hands. There should be, on the mother's part, some act done, or some circumstances shown, which would leave no doubt of the manifestation of her intention to accept and such was not shown in this case.

-Changing beneficiary-Identifying policy —''By number or otherwise''—Extrinsic evidence.]—R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, s. 160, "The Ontario Insurance Act" provides that the assured may vary a policy previously made so as to restrict, extend, etc., the benefits, or alter the apportionment, inter alia, by a will identifying the policy by a number or otherwise. The assured, in this case, being the holder of a beneficiary certificate in a benevolent society made payable to his wife, by his will bequeathed "out of my life insurance funds the sum of $200 to my sister," and "all the rest, residue and remainder of my insurance funds . . . to my daughter'':-Held, that this did not sufficiently identify the beneficiary certificate above mentioned, nor was it permissible to prove by extrinsic evidence that the testator must have referred to it as he held no other policies. Re Cheesborough (1897), 30 O.R. 639, specially discussed. Semble, even were it otherwise, the widow's claim would have been good to the extent of the $200 assumed to be bequeathed to the sister.

-Premium not paid in full at death-Acceptance of part after expiry of days of grace-Waiver of forfeiture.]-In an action upon a policy of life insurance the defence was that the assured or the plaintiff (his wife) did not pay the quarterly premium due on the 1st September, 1908, on that date, nor within one month thereafter. the period of grace allowed by the policy, whereupon the policy lapsed, and was not revived, and was at the date of the death of the assured, the 3rd November, 1908, null and void. The evidence showed that the defendants, by their practice, through their agents, with the knowledge and consent of the superior officers, took money on account of premiums whenever it was given to them, whether the period of grace had expired or not; and in this case, of the $2.55 premium due on the 1st September. $1 was paid on the 23rd September, $1 on the 1st October, and forty-five cents on the 24th October, these amounts being received by the defendants and carried into their books as good payments. The ten cents remaining due was, before the death, tendered to the agent to whom the plaintiff or the insured had been in the habit of paying, but was refused:-Held, that, even if there was no tender of the ten cents before death, the defendants were not in a position to forfeit the policy; by their dealing they were estopped from saying that the policy was not a current policy on the 24th October; and the defendants could not, on their own motion and without specific warning, afterwards revive the right to forfeit for non-payment of a small balance; and their implied engagement to accept that balance within a reasonable time remained operative though death ensued.

-Total disability through insanity-Suspension.]-M. was a regular beneficiary member of the defendant society, in good standing at the end of October, 1906, when he became, by reason of insanity, totally incapacitated from doing any work or fol-In November, lowing any employment. 1906, he went to an insane asylum, where he remained, his incapacity continuing, until his death on the 3rd April, 1909. His dues to the society were paid up to the end of February, 1908, but, as they were not paid after that date, he was suspended for non-payment of dues. He would have been entitled, under the constitution and laws of the society, to a total disability benefit of $1,000, had he or some one on his behalf applied for it when he was in good standing, but his wife did not become aware of this till shortly before the 13th January, 1909, when she applied for it, but was refused. She then brought this action for it, her husband being joined as a plaintiff suing by a next friend; he died before the action came to trial:-Held, upon reference to the constitution and laws of the society, that the member to obtain the benefit must be in good standing at the time he applies for it; and, express provision being made for an application by some one on behalf of the member where he is mentally incapacitated, the insanity in this case did not excuse the default; and the plaintiff was not entitled to re-

-Benefit society-By-law-Suspension for non-payment-Liquidation.]-The suspension of members of a benefit society for non-payment of dues, authorized by by-law, does not exclude them from membership which, and rights appertaining thereto, they still preserve. Thus, when the society is dissolved and is being wound up they have the right, in common with other members, to be notified and to receive their share (subject to reduction of what they owe) in the distribution made of the excess of assets over liabilities. If the liquidation and distribution takes place without regard to suspended members and without their being notified they can bring a joint action against all the other members to compel them to report to the Court the amounts they have respectively received in order that there may be a fresh distribution notwithstanding each defendant may have received and each of the claimants be entitled to a different sum.

-Payment of premium-Authority agent.]-An insurance company supplied an agent for soliciting insurance with printed forms on one of which was this clause: "If a cheque, draft or other obligation is given for the first or a subsequent premium, or for part thereof, and is not paid when due it is expressly agreed that any policy issued on this application or any contract for insurance effected thereon shall become null and void though the cheque or obligations remains payable," and in the margin was this question: "What cash premium has been paid to make the insurance, under this application, binding from this date providing the risk be assumed by the delivery of the company's policy? $——'':—Held, that this did not give a person who applied to such agent for a policy reasonable grounds for belief that he had authority to receive or collect the first premium and when the note of the applicant was given in payment and discounted by the agent who appropriated the proceeds the insurers incurred no liability.

Beaudoin v. Federal Life Assur. Co., Q.R. 35 S.C. 236 (Ct. Rev.).

—Benevolent society—Appropriation of insurance benefit by will.]—The destination of a benefit in the nature of life insurance conferred by membership in a benevolent society is to be determined solely by a consideration of the rules and regulations of the society, and, when such rules and regulations make full and explicit provisions as to the destination of such benefit, the insurance is not subject to the Life Insurance Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 83. Re Anderson (1906), 16 M.R. 177, followed. The testator's beneficiary certificate in the Canadian Order of Chosen Friends was expressed to be payable to his wife in the manner and subject to the conditions set forth in the laws governing the life insurance fund. Those laws prevented a member diverting the benefit to anyone not related to or dependent upon him unless there were no such persons, and provided that, in case of the prior death of the beneficiary "and no further or other disposition be made thereof" the benefit should go to the surviving children of the deceased member in equal shares:-Held, that it was not competent to the testator to divert by his will the benefit to his executors as part of his estate, although they were to take it in trust for the children, and that the proceeds should go to the children free from the claims of creditors of the deceased. Re Drysdale Estate, 18 Man. R. 644.

-Fraternal society-Payment of assessment—Rules of society—Membership in good standing in primary lodge.]-A certificate of membership issued to McK. in 1889 by the Orange Mutual Insurance Society of Ontario West set forth that he was a member of a certain (primary) Orange Lodge, a member in good standing of the Loyal Orange Association of America and of the insurance society. He undertook to pay all assessment to the insurance society, and to comply with all laws then or thereafter to be in force; and payment of the insurance was conditioned on proof being made of his good standing, at the time of his death, in the association and the insurance society. The defendants were incorporated by 53 Vict. c. 105 (D.), and established a benefit fund, and took over the certificates of insurance theretofore issued by the insurance society, and assumed liability therefore. The proofs of death prescribed required that there be a certificate of the primary lodge that the deceased was a member thereof in good standing at the time of his death. McK., being in arrear for dues to his primary lodge, was suspended in 1891 or 1892; in 1896 he applied for reinstatement, but did not pay his arrears; his name never appeared again upon the membership roll of his primary lodge, and nothing more was heard of him by that lodge until his death occurred in 1907, when an application was made for a certificate of good standing, which was refused. The annual assessments made by the defendants for the benefit fund had been paid on his behalf by one to whom his certificate had been pledged. The constitution and laws of the defendants and the benefit fund rules were strict in requiring membership in good standing in some primary lodge to be shown as a condition of the payment of the insurance benefit; one of the benefit fund rules provided that no member should be entitled to bring an action until he had exhausted all the remedies provided for in the rules by appeal or otherwise; and another rule provided that the members of the mutual benefit society who were in good standing on the 1st January, 1893, should be held to be members in good standing in the defendants' benefit fund on that day:-Held, that if the old rules and the action as to suspension thereunder were to be regarded as governing the deceased he was not in good standing on the 1st January, 1893, and his good standing was never effectually restored thereafter; and if he was to be regarded as under the new rules (the two sets being worked cumulatively), he was not in good standing at his death. The certificate of good standing being with-held, there was no proof of claim. The primary lodge not being before the Court, there could be no adjudication as to the bona fides of the withholding of the certificate; and it was questionable whether an netion could be maintained if an appeal or other remedy had not been resorted to, under the rules. The provision of s. 165 (1) of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, does not apply to a case where the payment of monthly dues is fixed by the by-laws, and the dues are collected at the regular meetings; and the original of that provision was not in force when the suspension was declared in 1891 or 1892. And an action to recover the amount of the insurance was dismissed, but without prejudice to any claim for repayment of the assessments.

McKechnie v. Grand Orange Lodge of British America, 18 O.L.R., 555.

-Life insurance-Winding-up of company -Distribution of deposits and trust assets Rights of policyholders and beneficiaries.]-Where an order had been made for the winding up of a life insurance company under the Dominion Winding-up Act, and the deposits of the company held by the Minister of Finance and the assets held by trustees under the Dominion Insurance Act were in the hands of the liquidator and were being distributed by him, a question arose as to whether payment should be made, under policies issued by the company, to the assured or to the beneficiaries:-Held, that the intention of the Insurance Act is to provide funds to meet the claims of persons who were resident in Canada at the time the contract with the company was made, and that, both under that Act and the Winding-up Act, the provisions for the distribution of the fund are directed entirely to questions arising as between the company and the assured and between the Canadian policyholders themselves; there is no interference with rights which may have been acquired by third persons against policyholders; and the liquidator is bound to take notice of assignments of the policies in respect of which he is making a distribution of the fund, and also of declarations in favour of preferred beneficiaries. Under the Ontario Insurance Act, the assured may make changes in the members of the class of preferred beneficiaries who are to take; the right of any beneficiary is not absolute until he shall have survived the assured; and the mere accident that moneys become payable in respect of the policy in the lifetime of the assured, while it does not impair, does not accelerate the rights of the beneficiaries. In this case the moneys payable in respect of a policy were ordered to be paid into Court, there to be subject to control of the assured as of a trust fund created under s. 159 of the Ontario Insurance Act; and, subject thereto, to be paid out, on the death of the assured, to the named beneficiaries then surviving.

Re Mutual Life Association; Wellington's Claim, 18 O.L.R. 411.

-Children and grandchildren-Apportionment by policy-Variance by will.]-M.D. effected policies of insurance upon her life, under which the insurance money upon her death was payable to her "surviving children share and share alike." By her will dated the 10th December, 1894, she directed her trustee to invest the insurance moneys, and the other proceeds of her estate, and, after provisions for the maintenance and advancement of her children, directed that as soon as the youngest should have attained the age of twenty-one years, the trustee should divide the money, or so much as might then remain, among her "children then surviving or the issue of any child or children deceased ":-Held. that, under the statutes in force at the date of the will, the testatrix had no power to take insurance money that had been apportioned to children, and to give it to grandchildren, and that one of the adult children was entitled to have his share of the fund paid out to him, notwithstanding the fact that all the children had not attained the age of twenty-one years. -Benefit of wife-Declaration in writing-Identification of policies.]-R., whose life was insured in a benefit society, by a prenuptial contract gave the insurance certificates to his intended wife, and agreed to have them transferred to her after the marriage. Two years afterwards, the marriage having taken place, R. replaced the certificates by policies in an assurance company for a larger sum, and made alterations in a copy of the marriage contract in his possession, so that it read that he gave and granted to his wife "the sum of five thousand dollars, being the amount of an insurance effected on his life with the Canada Life Assurance Company," signing his name on the margin opposite the alterations:-Held, that the writing sufficiently identified the policies to meet the requirements of s. 160 of the Insurance Act R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, and operated as a valid declaration under the statute in favour of the wife. -Policy payable to beneficiary in case of insured's death within named period.]-A life insurance policy (not coming within the Act respecting Life Insurance for the Benefit of Wives and Children, R.S.M. 1902, c. 83), and the money to become due under it belonged the moment it is issued, to the person or persons named in it as the beneficiary or beneficiaries and there is no power in the insured by any act of his, by deed or by will, to transfer to any other person the interest of the beneficiary which s a vested right in him or her, and, therefore, when the beneficiary dies before the insured the right to the money passes over to the personal representatives of the beneficiary to the exclusion of the insured or his personal representatives at his death. A policy may be made payable to a person or beneficiary who is without any insurable interest in the life of the insured. By virtue of s. 40 of the Manitoba Insurance Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 82, the money payable under a policy of life insurance issued by a company licensed under the Act, when the insured resides in Manitoba, is payable there, although the policy itself provides for payment at the head office of the company in another province, and in such a case the contract of insurance is subject to the laws of Manitoba and the money must be distributed in accordance there-

-Re-apportionment-Election-Bequest in nature of specific legacy.]-B. died in 1907, baving made a will in 1905, by which he left, among other legacies, one for $1,100 to his wife, the defendant in this suit. B. had insured his life some years previous to 1905 for $1,500, the policy being made payable to his wife. In his will B. created a fund for the payment of the several legacies, and included as part of this fund the policy for $1,500 above mentioned:-Held, that this provision in the will did not operate as a reapportionment of the insurance money as regards this policy for $1,500, under the New Brunswick Life Insurance Act, 5 Edw. VII. c. 4, s. 13; and that the proceeds of the same are payable to the defendant as sole beneficiary there-Held, that the widow was not bound to make an election, and that she was entitled to be paid the legacy for $1,100. Held, that in case the fund created by the will is insufficient, then the specific legatees are entitled to rank for any unpaid balance upon the general estate. Boyne v. Boyne, 4 N.B. Eq. 48.

-Presumption of death-Absence for over seven years.]-In order to establish the presumption of the death of the claimant's husband, who was engaged in the furniture and upholstering business, on account of his not having been heard of for seven years, it was proved that in May, 1900, he had gone in a sail-boat to an adjacent island to procure some lumber, and that while on this island a violent storm having arisen, he had telephoned his wife that he would probably be detained. He did not, however, return, and his wife had not heard of him since. The boat was subse-quently found with the sail set and having some lumber and his cap in it. On the following morning he was supposed to have been seen at the railway station, but the person who thought he saw him would not swear to his identity. It was said that a person who had lost some chairs suspected him of having stolen them, but it did not appear that he knew that he was suspected, while it appears that the detectives suspected someone else. In 1901 a letter was received from a favorite aunt in England, with whom he was in the habit of corresponding, asking about him, and stating that she had not heard from him for some time past. On the case coming before the Court of Appeal, the giving of judgment was stayed, at the claimant's request, to enable her to furnish an affidavit from the aunt verifying her letter:-Held, affirming the judgment of the Divisional Court, reversing the judgment of Riddell, J., that there was sufficient evidence to raise the presumption of death, even without the affidavit subsequently furnished.

III.-ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

-Disability-Payment of claim for short period—Injuries subsequently developing from same accident.]—An accident insurance policy was issued by the defendants to the plaintiffs, and was in force on the 3rd September, 1907, when the plaintiff was injured in a railway accident. Provision was made in the policy for the payment of varying amounts depending upon the nature and extent of the injury. On the 17th December, 1907, the plaintiff, believing that he would speedily recover from the effect of his injury, sent in a claim for eight weeks' total and four weeks' partial disability. The claim was admitted by the defendants, and they at once sent the the defendants, and they at once sent the plaintiff a cheque for $425, which he ac-cepted. He signed a receipt for the $425, "in final settlement of my claim, including double liability, under policy No. 64276, for injuries received on the 3rd day of September, 1907, and I hereby acquit and discharge the (defendants) from all and any further claims under said policy which have or may hereafter have as a result of said injuries." The plaintiff on the 9th October, 1908, made a claim for permanent disability arising from the same railway accident, the defendants first having had notice of this on the 18th June, 1908; and this action was brought to recover the amount of that claim. Being examined as a witness, the plaintiff admitted that in making the settlement of December, 1907, he intended to make and believed he was making a full and final settlement of all claims against the defendants arising out of the accident. He believed that he had substantially recovered from its serious consequences, and that, if he had continued to recover as he was recovering when he received the cheque, there would have been nothing further about it. He said he did not read the receipt which he signed, and in this he was believed by the trial Judge. Some of the terms of the policy were: that the defendants should not be liable for more than one claim on account of any one accident; that the entire amount pay able to and claimed by the assured should be ascertained and admitted before any part thereof was paid; that the amount so paid should be in diminution of the total amount insured in case of a subsequent claim in the same year; and that notice of the injury should be given within twenty-one days after the accident, and particulars of the claim sent within two months of the time when the same became a claim within the meaning of the policy:-Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to Intoxicating liquor clause—Onus of proof-Notice of death-Tender before action.]-When last seen alive, in November, 1908, the insured was under the influence of intoxicating liquor, and the probabilities were that he met his death by drowning on the same day, as nothing was seen or heard of him until his body was found in the river nearby in the following spring, greatly decomposed, but without any marks of violence. The policy sued on contained a provision upon which the defendants relied, namely, that if the insured met his death while under the influence of intoxicating liquor the claimant should only be entitled to onetenth of the amount of the policy and the defendants made a tender of the onetenth before action:-Held, that the burden of proof was upon the defendants. and that, as there was no evidence to show exactly when the death took place, this defence failed. The policy also contained a condition that notice of the death should be given by or on behalf of the insured within ten days thereafter. Held, that a notice within ten days after discovery of the body was sufficient. Held, also per Perdue and Cameron, JJ.A., that the tender of the one-tenth made and pleaded by the defendants was a waiver of the defence of want of notice.

O'Brien v. Canada Atlantic Insurance Co., 4 E.L.R. 231 (Que.).

-Death of assured by drowning-Influence of intoxicating liquors-Time for giving notice.]-One of the terms of an accident insurance policy was that, if the assured met death while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, the claimant should be entitled only to one-tenth of the amount of the policy. The evidence was that on the day when the assured was last seen alive he was helplessly drunk between 7 and 8 o'clock in the evening, but at the moment when last seen, about 9, he had become considerably more sober, though still noticeably under the influence of intoxicating liquor. There was no particle of proof to show the exact time when he met his death. Six months after the day when he was last seen, his dead body was found in the Red River, and the inference was that he had been accidentally drowned, and probably on that day:-Held, in an action by the administrator of the estate of the assured upon the policy, that the onus was upon the defendants to prove that the death occurred while the deceased was under the influence of intoxicating liquor, and that they had failed to satisfy that onus. Condition 6, which, by the policy, was made a condition precedent to the right to recovery, required written notice of the death, with particulars, to be given to the defendants with-in 10 days thereof; "and any failure to give such notice and particulars shall invalidate and render void all claims under this policy." The plaintiff and beneficiary had no knowledge of the death till the discovery of the body, 6 months afterwards. Held, that a notice given by the plaintiff within 10 days of the time when knowledge came to him was not a compliance with the condition; and upon that ground the action failed.

—Locomotive engineer—Total and permanent loss of sight—Practical blindness.]—Plaintiff held an accident policy in defendant society. His eye sight was badly injured, practically a loss of sight so far as being an engineer. Defendant's rules required a total and permanent loss of sight, and refused to allow plaintiff claim:—Held, that however much plaintiff might be hampered by the loss of vision, yet he was not totally and permanently blind, and he could not recover on the policy.

"Immediately disable" -- Causation of time—Notice—Condition precedent.] — The defendants insured the plaintiff against accident by a policy containing a condition that if "accidental injuries . . shall immediately, continuously and wholly disable and prevent the assured from pursuing his usual business or occupation," etc., they would pay a certain weekly allowance during a limited period. The plaintiff was injured accidentally within the meaning of the policy, but did not become wholly asabled from its effect until three months after, when he notified the company:-Held, that the word "immediately" in the condition had relation to causation and not to time, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover. Williams v. The Preferred Mutual Accident Ass'n. (1893), 91 Georgia 698; Merrill v. The Travellers Insurance Co. (1895), 91 Wis. 329, distinguished. The policy also contained a condition that written notice must be immediately given to the company at the office in Montreal . . . and 'that if in any other respect the conditions of this insurance are disregarded all rights hereunder are forfeited to the corporation'":-Held, that the giving of notice forthwith was not thereby made a condition precedent to the right of re-covery on the policy.

sary danger." M. was killed while coupling cars, a duty generally performed by a brakesman, whose occupation was classed by the company as more hazardous than that of a baggageman:-Held (Davies, J., dissenting), affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeal (2 Ont. L.R. 521), which sustained the verdict for plaintiff at the trial (32 O.R. 284), that as he was only performing an isolated act of coupling cars, the insured was not injured in an occupation classed as more hazardous under the first of the above conditions. Held, also, that as the evidence showed that insured was in the habit of coupling cars frequently, and therefore would not consider the operation dangerous there was no "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger" within the meaning of the second condition.

-Unregistered insurance business-Right of insurance company to sell blank policies payable to bearer-Wagering and illegal contracts.]-The plaintiffs organized a system ostensibly for the insurance of persons in case of accident. They took from merchants a contract agreeing to purchase from the system certain socalled policies, as per specimen, on certain conditions, at $60 per thousand, and to accept the same when forwarded, to be issued within a period of one year. The plaintiffs under the so-called policy were not bound to do anything, for underneath their name and address as printed on the document is the following undertaking of an incorporated insurance company:-"The Ontario Accident and Insurance Company will pay $500 to the legal representatives of the holder, or compensation at the rate of $5 per week in accordance with and subject to certain conditions printed on the back hereof, Signature of Witness holder defendants, as holders, signed one of these undertakings, but it was delivered to them as an escrow, conditioned only to have force if certain others traders adopted the same system, which was that for every $3 worth of goods purchased for cash by a customer, one of these so-called policies was to be given to the legal representatives of the purchaser, guaranteeing the payment of $500, if death should, independently of all other causes, directly result from an accident caused by extreme violence and accidental means occurring within fourteen days from the date of the instrument, or of $5 per week to such person whilst totally disabled for a period not exceeding ten weeks. There was no such insurance system registered in the insurance inspector's returns or authorized by law:-Held, 1. The plaintiffs are not a company authorized to issue currency payable to bearer. They only profess to be a medium for circulating and wagering in the name of an incorporated company, an illegal traffic in the sale of socalled life and accident assurance policies. It is in the nature of a gambling arrangement for the performance of an illegal act. It is therefore void. Any insurance in the nature of a wager is illegal, and sanctioning claim of the plaintiff would be to sanction an illegal device. 2. The plaintiffs promised nothing for the $60 per 1,000, and the Ontario Accident Insurance Company are not parties to the contract, and no consideration passed between them and the holder, and there was no mutuality of contract. The whole transaction was illegal and could have no force or effect. 3. The Ontario Accident Insurance Company, although a duly registered corporation for the transaction of insurance against accident or sickness, has no right to sub-let or delegate its franchise to any other corporation or person, much less to an inanimate aggregation without personal responsible existence. Action dismissed with costs.

Per Townshend, J., Ritchie, J., concurring:-Held, that a member was absolutely excluded from any participation in the benefits of the Society in case of illness or accident happening within the period of two months, and that the right to participate only began in cases where the inability to work was due to causes arising after the lapse of the two months. Per Graham, E.J., Mc-Donald, C.J., concurring:-Held, that the only effect of the rule in question was to delay the right to participate, until two full months from the date of the first payment, and that if it was the intention to exclude a member from participation, in respect to incapacity subsequent to the two months, because it was due to an accident or illness which first commenced within that period, it should have been expressly so stated.

—Insurance policy to married woman —Authority—Conditions o' policy.]—A contract for insurance against accidents, by a married woman even not common as to property, must be authorized by her husband, and failing such authorization it is absolutely void. Arts. 177, 183 C.C. Therefore the husband cannot bring an action founded on such contract. Moreover, in this case, the policy on which the action was brought provided for payment by the company of indemnity in the one case of accidental bodily injury to the assured while travelling on land or sea, and she was injured while in her own house; the accident, therefore, was not one contemplated by the policy, and gave no right of action to the assured.

-Accident insurance-Facts material to the risk-Withholding of-Previous insurance-Cancellation of.]-A policy of accident insurance contained a warranty that the applicant had not withheld any information which was calculated to influence the accision of the directors as to the applicant's eligibility for insurance, and also a warranty that no application ever made by the applicant for accident insurance had been declined, and no accident policy issued to him had been cancelled by any company. The plaintiff had effected previous insurance, which, on a settlement of a disputed claim, was put an end to during its currency with the consent of the plaintiff, but at the request of the company, the unearned premiums being returned:—Held, that the proper question for the jury was whether the withholding of this information was in fact material, and it was misdirection to tell the jury that they were to consider whether the plaintiff believed it material. Held, also that the putting an end to the policy with the consent of the plaintiff was a surrender and not a cancellation, and was not a breach of the warranty that no policy issued to him had ever been cancelled.

—Benevolent society—Police benefit fund—Pension—Right to—Proper forum—Injury in the execution of duty.]—By Rule 32 of the rules and regulations of a police benefit fund it was provided that where a member "in the execution of duty" received such injury as "in the opinion of the police commissioners" permanently incapacitated him from service in the police force, he should receive a pension as thereon provided. The plaintiff, a policeman, while vaulting over a wooden horse in a gymnasium, this being part of a manual exercise prescribed, received an injury whereby he claimed he was permanently incapacitated from further service in the force, and so entitled to such pension, and brought an action therefor:—Held, that the injury was one sustained by the policeman in the execution of duty, but whether the permanent incapacity was the result of such injury was a matter for the consideration of the police commissioners, and the action was not maintainable.

-Insurance-Payment of premium-Company's account with agent.]-An insurance company which entrusts the collection of premiums to an agent with whom it keeps a current account is presumed to have received the premiums when due whatever may have been the date on which they were paid to the agent. The stipulation in a policy that an action thereon must be brought within a time specified is a modification of the contract which should be specially pleaded against a claim for the amount of the insurance, otherwise it cannot be relied on. When the policy contains such stipulation and another giving the assured an extended time for payment of premiums it is only at the expiration of the extended time that the time for prescribing the action begins to run.

Lachappelle v. Dominion of Canada Guarantee & Accident Ins. Co., Q.R. 33 S.C. 228 (Ct. Rev.).

-Insurance accident policy-"Happening of the event insured against"-Commencement of action.]-An action brought by the widow of a deceased person, on an accident insurance policy issued to him by the defendants, was commenced more than one year, but less than one year and six months, after his death, without the leave required by the Ontario Insurance Act, s. 148 (2). Leave was, however, granted by the trial Judge after the expiry of eighteen months from the death, the order being dated nunc pro tune as if made on the date of the commencement of the action:-Held, 1. That the words, "happening of the event insured against" in the statute, had reference to the death of the person insured, and not to the accident which caused his death, and, consequently, the time within which the action should be brought began to run at the date of his death. 2. The trial Judge had no jurisdiction to give leave to the plain-tiff to commence her action by his order made at the trial, as it was then more than eighteen months after the death, and the plaintiff's action failed because it was not begun in time. There was a direct conflict in the evidence, as to whether deceased died from disease, as alleged by the defendants, or from the result of the injury he received, and there was also a question as to whether the plaintiff's own evidence did not support the conclusion that the injury was sustained by the deceased while lifting, in which case it would not be covered by the policy. There was other evidence, however, tending to explain this circumstance, and to establish that the injury was caused, not by lifting, but by slipping, and the jury found in favour of the plaintiff on the questions submitted to them on these points:-Held, that the case was properly left to the jury, and that where there is evidence on both sides properly submitted to the jury, the verdict of the jury, once found, ought to stand. Commissioner for Railways v. Brown (1887), 13 App. Cas. 133, followed. Held, also, that the defendants were not bound to plead the failure of the plaintiff to comply with the condition of the policy requiring the action to be brought within three months from the time when the right of action accrued, as it was by the terms of the policy a condition "precedent to the right of the insured to recover' thereunder, and the onus lay upon the plaintiff to show that her action was brought in time. Atkinson v. Dominion of Canada Guarantee and Accident Co., 16 O.L.R. 619.

-Condition limiting time for proofs of loss-Requirement of immediate notice-Foreign administrator-Relief from forfeiture.]-A condition in a personal accident insurance policy provided that immediate "written notice with full particulars and full name and address of insured is to be given to the company at Toronto of any accident and injury for which claim is made. Unless affirmative proof of death, loss of limb, or sight, or duration of disability, and of their being the approximate result of external, violent and accidental means, is so furnished within thirteen months from the time of such accident, no claim based thereon shall be valid." An appeal from the judgment of Boyd, C., at the trial, in favour of the plaintiff, the administrator of the insured, for the amount of the policy, was allowed, where although written notice of the killing of the insured by a railway train and the time when and the place where he was killed was given as required by the above condition, affirmative proof of death and of its being the approximate result of external violent and accidental means, within thirteen months from the time of the accident was not furnished as required by the same condition:-Held. by Moss, C.J.O., and Meredith, J.A., that the notice and proof required in this condition were two separate and distinct things, and although proof may amount to notice, mere notice is not proof. The condition was reasonable and neither under s. 57, sub-s. 3, of the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 51, which empowers the High Court to relieve against penalties and forfeitures, or otherwise, was there power to relieve against the consequences of non-compliance with its provisions. Per Moss, C.J.O.:—If a foreign administrator of a deceased person brings action in this province for money to which the latter was entitled, and pending proceedings obtains ancillary letters here, the title thus obtained relates back to the issue of the writ and supports the action.

-Death by drowning-Evidence sufficient to go to the jury.]-Deceased was insured in the defendant company "against loss of life while sane, resulting directly and independently of all other causes from bodily injuries effected from external, vio-lent and accidental means." There was evidence that he had been drinking heavily just previous to his death, which occurred while he was on a fishing trip. His companion had left him cooling his bare feet in a stream, but on returning to him in less than half an hour afterwards found him lying in about 27 inches of water, his boots and socks on his feet, and his fishing rod on the bank, with the handle in the water. There was an antemortem bruise on the back of the head. It was suggested that he was subject to fainting spells or dizziness, and evidence was given that he had had one of such spells a few weeks before the accident. There was also evidence that he was not in a firm condition, physically, and had to take a rest several times during his walk to the fishing place on the day of the accident:-Held, on appeal upholding the verdict of the jury at the trial, that the direct cause of death was by drowning, and that the company was liable.

—Commercial traveller—Brakesman—Temporary engagement.]—A policy of accident insurance 'escribed the insured as a commercial traveller, and contained a condition that if he met with an accident while 'tremporarily or permanently engaged in any occupation . . . classed by the company as more hazardous than that in which he is insured,'' the amount payable should be what the premiums paid by him would entitle him to be insured for under such more dangerous classification. The insured applied for employment as a railway brakesman, and while taking the usual trial trip prior to engagement (in which however, he worked gratuitously as a brakesman), he was killed, apparently by being run over by a train:-Held, that the case fell within the above condition, and the amount payable was limited accordingly.

Stanford v. Imperial Guarantee and Accident Insurance Co., 18 O.L.R. 562.

-Accident insurance-Contract for one year-Continuation or renewal.]-Section 148 (1) of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897 c. 203, is not applicable to a contract of insurance which the assured has no right to continue or renew without the consent of the insurers; it merely makes uniform and extends the commonly contracted-for grace given to the assured to renew, after forfeiture or default, a contract renewable, or not, at his will. In this case a policy of accident insurance was considered, having regard to its provisions, to be a contract for one year only, and one which could be continued or renewed only by mutual consent; and it was held, that there was no such continuation or renewal, although the agent of the insurers had, after the expiry of the year, and after an accident had happened to the assured, from the effects of which he died two weeks later, accepted from the assured a promissory note for the renewal premium and delivered to him or the beneficiary a renewal receipt which had been intrusted to the agent by the insurers, but not for such purpose.

IV. SICK BENEFIT INSURANCE.

-Benefit Society-"Sick benefits"-Certificate of medical officer.]—The plaintiff, a member of the defendant "court," a subordinate branch of a friendly or benefit society, incorporated by a Dominion statute and registered under the Ontario Insurance Act, applied for "sick benefits," to which he would have been entitled under the laws of the society, upon a satisfactory certificate from the medical officer of the court. The medical officer, however, certified that the plaintiff's illness was caused or contributed to by the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, and the court refused the benefits. This was affirmed by the various appellate bodies having jurisdiction under the laws of the society, but none of them had any evidence before them other than the certificate of the medical officer, and two certificates of a contrary opinion given at the instance of the plaintiff by another physician. There was no tender of other evidence by the plaintiff. In an action brought for the recovery of the amount of the sick benefits, the trial Judge heard evidence as to the cause of illness. and found that it was not caused or contributed to in the way certified to by the medical officer, and that the certificate, though honestly given, was founded upon an erroneous diagnosis:—Held, that the matter was one to be disposed of by the methods of the society, to which the plaintiff subjected himself on becoming a member; and the action of the society was final, unless it was made to appear that it was contrary to natural justice, or in violation of the rules of the body, or done mala fide; an erroneous medical certificate, given honestly, but by mistaken diagnosis, can-not be regarded as fraudulent; "legal fraud" does not exist in a sense distinguishing it from dishonesty or moral wrongdoing.

Thompson v. Court Harmony, 21 O.L.R. 303.

V .- MARINE INSURANCE.

Insurance against total loss of cargo "by total loss of vessel"—Total loss of thing insured.]-By a policy of marine Insurance a cargo of cement was insured against total loss "by total loss of the vessel." In an action thereon the jury found that barge and cargo had been practically if not completely submerged, that there had been an actual loss of the cargo, caused by the wreckage of the barge, which, however, was not found in so many words to have been a total loss, and judgment was entered for $2,700 damages:-Held, that, the findings were amply sustained by the evidence and were to the effect that the loss of the cement insured had occurred in the manner contemplated by the policy; and that the order of the Supreme Court for a new trial directed to the issue whether the barge was a constructive total loss within the meaning of Art. 2522, C.C., must be reversed. Sedgewick v. Montreal Ligat Co., 41 Can.

S.C.R. 639 reversed.

Montreal Light, Heat and Power Co. v. Sedgwick, [1910] A.C. 598.

-Marine insurance-Policies on hull and freight-Cost of repairs - Constructive total loss-Notice of abandonment-Acts working acceptance—Estoppel—Authority of master.]—Plaintiff's vessel while on a voyage from Trinidad to Vineyard Haven encountered heavy weather and put into St. Thomas, W.I., in a damaged condition. Notice of abandonment was given to the insurers on hull and freight, all of whom replied declining to accept. By the direction of the agent for the insurers the cargo was taken out and stored and the vessel put upon the slip for the purpose of being repaired and carrying the cargo forward to its destination. After repairs were made the vessel was taken off the slip, and a portion of the cargo reloaded, when it was discovered that the vessel was leaking and that it would be necessary to again remove the cargo and place the vessel on the slip for further repairs. The cost of the repairs up to this time, without including work which remained to be done and could not be done at St. Thomas, was upwards of $4,000, while the vessel was valued at only $6,000. The parties who had made the repairs, in order to preserve their lien, refused to allow the cargo to be taken out a second time, and, in default of payment, proceedings were taken against the ship and cargo under which they were finally sold. The jury found in answer to questions submitted that the vessel was repaired by the underwriters; that the repairs were not sufficient; and that the vessel was sold under the lien of such repairs. Also, that the agent of the insurers, by his acts, prevented plaintiff from dealing with the vessel in respect to repairs as he otherwise would have done. Also that each of the defendant companies, by its acts, reasonably led plaintiff to believe that the furnishing of formal proofs of loss and interest and adjustment was not required. On motion to set aside the verdict for plaintiff and for a new trial:— Held. 1. In view of their subsequent acts that the refusal of the defendant companies to accept the abandonment did not prevent the working of an acceptance. 2. The taking possession of the ship and incompletely repairing her and then allowing her to be sold for the cost of those repairs constituted an acceptance of the abandonment. 3. If the facts stated were not an acceptance of the abandonment they were such a wrongful conversion of the ship as would preclude the insurers from setting up non-acceptance. 4. The extraordinary powers conferred by implication of law upon the shipmaster in case of shipwreck were displaced on arrival of the owner, or of an agent having express authority from the owner to represent him, and that the trial Judge was right in so directing the jury. 5. Mis-direction as to the particular agent of de fendant companies who waived proofs of loss was immaterial if there was an acceptance of the abandonment. 6. Where the underwriter was wrongfully interfering with the control of the ship there was nothing to prevent the insured from elect ing at the last moment to hold that the underwriter had accepted the abandonment. 7. If the renewal of the notice of abandonment when the project of insurers to repair failed did not conclude the matter the vessel was lost to the insured by reason of her sale to defray the cost of repairs put upon her by the underwriters. McLeod v. The Insurance Company of North America, 37 C.L.J. 357, 34 N.S.R.

—Description of voyage — Alteration by agent.]—By a marine policy a cargo was insured for a voyage from "Montreal to New Carlisle," and the agent of the insurance company, of his own motion, changed the description of the voyage by adding thereto the words, "and to Bonaventure River," which was the voyage that the ship intended to make:—Held, that the contract of insurance was void ab initio even when the loss took place between Montreal and New Carlisle, the agent having no power to change the description without special authority and the parties not being ad item as to the port of destination.

Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Co. v. Empress Assurance Corporation, 11 Que. K.B. 200, affirming 15 S.C. 469.

-Description of voyage-Deviation-Custom.]-When a cargo is insured for a voyage described as "from Montreal to New Carlisle and Bonaventure River," without a provision for touching at intermediate ports, the fact that the ship remained at Levis for six or seven hours, and for four days and six hours at St. Michel de Bellechasse, constitutes a deviation and avoids the contract of insurance. That the custom or necessity may be invoked as authorizing such delay it is necessary that the custom be universally known, or at least sufficiently notorious for it to be known by the assured, and that the necessity should be such that it could have been foreseen before the vessel sailed from Montreal, and no such custom or necessity was proved in this case.

Prohibited waters — Making port for shelter — Breach of warranty — Waiver— Estoppel.]—

Hackett v. China Mutual Insurance Co., 4 E.L.R. 103 (N.S.).

— Reinsurance — Salvage — "Special Charges."]—The company plaintiff, having insured a large number of cattle, and sheep for the voyage from Montreal to Manchester, re-insured part of the risk with the company defendant—the reinsurance policy or certificate contained the following clause:—"Insured against absolute total loss of vessel and animals, but to pay general average, and "special charges." The ship carrying the animals struck a reef, and was finally abandoned three weeks later. In the meantime part of the animals had been landed on an island, whence they were carried to Halifax and other places. The amount payable for salvage of the live stock so transferred was fixed at one-third of the gross proceeds of the sale thereof. A large sum was also paid for maintenance of the animals and other expenses until they were sold. The parties insured then assigned all right in the live stock to the company plaintiff, and were paid as for a constructive total loss. The plaintiff claimed that all the expenditure for salvage, transportation and maintenance of the animals, con-stituted "special charges" within the meaning of the reinsurance policy, and sued the defendant for its proportion of the amount:—Held, 1. The term "special charges' is equivalent to "particular charges," and includes expenses for salvage, preservation and sale of the object insured. The word "special" merely distinguishes an expense incurred in a particular interest from an expense incurred in the general interest, which latter gives rise to general average contribution. Special charges cover all expenses occasioned by a peril insured against, when they have been necessarily incurred in consequence of such peril. 2. The fact that the plaintiff paid the principal insured as for a total loss, and the circumstance that the defendant may not have been interested in incurring all or any of the charges, did not relieve the defendant from liability for contribution to such charges.

Western Assurance Co. v. Baden Marine Assurance Co., 22 Que. S.C. 374 (Doherty, J.).

-Marine insurance-Loss of freight -Detention by ice-Perils insured against.1 -A vessel on her way to Miramichi, N.B., was chartered for a voyage from Norfolk, Va., to Liverpool with cotton. She arrived at Miramichi on November 25th and sailed for Norfolk on the 29th. Owing to the lateness of the season, however, she could not get out of the bay and she remained frozen in the ice all winter and had to cancel her charter-party:-Held, reversing the judgment of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick (24 N.B. Rep. 421), Henry, J., dissenting, that the loss occasioned by the detention from the ice was not a loss by "perils of the seas" covered by an ordinary marine policy. Held, per Henry, J .. -Contracts of insurance on freight differ essentially in many respects from those on vessels or goods, and when chartered freight is insured and lost through any of the perils insured against it is not necessary to show that the vessel was damaged; that the insured is entitled to recover if the vessel is detained by any of the perils insured against whereby the chartered freight is lost. Per Henry, J.:-When a contract of affreightment cannot be carried out by reason of stress of weather or other causes beyond control within the time contemplated by the parties, there being no fault on either side, both parties are discharged; and if under such circumstances the parties agree to cancel the contract, it cannot be treated as a voluntary cancellation that will disentitle the insured to recover upon his policy of insurance against loss of freight.

Great Western Insurance Company v. Jordan (1886), 1 S.C. Cas. 86.

-Marine insurance-Prohibited waters-Breach of warranty avoiding policy.]-A policy of insurance issued by the defend. ant company on the plaintiff's steamer "Richard," covered the steamer for the period of one year, from July 6th, 1905, to July 6th, 1906. By a clause in the policy. the steamer was prohibited from using certain waters, including Cape Breton, be-tween December 1st and May 1st, but by a clause written in on the face of the policy, permission was given to use Cape Breton ports until January 1st, 1906. The steamer left Halifax in ballast on the 31st December, 1905, for Port Hastings in the Island of Cape Breton, and arrived there on the Ist January, 1906. She took in a cargo of coal on January 2nd, and left for Yarmouth on the 3rd, having been prevented by the condition of the weather from leaving sooner:—Held, affirming the judgment of the trial Judge, that the use of the Cape Breton port after January 1st was a breach of a plain term in the policy and a breach of warranty that avoided the policy.

Richard SS. Co. v. China Mutual Insurance Co., 42 N.S.R. 240.

-Constructive total loss.]-In order to determine whether or not a ship is a constructive total loss under a policy of mar-ine insurance the value of the hull when broken up should be added to the cost of repairs. Macbeth v. Maritime Insurance Co. (1908), A.C. 144, followed. Every vessel submerged in a river is not ipso facto to be deemed a constructive total loss. The total loss of its cargo rendering the further prosecution of the particular voyage or adventure "not worth pursuing" does not, in itself, warrant a finding that a vessel is a constructive total loss; and the trial Judge having instructed the jury that, if they found such a loss on cargo they might, thereupon, find, under Art. 2522 of the Civil Code, that the vessel itself was a constructive total loss, their finding that the vessel was a constructive total loss was set aside for misdirection. and a partial new trial was ordered. Judgment appealed from, Q.R. 34 S.C. 127, reversed.

Sedgwick v. Montreal Light, Heat and Power Co., 41 Can. S.C.R. 639. VI. EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY INSURANCE.

Insolvency of employer-Enforcement of award against insurers.]-The plaintiff, a workman employed by the defendant Min-ing Company was injured in November, 1907. In October, 1908, he obtained an award for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1902. At the date of the award the Mining Company were insolvent and in the course of winding up. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants, the Casualty Company, were liable to indemnify the Mining Company against losses or liability under the award, and an order was asked for directing payment by the Casualty Company of the amount of the award into a chartered bank, pursuant to s. 6 of the Act, and a Judge of the Supreme Court granted the order, but it was set aside by the full Court: (1909), 14 B.C. 256. A subsequent application by the plaintiff for an issue to determine the liability of the Casualty Company to indemnify the Mining Company was dismissed (1909), 14 B.C.R. 273. The plaintiff then brought this action for a declaration that he had a first charge upon the moneys which the Mining Company were entitled to receive from the Casualty Company and for an order for payment pursuant to s. 6. The defendants admitted that they had issued a policy which was valid and subsisting at the date of the plaintiff's injuries, by which they agreed to indemnify the Mining Company against loss for damages on account of bodily injuries suffered within the period of the policy by any employee. The trial Judge (Hunter, C.J.), dismissed the action on the ground that there was no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the Casualty Company, in other words, that the plaintiff had no status:—Held, that the judgment should be affirmed. Per Macdonald, C.J.A .: - Unless section 6 gave the plaintiff a status to maintain the action, he had none; and it was not open to the plaintiff to ascertain the liability of the insurers to the Mining Company in an action such as this. The creation of the charge alone, without reference to that part of the section which gives a remedy for enforcing it, does not effect the subrogation mentioned in Northern Employers' Mutual Indemnity Co., Limited, v. Kniveton (1902), 1 K.B. 880, 18 T.L.R. 504, and Morris v. Northern Employers' Mutual Indemnity Company, Limited (1902), 2 K.B. 165, 18 T.L.R. 635. Were it not for the decision of the Full Court in (1909), 14 B.C.R. 256, s. 6 might be construed as intended not only to give the workman a charge on the insurance moneys, but also to provide the means of enforcing it, whether the insurers disputed their liability or not. Per Irving, J.A.: -The liability of the Casualty Company under s. 6 can be determined only in an action by the liquidator of the Mining Company. Per Martin, J.A.: -Section 6 affords a novel measure of relief to the workman, which can be obtained or enforced only in the way specified in the section, which at the same time creates a first charge upon the amount due from the insurer to the employer, and directs how the workman shall assert his rights in the premises, viz.: by means of an application to a Judge of the Supreme Court. An action in the Supreme Court cannot be deemed to be an application to a Judge of the Supreme Court, because the Judge is persona designata: aliter, had the appeal been to the Supreme Court or a Judge thereof: In re Vancouver Incorporation Act, 1900, and B. T. Rogers (1902), 9 B.C. 373; and semble, that the Judge would be a competent tribunal to make a finding that the employer was entitled to a sum from the insurers notwithstanding the absence of rules.

Disourdi v. Sullivan Group Mining Co. and Maryland Casualty Co., 15 B.C.R. 305.

—Allegation of admission by defendant of its liability in other similar cases.]—An allegation of a nature to establish by special instances the general allegation that the defendant has admitted liability for that class of accident is legal and will not be rejected on an inscription in law.

Carter White Lead Company v. Employers' Liability Assurance Co., 8 Que. P.R. 253.

VII.—CASUALTY INSURANCE.

-Mutual hail insurance-Assessment of premium notes-Discount for prompt payment,]-Action to recover the amount of an assessment on a premium note given by defendant for an insurance against loss by hail, Section 35 of the Mutual Hail Insurance Act, R.S.M., c. 106, under which the plaintiff company was incorporated, provides that the assessments upon premium notes or undertakings shall always be in proportion to the amounts of such notes or undertakings. In making the assessment of five per cent. upon the amount of each policy, the directors added a proviso that all members and policy-holders who should pay the full amount of the assessment on or before 1st November, 1899, should be entitled to and should receive a discount of 25 per cent. upon the amount of such assessment:-Held, that the company had no power to allow a discount for, or to impose penalties for default in, prompt payment, and being a mutual company, the directors must strictly observe the requirements of the Act and preserve equality amongst the members in assessing them; and that the effect of the resolution was really to assess 75 per cent. of five per cent. upon those who should pay before a certain date and the full five per cent. upon all others, and that the assessment was therefore void under s. 35 of the Act.

Maintoba Farmers' Mutual Hail Insurance Co., v. Lindsay, 13 Man. R. 352.

-Mutual hail insurance-Assessment of premium notes-Withdrawal from membership - Presumption of continuance of policy after first year.]-In an action by a company incorporated under the Mutual Hail Insurance Act, R.S.M., c. 106, to recover the amount of an assessment imposed by resolution of the directors upon one of its members for the second crop season after the issue of the policy, it is incum-bent on the company to show that by the terms of the policy the person called on to pay the assessment is still a member of the company, and if no evidence is given to show what the terms of the policy were in regard to the period covered by it, the action should be dismissed. If a member of such a company is entitled to withdraw from membership upon certain conditions, including the surrender of the policy is sved to him, he cannot exercise such right without surrendering the policy, although the loss of it has rendered it impossible for him to perform that condition.

Manitoba Farmers' Mutual Hail Ins. Co. v. Fisher, 14 Man. R. 157 (Killam, C.J.).

—Sprinkler system—Damage from leakage or discharge—Injury from frost—Application—Interim receipt.]—A policy of insurance covered loss by leakage or discharge from a sprinkler system for protection against fire, but provided that it would not cover injury resulting, inter alia, from freezing. The water in a pipe connected with the system froze, and, the pipe having burst, damage was caused by the consequent escape of water:—Held, affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeal (14 Ont. L.R. 166), that the damage did not result from freezing and the insured could recover on the policy.

Canadian Casualty and Boiler Insurance Company v. Boulter, Davies & Co., 39 Can. S.C.R. 558.

VIII .- FIDELITY INSURANCE.

—Guarantee insurance—Conditions of insurance—Stipulation that insured shall furnish proof to the satisfaction of insurer—Expenses of prosecuting employee at request of insurer—Notice of loss—Waiver of conditions.]—One of the conditions of the guarantee policy sued on required the employer, immediately after the discovery of any fraud or dishonesty on the part of the employee, to give notice thereof in writing to the insurer stating the cause, nature and extent of the loss; no formal notice fully complying with this condition, was ever given, but information of the loss was promptly communicated to the defendants, and they took steps themselves to ascertain the facts fully:-Held, that defendants could waive strict performance of this condition and had in fact waived it. The policy had been issued on the faith of the statements and answers to questions contained in the written application or proposal for the insurance, signed on behalf of the plaintiffs, and contained the condition that "if any suppression, misstatement or material om-ission shall have been made by the employer in his proposal, or at any time whatever, of any fact affecting the risk of the corporation, or in any claim made under this agreement , this agreement shall be null and void." As to the proofs of claims for a loss, the stipulations were that the employer should furnish his claim, with such full particulars thereof as should prove to the satisfaction of the insurer the cause, nature and extent of the loss and the correctness of the claim, and that the particulars furnished should include all reasonable verification of the statements made in the proposal and of the compliance therewith, and should be verified by affidavits duly certified if required by the insurer. Two of the answers in the proposal were found to have been incorrect and the evidence showed that the plaintiffs had failed to carry out the promises or undertakings implied in them, namely: (1) that the employee's receipts of money were to be entered in receipt pass-books furnished to borrowers and subscribers for shares, which pass-books would be checked monthly by the head office list, and (2) that the bank pass-book would be inspected and checked monthly by the head office. After furnishing certain proofs of the loss the plaintiffs' manager, in response to demands made on behalf of the defendants, sent in several statutory declarations intended to verify the correctness of the answers set forth in the proposal, and to prove com-pliance, but the trial Judge found as a fact that the proofs furnished were inaccurate and untrue in respect of the two statements last referred to:-Held. 1. The condition requiring the furnishing of proof to the satisfaction of defendants should not be so construed as to compel the employer to establish to the satisfaction of the guarantor the absolute liability of the latter and the absence of any defence. 2 The condition requiring "all reasonable verification of the statements in the proposal and of the compliance therewith" meant subsequent compliance with the indicated future course of conducting the business. 3. That defendants were entitled to rely on the two statements in the answers as to the receipt pass-books and the monthly examinations of the bank pass-book as indicating and promising the existence of safeguards against loss by embezzlement which in fact never existed; that the plaintiffs had failed to furnish "reasonable verification" of the statements made in the proposal or of "the compliance therewith" in respect to matters which were conditions of the liability of defendants under the policy; and that, upon principles of equity, the surety should be considered as discharged frim his liability by a departure from the course of business indicated by the answers, whether or not the incorporation of the application in the policy should be treated as creating a warranty that the employer would adhere to the indicated course. Lawrence v. Walmsley (1862), 12 C.B.N.S. 799, followed. The plaintiffs had, after being requested so to do by defendants in pursuance of a condition of the policy, prosecuted the employee to conviction for the embezzlement of the various sums of money which he had taken and they claimed payment of the expenses of the prosecution in addition to their other claim. Held, that, defendants were only liable for such expenses so far as said prosecution related to the offences committed before they received notice of the defalcations, but that liability was not dependent upon their liability under the policy. Plaintiff to pay for defendants' costs of contesting the liability for the loss, and defendants to pay plaintiffs' costs of contesting the liability for the expenses of the prosecution.

Globe Savings and Loan Co. v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, 12 Man. R. 531 (Killam, C.J.).

-Appointment of sole arbitrator-Arbitration Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 62, s. 8.]-A submission contained in a policy of insurance provided "that, if any difference shall arise in the adjustment of a loss, the amount to be paid . . . shall be ascertained by the arbitration of two disinterested persons, one to be chosen by each party, and, if the arbitrators are unable to agree. they shall choose a third, and the award of the majority shall be sufficient":-Held, reversing the decisions of a Divisional Court, 3 O.L.R. 93, and of Street, J., 2 O.L.R. 301, that the submission was not one providing for a reference "to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party," within the meaning of the Arbitration Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 62, s. 8, and, therefore, one party having failed, after notice from the other, to appoint an arbitrator, the other could not appoint a sole arbitrator. Re Sturgeon Falls Electric Light and Power Company and Town of Sturgeon Falls (1901), 2 O.L.R. 585, approved. Held, also, that the order of Street, J., dismissing an application to set aside the appointment of a sole arbitrator, was not made by him as persona designata, but was a judicial order from which an appeal lay.

Excelsior Life Ins. Co. v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation; Re Faulkner, 5 O.L.R. 609 (C.A.).

-Application-False answers-Basis of contract.]-The plaintiff company's manager applied for and obtained from the defendants an agreement guaranteeing his fidelity, and accompanied his application with a declaration of its president, containing answers to questions touching his duties, which answers it was agreed were to be taken as the basis of the contract. The contract recited on its face as rollows:--" Whereas the employee has delivered to the company certain statements and a declaration setting forth among other things the duties and remuneration of the employee, and the checks to be kept upon his accounts, and has consented that such declaration and each and every the statements therein referred to or contained shall form the basis of the contract, but this stipulation is hereby limited to such of the said statements as are material to this contract":-Held, that this had the effect of embodying the material facts of the preliminary application and declaration whether by the employee or employer into the face of the contract, and satisfied the requirements of s. 144 (1) of the Insurance Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 203, that "the terms and conditions of the contract shall be set out in full on the face or back of . . . the contract." Held, however, per Boyd, C., and Magee, J., Meredith, J., contra, that the case fell rather under s. 144 (2) which provides that any term or condition avoiding the contract on account of false pre liminary statements, must be limited to cases in which such statements are material to the contract, but does not require that such term or condition shall be contained in or endorsed upon the contract "in full." It is enough if the contract "be made subject" to such stipulation. Judgment of MacMahon, J., 8 O.L.R. 117, reversed on this point. Held, also, that the statements made by the plaintiff's president when seeking the insurance, that 'all withdrawals from the savings bank require the joint cheque of the president and manager," and that "a thorough and systematic audit is made by the company's auditors," whereas in fact the cheques were signed in blank by the president in batches, and so given to the manager, and no attempt was made to verify the savings bank amounts, were unquestionably material and affected the risk.

Elgin Loan & Savings Co. v. London Guarantee and Accident Co., 9 O.L.R. 569 (D.C.). [See next case.] —Guarantee—Application—False answers—Basis of contract—Materiality.]—Held. following Hay v. Employers' Liability Co. (1905), 6 O.W.R. 117, that the application in this case, and the statements made by the plaintiffs' president and fully set out in 8 O.L.R. 117 and 9 O.L.R. 563, were incorporated into the policy or contract of guarantee, and made part thereof, and were, under the circumstances. binding on the plaintiffs' company, though not apparently authorized by any resolution of the company, and that such statements—distinguishing the above case in this respect—were materially untrue, and therefore avoided the policy.

Elgin Loan & Savings Company v. London Guarantee and Accident Company, 11 O.L.R. 330 (C.A.).

-Meaning of words "money or other property"-Whether real estate included.]-The defendants had executed agreements authorizing the plaintiffs in the event which happened "to take possession of any money or other property" which the plaintiffs might find belonging to the defendants, and "to sell such goods or property" and take such other proceedings as the plaintiffs might deem best for recovering the amount of the payment made under guarantee bonds issued for the defendants and expenses, etc. The agreements also contained the following: "The undersigned agrees to do and execute any deed or thing that the company may deem to be necessary in order to give the company the rights and powers herein expressed or intended to be given."
The agreements were on printed forms prepared by the plaintiffs:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled, under the agreements, to a lien on any real estate of the defendants for the amount of their claim, and that the words used should not be construed to include land, the rule of ejusdem generis being applicable in this Case.

London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. George, 16 Man. R. 132.

—Gurantee policy—Bank officials—Expenses of following defaulter.]—The defendants, a guarantee company, gave the plaintiff bank a bond whereby they agreed to indemnify the plaintiffs to the extent of $5,000 in the case of an accountant of the bank, against "all and any pecuniary loss sustained by the plaintiffs directly occasioned by dishonesty or negligence or through disobedience of direct and positive instructions on the part of those persons in connection with their duties in the plaintiffs' service..." The bond also contained a provision whereby the defendants were exempted from liability for acts or omissions of any employee in pursuance of any instructions received by him from the employer or a superior officer, or for mere errors of judgment or bona fide mistake on the part of the employee-also a provision requiring the plaintiffs when required by the defendants, and at their cost, to assist them in every way in bringing to justice any employee for a criminal offence entailing loss upon the employer, and procuring the reimbursement to the defendants by the defaulting employee or his estate of any money paid by or recoverable from the defendants by reason of such defalcation. On a Saturday the teller stole from the plain-tiffs a large sum of money and absconded from Canada. The moneys were properly in his custody until the close of the day, when it was his duty to deposit them, along with the other moneys and securities in his possession, in the bank vault, having first submitted his cash to examination and checking by the accountant, whose duty it was to perform this office in the absence of, or by the direction of the manager. On the day in question the accountant certified to the correctness of the teller's statement in which the stolen money was included. Its absence was discovered on the opening of the teller's cash box on the following Monday, the teller having taken it with him when he left the bank on Saturday. No steps were taken by the defendants towards following or apprehending the teller, but the plaintiffs, without communication with the defendants, took active steps and finally succeeded in apprehending him and recovering from him a large part of the stolen money. In so doing they incurred expenses to a large amount which they claimed to be entitled to deduct from the recovered money, and to hold the defendants responsible for the deficiency, after making such deduction, up to the amount in which the defendants were liable in respect of both officials:—Held, 1. That the loss of the money was "directly occasioned," not merely by the dishonesty of the teller, but also by the negligence of the accountant, and that the defendants were therefore liable under their bond in respect of both. 2. The contract between the parties was in effect one of indemnity, and the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to deduct all such reasonable expenses as were incurred by them in recovering the money, from the amount re-covered from the teller, and were only bound to account to the defendants for the surplus after such deduction. Application of the doctrine of subrogation to guarantee insurance. Hatch, Mansfield & Co. v. Weingott (1906), 22 Times L.R. 366, followed.

-Counter-bond of guaranty-Authority of manager-Indorsement on bond-Consideration.1-Plaintiffs had given a bond to the municipal commissioner dated 1st May, 1904, to insure the faithfulness and honesty of the defendant Cornish as treasurer of the rural municipality of Brokeuhead for a term of three years in the sum of $3,000, and the premium for the three years' insurance was paid in advance. On March 3rd, 1905, the company gave notice, in accordance with a provision of the bond, cancelling the guarantee at the expiration of three months. whereby the liability of the company was confined to any defalcations of Cornish prior to 3rd June, 1905. This action necessitated the vacating by Cornish of his position as treasurer; but, on it being intimated to the council that the company would re-instate Cornish on the bond if they got a satisfactory counter-security bond, the other defendants agreed to give such security, and the council voted to reappoint Cornish. The manager of the company for Canada, Mr. Alexander, then had prepared a form of counter security bond for the defendants to sign, and, after it was returned to him signed, he sent to the municipal commissioner a document signed by himself purporting to be an indorsement on the original bond re-instating Cornish for a guarantee of $3,000 dating from 3rd June, 1905, to 1st May, 1907. The defendants were not asked to secure the company by their counter-bond against past defalcations and did not know that there were any such, and the wording of their counter-bond did not clearly show that it was intended to secure the company against past defalcations of Cornish. Shortly afterwards the company was obliged to pay the amount of its original bond to the municipal commissioner in respect of defalcations of Cornish committed prior to 3rd June, 1905. They then sued defendants upon the counter-bond:-Held, that, under all the circumstances, defendants were not liable, as their bond should be held to have relation only to the liability of the company under its re-instating contract, and not to that under the cancelled bond. Held, also, that as there was no evidence that Mr. Alexander had authority from the company to make the indorsement he gave the plaintiffs had failed to establish that they had continued the guarantee bond previously in existence, and consequently there was a total absence of consideration for the defendants' counter-bond, and for that reason also they were not liable upon it.

London Guarantee and Accident Co. v. Cornish, 17 Man. R. 148.

-Fidelity of employee — Duty of employer.)—The insured under a contract guaranteeing the fidelity of an employee is bound to a strict surveillance over the latter's conduct to require him to conform to the provisions of the law respecting the keeping and auditing of his accounts and, in case of defalcation, to have prompt recourse to the law both civilly and criminally. Failure to comply with these obligations will deprive him of a right to the indemnity stipulated for in the policy.

School Commissioners of St. Edward v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, Q.R. 16 K.B. 402.

IX. LIVE STOCK.

Live stock insurance—Animal not in good health when contract made-Premium paid only in part.]—In an action in the County Court of Victoria upon a policy of insurance of live stock, it appeared that the defendants' head office was at Vancouver, but that the plaintiff lived at Victoria, where he signed the application, paid a part of the premium, and received the policy; there was nothing in the policy to indicate that payment should be made at any place other than that at which the plaintiff lived:-Held, that the cause of action arose at least partly in Victoria (County Courts Act, s. 57), and the County Court of Victoria had jurisdiction. By the terms of the policy it was to come into force at noon on the 18th July. According to the application, which was a part of the contract, the stock must be in perfect health and condition at the time the contract takes effect. Held, on the evidence, that one of the two horses insured (the one that first died) was, before noon on the 18th July, inoculated with the disease from which it died, although the symptoms were not noticed till the following day; and, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover in respect to this horse. The plaintiff paid only half of the premium in cash, and made a promissory note in favour of the agent for the other half. In the application it was stated that the premium was to be paid in cash, and the defendants did not in fact know until after both horses were dead that it had not all been paid in cash. The defendants said that the policy was never in force. Held, that, as there never was any risk as to the horse which died first, payment of half the premium brought the policy into force in respect to the other; and the plaintiff was entitled to recover in respect to that horse.

INTERDICTION.

Interdiction made in one district with order to confine in another.]-The Superior Court, at Quebec, has no jurisdiction to try a petition for release from confinement in a sanatorium in the district, ordered by a decree of interdiction for habitual drunkenness, made in another district. The petition, under Art. 170 C.P., must be referred to the Court of the district where the interdiction took place. Audet v. Audet, 37 Que. S.C. 322.

Opposition to annul-Curator to an interdict.]-1. The curator to an interdicted person ought to be made a party in a pending suit with reference to proceedings taken therein subsequent to the interdiction. 2. A motion asking that such curator be made a party to assist defendant will be granted, and an opposition to a seizure lying on the only ground that said curator was not made a party will be summarily dismissed on motion to that Fortier v. Villeneuve, 12 Que. P.R. 53.

-Curator-Account of administration.] - The curator to an interdict must account for the whole of his administration when it comes to an end. As his account should cover the entire period the curator who is ordered by the Court to render it does not comply by filing an account for the latter part of the period and alleging, with filing of copies in support thereof, that he had already rendered an account for the prior part.

-In lunacy.]-See LUNACY.

Action for removal of curator to interdict-Death of plaintiff while suit is pending-Right of relations of interdict to intervene.]-The plaintiff brought suit for the removal of the curator appointed to his son-in-law, interdicted for prodigality. While the case was proceeding the plaintiff died, and his testamentary executors petitioned to be permitted to take up the instance. The heirs of the deceased, who were relations by affinity of the interdict, also petitioned to be allowed to intervene and continue the suit for the removal of the curator defendant:—Held (reversing the judgment of the Superior Court, Lynch, J.), 1. While an action to remove a curator forms a part of the plaintiff's succession and is not transmissible to his heirs, nevertheless the claim against the defendant for costs incurred in the action is a claim which formed part of the patrimony of the plaintiff, and was transmitted under his will to his executors who, therefore, were entitled to take up the instance, not to have the defendant removed from the ownership, but in order to determine his liability for costs. 2. The heirs were entitled to intervene to continue the action, and in virtue of any right transmitted to them, but in virtue of their quality of relatives by affinity of the interdict, and in this quality were entitled to ask for the removal of the defendant from his office of curator.

Wilson v. Giroux, 21 Que. S.C. 56 (C.R.).

-Action against curator by interdict.]-If a woman interdicted for drunkenness, wishes to take action in separation from bed and board, against her husband and curator and the grounds stated in the petition are sufficient to justify such an actiou, the Court will order that a family council be held to advise as to the appointment of a curator ad hoc.

Clermont v. Charest, 4 Que. P.R. 427.

-Interdiction for prodigality-Procedure -Curator not in cause.]-(1) Interdiction for prodigality renders the interdict incapable of administering his estate, or of being lawfully served with or of lawfully appearing in judicial proceedings. (2) Where a writ has issued against an interdiet for prodigality instead of against his curator, the defect cannot be cured by adding his curator as a defendant. Greene & Mappin, M.L.R. 5 Q.B., p. 108, followed. Leroux v. DeBeaujeu, 20 Que. S.C. 235 (Davidson, J.).

-Change of curator during time case is under consideration-Appeal-Motion to reject.]-While a case is under consideration by the Court, if one of the parties, an interdict, is relieved from interdiction, and, subsequently, again placed under care of a curator, an appeal against an unfavourable judgment cannot be taken in the name of the old curator; neither will a stay of proceedings be granted for the purpose of allowing the new curator to obtain the requisite legal authority.

Leduc v. The Parish of St. Louis de Gonzague, 5 Que. P.R. 446.

-Habitual drunkenness-Power of curator -Removal-Family council.]-The curator of an interdict for habitual drunkenness can bring an action for payment of the provision for maintenance of such interdict, and his refusal to do so when such payment is absolutely necessary, is a ground for his removal from the curatorship. The advice of a family council, when cause has arisen for the removal of the curator, is of no value when the council has not assisted in procuring evidence on the demand for his removal or when the evidence has not been communicated —Judicial adviser—Appeal from decision of prothonotary.]—(1) The prothonotary or a Judge, upon a petition for interdiction for lunacy, has the discretion of merely naming a judicial adviser to the respondent. Borbridge v. Eddy, 26 Que. S.C. 81 (Rochon, J.).

—Interdict—Curator ad hoc—Advice of family council.]—Where it appears that an interdict has matters to litigate with his curator, he is entitled to have a curator ad hoc appointed to him for the purpose of such litigation and the Judge ought to reject the advice of the family council not to name a curator ad hoc to said interdict.

Archambault v. Camirand, Q.R. 27 S.C. 30 (Sup. Ct.).

—Curator to an interdict—Summary account—Petition.]—The curator to an interdict may be ordered, upon petition to that effect, to produce a summary account of his gestion certified by him containing and setting forth the date, amount and character of each loan made on behalf of the interdict, the time at which it is payable, the security held therefor and the name and residence of the borrower; also the several deposits made on his behalf, and the name and residence of the persons or institutions with whom they are made.

Cardinal v. Cardinal, 7 Que. P.R. 153 (Davidson, J.).

—Curator—Interdict for insanity—Rights of mother.]—(1) Under Art. 339 C.C., curators to the person are appointed with the formalities and according to the rules prescribed for the appointment of tutors. (2) Mothers and female ascendants are entitled during their widowhood to the curatorship of their child interdicted for insanity, when the father is dead, the child anmarried, and there is no valid reason against their appointment. (3) The nomination of a curator to an interdict, made upon the strength of a declaration by the prothonotary that his mother was not capable of being named his curatrix, is null and void. (4) A new family council, and not the Court, has the right to appoint a new curator.

Charbonneau v. Mercier, 7 Que. P.R. 326 (Doherty, J.).

—Prescription—Judgment for interdiction —Action to set aside.]—The demand by action for annulment of an interdiction on the ground that it was obtained by fraudulent devices and without proper service on the interdict (plaintiff in the action) is not subject to the prescription of six months under Article 1178 C.C.P. Though a judgment for interdiction will not be annulled because of the acquisition after the judgment by the interdict of a new domicile abroad this circumstance may, nevertheless properly be set up in the action to annul as forming part of the res geste.

Cantlie v. Cantlie, Q.R. 15 K.B. 530.

Petition-Appeal from dismissal Articulation of facts-Service-Guardian.] -There is a direct appeal to the Court of Review from an order by a Judge in Chambers dismissing an application for appointment of a legal guardian. The petition for appointment of a legal guardian to a party because of his prodigality should contain an articulation of the acts of prodigality of which he is accused. Such petition should be served on the person to be interdicted or for whom a legal guardian is proposed before presentation to the Judge to give to the latter an opportunity to object to the sufficiency of the allegations and the capacity of the person asking for appointment of a guardian, Semble, in this case the petitioner who owed to the respondent (interdict) the sum of $4,000 (nearly the whole for-tune of the latter) should not have been appointed curator.

Ste. Marie v. Bourelle, 8 Que. P.R. 221 (Ct. Rev.).

—Interdict—Drunkenness—Discharge.] — An interdict for drunkenness can only be relieved from the interdiction after a year of habitual sobriety. The petition to remove the interdiction should state that the interdict has been habitually sober for a year.

Morency v. Gleason, 9 Que. P.R. 230 (Sup. Ct.).

—Duties of curators — Investment of monies belonging to the interdict.] — A curator who becomes indebted in a sum of money to the interdict committed to his care, is bound, under Arts. 295 and 9810 C.C., to invest it in the same manner as all capital sums which are paid into his hands and failure to do so, within the prescribed delay, amounts to the breach of duty (infidélité) which, under Art. 285, renders him liable to removal from office. The Court, upon suit brought for purpose, may order him to make the investment within a fixed delay, reserving further adjudication in case of his failure to do so. Prud'homme v. Beaulieu, 18 Que. K.B.

97, reversing 33 Que. S.C. 198.

-Order out of Court-Review. 1-Where an order for interdiction is made out of Court it will not be reviewed for defects of form which do not involve absolute nullity nor prevent the Judge from giving his decision with full knowledge of the matter. Mental weakness not amounting to idiocy or insanity, the failure of faculties which makes a person incapable of governing himself or managing his affairs, is ground for interdiction. For the Judge who has to consider the fac's and analyze the examination he has made of the person to be interdicted the latter's demeanor, gestures, etc., in the course of such examination have a value and weight greater than the opinion of witnesses, even specialists, whom he has permitted to be called though not obliged to do so.

INTEREST.

Contract - Interest - Effect of taking judgment for claim.] - The defendant Preston, in October, 1889, contracted with one Charlebois to build certain fences and gates along the line of the G.N.W. Central Railway, and, after associating the defendant Musson with him, they sublet the contract to the plaintiffs by a written agreement which provided for payment to the plaintiffs as follows: "Estimates for the said work shall be made monthly by the company's engineer . . . , and . . . shall be forthwith paid upon same being paid to said Preston and Musson by said company.' Charlebois was the contractor for the whole of the railway work being done by the company, and the evidence showed that the word "company" in the above provision was used by mistake for Charlebois. After payment of two estimates for part of the plaintiffs' work difficulties arose, and the company's engineer who also acted as engineer for Charlebois, to prevent the bringing of an action, withheld further estimates; but in September, 1891, after litigation between Charlebois and the company had commenced, Preston accepted a judgment against the company for the balance due to him by Charlebois upon his fencing contract. This judgment, however, was not paid until 1898, and then it was paid without interest: - Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to interest on their claim before action, as it was not payable by virtue of a written instrument at a time certain within the meaning of the Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 28. London, Chatham & Dover Ry. Co. v. South-Eastern Ry. Co., [1892] 1 Ch. 120, followed.

Sinclair v. Preston, 13 Man. R. 228.

-Mortgage - Rate of interest - Payment by instalments.] - A mortgage given to secure payment of $20,000 with interest at nine per cent. payable half yearly, contained these provisos: "Provided that on default of payment for two months of any portion of the money hereby secured the whole of the instalments hereby secured shall become payable. . . . Provided that on default of payment of any of the instalments hereby secured, or insurance or any part thereof at the time provided, interest at the rate above mentioned shall be paid on all sums so in arrear, and also on the interest by this proviso secured at the end of every half year that the same shall be unpaid": — Held, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal (26 O.A. R. 232) that the principal sum of $20,000 becoming due for non-payment under the first of the above provisos was not an instalment in arrear under the second on which the mortgagee was entitled to interest at the rate of nine per cent. per — Debt certain and time certain — 3 and 4 Wm., c. 42, s. 28 (Imp.).] — To entitle a creditor to interest under 3 & 4 Wm., c. 42, s. 28 (Imp.) the written instrument under which it is claimed must show by its terms that there was a debt certain payable at a certain time. It is not sufficient that the same may be made certain by some process of calculation or some act to be performed in the future. Appeal from the Court of King's Bench for Manitoba, 13 Man. LR. 228, 1901, C.A. Dig. 231, dismissed.

Sinclair v. Preston, 31 Can. S.C.R. 408.

-Advance of money - Claim of interest-Promissory note - Action on original consideration.] — The plaintiff sued the surviving member of a firm, together with the representatives of a deceased member for money loaned by him in the lifetime of the deceased, to the firm for the purposes of the firm. He also claimed interest, as having been stipulated for at the time:-Held, that inasmuch as there was a corroboration as to the main fact, namely the borrowing of the principal, this was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover the interest claimed. When a promissory note is taken from a borrower as collateral security for money loaned to him, and not in payment, action can be brought for the money lent, notwithstanding that owing to the form of the note it may not be maintainable thereon.

Secor v. Gray, 3 O.L.R. 34.

-Moneys retained under irregular judgment - Absence of fraud or misconduct-Order to refund.] - Where executors, who were also residuary legatees, acting bona fide under a judgment afterwards held by the Court of Appeal to be irregular and not binding on the parties concerned, retained a greater sum of money than they were subsequently held entitled to, but were exonerated from all fraud, or misconduct, they were held not chargeable with Boys' Home v. Lewis, 3 O.L.R. 208.

-Post diem interest on mortgage-Splitting cause of action.] - Plaintiff, on November 2, 1901, brought an action in a Division Court for one year's interest due February 1, 1901, and for interest on that sum, amounting together to $81.50, due on a mortgage, the principal of which was some years overdue:-Held, that the interest sued for, being interest post diem, as to which there was no covenant to pay, was not due the plaintiff qua interest, but was recoverable only by way of damages, and the case did not come within the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 79 R.S.O. 1897, c. 60. Held, also, that the plaintiffs, if entitled to recover interest from February 1, 1900, were entitled to recover as damages interest down to the date of the issue of the summons amounting to about $140, which sum was divided for the purpose of suing in the Division Court, which is forbidden by s. 79. Prohibition granted. Re Phillips v. Hanna, 3 O.L.R. 558.

-Premium to building society not interest.] See MORTGAGE. (Lee v. Canadian Mutual, 3 O.L.R. 191.)

-Interest Act (Can.) 1897-Rate of interest.] - A chattel mortgage provided for the payment of $125 principal money in consecutive monthly instalments of $5 each and for payment of $5 more with each instalment for interest and did not state the yearly rate to which this was equivalent, but there was a clause in the mortgage waiving in explicit terms the necessity for stating the yearly rate and waiving also the benefit of the Interest Act, 1897:-Held, that this being an Act passed on grounds of public policy for the benefit of borrowers its application could not be waived and that the mortgagee was entitled to interest only at the legal rate. Judgment of Snider, Co.J., affirmed by the Divisional Court.

Dunn v. Malone, 39 Can. Law Jour. 788 (Street, J., and Britton, J.).

-Mortgage running over five years-Payment-Tender of amount-Agency.] - Action to compel a mortgagee in Great Britain under the provisions of R.S.C. 1886, c. 127, s. 7, to accept the principal money and interest due on a ten-year mortgage, which had run over six years:—Held, that the section was intra vires of the Dominion Parliament and is not restricted in its application to such mortgages as are men-tioned in s. 3 of the Act, but applies to every mortgage on real estate executed after the 1st of July, 1880, where the money secured "is not under the terms of the mortgage payable till a time more than five years after the date of the mortgage." Held, also, that the words of s. 25 of c. 205 P.S.O. 1897, are wide enough to apply to mortgages executed prior to the passing of that Act. Held, also, that the loan having been made, the property being situate, and the mortgage giving the option of payment, in Canada, the law of Canada must govern in relation to the contract and its inci-dents and that the tender made as described in the judgment was sufficient.

Bradburn v. Edinburgh Life Assurance Co.,

5 O.L.R. 657 (Britton, J.).

-Award of arbitrators-Interest on award -Agreement as to date from which interest should be computed.]-In certain arbitration proceedings between the Dominion of Canada and the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, the first-mentioned Province was found to be indebted to the Dominion in the sum of $1,815,848.59, on the 31st December, 1892. While proceedings before the arbitrators were pending, correspondence between the Dominion and the two Provinces, concerning the rate per centum and the time from which interest was to run on the amount of the award, was op-ened by the Deputy Minister of Finance for Canada in a letter to the Treasurer of Quebec, of the 21st December, 1893, in which, among other things, he asked that the Province of Quebec should agree to pay to the Dominion, from the 1st January, 1894, simple interest at 5 per cent. favour of the Dominion on the 31st December, 1892. Quebec declined to accede to this proposal, and the correspondence in the matter was eventually closed by a letter from the Assistant Treasurer of Quebec to the Deputy Minister of Finance for Canada, of the 6th July, 1894, in which he, in effect, stated that the interest to be paid by Quebec upon any balances found by the arbitrators to be due on the 31st December, 1892, and existing on the 1st July, 1894, should be at the rate of 4 per Similar correspondence between the Dominion Government and the Province of Ontario was concluded by a letter of the 18th August, 1894, from the acting Deputy Attorney-General of that Province to the acting Deputy of the Minister of Finance for Canada, stating, in effect, that Ontario accepted the same conditions as Quebec in respect of the payment of the interest. Prior to the date of this letter the Premier of Ontario had addressed a letter to the Premier of the Dominion, dated 26th July, 1894, as follows:-"I understand that your Government has paid to Quebec the subsidy due July 1st instant, on the consent of the Government to pay 4 per cent. on any balance of account that might be found between the Province and the Dominion, such interest to be reckoned from and after the said 1st of July, 1894. I presume this means the balance of account in respect of the items which have already been brought before the arbitrators, and which now stand for judgment. This Gov-ernment is willing to accept the subsidy on these terms." Upon a case stated to determine whether interest was payable by the Province from the 31st December, 1892, when a balance was struck in favour of the Dominion, or from the 1st July, 1894, only: -Held, that the correspondence showed an agreement on the part of the Dominion that interest should only be paid from the date last mentioned.

The Dominion of Canada v. The Province of Ontario, 8 Can. Exch. R. 174.

- Money retained under irregular judg-ment,]-A testator by his will gave to two trustees his estate, real and personal, and directed the trustees to pay, (1) to a sister a legacy of $500, and in case of her death to her daughter, and in case of the death of the daughter to the daughter's children in equal shares; (2) to a niece a legacy of $500; (3) to the children of another niece a legacy of $500, and (4) to a charitable institution a legacy of $500; with a direction that should there not be sufficient to pay all the legacies there should be a proportionate abatement; and then directed that should there be any residue after payment of the legacies it should be divided and paid "to and among my legatees hereinbefore named and referred to and my said trustees or the survivor of them in even and equal shares and proportions":-Held, that the children of the niece, who were five in number, were en-titled between them to one-fifth of the residue and not to one-ninth each. Judgment of Moss, J.A., 3 O.L.R. 208, affirmed. Proceedings were taken in the year 1882 for the administration of the estate, and without, as was held in the previous judgment of this Court, 27 A.R. 242, proper proceedings being taken whereby they might have been bound, the children of the niece were ignored and their legacy and their share in the residue were divided between the charitable institution, the trustees, and one of the other legatees: — Held, that the trustees and the charitable institution were bound to repay the excess which they had received, with interest from the date of proceedings taken by the children of the niece. Per Maclennan, J.A., dissenting: Interest should be allowed from the date of distribution under the report in the administration proceedings. Judgment of Moss, J.A., 3 O.L.R. 208, reversed. Uffner v. Lewis (No. 2); Boys' Home v.

Lewis (No. 2), 5 O.L.R. 684 (C.A.).

-Contract - Sum certain - Rental of track - Interest by way of damages -Demand of payment.] — By the agreement in question in the action the defendants agreed to pay to the plaintiffs $800 per annum per mile of single track, and $1,600 per mile of double track occupied by the defendants' railway, not including "turn-outs," in four equal quarterly instalments on the first of January, April, July and October in each year. Disputes arose be-tween the parties as to the meaning of the word "turnouts," and as to what tracks were to be measured and as to the manner in which they were to be measured, and this action was brought in reference to these questions and was finally determined on appeal to the Judicial Committee. In the result the contention of neither party was given effect to, the mileage in respect of which rental was payable being held to be less than that contended for by the plaintiffs and greater than that con-tended for by the defendant. The plaintiffs had from time to time demanded payment of the sums payable to them according to their construction of the agreement. The mileage and the sums consequently payable were fixed by the Master in accordance with the principles laid down in the judgment:—Held, that the defendants were bound at their peril to ascertain the sums properly payable and to pay or tender these sums to the plaintiffs; and that not having done so the plaintiffs were entitled to interest upon these sums from the times at which they should have been paid; not under s. 114 of the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 51, as being sums certain payable by virtue of a written instrument at certain times capable of ascertainment by arithmetical computation, but upon the ground that the case was one in which it would have been usual for a jury to allow interest and therefore within s. 113 of that Act.

-Contractor and sub-contractor - Disputed accounts.] - A contract between C., the defendant, a contractor with the Department of Railways and Canals of the Dominion Government, and M., the plaintiff, a sub-contractor, provided that for $145,000 to be paid to him he was to complete certain work for the defendant, and that the payments should be made (less ten per cent.) monthly as the work progressed according to the estimate of the Government engineer in charge. The work on the principle contract was to be completed on the 30th of September, 1899. It was not completed for more than one year after that date, but the delay was not the fault of the plaintiff. There was no stipulation in the contract in reference to the payment of interest on any sums due but not paid. M.'s claim was disputed. On an action being brought, it was established that he was entitled substantially to what claimed:-Held, per Hanington, Landry, Barker, and McLeod, JJ. (Tuck, C.J., and Gregory, J., dissenting), that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest, his claim not being for a sum certain payable by virtue or a written instrument at a time certain within the meaning of s. 175 of 60 Vict. c. 24. Held (per Tuck, C.J., Hanington and Gregory, JJ), that if the plaintiff had been entitled to interest the rate would not be restricted to five per cent. under the Statutes of Canada, 63-64 Vict. c. 29, the contract having been entered into before the passing of the Act.

Bérian v. Stadacona Water, Light and

-Moneys made under execution-Reversal of judgment — Liability to refund — Rate of interest.] — Under a judgment against the defendant, the plaintiff issued execution and realized a sum of money which was in his hands when the judgment was reversed, and he became liable to repay it to the defendant. The money, however, was claimed by another executor creditor, and the plaintiff gave notice of an application for an interpleader order, but did not proceed with it. By consent of all parties the money was paid to the solicitor for the defendant, but without interest:-Held, that the plaintiff was liable for interest. notwithstanding the conflict as to who was entitled to the money, for he could have protected himself by paying the money into Court or obtaining a waiver of the right to interest; and the interest should be at the legal rate of 5 per cent., for the same reason.

-Ontario Judicature Act (Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897, c. 51) s. 113.-Construction -Interest on payments in arrear.]-The Ontario Judicature Act, (R.S.O. 1897, c. 51), s. 113 enacts that "interest shall be payable in all cases in which it is now payable by law or in which it has been usual for a jury to allow it:"-Held, that under the true construction of this section it is incumbent upon the Court to allow interest for such time and at such rate as it may think right in all cases where a just payment has been properly withheld, and compensation therefor seems fair and equitable. An order by the Ontario Court of Appeal that the appellant company should pay arrears of track rentals within the limits of the respondent city, over and above their periodical payments already made, and should pay interest thereon, was affirmed.

INTERPLEADER.

Purchase-money of land-Adverse claim to land.]-The defendant, being sued in this action for a balance due upon a purchase of land, admitted her liability, but stated that R. claimed the land as against the plaintiff and had begun an action and registered a certificate of lis pendens, and had notified her (the defendant) that he would hold her liable for any moneys paid by her under the agreement for pur-chase, after notice. Upon this the defendant applied for an interpleader order, and the Referee made an order staying proceedings in this action pending the result of the action brought by R., making the plaintiff a defendant in that action, and requiring the defendant to pay into Court a part of the purchase-money claimed:—Held, on appeal, that there was no ground for an interpleader, and not sufficient material to justify the order actually made; and the order was set aside, without prejudice to R. moving to amend his statement of claim in his own action, and for a stay of proceedings in this action, upon proper grounds.

Davison v. Lehberg, 13 W.L.R. 719.

Issue—Party plaintiff—Sheriff remaining in possession—Place of trial—Security for costs-Execution creditor - Insolvency.]-Where the claimant is in possession of the goods at the time of seizure, the execution creditor is made plaintiff in the interpleader issue directed on the sheriff's application. And this rule applies where the claimant is the wife of the execution debtor, and the goods are seized upon the premises in which a business is carried on by her in which she is assisted by him, but in which he has no interest. Where the goods seized were manufactured materials, the product of a going concern, a direction in the interpleader order that the sheriff should continue in possession until the final disposition of the issue, was upheld against the contention of the execution creditor that the sheriff should be directed to sell the goods, or the claimant to pay into Court or give security for the appraised value. An interpleader issue should ordinarily be tried in the county where the goods are seized, but where the sheriff is to remain in possession of the goods of a going concern, a speedy trial is so important that for the purpose of securing t, the issue may be sent to another county, having regard to considerations of expense and convenience. Under the discretionary powers given by Rule 1122, the execution creditor, being in insolvent circumstances, may be ordered to give security for the sheriff's costs.

-Sheriff enforcing writ of possession -Claim-Mortgagee in possession of land.]-Upon an attempt to execute a writ of possession under a judgment against G., who was in actual possession, the sheriff was served with a notice by B. claiming the land mentioned in the writ, and informing the sheriff that the house standing thereon was locked and that he (B.) had the key. B.'s claim was as mortgagee upon default in payment of interest:-Semble, that the sheriff's duty, as soon as he received the writ, was to break open the door and give the plaintiff possession. But, held, that, as the sheriff was not bound to consider the legality of the claim put forward, he was entitled to an interpleader order. -Shares-Certificate and transfer-Claim for damages-Parties out of jurisdiction-Laches.]-A transfer of certain shares in a company was executed by the holder of the shares in favour of her brother-in-law on the 29th September, 1900, and application to the company was at once made by the transferee for a certificate, but he did not receive one, and on the 25th October he was informed by the company that his transferor had set up a claim that the transfer was procured by fraud. On the 19th November the transferor brought an action against the company and the transferee to restrain the company from transferring the shares, for a declaration that the shares belonged to the plaintiff, and to set aside the transfer executed by her. On the 23rd November the transferee began an action against the company to compel the delivery of a certificate or for damages equal to the value of the shares, and for a mandatory injunction. On the 28th November the company applied for an interpleader order. Pending the application the transferee discontinued his action, and asserted his claim against the transferor and the company as a counterclaim in the action brought by the former:-Held, that the company were entitled to relief by way of interpleader, notwithstanding the claim against them for damages made by one of the claimants. Held, also, that although both claimants were out of the province, and the company's head office was also outside of the province, there was jurisdiction to make an interpleader order, the claimants themselves having brought the company into the jurisdiction, and the documents being within the jurisdiction. Held, also, that the laches of the company had not been so great as to disentitle them to the relief claimed, and the charge of collusion between the company and the transferor was not sustained. Held, also, that the transferee was entitled to have preserved to him any claim he might have for damages against the company.

Held, that in any event it is not open to the party giving the indemnity to take such objection.

McCallum v. Schwan; Gould v. Schwan, 5 Terr. L.R. 471 (Scott, J.).

-Lis pendens-Adverse claims to purchase money.]-A certificate of lis pendens is not ar incumbrance within the meaning of R. S.O. 1897, c. 119, s. 15. One who had contracted to purchase land was sued by his vendor for the purchase money, and an action was brought in respect of the same land by creditors of the vendor's husband, seeking to set aside a conveyance of the land by the husband to the wife: -- Held, that although the purchase money was not actually claimed in the latter action, yet, as the plaintiffs therein appeared upon an interpleader application by the purchaser and stated their willingness that the purchase should be carried out, the purchase money being applied to pay the debts of the husband, they were making an "adverse claim" to the purchase money, within the meaning of Rule 1103 (a), and the purchaser was entitled to an interpleader order.

-Proof of judgment at trial of interpleader issue-Attaching order.]-(1) When a third person claims goods seized by the sheriff under an attaching order and the sheriff applies for an interpleader order, any objection by the claimant as to the want or insufficiency of the material on which the attaching order was obtained should be raised in answer to the sheriff's application, and it will be too late to raise such objection at the trial of the interpleader issue. (2) It is not necessary at the trial of such ar interpleader issue for the plaintiff, although he is plaintiff in the issue, to prove the defendant's indebtedness, at least in the absence of evidence on the part of the claimant to show that it did not exist. The attaching order having been set aside by the referee after the making of the interpleader order and the sheriff having relinquished possession of the goods, the claimant contended that the latter order then lapsed; but the attaching order had been reinstated on appeal to a Judge, when the sheriff again took possession of such of the goods formerly seized as he found to be still in the claimant's possession:-Held, that the plaintiff had a right to have the interpleader issue disposed of and that, as the merits were in his favour, the verdict for him should stand, but limited in its effect to the goods seized by the sheriff after the attaching order was restored.

INTERVENTION.

Intervention-Death of party-Substitution of curator.]—Plaintiff, a wife séparée de corps, sued to have annulled a sale by her husband of an immovable of which she claimed to be owner. She died pending the action, her succession was declared vacant, and the curator took up the instance. The husband intervened asking that the guar-dianship be set aside and himself substituted as curator and given possession of his wife's property. The curator opposed the intervention. 1. Because the husband was already in the cause as mis en cause. 2. Because the guardianship could only be set aside by direct action:—Held, without admitting that the intervention was wellfounded, that it could not be dismissed on the grounds above stated.

IRON AND STEEL.

Bounties on manufacture of "pig-iron" and steel—60-61 Vict. c. 6—62-63 Vict. c. 8—Interpretation.]—It is a general practice in the art of manufacturing steel to use the iron product of the blast furnaces while still in a liquid or molten form for the manufacture of steel, the hot metal being taken direct from the blast furnaces to the steel mill. Among iron-masters and those who are familiar with the art of manufacturing iron and steel, the term "pig-iron" has come to mean that substance or material in a liquid as well as in a solid form. A question having arisen as to whether iron when used in a liquid or molten form for the manufacture of steel was "pig-iron" within the meaning of the term as employed in the Acts 60 & 61 Vict. c. 6 and 62 & 63 Vict. c. 8:-Held, that it was, and that a manufacturer of steel ingots therefrom was entitled to the bounties provided by the said Acts in respect of the manufacture of pig-iron and of steel ingots.

Duchaine v. Dussault, 11 Que. P.R. 254.

-Summary judgment-Affidavit in answer -Cross-examination.]-An application under Con. Rule 603 for judgment is a summary application, and should be given effect to only in a plain case. Upon such an application it is incumbent upon the defendant, by affidavit or otherwise, to satisfy the Judge hearing the application that he has a good defence to the action on the merits, or has disclosed such facts as may be deemed sufficient to entitle him to defend. And where a local Judge, in the exercise of his discretion, has given leave to defend, an appeal will not in general be allowed. Papayanni v. Coutpas [1880], W.N. 109. But the question whether a Judge has or has not a discretion to grant or refuse an enlargement of the motion for the purpose of allowing the plaintiff to cross-examine the defendant upon his affidavit is one of sufficient importance to justify an appeal. Under Con. Rule 490 a Judge has no discretion, but must grant the enlargement. Kingsley v. Dunn, 13 P.R. 300, and Townsend v. Hunter, 3 C.L.T. 310, followed. An appeal from an order of a local Judge refusing an enlargement, and giving the defendant leave to defend, was allowed, and the motion referred back to the local Judge to dispose of it after cross-examination of the defendant.

—Amendment after passing and entry.]—

—Striking out appearance—Power of Judge to trike out sham defences.]—On an application for summary judgment, the Judge, while giving leave to defend, has power to strike out such defences as are sham defences, but it would be an improper use of the practice to make such an application with this end in view. Before a summons is granted a prima facie case should be made out, showing that the defendant has no defence whatever. Trumbell v. Taylor, 3 Terr, L.R. 305.

-Reserving further directions.] - The judgment pronounced after trial reserved "all further directions that may be necessary." Relying on this, the defendant some six months after judgment was pronounced applied for further consideration, the matter so to be considered being certain costs and expenses of the defendant's bailiff for keeping possession of the property in dispute after service of an interim injunction order and before the appointment of a receiver. The request for such further consideration was made and the proceedings therefor taken according to the English practice in the Chancery Division:-Held, 1. That such practice was correct. 2. That a reservation of further directions does not entitle a party to move for further considera-tion. 3. That, in any event, the Court will not take into consideration at a further hearing any matter which was not raised by the pleadings, and which should have been brought under the notice of the Court at the trial.

Mitchell v. Sparling, 15 O.W.R. 37, 1 O.W.N. 297.

Judgment on default of appearance— Application to set aside.]—Upon an application, made in 1910 (under sub-sec. 2 of s. 57 of the Judicature Act), to set aside a judgment of the Supreme Court of the North-West Territories, entered in 1898, for default of appearance to a writ of summons personally served upon the defendant, upon the ground that the writ was void by reason of being issued out of the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court for the judicial district of East Assiniboia, instead of out of the office of the deputy clerk of the said judicial disgrict at Yorkton, where the defendant resided and the cause of action arose:-Held, that, under the Rule in force in 1898, the writ could be issued either from the office of the clerk or the deputy clerk; or, if not, that the issue from the office of the clerk was a mere irregularity, which was cured by the laches of the defendant; and, no merits being shown, the application should be dismissed. Saskatchewan Land and Homestead Co. v. Leadlay, 6 Terr. L.R. 82, distinguished.

Lawler v. Ashdown, 14 W.L.R. 330 (Sask.).

—Action against several defendants, one only defending — Discontinuance.] — Final judgment cannot be signed against a defendant for want of a defence, if there is an untried issue pending between the plaintiff and another defendant in the same action who has entered a defence. A notice of discontinuance of an action as against defendant B., served more than a year after the irregular entry of final judgment against defendant A. is a nullity and A. may, within a reasonable time after the service of such notice, move to set aside the judgment against him. Such a discontinuance cannot be effected under Rulo 538 of the King's Bench Act except under subsec. (e), and then only by leave of the Court or a Judge.

Macdonald v. Fairchild Co., 19 Man. R.

-Default in delivery of defence-Motion for judgment-Affidavit of merits.]-Plaintiff brought an action against defendant for rescission of a contract for sale and return of purchase money on account of vendor's default. The vendor appeared, but did not deliver a defence within the time limited. On a motion for judgment, an affidavit was filed by defendant's solicitor stating that in his belief defendant had a good defence on the merits, but no grounds for this belief were stated. It was also objected by counsel for the defendant that in any event in point of law the plaintiffs' claim was not sufficient to entitle him to the relief asked for:-Held, that an affidavit of merits filed by defendant on an application for judgment in default of defence must disclose facts showing a good defence, and if sworn on information and belief must disclose the grounds of such information and belief. 2. That if there appears to be a substantial question of law to be determined and arising out of the plaintiffs' claim, the Court may, even in the absence of an affidavit, allow the defendant in to defend. Miller v. Ross, 2 Sask, R, 449.

-Judgment recorded to bind lands-Release of portion of lands bound-Effect as regards remainder-Apportionment of liability. |--Where a judgment debtor in his lifetime and his personal representatives after his death alienate portions of the land bound by the judgment, and the judgment creditor releases a portion of the land sold from any claim under the judg-ment, the full amount of the judgment cannot be enforced against the owners of the unsold portions of the land, who are only liable to be called upon to pay pro rata according to the value of the lands released. Where the enforcement of the lien of the judgment creditor against the unsold land, involves questions of value and deductions by reason of the releases, it must be made the subject of an action, and, where the proper parties are not before the Court, cannot be accomplished on motion for leave to issue execution.

Re Bank of Liverpool, 43 N.S.R. 205.

-Setting aside-Defective notice-Laches. -Defendant failed to appear on the trial of the action against him, and judgment was entered against him. An application to set aside the judgment so entered was dismissed, on the ground that defendant had not sufficiently accounted for his delay in moving, and no merits were disclosed in his affidavit. Before the order was taken out, defendant discovered that the notice of trial given by plaintiff was insufficient, and gave notice that when the order was applied for, he would oppose the granting of it on that ground:—Held, that such notice was both irregular and too late. All the grounds should have been stated in the first notice. The Court will not entertain repeated applications of this sort, when proper inquiry would have disclosed all the information desired in the first instance. McKay v. Chisholm, 43 N.S.R. 227.

—Judgment debtor—Consent order made in absence of debtor.]—Where a debtor, in order to avoid an examination before a commissioner, under the Collection Act, touching his ability to pay a debt for which judgment had been recovered against him, gave his consent in writing to the making of an order against him for the payment of the debt by instalments, and admitting possession of means to pay the instalments agreed upon:—Held, that he would not be permitted, subsequently, to take advantage of the fact that he was not present personally or by counsel when the order so assented to was made by the commissioner. Re S. G. Piers, 44 N.S.R. 254.

-On motion-Action for possession of land -Counterclaim.]-Plaintiff brought an action for possession of certain property and mesne profits. Defendant appeared and filed a counterclaim, but no defence. Plaintiff then applied at the regular sittings of the Court by notice of motion for judgment:—Held, that a Judge in Chambers or a local Master had jurisdiction to make the order, and the application should have been made to either a Judge in Chambers or local Master, and while a Judge in Court doubtless had jurisdiction to entertain the motion, such jurisdiction should not be exer-

Hanson v. Pearson, 3 Terr. L.R. 197.

Judgment-Setting aside-Terms.] -Mere delay is not a bar to an application to set aside a regular judgment on the merits unless it be shown that an irreparable injury will be thereby done to the plaintiff. The applicant moved to set aside a regular judgment signed against a partnership in the firm name on the ground that there never was such a firm and that the applicant had never been served with writ of summons, and was not a member of such firm. The plaintiff's counsel raised no objections to the applicant's want of locus standi to attack the judgment, but consented to the judgment being set aside as on the merits and on the usual terms sufficient to protect the plaintiff. It appeared that certain goods of the applicant had been seized by the sheriff under an execution issued on the judgment against the firm. The judgment was ordered to be set aside upon the applicant paying the amount thereof into Court and paying the costs. Westman v. Ogmundson, 3 Terr. L.R. 442.

-Order for payment of judgment debt by instalments-Default-Motion to commit.] -Upon the 25th August, 1908, the defendant was examined as a judgment debtor under the Collection of Debts Ordinance, 1904, and was ordered to pay $25 a month, beginning on the 5th Sep-tember, 1908. In October, 1910, the plaintiff moved to commit the defendant, under s. 9, sub-s. 4, of that Ordinance, for contempt in not paying the instalments ordered. The defendant made the first three payments, in September, October, and November, 1908, since when he had paid nothing. The plaintiff's motion was dismissed, because notice of it was given in the name of a firm of solicitors not on the roll of the Territorial Court. A second motion was then made, upon the same material, properly served and filed:-Held, that the dismissal of the first motion was not a bar to the second, the merits not having been passed upon so as to make them res adjudicata. Held, also, that copies of the affidavits in support of the motion having been served with the notice of motion and the affidavits filed before the return day, the motion was regularly made: Rules 292 (a) and 467; and it was not necessary that the affidavits should be filed before the notice of motion was served. Held, as to the merits, that it is not compulsory upon the Judge to make an order of commitment upon an affidavit proving default, as provided for in s. 9, sub-s. 4, of the Ordinance; and the Judge has no power to vary or suspend the order for payment by instalments, or to give a new date; the powers of the Judge are confined to the making of the first order and enforcing it strictly on default; but he has a discretion to refuse to commit. And held, that, if the plaintiff had moved promptly on default, he would have been entitled to a committal order; but he had himself suspended the order for payment and allowed it to lie dead for two years, and he must have done so because he conceived that the defendant was unable to pay; and he had, by his own laches, put himself in a position where he could not ask for a committal order; and the motion was refus-—Setting aside judgment—Irregularity — Time for appearance.]—Where the defendant, after the time limited for appearance, tendered to the clerk of the Court, an appearance, and the plaintiff had previously tendered to the clerk the necessary papers for the entry of default judgment, but judgment had not been yet signed, and the clerk refused to accept the appearance and signed judgment, the judgment was set aside for irregularity. Judgment quasi non-suit.—Plaintiff resisted a motion for judgment quasi non-suit on the ground that no replication had been filed, though one had been served:—Held, that though the failure to file was the plaintiff's default, it was the defendant's duty to search the clerk's office, and to see that the issue was complete before moving.

-Mortgage action-Settlement after judgment-Failure to carry out-Account-New day-Reference. |-A motion by the plaintiff in a mortgage action for an order for a new day and a new account, and to change the relief sought from sale to foreclosure, was opposed by the defendant upon the ground of a settlement or compromise after judgment, under which money had been paid to the plaintiff, the mortgagee: -Held, that if the defendant mortgagor had made default in payments according to the agreement, the unmodified burden of the mortgage existed and was enforceable. an arrangement should be investigated in the Master's office, and not by independent litigation. The matter had passed into judgment, and the only contest was as to how much was due and payable in respect of the mortgage, having regard to the arrangement manifested in the correspondence and dealings subsequent to the Master's report. It was foreign to the policy of the Judicature Act to contemplate new litigation in such a case as this: s. 57, sub-s. 12

—Motion for judgment on admissions — Withdrawal—Leave.]—After all parties had agreed upon a statement of facts, and the plaintiff had served notice of motion for judgment thereon, he delivered a statement of claim and served on the defendants a notice withdrawing the statement of facts and countermanding the notice of motion. One of the defendants then moved for judgment on the statement of facts, which had not been filed:—Held, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to make an independent motion to be relieved from his admissions contained in the statement of facts, which had not been acted upon or brought before the Court; after the filing of the statement of claim and the notice of withdrawal, it was not competent for the plaintiff to get judgment on the statement of facts; and if the sanction of the Court were needed for the course taken by the plaintiff, it might be given upon the defendant's motion.

—Speedy judgment—Abridging time for return of summons.]—Notwithstanding the provisions of Rule 548 a Judge has no power to abridge the time for the return of a summons for speedy judgment taken out under Rules 103 and 104 of the N.W.T. Judicature Ordinance.

Shorey v. Stobart, 1 Terr. L.R. 262.

—Summary judgment—Ont. Rule 603—Promissory note—Unconditional leave to defend.]—In an action upon a promissory note the defendant set up, in answer to a motion for summary judgment under Rule 603, that the consideration for the note consisted in whole or in part of the purchase money of a patent right, and that the note had not the words "given for a patent right" written or printed across the face, and was, therefore, void under the Bills of Exchange Act, s. 30, sub-s. 4, in the hands of the plaintiff, who was alleged to have notice of such consideration. The plaintiff denied that the note was given for such consideration:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to unconditional leave to defend.

Davey v. Sadler, 1 O.L.R. 626.

—Interlocutory judgment — Assessment of damages—Writ of summons—Statement of claim—Non-conformity.)—By the indorsement on the writ of summons the plaintiff claimed damages for a breach of an agreement by the defendant to convey certain land to the plaintiff. By the statement of claim and the plaintiff's evidence it appeared that her real claim was for breach of a subsequent parol contract to the effect that if she would join the defendant (her husband) in a conveyance of the land to a purchaser, he would pay the purchase money over to her. Under an order of a local Judge service of the writ and statement of claim were effected by posting them on the 30th November, 1900, in an envelope addressed to the defendant at a place in Ontario. On the 28th December, 1900, judgment was entered for the plaintiff for default of appearance to the writ, for damages to be assessed. No proceedings were taken upon the statement of claim to enter judgment or a defauit note. Upon the action coming down for assessment of damages, no one appearing for the defendant: --Held, that, according to the practice, no assessment could be made except upon the judgment for default of appearance, for nothing else was ripe for assessment; and the plaintiff could not have damages pursuant to the claim indorsed on the writ, because it appeared by the evidence that she had consented to the defendant conveying the land in breach of his covenant. The action was, therefore, dismissed, but without costs and without prejudice to a new action being brought upon the causes of action set forth in the statement of claim. Semble, that the order for service by posting should not have been made, the material being quite insufficient, and there being no probability that the papers would reach the defendant.

—Judgment for default of plea — Setting aside—Terms as to payment of costs.]—Defendant was permitted by the Appeal Court (30 N.S.R. 393), to supplement his affidavits and renew an application to set aside a judgment entered against him in the County Court 10r default of plea. Defendant, thereupon, filed an affidavit disclosing a good defence on the merits, and renewed his application, which plaintiff opposed. The learned Judge of the County Court, being of the opinion that plaintiff, in opposing the application, acted unreasonably and oppressively, set aside the judgment with costs to be paid by plaintiff:—Held, that he erred in doing so, and that plaintin's appeal must be allowed with costs. Held, that the order must be so far modified as to give plaintiff the costs of the judgment, and execution, if any, and allowing defendant the costs only occasioned by plaintiff in opposing the renewed application. Held, that the judgment having been regularly entered defendant's application was to the indulgence of the Court, and could only be allowed on payment of costs thrown away.

Piper v. King's Dyspepsia Cure Co., 33 N.S.R. 287.

-Default judgment-Motion to set aside-Order reducing amount-Power of Judge to make.]-In an action brought by plaintiff against defendant to recover an amount claimed for taxes, an agreement was entered into on behalf of defendant to pay the amount claimed for debt and costs within a day or two from a time fixed. May 16th or 17th, 1901. On the 18th May an amount was paid on account of costs, and on the 21st, the balance not having been paid, judgment by default was entered for the full amount claimed for debt and costs, without giving credit for the amount paid on account. On an application to the Judge of the County Court to set aside the judgment, the learned Judge refused the motion, but made an order reducing the judgment to the proper amount:-Held, that under O. xiii., r. 10, he had power to do so. Held, that, inasmuch as the application was a necessary one, defendant should have had the costs of the motion below, but that, as there was a substantial condition in respect of which he had not succeeded, there should be no costs of the appeal. Semble, that if the judgment had been entered in breach of good faith the amendment should not have been granted, but that in this case it was defendant's duty to have seen that the terms of the arrangement as to payment were complied with.

The City of Halifax v. Bent, 33 N.S.R.

-Interlocutory or final judgment-Order to proceed with execution-Leave to appeal.]-An interlocutory judgment is one which is rendered in a cause between the institution of the suit and the final judgment therein, and is given in an intermediate state of the cause on some intermediate question before the final decision. 2. A judgment revoking the stay of execution previously ordered by the Court, and ordering the bailiff to proceed with the execution of the property seized, is a final judgment, and a petition for leave to appeal therefrom cannot be granted.

-Judicial hypothec-Time of registration.] -A judgment may be registered and create hypothec on property acquired by the judg-ment debtor after it has been rendered. McClure v. Croteau, 18 Que. S.C. 336.

-Setting aside judgment-Leave to defend -Substitutional service.]-The plaintiffs in 1896 issued a writ against the defendant company, and six individual defendants who were shareholders in the company, and in their statement of claim asked that the individual defendants be declared trustees for the defendant company of certain mining locations in Alberta: that the lands be sold under the order of the Court, and the proceeds applied in payment of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant company under a prior judgment which was still unsatisfied. Healy, one of the defendants, was a foreigner and resided out of the jurisdiction. An order for the substitutional service of the writ by prepaid registered letter was obtained, but the writ, as a matter of fact, never came to his notice; judgment was entered in default of defence against all the defendants, the lands were sold to one Sills, the sale was confirmed by an order of the Court and a certificate of title was issued by the registrar to Sills under the Court's direction. On an application in June, 1899, by the defendant Healy to have the judgment and sale set aside and for leave to defend upon the grounds: (1) that the material upon which the order for substitutional service had been made was insufficient; (2) that he had no actual notice of the proceedings under which the judgment had been pronounced; (3) that the judgment had been fraudulently obtained; (4) that notice of the writ and not a copy of it, should have been served upon him: Held, (1) That the material upon which the order for substitutional service had been made was sufficient. (2) That the alleged fraud had not been proven. (3) That following Moore v. Martin, 1 Terr. L.R. 236, the service of the writ itself upon Healy, though a foreigner, and out of the jurisdiction, was neither a nullity nor irregular, inasmuch as the form of writ provided in the Territories is itself a notice. (4) That although Healy had no actual notice of the proceedings, yet as the substitutional service was effected in the mode prescribed in the order, and the order was made on sufficient material, the Court had jurisdiction to deal with his interest in the property: that the purchaser Sills was not bound to ascertain that the substitutional service provided for had the effect of bringing the proceedings to the notice of Healy, and that the purchaser's rights should therefore not be disturbed. (5) That as Healy had disclosed a defence upon the merits, he should be allowed in to defend upon giving security for the plaintiff's costs without prejudice to the purchaser's rights.

-Summary judgment-Leave to defend-Allegations of fraud.]-When a defendant intends to rely on a defence of fraud, he should set it up definitely in his statement of defence and, in meeting a motion for leave to sign judgment under Rule 593 of the King's Bench Act, he should file an affidavit in answer showing such definite facts pointing to the alleged fraud as to satisfy the Judge that it would be reasonable that he should be allowed to raise such defence. In this case the only evidence in support of the allegation of fraud consisted of some general statements of defendants in their examinations on their affidavits filed in answer to the plaintiff's motion, and it was held on appeal from the referee that his order allowing plaintiff to sign judgment was right. Wallingford v. Mutual Society (1880), 5 A.C. 685, followed. Costs of appeal refused partly on account of the great mass of material heaped up, including diffuse examinations on affidavits.

ceedings for the oral examination of a judgment debtor under s. 36 of 59 Vict. c. 28, should be by summons and order; and not by an ex parte order in the first instance. A Judge of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick has no privilege against an attachment for any contempt which is of a criminal and not of a civil kind. The process of attachment which may be issued under the provisions of s. 36 of 59 Vict., c. 28, against a judgment debtor for contempt of an order calling upon him to appear and be examined orally as to any and what property he has, which by law is liable to be taken in execution, is punitive or criminal in its nature; therefore, a Judge of the Supreme Court can not protect himself by his privilege against an attachment issued against him for refusing to obey such an order. Ex parte VanWart, in re Burkhardt v. VanWart, 35 N.B.R. 78.

-Examining of - Incurring debt by fraud.] -Defendant received from plaintiff several sums of money, part of which were to be invested and part expended on plaintiff's farm. Defendant placed these monies to his wife's credit, made no investment, kept no accounts and could not account at all for a large portion, although he said it had been expended on the farm. Before the plaintiff got judgment and while the action was pending defendant allowed his wife and sister-in-law to get judgments against him:—Held, by the Full Court, reversing Drake, J., that the defendant had not incurred the debt by fraud or false pretenses within the meaning of s. 15 of the Arrest and Imprisonment for Debt Act. An appeal lies direct from an order committing a debtor to gaol and no preliminary motion to the Judge for discharge is necessary.

Bullock v. Collins, 8 B.C.R. 23.

-Dominion official-Order to pay judgment debt by instalments - Jurisdiction of local legislature - Judicial discretion.] - K., M. and W. were in receipt of annual salaries amounting to $1,800, $400, and $700 respectively. K., upon being examined before the Judge of the County Court of W., was, under the provisions of 59 Vict. c. 28, s. 53, ordered to pay the amount of the judg-ments against them by instalments at the rate of five and ten dollars per month respectively. Orders nisi having been obtained to bring up the three orders for the purpose of quashing them, upon the returns thereof, it was held (per Tuck, C.J., Hanington, VanWart and McLeod, JJ., Landry, J., dissenting):—1. That the provisions of 59 Vict., c. 28, s. 53 authorizing the Judge or other officer before whom the examination is held, upon it being made to appear to him that the judgment debtor is unable to pay the whole of the debt in one sum, but is able to pay the same by instalments, to make an order that the debtor shall pay the amount of the judgment debt by instalments, in so far as it is sought to apply the same to salary or income derived from office or employment under the Government of Canada, is ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature, and, therefore, that the orders against K., M. and W. should be quashed; and, 2. That in the cases of M. and W., there being no evidence or charge of fraudulent conduct on their parts, the circumstances showed such an improper exercise of discretion on the part of the Judge of the County Court of S., that the orders made by him should be quashed on that ground as well.

Ex parte Killam, Ex parte McLeod, and Ex parte Wilkins, 34 N.B.R. 530.

-Division Court - Order for committal -Previous order for payment - Affidavit.]-The plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant in a Division Court action for a debt contracted before the passing of the Act, 61 Vict., c. 15 (O.), and the defendant was at the hearing ordered to pay the amount of the judgment forthwith: Held, that the Court had jurisdiction under sub-s, 5 s. 247 of the Division Courts Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 60, upon examination of the defendant on an after-judgment summons. to make an order for her committal, a previous order for payment bason such an examination and default thereunder. Where it appears that a judgment debtor has been examined before the Judge, his order for committal must, on a motion for prohibition, be treated as a completé adjudication as to that which must be made to appear to warrant the making of an order under sub-s. 5 of s. 247. Semble, that if the affidavit of the plaintiff required by s. 243 to be filed before the issue of the summons were not filed, it would not be open to the defendant, after appearing in obedience to the summons, to raise an objection to the jurisdiction on that ground; and, the defect not appearing on the face of the proceedings, prohibiton in such a case would not be granted. Re Hawkins v. Batzold, 2 O.L.R. 704 (D.

-Summary - B.C. Order XIV.-Cross-examination of plaintiff - Discretion to refuse.] — On a summons for judgment under Order XIV., it is only in exceptional cases that defendant will be permitted to cross-examine plaintiff on his affidavit, and then only after defendant has filed an affidavit of merits.

Ward v. Dominion Steamboat Line Co., 9 B.C.R. 231.

-Extension of delay to render account.]-The Court will not extend the delay, fixed by judgment, for the defendant to render an account, unless special and sufficient reasons be adduced. The fact that the defendants, co-partners, pleaded separately, and that judgment was rendered against one defendant before the delivery of judgment in the case of the other, is not sufficient ground for extending the delay to account fixed by the first judgment so that the defendants may account together.

Jeannotte v. Pariseau, 20 Que. S.C. 229 (Archibald, J.).

-Effect of taking judgment for claim.]-One Charlebois was contractor for building the Great North-West Central Railway and Preston was a contractor with him for the fencing. Preston and Sinclair entered into an agreement by which the latter was to do the work of fencing, the agreement containing the following provision: "Estimates for said work shall be made monthly by the company's engineer, or at such other times as the said engineer shall deem reasonable and proper, and such estimates less ten per cent. rebate shall be paid forthwith upon same being paid to said Preston and Musson by said company, and the said ten per cent. rebate shall be paid forthwith upon same being paid to said Preston and Musson by said company." Preston obtained judgment, which by consent was entered against the railway company direct for the price of his work and received satisfaction therefor by assigning it to other persons. Sinclair was paid the price of his work but demanded interest, claiming that his right to payment attached under the above clause on the judgment being assigned. He sued for the interest which the trial Judge allowed but the Full Court overruled his judgment, holding that interest could not be recovered under the statute in force, 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 42, s. 28:—Held, affirming the latter decision (12 Man. L.R. 228), 1901 C.A. Dg. 231, that under said statute it must appear by the written instrument that there is a debt certain payable at a time certain before interest will be allowed, and it does not so appear by the contract in this case. Appeal dismissed with costs.

Sinclair v. Preston, 31 Can. S.C.R. 408.

—Saisie-arret after judgment — Delays — Arts. 693, 1155 C.P.]—In summary causes the defendant has had two days to plead to the saisie arrêt; if he does not plead within the time the plaintin has two days to contest the declaration of the treis-saisie; after this delay he may, if he does not contest it, inscribe for judgment according to the declaration.

Goldberg v. Giffin, 4 Que. P.R. 376 (Sup. Ct.).

—Requete civile — Arts. 182, 1177-8, 1182 C.C.] — A requête civile can only be entered by leave of a Judge, and will only be allowed when a prima facie case is made out. The requête civile should not be supported by general allegations. It will not be granted if the judgment complained of does not prejudice the petitioner.

Leveillé v. Charette, 4 Que P.R. 470 (Sup.

Ct.); Smith v. Charette, 4 Que. P.R. 469 (Sup. Ct.).

—County Court — Speedy judgment—Leave to defend.]—On a motion for speedy judgment in the County Court it is open to a defendant to set up other defences than those disclosed in his dispute note:—Held, on the facts, reversing Leamy, Co.J., that the defendant should have unconditional leave to defend. Per Irving, J.—Defendant should have been allowed to cross-examine plaintiff on his affidavit.

McGuire v. Miller, 9 B.C.R. 1.

— Revocation — Action — Arts. 192, 1177, C.C.P.J.—Revocation of a judgment may be sought by direct action when a requête civile could be taken. A party attacking a judgment against him for fraud, and alleging that it greatly prejudiced him, is not obliged to establish by his declaration that without the alleged fraud the judgment would have been other than it was. The requête civile should be accompanied by an affidavit, but if an inscription en droit against the direct action suci. informality is not invoked the Court cannot take judicial notice of the absence of the affidavit.

Charette v. Leveille, 4 Que. P.R. 310 (Sup. Ct.).

—Summary judgment — Bill of exchange —Conditional delivery — Notice — Innocent holders—53 Vict. c. 33, s. 21, sub-s. 3 (D.).] —On a motion for summary judgment under Con. Rule 616 by the payee of a promissory note against the maker, who alleged on his examination for discovery that he made and delivered the note to a trading company for a purpose other than that for which the company deposited it with the plaintiffs, but did not state that the plaintiffs had notice thereof. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment. Ontario Bank v. Young, 2 O.LuR. 761.

- Amendment - peath of plaintiff between argument and judgment - Administrator ad litem.] — The plaintiff died after the argument of an appeal by him from the judgment of the High Court dismissing his action with costs, but before judgment was given on such appeal. The Court was not informed of the death, and gave judgment dismissing the appeal with costs. The defendants, in ignorance of the death, obtained the issue of the certificate of judg-ment, which bore date as of the day on which the judgment was pronounced. Upon an application made by the defendants some months later, the Court directed that the certificate should be amended by dating it as of the day of the argument, and by inserting in the body thereof a direction that it be entered as of that day. Turner v. London and South-Western Ry. Co. (1874), L.R. 17 Eq. 561, and Ecroyd v. Coulthard, [1897] 2 Ch. 554, followed. The defendants were entitled to have an administrator ad litem appointed to represent the plaintiff's estate in order that the costs of the action and appeal might be recovered.

-Manitoba County Courts - Proof of.]-To prove a County Court judgment the plaintiff produced the procedure book of the County Court showing the entries therein of the different proceedings in the action in which such judgment was alleged to have been recovered, and also filed a copy of such entries, certified as a true copy by the clerk of the Court pursuant to s. 46 of the County Courts Act. Amongst the entries so proved was one of judgment by default, which entry itself, by s. 103 of the Act, constituted the judgment of the County Court:-Held, that, as the entry of the judgment in the procedure book constituted the judgment, and as the Court itself was a Court of record, the entry of the judgment became a record of a Court of record. If so, its production, or the statutory proof of it by a certified copy, proved the juris-diction of the Court over the matters in respect of which the judgment was recovered, and the recovery, existence, and validity of such judgment. Held, also, that although the procedure book did not show the note required by s. 105 to be made in such book, that the making of such note was only a ministerial act to be performed by the clerk; it was not a part of the judgment itself; the validity of the judgment did not depend on such note being made.

Dixon v. Mackay, August, 1902, not reported (Richards, J.).

—Examination of transferee—Third mort gagee — "Exigible under execution" — Ont. Rule 903.] — A third mortgage upon real estate made by a judgment debtor is not a transfer of property "exigible under execution," within the meaning of Rule 903, and the third mortgagee is not, therefore, liable to be examined as a person to whom such a transfer has been made. The words quoted refer to legal execution and do not include equitable execution or the appointment of a receiver.

Canadian Mining and Investment Co. v. Wheeler, 3 O.L.R. 210.

—Judgment of distribution—Art. 793 C.P.]

—The power to pay the money without report of distribution is given to the prothonotary alone, and not to the Judge or Court.

Gravel v. Mélancon, 5 Que. P.R. 388 (Doherty, J.).

-Examination of debtor after judgment-Art. 590 C.P.J. (1) The examination of the debtor, after judgment, can only take place in the cases mentioned in Art. 590 C. P. (2) A debtor who has made default to appear upon a summons wrongly issued.

may nevertheless demand, by motion, the setting aside of the summons.

Grand Trunk v. Miller, 12 Que. K.B. 1, 2 C.L.R. 490.

—Motion for judgment — "Debt or liquidated demand."] — The defendant having entered into an agreement to manufacture for and deliver timber to the plaintiff received from him certain advances in money exceeding the value of the timber actually delivered; and failed to complete his contract. No adjustment of accounts took place, nor was the amount to be paid for the delivered timber ascertained. In an action to recover the balance of the advances unpaid:—Held, that the claim was not a "debt or liquidated demand" within the meaning of Con. Rule 138; and an order of a local Judge, giving leave to sign judgment under Con. Rule 603, was set aside.

McIntyre v. Munn, 6 O.L.R. 290 (Meredith, J.).

—Interpretation — Motifs.] — If the reasons (motifs) of a judgment show that there is error, ambiguity, or obscurity in the result (dispositif), they should be considered in determining and settling the meaning of the judgment.

Adam v. Gagne, Q.R. 22 S.C. 367 (Sup. Ct.), affirmed on review, 31st Jan., 1903.

-Right to attack judgment - Absence of fraud and collusion.]-In an action brought by a judgment creditor against the judgment debtors and one L. for the recovery, by way of equitable execution of moneys claimed to belong to the judgment debtors, and to have been fraudulently transferred to L., an inquiry into the circumstances under which the judgment was recovered, cannot in the absence of fraud and collusion in the recovery thereof, be insisted upon. A motion that one of the plaintiffs, who, on examination for discovery, had refused to answer questions relating to such circumstances should be compelled to attend and be examined at his own expense, was therefore refused Caradian General Electric v. Tagona Water and Light Co., 6 O.L.R. 641 (M.C.).

—Succession — Aliments — Transmission to heirs.]—The obligation to furnish maintenance is not transferable to the heirs as a debt of the succession of the person subject to it even when the latter has, in his lifetime, been condemned thereto by a judgment for maintenance in an action en séparation de corps brought by a wife against her husband condemning him to pay her an allowance during his life. On this case the costs, even on appeal, were divided on account of the relationship of the parties, and because they had proceeded on a joint factum under Arts. 509 et seq., C.P.O.

Davidson v. Winteler, .R. 13 K.B. 97. Appeal to Supreme Court quashed, 34 S.C. R. 274.

-- Motion for judgment -- Admissions -- Pleading.] -- Consolidated Rule 616 is not intended to apply to the case of alleged insufficiency in law of the statements of fact pleaded in the defence. A motion for judgment should not under such circumstances be made under that Rule, but the procedure indicated in Rule 259 or Rule 261 should be adopted.

Edward v. Cole, 8 O.L.R. 140 (Anglin, J.).

-Procedure - Kequete civile.]-A requête civile against a judgment the rendering of which is disputed will not be received when the petitioner has not inscribed en faux against such judgment.

In re Clement, 6 Que. P.R. 60 (Lavergne, —Judgment by default — Interest—Rule 90 (N.W.T.).] — In an action for $108.07 for goods sold and delivered, the plaintiff claimed 4.66 as interest, but did not show upon what the claim for interest was founded: —Held, on an application to set aside a judgment, signed in default of appearance under Rule 90, that, in the absence of an allegation in the statement of claim of some contract, expressed or implied, to pay interest, it is an unliquidated demand, and cannot be included in such judgment. Judgment set aside accordingly.

King v. Latimer, 40 C.L.J. 124 (Scott, J.).

—Petition in revocation of judgment—Supplementary contestation.] — If a petition in revocation of judgment is received and a party allowed to contest an account by means of newly discovered evidence, he cannot nevertheless insert in the contestation which he is allowed to file, grounds of contestation not set forth in the petition in revocation.

Hill v. Campbell, 6 Que. P.R. 424 (Davidson, J.).

Revocation - Documentary evidence -Objections - New evidence - C.P. 1177.]-(1) A party who has declared, in compliance with a judgment ordering him to file particulars, that he was suing upon a verbal contract, may, without fraud, file documentary evidence at trial, in support of such so-called verbal contract. (2) At any rate, it is the duty of the adverse party, when such documents are filed, to object to their production and take proceedings to have the case reopened while it is under advisement, and a requête civile will not be received when the party might have had the case reopened before judgment. (3) A judgment will not be revoked by reason of the discovery of new evidence, unless it is shown that the party made reasonable efforts to discover it before the trial. or could have discovered it by reasonable diligence.

Union Home and Real Estate Co., Limited, v. Estates, Limited, 6 Que. P.R. 383 (Archibald, J.).

-Practice-Judgment on admissions.]-The words "admissions of fact in the pleadings in Rule 615 of the King's Bench Act, R.S. M. 1902, c. 40, are not confined to such admissions made by an opposite party, and this Rule may be availed of by the party making the admissions and an order made accordingly; and when the defendant in his statement of defence consents to the re-lief asked for by plaintiff and offers to give the conveyance required by him, such consent and offer, although strictly speaking not an admission of fact, should be treated as one for the purposes of the rule, as its object is to save further proceedings and further costs when the need of trying issues is removed by admissions. The statement of defence, besides the consent and offer referred to, denied the allegations of the statement of claim:-Held, that, as defendant, by making an application under Rule 615, had put it out of the power of the plaintiffs to prove their allegations and out of the power of the Court to decide, on the merits, who should pay the costs of the action, the case should be treated, for the purpose of awarding costs, as if the defendant had admitted the truth of the plaintiff's pleadings as well as submitted to the relief asked for, and that the defendant should pay the main costs of the action, including the costs of the mo-

-Setting aside-Undue preference - Collusion - Affidavits in proof of.] - An order allowing the plaintiff to sign judgment on a specially indorsed writ may be made under s. 73 of 60 Vict. c. 24, Supreme Court Act, though the time limited for appearance by the writ has not expired. A judgment will not be set aside on the ground of collusion and undue preference where the affidavit in proof of the collusion is founded on information and belief only, and does not state the origin of the information, and no circumstances are assigned for deponent's belief.

The Dominion Cotton Mills Company v. Maritime Wrapper Company, 35 N.B.R. 676.

-Questions submitted - Answers by jury -Entry of judgment on.1 - S. 158 of 60 Vict. c. 24, Supreme Court Act of New Brunswick, authorizing the Judge on the trial of a cause to direct the jury to answer questions submitted and enter a verdict on the answers given, applies to the County Courts. When this course is adopted it is the Judge's duty to enter the verdict for the party in whose favour the questions are answered.

Steeves v. Dryden, 35 N.B.R. 555.

-"Final judgment"-Yukon Territorial Act, 1899, s. 8.] - In an action by executors against the appellant to recover certain sums of money due to their estate, the Judge of the Territorial Court, at the request of the plaintiffs, selected one of the items and adjudicated on the evidence taken that the action in respect thereof be dismissed:—Held, that this was within the meaning of the Yukon Territorial Act, 1899, s. 8, a final judgment in respect thereof, notwithstanding that the remaining items in suit were referred and the costs were reserved. No appeal therefrom to the British Columbia Court lay after the expiration of twenty days.

McDonald v. Belcher, [1904] A.C. 429, reversing 33 Can. S.C.R. 321.

-Review from Justice's Court (N.B.) Jurisdiction of the County Court Judge.]-A Judge of a County Court has jurisdiction to hear a case on review from a Justice's Court, though the case was tried in a county for which he is not the County Court Judge. The King v. Wilson; Exparte Irving, 35 N.B.R., p. 461, explained.

Ex parte Graves, 35 N.B.R. 587.

-Judgment by default - Debt - Interest.] -Where in an action for a debt or liquidated demand, there is also a claim for interest as accruing prior to the issue of the writ, but no allegation in the statement of claim of any contract, express or implied, to pay it, it cannot, being an unliquidated demand, be included in a judgment signed by default under Rule 90. Such judgment will be set aside as irregular.

Ewing v. Latimer, 5 Terr. L.R. 499 (Scott,

-Setting aside judgment - Leave to defend - Absence of defence on the merits-Judicial discretion.] - When a judgment is regularly entered in default of a defence, a good defence on the merits should be shown on an application to set it aside and allow a defence to be filed, even if it was by the error of a clerk of the defendant's solicitor, in not carrying out his instructions, that the defence intended was not filed in time. Watt v. Barnett (1878), 3 Q.B.D. 363, approved. Where, however, the referee has exercised his discretion in favour of the defendant and made an order giving leave to defend, such order should not be reversed on appeal, although the Judge cannot find that any defence on the merits has been shown. Moore v. Kennedy (1898), 12 M.R. 173, followed.

McCaul v. Christie, 15 Man. R. 358 (Perdue, J.).

-Part of claim - Summary judgment.]-Under Rule 228 of the Yukon Territorial Court a summary judgment may be grant-ed for part of the plaintiff's claim, with leave to proceed for the residue.

Lisle v. DeLion, 1 W.L.R. 274 (Dugas, J.).

-Action summary in part only.] - Where plaintiff's claim is in part summary and in part ordinary the action as a whole is susceptible of different methods of procedure and defendant's remedy is to have plaintiff optate and not to move for the dismissal of the action by exception to the form.

Sun Life Ass. Co. v. Piché, 7 Que. P.R. 227 (Davidson, J.).

-Inscription en droit - Grounds.] - The inscription en droit should contain, not only the grounds of law but also the conclusions intended to be taken by the party inscribing.

-Judgment debtor - Examination.]-That the Imperial Debtors Act, 1869, is in force in the North-West Territories, and that upon the examination of the defendant as a judgment debtor he must state the exact location of bank notes which he admitted he had in his house, and the disposition of chattels which he formerly possessed. Iverson v. Enwright (N.W.T.), 2 W.L.R.

-Speedy judgment - Affidavit leading to.] -The materials used in support of a motion for speedy judgment in a County Court action in which the plaintiff sued on an account stated, were an affidavit of the plaintiff verifying his cause of action, and an affidavit of plaintiff's solicitor verifying defendant's signature to the account and stating that he believed the plaintiff had a good cause of action and that the defendant had no defence:-Held, that the materials were sufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff. Quære, whether an affi-davit of plaintiff verifying his cause of action and an affidavit of his solicitor stating that defendant had no defence would be sufficient under s. 94 of the County Courts Act to support a speedy judgment.

Bremner v. Mitchells, 11 B.C.R. 35.

-Settlement of action - Order enforcing -Jurisdiction.] - Since the passing of the O.J. Act the compromise of an action will be enforced by an order of the Court, and where the motion in such case is for judgment and, analogous thereto, for judgment on the pleadings, the proper practice is by motion to a Judge in Court.

Pirung v. Dawson, 9 O.L.R. 248 (Meredith, C.J., C.P.).

-Practice - Amending judgment after entry.] - The minutes of judgment as settled by the registrar directed that the appellants' costs should be paid out of certain moneys in Court, and in this form the judgment was duly entered and certified to the clerk of the Court below. Subsequently it was made to appear that there were no moneys in Court available to pay these costs, and upon the application of the appellants the Court amended the judgment, directing that the costs of the appellants should be paid by the respondents forthwith after taxation.

Letourneau v. Carbonneau, 35 Can. S.C.

-Declaratory action - Stay of proceedings on judgment in County Court.]-Where no consequential relief is claimed the Court's jurisdiction to make a declaratory order will be exercised with great caution. A declaration that the defendant is not entitled to proceed on a judgment recovered by him in another action against the plaintiff will not be granted if on a proper case being made out the proceedings could have been stayed in the original action, except in special circumstances. A County Court Judge has jurisdiction to stay proceedings on a judgment in his Court on a proper case for a stay being made out such for instance as that the judgment has in effect been satisfied. In such case an action in the Supreme Court to restrain the defendant from proceeding with his action in the County Court will be dismissed.

Williams v. Jackson, 11 B.C.R. 133 (Martin. J.).

—Judgment obtained by fraud — Fresh action to set aside.] — Where a judgment has been obtained by fraud, the Court has jurisdiction in a subsequent action brought for that purpose, to set the judgment aside. Richards v. Williams, 11 B.C.R. 122.

-Amending as to costs-Minutes of judgment — Clerical error.] — The dispositif of a final judgment, disposing of the costs in a manner quite contrary to that intended by the Judge as evidenced by the considerants and context of the judgment may be corrected on application to the Judge, such correction being deemed that of a "clerical error" provided for by Art 546 C.P.Q. (See Gevais v. Seely, Q.R. 1 S.C. 44.) Bérian v. Stadacona Water, Light & Power Co., Q.R. 25 S.C. 525 (Ct. Rev.).

-Enquete and merits-Interlocutory judg-ment.] - The Judge at the enquête cannot revise an interlocutory judgment rendered by the Superior Court since, although he may preside at the enquête and merits, it is only in deciding the merits that he can revise the interlocutory judgment. So long as the cause is en déliberé before him he is not in a position to adjure upon the merits and cannot modify the interlocutory judgment given on an inscription en droit.

Murphy v. Corry, 12 O.L.R. 120 (Clute, J.).

—Summary judgment — Motion for — De-lay — Con. Rule 603.] — The intention of Con. Rule 603 is that a motion for summary judgment shall be made within a reasonable time after the appearance of the defendant; and a motion for judgment in an action in which the writ was issued in June, the appearance entered in July, and the motion not launched until Novemberthe delay not being explained-was refused. that it was a preference within the meaning of the Assignment Act, R.S. (1900), c. 145, and given to defeat or delay creditors, the evidence showed that the judgment debtor owned a house and land valued at from $1,000 to $1,300, another piece of land worth about $400, and, in addition, a piece of land the value of which was not ascertained. He had besides some personal property the value of which was not proved. His liabilities, in addition to the amount for which the confession of judgment was given, were a disputed claim of $200, and a note for $75, not then matured:—Held, that these facts were not sufficient to constitute proof of insolvency, and, further, that the Act requires that the party taking judgment by confession should have notice of the insolvency at the time, and while in certain cases this might be inferred, there was no evidence in this case from which such an inference could be drawn. A creditor under the Statute of Elizabeth, attacking another's judgment, cannot succeed merely by showing that the judgment was one by confession, and that in such a case no consideration is to be presumed, but the burden is upon him to show that there was no debt due. Assuming that the judgment by confession must be presumed to be without consideration, the party attacking it must still show that by it, the judgment, the debtor was subtracting from his assets so much of his property that there was not enough left to pay the claims of other cre-ditors. The appeal was allowed with costs, but, as it appeared that there were many facts not in evidence, plaintiff was allowed a new trial, costs to be costs in the cause. Comeau v. White, 38 N.S.R. 553.

—Clerical error — Rectification — Affirmation on appeal — Judgment in conformity with rights of parties.] — Where a judgment has simply been affirmed by the Court of Appeal the Court which rendered the judgment on the trial ceases to be seized of the issues raised in the cause and has no right to make a correction of a clerical error in its judgment. 2. A judgment, which is in conformity with the rights of the parties and the whole of the issues raised in the action, cannot be affected by a clerical error on account of the conclusions failing to claim all that a party was in law entitled to.

Robert v. Montreal & St. Lawrence Light and Power Co., 7 Que. P.R. 480 (C.R.).

—Registered judgment — Lien — Agreement of purchase of land — Relief against forfeiture.] — The binding effect of the registration of a certificate of a County Court judgment against the lands of the judgment debtor, under s. 213 of the County Courts Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 38, is not nearly so extensive as in the case of a registered judgment of the Court of King's Bench under the Judgments Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 91; and, when the only interest or estate of the judgment debtor in the land in question is under an agreement of purchase providing for payment by delivery of one half of each year's crop and in no other way, the judgment creditor, having only a registered County Court judgment, does not acquire all the rights or position of an assignee of the benefits of the agreement, and is not necessarily entitled to notice of a cancellation of the agreement by the vendor in pursuance of a stipulation contained therein, or to insist on taking the place of the purchaser in all respects or to redeem the vendor, nor is he entitled to an order for the sale of the land after such cancellation. When the vendor in such a case declares the agreement forfeited and cancels same by notice under one of its terms, whether or not the purchaser could get relief in equity against the forfeiture, the judgment creditor has no standing to claim such relief.

McGregor v. Withers, 15 Man. R. 434.

—Registration of judgment — Property sold by unregistered deed.] — The registration of a judgment against immovable property which, by the cadastre of the division in which it is situate, appears to belong to the judgment-debtor, creates a legal hypothee thereon, even though the judgment-creditor is aware of the existence of an unregistered deed, by which the property had been sold to a third party.

the judgment opened up. Tupper v. Sutcliffe, 38 N.S.R. 332.

—Judgment on admissions — Payment into Court of part "in full satisfaction" — Payment out.] — In an action for a balance alleged to be due in respect of a contract, the defendants paid money into Court with their statement of defence under Con. Rule 419, alleging it in their pleading to be "balance due in respect of all the said matters," and that they brought it "into Court in full satisfaction of the plaintiffs' claim herein':—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled on motion under Con. Rule 616, to judgment with leave to proceed for the balance of their claim, and for payment out of the money paid in, for by so moving they accepted the statement of defence, and were not entitled to the benefit of it severed from the accompanying statement that the account admitted was the entire sum due. Held, further, that whatever discretion the Court may have under the words "subject to further order" in Con. Rule 419 it should not be exercised to enable the plaintiffs to take as payment on account moneys which the defendants had offered only "in full satisfaction."

-Equitable execution - Registered judgment - Interest of heir in lands of intestate, whether realty or personalty-Parties to action.] - Z., the owner of the lands in question, having died intestate, his widow A., took out letters of administration to his estate. B., the only child of Z. and A., subsequently married the defendant and then died childless and intestate. plaintiff, having recovered a judgment in the King's Bench against the defendant, registered in the proper Land Titles office a certificate of the judgment and then brought this action for a sale of the defendant's interest in the lands to realize his judgment. A. had not disposed of the land in any way under her letters of administration, nor had letters of administration of the estate of B. been taken out:-Held, that the defendant had no interest in the lands in question which was bound by, or could be sold under, the registered judgment. Held, also, that an administrator of the estate of the defendant's wife was a necessary party to any proceedings affecting her estate or the defendant's interest in it. Semble, even if the estate of the defendant's wife had been represented in the action, it would have to be held that the defendant, while the land remained vested in the administrator, had no interest in it which would be bound by the judgment. S. 3 of the Judgments Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 91, with the interpretation of the word "land" given in sub-s. (f) of s. 2, refers to a present existing interest in land, and does not cover an interest which may come to a beneficiary as real estate or may come to him as money according to the actions of the administrator and the unknown exigencies of the administration.

-Privy Council-Enforcing judgment on appeal from a Provincial Court. - The judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on appeal from the Supreme Court of New Brunswick may upon motion be entered as a judgment of the latter Court.

Robertson v. Fairweather, 37 N.B.R. 497.

-Voluntary execution of judgments.]-Art. 1147a. C.C.P. is of general application as a mode of voluntary execution of judgments of the Superior Court as well as of those of the Circuit Court.

Bank of St. Hyacinthe v. Desaulniers, Q. R. 30 S.C. 512 (Sup. Ct.).

-Examination of judgment debtor.] - Under Rule 610, of the B.C. Supreme Court Rules, 1906, the debtor must answer all questions affecting his property anterior to the recovery of the judgment. S. 19 of the Arrest and Imprisonment for Debt Act has not been displaced by Rule 610.

Jackson v. Drake, 13 B.C.R. 62.

-On default of appearance - Irregularity -Account stated - Interest.] - The claim for interest on an account stated was not a proper subject of special indorsement under Con. Rule 245 of 1888 and is not under the present Con. Rule 138, inasmuch as an account stated does not of itself entitle the creditor to interest. Interest is not chargeable upon such an account unless a fixed time for payment was agreed upon or a demand for payment was subsequently made, or upon an account indorsed showing that the parties have themselves in adjusting their accounts allowed interest upon balances outstanding, though a jury might and probably would allow such interest as damages. A judgment signed for default of appearance to a writ, the indorsement upon which is not a special indorsement authorized by the rules of Court would be a nullity and not merely irregular, and susceptible of cure by amendment, but by virtue of Con. Rule 711 of 1888, and now of Con. Rule 575 of 1897, notwithstanding such a claim for interest, final judgment may be rightly signed for the liquidated demand upon the account stated, while as to the rest of the claim, the judgment should be interlocutory only; and if under these circumstances judgment for the whole claim has been entered, it is not a nullity but merely irregular, and terms may be rightly imposed on setting it aside:-Held, also, that the requirements of Con. Rule 764 and 775 (1888) (cf. now Con. Rules 628 and 637, 1897) as to the signing and entry of judgments, were satisfied by the proper officer placing his signature up-on the back of the judgment under the words "judgment signed October 6th, 1890," followed by a memorandum in the judgment book in his office signed by him, although he did not sign the judgment on its face. The propriety of directing that a question as to the validity of a default judgment impugned because of alleged defects in the indorsement of claim upon the writ should be determined by the trial of an issue is open to grave doubt.

—Declaratory judgment — Discretion.]—
See Electric Railway.

—Default judgment — Setting aside —Affidavit of merits.] — Held, that on an application to set aside a regular judgment on default, a mere statement that the defendant has a good defence on the merits is not sufficient; but there must be facts set forth which will enable the Court or Judge to decide whether or not the defendant has a probable defence to the action.

Stewart v. McMahon, 1 Sask. R. 209.

—Alimentary pension — Application for relief from.] — It is not by petition but by an action that the person obliged to pay for support of another, can ask to be relieved of such obligation. When the debtor of the allowance for support proceeds by petition his right to do so should not be attacked by inscription en droit and, if it is, the person attacking it will only be entitled to the costs of an oral contestation.

Michaud v. Moreau, 9 Que. P.R. 330 (Sup. Ct.).

—Revivor — Unauthorized discharge from answer.] — Defendant having been arrested under execution issued on a judgment recovered against him by plaintiff was discharged from arrest without the authority of plaintiff or her solicitor: — Held, that such unauthorized discharge did not constitute a satisfaction of the judgment, and was no answer to an action by plaintiff to revive the judgment.

Conrad v. Simpson, 41 N.S.R. 468.

—Special indorsement on writ.] — Where a party is placed in the position of having judgment signed against him summarily, he is entitled to have sufficient particulars to enable him to satisfy his mind whether he should pay or resist.

Bank of Montreal v. Thomson, 13 B.C.R. 218.

—Motion for speedy judgment — Filing of defence — Accounting for delay.] — Upon a motion for speedy judgment launched after the statement of defence has been delivered, it is not essential that the delay in moving should be accounted for.

Victoria Lumber Co. v. Magee, 6 Terr. LR. 187.

-Admissions — Motion for judgment — Special circumstances.] — A motion for judgment under Rule 326 will only be entertained where special circumstances exist which necessitate a hearing out of the ordinary course.

White v. Edgar, 1 Alta. R. 102.

—Motion for judgment on admissions — Pleading.] — A defence stating in answer to each of the paragraphs of the statement of claim, "The defendant specifically denies the allegations contained in paragraph—of the statement of claim," may be deemed a specific denial; and will not be treated by the Court as an admission (Scott, J.). Such a defence is not a specific denial and will be treated by the Court as an admission (Stuart, J.).

Lougheed v. Hamilton, 1 Alta. R. 16.

—Speedy judgment — Sufficiency of affidavit — Defence of fraud.] — Held, that on an application for speedy judgment under order X. of the Judicature Ordinance, it is sufficient to verify the cause of action generally. (2) That on an application for speedy judgment (following Ward v. Plumbley (1889), 6 Times R. 198), if the defendant shows a fair probability of a good defence he should be allowed to plead. Alloway v. Pembranke, 1 Sask. R. 127.

—Judgments by default — Petition in revision.] — A petition for the revision of a judgment by default under Art. 1175 C.C.P. lies in favour of a defendant who has not been summoned in any one of the ways provided by law generally, and is not restricted to cases where a defendant is ordered to appear by advertisement in newspapers under Art. 136 C.C.P.

Awed v. Gimaill, 32 Que. S.C. 111.

- Revocation of judgment - Subsequent discovery of falsity of evidence adduced.]-When an action or petition in revocation of judgment is founded on the subsequent discovery of the falsity of documents, or of evidence adduced at the trial, or on the subsequent discovery of new evidence of a conclusive nature not then available, it is essential that the documents or evidence in question should be material and such that, accordingly as they would have been omitted in the first case, or adduced in the second, the judgment sought to be revoked would have been different. Hence, an action to revoke a judgment settling boundaries will not be maintained on the ground that the report and evidence of a surveyor. heard at the trial, was subsequently discovered to be false, if it appears that the judgment would have been the same, had the report and evidence in question not been put before the Court.

— Execution — Judgment — Con. Rule (1897) No. 843.] — Under Ontario Con. Rule (1897) No. 843, a judgment creditor is entitled to sue out execution instanter upon judgment being signed, and without waiting until it is duly entered. For purposes of execution a judgment under which a sum of money is payable is complete when it is signed.

Rossiter v. Toronto Street Ry. Co., 15 O. L.R. 297.

—Form — Imprisonment — Rule nisi — Costs.] — It is not necessary for a judgment to be signed by the Judge who renders it, it is sufficient that it contains his name. To obtain a rule nisi for imprisonment on a judgment in an action for slander service of a bill of costs is not required. The plaintiff has a right to demand payment of his attorney's costs if the consent of the latter as to execution for the costs sufficiently appears from the flat demanding the issue of the writ of execution and from the motion for the rule nisi.

Rennie v. Mace, 9 Que. P.R. 169 (Ct. Rev.).

—Judgment by default — Art. 94 C.C.P.]— The Court will give judgment in favour of the plaintiff when the defendant has not appeared even when it has no jurisdiction over the subject matter of the action.

Massey-Harris Co. v. Bélanger, 9 Que. P. R. 303 (Sup. Ct.).

—Confession of judgment — Delay.] — The confession of judgment by the defendant filed and served before the expiration of the time allowed to plead to the action operation as an interruption of the delay for pleading until service of notice of acceptance by plaintiff of the confession. A certificate of failure to plead issued by the prothonotary the day after the confession of judgment was filed and an inscription for judgment ex parte made on the same day are premature and will be set aside on motion therefor.

Bruneau v. Magnan, 9 Que P.R. 318 (Ct. Rev.).

—Confession of judgment — Particulars.]— The defendant will not be compelled to give the particulars of the amount for which he offers to confess judgment.

Lusher v. Watson, 9 Que. P.R. 328 (Sup. Ct.).

—Summons for judgment—Omission to indorse solicitors' address.]—Held, that when not otherwise provided the forms in use in the administration of civil justice in England, with such modifications as may be necessary to make them conform to the practice of the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan, must be followed in the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan, and therefore the omission to indorse the name and address of the solicitors issuing a chamber summons, as required by form of summons No. 1, in Appendix K to the English rules, is an irregularity. Quere, whether it is open to a solicitor to appear on the return of a summons and take such an objection, without thereby waiving the irregularity.

Beaver Lumber Co. v. Eckstein, 1 Sask. R. 134.

—Summary judgment — Affidavit verifying claim.] — Plaintiff applied to strike out appearance and enter judgment against the defendant under Rule 103 of the Judicature Ordinance. The affidavit filed alleged a judgment recovered against the defendant in the Alberta Court for a certain sum, but did not set out that he was still indebted to the plaintiff in that or any sum:—Held, that the affidavit did not sufficiently establish the cause of action.

Gaetz v. Hall, 2 Sask. R. 184

- Setting aside judgment - Leave to amend.] — In an action for a money demand, after pleadings had been delivered and the defendant examined for discovery, the plaintiff moved for and obtained under Con. Rule 616 a judgment for the amount of his claim, based on the pleadings and the defendant's depositions. The defendant appealed to a Divisional Court, and at the same time moved for leave to amend his defence and to counterclaim against the plaintiff. The Divisional Court made an order directing that, upon payment into Court of the amount of the judgment, it should be set aside and the defendant allowed to amend his defence and to file a counterclaim; the defendant to pay the costs of the motion and appeal. The defendant then appealed to the Court of Appeal:-Held, that the terms imposed upon the defendant were too onerous; should not extend beyond what might be reasonably necessary for the protection of the plaintiff pending the final disposition of the action; otherwise they might amount to a denial of justice to the defendant. The order was varied by directing that the judgment should stand for the protection, quantum valeat, of the plaintiff, and that the defendant should be at liberty, upon payment of the costs of the original motion and of the appeal to the Divisional Court, to amend his defence and file a counterclaim.

Auerbach v. Hamilton, 19 O.L.R. 570.

—Examination of judgment debtor — Commitment for contempt.] — The defendant, or her examination as a judgment debtor under Rule 748 of the King's Bench Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 40, admitted that she had upon her person more than enough money to pay the judgment, but refused to an swer whether she would pay it or to say why she would not. Afterwards upon the plaintiff's application, under Rule 755, the defendant was ordered by Mathers, J., to be committed to gaol for twelve months on the ground that, within the meaning of that rule, she had not made satisfactory answers to the questions. On appeal to this Court:—Held, per Howell, C.J.A., and Perdue, J.A., following Merrill v. McFarren (1881), 1 C.L.T. 133, and Metropolitan Loan Co. v. Mara (1880), 8 P.R. 360, that the order was justified and should not be set Per Richards and Phippen, JJ.A., that the word "satisfactory" in Rule 755 only means "full and truthful" and that, as Rule 748 does not provide for any questions as to the debtor's willingness to pay or as to his reasons for refusing to pay, there should be no order to commit under Rule 755 for refusal to answer such questions. The Court being equally divided, the appeal was dismissed without costs. Subsequently an order was made on consent providing for the release of the defendant, pending an appeal to the Supreme Court, on terms satisfactory to the plaintiff.

Bateman v. Svenson, 18 Man. R. 493.

—Revocation of judgment — Appeal.] — A direct action for revocation of a judgment does not lie if the judgment in question is susceptible of appeal.

Crépault v. Provencher, Q.R. 35 S.C. 377.

-Equitable execution - Life of judgment -Statute of Limitations.] - A judgment for payment of money was recovered by the plaintiffs against the defendant in 1883, and, nothing having been paid thereon, an order was made in 1892 appointing a receiver to receive the defendant's share or interest in the estate of his father, to the extent of the judgment. That interest was not available until the death of the defendant's mother, which did not occur until 1908; and it was then contended by the defendant that the judgment was barred under the Statute of Limitations, and the receiver should be discharged :- Held, that the order for a receiver was in effect equivalent to a judgment for equitable relief, and gave a new point of departure for the Statute of Limitations, if that was material. But the statute had no application to the actual condition of affairs; the process of equitable execution had been current in respect of the debtor's possible assets, and nothing more eculd be done than to let the receiving order remain in statu quo till the death of the life-tenant and the survival of the reversioner made it possible for the machinery of the Court to become again active.

Kinnear v. Clyne, 18 O.L.R. 457.

-Application to vacate.] - Appeal from decision, 14 O.L.R. 578, dismissed, on motion to quash.

Green v. George, 42 Can. S.C.R. 219.

—Confession of judgment by corporation.]
—A writing sous seing prive signed by the manager and secretary of a company defendant without a special authorization of the board of directors, is not signed by a competent officer and is not available as a valid confession of judgment, authorizing the defendant's attorneys to confess judgment on its behalf. A motion by plaintiff to reject this paper from the record will be granted.

Bessette v. Equitable Mutual Fire Insurance Co., 10 Que. P.R. 260.

-Setting aside - Meritorious defence -Defence to part only of claim.]-The plaintiff secured judgment, regularly, against defendants in default of pleadings. The claim was for $5,000 for commission on sale of bonds and for securing legislation validating such bonds, the amount claimed in respect to each of such services not being specified. The defendants moved to set aside the judgment disclosing a defence as to the claim for commission, but not as to the other part of the claim:-Held, that a meritorious defence sufficient to warrant the setting aside of a regular judgment is such a defence as would entitle the defendant to have the matter inquired into by the Court. (2) That, as the plaintiff had not severed his claim for different services, the disclosure of a meritorious defence as to one part of the claim was sufficient to warrant the judgment being set aside.

Straton v. City of Saskatoon, 1 Sask. R. 426.

--Acquiescence — Payment of costs without reservation.] — If an opposant has been declared proprietor of a lot of cattle under seizure, but condemned to pay one half of the costs of the care and keeping of said animals, and there is an application for the taxation of these costs, he acquiesces to the judgment in producing a statement purporting to be his share in said costs, without any reservation or declaration of intention to appeal.

JUDICIAL SALE

Leave to bid—Sales with the approbation of a Judge.]—Apart from a sale by private contract sanctioned by a Judge, there are two methods which may be adopted to effect sale, when an order for sale is necessary: 1. a sale "by proceedings altogether out of Court," or, 2. by auction or tender "with the approbation of a Judge."

—Rules 450, 451 Jud. Ord., English Order 51, Rules 1a and 3. It is the duty of the Judge to determine who shall have the earriage of the sale, to ascertain the particulars of the property and encumbrances thereon; whether encumbrancers will consent to the sale; the nature of the title; whether special conditions are necessary and what is the best method of sale. None of these duties shall be delegated. It is contrary to our practice to give leave to bid to the person having conduct of the sale.

Cummings v. Semerad, 2 Alta. R. 82.

Judicial sale—Order setting aside—Defective advertisement-Absence of notice.] -In an action by the vendors against the purchasers for specific performance of an agreement for the sale of land, judgment was given for the plaintiffs, by the terms of which the defendants were to pay into Court the amount due for principal and interest, when ascertained by the clerk of the Court, at the time and place appointed by him, and, in default of payment, the lands were to be sold under the directions and with the approval of a Judge, and the purchase-money was to be paid into Court, and thereafter a sufficient sum paid out to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, and, if the purchase-money should not be sufficient, the defendants were to pay to the plaintiffs the amount of the deficiency. The account was taken, the amount due ascertained, and a day and place appointed for payment; the defendants failed to pay; and the plaintiffs proceeded to bring the lands to a sale. After some negotiations between the solicitors for the plaintiffs and defendants, an order was drawn up for sale of the land by sealed tenders. Conditions of sale were inserted in the order and the reserve bid was fixed therein at $10,500. The order was consented to by the solicitors for the plaintiffs and defendants, and was thereupon signed by a Judge. No copy was served upon the de-fendants or their solicitors. The land was advertised for sale by tender, but the advertisement was settled without notice to the defendants, and was not approved by a Judge. It contained no information as to the location and condition of the property, and did not state where further information might be obtained. The defendants had no notice of the sale, and did not hear of it till some months after it had taken place. There was only one tender, that of the plaintiffs, for the amount of the reserve bid, $10,500; the plaintiffs had obtained leave to tender. ine tender was accepted by the clerk, and the plaintiffs declared the purchasers. Two months later the plaintiffs entered a part satisfaction of the judgment, acknowledging that $10,500 had been paid thereon, and signed judgment, without leave of a Judge, against the defendants, for the balance due to the plaintiffs over and above the $10,500. The order for sale provided that one-third of the accepted bid should be paid into Court, and the remainder paid from time to time. This term was absolutely disregarded, and, without any leave being obtained, the plaintiffs simply entered satisfaction for the amount of the bid. The bid was only two-thirds of the original price of sale to the defendants, and more than $2,000 less than the price at which the plaintiffs sold to another purchaser a few weeks later. No application was made to confirm the sale:-Held. that, if there is any case where a strict compliance with rules and orders should be insisted on, it is in such a case as this, where the plaintiffs attempt to purchase at a sale of which they have the conduct; and, as there had been neither a strict nor a substantial compliance with the ordinary requirements, and an injustice would be done the defendants if the sale should be confirmed, the order of Stuart, J., setting aside the sale and the judgment and other proceedings, should be affirmed.

Debts Court:—Held, that this was not an action for debt, but rather for damages, and that the Small Debts Court had no jurisdiction. Where want of jurisdiction is shown on the proceedings, even though the Court below has attempted to give itself jurisdiction by coming to an erroneous conclusion of law, a writ of prohibition will issue notwithstanding that the defendant appeared at the trial and launched an appeal which he subsequently abandoned. Affidavits may be used on applications for prohibition to shew what the facts necessary to found jurisdiction were.

Simpson v. Widrig, 15 B.C.R. 5.

Removal of action to County Court.]—
Upon an application by the defendant P. to transfer an action begun in the Supreme Court of British Columbia to a County Court for trial:—Held, that it was immaterial whether the action fell within sub-sec. 2 or sub-sec. 3 of s. 40 of the County Courts Act, 1905, as both made provision only that the action might be originally launched in a County Court; when launched in the Supreme Court, ss. 73 and 74 are applicable; the former is applicable only in cases of contract, and, while the plaintiff here founded his action upon a contract, it was not a contract to which the defendant P. was a party; and s. 74 applied only to an action for tort, which this was not; the application was, therefore, refused.

Soper v. Pemberton, 14 W.L.R. 200 (B.C.).

—County Court action—Transfer to King's Bench — Refusal — Res judicata.]—1. A County Court Judge has no jurisdiction under section 90 of the King's Bench Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 40, to transfer an action to the Court of King's Bench unless "the defence or counterclaim involves matters beyond the jurisdiction of the Court," and, when it is clear that such matters are not involved, the Court of Appeal will set aside an order allowing such transfer. Doll v. Howard (1896), 11 M.R. 21, distinguished. 2. A County Court Judge should not entertain an application for such a transfer, if it has been already refused by a Judge of the King's Bench on an application under the same section, as the matter is res judicata.

Town of Emerson v. Forrester, 19 Man. R. 665.

—Districts—Transfer of action.]—It is only on application of the defendant in any case and suo motu in the case of incompetence ratione materias that a Court without jurisdiction can remit a case to one with jurisdiction. Thus when, in an action en déclaration d'hypotheque brought in the disord Montreal the immovable being situate in the district of Quebec, the defendant, domiciled in Quebec, does not appear, the Superior Court at Montreal, incompetent ratione personæ cannot transfer the cause to Quebec, and must nonsuit the plaintiff. La Fonciere v. Bolduc, Q.R. 38 S.C. 128.

—Superior Court—Circuit Court.]—Except in the districts of Quebec and Montreal in which the Circuit Court has exclusive jurisdiction, the Superior Court has concurrent jurisdiction with it to entertain a personal hypothecary action for a sum of $33.34.

Campeau v. Deschambault, Q.R. 37 S.C. 542.

County Court Judge - Acting Judge in case of illness.] - Under the provisions of the Acts of Nova Scotia, 1889, c. 9, s. 12, whenever by reason of sickness, disability, etc., any Judge of a County Court shall be unable to act, or shall be disqualified from acting, such Judge may call in and designate any other Judge of any other County Court in this Province to act therein, and such Judge so called in and designated as aforesaid shall have the same powers as the regular Judge of such Court would have otherwise had. S., who was designated by the Judge of the County Court for district No. 1, to act for him in his absence on account of illness, heard an application for a writ of possession. After the death of the district Judge, S. gave judgment in favour of the applicant for the writ, and application was thereupon made to Townshend, J., at Chambers, for a writ of prohibition to prohibit S. from signing the order on the ground that his authority to act terminated with the death of the Judge of the district:-Held, that a Judge once called in and designated under the provisions of the Act was fully invested with all the authority of the Judge of the Court to try and dispose of any cause or matter upon the trial of which he had entered, and that one of the powers he would have was that of giving judgment and signing the order necessary to give effect to it, after the recovery of the Judge or removal of the disability, etc. Held, also, that the making of an order for the possession of land under a sheriff's deed, was not a question of title to land within the meaning of s. 19, sub-s. 1, and so excluded from the jurisdiction of the Court.

In re Gough, 37 C.L.J. 129 (Townshend, J.).

--County Courts Act, R.S.M. c. 33, ss. 74, 204—Replevin in County Courts — Jurisdiction.] —8. 204 of the County Courts Act, R.S.M. c. 33, does not authorize the issue of a writ of replevin out of the County Court of any County Court Division except that in which the goods to be replevied are situate. For the construction of the provision in that section as to the Court out of which the writ is to issue it is proper to look at the prior enactments of which that section is a revision; and, in that light, the words "otherwise ordered" should be held to apply only to an order changing the place of trial and not to give power to order the issue of the writ out of the Court of any County Court Division other than that in which the goods to be replev-An order of a County ied are situate. Court Judge for the issue of a writ of replevin out of such other County Court and the writ issued thereunder are wholly ultra vires and void and afford no protection to the officer attempting to execute the writ, and the owner of the goods described in the writ cannot be convicted under s. 144 of the Criminal Code, 1892, for unlawfully obstructing or resisting the officer in the execution of his duty, because he by force prevented the bailiff from taking the goods under the writ. Morse v. James (1738), Willis, 122, followed. Parsons v. Lloyd (1773), 2 W. Bl. 845, and Collett v. Foster (1857), 2 H. & N. 360, distinguished.

Rex v. Finlay, 13 Man. R. 383.

-Foreign land - Trusts.] - An action will not lie in Ontario for a declaration that, under a transaction entered into outside the Province, land outside the Province is held by the defendants as mortgagees and for redemption, even though the defendants reside in the Province at the time of the bringing of the action against them, and took from the original grantee with notice of the plaintiff's rights. Judgment of Meredith, C.J., 30 O.R. 650, affirmed. Gunn v. Harper, 2 O.L.R. 611 (C.A.).

-Circuit Court- Execution - Seizure of immovable - Sum recovered - Addition of costs.] - The Circuit Court, sitting at Montreal, cannot proceed to execution of its judgment on immovables for a sum not exceeding $40 and the want of jurisdiction in such a case is absolute and material. The taxed costs of the action given by the judgment can be added to the damages to make the amount exceed $40; but "the subsequent costs," that is the costs incurred by a fi-fa, or the cost of such writ, or of a seizure of crops thereunder, or of a return of nulla bona as to movables cannot be added. The clerk of the Circuit Court has no authority, in such a case, to issue a writ of fi-fa de terris and such writ is therefore void. The seizure and adjudica-tion (décret) of the defendant's immovable under such a writ are nullities. An hypothecary créditor of the debtor (saisi) who has not been aware of the seizure nor of the sale, and has been prejudiced thereby has a right to obtain, by petition, the annulment of the sale and setting aside of the adjudication.

Masson v. Dansereau, 18 Que. S.C. 141 (S. C.).

-- Circuit Court - Landlord and tenant -Costs.]-An action by which a tenant asks from his landlord certain repairs or otherwise the resiliation of the lease and, in any event $12.50 damages, is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Circuit Court and the incompetence of the Supreme Court being ratione materio that Court should remit the cause to the proper tribunal. In this case the plaintiff's action having been de-clared ill-founded by the Court of first instance he was ordered to bear the costs of the contestation in the Superior Court and also those in the Court of Review, although the incompetence of the Court had not been pleaded.

Lafranchice v. Caty, 19 Que. S.C. 185 (C.

-Division Courts-Garnishee resident out of Ontario - Attornment.] - Only debts by persons residing or carrying on business in Ontario are subject to garnishee proceedings under s. 190 of the Division Courts Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 60, and the acceptance of service of a summons on behalf of a garnishee residing out of the Province by a solicitor in the Province and his appeararce at the hearing and raising no objection, does not confer jurisdiction on the Division Court. -- Action on award - Service. 1 - The Superior Court at Montreal has no jurisdiction in an action to enforce an award of arbitrators, although the agreement for arbitration, submission and announcement of the award had taken place in the district of Montreal, if the award has been served on defendants in the district of St. Hyacinthe, the whole cause of action in such case not having arisen in the district of Montreal.

-Declinatory exception - Waiver - Cause of action.] - In forming an opposition or petition in revocation of judgment the defendant, in order to comply with Art. 1164 C.P.Q., is obliged to include therein any cross-demand he may have by way of setoff or in compensation of the plaintiff's claim, and, unless he does so, he cannot afterwards file it as of right. A cross-demand so filed with a petition for revision of judgment is not a waiver of a declinatory exception previously pleaded therein, nor an acceptance of the jurisdiction of the Court. In order to take advantage of waiver of a preliminary exception to the competence of the tribunal over the cause of action on account of subsequent incompatible pleadings, the plaintiff must invoke the alleged waiver of the objection in his answers. Held, also, that the Judge of a County Court in which the judgment has been recovered has power, when the amount claimed to be due from the garnishee is so large as not to be within the jurisdiction of a County Court, to make the garnishing summons returnable before himself, even where the garnishee resides in another county. Semble, that the proper construction of Rules 917, 918 and 919 is, that the Judge of a County Court in which a judgment has been recovered has power, when the amount claimed to be due from a garnishee residing in another county is within the jurisdiction of the County Court or the Division Court, to order the garnishee to attend before the Judge of the County Court or clerk of the division within which he lives. -County Courts - Title to land brought in question — Property in sand and gravel on highways — Municipal Act, R.S.M. c. 100, ss. 641, 644 — Costs when action fails for want of jurisdiction.] — 1. A claim of a municipality for damages for the taking by a railway company of quantities of sand and gravel from alleged highways and allowances for roads in the municipality not in its actual possession or occupation, if disputed, raises a question of the title to a corporeal hereditament within the meaning of s. 59 of the County Courts Act, R. S.M. c. 33, and the jurisdiction of the County Court to adjudicate on such claim is ousted when such a question of title is bona fide raised, notwithstanding the provisions of ss. 615 and 644 of the Municipal Act, R.S.M. c. 100, giving the right of possession of such roads to the municipality and power to pass by-laws for preserving or selling timber, trees, stone, or gravel on any of such roads. 2. -Waiver amounting to consent - Failure to object.] - Where an inferior Court has jurisdiction to try only by consent, and the trial proceeds and judgment is given without any objection to the jurisdiction being raised, the objection will not be heard on appeal.

Robitaille v. Mason, 9 B.C.R. 499.

—Inferior Courts — Judgments of — Estoppel — Review.] — The Supreme Court has jurisdiction to try an action against bail given in a cause originating in an inferior Court, and has power to give such relief to the bail as justice may require. The former practice of the King's Bench in England of refusing to try such actions, and of compelling them to be brought in the inferior Court, has never been followed in this Province. The judgment of an inferior Court is not conclusive as between the parties and their privies upon the question of jurisdiction; therefore, where an action was brought in the Supreme Court against bail given in a cause, which had been commenced and tried in the City Court of Saint John, and the defendant by plea denied the jurisdiction of the said Court, and at the trial gave evidence in support of his plea: -Held, that the defendant was not estopped by the judgment of the City Court from offering such proof, and that as the plaintiff had chosen to rely entirely upon the estoppel he must fail. The fact that the judgment relied upon by way of estoppel had been affirmed upon review by a County Court Judge, made no difference. Jack v. Bonnell, 35 N.B.R. 323.

—Bill of lading — Condition giving foreign Court sole jurisdiction over disputes.] —A condition in a contract made in a foreign country, which was moreover executory in largest part outside of this Province, stating that all disputes arising therefrom shall be settled by a certain forcign tribunal, is positively restrictive in form and precludes the parties from relief in our Courts.

Michaelson v. Hamburg American Packet Co., 6 Que. P.R. 165 (Davidson, J.).

—Place of contract — Incomplete sale, C.P. 94.] — Action cannot be brought before the Court of the place where the order was accepted, where it appears that the party who accepted on behalf of defendant had not due authority to do so, and defendant has repudiated the order, especially if said order did not constitute a complete contract of sale.

Superior v. Columbia Phonograph Co., 7 Que. P.R. 211 (Davidson, J.).

—Place of contract — Acceptance — Correspondence.] — Though offers for the sale of goods may be sent from the Province of Ontario by letter or telegram they are, as regards the vendor, deemed to be made at the place where received and the contract becomes perfect or complete by their acceptance there. Hence the Court of the place of such acceptance, which in this case was also the place where the goods were delivered, has jurisdiction in an action for their price.

Angers v. Mutual Reserve, 35 Can. S.C.R. 330.

—Want of jurisdiction, ratione personae vel loci — Judgment by default.] — 1. Want of jurisdiction ratione personæ vel loci is only waived by the appearance of the defendant and his default to plead it within the delays: it does not give a Court power to condemn by default a defendant improperly summoned. 2. If want of jurisdiction is pleaded on appeal by the defendant, the duty of the Court is to put the parties out of Court, reserving plaintiff his recourse before the competent tribunal.

---Contract providing enforcement in another jurisdiction.] — A bill of lading which formed the contract for the carriage of goods by defendant from Halifax, N.S., to Liverpool, Eng., and their delivery there to a steamer of the Cunard line, to be carried to a port in Italy, contained a condition that "any claim or dispute arising on this bill of lading, shall be determined according to English law in England." Defendant failed to deliver the goods to a steamer of the Cunard line, as agreed, at Liverpool, but delivered them to a slow and inferior steamer of another line, on account of which, acceptance of the goods was declined, and the contract of purchase cancelled. An action claiming damages was brought in the Supreme Court at Halifax: -Held, affirming the judgment of Graham, E.J., that the Court had no jurisdiction and that the action must be dismissed.

- Jurisdiction of Referee in Chambers -King's Bench Act (Man.).] - 1. The referee in chambers has no power to rescind his own order not made ex parte. 2. An appeal will not lie from the refusal of the referee to rescind such an order. 3. The referee has no jurisdiction, under Rule 449 of the King's Bench Act or otherwise, even with the consent of the parties, to make an order for the entry of judgment for the defendant, after the action has been entered for trial. Such a judgment can then only be pronounced by a Judge sitting in Court. 4. The referee would have power, under Rule 422 (d) of the Act, to dismiss an action by the consent of the parties. 5. When the judgment entered in an action is unauthorized and unsupported by any order or pronouncement of the Court, an appeal will lie from the refusal of the referee to set it aside on motion before him, although such motion also included an application to him to rescind his own order previously made not ex parte in the same action.

(2) Plaintiff's action in this case having been instituted after the annexation of the City of Ste. Cunégonde to the City of Montreal, the Recorder's Court of the former city had ceased to exist and had no jurisdiction over property within the previous limits of the same.

Leclair v. Goyette, 8 Que. P.R. 22.

-Want of jurisdiction - Appeal - Jurisdiction to dismiss action on appeal.] - In an action to recover a small sum in the Magistrates' Court the defendant appeared and contended that the justice had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the cause of action arose and defendant resided and was served in another county than that in which the justice was sitting. Judgment having been given in plaintiff's favour, defendant appealed to the County Court, the Judge of which dismissed the appeal on the ground that as the justice had no jurisdiction to try the case, the Judge of the County Court had none to hear the appeal, and that the proper remedy was by certiorari: -Held, allowing defendant's appeal wit costs, that as the Judge of the County Court had jurisdiction to take evidence to establish the question of jurisdiction he had jurisdiction to determine that the action ought to have been dismissed and should have given judgment accordingly. Slip v. Morris, 41 N.S.R. 87.

Police magistrate—Appointment for town
 Ex-officio justice of peace for county —
 Jurisdiction over offences in another town.]

—A police magistrate appointed for a town, notwithstanding he has jurisdiction as a justice of the peace for the whole county, has no jurisdiction to act at the trial of an offence committed in another town for which there is a police magistrate, except at the general sessions or in the case of the illness or absence or at the request of such other police magistrate.

—Provincial and Federal Courts — Exchequer Court — Reference.] — (1) The Superior Court of Quebec does not possess any superintending, revisory or appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decisions and decrees of the Exchequer Court in matters arising in Quebec Province. (2) It has no power to refer a record to the Exchequer Court of Canada, which is a Federal Court. Hodge v. Beique, 8 Que. P.R. 142.

—Solicitor-Master — Acceptance by local Master of retainer from one of the parties —Disqualification.] — The firm of solicitors in which a local Master was a partner had accepted, pending a reference before the latter, a retainer from the defendant for some non-contentious business in the Surogate Court: — Held, that the reference and proceedings thereon must be set aside, for, without suggesting that there had been or would be any bias, the Master, as the solicitor even in a small matter for the defendant, a man of large business interests, might reasonably be suspected of bias.

Livingston v. Livingston, 13 O.L.R. 604 (D.C.).

—Order for sale of real estate pendente lite.] — Rule 1 of Order 50, provides, in part "If in any cause or matter relating to any real estate, it shall appear necessary or expedient that the real estate or any part should be sold the Court or a Judge may order the same to be sold":—Held, that this is a general power, to be exercised by the Court or a Judge according to the circumstances, and is not meant to apply only where a sale is necessary or expedient for the purposes of the action. In re Robinson (1885), 31 Ch. D. 247, not followed.

Rainey v. Rainey, 12 B.C.R. 494.

—Superior Court—Exchequer Court of Canada—Action to have proceedings and judgments declared void.] — The Exchequer Court of Canada is not a Court subject to the superintending and reforming power of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec. No action will lie before the latter to have proceedings and judgments had before and rendered by the former declared null and void for want of jurisdiction.

Hodge v. Bérque, 33 Que. S.C. 90.

— Declinatory exception — Sale — Cause of action.] — (1) A debtor who has his domicile in the district of Montreal where the contract of sale was signed, cannot be sued in the district of Quebec, where the goods are to be delivered and are payable. (2) A cause of action is the entire set of facts that gives rise to an enforceable claim; the phrase comprises every fact, which, if traversed, the plaintiff must prove, in order to obtain judgment. Joly v. Godbout, 9 Que. P.R. 93.

—Commissioners' Court — Jurisdiction — Territory.] — A commissioners' Court established in a parish has jurisdiction over causes originating in a part of the territory subsequently erected into a town.

Bussieres v. Bussieres, Q.R. 33 S.C. 292 (Sup. Ct.)

—Ex parte order — Setting aside.] — Held, that every application not expressly permitted to be made in chambers by summons, and an order made upon an ex parte application not so authorized is irregular. (2) That a single Judge has power to set aside an ex parte order for irregularity.

Jackson v. Canadian Pacific Ry. Co., 1 Sask. R. 84.

-Contract made ex juris - Place of performance - Joinder.]-In determining whether a cause of action is founded on a breach within the jurisdiction of a contract which ought to be performed within the jurisdiction, the Courts must look at the contract and at the facts which existed at the time when the contract was made, and then determine whether, having regard to the terms, the contract was one which ought to be performed within the jurisdiction. (2) Where in an action on a covenant to pay money there is no place specified in the contract for the payment, the debtor must follow his creditor, and pay where his creditor is; and if the creditor is within the jurisdiction, and the contract was made without, and the parties under obligation and residing without the jurisdiction make default in payment, the cause of action arises within the jurisdiction:—(3) Held, also (hesitante), that where the plaintiff brings an action in respect of a breach arising within the jurisdiction, he may also claim in respect of a breach of the same contract which occurred without the jurisdiction.

Saskatchewan and Battle River Land and Development Co. v. Hunter, 1 Sask. R. 27.

- Small debt procedure - "Debt whether payable in money or otherwise."] - In an action for $60, being the value of twelve loads of straw at $5 a load, the unpaid balance of rent for a farm leased by the plaintiff to the defendant at a rental of a two-thirds share of the whole crop; and also to recover $15 for money had and received:-Held, that the claim for the value of the straw was not properly brought under the Small Debt Procedure. The words "all claims and demands for debt whether payable in money or otherwise" do not extend beyond cases where there is a debt created in the proper sense of the word, clearly recognized as such, and there is an agreement that such debt is to be paid in something other than money. that, although a claim clearly within the Small Debt Procedure was joined with such claim, the process was nevertheless bad and must be set aside.

Paradis v. Horton, 6 Terr. L.R. 319.

- Dismissal of action - Deposit.]-The defendant who objects to the jurisdiction of the Court should apply to have the action transferred to the competent Court if there is one; he can claim dismissal only by depositing the amount claimed; if he claims it without such deposit his declinatory motion will be declared irregular and dismissed with costs.

McKenzie v. Boston & Main Rd. Co., 9 Que. P.R. 389 (Sup. Ct.).

-Succession - Payment of annuities.] -A plaintiff, to recover certain annuities left by a testator who died in Montreal, from a defendant who resides and has been served within the district of Montreal, must sue in said district, where the sucession devolved and is administered, and not in the district of Quebec, where the will was modified by an Act of the Legislature.

Bourdon v. Pratt, 9 Que. P.R. 128.

-Preliminary exception - Delay - Deposit.] - A motion for dismissal of a procceding on the ground that the Court has no jurisdiction over the subject matter need not be filed within the delays prescribed for preliminary exceptions nor accompanied by a certificate of the deposit with the prothonotary of the amount fixed by the rules of practice in the latter case. Incapacity of a school commissioner to read or write is not a matter of public or common law; the fact that it was not relied on to contest the election of the commissioner at the proper time and in a competent Court is a bar to the parties interested; such want of legal capacity cannot afterwards be taken advantage of by means of a writ of quo warranto.

Bouin v. Pagé, 9 Que. P.R. 177 (Sup. Ct.).

-Goods ordered subject to acceptance in another district.] - If an order for goods given in a district is subject to acceptance by the principal in another district where the goods are delivered the action for price must be taken in the latter district.

Brock Co. v. Forget, 11 Que. P.R. 21.

-County Courts Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 38-Conferring jurisdiction by agreement.] -It is not competent to the parties to a contract to agree to confer jurisdiction upon the County Court of any judicial division other than the one in which, under s. 73 of the County Courts Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 38, any action arising out of a breach of the contract may be brought, and, if such an action is brought in any other County Court, the Judge should refuse to try it on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

Manitoba Windmill Co. v. Vigier, 18 Man. R. 427.

-Disputed debt as property - Non-resident creditor.] - A debt claimed by a party who has no domicile in the Province, from a debtor domiciled therein, although the latter disputes it and declines to pay it, is property within the meaning of s. 4, Art. 94 C.P. Hence, the Superior Court, at the place where such a debt is due, has jurisdiction to hear and determine a suit, brought by the debtor against the creditor, to annul the contract under which it is claimed.

Porter v. Canadian Rubber Co., 18 Que. K.B. 534.

-County Court - Jurisdiction - Judge acting outside his county at request of another Judge - Persona designata - Municipal Clauses Act, B.C.]-The Judge of the County Court mentioned in s. 137 of the Municipal Clauses Act is persona designata, and the authority conferred upon him by said section may not be exercised by the Judge of another county acting on his request and in his absence. The remedy of an aggrieved party in such a case is by application for prohibition, and not by way of appeal.

City of Slocan v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co., 14 B.C.R. 112.

-Incompetent Court - Rights of defendant.] - A defendant summoned before a Court other than that of his own domicile can demand that the cause be transferred to the latter Court or the action dismissed on depositing in Court the amount of the debt: Art. 170 C.P.Q. A declinatory exception asking for dismissal of the action with deposit of a part only of the sum claimed is irregular and will be rejected. Belleau v. Dufault, Q.R. 36 S.C. 306.

- Lessor and lessee - Costs. J-(1) If in an action between lessor and lessee, the plaintiff asks that some repairs be made, or that he may be authorized to make such repairs, and that, at all events, the defendant be condemned to pay him the sum of $75.00 as damages already suffered, the Superior Court has no jurisdiction ratione materiæ, and the Circuit Court is the proper Court to take cognizance of the case. Each party was ordered to pay his own costs in review.

Lapierre v. Marcotte, 10 Que. P.R. 435.

-Foreign defendant having property in the Province of Quebec.] - A foreign defendant can be sued in the Province of Quebec, if he has property in said province which can be taken in execution for his debts. In the present case the action being for the cancellation of a sale, the price whereof has not been entirely paid, and the goods being at Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, these goods or the value thereof, are to be considered as defendant's property, and the latter who resides at Manchester, England, may be sued in the district of Montreal.

Porter v. Canadian Rubber Company, 10 Que. P.R. 402.

-Disqualification of justice - Bias.] justice of the peace is not disqualified from hearing a charge of assault on the ground of bias and prejudice, because (a) the justice had been removed from the position of police magistrate of H. some five months be-fore and the defendant appointed in his stead, and (b) some two months before the justice had been charged with a criminal offence before the defendant acting as such police magistrate, and by him committed for trial.

JURY.

View-Irregular act.]-On the trial of an action claiming damages for negligence on the part of defendant, in connection with the running of his automobile on a public street, whereby plaintiff's husband, while proceeding along the street on his bicycle, was knocked down and received injuries which caused his death, the foreman and one other member of the jury, without the consent of the parties and without the order of the Court or Judge, viewed the locus and made experiments with an automobile for the purpose of gathering information to be used by them in connection with the trial. The jury having found a ver-dict for plaintiff, and the facts having been brought to the notice of the Court by affidavit:-Held, that there must be a new trial. Held, also (by a majority of the Court), that costs of the appeal should be defendant's costs in the cause

Hutchings v. McDonald, 44 N.S.R. 64.

Verdict—Jury refusing to answer questions—New trial.]—Upon the trial of an action for negligently setting fire to plaintiff's timber land the Judge submitted certain questions to the jury under C. S. 1903, c. 111, s. 163. The jury did not answer the questions but brought in a general verdict which the Judge accepted without objection by either party:-Held, this was not a ground for a new trial. Sullivan v. Crane, 39 N.B.R. 438.

-Notice of trial-Jury sittings.]-The plaintiff alleged that she was a clerk in the service of the defendants in their store, and was injured while serving customers, by reason of the negligence of the defendants or of some one in their service in authority. The plaintiff sought to re-cover damages from the defendants for her alleged injuries, but did not directly seek them under the Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act, though she alleged in the statement of claim that she was conforming to the orders of the defendants' manager, etc. Assuming that the action was for the recovery of damages under the Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act, the plaintiff, relying on the King's Bench Act, s. 59, sub-sec. 1, gave notice of trial for a jury sittings, with out obtaining an order for a jury:—Held, that the plaintiff was not to be regarded as a "workman," within the meaning of s. 2 (c) of the Act, not having alleged any facts from which it could be inferred that she was engaged in manual labour at the time the injuries were sustained; and she was not, therefore, entitled as a matter of right to a jury 372 (Man.).

-Jury trial-Delays.]-A party, by allowing a delay of more than 30 days to elapse, from the date at which the case stands ready for trial without proceeding to bring on the trial, is, by the sole operation of law, deprived of his right to a jury trial.

Czifurska v. MacDonnell, 12 Que. P.R. 29.

-Jury trial-"Personal tort"-Municipal corporation and employee.]-1. The words "personal tort" or "wrong" used in the sense intended by Art. 421 C.P. mean a personal tort or wrong independent of any contract. 2. The hire of his services by an employee to a municipal corporation is a civil contract; an action for damages based on failure of the corporation to perform its obligations upon this contract is not triable by a jury.

The City of Montreal v. De Montigny, 11 Que. P.R. 273.

-Jury trial-Delays.]-The death of one of the defendants does not interrupt the delays as regards proceeding to trial, or interfere with the right of the plaintiff to take the necessary proceedings for trial in the absence of any suggestion or notice of such death.

Chartrand v. Paquette, 11 Que. P.R. 351.

-Motion to reject option for a jury trial.]-1. A motion to define the facts for a jury trial duly served, but which was never presented, cannot be considered a proceeding to bring on the trial. 2. The filing of a reply to an answer, which reply contains no affirmative allegation of a new fact does not interrupt the delays within which a motion to define the facts for a jury trial must be presented; the issues were joined by the filing of the answer.

Simard v. Taschereau, 11 Que. P.R. 200.

-Mixed question of fact and law-Charge to jury.]-In an action (tried with a jury) by a carter against the persons to whom he had delivered a load claiming damages for injury by an accident occurring at the time of such delivery, the question whether or not at such time delivery had been made in such manner that the defendants and their employees had been put in charge of the thing delivered is a mixed question of law and fact which should be submitted to the jury. Moreover, the expression by the Judge in the course of his charge of his opinion on the matter of law is an irregularity only in so far as such opinion is erroneous. There is no irregularity in the citation by the Judge in his charge of a judicial opinion given in a case analogous to, though not identical with, that before him when the point of such case applies. Hence, an opinion on the duty of masters to their employees may be cited to show what precautions should be taken by persons taking delivery of things the manipulation of which is dangerous to those taking part in Canada Car Co. v. Poirier, Q.R. 19 K.B.

—Verdict—Weight of evidence.]—A verdict is clearly contrary to the weight of evidence only if it is such that a jury 'on examining all the evidence could not reasonably render it." Arts. 498, pp. 4 and 501 C.P.Q. This provision of the Code means "a verdict of such a nature that twelve reasonable men should not render it."

Montreal Street Railway Co. v. Henderson, Q.R. 19 K.B. 135.

—New panel—Notice.]—The Judge cannot order a new jury to be impanelled without the consent of both parties to the action and such an order made on application of one party without notice to the other will be set aside.

Archibald v. Cullen, 11 Que. P.R. 363 (K.B.).

—Trial by jury—Life insurance policy.]—Where a mutual insurance company issues policies insuring the life of the applicant for a specified period at a stated premium, it is a commercial transaction and an action for the amount insured is susceptible of trial by a jury.

of trial by a jury. Huot v. Provincial Life Assurance Co., 11 Que. P. R. 222.

—Discretion of Judge—Jury trial.]—The Court of Appeal will not interfere with the discretion of the Judge in granting or refusing an application for the trial of an action by a jury unless that discretion has been exercised on a wrong principle.

McCormick v. C.P.R. 19 Man. R. 159.

McCormick v. C.P.R. 19 Man. R. 159.

-Trial by jury-Damages for wrongful dismissal.]—An action to recover damages for an act which amounts to a breach of a hire of services, and which could not be maintained in the absence of such a contract, is not an action "resulting from a personal wrong," within the meaning of Article 421 C.P., and is therefore not triable by jury. City of Montreal v. De Montigny, 20 Que. K.B. 49.

—Jury trial—Delays—Consent.] — Helő, (confirming Davidson, J.):—The consent of the parties to the filing of the plea long after the usual delays has the result of prolonging for thirty days from the date it was fyled the delay within which the defendant could proceed upon his option for a trial by jury.

St. Paul Electric Light and Power Co. v. Quesnel, 12 Que. P.R. 158.

-Verdict-Answers to questions-New trial where meaning of verdict in doubt.]-See Electric Railway.

Rayfield v. B. C. Electric Ry., 15 B.C. R. 361.

—Joinder of issue—Jury trial—Option.]—When the defence to an action sets up new matter, issue is joined by the plaintiff's replication which is limited to admitting or denying the same without suggesting other facts. A general rejoinder by the defendant is then useless and the plaintiff can have it rejected. The option of a trial by jury by special application made within the days from the filing of such rejoinder but eight days after issue was joined by the replication comes too late and will be refused.

Parke v. Laurie, Q.R. 19 K.B. 478.

—Jury trial.]—To avoid being deprived of his right to a trial by jury the party who has obtained it must, within thirty days from the time issue was joined must take not only some but all of the proceedings processary to bring his case to trial.

necessary to bring his case to trial.

—Appeals from verdict in criminal matters.]—See CRIMINAL LAW.

Summons for jury — Delivery of defence.] — An application for change of venue and trial by jury after an order made giving leave to amend defence, but before delivery thereof, is premature.

Bank of B.C. v. Oppenheimer, 7 B.C.R. 446.

—Summoning of — Procedure on — Whether directory or imperative.] — If on the trial of an action in the Supreme Court twenty persons do not appear from which a jury may be selected, the panel may be quashed. The provisions of the Jurors Act relating to the procedure to be followed by the sheriff in summoning a jury are not imperative but directory, and an irregularity in respect thereto is not ipso facto a ground for setting aside the panel.

Ross v. British Columbia Electric Ry. Co., Ltd., 7 B.C.R. 394.

-Property in name of another party advancing purchase money - Resulting trusts -Case withdrawn from jury.] - Plaintiffs as assignees of M. sought to obtain a de-claration that certain lands held in the name of the defendant were, at the time of the assignment, the property of M., and, by reason of the assignment, became vest-ed in the plaintiffs. The evidence showed that the money required by defendant for the purchase of the properties in question was obtained from M., but that M. had nothing to do with any of the purchases except to advance the money to defendant by whom the negotiations were conducted, and in whose name the deeds were taken and recorded, and who, in all cases, acted independently of M. in negotiating for and acquiring properties from the respective owners:—Held, that the doctrine of re-sulting trusts was not applicable, and, there being no issue of fact for the jury on this phase of the case, that the learned trial Judge was justified in withdrawing it from them. Held, also, the trial Judge having at the close of the trial announced his intention of withdrawing the case from the jury, that counsel for plaintiffs should at that time have indicated the facts or issues that they wished the jury to pass upon, and having neglected to do so, that it was now too late for them to object. Held, also, that the objection was without merit as the jury was applied for by defendant and not by plaintiffs. Semble, that where a cause of an equitable nature has been ordered to be tried with a jury, under the provisions of O. 34, r. 2, the trial Judge can not, without the consent of both parties, withdraw the case from the jury, and himself try the issues of fact. McKenzie v. Ross, 33 N.S.R. 252.

—Demand for jury trial — Certificate of default — Art. 442 C.P.Q.] — A certificate by the prothonotary showing that the party who asked for a jury trial has not proceeded with his demand therefor will be struck out of the record if it was filed be-fore the expiration of thirty days from the joinder of issue.

Mathers v. City of Montreal, 3 Que. P.R. 382 (S.C.).

-Jury trial - Delay - Extension.]-The delay granted by Art. 442 C.P.Q. for proceeding by a trial by jury is not extended by the fact that the party who elects to have a jury has obtained the issue of a commission of inquiry returned within less than 30 days, or has been authorized to amend a portion of his proceedings after the expiration of the delay of 30 days after the cause is ripe for hearing, that is to say, after the contestation is at issue.

Foley v. Foley, 17 Que. S.C. 480 (S.C.).

-Grand jury.]-See GRAND JURY.

—Special jury — Striking — Parties — Challenge.] — Defendants, in the original action, counter-claimed against the plaintiff and one R. On defendants' application an order for a special jury was made, the plaintiff and R. acquiescing. On the strik-ing of the jury the sheriff refused to allow ing of the jury the sheriif refused to allow it. to take any part and plaintif then applied under R. 167 to strike out the counter-claim because of the impossibility of properly striking a special jury where there are more than two parties. Held, dismissing the summons, that plaintiff had no right to make the application. As R. acquiesced in the order for a special jury when it was made and had not applied to when it was made and had not appealed, a challenge to the array by his counsel at the trial was overruled.

Bank of British North America v. Robert Ward & Co., 9 B.C.R. 49 (Irving, J.).

- Practice - Counterclaim.] - Where the claim is such that it cannot by reason of R. 170 of the Judicature Ordinance (C.O. 1898, c. 21), be tried by a jury, and there is a counterclaim which, if the defendant had sued in a separate action, he would have been entitled to have tried by a jury. If the counterclaim arises out of the same transactions as the claim, they must be tried together; and in that event the defendant, having accepted the forum chosen by plaintiff, a jury cannot be allowed. Friel v. Stinton, 5 Terr. L.R. 252.

-Malpractice of surgeon.] - The better practice is to dispense with the jury in trials of malpractice suits against surgeons. Town v. Archer, 4 O.L.R. 383 (Falconbridge, C.J.K.B.).

-Jury notice - Order striking out.] - In an action of covenant upon two mortgages the defence was that the defendant had been induced to execute them by false and fraudulent representations. The defendant filed and served a jury notice, which was struck out by a Judge in Chambers, whose order was affirmed by a Divisional Court. A motion by the defendant for leave to arpeal to the Court of Appeal was refused: Held, that the order sought to be appealed against involved no question of law or practice on which there had been conflicting accisions or opinions by the High Court, or by Judges thereof: R.S.O. 1897, c. 51, s. 77, sub-s. (4), cl. (c). The power of a Judge in Chambers to strike out a jury notice has never been doubted.

- Jury notice - Libel action.] - In actions of tibel it is not necessary to file and serve a jury notice.

Puterbaugh v. The Gold Medal Manufacturing Company, 3 O.L.R. 259.

-Jury trial - Illegal mandate - Art. 421 C.C.P.]-In order that there may be a jury trial it is necessary that all the causes of action in which it is demanded are susceptible of that exceptional mode of proceeding. An action claiming damages from defendant for having executed a mandate for illegal search by wrongfully entering plaintiff's residence and threatened him with a criminal process, can be tried by a jury; but if in addition damages are claimed for deprivation of the use of certain movable effects this cause of action does not involve a right to jury process. Roy v. Dickson, 4 Que. P.R. 357 (Sup.

—Special jury — Fees of jurors in B.C.]— A special juror is entitled to $2.00 for each day's attendance at Court whether he serves or not, and whether in order to attend Court he travels from his place of residence or not; if he so travels he is in addition entitled to mileage.

Taylor v. Drake, 9 B.C.R. 54.

-Jury trial - Settling facts - Art. 421 C.C.P.] - Trial by a jury can be had only in the cases enumerated in Art. 421 C.C.P. An action for damages founded on fraud and false representations does not come within any of the classes of action mentioned in this article. There is little time, on motion to settle the facts, to plead that the cause is not susceptible of trial by jury

Bell v. Royal Bank of Canada, 21 Que. S.C. 321.

-Jury notice - Striking out - Judge in Chambers - Common law action - Action to restrain nuisance — 0.J.A., s. 103.] An action to restrain a nuisance and for damages not being one which prior to the Administration of Justice Act, 1873, was cognizable by the Court of Chancery, a jury notice therein is not irregular, under s. 103 of the Ontario Judicature Act, R.S. O. 1897, c. 51. While no doubt a Judge sitting in Chambers has discretionary power to strike out a jury notice in such a case, the practice is to leave it to be dealt with by the trial Judge.

Shantz v. Town of Berlin, 4 O.L.R. 730 (Meredith, C.J.).

-Option for jury trial-Time limit-Art. 423 C.P.C.] — The special application to the Judge for acte of declaration of option for a trial by jury-when this option has not been declared by the declaration or pleadings-must be presented to the Judge within the three days granted for this pur-pose by Art. 423 C.P.C., and it is not suffi-cient to give to the opposite party notice of such application within the time so limited, even although one of the three days should be a non-juridical day.

Canadian Pacific Railway Co. v. Foster, 12 Que. K.B. 139.

-Criminal law - Crown case reserved -Application for - Misapprehension of jurors -Statements by.] - It is no ground for stating a reserved case, after a trial and conviction, that two of the jurors who joined in the verdict of guilty did so under a misapprehension; it is contrary to principle to allow the statements of jurors, even under oath, to be used for the purpose of an application for a reserved case. Rex v. Mullen, 5 O.L.R. 373 (Street, J.). 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 363.

-Trial by jury - Action on mutual insurance policy.] - The nature of an action to recover the amount of a policy of insurance issued by a mutual insurance company, is not such as requires trial by jury. 2. Want of jurisdiction for the trial by jury of such a case may be urged at any stage of the proceedings; but, if the question be raised for the first time only in answer to a motion to settle the assignment of facts. such motion will be rejected without costs.

Montreal Coal and Towing Co. v. Empire Mutual Assurance Co., 5 Que. P.R. 283.

-Jury notice - Leave to deliver reply Discretion.] - Where an order was made by the Master in Chambers allowing the plaintiff to deliver a reply after the regular time for replying had expired, a Judge refused to interfere with the discretion exercised, although the reply was open to the objection that all that it sought to put in issue was already in issue by the statement of defence, the purpose being to enable the plaintiff to file a jury notice, and the case being one in which the plaintiff should be allowed to file a jury notice, and thus leave it to the discretion of the Judge at the trial to say whether it should be tried with or without a jury. The pleadings were not closed until the lapse of four days (excluding the Christmas vacation) after the delivery of the reply, or un-til the defendants had joined issue, and a notice of trial given before the lapse of that time, and without a joinder of issue having been delivered, was irregular; and the Judge had no power to allow the notice of trial thus irregularly given to stand.

Qua v. Woodmen of the World, 5 O.L.R. 51 (Meredith, J.).

-Trial by jury - Declaration of option-Non-juridical days.] — If the third and fourth days after joinder of issue are nonjuridical days, the motion of acte of declaration of option for a trial by jury may be presented on the next following juridical day. (See also Forget v. Wallach, 1 Que. P.R. at p. 29). Morlock v. Webster, 5 Que. P.R. 484.

- Question for - Street railways - Conductor's authority.] - Plaintiff came to a platform station of the defendants and signalled an approaching car to stop. car slowed down, but did not stop, and as it was passing the conductor seized plaintiff's hand and while attempting to help her on board signalled to car to go on again which it did and she was injured. The jury found that the plaintiff was injured by the conductor seizing her hand and trying to pull her on the car, and that he acted negligently:-Held, that it was the duty of the conductor to assist people in getting on and off the car, and that it might be within the line of his duty to assist those apparently about to get on a car while it was slowing up; that there was evidence to go to the jury, and that the effect of it was for them to consider, and that it should have been left to them to pass upon the circumstances of the case as to the scope of the conductor's authority. Per Meredith, J.:—The jury might draw reasonable inferences against the defendants from the fact that they did not call the conductor, or any other of their servants or officers, to prove what actually took place, or what the conductor's duties were.

Dawdy v. Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric R.W. Co., 5 O.L.R. 92 (D.C.).

-Jury trial - Time to declare option.] -A plaintiff in default to answer a plea may obtain permission to file his answer, but such filing cannot have the effect of enlarging the time for declaring an option for a jury trial which expires on the fourth day from joinder of issue.

Deniger v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 5 Que. P.R. 136.

-Alleged misconduct of jurymen - Contradictory affidavits — Viva voce examina-tion of deponents.] — Where one of the grounds in support of a motion for a new trial was that some of the jury had been tampered with, and the charge included the defendant's attorney, an officer of the Court, and a number of affidavits very contradictory and of an entirely irreconcilable nature were read, under the special circumstances of the case an order was made that the deponents should appear before the Court to be examined viva voce touching the matters in question. Where each party is seeking to make a title for himself by possession the Court will not interfere with the findings of the jury unless the verdict was one which, the whole of the evidence being reasonably viewed, could not properly have been found.

Wood v. LeBlanc, 36 N.B.R. 47.

- Jurors Act, B.C.—Special direction.] Where an action is to be tried at the Victoria or Vancouver Civil Sittings held pursuant to the S.C. Act Amendment Act, 1901, s. 5, a special direction to the sheriff is necessary under s. 69 of the Jurors Act to summon a jury.

—Jury trial — Option — Inscription.]—(1) The delay of thirty days, within which a party must proceed to bring on a trial by jury, runs from the day of the granting of a motion praying acte of his option for jury trial. (2) A motion for fixing the facts for the jury is a proceeding to bring on the trial, and an inscription for proof and hearing filed by the adverse party, not-withstanding such motion will be rejected. -Jury notice - Striking out - Non-repair of highway.] - An action for damages caused by runaway horses, which were frightened by a steam roller placed and left standing on a highway by the defendants is an action based on an act of misfeasance by them, and not on the non-repair of the highway, and the plaintiff is entitled to have it tried by a jury.

-Findings as to negligence - Questions as to special grounds — Judge's charge — Non-direction — Misdirection.] — Upon a trial by jury, the Judge in directing the jury as to the law is bound to call their attention to the nanner in which the law should be applied by them according to their findings as to the facts, the extent to which he should do so depending on the circumstances of the case he is trying, and, where the form of the charge was defective in this respect and, consequently, left the jury in a confused state of mind as to the questions in issue, there should be a new trial. Judgment appealed from (Alaska Packers v. Spencer, 10 B.C.R. 473) affirmed, Davies, J., dissenting:-Held, per Nesbitt, J .- That in an action founded on negligence it is advisable that specific questions should be submitted to the jury to enable them to state the special grounds on which they find negligence or no negli-

-Severing issues.] - In an action containing several causes of action some of which are triable by jury under Rule 170, the others being non-jury matters, the trial of the issues may be severed and an order was made setting down the action for trial with a direction that the issues respecting the alleged fraudulent conveyance and for a conveyance of certain lands should be tried without a jury and that the other claims founded upon contract exceeding $1,000 should be tried by a jury.

-Jury trial - Option - Delay.] -If a plea is filed during the holidays, the plaintiff may answer it on the 7th day of September, from which date the delay for making option for trial by jury will run if the plea is not answered

Bélanger v. Montreal Street Ry. Co., 7 Que. P.R. 272.

-Damage claim under $500-Yukon practice.] - The right to the trial of an action by jury in the Yukon Territory is regulated by s. 88 of the North-West Territories Act, as amended by 60 & 61 V. c. 32, and the defendants were entitled to file a jury notice, though the amount of damages claimed did not exceed $500.

Ledieu v. Roediger, 1 W.L.R. 515 (Macaulay, J.).

-Order for special jury - New trial -Whether order is exhausted after first trial.] - Pursuant to an order therefor a trial was had with a special jury; on appeal a new trial was ordered:-Held, that the order for a special jury was not exhausted and a summons for a special jury on the new trial was unnecessary.

Alaska Packers' Association v. Spencer, 11 B.C.R. 138 (Martin, J.).

-New trial - Order for special jury.] -Pursuant to an order therefor a trial was had with a special jury; on appeal a new trial was ordered:—Held, per Irving and Morrison, JJ. —Grand jury — Constitution of — Motion to quash — Juror prejudiced.] — An objection to the qualification of an individual member of a grand jury is not an objection to the "constitution" of the grand jury within the meaning of s. 656 of the Criminal Code, and so cannot be raised by motion to quash. Per Martin, J .: - The question as to whether or not a grand juror is prejudiced is for the Judge of Assize to decide and his decision cannot be reviewed on appeal.

-Jury notice-Effect of.]-A jury notice is not a notice of trial but one changing the mode of trial. If given in sufficient time it assigns the case to the jury list of trials, and when once given makes the case a jury case when the trial comes on, unless the case be an equitable one or the parties agree to a trial without a jury.

Hackett v. Rorke, 37 N.S.R. 435.

-Jury notice - Non-repair of highway.]-In an action for damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff from a fall upon a highway under the control of the defendant municipality, the statement of claim alleged that the accident to the plaintiff was caused by the faulty, improper and negligent construction of the pavement, which, being built upon an incline and having a smooth surface, "would call for the ordinary rough finish which it is customary and prudent to build under said cenditions":—Held, that the action was for "injuries sustained through non-repair" of the highway, within the meaning of s. 104 of the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 51, and that a jury notice was therefore irregular.

Armour v. Town of Peterborough, 10 O.L. R. 306, M.C.

—Jury trial — Delay to proceed — Forfeiture—442 C.P.J.—1. When, after making the option for a jury trial in his declaration the plaintiff allows more than 30 days to elapse from the date on which he should have filed his answer to plea, without proceeding to bring on the trial, he is deprived of his right to a jury trial, and subsequent production of an answer, whether by consent or otherwise, has not the effect of reviving the lapsed right to a jury trial. 2. A motion praying act of an option already made is not a proceeding to bring on the trial.

Asselin v. Montreal Light, Heat & Power Co., 7 Que. P.R. 218 (Davidson, J.).

—Demand for jury trial — Motion.] — A demand for a jury trial will be received if presented within the three days following the joinder of issue notwithstanding one clear day's notice of the motion therefor was not given.

Richer v. Shawinigan Water & Power Co., 7 Que. P.R. 71 (Sup. Ct.).

-Joinder of different causes of action -Jury trial - Separate trials of different causes of action. J — Under Rule 257 of the King's Bench Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 40, a plaintiff may sue in the same action both for malicious prosecution and trespass, although, by s. 59 of the Act, the former must be tried by a jury unless the parties waive it, whilst the latter must be tried without a jury unless a Judge otherwise orders, and a statement of claim including both such causes of action is not thereby embarrassing or inconsistent with the rules of practice of the Court. After the pleadings are closed, a plaintiff suing for both such causes of action may either waive his right to a jury or apply to have the trespass claim also tried by a jury, and, if such application fails, then an application might be made, under Rule 263, to exclude one of the causes of action or for separate trials, but no application under the last mentioned rule should be made before the cause is at issue.

Coates v. Pearson, 16 Man. R. 3 (Mathers, J.).

- New trial - No substantial difference in evidence - Withdrawal of case from jury.] -The judgment of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, in an action by plaintiff as executrix of M, to recover an amount claimed to be due under a contract of hiring with defendant, was reversed on appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, on the ground that the illness of deceased, by which he was permanently incapacitated, would of itself terminate the contract, and a finding of the jury that deceased did not continue in his employment after notice of a rule that an employee was only to be paid for time that he was actually on duty was held to be against evidence and was set aside. A new trial having been ordered and had, the presiding Judge, on the conclusion of plaintiffs case, stated that, in his opinion, the additional evidence made no material change in the case from what it was before, and withdrew the case from the jury:—Held, that the facts being substantially the same as before no useful purpose could be served in submitting the case to a jury, and that the judge was right in withdrawing the case from the jury and in dismissing the action.

Milonas v. The Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 7
Que. P.R. 427 (Lavergne, J.).

—Failure of jury to answer material question — Power of Court to supply omission.]
—Where the jury, in answering questions submitted to them, fail to answer a material question, upon which their answers to other questions depend, their findings will be set aside and a new trial ordered. Assuming that the Court has power to supply a finding, on a point not answered by the jury, it will not do so in a case where the evidence is not clear or where it is conflicting. A deposition tendered in evidence for the purpose of contradicting a witness held to be improperly received where the attention of the witness was not called to the writing before it was tendered.

Blois v. The Midland Railway Co., 39 N. S.R. 242.

-Questions submitted - Duty of jury to answer.] — T. & Co., under an arrangement made with B. in 1900, agreed to supply S. with materials to be used in building and repairing houses owned or managed by B. The materials were charged direct to B., and supplied upon his credit. This arrangement continued down to November 8th, 1902, without any dispute between the parties. T. & Co. claim that about that time B. requested them for his convenience to change the account and charge all materials got under the arrangement between them to S. to prevent the account from getting mixed up with his private account with T. & Co. with which S. had nothing to do, and the account was changed in the books accordingly, but without any intention on the part of T. & Co. to alter the liability of B. This arrangement and request is denied by B., and he says on the other hand that about the 8th of November, 1902, he gave T. & Co. a written notice that he would be no longer liable for goods supplied to S., and that the arrangeon the d that, e made n what he from ig sub-iul purhe case is right ury and ment between them to that effect was terminated. On the trial of an action by T. & Co. against B. for the goods sold and delivered after November 8th, 1902, the jury was asked "after the 8th of November, 1902, to whom was credit given by T. & Co., to B. or S.," and they found to B. They were also asked whether the goods were sold upon the credit of B. or S., and they found upon the credit of B. They also found, in answer to a question, that B. agreed to become liable for the goods supplied subsequent to the 8th of November, 1902, and charged in T. & Co.'s books to S. On these findings a verdict was entered for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed:—Held, per Tuck, C.J., Hanington and Landry, JJ., that these findings were in effect findings that the change in the account was made under the circumstances alleged by T. & Co. at the request of B., and that the notice alleged to have been given by B. terminating his liability was not given, and it is no ground for a new trial, that no distinct questions were left, or findings asked on these issues. Held, per Barker, McLeod, and Gregory, JJ., that as the questions submitted did not necessarily involve findings upon the issues between the parties, and, upon which the defendant's liability must depend, there should be a new trial. That under section 163 of c. 111 of the Consolidated Statutes, 1903, counsel have the right to require the Judge to submit questions to the jury, and if they are pertinent to the issue it is the duty of the Judge to instruct the jury that they must answer them if they can. Thorne v. Bustin, 37 N.B.R. 163.

—Jury trial — Facts assigned.] — After the facts to be submitted to the jury have been assigned, a party cannot, even if thirty days elapse after such assignment, inscribe the case on the ordinary roll.

The production, with or without consent,

Leclair v. Montreal Street Ry. Co., 7
Que. P.R. 453.

—Jury trial — Time for proceeding — Deprivation of right to trial by jury — Motion to settle assignment of facts.] —Where a party has, within the proper time, served a motion to settle the assignment of facts to be submitted to the jury he cannot be deprived of his right to a jury trial except by peremption in the usual course.

Furness Withy & Co. v. Great Northern Railway of Canada, 7 Que. P.R. 361 (Cimon, J.).

-Jury trial - Option - Delay.] - Option for trial by jury by special application must be made within three days after issue joined; the subsequent acquiescence or the filing of necessary pleadings does not reopen the right to ask for a jury trial.

La Banque Nationale v. Atlantic & Lake Superior Ry. Co., 8 Que. P.R. 309.

—Exhausting panel — Talesmen — Treating juror.] — Where the jury panel has been exhausted by reason of some of the jurors being out in another case the presiding Judge may direct talesmen to be summoned. Treating one of the jurors during the progress of the trial by the attorney of one of the parties is ground for a new trial. Nadeau v. Theriault, 37 N.B.R. 498.

—Trial by jury — Demand for particulars—Questions for jury — Forfeiture of right to jury tral.] — The demand by motion for assignment of the facts to be submitted to the jury provided by article 424 C. P.Q., even when followed by adjudication, is a proceeding within the meaning of Article 442 C. P.Q., which, if made within the prescribed time, may avail against the forfeiture of the right to trial by jury provided by that article.

Furness Withy & Co. v. Great Northern Ry. Co., Q.R. 29 S.C. 11.

—Personal torts — Injury to property.] —
The damages caused to an industry by the closing of streets adjoining the premises and giving access thereto, though the work and carrying on of the industry may be affected, and a cause of action has arisen, are not damages resulting from personal torts or of delits or quasi-delits against movable property as provided by Article 421 C.C.P. Therefore the party sued for recovery of such damages has no right to a jury trial.

Montreal Brewing Co. v. City of Montreal, Q.R. 15 K.B. 297.

—Hire of machine.] — The hire of machines to a manufacturer for the purposes of his industry is an act of commerce and the lessee sued by the lessor for damages resulting from violation of the terms of the lease has a right to a trial by jury under Articles 421 et seq. C.C.P.

Brunet v. United Shoe Machinery Co., Q. R. 15 K.B. 295.

— Jurors — Disqualification of — Ground of challenge.] — The fact that a juror was related to the plaintiff's wife, which was not known to either party or their attorney at the time of the trial; and that two other jurymen were open to challenge on the ground that they had not the necessary property qualification are not grounds for a new trial. Telling the jury in an action of replevin that if there is any question about the defendant's possession of the property replevied it was settled by the record of the return at the time of replevying is misdirection and a ground for a new trial.

though there is other evidence amply justifying the finding of possession.

Lloyd v. Adams, 37 N.B.R. 590.

-Jury trial - Action for damages for negligence.] — The plaintiff's claim was for damages for the loss of an arm in consequence of being run over by a car of the defendants which he claimed was going at excessive speed, without a fender and without the gong being rung to warn him. On his application, under s. 59 of the King's Bench Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 40, a Judge ordered that the action should be tried by a jury on the grounds that the principal issues to be tried were issues of fact and that a jury would be more likely to assess the proper damages in case of a verdict for the plaintiff than a Judge:-Held, that the judicial discretion exercised by the Judge in this case should not be interfered with. Griffiths v. Winnipeg Electric Ry. Co., 16 Man. R. 512.

— Verdict — Right of jury to return a general verdict.] — If either party asks that the jury return a general verdict, then the jury must do so unless they are unable to agree.

Macleod v. McLaughlin, 13 B.C.R. 16.

—Venire — Challenge to array — Disqualification — Interest.] — It is no ground for a challenge to the array that the jury was summoned by a coroner who was the deputy of the sheriff of the county who was disqualified by reason of being a ratepayer in the town that was the defendant in the action, or that the coroner summoned the jury under a notice by the clerk of the circuits, pursuant to s. 18, of c. 126, C.S. 1993, and no venire was issued.

Milmore v. The Town of Woodstock, 38 N.B.R. 133.

-Trial in Toronto - Investigation of accounts - Striking out jury notice.] - The practice where the venue in an action is laid out of Toronto is, except in rare cases, to leave the matter to be dealt with by the trial Judge; but in Toronto, where there are separate sittings for jury and non-jury cases, the latter being practically a continuous sitting throughout the year, the practice has been adopted, in order to prevent the jury list from being unduly encumbered, to strike out the jury notice in cases which properly ought to be tried without a jury. In an action on a promissory note, which involved an investigation of accounts, and therefore properly triable without a jury, an order was made in Chambers directing such notice to be struck out. Montgomery v. Ryan, 13 O.L.R. 297.

—Answer by majority to question submitted — Failure to take objection at time.] —In an action claiming damages for placing a car laden with lumber on plaintiff's track, whereby a collision occurred and plaintiff suffered injury, questions were submitted to the jury who, without having remained out for four hours, returned the answer of a majority to certain of the questions. The prothonotary read over the answers to the jury, without making any reference to whether the answers were unanimous or not, and asked the question, "as you say one so say you all," and, no one objecting, entered the verdict accordingly:—Held, that this had the effect of making the verdict a unanimous one. Per Longley, J., that if counsel for defendant wished to object to the validity of the finding, he should have done so on the spot, when the jury could have been sent back, and having been silent and allowed the verdict to be recorded, he could not afterwards raise the objection.

Midland Railway Co. v. McDougall, 39 N.S.R. 280.

— Jury tral — Illegal seizure — Trespass.] — Under s. 59 of the King's Bench Act, a party complaining of an illegal seizure of his goods has a right to have his action tried by a jury unless he expressly waives such right. That the act complained of might have been properly characterized as a trespass, will not affect the right to a trial by jury, for every illegal seizure is a trespass although there may be a trespass without a seizure.

Bartlett v. House Furnishing Co., 16 Man. R. 350.

—Judge's charge — Practical withdrawal of case.] — On trial of an action against a surety, the defence was that he had been discharged by the plaintiff's dealings with his principal. The trial Judge directed the jury that the facts proved in no way operated to discharge him; and that while, if they could find any evidence to satisfy them that he was relieved from liability they could find for defendant he knew of no such evidence and it was not to be found in the case:—Held, that the disputed facts were practically withdrawn from the jury, and as there was evidence proper to be submitted and on which they might reasonably find for defendant there should be a new trial.

Wood v. Rockwell, 38 Can. S.C.R. 165.

—Motion for jury trial — Que. P.C: Art. 442.] — The delay given by Article 442 C. P. is for the presentation of the motion for a jury and the mere service of a notice of motion within the time is not sufficient. Bray v. Montreal Street Ry. Co., 8 Que. P.R. 122.

—Neglect of municipality.] — An action against a municipality claiming damages for personal injuries received by plantiff by being beaten in a police patrol waggon by another occupant thereof is properly triable by a jury.

Larrasev v. City of Montreal, 8 Que. P.

-Jury notice - Motion to strike out -Discretion exercised before trial. | - The discretion of a Judge in Chambers in striking out a jury notice, in an action to be tried outside of Toronto, was held to have been properly exercised where the action was brought by the executors of a deceased mortgagee upon the covenant contained in the mortgage deed, and the defence was that the written documents, the mortgage deed and the deed of conveyance to the mortgagors, did not express the true agreement between the parties: - Semble, per Meredith, C.J.C.P., that the rule laid down in Montgomery v. Ryan (1906), 13 O.L.R. 297, might well be extended to all cases, whether to be tried in Toronto or elsewhere. Semble, also, that the facts alleged in the defence would not have been admissible under the plea of non est factum; that the defence was really an equitable one, involving rectification of the instrument sued upon; and in that case the jury notice would be irregular. Bryans v. Moffatt, 15 O.L.R. 220 (D.C.).

-Motion for jury trial - Delay.] - Issue is joined by failure of the plaintiff to reply to a plea within six days from the time it is filed. A motion for a jury trial made more than three days after joinder of issue will be refused as too late. Cox v. Phœnix Assur. Co., 9 Que. P.R.

117 (Sup. Ct.).

-Jury trial - Formation of the jury -Jury de medietate linguae.] - A jury composed exclusively of persons speaking the French or English language can only be had upon the application of either party and if the opposite party does not object; otherwise it will be refused even if both parties speak the same language and are of the same origin.

Martin v. St. Vincent de Paul, 9 Que. P. R. 381.

-Jury trial - Joinder of issue - Delays.]
-The delay of thirty days fixed by C.P. 442, to have the facts fixed for the jury does not run until an inscription in law filed with the plea has been determined. Clough v. Fabre, 9 Que. P.R. 231.

—Amendment of pleading — Trial by jury.]
—A plea amended by leave of the Court on terms imposed on defendant may restore the latter to the position in which he was when his original plea was filed. Therefore, in a case susceptible to trial by a jury where the defendant who has lost his right to demand such a trial obtains the leave of the Court to file a new plea he can then demand a jury trial as he could have done originally.

Huard v. Landrieux, Q.R. 33 S.C. 391 (Sup. Ct.).

--Qualification - Age limit. J - The age limit provided by s. 1 of the Jury Act of N.B., 1903, c. 126, operates as a disqualification.

Moran v. O'Regan, 38 N.B.R. 399.

-Jury notice - Striking out in chambers -Equitable issue.] - Since the cules providing for the holding of separate jury and non-jury sitting it is desirable, even where the venue in an action is laid out of Toronto, to have it settled at as early a stage of the action as possible, whether the case is to be tried with a jury or without a jury. Montgomery v. Ryan (1906), 13 O.L.R. 297, approved of. In this action the plaintiff sought to set aside a certain agreement as fraudulent and void as against the plaintiffs and to have the plaintiffs declared entitled to a one-eighth share in the property in question; and in the alternative, a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to a one-eighth share in certain stock: or damages and other relief :- Held, that this was an action which it was proper to try without a jury. Sawyer v. Robinson (1900), 19 P.R. 172, distinguished.

Clisdell v. Lovell, 15 O.L.R. 379 (D.C.).

-Findings of jury - Grounds for setting aside.] - The main defence to an action on a bond was that it was materially and fraudulently altered after it was signed. Questions were submitted to the jury the answers to which were in plaintiff's favour, and were in accordance with the weight of evidence: - Held, that the findings would not be disturbed except upon clear and necessary grounds, and that in the absence of such grounds defendant's appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Kennedy v. McDonald, 42 N.S.R. 22.

- Jury trial - Jurisdiction of referee to order trial by jury.] — Under Rules 27 and 29 of the King's Bench Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 40, the referee in Chambers may exercise the power of ordering the trial of an action by a jury to a Judge by sub-s. (b) of s. 59 of the Act.

Cameron v. Winnipeg Electric Railway Co., 17 Man. R. 475.

-Damages - Personal injuries.] - The effect of c. 44 of 6 Edw. VII. (Ca.), was to annul the repeal of the North-West Territories Act, so far as Alberta and Saskatchewan were concerned and the Ordinance respecting juries is in consequence not in force:-Held, also, that the increase of damages on the second trial of an action for damages for the loss of a foot from $3,500 to $6,500, was not perverse or wrong, and that the latter amount was not under the circumstances excessive.

Hansen v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co., 6 Terr. L.R. 420.

-Trial by jury - Misdirection by trial Judge on matters of fact - General verdict — Additions to verdict.]—(1) Misdirection by the trial Judge on matters of fact affords no ground for a new trial, more particularly when the Judge expressly instructs the jury that they are not bound by his view of the facts. (2) When, in a trial by jury, the assignment of facts is dispensed with by consent of the parties, and the jury bring in a general verdict to which they append a recommendation and an expression of opinion, the Court will not infer that the verdict rests exclusively on these additions and will therefore not disturb it, if it is one which in view of all the evidence, could reasonably have been found. (3) In the absence of an assignment of facts, the Court cannot apply special rules of law (v.g. respecting employer's liability) to any one or more of the facts proved, to say that a general verdict is wrong. In such a case, the verdict must stand, if there is enough in the whole evidence to support it. (4) When it does not appear that the jury was actuated by improper motives, or was misled, a verdict of $2,000 damages to a father for the death of his son is not excessive.

City of Montreal v. Enright, 16 Que. K.

- Finding of jury - Questions of fact -Duty of Appellate Court. | - Where the question was one of fact, and the jury, on evidence properly submitted to them, accepted the evidence on one side and rejected that adduced upon the other, the Supreme Court of Canada refused to disturb their findings.

The Windsor Hotel Company v. Odell, 39 Can. S.C.R. 336.

-Jury trial - Delays.] - When a party within 30 days after issue joined has formulated the facts which the jury should consider, he is not barred by taking no further step in the cause for 30 days more and after that time he is entitled to an order for trial by jury.

Brosseau v. Montreal Light, Heat and Power Co., 9 Que. P.R. 227 (Sup. Ct.).

-Jury trial - Sums claimed as accessory to a commercial contract.] - An action claiming a certain amount for salary due, for monies advanced and for salary until the completion of a management contract, is triable by a jury, if these monies have been so advanced incidentally and as accessory to the execution of the management contract as alleged by the plaintiff's declara-

Clark v. Clark Automatic Nut-lock Company, 10 Que. P.R. 386.

 Jury trial — Expiry of the delays — Amended pleading.] — When a party is permitted to produce an amended pleading, he does not thereby acquire again the right to have the cause tried by a jury, if that right has already been forfeited by the expiry of thirty days since issue joined.

Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company and Dupras, 10 Que. P.R. 114.

-Jury trial - Right to - Action in warranty.] - When the city of Montreal being sued in damages for a defective sidewalk, takes an action in warranty against a third party, its demand is based on a special right conferred by its charter, and it does not sue for personal wrongs. Art. 421 C.P. being a restrictive one, there can be no jury trial in such an action in warranty.

Ste. Agnes v. Montreal, 10 Que. P.R. 157.

- Trial by jury - Option forfeited by lapse of delay.] — Leave granted to a plaintiff to amend his answer to the defendant's plea does not revive his right of option to a trial by jury, which he had declared, but had forfeited by allowing a delay of thirty days to elapse from the date at which the case stood ready for trial. - Jury trial - Contract based on a municipal by-law.] - Held, a case is not triable by a jury when it is taken on an infringement of a contract based on a municipal by-law. A municipal by-law is purely an act of administration, excluding all idea of commerce, and the signing of a contract based on said municipal by-law in no way changes the nature of the Municipal Act. - Jury trial - Delays - Inscription in law.] - If an inscription in law and a plea to the merits have been filed concurrently, the delay of thirty days allowed by C.P. 442 to have the facts fixed for the jury does not run until the inscription in law has been determined.

O'Brien v. Montreal Light, Heat and Power Co., 10 Que. P.R. 348.

-Jury notice - Motion to strike out.]-Held, reversing an order of Riddell, J., in Chambers, striking out a jury notice, that in an action of merely common law character the determination as to the method of trial should not be taken out of the hands of the trial Judge; and that, if he determines that an action on the jury list should be tried without a jury, he should himself try it, because the litigants are entitled to have their cause tried in its order upon the list. The reasons for letting the determination rest with the trial Judge prevail over those of convenience and expedience applied peculiarly to actions tried at Toronto.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Order for arrest — Want of cause — Liability.] — A justice of the peace who issues a warrant of arrest without inquiry into the informant's grounds of suspicion against the accused is liable to the latter if the complaint is not justified on any serious ground, reasonable or plausible. Murfina v. Sauvé, 19 Que. S.C. 51 (S.C.).

— Territorial jurisdiction — Act for protection of sheep — Offence against — Locality of.] — Upon a motion to quash an order of a justice of the peace for the county of Waterloo, under ss. 11-13 of R.S. O. 1897, c. 271, an Act for the Protection of Sheep and to impose a Tax on Dogs, finding that the defendant, at the town of Waterloo, did unlawfully have in his possession two dogs, which dogs worried and injured two sheep, the property of the complainant, at the township of Wellesley, and ordering the defendant to kill the dogs:— Iled, that the offence under s. 11 was the having in possession a dog which, wherever the act was done, had worried, injured or destroyed sheep, and therefore the offence was committed at the town of Waterloo, where the defendant lived, and a magistrate for the county had no jurisdiction, there being a police magistrate for the town, and it not appearing that the convicting magistrate was acting for or at the request of such police magistrate. Upon the same information the same magistrate also made an order, under s. 15 of the Act, for payment by the defendant to the complainant of $10 (said to be the value of the sheep) and costs:-Held, that a proceeding under s. 15 is independent of one under ss. 11-13, and the magistrate had no power to award damages for the injury to the sheep without a separate complaint. The first order was quashed without costs, because the question of the magistrate's jurisdiction was not raised before him, and the assuming jurisdiction was his mistake. The second order was quashed with costs to be paid by the complainant, because he insisted on going on with the claim for damages before the magistrate.

Rex v. Duering, 2 O.L.R. 593.

—Jurisdiction — Warrant executed by a constable not qualified.] — The fact that the defendant was arrested and brought before the magistrate, who made the conviction, by a constable who was not qualified as required by Con. Stat. c. 99, s. 69, is no ground for a certiorari under the Liquor License Act, 1896. The improper arrest does not go to the jurisdiction of the convicting magistrate. R. v. Also, that the rule ejusdem generis applied in full force, and the kind or class of taxes which defendants bound themselves to pay being "all license fees or other rates or assessments chargeable by reason of the manner in which the premises are used or occupied by defendants," the "regular and ordinary taxes, etc." which plaintiff bound itself to pay could not be placed in that category. Also, that there was no ambiguity in the language used and parol evidence should not have been admitted.

St. Mary's Society v. Albee, 44 N.S.R. 1.

—Lease—Breach of conditions—Particulars.]—An action to recover damages for non-observance of the conditions in a lease is summary. An exception to the form demanding the particulars required to enable the defendant to plead to the action should indicate the nature of such particulars. Insufficiency of stamps on papers filed in an action does not warrant an exception to the form if the opposite party has not been prejudiced and the stamps have since been affixed by leave of the Court.

Weinstein v. Millman, 11 Que. P.R. 294.

—Lease—Promise of sale.]—A contract by which the owner of an immovable agrees to lease it for a sum payable by instalments the last of which would mark the expiration of the term and then to sell the premises to the lessee the total consideration being the rent during the term and the price of sale afterwards establishes between the parties the relation of lessor and lessee as provided in Art. 1150 C.P.Q. Therefore, the owner has all the remedies, summary and by way of saisie gagerie of a lessor to recover the instalments and damages which fall due and to resiliate the contract and retake possession of the premises.

Crevier v. Lamoureux, Q.R. 38 S.C. 172 (Ct. Rev.).

—Lease of furnished house—Unsanitary condition.]—Upon the letting of a furnished house, there is an implied undertaking that the house is reasonably fit for habitation; and if from any cause this is not the case, the tenant is justified in repudiating the tenancy. This is quite irrespective of any representation by the lessor; if the lessor makes a representation that the house is fit for habitation, he is not relieved from the effect of that representation by the fact that he honestly believed in the truth of it. The house must be so reasonably fit for habitation at the time of the beginning of the term; and the lessor has no right to be allowed after that time to put the house in the condition it should have been in. A Divisional Court disagreed with the findings of fact of Clute, J., at the trial, as to the condition of a house let furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant, and, being of opinion that the house when let was in such an unsanitary condition as to justify the defendant in leaving it, allowed an appeal from the judgment at the trial in favour of the plaintiff, and dismissed an action for damages for breach of the covenants in the lease. In showing the unsanitary condition of a house, it is not necessary to prove that the condition was such that it caused illness. Beal v. Michigan Central R.R. Co. (1900), 19 O.L.R. 502, and Ryan v. McIntosh (1909), 20 O.L.R. 31, referred to as to the principles to be adopted upon an appeal from the findings of fact made by a trial Judge.

Gordon v. Goodwin, 20 O.L.R. 327.

-Injury to property by overflow of water-Flats in building tenanted by different persons.]-The defendants were held liable in damages for injury to the plaintiffs' premises by water overflowing from a tap negligently left running in the lavatory in the defendants' premises upon the floor above the plaintiffs' in the same building, both plaintiffs and defendants being tenants of the owner of the building. Per Clute, J .: - The fair inference from the evidence was that the defendants, by themselves or their servants, who were allowed to use the lavatory, negligently left the tap running, and caused the injury complained of. Per Middleton, J .: - Where the claim is made against a tenant occupying an upper flat, prima facie he is liable for the escape of water from a tap left open; the onus is upon him to establish facts freeing him from liability. The action was originally brought by the assignees of the persons who were tenants of the lower premises when the damage was done, but the assignors were added as plaintiffs:-Held, that, both parties being before the Court, a right of action was vested in either one or the other, and the effect of the assignment was immaterial.

Powley v. Mickleborough, 21 O.L.R. 556.

—Non-tenantable building—Inherent defect.)—The owner of a building which falls owing to a defect in construction, is liable on two grounds, for the damages suffered by his tenant; first, for failure of his obligation, under the contract of lease, to provide the tenant with a habitable building, and secondly, on account of the quasi-delit mentioned in Art. 1055 C.C. For the first he is liable for the damages foreseen or which might have been foreseen at the time the lease was given (Art. 1074 C.C.) and for the second, all those which are the immediate and direct result of the falling of the building provided the same are claimed within two years after which there is prescription. The tenant may, at his option, base his action on either of these causes or on both at once.

—Termination of lease by death of the usufructuary lessor—Crop standing—Right of lessee to the crop.]—The lease of a farm made by an usufructuary for a term of years expires at his death, but if it occurs after a year of the term has begun, the lessee has the right to continue his enjoyment to the end of that year. Hence, when the death of the usufructuary lessor takes place in May, when the crop is standing, the lessee having the enjoyment of the farm till the first of November following, has the right to cut the crop in the interval, and thus make it his own.

Peckham v. Parizeau, 39 Que. S.C. 9.

—Construction of covenant—Taxes—Partial exemption.]—A society owned a building worth about $20,000 which, by the statute law of the province, was exempt from municipal taxation so long as it was used exclusively for the purposes of the society.

A portion of the building having been used at intervals for other purposes, it was assessed at a valuation of $1,000 and the society paid the taxes thereon for some years. Such portion was eventually leased for a term of years to be used for other purposes than those of the society, and the valuation for assessment was increased to $10,000. The lease contained this covenant:-"The said lessees * * * shall and will well and truly pay or cause to be paid any and all license fees, taxes or other rates or assessments which may be payable to the city of Halifax, or chargeable against the said premises by reason of the manner in which the same are used or occupied by the lessees hereafter, or which are chargeable or levied against any property belonging to the said lessees (the said lessor, however, hereby agreeing to continue to pay as heretofore all the regular and ordinary taxes, water rates and assessments levied upon or with respect to said premises, and the personal property thereon belonging to the lessor)." The society was obliged to pay the taxes on such increased valuation and brought action to recover the amount so paid from the lessees:-Held, that the taxes so paid were "regular and ordinary taxes" which the lessors had agreed to pay as theretofore and the lessees were not liable therefor on their covenant.

Saint Mary's Young Men's Society v. Albee, 43 Can. S.C.R. 288.

-Covenant to renew-Severance of term-Consent of lessor—Expropriation.] — The covenant for renewal of a lease for a term of years is indivisible and if the lessee assigns a part of the demised premises neither he nor his assignee can enforce the covenant for renewal as to his portion. The assignment of part of the leasehold premises included an assignment of the right to renewal of the lease for such part and the lessor executed a consent thereto:-Held, that he did not thereby agree that his covenant for renewal would be exercised in respect to a part only of the demised premises. In the case mentioned the lessee who has severed his term cannot, when the land demised is expropriated by a railway company, obtain compensation on the basis of his right to a renewal of his lease. Judgment of the Court of Appeal (18 Ont. L. R. 85) affirmed.

She has been accustomed to transact all her own business. and manage her own property without assistance from anyone, and it was not contended that she was not fully capable of making an agreement of this nature:-Held, that the lease would not be set aside, as there was no fraud or misrepresentation; that the defendant M. did not stand in any fiduciary relationship to R. by reason of his having drawn the lease, and the rule as to independent advice in such cases was not applicable here. The lease contained the following provision for renewal:-"For a further term of five years or more and containing and subject to precisely the same covenants, provisions and agreements as are herein contained." The defendants consenting the words "or more" in the renewal clause were expunged. Robinson v. Estabrooks, 4 N.B. Eq. 168.

-Injury to goods on demised premises-Alteration of premises above—Breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment—Premises leased for particular purpose.]-The defendant, the landlord of premises, was held liable to the plaintiff, the tenant, for damage done to goods of the plaintiff upon the demised premises by water and lime dust from the upper storeys of the defendant's building coming down upon the demised premises, it being known to the defendant when he made the lease, that the plaint of proposed to use the premises for the purposes of a shop for the reception and sale of second-hand furniture, and the premises being, by reason of the dust and water, rendered unfit for carrying on such business. The defendant was liable for a derogation from his grant, and also for breach of his covenant for quiet enjoyment; and he was not relieved by the employment of an independent contractor to make the repairs to the upper storeys which caused the descent of the dust and water. The plaintiff's covenant to repair did not constitute a defence, for, if the ceiling had been repaired, it would not have kept out the water, nor wholly kept out the lime dust. Damages assessed for the goods injured-but not for loss of The conversion of the watercloset from a private one to one to be used by other tenants, and the cutting off of the private access thereto, constituted a breach of covenant for which the defendant was liable in damages.

—Lease—Sublease—Collapse of building— Implied warranty as to fitness.]—The plaintiffs, the owners of land on which they had commenced to construct a building, on the 16th January, 1907, granted a lease of the basement and three flats of the north and the two upper flats of the south half, to the defendant F., for a term of 12 years from the date of the completion of the building. This lease was stated to be made pursuant to the Land Titles Act, and was in the form prescribed by that Act for leases for terms exceeding three years. It was expressed to be made subject to the covenants and powers implied, except as thereinafter modified, and subject to specified covenants, terms, and conditions, one of which gave the lessee the right to continue the lease for a further period of two years at the same rental, upon giving notice. Another term was that if the demised premises should at any time during the term be destroyed by fire or other unavoidable casualty so as to be a total loss, the lessee should be obliged to pay only a proportionate part of the current rent, and the term should become forfeited and void. On the 19th March, 1907, the defendant F. executed a transfer of the lease to the defendants N. and B., and the plaintiffs assented thereto. The defendant F. never occupied the premises individually, but formed a partnership with defendants N. and B., and the firm commenced their occupation on the 22nd April, 1907. On the 18th June, 1908, N. and B. executed a sublease of the north half of all the floors of the building, except the basement, to another mercantile firm, for a term commencing on the 1st July, 1908, and ending on the 22nd April, 1909. This sublease was also expressed to be pursuant to the Land Titles Act, and contained the provisions referred to above. The sublessees occupied the portion of the building sublet to them, and stored therein a a large quantity of goods. On the 26th October, 1908, all three floors occupied by them collapsed, and a large proportion of their goods were precipitated into the basement. The plaintiffs repaired the building, and brought this action against the defendant F. to recover the amount expended in repairs; N. and B. were afterwards added as defendants, and they brought in the sublessees as third parties, claiming indemnity against them. third parties counterclaimed against N. and B. for the loss of goods resulting from the collapse; and the defendants N. and B. counterclaimed against the plaintiffs for indemnity against the counterclaim of the third parties:-Held, that, where there is no express agreement or warranty, a landlord is not liable in damages for breach of an implied covenant or warranty that the building is fit for the purpose for which it is to be used. And, held, that no express covenant or warranty was ever made or given by any one, either by the plaintiffs or by the defendants N. and B. Held, also, that there was nothing to prevent the parties from contracting themselves into the terms of the Land Titles, where they would not otherwise have been brought within them, and they had so contracted both in the lease and sublease; and, therefore, the covenant as to repairs, which, by s. 55 of the Act, is declared to be implied in every lease under that Act, was implied in the lease to F. and the sublease to the third parties, and they were bound thereby, and were liable to rebuild the whole building, and therefore liable to the plaintiffs for the amount properly expended by them. Semble, that the lessees, having covenanted to restore the building, or parts of it, demised to them, were bound to do so, even if there were some latent defects in its construction. And held, that the burden of proof was upon the lessees, and it was impossible to say, upon the evidence, that they had not put a greater load upon the piers than they were apparently fit to carry. Held, also, that the collapse of the building did not come within the exception as to "other unavoidable casualty" in the express provision of the leases, or within the exception of "accident or other cas-ualty" in the implied covenant. Held, also, that where the tenant's covenant to repair contains no provision as to notice, the landlord is under no obligation to give the tenant notice to repair before doing the repairs himself and proceeding to recover the cost. Manchester Bonded Warehouse Co. v. Carr, 5 C.P.D. 510, followed. Held, also, that judgment should be entered for the plaintiffs against F. for the cost of the repairs and the plaintiffs' costs; for F. against N. and B. for this amount and F.'s costs of defence; for the plaintiffs directly against N. and B. for the cost of the repairs and the plaintiffs' costs; for the defendants N. and B. against the third parties for the cost of the repairs, and for N. and B.'s costs applicable to the enforcement of their claim against the third parties, but not for the amount of the plaintiffs' costs.

—Lease of unfurnished house—Warranty as to habitable condition.]—The plaintiff alleged an oral warranty of the habitable condition of an unfurnished house leased to him by the defendant:—Held, upon the evidence, that the plaintiff relied upon his own inspection, and was not given any assurance as to the condition of the house; and, therefore, the case was not brought within De Lassalle v. Guildford, [1901] 2 K.B. 215.

Evans v. Templin, 13 W.L.R. 714.

—Jurisdiction—Damages and specific performance.]—The Superior Court has no jurisdiction to try and determine an action arising from the relation of lessor and lessee in which the amoun of damages claimed is under $100, even though, in addition thereto, the conclusions are for the specific performance of work alleged in the declaration to cost $100.

—Contract by correspondence—Acceptance of conditions—Telegram.]—Where negotiations have been carried on by correspondence, for the lease of premises, between the owner and the agents of a company, without a final understanding, and the last letter is from the owner, containing new conditions and proposals, a telegram from the agent in these words: "Will meet you at store, Saturday 2 p.m. Authority to sign lease," is not an acceptance of such conditions and proposals and does not amount to a closing of the contract.

Robichon v. Charlton Co., 39 Que. S.C.

-Covenant for renewal-Construction.]-A lease for 21 years of mill-races and lands on the old Welland Canal contained the covenant that: "After the end of 21 years, as aforesaid, if the said (lessors) do not continue the lease of the said water and works' they would compensate the lessees for their improvements:-Held, Girouard and Duff, JJ., dissenting, that at the end of the 21 years the lessees were entitled to a renewal of the term but not to a new lease containing a similar covenant for renewal or compensation. They had a right to renewal or compensation but not to both. After the original term expired the lessees remained in possession, paying the same rental as before, for a further term of 21 years, no formal lease therefore having been executed and none demanded or tendered for execution. Ten years after the expiration of this second term they were dispossessed and claimed compensation for improvements by petition of right. Held, that the rights of the lessees were the same as if the original term of 21 years had been formally continued, or renewed, for a further like term. Held, per Idington, J., Girouard, J., contra, that the lessees having obtained a renewal their right to compensation was gone. Per Davies and Anglin, JJ .: - The lease was probably not renewed within the meaning or the lessor's covenant, but there having been no proof of a demand for renewal and the lessees having re-mained in possession for the entire period for which they could have claimed a renewal, they can have no right to compensation for improvements. If they ever had such a right in default of obtaining a renewal it is barred by the Statute of Limitations.

The plaintiff, the lessor, by a clause in the lease, guaranteed that the heating apparatus and the plumbing of the building was in a good working and proper condition, and competent for the purposes for which they were intended. The lease also contained a clause giving the lessees the right to renewal of the lease for a further term of one year, "provided always, and these presents are upon this express condition, that, if the said yearly rent hereby reserved . shall at any time remain unpaid for a space of 10 days or if a breach or default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained, by the said lessees, then the covenants herein which relate to a renewal lease for a period of one year on the expiration of this lease shall become null and void and of no effect;" and it gave the lessor a right to re-enter after a breach of these covenants. The defendants were the assignees of the lease from L. et al. There was no express demise of the basement of the building, but the defendants took possession of it and used the furnaces there for the purpose of heating the building, with the consent of the lessor. The plaintiff, alleging that the covenant properly to heat the rooms in the upper flat was not complied with, and therefore the defendants had lost their right to a renewal of the lease, and were overholding after the end of the year, brought this action to recover possession of the demised premises:-Held, that the covenant to heat the upper rooms was not a covenant which ran with the land, but the defendants took the assignment with the notice of that covenant, and in equity it was binding upon them; but it was a condition precedent to its binding effect that the heating apparatus should be in good working and proper condition and competent for the purposes for which it was intended. And held, upon the evidence, that the upper rooms were not satisfactorily heated by the defendants, within the meaning of the covenant; that the heating apparatus was in good working and proper condition so far as it could be, considering the system adopted, which was to some extent defective; that the defendants did not make the best use they could reasonably have expected to make of the system, such as it was; that there had been a breach of the covenant; that there had been nothing to constitute a waiver of the breach; and, therefore, the right to a renewal was gone. Held, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to possession, but not to double damages, the holding over not being wilful and contumacious, and not to special damage, none having been proven.

Fire in leased premises - Responsibility of lessee - Seizure in recaption - Sale of stock in trade "en bloc."] — Held (affirming the judgment of the Superior Court, Doherty, J., 14 Que. S.C. 396, 1899 C.A. Dig. 232, except as to the amount of damages, which was increased):-1. Where a lease contains stipulations to the effect that the lessee shall deliver the premises at the expiration of the lease in as good order as they were at the commencement of the lease, reasonable wear and tear and accidents by fire excepted, and shall pay extra premium of insurance exacted by insurance company in consequence of the work carried on by the lessee, the effect is to do away with the presumption, which would otherwise exist by law in favour of the lessor, that the fire which occurred in the leased premises was due to the fault of the lessee, or of persons for whom he was responsible, and it is for the lessor to prove fault before he can recover damages. Evans v. Skelton, 13 Can. S.C.R., p. 637, followed. 2. Damage by fire so inconsiderable in extent that repairs may be made in three or four days does not justify the lessee in abandoning the premises. His remedy is to put the lessor in default to make the necessary repairs. and then, if the repairs be not made, to ask for the cancellation of the lease. 3. The application of Article 1623 of the Civil Code,-which says that in the exercise of the privileged right the lessor may seize the things which are subject to it, upon the premises, or within eight days after they are taken away; but, "if the things consist of merchandise they can be seized only while they continue to be the property of the lessee"—is not restricted to daily sales of merchandise in detail. The article applies to any sale which a merchant may make in the ordinary course of business: and the sale en bloc of a stock which has been damaged by fire on the premises, is an ordinary and usual transaction; and therefore the lessor is not entitled to seize in recaption, in the possession of the purchaser, a damaged or partially damaged stock bought from the lessee in good faith, even when such merchandise has been sold en

The hotel was occupied by W. under a lease from the defendant, which contained a covenant on the part of the lessee to repair, "except outside repairs," and that the lessee will repair according to notice:-Held, that the exception in the lease as to outside repairs had not the effect of a covenant on the part of the defendant to make outside repairs; but, even if the lease had contained an express covenant on the part of the defendant to make outside repairs, and he was in default in making them, after notice of the want of repair, before the plaintiff was injured, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, he being a stranger to the covenant, and the covenant not having the effect of putting the defendant in constructive possession of the premises. Snetzinger v. Leitch, 32 O.R. 440.

-Covenant as to payment for improvements and renewal of lease - Independent covenants.] - A lease contained a covenant to the effect that the lessee might make improvements upon the demised premises, that at the expiration of the lease or any renewal thereof the same should be valued and paid for by the lessor and then concluded as follows: "And upon such payment upon such valuation not being duly made the party of the first part, his heirs or assigns, shall, if so required, give or renew a lease including the covenants of the present lease to the parties of the second part for a further period of five years, with the like agreement of valuation and payment for improvements as in this lease expressed and at the same yearly rent." On the expiration of the term a dispute having arisen between the lessor and lessee as to the effect of the covenant - the former claiming that it was optional with him either to renew the lease or pay for the improvements The latter that after valuation. he was entitled to have the improvements valued and paid for by the lessor - a special case was stated in Equity for the opinion of the Court. Each party was ready and willing to perform the covenant as interpreted by him:-Held (per Landry, Barker and McLeod, JJ.): (1) That the covenant was single and therefore that the lessor was discharged upon his showing that he was ready and willing to renew the lease; (2) That even if there were two separate and independent covenants, one to pay the appraised value of the improvements and the other to renew, only one was to be performed and the option lay with the lessor, he being the first person called upon to act. Per Tuck, C.J.: That the lessee was entitled to have a valuation of the improvements made, that until the making of such valuation it was optional with the lessor to pay for the improvements or renew the lease. Quære, per Tuck, C.J.: Whether a special case stated under the provisions of 53 Vict. c. 4, s. 139, should not be first heard by the Judge in Equity. Ward v. Hall, 34 N.B.R. 600.

 Construction of renewal clause — Increased rent.] - A renewable lease provided that renewals should be at such "increased rent" as should be determined by arbitrators "payable in like manner and under and subject to the like covenants, provisions and agreements as are contained in these presents." The lease further provided for the payment of the yearly rent as follows: 'For the first ten years of the said term $80 per annum; for the remaining eleven years $100 per annum":-Held, that the proper method of increasing the rent on renewal was by adding to the rent of $80 per annum for the first ten years, and to the rent of $100 per annum for the remaining eleven years of the renewal term. Held, also, that the condition as to the rent for the new term being an increased rent, might be satisfied by making a merely nominal addition, there being no increase in the rental value of the premises.

-Transfer of lease - Title to land - Alienation for rent - Possessory action.] - An instrument by which lands were leased for sixteen years at an annual rental, subject to renewal for a further term of twelve years, provided for the construction of certain buildings and improvements by the lessee upon the leased premises, and hypothecated these contemplated ameliorations to secure payment of rent and performance of the obligations of the lessee. The leased premises were transferred by the lessee by deed of sale, and on disturbance an action, with both petitory and possessory conclusions, was brought by the transferee against an alleged trespasser, who pleaded title and possession in himself without taking objection to its cumulative form:-Held affirming the judgment appealed from, that under the circumstances the action should be treated as petitory only; that the contract under the instrument described was neither emphyteusis nor a bail á rente (lease in perpetuity), but merely an ordinary contract of lease which did not convey a title to the land nor real rights sufficient to confer upon the transferee the right of instituting a petitory action in his own name. Held, also, that the transfer by the deed of sale of such leased premises would not support the petitory action, as the lessee could not convey proprietary which he did not himself possess —Maintaining unsafe building — Snow and ice — Resulting damages.] — Held, by the Court of Review (affirming the judgment of Archibald, J.):—The proprietor of a building is responsible for injuries caused by snow or ice falling from the roof thereof, where the fall of the snow or ice results from a want of proper care in keeping the premises in a safe condition; and the proprietor is not relieved from this responsibility as regards the public by the fact that the building is wholly occupied by tenants, or by the fact that the municipal by-laws impose upon tenants the obligation of keeping the roof free from snow. -Negligence - Defective platform - Liability of lessee - Covenant by lessor to repair - License from lessee - Invitation.] -One of the plaintiffs purchased from an exhibition association, upon the terms mentioned in the agreement set out in the report, the privilege of selling refreshments under a certain building during the holding of the exhibition in grounds leased by the association from the corporation of a city for two months in the year for the purpose of holding an exhibition, the city by the lease covenanting to repair. During the period of her occupation, and while walking across a platform which was constructed between the building and the sidewalk to give access to people requiring refreshments, the female plaintiff put her foot into a hole in the platform which was out of repair and was injured:-Held, that under the agreement mentioned, she was not a lessee of the premises but a mere licensee, who was lawfully there upon the invitation of the association, and that the association owed a duty to the persons whom they induced to go there to keep the place in proper repair; that there was no liability on the corporation of the city as they were not the occupiers of the grounds and did not invite the plaintiff to go where she was hurt, and there was no highway to be kept in repair by them, but that the association, who had by their negligence caused the accident, were liable.

Marshall v. Industrial Exhibition Association, 1 O.L.R. 319.

-Lease - Option to purchase - Revocation of by death - Consideration, inadequacy of.] - A provision in a lease, whereby the lessor grants to the lessee an option to purchase the leased property within a limited time, is not a nudum pactum. Such an option is, within the time limited, binding on a deceased lessor's personal representatives, though not so expressed. Statements, whether written or verbally made, by the lessor as to the terms of the lease are not, after the death of the lessor, admissible as evidence in favour of his successor in title as being declarations against the deceased's interest. Per McGuire, C.J .-Such statements merely amount to statements of an agreement which must be supposed to be made on fair terms, and, consequently, as much in favour of the maker's interest as against it. Where a tender is made in current bank bills, and objection is made only to the amount tendered, the objection cannot subsequently be taken that the tender was not made in "legal tender." Judgment of Rouleau, J., affirmed. Yuill v. White, 5 Terr. L.R. 275.

-Lease made by deceased husband - Dower -Priorities. J - A doweress whose dower has not been assigned has no estate in the land out of which she is entitled to dower, but, as soon as her dower is properly assigned, she is entitled to claim possession of the land assigned to her, in priority to persons claiming under leases created by her husband, without her assent, during the coverture. Stoughton v. Leigh (1808), 1 Taunt, 402, followed. Where a testator, dving in August, 1901, devised land to his son, and probate of the will was granted to the executor named therein, and the son in April, 1902, executed a conveyance of a part of the land to the testator's widow for her life, as and for her dower, the executor not assenting thereto: -Held, that the conveyance was of no avail; for the only person who could assign dower was the executor, in whom, under s. 4 of the Devolution of Estates Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 127, the whole inheritance of the testator vested. -Lessor and lessee - Anticipated rent -Repairs - Evidence. J - A sum of $300 paid by the lessee to the lessor as a bonus for improvements made to the immovable is equivalent to an additional rent paid by anticipation. If the lease, therefore, is resiliated by a judgment in an action by the lessee for failure by the lessor to make the repairs the latter is bound to repay the bonus as any other rent paid in advance. The lease of an immovable for a commercial establishment is a purely civil contract. -Agreement for lease - Waiver - Distress for rent.] - Defendant contracted to let to plaintiff a house, then under construction, for the term of one year from the 1st June, 1900, at the rental of $20 per month, payable monthly in advance. It was agreed that in the event of the house not being completed by June 1st, there should be a proportionate reduction in the rent. The house was not completed by the time agreed, but plaintiff moved in on the 24th June, when the work was still un-finished. No rent was charged for the month of June, but plaintiff paid rent in advance for the months of July, August, September, and October, and continued in occupation of the premises until the 1st May, 1901, when he moved out. In an action by plaintiff, claiming damages for goods distrained by defendant for rent in arrear:-Held, dismissing plaintiff's appeal, with costs, that the trial Judge was right in construing the agreement as a letting for a year from the 1st June, 1900, with a condition that if the occupancy was prevented by reason of the house not being ready for occupation at that time, there should be a deduction from the rent in respect to the period of time during which the house was not occupied. Held, also, that the payments made by plaintiff showed a waiver of the provision made in respect to the house being finished by a fixed date, or rather, in respect to the reduction which was to be made in consequence of its not being finished.

Acorn v. Hill, 34 N.S.R. 508.

- Lease - Covenant - Forfeiture -Waiver.] - A lease to a joint stock company provided that in case the lessee should assign for the benefit of creditors six months rent should immediately become due and the lease should be forfeited and void. The two lessors were principal shareholders in the company, and while the lease was in force one of them, at a meeting of the directors moved, and the other seconded, that a by-law be passed authorizing the company to make an assignment, which was afterwards done, the lessors executing the assignment as creditors assenting thereto. Held, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal, 1 Ont. L.R. 172, that the lessers and the company were distinct legal persons, and the individual interests of the former were not affected by the above action. Salomon v. Salomon & Co. (1897), A.C. 22, followed. The assignee of the company held possession of the leased premises for three months and the lessees accepted rent from him for that time and from sub-lessees for the month following. Held, also reversing the judgment appealed from, that as the lessors had claimed the six months accelerated rent under the forfeiture clause in the lease and testified at the trial that they had elected to forfeit: as the assignee had a statutory right to remain in possession for the three months and collect the rents; as the evidence showed that the receipt by the lessors of the three months rent was in pursuance of a compromise with the assignee in respect to the acceleration; and as the month's rent from the sub-tenants was only for compensation by the latter for being permitted to use and occupy the premises and for their accommodation; the lessors could not be said to have waived their right to claim a forfeiture of the lease. Mortga-gees of the premises having notified the sub-tenants to pay rent to them the assignee paid them a sum in satisfaction of their claim with the assent of the lessors against whose demand it was charged. Held, that this also was no waiver of the lessors' right to claim a forfeiture. Quære, was a covenant by the company to supply steam and power to its sub-tenants anything more than a personal covenant by the company or would it, on surrender of the original lease have bound the lessor and a purchaser from him of the fee?

Specific performance - Undertaking to build - Non-performance. | - By an instrument dated 29th January, 1901, a father leased a farm to his son for five years from the 1st March, 1901, at a yearly rental of $200 payable in October of each year, and undertook to build on the farm, during the first year of the term, a house of certain expressed dimensions. There was a provision in the instrument for the determination of the lease at the end of any year by notice to that effect given in October previous. The father died on the 19th June, 1902 (after the expiry of the first year of the term), but had not built nor done anything towards building the house. By his will, dated the 7th February, 1901, he devised the farm to his son, but made no reference to the lease:-Held, that (the father having died after the breach of the undertaking) the son was not entitled to have the house built at the

- Responsibility for an accident caused by weakness of construction.] - The lessee is not obliged to notify the lessor of the need of repairs to the leased premises, which the lessor is obliged to make. He is, therefore, although not notified of any defects, responsible in damages for an accident which happened to the tenant in conse-from the landlord, damages resulting to the tenant from non-repair of the premises. - Lease - Tacit reconduction - Verbal lease - Mise en demeure - Damages suffered by tenant through bad state of premises - Verbal mise en demeure - Responsibility of lessor.] - (1) Lease by tacit reconduction is not a verbal lease. -Arrears of ground rent - Movable or immovable - Personal promise of purchaser to pay rent to vendor - Arts. 338-391 C. C.] - (1) A ground rent established before the coming into force of the Civil Code, even if it were immovable under the law as it existed at the time the rent was constituted, has become movable by the operation of the Code, under the provisions of which it is convertible into money, and redeemable, and consequently movable (Arts. 388, 389, 390, and 391 C.C.). (2) Where there is a personal promise by the purchaser to pay the rent to the vendor at a given date each year, there is a personal liability to pay the amounts as soon as the time has elapsed and the arrears are movable. (3) Acceptance of such promise, by the person by whom the rent was created, is sufficiently established by the fact that he received payments and gave receipts to the purchasers in their own name, and entered them in his books as debtors of the amount.

The lease contained a covenant by the lessor to renew for a further term of twenty-one years, "at such increased rent as may be determined upon as hereinafter mentioned, payable in like manner, and under and subject to the like covenants . . . as are contained in these presents." The lease provided for the appointment of arbitrators to determine the rent to be paid under the renewal lease:-Held, that the arbitrators were bound to award an increased rent under the terms of the reference to them, but they might award a mere nominal increase if they thought proper; the increase was to be based upon the rent reserved for the whole term, and not for any particular year or years of it; and might be upon each year's rent or upon the average of the whole twenty-one years, but so that in the result the average annual rent should be greater for the future term than the past. Plaintiff may ask that the owner be condemned to take the necessary steps to prevent the overflow of the water, but he cannot claim from him damages caused by the act of the lessee if the latter, in doing the injurious work, was not acting for the owner.

Seminary of Foreign Missions v. Kieffer, 11 Que. K.B. 173, reversing 14 S.C. 325.

-Damage suffered by tenant of part of building caused by defective condition of another part.] - The plaintiff was tenant of a store on the ground floor of a building owned by the defendant and sued for damages to her goods caused by rain water entering by an unglazed fanlight over a door at the end of a hall extending from the head of a stairway leading to the second floor of the building. The water, flowing over the floor above the plaintiff's store, came through the ceiling, and caused plaster to fall which damaged the plaintiff's goods. The defect complained of existed at the time of the demise to the plaintiff:-Held, that the defendant was not liable. Miller v. Hancock, [1893] 2 Q.B. 177, distinguished. — Contract by which the lessee undertook to furnish the leased premises — Basis for estimation of value.] — Where, by the lease, the lessee undertook to furnish the leased premises with "a sufficient quantity of household furniture or goods to secure the payment of one year's rent," the effects upon the leased premises should be valued in accordance with their ordinary merchantable value, and not in accordance with what they might bring at a forced sale.

- Patent defects in premises Damages.] —The landlord is not liable in damages to his tenant for injury resulting from patent defects in the leased premises in which defects had existed when the tenancy began. Cartir v. Durocher, Q.R. 22 S.C. 255 (Sup. Ct.), affirmed on review.

- Trespass by third party.] A landlord is liable to his tenant if thieves gain entrance into the house adjoining and overturn a cistern whereby the water penetrates into the house leased to the tenant, such action not being a mere trespass by a third party within the meaning of Art. 1616 C.C., but a substantial act which affects the enjoyment of the premises in a manner prejudicial to the tenant.

— Privilege of lessor — Insolvency — Retroactivity of statute.] — 1. In interpreting laws which affect public interests, e.g., a law for the equitable distribution of insolvent estates, the Legislature is rather presumed to have intended that they should apply generally from the date of their coming into force, so as to accomplish the object for which they were passed, especially when a delay is given between the passing and coming into force of such laws, within which persons affected thereby could take means to preserve acquired rights. The amendment made by 61 Vict. (Q.) c. 46, replacing Art. 2005 of the Civil Code, by which, in the case of the liquidation of property abandoned by an insolvent trader, the lessor's privilege is restricted to twelve months' rent due and to rent to become due during the current year, etc., applies to and includes claims for rent which have arisen under authentic leases made prior to the coming into force of the amending

- Stipulation in lease that "accidents by fire" are excepted - Proof - Article 1629, C.C.] - One of the covenants of the lease from plaintiff to defendant provided that the tenant should deliver up the premises, at the expiration of the lease, "in as good order, state and condition as the same may be found in at the commencement of the same, reasonable wear and tear, and accidents by fire, excepted." The building was destroyed by a fire, the origin or cause of which was not definitely determined. In an action by the lessor to recover from the lessee the value of the building destroyed less the amount of the insurance money received:-Held (affirming the dispositif of the judgment of the Superior Court, Davidson, J., 21 Que. S.C. p. 1):—(1) A fire in the leased premises, the cause of which is unknown, or not legally proved, is an accident within the meaning of the abovementioned clause in the lease excepting "accidents by fire." (2) In such case there is no presumption of fault against the lessee, where a fire occurs the origin of which is unknown, but rather a presumption of abscnee of fault, and the burden of proving fault is on the lessor. (3) (Per Mathieu and Lavergne, JJ.): Even assuming that the burden of proving absence of fault was on the lessee, he had succeeded in doing so in the present case.

— Sale by auction — Opposition to secure charges — Security.] — An hypothecary creditor causing the sale of an immovable in execution may, by motion, demand that a tenant making an opposition a fin de charge based upon his lease, should furnish security that the immovable shall be sold for a sum sufficient to make complete payment of his debt. - Sale by auction - Opposition to secure charges — Motion for security.] — Held (affirming Langelier, J.), that an hypothecary creditor has the right to ask that the tenant making an opposition a fin de charge tounded upon a registered lease should furnish good and sufficient security that the property shall sell for a price sufficient to make the amount of his debt, and this before the advertisements for the sale have been given. Semble, that the tenant, under registered lease, has the right in case of sale by auction, to protect himself by opposition a fin de charge. (See also Q.R. 12 K.B. 445.)

- Ground rent - Valuation of buildings -Extension of time for making award - Interest.] - By a lease made on the 1st November, 1879, land was demised for a term of twenty-one years, and it was agreed that all the buildings on the land at the end of the term should be valued by valuators or arbitrators, and that the reference should be made and entered on and the award made within six months next preceding the 1st November, 1900; and it was further agreed that within six months from that day the value of the buildings found by the arbitrators should be paid by the lessors, with interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from that day, and that until paid it should be a charge on the land. By deed dated the 23rd October, 1900, the parties agreed that the time for making the award should be extended to the 1st December, 1900, and until such further day as the valuators or arbitrators might extend the same. The time was duly extended until the 30th November, 1901, on which day an award was made fixing the value of the buildings. Possession of the lands and buildings was given up by the lessees to the lessors on the 31st October, 1900:—Held, Osler, J.A., dubitante, that, supposing the extension of time and delay to have been agreed to for the convenience of both parties and without the fault of either, the lessees were entitled to interest on the value of the buildings from the 31st October, 1900, to the 30th November, 1901, for the first six months at seven per cent., and for the remainder of the time at the legal rate of five per cent. - Renewal of lease - Appointment of arbitrators - Injunction to restrain proceedings before sole arbitrator.] - The renewal clause in a lease provided that at the expiration of the term the lessors might at their election either take the lessees' improvements at a valuation to be fixed by arbitrators prior to such election being made, or grant a new lease for a further term. No time limit was fixed within which the arbitration should take place, and either party might require the other to appoint an arbitrator within seven days, and on default might appoint a sole arbitrator. The lease terminated November 1st. 1900. and on April 30th, 1900, the lessees wrote saying they had no desire to renew and would be glad to give up possession. The lessors, however, did nothing to relieve the lessees of possession; but, on the contrary, in June and July, 1901, they endeavoured unsuccessfully to have the assessment roll altered by preserving the tenants' names thereon as still tenants. On February 15th, 1902, they gave notice to arbitrate requiring the lessees to appoint an arbitrator:-Held, that the lessees were precluded by delay from enforcing renewal of the lease. The lessees, disputing their obligation to take a renewal lease, and desiring to have that point first decided, appointed their arbitrator under protest, but the lessors refused to accept such nomination, and appointed a sole arbitrator. Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to restrain proceeding before a sole arbitrator, and injunction granted accordingly.

-Liability of lessee to adjoining proprietor in respect of works on his land.] -Where a lessee of defendants' land, being in possession thereof and having a contract for future purchase contained in his lease, raised for the purpose of building operations for his own benefit, and not as mandatory of the defendants, the lower part of the leased land with the effect of diverting to the plaintiff's adjoining land, and thereby causing him damage, the water which would otherwise have been discharged over the defendants' land:-Held, that the plaintiff's remedy was against the lessee, and that an action negatoire against the defendants, who claimed no servitude over the plaintiff's land, was unnecessary

Kieffer v. Le Seminaire de Quebec, [1903] A.C. 85.

-Rent payable in kind - Implied covenants in lease-Liability for failure to crop.] -In April, 1898, the plaintiff leased by deed to defendant's husband a half section of land for rive years at a rental of onethird of the crop grown on the premises yearly. The lease was on a printed form of a farm lease and contained covenants by the lessee that he would during the term cultivate such part of the land as was then or should thereafter be brought under cultivation in a good, husbandlike and proper manner, and would plough said land in each year four inches deep and crop the same during the term in a proper farmerlike manner. Afterwards a new lease of the same land was made by deed, ante-

by dated so as to bear the same date as the first one, substituting the defendant as leseing see instead of her husband. This was done. ther as found by the trial Judge, at the rehich ther quest of the defendant's husband who had oint reason to fear the action of a creditor in case the lease remained in his name, and it on was intended that the new lease should be itor. a duplicate of the other in all respects ex-900. cept as to the name of the lessee. The new lease, by mistake of the solicitor who and prepared it, was written on a printed form The of "statutory lease," not containing the special clauses applicable to farm land. It rary provided for the same rental as the other mred lease, payable in the same way and at roll the same times, and contained the same ames covenant to plough four inches deep in 15th. each year written into it, but no express quircovenants to cultivate or crop the land. By or:the end of 1901 the cultivated portion of d by the farm was 117 acres, but in 1902, the lease. defendant only ploughed and cultivated four n to acres out of the 117, and weeds grew up all over the rest. The lease also contained a purchase clause whereby F. agreed to convey to S. the leased premises at any time within the nine years for the sum of $600, and further agreed that any payment which might have been made on account of the lease rent in advance at the time at which such conveyance might occur should be allowed as part payment:-Held, affirming the judgment of the Judge in equity, that in case of a purchase all the advance rent should go on account of the purchase money

Larivière v. Vinet, 25 Que. S.C. 338 (Curran, J.).

-Renewal - Arbitration - Appointment of arbitrators - Procedure. 1 - A lease contained an agreement for renewal upon the following terms: the lessors were at liberty to elect either to take the improvements made by the lessees at a valuation or to grant a new lease for a further term at a rent to be fixed by arbitrators, one to be chosen by the lessors, one by lessees, and a third by the two, provided that if either party refused or neglected to appoint an arbitrator within seven days after being required in writing by the other to do so, the other might appoint a sole arbitrator, whose award should be final. After the original term had expired, the lessors served upon the lessees a notice requiring them to appoint an arbitrator. The lessees answered by stating that they contended that the lessors had no longer any right to insist upon a renewal, and protesting against any arbitration, but at the same time naming an arbitrator. The lessors did not accept this as an appointment of the arbitrator, and assumed to appoint a sole arbitrator as upon default for seven days after notice:—Held, affirming the judgment of Boyd, C., 5 O.L.R. 105, that the lessees had made a valid appointment of an arbitrator, and the lessors had no right to appoint a sole arbitrator; and that the lessees were entitled to resort to the Court to have the lessors restrained from proceeding before a sole arbitrator and to have a determination of their contention that the lessors had no right to insist upon a renewal. North London R.W. Co. v. Great Northern R.W. Co. (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 30, and London and Blackwall R.W. -Lease - Short Forms Act - Covenant -Covenant to repair - Variation from statutory form.] - An indenture of lease, bearing date the 29th of June, 1891, expressed to be made in pursuance of the Act then in force respecting Short Forms of Leases (R.S.O. 1887, c. 106) contained a covenant by the lessees that they would "leave the premises in good repair, ordinary wear and tear only excepted," the words "ordinary wear and tear only excepted," not being in the statutory short form and the extended statutory equivalent of the short form having in it the exception "reasonable wear and tear and damage by fire only excepted": Held, (Magee, J., dissenting), that the added words were not an exception to or qualification of the short form within the meaning of the Act; that the covenant had to be construed as it stood without the aid of the extended form; and therefore that the exception as to damage by fire did not apply. Therefore, if it does not appear that the premises are leased for business purposes, the owner cannot expect to be called upon to pay other damages than those resulting from the lease of a residence and cannot be liable for damages caused by the tenant being prevented from carrying on a tailor's business during the time repairs are being made to the premises leased for a dwelling house only.

-Covenant for renewal - Option of lessor - Second term - Possession by lessee after expiration of term.] - A lease for a term of years provided that when the term expired any buildings or improvements erected by the lessees should be valued, and it should be optional with the lessors either to pay for the same or continue the lease for a further term of like duration. After the term expired the lessees remained in possession for some years when a new indenture was executed which recited the provisions of the original lease, and, after a declaration that the lessors had agreed to continue and extend the same for a further term of 14 years from the end of the term granted thereby at the same rent and under the like covenants, conditions and agreements as were expressed and contained in the said recited indenture of lease and that the lessees had agreed to accept the same, it proceeded to grant the further term. This last mentioned indenture contained no independent covenant for renewal. After the second term expired the lessees continued in possession and paid rent for one year when they notified the lessors of their intention to abandon the premises. The lessors refused to accept the surrender and, after demand of further rent and tender for execution of an indenture granting a further term, they brought suit for specific performance of the agreement implied in the original lease for renewal of the second term at their option. Held, affirming the judgment of the Court below (28 N.B. Rep. 1), Ritchie, C.J., and Taschereau, J., dissenting, that the lessees were not entitled to a decree for specific performance. Held, per Gwynne, J., that the provision in the second indenture granting a renewal under the like covenants, conditions and agreements as were contained in the original lease, did not operate to incorporate in said indenture the clause for renewal in said lease which should have been expressed in an independent covenant. Per Gwynne, J. (Patterson, J., hesitante) that assuming the renewal clause was incorporated in the second indenture, the lessees could not be compelled to accept a renewal at the option of the lessors, there being no mutual agreement therefor; if they could the clause would operate to make the lease perpetual at the will of the lessors. Per Gwynne and Patterson, JJ., that the option of the lessors could only be exercised in case there were buildings to be valued erected during the term granted by the instrument containing such clause; and, if the second indenture was subject to renewal, the clause had no effect, as there were no buildings erected during the second term. Per Gwynne, J .- The renewal clause was inoperative under the Statute of Frauds, which makes leases for three years and upwards, not in writing, have the effect of estates at will only and, consequently, there could be no second term of fourteen years granted except by a second lease executed and signed by the les-

-Lease - Covenant to pay taxes - Usual covenant.] - Where an agreement between the appellant railway and the respondent municipal corporation provided for a re-newable lease from the latter to the former of a large tract of land for railway purposes, but was silent as to payment of taxes by the appellant:—Held, that the lease should contain a covenant by the appellant to pay the same, partly because the effect of the Assessment Act in force at the date of the contract was to impose such liability on the lessees of municipal lands without recourse to the corporation and partly because a covenant to that effect was shown to be a usual covenant in the sense that the corporation invariably insisted on it in their leases. -Partial destruction of premises - Rent during the time of repairs - Collapse of premises - Bad construction and material -Hidden defects.] - (1) A clause in a lease "that indispensable repairs shall be performed without reduction of rent, damages or compensation" does not apply to the reconstruction of the premises leased, when partially destroyed so as to render them unfit for the purposes of the lease and to compel the lessee to vacate them. In such a case, the latter is relieved from the obligation to pay rent during the period of reconstruction. (2) The lessor is liable for the damages sustained by the lessee by the collapse of the premises leased, caused by bad construction and defective materials, even though such defects were hidden and could not have been ascertained by any ordinary examination of the building —Building lease — Expiration of term — Work done under prior leases and by subtenant — "Permanent improvements."] — Where, by the terms of a lease, the lessors, in case of their refusal to renew at the expiration of the term, were to pay to the lessee "such reasonable sum" as "the buildings and permanent improvements" on the demised premises might then be worth, evidence was held, in an arbitration to fix their value, to be admissible to explain the meaning of the words "permanent improve-ments," namely, improvements made and in a sense owned by the lessee:—Held, also, that the meaning of the word "worth" was the value of such buildings and permanent improvements to the lessee in case the lease was renewed, and the principle to be adopted was the fair and reasonable market value thereof as would result, if it were the case of the bringing together of a willing buyer and prudent seller. Where certain of the alleged improvements claimed for consisted of filling in portions of a water lot, which was done by or for lessees under prior leases in performance of agreements entered into therefor. Held, that the claimant was not entitled to be paid for such filling in, for when done it at once became part of the freehold, and was not in any sense a permanent improvement under the claimant's lease. Where other alleged improvments, also consisting of filling in, were done by a sub-tenant, under a sublease from the claimant. Held, that such improvements enured to the benefit of the lessee, and he was entitled to be paid therefor. Where a submission to arbitration is silent as to costs, sub-s. 6 of s. 2 of the Municipal Arbitration Act, 1897, c. 227, applies, and empowers the arbitrator to deal with the costs; and he having awarded costs to the claimant, the Court, under the circumstances, refused to interfere.

-Repairs to furnace - Rates of fire insurance - Business carried on in premises.] -(1) Repairs to a furnace, such as substituting a new section for one that is cracked and leaks from long usage, are not tenant's repairs, and the cost must be borne by the lessor. (2) In construing a lease, in which the lessor and lessee are both described as manufacturers of tobacco, and the premises as "a four storey building, etc., now occupied by the lessor as a factory," it is fair to infer that the premises were leased to be used as a tobacco factory. Therefore, a clause in the lease that "the lessee shall pay all extra premiums of insurance of the premises, exacted in consequence of the business or work he carries on therein," does not make him liable for the difference between warehouse and factory rates of insurance.

Fortier v. Youngheart, 28 Que. S.C. 118 (C.R.).

—Injury to roof — Failure to repair.] —Plaintiff was tenant under defendant of the "dwelling portion" of a building, the remainder of which was occupied by defendant as a shop. During a storm a skylight was blown from a neighbouring building and struck the roof of defendant's building and injured it. Plaintiff notified defendant, who gave an order on a builder for the repair of the roof, but, before this could be done the weather conditions became such that the repairs could not be effected, and, later on, water from rain and from the melting of a heavy accumulation of snow on the roof, came through and damaged plaintiff's property:—Held, reversing the judgment of the trial Judge, that defendant was under no obligation to repair the roof which would make him responsible in damages, and that his promise to have the injuries made good was without consideration to support it and was not binding.

Betcher v. Hagell, 38 N.S.R. 517.

— Covenants in lease — Assignment — Sub-lessee — Forfeiture of rent.] — In an action of replevin by a sub-lessee against the lessor for goods taken by the lessor under a distress for rent, the plaintiff is entitled to prove, on cross-examination of the lessor, that there had been a breach of a covenant in the lease which forfeited the rent claimed. A sub-lessee in such an action is entitled to the benefit of a covenant in the lease which forfeits the rent as a penalty for a breach, though there has been no assignment of the lease in writing.

Ringuette v. Herbert, 37 N.B.R. 68.

—Landlord's claim for damages — Tenant's failure to repair.] — A lessor, in order to obtain judgment must prove that he has suffered damages from his inability to relet the premises leased, that he has paid the taxes claimed, and that the repairs done are "reparations locatives."

Lamarche v. Bessette, 7 Que. P.R. 351.

—Repairs — Apparent defects — Contract against liability.] — The duty of the land-lord to maintain leased premises in fit condition for the use for which they were leased is not imposed by law of the essence of the contract of lease and hire, and it.

of the contract of lease and hire, and it may be validly stipulated that he shall be exempt from this obligation. The landlord is not under any obligation in respect of apparent defects, in the premises leased, of which the defendant, at the time of the lease, could have obtained information.

Rivard v. Pelchat, Q.R. 28 S.C. 8 (Sup. Ct.).

- Obligations of lessors and lessees — Covenant not to sub-let without consent of owner.]—(1) A tenant who sub-lets premises in breach of a covenant with the owner not to do so without his consent, is liable for the damages sustained by the sub-tenant who is expelled at the suit of the owner. (2) A demand for improbation can only be made when it is relevant and will be rejected if the "faux" complained of does not affect the issue between the parties.

Hanleyson v. Dozois, 28 Que. S.C. 400.

— Contract of lease — Sub-lease — Rights of lessor and of sub-tenant.] — The voluntary cancellation by the parties, for inability of the tenant to pay the rent, of a lease with a stipulation that failure to pay rent should dissolve it, extinguishes a sub-lease of part of the premises, notwithstanding the fulfilment of his obligations by the sub-tenant; and an action will lie against the latter, in favour of the lessor, to recover possession of the part sub-leased.

- Contract of lease - Rescission - Nuisance - Smoke and bad odours - Liability of lessor for acts of co-lessees.] - The lessee has an action to rescind the lease of a flat which is uninhabitable by reason of smoke and obnoxious odours. Evidence of the existence of smoke and obnoxious odours in it during a stated period, is not sufficiently rebutted by proof that it was free from both immediately before and after the period in question, and that the building of which it forms part was well constructed with all modern improvements. Nor is it an answer to the action to say that the smoke and bad odours complained of came from neighbouring chimneys, while windows were opened, or from two flats underneath, and that the landlord is not responsible for the acts of neighbours or of co-lessees in the building.

Beardmore v. Bellevue Land Co., 15 Que.

K.B. 43.

— Lease of farm — Removal of fodder — Privilege of landlord — Forfeiture of term.] The privilege of the landlord, in the lease of a farm, is a security within the meaning of Art. 1092 C.C. Consequently the farmer tenant who removes from the farm the fodder with which it is furnished, by thus diminishing the security of his landlord loses the benefit of the term for the payment of his rent.

Egglefield v. Baben, Q.R. 28 S.C. 382 (Ct.

Rev.).

—Disturbance of possession — New constructions by iandlord — Injunction.] — A tenant who anticipates disturbance in his enjoyment of leased premises on account of new constructions by the landlord during the term of his lease is entitled to relief by an interim injunction against such works in addition to further recourse by action for damages, if any.

Haycock et al. v. Pacaud, Q.R. 27 S.C.

464 (Sup. Ct.).

— Lease — Disturbance.] — Rectification of boundaries which has the effect of narrowing leased premises, cutting off the light and diminishing the strength of buildings in such a manner as to render them unfit for the purposes for which they were leased is a disturbance for which the landlord is responsible, and gives the tenant a right of action to resiliate the lease, to obtain diminution of the rent during the continuance of the disturbance and for the recovery of damages. (2) Works done by the owner of adjoining lands, beyond those provided for by Art. 520 C.C., are not mere trespass as contemplated by Art 1616 C.C., and the landlord is obliged to warrant the tenant against such disturbance under Arts. 1612, 1614 and 1618 C.C.

Saint-Onge v. Gauthier, Q.R. 27 S.C. 232 (Ct. Rev.).

-Lease for share of produce with agreement by lessee to pay half value of stock. etc.] - (1) A lease of a farm for a share of its produce and an undertaking by the lessee to pay the lessor one-half the value of the stock and agricultural implements on it, partakes of the nature of a partnership and is essentially a contract bonæ fidei. In adjudicating upon a demand by the lessor based upon charges of neglect and of maladministration by the lessee, the Court has a full discretionary power, in its appreciation of the facts, to declare whether the case comes within any of the provisions of Art. 1624 C.C. as to rescission. (2) While the failure of the lessee to carry out the stipulations of the lease entitles the lessor to ask for its rescission when it is of a grievous character, the Civil Code provides another remedy for acts of negligence or omissions which are involuntary rather than the result of incapacity or of a re-fusal to perform the obligations of the Meunier v. Laurin, 30 Que. S.C. 68 (Archibald, J.).

— Agreement to renew unproductive stock.]

— A covenant in a lease of a farm that the lessor will contribute one-half the expense of feeding the stock and that the latter, as it becomes unproductive, will be renewed by sale and purchase, will, in case of breach by the lessor, give the lessee a right of action to be allowed to carry it out at the cost of the lessor.

Laurin v. Meunier, 30 Que. S.C. 78 (Archibald, J.).

—Essence of contract — Delivery of possession.] — Delivery of possession of the premises leased at the time agreed upon is of the essence of the contract of leasing and on refusal or neglect to give possession a summary action lies to recover damages resulting from the non-performance of the terms of the lease.

Davignon v. Chevalier, 8 Que. P.R. 104 (Ct. Rev.).

—Action against landlord — Defective premises — Action by tenant's wife.] — An action will not be dismissed on exception to the form, because it was brought by the wife of a tenant against his landlord for injuries received by a fall owing to the defective state of the premises leased, as a summary action and made returnable within two days, such irregularity not being without remedy. Joining the husband as plaintiff with his wife séparèe de biens does not avoid the action but is ground for an exception to the form (mis joinder). The cause of the separation de biens need not be stated. An action against a landlord for damages resulting from the defective state of the premises will be dismissed on exception to the form where the declaration is vague, the facts are insufficiently stated and it does not appear that defendant was guilty of negligence or how he was the cause of the injury suffere, by the plaintiff.

Raso v. Miller, 8 Que. P.R. 329 (Lafontaine, J.).

-- Covenant to leave premises in repair -Insurance by lessee — Application of insurance money. J — A lessee covenanted for himself and assigns that buildings of the lessor on the premises at the date of the lease would be left on the premises in as good repair as they then were; also that machinery of the lessee would not be removed from the premises during the term without the lessor's consent, but the same should be held by the lessor as a lien for the performance of the lessee's covenants and for any damage from their breach. Under a deed of assignment for the benefit of the lessee's creditors the lease became vested in the trustees. A fire subsequently occurring, which destroyed the buildings and machinery, insurance on the latter was paid to the trustees. The lessor demanded of the trustees that the insurance be applied to reinstating the buildings or the machinery. By Act. 14 Geo. III., c. 78, s. 83, insurance companies are authorized and required, upon request of a person interested in or entitled unto a house or other buildings which may be burnt down or damaged by fire to cause the insurance money to be laid out and expended towards rebuilding, reinstating or repairing such house or buildings:-Held, (1) without deciding whether the Act was in force in this province, or not, that the lessor was not entitled to the benefit of it, the Act not applying to machinery belonging to a lessee, and the lessor not having made a request upon the insurance company, as provided by the Act. (2) That even had the insurance been upon the buildings, the lessor would have had no equity to it, there being no covenant by the lessee to insure for the former's benefit. (3) That the lessor was not entitled to prove for damages against the estate with respect to the covenant to leave the premises in repair, the term not having expired. Randolph v. Randolph, 3 N.B. Eq. 576.

— Premises leased for special business — Abandonment by lessee — Rights of lessor.] — The lessor of premises leased for a special business (v.g. as a barber shop) who brings suit with attachment in recaption for rent due and to rescind the lease, has a further right to recover by the same action the damages arising from the likelihood of the premises remaining unoccupied för a length of time.

Darwent v. Montbriant, 31 Que. S.C. 54.

- Terms of lease - Improvements by lessee.] - An agreement between a lessor and his lessee that the lease will run for several years on condition that the lessee will construct, to the satisfaction of the lessor, an addition to the immovable leased creates mutual rights and obligations which form the consideration on both sides. fore, the lessor refusing to continue the lease, claiming that the addition was not made to his satisfaction, cannot at the same time retain it without paying its value. When the addition which is the object of such an agreement is of a value exceeding $50 oral evidence cannot be received to establish that it was constructed to the satisfaction of the lessor.

Le Chu v. Deslauriers, Q.R. 30 S.C. 494

(Ct. Rev.).

— Sub-lease for purposes of prostitution — Legal relation between sub-tenant and owner — Damages,] — (1) Where the tenant has sub-let premises for purposes of prostitution, the sub-tenant stands, in relation to the landlord, in the position of a third person whose effects are upon the premises with his consent (Art. 1622 C.C.), and these effects are subject to the privilege of the landlord for rent and damages for breach of the obligations under the principal lease. (2) The sub-tenant who takes a sub-lease of premises for the purposes of prostitution commits a civil wrong which renders him liable towards the owner for such damages as may result thereform.

Montmarquette v. Berman, Q.R. 29 S.C.

— Unlawful consideration — Lease of house of prostitution.] — As the lease of a house for purposes of prostitution is a contract for illegal consideration, contrary to good morals and public policy, it can give no right of action to any of the parties thereto. (2) In such a case, the circumstance that the lessee is about to quit the premises and remove the furniture therefrom does not give the lessor the right to have an attachment for rent (saisie-gagerie), more particularly when the lessee is forced to quit by legal process.

Lachance v. Roy, Q.R. 29 S.C. 478.

— Vacation — Arts. 15, 1150 C.C.P.] — When a portion of the rent consists in the furnishing of certain supplies the obligation to furnish them forms part of the consideration for the lease and an action based on enforcement thereof will be heard in the long vacation.

 Action for resiliation — Premises not halfable — Art. 191 C.C.P.—Art. 1641 C.C.]
 The defendant to an action for resiliation of a lease and for damages may properly plead that the premises leased have become uninhabitable by reason of a fire which occurred before the institution of the action.

Lander v. Hammond, 8 Que. P.R. 408 (Loranger, J.).

— Jurisdiction — Superior Court.] — The Superior Court has jurisdiction to hear a case between landlord and tenant when it is alleged that the latter did not sufficiently furnish the premises leased and had taken away certain movables subject to the landlord's lien.

Devlin v. Robb, 8 Que. P.R. 417 (Loranger, J.).

— Sub-letting — Sale of premises — Notice.] — The provision against sub-letting in a lease to a firm does not avoid the lease when, the partnership being dissolved, one of the partners continues to occupy the leased premises. When the lessor reserves the right to sell the premises and in doing so to terminate the lease on giving three months' notice before the expiration of the year ending on May 1st, a notice by letter to the lessee posted on January 31st and received on February 1st is not sufficient. Carter v. Urquhart, Q.R. 15 k.B. 509.

- Lease of goods.] -See TRESPASS.

- Parol lease for one year to commence at future day.] - A parol agreement for the lease of a house for the period of one year, to commence at a future day, is void as made in contravention of the Statute of Frauds, R.S. (1900), c. 141, and cannot be enforced. But an immediate letting for the same period is within the exception to s. 3 of the statute, and is good, notwithstanding that it is not to go into effect until a future day. Where in an action for rent claimed to be due under a contract of hiring, made under the circumstances mentioned, defendant having refused to take possession, the Judge of the County Court was of the opinion that plaintiff was entitled to recover only for one month's rent and plaintiff failed to appeal, the Court (Townshend, J., dubitante), although of the opinion that plaintiff was entitled to recover generally, dismissed defendant's appeal, and ordered judgment for plaintiff for the amount awarded in the Court below.

Smith v. Thomas, 41 N.S.R. 216.

— Disturbance in enjoyment of premises— Acts of third party — Reduction of rent.] —A lessor is liable for a disturbance in the enjoyment of his lessee arising from the acts of a neighbour performed in the exercise of his proprietary rights. So, when the owner of property contiguous to the leased premises builds a mitoyen wall and in doing so cuts off means of access to them, shuts off light openings and by sinking foundations puts a strain on the framework of the building, opening cracks and lissures therein through which rain gets in, the lessor who allows the performance of such acts, becomes liable to a reduction of rental proportionate to the loss of enjoyment of the lessee, and further to pay damages for deterioration of his goods.

Gauthier v. Saint-Onge, 15 Que. K.B. 264.

- Covenant by lessee to pay extra insurance premiums - Notice of same - Waiver by lessor.] - (1) A covenant in a lease that the lessee shall pay in addition to rental, any "extra premiums of insurance of the premises exacted in consequence of the business or work he carries on therein," does not impose on the lessor the obligation to notify the lessee when such extra premiums are exacted, even though the premises were occupied for a number of years by the same tenant, carrying on the same business, under a lease containing the same clause, during which no extra premiums had been paid. (2) Dilatoriness on the part of the lessor and his not making the demand of such extra premiums for several years cannot be construed as a waiver of his right to recover them.

McMillan v. Wing Sang Kee, 29 Que. S.C. 440 (C.R.),

- Tenant for years - Liability for permissive waste — Covenants in lease.] — Held, after detailed review of the cases, that Yellowly v. Gower (1855), 11 Exch. 274, which decided that a tenant for years is liable for permissive waste, was rightly decided, and that its authority has not been impugned or affected by any subsequent case or displaced by the provsions of the Judicature Act. Held, also, that the provisions in the lease in question in this case whereby the covenants to repair and to repair according to notice were qualified by the exceptions in the covenant to leave the premises in good repair, namely, "reasonable wear and tear and damage by fire or tempest," had not the effect of relieving the tenant from any hability which but for them he would have been subject to for permissive waste. Such exceptions are to be construed as exempting from damage which is the result of accident, not from damage which is the result of negligence. Taylor v. Taylor (1875), L.R. 20 Eq. 297, specially considered. Semble, a person entitled to the income of land under a trust or direction for payment thereof to him during his own or any other life, is entitled to exercise the power of leasing conferred by s. 42 of R.S.O. 1897, c. 71.

Morris v. Cairneross, 14 O.L.K. 544 (Boyd,

C.).

- Negligent act of caretaker -Injury to tenant's property — Alterations to plumbing — Damage by steam, etc. — Responsibility of contractors. J — In the lease of a shop, the landlord agreed to supply steam heating and, in order to improve the system, engaged a firm of plumbers to make alterations. Before this work was completed and during the absence of the ten-ant, the plumbers' men, who were at work in another part of the same building, with steam cut off for that purpose, at the request of the caretaker employed by the landlord, turned the steam on again which, passing through unfinished pipes connected with the shop, escaped through an open valve in a radiator and injured the tenant's goods:-Held, that the landlord was liable in damages for the negligent act of his caretaker in allowing steam to be turned on without ascertaining that the radiator was in proper condition to receive the pressure, and that the plumbing firm were also responsible for the negligence of their employees in turning on the steam, under such circumstances, as they were acting in the course of their employment in what they did although requested to do so by the caretaker. The judgment appealed from, Malcolm v. McNichol, 16 Man. R. 411, was affirmed with a variation declaring the plumbers jointly liable with the landlord. The action was against the two defendants, jointly, and the plaintiff obtained a ver-diet, at the trial, against both. The Court of Appeal confirmed the verdict as to McN. and dismissed the action as to the other defendant. McN. appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, making the other defendants respondents on his appeal. Held, that the plaintiff, respondent, was entitled to cross-appeal against the said defendants, respondents, to have the verdict against them at the trial restored.

McNiehol v. Malcolm, 39 Can. S.C.R. 265.

- Bank vault door - Trade fixture - Removal.] - In 1886 the landlord of the defendants constructed a vault in the premises occupied by them, the defendants supplying a steel lining and a bank vault-door. On April 1st, 1890, the defendants leased another portion of the same building from the same landlord for ten years from that date, a vault being built there by the landlord and the defendants bringing to it the same door. The lease was made in pursuance of the then Short Forms of Leases Act, and contained no reference to fixtures, but had the covenants by the tenant to repair and leave in good repair. During the currency of the lease the landlord sold and conveyed the premises. On November 10th, 1899, the defendants obtained a new lease from the owner for five years from April 1st, 1890, made pursuant to the statute, which contained the clause "provided that the lessee may remove its fixtures." On November 10th, 1904, the owner granted the defendants another lease, made in pursuance of the statute, for eighteen months from April 1st, 1905, with the same clause as to fixtures, and during its currency the defendants removed the door: — Held, that under the above provisoes the defendants were not restricted in their right of removal to those fixtures placed subsequent to the dates of the last two demises, and that they were entitled to remove the door.

Cronkhite v. Imperial Bank of Canada, 14 O.L.R. 270 (D.C.).

- Bank safe built into rented property -Agreement as to removal of property after termination of tenancy - Subsequent sale of premises.] - Plaintiff bank rented a building into which it moved a safe for the purposes or its banking business. The landlords at the request of the bank built around the safe a brick vault. After occupying the building about a year the bank moved into premises of its own, and the building and safe were used by succeeding tenants until the sale of the property to defendants, who knew nothing of an alleged agreement between the bank and its landlords as to the right to remove the safe after the bank had left the premises. During the interim between the removal of the bank and the sale, certain improvements were effected in the building, one of which was the pulling down of the vault and the construction of a mezzanine floor which was partly supported by the safe:-Held, on appeal that although the safe when enclosed in the vault, became a fixture, and although it could have been removed with the consent of the original owners of the building, yet the right of removal was lost when the defendants bought the premises. Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Lewis, 12 B.C.R. 398.

— Defective roof — Demise of part of premises — Implied covenant for repair.] — There is no implied covenant on the part of a landlord to protect a tenant of the ground floor against water percolating through a defective roof. A tenant taking part of a building, in other parts of which are defects likely to result in damage to him, should examine the premises and contract for the removal of such defects as are apparent, otherwise he will have no remedy afterwards against the landlord for damage caused by such defects. Rogers V Sorele (1903), 14 Man. R. 450, specially referred to.

mal and express. When conditional it can only be effective by acceptance. A letter from the landlord informing the tenant that he can remain on the premises at a higher rent, written eight days before the termination of the tenancy, is sufficient notice to prevent a tacit renewal. Continuance in occupation of the premises after the tenancy is terminated does not give the occupant the rights of a tenant and he can not longer exercise the remedies of a tenant. When it is proved that a chimney has no defects in construction there is a presumption that, if it smokes, the cause is to be attributed to the tenant using it. Canada Newspaper Syndicate v, Gardner.

Canada Newspaper Syndicate v. Gardner, Q.R. 32 S.C. 452.

— Water supply — Resiliation.] — The landlord who lets premises provided with apparatus, pipes, taps, water closets, etc., connected with an aqueduct is deemed to guarantee to his tenant a constant supply of water. The failure of water in these circumstances constitutes on his part a breach of the obligations to procure the enjoyment of the leased premises and gives rise to an action by the tenant for resiliation of the lease.

McKillop v. Tapley, Q.R. 32 S.C. 380 (Ct. Rev.).

— Holding over after expiration of tenancy for a year — Implied tenancy.] — A letter from the landlord posted to the tenant before the expiration of a lease for a year, proposing that after its expiration the tenant should hold from month to month, is not sufficient, if the letter is not received by the tenant, to displace the tenancy from year to year which arises by implication from the tenant's holding over and paying rent after the expiration of his term. Gass v. McCammon, 6 Terr. L.R. 96.

— Power of attorney to receive and apply revenue only — Lease by one co-owner of his share of the property.] — The creation of a trust by co-owners of property, in a power of attorney to the trustese, to receive the revenues of the property and apply them to certain uses, but without any conveyance of title or ownership, can have no effect on a lease, made subsequently by one of such co-owners of his share of the property, or on the relations between him and his lessee. Hence an attachment of the rent by his judgment creditor cannot be attacked or set aside at the instance of one of his co-owners on the ground of the trust created as stated above.

— Request for favour — Acquiescence — Resulting injury.] — The undertaking to fulfil the obligation of another is a contract of surety and should be express. Therefore, there cannot be found, in a letter written by the tenant of an upper storey in a building to one in the lower in these terms, "Please do not turn the water off except on Saturday afternoons and Sundays and oblige, E. H. T.," an undertaking to pay for losses that sub-tenants of the writer may incur by compliance with such request. The said writing contains only a simple request for a favour with no indication that the writer intended or should incur any obligation to the person to whom it was written. It cannot, then, serve as a commencement of proof in writing of any undertaking whatever. Damages claimed for injury to merchandise should be established by direct and specific proof of deterioration and diminution in value. General proof of its original value, of the fact that it is no longer merchantable and an offer to abandon it to defendant is not sufficient.

Thurston v. Dawson, Q.R. 17 K.B. 148, reversing Dawson v. Thurston, 31 Que. S.C.

- Acquisition of land for camp grounds-Sub-division into lots and streets - Lease of lots — Right of access — Admission fee.j —Under letters patent issued in 1875 incorporating the defendants, power was conferred to acquire a tract of land and to improve, sell or otherwise dispose of same in lots, plots or parcels as the by-laws might provide, which they did, and by plans duly registered sub-divided it into lots with streets or avenues giving access to the lots. By s. 6 of 47 Vict. c. 83 (O.). the company were authorized to impose and collect an admission fee from any person seeking an entrance into "the premises oc-cupied by the company" and those claiming under them; but such payment was not to prevent the company from excluding oc ejecting any person from the premises for disorderly conduct. In 1885 by a lease under the Short Forms Act, the company leased two of the lots for 999 years subject to the letters patent and the company's by-laws then or thereafter to be enacted. the lease containing a covenant by the lessee, on behalf of herself and her assigns, to at all times during the term to observe, keep and perform all such by-laws, etc., there being also a covenant by the company for quiet enjoyment. In 1889 the lease was assigned to the plaintiff. In 1902 a gate was placed at the entrance to the grounds, and a by-law passed requiring an admission fee or toll to be paid by all persons seeking admission to the grounds, under which the company claimed the right to demand payment thereof from the plaintiff and each adult member of his family, and by-laws were subsequently passed in 1904, 1906 and 1907 rising the amount of the fee:-Held, that the plaintiff, by virtue of the lease, was entitled to the reasonable use of the roads, streets and avenues leading to nis premises for access thereto, and though it was doubtless intended that the lessee personally, if not his lands, should be subject to some control by means of by-laws, and to charges for certain services, the power to regulate such services did not carry with it the right to impose an admission fee with the corresponding right to exclude for non-payment, etc.; and that s. 6 of the Act was applicable to those, such as casual visitors, who merely sought an entrance to the defendants' premises or through them to the premises of others, and not to a person such as the lessee who sought an entrance to the grounds for the purpose of reaching his own premises.

— Lease of movables — Continued possession by lessee after expiration.] — There can be no tacit renewal of a lease of movables. When the lessee remains in possession after the expiration of the period for which they were leased, the owner can at all times demand that such possession cease and that the movables be surrendered to him. Notice to the lessee is required, failing which, he is not neld to be in default, nor liable for damages or costs.

Monarch Manufacturing Co. v. Blouin, 34 Que, S.C. 167.

— Lease — Execution by party not understanding its effect — Absence of fraud — Denial of lessor's title.] — A lessee can not deny his lessor's title and set up title in himself in an equitable replication in an action brought by him against the lessor for an illegal distress for rent in arrear under the lease by alleging and proving (no issue of fraud being raised) that he did not understand the effect of the lease, and believed that in executing it he was completing an option of purchase of the demised premises given in a prior lease from the defendant's predecessor in title.

Sivert v. Young, 38 N.B.R. 571.

— Lease for rental exceeding $50 — Commencement of proof in writing.]—(1) Parol evidence is not admissible to prove a contract of lease for a period of five years, at a yearly rental of six hundred dollars, unless there be a commencement of proof in writing of it. (2) Such a commencement of proof in writing may be found in the admissions of a party examined as a witness under oath. (3) The admission by a party cannot be divided except in the special cases stated in Art. 1243 C.C.:—Quere, can the admissions by an agent have the same value as proof in writing, or as a commencement of proof in writing, as if made by the principal?

the lessors, provided that "if within six months from date a well has not been commenced on said premises, this lease shall be null and void." The well contemplated involved drilling into the ground or through rock several hundred feet. When the six months had expired, it was found that the lessee had done no work on the ground, but had put upon the place where the well was to be drilled some plant suitable for the contemplated operation, at an expense of $200:—Held, that this did not amount to a commencement of the well; the terms of the lease imported that some work was contemplated upon and in the ground—"breaking the ground" in order to the commencement of a well.

Lang v. Provincial Natural Gas and Fuel

- Lease - Assignment - Personal covenant - Breach prior to assignment - Liability of assignee.] — The assignee of a lease of a store and premises and of certain personal property enumerated in a schedule annexed to the lease containing covenants not to assign without the consent of the lessor and at the expiration of the term to yield up the premises and return the articles mentioned in the schedule, who got the lessor to sign an assent to the assignment containing a proviso that it was subject to the payment of the rent and the performance of the covenants in the lease reserved is not liable in an action on the covenant to return the goods for a breach committed by the original lessee.

Goggin v. Whittaker, 38 N.B.R. 415.

— Lease of dwelling previously occupied as a brothel — Peaceable enjoyment of premises leased — Rescission of lease.] — An action by a lessee will lie to rescind the lease of a dwelling previously occupied as a brothel and in close proximity to two other houses the property of the lessor actually leased and occupied for similar purposes, in consequence of which the lessee and his family are mclested, insulted and troubled by frequenters of such resorts, in their enjoyment of the premises leased.

Levin v. Lalande, 30 Que. S.C. 481 (Dunlop, J.).

— Sub-tenant — Guarantee.] — The prohibition in a lease against the lessee making atterations in the premises without the consent of the lessor does not apply to work made necessary by a new use to be made of them which is provided for in the lease itself. A sub-tenant is only bound to guarantee the tenant against claims of the landlord arising out of his own acts and cannot be made answerable for those of the tenant hinself.

- Extincowner of land.] - The extinction of a right of usufruct of an immovable leased to the holder of the usufruct, and notice by the owner of the land of his intention to enter into possession does not give the lessee a right to an action for damages under Art 1618 C.C. It is necessary that there should be actual, if not material, disturbance in his enjoyment of the premises, at least by institution of an action for eviction by the owner. A fortiori there will be no ground, when agreement is made with the owner for continuation of the lease, for an action in damages against the lessor.

Baillargeon v. Robillard, Q.R. 17 K.B. 334.

- Repairs by lessee - Agreement for.]The clause in a lease by which the lessee, in consideration of a reduced rent, undertakes to make the repairs to the inside of the premises should be construed strictly and against the lessor. It does not release the latter from the obligation imposed on him by law to make the greater repairs and to maintain the leased premises in a habitable condition and one suitable for their intended use. The knowledge that the lessee had of the bad state of the premises at the time the lease was executed cannot be relied on as an answer to his claim that the lessor make the repairs incumbent on O'Connor v. Flint, Q.R. 33 S.C. 491 (Ct. Rev.).

- Delay in entry - Refusal to deliver premises - Resiliation.] - The tenant of a house has a right to enter from the first day of the term for which he has rented it but subject to the delay of three days recognized by custom for the occupant to move out. Hence, a trifling quarrel on the first day between the landlord occupying and the brother of the tenant who wished to penetrate to the upper storey of the house is not a refusal to deliver over the premises and does not give to the tenant, without further mise en demeure, a right of action for resiliation of the lease. The landlord who, under these circumstances, vacates the house on the second day and sends the key to the tenant has a right of action for damages against the latter who refuses to take possession and rents other premises and also a right to a saisie-gagerie to seize the movables of the tenant who had furnished part of the house.

Landry v. Lafortune, Q.R. 33 S.C. 126 (Ct.

- Building erected by lessee - Privilege of removal.] - A building erected by the lessee of a lot of land under an agreement with the lessor by which he has the right to remove it at the expiration of the lease, does not become a part of the lot. A sale by licitation of the latter, even though described in the proceedings as "a lot, etc., with the building thereon," does not pass the ownership of the one so erected to the purchaser, and the lessee has an action to recover its value from him.

Gaudet v. Marsan, 33 Que. S.C. 37.

Leasehold — Specific performance.] Plaintiff purchased leasehold property from defendant for $340.50, and has paid $300 on account. Plaintiff alleged that property was sold free of all unpaid rent and taxes, and refused to pay balance of purchase money unless defendant contributed towards unpaid rent which was due at the time of the sale. Defendant alleged that no such agreement as to unpaid rent and taxes was made, and was willing to execute conveyance on payment of the true balance, but refused to entertain any proposition for settlement unless certain other dealings between the parties were adjusted at the same time: Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for specific performance. Held, also, that as the evidence failed to establish the plaintiff's contention as to the agreement for sale and the unpaid balance; and that as the defendant had acted wrongfully in attempting to make the settlement of this matter contingent upon the settlement of other dealings between the parties which are distinctly foreign, there should be no order as to cost.

Edgecombe v. McLellan, 4 N.B. Eq. 1.

-Lease - Description of building as an office - No implied restriction.]- The defendant L. holds certain premises under a lease granted by the plaintiff N. to one W. and assigned by W. to L. The lease contains express covenants, but nothing in reference to its assignment, or to the use of the premises, with the exception of the word "office" used in the description, which is as follows: "All that certain office situate on the ground floor of her brick building on the east side of Main Street in the said town of Woodstock, and the office in the said building fronting on the south side of Regent Street in the said town, also the lower part of the shed in the rear of the said office, etc." W. is an attorney and occupied the premises as an office. L. is a retail meat and fish dealer, and proposes to carry on this business in the premises:— Held, that there was no implied covenant in the lease, restricting the lessee to the use of the premises as an office, as it was not necessary to carry out any obvious intention of the parties; and that the word "office" in the lease was used merely as a means of identifying the premises included in the demise: -Held, that as no actua! damage had been shown, the action was in the nature of a quia timet action; and that as the defendant was carrying on a legitimate business, and there was no probability of any immediate or irreparable damage to the plaintiff arising, the application for an injunction must be dismissed.

Nevers v. Lilley, 4 N.B. Eq. 104.

— Lease for a term of years — Registration by memorial that does not specify term of years.] — The lessee of premises under a written lease for six years, registered more than thirty days after it is made, and only by a memorial in which the term of years is not specified, cannot invoke it against a subsequent purchaser under a deed passed before the registration of the lease, though registered after, but within thirty days of its date. Trudeau v. Ressler, 36 Que. s.C. 17.

— Commencement of proof in writing — Admission of existence of a lease — Special conditions.] — The admissions, by a party, of a verbal lease of premises and of occupation thereof, are not a commencement of proof in writing of special conditions attached to it. Hence, they will not avail to allow proof by testimony that the tenant, by the terms of the lease, was to permit alterations, etc., without compensation. Men's Wear v. Arnold, 34 Que. S.C. 224.

— Covenant to insure leased premises — Default of lessee — Difficulty of insuring.] — A covenant in a lease that the lessee will insure the premises and transfer the policies to the lessor, and, in default of doing so, the lessor will have the right to insure them himself and recover the premiums from the lessee, is binding, notwithstanding difficulties in the way of obtaining insurance from regular underwriters, particularly when such difficulties arise from the circumstance that the lessee does not occupy the premises. In such a case, the lessor has the right to insure as best he can and to recover the premiums, even if somewhat in excess of ordinary rates.

Bannerman v. Consumers Cordage Company, 34 Que. S.C. 441.

— Failure of lessor to make repairs — Option of the lessee to obtain a rescission.] — When a lessor after due notification (missen demeure), fails to make necessary repairs, the lessee may, by action, declare his option to obtain a rescission of the lease and recover judgment accordingly.

Vannat v. Fischel Ship, 34 Que. S.C. 529.

— Possession taken in expectation of lease
—Encroachment on adjacent land of lessor by tenant.] — The defendant, in 1882, went into possesion of certain lands situate on Toronto Island, under the expectation of obtaining a lease thereof for twenty-one years, which was shortly afterwards granted to him by the plaintiffs, owners of the freehold, the lease containing a covenant for renewal. The lands leased were three lots, described in the lease by their numbers on a plan. The defendant, in the belief that a piece of land, not so included, formed part of the lands leased, took possession of it with the lands actually leased, and occupied the whole. In 1891 the defendant allowed a person to occupy the encroached upon land as tenant, the latter paying defendant a yearly rental, it being stated by the defendant in a receipt therefor that such land formed part of his leasehold lands. Defendant's tenant continued to pay the yearly rent until 1905, when the plaintiffs, in making a survey of the lands, discovered the mistake made by the defendant, and notified the tenant not to make any further payments. In an action for use and occupation of the part encroached upon:-Held, that the defendant could not claim to have acquired a title by possession, un-der the Statute of Limitations, of the land so encroached upon, for his possession was in his character of lessee, and would therefore be deemed to be that of his landlords, the claim made by plaintiffs for the use and occupation not constituting a repudiation thereof; nor could he claim to have the encroached upon lands included in the new lease to be given him under the covenant for renewal, for under that covenant he would only be entitled to a lease of the lands actually comprised in the old lease. Held, also, that the city were not entitled to claim for the use and occupation of such encroached upon land prior to the termination of the lease to defendant, but were entitled thereafter to be paid therefor. City of Toronto v. Ward, 18 O.L.R. 214.

— Reduction of rental.] — (1) The right of the lessee to sue for specific performance, under s. 1 of Art. 1641 CC., applies only, as stated therein, to repairs and ameliorations stipulated in the lease, or which the lessor is bound by law to make; it does not extend to the erection of works (especially outside the premises leased), required to procure a covenanted state of things. Hence, an undertaking in a lease by a lessor to heat the premises convenablement et confortablement, does not give the lessee a right of action to compel the lessor to build a furnace, for that purpose, in a cellar under the leased premises. (2) Failure by the lessor to carry out the above agreement does not give the lessee a right of action to have a different and lesser rental substituted to that agreed upon in the lease.

Lapointe v. Vincent, 35 Que. S.C. 485.

— Lease of mud flats — Covenant to pay for buildings and erections — Piling and filling in — Damages.] — On expropriation under 63 Vict. c. 59 of lands under a lease, containing a covenant to pay at the end of the term for "any buildings or erections for manufacturing purposes" which should or might then be on the demised premises:—Held, that damages should be assessed for the value at the time of expropriation of all piling and filling in intended for and forming a necessary part of the foundation of such buildings.

- Covenant to renew - Option of lessor.] -A lease for years provided that on its termination the lessor, at his option, could renew or pay for improvements. When it expired the lessor notified the lessee that he would not renew and that he had appointed a valuator of the improvements requesting her to do the same, which she did. The valuation was made and the amount thereof tendered to the lessee which she refused on the ground that valuable improvements had not been appraised, and refusing to give up possession when demanded the lessor brought ejectment. By her plea to the action the lessee set up the invalid appraisement and claimed that as the lessor's option could not be exercised until a valid appraisement had been made he was not entitled to possession. By a plea on equitable grounds she again set up the invalid appraisement and asked that it be set aside and the lessor ordered to specifically perform the condition in the lease for renewal and for other and further relief:-Held, affirming the judgment appealed against, Purdy v. Porter, 38 N.B. Rep. 465, that though the appraisement was a nullity that fact did not defeat the action of ejectment; that the acts of the lessor in giving notice of intention not to renew, demanding possession and bringing ejectment, constituted a valid exercise of his option under the lease, and that the lessor was entitled to possession. Held, that s. 289 of the Supreme Court Act of New Brunswick did not authorize that Court to grant relief to the lessee under her equitable plea; that such a plea to an action of ejectment must state facts which would entitle the defendant to retain possession, which the plea in this did not do.

Porter v. Purdy, 41 Can. S.C.R. 471.

- Permit to cut hay - Provision for cancellation of permit if land leased - Subsequent lease of part.] - The defendant paid for a permit to cut in 1908, on a parcel of land across which was printed the following: "This permit becomes cancelled by the sale or lease of the land." Subsequently the plaintiff obtained a lease of half the same parcel:-Held, that the defendant's permit gave him an actual interest in the land, that the provision for cancellation should be most strictly construed and that as the land had not been leased but only a part of it, the permit was not cancelled, and the defendant had a right to the hay cut in that year on the whole of the land including some that had been cut by the plaintiff under his lease.

Decock v. Barrager, 19 Man. R. 34.

— Covenant by lessee to insure.] — The obligation of the lessee under a clause in a lease of manufacturing premises to keep them insured is not at an end when the company to which he applied for insurance refused the risk especially when the refusal was based on the ground that the lessee had not occupied nor operated the factory. And where the lessor under authority of the same clause effects the insurance himself he can recover the promium from the lessee though it is higher than the usual rates. The lessee cannot set up as against such action that the insurance effected does not give him proper security. It is sufficient that the lessor is satisfied as it was he who stipulated for the covenant which the lessee entered into.

Consumers Cordage Co. v. Bannerman, Q. R. 18 K.B. 305, affirming 34 S.C. 441.

— Conditions of lease.] — A creditor cannot demand the execution of a contract to perform an act dependent on circumstances foreseen and expected so long as they do not take place. Therefore, a landlord who is to bring the water into the premises leased and instal closets, etc., whenever a proposed main should be placed in the street in front cannot be compelled to do it sooner, the lessee's remedy, if any, being only for damages, diminution of rent or resiliation of the lease.

Lazanis v. Grenier, Q.R. 36 S.C. 171.

- Building lease - Settled estate - Order of Court authorizing lease - Covenant for renewal.] - The lessor, the devisee of land "during his natural life and for him to leave it to any of his children he may please," agreed to lease it; and an order was made by the High Court on the 29th September, 1884, under certain Imperial statutes and R.S.O. 1877, c. 40, s. 85, declaring that it was proper and consistent with a due regard to the interest of the parties entitled or to become entitled under the will containing the devise, that leases of the land should be authorized, but for periods not exceeding, with renewals, 99 years, and directing that a proper lease should be executed, being first approved of by a Judge or the Master in Ordinary, upon notice to the official guardian, and that such lease should be binding on all persons claiming under the will. Thereupon with the approval of the Master in Ordinary, a lease was executed for 21 years from the 1st January, 1886, containing a covenant for renewal, subject to the approval of the Master in Ordinary, for a further term of 21 years, and at a rental to be fixed by the Master. By an order of the High Court of the 20th May, 1907, the powers conferred upon the Master by the former order were transferred to an official referee, and it was declared that it should be lawful for the latter to do all acts and exercise all powers which it would be lawful for the Master to do or exercise in pursuance of the former order. The referee then proceeded, in the presence of all parties and without objection, to determine the rental upon evidence and made an award fixing the amount of the rental for a renewal term:-Held, that the lease, though approved by the officer of the Court, was a contract between the parties thereto, and the provisions as to renewal as much a contract as any other part; the proper officer to fix the rental was, therefore, the Master, the express contract not being varied by the order of 1907. But there was nothing to prevent the parties waiving the terms of the contract and agreeing that, instead of the Master fixing the rental, the referee should do so; no formal submission, either oral or written, was necessary; what was done amounted to an informal agreement or submission that the referee should act as arbitrator and fix the rental; and therefore an objection to his award, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction, failed. Objections to the award, that the referee should have provided for the reimbursement in whole or in part of the lessee for the buildings, and that he should not have fixed a rental which would imply the expenditure of a considerable sum of money by the lessee, were overruled. It is not improper in fixing a rental to take into consideration the potential value of the property.

Re Denison and Foster, 18 O.L.R. 478.

- Sub-letting - Consent of lessor.] - Where a lessor received in payment for rent the cheque of a third party to whom the premises had been sub-let and indorsed it but almost immediately obliterated his indorsement after consultation with his solicitor; his act was not a commencement of proof in writing of his acceptance of the third party as sub-tenant. The condition against sub-letting without the consent in writing of the lessor is de rigueur and if alleged in an action for resiliation of the lease the Court can neither inquire into the reasons for refusing consent nor otherwise exercise control over the condition. Brown v. Orkin, Q.R. 35 S.C. 132.

- Condition for reduction of rent - Hotel property.] - A lease to the plaintiff of an hotel business in Orillia contained a proviso that "in the event of any law being enacted . . . which shall prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors upon the demised premises" the lessor shall make a reasonable reduction in the rent. A local option bylaw was passed in Orillia in February, 1908, prohibiting the sale of liquor from and after May 1st, 1908, but was quashed in June, 1908. Meanwhile, in April, 1908, 8 Edw. VII. c. 54 (O.), was passed, which by s. 11, prohibited under such circumstances the issue of the necessary license, without the written consent of the provincial secretary, who refused it:-Held, that until such consent was obtained there was a law prohibiting sale within the meaning of the above proviso, and the plaintiff was entitled to a rebate in his rent.

Hessey v. Quinn, 18 O.L.R. 487.

-Land let "for pasturing purposes"-Hay raised by tenant - Injunction against selling.] — The defendant agreed to rent a farm from the plaintiff "for pasturing purposes," by a memorandum containing no other stipulation as to the use of the place. Instead of using the entire farm for grazing purposes, the defendant raised a crop of hay on part of the land, which he cut and stored in his barn and endeavoured to sell:-Held, that the defendant was rightly enjoined from selling and removing from the farm any part of the hay, but that his raising a crop of hav on the farm was not a breach of his contract to use it for "pasturing purposes," as these words did not require that the grass should be severed only by the teeth of the feeding beasts, but permitted him to cut the hay and remove it to his barn, and either use it in feeding his cattle during the winter or leave it on the premises after the termination of the lease. Westropp v. Elligott (1884), 9 App. Cas. 815, discussed and followed.

Bradley v. McClure, 18 O.L.R. 503.

II. RECOVERY OF RENT.

-Division of premises leased-Action to apportion rent.]-The lessee of a house and vacant lot adjoining paying one rent for both has a right of action against the person who has acquired the property in the house subject to the lease in order to have settled the proportion of rent to be paid therefor.

Brouner v. Lapointe, Q.R. 38 S.C. 309.

-Distress for rent-Sale of goods distrained-Oath of appraisers.]-The right to sell goods distrained for rent did not exist at common law, but was given by the statute 2 W & M: c. 5, s. 2; and it must be exercised, if at all, upon the terms the statute imposes. The tenant is allowed 5 days after distress within which he may replevy; at the expiration of that time, or within a reasonable time thereafter, and before sale, the goods must be appraised by sworn appraisers; the oath can be administered by the officer conducting the proceedings. Where damage has occurred, the tenant is entitled to recover the real value of the goods, i.e., their full value to him, less the rent and expenses:-Held, in the circumstances of this case, that the tenant had a right of action, and was entitled to $250 damages.

Dewar v. Clements, 15 W.L.R. (Man.).

-Piano under mortgage seized for rent-Storage-Right of mortgagee.]-Landlady seized a piano for rent due; later she released possession of the piano, taking a bond providing that she might repossess if the amount claimed for rent, costs, etc., was not paid in a few days. it all up. The piano in question was subject to a chattel mortgage to plaintiff, who brought action to recover possession. Defendant contended that he was holding the piano under the distress warrant:—Held, that so soon as the piano, in accordance with the arrangement, was removed from the demised premises, the distress was abandoned and the landlady's lien ceased and the mortgage was entitled to possession of the piano under his mortgage.

Gosnell v. McTamney, 1 O.W.N. 832, 16 O.W.R. 176.

-Sale of reversion-Equitable assignment of rent-Distress by vendor after sale.]-The sale of the reversion of leased lands with an equitable verbal assignment of the rents but without transfer of the legal estate in the lands, prevents the vendor from distraining for rent, and gives no right to the purchaser to distrain. The landlord is liable for the act of his bailiff in making an excessive distress. There is no action of replevin under the practice in Alberta, proceedings by way of replevin being only collateral to an action for detention or conversion, and therefore if the tenant replevies his goods wrongfully seized by the landlord, he may still maintain action for damages for excessive distress. The English rule by which the tenant in such case is precluded from bringing such an action for damages is not in force in this province.

McCoig v. Griffith, 2 Alta. R. 335.

—Landlord's lien—Goods of third parties.]
—The notice provided for by Art. 1622
C.C. to withdraw the movables of third parties from a landlord's lien should be in writing but proof of the "knowledge acquired" by the landlord of the right of the third party, mentioned in the same article, may be made by witness. In either case the notice and the "knowledge acquired" should be of specific movables distinct from the others.

Cf. Ouimet v. The Heirs Greene Willis, Q.R. 37 S.C. 136.

The intervenant who claims ownership of movables seized as security for rent against whom the plaintiff, while acknowledging his right of property therein, sets up the privilege with which they are affected as being on the leased premises; and who proves neither the notice to the plaintiff nor the "knowledge acquired" by him within the terms of Art. 1662 C.C. is not entitled to a declaration of his right of property in the judgment dismissing his intervention. He should also bear all the costs even if the amount for which his movables are subject to the lieu is declared in the judgment to be less than that for which the writ of saisie-gagerie was issued.

Gosselin v. Morin, Q.R. 38 S.C. 385.

—Distress and sale—Landlord debarred from purchasing.]—A landlord who distrains upon the goods of his tenant cannot himself become a purchaser at the sale of the tenant's goods and, should he do so, will be held accountable in damages. Where no order for judgment is taken and the whole matter is left to be disposed of by the trial Judge, the Court may make the order for judgment which the trial Judge should have made. The appeal was allowed with costs, but plaintiff was deprived of costs below because of the extravagance of his claims and untenable contentions set up with respect to the nature of his claim and the measure of damages.

Spain v. McKay, 44 N.S.R. 74.

—Sale of movables by lessec.]—The lessor has a right to make a conservatory seizure of the movables of his lessee who has publicly announced their sale, even though no rent may be due at the time.

Carroll v. Elliott, 11 Que. P.R. 217.

-Lease of hotel-Rent-Proviso for rebate -Distress for rent reserved without making rebate.]-A lease of hotel premises contained a proviso that, in a certain event (which happened), the lessors should make a reasonable rebate in the rent which the lessee convenanted to pay. Notwithstanding that an action was pending for a declaration as to the rebate which should properly be allowed, the defendants (the lessors) distrained the goods of the plaintiff (the lessee) in the hotel, and the plaintiff brought this action, for replevin and other relief, paying into Court the amount of the rent in question:-Held. that the defendants' covenant to make the rebate did not directly affect the reservation of rent; the rebate was to be made by the defendants from time to time, and for their refusal to make it the lessee's remedy was by action for breach of covenant; and, therefore, so far as the action was founded on replevin, it failed, the rent not having been tendered before distress. Bickle v. Beatty (1859), 17 U.C.R. 465, specially referred to. But held, that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for excessive distress, the value of the goods distrained being wholly out of proportion to the rent distrained for. Quære, whether any cause of action had arisen for breach of covenant for not making a reasonable rebate in respect of the rent distrained for. the rent not having been paid or tendered before the distress; but this it was not necessary to determine, as any relief to which the plaintiff might be entitled in respect of the rebate could be administered under Con. Rules 1069 and 1072 in dealing with the money which had been paid into Court. Held, that on their counterclaim, the defendants were entitled to recover the rent accrued due under the lease, subject to the rebate as ascertained in the former action; but their claim for double the yearly value for holding over certain rooms outside the hotel was disallowed, the agreement being that the plaintiff was to hold them during the term of the lease of the hotel. A reference was directed; and the plaintiff was allowed the costs of the action except as to his claim in replevin; the defendants were allowed no costs of the action or counterclaim, their conduct having been harsh and unreason-

Hessey v. Quinn, 20 O.L.R. 442. (See next case.)

-Rent - Excessive distress - Substantial damage not shown.]—The judgment of Osler, J.A., 20 O.L.R. 442, was varied by reducing the damages awarded to the plaintiff for excessive distress from $100 to $5:-Held, that the statute R.S.O. 1897, c. 342, is confined to irregularities or illegalities arising after the distress, and has no application to the taking of an excessive distress. In the case of an excessive distress there is a breach of the statutory duty to make a reasonable distress only, and some damage must be presumed; but nominal or "nearly nominal" damages only are allowed, unless substantial damage is shown. As in this case the bailiff took nominal possession only, and did not interfere with the use and enjoyment of the goous, and replevin was granted upon payment into Court of the rent due, there was nothing upon which to found an award of more than nominal damages. The judgment of Osler, J.A., as to the terms upon which certain rooms were held by the plaintiff, was affirmed.

-Tenancy at will-Right to distrain-Excessive distress.]-A tenant at will may by agreement made during the tenancy change the nature of his holding so as to make the rent payable at fixed periods, and upon this being done a right of distress is given to the landlord:-Held, also, that in levying distress for rent a bailiff is justified in seizing sufficient to make the realization of the rent and expenses certain, but must be careful not to take more than what is manifestly sufficient for that purpose.

-Rent payable by delivery of portion of crop-Assignment of rent by lessor.]-Defendant was the owner of a farm, which he leased on terms that he was to receive one-half of the crop, when threshed, by way of rent. Being indebted to one Emerson, he executed a deed by way of security whereby he did "assign and grant . . all that certain parcel of land . . gether with the residue unexpired of the said term of years and the said lease and all benefit and advantages to be derived therefrom." The sheriff, under writ of execution of the plaintiff, seized the defendant's half of the crop which was claimed by Emerson, and the sheriff interplead-Whether the crop was standing or cut, threshed or divided, did not appear by the material before the Court:-Held, rent is a chose in action, and as such is assignable, and the doctrine applies to future rent as well as past due rent. 2. That until the grain was threshed and divided the property therein remained in the lessee, and in the absence of evidence of division and delivery there was no evidence that the debtor had any interest in the crop liable to seizure. 3. That the as-signment by the lessor of the benefits of a lease, the rent under which is payable by a portion of a crop, is not an assignment of a growing crop within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Ordinance.

—Lessor and lessee—Remedy of lessee—Sub-lease.]—The inconvenience caused to a lessee by work done on a party wall by the owner of land adjoining the leased premises is a trouble de droit which gives him a right of action for resiliation of the lease or for reduction of the rent but not to the recovery of damages. When there is a sub-lease it is the original lessee who is entitled to a reduction of rent without regard to that of the sub-tenant. Lanctot v. Boack, Q.R. 38 S.C. 228.

—Seizure of movables—Sale—Lien of lessor.]—When movables are seized the debtor (saisi) cannot by selling them with the immovable containing them to a third party and taking a lease from such third party of the immovable and the movables seized, confer on the latter the privilege of lessor capable of being opposed to the seizing creditor on the distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the movables on proceedings taken by auother creditor.

—Excessive distress—Fire—Remoteness of damages.]—Where a landlord makes an excessive distress, and the goods, while so distrained, are destroped by fire, the tenant is entitled to damages for such excessive distress to the value of the excess in distress, and that such damages are not too remote.

—Rent—Seizure under execution—8 Anne c. 14.]—Where goods are seized under execution on leasehold premises and are claimed by a third party, who establishes his title thereto, the statute 8 Anne c. 14, does not entitle the landlord to be paid rent by the sheriff. Where, however, goods seized by the sheriff were claimed by a third party, and under an interpleader order were sold and the proceeds paid into court pending the trial of an issue as to the ownership of the goods, and the trial of a second issue had been directed between the landlord and the execution creditor as to the landlord's right to the rent claimed, and the claimants in the first issue consented to the landlord's claim being satisfied, even if they should be successful in the issue, the landlord was held entitled to be paid out of the fund in Court the arrears of rent not exceeding one year's rent, without awaiting the decision of the issue as to the ownership of the goods. Robinson v. McIntosh, 4 Terr. L.R. 102.

-Mortgage-Creation of tenancy-Tenancy at will-Right to distrain-Assignment of equity of redemption-Assent of mortgagees-Liability of assignee for rent -Sale of distress-Absence of appraisement.]-A mortgage made by the plaintiff to the defendants secured $36,000 and interest at five per cent., payable by instalments, this rate of interest to be pard both before and after maturity. It had the usual statutory covenants, and this special provision: "Provided that in default of the payment of the interest hereby secured the principal shall become payable. Provided that until default of payment the mortgagor shall have quiet possession of the said lands. Provided that so long as the mortgagor, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, shall remain in possession of the said lands then he or they shall hold the same by tenancy at will under the said mortgagees, their successors or assigns, at an annual rent equal to the said yearly interest and payable at the times set forth for the payment of said interest, any such rent collected to be applied towards satisfaction of said interest and that if the tenancy be determined at any time the rent accrued up to that period shall be payable forthwith for the purpose of enforcing remedies for the collection thereof." This formed one sentence in the mortgage, and had no stops throughout:-Held, that it contained no repugnancy or inconsistency. Trust & Loan Co. v. Lawrason (1882), 10 S.C.R. 679, distinguished. The mortgagor, remaining in possession upon the execution of the mortgage, had the right, under the provision for quiet possession, until default, to enjoy the premises, but for no determinate period, and his tenancy thereunder was a tenancy at will, and such provision was, therefore, not inconsistent with an express tenancy at will at a halfyearly rent. There being a tenancy at will at a fixed rent, there was, as incident to it, the right to distrain, and the covenant for quiet enjoyment must be read as subject to such right. Doe d. Dixie v. Davies (1851), 7 Ex. 89, followed. After the mortgagor had made default, his continuance in possession was still as tenant at will. After default, the mortgagor, at the instance of the mortgagees, assigned his equity of redemption to his wife, and she took possession and agreed to apply the proceeds of the land to the payment of the mortgage:-Held, that this operated as a new tenancy at will with the wife, who became liable for the payment of the rent as the assign of her husband with the assent of the mortgagees, and her goods was therefore distrainable for rent. So the goods of the husband might also be distrained, as it was a case of real ten-ancy. Held, however, that the defendants were liable for selling the distress without appraisement or valuation; and the measure of damages was the real value of what was sold, minus the rent due.

—Privilege of lessor—Repayment of loan—Contestation of collocation.]—The curator to an insolvent estate has a right to attack a privileged claim by showing that part of what is supposed to be rental price goes to the repayment of a loan, and therefore does not constitute a privileged claim.

In re Mercier, Pauzé v. Lamarche, 3 Que. P.R. 483.

-Effects in possession of tenant-Third party owner-Notice-Intervention.] - A third party, owner of effects in possession of a tenant, who desires to take advantage of the provisions of Art. 1622 C.C. as modified by 61 Vict. c. 45, should give notice to the landlord specifying the effects of which he is owner; it is not sufficient to notify the landlord merely that he owns the greater part of the effects in possession of the tenant. An intervention filed in proceedings against the tenant by the landlord, with saisie-gagerie conservatoire of the movables in the leased premisesno rent then being due-constitutes sufficient notice of the ownership of the third party if it specifies the effects which belong to the intervenant. But the intervenant in this case having caused the landlord's proceedings by removing all the effects without distinction from the leased premises, some of which belonged to the defendant, before sufficient notice of his ownership had been given to the landlord, is liable for the costs incurred by the latter and should have tendered them with his intervention; in the absence of such tender he should be condemned to pay the costs of contesting his interMathieu v. Clifford, 19 Que. S.C. 410 (C. R.).

-Exemptions-R.S.O., c. 170, s. 30.]-In this case the tenancy was a monthly one at $12 per month rent. There were nine months' rent in arrears. The landlord seized all the goods on the premises, including goods exempt under R.S.O., c. 170, s. 30. The tenant claimed the goods as being exempt under the said section and an injunction was obtained, and on motion to continue the same, the matter was disposed of summarily:-Held, that the plain import of the words of the above section "In case of a monthly tenancy, the said exemptions shall only apply to two months' arrears of rent" is to give the protection to this monthly tenant as to two months' rent, viz., $24. This amount can be paid to the tenant at the outset, or it may be so paid at the conclusion of the sale of the goods. [Note.-The above case differs from the holdings in Harris v. Canada Permanent Co., 34 C.L.J. 89, and Shannon v. O'Brien, Ib. 421. See also 34 C.L.J. 440].

—Distress for rent due under an illegal lease—Replevin. |—Replevin will lie to recover goods distrained for rent in arrear under an illegal lease. The maxim, In pari delicto est conditio possidentis, is applicable only when the possession results from the act of the parties, and not when it results from some incident attached to a legal instrument. Per Tuck, C.J., Barker and McLeod, J.J. (Hanington and Van-Wart, J.J., dissenting).

Gallagher v. McQueen, 35 N.B.R. 198.

-Landlord's privilege-Costs-Cession de biens-Arts. 1619, 1620 C.C.]-The proceeds of sale of a hotel license (sold under cession de biens) is not subject to the landlord's lien. The only costs of judicial proceedings which take precedence of special privileges are those incurred in the interest of the privileged creditors and for the preservation of their security (gage). Therefore, in a cession de biens the costs made necessary by the assignment and those for the administration of the assets in insolvency and their liquidation are not superior to the landlord's claim, but it is otherwise in respect to the costs of sale of the articles subject to his security, of the inventory thereof and of the distribution of the proceeds of sale.

—Obstructing distress—Legality of distress—Crim. Code, s. 144 (2).]—Held, that it devolves on the prosecution under s. 144 of the Crim. Shearer v. Marks, Q.R. 22 S.C. 472 (Sup. Ct.).

-Rent payable under lease to administratrix for benefit of others-Attachment.] --Plaintiffs, claiming as heirs at law of their father and owners of a lot of land, brought an action for specific performance, which was dismissed with costs. After the trial one of the plaintiffs, G. R., died, and probate of his will was granted to a sister and co-plaintiff, and the action was revived in the names of the remaining plaintiffs and the executrix, and an appeal against the judgment was dismissed with costs. It appeared G. R. owned one-half of the lot and the father of the plaintiffs the other half, and that the lot had been leased to a tenant by one of the plaintiffs as administratrix of the father, who died in or before 1896, and by the executrix of G. R. No caution was registered under the Devolution of Estates Act:-Held, that the rent due from the tenant was garnishable for the costs payable by the plaintiffs. Macaulay v. Rumbal! (1869), 19 U.C.C.P. 284, commented on. Judgment of Street, J., reversed, and judgment of the Master in Chambers restored.

— Privilege — Saisie — Revendication — Deposit.]—A landlord's privilege is gone when he fails to seize movables within eight days from the time at which they were removed from the premises under lease, and this even when the tenant, who was not the owner of the movables, had sent them to the landlord as a ple ige, and the real owner may revendicate them from the possession of the landlord. In this case, a merchant, to whom the movables had been entrusted as a deposit, could be deemed the depositary and claim from the owner his charges therefor.

—Second distress for rent due at date of first distress — Appraisement—Appraisers not sworn.]—After a distress for a month's rent, it is not illegal to make another distress for the next month's rent, although it was due and in arrear at the time of the first distress. Under 11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 19, the want of the sworn appraisement required by 2 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, is only an irregularity, and the tenant can only recover such special damage as he can show to have resulted from it.

-Illegal distress - Abandonment of -Agreement to suspend right.]-Under a distress for rent issued on the 12th of March the defendant took possession of the plaintiff's store and evicted him. On the 13th of March, discovering that the distress was illegal, he induced the plaintiff to go to the store with his attorney and the bailiff, who made the distress, where they informed him that the distress was illegal and a new one would have to be made, and they handed him the key of the store and an inventory of the goods distrained, and tendered him $17 as damages for the eviction. to the jury to say whether there had been an abandonment of the distress under the first warrant, but they found in answer to a question left that the bailiff at no time prior to the service of the second warrant gave up the possession and control of the goods under the first:-Held, that it should have been specifically left to the jury to say whether what took place and what was done on the discovery of the mistake made on executing the warrant and mak ing the distress after sunset was done with the intention of abandoning the distress. Where an agreement was made between the plaintiff and the defendant that if the plaintiff would pay the rent on the 1st April and give up the premises so that the defendant could have the month for making repairs for a new tenant coming in on the 1st of May he, the plaintiff, would not distrain for the rent until after default on the 1st of April:-Held, the agreement would have the effect of suspending the right to distrain, and if the defendant in violation of it distrained he would render himself a trespasser. Mooers v. Manzer, 36 N.B.R. 205.

-Distress-Payment of rent, after distress, to mortgagee-Costs of distress.] -Rent, being in arrear, the landlord distrained, and the tenant then paid the rent to the landlord's mortgagees, who had previously given him notice to pay to them (their mortgage money being in arrear), and threatened him with proceedings if he did not do so:-Held, that the tenant having paid the mortgagees under compulsion, was entitled to be re-lieved from the distress and from further liability to the landlord; but the distress was lawful when made, and the landlord was entitled to retain a suffi-cient quantity of the goods until the costs of the distress were paid. The tenant sued the landlord and bailiff. claiming an injunction to restrain them from proceeding with the distress, and damages, and the landlord counterclaimed for the rent and costs of the distress: -Held, that the action should be dismissed as against the bailiff with costs; that the landlord should have judgment against the plaintiff for the costs of the distress without costs of the counterclaim, and that there should be no costs of the action between the plaintiff and the landlord.

— Rent — Property of third party — Exemption.]—The right of a landlord to seize on a judgment for rent does not extend to the moveables of a third party found on the leased premises if the same are exempt from seizure, or to effects which, by law, the tenant may select and withdraw from seizure. As the law makes no distinction as to persons such choice of selection may be exercised by the third party who has an interest as owner of the movables as well as by the debtor hinself.

—Lien—Owner of effects—Notice — Service by bailiff.)—A bailiff has no authority to serve on a landlord the votice that should be given him by the owner of movables in order to exempt them from the landlord's lien; and the return of the bailiff alone is not sufficient proof of service required by law in such a case.

—Recovery of rent—Entry by landlord.]
—An entry made by the landlord for the purpose of protecting the demised premises, which had been left vacant by the tenant, does not amount to an eviction if there were no intention to put an end to the tenancy. McLean v. Green, 37 N.B.R. 204.

-Distress for rent-Irregularities in proceeding-Damages improperly awarded.]-Defendant distrained upon plaintiff's goods for rent, then overdue, but nothing further was done, and no special damage was shown:-Held, that, if there were irregularities in connection with the making of the distress, defendant was protected by the Act (R.S. 1900, c. 172, s. 10). A previous distress of plaintiff's goods was irregular in a number of particulars, among others as including goods which were not distrainable, and omission to give the notice required by the statute, section 2, but none of the articles were removed from the premises, plaintiff continued to use them as before, and the distress was abandoned before anything had been sold. Held, that, to entitle plaintiff to damages on account of the irregularities committed, some substantial hurt or injury must be shown, resulting from the irregular proceeding, and that, in the absence of proof of actual damage, the trial Judge erred in awarding damages to plaintiff, and his decision on this point must be reversed with costs.

-Holding over - Increased rent.]-When a tenant holds over after the expiration of the term and nothing is agreed on as to the terms of the new holding, that new holding is not of necessity to be on the same terms as the former, but the landlord may be awarded an increased rent if there are circumstances to show that such was expected by him, and that such expectation was known to and not repudiated by the tenant. In such a case the tenant was notified in writing within a month that the rent would be increased after another month, and paid two months' rent at the increased rate without objection:-Held, that she was liable for rent at such increased rate for the remaining months of her occupancy, without deciding whether a new tenancy from year to year had been created or not.

-Sub-lease for purposes of prostitution-Legal relation between sub-tenant and owner-Damages.]-(1) Where the tenant has sub-let premises for purposes of prostitution, the sub-tenant stands, in relation to the landlord, in the position of a third person whose effects are upon the premises with his consent (Article 1622 C.C.), and these effects are subject to the privilege of the landlord for rent and damages for breach of the obligations under the principal lease. (2) The sub-tenant who takes a sub-lease of premises for the purposes of prostitution commits a civil wrong which renders him liable towards the owner for such damages as may result therefrom.

Montmarquette v. Berman, Q.R. 29 S.C. 193.

— Distress—Goods fraudulently or clandestinely removed.]—Goods fraudulently or clandestinely removed to avoid distress cannot be seized under distress if there is no rent in arrear: Hoyt v. Stockton, 13 N.B.R. 60, considered. In an action for an illegal distress the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the value of the goods sold, although they are subject to a bill of sale by way of mortgage to secure a compromise which the plaintiffs have made with their creditors.

Clark v. Green, 37 N.B.R. 525.

—Action for rent and saisie-gagerie—Removal of goods seized.]—When movables attached by saisie-gagerie in an action for rent by the landlord are removed into premises belonging to a third party, a second action will not lie to bring such party into the suit and to preserve the privilege of the plaintiff as against him. It is useless for such purposes and if brought will be dismissed as such. Simard v, Champagne, 30 Que. S.C. 505.

-Distress-Reversion.]-The common law right of distress for rent in arrear can only be exercised by the owner of the reversion which must be vested in him at the time of the distress. A tenant, therefore, who makes a sub-lease of the property for the whole of his term, without reserving to himself any right of distress cannot distrain for rent in arrear due under the sub-lease, as he has parted with the reversion. The payment of rent under the sub-lease does not operate as an estoppels oa sto confer a right of distress for subsequent arrears of rent which otherwise does not exist.

O'Connor v. Peltier, 18 Man. R. 94.

-Irregular and excessive distress - Sale without appraisement-Unreasonable delay in selling. 1-Plaintiff and one B. carried on business in partnership in premises owned by the wife of B. There was a verbal arrangement between B. and plaintiff by which they were to become the joint owners of such premises, but the wife of B. did not appear to have been a party to such arrangement. It was also a part of such arrangement that the partnership should assume and make the payment due under a mortgage on the property. The partnership was dissolved, plaintiff continuing the business. After the dissolution defendant became the owner of the premises, and served a notice on plaintiff demanding rent at $20 per month, to begin from a date some months previous to the date of the notice. Plaintiff never agreed to pay any rent, and not paying same defendant distrained for months' rent, locked up the premises, and after a delay of nearly three weeks sold the goods of plaintiff and of other parties which were then on the premises, without appraisement, the defendant him self buying in at a very low price. The plaintiff sued for damages for trespass, conversion and illegal distress:-Held, that to give a right to distress there must be a fixed rent, and there being no such rent fixed by agreement there was no right of distress. 2. That a landlord cannot by notice fix the amount of rent to be paid unless the amount is assented to or fixed by implication.

White v. Cusak, 2 Sask, R. 106.

—Rent payable by delivery of portion of crop—Assignment of lease by lessor — Seizure of crop by sheriff under execution against lessor.]—Defendant was the owner of a farm, which he leased on terms that he was to receive one-half of the crop, when threshed, by way of rent. Being indebted to one Emerson, he executed a deed by way of security whereby he did "assign and grant... all that certain parcel of land... together with the residue unexpired of the said term of years and the said lease and all benefit and advantages to be derived therefrom." The sheriff, under writ of execution of the plaintiff, seized the defendant's half of the crop which was claimed by Emerson, and the sheriff interpleaded. Whether the crop was standing or cut, threshed or divided, did not appear by the material before the Court:-Held, rent is a chose in action, and as such is assignable, and the doctrine applies to future rent as well as past due rent. 2. That until the grain was threshed and divided the property therein remained in the lessee, and in the absence of evidence of division and delivery there was no evidence that the debtor had any interest in the crop liable to seizure. 3. That the assignment by the lessor of the benefits of a lease, the rent under which is payable by a portion of a crop, is not an assignment of a growing crop within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Ordinance.

-Repair of premises by landlord-Tenant out of possession during repairing.]-Plaintiff leased certain premises from the defendant for a period of three years, and carried on business therein. The premises being out of repair the plaintiff complained to the defendant of the condition of the premises, and the defendant thereupon proposed that the plaintiff vacate the premises for about one month and that he would have the necessary repairs made. To this the defendant agreed and moved out. The repairs were not completed until after about two and one-half months, and the plaintiff ultimately told the defendant he would not continue in the occupancy of the premises, and the defendant thereupon re-let them. When the plaintiff vacated the premises he left a range thereon, and this he demanded from the defendant. who refused to give it up until the rent for the two months during which the repairs were being made was paid. The plaintiff thereupon sued for detention, and the defendant counterclaimed for the rent. The learned trial Judge found for the plaintiff and dismissed the counterclaim. On appeal:-Held, that the plaintiff having vacated the premises at the request of the defendant without any compulsion, and apparently without any objection, the dispossession during the period in which the repairs were being made did not amount to an eviction, and in order to effect a suspension of rent the dispossession must amount to an eviction, and therefore the defendant was entitled to rent during such period. 2. That even if the language used by the defendant were sufficient to constitute a seizure for rent, he had not proved that such seizure was made between sunrise and sunset, and as the ones was upon the defendant to prove that the seizure was lawfully made, which had not been done, the plaintiff was entitled to recover on the claim for detention.

-Property of third party-Notice to landlord.]-No special mode is prescribed for notifying a landlord that a movable on the leased premises does not belong to his tenant; if he is notified within a reasonable time it will suffice. The knowledge of the landlord of the right of ownership which is mentioned in Art. 1622 C.C. is a fact to be proved in the ordinary way, not only by obtaining an acknowledgment or notice by letter to the landlord but by oral evidence and even by presumptions.

Ouimet v. The Heirs of Green, 10 Que. P.R. 416.

-Privilege-Sale of effects by tenant -Seizure from purchaser.]-The landlord who has seized goods subject to his lien in the possession of a purchaser thereof from the tenant and who contests the plea of non indebitati on the ground that at the time of such purchase the tenant was insolvent to the knowledge of the purchaser cannot, after failing to establish such fraud, claim that his seizure within eight days from the time the goods were removed, was equivalent to a saisie-gagerie under which the tiers-saisi could be ordered to return them or pay their value, especially when, in exercising the remedy he chose, he acted in the capacity of personal creditor only without invoking the pledge or lien he had upon the goods.

Bastien v. Richardson, Q.R. 35 S.C. 481.

-Fraud on landlord-Disposal of movables.]-A third party who, fraudulently and in collusion with the tenant, carries away the movables subject to the landlord's lien is responsible for the damage caused to the latter by loss of rent. An allegation of fact in the declaration as follows: "On the 15th of November, 1907, during the night, the defendants or their employees surreptitiously carried away the movables in the shop leased by the plaintiff to Picard and converted them to their own use without the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, and disposed of them for their own benefit," is sufficient and an inscription en droit on the ground that it does not disclose any right of lien between the parties does not justify the dismissal of the action, but, at the most, an order for preuve avant faire

Lallemand v. Larue, Q.R. 35 S.C. 431.

-Goods of third party-Notice of ownership.]-It is not necessary that the notice to a tenant by a third party who owns a movable in the tenant's possession should be delivered to him personally; notice by registered letter left at his house is sufficient. The post office books are official, in charge of public officers, and constitute literal proof within the meaning of Art. 1207 C.C.; they form a commencement of proof by writing which enables the sender of a registered letter to prove its contents by evidence.

Montpetit v. Bellemare, 10 Que. P.R. 340.

-Distress and sale where no rent due-Recovery of double the value of goods sold.]-Where distress and sale are made for rent when no rent is due to the person distraining, the owner of the goods is entitled, under R.S.O. 1897, c. 342, s. 18, subs. 2, to recover double the value of the goods distrained or sold, and full costs of suit. Notwithstanding that the word "may" alone is used in the sub-section. whereas "shall and may" is in the original enactment, 2 W. & M., sess. 1, c. 5, s. 4, there is no difference in the effect; there is no discretion in the trial tribunal to give less than double the value or less than full costs; nor is there power, by virtue of the provision of the Judicature Act, s. 57 (3), enabling the High Court "to relieve against all penalties and forfeitures," to reduce the double value to the single value or otherwise. The costs are fixed by the statute itself; and the discretionary power given by the Rules of Court relating to the imposition of or dispensation from costs is not exercisable in regard to costs given by statute. The right to recover the double value not only exists against the landlord, but extends to his officers and bailiffs engaged in the illegal proceedings. The plaintiff was entitled to judgment for double the value of the goods with costs, and the defendants to judgment on a counterclaim with costs; the amounts recovered by the parties respectively for debt and costs to be set off and payment made according to the result.

Webb v. Box, 19 O.L.R. 540,

-Lien of landlord-Seizure for rent-Sale to landlord.]-The landlord who, exercising his lien, seizes the movables on the leased premises and having purchased them at the judicial sale resells them to a third party who leaves them upon the premises does not retain his lien on these movables for rent accruing due after the sale. He cannot seize them in another action against his tenant and if he does the purchaser may intervene to have such seizure set aside.

Pontbriand Co. v. Feeing, Q.R. 36 S.C.

III .- FORFEITURE, TERMINATION AND OVERHOLDING.

-Lease-Termination-Temporary occupation.]-The plaintiffs, tenants of business premises under a lease for five years from the defendant, sublet to one who occupied for a year, and, the premises becoming vacant, engaged the defendant to procure another subtenant. The defendant, wishing to repair the adjoining premises, made a temporary arrangement with R., the tenant of those premises, under which R. moved into a part of the plaintiffs' premises, for which he agreed to pay a small rent, to allow a "to let" notice to remain up, and to show the premises to prospective subtenants. This was done without consulting the plaintiffs:—Held, in an action for a declaration that the lease was determined by the acts of the defendant, that to succeed the plaintiffs must show an eviction, and that what was done by the defendant did not amount to an eviction, especially occause it was plain that the defendant did not intend to terminate the lease, or to do more than permit a temporary occupation in the interest of the plaintiff's.

Mickleborough v. Strathy, 21 O.L.R. 259.

—Notice to quit—Remission of rent.]—If a lessee on being served with the following notice from his lessor "the house having been rented from the first of July next, we take the liberty of notifying you that we wish you to quit the premises at that date," quits the leased premises within three days he is released from liability to pay the rent then due, such notice meeting all the requirements of Art. 1089 C.P.Q. Pouthriand Co. v. Chateauvert, 11 Que.

Pouthriand Co. v. Chateauvert, 11 Que P.R. 242.

-Jurisdiction of Court-Evocation.]-The provision in Art. 1152 C.P.Q. that the amount of the rent or the damages determines the class of the action and the jurisdiction of the Court in actions between lessors and lessees forms no obstacle to their evocation from the Circuit Court to the Superior Court in the cases provided for by Art. 49 C.P.Q. Per Charbonneau, J.:—The Superior Court, to the exclusion of the Circuit Court has jurisdiction over an action for resiliation of a lease carrying a rent exceeding $100 for non-performance of obligations even without any claim for a money compensation. Hence an action of this kind brought in the Circuit Court can be moved into the Superior Court. It is not material, in such case, that the demand contains conclusions asking judgment for a sum less than $100.

Poiré v. Lavigne, Q.R. 38 S.C. 19.

—Breach of covenant—Forfeiture of lease—Relief from forieiture on 'terms.]—The plaintiff's deceased testator in his life-time leased to the defendant the Royal Hotel Block, consisting of an hotel, barber shop, stores, offices and stable, for a term of years. The lease contained lessee's covenants not to sell, assign, let or otherwise part with the demised premises without leave in writing and not to alter the premises without leave in writing. The lessor roomed in the hotel, and usually took his meals there. During his lifetime certain alterations were made in the premises and other alterations were commenced, without his written consent, but with his knowledge and implied consent and acquiescence, and after his death the alterations were continued, with the knowledge of the plaintiff. One sub-tenant had without leave in writing from the head lessor assigned his lease. In the case of two other sub-leases the rent had been increased without consent, and in respect of another a monthly tenancy on a verbal lease had been changed without consent to a two-years' term, with a lease in writing, at a higher rent. The diningroom of the hotel had been placed under separate management on an agreement that the manager should pay defendant a fixed sum of the income from the dining-room and should be entitled to the balance earned by the dining-room. In an action by the executor of the lessor against the lessee claiming forfeiture of the lease on account of the breach of covenants:-Held, (1) an assignment without consent by a sub-lessee of his lease which has been granted with consent is no breach of the lessee's covenant in the head lease not to assign without leave. (2) The mere increase in the monthly rental payable by a sub-lessee is not a termination of one tenancy and the creation of a new tenancy, and will therefore not be a breach of the covenant in the head lease not to sub-let, etc., if done without consent. (3) The alteration of a monthly tenancy to a two years' term on a written lease without such consent is a breach of the covenant. (4) The agreement with the dining-room manager was not a lease, sale or assignment, and therefore no breach. (5) Under the circumstances the Court should exercise the jurisdiction to relieve against forfeitures on terms. The terms imposed were increased rent to make up the increase obtained from the new tenancy created by the conversion of the monthly tenancy to a two-years' tenancy, and the defendant was required to execute a lease covenanting to pay to the plaintiff such increased amount, and was also required to pay the plaintiff's costs as between solicitor and client within one month. Quere—Whether the plaintiff was estopped from taking ad-vantage of the condition for forfeiture in respect of alterations authorized verbally by the testator in his lifetime but executed after his death.

Venner v. Thienel, Q.R. 37 S.C. 80, reversing 36 S.C. 223.

—Contract to lease—Repudiation.]—If B. repudiates his agreement to lease property from A. for a term to commence at a future date, A. may treat the contract as at an end except for the purpose of bringing an action for the breach of contract, and he may remain in possession during the whole of the term agreed on and then bring such action.

Arden Hotel Co. v. Mills, 20 Man. R. 14.

—Overholding tenant—Demand of possession.]—Held, that after a tenancy has been determined, it is necessary that a demand of possession be made to give the County Court Judge jurisdiction under the Overholding Tenants Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 171. Held, also, that it is within the jurisdiction of the County Court Judge, under that Act, to try and determine a question of fact, where the testimony is conflicting, and his decision will not be interfered with.

Fee v. Adams, 16 O.W.R. 103, 1 O.W.N. 812.

-Lease-Breach of covenants-Forfeiture.] -Land leased by the plaintiff to the defendants the B. Co. for mining purposes, was worked by one or other of the several defendants up to the time this action was brought. Previous to action the plaintiff gave notice of cancellation of the lease, addressed to the defendants the K. Co., and served on the defendant T., who was apparently in actual possession. The claim in the action followed the notice, and claimed possession only on account of alleged breaches of covenants in the lease:-Held, on the evidence, that no breach of the covenants was proved as against the B. Co., who were the only necessary defendants, and the plaintiff could not be allowed to turn his action into one of ejectment against T.

Humberstone v. Belmont Coal Co., 13 W. L.R. 119.

—Refusal of lessee to take premises—Action to rescind.]—(1) An action lies by a lessor against a lessee who refuses to take possession of the premises leased, to rescind the lease and to recover damages for loss of rent during the time necessary for re-letting. Such damages may be awarded by anticipation, subject to the condition that the lessor shall account to the lessee for any rental received during the same time. (2) In an action for rescission of a lease, with a demand for damages, costs are due and should be adjudged according to the amount of damages awarded.

Theoret v. Trudeau, 38 Que. S.C. 520.

-Surrender by operation of law-Abandonment.]-Where a tenant, before the end of the term, abandoned the premises leased without any intention of returning to them and his landlord took possession with intent to put an end to the term:-Held. this was a surrender of the term by operation of law, and in any event the tenant, having abandoned possession, could not maintain an action of trespass. To a count for breaking and entering plaintiff's premises and ejecting plaintiff therefrom, defendant pleaded that the premises were not the plaintiff's and gave evidence that the plaintiff had abandoned the premises. and defendant had taken possession before the alleged trespass. Held, that the evidence was admissible under the plea, there being no special allegation of title in the declaration other than that the premises were the plaintiff's and that the defendant need not plead abandonment specially. In an action of trespass to land the Court will not grant a new trial to enable the plaintiff to recover nominal damages.

Whittaker v. Goggin, 39 N.B.R. 403.

-Cancellation of lease-Action upon covenant after.]—Plaintiff leased certain land to defendant, and with the land supplied 800 bushels of seed wheat and 800 bushels seed oats, which the lessee covenanted to return-the wheat the following fall, the oats at the expiration of the lease. There was also a covenant in the lease that either party might cancel the lease within ten months from the date thereof, giving reasons therefor. There was also a provision for cancellation by the lessor in the event of sale, in which case the lessee was to be compensated for improvements. The lessor subsequently cancelled the lease, and the lessee having neglected to return the wheat and oats the lessor brought action to recover the value thereof. The defendant counterclaimed for summer fallowing done during the term :- Held, that cancellation of a lease by mutual consent of the parties does not destroy the term vested in the lessee, and therefore, notwithstanding such cancellation, the lessor could maintain an action for the recovery of the wheat. 2. That in the absence of an agreement to that effect the lessee is not entitled to compensation for tillage upon cancellation.

Ellis v. Fox, 2 Sask. R. 417.

--Lease-Repudiation by tenant-Reletting
--Rent accrued.]--The plaintiffs on the 29th
February, 1908, made a lease to the defendant of store property in a city for a term of ten years from the 5th March, 1910, at a yearly rent of $3,000, payable in equal parts, on the 5th day of each month, in advance, during each year of the term. The defendant covenanted to pay rent and taxes, to leave in repair, and to add certain improvements. The defendant was offered possession, but refused to take it. After some negotiation, he repudiated the lease and refused to act under it. The plaintiffs, after doing their best to make the defendant go in under the lease, advertised the property for rent, and on the 22nd April, 1910, leased it for five years to N., on terms less favourable to them as landlords than those contained in the defendant's lease. On the 7th April, 1910, immediately after the repudiation of the lease, the plaintiffs brought this action to recover two gales of rent and damages for breach of contract:-Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the two gales of rent and interest thereon. The act of the and interest thereon. The act of the plaintiffs in leasing to N. could not be called an eviction; and, even were it an eviction, it would not affect the liability for rent accrued due before the eviction. was this the case of the landlord taking advantage of the proviso in the lease, in the statutory form, for non-payment of rent. It was the case of one contracting party expressly repudiating to the other the contract between them whereupon the other could treat the contract as at an end, excepting and reserving his claim for damages for its breach.

—Notice under Art. 1089 C.P.Q.—Expiry on holiday.]—If the last of the three days following the day on which notice is given by a landlord under Art. 1089 is a Sunday or holiday it is not computed, and the tenant has the whole of the following day to leave the premises.

-Jurisdiction of Circuit Court—Costs.]—An action by which a tenant asks from his landlord certain repairs or otherwise the resiliation of the lease, and, in any event $12.50 damages, is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Circuit Court and the incompetence of the Superior Court being ratione materie, that Court should remit the cause to the proper tribunal. In this case the plaintiff's action having been declared ill-founded by the Court of first instance he was ordered to bear the costs of the contestation in the Superior Court, and also those in the Court of Review although the incompetence of the Court had not been pleaded.

-Overholding Tenants Act-Summary order for possession-Review of High Court

-Evidence-Breach of covenant in lease -Notice specifying-Necessity for.] Under the Overholding Tenants Act, R.S. O. 1897, c. 171, two things must concur to justify the summary interference of the County Court Judge: the tenant must wrongfully refuse to go out of possession, and it must appear to the Judge that the case is clearly one coming under the purview of the Act. It is only the proceedings and evidence before the Judge, set up pursuant to the certiorari, at which the High Court may look for the purpose of determining what is to be decided under s. 6 of the Act. Where there was nothing in the evidence to show that the enants had violated the provision of the lease for breach of which the landlord claimed the right to re-enter, the Court set aside the order of the County Court Judge commanding the sheriff to place the landlord in possession. Per Boyd, C .: - The whole proceeding was nugatory from the outset for the want of a proper notice specifying the breach complained of, as required by s. 13 of the Landlord and Tenants Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 170, which is applicable to summary proceedings under the Overholding Tenants Act.

Re Snure and Davis, 4 O.L.R. 82 (Div. Ct.).

Overholding tenant — Forcible entry—Costs.]—In an ar action brought by plaintiff against defendant, claiming damages for forcibly and unlawfully entering the premises occupied by plaintiff, as tenant of defendant, and ejecting plaintiff therefrom, the trial Judge found that although defendant had technically violated plaintiff's right of possession, plaintiff was retaining possession in violation of good faith, and that her evidence as to the circumstances and manner of her removal was untrue:—Held, that the trial Judge was justified (following Rice v. Ditmars, 21 N.S.R. 140), in depriving plaintiff of costs.

Beaudry v. Hannigan, Q.R. 23 S.C. 232 (Cir. Ct.). overruling judgment of Langelier, J. (19 S.C. 421), who decided the contrary on an inscription en droit in the same cause.

-Lease-Short Forms Act-Covenant not to assign-Breach-Right of entry.]-The right of re-entry under the Act respecting Short Forms of Lease applies to the breach of a negative as well as of an affirmative covenant, so that there is a right of re-entry for breach of the covenant not to assign or sub-let without leave. Toronto General Hospital v. Denham (1880), 31 C.P. 207, followed. The making of an agreement for the assignment of a lease, the settlement of the terms thereof and the taking of possession by the assignee, constitute sufficient evidence of the breach of such covenant; the fact of the document showing the transfer not having been made until after action brought is immaterial.

- Agent to collect rents - Cancelling lease.]--In an action to recover rent in the St. John City Court defendant set up that plaintiff's husband agreed to cancel the lease and relieve defendant from a date prior to the period for which the rent was claimed. Plaintiff alleged that her husband had no authority to do this, though he was authorized to collect rents and make repairs. The magistrate found for the plaintiff. On review before the St. John County Court Judge the latter reversed the verdict:-Held, on motion to make absolute a rule nisi to quash the review order on certiorari that there was no evidence of authority to the husband to make the agreement alleged; and that, even if there were any evidence, the magistrate must be taken to have found against it, and that the review Judge should not have disturbed the judgment. Rule absolute to quash with directions to the review Judge to dismiss the review with costs.

Per Britton, J., that whether s. 6 is exclusive or not, it at least amply protects the tenant's rights, and that the applicant was not entitled to relief either under that section or under the general jurisdiction of the Court. -Expiry of lease-Continuation of possession by tenant-Special agreement-Tenancy at will.]-Although payment of rent in aliquot proportions of a year is the leading circumstance which turns tenancies for uncertain terms into tenancies from year to year, yet such payment does not create the tenancy, but is only evidence from which the Court or jury may find the fact:-Held, therefore, in this case where the landlord, before he accepted any rent after expiry of a lease, told the tenants that he would not consent to any tenancy from year to year, but that they should remain as they were on expiry of the lease, to which they assented, that the parties were not tenants from year to year, but tenants at will, although rent continued to be paid as under the lease. Tenants who, on expiry of lease, are permitted to continue in possession pending a treaty for a further lease, are not tenants from year to year, but tenants at will.

The landlord, under such circumstances, cannot before the expiration of the lease claim damages for deterioration in the value of the premises caused by the occupancy of the tenant.

Amiot v. Bonin, Q.R. 23 S.C. 42 (Cir. Ct.).

-Portion of leased premises used for immoral purposes to the knowledge of the lessor's auteur-Action to resiliate lease.] -The fact that the lessor's auteur, who was also the manager of the company appellant, was aware, during several years, that a portion of the leased premises was being used for immoral purposes, and that he acquiesced therein, does not deprive the purchaser and transferee of such premises of the right to demand the resiliation of the lease on the ground of such immoral use of premises. Such knowledge can only affect the question of costs.

-Overholding Tenants Act. R.S.N.S. 1900. c. 174-Statute of Frauds-Oral letting.]-An application was made by the original lessee for a writ of possession against a tenant, the lessee alleging that the tenant continued to occupy under a verbal agreement, sub-letting to him for one year which year had expired. The tenant alleged that the agreement to sub-let covered the whole period of three years granted by the landlord to the original lessee. There being a bona fide dispute as to the duration of the term for which the premises were sub-let, and the parties being equally reputable the Judge held that the applicant had failed to establish that the tenant was wrongfully holding possession and a writ of possession was refused: Re Myers v. Murrans, 40 C.L.J. 317, and also, in addition to the cases there cited, Moore v. Gillies, 28 O.R. 358. It was also contended on behalf of the applicant that even if the version of the tenant were accepted it appeared from such version that the oral agreement for the sub-letting for three years was made in January, 1902, and was for a term to begin in the following May and cover a period of three years from May, 1902, and was therefore void under the Statute of Frauds:—Held, following Hodson v. Heuland, 2 Ch. D. (1896), 428, that the continuance in possession after the parol agreement was a part performance of the contract sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds.

McColl v. Boreham, 40 C.L.J. 399 (Wallace, Co.J.).

—Summary ejectment—Tenancy at will—Contract of purchase.]—W. went into possession of a lot of land under an instrument in writing whereby it was agreed that the purchase money was to be paid in four equal instalments in six, twelve, eighteen and twenty-four months. It was also agreed that W. was to be tenant at will, and that he should remain in possession until default in the payment of any of the instalments—Held, that W. was not a tenant at will, or a tenant for a fixed term so as to be subject to the provisions of the Summary Ejectment Act, Consoldated Statutes, c. S3, or amending Acts.

Winslow v. Nugent, 36 N.B.R. 356.

— Overholding Tenants Act—Notice of hearing—Affidavit—Waiver.]—On an application under the Overholding Tenants Act of Ontario by a landlord for possession, a copy of the affidavit filed on the application was not served on the tenant as directed by s. 4 of the Act. Counsel appeared for the tenant on the return of the application and took this objection, and the application was adjourned to enable a copy of the affidavit to be served After such service the application was proceeded with and counsel for the tenant examined and cross-examined witnesses and argued the case, when an order for possession was made:—Held, that the failure to serve a copy of the affidavit was an irregularity, which could be and had been waived, and prohibition against the enforcement of the order for possession was refused.

-Overholding tenant-Colour of right -Summary proceedings. |-In answer to a summary proceeding under the Landlords and Tenants Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 93, to recover possession of the premises in question, which were held under a written lease creating a tenancy from week to week, the tenant gave evidence tending to show that agents of the landlords had. prior to and at the time of the execution of the lease, agreed and promised verbally that the tenant would not be required to give up possession until the landlords would build on the land. This was denied by one of the agents and the tenant admitted that said agent had refused to put such a term in the lease, although requested to do so:-Held, that the alleged promise, if proved, was of too indefinite a character to support the contention of the tenant that he was not holding over without colour of right. Price v. Guinane (1889), 16 O.R. 264; Gilbert v. Doyle (1874), 24 U.C.C.P. 71, and Wright v. Mattison (1855), 59 U.S.R. 50, followed.

(2) A notice to quit signed by one of two owners of the property with the approval of the other, such approval being known to the tenant, will be sufficient, although not expressed to be on behalf of any one except the person giving it. (3) To put an end to a tenancy at the end of May, a notice served on the 30th April is good, although it be erron-eously dated 1st May. (4) A notice to quit on or before the anniversary of the commencement of the tenancy is good; Sidebotham v. -Overholding tenant-Summary proceedings to evict-Forfeiture for breach of covenant.]-This was an application by way of summary proceedings under ss. 11-17 of the Landlords and Tenants Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 93, as amended by 3 and 4 Edw. VII., c. 29, ss. 1, 2, to recover possession of a hall let to defendants for five years, from 1st November, 1901, at a rent-al of $15 per month. The lease was in writing under seal, and the lessees by it covenanted that they would not permit the hall to be used for the purpose of dancing, except to lodges renting the hall, and that any breach of that covenant should at once at the option of the lessor operate as a forfeiture of the lease. The lessees having rented the hall to five young men not connected with any lodge, for the holding of a dance, the lessor gave them a notice declaring the lease to be forfeited and demanded possession:-Held, following Moore v. Gillies (1897), 28 O.R. 358, that, under the statute as amended, the Judge can now try the right of the tenant to hold over, and that defendants had forfeited the lease, and that a writ of possession should be issued in the landlord's

-Overholding Tenants Act-Negotiation for new tenancy-Failure to agree-Tenancy at will-Notice to quit-Demand of possession.]-Upon a review of proceedings taken under the Overholding Tenants Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 171:-Held, that the evidence sustained the finding of the County Court Judge that no complete agreement for a new lease was ever made, but that the tenant held over expecting that an agreement would be arrived at. The tenant, overholding after the 1st March, did so with the consent of the landlord, pending negotiations. When the negotiations came to an end, the landlord, on the 19th March, served a notice requiring the tenant to give up possession on the 23rd March. Upon the tenant's failure to give up possession on that day, the landlord took proceedings under the Act without any further demand of possession:-Held, that the tenant was, after the 1st March, a tenant at will; the notice had the effect of extending his right of occupation till the 23rd March; and a demand of possession after that date was necessary to give the County Court Judge jurisdiction under s. 3 of the Act. -Disturbance of lessee by trespass of third party.]—(1) The cutting of hay, and hunting, upon leased property, by a third party not pretending to have any right upon the property leased, but merely asserting that the land on which he cut hay and hunted was not part of the property leased, is not a trouble de droit, but a mere trespass, against which, in the terms of Art. 1616 C.C., the lessor is not obliged to warrant the lessee. (2) The pretension of a third party that he had acquired a right by prescription to cut hay on the leased property, which pretension was never brought to the notice of the Crown lessor, by a legal proceeding or otherwise, and which was manifestly untenable as regards property of the Crown. would not constitute a trouble de droit under Art. 1616 C.C.

Fitzpatrick v. Lavallée, 25 Que. S.C. 298 (C.R.).

-Surrender of lease-Forfeiture of lease for breach of covenant-Eviction by notice.]-The plaintiff was a tenant to defendant of a farm under a lease for three years dated in March, 1903. The lease contained a covenant by plaintiff to buy three horses from defendant and to pay for them by breaking and clearing of stone on the farm at a price per acre and in default, to pay in cash at the time of threshing. About the first day of December following, plaintiff and defendant met and discussed terms on which plaintiff would abandon the lease and give up possession of the premises. Plaintiff told defendant that he was embarrassed financially, and that, unless defendant would agree to guarantee the wages of the men for the next year's work and the store bills to be paid, he would be unable to go on with the working of the farm under the lease. The defendant seemed to be anxious to assist the plaintiff in this respect, and offered to guarantee the store bills up to $125, but refused to guarantee the men's wages. Negotiations having failed, defendant then told plaintiff that be would cancel the lease for non-fulfilment of some of the covenants. The plaintiff said he wanted that in writing, and the next morning defendant gave plaintiff the following written notice: "Take notice that I have this day cancelled lease of my farm to you on the grounds of non-fulfilment of terms of said lease." On the same day the plaintiff vacated the premises, after selling to defendant some oats, barley and feed he had there. Defendant resumed possession at once. A few days afterwards plaintiff came back and sold to defendant his poultry and then left the farm altogether:-Held, that there had been no surrender of the lease and that defendant was liable in damages as for an eviction of the plaintiff. Defendant also claimed that he was entitled to terminate the lease for breach of the covenant referred to. As to this, it appeared that plaintiff had done some of the work stipulated for and that there was a dispute over their accounts, but that at all events there was not more than about $38 due on the horses. Held, that there was not such a clear breach of the covenant as to entitle the defendant to declare the lease forfeited on that ground.

Watson v. Moggey, 15 Man. R. 241 (Dubue, C.J., and Kichards, J.).

-Notice to quit-Waiver.]-A lease at a yearly rent, payable in even portions, in advance, on the first day of each and every month, contained a provision entitling the landlord to give the tenant three months' notice to quit in case the landlord received an offer to purchase which he was willing to accept. On the 22nd August the landlord gave the tenant notice to quit three months thereafter. On the 2nd of November the applicant, the original landlord's successor in title, accepted the rent due in advance the previous day, for the whole of the month of November, though the time limited by the notice to quit would expire on the 22nd November:-Held, that the notice to quit was waived. also, that the acceptance on December 3rd of a cheque for that month's rent, although it was not presented for payment, would also be a waiver. A notice to quit in pursuance of such a special provision may be given for any broken period of the term, and need not expire at the end of a month of the tenancy.

-Overholding Tenants Act-Alterations in lease-Summary adjudication.]-Under the Overholding Tenants Act, as now amended, R.S.O. 1897, c. 171, it is the duty of the Judge upon an application for possession if he is satisfied that the case made out by the landlord is a clear one upon both the facts and the law, to exercise the summary power conferred upon him; but if his conclusion is that the case is a doubtful one either upon the facts or the law then he should leave the parties to proceed in the ordinary course to determine the matters in dispute between them. In such proceedings the Judge has power to determine summarily such a question as the validity of alterations appearing in the copy of the lease in question produced by the tenant although there is a direct conflict of testimony as to the time when and the person by whom the alterations were made.

-Holding over-Increased rent.] - When a tenant holds over after the expiration of

In such a case the tenant was notified in writing within a month that the rent would be increased, after another month, and paid two months' rent at the increased rate without objection:-Held, that she was liable for rent at such increased rate for the remaining months of her occupancy, without deciding whether a new tenancy from year to year had been created or not.

Lander v. Hammond, 8 Que. P.R. 408 (Loranger, J.).

-Tenancy for eleven months at a yearly rate-Monthly payments of rent-Notice to quit.]-Respondents became tenants of the appellant for a period of eleven months for which they were to pay rent "at the rate of $400.00 per year." They paid the rent monthly. After the expiration of the term they continued in possession paying monthly rent. On 9th March, 1896, they gave appellant notice that they would quit the premises on the 30th April following. They paid rent up to that date, when they quit the premises in pursuance of their notice. No arrangement was made as to terms upon which respondents were to continue after the expiry of the term. The action was brought for $66.66 rent for the months of May and June:-Held, affirming the judgment of Rouleau, J., that the tenancy was a tenancy from month to month and was properly terminated by the notice to quit. Held, that the matter in question related "to the taking of an annual or other rent," and that consequently an appeal lay without leave.

Eastman v. Richards, 3 Terr. L.R. 73.

-Forfeiture of lease-Relief against nonpayment of rent excused by oral assurance.]-Plaintiff, as lessee, and defendant, as lessor, on the 1st of January, 1906, entered into a lease for a term of five years, at a rental of $70 per month, in advance, with a proviso for forfeiture and re-entry after 15 days' default in payment of rent, together with an exclusive option of purchase on terms named. Plaintiff being absent in December, 1906, and up to the 23rd of January, 1907, inadvertently allowed the rent for January to fall in arrear, but on the latter date, tendered defendant, through her solicitor, she herself being inaccessible, the rent for January and February, and also offered to defray any costs incurred. Defendant had in the meantime, through her bailiff, taken and re-There was evidence tained possession. of an oral arrangement that in the event of the plaintiff's absence at any time the forfeiture clause for non-payment in advance would not be enforced:-Held, following Newbolt v. Bingham (1895), 72 L.T.N.S. 852, that, no third party interests having intervened, plaintiff was entitled to relief against forfeiture, both as to the term and the option, and that, the case coming within Rule 976 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1906, plaintiff should also get the costs of the action.

Huntting v. MacAdam, 13 B.C.R. 426.

-Unregistered assignment of lease-Land Titles Act.]-In an action against the landlord by the assignee of a lease under the Land Titles Act, 1894, duly registered, to recover possession of the premises upon which the landlord had re-entered for default in the payment of rent:-Held, 1. That the fact that the assignment was not registered was no bar to the action, 2. That the original lessee was not a necessary party. 3. That the lessee was entitled to relief without the issue of a writ of ejectment upon payment of the rent due, but that the plaintiff, although he tendered all the rent due before action, should bear the costs of it, except in so far as these were increased by the defendant's resistance to the claim. The plaintiff had sub-let the lands, the sub-lease providing for re-entry in the event of the sub-lessee permitting an execution to be levied against his goods. This event had happened and the plaintiff had distrained through the sheriff, who was in possession under a writ of attachment and writs of execution when the defendant re-entered Held, that the plaintiff's distress and the bringing of this action showed that the Tucker v. Armour, 6 Terr. L.R. 388.

-Covenant by lessees not to sublet without leave-Breach.]-A lease of land for five years, made pursuant to the Act, respecting short forms of leases contained a covenant by the lessees not to assign or sub-let without leave, and a covenant by the lessor for renewal, provided that the lessees should have duly kept and performed all the covenants, etc., and have given six months' notice that they required a further term. While the lease was current it was assigned by the lessees to the two defendants, who were partners, with the written consent of the lessor, and before the expiry of the lease one of the defendants, by deed, without the leave of the lessor assigned all his interest in the lease to his co-defendant, and surrendered to him possession of the demised premises, of which he had since been in exclusive occupation:-Held, that the execution of this deed, followed by the change of possession, constituted a breach of the coven ant of the lessees not to assign or sub-let. for which the lessor was entitled to enter, and had the effect of putting an end to the right to a renewal provided for by the lease.

Fitzgerald v. Barbour, 17 O.L.R. 254, affirmed on appeal, Loveless v. Fitzgerald, 42 Can. S.C.R. 254.

—Default in payment of rent—Provise for re-entry—Forfeiture—Distress.]—A plea in an action of trespass by a tenant against his landlord alleging that it became lawful under a provise in the lease for the landlord to re-enter for non-payment of rent, without setting out the provise, is bad on demurrer, as stating a conclusion of law. A landlord can not, during the currency of the lease and before the expiration of the term, re-enter for non-payment of rent for which he has distrained on goods and chattels still held by him under the distress.

Whittaker v. Goggin, 38 N.B.R. 378.

—Prohibition of sub-letting—Effect of violation.)—Where a lease prohibits sub-letting a sub-lease by the lessee does not of itself effect resiliation; it has the effect of a resolutory condition and affords ground for application to the Court for resiliation which, in its discretion the Court may grant or may refuse it if the lessor has no longer the interest on the strength of which he applied, for example, if the sub-lease had ceased to exist before the application was made.

Brunel v. Goldwater, Q.R. 33 S.C. 240 (Sup. Ct.).

- Non-payment of rent-Resiliation.] - Failure to pay one gale of rent is ground for an action by the lessor for resiliation of the lease. The lessor who sues for resiliation may recover from the lessee, as damages, the amount of the rent, which would accrue during the remainder of the term under the resiliated lease subject to the obligation to account for rents received by a new tenancy during such period.

Guardian Assur. Co. v. Humphrey, Q.R. 33 S.C. 393 (Ct. Rev.).

-Conditions of lease-Breach-Resiliation.]-The lessor who has covenanted in his lease not to make any alteration in the premises without the express permission in writing of the lessor affords ground for the latter to demand resiliation. (1) By installing a machine heated and operated by gas through an electric motor which causes vibration. (2) By making an opening in the roof for the insertion of an escape pipe which has the effect (the roof being double) of raising the temperature in winter in the intermediate space and causing ice to form on the outer roof. (3) By increasing the risk of fire and thereby making greater the cost of insurance. The lessee cannot invoke in such case the clause of the lease by which he is obliged to pay this extra insurance; the additional risk of fire alone is a sufficient ground for resiliation.

Valois v. Marceau, Q.R. 17 K.B. 31.

—Resiliation—Tacit renewal.]—There cannot be a tacit renewal of a lease resiliated by a judicial decree. It is of no avail for the lessor claiming it to allege that the judgment was rendered by error and that he abandoned it as soon as he was informed of it. It has caused a modification of the judicial relations between the lesse and the lessor which the latter cannot sweep away by the mere expression of his will

Wallace v. Honan, Q.R. 17 K.B. 289.

—Prohibition to sub-let — Action to rescind.]—Knowledge by a lessor during several months that the leased premises are sub-let in violation of a prohibitive clause, is no bar to an action brought by him against the lessee to have the lease rescinded for such violation.

Venner v. Thienel, 36 Que. S.C. 223.

—Lease—Use of premises—Resiliation.] —
The obligation of a lessee to use the leased premises for the purposes indicated is violated by one who, having leased a building to be used as a lodging and boarding house ceases its use for the latter purpose to carry on that business in another building two hundred feet away. The lessor, in such case, can demand the resiliation of the lease and damages from the lessee.

Caron v. Lamarche, Q.R. 17 K.B. 495.

-Provision against sub-letting - Written consent of lessor-Verbal authority.] - A provision in a lease against sub-letting without the written consent of the lessor is not de rigueur so as to prevent the lessor pleading a verbal consent to an action to resiliate the lease for breach of this provision brought by an assignee of the lessor. Oral evidence by the lessor of such consent prior to the sale of the immovable to the plaintiff, coupled with the implied consent of the latter to the sublease resulting from the fact that he was aware of it for several months without taking action is sufficient. Legal Professions Act—Power to make rules—Call to the bar.]—Under section 37 (g) of the Legal Professions Act, the benchers of the Law Society, having been empowered to make rules governing "the fees to be paid to the society upon call to the bar . . . ," passed a rule, 103, directing that "the following fees shall be paiding that "the following fees shall be paiding that "the following fees shall be paiding that the feet of the feet to the Society .*. . on examination for call to the bar, $100. In the event of an unsuccessful examination $75 will be returned;" and, Rule 60, "the prescribed fees must accompany the notice." Plaintiff was entitled to apply for call under section 41 of the statute, "upon passing such examination . . . and upon payment of the prescribed fees." He gave notice and presented a petition for call, but declined to pay at that time the fee prescribed. Held, (Irving, J.A., dissenting), that "call to the bar includes all the preliminary proceedings and steps connected therewith, such as payment of the fee, the examination and compliance with other proper requirements of the Act and Rules; that when the Society imposed by Rule 103 a fee of $100 upon call to the bar, they intended to impose the fee authorized by section 37, and were entitled to insist upon payment of that fee before entering upon the expense to be incurred by calling the applicant to the bar. The rider to Rule 103, providing for the return of $75 to an unsuccessful applicant is separable from the part prescribing the fee.

LIBEL.

Privilege-Notary-Objections after verdict-New trial.]-H., to qualify as candidate in a municipal election procured from a friend a deed of land giving him a contrelettre under which he collected the revenues. Having sworn that he was owner of real estate to the value of $2,000 (that described in the deed), B. in his newspaper accused him of perjury and he took action against B. for libel. On the trial the deed to H. was produced, and the existence of the contre-lettre proved, but the notary having the custody of both documents refused to produce the latter, claiming privi-lege on the ground that it was a con-fidential document. The trial Judge main-tained this claim, but oral evidence was admitted proving to some extent what the contre-lettre contained. A verdict having been given in favour of H.:—Held, that the trial Judge erred in ruling that the notary was not obliged to produce the contre-lettre, as it was impossible without its production to determine what, if any, limitations it placed upon the deed, and there should be a new trial. B. in his newspaper article also accused H. of having been drunk during the election, and the Judge, in charging the jury, said:—"You should consider the case as if the charge of drunkenness had been made against yourselves, your brother or your friend." Held, that this was calculated to mislead the jury and was also a reason for granting a new trial. If objection to one or more portions of the Judge's charge is not presented until after the jury have rendered their verdict, the losing party cannot demand a new trial as of right, but in such case an appellate Court, to prevent a miscarriage of justice, may order a new trial as a matter of discretion.

-Security for costs-Action against newspaper-Criminal charge.]—Motion by defendants for security for costs in a libel action:—Held, that on the face of the publication complained of, there was nothing that would suggest a criminal charge. To allege that a bench warrant was applied for to bring plaintiff before a magistrate, but refused, cannot be said to impute a criminal offence to plaintiff. Order for security granted.

Titchmarsh v. The World, 1 O.W.N. 454,

15 O.W.R. 362.

-Particulars of malice.]-When the defendant has pleaded privilege, in an action for libel, and anticipates that plaintiff will endeavour to prove malice to rebut the privilege he is not entitled to an order requiring the plaintiff to furnish particulars of express malice charged by the plaintiff against the defendant as affecting the publication complained of. When the defendent has not pleaded justification in an action for libel, he is not entitled to admin ster interrogatories asking the plaint if if he did certain acts with a view to showing that the statements in the alleged libel were true.

Timmons v. National Life Assurance Co.,

19 Man. R. 227.

-Proof of malice to rebut defence of privilege.]-1. At the trial of a libel action where the truth of the libel was not in issue, evidence showing that the statements complained of were false to the knowledge of the defendant was properly admitted for the purpose of showing malice in the defendant and rebutting the defence of privilege. 2. A new trial will not be granted because the trial Judge in his charge to the jury commented strongly upon the facts adduced to show such falsity, on the ground that the jury was thereby misled as to the issue to be tried, if it appears that in the same charge he clearly pointed out for what purpose the evidence was allowed in and that the falsity of the statements was only to be considered as an element in the consideration of the guestion of malice. 3. Neither should a new trial be ordered because of references in the charge to the plaintiff that were "calculated to secure for him the good-will of the jury" and to the defendant that were "uncomplimentary and calculated to prejudice him in the regard of the jury" when the amount of the verdict was only $400 and the evidence seemed to warrant such references, because it did not clearly appear that any substantial wrong or miscarriage of justice had been occasioned by the use of the expressions complained of.

Schaefer v. Schwab, 19 Man. R. 212.

-Criminal libel-Indictment.]-An indictment for defamatory libel is good which purports to set out only the tenor and effect of the alleged libel, but in fact sets out the exact words. Such an indictment following the statutory form, Criminal Code, form 64 h, need not state that the words were likely to injure the reputa-tions of the persons alleged to be defamed by exposing them to hatred, contempt or ridicule, or that they were designed to insult such persons. The following article published in a newspaper, taken in connection with the character of the paper and surrounding circumstances, was held to be sufficient to support a verdict of circulating obscene printed matter tending to corrupt morals within s. 207 (a) of the Criminal Code: "What married woman lets the young man in through the side window when her husband is attending lodge meeting?" "Who is the married woman who went to Saint John last Saturday with an I. C. R. clerk and stopped at the hotel as clerk's wife?"

LIBEL.

-Libel-Election contest-Withdrawal of candidate-Allegation of improper motives.] -K. was a member of the House of Commons prior to the election in 1908 and in August of that year a letter was published in the Sydney Post which contained the following, which referred to him:-"The doctor had a great deal to say of the elections in 1904. Well, I have some recollections of that contest myself, and I ask the Doctor: Why did you at that time withdraw your name from the Liberal convention? The majority of the delegates came there determined to see you nominated? Why aid you not accede to their request? Doctor Kendall, what was your price? Did you get it? Take the good Liberals of this country into your confidence and tell them what happened in those two awful hours in a certain room in the Sydney Hotel that day? The proceedings of the convention were held up for no reason that the delegates saw, but for reasons which are very well known to you and three or four others whom I might mention. One speaker after another killed time at the Alexandria Hall while you were in dread conflict with the machine. Finally the consideration was fixed and you took off your coat and shouted for Johnston. What was that consideration?" On the trial of an action by K. against the proprietors of the Post the jury gave a verdict for the defendants:-Held, that the publication could only be construed as charging K. with having withdrawn his name from the convention for personal profit, and was libellous. The verdict was therefore properly set aside by the Court below and a new trial ordered.

Sydney Post Publishing Co. v. Kendall,

43 Can. S.C.R. 461.

-Animus-Evidence-Proof of handwriting.]-1. At a trial for criminal libel where the matter complained of was libellous per se, the prosecution should not be allowed to give evidence of acts of hostility on the part of the accused towards the prosecutor or relatives unconnected with the alleged libel, for the purpose of leading to the inference that the accused cherished feelings of ill-will towards the prosecutor and was therefore likely to have been the person who published the libel; and, if such evidence has been admitted, although without objection, the jury should be told that they should give no weight to it. 2. A comparison of style and common forms of expression in the libellous and admitted writings should be by experts or skilled witnesses and, without such evidence, the trial Judge should not invite the jury to draw any inference from similarity in style or expressions. Scott v. Crerar (1886), 14 A.R. 152, followed. Per Perdue, J.A.:—When the only evidence of the handwriting of the accused is that of experts, and where the experts called by the pro-secutor are contradicted by an equal number of experts called by the defence, the accused denying the authorship on oath, the jury should be told that the prosecutor had failed to establish that the letters had been written by her.

Rex v. Law, 19 Man. R. 259, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 382.

-Articles in newspaper-Joint damages asked by husband and wife.]-1. In an action for libel against a newspaper, it is not sufficient to give the purport of the articles which plaintiff alleges to be libellous; but defendant is entitled to know in which articles of the paper the alleged libel appeared. 2. If husband and wife claim a fixed amount of damages caused by a libel, the defendant is entitled to know how much damage was suffered by the male plaintiff, how much by the female plaintiff and how much is claimed by each of them. Patron v. "La Vigie," 11 Que. P.R. 268.

-Discovery-Person libelled not named-Examination of defendant.]-In an action for a libel said to be contained in a letter written by the defendant to the husband of the plaintiff, the defendant, on being examined for discovery, admitted the authorship of the letter, but refused to answer questions directed to finding out who the person referred to in the letter as "lady friend" was-the plaintiff not being named in the letter. The defendant in his statement of defence denied all the allegations of the statement of claim, and said that, if the words were written and published of and concerning the plaintiff, as alleged, it was without malice and upon a privileged occasion:-Held, that the defendant should answer the questions; the alleged libel having made a reference that could only be understood having regard to extraneous circumstances, the questions were relevant to show that the plaintiff was the person who would be understood by her associates or persons acquainted with the circumstances, to have been referred to; and the questions were also relevant upon the issue as to malice raised by the defence of privilege.

-Statement of defence - Newspaper Mistake.] — In an action for libel, the words complained of were the concluding words of a newspaper article referring to the plaintiff and speaking of his conduct and conviction with H., "the notorious London promotor." It was said that the word "conviction" was a misprint for "connection." The defendant pleaded that the article was one of considerable length, and contained many statements concerning the plaintiff, all of which, except that expressly complained of in this action, were true in substance and in fact, and but for the mistake the whole of the article would have been true in substance and in fact, and such mistake was made without any milicious motive or intent. The Master in Chambers ordered this paragraph to be struck out with leave to the defendants to amend by substituting such allegations as might be proper to set out the alleged mistake:-Held, that the order was right, and the pleading bad whether regarded as in mitigation of damages or in any other view. Beaton v. Intelligencer Printing and Publishing Co., 22 A.R. 97, distinguished. Kelly v. Ross, 1 O.W.N. 142.

-Libel and slander - Newspaper - Pleading - Security for costs.]-The defendants were the publishers of a newspaper, in which an article appeared, headed "A Girl's Confession," stating that "a young lady of Walkerton claims she had a hand in the shooting of the Chinaman." The "young lady" was not named in the article, but was spoken as a constant visitor at the Chinaman's laundry, and on intimate terms with the Chinaman, and it was said that her visits became "odorous." The plaintiff, a young girl, alleging that the article re-ferred to her, sued for defamation. In the um. the ssue prififth paragraph of her statement of claim she set out the article with an innuendo that she had been guilty of attempt to murder and was an immoral person. the 6th paragraph she alleged that her name was given to a detective by the defendants as the person referred to in the article:-Held, that paragraph 6 did not aid claim for libel, but was in itself a count for slander, and could not be struck out, nor could the defendants have security for costs in respect of that paragraph, as the Act 9 Edw. VII. c. 40, s. 12, sub-s. 2, does not apply to slander by the publishers of a newspaper. The statute is one passed for the benefit of a class, and those invoking it must comply strictly with the practice. An affidavit made by one of the defendants, not filed upon the original motion, was not allowed to be read upon an appeal. Upon a motion for security for costs the defendants must show the nature of the defence. When they allege good faith, they must show the facts surrounding the publication, as that their good faith may be ascertained. It is not enough for the defendants to say that there was reasonable ground for their belief that the publication was for the public benefit-they must say why they thought so.

Criminal libel - Acquittal-Subsequent action for costs-Taxation.]-Plaintiff had been prosecuted by defendant in a criminal Court for defamatory libel and acquitted. No demand was made when the verdict was given for a condemnation of defendant for costs, but plaintiff afterwards sought to recover them by action. After hearing the cause in the Superior Court the presiding Judge discharged the déli-béré to enable the plaintiff to have his costs taxed before the Judge who presided at the criminal trial, which was done, and the cause was reheard:-Held, that plaintiff could claim his costs and disbursements from defendant by an ordinary action though he had not asked for a condemnation against defendant therefor at the time of the verdict. That the Judge who presided at the criminal trial could. even after proceedings in such action, tax such costs and disbursements.

Mackenzie v. Cunningham, 8 B.C.R. 206.

- "Blackmailing" - Innuendo - Onus of proof-Contradictory evidence-Nonsuit.1 -The word "blackmailing" is libellous per se requiring no innuendo, and it does not lie upon the plaintiff to prove the falsity of the charge. For the purposes of the trial it is presumed in his favour, and the onus is on the defendant to prove it to be true if justification is pleaded. Semble, per Boyd, C .: - The better view is that colloquial use has broadened the meaning of the word so that it may not have a eriminal connotation. In an action for two libels where the words used in one were not libellous per se and were not, fairly taken, capable of the meaning alleged in the innuendo:-Held, that the trial Judge was right who had, after motions made for a nonsuit both at the close of the plaintiff's case, and after all the evidence was in, on which he reserved judgment, given judgment dismissing the action after a verdict was rendered by the jury in favour of the plaintiff. But as to the other, where the truth of the charge was not admitted by the plaintiff or proved on uncontroverted evidence, and where the evidence as to the use of the word "blackmailing" was contradictory:-Held, that it was for the jury to pass upon the evidence, and the judgment dismissing the action on the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury should be set aside and the verdict of the jury in favour of the plaintiff restored. Judgment of Meredith, J., 32 O.R. 163, reversed in part by the Divisional Court.

Macdonald v. Mail Printing Co., 2 O.L.

-Privileged communication-Malice-Evidence.]-Plaintiff, who was local agent of a life insurance company, was dissatisfied with the remuneration he was receiving and decided to retire, and another agent was appointed to succeed him. Shortly afterwards defendant, who was general manager of the company, wrote to a policy holder, who was also a client of plaintiff's, stating that plaintiff had been "removed" from the agency, and that this was only done "because it was clearly necessary," and, adding, "I now find that he has collected money, which, up to the present time, we have been unable to get him to report." At the time the letter complained of was written it was untrue to the knowledge of defendant that plaintiff had been dismissed from his office as agent of the company, or that he had collected any of the moneys of the company for which he had been unable to get him to account:-Held, that the letter was clearly libellous, but that if it was written bona fide, to a policy holder in the company, even though the charges contained in it were false, and could not be justified, the occasion was privileged, and defendant would not be liable. On the trial, counsel for plaintiff asked the trial Judge to instruct the jury that if it was proved that defendant stated in the letter that which he knew to be false, it was evidence from which actual malice might be inferred. The learned trial Judge declined to do so, on the ground that the point was already sufficiently covered. Held, that the point upon which the trial Judge was asked to direct the jury involved a point material for their consideration, and that, as the learned Judge had not directed the jury as asked, there must be a new trial.

Miller v. Green, 33 N.S.R. 517.

-Privileged communication - Malice Charge to jury-Evidence.]-On the trial of an action claiming damages for a libet alleged to be contained in a privileged communication the Judge charged the jury as to privilege and added "if the defendant made the communication bona fide, believing it to be true, and the privilege existed that I have endeavoured to explain, then there would be no action against him:—Held, that plaintiff was entitled to a more explicit statement of the law on a point directly affecting the proof of an issue the burden of which was upon him. One portion of the communication containing the alleged libel might be read as importing a grave charge against the plaintiff or as an innocuous statement of fact. Held, that as to prove malice the writer's knowledge of the falsity of the fact was the material point the sense in which he may have used the words was the governing consideration. The Judge's charge was not open to objection for want of an explicit reference to pre-existing unfriendliness between the parties as proof of malice where the only evidence of unfriendliness consisted of hard things axid of the defendant by the plaintiff. Green v. Miller, 31 Can. S.C.R. 177.

-Discovery—Justification — Immorality— Disclosure of name of paramour.]-The defendants having in their newspaper charged the plaintiff with immorality, he sued them for libel, and the defendants pleaded that the charge was true. plaintiff having required particulars, the defendants set forth that he lived at a house of ill-fame; that he lived at a particular place in adultery; that a child was born to the woman with whom he lived; and that he brought to his house and kept with the members of his family woman who had lived in a house of ill-fame. The plaintiff, being examined for discovery, admitted that he had lived in adultery with a woman who had pre-viously lived in a house of ill-fame, and that she bore a child of which he was not the father, but denied the other allegations of the particulars:-Held, that the plaintiff was bound to disclose the name of the woman, although such disclosure might injure her.

Downey v. Stirton, 1 O.L.R. 186.

-Defamation-Privilege - Malice.] - A niece wrote to her aunt, with whom she was on terms of great intimacy and whom she was in the habit of staying with, a letter making, on the authority of a correspondent, statements derogatory to the character of a clergyman well known to niece and aunt, who was a frequent visitor at the aunt's house, and it was alleged on one side and denied on the other that in the letter, which had been destroyed, the niece told the aunt "to spread this about town at once: "-Held, that such a moral and social duty existed as made the communication a privileged one; and that though a direction to spread the statement about would be some evidence of malice, it should have been left to the jury to say whether the direction had been in fact given.

Fenton v. Macdonald, 1 O.L.R. 422 (C.

- Privilege-Interest - Publication to clerk.]-One of the defendants, the secretary of a trade association, prepared a statement for circulation among the members of the association, and gave it to a person whom he occasionally employed, with instructions to copy it. This statement contained an allegation that the plaintiff was unworthy of credit:-Held, that, as the publication to the members of the association would have been privileged, in the absence of malice, on the ground of interest, the publication to the copyist was also privileged, being a reasonable means employed to make the communication to the others. Lawless v. Anglo-Egyptian Cotton and Oil Co. (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 262, followed. Held, also, that the finding of the jury that "there was no ground of action" was in effect a finding that the words were not defamatory.

-Criminal libel-Suspended sentence -Breach of recognizance for good behaviour -Fresh libels.]-Where a person has been released from custody on a criminal charge upon entering into a recognizance with sureties to appear and receive judgment when called on, it is only on motion of the Crown that the recognizance can be estreated, and judgment moved against the offender. Where such a recognizance has been given in proceedings for libel, the publication of fresh libels against the prosecutor is no breach of good behaviour under such recognizance, for the defendant may have complete defences against such charges of libel, and the prosecutor must be left to his remedy by action or indictment.

-Publication-New trial.] - Defendant took a copy of an alleged libellous resolution to the editor of a newspaper who dictated it to his stenographer and handed defendant's copy back to her. Before the stenographer extended his notes another copy of the resolution was found in the office and from it the printer set up the type:—Held, reversing Irving, J., who dismissed the action on the ground that it was not shown that defendant was the cause of publication, that there should be a new trial.

Mackenzie v. Cunningham, 8 B.C.R. 36.

-General damages-Particulars.] - When in an action based on a libel plaintiff demands damages without indicating their nature the Court should presume that he asks for exemplary damages and will not order particulars to be furnished.

Gauvreau v. Chapais, 18 Que. S.C. 135 (S.C.).

-Justification-Particulars - Appeal -Res judicata.]-The libel originally complained of in the statement of claim stated that the plaintiff had been cashiered from the army for cheating at cards, and also that divorce proceedings had been taken against him. The defendants pleaded justification to the whole, and added two clauses to the same paragraph of their statement of defence, one of which related to the first charge and the other to the second. The first of these clauses was as follows: "The plaintiff was obliged to leave the army on the ground that he had cheated at cards, and stories of the peculiar character of the plaintiff's card playing and of his having been cashiered from the army for cheating at cards were in circulation in the city of Vancouver." The plaintiff applied for an order striking out both these added clauses, but the application was refused on the ground that the defendants were entitled to plead them as particulars of the defence of justification. There was no appeal from this order, but the plaintiff amended (by leave) by striking out so much of his complaint as related to the divorce proceedings, and the defendants then struck out of their defence the second clause, relating to the divorce proceedings. An application was then made to strike out the first clause, that relating to the plaintiff being cashiered from the army, and was refused by the Master and by a Judge in Chambers on appeal:-Held, per Falcon bridge, C.J., that the plaintiff was not prejudiced by the clause; and, moreover, approving Dodge v. Smith (1901), 1 O.L. R. 46, that a second appeal was not to be encouraged in a case of this kind. Per Street, J., that the matter of the second application was res judicata by the order made on the first application and not appealed against.

-Criminal libel-Costs-Depositions not used at trial-Abortive trial-Cr. Code, ss. 833 and 835.]-In a criminal libel action, defendant, in support of his plea of justification, obtained a commission and had the evidence of certain witnesses, out of the jurisdiction, taken, for use at the trial. The evidence was used at the first trial and the jury disagreed. At the second trial the jury again disagreed. At the third trial defendant was acquitted, but the evidence was not used owing to the private prosecutors giving evidence and admitting substantially what was stated by the witnesses in their depositions before the commissioner:-Held, that as the commission evidence was not put in by defendant as part of his case defendant should be deprived of the costs of it. Held, also, that defendant was not entitled to the costs of the abortive trials.

-N., after his acquittal in a criminal libel action, proceeded to tax his costs and moved before the trial Judge for certain costs, and on obtaining an order with which he was dissatisfied, abandoned the taxation and commenced a civil action against the prosecutors for his costs:—Held, by Irving, J., on a summons for a stay of proceedings, that plaintiff should not be allowed to pursue both remedies at once, but as in the other action there was no appeal he allowed this action to proceed on terms.

Nichol v. Pooley, 9 B.C.R. 21 (Irving, J.).

—Pleading — Defence — Fair comment—Absence of justification—Striking out defences.]—In an action for an alleged libel contained in an article in the defendants' newspaper, the defendants pleaded fair comment, but did not set out the facts upon which it was alleged the article was fair comment, or allege the truth thereof:—Held, that the defence was bad, and should be struck out.

-Libel in pleading-Right of action of person injured-Public policy.]-(1) The action against a party for a libellous statement in a judicial proceeding, is a matter concerning the relation of the subject to the administration of justice, and, as such, is governed in the Province of Quebec by the law of England. (2) Under the law of England, no damages can be recovered for injurious words, forming part of a judicial proceeding, pleaded in good faith, with probable cause and without malice, and which words are relevant to the issue, although they may be subsequently shown to be false and injurious Semble, an action for such injurious statements, instituted before the determination of the suit in which they were pleaded. is premature; but, in the present case, it was unnecessary to pronounce formally upon this point, the action being dismissed on other grounds.

-Pleading setting out whole article-Immaterial issue.]—The very words complained of in an action of defamation must be set out by the plaintiff, in order that the Court may judge whether they constitute a cause of action-it is not sufficient to give the substance or purport with innuendoes-it is sufficient to set out the libellous passages, provided nothing be omitted which qualifies or alters the sense, and as the libel itself must be produced at the trial, and the defendant is entitled to have the whole of it read:-Held, that the plaintiff was entitled in this action to set out in the statement of claim the whole article complained of. But, held, also, that certain words in another paragraph which tendered an issue not material but which might be embarrassing should be struck out. Hay v. Bingham, 5 O.L.R. 224 (Falcon-

-Privilege-Proof of malice-Admissibility of evidence-Misdirection.]-G., local manager for Nova Scotia of the Confederation Life Association, of which M. had been a local agent, wrote to Mrs. Freeman, a policy-holder, the following letter: "I think you know that at the time of my recent visit to Bridgetown, I relieved Mr. O. S. Miller of our local agency. As you and your husband have evidently taken a kindly interest in Mr. Miller, I might say to you without entering into details as to the causes which compelled me to take this action, an explanation of which would hardly be appropriate here, that we have tried for a considerable time past to get Mr. Miller to attend properly to our business, and that it was only because it was clearly necessary that the change was made. In order to give Mr. Miller an opportunity to get the benefit of commissions on as much outstanding business as I could, 'I left the attention of certain matters in Mr. Miller's hands on the understanding that he would attend to them and remit to me as our representative. I now find that he has collected money which up to the present time, we have been unable to get him to report, and I am told that he is doing and saying all he can against myself and the company. The receipt for your premium fell due May 30th, days of grace June 30th. If you have made settlement of the premium with Mr. Miller your policy will, of course, be maintained in force, and we shall look to him for the returns in due course; but I have thought that it would be part of the plan Mr. Miller at one time declared he would follow in order to cease as much of our business as possible, that he would allow your policy to lapse through inattention. As I have thought that you would not like to have it so I am prompted to write you this letter and shall be glad if you will advise us whether or not you have made settlement with Mr. Miller. If not, what is your wish in regard to continue the policy?" In an action for libel it was shown that he had not been dismissed from the agency, but wanted larger commissions in continuing, which were refused, and that he was not a de faulter, but was dilatory in making his returns. On the trial Mrs. Freeman gave evidence, subject to objection, of her understanding of the letter as imputing to M. a wrongful retention of money:-Held. that such evidence was improperly received and there was a miscarriage of justice by its admission. The Judge at the trial charged the jury that "if the meaning of the first part of the letter is that he dismissed the plaintiff, and you decide that he did not dismiss the plaintiff, and it was not a correct statement, that is malice beyond all doubt. The protection which he gets from the privileged occasion is all gone. He loses it entirely. The same way with the second part. If it is not true it is malicious and his protection is taken away." Held, that this was misdirection; that the question for the jury was not the truth or falsity of the statements, but whether or not, if false, the defendant honestly believed them to be true, so that it was misdirection on a vital point. The majority of the Court were of opinion, Girouard and Davies, JJ., contra, that as defendant had asked for a new trial only in the Court below, this Court could not order judgment to be entered for him, and a new trial was granted. Judgment of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia (Miller v. Green, 35 N.S. Rep. 117), reversed.

Green v. Miller, 33 Can. S.C.R. 193.

—Jurisdiction—Venue.]—An action based on a letter containing defamatory matter, sent from the district of Three Rivers to the address of a person living in the district of Arthabasea where it was received and read, may be brought in the latter district.

—Mercantile agency—Incomplete report of Court process—Privilege.]—In a mortgage foreclosure action, the Lion Brewery Co. as second mortgagees was joined as a party defendant, and a mercantile agency published in a notice or circular, distributed amongst its subscribers, that a writ had been issued against the Lion Brewery Co., claiming foreclosure of a mortgage and indicating by means of the words "ct al" that there were other defendants:—Held, in an action by the Lion Brewery Co. against the mercantile agency, that the publication was libellous and not privileged.

Lion Brewery Co., Ltd. v. The Bradstreet Co., 9 B.C.R. 435 (Irving, J.).

-Words of abuse-Natural signification-Innuendo.]-The defendant, a tax collector, having applied to the plaintiff for payment of certain taxes, was told by him that J. S. should pay them. He subsequent. ly wrote and mailed to the plaintiff a postal card, stating: "I saw J. S. this morning. He said make the S. B. pay it. In an action for libel, in which plaintiff claimed that "S. B." applied to him and meant "son of a bitch.":-Held, that there was no reasonable evidence to go to the jury that the letters conveyed the meaning attributed to them by the plaintiff; that in their natural signification they were not actionable, and that the plaintiff had failed to prove his innuendo. Major v. McGregor, 5 O.L.R. 81 (Britton, J.); affirmed 6 O.L.R. 528 (C.A.).

-Libel in newspaper-Failure to verify report-Retraction - Damages.]-Where a false report, implicating an entirely innocent person in the commission of a serious crime, has been published in a newspaper, not maliciously, but without any effort to verify the statements contained therein, the fact that the newspaper was about to go to press at the time the information was received is not a valid excuse for failure to investigate the truth of the charge; and the fact that subsequently a retractation and apology were published in the same journal, while it may be taken into consideration in the assessment of damages, is not a sufficient reparation for the wrong inflicted on an innocent person by a false accusation. The Court in such a case will award exemplary damages to an amount in proportion to the degree of negligence proved.

Auburn v. Berthiaume, 23 Que. S.C. 476 (Doherty, J.).

—Debtor disposing of property—Verdict for damages—Fraud.]—The plaintiff in an action of tort who has recovered a verdict, the entry whereon of judgment has been stayed, is not a creditor of the defendant, much less a judgment creditor, and is not entitled to have the defendant enjoined from disposing of his property, even where the plaintiff shows upon affidavit the intent of the defendant to defraud the plaintiff and to leave the country with the proceeds of the sale of property.

—Postal card — Threatening suit.]—One who, without malice, sends his debtor a postal card on which he gives the latter notice of his intention to sue unless the debt is paid is not liable in damages to the debtor even though third persons have seen the card.

L'Hemeux v. Heroux, Q.R. 25 S.C. 126 (Cir. Ct.).

-Libel in plea-Allegation of false representations-Probable cause.]-The denial in a plea that a fire occurred accidentally and from cause unknown, does not imply or insinuate that the assured criminally set the fire. Allegations in a plea by an insurance company, that the assured made false representations in his application for insurance, made false solemn declarations after the loss, as to the value of his stock, with fraudulent intent, and that in swearing to false exaggerated statements, the assured did not swear the truth and rendered himself guilty of fraud and his policy null, when pertinent to the issue, and pleaded in good faith and with probable cause, are not libellous or defamatory.

Morrison v. Western Assurance Company, 24 Que. S.C. 111 (Rochon, J.).

— Publication — Privilege—Dictating letter to stenographer.]—The manager of defendant company handed to his stenographer to be typewritten a draft letter written in the interest of the company, but unconnected with its ordinary business, which contained defamatory statements:—Held, on the authority of Pullman v. Hill & Co. [1891] 1 Q.B. 524, that privilege was taken away by the publication to the stenographer, and the defendant company was liable. Pullman v. Hill & Co., [1891] 1 Q.B. 524, commented on. Judgment of the Divisional Court, 5 O. L.R. 680, reversed.

Puterbaugh v. Gold Medal Furniture Manufacturing Co., 7 O.L.R. 582 (C.A.).

-Notice of Action-Labour unions-Malicious notices and statements issued by-Publication of.]-The statement of claim in an action alleged that defendants, the Toiler Publishing Co., and members of certain labour unions, wrongly and maliciously published and circulated hand bills, circulars and newspapers owned and controlled by them, describing the plaintiffs as unfair and their goods as unfair, and of inferior quality and manufactured by apprentices and incompetent workmen, and requesting, persuading and advising the friends of labour and the public generally, not to buy the plaintiffs' goods, and to break up their business, unless certain demands of the union were complied with. An order, made by a Judge in Chambers, dismissing the action for the omission to give notice of action, was set aside by the Divisional Court, and the action allowed to go on to trial when the question of such want of notice could be raised.

Gurney Foundry Co. v. Emmett, 7 O.L. R. 604 (D.C.).

-Newspaper article-Fair comment.] Defendants published on page 1 of their newspaper an article stating that some women from Seattle had been canvassing some time ago in Victoria for subscriptions for a bogus foundling institution and on being questioned by the police had left town; on page 8 of the same issue there was an article stating that two ladies for the past few days had been selling tickets for a recital by one Greenleaf and that the tickets were being sold "in a manner similar to those for a recital by a gentleman of the same name nearly two years ago which was ostensibly for the benefit of the Orphanage, but which the promoters were obliged to abandon." The manner of selling tickets was as a fact the same in both cases:-Held, that the article on page 1 did not necessarily refer to the plaintiff and that the article on page 8 was a fair comment on a matter of public interest and was true. Wiles v. Victoria Times, 11 B.C.R. 143 (Irving, J.).

-Criminal libel - Innuendo - Evidence -Extrinsic circumstances-Demand for particulars - Publication without knowledge.]-When an indictment for defamatory libel consisting of words, inoffensive in themselves, but capable, by irony, of being construed as a dishonourable imputation, contains, beyond the offensive words, an allegation of the sense in which they would be understood, the Crown may prove extrinsic circumstances which would cause such sense to be attached to the words. It is not necessary that these circumstances should be set forth in the indictment, and the accused is sufficiently protected from surprise by the right given to him to ask for particulars of the charge. In default of a demand for particulars he cannot object to such evidence and there would be no ground for a reserved case as to the legality of its admission. (2) In the case of a defamatory libel published in a newspaper, where the accused relies upon the plea, under s. 297 of the Criminal Code, that the publication of the libel was made without his knowledge, the Crown may make proof of the publication of former libels of the same kind by the same publisher, in order to fix upon the accused responsibility, in the terms of that section, for his persistency in continuing such publications in the conduct of the newspaper.

Rex v. Molleur, Q.R. 14 K.B. 556, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 8 and 16.

—Discovery—Examination of defendant— Answers tending to criminate—Witnesses and Evidence Act, s. 5.]—Upon the trial of an action for libel, section 5 of the Ontario Witnesses and Evidence Act, as now enacted by 4 Edw. VII. c. 10, s. 21, would be applicable, and the defendant would not be excused from answering proper questions because the answers might tend to criminate him; and Con. Rule 439 (1250) puts a party on his examination for discovery in the same position as he would be in if he were being examined as a witness at the trial, and he is, therefore, not excused from answering any question that is properly put to him, upon the ground that the answer to it may tend to criminate him, and if he objects to answer on that ground, his answer is within the protection of section 5. Regina v. Fox (1899), 18 P.R. 343, applied. Chambers v. Jaffray, 12 O.L.R. 377 may recover exemplary damages. Filiatrault v. "La Patrie," 28 Que. S.C. 380 (Curran, J.).

-Newspaper-Publication of matter contained in statutory declaration-Claim of privilege.]-The publication of libellous matter in a newspaper cannot be justified on the ground that it was published "as a matter of public news" or "in the bona fide belief that it is in the public interest that the matters referred to should be made public." Neither can the publication be justified on the ground that the matter complained of has been embodied in a statutory declaration made before a justice of the peace with the object of bringing the charges contained in the declaration before the municipal council having power to inquire into the charges made and to dismiss the official complained of. Under the heading of "Scott Act Inspector Accused of Bribery," the defendant company printed in their newspaper an item to the effect that M. had made a declaration before a justice of the peace accusing plaintiff, the county Can-ada Temperance Act inspector, of attempted bribery, and stating that, in the declaration referred to, it was alleged that plaintiff, on two different occasions, promised that he would not prosecute M. if the latter would give him a certain sum of money, which he refused to do. At the trial the statutory declaration referred to was tendered in evidence, on behalf of de-fendant, as evidence of bona fides, and was rejected by the trial Judge:-Held, that the evidence was rightly rejected, and that defendant's appeal must be dismissed with costs. Also, that the making of the statutory declaration before the magistrate was not a necessary preliminary to an inquiry into the conduct of plaintiff by the municipal council, and that defendant could not claim privilege in respect to the publication. Semble, per Graham, E.J., a communication addressed to the warden of the council, and sent to him, might have been considered privileged.

McDonald v. Sydney Post Publishing Co., 39 N.S.R. 81.

- Newspaper interview-Publication -Privilege.]-A defeated candidate in an interview with a newspaper reporter the day after an election informed him that the plaintiff (who was a political opponent and an active party worker) had as soon as it was known that he was in the field, come to and asked him to endorse a note for $1,000, which he refused to do. and had also later, in a speech, accused him of disloyalty. This was the libel complained of. The innuendo alleged was, that the plaintiff had offered his services and support as a bribe and had corruptly offered to desert his party and abandon his principles and support the defendant at the election if he would endorse his note; that his opposition to the defendant's candidature was not due to principle or party loyalty, but to the defendant's refusal to endorse the note; and that because of such refusal the plaintiff not only opposed his candidature, but attacked him personally and accused him of disloyalty. The interview was published and the defendant next day called at the newspaper office and the only thing he found fault with in the report was the omission of a few words in the introductory part. At the trial the Judge allowed the case to go to the jury, who found a verdict in favour of the plaintiff:-Held, that there was evidence that the defendant knew he was speaking for publication and that he authorized what he said to ba published in a newspaper; and that communication was not privileged. Held, however, that the words were not capable of the meaning ascribed to them by the plaintiff and that the motion for a nonsuit at the close of the case should have been allowed. The Capital and Counties Bank, Ltd. v. Henty & Sons (1882), 7 App. Cas. 741, referred to. Hay v. Bingham, 11 O.L.R. 148 (C.A.).

—Tender and Deposit—Dismissal of Action—Art. 200 C.P.Q.]—An allegation that an article published in a newspaper was simply published as an item taken from another newspaper is no defence or justification in an action for libel. (2) A defendant who has tendered and deposited an amount in Court is estopped from conclusions asking that the action should be dismissed absolutely, he can only pray for dismissal as to the excess of the demand over the amount tendered.

Prevost v. Huard, 7 Que. P.R. 406 (Pelletier, J.).

-Statements made in the exercise of a right - Malice.]-(1) The law of "qualified privilege" of the law of England in the matter of libel and slander corresponds to, and is the same as that of Quebec law, in the same matter, that no action will lie for statements made by a party in the exercise of a right (dans l'exercise d'un droit) unless actual malice is proved. (2) As in England the question of privilege or no privilege is one of law for the Court and not for the jury to determine, so with us, it is for the Court and not for the jury to say whether the defendant in making a statement is in the exercise of a right. (3) Where in a trial by jury of an action for defamation, the jury finds that a statement caused the plaintiff damage to a fixed amount, but was made without actual malice, the Court holding the defendant to have been in the exercise of his rights, or to employ the English equivalent, holding the occasion to have been privileged, will dismiss the action.

 McKergow v. Comstock, 11 O.L.R. 637.

-Privileged occasion-Letter copied by clerk-Publication.]-In an action for libe! the declaration alleged that the defendant falsely and maliciously published a letter containing defamatory matter, and ad-dressed and sent it to the plaintiff, and that this letter was dictated by the defendant to his stenographer who extended the notes and transcribed the same by a typewriter, which transcribed copy was signed by the defendant and sent to the plaintiff. The defendant by his pleas denied malice, and alleged that the letter was drafted by him and given to his typewriter to be copied; that the typewriter was his confidential clerk, and as such was accustomed to deal with letters of a confidential nature, and that the typewriting of the letter in question was done in the performance of her duty as such confidential clerk that no person except the defendant and the typewriter saw the letter, and its contents were not disclosed to any person other than the plaintiff:-Held, on demurrer that the pleas admit a publication and do not show that the occasion was privileged, and if proved, would not be an answer to the prima facie cause of action, alleged in the declaration, and were bad on demurrer.

-Notarial protest-Exercise of right -Publication.]-Objection by an interested party by means of a notarial protest to a member of a municipal council taking part in a discussion or vote on the ground that such member had received favours from the party maintaining the opposite interest and would be susceptible of partiality in his favour, is the exercise of a right and, in the absence of proof of a fraudulent or malicious intention to cause injury, does not give rise to a recourse in damages for defamation. The sending by a notary of a protest to a party is not a publication of the matter contained in it and does not, therefore, constitute the fact of defamation.

Montreal Brewing Co. v. Vallières, Q.R.

15 K. B. 201.

-Public press-Justification.]-It is the English law, under which the constitu-tional liberty of the press exists in Canada, which applies to actions for defamation in newspapers and to the defences founded on privilege and on fair comment. Under this law the concurrence of three elements is necessary to relieve the author of a defamatory writing of civil liability. (1) It is necessary that the writing be true. (2) That it deals with facts of interest to the public. (3) That it was published in the public interest and without malice.

Marcotte v. Bolduc, Q.R. 30 S.C. 222.

-Qualified privilege-Statement made by a garnishee in his declaration.]-No action will lie for defamatory statements made in good faith by a garnishee in his declaration upon a seizure by garnishment.

Daoust v. Charbonneau, 30 Que. S.C. 188

-Non-trading corporation created under the Benevolent Societies Act-Libel of, whether actionable.] - A non-trading corporation, having the right to acquire property which may be the source of income or revenue, the transaction of the business incidental thereto creates a reputation, rights and interests similar to those of an individual or a trading corporation, and must have the same protection and immunities, and be given the same remedies, in case of injury, as a trading corporation.

Chinese Empire Reform Association v. Chinese Daily Newspaper, 13 B.C.R. 141.

-Libel-Prima facie innocent publication -Failure to prove innuendo.]-An action for libel will be dismissed when the publication complained of does not on the face of it apply to the plaintiff and he fails to prove the innuendo that it was meant to apply to him.

Morrell v. Grant, 30 Que. S.C. 327 (C.

-Qualified privilege - Proceedings in a Court of law.]-An impartial and accurate report in the public press of any proceeding in a Court of law is privileged, and this rule applies to the publication of pleadings (declarations, exceptions, rejoinders, etc.) before issue joined, as well as after trial

Shallow v. Gazette Printing Co., 31 Que. S.C. 338. (See next case).

-Verdict of jury opposed to Judge's charge-New trial, grounds for.] - Two substantive allegations of wrong-doing on the part of plaintiff as a minister of the Crown having been alleged, and there being no proof of the truth, and no justification for one of such allegations, the jury, after a charge in favour of plaintiff, returned a verdict in favour of the defendant:-Held, on appeal, that there should be a new trial.

Green v. World Printing and Publishing

Co., 13 B.C.R. 467.

-Actions for libel-Newspaper-Court of the place where the whole cause of action has arisen.]-In actions for libel in a news paper, the place where the whole cause of action has arisen is that of the place where the newspaper is published. Hence, when an action is brought in another district in which the paper is circulated, but in which the plaintiff does not reside, it will be deferred on a motion in the nature of a declinatory exception, to the district of publication.

Dubuc v. Delisle, 33 S.C. 456.

-Confidential clerk-Publication-Privileged occasion.]-The defendant, a merchant, in a letter accused the plaintiff of theft and threatened to expose him. This letter was handed to a confidential clerk and copied, and the copy was signed by the defendant and sent by post to the plaintiff:-Held, that the writing of such defamatory statements did not fall within the ordinary business of a merchant, and the giving of it to his clerk to copy was a publication and the occasion of such publication was not privileged.

Moran v. O'Regan, 38 N.B.R. 399.

- Plea of justification-Agreement to settle action - Implied undertaking Breach of agreement.]-The defendant in an action for libel, who, having pleaded justification, enters into an agreement with the plaintiff by signing an explicit document and thereby undertaking to join in a request to the Court to have judgment entered according to its terms at a later date, impliedly binds himself not to renew his libellous attacks during the interval, and if he does so he violates his agreement and matters will be considered as placed in statu quo ante.

Choquette v. Parent, Q.R. 16 K.B. 481.

—Accusation of malversation as a director of a company.]—A newspaper sued in damages for having published that the plaintiff as president of a company had purchased privately some real estate to resell it with profit to the company cannot plead, (1) That the plaintiff as mayor of the city has negotiated a loan to the great loss of the citizens of the city. (2) That plaintiff was bound to put the defendant in default either by letter or otherwise, to publish an explanation or a retraction. These allegations will be struck on an inscription in law.

Garneau v. La Vigie Co., 10 Que. P.R.

-Justification-Onus of proof-Fair comment.]-(1) If truth of an alleged libellous statement is proven, the defendant is not liable for damage resulting to the plaintiff from any improper inference drawn from the fact stated. (2) In an action for damages for publication of a libel, a plea of justification places upon the defendant the onus of proving the truth of the assertion; and this onus is not discharged by simply proving facts from which the truth of the libel might possibly be inferred; the inference from the facts must be necessary or inevitable. (3) The plea of "fair comment" is only referable to a case where the facts taken as the basis of the comment are either admitted by all the parties or proven to be true. (4) The facts alleged in support of the plea of justification will be taken into consideration in awarding damages. Patterson v. Plaindealer Co., 2 Alta. R.

-Newspaper-Security for costs-Right of sub-editor to security.]-In an action for libels contained in a newspaper the defendant moved for security for costs under R.S.O. 1897, c. 68, s. 10, alleging in his affidavit that he was the "sporting editor" of the newspaper, and that he had the sole control and editorship of the sporting and dramatic intelligence:-Held, that as the editor of a department of a newspaper, he was entitled to security for costs. Semble, that all who are engaged in any capacity in the work of publishing the newspaper in which an alleged libel appears are entitled to the protection given by the statute. The plaintiff having moved under Con. Rule 1278 for leave to appeal from the above decision. Held, that leave could not be given under either branch of the rule, as there were no "conflicting decisions by Judges of the High Court upon the matter involved in the proposed appeal," and there appeared to be no "good reason to doubt the correctness" of the order sought to be appealed from. The defendant's affidavit as to merits said, "I am advised by my solicitor and I believe that I have a good defence on the merits," the statute requiring "an affidavit by the defendant or his agent . . . that the defendant has a good defence upon the merits." Held, that the affidavit was sufficient. Robinson v. Morris (1908), 15 O.L.R. 649, distinguished. The statute requires that the defendant's affidavit should show "that the statements complained of were published in good faith, or that the grounds of action are trivial or frivolous." The defendant swore that the words used by him were "innocent and harmless." Held, that this was equivalent to swearing that the grounds of action were trivial and frivolous. The Master in Chambers is not to be considered "a Judge of the High Court," under s. 15 of the Act, and the order made by him was, therefore, not a final one under that section, but was subject to appeal to a Judge of the High Court. Quære, whether the order of Meredith, C.J., being "an order made under s. 10 by a Judge of the High Court," was non-appealable under s. 15.

Robinson v. Mills, 19 O.L.R. 162.

-Particulars in libel action-Examination for discovery.]—Action for libel in charging the plaintiff with not accounting for moneys received as agent for defendants. The defendants pleaded privilege and set out certain circumstances which they alleged created the privilege. They also pleaded in justification of the libel. The plaintiff applied for particulars and the defendants, while not denying his right to particulars, claimed the right to examine him for discovery before being compelled to deliver particulars. The plaintiff however, refused to attend for examination until after the delivery of particulars by the defendants:-Held, that the plaintiff should forthwith attend at his own expense for examination and that the defendants should deliver at once particulars of the grounds of their belief the words complained of were true.

Timmons v. National Life Assurance Co., 18 Man. R. 465.

—Privileged publications — Reports of judicial proceedings—Pleadings filed in civil actions.]—The publication of the statements contained in a pleading filed in the course of a civil action, merely because such statements form part of such a pleading, is not a privileged publication within the rule which throws the protection of privilege about fair reports of judicial proceedings. The judgment appealed from Shallow v. Gazette, Q.R. 17 K.B. 309, reversing the judgment of the Superior Court, Q.R. 31 S.C. 338, was affirmed.

Gazette Printing Co. v. Shallow, 41 Can. S.C.R. 339.

—Venue.]—The party injured by a libellous article has his recourse for damages against the editor in the district in which the newspaper is issued and the injury caused since that is the district in which the injurious and damaging attack was made and where the cause of action arose. The new Code of procedure in saying "where the whole cause of action arose;" makes no change in the law respecting the right in such actions of suing in a district other than that in which the defendant resides.

Chicoutimi Pulp Co. v. Delisle, Q.R. 34 S.C. 294.

-Privilege-Fair comment-Mitigation of damages.]-It is no defence to an action for libel, that the publication complained of purports to represent the assertions of a third party, or even the mere repetition by such third party of the assertions of another; such facts can be considered only in mitigation of damages. While a newspaper may publish a report of the pro-ceedings of a public body, and comment upon facts and statements then made that may be defamatory to individuals, it is not fair comment as against any such individuals after a considerable interval of time to republish such statements as facts or as alleged facts. Fair comment must never consist of the assertion of fact: it consists of opinions and inferences from facts assumed to be true. A newspaper publishing and commenting upon proceedings in a judicial or semi-judicial investigation may comment upon the fact that further damaging evidence against a party might have been given if the tribunal had been disposed to receive it, but it is not fair comment to state such evidence, or the purport of it:—Semble, that the jury (or Judge sitting without a jury) may take into consideration the fact that the libellous statements were matters of public notoriety in the community previous to their publication by the defendant in mitigation of damages.

Patterson v. Edmonton Bulletin Company, 1 Alta. R. 477.

-Notice of action-Anonymous correspondent.]—Section 4 of the Libel Act, C.S. 1903, c. 136, providing for notice of action, does not apply to an anonymous correspondent, not being a regular correspondent of the newspaper, who causes a libel to be published therein.

Underwood v. Roach, 39 N.B.R. 27.

-Libel in a newspaper-Damages.]-An action taken in the district of Quebec for damages alleged to have been caused in that district by the publication (circulation) therein of a newspaper, containing a libellous article alleged to have been written in Chicoutimi and printed and published in said newspaper in Chicoutimi, by defendant, as editor of said newspaper, to satisfy the alleged hatred and malice of the proprietor thereof for the plaintiff, will, upon motion declining the jurisdiction of the said Court, in the district of Quebec, upon the ground: (1) That plaintiff and defendant both reside in Chicoutimi where the action was served, and (2) because "the whole cause of action" alleged in the declaration, did not arise in the district of Quebec-be referred to the district of Chicoutimi for trial and judgment. The difference between "right of action" (C.C.P. 34) and "the whole cause of action" (C.P. 94) discussed.

Dubuc v. Delisle, 10 Que. P.R. 252.

-Matter of defence charging crime Particulars.]-In an action for libel, the defendant in the first place pleaded generally denying the matters alleged in the statement of claim. Subsequently applied to amend by pleading justification, and filed the proposed amended defence. The matters relied upon by way of justification charged the acceptance of bribes by the plaintiff when holding a municipal office, and it was objected that the Court should not permit an amendment enarging fraud or crime, and it was also objected that the matters charged were not stated with sufficient particularity:-Held, that the allowance of an amendment setting up fraud is discretionary with the Judge and in some cases permissible, and in this case the amendment should be allowed. 2. That it is not now necessary to put the particulars relied upon by way of justification in the pleading, but such

I. MECHANICS' AND BUILDERS' LIENS.

Lien of material-man-Several buildings-Entire contract.]-Where one owner enters into an entire contract for the supply of material to be used in several buildings, the material-man can ask to have his lien, under the Mechanics' and Wage Earners' Lien Act, follow the form of the contract, and that it be for an entire sum upon all the buildings. If the owner desires to invoke the statute to the extent of having the lien upon any building confined to the value of the material going into that building, the onus is upon him to show the facts, and, if the facts cannot be ascertained, less violence will be done to the statute by construing it as indicated than by rendering it nugatory in many instances in which the Legislature apparently intended a lien to exist. And when, after the lien has attached to several distinct buildings, the owner has sold one or more, the equities which then arise between the owners of the several buildings may be worked out upon the principles applied where part of a property subject to a mortgage is sold and the mortgagee seeks to enforce his remedy against both parcels. Where an action to enforce a lien for material supplied by the plaintiffs under one contract for several buildings was brought against several defendants having separate interests in the land sought to be charged, a summary application by the defendant G., who made the contract with the plaintiffs, and was also alleged to have an interest in the land, to vacate the registry of the lien, upon the ground that there could be no valid lien against several buildings, was dismissed; it being held, that it was not so clearly demonstrated that the lien was bad that it should be vacated upon a summary application by G., who was not in a position to invoke the benefit of the Registry Act. Dunn v. McCallum (1907), 14 O.L.R. 249, distinguished. Claiming a lien upon too much property will not invalidated it altogether.

Ontario Lime Association v. Grimwood, 22 O.L.R. 17.

Travis v. Breckenridge, 43 Can. S.C.R. 59. [Leave to appeal refused by Privy Council, Feb. 28, 1911.]

Mechanic's lien - Miner's lien - Consolidated actions-Joint or several judgment.] -Though several lienholders may bring suit on their respective and distinct claims in one action and judgment may be entered for the whole amount of said claims, yet for the purposes of appeal each claim is deemed to be severable, and the adjudication thereon is a distinct one, and not appealable unless it amounts to $250.

Gabriele v. Jackson Mines, 2 M.M.C. 399, 15 B.C.R. 373.

-Mechanic's lien - Appeal - Amount adjudged.] - In an action on a mechanic's lien, the amount adjudged to be owing was $172.05. S. 24 of the Mechanic's Lien Act enacts that there is no appeal where the amount claimed to be owing is adjudged to be less than $250. Therefore an appeal from the judgment was dismissed.

—Contract — Divisible and severable.]—A plumber agreed in a single written document to install plumbing and heating apparatus in each of two houses situated on two adjoining lots, for the sum of $620 for each house:—Held, the contract contained two severable or divisible promises, one in respect to each house. The work in connection with the house on lot No. 30 was completed on the 29th July, 1908, and that in connection with the house on lot No. 29 on the 15th June, 1909; the sewer connections from both houses were joined in a line between the two lots. Held, a claim of mechanics' lien filed against both lots on the 1st February, 1909, in respect of the whole contract price for the two houses, was filed too late to preserve the lien against lot 30.

A. Lee Co. v. Hill, 2 Alta, R. 368.

-Time of registration-Goods supplied-Entire contract-Notice of lien of sub-contractor to owner.]—Defendant B. contracted with defendant F. to build a house for the latter. Plaintiff supplied at different times during the work hardware and installed plumbing and heating apparatus and not being paid filed a lien. The last work done was on the furnace on January 3rd, the other work done by plaintiff having been completed and material supplied at an earlier date. The lien was filed on February 2nd. No formal notice was given by Smith to Fry of his claim as a sub-contractor but payment of the account had been discussed between them on several occasions, and Fry had promised to protect Smith. Fry also claimed that the work had not been finished by Bernhardt in accordance with the contract, that no architect's certificate had been produced and that he was entitled to set off certain damages. It appeared, however, that he had taken possession of the premises and that accounts had been stated to some extent and a balance found due:-Held, that the plumbing, heating and build-ing hardware were all supplied with the same object by the one party on the one hand to the one party on the other, standing in the same relationship and were so supplied as material and labour coming within the scope of the plaintiff's business and were so bound into one as to form an entire contract and not as separate contracts or deliveries and the last work on the whole being done on the 3rd of January the lien was filed in time. 2. That the defendant, Fry, by his conversation with plaintiff and assurance of protection of the account had waived notice of claim of lien. 3. That by taking possession of the premises, selling the same and stating accounts with Bernhardt, Fry had accepted the work and waived the presentation of an architect's certificate. 4. Damages for delay in performance can not be set off against a lienholder.

Smith v. Bernhardt, 2 Sask. R. 315.

-Preferred claims of lien-holders - Company - Registration after commencement of winding-up.] — The commencement of a mechanic's lien is coincident with the commencement of the work. Liens claimed by different lien-holders were in respect of work done in building upon the lands of a company prior to the date of the service of a petition for the winding-up of the company, but some of the claims for liens were not registered until after that date, though all within 30 days after the commencement of the liens:-Held, that all the liens existed by force of the Mechanics' Lien Act prior to the service of the petition, and their efficacy and precedence were not disturbed by the subsequent winding-up proceedings; and the lien-holders had a valid claim attaching upon the land and to be paid in priority to ordinary creditors. S. 84 of the Winding-up Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 144, does not apply to mechanics' liens. The lien-holders had, therefore, preferential claims upon the assets of the company in liquidation.

McKenzie v. Murray, 11 W.L.R. 123 (Sask.).

-Building erected by lessee - Liability of "owner."]-S. 4. of the Alberta Mechanics' Lien Act (6 Edw. VII. c. 21) gives to any contractor or materialman furnishing labour or materials for a building at the request of the owner of the land a lien on such land for the value of such labour or materials. Sub-s. 4 of s. 2 provides that the term "owner" shall extend to and include a person having any estate or interest "in the land upon or in respect of which the work is done or materials are placed or furnished at whose request and upon whose credit or on whose behalf or with whose privity or consent or for whose direct benefit any such work is done, etc." By s. 11 "every building . . . mentioned in the fourth section of this Act, constructed upon any lands with the knowledge of the owner or of his authorized agent . shall be held to have been constructed at the request of such owner," unless the lat-ter gives notice within three days after acquiring such knowledge that he will not be responsible. The lessee of land, as permitted by his lease, had buildings thereon pulled down and proceeded to erect others in their place, but was obliged to abandon the work before it was finished. The owner of the land was aware of the work being done but gave no notice disclaiming responsibility therefor. Mechanics' liens having been filed under the Act:-Held, that the interest of the owner in the land was subject to such liens. Judgment appealed from varying that at the trial (Scratch v. Anderson, 2 Alta. L.R. 109) in favour of the lien-holders, affirmed.

—Contract with school district—Right to file lien.]—A school district duly organized in Saskatchewan and declared to be a corporation let a contract for the erection of a school building. A sub-contractor filed a mechanic's lien against the building, and not being paid brought action to enforce the lien. It was objected that the lien was not enforceable against the lands of a school district:—Held, that the lands of a school district were liable to be sold under the provisions of the Mechanics' Lien Act. 2. The provisions of s. 9 of the School Assessment Ordinance providing a means of realizing the amount of a judgment against a school district do not exclude other remedies.

claiming the lien, it is so only in the construction of the sections dealing with the creation of the nen, and not of those dealing with its enforcement; and, even as to the former, s. 14 of the Act requires only a substantial compliance. A sub-contractor is bound to show a substantial performance of his own contract with the contractor, but is not bound to a strict compliance with the terms of the principal contract. S. 24 of the Act gives the Court power, in a lien action, to deal fully with the rights of all the parties who are before it. Upon the evidence, the plaintiff, a sub-contractor, was held, to have strictly complied with his contract with the principal contractor, and to be entitled to enforce his lien, notwithstanding that the furnace which he installed was rejected by the owners, a school board:—Held, also, that there was no unreasonable delay on the plaintiff's part in completing his work.

-Mechanics' liens-Trade custom-Method of computing bricks-Unreasonable usage.] -In an action in a County Court to enforce a mechanic's lien, the plaintiff's statement of the work done not complying with s. 12 of the Mechanics' Lien Act of 1900, an amendment of the plaint was allowed, it being held, that s. 13 gave power so to amend. The plaintiff's contract was to lay bricks by the thousand, but he sought to affix to it an alleged usage of bricklayers, that, in a contract to lay bricks by the thousand, unless kiln count is specified, the method of ascertaining the number of thousands is by measuring the wall. There was no evidence that this alleged usage was known to the defendant, and he stated that it was not known to him:-Held, that the alleged usage was an unreasonable one, and not binding on the defendant; and the plaintiff was entitled to recover for laying only the actual number of bricks in the wall, that is, on the basis of kiln count. The bricks were put into the wall in a wet condition, and it was shown that, in order to make good work, the bricks should be dry. The wall fell down, and the plaintiff rebuilt part of it, but it cost the defendant $590 in labour to do the rest of the work:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to a set-off $250 as claimed by him.

Allen v. Deane, 14 W.L.R. 622 (B.C.).

-Building contract-Progress estimates-Architect's certificate-Condition precedent -Certificate given after action begun.]-Work was done and materials supplied by the plaintiffs for the defendants in con-nection with the building of an hotel, under a written contract dated the 26th June, 1907. The plaintiffs undertook to complete the the work, to the satisfaction of an architect, in accordance with specifications and drawings and with the conditions of the agreement, for $115,000, which the defendants were to pay as the work progressed in monthly payments representing 85 per cent. of the amount of the work done and materials supplied, and for this percentage the architect was to issue progress estimates each month, on which payments were to be made, and the final payment was to be made on the expiration of thirty-one days after the plaintiffs had fulfilled the agreement. Payments were to be made only upon the written certificates of the architect that they were due. The plaintiffs were to complete and have ready for occupation by the 1st January, 1908, the first and second flats and part of the basement; to complete the remainder, except the outside finishing, by the 1st April, 1908; and to complete the whole by the 15th May, 1908. A large amount of the work was done, and nine progress estimates, the last dated the 1st June, 1908, were given by C., acting for the architect, amounting to $57,533.36. The amounts mentioned in five of these certifi-cates were paid by the defendants, and a portion of the sixth; the defendants refused to make any further payments, on the ground that the plaintiffs were in default in not procuring and delivering to the defendants a bond guaranteeing the performance of the contract, which, by the contract, the plaintiffs undertook to do within fifteen days from the date of the contract. The plaintiffs thereupon stopped work on the building, and on the 14th July, 1908, brought this action to recover the amount alleged to be due to them for all work done and materials supplied by them, and to enforce their lien therefore under the Mechanics' and Wage Earners' Lien Act. Pending the action and on the 19th July, 1909, ten days before the trial, the architect gave the plaintiffs another progress estimate in which he estimated the cost of the work to the date of the estimate at $64,263.49:—Held, that the defendants' refusal to make further payments was not justifiable, nor were the plaintiffs justified in discontinuing work. The plaintiffs were not entitled to be paid anything but the sums for which the architect had given them progress estimates: and were not entitled, in this action, to recover for the amount of the estimate of the 19th July, 1909, nor to recover on a quantum meruit. By clause 13 of the contract, provision was made for the payment of insurance premiums by the defendants during the progress of the work, but at the cost and expense of the plaintiffs, until the completion of the basement and the first and second flats, which were to have been, but were not, completed by the 1st January, 1908, but the defendants were to pay the cost and expense of the insurance from and after the 1st January, 1908. Held, that the plaintiffs were not chargeable with the amount paid by the defendants for fire insurance subsequent to 1st January, 1908.

Kelly v. Tourist Hotel Co., 20 O.L.R. 267.

-Lien of sub-contractor-Time for registering—Completion of work.]—The plaintiffs were sub-contractors for the installation of the heating system in a hospital, and completed their work, as the workmen thought, early in December, 1908, but, upon a test being made it was ascertained that the plant was not sufficient to heat the building to the required temperature. As the hospital was then being used, it was impossible to turn off the water and make alterations in the plant, and the alterations could not be and were not made until May. The plaintiffs were acting in good faith; they registered their lien within 31 days from the time of completing the alterations in May-the work then done being for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the plant so that it would heat the building in accordance with the terms of the guarantee given by the plaintiffs:
Held, that it was substantial work, and not work that could be described as being done to remedy slight defects, such as stopping leaks; and therefore the lien was registered in time. Day v. Crown Grain Co., 39 S.C.R. 258, followed.

Whimster v. Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., 13 W.L.R. 621.

-Claims of sub-contractors-Price to be paid by conveyance of land.]-The defendant C. entered into an agreement with the defendant D. to build two houses of the value of $3,000 each, the consideration being the transfer to C. of 3 lots and the payment of $3,000, half of which money was to be paid when $3,000 had been ex-pended, and the remainder paid and the lots transferred as soon as the buildings should be completed according to the specifications and all claims satisfied. Before the completion of the houses, and after the payment to C. of about $2,200, D. gave notice to C. that unless he completed the houses within a specified time they would be taken out of his hands, and the amount expended in completion would be deducted from the sum payable to him, without prejudice to any claim for delay or damages by reason of imperfection in construction or in quality of material. C. did nothing more under the contract, and D. completed the houses, expending more than the balance payable under the contract, and also claiming damages, etc. The three lots had not been conveyed to C.:—Held, that the plaintiffs, who did work and furnished materials for the buildings, and had registered mechanics' liens against the property built on, and established by evidence their rights thereto, were entitled to the equity in the 3 lots, after the satisfaction of D.'s claim for payments made and damages. Judgment of Stuart, J., 11 W.L.R. 603, reversed, and judgment to be entered declaring the plaintiffs entitled to liens, and directing a sale of the 3 lots, the proceeds of such sale to be applied, first, in payment of the amount (to be ascertained by the Master) which D. was entitled to deduct over and above the sum of $3,00, and secondly, in satisfaction of the plaintiffs' claims—the balance, if any, to be paid to C.

Head Co. v. Coffin, 13 W.L.R. 663.

-Preservation of lien-Work done after final certificate and acceptance of building -Sub-contractor-Alteration in work.]-Where a plaintiff claims to revive a mechanic's lien by means of material supplied and work done after the completion of a building, and after the architect has given the final certificate, it is incumbent on him to prove clearly that the material was supplied and the work done in pursuance of and as a part of his original agreement. The defendant built a house, which she supposed was completed on the 15th September, 1909, when her architect accepted it, and 40 days later issued his final certificate. The final payment was made on the 8th November. On the 26th January, 1910, the plaintiff, a plumber, changed a register, the original one not being according to specifications. A month before that the contractor had left Vic-toria, and the plaintiff knew it. The archi-tect and the defendant were not aware that anything further was to be done, and the defendant did not know, until served with the summons in this plaint to enforce the lien, that the register had been changed:-Held, that the change in the register was not to be regarded as part of the work to be done under the plaintiff's sub-contract so as to keep the lien alive. It was sought to make the defendant personally liable because her husband had requested the plaintiff to do the work. Held, that the facts shown were not sufficient to justify a finding that the husband was the wife's agent.

Lawrence v. Landsberg, 14 W.L.R. 477 (B.C.).

—Material-man—Preservation of lien—Last delivery—Articles used for temporary purpose.]—Under s. 4 of the Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 153, it is not enough that the materials are furnished to be used upon or in the building—the lien attaches only in virtue of materials furnished to be used in the making, constructing, erecting, fitting, altering, improving or repairing the erection or building. The significance of the term "furnishes any material is furnished by the material is furnished by the material man for the purpose of being used in the building or other work, it cannot be the subject of a lien, even though used. they relied for preservation of their lien—the registry of the claim of lien being within thirty days of that delivery, but more than thirty days after the last previous delivery of materials—was of certain bolts, of trilling value and used for a temporary or experimental purpose only:—Held, that these articles were not furnished in such manner as to enable the plaintiffs to claim a lien for their price upon the land of the owners, within the meaning of the Act; and so the whole claim fell to the ground. Judgment of a Divisional Court, 20 O.L.R. 303, reversed.

Brooks-Sanford Co. v. Theodore Telier Construction Co., 22 O.L.R. 176.

—Privilege—Materials—Notice.]—The person who furnishes materials for construction of a building acquires a lien for his debt only on the essential condition of giving to the owner of the land, before delivery, notice of the contract to furnish containing a statement of the cost and specifying the immovable for which they are intended. Cf. Carrière v. Sigouin, Q.R. 18 K.B. 176. The promise of sale of the land by the owner to the contractor to whom the materials have been sold and delivered, which is not registered is of no effect as against third parties in whatever relates to the creation of the lien.

W. Rutherford & Sons Co. v. Racicot, Q.R. 19 K.B. 428, affirming 36 S.C. 97.

Workman's privilege-Furnishing materials to contractor.]-A manufacturer who enters into an agreement with a contractor to deliver a number of closets intended for a building which the contractor has undertaken to construct, is not a workman, but a furnisher of materials. The registry by the manufacturer of a workman's lien upon the immovable of the owner to secure payment of the price of the closets is void under the circum stances, the manufacturer not being entitled to other security for such payment than that given by law in Arts. 2013g, 2013h, 2013i, 2013l, C.C., when he conforms to the provisions of these several articles. The contract between the manufacturer and the contractor is a sale and not a letting of work (louage d'ouvrage). To enable a workman to claim a lien upon the immovable of an owner it is essential that he should be employed upon such immovable. It is not sufficient for him to work at and finish materials intended for the building which the owner constructs or causes to be constructed.

Montmorency Cotton Mills Co. v. Gignac, 10 Que. Q.B. 158.

—Materials for building—Notice—Registry.]—When the owner of land builds on it, the person furnishing materials who desires to obtain a right of hypothec should, before delivery of the material, give notice to him who lends money to the owner, and a notice given too late to such lender will not suffice to give said right of hypothec. When two portions of the same land have been sold by separate contracts to different purchasers, and buildings are put upon it, the furnisher of material for the building should, in the particulars of claim (bordereau) which he registers under Art. 2013 C.C., indicate the part of the land belonging to each purchaser, and his registration will have no effect if he describes the whole land as being the property of the two purchasers.

Paquette v. Mayer, 18 Que. S.C. 563 (C.C.).

-Builder's lien-Registry-Sub-contract-Delays.]-The holder of a note secured by a builder's lien may, in suing on it, claim a declaration of the existence of the lien in his favour. A contractor may take, in his own name, a builder's lien, not only for the work done by himself, but also for that done by a sub-contractor, and in these circumstances it is not necessary that his contract with the sub-contractor should be made known to the owner of the works to be constructed. The time limited for registry of a builder's lien runs from the date on which the works were entirely completed and not from that on which the person entitled to the lien begins to profit from their construction before completion. The owner of the works to be constructed cannot take advantage of the lien being registered too late nor even of entire failure to register

La Banque Jacques Cartier v. Picard, 18 Que. S.C. 502 (S.C.).

—Mechanic's lien—''Notice in writing of such lien''—Letter—R.S.O. c. 153, s. 11, sub-s, 2.]—A letter to the owners from sub-contractors furnishing materials, asking him when making a payment to the contractor for the building in question to 'see that a cheque for at least $400 is made payable to us on account of brick delivered, as our account is considerably over $700, and we shall be obliged to register a lien if a payment is not made today' is sufficient 'inotice in writing' of a lien under the Mechanic's Lien Act, R. S.O. c. 153, s. 11, sub-s. 2. Judgment of a Divisional Court, 32 O.R. 27, affirmed. Craig v. Cromwell, 27 Ont. App. 585.

— Mechanic's liens—Trial—Appointment in writing—Notice of trial.]—Under s. 35 (1) of the Mechanic's Lien Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 153, the Judge or officer fixing a day for the trial of an action brought under that Act, is to do so in writing, and a notice of trial under that section given by a party who has not obtained a signed appointment from the Judge or officer, is not effective. The notice of trial must be served at least eight clear days before the day fixed, as provided by s. 36.

McIver v. Crown Point Mining Co., 19 Ont. Pr. 335.

-Mechanic's lien-Mineral claim-Work done at request of holder of option . Whether or not lien lies.]-Defendant, a mine owner, gave C. an option to buy a mine for $25,000.00, with liberty to work it, the net proceeds to be applied towards payment. The plaintiffs claimed liens for labour while employed by C. in working it under the agreement, C. did not exercise his option:-Held, by the full Court, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to liens under the Mechanic's Lien Act. There is no lien given for cooking under the Act. Anderson v. Godsal, 7 B.C.R. 404.

-Privilege-Suppliers of materials.]-Although the right of suppliers of materials is called in Art. 2013(1) C.C. (59 Vict. Q. c. 42), in the French version "un droit d'hypothêque'' and in the English version 'a hypothecary privilege,'' the right is nevertheless of the nature of a privilege and not of the nature of a hypothec, and all suppliers for the same building who have availed themselves of the privileges of the article and registered their claims, rank concurrently.

Jamieson v. Charbonneau, 17 Que. S.C. 514.

-Mechanic's lien-One lien against owners of different properties.]-Action to enforce mechanic's lien. Two of the defendants were husband and wife owning separate adjoining lots of land. The husband employed the plaintiff in the erection of two houses, one on each lot, and the plaintiff, not being paid for his work, registered a claim of lien upon the estate or interest of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, in the two lots, for an amount claimed to be due him for work on the two houses, without apportioning the amount as between the two:-Held, that the registered claim was not sufficient to bind both lots and that effect could not be given to it against one of the lots only for the proper amount, and that the action must be dismissed with costs as against the defendant Lister, who was a mortgagee. Carrier v. Friedrich, 22 Gr. 243; Oldfield v. Barber, 12 P. R. 554, and Rathbun v. Nayfield, 87 Mass. 406, followed. Held, also, that if plaintiff desired it, or the defendants, the Smiths, consented, there might be judgment declaring a lien in plaintiff's favour against them for amounts claimed and costs and sale on default in the usual terms.

Fairclough v. Smith, 37 C.L.J. 670 (Killam, C.J.).

-Mechanic's lien-Certificate of action imperative-Sections 8 and 24 of R.S.B.C. 1897, c. 132.]-The certificate of action required under s. 24 of the Mechanic's Lien Act, must be filed within the time therein limited, otherwise the lien ceases to exist. Dunn v. Holbrook and Bain, 7 B.C.R.

-Hypothecary action-Work on immovable-Enhanced value - Privilege-Art. 2013 C.C.]-The enhanced value given to an immovable by a workman is settled by valuation at that time of the decree when the moneys are insufficient to pay the workman who has registered a privilege (lien) or in case the increased value is disputed by parties interested. The contention when it can take place should be raised by a pleading au fond and not by inscription en droit. The defendant being owner of the immovable the workman need not allege the increase in value.

Therien v. Hainault, 5 Que P.R. 61 (Sup. Ct.).

-Contract on two adjoining buildings-Lien for work done on one-Registration -Extent of work done.]-Where a contract was made with the respective owners of adjoining lands, on which two separate buildings were erected, but included under one roof, for the repair thereof at one entire price, separate accounts being kept of the work done and materials furnished on each building, a lien attaches, and can be enforced under Mechanic's Lien Act against the lands of each of such owners for the price of the work done and the materials provided on the buildings respectively. The findings of the local Master, who tried a mechanic's lien action, as to the fact of the work being done and the materials furnished within thirty days prior to the lien being registered, and as to the extent of the said work and materials, was upheld, although the evidence was contradictory, there being no evidence to support such findings.

Where the plaintiff in such an action claimed to be entitled to a lien against the owner of land who had erected a building thereon, and joined as a defendant the architect of the building, whom he charged with fraudulently refusing to give a certificate for the amount which the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to recover, and asked that the architect might be ordered to pay the amount claimed with damages, for his fraudulent breach of duty, and the costs of the action, the name of the architect was struck out. -Action begun by statement of claim -Service out of Ontario-Jurisdiction to allow.1-There is no authority in the Courts of this province to allow service out of Ontario of a statement of claim filed as the initial step in an action. In re Busfield-Whaley v. Busfield (1886), 32 Ch. D. 123, followed. Such service is not a matter of practice, but of jurisdiction, and Rule 3 does not enable the Court to apply the analagous procedure as to writs of summons. Semble, that if there were power to allow service of such a statement out of Ontario, it could not be allowed nunc pro tune after it had been effected without an order. -Lien on interest of purchaser of land under agreement not carried out-Rights of workmen as against vendor.]-The purchaser of a lot of land under an agreement of sale fixing 15th August, 1901, for payment of the purchase money, was allowed to enter into possession on the 15th June, 1901, and to commence building on the land. He continued the expenditure of money upon the premises after the date fixed for payment, with the knowledge and concurrence of the vendors, but eventually abandoned the purchase without having paid anything to the vendors. Then they notified him that, as he had not complied with the terms of the purchase as to time, his interest had ceased. The plaintiff's claim was for a lien on the interest of the purchaser in the property for work done by him in the erection of the building, but he submitted to the lien of the vendors for the full amount of the purchase money of the land:-Held, that the vendors could not, under the circumstances, put an end to the rights of the purchaser by giving such a notice, and that, apart from the provisions of s. 11, sub-s. 2 of the Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, 61 Vict., c. 29, the plaintiff was entitled to the lien asked for with the usual inquiries and direc-

The plaintiffs were day labourers, who did work for the defendants on a railway in an unorganized district, and it was set forth in the statement of claim that they resided in that district; the name and address of the plaintiffs' solicitor were also stated therein:—Held, that it was not necessary to give more precise particulars of the places of residence of the plaintiffs.

The petitioners were not served with any notice of trial, and did not appear at the trial nor prove any claim, but the judgment given upon the trial recited that it appeared that they had some lien, charge or incumbrance on the lands, created subsequent to the commencement of the action, and declared that the plaintiffs and others were entitled to liens:-Held, that the name of the petitioners and all reference to their claim should be stricken out of the judgment.

-Mechanic's lien-Priority-Jurisdiction to order-Notice to parties affected.] -The holders of mechanics' liens filed against mineral claims owned by a company which was subsequently ordered to be wound up, recovered judgment thereon in the County Court the same day the winding-up order was made. In the list of creditors made up by the liquidator the lien claimants did not appear as secured creditors, but as judgment creditors. The winding-up order was made on the petition of Holmes, a surveyor, who held the field notes of the survey made by him, and who afterwards proposed that he advance the moneys necessary to obtain Crown grants of the claims and retain a lien on them until he was paid. The liquidator applied to the Court for leave to accept the proposal and an order was made, without notice to the lien holders, giving Holmes a first charge on the claims for his debt and the amount advanced by him. Afterwards, on Holmes' application, an order was made, on notice to the liquidator but without notice to the lien holders, that the claims be sold to pay his charge. The lien holders did not appeal from either of the last orders, but applied for leave to enforce their security and that they be declared to have priority over Holmes:—Held, by the Full Court that the order giving Holmes priority over the lien holders was made without jurisdiction and the lien holders were not bound by it.

-Mechanics' lien-Building contract -Pretended tender-Penalty clause.] -Where a tender for the erection of building is made and accepted, but without the intention on the part of either owner or contractor that the amount stated in the tender should be the contract price, the contractor is entitled to recover on a quantum meruit. The fact that the plaintiff's tender was made for the purpose of deceiving other tenderers did not estop the plaintiff from disputing its bona fides as against the defendant. Failure by the owner to supply material which the contract provides he shall supply discharges a penal clause. Where a building contract provides for the certificate of an architect and no architect is appointed, the provision is inoperative.

Degagne v. Chave, 2 Terr. L.R. 210.

-Lien for goods supplied to sub-contractor-Notice - Failure to give - Words "placed or furnished."]-B. contracted with the defendant company to transfer to them a quantity of land, and to erect and equip a mill and to do other work. for an agreed sum in bonds and shares of the company and other considerations. It was subsequently agreed, verbally, that a portion of the proceeds of the bonds and shares transferred to B. should be retained by a trust company as security for the performance by B. of his contract for the erection of the mill, to be paid out as the work progressed. In an action against the company by the sub-contractor by whom the machinery for the mill was supplied:—Held, that, in the absence of notice, the company was not liable to the plaintiff for failure to retain out of the moneys paid to B. the percentage required to be retained under the provisions of the Mechanics' Lien Act. Also, that the transaction which took place when the title to the property was transferred to the company, and the bonds and shares, the consideration therefor, were delivered to B., was not one within the provisions of the Mechanics' Lien Act, s. 8, and that the company was not required to retain anything on that date for the benefit of future contractors. Also, that as the bonds and shares constituted the price or consideration not only for the construction of the mill, but for the land and other property transferred to the company, the price to be paid for the construction of the mill could not be ascertained so as to enable the claim for work or machinery to be enforced against the property. Also, that the lien for goods or materials placed or furnished under s. 3 of the Act, commences when the goods or materials are so placed or furnished, and that, as against the owner, this cannot be said to have occurred until they have reached his property.

Smith Co. v. Sissiboo Pulp and Paper Co., 36 N.S.R. 348. (See the next case.)

-Machinery furnished-Contract price.1 -Under the Mechanics' Lien Act of Nova Scotia, R.S.N.S. (1900), c. 171, a lien for machinery for a mill does not attach until it is delivered, and if the contractor for building the mill has then been fully paid, there is nothing upon which the lien can operate, as by section 6 of the Act the owner cannot be liable for a sum greater than that due to the contractor. B., holder of more than half the stock of a pulp company, for which he had paid by cheque, and also a director, offered to sell to the company, land, build a mill and furnish working capital on receipt of all the bond issue and cash on hand. The offer was accepted, and all the stock, issued as fully paid up, was deposited with a trust company, and the cash, his own cheque and the price of five shares, given to B. The stock was sold, and, from the proceeds the land was paid for, the working capital promised given to the company, and the balance paid to B. from time to time, as the mill was constructed. The machinery was supplied by an American company, but when it was delivered all the money had been paid out as above: -Held, affirming the judgment appealed from (36 N.S.R. 348), that as all the money had been paid before delivery, the company was not liable under the Mechanics' Lien Act to pay for the machinery. Held, also, that s. 8 of the Act, which requires the owner to retain 15 per cent. of the contract price until the work is completed did not apply, as no price for building the mill was specified, but the price was associated with other considerations from which it could not be separated.

Morgan Smith Company v. Sissiboo Pulo and Paper Company, 35 Can. S.C.R. 93.

-Building contract-Lien for materials furnished to contractor-Occupation of building by owner-Acceptance of work.]

-Persons supplying materials to the contractor for the building of a house are not entitled to the benefit of the provisions of section 12 of the Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 110, by which, in the event of the contract not being completed, wage-earners may enforce liens against the percentage of the contract price which the owner is required to hold back under section 9 of the Act; but, if the contract price is payable by instalments, the general lien holders may enforce their liens pro rata to the extent of any earned instalments in so far as the same remain unpaid in the hands of the owner, although the work is not completed. (2) The occupation of the uncompleted house by the owner and the mortgaging of it, for a sum to be paid to the contractor in accordance with one of the terms of the contract, do not estop the owner from setting up against the lien holder that the house has not been completed and that consequently, no more money is due under the contract. Black v. Wiebe, 15 Man. R. 260 (Per-

-Lien of sub-contractor when contractor fails to complete work-Percentages to be kept back by owner-Successive jobs on distinct orders.]-Where nothing is payable under a building contract until the whole of the work is completed, but the owner voluntarily makes payment to the contractor as the work progresses, to the extent of the value of the work done, a sub-contractor who has not been paid is entitled, under section 9 of the Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 110, as against the owner, to a lien for the amount due him, to the extent of twenty per cent. of such payments. Russell v. French (1898), 28 O.R. 215, followed. Plaintiff's claim consisted of charges for different jobs, all in his line of business, but ordered at different times, and, as to the first job, if considered separately, his lien was not filed with-in the time required by the statute:--Held, that, under such circumstances, a mechanic should not be required, in order to secure payment, to file a lien after completing each piece of work, and that filing his lien after he has completed all his work is sufficient.

Carroll v. McVicar, 15 Man. R. 379 (Richards and Perdue, JJ.).

—Workman's lien—Description of property—Valuation—Notice of registry.] — The fact that, in a schedule for registering a workman's lien, the immovables affected are described as "two lots of land or emplacements known and designated under the numbers 2C and 3C of the official sub-division of lot No. 907," instead of describing them as in the cad-astre, namely, "two lots of land known and designated under the numbers 2 subdivision C and 3 sub-division C both of the sub-division of the official lot No. 907'' does not constitute an irregularity sufficient to make void the registration of the lien, especially when the description in the schedule was identical with that in the document by which the owner (who had acquired the immovables from the respondent) had obtained his title and with that in the proces-verbal of seizure and when the registrar, on presentation of the schedule, had inscribed it upon the immovables as described in his office. In this case the respondent who had sold the immovables had filed on the record a declaration that the land was not worth more than $3,000 (the property with the erections thereon had been sold for $5,000) and an hypothecary creditor, represented by respondent's attorney, had directed that the money be distributed without proceeding to an appraisement:-Held, that the respondent, who was dominus litis, was considered as having acquiesced in the omission of a valuation and was not entitled to complain that the increased value given to the land by the new erections had not been fixed by valuation. Failure of the workman to notify the owner of the immovable within three days after registration of the schedule, Art. 2103 C.C., does not affect the validity of the registration or of the lien.

-Costs of sale and reference to Master -Limitation of 25 per cent.]-The expression "costs of the action awarded in any action under this Act by the Judge or local Judge trying the action" in section 37 of the Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 110, refers to the costs up to and including the trial, and means the costs which are allowed by the Judge at the hearing and entered in the judgment, and the provisions of that section, limiting the costs to be allowed in such action exclusive of disbursements to twenty-five per cent. of the amount of the judgment, do not apply to the subsequent costs of sale and proceedings before the Master, which may be dealt with by the Judge as in other cases. Gearing v. Robinson (1900), The judgment 19 P.R. 192, followed. pronounced empowered the Master to tax and add to the plaintiffs' claim the costs of the subsequent proceedings, and the Master under it allowed the ordinary costs of a sale conducted in his office, and there was no appeal from the judgment:-Held, on an appeal from the taxation, that the Court could not interfere with the provisions of the judgment. Held, per Richards, J., that it could not be assumed that proceedings under section 31 would have been any less expensive than those which had been taken. Per Perdue, J., that the question as to the least expensive course should have been dealt with, if at all, by the Judge who tried the action, and the taxing officer had no power, without a special direction in the judgment, to determine which would have been the least expensive course.

— Assignment—Debt "due"—Consideration-Lien holder-Priority.]-E., a subcontractor, commenced work on the 19th August, 1903, completed it on the 11th October, 1904, and registered his lien on the 12th October, 1904. On the 14th November, 1903, the contractor by whom E. was employed, assigned $2,588.32 of the amount "due" to him from the owner on his contract, to .D., another subcontractor, who duly gave notice thereof to the owner. At the time of this assignment $2,588.32 had been earned under the contract, but it did not become payable until the giving of the architect's certificate, on the 4th November, 1904:--Held, that under the Mechanics' Lien Act. s. 4, E.'s lien related back to the commencement of his work, and under s. 13 it was entitled to priority over D.'s assignment, for the full amount of the lien, and not merely for that portion thereof actually earned by E. up to the date of the assignment. Held, also, that the assignment was valid, and bound the debt assigned, though it was not payable at the date of the assignment. Held, also, that a debt due and owing is a sufficient consideration for an assignment of a chose in action, and that the assignment was, therefore, not revocable or impeachable as being voluntary.

The sub-contract was made September 29th, 1902, and the final payment was made by D. to the principal contractor on the 21st November, 1902, when the work was all through, without retaining fifteen per cent. for 30 days, as required by the Mechanics' Lien Act, R.S. (1900), c. 171, s. 8. Ross v. St. Onge, Q.R. 14 K.B. 478.

-Time for registering - Completion of work-Satisfaction of architects-Work done after registration of lien.]-Under a contract made with the railway company for the erection of a building, the work was to be done to the entire satisfaction of certain architects. The plaintiffs, who were sub-contractors for a part of the building, ceased work on the 20th May, under the belief that their contract was completed, and their secretary-treasurer on the 8th of June, made an affidavit stating such to be the fact, with a view of having a lien registered, which was done on the 24th June. The architects, however, were not satisfied, and required further work to be done, and this was accordingly done in June, and again in August, and it was not until the 4th of August that the architects were satisfied and accepted the work:-Held, that under the contract the architects, being the persons to determine when the work was completed, it was not so completed until they had signified their approval, and therefore the lien was registered in time.

-Parties to action-Suit by sub-contractor against contractor.]-A., an owner of property, who has employed a contractor to build a house for him, and before the filing of a lien under the Manitoba Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, by a sub-contractor for his claim against the contractor, has sold and conveyed all his interest in the land to a purchaser, is neither a necessary nor a proper party to the action afterwards commenced to realize the lien, as the plaintiff could not have any relief against him. Although the plaintiff's claim would be limited to the amount due by A. to the contractor and he would have to prove what that indebtedness was, yet that would not justify making A. a party, as the plaintiff could prove that indebtedness at the trial or on a reference to the Master without having A. before the Court.

Christie v. McKay, 15 Man. R. 612 (Mathers, J.).

-Meaning of 'claim' -Personal remedy of workman.]-(1) A workman under a contractor engaged in the repair of a building for the owner, is entitled, under sections 9 and 12 of the Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 110, to a lien on the building for his unpaid wages to the extent of the twenty per cent. of the payments made, that the owner should have held back from the contractor, but did not. Carroll v. Me-Vicar (1905), 15 M.R. 379, followed. (2) A workman who has brought his action under the above Act, can not in that action avail himself of the personal remedy given by the Builders' and Workmen's Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 14, against the proprietor for the full amount of his claim in cases where a pay list is not kept and the proprietor neglects to see that the workmen are paid. (3) The word "claim" in the second paragraph of section 4 of the first-named Act, providing that no lien shall exist under the Act for any claim under twenty dollars, means the amount actually due to the claimant under his contract or employment, and not the amount to which his right or remedy against the land may on inquiry be found to be limited.

Phelan v. Franklin, 15 Man. R. 520 (Richards, J.).

—Misdescription of land—Right to amend lien—Interest of timber licensee in land.]
—Where the land sought to be charged by lien is misdescribed in the lien affidavits, the Court will not give leave to amend by correcting the description, as that would in effect be creating a lien, and the statute provides a specific mode for creating a lien. Section 54 of the Land Act, which vests in the holder of a special timber license all rights of property in all trees, timber and lumber cut within the limits of the license during the term thereof, does not give any estate in the land itself chargeable under the Mechanics' Lien Act.

Rafuse v. Hunter, 12 B.C.R. 126 (Wilson, Co.J.).

-Building contractors-Sub-contractors-Suppliers of materials.]—The privilege given to labourers, workmen, architects and builders by the Civil Code, Arts. 2013 et seq., extends only to persons of the classes mentioned under engagement with the owner of lands or the building contractors employed by him, and does not enure to the benefit of sub-contractors or persons furnishing labour or materials without direct agreement with or knowledge of the owner.

Fréchette v. Ouimet, Q.R. 28 S.C. 4 (Sup. Ct.).

-Time for filing-General authority conferred verbally-Subsequently limited by writing.]-Whether material is supplied in good faith for the purpose of completing a contract, or as a pretext to revive a right to file a lien, is a question of fact for the trial Judge, and his decision on such fact should govern. Where an agent is vested with general authority, and such authority is subsequently sought to be limited by writing, notice of such subsequent limitation must be conveyed to third parties having dealings with the agent. In the absence of such notice the principal is estopped from setting up the limitation as against a third party acting bona fide. Whether authority has been conferred on an agent is a question of fact, which may be proved by showing that it was expressly given; or the acts of recognition by the principal may be such that the authority may be inferred. When the relationship of debtor and creditor is established on the hearing of a claim for a mechanic's lien, the jurisdiction of the County Court Judge to give a judgment in personam arises under section 23 of the Mechanics' Lien Act Amendment Act, 1900. A principal who, knowing that an agent with a limited authority is assuming to exercise a general authority, stands by and permits third persons to alter their position on the faith of the existence in fact of the pretended authority, cannot afterwards, against such third persons dispute its existence.

Sayward v. Dunsmuir, 11 B.C.R. 375.

-Material supplied-Request, privity and consent and credit of owner.]-Under the Mechanics' Lien Act, in order to create a lien on the property of the owner in favour of the material man, there must in all cases be a request of the owner and the furnishing of the materials in pursuance of that request, either upon the owner's credit or on his behalf or with his privity or consent or for his direct benefit. In the circumstances of this case, it was held that the person who had furhished the materials had a direct lien upon the land and as against the owner, and not a sub-lien upon the moneys owing by the owner to the contractor or upon the statutory drawback. Slattery v. Lillis, 10 O.L.R. 697 (D.C.).

-Mechanics' Lien Act-Material man, lien by-Appropriation of payment on account.]-Defendant Horrobin contracted to build a house for defendant Henshaw. Horrobin contracted with plaintiffs to supply the lumber and building materials. Previous to this, Horrobin, who was indebted to the plaintiffs, gave them a 30day note for $1,700, on which, about due date he paid them $1,000 on account, in doing which he overdrew his bank account by about that sum. A few days afterwards he was paid the sum of $1,-200 by cheque, stated on its face to be "re Mrs. Henshaw." This cheque Horrobin endorsed over to his bank, making good his overdraft, which he had obtained on the strength of the promise of defendant Henshawi's payment. Plaintiffs applied the $1,000 payment to the reduction of the overdue note. Horrobin, through injuries received from a fall, was unable to give evidence at the trial so that the statement by plaintiffs' accountant that there was no appropriation by Horrobin of the $1,000 to defendant Henshaw's account, was not contradicted. Plaintiffs placed a lien on the building for $948.45. The trial Judge came to the conclusion that the $1,700 note must have included some of the materials supplied for the house in question, and that defendant Henshaw was entitled to a credit of some amount which the accounts ought to show, and dismissed the action as against defendants:-Held, on appeal. that there had been no appropriation by Horrobin, but held, on the facts, that as there had been a shortage in delivery of lumber entitling defendant Henshaw to a certain credit, the claim had been brought for too much and there should be a reference.

British Columbia Mills v. Horrobin, 12 B.C.R. 426.

—Mechanics' lien—Lien of material man—Registration of one lien against three separate owners.]—A material man is not entitled, under the Mechanics' Lien Act, R. S.O. 1897, c. 153, to register, as one individual claim, a lien for the amount due for materials supplied by him to a contractor, against all the lands jointly of the owners of different parcels of land, who have made separate contracts with the contractor for the erection of houses on their respective parcels. Neither can the registered lien nor the statement of claim in such a lien proceeding be amended so as to claim against each parcel the amount entering into the construction of the building thereon. The owners of separate parcels of land made separate contracts with a contractor for the erection of houses on their respective parcels and materials were furnished by a material man to the contractor, which were used by him in the erection of the houses;—Held, that the material man was not empowered, under the Mechanics' Lien Act, to register a lien for the total amount against all the lands jointly.

Dunn v. McCallum, 14 O.L.R. 249.

-Statement of claim-Computation of time for filing-Commencement of action.]-The 90 days allowed by section 24 of the Mechanics' Lien Act, R.S.O. 1897, e. 153, for commencing an action to realize a claim, are not to be computed exclusively of long vacation. Although such an action is begun by a proceeding called a "statement of claim," the Rules of Court with respect to the filing of the statement of claim in an action begun by writ of summons, are not applicable to it. Where the last of the materials in respect of which the plaintiffs claimed a lien were furnished on the 30th May, 1907, and the lien was registered within a month, but the action for the enforcement was not begun by the filing of a statement of claim until the 23rd September, 1907, it was held that the lien had ceased to exist, was held that the lien had ceased to exist. Canada Sand, Lime and Brick Co. v. Ottaway, 15 O.L.R. 128.

—Mechanics' Lien Act—Dominion Railway—Jurisdiction.]—A lien under the Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 153, cannot be enforced against the railway of a company incorporated under a Dominion Act, and de clared thereby to be a company incorporated for the general advantage of Canada, Decision of a Divisional Court, 13 O.L.R. 169, affirmed.

Crawford v. Tilden, 14 O.L.R. 572 (C. A.), 6 Can, Ry. Cas. 437.

—Completion of contract—Time for filing claim.]—The time limited for the registration of claims for liens by section 20 of the Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 110, does not commence to run until there has been such performance of the contract as would entitle the contractor to maintain an action for the whole amount due thereunder. The judgment appealed from, 16 Man, R. 366, was reversed. The Court refused to quash the appeal on the ground that the right of appeal had been taken away by section 36 of the statute above referred to.

Day v. Crown Grain Company, 39 Can. S.C.R. 258, affirmed, Crown Grain Co. v. Day [1908] A.C. 504.

—Pleading.]—Under section 45 of the Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act. R.S.M. 1902, c. 110, and the form No. 7 in the schedule of forms appended to the Act, it is permissible for a defendant, in an action under that Act, to plead that the lien asserted by the plaintiff was not filed, and that the proceedings had not been instituted, within the time required by law, but not that the plaintiff was not entitled to said lien which is only an allegation of a conclusion of law.

Imperial Elevator Co. v. Welch, 16 Man. R. 136.

-Reserve of percentage of contract price -Payments to material men and wageearners out of the reserve.]-The owner of a building in course of erection, when the contract price exceeds $15,000, being required by section 9 of the Mechanics and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 110, to keep back fifteen per cent. of the amounts from time to time earned by the contractor and retain such percentages until thirty days after the completion or abandonment of the contract for the benefit of sub-contractors who may become entitled to file liens under the Act, must reserve such percentages at his peril, and cannot afterwards, in an action by a person who has supplied materials, deduct therefrom any payments he may have made under section 10 of the Act for wages or materials in order to prevent the filing of liens therefor, as section 10 at the end expressly says in effect that payments made under it are not to "affect the percentage to be retained by the owner as provided by" section 9. McArthur v. Martinson, 16 Man. R. 387.

—Taking promissory note for amount of claim.]—Notwithstanding sub-section (c) of section 24 of the Mechanics' and Wage Earners' Lien Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 110, if a person claiming a lien under the Act takes a promissory note for the amount and discounts it he thereby forfeits his right to a lien.

Arbuthnot Co. v. Winnipeg Manufacturing Co., 16 Man. R. 401.

—Contractor—Notice.]—In the matter of a lien the prescribed formalities are essential and should be strictly observed; a builder desiring to preserve his lien as such should give the owner of the immovable on which he wishes to have a lien a notice in writing of the contract within eight days from the date on which it was signed pursuant to the provisions of Art. 2013c C.C.

Moreau v. Guimont, 8 Que. P.R. 424 (Loranger, J.).

-Discounting promissory note for claim.]
-The provision in sub-section (e) of section 24 of the Mechanies' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 110, that the acceptance, by a person claiming a lien under the Act, of any promissory note for the claim shall not merge, waive, pay, satisfy, prejudice or destroy any lien created by the Act, unless the lien holder agrees in writing that it shall have that effect, does not protect the lien holder if he discounts or transfers such note and in that event his lien is lost.

National Supply Co. v. Horrobin, 16 Man. R. 472.

-Mechanics' lien-Statement of claim ant's residence and description of goods supplied.]-A claim for a lien under the Mechanics' Lien and Wage-Earners' Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 153, was made out on a printed form, and was against the contractor for the erection of certain buildings, whom the claimant believed to be, although another person was the owner, The claim was for "material supplied" on or before a named date, no description of the materials being given and no mention being made of the commencement of the lien, words for that purpose contained in the printed form having been struck out. The claimant's residence was given as "of Toronto":-Held, 1. That the claimant's residence was sufficiently designated. 2. That the claim against the contractor was sufficient, the Act merely requiring it to be made against the owner or person believed to be the owner. That it was not necessary to give the date of the commencement of the lien: and 4. That while the statement "materials supplied" was not a substantial compliance with the Act, yet under s. 19 it did not invalidate the lien, no prejudice being occasioned thereby; and that the lien was therefore valid.

Barrington v. Martin, 16 O.L.R. 635.

-Parties-Procedure to add-Striking out unnecessary or improper parties.] - The proper interpretation of ss. 18, 19, 20 of the Mechanics' Lien Act is:-"Once an action to enforce a mechanic's lien is commenced it is improper for another lien holder, in respect of the same subject matter, to commence an action, because all suits or proceedings brought by a lien holder shall be taken to be brought on behalf of all lien holders who became parties within the time limited for instituting proceedings":-Semble, that where a lien holder is plaintiff in an action on his lien, it is improper to join other lien holders as parties defendant. Held, such other lien holders may become parties by order of a Judge on ex parte application under s. 18.

-Contract price payable in instalments-Default.]-Where the contract price is payable in instalments, if default is made in payment of an instalment, the contractor, prior to the falling due of the later instalments, can commence proceed-ings under the Mechanics' Lien Act to enforce his lien. The words in s. 7 of the Act: "No further proceedings shall be taken in the action until after such ex tension of time," are to be construed distributively, and default in payment of any deferred payments entitles the lien holder to take any further proper proceedings in the action. Section 17 of the Act, requiring the contractor to post up a copy of the pay roll, etc., is intended solely to protect the labourers, and to afford the owner the means of securing himself from liability to the labourers, and non-compliance by the contractor with this section does not prevent his lien coming into existence, or nullify a lien already existing, or prevent the lien holder from keeping it alive by commencing proceedings, in accordance with the Act. Spears v. Bannerman, 1 Alta. R. 98.

—Jurisdiction of District Court.]—Held, that the District Court has no jurisdiction in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien filed under the provisions of the Mechanics' Lien Ordinance of the Northwest Territories before the Mechanics' Lien Act of 1907 came into force; but such lien must be enforced in the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan.

The Craftsmen v. Hunter, 1 Sask. R. 88.

—Mechanic's lien—Limit of costs—Counsel fee.]—Counsel fees not shown to have been actually disbursed by the solicitor are not taxable as disbursements in a mechanic's lien action. Cobban v. Lake Simcoe (1903), 5 O.L.R. 447, followed.

Leibrock v. Adams, 17 Man. R. 575.

-Jurisdiction-Proceedings by originating summons-Costs.]—Section 21 of the Mechanics' Lien Act is merely permissive, and does not exclude the ordinary procedure by writ of summons:-Held, the combined effect of the Mechanics' Lien Act, s. 2, sub-s. 1, and the District Court Act, ss. 23 and 24, and the Supreme Court Act, ss. 9 to 23, is to vest in the District Court jurisdiction in mechanics' lien cases where the amount involved is under four hundred dollars; but in such cases the Supreme Court has concurrent jurisdiction. Semble, costs as between party and party will, however, in such cases as a rule only be allowed on the scale or tariff applicable to the District Court, in whichever Court proceedings are instituted. Freeze v. Carry, 1 Alta. R. 81.

-Workman's lien-Sub-contractor - Notice to owner.]-The lien on immovables under Art. 2013 et seq. C.C., exists for the benefit of workmen in the service of sub-contractors though no notice of the sub-contract has been given to the owner. It is sufficient if there is given to the latter a verbal notice, before a witness, that the workmen have not been paid for each term of payment due them. Therefore, they can register their claims in the manner and for the purposes provided for by Art. 2018; C.C.

Rousseau v. Toupin, Q.R. 32 S.C. 228.

—Builder's lien—Sub-contractor—Notice—Service on architect—Art. 2013c C.C.] — Notice given by a sub-contractor after the expiration of eight days as provided by Art. 2013c C.C., does not give rise to the lien provided for by that Article. The architect employed to superintend the construction of a building is not agent of the owner for the purpose of being served with such notice.

Sharpe v. Budd, Q.R. 17 K.B. 17.

-Computation of time-"Thirty days," how calculated-Promissory note of owner.]—The Mechanics' Lien Act, 6 Edw. VII. c. 21, s. 13, provides that "the lien shall . . . cease . . . after the expiration of thirty-one days, . . . after the claimant has ceased from any cause to work thereon, or place or furnish the materials therefor":-Held, that the doing of work, or supplying materials, even of a trivial character, should be taken into consideration in determining when the claimant "has ceased," etc., etc., if the work was done, or material furnished, in good faith, to complete the contract, and not colourably to revive the lien. Held, further, that if the claimant has delayed completion, in order to give the owner time to arrange for payment, by arrangement with the owner, and work is then done to keep the lien alive, the owner having accepted the benefit of the delay, and the work being necessary, the completion of such work will be taken as the date upon which the claimant "has ceased," etc., etc.; and semble, it makes no difference that such work was merely part of an "extra." It revives the lien in respect of the whole work. Section 35 provides that: "Every lien shall absolutely cease to exist after the expiration of thirty days, after the filing of the affidavit . . . unless the claimant shall have instituted proceedings . and a certificate thereof is duly filed." Held, that in computing the period of thirty days, fractions of a day will not be considered, and hence where the affi-davit was registered 12th December at 11 a.m., and certificate filed on the 11th January, at 11.30 a.m., the filing was in time. Held, that the claimant does not waive, release, lose or extinguish his lien, even to the extent of the amount of the note, by taking and negotiating the owner's promissory note in part payment of the amount then due. The claimant is entitled to enforce his lien for the full amount due him. Held, that the words in s. 4: 'land.... occupied thereby or enjoyed therewith,' are not necessarily restricted to the particular lot upon which the building is situated, but will include other (adjoining?) lots intended for use with the house.

Clarke v. Moore, 1 Alta. R. 49.

—Employment of workmen "by the day."]—A workman employed at a rate per hour is not a workman employed "by the day" within the meaning of s. 3 of the Builders' and Workmen's Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 14, and can have no direct claim against the proprietor, under s. 4 of the Act, for his wages earned in the erection of a building by his employer for the proprietor.

Dunn v. Sedziak, 17 Man. R. 484.

-Manitoba Act, R.S.M. c. 110, s. 36, limiting right of appeal ultra vires.] - By s. 101 of the British North America Act, 1867, the Parliament of Canada was authorized to establish the Supreme Court of Canada, the existing statute being R.S.C. 1906, c. 139, ss. 35 and 36 of which define its appellate jurisdiction in respect of any final judgment of the highest Court of final resort now or hereafter established in any Province of Canada. The Manitoba Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, R.S.M. c. 110, s. 36, applies to the suit under appeal and enacts that in suits relating to liens the judgment of the Manitoba Court of King's Bench shall be final and that no appeal shall lie therefrom:— Held, that the provincial Act could not circumscribe the appellate jurisdiction granted by the Dominion Act.

Crown Grain Company v. Day, [1908], A.C. 504.

-Claims of wage-earners - Abandoned contract-Ascertainment of sum upon which percentage to be computed.] - The defendant P. contracted to build a house for the defendant T., but abandoned the contract when the work was not half done. Liens were claimed by wage-earners, and proceedings were had under the provisions of the Mechanics' Lien Act. It was contended that s. 14 (3) lays down a rule for wage-earners, in a case in which the contract has not been completely fulfilled, different from the rule in any other set of circumstances, and that the only thing to be looked at is the value of the work done and materials furnished by the contractor: -Held, that the interpretation of the words of s. 14 (3) "the percentage aforesaid shall be calculated on the work done and materials furnished by the contractor," is to be found from an examination of the course of legislation, and there is nothing therein to indicate that "the percentage aforesaid" is not the same percentage as that in s. 14 (1) and in s. 11 of the present Act; and, therefore, in ascertaining the amount upon which is to be computed the 20 per cent, provided by the Act, the value of the work done and materials furnished is to be calculated upon "the basis of the price to be paid for the whole contract."

Cole v. Pearson, 17 O.L.R. 46.

-- Mechanic's lien-Certificate of lis pendens.]—Under section 22 of the Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 110, in order to preserve a mechanic's lien, it is necessary, besides com mencing an action, to register a certificate of lis pendens in respect thereof, according to form No. 6 in the schedule, in the proper registry or land titles office within the time prescribed, and a certificate that some title or interest in the land is called in question, without any reference to a mechanic's lien, is not a sufficient compliance with the statute. Although the lien may be registered before commencing or during the progress of the work, yet an action thereon cannot be commenced before completion.

Curtis v. Richardson, 18 Man. R. 519.

—Material man—Notice.]—The lien of the person who supplies materials for an immovable of which they become part only arises on observance of the necessary condition of giving notice to the owner before delivery, specifying the contracts under which they are supplied, their cost and describing the immovable for which they are intended.

Carrière v. Sigouin, Q.R. 18 K.B. 176, affirming 33 S.C. 423.

-Mechanic's lien-Time of registration-Goods supplied-Entire contract.]-Defendant B. contracted with defendant F. to build a house for the latter. Plaintiff supplied at different times during the work hardware and installed plumbing and heating apparatus, and not being paid filed a lien. The last work done was on the furnace, on January 3rd, the other work done by plaintiff having been completed and material supplied at an earlier date. The lien was filed on February 2nd. No formal notice was given by Smith to Fry of his claim as a sub-contractor but payment of the account had been discussed between them on several occasions, and Fry had promised to protect Smith. Fry also claimed that the work had not been finished by Bernhardt in accordance with the contract, that no architect's certificate had been produced and that he was entitled to set off certain damages.

It appeared, however, that he had taken possession of the premises and that accounts had been stated to some extent and a balance found due:-Held, that the plumbing, heating and building hardware were all supplied with the same object by the one party on the one hand to the one party on the other, standing in the same relationship, and were so supplied as material and labour coming within the scope of the plaintiff's business and were so bound into one as to form an entire contract and not as separate con tracts or deliveries and the last work on the whole being done on the 3rd of January the lien was filed in time. (2) That the defendant Fry by his conversation with plaintiff and assurance of protection of the account had waived notice of claim of lien. (3) That by taking possession of the premises, selling the same an l stating accounts with Bernhardt, Fry had accepted the work and waived the presentation of an architect's certificate. (4) Damages for delay in performance cannot be set off against a sub-contractor (Ord. 1903, c. 18).

Smith v. Bernhardt, 2 Sask. R. 315.

-Contract with school district-Right to file lien.]-A school district duly organized in Saskatchewan and declared to be a corporation, let a contract for the erection of a school building. A sub-contractor filed a mechanic's lien against the building, and not being paid, brought action to enforce the lien. It was objected that the lien was not enforceable against the lands of a school district:-Held, that the lands of a school district were liable to be sold under the provisions of the Mechanics' Lien Act. 2. The provisions of s. 9 of the School Assessment Ordinance providing a means of realizing the amount of a judgment against a school district do not exclude other remedies.

Lee v. Broley, 2 Sask. R. 288.

-Material for building-Notice.]-The no tice required by Art. 2013g, C.C., 59 Vict. c. 46, s. 2, to give to the person furnishing materials for a building a lien under the first paragraph of Art. 2013 and the hypothee provided for by Art. 2013 C.C. is necessary whether he deals directly with the owner or by sub-contract from the contractor.

Racocot v. The W. Rutherford & Sons Co., Q.R. 36 S.C. 97 (Ct. Rev.).

-Lien of del credere agent-Filing certificate lis of pendens-Neglect of registrar-Payment by promissory note.]-Del credere agents supplying materials have such an interest in the goods as entitles them to a mechanics' lien, as material men under the Mechanics' Lien Act. One claim of lien can be filed in respect of all goods supplied, though from different principals, and the time for filing it will run from the date of the last delivery, irrespective of whose goods constitute it. Delivery of the certificate of lis pendens to the land titles office before 4 p.m. on the last day for filing is, as against the "owner," a suffistanding that the registration is not completed until the next day:-Semble, that the lien holder cannot be prejudiced by the neglect of the registrar; but quære, where a question of priority arises as against rival encumbrancers who may have been misled by the registrar's error. A mechanic's lien is not waived by the claimant accepting and negotiating a promissory note from the contractor. Where the claimant, a material man, bad deliver ed a small quantity of brick by the contractor's orders, some six weeks after he had been given a promissory note for the bulk of the material supplied by him, under a general contract to supply all the brick required; and it appeared that more bricks were at the time still required for the completion of the building, and it was not shown that the claimant had not acted in good faith, or that the arrangement for supplying the bricks had been terminated when the note was given:-Held, that the claimant had not "ceased from any cause to place or furnish materials," prior to such last delivery, although it was not shown that the brick had gone into the building, and whatever the motives of the contractor in giving the order. In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien the onus does not lie upon the plaintiff to show that there is a sum of money owing by the owner to the contractor out of which the lien can be realized. If this is disputed it is a matter of defence.

Gorman v. Archibald, 1 Alta. R. 524.

-Costs-Commission of 25 per cent. -Several successful lien claimants.]-Under section 37 of the Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 100, where there are several successful lien holders besides the plaintiff, the maximum of costs, exclusive of disbursements, that can be allowed to the plaintiff is twentyfive per cent, of the total amount awarded to him and the other lien holders, reduced by the total sum of costs awarded to the other lien holders, so that in no event shall the defendant have to pay in costs, exclusive of disbursements, a sum greater than twenty-five per cent. of all sums awarded against him to lien holders in the action.

McDonald Dure Lumber Co. v. Work man, 18 Man. R. 419.

-Payment by owner to contractor-Liability of owner limited by contract price -Lien claimed by partnership of which "owner" a member.]-A lien arises and attaches, under the Mechanics' Lien Act, as soon as work is done or materials furnished, subject to be increased or decreased in amount, from time to time, as further work is done or materials furnished. on the one hand, or payments made to the lien holder on the other hand. Payments made by the owner to the contractor after the lien has attached, as no discharge of such liens for work and materials; but neither the owners nor the land can be held liable to the lien holders for a greater aggregate sum than the amount of the contract price. A claimant under the Act is not bound to give any notice of lien to the owner. A lien claimed by a partnership stands in no different position to any other lien by reason of "the owner" being a member of the partnership. Judgment of Harvey, J., 1 Alta. R. 109, affirmed.

-Court sale-Arrears of taxes-Vendor and purchaser-Mechanics' lien action -Plaintiffs' right to costs.]-The right, title and interest of certain parties under a lease of lands was offered for sale by the Court, pursuant to a judgment in a mechanic's lien action. The lands were, at the time of the sale, subject to a tax imposed by the Supplementary Revenue Act, 1907, though this was not known either to the vendors or purchaser:-Held, that the purchaser took subject to the tax, and the utmost relief to which he was entitled was to have the contract wholly rescinded. Per Anglin, J .: - Where, in a Mechanics' Lien Act, the defendants unsuccessfully appealed to the Divisional Court. that the Master should have added to the amount allowed the plaintiffs the costs of the appeal successfully opposed by them. Per Anglin, J.:-The judgment in the action having directed the Master to compute and tax subsequent interest and subsequent costs, the Master should have tax ed to the plaintiffs their costs in connection with the sale proceedings, the same not exceeding 25 per cent. of the judg-ment recovered, R.S.O. 1897, c. 153, s. 41, and not merely the disbursements.

—Mechanic's lien—Sub-coutractor—Material man—Registration of iten—Time—Material not actually used in building or placed on land—R.S.O. 1817, c. 153, ss. 4, 22.]—The plaintiffs contracted with E. to supply him with lumber to be used in the construction of a building which he was erecting for the defendant on lands in Port Arthur, at the price of $454.82. The lumber was sent in different shipments, the last of which arrived at Port Arthur on the 11th November, 1907, and was taken possession of by E.'s foreman, but was not in fact used in the defendant's building or placed upon his land. E having made default in payment, the plaintiffs on the 10th December registered a claim for lien on the lands under the Mechanics' Lien Act for the price of the lumber:— Held, that the lien was registered too late, as it was not registered until more than thirty days had elapsed since any material furnished by the plaintiffs had been placed upon the land or used in the construction of the building. Bunting v. Bell (1876), 23 Gr. 584; and Hall v. Hogg (1890), 20 O.R. 13, considered. Semble, that the lien would have attached if the material had been placed upon the land, under the control of the owner within the thirty days, even although not incorporated in the building.

-Mechanics' lien-Time of completion -Notes discounted by bank - Notice to owner.]-By agreement dated the 23rd of December, 1907, the defendant, National Construction Company, Limited, agreed with the defendant Jsong Mong Lin to construct a building upon the property of the last named defendant for the sum of $80,000. The plaintiffs furnished material from time to time during the course of construction. The construction company got into financial difficulties and was unable to complete its contract. On the 24th of October, 1908, a deed of the property from Jsong Mong Lin to her husband, Loo Gee Wing, was executed and deposited in the land registry office with the application to register same. On the 28th of October, 1908, the plaintiffs' solicitors in the Coughlan case, sent to the defendant, Jsong Mong Lin, by registered mail, a notice addressed to her, care of Loo Gee Wing, Victoria, B.C., which notice was in the following terms: "We beg to notify you that J. Coughlan & Company intend to file a mechanic's lien against your property in the city of Victoria, being lots 1 and 2, westerly 10 feet of lot 3, in block 29, district lot 541, for the balance due, amounting to $5,180.92, for goods and materials supplied and work done by the National Construction Company on the building on the above mentioned lots, if not paid to us at once." On the same day that this notice was posted the plaintiffs filed a mechanic's lien in respect of their claim in the County Court office at Vancouver, and on the 27th of November, 1908, commenced action to enforce same. McLean Bros. and other lien claimants had meanwhile commenced their actions in which Loo Gee Wing was made party defendant as owner, and on the 7th of December, 1808, an order was made by Grant, Co.J., upon the application of Loo

On the trial the 's on claim of the present plaintiffs (J. Held, further, that "15 days before the completion of the work" means 15 days before the completion of the work of the building as a whole and not a to 15 days before the completion of the delivery of the material by the vendor. Section 24 of the Mechanics' lien Act Amendonal reed ment Act, 1900, enacts that where in any action for a lien the amount claimed to y of be owing is adjudged to be less than $250. the judgment shall be final and without arial appeal. -Mechanics' liens-Material man-Material supplied outside of contract-Time for registration.]-The words "the last material'' in section 22, sub-s. 2, of the Mechanics' and Wage-Earners' Lien Act. R. S.O. 1897, c. 153, providing that " a claim for lien for materials may be registered before or during the furnishing or placing thereof or within thirty days after the furnishing or placing of the last material so furnished and placed," mean the last material furnished by the material man under his contract, where there is a dis tinct contract; and where he furnishes materials outside of his contract, the time for registering his claim for lien in respect of the material supplied under the contract begins to run from the time of the last delivery of material under the contract, without regard to the time for delivery of material outside of the con tract. Lindop v. Martin (1883), 3 C.L.T. 312, and Morris v. Tharle (1893), 24 O. R. 159, distinguished.

-For wages-Builders' and Workmen's Act, R.S.M. 1902.]—Section 4 of the Builders' and Workmen's Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 14, making a proprietor directly liable for payment of the wages of workmen employed by a contractor doing any work for him, effects what may be termed a statutory assignment to the workmen, to the amount of their unpaid wages, of the moneys payable by the proprietor to the contractor, so that the workmen are entitled to priority over the claims of creditors holding garnishing or other orders against the proprietor in respect of such moneys, and such creditors are entitled to be paid out of any balance in the order in which notices of their several claims were given to the proprietor. such case it makes no difference that the proprietor has made a payment to the contractor which diminishes the amount available for such other creditors.

- Workmen's privilege-Registration -Failure to institute action-Cancellation of registration.]-A workman who causes his claim to be registered on the immovable on which his work is performed in order to secure a privilege or hypothee under Art. 2013b C.C., but neglects to bring suit within the delay prescribed in the article, is not bound to cause the registration to be cancelled at his expense. The owner of the immovable must put him in default (en demeure) to sign the discharge, attend to the cancelling and pay the cost. Roy v. Gariepy, 36 Que. S.C. 238.

-Liability of owner when cost of building exceeds the contract price-Payments by owner.]-The expressions "the owner shall not be liable" and "to make the owner liable," contained in ss. 19 and 32 of the Mechanics' Lien Act, do not refer to personal liability, but refer only to the liability of the property to which a lien attaches. The effect of ss. 19 and 32 is to limit the amount of the liens for which the property can be liable to the amount of the contract price; and when the time is reached when payments already properly made in satisfaction or prevention of liens and the amounts unpaid for which liens exist, together equal the contract price, no liens can arise thereafter. Payments made by the owner, to be proper payments and relieve the owner from liens which have attached, must reach the lien holders, and one lien holder may not be preferred to another so as to defeat that other's lien, the acceptance and negotiation of a note for a portion of the price of goods furnished, for which a lien exists, does not destroy the lien, unless there is an agreement in writing as contemplated by s. 7 of the Act. The defendant Travis, the owner, claimed that the plaintiffs were estopped from prosecuting their claim for lien, their manager having recommended the contractor (the defendant Short) as a fit and proper person to take the contract for the construction of buildings for the defendant Travis:-Held, even if the plaintiffs' manager, under such circumstances as would bind the plaintiffs, did represent the defendant Short to be a fit and proper person, and the defendant Travis acted on the manager's representation, to his prejudice, a claim for the material supplied to the defendant the contractor could in no way be considered as a denial of the truth of the representation, and the principle of estoppel was, therefore, not applicable. On dismissal of plaintiffs' action, and also of defendants' counterclaim, the Court of Appeal will not, on appeal by plaintiffs from the judgment dismissing the action, review the judgment dismissing the counterclaim, unless the defendants also ap-

II. WOODMAN'S LIEN.

-Woodmen's Lien Act-Writ of attachment.]-An affidavit and statement of claim in form 1 of the Act is sufficient to obtain an order for a writ of attachment under 9 of the Woodmen's Lien Act, S.C., 1903, c. 148, and such order will not be set aside although the defendant was solvent and had been held to bail for the same cause of action, and these facts were not disclosed to the Judge on the application for the attachment. The merits of the claim will not be inquired into on an application to set aside the attachment.

-Woodmen's liens-Promissory note-Acceptance for wages-Suspension of lien.]-On the day before the maturity of a promissory note accepted by the plaintiff from the defendants in payment for his services in getting out logs for the defendants, the plaintiff filed a lien under the Woodmen's Lien Act, and brought this action, in which he sought to enforce the lien and to recover a personal judgment against the defendants for the amount of wages for which the note was given:—Held, that the plaintiff, before the maturity of the note, had no cause of action either for wages or for the enforcement of the lien, and the action therefore failed.

Harvey v. Harvey, 19 Que. S.C. 155 (Cir.

-- Woodmen's Lien Act (N.B.) 1894-Logs and timber — Meaning of — Contractor — Whether entitled to lien — Estoppel.] — The appellant, under a contract in writing made by him with the respondent, for an agreed price per thousand, cut upon the land of the respondent a quantity of logs, and hauled them to a portable mill upon the land, where they were manufactured into deals, planks, etc. The work was per-formed in part by the appellant himself with his team, though there was no stipulation to that effect between the parties, but chiefly by labourers and teams, by the terms of the contract hired and paid by the appellant. A portion of the amount due to the appellant under the agreement being unpaid, he caused an attachment to be placed upon the above mentioned deals, planks, etc., claiming a lien thereupon by virtue of The Woodmen's Lien Act, 1894. This attachment was set aside by the Judge of the County Court of K. Upon appeal: Held, per Hanington and Landry, JJ. (Tuck, C.J., dissenting), that the words "logs and timber," as employed in sub-s. 1 of s. 2 of the above Act, were not intended to include deals or other manufactured lumber; also held, per Hanington, Landry, Barker and McLeod, JJ. (Tuck, C.J., dissenting), that the evidence showed the appellant to be a contractor, and not within the class of persons for whose benefit, by s 3 of the Act, liens were established; also held, per Hanington, J., that the respondent, by giving a bond in order to secure the payment of the amount claimed if the lien should prove effectual, and thus obtaining a release of the deals, etc., attached, did not estop himself from disputing the validity of the lien.

-Sub-contractor - Marking logs - Possession.1 - Plaintiff, a sub-contractor of G., defendant, had made a certain number of ties in the winter of 1901-2. G. had the ties made for the intervenant S. Plaintiff not having been paid took a saisie conservatoire against G. on which was seized all the wood which G. had taken out for S. and which had been put in a boom on the river at Saumores. Plaintiff did not make S. a party and the latter intervened and contested the seizure:-Held. 1. The law creating a lien is an exception to the common law and should be strictly construed; he who invokes a lien should establish its existence under a special law creating it. 2. The lien created by Art. 1884c. C.C. applies only to woodcutters or day labourers for payment of wages, but not to contractors or sub-contractors for payment of the contract price, of advances and disbursements made by them. 3. He who, under a contract or sub-contract, cuts wood on his land, converts it by his labour into ties, logs, etc., and delivers it to the person with whom he made the contract, cannot claim on this wood the lien given by Art. 1884c, even though the value of the standing wood was very little. 4. In case of insolvency the lien of the vendor can only be enforced within the 30 days following the delivery of the wood; a saisie conservatoire issued after this delay upon the wood sold cannot be maintained. 5. The lien of the vendor can only be enforced when the goods sold remain in possession of the purchaser in the same state as when sold and so that their identity can be clearly and surely established. Placing the trade mark of dealers in wood upon logs which have been got out for them by contractors is a sufficient taking of possession and evidence of the transfer of property in

- Woodman's lien - Cutting timber Contract of sale-Insolvency.] - The lien given by Art. 1994 (c.) C.C. to workmen hired to cut wood in the forest to secure payment of their wages ceases from the time that the wood passes into possession of a third party who has bought it and paid the price. But the lien is not extinguished by sale of the wood so cut if, in fact, there has been no delivery and it remains in possession of the vendor, and this is so even when the purchaser has made advances to the vendor to an amount exceeding that realized from the subsequent sale of the wood by the curators of the estate of the insolvent vendor.—A contract for sale of the wood, executed before and during the cutting, the consideration of which is advances and prior debts, is not a fraud on the rights of the unpaid workmen since they retain their lien on the wood notwithstanding. In this case the wood in the litigation was sold, by authority of the Court, by the curators of the estate of the wood merchant and the proceeds deposited in Court subject to the final adjudication. By the judgment of the Superior Court part of the wood was declared to be the exclusive property of the petitioners (purchasers) and part subject to the lien of the workmen:—Held, that the curators were not obliged to remit directly to the petitioners the proceeds of sale of the portion belonging to them but should make a regular distribution of it in the usual form of a dividend sheet.

-Hackman-Lien on passenger's baggage for fare.]—A cabman who undertakes to drive a passenger to his destination is justified in detaining a portion of the passenger's baggage as a means of enforcing payment of his legal fare, but he has no other right than this, and where plaintiff having been tendered the legal fare demanded an equal amount for baggage carried, which the passenger, defendant's servant, was unable at the moment to pay, but which plaintiff was told would be paid on the return of defendant, who was expected to arrive immediately, and plaintiff was proceeding to carry away a portion of the baggage, and defendant arriving grasped plaintiff's horse by the head and stopped the carriage:-Held, that defendant was justified in taking the action he did to regain possession of his servant's property. Where on the trial of an action claiming damages for assault the jury declined to accept the directions of the trial Judge, and, disregarding the evidence of defendant and two credible witnesses by whom he was supported, contradicting plaintiff's statements as to any personal assault, and accepting the evidence of plaintiff, who appeared to have been under the influence of intoxicants at the time, gave their verdict in plaintiff's favour. Held, that there must be a new trial. Also, that in such a case the opinion of the trial Judge, who has all the parties before him, and is in a position to estimate the credit to be given to them, is of peculiar value.

McQuarrie v. Duggan, 44 N.S.R. 185.

-Threshers' Lien Ordinance-Seizure by assignees of grain threshed for third person.] -The plaintiff's grain on his farm was seized by the defendants, purporting to be assignees of C., who had threshed the grain for the plaintiff, and who was, as the de-fendants alleged, entitled to a lien on the grain under the Threshers' Lien Ordinance. At the time of the seizure only $38.89 was owing by the plaintiff to C., and that sum was, by agreement between the plaintiff and C., not then payable. The alleged assignment to the defendants was after this agreement. It was a general assignment of all earnings of a threshing machine used by C. in threshing the plaintiff's grain:-Held, that the defendants had no legal right to make the entry and seizure; and, the defendants' seizure being for $160, it was, at all events, for an excessive amount, and illegal. There is no authority under the Ordinance to seize any quantity of grain and claim a lien thereon without ascertaining positively the amount owing and also the quantity of grain seized. Quære, whether a thresher's lien could be considered as assigned by virtue of a general assignment of earnings. Semble, also, that the seizure was illegal by reason of the provisions of the Threshers' Employees Act, 1909. Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to substantial damages; the annoyance caused to him and the injury to his credit and reputation by the seizure were to be considered.

-Charge on land - Prior lien - Voluntary conveyances.] - The defendant who had been for some years in possession of a farm purchased by his father with the intention of giving it to him, and who had in fact devised it to him, purchased a machine from the manufacturers giving his notes therefor, and at the same time executed a document which was duly registered, and in which it was stated that the land had been so "willed" to him that he had a good title thereto, and would not further encumber it, and he thereby charged it with the payment of the notes. The father subsequently conveyed the land to the defendant, but upon the condition of his executing a mortgage, which he did to certain persons who had advanced moneys to him. The defendant, on the ground that the land had been conveyed to him on an alleged trust for his tamily, conveyed it to his wife, the consideration being $1.00 and love and affection, and the wife, for the like consideration, conveyed it to an infant son:-Held, that the charge in favour of the manufacturers was enforceable against the defendant and those claiming under him, by the plaintiff, the assignee of the manufacturers, but was subject to the mortgage; and the evidence displacing any trust in favour of the defendant's family, the conveyances by the defendant and his wife must be treated as merely voluntary and subject to the plaintiff's charge.

-Vendor's lien-Timber-Cut and uncut interest in land - Identification.] - The owner of land by agreement in writing sold the timber on it, removable within three years, taking promissory notes from the purchaser in payment. The purchaser, who was acting as an agent, assigned all his interest in the agreement to his principal and transferred the notes made by his principal to the landowner, who subsequently sold and conveyed the land and all her interest in the timber and notes to the plaintiff. The assignee of the purchaser's rights cut and removed some of the timber from the land and cut and piled on the land a lot of cordwood, which he sold to the defendant, but did not pay the notes. The defendant, who had notice of the contract for the sale of the timber and of the non-payment of the price, sought to remove the wood: -Held, that the sale of the timber was that of an interest in land in respect of which the plaintiff was entitled to a vendor's lien for the amount of the notes, which was not displaced by the cutting and sale of the timber so long as it could be identified and remained on the land, and that he was entitled to an injunction. - Threshers' Lien Act (Man.), 57 Vict. c. 36 — Lien on grain for price of threshing other grain — Seizure of excessive quantity. -A thresher cannot, under the Threshers' Lien Act, 57 Vict. c. 36, maintain a lien on grain for the threshing of which he had been paid to recover the price of a subsequent unpaid threshing. The plaintiff, by his notice put up on the granary, asserted his claim to a lien upon all the grain contained in it which was worth about $86; but the Court found that the amount of the claim for threshing for which he could, under the Act, at the time of the posting of the notice, enforce a lien on such grain, if the proper steps were taken, was only about $26:—Held, that the quantity of grain which the plaintiff attempted to retain was unreasonably large for the amount owing, and that, under s. 2 of the Act, he had forfeited his right of retention of any of it.

- Innkeeper - Pledge.] - The privilege given by law to an innkeeper on the personal effects of his boarders is one of strict law and cannot be extended by the Court even for reasons based on equity.-An innkeeper cannot, under Art. 1816a. - Boarding house keeper.] - Defendant was a boarding house keeper, and plaintiff, while staying with him in a transient manner, brought a large quantity of personal property, consisting of household effects and other articles, to the defendant's house, and left them there, in the meanwhile becoming indebted to the defendant for board. There was some dispute as to the amount due, and the defendant refused to deliver the goods until payment, and claimed a lien on goods to the value of about $1,000 for a small balance due for board:-Held, that a boarding house keeper's lien extends to all goods brought to the premises by the lodger while a guest, and not merely to goods brought for the purpose of the journey. (2) That the lien extends to all the goods, no matter how great the value as compared with the amount due.

M. 1902, c. 159, which gives a livery stable keeper a lien on animals for stabling and feeding them and the same rights and privileges for exercising and enforcing such lien . . . as hotel keepers may have or possess in virtue of the Hotel Keepers Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 75, does not give the livery stable keeper the same right of lien which a hotel keeper has at common law in respect of goods or animals left in his charge by a guest who may have stolen the same, as the latter Act in its terms gives only a lien on the property of persons who may be indebted to the hotel keeper for board or lodging, whatever may be his rights in-dependently of the Act.

—Adverse possession—Exclusion of true owner—Occupation of surface—Maintenance of roof projecting over land in dispute.]-Under the Real Property Limitation Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 133, ss. 4, 5 (1), and 8, the ten years limited by s. 4 begin when the true owner is dispossessed or discontinues possession; the possession to be relied upon by the claimant must be such as involves the exclusion of the true owner; the occupant of the surface of the soil may obtain a title to that surface, while the true owner retains an easement therein, and, subject to such easement, the statutory title is usque ad cœlum; and the right of a person to have his eaves or roof project over another's land is an easement. Therefore, where the defendant claimed title by possession to a strip of land one foot wide, lying between the plaintiff's house and front fence and the true boundary line separating the adjoining lots of the plaintiff and defendant fronting on a city street, and it was not disputed that the defendant had acquired a title to the strip by the statute unless the acts of the plaintiff in maintaining the roof of her house projecting over the strip, or her entries upon the strip, prevented such title accruing:-Held, that the maintaining of the roof was not such a circumstance as to prevent the defendant's exclusive possession, and that all the acts done by the plaintiff, in person or by agent, hich rearge ame, ly a may oard s in-

Grant to uses - Deed of appointment -Intervening adverse possession.] - The purchaser of land in 1870 had it conveyed by the vendor to grantees named by him to hold to such uses as the purchaser should by deed or will appoint, and in default of, and until, appointment to the use of the grantees. The purchaser put his mother in possession of the land, and she remained in possession till her death in 1878, her two daughters, the defendants, living with her, and they after her death continued in possession down to the time of the bringing of this action in 1897, no rent having been paid, nor any acknowledgment of title given. In 1892 the purchaser, in alleged exercise of the power, executed a deed of appointment in favour of his solicitor, who, on the following day conveyed to him in fee simple. He died in 1894, having devised the land to the plaintiffs:—Held, that the grantees to uses took an estate in fee sim-ple which was barred before the execution of the deed of appointment, and that that deed did not give a new starting point to the statute, the estate appointed not being within the meaning of the statute, a future estate coming into existence at the time of the exercise of the power. — Annuity — Will — Charge on land — Arrears — Lunatic.] — By a will made in 1872 a testator, who died in the same year, devised land to two sons, "subject to the payment by my said two sons of the sum of $200 per annum, for the benefit of my son Thomas Anson, which said sum, or annuity, or so much thereof as shall be reasonably necessary for the support and maintenance of my said son Thomas Anson, shall be paid yearly and every year, for and during the natural life of my said son Thomas, to the person or persons who may be his guardian or guardians." The son Thomas Anson was of age at the time of the testator's death but was of unsound mind, and he was declared a lunatic in 1898, and the plaintiffs were appointed committee of his person and estate. After the father's death the son lived with his mother, to whom from time to time till February, 1889, payments were made on account of the annuity:--Held, that the annuity was charged on the land; that it was, therefore, by virtue of s. 2 (3) of the Limitations Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 103, rent within the meaning of that Act; that the payments to the mother, who was the guardian de facto, were good, and that the statute did not begin to run till the last of them was made; that apart from the question of disability the right of action would have been barred at the expiration of ten years from that time; but that by ss. 43 and 44 the time was extended for five years from the removal of disability, or for twenty years; and that, therefore, an action brought in February, 1900, was in time and that six years' arrears could be recovered. Judgment of MacMahon, J., 31 O.R. 504, affirmed.

—Title by possession.] — The acts relied on in support of a claim to title by possession were that the claimant had sold the timber off the land in question; had afterwards cleared it and had sowed and harvested one crop of wheat; had then for some years taken hay from it; and had then used it as pasture land. The land was not wholly enclosed, one end being bounded by a marsh, and through this marsh cattle could and did stray into it:—Held, that there had not been such possession as is necessary to bar the right of the true owner.

- Acknowledgment in writing - Agent -Power of attorney.] - A power of attorney from the executor, resident out of the jurisdiction, of deceased maker of a promissory note to the surviving maker, within the jurisdiction, "to do all things which may be legally requisite for the due proving and carrying out of the provisions" of the will, which, among other things, directs the payment of the testator's debts, does not authorize the surviving maker to bind the estate by an acknowledgment of a debt of which the executor knows nothing, and which is barred at the time. A letter from the executor of one maker of a note to the holder thereof, advising the holder to look to the surviving maker for payment, as he is now doing well, is not a sufficient ac-knowledgment. A direct acknowledgment of the debt in a letter by the executor of one maker of a note to the surviving maker is of no avail to the holder.

- Easement - Street - Right of ingress and egress. j - By 52 Vict. c. 53 (O.), an agreement entered into between the Crown on behalf of the University of Toronto and the City of Toronto for the purpose of restoring a lease for 999 years of a block of land, made to the city for a public park, which had been declared forfeited, was validated, under the circumstances set out in the report, and a street which constituted one of the avenues under the lease, made a public street; but such dedication was not of itself to confer on adjacent property owners any right of ingress or egress thereto; and any owner, who had not, prior to said agreement, acquired rights of access, was required to pay such sum therefor as might be awarded under arbitration proceedings or settled between the parties. The plaintiff subsequently purchased from the defendant lands on said street, the deed containing a covenant by the defendant to indemnify plaintiff against the payment of any money, and all loss, costs or damages he might be obliged to pay for access to said street. The plaintiff's right of access being objected to by the University and use of the same forbidden, a settlement was effected by plaintiff agreeing to pay a named sum, part of which was paid down and an undertaking given to pay the balance by yearly instalments:—Held, that the dedication of the street was a limited one, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount he agreed to pay, and that his remedy was not limited to what he had actually paid. Held, also, assuming that the predecessors in title of the plaintiff had for nearly thirty years before the passing of the Act enjoyed access to and from the avenue, no right thereto had been ac-

Boice v. O'Loane (1878), 3 A.R. 167, and cases following it, followed in preference to Jay v. Johnston [1893], 1 Q.B. 25, 189. Trimble v. Hill (1879), 5 App. Cas. 342, at p. 344, specially considered. The renewal of a writ of summons after its expiration is matter of judicial discretion, and when a County Court Judge had so renewed such a writ as to defeat the operation of the Statute of Limitations, and the defendant made no attempt to appeal from his order, but appeared to the writ without objection, a Divisional Court, on appeal from judgment in the action, refused to entertain an objection to the validity of the writ. Under Ontario Rule 498 the Court may entertain an application to admit new evidence in a proper case on a County Court appeal, not-withstanding R.S.O. c. 55, s. 51, sub-s. 3, under which such an application must be made before the County Court, and this although the time for applying for a new trial

Meehan v. Berry, 38 C.L.J. 554 (Hughes, Co.J.).

- Real Property Limitation Act - Parent and child - Tenancy at will - Accrual of right of entry - Caretaker - Effect of entry by consent. |- In the autumn of 1879 the defendant was put by his father in pos-session of a farm. His tather told him that he had bought the farm for him, but the defendant knew that what was done had not the effect of transferring the title to him, and was aware that it must be obtained either by conveyance or devise from his father. The father did not intend to divest himself of the ownership of the farm, but to leave himself free in devising it, as he intended, to his son, to charge it with the payment of such sum as he might think it right to require him to pay. The defendant continued in possession of the farm until his father's death in 1900, occupying it for his own benefit, and having the exclusive enjoyment of the profits; he paid no rent and rendered no service or other return for it, and gave no acknowledgment of his father's title; he also made valuable permanent improve-ments at his own expense:—Held, that the title of the father had, long before his death, by force of the Real Property Limitation Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 133, become extinguished. The defendant became, upon his entry with the permission of his father, a tenant at will, and that tenancy never having in fact been determined, the father's right of entry first accrued at the expiration of one year from the commencement of it (s. 5, sub-s. 7), and was barred at the expiration of eleven years. There was no evidence that the defendant was a caretaker or servant of his father. Upon the expiration of the tenancy at will the possession of the defendant became that of a tenant at sufferance, and the running of the statute was not stopped by an entry, unless before the statute had operated to extinguish the title of the testator, a new tenancy at will was created; and this would have been the case even if the tenancy at will had been put an end to in fact, and not merely by force of s. 5, sub-s. 7; the effect of the sub-section is, that it is for the purposes of the statute only that the tenancy at will is to be deemed to be determined at the expiration of a year from the time when it began. Held, however, that there was no entry by the father sufficient to prevent the running of the statute; a visit made by the father to the son, within eleven years before action, when he lived with him on the farm for a few days, was not an entry on the land and did not put an end to the existing tenancy at will. In 1879 and 1880 the farm was assessed in the name of the father as well as of the defendant, to the former as "freeholder," and to the latter as "owner," and from 1880 to 1899 to both as freeholders, and in 1882 this was done at the instance of the defendant, who also knew of the way in which the assessment was made in each of these years: -Held, that this was not evidence of a new tenancy at will created within eleven years before the commencement of the action. Doe d. Bennett v. Turner (1840), 7 M. & W. 226, and (1842), 9 M. & W. 643, distinguished. By an agreement in writing, made a few days after the death of the father, between the devisees and legatees under the father's will, the defendant admitted and acknowledged that, although the farm was occupied by him, the father was at the time of his death the owner in fee simple of it, and agreed to abide by the will and to carry out the terms of it. By the will the father devised the farm to the defendant, charged with the payment of $4,000. This agreement was made before the will had been opened or the contents of it known to the defendant; no doubt existed as to the validity of the will; and the object of the agreement was, though this was not known by or communicated to the defendant, to get rid of any difficulty which might arise if the defendant asserted title to the farm under the Real Property Limitation Act, but the defendant did not in fact know of his rights under that statute. Held, that, in these circumstances, the agreement was not, even when viewed as a family arrangement, binding on the defendant. Fane v. Fane (1875), L.R. 20 Eq. 698, applied and followed. Held, also, that, if there was any election by the defendant to take under the will, it was made under a mistake as to his rights; and besides, if the agreement fell, what the defendant did was relied on as being an election, being a part of the same transaction must fall with it. McCowan v. Armstrong, 3 O.L.R. 100.

- Husband and wife - Statute of Limitations-Executors and administrators-Right of retainer.] - In 1876 the plaintiff advanced to her husband the purchase money of certain land subject to a mortgage, and which was accordingly conveyed to him. The existing mortgage was paid off and a fresh mortgage was subsequently executed, the plaintiff joining to bar her dower in it. On his death in 1893 he devised the land to the plaintiff and one of his sons in equal shares. In 1901 the plaintiff obtained an order for partition or sale of so much of the land as had not been sold, and a sale being made she filed a claim upon the proceeds as a creditor for the amount originally advanced by her to purchase the lands. The plaintiff alleged that the land was conveyed to her husband to enable him to vote:—Held, that assuming the purchase money was entrusted by the plaintiff to her husband to invest for her in the purchase of land, that express trust was performed and was at an end when the land was conveyed to him. Held, also, that even assuming the money had been advanced by her by way of loan, her claim was bar-red by the Statute of Limitations, for there is no reason why the Statute of Limitations should not be applied to such a claim by a wife against her husband in the same way as if she were not his wife. Held, also, that though she was her husband's executrix, she had no longer any right of retainer in respect to her alleged debt, as by her own acts, by registering no caution within twelve months and then treating the property as vested in the defendants, the heirs of her co-devisee, she had put the assets out of her own possession and control. Un-der all the circumstances of the case, and in view of the conduct of the plaintiff, held, however, that the transaction was not a loan but a gift by the plaintiff to her hus-

-Interest - Will - Legacy.]-An administrator with the will annexed, who was also a legatee of moneys charged on land, payable six months after the death of the testator, did not sell the land to pay herself the legacy, but held it for some eight years till it could be sold more advantageously:-Held, that the hand to pay and the hand to receive being one and the same, the Statute of Limitations had no application, and the claim for the legacy was a still subsisting claim, with interest as accessory for the period till the fund was in hand for payment.

- Executor de son tort - Payment by.] -A payment or acknowledgment by an executor de son tort cannot be relied on to prevent the Statute of Limitations from operating as a bar, where the action in which it is set up is brought against the lawful personal representative of the de-ceased. But where the executor de son tort has made payments of interest in respect to a promissory note, within six months before action commenced, and the holder of the note brings action against her to make her answerable to the extent of the goods of the deceased come to her hands, it is not open to the defendant, for the purpose of preventing a payment giving a new start to the Statute of Limitations (which effect it would have if made by the lawful representative), to rely on his having been a wrongdoer and not the true representative. As between himself and the plaintiff, as respects payments made by the executor de son tort and their effect, the latter is to be treated as the true representative of the deceased. The Bills of Exchange Act does not deal with the consequences which are to flow from the character which according to its provisions is attached to the promise which a bill or note contains, and therefore these consequences fall to be determined according to the law of the province in which the liability is sought to be enforced.

In 1900 they brought an action against the Canada Atlantic Railway Company, alleging that the embankment was built and level raised un-lawfully and without authority and claim-ing damages for the flooding of their premises and obstruction to their ingress and egress in consequence of such work:-Held, that the trespass and nuisance (if any) complained of were committed in 1888, and the then owner of the property might have taken an action in which the damages would have been assessed once for all. His right of action being barred by lapse of time when the plaintiff's action was taken the same could not be maintained.

His father died before he left the and. In 1870 he deeded the land to his four sons, who sold it in 1873, and by different conveyances the title passed to P. in 1884. In 1896 the descendants of the younger children of M. gave a deed of this land to B., who proceeded to cut timber from it. - Simple contract debt - Conversion into specialty debt - Evidence of.] - Default having been made in the payment of two promissory notes payable to a bank, a trust deed was entered into, to which the defend-ant, the maker of the notes, the defendant's father, an agent of the bank as trustee, and the bank itself, were parties. The deed, after reciting the defendant's indebtedness to the bank and also to his father, and that the father held certain lands as security therefor, the father thereby conveyed the same to the trustees as security, in the first place of his indebtedness, and then for that of the bank, power being given to the trustee to sell the lands on one month's default in payment and on notice in writing by the trustee of his intention to sell. The deed contained an acknowledgment by the defendant of his indebtedness, but there was no covenant by him to pay same. In 1893 written notice having been given by the trustee of his intention to sell, deed of release of all his interest in the lands was given by the defendant to the bank, the deed reciting that it was made to save expense of a sale:-Held, that neither the trust deed nor the deed of release converted the debt into a specialty debt, and the defendant could validly set up the Statute of Limitations as a bar to an action brought in 1902. Bank of Montreal v. Lingham, 5 O.L.R. 519 (MacMahon, J.).

- Solicitor - Retainer - Termination ofsubsequent to judgment.] Costs of solicitor employment or defend an action, subto bring ject possibly to his right to claim payment of his costs on judgment being given, does not terminate on the giving of judgment, so long as anything remains to be done which it is the solicitor's duty under his retainer to do for his client's protection; and even, in the absence of such duty, where he does not elect to treat the contract as then at an end, but under his client's instructions acts for him thereafter in subproceedings, consequent upon sequent the judgment, there is a ation of such original contract, is a continu-Where, therefore, after the giving of judgment in an interpleader issue the solicitor for the defendant against whom judgment had been given, continued, with the client's knowledge, to act for him in the taxation of the plaintiff's costs, and in the preparation and taxation of certain costs which the defendants were entitled to set off, his appointment continued until the completion of these proceedings, so that as against a claim for the amount of his bill of costs the Statute of Limitations only commenced to run therefrom.

Millar v. Kanady, 5 O.L.R. 412 (D.C.).

-Claim against estate of deceased person-Special agreement — Running account — Terms of credit — Demand.] — The plaintiff claimed from the executors of his father-in-law payment of a running account for work done and goods supplied to the testator from 1888 till his death in 1895. No demand for payment was ever made upon the deceased, nor was any account rendered until one was sent in to the defendants on the 16th May, 1895. This action was begun on the 4th May, 1901. The plaintiff and his wife gave evidence of an agreement with the deceased that the plaintiff should keep the account separate from his other accounts, that he should try, if possible, to get on without the money, and to leave it in the hands of the deceased. who said he would save it for the plaintiff, and put it in a house for him or his wife. The plaintiff did keep the account in separate books, which were produced, as also the general books. A witness said that the deceased told him about a year and a half before his death that he had requested the plaintiff to keep the account between them is a little book at home, not in the regular day book, so that, if anything happened, the account would not go in to the wholesale men, and that he intended to buy a house for the plaintiff's wife. Similar evidence, although less distinct, was given by another witness:-Held, that there was sufficient corroboration of the plaintiff's statement. Held, also, that the plaintiff was not obliged to prove a definite term for which credit was given; the agreement was in effect one that the testator was to hold the money at least until the plaintiff demanded it; and as there was no demand before the 16th May, 1895, the action was in time. Held, also, that the agreement was not one which offended against the law relating to frauds upon creditors; and the defendants were not in a position to raise such a question, not having pleaded it.

Wood v. LeBlanc, 34 Can. S.C.R. 627.

- Simple contract debt - Conversion into specialty debt — Payment or acknowledg-ment of debt — Evidence of.]—Two prom-issory notes, payable to a bank, not having been paid in 1884, a trust deed was entered into, to which the defendant, the maker of the notes, the defendant's father, an agent of the bank as trustee, and the bank itself, were parties. The deed, after reciting the defendant's indebtedness to the bank, and also to his father, and that the father held certain lands as security therefor, conveyed the same to the trustee as security, in the first place for the father's indebtedness, and then for that of the bank, with interest at seven per cent. from date power being given to the trustee to sell the lands after notice. The deed contained an acknowledgment by the defendant of his indebtedness, but there was no express covenant by him to pay the same. In 1893, on the plaintiffs pressing for payment, deeds of release were executed by the defendant and the other heirs and next of kin of the father, who was then dead, on the understanding that the father's debts had been paid, whereby after referring to the recitals in the deed of 1884, and reciting that the releases were given to save the expenses of a sale, they released to the plaintiff all their interest in the said lands, and subsequently $5,500 was realized by the plaintiffs from a sale of the lands or the timber thereon:-Held, that the effect of the deed of 1884 was not to convert the debt into a specialty debt, nor did the reference in the deed of 1893 to the recitals in the deed of 1884 so incorporate them in the former as to amount to an acknowledgment of the debt; nor did such deed operate as a transfer or assignment of the interest, if any, which the defendant had in his father's estate, as one of his personal representatives nor did the receipt by the bank of the $5,500 constitute a payment by the defendant on account of the debt, so that no bar was created to the running of the Statute of Limitations, and that it could, therefore, be validly set up by the plaintiffs in 1902, Maclennan, J.A., dissenting on the first point, being of opinion that the deed converted the debt into a specialty. Bank of Montreal v. Lingham, 7 O.L.R. 164 (C.A.).

- Promissory note - Acknowledgment.] -After the expiration of six years from the making of certain promissory notes, the maker wrote to the payee's solicitor stating that he acknowledged his indebtedness on the notes so as to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations, and that in no event would it have made any difference, for statute or no statute the debt was one he would pay, if it took his last penny. He enclosed a letter to the payee himself, stating that he thereby begged to acknowledge his liability to him on the notes, and that the acknowledgment was made by him to prevent the running of the Statute of Limitations. The maker died a couple of years afterwards:-Held, that the claim was taken out of the operation of the statute, both as to principal and also as to interest due. not only at the maturity of the notes, but also after maturity, by way of damages. Re Williams, 7 O.L.R. 156 (C.A.).

— Real Property Limitation Act — Wild land — Boundary — Entry — Occupation— Evidence of possession — Survey.] — In an action of trespass, the dispute was as to the ownership of a strip of land about 53 links in width, which the plaintiff claimed as part of his lot, 16, and the defendants as part of theirs, 17, or if not, as having become theirs by the operation of the Statute of Limitations. Neither of the lots had ever been entered upon or cultivated, and no fence separating them had ever been built. Both parties had cut timber, and that was the only use that had ever been made of either lot:-Held, that the statute did not apply; to render it applicable it would be necessary to show, if not an entry and cultivation of some part of the land, at least an entry and actual occupation. Semble, that, even if the statute applied, there was not, upon the facts, that clear and unequivocal evidence of possession by the defendants of the strip in dispute which was necessary to bar the right of the true owner. Davis v. Henderson (1869), 29 U.C.R. 344, distinguished. Har-ris v. Mudie (1882), 7 A.R. 414, considered. Held, however, that the plaintiff's evidence of his title to the land in question as forming part of his lot was not sufficient to establish it. Proper method of ascertaining the true position of the dividing line between lots pointed out.

Huffman v. Rush, 7 O.L.R. 346 (D.C.).

- Account - Co-owners of land - Partnership - Principal and agent - Trustee -Outlay on land - Rents.] - The plaintiff sold a half interest in land to the defendant, and they agreed to build houses thereon at their joint cost and to raise part of the money for the purpose by mortgages upon the property, and to contribute the remainder in equal shares. The houses were completed, and rented in 1891. The defendant collected the rents on joint account, and paid out of them the interest on the mortgages and the taxes and other outlays upon the property, sending accounts from time to time to the plaintiff. The plaintiff, alleging that the defendant did not contribute his just share of the cost of the houses, and that he had not properly accounted for the rents, brought an action for an account on the 15th August, 1902:-Held, that the plaintiff was barred by the Statute of Limitations in respect of his claim as to the cost of the houses, and also with regard to the rents, except for six years before the commencement of the action; the plaintiff and defendant were not partners; nor was the defendant years is ta-, both t due, s, but ges.

- Acts of ownership - Land in state of nature - Fence built before entry by patentee - Cutting wood - Pasturing cattle -Commenc nent of statutory period-Knowledge of true owner.] — The plaintiff claimed cancellation of a deed as a cloud upon his title, so far as it affected 14 acres of land as to which the plaintiff alleged title in himself, and sought an injunction and damages in respect of trespass thereon:-Held, upon an examination of the defendant's title deeds, that they did not in fact convey the 14 acres, nor even profess to do so, and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to cancellation of the deed. Held, also, upon the evidence, that the plaintiff had established his paper title to the 14 acres. and had sufficiently proved the correctness of a survey and plan showing that the 14 acres were outside of the land covered by the defendant's title deeds. The defendant contended that he had exercised such acts of ownership upon the 14 acres more than ten years before action as had dispossessed the plaintiff, and constituted such a possession by himself as to bar the action. The 14 acres had never been built upon or cleared or cultivated or resided The defendant relied upon the building of a brush fence along the south limit of the 14 acres in 1880 or 1881 by his predecessor in title. At that time the title to the 14 acres was still in the heirs of the patentee, who had never taken possession: -Held, that the building of the fence was of no significance as an act of ownership. Being built on the land while it belonged to the heirs of the patentee, it became their property, and the plaintiff having become the owner and having entered in 1888, before the statutory period had run, it became his property as absolutely as if he had built it himself. The defendant also relied upon acts done since 1888, namely, cutting and removing wood and pasturing cattle upon the 14 acres:-Held, that these acts, being intermittent and isolated, were merely occasional acts of trespass, and insufficient to constitute possession of the kind required by the statute to bar the true owner. Semble, also, that the land being in a state of nature, and there being no evidence that the grantee of the Crown, or his heirs or assigns, had taken actual possession, by residing upon or cultivating any portion thereof, until the plaintiff acquired the title of the heirs in 1887, or that they or any of them had any knowledge before that date of the land having been in the actual possession of the defendant or of any one under whom he claimed, even if the defendant's acts amounted to possession, he could not claim to have acquired a title to it, for in such a case time runs from knowledge by the true owner of the entry on his land, and must have run for 20 years to bar his title. Judgment of Teetzel, J., reversed.

Reynolds v. Trivett, 7 O.L.R. 623 (C.A.).

— Mortgage — Interest — Default — Acceleration.] — Under a mortgage containing the statutory provision that in default of the payment of the interest the principal shall become payable, default in payment of interest has the effect of making the principal payable as if the time for payment had fully come, and a right of action therefore then arises and the Statute of Limitation then begins to run. Judgment of Street, J., 6 O.L.R. 247, affirmed. McFadden v. Brandon, 8 O.L.R. 610 (C.A.).

- Railway bonds - Interest coupons -Arrears.] - Bonds under seal issued by a railway company contained a covenant to pay half yearly instalments of interest evidenced by attached coupons, and payment of principal and interest was secured by a mortgage of the undertaking, which also contained a covenant to pay:-Held, in foreclosure proceedings upon this mortgage, that the interest being a specialty debt and the mortgaged undertaking consisting in part of realty and in part of personalty not subject to division, the holders of coupons, whether attached to the bonds or detached therefrom, were entitled rank for all instalments which had fallen due within twenty years, and not merely those which had fallen due within six years. Judgment of Boyd, C., 6 O.L.R. 534, affirmed. Held, also, that even if the case were dealt with upon the footing of the mortgage being one of realty only, there was the right to rank, for there were no subsequent encumbrancers, and there had been shortly before the claims were filed a valid acknowldgment by the company of liability for all the interest in question.

- Landlord and tenant - Payment of taxes by tenant.] - The lessee of a house at a yearly rental, without taxes, agreed with the lessor after he had been in possession of the house for some time to pay the municipal taxes and water rates chargeable in respect of the house on the understanding that the amount would be deducted from the rent payable by him. He remained in possession of the house for more than eleven years prior to the time of the bringing of the action, having paid the taxes and water rates each year to the municipal authorities, but not having made any payments to the lessor:-In an action for foreclosure by a mortgagee of the lessor under a mortgage made subsequent to the lease, it was held that, even assuming the agreement had been intended to relate to future years (which was doubtful), the payments of taxes and water rates did not operate to prevent the bar of the statute. Finch v. Gilroy (1889), 16 A.R. 484, applied.

— Promissory note — Part payment — Payment by husband out of wife's monies.] — A husband, who had authority from his wife to collect rents for her, and to apply the same as he saw fit, either for his own or her benefit, made payments on the joint promissory note of himself and his wife, but there was nothing to show any specific application of any part of the moneys collected on the note, or her knowledge or consent:—Held, that such payments could not be treated as part payments by the wife on the note, so as to operate as a bar to the running of the Statute of Limitations.

- Title to undivided half of lot - Possession as against co-tenant in common Husband and wife.] - On and after the 1st March, 1872, the defendants and one A. were the owners as tenants in common of a lot containing 50 acres, and A. alone was in possession. He died on the 30th March, 1872, having by his will devised his undivided half to his wife for life. The remainder descended to his father. After A.'s death his widow continued in possession of the whole lot. On the 4th March, 1873, she intermarried with the plaintiff, and they continued in sole possession until the 24th December, 1887, when they conveyed the south half of the lot to the defendant, who entered into possession thereof. The plaintiff and his wife continued in possession of the north half till the death of the wife, without issue, on the 3rd March, 1903, and after that the plaintiff remained in possession. A.'s father died in 1885, having devised his undivided estate in remainder in the whole lot to the defendant. The plaintiff sought a declaration that he was seized in fee simple of an undivided half of the north half, namely, the defendant's original undivided half, by virtue of possession for more than the statutory period: - Held, that, as against the defendant, the possession was that of the plaintiff's wife, not of the plaintiff and his wife jointly, and that if that possession ripened into a title, it was gained by the wife alone, and during her lifetime. At the time of the marriage she was in sole possession, and as against the defendant's undivided half the Statute of Limitations had begun to run in her fayour; the interest in real estate which she thus had secured to her on her marriage by s. 1 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1872, free from any estate or claim of the plaintiff. Semble, although the plaintiff was not entitled to a declaration of title, that he could not be dispossessed by the defendant.

Myers v. Ruport, 8 O.L.R. 668 (C.A.).

- Ontario Railway Act - Limitation of actions - "By reason of the railway." The plaintiff brought an action for damages for injuries received in an accident while travelling on an unconditional free pass upon the defendants' railway. The only evidence of negligence was that there was a head-on collision between two cars on defendants' line, the managed by the defendants' servants:-Held, that although brought more than six months after the happening of the accident, the action was not barred under the limitation clause of the General Railway Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 207, s. 42, incorporated into the defendants' special Act—because it was based on the defendants' breach of their common law duty, founded on their undertaking to carry the plaintiff safely, and not on injury sustained "by reason of the railway" within the meaning of that clause. Semble, that "may prove that the same was done in pursuance of and by authority of this Act and the Special Act" in the latter part of R.S.O. 1897, c. 207, s. 41 (1), mean no more than "may prove that the damage or injury was sustained by reason of the railway," as in the earlier part of the section.

— Interest — Arrears — Railway bond — Mortgage — Foreclosure.] — Bonds under seal issued by a railway company contained a covenant to pay half yearly instalments of interest evidenced by attached coupons, and payment of principal and interest was secured by a mortgage of the undertaking. which also contained a covenant to pay:-Held, in foreclosure proceedings upon the mortgage, that the interest being a specialty debt and the mortgaged undertaking consisting in part of realty and in part of personalty not subject to division, the holders of coupons, whether attached to the bonds or detached therefrom, were entitled to rank for all instalments which had fallen due within twenty years and not merely for those which had fallen due within six years. Judgment of Boyd, C., 6 O.L.R. 534, 3 Can. Ry. Cas. 339, affirmed. Held, also, that even if the case were dealt with upon the footing of the mortgage being one of realty only there was the right to rank, for there were no subsequent encumbrancers, and there had been shortly before the claims were filed a valid acknowledgment by the company of liability for all the interest in question.

tor against the estate of A. M. C., a deceased intestate, obtained an order for the administration of the estate of the intestate. On the proceedings in the Master's office, a claim which O. made to have an account of the firm of which he was a member allowed was refused, but a further claim presented by him as the assignee of certain promissory notes made in favour of H. & Co. was allowed. The present appellant, wife of the intestate, presented a petition to the Court to set aside the administration order on the ground that O. at the time the order was made was not a creditor of the deceased intestate, as the assignment of the notes of H. & Co. to him was part of a champertous agreement. The Court held that the judgment for administration enured to the benefit of all the creditors, and as one at least had established a claim under it, the order could not be set aside, but that O. was not entitled to be allowed in the Master's office his claim on the notes, as the transaction between him and H. & Co. in connection therewith was a champertous one. O, re-transferred the notes to H. & Co., and the latter obtained leave to prove the claim thereon in the Master's office, and on appeal from the Master's ruling, it was held that H. & Co. might now assert their title to the notes and prove on them notwithstanding the former champertous agreement with O., and that the order for administration was a bar to the Statute of Limitations running against the notes from the date of that order. Upon appeal this judgment was affirmed by the Court of Appeal.

-Doweress - Prescription - Heirs at law -Parol admissions.] — C. R., at the time of his death (1864), was the owner in fee of certain lands and died intestate, leaving him surviving his widow, M.R., but no issue. After his death the widow remained in possession and occupation by herself or her tenants up to her death, October 6th, 1881. By lease on the 3rd May, 1881, she demised the premises to the defendant O. for a term of five years and, at the time of her death, O. was in possession as ten-ant under the lease. The plaintiff was the devisee of the lands under the will of M. R. The defendant R. claimed to be one of the heirs at law of C. R. and procured O. to attorn to him as landlord:-Held, that the widow remaining in possession of the lands of her husband after his death for a period of ten years, acquired a prescriptive right to the fee as against the heirs at law. Held, that admissions made by the doweress that she was bound to her husband's heirs to cut thistles, on the land and it was her duty to take care of the property given her by the heirs, made to persons having no interest in the property, were not sufficient evidence of an agreement with the heirs at law that she was occupying the land in lieu of dower. Held, that a will containing a residuary devise in the words: "All the rest and residue of my estate of which I shall be seized and possessed of or to which I shall be entitled at the time of my decease" was sufficient to include lands the title to which at the time of the making of the will had not, but before the testator's death had, ripened into an estate in fee simple by virtue of the Statute of Limitations.

The brother continued in possession, and on the 1st April, 1895, leased the land (without consent) for one year. The plaintiffs, claiming under the son, sought to recover possession from the devisee of the brother, by an action begun on the 29th May, 1905:-Held, that the brother, having openly set at naught the condition of the will, should not be presumed to have accepted the devise, and the Real Property Limitation Act was a bar to the action. - Loan to railway company through general manager - Bill of exchange therefor -Acceptance by company — Payments of interest.] — In 1893, E.N., one of the plaintiffs, and mother of her co-plaintiff, at the request of F., her brother, who was the chief executive officer of the defendants' railway, and had the management of its financial matters, lent to the company $4,600, giving him her cheque therefor, payable to his order, which he endorsed over to the company, and it was applied to their purposes, but, through some error in bookkeeping, F. was credited with the loan in the company's books. E.N. received as security for the loan a bill of exchange drawn, according to the company's usual custom, by F., payable to himself, and accepted, under F.'s instructions, by the company's secretary, which F. endorsed over to E.N. The bill was renewed from time to time, interest being paid by the company's cheques, drawn payable to F., and endorsed over to E.N., until 1895, when she, having transferred the bill to her co-plaintiff, the interest thereafter was paid to him. On March 31st, 1899, the amount standing to F.'s credit in the company's boks, including this loan, was transferred on the books, to a firm, of which F. was a member, with out the knowledge of the plaintiffs. The interest thereafter was paid in the same manner as before, but in reality it was paid by F. personally, of which the plain-tiffs were not aware. The payment of interest continued until 1900. In an action brought in 1905:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, for that the debt was from its inception, and continued to be, that of the company, and not of F., and that the company were estopped from contending that the payments of interest were not made by them, and that such payments prevented the Statute of Limitations from running against the plaintiffs. The principle of the decision in Re Tucker, Tucker v. Tucker, [1894] 3 Ch. 429, applied.

The agreement was in force for three years when the Barr Co. sued for an account, alleging failure to make proper returns and payments:-Held, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal, that the accounts should be taken for the six years preceding the action only. On a reference to the Master the taking of the accounts was brought down to a time at which defendants claimed that the contract was terminated by notice. The Court of Appeal or-dered that they should be taken down to the date of the Master's report. Held, that this was a matter of practice and procedure as to which the Supreme Court would not entertain an appeal.

-Title to land - Room in building - Adverse possession - License or easement.] -

Possession of an upper room in a building supported entirely by portions of the storey beneath may ripen into title thereto under the provisions of the Statute of Limitations. I., one of several owners of land with a building thereon, sold his interest to a co-owner and afterwards occupied a room in said building as tenant for his business. The room was on the second storey and inside the street door was a landing leading to a staircase by which it was reached. I had the only key provided for this street door and always locked it when leaving at night. He paid rent for the room at first and then remained in possession without paying rent for twelve years. The annual tax bills for the whole premises were generally, during that period, left in the room he occupied and were sent by him to the managing owner who paid the amounts. In an action to restrain the owners from interfering with his possession of said room and its appurtenances:-Held, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal, 15 Ont. L. R. 286, and restoring with a modification that of the trial Judge, 14 Ont. L.R. 17, that I. had acquired a title under the Statute of Limitations to said room and to so much of the structure as rested on the soil to which he had acquired title. Held, per Davies, J.—He had also acquired a proprietary right to the staircase and the portions of the building supporting said room. Per Fitzpatrick, C.J., and Duff, J. — The Statute of Limitations does not as against the party dispossessed annex to a title acquired by possession incidents resting on the implication of a grant. I. had, therefore, acquired no rights in these supports.

Held. also, that the respondents were not protected by the Limitations Act, R.S.O. c. 133. -Art. 5535 owners to the workr favour a legal servitude over the lands upon which the dams retain the water. The exercise of this servitude makes them liable to the riparian owners for damages that it causes them. The damages caused not being in consequence of a délit, the action to recover them is not prescribed by two years. Larochette v. Price, 19 Que. S.C. 403 (S.C.), affirmed in review 23rd Jan., 1900.

-Peremption d'instance-Art. 279 C.P.Q.] -A demand for peremption d'instance is itself an instance within the terms of Art. 279 C.P.Q. and may be declared to be prescribed.

Reid v. Marizzi, 19 Que, S.C. 428 (S.C.).

-Promissory note-Interruption of Prescription-Art. 1235 C.C.]-The proof resulting from failure of a defendant to answer interrogatories sur faits et articles is sufficient to establish partial payments effected by him on a promissory note for more than $50, and, therefore, to prove the interruption of prescription. -- Employers' liability-Prescription-Bodily injuries.]-Under Art. 2262 C.C. the action of a workman against his employer, for the recovery of damages for bodily injuries received in the course of his employment, is prescribed by one year, and the court is bound to apply the prescription although not pleaded. The doctrine of faute contractuelle does not apply to such case

Robillard v. Wand, 17 Que. S.C. 456.

-Failure to plead limitation-Defence supplied by the Court of its own motion-Reservation of recourse for future damages.]-The prescription of actions for personal injuries established by Art. 2262 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada is not waived by failure of the defendant to plead the limitation but the Court must take judicial notice of such prescription as absolutely extinguishing the right of action. The reservation of recourse for future damages in a judgment upon an action for tort is not an adjudication which can preserve the right of action beyond the time limited by the provisions of the Civil Code. When in an action of this nature there is but one cause of action damages must be assessed once for all. And when damages have been once recovered, no new action can be maintained for sufferings afterwards endured from the unforeseen effects of the original injury

The City of Montreal v. McGee, 30 Can. S.C.R. 582.

-Professional services of advocates and attorneys-Art. 2260, C.C.]-Held, 1. The words "final judgment," in Art. 2260, C.C., which enacts that the action "for professional services and disbursements of advocates and attorneys is prescribed by five years, reckoning from the date of the final judgment in each case," mean final as opposed to interlocutory, and not final in the sense of being the judgment in last resort; and consequently prescription of an attorney's claim against his own client, for the taxed cost in a cause, commences to run from the rendering of the final judgment in the court in which such costs are taxed. notwithstanding the fact that the case may have been taken to review and conducted by the same attorney in that court.

Gilman v. Cockshutt, 18 Que. S.C. 552.

Per Archibald, J.

-Limitation and prescription distinguished -Continuing offences.]-1. Limitation of the time within which an action may be brought operates as an extinction of the right to bring it and is an absolute bar to it, of which the Courts must take notice. if it appears on the face of the pleadings. In that respect, it differs from extinctive prescription which only gives rise to a pre-sumption that the obligation affected by it has been discharged, and must therefore be pleaded. 2. The action to recover a penalty accrues, and the limitation period in which it may be taken begins to run, as soon as the offence is committed. 3. When a statute that prescribes performance of an act within a specific delay, makes a failure to comply a penal offence, the letter is committed and the penalty is recoverable at the expiration of the delay so fixed. Hence, the limitation period for bringing the action runs from the same time. sley v. Morgan, 5 L.C.J. 54, overruled.

Croysdill v. Anglo-American Telegraph

Co., 19 Que. K.B. 193.

Interruption-Payment for services-Donation à cause de mort.]-The defendant had for several years been agent and solicitor of Dame Léocadie Boucher, who, to show her appreciation of the services which he had rendered, and was rendering every day to her, and also as a mark of her regard, had made him a donation of the sum of $8,000, to be a charge upon her succession from the moment of her death and before division of her property. This donation was annulled by the Superior Court (12 Que. S.C. 162, confirmed in review 13 S.C. 205), on the ground that it was a donation à cause de mort. Defendant thereupon rendered an account of the sums he had received from the executors in execution of the donation, but set up em compensation a larger amount as being due him from the succession of the deceased for solicitor's fees, costs of agency, etc. The plaintiff in reply alleged that such account was prescribed:-Held, that, notwithstanding the donation in question had been declared void, the prescription of defendant's account had been interrupted by the acknowledgment and promise to pay contained in it, and had been suspended until the death of the donor, the defendant not being able, before then, to claim payment for his services; and that, moreover, the prescription had been interrupted by the payment by the executors of the amount granted by the donation.

Boucher v. Morrison, 20 Que. S.C. 151 (Ct. Rev.).

-Prescription-Interruption-Cession de biens-Insolvency.]-The cession de biens does not interrupt prescription. The filing by a creditor of his claim with the curator of the property of an insolvent, and the collocation and partial payment of such claim by the curator will interrupt the prescription.

Coster v. McLean, 20 Que. S.C. 395 (Sup. Ct.).

-Disturbed possession-What constitutes legal disturbance - Intervention.]-Plaintiff, by possessory action, complained of being troubled in his possession, by defendants, of the rear portion of lots 2195 and 2196 of the cadastral plan of Three Rivers, extending from "la cîme de la côte" to the river St. Lawrence. Defendants pleaded ownership and possession under arrangements with the Crown. The Canada Iron Furnace Company intervened, claiming ownership of the entire lot No. 2196 under a deed of sale of 30th October, 1890, accompanied by constant possession for over ten Plaintiff contested the intervention, alleging that the intervenants could only claim the extent of ground conveyed to their auteur, by sheriff's sale of the 15th February, 1862, and which extended only to the "cîme de la côte." none of which is claimed by the action, the portion so claimed starting from the "cîme de la côte" and going to the river. ants' title expressly covered all the land to the river, which is given both by the title and by the cadastral plan as the boundary thereof. Intervenants were never troubled in their possession judically, the only disturbance being a notarial protest by plaintiff, more than a year and a day prior to the institution of this action, notifying intervenants that he claimed the !and now claimed by his action, and requiring them to join in making a line fence along the "cîme de la côte." This protest was not followed by any attempt to obtain possession of the land from the intervenants:-Held (reversing the judgment of the Superior Court, Desmarais, J.), (1) There was no trouble de droit of intervenants' possession within ten years. (2) A notarial protest is not a trouble de droit of possession of land, and does not in-terrupt prescription. (3) Intervenants' title and constant possession gave them ownership of the land, notwithstanding the title of conveyance to their auteur. (4) Intervenants had a sufficient interest to intervene, having shown a possession which was troubled by plaintiff's action. (5) Possession which affects a whole lot of land renders it unnecessary to prove particular acts of possession, within a year and a day, of any special part of the lot. Dupré v. Harbour Commissioners of Three Rivers, 23 Que. S.C. 439 (C.R.).

Archambault v. St. Charles de Lachenaie, 12 Que. K.B. 349.

-Person trading under firm name-Prescription.]-A motion to amend the declaration is a procedure which may prevent dismissal of the action. In this case the respondents sued the appellant and one Charles Lamoureux, the latter as doing business under the name of C. Lamoureux & Co. The writ was served on the last day of the prescribed delay. Lamoureux moved for dismissal of the action as against him alleging that his wife, Dame Maloina Huberdault, and not himself, carried on business under the name of C. Lamoureux & Co. After the filing of this pleading the bank desisted from its action against Lamoureux and obtained leave to amend its declaration on alleging that the note sued on had been signed by Dame Huberdault doing business under said name, but she was not made a party:-Held, that under these circumstances, the amendment related back to the date of the institution of the action and prescription had not been acquired.

—Possession of movables for purposes of prescription.]—1. Z. The respondent, as one of the executors of the donor's will, having knowledge of the fact that the portraits were bequeathed to the appellant, had no possession which could serve for purposes of prescription.

Zampino v. Blancheri, 24 Que. S.C. 265 C.R.).

Possession — Prescription — Interruptive acknowledgment — Evidence.] — The company claimed prescriptive title to a part of the bed of a small river on which D., the respondents' auteur, had been a riparian owner. D. had leased lands on the banks of the river to the company which, it was alleged, included the property in dispute. The only evidence as to interruption of prescription consisted of a letter by the company to D. enclosing a cheque in payment for "use of your interest in Cap Rouge River this year," with an indorsement by D. acknowledging receipt of the funds "with the understanding that the navigation of the river is not to be prevented":-Held, reversing the judgment appealed from (13 Ex. C.R. 116), Girouard and Idington, JJ., dissenting, that the memorandum was too vague to serve as an interruptive acknowledgment sufficient to defeat the title claimed by the company

- Prescription - Special assessment -Contestation - Interruption of prescription.] - Held (affirming the judgment of the Superior Court, Doherty, J., 23 Que. S. C., p. 461):-1. Under the former charter of the city of Montreal (52 Vict. c. 79), the contestation of a special assessment roll, by a person assessed therein, had not the effect of interrupting prescription as regards other persons subject to such as-sessment. 2. The fact that the person contesting the roll obtained a temporary order enjoining the city against making any collection under the roll attacked, did not constitute an interruption of prescription as regards other persons assessed by the same roll, where such order was made without objection on the part of the city, and no steps were subsequently taken by the city to obtain the rescission of the order.

City of Montreal v. Land and Loan Company, 13 Que. K.B. 74.

-Prescription-Waiver-Condition.] - A note made by defendant in favour of the plaintiff had been prescribed since 1897. In 1902 the defendant wrote to plaintiff as follows: "You ask for money; at present I have none. I have bought some land which has taken all I had; but I am about to sell the land I am living on and will pay you soon." Plaintiff, claiming that this letter amounted to a waiver of the acquired prescription, brought an action for the amount of the note and interest, without waiting for the defendant to sell his lands:-Hield, that the letter did not constitute a waiver of acquired rights, but only contained a conditional offer to waive the prescription, and, therefore, the creditor, to be entitled arew to the right of action which he had lost, would have to wait for the fulfilment of the condition.

Perrier v. Perrier, Q.R. 25 S.C. 183 (Ct. Rev.).

Possession by two or more successive possessors as basis of prescription.]—A party who claims a title to immovable property by thirty years' prescription must establish either his own possession for the while period, or that of himself and of predecessors who are connected with him by a chain of valid titles to the ownership of the property. 2. -Demand note-Prescription - Act required to interrupt.]-1. Prescription of five years and not thirty, applies to a note, notwithstanding that part thereof was for money loaned and for securing which hypothec was given. 2. Interest on a demand note runs from the date thereof. 3. Prescription begins to run from date thereof and not from date of demand of pay-ment. 4. Acknowledgment made by one party to a note, interrupts prescription as to the others. 5. Acknowledgment can be proved by the oath of one of the parties defendant. 6. A transfer of property by one defendant to the plaintiff, though signed by defendant before consideration was filled in, and imperfect in form, when coupled with the admission of said defendant, that the consideration, whatever it was, was to be placed to the credit of the said note, is a "reconnaissance par écrit" at the date of the transfer and sufficient to interrupt prescription. 7. The oath alone of one defendant is in itself enough to interrupt prescription. 8. While it requires a new promise to pay, clearly expressed to renounce a prescription acquired, the sole acknowledgment of a debt is sufficient to interrupt prescription, while running.

- Taxes - Action to recover assessed amounts-Assessment due on filing of the rull—Prescription.]—Under s. 251 of the City of Montreal Charter, 1889 (52 Vict. c. 79), the amount of an assessment becomes due and recoverable on the filing of the roll of assessment in the office of the city treasurer. In an action by the city to recover after the period of prescription enacted by s. 120, calculated from the date of filing, had elapsed, it appeared that the respondent's predecessor had been a party to proceedings had for its annulment:-Held, (1) That the period was not interrupted thereby within the meaning of Art. 2227 of the Civil Code, for there had been no acknowledgment of liability. (2) That there had been no impossibility to sue within the meaning of Art. 2232, for the right of action was not by the above Act suspended during the proceedings. That the debt in suit was not dependent on condition within the meaning of Art. 2236, though s. 144 of the Act limited the time within which the roll might be annulled, it did not make the date of its coming into force conditional on the roll not being either attacked or annulled.

City of Montreal v. Cantin, [1906] A.C.

-Prescription - Interruption - Evidence - Application of payments.]-Every arrangement importing the acknowledgment of or promise to pay a debt so as to take it out of the operation of the law respecting limitations of actions must be in writing and cannot be proved otherwise. And (reversing Pelletier, J.) (2) That a payment made before any of the items of a current account had been prescribed must be imputed upon the oldest debt, i.e., the first item of the account, provided that all the items therein constitute debts of the same kind and equally onerous, none of them being overdue nor bearing interest. Danis v. Thibault, Q.R. 36 S.C. 213.

-Negative prescription-Interruption Judicial demand-Service by publication in newspapers of order to appear.j-Interruption of negative prescription takes place by a judicial demand in proper form duly served upon the debtor. If, by reason of his absence, service is made by two insertions in newspapers of an order to appear, as provided in Art. 136 C.P., it is only complete and effectual to interrupt, by the second insertion. Hence, if the term of prescription expires between the first and second, there is no interruption. Gauthier v. Charlebois, 35 Que. S.C. 104.

-Prescription-Agreement for conditional sale.]-One who takes possession of movable effects under a deed described as a lease but containing a provision that he will become owner on performance of the conditions imposed and payment of the rent reserved in which case the lessor will execute a deed of sale in his favour, having entered into possession for another person is afterwards presumed to possess by the same title and, therefore, cannot, even at the expiration of ten years, set up an acquisitive prescription of the effects unless he proves that there was, during this interval, a change in the title by which he held possession.

It appeared that plaintiff knew of the drain at the time but made no objection, until the latter part of 1896, when the land caved in and repair work was undertaken, and plaintiff demanded com-pensation:-Held, that the clear meaning of the words "by virtue of the streets commissioner's powers of office" was that the town constructed the drain in question by their agent, the streets commissioner, one of whose duties it was to construct drains. Held, that the trespass, being a continuing one, was not barred by the Towns' Incorporation Act of 1895, Acts of 1895, c. 4, s. 295, which provides that "no action ex delicto shall be brought against any town incorporated under the unless within twelve months next after the cause of action shall have secrued" except as to damage suffered more than one year before action brought

He and his sisters lived together on premises situated elsewhere until his marriage in 1890. He always contributed to their support, but the contributions were not meant, and were not understood, to be a share by the sisters in the rents and profits of the land. In a suit commenced September 21st, 1899, by the plaintiff for the partition of the land:—Held, that the plaintiff's title was extinguished by c. 84, s. 13, C.S. N.B.

-Registry of judgment in Nova Scotia.]-In an action brought by plaintiffs, trustees under the last will of D., to recover posses sion of a lot of land bought by plaintiffs at sheriff's sale under execution on a judgment recovered by D. against M., defendant relied, among other defences, upon the ground that, at the time of the sale by the sheriff, he was in adverse possession of the land:-Held, that a sheriff selling under execution is not within the class of cases which apply to a person selling land held adversely by another. Held, per McDonald, C.J., that the registry of the judgment obtained by D. had the same effect, so far as his title was concerned, as if he held a mortgage. Held, also, the judgment being registered, and securing the title, that the statute of limitations would not begin to run until after the date of the recovery of the judgment.

Doull v. Keefe, 34 N.S.R. 15.

—Statute of Limitations—Evidence to take case out of—Mortgagor and mortgage—Payments on account of principal—Entries in books of solicitor.]—A mortgage made by G. to C., after providing for payment of premiums of insurance by the mortgage, G., continued: "And in default thereof, the said C. . . shall and may, as required, effect, renew, etc., such insurance, and charge all payments made for or in respect thereof, with interest, after the rate aforesaid, upon the said mortgaged premises':—Held (affirming the juo, ment of the trial Judge), that an amount paid for premium of insurance by the authorized agent of C., was, by the terms of the mortgage, without further act, made part of the principal on which interest was payable and that the subsequent repayment of this amount by G. was a payment on account of principal which would take the case out of the Statute of Limitations, and entitle plaintiff to an order of foreclosure and sale. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover on the bond as well as on the mortgage.

Cogswell v. Grant, 34 N.S.R. 340.

-Twenty years' possession-Decree of foreclosure-Effect of as against third party in possession.]-In an action claiming possession of land, plaintiff's title was derived under a sheriff's deed made under direction of the Court in foreclosure proceedings, and dated July 23rd, 1896. Defendant relied upon the Statute of Limitations, and gave evidence of more than twenty years' possession of the land in dispute without payment of rent or acknowledgment of title. It appearing that defendant went into possession at a date subsequent to the date of the mortgage under which plaintiff claimed:—Held, dismissing defendant's appeal with costs, and affirming the judgment of the trial Judge, that defendant could not acquire title by possession against the mortgagee so long as the mortgage was kept alive. It is enacted by the Statute of Limitation of Actions, R.S.N.S. (1900), c. 167, s. 23, that "any person entitled to or claiming under a mortgage of land may make an entry or bring an action to recover such land at any time within twenty years next after the last payment of the principal money or interest secured by such mortgage, although more than twenty years have elapsed since the time at which the right to make such entry or bring such action first accrued." Held, that the granting of the decree of foreclosure, was an adjudication that, at that date, the mortgage was in force, and that, therefore, plaintiff's title came under the provisions of the section quoted. Held, also, that a third party could not, by a possession of twenty years, acquire title, notwithstanding the provisions of the statute, and that plaintiff's title could not be defeated by defendant's possession, even though it were shown to be of a more definite kind than was disclosed by the evidence.

Archibald v. Lawlor, 35 N.S.R. 48.

—Payment by surety after running of statutory period.]—The makers of a joint and several promissory note are joint contractors within the meaning of the Statute of Limitations, R.S. 1900, c. 165, s. 5, and Lord Tenterden's Act, and where such a note was entered into by plaintiff and defendant as sureties for C., the principal maker, and the note was dishonoured by C. and was paid by plaintiff after the Statute of Limitations had run as against the payee in favour of plaintiff and his co-surety:—Held, that such payment was voluntary on the part of plaintiff, and that he could not, by waiving in his own favour the defence of the Statute, establish a claim against his co-surety for contribution.

-Statute of Limitations-Amount credited by sheriff on execution-Payment by or on behalf of the debtor.]-At a sale of lands under execution, the lands sold were bid in by the judgment creditor, and the amount of the bid credited on the execution by the sheriff on account of the judgment debt:-Held, that this was not a payment by or on behalf of the debtor to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Held, further, that an order for the issue of a writ of execution, made by a Judge of the Court, ex parte, during the currency of the period of twenty years from the recovery of the judgment, the judgment debtor having died out of the province intestate, and nc administrators having been appointed, conferred no new right upon defendant sufficient to keep the judgment alive, and unbarred by the statute. Held, that to obtain a new right against anyone, by reason of such an order defendant must have given notice, which he could have done, either by applying as a creditor to have administrators appointed, or by notifying the heirs.

Lefurgey v. Harrington, 36 N.S.R. 88.

-Partition-Defence of Statute of Limitations-Person acting in fiduciary capacity -Acquiescence.]-An action for partition of land was resisted by the heirs, etc., of D., on the ground that she had acquired title by exclusive possession against the other tenants in common. The trial Judge found, and the evidence supported such finding, that D. acted throughout in a fiduciary capacity, as administratrix for the benefit of her father's estate, and those interested in it:—Held, that it was not open to a person in the position of D. to avail herself of the Statute of Limitations. Als., that as plaintiffs believed that D. was acting within her rights as administratrix, there was nothing in their conduct that would operate as a bar to the relief sought on the ground of acquiescence. Also, that the acts of D., leasing the property collecting rents, etc., which were relied upon as giving her an exclusive title, were perfectly consistent with the rights of plaintiffs as tenants in common.

Brown v. Dooley, 36 N.S.R. 56.

-Assignment of debt-Invalid sale by sheriff-Statute of Limitations-Payment -Ratification.]-In Nova Scotia book debts cannot be sold under execution and the act of the judgment debtor in allowing such sale does not constitute an equitable assignment of such debts to the purchaser. The purchaser received payment on account of a debt so sold which, in a subsequent action by the creditor and others, was relied on to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations:-Held, affirming 37 N.S.R. 161, that though the creditor might be unable to deny the validity of the payment he could not adopt it so as to obtain a right of action thereon and the payment having been made to a third party who was not his agent did not interrupt the prescription. -Trustee-Technical breach-Relief.]-See Trusts. Cairns v. Murray, 37 N.S.R. 451.

- Acknowledgment of debt.] - Action brought by the plaintiff as assignee of one T. against the defendants, alleging indebt-edness of the defendants' testator to T. on the common counts and alleging an assignment of the indebtedness from T. to the plaintiff and notice thereof to the detendants. The defendants denied the claim and alleged, first, that no sufficient notice under the statute was ever given of the assignment from T. to the plaintiff, and that the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations:-Heid, affirming the judgment of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, that the notice of the assignment given was a sufficient compliance with the statute (R.S.N.S., (4 ser.), c. 94, s. 357), and that the letters written by the defendants' testator to the assignor of the plaintiff were a clear acknowledgment of the debt and sufficient to take it out of the provisions of the Statute of Limitations. Grant v. Cameron, (1891), 1 S.C. Cas. 239.

-- Mortgage--Executors and administrators -Action to recover possession or land.]property for a period of twenty-five years In 1862 J. M. conveyed land to W. by a deed which, although absolute in form, was intended to operate by way of mortgage, as security for a debt due from the grantor to the grantee. The last will of W., made seventeen years after the date of the deed, directed that the land in question should not be sold during the lifetime of M. M., the wife of J. M., and that if, at any time before the death of M. M., the grantor, J. M., should repay the amount of his indebtedness with interest, then the property should be reconveyed, etc. W. died in July, 1881, and M. M. died in February, 1903, having continued in possession of the land down to the time of her death:-Held, notwithstanding the clause in the will of W. restraining his executors from selling the land, that an action brought by the executors, after the death of M. M., to recover possession of the land, was barred by the Statute of Limitations.

Whitman v. Hiltz, 39 N.S.R. 230.

-Entry by deceased person-Oral admission of tenancy-Tenant under an agreement to purchase-Vendor-Right of entry.]-Payment of part of the purchase money by a person in possession of land under an agreement to purchase is a renewal of the tenancy at will, and the Statute of Limitations begins to run from such payment. Entries in the handwriting of a deceased person in his books of account, made in the ordinary course of his business, as follows: Balance due Robert Anderson, $41.25; July 15, 1892, by cash on due-bill for Thompson farm, $41.25; settled, $00.00; 1886, May 23, balance due R. H. Anderson, $35.63; by cash to self, $10.00; by balance due R. And., $25.63; Credit on due-bill settled in full, $25.63, are admissible under s. 38, c. 127, Con. Stat. 1903, and the first entry being admitted to be a payment on account of a land purchase, the second is evidence of a payment on the same account on the 23rd of May, 1886. Where an entry in the handwriting of a deceased person is prima facie against interest it is admissible for all purposes, irrespective of its effect or value when received. A verbal admission by a person holding under an agreement to purchase, that he is holding as tenant at will to the vendor, will not prevent the statute running against such vendor. As between the vendor and a vendee in possession under an agreement to purchase, the vendor is substantially a mortgagee entitled to the rights and privileges secured to a mortgagee under s. 30 of c. 139 of Con. Stat. 1903, and is also as a mortgage within the exception provided by s. 8 of the statute, and the right of entry of the vendor and his representatives would not be extinguished for twenty years after the last payment of principal or interest

Anderson v. Anderson, 37 N.B.R. 432.

-Crown land in New Brunswick-Adverse possession for less than sixty years--Grant by the Crown during adverse possession valid-Rights of grantee.]-In an action of ejectment it appeared that the land belonged to the Crown, and was in peaceable possession of its grantee, the defendant, but that the plaintiff and his predecessors in title had enjoyed uninterrupted occunation thereof for a period of fifty-six years down to a date about seven years prior to date of action:-Held, that judgment was rightly entered for defendant. Occupation against the Crown for any period less than the sixty years required by the Nullum Tempus Act is of no avail against the title and legal possession of the Crown, and still less against the grantee in actual possession. The Act, 21 Jac. I. c. 14, only regulates procedure, and its effect is that if any information of intrusion is filed and the Crown has been out of possession for twenty years, the defendant is allowed to retain possession till the Crown has established its title. Where no information has been filed there is nothing to prevent the Crown or its grantee from making a peaceable entry and then holding possession by virtue of title. Decisions by the Courts of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, to the effect that when the Crown has been out of actual possession for twenty years it could not make a grant until it had first established its title by information of intrusion, overruled. Decision in Maddison v. Emmerson, 34 Can. S. C.R. 533, affirmed.

Emmerson v. Maddison, [1906] A.C. 569.

-Possession of land-Constructive possession—Colourable title.]—McI., by his will devised sixty acres of land to his son charged with the maintenance of his widow and daughter. Shortly afterwards the son with the widow and other heirs conveyed away four of the sixty acres and nearly thirty years later they were deeded to McD. Under a judgment against the exe-cutors of McI. the sixty acres were sold by the sheriff and fifty including the said four were conveyed by the purchaser to McI.'s son. The sheriff's sale was illegal under the Nova Scotia law. The son lived on the fifty acres for a time and then went to the United States, leaving his mother and sister in occupation until he returned twenty years later. During this time he occasionally cut hay on the four acres, which was only partly enclosed, and let his cattle pasture on it. In an action for a declaration of title to the four acres:-Held, that the occupation by the son under colour of title of the fifty acres was not constructive possession of the four which he had conveyed away and his alleged acts of ownership over which were merely in-termittent acts of trespass. McDonald v. McIsaac, 38 N.S.R. 163, affirmed. McIsaac v. McDonald, 37 Can. S.C.R. 157.

Stevens v. Jeffers, 38 N.B.R. 233.

—Gift of land accompanied by possession —Exclusive occupation.]—A gift of land by a father to his son accompanied by actual delivery of possession and followed by a continuous and exclusive possession by the son extending over a period of twenty years, confers a title upon the son under the Statute of Limitations which will be bound by a judgment recovered against him, and will pass to the purchaser at a sheriff's sale. The operation of the statute will not be suspended by acts by the father, such as the pasturing of sheep and the occasional cutting of fire wood, where the acts are done with the assent of the son and not with the intention of interfering with the possession, or in the way of rental for the property. Kaulbach v. Cook, 39 N.S.R. 500.

—Judgment—Barred after 20 years—Ack-nowledgment.]—The Statute of Limitations, R.S. (1900) c. 167, s. 22, provides that no action or other proceeding shall be brought to recover any sum of money secured by any—judgment—but within 20 years after the present right to receive the same has accrued-unless in the meantime some part of the principal money or some interest thereon has been paid, or some knowledge-ment of the right thereto has been given, etc.:-Held, that the mere issue of a writ of execution and the placing of the same in the hands of the sheriff, without any further action being taken thereon to enforce the payment, was not sufficient to bring the judgment within the saving clause of the statute so as to keep it in force, and that the judgment being dead the execution fell with it. Also, that the section refers to judgments generally. Also, that the issuing of a summons under the Judgment Debtors' Act, calling upon the debtor to appear for examination, is not such an acknowledgment as to take the case out of the statute.

Boak v. Flemming, 43 N.S.R. 360.

—Statute of Limitations—Agency—Receipt of rents—Right to an account.]— Where defendant received the rents of a plaintiff, it was held that the right to an account was not barred by the lapse of time, defendant having taken possession of the property under an agreement with plaintiff, which had never been terminated, to hold the property for him and to account to him for it. Pick v. Edwards, 3 N.B. Eq. 410.

Trespass to lands—Tenancy in common— Exclusive possession—Burden of showing— Statute of Limitations.]-In an action by plaintiffs claiming damages for trespass to lands defendant justified under his wife, who was alleged to be a tenant in common with plaintiffs of the locus. The land in question was originally granted to A. B., through whom both parties claimed. It was agreed that the only issue for trial was whether the title of defendant's wife, as tenant in common, was barred by the Statute of Limitations:-Held, that the burden was on plaintiffs of establishing exclusive possession of the common lands for a period of twenty years, and that in the absence of such evidence defendants must succeed. Where defendant, by the erection of a house in the lands held in common, exceeded his rights, taking possession of a piece of the lands to the exclusion of plaintiffs and other tenants in common, but no claim as to this was set up in the pleadings or on the trial. Held, that the defendant's possession could not be adjudicated upon in the action, but must be raised in partition proceedings when defendant could be protected as to his occupation and improvements.

Boudroit v. Sampson, 41 N.S.R. 490.

-Title by adverse possession-Payment of fire insurance premium.]-Plaintiff claimed a house and lot of land as devisee of S. M., who had occupied and used the property as his own for a period of upwards of thirty years. Defendant set up title under the will of M. M., to whom the property was mortgaged by G., the original owner, to secure repayment of the sum of $240, and to whom it was subsequently conveyed by G., by deed expressed to be made for the same consideration. The house on the property had been insured in the name of M. M., but there was evidence of admission that his claim to the property was not as owner but for advances made by him: Held, that under the circumstances stated, and in the absence of evidence of any obligation on the part of S. M., to insure for the benefit of M. M., the payment of S. M., at one time during his occupancy, of a renewal insurance premium, whether to insure his house in his own name or that of M. M., was not an act inconsistent with his ownership, or with his right to insist that any claim of M. M., as mortgagee was barred. Cogswell v. Grant, 34 N.S.R. 340, distinguished. Matheson v. —Small debt procedure (N.W.T.)—Writ of summons—Failure to serve—Expiry—Alias writ.]—A writ of summons (under the small debt procedure) had been issued in an action on a debt before the period after which it would become barred by the Limitations Ordinanee had expired; it was, however, never served; but after the expiry of the period fixed by the Ordinance an alias writ of summons was issued:—Held, in view of the provisions of Rule 542 of the Judicature Ordinance (C.O. 1998, c. 21), the issue of the alias writ of summons prevented the operation of the Limitations Ordinance, and that, therefore, the Ordinance afforded no defence to the action.

—Ancient lights—Right to—How acquired —Unity of possession—Prescription Act.]
—A right to the access and use of light to a house cannot be acquired under the Prescription Act by the lapse of time, during which the owner of the house or his occupying tenant is also occupier of the land over which the right would extend. In an action to establish a right to ancient lights, the burden of proof in the first place is on the plaintiff to show uninterrupted use for twenty years, and then the burden is shifted to the defendant, to show such facts as negative the presumption of ancient lights.

Freigenbaum v. Jackson and McDonell, 8 B.C.R. 417.

—Acknowledgment.]—A promise to "fix it up all right" in a week or two, in a letter written by the debtor in reply to a written demand for payment of the debt, is a sufficient, acknowledgment to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations and start it running anew. A promise to pay the debt as soon as the debtor could get the money is conditional only and, without evidence that the debtor had got the money, would not be a sufficient acknowledgment to prevent the statute running.

Eyre v. McFarlane, 19 Man. R. 645.

—Mortgage covenant—Foreign judgment.]
—The action was begun in the North-West Territories in 1994 to recover the amount of two promissory notes made by the defendant in 1890, and payable in 1890 and 1891, with a claim also upon a covenant in a mortgage bearing the same date for payment at the same time as the notes, the mortgage being of land situated in South Dakota, and also upon a judgment re-covered in South Dakota. The right of recovery upon the notes was unquestionably barred:-Held, that the right of action upon the covenant was also barred by s. 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (Imp.), which is in force in the Territories by virtue of s. 2 of c. 31 of the Consolidated Ordinances. Under the law of South Dakota the Statute of Limitations bars the right of action upon a covenant only after the expiration of 20 years, but it was held that the South Dakota law did not apply. The period of limitation under the Imperial Act is 12 years. But held, that the claim upon the foreign judgment was not barred. The defendant was born in the United States, but came to the Territories in or about 1891. and had not since been absent therefrom. He was personally served therein with the summons in the foreign action, according to the practice of the foreign Court: -Held, that the defendant was by natural allegiance a subject of the United States, and that it was not established that he had ever been naturalized in Canada, and this was sufficient to determine the jurisdiction of the Dakota Court although the defendant had not submitted to it by appearing.

Dakota Lumber Co. v. Rinderknecht, 1 W.L.R. 481 (Wetmore, J.).

-Money lent-Date fixed for repayment-Statute of Limitations. J-In an action for money lent, it appeared that the defendant in August or September, 1903, borrowed £20 from the plaintiff. On the 3rd August, 1903, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff: "Would you lend me £20 for say two years at most? I will honestly repay you." On the 23rd October, 1903, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff: "I scarcely know how to thank you for your very kind letter and for the draft duly received":-Held, that the time for payment was in September, 1905, and the action was not (in 1910) barred by the Statute of Limitations. Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to interest at 5 per cent. upon the amount lent, there being a written contract for payment of money on a certain day to be spelled out of the two letters, the request and the acknowledgment.

See MORTGAGE.

Rutherford v. Mitchell, 15 Man. R. 390.

—Action for breach of covenant in agreement for sale of land—Measure of damages.]—(1) A claim for damages for breach of a covenant against incumbrances on land is not a claim "to recover any sum of money secured by any mortgage, judgment or lien, or otherwise charged upon or payable out of any land or rent," within the meaning of s. 24 of the Real Property Limitation Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 100, and an action to recover such damages is therefore not barred under that section by the lapse of ten years. (2) Where the covenant for the breach of which an action is brought is one against incumbrances, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover as damages the amount of all incumbrances, but only such as have been actually enforced, though it would be otherwise if the covenant had been that the land was free from incumbrances. The defendant covenanted that he would give the plaintiff a deed clear of all incumbrances except a mortgage of $1,000:-Held, that the plaintiff's damages should be limited to the excess of the mortgagee's claim over $1,000, notwithstanding there were at the time registered judgments against the land for further sums of money.

Wilson v. Graham, 16 Man. R. 101.

-Private and public acts, construction of.] -Deceased, a workman employed by the defendant Cook on a contract work for the defendant company, was instantly killed by coming in contact with a live wire. The accident occurred on the 6th of August, 1904, and the writ in the action, brought under the provisions of Lord Campbell's Act, was issued on the 15th of July, 1905. Defendant company set up, as a bar to the action as against them, s. 60 of their Act of incorporation, which limits the time to six months within which an action may be brought against them for any damage or injury sustained by reason of the tramway or railway, or works or operations of the company:-Held, on appeal, affirming the decision of Morrison, J., that Lord Campbell's Act is a special Act; creating a special cause of action; and this special cause of action, so specially provided for, does not come within the scope of a general limitation clause in a private Act, passed for the benefit of a private corporation. Effect of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (Imperial), discussed. Green v. British Columbia Electric Railway Company, 12 B.C.R. 199.

-Cause of action-Foreign judgment-Absence of debtor.]-Under the provisions of the Yukon Ordinance, c. 31 of 1890, the right to recover simple contract debts in the Territorial Court of Yukon Territory is absolutely barred after the expiration of six years from the date when the cause of action arose notwithstanding that the debtor has not been for that period resident within the jurisdiction of the Court.

Rutledge v. United States Savings and Loan Company, 37 Can. S.C.R. 546.

-Fraudulent conveyance-Statute of Limitations-Cause of action barred.]-(1) An instrument in the form usually called a lien note is not a negotiable promissory note: Bank of Hamilton v. Gillies (1899), 12 M.R. 495, and the right of action upon it is barred by the Statute of Limitations in six years from the due date of it without adding any days of grace. (2) A voluntary conveyance of land cannot be successfully attacked under the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, on the basis of a debt due at the time of the conveyance but barred by lapse of time before the commencement of the action to attack. Struthers v. Glennie (1888), 14 O.R. 726, followed. (3) A voluntary conveyance of land, if meant to be absolute as between the parties, so that the grantee holds it free of trust for the grantor, leaves no interest in him which can be affected by the registration of a certificate of a subsequently recovered County Court judgment against the grantor. A debt of the grantor, though owing at the time of the making of such voluntary conveyance, became afterwards barred by the Statute of Limitations before the creditor sued the grantor upon it. The grantor neglected to plead that statute and judgment was recovered against him:-Held, that, as against the grantee, such judgment does not relate back to the original debt so as to form the basis for an action under 13 Eliz. c. 5. The grantee having once gained the right to plead the Statute of Limitations in such last-named action, cannot be deprived of that right by the act or omission of the grantor.

Keddy v. Morden, 15 Man. R. 629 (Richards, J.).

-Statute of Limitations - Payment on account — Appropriation of fund.]—A debt collector having accounts placed in his hands by both plaintiffs and defendant for collection, applied to the defendant for payment of his account which was statute-Defendant stated that plaintiffs barred. would never press him for payment, but on the collector insisting, defendant instructed him to hand over to plaintiffs some of the money collected for defendant. The collector accordingly paid in $11.65:—Held, affirming the judgment of Lampman, Co. J., at the trial, that from the instructions of defendant to the collector to pay to plain-tiffs some of the moneys collected for him (defendant) could be inferred a promise to pay sufficient to take the debt out of the statute, and was not an appropriation of a particular fund.

-Injury to passenger-Limitation clause -"By reason of the railway"-"Works or operations of the company."]-Plaintiff, on the 26th of December, 1903, was injured on defendants' tramway in Vancolver, in stepping off a movable platform provided by defendants for the accommodation of passengers transferring at one of the junctions. The platform was necessary to enable passengers to alight, owing to the height of the car steps above the surface of the street, and was so placed that there was very close to it, and not easily observable by passengers leaving the car, a large hole, into which plaintiff stepped, severely injurying her knee. On the 24th of December, 1904, she brought an action to recover damage for her injuries. Defendant company set up, inter alia, s. 60 of their Act of Incorporation, c. 55 of the Statutes of British Columbia, 1896, which enacted that "all actions or suits for indemnity sustained by reason of the tramway or railway, or the works or operations of the company, shall be commenced within six months next after the time when such supposed damage was sustained'':-Held (affirming the decision of Duff, J.). that the words "by reason of the tramway or railway or the works or operations of the company," should be read separatim, as describing different branches of the company's undertaking, and that the section does not apply to a case like that at bar, which was based on the defendant company's duty to carry the plaintiff safely.

Section 24 of the Real Property Limitation Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 100, applies to proceedings taken by a municipality to sell lands for taxes which are a lien or charge on the land, and the municipality will be restrained by injunction from taking such proceedings after the lapse of ten years from the time when the taxes fell due. 3. The plaintiff is also entitled, under s. 17 of the Act, to a declaration that neither the levy of taxes nor the rate remains any longer a lien or charge on the land.

-Evidence required to prove adverse possession-Claim set up by wife living with husband.]-(1) A party asserting a title to land by adverse possession should prove it most clearly and, although there is no statutory requirement that the evidence of such party and members of his family must be corroborated, it would be unsafe, unless such evidence appears to be correct beyond reasonable doubt, to hold that a title by possession has been gained in the absence of strong additional evidence by disinterested witnesses. (2) When a husband and wife are living together, the possession of any property on which they are living or which, is occupied by them must ordinarily be attributed to the husband as the head of the family, and the wife cannot acquire title to the property for herself by length of possession under the Real Property Limitation Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 100. (3) Permission should not be given, even if the Judge has power to allow it, to amend an issue under the Real Property Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 148, between a married woman claiming by such possession and the holder of the paper title, by setting up that her husband had acquired such title and given the plaintiff a quit claim deed of the property, for no one claiming a title by length of adverse possession is entitled to any such indulgence from the Court. -Local option by-law - Voting - Voters' list.]-The certified list of voters used at the voting upon a local option by-law, being the list in fact certified by the Judge of the County Court, was held, the proper list, within the meaning of the Votors' Lists Act, notwithstanding that the Judge might have omitted to comply with the requirements of sub-sec. 4 of s. 17, as to the publication of notice of the sittings of the Court for the revision of the list, and that the only person who made a complaint was a person not entitled under the Act to be a com-plainant. The last de facto certified voters' list filed in the office of the clerk of the peace is all that the clerk of the municipality is to concern himself with; and where an election has been held at which such a list has been used, it is not open to attack because of some informality or omission on the part of the Judge or of any of connection with the list in the performance of their duties under the Act in accordance with its provisions.

—Township by-law limiting number of licenses—Time for going into operation.]— On the 11th January, 1909, a township council passed a by-law enacting "that the number of licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors be limited to three." This action was brought in April, 1910, to obtain a declaration that the by-law was void and of no effect:—Held, that the words "for any future license year," in the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, s. 20, mean "for any year future as regards the date of the by-law." This interpretation allows the council, if they are dealing with their own year, to deal at the same time with all succeeding years, without depriving the future councils of their power to deal with their years by altering or repealing the by-law. This by-law, being general, applied to the immediately succeeding license year, and to all future years until altered or repealed; and it was not necessary that it should state that it came into operation at the beginning of the then en-suing license year. Re Wilson and Town of Ingersoll (1894), 25 O.R. 439, disap-proved. Re Brewer and City of Toronto (1909), 19 O.L.R. 411, followed. 2. That, although the kind of license was not specified, it should be read as applying to tavern licenses only, there being no shop li-censes in the township. 3. That the previously existing by-law, restricting the number of licenses to seven, was repealed by this by-law, being inconsistent with it, though words of repeal were not used. Semble, that such a declaration as sought should not, in any event, be made, as be-fore the time came for the issue of another set of licenses, a perfect by-law could be passed by the council.

Bourgon v. Township of Cumberland, 22 O.L.R. 256.

-Conviction for second offence in absence of accused-Inquiry as to first offence.]-The defendant was charged with a second offence against the Ontario Liquor License Act, and was, in his absence, though duly summoned, convicted thereof before a magistrate, and sentenced to be imprisoned. Section 101 of the Act, as found in R.S.O. 1897, c. 145, provides that in such a case the magistrate shall in the first instance inquire concerning the subsequent offence only, and, if the accused be found guilty thereof, he shall then, and not before, be asked whether he was so previously convicted; but, if he denies or does not answer, the magistrate shall then inquire concerning the previous conviction. The words "and not before" were struck out by the amending Act 9 Edw. VII. c. 82, s. 20. By s. 718 of the Criminal Code, when the defendant has been duly summoned, if he fail to appear, the magistrate may proceed with the trial ex parte or may issue his warrant and adjourn the trial until the defendant is apprehended. S. 721 provides that, if the defendant is personally present, he shall be asked to plead. These sections are made applicable to offences against Ontario Statutes by the Summary Convictions Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 90, s. 2, unless in any Act "hereafter passed it is otherwise declared:"—Held, reversing the order of Middleton, J., discharging the defendant upon habeas corpus, that the magistrate had jurisdiction to convict the defendant in his absence; the two provisions were neither repugnant nor inconsistent, and should be read together. since the amendment striking out the words "and not before," the provision of s. 101, as to asking the defendant whether he was previously convicted, must be regarded as directory only. Per Magee, J.A., that the provision is peremptory; but (with some doubt) the section may be construed, in connection with other sections, so as to authorize proceeding in the defendant's absence, if he chooses to absent himself altogether.

—Sale of more than quart—Hotel limit.]—Where the employee of the licensee refused to sell the applicant more than the statutory limit but told him he could go outside and return and then make another purchase, which he did, the total of both being in excess of the legal limit, and the magistrate convicted, the order of a county Judge setting aside the conviction was affirmed on appeal.

—Imprisonment in default of paying fine—Thirty days or one month.]—I. Where a statute limits the period of imprisonment in default of paying a fine to one month, and, the conviction awards thirty days, the Court will not on certiorari quash the conviction on the ground that the thirty days may exceed one month but will amend the conviction to one month under Cr. Code, s. 889. 2. S. 101, s.-s. 5 of the Ontario Liquor License Act, applies to authorize the re-summoning of the offender and revision of the penalty in respect of a subsequent conviction in any case where the prior conviction has been set aside.

—By-law restricting number of licenses— Next ensuing year.]—A by-law restricting the number of liquor licenses to three was attacked on the grounds that no time was mentioned when it should come into force, and that it was vague because it did not specify that it applied to taverns only or to taverns in particular. Evidence showed that there were no shop licenses in the township. Boyd, C., held, that the by-law was valid; that it came into operation on lst May next ensuing after its passage.

—"Club."]—Eight men contributed $1 each, which was handed to defendant. He rented a room for an unstated period, paying $4 for one month's rent, and with the balance purchased two eight gallon kegs of lager beer. He borrowed a beer pump and procured some glasses which were all taken to the room, where a P. C. found these men drinking beer. Defendant was charged with a violation of s. 50 of the Liquor License Act. The police magistrate dismissed the information. The Crown appealed. Widdifield, Co. C.J., held, that there was a club or association within the meaning of s. 53, and allowed the appeal. Defendant fined $20 and costs.

Held, further, that the Algoma magistrate had no jurisdiction to receive informations relating to offences committed in the District of Sudbury. Charges dismissed with costs.

-Local option-By-law submitted to electors-Voting-Scrutiny.]-A County Court Judge holding, under secs. 369 and 371 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903, a scrutiny of the ballot papers deposited at the voting upon a by-law submitted to the electors, has no authority to require any person who voted to state for whom he voted. Upon such a scrutiny the Judge has, however, jurisdiction to enter upon an inquiry as to the right to vote of the persons who have voted; but that inquiry is limited, in view of the provisions for finality of s. 24 of the Voters' Lists Act, 1907, as regards the right to vote of any person whose name is entered on the voters' list upon which the voting took place, to an inquiry as to whether, subsequently to the list being certified, he has become by change of residence, disentitled to vote. In re Local Option By-law of the Township of Saltfleet (1908), 16 O.L.R. 293, followed:-Semble, that, the jurisdiction of the County Court Judge being purely statutory, he has not the power to deduct the bad votes from the number cast in favour of the by-law, but his proper course is to certify the facts to the council.

Re Orangeville Local Option By-law, 20 O.L.R. 476.

-Local option by-law-Posting copies of bylaw-Publication.]-A local option by-law was submitted to the electors and approved by a vote of 481 in favour of the by-law out of a total vote of 781, the statutory minimum being thus exceeded by 12:-Held, that the least number of votes which would require to be struck off to destroy the majority was 32; and therefore it was not necessary, upon a motion to quash the bylaw, to consider the objection that 20 persons voted who had no right to vote. 2. Upon the evidence, s. 338 (2) of the Municipal Act, 1903, had not been complied with, copies of the by-law not having been put up at four of the most public places in the municipality; and s. 204 of the Act did not apply to heal this defect, the onus of proving that the omission had not affected the result being upon the municipality, and not having been met; and upon this ground the by-law should be quashed. 3. The bylaw was published in a newspaper issued outside the municipality in a certain village, without the authority of a resolution by the council, as required by s. 338 (2). The clerk said, "We always get our printing done there." Held, following In re Salter and Township of Beckwith (1902), 4 O.L.R. 51, that an objection to the by-law based on this irregular publication was not tenable. Re Begg and Township of Dunwich, 21

-Local option by-law-Voting-Declaration by clerk-Scrutiny-Illiterate voters.]-The result of the voting upon a local option bylaw, as declared by the clerk, was that 571 votes were for the by-law and 232 against, i.e., a total of 603 votes, of which more than three-fifths were for the by-law. Upon a scrutiny before a County Court Judge one vote which had been wrongly counted for the by-law was transferred to the other side, two ballots were rejected for defect of form, and 10 votes were struck off the winning side, because, as the Judge found, 10 persons had voted who had no right to do so. According to this result, the total of the votes was 591, 358 of which were cast for the by-law, being more than threefifths. The Judge certified, under s. 371 of the Municipal Act, 1903, that the by-law had received the approval of more than three-fifths of the electors voting thereon. Upon a motion to quash the by-law:-Quære, whether there is any necessity for a summing up or declaration by the clerk; but held, upon the evidence, that the declaration required by the Act was made by the clerk. The by-law being now attacked on the ground that it had not in fact received the approval of three-fifths of the electors voting thereon:—Held, that it lay upon the applicant to show that a sufficient number of votes must be struck off to establish that upon the declaration by the clerk, with the proper changes, the requisite majority was not in fact obtained. The Court should start with the result declared by the clerk, not that found by the County Court Judge; upon motions of this kind the Court may go behind the findings of the County Court Judge—his judgment in disallowing as well as in allowing votes may be attacked. Of the 371 votes counted in the declaration of the clerk for the by-law, it was admitted that one was counted by mistake for, instead of against; this left 370 for and 233 against. Held, that it would be necessary to strike 21 votes off the 370 to reduce the majority vote below the statutory minimum. Process of arriving at this figure explained. The votes of a number of persons, illiterates and others, whose ballots were marked for them by the deputy returning officers were objected to, on the ground that these persons had not been required to take declarations, and that the marking had not been done in the presence of the agents, as required by s. 171 of the Municipal Act. Held, in the case of one of these, a blind voter, that no declaration was needed; and as to the irregularity of marking his ballot in his presence alone, and not in the presence of the agents, that his vote could not be struck off on that ground, for the right to vote could not be considered to depend upon the manner of voting. Two very old women, who stated that they were unable to mark their ballots, were each accompanied into the voting compartment by a relative, with the permission of the deputy returning officer, upon the consent of the agents, including the person moving to quash the by-law, without any declaration of physical incapacity being made. Held, that these votes could not be struck off; it was not the right to vote, but the manner of voting, that was objected to. At one of the polling subdivisions there were 6 unmarked or spoiled ballots in the box. There was evidence that one of the voters at this place threw down the ballot upon the table, after having taken it into the voting compartment and returned with it, saying that she would have nothing to do with it. Being examined as a witness upon the motion, she refused to say whether she had made any marks upon the ballot. The ballot was placed in the box. It was contended that her vote should not have been counted. Held, that the Court, upon these facts, was not bound to find that this ballot was marked at all. It was sworn that one voter was allowed to mark her ballot in public and without ratiring into the compartment. This was not specifically denied Held, taking the incident as sworn to, that the vote was not invalidated by an irregularity in voting. 5 were persons whose places of residence had not been changed since the certification of the voters' list used as the voting. Held, that the judgment in In re Local Option By-law of the Township of Saltfleet (1908), 16 O.L.R. 293, 302, did not apply; and the Act prevented an inquiry by the County Court Judge, or by the Court upon this motion, into the right of these 5 persons to vote. The name of a married woman was entered on the list as "widow." It was shewn that she owned the property assessed to her as "widow," and was the person intended by the description. Held. that her name was on the list, and she had a right to vote. In one of the polling subdivisions 220 ballots were handed out, 220 voters were entered as voting, but 221 ballots were taken out and counted. Held, that, upon this state of facts, a vote should not be struck off the winning side. After the close of the poll in one subdivision the ballots were thrown loosely into a basket. after they had been regularly counted and certified, and were left exposed after the general public were admitted, so that they would have access to them, before they were replaced in the ballot box. Held, that this did not affect the result, and at the worst was an irregularity after the taking of the vote. The clerk of the municipality acted not only as returning officer, but also as deputy returning officer in one of the polling subdivisions. Held, following Re Pickett and Township of Wainfleet (1897), 28 O.R. 464, 467, that this was an irregularity; but it was only an irregularity. Objections to 16 other votes were not considered, as, if they were all allowed, the result would not be affected. And held, that all the irregularities were covered by sec. 204 of the Act. It was considered that the applicant, who was an agent at one of the polling subdivisions, was estopped by his acquiescence; but semble, that in a public matter such as this the doctrine of estoppel has no place.

Re Ellis and Town of Renfrew, 21 O.L.R.

--Notice not .o supply intoxicating liquor to named person—Information by person not within statute—Defamation.]—The defendant, the license inspector for a county, upon the application to him of McK., who was married to the sister of the plaintiff's first wife, knowing that fact, and believing that McK. was the brother-in-law of the plaintiff, issued a notice, under s. 125 (1) of the Liquor License Act (6 Edw. VII. c. 7, s. 33), to the hotel-keepers of the county, forbidding them to deliver liquor to the plaintiff. The section says that, among other persons, "the parent, brother or sister, of the husband or wife" of any person who has the habit of drinking liquor to excess, may require the inspector to give the notice. The defendant acted in good faith and without improper motive:—Held, that McK. did not come within the statute, and had no more authority to intervene than a stranger; the effect of the unauthorized notice was to promulgate a libel, to injure the plaintiff's business, and to expose him to various disabilities and interfere with his freedom of action; the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to recover damages from the defendant. Held, also, that the defendant, as a public officer, was entitled, under R.S.O. 1897, c. 88, to notice of action; but, as he acted without jurisdiction or exceeded his jurisdiction, it was not necessary under s. 2, which was the section applicable, that the notice should contain a charge of malice and absence of reasonable and probable cause; it was sufficient to state, as was stated in the notice served, that the act was done unlawfully. Moriarity v. Harris (1905), 10 O.L.R. 610, and Roberts v. Climie (1881), 46 U.C.R. 264, specially referred to.

-Conviction for second offence-Amendment of statute-First conviction-Change in penalty.]—Notwithstanding the provisions of secs. 1 and 6 of R.S.O. 1897, c. 83, and of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, s. 121, there is a right of appeal to a Divisional Court of the High Court from an order of a Judge of the High Court, made on the return of a habeas corpus and certiorari in aid, refusing to discharge a prisoner confined under a conviction as for a second offence of selling liquor without a license, contrary to the Liquor License Act. The prisoner was first convicted on the 28th July, 1908. In 1909, by s. 12 of 9 Edw. VII. c. 82, s. 72 of the Liquor License Act was amended by increasing the penalty for a first offence. The conviction for the second offence was made after the amendment:-Held, by Clute, J., and by a Divisional Court on appeal, that, having regard to the Interpretation Act, 7 Edw. VII. c. 2, s. 7, clause 46 (d), the offence for which the prisoner was convicted was a second offence within the statute, notwithstanding the amendment. But held, by the Divisional Court, that the convicting magistrate, in inquiring as to the previous conviction, had not followed the procedure indicated by s. 101 of the Liquor License Act; and the prisoner must be discharged.

—Local option by-law—Method of taking vote—Votes of illiterate persons.]—Upon an application to quash a local option by-law, upon the ground that the by-law, upon being submitted to the electors, did not receive the necessary majority of votes, it appeared that ten of the persons who voted were unable to read or write or were otherwise incapacitated from marking their ballot papers, and that the deputy returning officers marked ballot papers for them, without requiring them to make declarations of inability to read or physical incapacity, and in the absence of the agents appointed for and against the by-law, and without making the proper entries in the pollbooks; in these respects failing to comply with the provisions of s. 171 of the Muni-cipal Act, 1903:—Held, that the vote of one of these persons should be disallowed, because it was clear upon the evidence that the deputy returning officer marked the ballot as he (the officer) pleased, the voter giving no direction. As to three of the votes, they should not, upon the evidence, be disallowed. As to the six remaining, it appeared that each of the voters had a full and fair opportunity to cast his ballot; that the six ballots were marked by the deputy returning officers in good faith and in accordance with the directions of the voters; that no objection was taken by the agents to the method adopted of taking the votes, but that that method was acquiesced in by every one present. Held, that the non-compliance with the provisions of the Act in regard to these six votes should not invalidate the by-law, the voting having been conducted in accordance with the principles of the Act, and the non-compliance not affecting the result: Municipal Act, s. 204. In the case of one of the ten voters a person accompanied her and was present with her in the pollingbooth in circumstances which enabled that person to ascertain how the voter's ballot was being marked. Held, that that fact did not, in the circumstances, affect the result. The motion to quash the by-law was dismissed without costs, the irregularities of the deputy returning officers, the appointees of the municipality, being such as to provoke suspicion and warrant the -Jurisdiction of justices-Request of police magistrate not appearing—Habeas corpus.]—The defendant was convicted by two justices of the peace of an offence against the Liquor License Act. The in-itiatory proceedings were taken before a police magistrate, and it did not appear upon the face of the conviction (though it was the fact) that the justices were acting at the request of the police magistrate:—Held, upon motion to discharge the prisoner from custody under a warrant of commitment based upon the conviction, that, having regard to the provisions of R.S.O. 1897, c. 87, s. 22, the conviction was bad because it did not show the jurisdiction of the Justices; but the Court ordered that the prisoner should be further detained and the conviction amended under the Liquor License Act s. 105. Held, also, that it was not a ground for discharge that the warrant of commitment did not conform to the conviction, in that the conviction did not state the costs and charges of conveying the defendant to gaol; the statement of the costs in the warrant was sufficient. Held, also, upon an objection that the proper distribution of the penalty was not determinable upon the face of the proceedings, that it was sufficient that it appeared from the information that the informant was a license inspector, and that the conviction declared that the fine imposed should be paid and applied according to law. Objections that the justices, having drawn up and returned to the clerk of the peace an order for the payment of money, could not afterwards file any conviction with him, that no minute of such order was made before commitment, and that an amended conviction could not be put in after the enforcement of the fine and costs by imprisonment, were also overruled.

-Magistrate's conviction for selling liquor to minor-Appeal to County Court Judge-Trial de novo.]-The defendant, a licensed hotel-keeper, was convicted by a police magistrate, under 7 Edw. VII. c. 46, s. 8, introducing a new provision for s. 78 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, for unlawfully giving, selling, or supplying intoxicating liquor to a youth who was apparently or to the knowledge of the defendant under the age of twenty-one years. The youth was before the magistrate, and testified that he was under twenty-one; there was no other evidence as to his age, and no evidence as to the knowledge of the defendant. Under s. 118 of the Act, the defendant appealed to a County Court Judge, who made an order, quashing the conviction. No fresh evidence was taken before the Judge; the written depositions taken by the magistrate were (by agreement) put in; and the Judge had not the supposed minor before him:-Held, by a Divisional Court, upon a further appeal, by leave of the Attorney-General, under s. 120 of the Act, that the conviction was properly quashed, there being no evidence before the Judge that the defendant knew that the youth was under twenty-one and none that he was apparently under twentyone. The appeal to the Judge under s. 118 is in effect a trial upon the merits, the burden of proof is not upon the appellant, and the findings of the magistrate are irrelevant. Semble, per Riddell, J., that the age of the supposed minor could not be proved by his own testimony; and also that the whole effect of disbelieving evidence is to wipe out the evidence; and, although the magistrate might disbelieve the evidence of the defendant that he thought the youth was twenty-one years old in appearance, he could not find that this evidence proved the opposite.

Held, having regard to the amendment of s. 351 of the Municipal Act by 9 Edw. VII. c. 73, s. 9, that the clerk of a municipality can vote upon the submission of such a by-law to the electors. 2. That the action of the council, unanimous and without objection, in finally passing the by-law at a meeting held on Good Friday, was valid. Foster v. Toronto R.W. Co. (1899), 31 O.R. 1, referred to. 3. That, a special meeting of the council having been held on the 21st March for the purpose of finally passing the by-law and having been adjourned until the 28th March, it was not illegal to pass the by-law at another special meeting called for the 25th March; sec. 270 (1) of the Municipal Act. 4. That the clerk of the municipality was not disqualified by reason of his having published the by-law and done the printing in connection with it, nor because he had printed for pay certain literature in regard to the contest over the by-law for the organized class of electors who were advocating the adoption of it. 5. That the appointment of D. to act as scrutineer in polling subdivision No. 1, the certificate of the clerk that he was entitled to vote in No. 1, and the delivery of both to the deputy returning officer for No. 1, was sufficiently proved; and the clerk's certificate, that D., as scrutineer in polling subdivision No. 1, was qualified to vote in polling subdivision No. 2, on lot 16 West Main, and that this certificate entitled him to vote in polling subdivision No. 1, contained all that the Act required-the words "for or against the by-law" not being necessary. 6. That N., the deputy returning officer in No. 2, whose certificate read, "is a duly qualified tenant in polling subdivision No. 1, and is, therefore, entitled to vote in No. 2, was properly allowed to vote in No. 2, being "a person claiming to vote as a tenant:" s. 113. 7. That the real qualification of a voter whose name was on the list for No. 2 and who voted in No. 2, could not be inquired into: 7 Edw. VII c. 4, s. 24. 8. That persons "named" in the voters' list, even if their qualifications were not stated or were not sufficiently stated, were entitled to vote: 7 Edw. VII. c. 4, s. 24. In re McGrath and Town of Durham (1908), 17 O.L.R. 514, followed. 9. That Arthur S. Bashford was entitled to vote, as "the person . . . intended to be named" in the voters' list, the mame in the list being "Bashford, Geo. S.:" Municipal Act, s. 112. In re Armour and Township of Onondaga (1907), 14 O.L.R. 606, 608, followed. 10. That persons whose names appeared on the list as "Morgan, Dr.," "Nichols, Mrs." were entitled to vote there was no necessity for having the full name. 11. effect to in determining the number of votes for a by-law; the objection does not go to the right to vote. 12. That the entering in the poll books before the day of polling of the names of the persons on the voters' list was irregular, but it could not affect the result, nor the right of any voter to vote. 13. That the fact (if it was a fact) that, although sec. 341 of the Municipal Act was complied with by the council fixing a time and place for the appointment of persons to attend at the various polling places, s. 342 was not complied with because the head of the municipality did not appoint at the time fixed, was not fatal to the by-law; s. 342 is a provision "as to the taking of the poll," and so covered by s. 204, which should be applied. Re Bell and Corporation of Elma (1906), 13 O.L.R. 80, and Re Kerr and Town of Thornbury (1906), 8 O.W.R. 451, explained. 14. That, notwithstanding several irregularities, the by-law was saved by s. 204.

-Appeal to Court of Appeal-Option of Attorney-General-Warrant of commitment -Conviction for second offence-Proof of prior conviction. 1-The defendant, being imprisoned under a conviction for an offence against the Ontario Liquor License Act, obtained a writ of habeas corpus' (with certiorari in aid) and moved for an order for his discharge, which was refused by a Judge in Chambers:—Held, Britton, J., dissenting, that a Divisional Court of the High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from the Judge's order. Re Harper (1892), 23 O.R. 63, followed. Rex Teasdale (1910), 20 O.L.R. 382, not followed. Held, also, per Riddell, J., that the Divisional Court could not entertain a substantive application for a writ of habeas corpus; the matter being res adjudicata unless and until the decision of the Judge in Chambers was got rid off; and the Divisional Court as a Divisional Court having no jurisdiction. Rex v. Miller (No. 2) (1909), 19 O.L.R. 288, followed. Held, also, per Riddell, J., that, though a person is limited, by reason of the appeal to the Court of Appeal given by the Habeas Corpus Act, to one habeas corpus, the common law right to go from Judge to Judge until either a writ is obtained or every Judge has refused, still remains. Taylor v. Scott (1899), 30 O.R. 475, and Rex v. Akers (1910), 1 O.W.N. 672, explained. Held, also, per Riddell, J., that the proceeding begun by the writ of habeas corpus was not an "action," within the meaning of the Consolidated Rules. Held, also, per Riddell, J., that the fact that in this particular case (the conviction being under the Liquor License Act) the right of appeal was not or might not be absolute, but only at the option of the Attorney-General, did not affect the rule in Taylor v. Scott, supra.

electors and persons, should not be given

Notwithstanding the objection to the jurisdiction of the Divisional Court, Riddell, J., considered the points raised by the appeal, and stated his opinion thereon, as follows:—1. While it is the general rule that an appellant is not allowed to raise in the appellate Court anything which has not been raised below, the rule is not applied in cases affecting the liberty of the subject. 2. That the warrant of commitment was not bad because the word "liquor" was interlined in the recital of the conviction of the defendant for having "unlawfully sold liquor without the license," etc. 3. That the warrant of commitment sufficiently showed the authority of the magistrate alleged to have previously convicted the defendant (the conviction under which he was imprisoned being for a second offence). 4. That, while in the conviction the magistrate was described as "the undersigned William Lawson, police magistrate in and for the said county of Frontenac, and one of His Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county of Frontenac," but, in speaking of the prior conviction the words were "before me, the said William Lawson," it was to be taken that the prior conviction was made by Lawson, not as a justice of the peace, but as police magistrate, in which latter capacity only he would have jurisdiction. Hunt qui tam v. Shaver (1895), 22 A.R. 202, followed. 5. That the objection that the warrant did not state the place at which the conviction for the second offence took place was answered by saying that the form in schedule L. to the Liquor License Act had been followed. 6. That, although the warrant of commitment, in describing the offence in the recital of the conviction, omitted the word "anlawfully," while otherwise following the form in schedule F.(3), it was sufficient having regard to s. 72 of the Liquor License Act. 7. That the warrant (in the form in schedule L.) was sufficiently addressed to the keeper of the common gaol, by the description of his official character, though not by his name as an individual, to justify him in detaining the prisoner; the warrant was produced by the keeper, and the Court was not concerned about the description of the constables. 8. That the conviction was not invalidated by reason of interlineations and erasures in material parts; the conviction must be read with the interlineations and erasures as they appeared. 9. That the provision in the conviction, after the adjudication of imprisonment for three months for the offence, that the defendant should pay the costs of the complainant, and, if not paid, that the costs should be levied by distress, and, in default of sufficient distress, that the defendant should be imprisoned for fifteen days, unless the said costs and the charges conveying the defendant to gaol were sooner paid, was warranted by the Criminal Code, except as regards the charges of conveying the defendant to gaol; as to which charges s. 739 of the Criminal Code (as amended by 8 and 9 Edw. VII. c. 9) did not apply, nor s. 89 of the Liquor License Act, nor R.S.O. 1897, c. 90; nor could the conviction be amended under s. 105 of the Liquor License Act (distinguishing Rex v. Degan (1908), 17 O.L.R. 366); but, if the conviction was in other respects good, the Court should (if it had jurisdiction) exercise the power given by secs. 1124 and 754 of the Criminal Code, and make a proper conviction. 10. That the effect of the amendment, by 9 Edw. VII. c. 82, s. 209, of s. 101(1) of the Liquor License Aes, striking out the words "and not before," is to make the provision directory, instead of imperative and peremptory. 11. That the prosecutor, though interested, was not an incompetent witness: Canada Evidence Act. R.S.C. 1906, c. 145, s. 3; R.S.O. 1897, c. 73, s. 2. 12. That the prior conviction could not be proved by persons present in Court when the alleged conviction took place; the prior conviction not being proved, the conviction for a second offence could not stand; Britton, J., agreeing in this. 13. That the case could not be remitted under s. 105 (3) of the Liquor License Act (9 Edw. VII. c. 82, s. 32), which only applies where evidence has been rejected; nor could proceedings be taken under s. 101(5), the previous conviction not having been set aside; but the Court might (if it had jurisdiction) proceed under s. 1124 of the Code, and make use of the power given under s. 754, to make a conviction as for a first offence.

-Local option by-law-Voting-Form of ballot.]—By 8 Edw. VII. c. 54, s. 10, the Ontario Liquor License Act, s. 141, is amended by adding thereto a sub-section providing that the form of the ballot paper to be used for voting on a by-law prohibiting the sale by retail in a municipality of intoxicating liquors shall be, "For Local Option"-"Against Local Option." After the passing of the amending Act, a by-law was submitted to the electors of a town, and the form of ballot paper used was not that perscribed by the amendment, but "For the by-law"—"Against the by-law:"— Held, Middleton, J., dubitante, that the defect in form was cured by the Interpretation Act, 7 Edw. VII. c. 2, s. 7(35); that the mistake was not such as was calculated to mislead the voters; and (per Britton, J.) that, upon the material before the Court, the voting was, apart from this mistake, conducted according to the principles of the Act, and the result was not affected by the mistake; and, therefore, s. 204, of the Municipal Act could be applied. Re Giles and Town of Almonte, 21 O.L.R. -Transfer of license-Premises to be made "suitable" -- Powers of license commissioners — Ratepayers' petition.]—License commissioners appointed under the Ontario Liquor License Act have no power to say to an applicant for a transfer of a license that, if he will put certain premises into a suitable state for compliance with the law in the future, they will transfer a license to such premises; they are entitled to act under the statute only with regard to the existing state of facts, not to make promises as to the future, in such cases. O'C. having no interest in the premises proposed to be licensed, and having no valid license at all, presented a petition to the commissioners for the transfer to these premises of a license standing in his name for other premises in which he had no longer any real interest. He supported this by the statutory ratepayers which stated that the new premises were suitable for a tavern, whereas they admittedly did not possess the required accommodation, and that he was a proper person to become licensee of them. The commissioners heard petitions and counterpetitions upon the matter, and decided that they would allow the transfer of O'C.'s license to the new premises when they should be made suitable; but before that time arrived O'C., whose fitness for the transfer was one of the subjects of the petition, had ceased to have any interest in the matter, and was allowed to make over his right to K., who in this way escaped the necessity of obtaining the certificate of the ratepayers as to his fitness: -Held, that this was illegal, and if the plaintiff had asked promptly for an injunction to prevent O'C., when he had no valid license and no interest in the new premises, from obtaining rights by asserting that he had, he might possibly have obtained some relief; but at the trial it was too late to interfere, for K. had obtained rights which could not be interfered with in his absence, and the license commissioners whose conduct was in question had ceased to hold office. Held, also, that an offer made by the defendants to submit the question of the costs of the action to be disposed of in Chambers should have been accepted by the plaintiff, and, as it was not, the plaintiff was not entitled to costs against O'C.; and, as the unauthorized action of the license commissioners had caused the trouble, they

of an unincorporated club, purchases, with the funds of the club, a supply of intoxicating liquors for the use of the members. each of whom, although at liberty to help himself, was to contribute to the keeping up of the fund in proportion to what he used of the supply, is guilty under the Ontario Liquor License Act of the offence of unlawfully keeping liquor for sale. (2) Proof of the consumption of liquor in the premises occupied by a society, association or club within the provisions of s. 53 of the Ontario Liquor License Act, by any member thereof, constitutes incontrover-tible evidence of the sale or keeping for sale of such liquor, and the effect of s. 53, sub-s. 3, which declares that such proof shall be "conclusive evidence" of sale, and that "any member of the club, etc., shall be taken conclusively to be the person who keeps such liquors for sale," is to debar any member of the club against whom the charge is laid, from showing the contrary. (3) Such enactment is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature.

-Seizure under execution-Covenant to assign license-Covenant running with the land-Interpleader-R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, s. 37.]-A license under the Liquor License Act cannot be seized by a sheriff under a fieri facias against goods. The piece of paper upon which it is printed and written ceases to be seizable as an ordinary chattel when it is converted into a license. The right to sell liquor at a particular place under such a license is a personal one, and is not assignable by the holder of it except under the conditions imposed by s. 37 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245. Semble, a covenant in the lease of an hotel by the lessee that he will from time to time apply for a license and at the expiration of the lease assign to the lessor the license, if any, then held by him, is not a covenant binding on the assignee of the term as such, being merely personal and having nothing to do with the land or its tenure.

Walsh v. Walper, 3 O.L.R. 158.

-Devise of hotel premises to widow for life-Transfer by license commissioners of license to widow-Absolute right of widow thereto.]-A testator by his will devised certain real estate consisting of hotel premises to his wife during widowhood for the benefit of herself and four children, the income to be applied for their support and maintenance until the children became of age, and in case of daughters until marriage. On the widow marrying the property was to go to the children, the widow being paid $1,000. On the testator's death in 1896, the widow applied to the License Commissioners and obtained a transfer of the license to her for the remainder of the year, and for the subsequent years until 1900 the license was granted to her, she carrying on the business and maintaining herself and children thereout, no money of the estate going into the business:-Held, that after the testator's death the license and goodwill of the hotel business belonged to the widow personally, and formed no part of the estate; and apart therefrom the income was divisible amongst the widow and children as directed in Allen v. Furness (1892), 20 A.R. 34. Held, also, that creditors of the widow were entitled to attach the widow's interest in the property which could be reached by the appointment of a receiver.

conbridge, C.J.K.B.).

-Intoxicating liquors-Local Option Bylaw—Directions to voters—Motion to quash—Electors' status to oppose.]—A local option by-law named as one of the polling places a small unincorporated village; without specifying any house, hall or place in the village. Polling had taken place at this village year after year at municipal elections, and any house or place in it could be easily found:-Held, following In re Huson and South Norwich (1892), 19 A.R. 343, that the polling place was sufficiently defined. But, held also, that as directions to voters had not been, as required by the Municipal Act, ss. 142 and 352, furnished to the deputy returning officers, and as there was not clear evidence of the posting up under the direction of the council of the by-law at four or more public places, the by-law must be quashed, these not being irregularities cured by s. 204, and the fact that no harm had, as far as shown, resulted, being no answer. The municipal council having decided not to oppose the motion to quash the by-law, certain electors were allowed, at their individual risk as to costs, to oppose it in the council's name. Tavern licenses - Township by-law limiting to one - Monopoly.] - The effect of s. 20 of the Liquor License Act, when read with s. 330 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, is that no township can pass a by-law providing that the number of licenses shall be limited to one; the result of the by-law is in effect to create a monopoly. - Local option by-law - Repealing bylaw - Voting on - Form of ballot.]-A local option by-law was passed by the defendants' council in January, 1906. In December, 1908, a repealing by-law was introduced and given two readings, and submitted to the electors in January, 1909. The form of ballot used was that prescribed by the Liquor License Act. This amendment changed the ballot from "For the By-law" or "Against the By-law" to "For Local Op-tion" or "Against Local Option." The directions for the guidance of voters were changed to meet the requirements of the new form of ballot, though this was not in terms provided for by the amending enactment:-Held, that the change made in the directions was lawful. Held, also, that the plaintiff could not, upon the facts, maintain this action, which was brought to have it declared that the repealing by-law had not been properly voted upon, and so to clear the way for the passing of another repealing by-law (this one having been defeated at the polls by a majority "for local option"); for it was not shown that any ratepayer desired to have another by-law submitted, or that the council desired or intended to submit one. Held, also, that a change in the territorial limits of the municipality by county by-laws did not affect the voting upon the repealing by-law.

Ward v. Town of Owen Sound, 1 O.W.N. 512 (D.C.). - Convictions for first and second offences

-Ouashing the first - Amendment of second - Term of imprisonment - "Thirty days" - "One month" - Amendment.] The defendant was convicted of a first offence of selling liquor without a license, and also of a second offence. The first conviction was quashed for illegality, and that left the other conviction in effect one for a first offence: -Held, that, under s. 101 (5) of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, the second conviction could be amended so as to make it appropriate to a first offence; that sub-section is not limited to cases where the quashed conviction has been made by a County Court Judge on appeal; the language is wide enough to cover every case where a first conviction has been legally avoided. Held, also, on a motion to quash the second conviction as amended, that the manner of making the amendment was only a matter of form, and it was no objection that the magistrates had drawn up a new conviction, instead of amending the old one, both being returned. Hold, also, that, it was no objection that the magistrates had imposed a penalty of $45 and costs, though that was the same penalty as for the assumed second conviction. By s. 86, the penalty for a first offence is not less than $20 "besides costs," and not more than $50 "besides costs." By that costs are accessory to the penalty, and the power to give costs is not withheld, though s. 101 (5) speaks only of "penalty or punde-

It could not be said that $45 was not an appropriate penalty for the offence; and by the Criminal Code, s. 735, the magistrates, in their discretion, had power to order the payment of costs. Held, also, that it was no objection that the information was laid by the license inspector for a district other than that in which the sale was made; by s. 94 of the Act, any person may be the prosecutor. Held, also, that the imposition of "thirty days" imprisonment in case of default in payment of fine and costs, instead of one month, as provided by s. 86, was not fatal to the conviction, the error being amendable under 2 Edw. VII. c. 12, s. 15 (O.), introducing the provisions of the Criminal Code, 1892, s. 889 of which is applicable to an excess in punishment. Regina v. Spooner, 32 O.R. 451, referred to. Regina v. -Powers of license commissioners-Resolution prohibiting games of chance on licensed premises—"Euchre"—Knowledge of licensee.]-A board of license commissioners, under the authority of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, s. 4, ss. 4, passed a resolution "that no gambling or any game of chance whatever for gain or amusement or for any other purpose whatever shall be played about any licensed tavern or other house of public entertainment . . . or on the premises '': -Held, MacMahon, J., dissenting, that the powers of the commissioners, under s. 4, were not restricted by s. 81, and that the resolution was within their powers. Four persons played "euchre" for amusement in a room behind the bar of the defendant's hotel, the cards used being the property of one of the players, a boarder in the hotel:—Held, that "euchre" is a game of chance, and that the defendant was properly convicted of an infraction of the resolution by reason of the game having been played in his premises, though without his knowledge. Held, also, that s. 100 of the Act should be read into the resolution providing for the recovery of the fine imposed upon a conviction, and that the direction of the conviction for recovery by distress, and, in default of distress, imprisonment, was authorized. Held, also, that where the license inspector attends Court as prosecutor he is to be allowed certain expenses by way of costs, as provided in s. 117, and there was nothing wrong in the amount ($4.20) allowed for costs in this case. If it were wrong, it was severable, and could not affect the conviction. Rex. v. Laird, 6 O.L.R. 180 (D.C.).

—Cross-examination of accused as to previous offences.]—1. A conviction for a third offence under the Ontario Liquor License Act will be quashed if it appears that the only evidence of the previous convictions was the admission of the accused upon his cross-examination upon the principal charge. 2. It is not permissible to interrogate the accused as to the previous convictions until after the adjudication of the principal charge, and s. 101 of the Liquor License Act is imperative in that respect.

-Local option by-law-Second reading without formal motion-Approval by vote or ratepayers.]-A local option by-law was introduced in a town council on the 5th October, 1903 and a motion that it be read a first time was carried, after discussion, on a division of eight to two. On the 17th November a motion that the second reading should be deferred till January was council then went into committee of the whole and reported the by-law, which was then "read and passed as having had its second reading," but without any motion that it be read a second time. The by-law was then submitted to the electors, as provided by the Liquor License Act and the Municipal Act, and was approved by a vote of 869 to 679. On the 11th January, 1904, the by-law was, on motion, read a third time in the council, and also on motion, adopted as final. On the 23rd April, 1904, a motion to quash the by-law, on the ground that there was no motion for a second reading, was launched. The procedure by-law of the council contained a provision that in proceedings of the council the law of Parliament should be followed in cases not provided for. The procedure followed in this case was, however, the usual procedure of the council:-Held, that the matter was one of internal regulation, of which the mayor was the judge. subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the council; that, even if there was an irregularity, a by-law passed pursuant to a statute and adopted by vote of the people should not be quashed by reason thereof; and further, that as a matter of discretion, and in view of the delay in moving, a motion should be refused.

—Conviction—Third offence—Evidence of previous convictions—Improper reception—Subsequent deletion.]—A conviction of the defendant for a third offence against the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, was quashed on the ground that the convicting magistrate had improperly admitted evidence of previous convictions before the determination of the defendant's gailt upon the charge against him of a third offence, contrary to s. 101 of the Act. Regina v. Edgar (1887), 15 O.R. 142, approved and followed. Dictum of Armour, C.J., in Regina v. Brown (1888), 16 O.R.

41, 48, disapproved. Held, also, that the jurisdiction of the magistrate was gone when he admitted the improper evidence, and his competence was not restored by its deletion.

-Local option-Voting on by-law-Irregularities. J-Upon an application to quash a local option by-law of a village. approved by the electors by a vote of 124 to 117, it was alleged that in taking the vote the requirements of the Municipal Act had not been complied with, in that: (1) no newspaper was designated by the council wherein the by-law should be published; (2) one person was not appointed to attend the polling on behalf of those interested on each side; (3) persons were allowed to vote who were not so entitled; (4) no compartment was provided wherein a voter could mark his ballot screened from observation; (5) other persons were present in the compartment with the voter; (6) other persons were allowed to be in a position to see how the voter marked his ballot; (7) persons were allowed to be in the polling place who were not entitled to be there; (8) the returning officer did not perform various duties required of him at and after the close of Some of the allegations were disproved in fact. As to matters which were proved:—Held, that they were irregularities which did not affect the result, the voting having been conducted in accordance with the principles laid down in the Act, within the meaning of s. 204; and the motion was refused.

-Selling liquor without a license-Second offence-Form of conviction-Arrest under warrant not backed.]-On a conviction for a second offence, for selling liquor without a license, on which imprisonment was directed, a warrant of commitment was issued, directed to the peace officers of the county in which the conviction was made, upon which the defendant was arrested in another county and conveyed to gaol, without the warrant being backed by a justice of that county. A writ of habeas corpus having been issued on the defendant's behalf, the gaoler returned the warrant as the cause of the detention, and the conviction and amended conviction were returned under a writ of certiorari issued ir aid:-Held, that the amended conviction being before the Court, and sufficient grounds appearing therefrom for the detention, enquiry would not be made as to the regularity of the caption of the defendant, nor would any enquiry be made if there had been nothing before the Court but a regular warrant of commitment to the gaol of the proper county. Regina v. Jones (1888), 8 C.L.T. 333, not followed. Where, in a conviction for such second offence, the prior conviction was referred to as if being then adjudicated upon, instead of its being stated as a fact found on enquiry, after the finding of the charge then before the magistrates, but which fact, the evidence disclosed, had been so found, the court refused to interfere, intimating that, if necessary, the conviction could be amended. Judgment of Anglin, J., affirmed.

-Recovery of payment for liquor illegally sold-Holding license as trustee-Ontario Liquor License Act.]-The defendants, having become possessed of the good will of a liquor business theretofore carried on by an insolvent, who was indebted to them, and of the chattel property on the premises whereon the business had been carried on, sold them to the plaintiff for $1,200, it being agreed that the license should be taken out in the name of the defendant's manager, as was in fact done, to be held and controlled by him for the purpose of securing the purchase money. The defendants also obtained a lease of the premises and supplied the plaintiff with liquor to carry on, and which he resold in the course of his business, they debiting him with the price of the liquor and with the rent. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover monies paid by him to the defendants for liquor so sup-plied, under s. 126 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, as furnished in contravention of that Act, and especially of s. 64 (1), prohibiting such sales to unlicensed persons for the purpose of the latter re-selling, and this though the defendants were brewers duly licensed by the Government of Canada for the manufacture of liquor and also held a Provincial brewer's license. The granting of a license to one who has no interest in the business, and is not an occupant of the premises in which it is carried on, in trust for another who is the true owner of the business, and the occupant of the premises, is not a thing permissible under the Act. Held, also, that the defendants were not entitled to recover, by way of counter-claim, on notes given by the plaintiff for liquor supplied under the above circumstances, but that there being no scheme of any kind to evade the Act in the arrangement made, the defendants were entitled to recover the rent of the premises and money paid for plaintiff. Waugh v. Morris (1875), L.R. 8 Q.B. 202, specially referred to. Held, further, that the liability invoked by the plaintiff was not a penalty imposed upon the defendants within the meaning of R.S.O. 1897, c. 108, and could not be relieved against under that Act.

In prescribing the accommodation for taverns the by-law did not limit its provisions to the ensuing license year, but was so general that it might apply to all future years:-Held, that the scope of the by-law being limited on its face to the license year 1905 1906, the general words of the clause dealing with accommodation were limited to that year. Sections 20 and 29 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, considered. By-law-Local option in intoxicating liquors-Right of council to pass upon bylaw approved by electors.]-A local option by-law of a township was voted upon and approved by the electors on the 2nd January, 1905, and was finally passed by the unanimous vote of the council at a special meeting held on the 21st January, 1905. It was objected that the council had no power to pass the by-law on that day, because at a meeting of the council on the 9th January, when only four or five members were present, a motion for the final passing was negatived as the result of two voting for the motion and two against:-Held, that it was competent for the couneil at a special meeting of the 21st January to reconsider their action, to reverse it, and, without again introducing and submitting the by-law to the vote of the electors, to pass it. Re Wilson and Town of Ingersoll (1894), 25 O.R. 439, commented upon. Per Anglin, J.:—The first sentence of s. 373 of the Municipal Act, 3 Edw. -Searching for liquor-Absence of warrant-Private dwelling house.]-Defendant, a county constable, appointed by a police magistrate, searched the plaintiff's dwelling house for liquor without a warrant and without any special authority. In an action for trespass the trial Judge held that the defendant was acting in the discharge of his duty, and there being no evidence of malice, that he was entitled to notice of action, and withdrew the case from the jury and directed a non-suit:—Held, that the question as to whether the defendant was acting bona fide in the discharge of his duty as a constable in searching a private house as being a house of public entertainment, for liquor was a question for the jury; and that leave and license, which was argued on the appeal but not pleaded should also, if pleaded, be submitted to the jury, and the judgment dismissing the action was set aside and a new trial ordered with liberty to the defendant to amend by adding a plea of leave and license. Re Armstrong and Township of Toronto (1889), 17 O.R. 766, distinguished. The legality of the election of the members of the council who pass such a by-law, they having been returned as duly elected and having taken the oath of office, will not be enquired into on a motion to quash the by-law. The fact that the reeve, who signed the by-law and caused the corporate seal to be attached, having prior thereto purported to resign from the office, without the consent of the majority of the members present at a meeting of the council, and without his resignation having been entered on the minutes thereof, did not preclude him from afterwards acting as such.

-Local option by-law-General bribery.] -A cattle drover who was not a "temperance man," nor an agent in any way of the "temperance people" who were promoting the passage of a local option bylaw, having a grudge against a local hotel keeper, took an active interest in the passing of the by-law by treating freely as he travelled through the township, with a view, as he admitted, of influencing the electors to vote for the by-law. There was no general drunkenness, and it was not proved definitely that any one elector had been treated. The by-law was carried by a majority of 205 in a vote of over 1,200: -Held, in the circumstances, that such treating and conduct were not the means of passing of the by-law in violation of the provisions of secs. 245 and 246 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903.

-Selling liquor on vessel-Territorial limits of province-Offence committed on great lakes-Jurisdiction.]-The Province of Ontario extends to the middle line of Lake Huron as defined in the treaties of Paris and Ghent; and the British North America Act, in fixing the electoral divisions of the Province, recognizes the territorial sub-divisions provided for by the statute which is now R.S.O. 1897, c. 3, by which the limits of the counties and townships bordering on Lake Huron extend to the boundary of the Province; within the territorial limits of the Province, as to the subjects of legislation assigned by the British North America Act to the Provinces, the legislative authority of the Province is as plenary and as ample as the Imperial Parliament in the plenitude of its power possessed and could bestow; the regulation of the traffic in intoxicating liquors within the limits of the Provinces by a license law is one of the subjects as signed by the British North America Act to the Provincial Legislatures; and therefore the Ontario Legislature had authority to enact s. 10 of the Liquor License Act, which provides that no license shall be issued for the sale of liquor nor shall any liquor be sold or kept for sale in any room or place on any vessel navigating any of the great lakes, etc.; notwithstanding the contention that the only jurisdiction over the great lakes is in the Admiralty Courts. Regina v. Keyn (1876), 13 Cox C.C. 403, and Regina v. Sharp (1860), 5 P.R. 135, distinguished. The defendant, the master of the steamer "Greyhound," was convicted before a police magistrate having jurisdiction over the whole County of Huron, for that he (the defendant), on Canadian waters adjacent to the harbour of the Town of Goderich, in the said County of Huron, did "unlawfully allow liquors to be sold" on the steamer "Greyhound," of the City of Detroit, in the State of Michigan, "without a license therefor by law required ":-Held, upon the evidence, that the vessel, although a foreign vessel, was not when the offence was committed proceeding from one foreign port to another, but was being used for an ex-cursion which went out from the port of Goderich for a few miles and returned to that port, and therefore the rule of in-ternational law forbidding interference with persons on board a foreign vessel navigating the high seas or the great lakes was not applicable. Semble, that where it is plain that the Legislature has intended to disregard or interfere with a rule of international law, the Courts are bound to give effect to its enactments. that the conviction was not invalid merely because the place in the county where the offence was committed was not stated with more particularity than as above recited. Held, that the conviction disclosed no offence, unlawfully allowing liquor to be sold not being an offence created by the Liquor License Act; but the conviction should be amended so as to make it for an offence under sub-section 1 of section 49 of the Act, viz., the selling or bartering of liquors without the license required by law; Meredith, C.J., doubting whether the defendant was an "occupant" within the meaning of section 111, whether the words "house, shop, room, or other place," included a vessel, and whether the offence of selling liquor without a license was of the nature of the offence alleged in the conviction; Criminal Code, s. 889.

-Expropriation-Hotel property - Goodwill-License, value of-Interest.]-Where the land taken on a railway expropria-tion consisted of an hotel property, an allowance was properly made for the loss sustained by the owner for the disturbance of his business and anticipated profits by reason of the expropriation, notwithstanding by the fencing off of the railway property therefrom, which the company had the right to do, the hotel property might have been -rendered valueless as such, but which right the company had never attempted to exercise and presumably never would have exercised. The value of the license of an hotel is also a proper subject of allowance, though merely a personal right, and the renewal thereof, though reasonably probable, is not absolutely certain. Interest on the amount of compensation awarded is properly allowable from the date of the taking of the land, which in this case was the filing of the plan showing the land expropriated, and the order of the Railway Commission authorizing the taking.

-Conviction for second offence-Imprisonment-Police magistrate-Territorial jurisdiction-Proof of previous conviction-Affidavit of magistrate.]-On a motion upon habeas corpus for the discharge of a person imprisoned under a conviction regular on its face, the Court will not rehear the case or weigh the evidence or sit in appeal, but will examine the depositions returned upon certiorari granted in aid of the habeas corpus, to see if there is any evidence to sustain the conviction, and, if none is found, will discharge the prisoner; this is required by the language of R.S.O. 1897, c. 83, s. 5. (2) The police magistrate for the town of Brampton has jurisdiction, at the request of the police magistrate for the township of Toronto, to try a person accused of an offence committed in the township. (3) A prisoner will not be discharged because the warrant of commitment returned, by a clerical error, bears a date before that of the conviction upon which it is founded. (4) The conviction of the prisoner returned purported to be for a second offence of selling intoxicating liquor without a license, contrary to the Ontario Liquor License Act, and the sentence was four months' imprisonment as for a second offence. By s. 99 of the Act the magistrate is required to reduce to writing the evidence of the witnesses, which is to be read over to and signed by them. The depositions returned failed to show any proof of a previous conviction:—Held, that the magistrate's affidavit that proof of the previous conviction was in fact properly given could not be accepted on the motion for discharge of the prisoner, and no evidence being returned to warrant the conviction for a second offence, which was essential to support the adjudication of imprisonment for four months, the prisoner was entitled to his discharge. (5) The prisoner was also entitled to his discharge on the ground that he was not allowed fair or reasonable opportunity to make his defence; he was served with a summons to appear the next day after service to answer the charge; he did so; the information was then amended so as to charge an offence upon a day other than either of those mentioned in the summons; and he was refused an adjournment; all of which, as well as other things in the proceedings before the magistrate, was contrary to natural justice. The following votes were also held good: (1) Where the son, the voter, lived with his mother, who had a life estate in the property, with a power of appointment amongst a class which included the son; (2) a farmer's son, assessed as owner and living with his father, the owner of the farm, but who subsequently became the tenant; (3) a farmer's son, assessed as owner, living with his father, the owner, but carrying on a blacksmith business off the property; (4) an infant who became of age before the voting took place; (5) a farmer's son, the father and another being tenants in common of the farm; (6) where the property had been acquired after the roll had been made up, but before the final revision thereof; (7) where the property had been sold after the final revision, but another had been acquired before the date of the election. Deputy returning officers are not entitled to vote on such a by-law; it is not necessary that they should be selected before the publication of the by-law, and their names mentioned therein, nor is it necessary to name a day for the final passing of the by-law, these being cured by 4 Edw. VII. c. 22, s. 8 (O.). An Indian reserve, within the territorial limits of a township, but over which the municipal council has no jurisdiction, need not be specifically excepted in the by-law, for the municipal council must be assumed to have dealt only with the territory within their jurisdiction. In construing the word "week" in dealing with the required three weeks' publication of the by-law, it must be taken in its ordinary acceptance, which would include Sundays and holidays, and, therefore, not necessarily seven days, exclusive thereof. Irregularities in the meeting of the township council, or illegality in the election of the members, cannot be raised in a proceeding of this character. It need not appear on the face of the by-law that scrutiny has taken place.

-Imprisonment under several warrants-Consecutive terms of imprisonment.]— Section 72 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, enacts that, in the event of the imprisonment of any person under several warrants of commitment under different convictions in pursuance of this Act, the terms of imprisonment under such warrants shall be consecutive and not concurrent:-Held, that in such case, upon the fine imposed on the first conviction being paid, the imprisonment commences under the second; and if the fine be not paid, the second term commences at the end of the first; and in the meanwhile the prisoner is held under both warrants. Under the power to amend the conviction, warrant, process or proceeding given by s. 105 of the Liquor License Act, the Court has power to amend by striking out references to the costs of conveying to prison when the same are not properly indicated in the commitments or sufficiently identified by endorsement. Held, also, that on proceedings before a magistrate on a charge of selling liquor contrary to the said Act, counsel for the defendant, in the absence of the latter, had authority to bind him by an agreement that the shorthand reporter's notes should have the same force and effect as if taken down by the magistrate, and read over to and signed by each witness.

-Sale of liquor near public works.]-In areas wherein R.S.O. 1897, c. 39, an Act respecting the sale of intoxicating liquors near public works, is in force, a person who sells liquor without license may be proceeded against either under that Act or under the general Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245. It is optional to proceed under either one Act or the other with this proviso, that the offender shall not be punished twice for the same illegal sale. The fact that a man is a police magistrate does not debar him from calling in another justice of the peace to sit with him, and there is nothing to oust the general jurisdiction of justices in the fact that a stipendiary magistrate has been appointed for the district. The omission to ascertain the costs and insert the amount in, a conviction under the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, s. 49, is only an irregularity and not a fatal defect, and may be afterwards rectified by the same justices if it is sought to enforce payment of the costs:—Semble, that under the proper construction of s. 49 of the Liquor License Act, it is not necessary to negative the excepted cases in a conviction under that section. Semble, that reducing the evidence of witnesses to writing and tendering the same to them to be signed by them, though details which it is better not to disregard, are not essential to the validity of a conviction under the Liquor License Act.

-Local option by-law-Irregularities in conduct of election-Provisions as to secrecy.]-On a motion to quash a local option by-law passed by the municipal council of a town after an election at which five more than the requisite threefifths of the electors voting thereon were in favor of the by-law, the applicant established many important violations fully set out in the judgment of Riddell, J., of the statutory provisions relating to the taking of the poll, more especially of those which are intended to secure the secrecy of the ballot which were in effect disregarded:-Held, that the election was invalid and the by-law must be quashed, inasmuch as the irregularities proved were of such a nature as to cause an interference with the polling of a full, fair, and untrammelled vote of the electorate, and that such irregularities were not cured by s. 204 of the Municipal Act.

campers were, or what he meant by that phrase:—Held, that there was nothing in the reply to give the vendors reason to believe that the purchaser did not buy to re-sell within the meaning of sub-s. 2 of s. 64 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, and that, therefore, the vendor was rightly convicted under that section.

—Local option by-law—Deputy returning officer and poll clerks—Right to vote and take oath—By-law passed before expiration of two weeks for scrutiny.]—By virtue of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, s. 141 of which provides that the council of every township may pass a prohibitory by-law, known as a local option by-law, provided that before the final passing thereof it had been duly approved of by the electors in the manner provided by the electors in the manner provided by the section in that behalf of the Municipal Act. The fact that such a by-law was read a third time before the expiration of two weeks allowed for a scrutiny is immaterial, where, after such two weeks, and within the time limited for its passing, the by-law is read and finally passed. Deputy returning officers and poll clerks are entitled to vote on such by-laws, under s. 347 of the Municipal Act, and can properly take the oath, which may be required to be taken by persons claiming to vote thereon. -Evidence taken in shorthand-Consent. -Upon a prosecution for a second offence of selling intoxicating liquor without a license, contrary to the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, the evidence was taken in shorthand, with the express consent of the accused, and was not read over to or signed by the witnesses, as required by s. 99. The accused was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment. Upon the return to a habeas corpus:-Held, following The King v. Janneau (1907), 12 Can. Crim. Cas. 360, that the consent amounted to a legal waiver of a requirement affecting procedure only; and the prisoner was not entitled to be discharged. Semble, that, apart from any consent on the part of the accused, the effect of secs. 683, 711, 721 of the Criminal Code, warranted the course taken.

VII. c. 4, s 24, are (with certain exceptions specified in said section) final and conclusive evidence that all persons named therein, and no others, are qualified to vote on the bylaw. -By-law to reduce number of licenses-Unauthorized limitation - Meaning of "'year."]-By sub-s. 1 of s. 20 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, the council of every city is authorized by by-law passed before the 1st of March in any year to limit the number of tavern licenses to be issued therein for the then ensuing license year, beginning on the 1st day of May, or for any future license year until such by-law is altered or repealed, provided such limit is within the limit imposed by the Act. Under the authority of this sub-section, the municipal council of the city of Toronto, on February 22nd, 1904, passed a by-law, the second section of which provided that "the number of tavern licenses to be issued shall not exceed the number of one hundred and fifty in any one year." On January 27th, 1908, the council passed a by-law, intituled "A by-law to reduce the number of tavern licenses to 110," the effect of which was to amend the second section of the first by-law, so that it would read: "The number of tavern licenses to be issued shall not exceed the number of 110 in any one year." The number of licenses issued by the License Commissioners for the license year commencing on May 1st, 1907, was 144, but under s. 8, sub-s. 3, of the Act, they had authority, if special grounds were shown, to issue the six unissued licenses at any time before 1st of May, 1908:-Held, that the council by the by-law of 27th January, 1908, had, in effect, assumed to limit the number of licenses which the License Commissioners had authority to issue for the license year beginning on the 1st May, 1907, and that the by-law was therefore ultra vires, and should be quash-pass the by-law. Per Osler and Garrow, JJ.A., in the Court of Appeal.—The provisions of the Municipal Act, as contained in secs. 369-374 as to the ascertainment by the clerk of the result of the voting and as to the right to a scrutiny apply to a by-law of this kind; and, therefore, the bylaw should not be finally passed by the council until the expiration of the two weeks next after the clerk has declared the result of the voting, but there being here the requisite two-thirds majority, and no attempt made to obtain a scrutiny, the only objection made being as to the faulty third reading, the passing of the by-law being a purely formal and ministerial act only, which the council could be compelled to do, nothing would be gained by quashing it. Per Maclennan and Meredith, JJ.A. -The by-law could properly be passed by the council at any time within the six weeks, notwithstanding the non-expiry of the two weeks allowed for the scrutiny, so long as there was the three-fifths majority, there being nothing to prevent a scrutiny being had afterwards. Moss, C.J.O., agreed in the result. Judgment of the Divisional Court affirmed:-Held, by the Divisional Court:-(1) No proceedings after the polling, such as summing up the votes, or a declaration by the clerk of the result of the voting are necessary. (2) Where a voter, instead of handing the ballot paper to the deputy returning officer, puts it into the box himself, but with the officer's approval, the vote is not invalidated. (3) In computing the three weeks required for the publication of the by-law, the word "week" is used in its ordinary signification, and includes Sundays and holidays. (4) The question whether the council, when it passed the by-law, was properly consti-tuted or not, will not be considered on a motion to quash. (5) Knowledge by the council, when finally passing the by-law, that the three-fifths majority had been obtained, is not essential. (6) The ballotboxes used for voting on the by-law can properly be used for concurrent voting for other objects, the Act in no way restricting their use to voting on the by-law only. (7) Objections, that the voters lists were not properly prepared; that the list for one of the polling divisions contained more than the requisite number of voters; and that certain deputy returning officers and poll clerks were not properly appointed, were over-ruled. (8) The declaration of inability to read or physical incapacity to mark the ballot is a pre-requisite to open voting, and its absence invalidates the vote, even though it is done with the consent of the scrutineers for and against the by-law; but the defect was immaterial, for, even if struck off, the result would not be affected. (9) A voter is not to be deprived of his vote by reason of the submission to him by the deputy returning officer of a useless form of oath. (10) The fact that a public harbour, which is subject to the legislative authority of the Dominion, was within the territorial limits of the township does not necessarily raise the presumption that the council intended the by-law to apply thereto, even assuming that the council and not power to do so. (11) The copy of the by-law as advertised was: "In every tavern, inn or other house of public entertainment," omitting the words "or place" between the words "other house," and "public entertainment," which were contained in the original by-law:—Held, that the phrases "tavern, inn or house or place of public entertainment" and houses of entertainment were equivalent terms, and an objection that the copy published was not a true copy was overruled.

—Hotel keeper—Sale of three gallon keg of beer—Fretended sale of one quart at a time.]—A person brought a three gallon keg to the defendant's hotel to be filled with beer, and was informed by the defendant who held a "tavern license" that he could not sell more than a quart at a time. The keg was taken into a room adjoining the barroom and a little less than a quart of beer drawn off and poured into the keg, and this was repeated until the keg was filled:—Held, that this was a sale by the defendant of three gallons and not of a quart at a time as authorized by his license; and that the offence came —Second offence—Admission of previous offence—Record — Magistrate's minute— Uncertainty-Discharge of prisoner-Excessive penalty-Power to amend.]-The defendant was convicted on the 15th September, 1908, for selling liquor without a license; the conviction recited that the defendant had been convicted on the 17th October, 1907, of having unlawfully sold liquor without a license; and the punishment adjudged was imprisonment for four months without hard labour-the statutory penalty for a second offence. The only record in the proceedings in respect to any previous conviction was contained in an indorsement upon the information in the handwriting of the magistrate, as follows: 'The defendant makes a statement that he was convicted of selling between 4 Oct. and 14 Oct., 1907, and I find the within charge a second offence for selling. I commit the defendant to the county gaol for four months without hard labour:-Held, that sub-sec. 6 of s. 101 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, requires that the subsequent offence and the earlier offence shall each be an offence in contravention of one of the sections numbered 49, 50, 51, 52 or 72 or an offence against some other section for which no penalty is provided except by s. 86. The admission as re-corded might mean that the defendant had previously been convicted of an offence against s. 78 (2) or against s. 124 (1), or of selling on licensed premises in prohibited hours; proof or the admission of a former conviction for any of these offences would not warrant a later conviction under s. 72 being treated as a second offence under sub-sec. 6 of s. 101; and this fact sufficed to render the admission of the accused as recorded by the magistrate so uncertain that it was inadequate to sustain his conviction as for a second offence, and he should be discharged from custody under the commitment. Semb , that the Court had no power to amend the conviction by substituting the maximum penalty prescribed by s. 72 for a first offence. Rex v. Simmons, 17 O.L.R. 239, 14 Can.

Cr. Cas. 5.

-Selling liquor without a license-Evidence in writing.]-The taking down of the evidence under the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, is not only for the protection of the magistrates, but as a record of the material on which a conviction is founded in case of ulterior proceedings in respect of it, the Court being bound by such evidence, without any power to remit the case back to the magistrates to take further evidence. Where, therefore, a defendant was convicted and imprisoned for the sale of liquor without a license, but the evidence returned in response to certiorari, issued in aid of a writ of habeas corpus, while disclosing a sale on the premises, failed to show a sale by the defendant himself, the conviction and imprisonment of the defendant were held to be illegal, and an order was made for his discharge from custody.

-Local option by-law-Scrutiny of ballots -Finality of voters' list-Right of deputy returning officers and poll clerks to vote.] -Under s. 24 of the Ontario Voters' List Act, 7 Edw. VII. c. 4, the voters' lists finally settled by the Judge, are, upon a scrutiny, conclusive evidence that all persons named therein, and none others, are qualified to vote on a local option by-law, under the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, as amended by 6 Edw. VII. c. 47 (O.), except as therein mentioned, and therefore no evidence can be then given, touching alienage, or minority of any voters named therein, or as to whether the name of a married woman is properly on the list or not. Deputy returning officers and poll clerks are entitled, if qualified otherwise, to vote on such a by-law, if their names appear on the voters' list certified by the Judge and transmitted to the clerk of the peace. They may vote at the place where they act, though it be not their proper polling division. In re Armour and Township of Onondaga (1907), 14 O.L.B. 606, 610, not followed. As the law now stands under the present Voters' List Act. 7 Edw. VII. c. 4 (O), "scrutiny" of ballots cast on such a proposed by-law, with-in the meaning of s. 369 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19 (O.), is something different and more comprehensive than a simple recount. The extent of it is to be measured by what can be done on inspection of the ballot papers and the ascertainment of what votes are void ex facie, and the scope of investigation contemplated by the exceptions to the finality of the voters' list in 7 Edw. VII. c. 4, s. 24 (O.). A person who is a resideut in the municipality in which a local option by-law is proposed and an elector therein has a locus standi to move for a prohibition to the County Court Judge in respect to a scrutiny of the ballots at the voting. The certifying of the result of such a scrutiny under s. 371 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19 (O.), is a judicial and not a merely ministerial act, and the Judge may be prohibited from allowing his certificate of the result to be affected by any matter which he should not have considered in arriving at the result, to this extent that if he was not justified in arriving at the result, in entering into the consideration of the qualifications of the voters he may be prohibited from allowing these matters to affect his certificate.

-By-law increasing license fees-Effect of - Prohibition or monopoly.]-Under 6 Edw. VII. c. 47, s. 10 (O.), amending the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, the license duties were increased, the duties imposed being, in cities of a population of over 100,000, $1,200 for a tavern and $1,000 for a shop license; in cities of a population of 10,000 only, and towns of over 5,000 and not more than 10,000, $450 for a tavern and shop license respectively. By s. 11, the council of any municipality, with the approval of the electors, could increase the above amounts; but by subsec. 5, where in cities there had been an increase made by the Act, no further increase should be made. In a town with a population of about 7,000, the council, with the electors' approval, passed a by-law increasing the amount to be paid for a tavern license to $2,500:—Held, by Britton, J., that the validity of the by-law was dependent on the good faith of the council in passing it, and it being apparent that

-Sale of liquor during prohibited hours-Conviction of two persons for same offence Requisition for medical purposes-Exception not negatived by information.]-B., a hotel-keeper, and O., his bartender, were convicted by a magistrate upon informations charging them with the illegal sale of liquor during prohibited hours, both informations, however, referring to the same sale. Both convictions were quashed by the district Court Judge as being in contravention of the Liquor License Act, s. 112, sub-sec. 2, which provides that in such a case both the accused parties shall not be convicted of the same offence. On appeal to the Divisional Court:-Held, that as to O. the Judge's order was right on the ground taken by him, but as to B., who was convicted before O. was tried, the subsequent conviction of O. could not affect the validity of the conviction against B. (2) As, however, the information did not negative the exception of s. 54 of the Act protecting sales to vendees holding requisitions for the purchase of liquor for medicinal purposes, the prosecutor was bound to adduce evidence that the sale was not within that exception, and as there was no evidence before the magistrate on that point, the order quashing B.'s conviction must be upheld. (3) Although the magistrate might have amended the information at the trial, subject to s. 104 of the Act, by adding a clause negativing the exception, no such amendment could now be made. Regina v. -By-law of city council limiting number of tavern licenses-Annexation of town to city-Repeal of town by-law.]-A by-law passed by the council of the city of Toronto, on the 15th February, 1909, providing that the number of tavern licenses to be issued in the city "for the ensuing license year beginning on the 1st day of May, 1909, and for each subsequent ricense year until this by-law is altered or repealed, shall be limited to one hundred and ten' ':- Held, within the powers conferred upon councils by s. 20 (1) of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, to " limit the number of tavern licenses for the then ensuing license year, beginning on the 1st day of May, or for any future license year until such by-law is altered or repealed." On the 9th February, 1908, the town of East Toronto passed a by-law limiting to five the number of licenses that might be issued in that town: on the 15th December, 1908, the town became annexed to and part of the municipality of the city of Toronto; and thereafter the city council passed the by-law in question. It was argued that there were two by-laws in force dealing with the same matter, but unequal in their effect. Held, that the city by-law applied to the whole territory embraced within the city limits, and in effect repealed any bylaws inconsistent with it. It was also objected that after the first reading of the city by-law some other outlying territory became annexed to the city, and that the by-law should have been re-introduced before being finally passed. Held, that, the by-law being legal on its face and nothing fraudulent or improper being shown, the Court should, in its discretion, decline to quash the by-law on this ground. Re Secord and County of Lincoln (1865), 24 U.C.R. 142, followed. Order of Meredith, C.J.C.P. refusing to quash the by-law, affirmed by a Divisional Court holding as above; and leave to appeal refused by the Court of Appeal. Per Osler, J.A., delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal, refusing leave to appeal:-The plain object and intent of s. 20 (1) of the Liquor License Act is to enable the council to do one of two things: (1) to pass a by-law limited in its operation to the then ensuing license year, which will come to an end, ex vi termini, at the end of that year, leaving the next succeeding license year to be provided for, if at all, by a new by-law to be passed before the 1st day of March next before its commencement; or (2) to pass a general by-law applicable to any future license year, commencing with the 1st day of May after its passage. The expression "any future license year" means "all" future license years. The omission of the council to re-introduce the by-law and to read it a first and second time after the annexation of additional territory was merely a matter of the internal regulation of their business, which, in the absence of statutory obligation, they were at liberty to alter or suspend at their discretion.

(2) Where the defendant gives evidence on his own behalf, a question on cross-examination as to previous convictions of the accused for any offence and which would necessarily involve an answer as to the prior conviction charged. is within the prohibition of the statute although asked for the purpose of discrediting the testimony of the accused.

-- Railway employees-Selling liquor to-Offence created by both provincial and Dominion Acts.]-Where Acts have been passed by the Dominion Parliament and Provincial Legislature prohibiting an act, and an information is laid charging as an offence the commission of the prohibited act "contrary to the statute in such case made and provided," such information must be held, in the absence of a specific reference to the particular statute, to have been laid under that statute whose words are used to describe the elements of the offence. An information charged that the defendant at, etc., did sell, give or barter spirituous or intoxicating liquors to a conductor and engineer on the Grand Trunk Railway, while actually employed in the course of their duty in connection with the operation of a train; and that such liquor was supplied by the defendant's barkeeper contrary to the form of the statute, following the wording of the Ontario Railway Act, 6 Edw. VII. c. 30:-Held, that the offence must be deemed to be one under the Ontario Act, and not under s. 414 of the Dominion Railway Act; and as by s. 3 of the Ontario Act such Act is restricted to railways within the jurisdiction of the Ontario Legislature, and the Grand Trunk Railway being under the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament, a conviction of the defendants for the alleged offence could not be supported. Semble, the fact of the men not being in uniform, and not known to the barkeeper to be railway employees, would not exculpate the defendant.

- Selling liquor without a license-Second offence—Adjournments.]—The conviction of the defendant for a second offence under the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, was alleged to be illegal, by reason of the invalidity of certain adjournments made during the progress of the case, namely: (1) adjournments made by the justice before whom the information was laid, prior to the trial before the police magistrate; and (2) adjournments made after the trial had been entered upon, by a justice who had been appointed high constable of the county, and who, moreover, had no connection with the case:-Held, that the adjournments first referred to were valid under s. 702 of the Criminal Code-made applicable by R.S.O. 1897, c. 90-which empowers the justice who took the information to do "all other acts and matters necessary preliminary to the hearing," for the hearing must be deemed to refer to the actual hearing or trial of the case; but as to the adjournments secondly referred to it was doubtful whether the justice could legally act as such, and, even if he could, he had no jurisdiction to intervene in the case and grant adjournments. In any event. however, the alleged defects were merely irregularities, which were waived by the defendant appearing before the police magistrate at the trial, stating his readiness to proceed, and submitting evidence on his own behalf. An appeal from an order in Chambers refusing to discharge the defendant on habeas corpus, was dismissed; and costs of it were allowed to the Crown against the defendant. Quære, whether an appeal lay to a Divisional Court; or whether the appeal might be referred to the Court of Appeal, the Attorney-General having refused a certificate under s. 121 of R.S.O. 1897, c. 245; or whether, in any event, the Divisional Court was bound, at the det excul-

-Certiorari-Right taken away-Ontario Summary Convictions Act - Adequate remedy.]-The right to take the new procedure for the quashing of convictions, etc., substituted by 8 Edw. VII. c. 34 (O.), for certiorari and proceedings founded thereon. must be confined to cases in which, prior to that Act, the defendant would have been entitled to a writ of certiorari; and where the right to certiorari is taken away the new procedure is not applicable. A motion made under the new procedure to quash a magistrate's conviction for an offence against the Ontario Liquor License Act was dismissed, except as to one ground, it being considered that the other objections to the conviction were not such as, if substantiated, would oust the jurisdiction of the magistrate, and also, that in respect of them the defendant would have an adequate remedy by the appeal given him by s. 118 of the Liquor License Act; and, in these circumstances, the right to certiorari. and therefore the right to move under the new procedure, was taken away by s. 7, sub-s. 2, of the Ontario Summary Convictions Act, as enacted by 2 Edw. VII. c. 12, s. 14, amended by 4 Edw. VII. c. 10, s. 23, It cannot be said that, because defects in the proceedings before the magistrate may be cured by the appellate tribunal, therefore an appeal does not afford an adequate remedy.

-Convictions for second offences-Alleged convictions for first offences on same informations.]-Upon an application by the defendant to quash two convictions made by a justice of the peace for offences against the Liquor License Act, the defendant stated that, having been summoned to appear before the justice at one p.m. on a certain day to answer two charges of selling liquor during prohibited hours, the offences charged not being alleged to be second offences, he went to the justice in the forenoon of the day for which he was summoned, acknowledged his guilt, was found guilty and fined, and paid his fines and subsequently on the same day, the informations having been in the meantime amended by charging the offences as second offences, he was again convicted and fined for the same offences:-Held, that the principal objection, viz., that the alleged first convictions were bad because the penalties imposed exceeded those authorized for first offences, and that the alleged second convictions were bad because of the existence of the alleged first convictions, failed on the evidence, there having been in fact no conviction at the earlier hour, and therefore no payment of fines, but at most a deposit with the justice of the amount of the fines and costs which would be imposed when the complaints should be formally heard. The other objections related to the provision as to the recovery of penalties by distress, which was found in the convictions but not in the minute of adjudication, and the term of imprisonment imposed in default of payment of the fines and costs, the former being, it was urged, wholly unauthorized, and the latter in excess of what is authorized by the Act:-Held, that, assuming both to be valid objections, not to be got rid of by amendment in the present proceedings, they did not entitle the applicant to invoke the are of the Court to quash the convictions, because by the provisions of sub-s. 2 of s. 7 of the Ontario Summary Convictions Act, as enacted by 2 Edw. VII. c. 12, s. 14 (amended by 4 Edw. VII. c. 10, s. 23), the right to certiorari is taken away, and therefore the right to apply under the new procedure to quash the convictions, except in cases where there is no adequate remedy by appeal; and the objections were not such as affected the jurisdiction or the justice in such a way as to make the provisions of the sub-section inapplicable. Rex v. Cook (1908), 18 O.L.R. 415, followed.

Rex v. Renaud, 18 O.L.R. 420, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 246.

-Unlicensed hotel-Permitting liquor to be consumed-Occupant.]-The defendant was the owner of an unlicensed public house or hotel, which he had leased to his son; the defendant lived in the hotel as a boarder:-Held, that he was not an "occupant" within the meaning of that portion of s. 50 of the Liquor License Act which provides that the occupant of an unlicensed house shall not "permit any liquor, whether sold by him or not, to be consumed upon the premises." Held, also, that the word "rermit" indicates authorization, either expressly or tacitly, proceding from the occupant personally, and involves a mens rea; and, there being no evidence that the defendant knew or in any way authorized or connived at the drinking on the premises for "permitting" which he was convicted, that even if he were an occupant, the conviction could not be sustained.

Rex v. Irish, 18 O.L.R. 351, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 458.

—Selling liquor without license—Cross-examination to credit—Discretion of magistrate.]—On a charge of selling intoxicating liquor without a license on a certain afternoon, there being another charge pending against the accused for doing the same during the forenoon, and similar charges against other hotelkeepers for doing the same during the forenoon and afternoon of the same day:—Held, that the magistrate had a discretion as to allowing counsel for the accused to ask witnesses on cross-examination whether they had been seen in the defendant's hotel during the forenoon, and whether they had been in one of the other hotels that forenoon and atternoon, notwithstanding s. 786 of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1906, c. 146. Held, also, that on a motion to quash the conviction there could be no review of the finding of the magistrate that there was a sale of intoxicating liquor.

-Appointment of police magistrate-Jurisdiction before issue of commission.] - Under the Police Magistrates Act, R. S. O. 1897, c. 87, s. 6, conferring power on the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to appoint police magistrates, the effective act of appointment is the Order in Council, and police magistrates so appointed have jurisdiction to act as such before their commissions are issued. Under s. 6 of the said Act, by which "the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may at all times, notwithstanding anything in this Act contained, appoint a police magistrate without salary for any town," such appointment may be made for a town made such by proclamation, with less than 5,000 inhabitants, in an unorganized district before a council has been elected for it, notwithstanding that by s. 3 (2) no salaried police magistrate shall be appointed for a town with less than 5,000 inhabitants until resolution of the council affirming the expediency thereof is passed by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the council. Such magistrate has jurisdiction to act, notwithstanding that there may be another police magistrate appointed for the part of the unorganized district in which the town to which he has been appointed is situate, and this, though he is ex officio a justice of the peace, since jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in such a district to adjudicate upon or otherwise act, until after judgment in any case, is excluded (by s. 22) if the initiatory proceedings have been taken by or before the police magistrate for the district or part of the district. On motion to quash a conviction for unlawfully keeping liquor for purposes of sale without a license therefor:-Held, that the magistrate making such conviction, being a police magistrate for the town of Cobalt, correctly described himself as making the conviction as such police magistrate, although, in making it, he was acting in his capacity as ex officio justice of the peace for the district of Nipissing. Held, also, that in this case the conviction must be quashed on the ground that no offence was disclosed upon the evidence, and Regina v. McGregor (1895), 26 O.L.R.

114, distinguished in that regard. Rex v. Reedy, 18 O.L.R. 1, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 256.

-Local option by-law-Repeal-Submission of new by-law-Time limit.]-A village council passed a local option by-law in 1906; a petition for its repeal was presented in 1908; and proceedings were taken for the submission of a repealing by-law to the electors in 1909. The electors voted upon the by-law, but the number in favour of it was insufficient to authorize the council to pass it. The proceedings were in fact invalid because the voting took place more than five weeks after the first publication of the by-law:-Held, that the ineffective proceedings taken in respect of this repealing Ly-law were not a bar to the submission of another repealing bylaw before the year 1912, notwithstanding the provisions of 6 Edw. VII. c. 47, s. 24 (sub-s. 6 of s. 141 of R.S.O. 1897, c. 245), that "in case such repealing by-law is not so approved, no other repealing by-law shall be submitted to the electors until the polling at the third annual municipal election thereafter."

Re Vandyke and Village of Grimsby, 19 O.L.R. 402.

—Second offence—Conviction by same magistrates—Certificate of first conviction.]—
The defendant was convicted of a second offence against the Liquor License Act by the same justices who had made the former conviction, as in the case of Rex v. Reid, 17 O.L.R., p. 578, and it further appeared that among the papers returned upon the certiorari was a certificate of the fact of the previous conviction, signed by the justices, but it did not appear that any use was made of the certificate at the trial:—Held that the conviction was valid.

-Second offence-Conviction by same magistrates - Evidence of previous conviction.]-The defendant was convicted of a second offence against the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, by the same magistrates who had tried and convicted him of the first offence. The magistrates, however, followed accurately the directions of s. 101 of the Act, first inquiring concerning the subsequent offence only, of which the defendant was found guilty, and then, and not before, asking him whether he had been previously convicted, to which he answered that he had been:——Held, that the conviction was valid. -Local option by-law-Scrutiny-Finality of voters' list.]-S. 24 of the Voters' List Act, 7 Edw. VII. c. 4 (O.), provides that "the certified list" made under that Act "shall upon a scrutiny under the Ontario Elections Act," meaning the "Ontario Controverted Elections Act," or the Municipal Act, be final and conclusive evidence that all persons named therein, and no others, were qualified to vote at any election, at which such list was, or was the proper list, to be used at the elections, except persons (1) guilty of corrupt practices at the elections, etc., (2) becoming non-resident, etc., (3) persons disqualified under s. 47 of the Ontario Elections Act, namely, Judges, clerks of the peace, etc., prisoners, lunatics, or persons in charitable rnstitutions:-Held, that the section applied to the proceedings on a motion to quash a local option by-law, so that the list was final and conclusive as to the right of the persons named in such list, and not within the exceptions mentioned, to vote on such by-law.

-Destruction order-Proprietary medicines -Oral direction of magistrate. |-The plaintiffs were on the 9th July, 1906, convicted by a magistrate of keeping intoxicating liquors for sale without license, contrary to the Liquor License Act. The conviction was not formally drawn up and signed until the 25th October, 1906, when it was made part of the return to a writ of certiorari. The conviction as returned contained a declaration that a large quantity of liquor found on the plaintiffs' premises, including portions alleged by the plaintiffs to be proprietary medicines, should be forfeited, and an order and direction to the defendants, who were police officers, to destroy the liquor and the vessels containing it. This direction was given orally at the time of the conviction, and was acted upon by the defendants about three weeks later. On the 10th December, 1906, the order for the destruction of the portions of the liquor alleged to be medicines was quashed by an order of the High Court of Justice. In an action for damages for the destruction of those portions:-Held, (1) Upon the evidence, that the liquors in question came within the protection of ss. 2 and 3 of 61 Vict. c. 30 (O.), as proprietary medicines or medicine wines. (2) That in destroying the liquors in question the defendants in good faith believed they had the right to do so in their capacity as police officers, and it was their duty to obey the direction, though merely oral, of the police magistrate. (3) That the goods being in the custody of the law, and under the jurisdiction of the magistrate, and the destruction being a ministerial act, there was no necessity, in the absence of statu-tory requirement or other authority, for the direction to the police officers to be in writing. (4) That the defendants had reasonable and probable cause to believe that they had the right to destroy the liquors in question, and no malice on their part was shown. (5) That the notice of action was sufficient, as the defendants, according to their own evidence, understood the nature of the complaint and when and where the act complained of happened. (6) That, in view of the provisions of R.S.O. 1897, c. 88, s. 22, the successful defendants could not be deprived of their costs of the action, and were entitled thereunder to costs as between solicitor and client. -Sale to minors-Amending informations -Lapse of 30 days.]-Upon the hearing of complaints upon two informations for breach of s. 78 of the Liquor License Act, as amended by 5 Edw. VII. c. 30, s. 1 (O.), in selling liquor to minors, the justices amended by inserting in the informations the necessary allegation that the parties to whom the liquor was sold were "apparently, or to the knowledge of the defendants, under the age of 21 years':-Held, that under s. 104 of the said Act the justices had power so to amend, notwithstanding that 30 days had elapsed from the date of the commission of the offences charged. Quære, whether in view of s. 95 this would have been permissible if the amendments had substituted other and different offences for those charged in the informations.

-Local option by-law-Statement in bylaw as to time and place of voting-Unqualified voters.]-At the time a local option by-law received its first and second readings it was stated therein that it would be voted on at the same time and place as the municipal elections. Before the first publication of the by-law such time and place were fixed by the council and inserted in the by-law by the clerk. On objection to this:-Held, that s. 338 of the Con. Mun. Act, 1903, 3 Edw. VII. c. 19 (O), was substantially complied with, the act of the clerk having been merely the substitution of one equivalent for another. An objection that a number of unqualified voters were allowed to vote was also overruled, it appearing that even if the votes were struck out there would still be the required three-fiths majority in favour of the by-law. An objection that the by-law was finally 1 assed before the lapse of the two weeks allowed for a scrutiny was also overruled, following Re Dunean and the Town of Midland (1907), 16 O.L.R. 132.

-Selling without license-Trial-Evidence taken in shorthand—Prior conviction—Identity—Absence of accused—"Penalty" -Punishment by imprisonment.]-On a trial before a magistrate for selling liquor without a license contrary to the Liquor License Act, the evidence with, and semple, without, the consent of the accused. may be taken down in shorthand, and it is not necessary that it should be read over to and be signed by the accused. In proof of the conviction of a prior offence by the person accused, identity of name in the certificate of conviction is some evidence of the identity of the person, and it is then a question of the weight of evidence for the determination of the magistrate. The existence of a local option by-law in a locality has not the effect, under s. 193 of the Liquor License Act, of depriving the magistrate of the power to direct the imprisonment of the accused, the word "penalty," used in the Act, including im-prisonment. When the accused is present at the trial and has due notice of the adjournment of it to another time, the fact of his absenting himself at that time, whether represented by counsel or not, does not deprive the magistrate of authority to hear evidence and convict him of a second offence. The Court, by virtue of the powers conferred by s. 119 of the Ontario Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 51, has jurisdiction to award costs against the applicant for discharge upon habeas corpus when the conviction is for a penalty imposed by or for an offence created by provincial legislation, such jurisdiction being in no way interfered with by s. 191.

—Local option by-law—Petition for submission of by-law—Signatures—Detachment from petition.]—Sub-s. 3 of s. 141 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 245, as added by 6 Edw. VII. c. 47, s. 24, and amended by 7 Edw. VII. c. 46, s. 11, provides that "in case a petition in writing signed by at least twenty-five per cent. of the total number of persons qualified to vote at municipal elections, is filed with the clerk of the municipality on or before the 1st day of November praying for the submission of such by-law"—a local option by-law—"it shall be the duty of the council to submit the same to a vote of the municipal electors as afore-said." Upon a motion for a mandamus to compel the council, after the filing of a petition in due time, to submit a by-law to a vote of the electors:—Held, reversing the decision of Meredith, C.J.C.P., that the document filed, being in the form of a petition, but signed by only two electors, with the signatures of others sufficient to make up the proper number attached thereto, having been previously affixed to, and detached from, other petitions in the same form, was not a "petition in writing signed by at least twenty-five per cent. of the total number of persons qualfied to vote." within the meaning of the statute, notwithstanding that no fraud was alleged. Held, also, that one of the members of the council had a status to maintain an appeal from an order in the nature of a mandamus requiring the council to submit the by-

-- Quebec license law-Writ of Prohibition Procedure - Proof - Jurisdiction of license commissioners.]-Held (affirming the judgment of the Superior Court, Davidson, J., 19 Que. S.C. p. 279): 1. License commissioners, although not among the inferior courts mentioned in Arts. 59, 63, 64 and 65 of the Code of Procedure, have duties of a judicial character which, on proper occasion, subject them to the superintending authority of the Superior Court, and the proper remedy is a writ of prohibi-tion. 2. The only proof required, or admissible, on a writ of prohibition against the license commissioners is such as would go to establish want or excess of jurisdiction. 3. When Art. 836 R.S.Q. may be invoked, the license commissioners can no longer grant a license as a matter of discretion, but their judgment is none the less final as to whether majority oppositions, or two previous oppositions, really exist. 4. The refusal of the commissioners to re-open the enquête after both parties had formally declared their respective enquêtes closed, is not sufficient to support a writ of prohibi-tion. 5. The refusal of the commissioners to count on the opposition signatures of duly qualified electors, for the reason that the same persons had also signed in support of the application, was a decision on an issue within their jurisdiction, and was moreover a proper decision.

Perkins v. Choiniere, 20 Que. S.C. 537 (n), (Mulvena, J.P.).

-Ouebec License Act-Municipal councils-Discretion.] - The district magistrate's Court is an inferior tribunal within the meaning of Art. 1003, C.P.Q., and the provisions of Art. 50 C.P.Q. which subject all tribunals, etc., except the Court of King's Bench, to the orders and control of the Superior Court, apply to the district magistrate's Court, notwithstanding Art. 1290 C. P.Q., which forbids the proceedings in such Courts to be taken, by certiorari or otherwise, before any other tribunal. The recourse to prohibition to prevent an inferior tribunal from dealing with a cause is open from the time such tribunal is seized of the cause and before judgment. After judgment it only lies when the want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the proceedings. Municipal councils, in the decisions they give, under the License Act, respecting the certificate for hotel licenses (except in the cases provided for by s. 22) exercise a purely discretionary power and such decisions are, therefore, free from censure and control by the judiciary. S. 26 of the License Act applies only to the cities of Montreal and Quebec, but even if extended to rural nunicipalities it is always discretionary with municipal councils to grant or refuse the preference therein mentioned. Art. 100 M.C. gives the magistrate's Court jurisdiction to quash decisions of municipal councils for illegality only, and the application to quash must state the grounds of illegality before it can be entertained.

Taxes on confirmation of license certificates.]-Held, reversing the judgment of Lynch, J., Hall and Wurtele, JJ., dissenting:-That the Act amending the Quebec License Act (54 Vict. c. 13), which provides that "the municipal councils of cities, towns, villages and other authorized local municipalities, cannot levy, by by-law, resolution, or otherwise, any tax or impost or duty exceeding in any year the sum of $50, on any license under this Act, either for confirmation of a certificate to obtain the license or otherwise, for the object for which he holds such license" has not the effect of repealing the provisions of special charters permitting municipal corporations from imposing a higher rate of taxation. Town of Farnham v. Roy, 12 Que. K.B. 237.

—Confirmation of certificate by municipal council—Want of notice—Nullity.]—Held, affirming the judgment of the Court of Review, and reversing that of Choquette, J.:—That the Quebec License Act, requiring previous notice on the part of manuicipal councils upon the confirmation of license certificates, is an imperative provision in the interest of the public, and want of such notice is justification for any person interested to require the annulment of the confirmation of such certificate within the time and in the manner indicated in the Municipal Code.

Village of Plessisville v. Moffet, 12 Que. K.B. 418.

—Wote of ratepayers——Invalid by-law.]

—A ratepayer interested in the license fee for the sale of intoxicating liquor in the municipality, is competent to demand that a by-law which the ratepayers have been called upon to approve by their votes, and have, in fact, approved, and which has been sent to the collector of revenue for the district in order to prevent the issue of licenses, should be declared never to have been adopted by the municipal council, and, therefore, to be no by-law at all. When several witnesses, equally intelligent and unimpeachable, and who seem to have given their evidence in good faith, do not agree as to the existence of a certain matter, the Court should accept the view of the majority, rather than that of the minority. Between witnesses equally honest, credence should be given to those who from the circumstances of the case cannot be mistaken, as against those who can. A municipal council hes no right to declare that one of its members is disqualified from voting on any question respecting license fees for sale of liquor on the ground that he had been corruptly influenced by a person seeking such a license.

Lambe v. Lafontaine, 6 Que. P.R. 422 (Curran, J.).

—Confirmation of certificate.]—A municipal council cannot confirm the certificate for a saloon license when there is a protest signed by a majority of the electors on the ground that one of the protesting parties without whom there would not be a majority had himself signed the certificate. This was the law before the Act of 9 Edw. VII. c. 17 was passed. An explanatory Act is a part of the Act explained and applies to prior proceedings, though not in terms retroactive.

—Concurrent legislative power—Temperance Act of 1864—Quebec License Law 1900.]—(1) The legislature of the Province of Quebec has no power to repeal any portion of the Temperance Act of 1870 purporting to repeal certain sections thereof in so far as the same relates to the Province of Quebec and to matters within the control of the provincial legislature, is of no effect. (2) The repeal of ss. 1 to 10 inclusive of the Temperance Act of 1864 by the Canada Temperance Act, 1878, still left in force as provincial legislation the sections of the Quebec License Law of 1870 embodying similar provisions to those contained in the sections so repealed. (3) The Quebec provincial statute, 49 & 50 Viet. c. 3, s. 4 (now s. 68 of the Quebec License Law), declaring that the sale of intoxicating liquors without license in municipalities where the Canada Temperance Act is in operation shall be held to be a contravention of the provincial license law is within the legislative powers of the province. (4) A prosecution for selling liquors without license will lie under the Quebec License Law of 1900, although such sale took place in a district in which the Temperance Act of 1864 is in force and had been so comtinuously since confederation. (5) The fact that the offence was an infraction of the Temperance Act of 1864 does not prevent its being also an offence under a provincial law and punishable under either or both, the federal and provincial jurisdiction to constitute the sale an offence, being concurrent.

License to sell liquor—Petition against— Question of fact—Signatures to petition.] -The question of whether or not an opposition in writing to confirmation of a certificate for obtaining a license is signed by the majorty of the electors required by law is a question of fact of which the municipal councils are the sovereign judges. Therefore, the resolution passed in the negative does not give a right to the action to quash (en cassation) on account of illegality under Art. 23 of the License Act amended by 3 Edw. VII. c. 13, s. 3. A municipal council has the right to strike out en bloc, from the written opposition to these certificates, the signatures of the persons who had previously signed the certificates and is not obliged to make a special elimination for each of the signatures which appear on them and at the same time on the opposition.

Cérat v. Boisseau, 8 Que. P.R. 343 (Fortin, J.).

—Municipal council—Resolution.]—A Magistrate's Court has jurisdiction to quash as illegal a resolution of a municipal council respecting a tavern license only when the council confirms a certificate in contravention of s. 22 of 63 Vict. c. 12, in all other cases the decision of the council is final. Therefore, the judgment of the Superior Court refusing to grant a writ of prohibition to prevent the Magistrate's Court from sitting on a case in which said statute was not contravened should be reversed.

Town of Ste. There'se v. Magistrate's Court of Terrebonne & Desormeaux, 9 Que. P.R. 408 (Ct. Rev.).

—Municipal by-laws—Sale of liquor.]—Provincial legislatures have power, by virtue of s. 92 B.N.A. Act, 1867, to pass an Act permitting municipalities, by by-law, to require places where intoxicating liquor is sold under license from the government to be closed at certain hours. A by-law passed under this authority is valid although, in its application, it affects only a special class of citizens, for example, restaurant keepers. It is applicable from the time it comes into force even as to persons whose licenses had been issued when it was passed.

De Varennes v. The City of Quebec, Q.R. 31 S.C. 444.

-Municipal by-laws - Liquor sellers-Regulation of trade-Double penalty.]-Provincial legislatures have power, under s. 92 B.N.A. Act, 1867, to authorize municipalities to pass by-laws to compel the closing, at prescribed hours of certain days, or during certain hours of shops for selling liquor under government license. A bylaw passed for such purpose is valid although it affects only a special class of citizens, fixes different hours for closing on different days, and may result in the imposition of a double penalty on that account. The license for the sale of liquor granted by the government is subject to the Acts and by-laws in force when it is issued as well as to those passed while it is in operation; it is in no sense a contract which relieves the licensee from such obligation

De Varennes v. Attorney-General, Q.R. 16 K.B. 571, affirming 31 S.C. 444.

—Quebec License Act—Depositions of witnesses—Attestation—Commitment extending to payment of "subsequent costs."]—1. When depositions of the witnesses present in Court are taken down in writing by leave of the magistrates, under s. 189 of the Quebec License Act, they need not be signed by the witnesses and are sufficiently attested by the signatures of the justices to the minutes of proceedings that declare that each one of the witnesses was sworn and gave the evidence written in the depositions. 2. A commitment, under a condemnation to pay a fine, a specified sum for costs, or, in default, to imprisonment for a stated period, "unless the said several sums of money and costs and charges of arrest, of commitment and of the conveying of the said X. to the common gaol, shall be sooner paid," is not bad under the Quebec License Act, which provides at s. 207 for the payment of such subsequent costs. 3. A conviction, under the Act, of selling liquor without a license on the 24th of February, 1906, and on various occasions, both prior and subsequent to that date, is not bad for vagueness, it being provided in s. 193, that "rigorous precision as to the mention of time in the complaint, is not necessary in the proof, to justify a conviction." 4. No appeal being allowed from a conviction under the Quebec License Act, the Court, on an application for certiorari, will not look into the evidence with a view to revise the decision of the magistrates.

Dubuc v. Maclaren; R. v. Dubuc, 37 Que. S.C. 59.

-Contract-Illegal consideration-Club-Evasion of the law as to licenses.]-Letters patent of incorporation of a so-called club and a license to sell liquor issued to it, as such, when in reality an individual alone is interested in the matter, as lessee of the premises, purchaser of the furniture, fixings and stock, and as sole beneficiary of the profits, the whole as a scheme to evade the law respecting the more expensive license and stricter regulations imposed on tavern-keepers, confer no rights that can be the lawful consideration of a contract. A sale therefore of any such pretended rights cannot be enforced and no action will lie to recover the price thereof. The Courts, in dealing with such cases, will only declare the nullity of the proceedings had in violation of the law and leave each party to pay his costs.

Bernier v. Dequoy, 33 Que. S.C. 237.

—Community of property.]—(1) An action taken by a wife against an hotel-keeper for damages because of liquor sold to her husband is not an exercise of community rights, as the community has no claim against the defendant. (2) A wife commune en biens has an eventual right in the property of the community and thus suffers damage from acts which diminish the community of property.

-Saloon certificate-Opposition-Municipal elector.]-The status of municipal elector which one must have to enable him to take proceedings to quash a resolution confirming a certificate for a saloon license is sufficiently established by his name being inscribed on the roll of electors and is not subject to the condition of payment of his taxes. An opposition in general terms to the confirmation of a certificate for a saloon license in a city ward for a fixed period granted by those authorized by law and in the former prescribed has the same effect as a special opposition to an application to confirm a certificate given by a private person. Hence, a resolution of a municipal council which confirms a certificate for a license in a ward after an actual majority of the electors residing therein have signed and deposited an opposition to the confirmation of any such certificate is void and should be quashed.

Town of Montenaguy v. Bélanger, Q.R.

19 K.B. 256.

-Liquor license-Resolution of council-Future rights.]—Under the Act, 3 Edw. VII. c. 13, s. 3 (Que.) the Circuit Court can try a case for quashing a resolution by a town council for issue of a license for the sale of liquor; such jurisdiction is special and forms an exception to the rules of Art. 47 C.P.Q. An action to quash such an resolution does not affect the future rights of the person to whom the license was granted; the latter cannot, therefore, evoke the cause to the Superior Picard v. Town of Bordeaux, 11 Que. P.R. 296.

-Minor-Sale of liquor to-Action by father-Damages.]-In an action against a hotel-keeper for injury to his son under age by the sale of liquor the father cannot. in his own name, claim damages personal to the son.

Charbonneau v. Béliveau, 9 Que. P.R. 88 (Sup. Ct.).

-Municipal council-Resolution-Appeal-License certificate.]-The resolution of a municipal council which refuses to confirm a certificate for a hotel license is final and not subject to review. The amending Act 3 Edw. VII. c. 13, s. 3, makes resolutions confirming the certificate alone liable to be quashed. Hence, where the magistrate of the district entertained a petition to quash the resolution refusing to confirm a writ of prohibition to restrain him was granted. Sec. 26 of the License Act which gives a preference to those who have kept hotels during the preceding year and have them fitted up for the purpose has operation only in the cities of Quebec and Montreal.

Town of Ste. Thérèse de Blainville v.

Magistrate's Court for County of Terrebonne, Q.R. 34 S.C. 470.

-License-Resolution of municipal council.]-There is a right of appeal to the Court of King's Bench from the judgment of the Superior Court in Review, Q.R. 34 S.C. 470, on the merits of an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain a Magistrate's Court from dealing with a petition to quash a resolution of a munici-pal council respecting a certificate for a hotel license. Such judgment is not given in a matter respecting municipal corporations and municipal officials but in one concerning the application of the Act respecting licenses 63 Vict. c. 12 (Que.). It therefore falls under the operation of Art. 1006 C.P.Q.

- Statutory restriction of certiorari proceedings—Affidavit negativing guilt—Jurisdiction of magistrate—Sale of liquor by wholesale.]-The Liquor License Act of Nova Scotia, 1895, s. 117, applies to pro-hibit the granting of a certiorari in re-spect of any conviction thereunder, unless the applicant makes an affidavit negativing the charge as laid in the information; and without such affidavit, the court cannot grant the writ, although the sole questions raised are as to the validity of the License Act as regards wholesale transactions, and as to whether the conviction which showed the exact quantity of liquor admittedly sold was not a wholesale transaction.

Bigelow v. The Queen, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 337, 31 Can. S.C.R. 128, affirming the judgment of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia in The Queen v. Bigelow (1899), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 367, 31 N.S.R. 436.

-N. S. Liquor License Act, of 1895-Provision requiring wholesale licenses-Illegal contract-Sale without license.]-In an action to recover the price of a quantity of liquor sold by plaintiff to J., payment for which was guaranteed by the defendant M., it appeared that, at the time of the sale, plaintiff carried on business in Truro where no licenses for the sale of liquor were issued. By the Liquor License Act of 1895, Acts of 1895, c. 2, s. 56, it is enacted that no person shall sell by whole-sale or by retail any liquors without having first obtained a license under this Act authorizing him to do so. It was contended on behalf of plaintiff that this section was ultra vires the Provincial Legislature, so far as it related to wholesale licenses:-Held, that the result of the authorities is clear as to the power of the Local Legislature to enact laws requiring dealers in intoxicating liquors, whether wholesale or retail, to take out licenses, and that this not having been done in the present case, the sale was illegal and plaintiff could not recover.

Brown v. Moore, 33 N.S.R. 381, affirmed 32 Can. S.C.R. 93.

—Liquor License Act, R.S.N.S. c. 100— Third offence—Illegal addition of costs of conveying to gaol.]—The costs of conveying the defendant to gaol cannot be legally awarded against him on a conviction for a third offence under the Nova Scotia Liquor License Act. Where the sum of such costs is stated in the warrant of commitment the improper inclusion of same cannot be treated as surplusage, and will invalidate the warrant.

-Selling liquor without a license-Improper rejection of evidence—Disqualification of magistrate-Application to call magistrate as a witness-Bona fides of-Liquor License Act, 1896, s. 104.] - An order nisi having been obtained to quash a conviction for selling liquor without a license upon the ground, among others, of the improper rejection of evidence tendered on behalf of the defendant:-Held, that this was no ground for certiorari. The defendant applied to call the magistrate as a witness, but, as he declined to state in any other than in a general way what he purposed to prove by him, the magistrate refused to leave the bench to be sworn. In this he was sustained by the court, notwithstanding the defendant swore that the application was made in good faith. The magistrate is not disqualified because of his being a ratepayer in the district where the case was tried. Certiorari is taken away in cases of convictions for selling without license by the Liquor License Act, 1896, s. 104.

Ex parte Hebert, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 153, 34 N.B.R. 455.

Sale by steward of incorporated club, to members.]-Defendant, the steward of an incorporated club, was charged before the stipendiary magistrate of the city of Halifax with an offence against the Nova Scotia Liquor License Act. It appeared from the evidence that the liquor alleged to have been sold was the property of the club and was sold by defendant in his capacity of steward, at a fixed tariff rate to members only. On a case stated for the opinion of the Court :- Held, distinguishing the case from Graff v. Evans, and other cases of a like character, that the legal entity in this case was distinct from the shareholders, and that the supplying to members at a tariff rate of the goods of the corporation could not properly be said to be a distribution among the shareholders of their own property. Also, that the supplying of the liquor under the circumstances mentioned could not mean any transaction known to the law except that of a sale, and for this reason the conviction should be affirmed.

The King v. Simmonds, 44 N.S.R. 107.

-Liquor License Act (N.S.) 1895-Compelling attendance of witnesses-Tender of fees.]-On a prosecution before the Stipendiary Magistrate of the City of Halifax, for a violation of the Liquor License Act, service was proved of a summons on M., who it was claimed, was a material witness for defendant, but without tendering witness fees, and an application was made to the magistrate for a warrant to compel the attendance of the witness, the fees being at the same time tendered to the magistrate. The application was refused on the sole ground that fees were not tendered in the first instance to the witness, and the trial was proceeded with, and defendant convicted. On application for a writ of habeas corpus:-Held, that the question whether, in a case under the Liquor License Act, the witness could be compelled to attend, or the party was entitled to a warrant, unless the fees had been paid, was open to debate, but that even if the decision of the stipendiary magistrate was erroneous it could not be reviewed upon habeas corpus, and the application must be dismissed. Per Meagher, J.:—Held, (1) That assuming everything in defendant's favour, the magistrate would not lose jurisdiction to convict merely because of his erroneous refusal to grant the warrant applied for. (2) That if any wrong or injustice were done defendant by such refusal, she had a remedy by way of appeal. (3) That the error having occurred in the exercise by the magistrate of his undoubted jurisdiction, the objection went merely to the regularity of the proceedings, and not to the jurisdiction. Per Weatherbe, J., dissenting. Held, that the statute imperatively required the magistrate to issue the warrant, and that, having refused to do so, he had no power to convict, and the conviction must be set aside.

The King v. Clements, 34 N.S.R. 443.

—N.S. Liquor License Act of 1895—Provision requiring wholesale licenses—Hlegal contract—Sale without license.]—In an action to recover the price of a quantity of liquor sold by plaintiff to J., payment for which was guaranteed by the defendant M., it appeared that at the time of the sale plaintiff carried on business in Truro, where no licenses for the sale of liquor were issued. By the Liquor License Act of 1895, c. 2, s. 56, it is enacted that no person shall sell by wholesale or by retail any liquors without first having obtained a license under this Act authorizing him to do so:—Held, that the sale was illegal, and plaintiff could not recover.

Brown v. Moore, 32 Can. S.C.R. 93, affirming 33 N.S.R. 381.

—Sale by person "suffered to be or remain on the premises"—Burden of proof—Word "occupant."]—The N.S. Liquor License Act, R.S. (1900), c. 100, s. 111, provides that "the occupant of any house, shop, room, or other place in which any sale has taken place, shall be personally liable to the penalty, notwithstanding such sale was made by some other person who cannot be proved to have so acted under or by direction of such occupant':-Held, that defendant was properly convicted for sales made by his son, who lived with him in a house occupied by defendant and his family. Per Ritchie, J. Held, that the service, upon the person convicted, of an incorrect copy of the minute of conviction, followed by service of a correct one, would not, in any way, invalidate the proceedings, or prevent the magistrate from preparing a conviction in accordance with the original minute made by him, and issuing process to enforce the penalty or imprison-ment. Per Graham, E.J. Held, that the son living with his father was a person "suffered to be or remain" on the premises within the meaning of the Act (s. 111, sub-s. 2). Held, also, that the burden was on defendant of proving that the sales were made without his authority. Held, also, that defendant was an "occupant" within the meaning of the Act.

Cr. Cas. 414.

—N.S. Liquor License Act—Witness summoned by prosecution—Prepayment of fees—Conviction for non-attendance set aside.]—Defendant was summoned to appear as a witness on behalf of the prosecution at the trial of a prosecution under the Liquor License Act, R.S.N.S. (1900), c. 100. Defendant did not appear, and, afterwards, a summons was issued requiring him to appear to answer to the charge of refusing or neglecting to attend as a witness. Defendant appeared, and, after hearing evidence in support of the charge, the Justices convicted defendant, and imposed a fine of $5 and coats:—Held, setting aside the conviction, with costs, that defendant could not be made liable for the penalty imposed by the Act, s. 161, sub-s. (2) in the absence of proof that the proper fees were tendered to him before he was required to give evidence.

Rex v. Chisholm, 35 N.S.R. 505; 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 493.

—N.B. Liquor License Act, 1896—Minute of conviction—Variance.]—A conviction will not be quashed because the minute awarded an imprisonment of thirty days, while the section of the Act under which the conviction was made limited the time of imprisonment to one month. Under the Act, 60 Vict. c. 6, s. 12, it is not necessary for the magistrate to specify in his order any particular public hospital to which the proceeds derived from the sale of liquor seized by reason of its being illegally kept for sale are to be paid.

— Liquor License Act—R.S. 1900, c. 100— Incorporated company — Member may be required to give evidence.] — A member of an incorporated company may be compelled to give evidence against the company on a prosecution for a violation of the Liquor License Act.

The King v. The Mayflower Bottling Co., 44 N.S.R. 417.

—Keeping for sale and illegal selling—One charge not considered by magistrate.]— Where charges of selling liquor and of keeping liquor for sale were improperly joined in one information, but the conviction was for keeping only and the charge of selling was not dealt with by the magistrate nor was the information amended, the defendant is not entitled to a certificate under s. 682 of the Code that the charge of selling was dismissed.

The King v. Stevens, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 76, Wallace, Co. J.

—Keeping liquors for sale—Workmen's club—Purchasing agent.]—Where several persons constituting a workmen's club appoint another to purchase liquor in bulk for them, each member reimbursing him monthly for the cost of liquor consumed, and the person so purchasing for the club acquires the right of property in the stock of liquors and keeps possession of same, such person may be convicted under the Liquor License statute of Nova Scotia for "keeping for sale" although he made no profit on the transaction.

The King v. Cavicchi, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 78, Wallace, Co. J.

—Third offences—Dates of previous informations.]—1. A conviction as for a "third offence" under the Nova Scotia Liquor License Act is invalid, if the third infraction of the statute preceded the information for the first offence. 2. The statutory forfeiture of license and disqualification of its holder is an increased penalty or punishment for a third offence, within the meaning of s. 95 of the License Act of 1896 (now R.S.N.S. c. 100, s. 134), although it arises ipso facto upon the adjudication and is not part of the magistrate's award.

R. v. Murrans, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 459.

—Irregular grant of license—Special meeting.]—Under the New Brunswick law a wholesale license was revoked which had been granted at a special meeting after its refusal at the prior regular meeting, it appearing that no notice had been published of the holding of the special meeting, and that there had been a refusal by the Commissioners to hear evidence against the grant.

Miles v. Rogers, 36 N.B.R. 345.

—Intoxicating liquors—Sale to minor—Liability for act of servant.]—The Nova Scotia Liquor License Act, R.S. 1900, c. 100, s. 62, provides that a licensee shall not give, supply, or furnish, or allow to be given, supplied or furnished, in or upon his licensed premises, any description of liquor to any minor, and every licensee who gives, supplies or furnishes any liquor to any minor in contravention of this section shall be liable, etc. Defendant was convicted by the stipendiary magistrate of a violation of this section of the Act, but the conviction was set aside on appeal to the County Court, on the ground that it appeared from the evidence that the liquor in question was supplied by one of defendant's employees without defendant's knowledge, and contrary to his instructions:—Held, reversing the judgment of the County Court Judge and restoring the conviction, that the section of the Act is an absolute prohibition in the interests of the public, to prevent the sale or supply of liquor to d that the act of the servant being within the scope of his duty, defendant was liable to the penalty provided by the Act, notwithstanding the fact that the servant acted without defendant's knowledge and in violation of his instructions. The King v. Quirk, 44 N.S.R. 244.

—Habeas corpus—Review.]—Where there is conflicting evidence in a case for selling liquor contrary to the Liquor License Act, 1896, the finding of the committing justice on questions of fact cannot be reviewed on an application for an order in the nature of a habeas corpus.

The King v. Wilson; Ex parte Irving, 35 N.B.R. 461.

—Illegal sale—Order of liquor in bulk—Place of acceptance of order.]—For the purpose of a prosecution for illegal sale of liquor under a license law, the place of sale is not necessarily the city in which an order for liquors was accepted by the liquor dealer, and a charge of illogal sale at another city in which the liquor was delivered to the buyer out of a stock there kept will be sustained if the appropriation to the buyer of the quantity purchased and its segregation from other articles took place in the latter city.

Prohibition Act - Conviction - Third offence — Proof of previous convictions.]— In re Higgins, 2 E.L.R. 179 (P.E.I.).

-Third offence-Use of previous convictions.]-Previous convictions may be used as evidence upon which to base a conviction for a third offence against the provisions of the Liquor License Act, as often as such offence is charged and proved. It is not now necessary, under the statute (s. 131), to ask the defendant whether he has been previously convicted, unless he is present in person. Where, at the conclusion of each of several cases tried before him, the magistrate decided to convict, but, at the instance of defendant's counsel, refrained from imposing sentence, and drawing up the formal conviction, until the county court judge should have decided a question, raised on the trial, as to the use of previous convictions. Held, dismissing defendant's motion to quash, and ordering a writ of procedendo, that the magistrate was not precluded from proceeding with the convictions at a later stage. The Queen -Commissioners-Knowingly issuing license contrary to law-Mens rea.]-A member of a board of license commissioners who, with a knowledge of all the facts, issues a license contrary to the provisions of the Liquor License Act, Con. Stat. N.B. 1903, c. 22, is guilty under s. 59 of "knowingly" issuing a license contrary to law, though there is no evidence of a corrupt motive or criminal intent.

The King v. Ritchie; Ex parte Blaine, 37 N.B.R. 213, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 193.

-License granted subsequent to 1st of May-Special grounds-Petition-Order revoking license.]-At a meeting for that purpose, for which notice had been given. a tavern license was granted under the Liquor License Act by commissioners un-der the Act to one D., on the 8th of August, 1904, for the year ending the 30th of April, 1905, on a petition of D., dated the 2nd of July, 1904, the chairman objecting on the ground that they had no authority to grant a license after the 1st of May, except on special grounds, and that no such grounds were either stated in the petition or shown at the time; on an application to a County Court Judge to revoke the license under s. 31 on these grounds, an order was made revoking the license, the judge refusing to admit evidence tending to show that special grounds for the granting of the license existed, and were acted upon by the commissioners, holding that he, and not the commissioners, is the authority who determines as to the sufficiency of the special grounds, and whether the grounds alleged are special grounds within the meaning of the Act: also, on the ground that the petition for a license subsequent to the let of May should allege the special grounds upon which the application is based:-Held, on making absolute the order nisi to quash the order revoking the license, that the commissioners, and not the Judge are to determine the sufficiency of the special grounds and whether the grounds alleged are special; and that the petition need not allege the special grounds upon which the application is based.

The King v. Wilkinson; Ex parte Duguay, 37 N.B.R. 90.

-Extension of license-Revocation of-Second extension-Power of commissioners.]-The license commissioners, under the Liquor License Act (Con. Stat. 1903, c. 22), have no power to extend the duration of an existing license under s. 23 for a greater period than three months of the next ensuing license year, or to grant a second extension. The power of revocation, under s. 31, extends to an extension of the original license by the commissioners under s. 23. Per Gregory, J.: -S. 31 does not give the Judges therein named power to revoke an extension of a license granted by the license commissioners under s. 23, but such power is limited to an original license when proved to have been given contrary to the terms of the Act, or obtained by fraud.

The King v. Wilkinson; Ex parte Cormier, 37 N.B.R. 53, 12 Can Cr. Cas. 339.

-Summons-Mistake in place of trial.]-The defendant was served with a copy of a summons under the Liquor License Act, to appear at a magistrate's office in the parish of P. In the original summons the place was stated to be in the parish of A., and in fact the magistrate's office was in A. The constable made affidavit that he served a true copy of the original summons. At the trial the defendant's counsel appeared in answer to a summons for another offence returnable before the same magistrate at the same time and place. He also had authority to defend this case but he did not appear in it or defend. The magistrate understood the defendant's counsel appeared in both cases and granted an adjournment of both. After conviction:-Held, that in absence of an affidavit that the defendant was misled by the mistake the conviction would not be set aside.

The King v. McQuarrie; Ex parte Giberson (No. 2.), 39 N.B.R. 371, 16 Can. Cr.

-Summons-Time of service.]-Where a summons to answer an offence under the Liquor License Act, C.S. 1903, c. 22, was served personally on the evening of April 14, returnable at 10 a.m. April 16, and on the return of the same the defendant appeared by counsel and procured an adjournment to April 19, the Court refused to set aside the conviction subsequently had on the ground that the defendant did not have a reasonable opportunity of appearing and defending. The conviction as first made was defective by reason of not stating the place of the offence but the place was stated in the information and summons and in the magistrate's minutes. The magistrate having returned an amended conviction upon certiorari:-Held, such amendment was proper since the facts appearing in the magistrate's minutes warranted the conviction in its amended form.

The King v. McQuarrie; Ex parte Giberson (No. 1.), 39 N.B.R. 367, 16 Cap. Cr.

-Penalty by imprisonment-Error in conviction-Amendment ordered.]-Where the magistrate, on a conviction for an offence against the Liquor License Act, imposed the proper money penalty, but affixed a term of imprisonment not authorized, the Court ordered an amendment of the conviction by inserting the term of imprisonment applicable under the statutory provision. The King v. Power, 43 N.S.R. 235.

-Stated case-Sale by steward of incorporated club.]-An information was laid before the stipendiary magistrate of the city of Halifax, by the license inspector for the said city, charging defendant with having unlawfully in said city kept intoxicating liquors for sale within the space of six months previous to the laying of the information. A summons was issued, and on its return defendant appeared and pleaded not guilty. The stipendiary magistrate at defendants request, stated a case for the opinion of the Court, upon the point whether the serving of liquor by the steward of an incorporated club to bona fide members (in which liquor the steward had no pecuniary interest, and which was bought by the funds of the club) amounted in law to a "keep-ing for sale" by said steward, within the prohibition contained in s. 87 of the Nova Scotia Liquor License Act:—Held, quashing the case stated, that in order to give the Court jurisdiction to hear the case there must be a conviction, order, determination or other proceeding heard and determined which the person aggrieved complains of, and it was impossible to say whether such was the case in the present instance, the point being stated at the defendant's request and apparently before any determination by the magistrate. Also, that in stating a case under the statute, the findings and conclusion of the magistrate upon the whole evidence must be set forth, and not merely the evidence. Also, that the application for a stated case must be made in writing, and that, as in the present case, the inference was the other way, there was a defect going to the jurisdiction of the Court which could not be waived.

The King v. Gaines, 43 N.S.R. 253.

-Illegally keeping for sale-Nova Scotia Liquor License Act-Presumption raised by evidence and statute.]-Appeal from the Judge of the County Court for district No. 4, affirming a conviction made by the stipendiary magistrate for the Town of Truro for keeping liquor for the purpose of sale, barter and traffic therein, without the license therefore by law required. The evidence showed that defendant occupied a house in the Town of Truro, opposite a building occupied by his son-in-law as an hotel where liquor was believed to be sold illegally. Defendant had previously occupied the hotel himself, and had been convicted of unlawful selling, and was believed to be selling in collusion with his son-in-law to whom he had rented the premises, the liquor being kept on defendant's premises and carried across the street to the hotel as required. On making a search of defendant's premises, the inspector found a quantity of liquor con-cealed in a hole below the floor of a room occupied as a bed room, and also in a valise in a wood shed back of the house, which was found to be locked at the time of the search and which defendant declined to open. In both places he found a large quantity of straw wrappers, such as are used for packing bottles, and in the wood house some empty liquor cases. was also evidence, that, as the inspector left, defendant said there was a barrel that he had not got, though this remark was not heard by the inspector and was denied by defendant:-Held, that the evidence of search, coupled with the provisions of the Act, R. S. (1900) c. 100, s. 165, sub-s. 2, was ample to justify the conviction unless displaced. That defendant had to overcome the presumption raised against him, and to explain the circumstances to the satisfaction of the Judge, and having failed to do so, the Judge could properly find as he did and the Court would not disturb the conviction.

—1. Where a magistrate has decided a case ostensibly upon the merits in favour of the accused and the statute under which the prosecution is brought allows no appeal, a certiorari will not be granted to quash the order of acquittal, with a view to re-opening the case, on the ground of the wrongful refusal of the magistrate to compel a witness to answer a material question. 2. Except where it is otherwise provided by statute, a person who has been regularly tried and acquitted by a competent tribunal having full cognizance of his case, is not liable to be again tried for the same offence, and this rule applies to an acquittal under a section of a provincial liquor law (the Prohibition Act, P.E.I., 1900), under which fine and imprisonment may be imposed.

The King v. Reddin, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 163 (P.E.I.).

-Justice informant and prosecutor in pending action against defendant-Petition against granting licenses-Circulation of by justice-Bias-Disqualification-Commitment for less than prescribed term of imprisonment - Conviction - Amendment.]-D., the defendant, was twice convicted for offences against the Liquor License Act. In the first case C. was the informant and prosecutor; in the second he was the convicting magistrate:-Held, that while the first case was pending before this Court on certiorari C. had no jurisdiction to try the information in the second case. The convicting magistrate was not disqualified by reason of his having circulated and obtained signatures to a petition praying that no licenses be granted in the parish where the defendant lived, and in which he was the sole applicant for a license. A conviction ordering the defendant to be imprisoned for sixty days in default of payment of a fine can not be supported under a section of the Act which authorizes imprisonment for not less than three months in case of such default. Semble, the Court will not amend a summary conviction when by so doing it has to exercise a discretion confided to the justice.

The King v. Charest; Ex parte Daigle, 37 N.B.R. 492.

—Sale at retail without license—Conviction in absence of defendant—Reasonableness of service.]—Information was laid before the stipendiary magistrate for the Town of Truro, charging defendant with having sold liquor at retail without license, defendant having been previously convicted of first and second offences of the same nature. A summons was issued on the 20th day of June, 1905, requiring defendant to appear at the Town Court room at 10 o'clock on the following morning to answer the charge against him, and to be further dealt with. A copy of the sum-mons was served by a constable on the defendant personally on the same day on which the summons was issued, and defendant failing to appear was convicted in his absence. The conviction was attacked on the ground that defendant was not served until the night of the day on which the summons was issued, and that he had no time to consult counsel:-Held, that the question of the reasonableness of the service was one for the Justice under all the circumstances of the case, and that on the facts stated there was evidence to justify him in coming to the conclusion that a reasonable time had elapsed between the time of service and the time fixed for the trial, and in proceeding with the case in defendant's absence. Per Russell, J. That if defendant required further time it was his duty to have appeared, and to have made his application to the Justice, and that it was not permissible for him to ignore the summons and afterwards ask the Court to quash the conviction.

-Report of inspectors-License Commissioners - Jurisdiction - Writ of prohibition.]-License commissioners under the Liquor License Act (C.S. 1903, c. 22), have no jurisdiction to grant a certificate for a license unless the inspector has reported the applicant to be a fit and proper person to have a license, and the other requirements provided for in s. 11 of the Act have been complied with. A writ of prohibition is the proper remedy to restrain the issuing of a license where the commissioners acted without jurisdiction, and may be issued after the certificate for a license had been granted.

Ex parte Demmings, 37 N.B.R. 586.

Appeal — How proceedings may be brought up-Certiorari.]-Where a party prosecuting an appeal under the Liquor License Act (Con. Stat. 1903, c. 22) was unable to get the proceedings certified by the clerk of the County Court as provided by s. 105, had them returned under a writ of certiorari, the Court heard the matter as an appeal under the section. No appeal lies from a decision of a Judge of a County Court, under s. 105, from an order made under habeas corpus proceedings discharging a prisoner in custody for default of payment of fines imposed for offences against the Liquor License Act. McCrea v. Watson, 37 N.B.R. 623.

-Justice of the peace-Disqualification-Penalty for offence.]-A justice of the peace who accepts the offices of clerk of the peace and clerk of the County Court is not disqualified from trying an offence charged under the Liquor License Act on the ground that the offices are incompatible. A justice appointed for a county has jurisdiction to try in a parish of the county an offence committed in another parish in the county. Section 62 of the Liquor License Act, authorizing as a penalty in default of the fine imposed for a first offence imprisonment for a period of not less than three months, is not ultra vires.

The King v. Plant; Ex parte Morneault, 37 N.B.R. 500.

-Solemn declaration accompanying petition.]—A petition to have a vote taken under the Liquor License Act, C.S. 1903, c. 22, as amended by 9 Edw. VII. c. 16, s. 4, was received by the town clerk of Campbellton, with a solemn declaration folded therein but not attached in any way. The first page of the petition was marked "B" and the declaration referred to it as "hereto annexed marked 'B'":—Held, this was a sufficient compliance with the Act.

-Tavern license-Selling liquor in quantities exceeding 1 quart.]—The holder of a tavern license under the Liquor License Act, C.S. 1903, c. 22, who is guilty of selling liquor in quantities exceeding 1 quart, has not a "license therefor as by law required" and it therefore liable to the penalty imposed by s. 62 of the Act.

-Selling without license-No review.]-If the convicting magistrate had jurisdiction there is no right of review from a summary conviction for selling without license contrary to the N.B. Liquor License Act, s. 62.

Rex v. Carleton, ex parte McCrea, 38 N.B.R. 42.

-Rejection of evidence-Minute of adjudication not necessary-Name of informant not stated-Excessive costs.]-On the trial of an information for an offence against the Liquor License Act the counsel for the defendant proposed to ask him as to what took place between him and a witness for the prosecution. On objection the evidence was rejected. It did not appear, and the counsel on the argument was unable to state what was proposed to be proved:—Held, no ground under the circumstances for quashing the conviction. Quære, if an objection that evidence was improperly rejected is open to the accused on certiorari where an appeal is given. If the conviction is complete there is no necessity for a minute of the conviction. It is not necessary to state in the conviction the name of the informant. The Court will not interfere with a conviction on the ground that the costs are excessive, where it is not shown in what particular they are excessive. Signing a petition praying that no license be issued to a party subsequently charged with an offence against the Act does not disqualify a magistrate so signing from trying the charge.

The King v. Davis; Ex parte Vanbuskirk, 38 N.B.R. 335, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 234.

-Second offence-Must be for offence after date of first.]-A conviction under the Liquor License Act. Con. Stat. 1903, c. 22, can not be had for a second offence without proof of conviction of a first offence committed before the date of the commission of the second offence.

The King v. O'Brien; Ex parte Chamberlain (No. 1), 38 N.B.R. 381.

-Information and conviction for a third offence-Proof -Amendment - Awarding distress not authorized.]-Where the accused was charged under the License Act, Con. Stat. 1903, c. 22, with a third offence, and the conviction stated it was for a third offence, but was in other respects in the form of a conviction for a first offence, and the only proof was of a first offence, and the prosecution on the trial asked to have a conviction entered for a first offence:—Held, on application to quash, that the conviction might be amended under s. 99 of the Act. Where the conviction ordered a distress in default of payment of the penalty imposed, which order is not authorized by the Act, it was treated as surplusage and struck out of the conviction. The convicting magistrate, under s. 74 (2), has power to award in addition to the costs, the charges of commitment and conveying of the defendant to graol.

The King v. O'Brien; Ex parte Chamberlain (No. 2), 38 N.B.R. 385.

—Limitation of licenses—How apportioned among several wards of city.] The number of licenses that may issue in the city of Saint John under the Liquor License Act, C.S. 1993, c. 22, is subject to the limitation that they shall in no case exceed seventy-five, exclusive of hotel licenses, and that they shall be apportioned among the sevral wards in which licenses may issue in a fixed proportion according to the scale provided by sub-s. 1 of s. 19 of the Act. Jamieson v. Blaine, 38 N.B.R. 508.

- Penalty-Mode of enforcing when none provided by Act-Summons-Reasonable time between issue and return.]-A conviction under s. 67 of the Liquor License Act for selling liquor to a minor which imposes a fine, and in default of payment distress, but which does not award imprisonment in default of sufficient distress is bad. Per Hanington, J .: - A justice has no jurisdiction to hear a complaint unless there is evidence before him to show that the defendant was served with the summons a reasonable time before the return. A summons issued at ten o'clock in the morning, returnable the same day at one, does not allow the defendant a reasonable time to appear and defend, and a conviction in default of appearance founded on such a proceeding should be quashed on certiorari.

The King v. Wathen; Ex parte Vanbuskirk, 38 N.B.R. 529.

-- Penalty--- Mode of enforcing when none provided by Act.] -- A conviction for selling liquor to a minor under s. 67 of the Liquor License Act, C.S. 1903, c. 22, imposing a fine and in default of payment distress, but which does not award imprisonment, is bad. S. 67 not providing any mode of enforcing the penalty authorized, the conviction should follow the form prescribed in s. 22 of the Summary Convictions Act, C.S. 193, c. 123.

The King v. Davis; Ex parte Vanbuskirk, 38 N.B.R. 526. —Summary conviction—Appeal from stipendiary magistrate by way of case stated.]—Notwithstanding s. 127 of the Summary Convictions Act, which makes the conviction final "except as in this chapter otherwise provided," an appeal lies from a stipendiary magistrate to the Supreme Court, by way of case stated, where the point sought to be raised is not frivolous and is of an arguable character. The King v. McNut, 42 N.S.R. 180.

-Words "liquor" and "liquors"-Percentage of alcohol in drinkable liquid.]-The Liquor License Act, R.S.N.S. c. 100, s 2 (g), defines "liquors" and "liquor" to mean and include all drinkable liquids containing alcohol. Defendant was convicted for keeping for sale without license in contravention of the provisions of the Act a beer, sold under the name of "pilsner beer" which was shown by the evidence to contain alcohol in quantities varying from 2.27 to 4.71 per cent. in volume, which would be the equivalent of from something under 2 to 31/2 per cent. by weight:-Held, that the presence of alcohol in this quantity brought the beer in question within the definition of "liquor" contained in the statute. Also, the intention of the statute being to require a license in all cases where alcoholic beverages were sold, whether they were intoxicating or not, it was not necessary, under the wording of the Act, to constitute a drinkable liquid a liquor that it should contain enough alcohol to render it intoxicating. Also, that the power to enact such a law was clearly within the legislative authority of the provincial legislature.

The King v. Bigelow, 41 N.S.R. 499.

--Third offence--Appeal to County Court—Deposit of money in lieu of bond.]—Defendant was convicted of a third offence against the Liquor License Act and was adjudged to be imprisoned for a period of thirty days. Notice of appeal to the County Court for district No. 4 was given, and a sum of money was deposited in place of the bond required in such cases:—Held, affirming the judgment of the Judge of the County Court, that in the absence of the bond the Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal. —Conviction—Costs—Mileage fees.]—Upon a conviction under the Liquor License Act, C.S. 1903, c. 22, for unlawful selling no costs can be taxed for serving the defendant with notice of adjournment of hearing. A conviction will not be set aside because a magistrate taxed witnesses' mileage fees relying on his own knowledge of distances and without affidavits, there being no evidence that the mileage was incorrectly allowed, and the magistrate having sworn that he was acquainted with the witnesses and familiar with the distances they had to travel. A constable is entitled to five cents per day for attendance upon the trial.

The King v. Bassett; Ex parte Davidson, 39 N.B.R. 271.

-Resolution of council granting license-Refusal of inspector to deliver.]-D. made application for a license to sell intoxicating liquor in the city of H. under the provisions of the Liquor License Act, for the year 1908-1909. The application was investigated by the license inspector, and, upon his report, the city council granted the license applied for. Defendant, as agent of D., tendered the amount of the license fee and the bond required, but the inspector de-clined to deliver the license, and caused defendant to be summoned and convicted for selling without license:-Held, 1, after the city council had authorized the issue of the license, the signing of the same by the mayor and inspector was a mere ministerial act, and it did not lie with them, or either of them, to defeat the will of the council by refusing to sign or deliver the license, and that there was error in the conviction under the facts shown. 2. Where the city council grants a license illegally, express power for the cancellation of the license is contained in the statute, but there is nothing in the scope of the statue to justify the officer entrusted with the formal duty of carrying out the council's instructions in saying he has any control as to the question of license of no license.

The King v. Mackasey, 43 N.S.R. 169.

—Presentation of petition to warden—Liquor License Act.]—M. was elected councillor for the parish of St. L. in October, 1907, and was appointed warden of the county in January, 1908. On September 26, 1908, he resigned his position of councillor, but afterwards and before December 29, 1908, was elected councillor by a newly created parish in the same county, and in January, 1909, was reappointed warden:—Held, M.'s resignation as councillor operated as a resignation of his position of warden, as the warden must be a councillor under the Manicipalities Act, C.S. 1903, c. 165, and therefore presenting a petition to him on December 29, 1908, would not be sufficient under the provisions of the Liquor License Act, C.S. 1903, c. 22, s. 21, amended 7 Edw. VII. c. 46. Ex parte Stavert, 39 N.B.R. 239.

—Selling by licensee after hours—Statutory presumption from light in bar-room—Penalty imposed less than minimum.]—(1) Under the New Brunswick Liquor License Act, the minimum penalty for selling by a licensee after hours must be imposed although the conviction is founded upon the statutory presumption of sale because of a light in the bar-room. (2) A summary conviction for a penalty less than the statutory minimum will be set aside on appeal under the New Brunswick liquor law.

The King v. McIntyre, 14 Can. Cr. Cas.

-Evidence of sale.]-The only point relied upon by defendant on appeal from a conviction for a violation of the Liquor License Act was that there was no evidence that the sale of the liquor in question took place in the town of B. as alleged. The purchaser of the liquor swore that she bought the article from defendant and that it was delivered at her house in B. by the defendant's team, and another witness, the policeman of the town, swore that defendant's factory and residence were in the town of B., and that he put up bottled drinks there which were sold and delivered in the town of B .: - Held, that the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction, and that the judgment of the County Court Judge to the contrary should be set aside and the conviction made by the stipendiary Magistrate of the town restored.

The King v. Wilson, 43 N.S.R. 482.

-Sale-Evidence.]-Defendant was charged with keeping intoxicating liquors for sale, contrary to the provisions of the Nova Scotia Liquor License Act. The evidence showed that there was a barrel of beer in the back room of defendant's house, that there were glasses there, and that there were persons drinking there at the time charged. It further appeared that the front room was occupied by a person said to be a shoemaker, and the latter person served and sold there and in a middle room, beer which he brought from the back room:-Held, that under the Act s. 156, defendant was to be taken as the person who kept the liquor for sale, and the occupant of the front room as a person who was suffered to be upon the premises or acting for defendant. Held, that there was sufficient evidence to convict, and that the judgment of the County Court Judge setting aside the conviction must be reversed, and the conviction of the magistrate restored.

The King v. Passerini, 43 N.S.R. 448.

—Hotel proprietor—Sale to bona fide guest.]—Where the evidence showed that K., the person to whom liquor was supplied by defendant, an hotel proprietor, left his home in the morning before breakfast, on his way to S., and had breakfast at defendant's hotel, and at the same time obtained liquor for which he paid defendant:—Held, that, on the facts stated, K. must be regarded as a bonâ fide guest within the meaning of the Act, R.S. 1900, c. 100, and that the conviction must be set aside. Semble, that defendant might have been convicted if he had been charged under s. 73 of the Act for selling "otherwise than during regular meals."

The King v. Byng (No. 1), 43 N.S.R. 43.

—Hotel proprietor—Sale to guest.]—In order to be a bonâ fide guest at an hotel, within the meaning of the Liquor License Act, R.S. 1990, c. 100, by renson of obtaining a meal at the hotel, the person to whom the meal is supplied must have resorted to the hotel for the primary purpose of obtaining in good faith the meal. Where liquor was supplied by the proprietor of the hotel to two persons, one of whom was a guest only in the sense that he got a glass of beer and a sandwich with it, while the other got whiskey and some bread with it, suggested by the proprietor in order to qualify:—Held, that the conviction was properly made.

The King v. Byng (No. 2), 43 N.S.R. 40.

- Local option by-law - Separate petitions - Proof of signatures - Substantial compliance with statutory requirements.] - On an application to quash a local option by-law passed under the provisions of ss. 61 to 73 inclusive of the Liquor License Act, R.S.M. (1902), c. 101:-Held, that none of the following objections to the proceedings were fatal to the by-law:-1. That, instead of one petition, about 13 papers, all with the same printed heading, each having a number of signatures, were tied up in a roll, the sheets not fastened together, and presented to the council, it being admitted that the heading of each was sufficient for a petition. 2. That there was no entry in the minutes of the proceedings of the council showing receipt of the petition, such receipt having been recited in the by-law. 3. That there was no proof that the petitions altogether had been signed by one-fourth in number of the electors. It was for the council to satisfy itself that this condition had been complied with, and it must be assumed that it performed its duty in that respect. 4. That, instead of preparing and posting up "a list of those entitled to vote on such by-law," as required by s. 67 of the Act, the clerk of the municipality posted up and supplied merely copies of the last revised list of electors of the municipality the year certified by him to be true copies thereof. Under s. 63 of the Act the two lists would contain the same names. 5. That the certificate of the clerk as to the result of the voting, by mistake, referred in the body of it to the by-law by a wrong number. The heading of the certificate, how ever, sufficiently showed what by-law was referred to. *6. That, instead of summing up the votes on the day appointed by the by-law, the clerk, on account of the non-receipt of one of the ballot boxes, adjourned the proceeding to a future day, for which there is no statutory authority. 7. That the by-law received its third reading on 27th December, 1904, and, although passed in the afternoon of that day, was declared to be in force on that day, that is, as alleged, from the beginning of that day. When there has been a virtual compliance with the statute and the departures complained of have been rather from the letter than from the spirit of the enactment, the Court has a discretion in determining whether there has been a sufficient compliance, and whether effect should be given to the objections on an application to quash. White v. East Sandwich (1882), 1 O.R. 530, and Young v. Binbrook (1899), 31 O. R. 108, followed.

Re Caswell and South Norfolk, 15 Man. R. 620.

- Local option by-law-Notice of by-law.] -1. The notice given by the council under s. 66 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.M. (1902), c. 101, must, among other things, state that the by-law or a true copy of it can be seen at the office of the clerk until the day of the taking of the vote and the absence of such statement in the notice will be fatal to the by-law on an application to quash it. 2. If, on account of an application for a recount of the votes, the council postpone the further consideration of the bylaw until after the result of the recount is known, they must either formally adjourn such further consideration to a named day or they must afterwards give such notice of the time and place when the third reading is to be moved that parties opposed to it may be in a position to attend and urge their views and, if the third reading takes place without such notice being given, the by-law will be quashed. Re Mace and Frontenac (1877), 42 U.C.R. 85, and Hall v. South Norfolk (1892), 8 M.R. 430, followed. 3. The third reading of such a by-law even after it has been carried by the votes of the electors, is not an empty formality, as the councillors have still to exercise their judgment upon it, and might, if they choose, then finally refuse to pass it. 4. Under s. 427 of the Municipal Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 116, a Judge, on quashing such a by-law for illegality, as in this instance, has no discretion to refuse costs to the applicant.

(2) The finding of a bar or other appliances enumerated in s. 114 of the Territories Liquor License Ordinance in an unlicensed place, is proof that there exists in such place such appliances, and the word "exists" as used in said section means "is." (3) Where there was ample evidence to warrant the conviction made by a justice of the peace of keeping liquor for sale and no evidence was adduced by the defence in rebuttal of the charge, the Court will not on a stated case hold the conviction bad because of the admission of irrelevant tes-

— Local option by-law — Changes in name and boundaries of municipality after passage of by-law.] — The Act 53 Vict. c. 52, assented to 31st March, 1890, making changes in names and boundaries of the municipalities into which the Province was divided, provided, by s. 81, that if, in any of the territory changed as to its munici-pal situation by the provisions of the Act, a by-law under the local option clauses of the Liquor License Act should be in force at the time of the coming into force of the Act, such by-law should continue to affect such territory the same as if the Act had not been passed. The village of Napinka was in 1890 part of the rural municipality of Brenda, in which a local option by-law had been passed forbidding the receiving of any money for licenses under the Liquor License Act; but, by the said Act, 53 Vict. c 52, the said village became part of the newly-created municipality of Winchester, and again in 1896 it was made part of a municipality then created under the old name of Brenda:-Held, that the said local option by-law was still in force in that village, notwithstanding the changes in name and boundaries of the municipalities referred to. Doyle v. Dufferin (1892), 8 Man. R. 286, followed. Held, also, that the by-law was valid although it contained an additional provision, unauthorized by the statute, purporting to prohibit the granting of any licenses within the limits of the municipality. Application for mandamus to license commissioners to grant a license to sell liquor in Napinka refused without costs.

VII. were signed by persons aggregating more than twenty-five per cent. of the resident electors whose names appeared on the last revised municipal voters' list, but, before being handed to the clerk, the printed headings of all but one of the petitions were cut off, and the rest of the sheets of paper containing only the signatures pasted successively below the signatures on the one petition not thus mutilated. These latter signatures were not themselves sufficiently numerous:-Held, following Re Williams and Brampton (1908), 17 O.L.R. 398, that the document presented to the council was not such a petition as the Act requires and that an injunction should issue, on the application of an owner of a licensed hotel, to prevent the reeve and councillors from submitting a by-law to the electors as prayed for. 1902, c. 101, as re-enacted by 9 Edw. VII. c. 31, s. 2, filed with the clerk in one calendar year with the intention that it should be acted upon in that year, but not so acted upon, may be acted upon as a acted upon, may be acted upon as a valid petition for the submission of such a by-law in the following year even if a portion of the territory of the municipality in which some of the peti-tioners resided has, in the meantime, been incorporated into a separate village, provided that there still remain on the petition enough names of persons resident in the reduced municipality. -Local option by-law-Several petitions made into one.]—A number of separate petitions for the submission of a local option by-law under s. 62 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 101, as re-enacted by 9 Edw. VII. c. 31, s. 2, containing signatures of more than the required number of the resident electors, were received by the clerk of the municipality, who handed them back to the person presenting them ,to carry out a suggestion as to how they should be put together. The latter then made the many petitions into one by cutting off the headings from all but one and putting all the signatures after the one heading left. He then left this with the clerk:-Held, that the first reception of the petition by the clerk was not the receipt by him contemplated by the statute and that only the petition as afterwards filed could be considered as having been presented to the council, that such mutilated petition was not such a petition as the Act requires, and, therefore the injunction issued by the Judge appealed from, to prevent the submission of the by-law by the council, should stand. Two of the headings cut off as above described were altogether insufficient as petitions under the Act and, although the number of the signatures to these imperfect petitions could not, as a result of the mutilation, be definitely ascertained, it was believed by the Judge appealed from that there was not the necessary percentage of the electors on the remaining petitions, and he held, that everything should be presumed in odium spoliatoris and that his finding should be that there were not enough signatures to uphold the petition.

(2) A composition arrangement made with a creditor induced by a misstatement by the debtor to the creditor of the amount of assets and liabilities, will be set aside if repudiated on the discovery of the falsity of the statement, and before any benefit has been taken under the arrangement, even though the misstatement be not shown to have been fraudulently made.

Moore, 32 S.C.R. 93, that where by law sales of liquor without license are prohibited, recovery for such sales cannot be enforced, and that therefore recovery on the bill of exchange in so far as the consideration is for sales of liquor, cannot be supported or enforced, but the prohibition will not extend beyond liquor sold, and the other sales included in the bill of exchange and the open account, not liquors are enforceable. (2) The contract between the plaintiffs and defendants, and several other creditors of defendants, and Dundas, was entered into by the plaintiffs by misrepresentation of a material fact. The plaintiffs having, on discovering this and before receiving any benefit, repudiated the same, the agreement must be rescinded.

The deliberate closing of one of the polls for about an hour upon an adjournment for lunch, though with the consent of all present and in pursuance of a local custom, was held fatal to the by-law in the absence of satisfactory evidence that the result of the voting had not been affected thereby. 4. Held, on the hearing of the appeal, that s. 64, sub-s. 5 of the Liquor License Ordinance was intra vires, although the effect might be to inflict imprisonment (on non-payment of fine) upon a person who had not personally violated the Ordinance. On a motion for a certiorari to quash the conviction: - Held, (1) following Barber v. Nottingham Grantham Ry. Co., 15 C.B.N.S. 726, and R. v. Grant, 14 Q.B. 43, that where the charge is one, which, if true, is within the magistrate's jurisdiction, the findings of fact by him are conclusive. (2) That, as the stat-ute does not express knowledge by the accused of the intoxicating character of the liquor, to be an essential element of the offence, first, it was not necessary for the prosecution to allege or prove it; secondly, that it was necessary for the accused to prove not merely that he had no such knowledge, but that he had been misled without fault or carelessness on his part. Attorney-General of British Columbia (1897), 27 S.C.R. 637, that the opinion of the Court (reported 13 Man. R. p. 239), rendered under R.S.M. c. 28, upon a constitutional question submitted by an Order of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, was not a judgment, decree, order or sentence within the meaning of the Imperial Order in Council of 26th November, 1892, relating to to appeals from the Court of Queen's Bench for Manitoba, and that such Court has no jurisdiction to grant an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under said Order from such an opinion. Held, also, that, although it was shown that the enforcement of the Liquor Act would deprive the Province of a revenue far exceeding £300 per annum, and would prejudicially affect the very large investments of persons engaged in the liquor traffic, it could not be said that any questions respecting property or civil rights to the value of £300 were involved in the decision sought to be appealed from.

Re Swan River By-law, 16 Man. R. 312.

- Convicting by-laws - Offence committed by employee.] - By a by-law passed in November, 1900, the Licensing Board, pursuant to ss. 161 and 162 of the Vancouver Incorporation Act, 1900, defined the conditions governing the sale of liquor within the municipality. The Board again dealt with the subject in August, 1905, forbidding the sale of liquor "from or after the hour of 11 o'clock on Saturday night till six of the clock on Monday morning thereafter," and provided that "such portions of any and all by-laws heretofore passed regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the City of Vancouver as conflict with the provisions of this by-law are hereby repealed." Sub-s. 19 of s. 125 of the Vancouver Incorporation Act, 1900, empowers the city council to pass by-laws for "the closing of saloons, hotels and stores and places of business during such hours and on Sunday as may be thought expedient." In pursuance of this sub-s., the council, in May, 1902, passed a by-law preventing the sale of liquor between the hours of 11 o'clock on Saturday night and six o'clock on Monday morning:—Held, that the council, in passing this last mentioned by-law, had gone beyond the powers meant to be conferred by sub-s. 19 of s. 125.

Re Roberts, 14 B.C.R. 76.

-Local option by-law-Voting-Form of ballot paper—Inconsistent directions—Fac-simile ballot.]—Upon an application to quash a local option by-law:—Held, that, although the legislature, in amending the Liquor License Act in 1909 by prescribing a new form of ballot paper, did not amend schedule F. to the Act, containing directions to voters and a facsimile ballot paper, the municipal officers were justified in substituting the proper form of ballot as prescribed by the amending Act, and would also have been justified in changing the words of the directions, but the bylaw was not invalid because they did not do so. Re Hatch and Rural Municipality of Oakland, 14 W.L.R. 309, and Ward v. Owen Sound, 15 O.W.R. 443, followed. 2. That the notice required by s. 66 of the Liquor License Act to be published in the Mani-toba Gazette and a local newspaper "as soon as possible," was published in time, the second reading having been on the 5th October, the publications in the Gazette on the 16th, 23rd, and 30th October, and the 6th and 13th November, and in a local weekly newspaper on the 14th, 21st, and 28th October and the 4th and 11th November. The publications might have been a week earlier in each case, but "as soon as possible" did not mean that the clerk should neglect his other duties and devote himself to the preparation and publication of this notice; he must publish it as soon as possible, following the ordinary routine of official duty. And the municipal officers were not bound to select as their medium a daily newspaper because of earlier publication, the weekly circulating more largely in the municipality. 3. That the by-law was not illegal because the proclamation published pursuant to s. 376 (b) of the Municipal Act stated in one paragraph that "in the event of a poll being required, the said poll will be taken at the following places"-naming them; another paragraph containing an explicit notice of the voting on the by-law. 4. That the by-law was not illegal because it was given its third reading before the time for applying for a recount had elapsed. In re Coxworth and Village of Hensall, 17 O.L.R. 431, approved and followed. 5. Without considering whether s. 376 (b) of the Municipal Act was made applicable by s. 68 of the Liquor License Act, that the requirement of s. 376 (b), that before the final passing of the by-law the council shall publish in a newspaper in at least one number of such paper each week for 3 successive weeks, and once in the Manitoba Gazette, at least 2 weeks in advance of the day of voting, a notice signed by the clerk. etc., was complied with by the publications in October and November (set out in paragraph 2 of this head-note), the voting taking place on the 21st December; and that, in construing sub-s. (b) of s. 376, the provisions of sub-s. (a) are not to be considered, in view of the new section substituted for s. 65 of the Liquor License Act by s. 4 of c. 26 of the Acts of 1908. 6. That an objection that one of the polling places was not opened until after 11 o'clock on the day of polling should not be considered, the only evidence in support of the fact being an affidavit of the applicant on information and belief. 7. That the admitted fact that another poll was not opened until after 10 o'clock (9 being the hour for opening) did not invalidate the by-law. the deputy returning officer having made an honest effort to comply with the by-law, but having been delayed by stress of weather, and it not being shown that the result was affected. And semble, that s. 89 of the Municipal Act, fixing the hours of voting, is directory only. All that is required is a substantial, not a literal, compliance. 8. That effect should not be given to an objection based on the fact that the by-law did not fix a time and place for the appointment of scrutineers, as required by s. 377 of the Municipal Act it being shown as a fact that scrutineers were appointed and did act.

— Loan of liquors by one retail licensee to another — Sale or barter.] — The holder of a hotel license who lends to another hotel licensee liquors in quantities greater than the quantity he is permitted by the Liquor License Ordinance to sell, upon terms requiring the borrower to return goods of like quality and quantity is thereby guilty of an infraction of the Ordinance which imposes a penalty for the infraction, and as the contract is therefore avoided he cannot recover the value of the goods so lent. - Sunday closing - Saloons - Hotel barrooms.] - A liquor license by-law provided that upon information of an infraction of its provisions by a holder of a license, he might be summoned to attend the next meeting of the Licensing Commissioners to make application for a renewal of his license. It was contended that the holder could not be compelled to make application for a renewal until the expiry of his license:-Held, that the council had authority to pass such an enactment under subs. (d) of s. 205, Municipal Clauses Act, c. 32, 1906. Held, also, that a provision to enforce, inter alia, the closing of hotel barrooms during such hours of the night as may be thought expedient, was bad as exceeding the powers conferred by s. 50, sub-s. 122 of said ch. 32. -Judgment cancelling liquor license-Effect of appeal-Perfecting security.]-The liquor license in respect to the Richelieu Hotel was cancelled by the judgment of the Court en banc on the 29th March, 1909. From this judgment the licensee appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada. Security upon the appeal to the Supreme Court was perfected on the 19th April, 1909. Pending this appeal the licensee obtained a renewal license. On an application to cancel the renewal license:—Held, that the renewed license had been in fact cancelled by the judgment of the Court en banc. The effect of the appeal and the perfecting of the security was not to revive this license, and there was therefore no license in existence which could be renewed and the renewal license must therefore be cancelled.

- Hotel license - Sale of spirits in greater quantities than a quart.] - The defendant, the holder of a hotel license to sell liquor by retail, was convicted of selling liquor in greater quantities than that authorized by the Act. It was shown that one G. applied to the licensee to purchase three quart bottles of whiskey, the quantity which the licensee could, under his license, sell being one quart. The licensee said to G. "one at a time" and gave him one quart, which was paid for. The purchaser understood the licensee to mean that he would sell the three bottles; but separately. Subsequently and at intervals of fifteen minutes each two other bottles were purchased and these were stored in the bar until called for by the purchaser. On appeal:-Held, that the evidence disclosed that the real nature of the transaction was not a separate and distinct sale of separate and distinct quarts, but one sale delivered in instalments for the purpose of evading the Act, and the conviction should therefore be affirmed. (2) That the object of the statute being to prevent the sale of liquor by hotel licensees in greater quantites than one quart, the Court should so construe it as to suppress evasions and defeat attempts to avoid in an indirect manner that which is by the statute prohibited.

S. 37 relates to procedure, and is directory only. -Local option by-law-Posting up notices of voting-Ballots marked with assistance of deputy.]-1. S. 66 of the Liquor License Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 101, provides completely for the giving of notice of the voting on a local option by-law under the Act, and there is nothing in the Act which incorporates the provisions of s. 376 of the Municipal Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 116, so as to require the notices provided for by that section. 2. S. 68 of the Liquor License Act does not incorporate any provisions of the Municipal Act with respect to matters prior to the polling, especially the matter of no-tice of the voting which is independently and specifically dealt with in s. 66. 3. The vote of an elector who requests assistance in marking his ballot cannot be legally taken without strict compliance with s. 119 of the Municipal Act, and when four votes were so taken without the oath prescribed by that section, a by-law carried by a majority of only two should be quashed, because, without violating the secrecy of the ballot, it could not be shown that a majority of the electors voted for the by-law. 4. -Local option by-law-Submission to electors-Voting.]-The legislature in passing s. 68 of the Liquor License Act intended that those sections of the Municipal Act which provide for situations not directly covered by the Liquor License Act should be applicable. Summing up is a necessary part of the proceedings in taking the vote upon a by-law submitted to the electors. Section 377 of the Municipal Act provides a just and reasonable method for the appointment of a time and place of summing up, and also that those interested in promoting or opposing the by-law may be present thereat. A local option by-law which did not appoint a time and place for summing up was quashed. S. 66 of the Li-quor License Act provides that the council shall, "as soon as possible" after the first and second readings of the by-law, publish a notice in a newspaper, and that such notice shall be published for at least one month before the vote is taken:-Semble, that the statute does not require two such advertisements. The defendant may by a plea of lis pendens attack an action brought in Quebec Province on the ground that an action of the same nature, between the same parties, and based on the same rights, is pending in another Province of Canada. But if the action is only brought to have the judgment obtained in the other province enforced, the fact that plaintiff had set up a similar claim in such other province and that the action thereon was actually pending, will not support the plea of lis pendens, as the Court in such case would not be called upon to decide the merits of the action, but only to pronounce upon the validity of the judgment so rendered.

- Contract for sale of land - Registration of - Interest of vendor pending payment-Subsequent registration of lis pendens . Payment of instalments.]-In 1894 a husband conveyed certain lands to his wife and from her by agreement in October, 1896 (registered in March, 1897), plaintiff contracted to purchase one parcel of the land; the agreement provided that the purchase money should be paid by instalments, which were paid until November, 1898, when the wife conveyed to the plaintiff and took his note in payment of the balance. In August, 1897, defendant company commenced an action against the wife to set aside the conveyance to her from her husband as a fraud on his creditors and registered a lis pendens on 24th September, 1897, and by the final judgment in that action the wife was directed to do all acts necessary to make the lands comprised in the impeached conveyance available to satisfy the claims on her husband's estate. Plaintiff on applying to register his title first learned of the action and the lis pendens. Plaintiff sued to have the registration of the lis pendens cancelled:-Held, (1) The estate acquired by the conveyance to plaintiff from the wife remained subject to the rights of the company as they should be determined by the results of its action against the wife. (2) The plaintiff in order to get a title should not be compelled to pay again that portion of the purchase money which he had paid since the registration of the lis pendens. (3) Notice of the company's adverse claim was not imputed to plaintiff by reason of the registration of the lis pendens. (4) Ss. 85-88 of the Land Registry Act providing for the cancellation of a lis pendens are not available in practice where, as in this case, the nature and extent of the interest affected by the lis pendens are not ascertained. (5) The plaintiff was entitled to a declaration of right only and the Court declared that he was within his rights in making the payments before notice of the adverse claim; that the lis pendens did not affect the interest acquired by the plaintiff under his contract and that the detendant company had a charge for the amount of purchase money unpaid. So long as there remains anything to be done to work out the judgment in an action the action is pending. Upon a contract for the sale of land the purchase price of which is payable by instalments the vendor retains an interest in the land proportional to the amount of purchase money unpaid which interest is capable of being affected by lis pendens. Semble, generally a cause of action imperfect at the issue of the writ is not perfected, either at law or in equity, by subsequent events.

Death of workman-Action by widow-Insurance moneys.]-In an action by the widow and administratrix of a man who was killed while in the employment of the defendants, under the Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act, to recover damages as compensation for his death. the evidence showed that the damages, based upon a estimate of the wages for three years of a person in the same grade as the deceased, would amount to at least $2,200. Counsel for the plaintiff, however, in addressing the jury, told them they should deduct from the amount they found on that basis a sum of $1,000 which the plaintiff had received for insurance on the life of the deceased. The jury announced a verdict of $1,200, not saying that they had found $2,200 and deducted $1,000; but the trial Judge asked them if that was what they meant, and they said it was:—Held, having regard to s. 7 of the Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 160, that the $1,000 ought not to have been deducted; and that, upon the findings of the jury, judgment should be entered for $2,200. -Pecuniary loss of parents - Reasonable expectation of benefit.]—A lad of twenty, a brakesman employed by the defendants, was killed in a collision upon the railway, by reason of the negligence of the defendants' servants, and this action was brought under the Fatal Accidents Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 166, by the administrators of his estate, to recover damages for his death, for the benefit of his parents, who lived in England. The claim was made and the assessment of the damages was based upon the principle of the Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act. The jury found that the estimated earnings of a person in the same grade as the deceased, in the like employment, in this province, for the three years allowed by the statute, would be $1,800, and they assessed the damages at that sum, apportioning them between the father and mother. The evidence showed that the deceased was unmarried; had been about four years in Canada, and about a month in the service of the defendants. He had corresponded with his mother, but had sent his parents no money. He had received a good and rather expensive education at his father's expense, and the father swore to an un-derstanding between son and the parents that the son would, in consideration of the large sum so expended, assist the parents in their old age:-Held, that the plaintiffs' right of recovery was limited in amount to the pecuniary loss which it could be fairly and reasonably found that the parents had suffered by the son's death; and, upon the evidence and in all the circumstances, taking into account the uncertainties and contingencies, there was such a reasonable and well-founded expectation of pecuniary benefit as could be estimated in money so as to become the subject of damages; but, having regard to all these matters, the award of damages was excessive and extravagant, and therefore unreasonable; and there should be a new assessment of damages, unless the parties could agree upon some amount. It is the plain duty of the Court to see that an award of damages, in an action of this kind, which appears to have been arrived at upon consideration not warranted by the evidence, shall not stand.

London and Western Trusts Co. v. Grand Trunk Railway Co., 22 O.L.R. 262.

- Action by foreign administrator - Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis.] - In an action brought under the Fatal Injuries Act plaintiff who was a sister of the deceased, as well as of the administratrix, applied for leave to sue in forma pauperis:-Held, refusing the application and affirming the judgment of the Chambers Judge, that plaintiff was not within the exception made in the case of a person who is both executor and a benefi-ciary. Per Drysdale, J., in the judgment appealed from, an application made by a Scotch administrator whose letters have been recognized and re-sealed by the Pro-bate Court of this province for leave to continue the action in forma pauperis, ought not to be allowed where such application is not made until after the statute has run against the administrator in this province.

Walker v. Allan Line Steamship Co., 44 N.S.R. 410.

-Death caused by motor vehicle-Presumption of negligence.]-S. 33 of the Manitoba Motor Vehicles Act, 7 & 8 *Edw. VII. c. 34, applies to actions under the Fatal Accidents Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 31, where the death of a person has been caused by an injury sustained from a motor vehicle upon a highway. The only effect of s. 38 is that a presumption is afforded that there has been negligence, and it is for the defendant to rebut that presumption. Therefore, the plaintiffs, suing as the administrators of the estate of a man who was injured upon a highway by the defendant's motor vehicle, and died from his injuries, were entitled to the benefit of the presumption. And, held, upon the evidence, and having regard to ss. 12, 13, 22, and 39 of the Motor Vehicles Act, that the defendant had not discharged the onus that the statute had placed upon him-that there was negligence on the part of the defendant. The deceased had a right to expect that any person driving a motor vehicle along the highway would comply with the statute and otherwise exercise a proper degree of care; and it had not been made to appear that he himself was guilty of any want of care. The introduction into street traffic of the automobile, combining speed with great weight and size, has brought about new considerations; and the legislature has deemed it necessary to interfere for the protection of pedestrians and vehicular traffic of other kinds; hence the Motor Vehicles Act. The rule that persons lawfully using a highway are entitled to rely on warnings required by statute, as from railway engines, is applicable where the statute requires from motor vehicles warning by light and sound. The persons on whose behalf the action was brought, the father sister, and child of the deceased, were held to have a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continuance of the life of the deceased; and damages were assessed in their favour at $3,000.

Toronto General Trusts Corporation v. Dunn, 15 W.L.R. 314 (Man.).

-Action by parents of deceased workman-Expectation by parents of benefit.]-In an action for damages resulting from the death of a workman, the employers admitted liability under the Employers' Liability Act, but disputed the right of the parents to sue as defendants, or that they had any reasonable expectation of benefit from the continuance of his life. There was evidence that the deceased had sent money on two occasions to his parents, but they had in the first instance assisted him by advancing money for his passage to Canada:-Held, on appeal, that the parents had failed to show that they had any reasonable ex-pectation of benefit from the son had he lived. The proceedings at the trial showed that there had been no attempt, by commission or otherwise, to prove the financial condition of the parents. Held, that a new trial should not be granted to enable the plaintiffs to make out a stronger case.

Brown v. British Columbia Electric Railway, 15 B.C.R. 350.

—Dea'h of son—Reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit.)—In an action under C.O. 1898, c. 48, brought on behalf of the mother of a man in the employment of the defendants, who was killed, as was alleged, through the negligence of the defendants, the mother herself was not a witness at the trial, but the plaintiff, another son, testified that she was about 70 years old and in good health; that she lived in Ontario, where she owned a house and lot; that an unmarried son and daughter lived with her; that she had several other sons and daughters, all married and living away from her; and that she had no means of support, except what she received from her children. The deceased was 30 years old, unmarried, and earning about $100 a month. The plaintiff said that the deceased sent his mother money from time to time, and that she looked to him more than to the others; but he admitted that he knew this only through his mother or the deceased. As to one occasion, about three months before the death, the plaintiff said: "Times were not very good, and he was sending some money, and he wanted to send $35, and he asked me if I had any. He said he had $25, and whether I had $10. I had a letter from mother after that, saying she had received it. There was no other evidence of im-portance. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff with $1,500 damages:-Held, that the jury had no proper evidence on which to estimate the damages, and they must have guessed at the amount awarded; but, further, there was no proper evidence of any reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit to support a verdict of even nominal damages. The only evidence of any payment made by the deceased to his mother was hearsay, and inadmissible for the purpose of proving actual contribution to her support; and it was not to be inferred that she had an expectation of future contributions from the single fact that at one time he wished to send one, especially when the circumstances suggested that it was an individual case and not likely to recur; nor, it such an expectation could be inferred, would it be a reasonable one, on that evidence. The evidence, so far as it showed intention, was properly received, but was not sufficient to warrant a finding of a reasonable and well-founded expectation of pecuniary benefit capable of estimation money. Judgment of Stuart, J., 11 W.L.R. 608, reversed.

-Failure to connect negligence with death.]-In an action brought to recover damages for the death of a man by the negligence of the defendants, it appeared that he had been a passenger upon a train of the defendants, and was left by the servants of the defendants alone, while asleep and under the influence of strong drink, in a coach placed in a dangerous position upon a bridge unprotected by a railing or otherwise. When last seen alive, he was asleep in the coach. His body was found in the river, some miles below the bridge, a few days later. Whether he fell from the bridge accidentally, or threw himself or was thrown therefrom, or whether he met his death otherwise than by falling from the bridge, was left open to doubt. The only evidence tending to show that he fell from the bridge was that of a call-boy employed by the defendants, who stated that, when returning across bridge to the coach about an hour after the deceased was last seen, he heard a splash as if made by a heavy body falling into the water under the bridge:—Held, assuming that the defendants owed a duty to the deceased, and that there was negligence on their part, that the plaintiff had failed to show with any reasonable degree of certainty that such negligence caused the death of the deceased; the manner and cause of his death were matters of mere conjecture; and the plaintiff was properly nonsuited. -Action for damages of appellants' son-Negligence by respondents-Misdirection as to contributory negligence by deceased.]-In an action for damages for the death of the appellants' son while acting as engineer of the respondents' lumber train, the respondents were charged with negligence in respect to the train having been equipped with defective brakes and an incompetent brakesman, while the deceased was charged with contributory negligence in jumping from the train. The jury found for the appel-lants, but a new trial was ordered by the Supreme Court. One Judge was dissatisfied with the verdict on the ground of misdirection in regard to contributory negligence, and another Judge held, contrary to both his colleagues, that the damages were excessive:-Held, that the order must be reversed. It was too late for the respondents to rely on misdirection which they had not expected at the trial or in the notice of appeal or in oral argument before the Supreme Court. There were no sufficient grounds for a new trial on the head of excessive damages.

—Action for death happening out of the jurisdiction — Necessity for adm. The plaintiff, his widow, was appointed administratrix of his estate by a Manitoba Surrogate Court and brought this action for damages claiming both at common law and under the Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 178:—Held, Tipiries Act, R.S.M. 1902, c. 178:—Held, following Couture v. Dominion Fish Co., 19 M.R. 65, that the plaintiff could not sue under the corresponding Ontario Act without having been first appointed administratrix by an Ontario Court and that, as the injury took place in Ontario, the Manitoba Act could not apply and there being no such right of action at common law, the entry of a nonsuit by the trial Judge was right.

-Accident-Cause of death-Negligence of victim.]-In a trial by a jury with an assignment of facts in an action based on the liability of a builder for death caused by the victim coming into contact with a crane the arm of which had, in turning, touched electric wires charged with a heavy voltage, a finding by the jury that the fault attributable to the defendant was "not having taken necessary precaution to prevent the arm of the crane approaching the electric wires" is sufficiently explicit to comply with the requirements of art. 483 C.P.Q., through the nature of the precautions that should have been taken is not indicated. The presiding Judge must, after the verdict, render judgment at once or after deliberation or reserve the case of the opinion of the Court of Review and application by motion or otherwise is not necessary to enable him to do so. The spontaneous and voluntary act of a passer-by who rushes to the aid of a workman whom he believes to be in danger, and is struck by electricity in the manner above mentioned, cannot be imputed as the cause of his death by the person responsible

If the alleged wrongful act or negligence was not actionable where it took place it would not be actionable in Manitoba, even though the defendants were domiciled there. (2). The rule actio personalis moritur cum persona would apply and no action could be brought in the Territories for such wrongful act or negligence, unless Lord Campbell's Act or some statute equivalent thereto were in force there. 3. - Rights of administrator - Rights of relatives - Time limit - Stay of proceedings.] - An unmarried man having come to his death by reason of injuries inflicted by the defendants, two actions were brought to recover damages occasioned by his death. The first in point of time was brought by the paternal grandfather and grandmother of the deceased, and the second by his mother, who had obtained letters of administration to his estate after the bringing of the first action. Upon a motion by the defendants to stay one or other of the actions:-Held, that, while the grandfather and grandmother could legally proceed with their action under R.S.O. 1897, c. 166, although brought within six months of the death, so long as there was no executor or administrator, yet an administratrix having been appointed and an action' brought by her within the six months, she was entitled to proceed with it; and the first action was the one to be stayed. — Action for causing death through negligence — Pecuniary loss to surviving relative — Damages assessed on wrong principle.] — In an action brought under Con. Stat. c. 86 (Lord Campbell's Act), for the benefit of the father of the deceased, evidence was given to show that the father, who was a brass founder, and about seventy years old, had practically become unable to earn his own livelihood, although his prospects for some years of future life were good; that the deceased, who was 26 years of age, had always lived with his father, and for many years had paid various sums-sometimes as much as thirty dollars per month-for his board and lodging, though there was no evidence to show what such board and lodging were worth; that for the fifteen months immediately preceding his death he had ceased to pay anything, because having gone into business on his own account, his father wished him to keep the money to put into the business; that the son was sober, industrious, a good man of business, and affectionate to his father. When the son went into business for himself the father advanced him $700. After his death the business was closed up and the stock-in-trade, etc., sold, which sale realized $1,100. Of this $700 went to creditors other than the father, leaving only $400 to satisfy the father's claim of $700. The learned Chief Justice, who tried the case, having left it to the jury in general terms to estimate what, if any, pecuniary damage the father had sustained by the death of his son, a verdict was found for the plaintiff for $3,500:—Held, (per Hanning-ton, Landry, Barker, VanWart, and Mc Leod, JJ.), that the amount of the verdict showed either the charge was too general in its terms or the jury misunderstood the principles upon which damages should be assessed in cases such as this, and, therefore, that there must be a new trial on the question of damages, and, further, as the evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants was not altogether satisfactory, and the finding of the jury on the question of the damages did not entitle their opinion on the question of negligence to much weight, that there must be a new trial on this point as well. It having been urged on behalf of the plaintiff that he was entitled to retain a verdict for $300 at least, that being the balance due the father upon his $700 loan, as the jury would have a right to infer that the son, if he had lived, would have paid the debt in full. Held, as before, that as such claim had not been mentioned in the particulars delivered under the Act, and was not referred to either in the plaintiff's opening, the Judge's charge, or in any other part of the case, it was impossible to say that the jury in as-sessing the damages had included this item, therefore, even admitting this claim to be a proper element of damage in cases under the Act, it must be submitted to the consideration of another jury; further held, as before, that outside of the debt above referred to there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury of a pecuniary loss to the father by the death of the son. Per Tuck, C.J.: That as the jury had either misunderstood or wilfully disregarded the charge in question of damages, there must be a new trial, and that the evidence of negligence should be submitted to another jury as well.

Runciman v. The Star Line Steamship Co., 35 N.B.R. 123.

- Railways - Negligence - Orders to engine drivers - R.S.O. 1897, c. 166.] - The defendants were erecting an interlocking apparatus at a point of their main line where there was a siding, whereby the switch could be worked and a signal shown to indicate how it was set, by lowering the upper or lower arm of the signal as the case might be. The plaintiffs' husband, an experienced engine driver in defendants' employ, having been informed before starting with his train that the apparatus was in working order and that all trains were to be governed by the rules applicable in such cases, approaching the spot, saw the signal with both arms down, intimating that the interlocker was out of order, but nevertheless proceeded, and the switch not being fastened in any way the train was derailed and he was killed. As a matter of fact, the apparatus was not in working order, a switchman of the defendants being at the spot with flag signals to use in case of necessity, but he failed to warn the deceased. The defendant's rules governing engine drivers provided that they should stop when in doubt as to the meaning of a signal, also that a signal imperfectly displayed must be regarded as a danger signal, and that in case of doubt they were to take the safe course and run no risk. Employees were also specially instructed that if an interlocker was out of order, trains were to be flagged through. plaintiff brought this action for damages under R.S.O. 1897, c. 166:-Held, that although there was a plain defect in the condition of the way which was the cause of the derailment of the engine, that the plaintiff was properly non-suited, in that her husband, had he survived, could not have maintained an action, having negligently disobeyed his orders as contained in the rules, by proceeding with his train in spite of the condition of the signals.

- Damages - Death of husband - Life insurance policy — Art. 1056 C.C.] — The fact that a widow may have at the death of her husband the amount insured upon his life under a policy of insurance is no reason why she may not claim damages from the person responsible on account of Trunk R.W. - Convicting claims.] - A woman claiming to be the widow of a man killed owing as alleged to the negligence of the defendants, brought an action against them with her two children as co-plaintiffs to recover damages. Subsequently another action was brought by another woman also claiming to be the deceased's widow, to recover damages for the benefit of herself and child, her marriage having taken place after an alleged divorce of the first plaintiff:-Held, that only one action would lie under the Act; that that action would be for the benefit of the persons in fact entitled; and that, there being no doubt as to the right of the children in the first action, that action should be allowed to proceed and the rights of all parties worked out in it, the second action being stayed; the plaintiff in the second action to be represented by counsel at the trial if desired. Judgment of Falconbridge, C.J.K.B., reversed.

- Fatal Accidents Act - Status of widow -Grant of administration pendente lite -Workmen's Compensation Act - Rights of mother - Expectation of benefit.] - An action was brought to recover damages for the death of a workman employed by the defendants, owing to their alleged negligence. The plaintiff alleged that she was the widow of the deceased, but this was denied. She obtained, as widow, pendente lite, letters of administration to the estate of the deceased, and amendments were made by which she claimed as administratrix for her own benefit as widow and for the benefit of the mother of the deceased. The defendants denied negligence, denied the plaintiffs' status as widow and administratrix, and also set up a release of the cause of action. The trial Judge found against the plaintiff's status and in the defendants' favour on the facts as to the obtaining of the release. The jury found negligence, and assessed the damages at $1,500 apportioning the sum equally between the plaintiff and the mother:-Held, that there was evidence upon which the jury were justified in finding that the man's death arose from the negligence of the defendants without blame on his part; and therefore that there should not be a non-suit or a new trial upon this branch of the case; Meredith, J., dissenting, and being of the opinion that there should be a new trial upon the whole case. (2) That the release given by the plaintiff should not, on the evidence, be held binding on her; Anglin, J., hesitating. (3) That, on the evidence, the mother had no sufficient interest in her son's life or expectation from him to give her a right of action in respect of his death; and there should be a new assessment of damages unless the plaintiff was content to accept $750. (4) That there should be a new trial upon the question of the plaintiff's right as widow and administratrix, evidence having been discovered since the trial going to show that the plaintiff was the true widow. (5) That if the letters of administration were rightly granted to the plaintiff as widow, they related back so as to Trice v. Robinson validate the action. (1888), 16 O.R. 433, and Murphy v. Grand Trunk R.W. Co., unreported decision of a Divisional Court, 27th May, 1889, applied and followed. Judgment of Idington, J., 7 O.L.R. 747, reversed.

Doyle v. Diamond Flint Glass Co., 8 O.L. R. 499 (D.C.).

-Railway - Disorderly passenger - Expulsion from train-Fatal Accidents Act.]-A passenger travelling from Detroit to Buffalo on defendants' train, who was somewhat excited from liquor, but physically capable of taking care of himself, was guilty of several disorderly acts, amongst others of molesting fellow-passengers. He was put off the train at Bridgeburg, a station near the Canadian end of the International Railway Bridge crossing the Niagara River, and about a mile distant from his destination. He followed the train on foot and after a scuffle with the bridge guard jumped or fell off the bridge into the river and was drowned:-Held, that the defendants were justified in putting him off the train, and were neither obliged to put him under re-straint and carry him to Buffalo, nor to place him in charge of some one at Bridgeburg. On the evidence it was impossible to say whether the deceased fell off the bridge accidentally or threw himself off; or that his death was the natural or probable result of his being removed from the train. Held, also, that there was no evidence of any negligence on the part of the defendants to be submitted to a jury. Judgment of Delahanty v. Michigan Central R.W. Co., 10 O.L.R. 388, C.A.

— Damages — Death of son.] — The father who sues for compensation for the death of his son by defendant's fault cannot claim as damages, the sums he would have paid for the son's maintenance, education and the like.

Beaudet v. William Grace Co., 7 Que. P. R. 82 (Sup. Ct.).

- Negligence - Accident - Cause of -Failure to disclose. | - The defendants were the owners of a tug which had been laid up for the winter in a harbour alongside of their dock, being a place accessible to, but not frequented by, the public. The tug accidentally filled with water and sank, breaking the ice, and leaving open water above the deck, over which fresh ice formed. This was cut away by defendants with the object of raising the tug, and, while in this condition, the body of the plaintiff's hus-band was found lying on his back with his feet and legs on the surrounding ice and his head in the water. It appeared that ou the evening before the finding of the body the deceased was in a state of intoxication. To a question put to the jury, whether deceased by means of ordinary care could have avoided the accident; and how he could have so avoided it, they answered, "Yes, he might have taken another road; or, if sober, on a bright night, he might have avoided the hole":-Held, that no negligence on the part of the defendants was established, for it was quite as reasonable to conclude that deceased voluntarily sat down on the edge of the hole and perished from exposure, as that he walked into the hole. Held, also, that the answer of the jury to the question put to them was not one in favour of contributory negligence.

Plouffe v. Canada Iron Furnace Company, 10 O.L.R. 37 (Britton, J.).

— Loss of child — Right of mother while father living — Excessive damages — Reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit.]—
The mother of the deceased is a person for whose benefit an action can be brought under the Fatal Accidents Act, although the father is living. Damages assessed by a jury at $3,000 for the loss of a daughter seventeen years old by reason of the negligence of the defendants, were held to be excessive, and a new trial was directed unless both parties would agree to have the damages fixed at $1,500. Order of a Divisional Court, 11 O.L.R. 158, reversed.

Renwick v. Galt, Preston and Hespeler Street R.W. Co., 12 O.L.R. 35 (C.A.).

- Damages - Excessive amount.] - Damages to the amount of $2,100 were recovered by the plaintiff suing as the father and administrator of his deceased son, 22 years of age, who was killed through defendant's negligence. The son's occupation was principally that of a labourer, the highest rate of wages received by him being for a few days at the rate of $35 a month. His mother was dead and his father had married again. He lived with a widowed sister, but was on good terms with his father and stepmother, whom he visited once or twice a month, on such occasions giving his father from $2 to $4, and once $5. His habits were good and he was of a generous disposition. Evidence was received of his intention of helping his father to build a house, of assisting him in paying off a mortgage of $650 on his property, as well as a debt of $400, which he owed another son, and for which the father had given his promissory notes:-Held, that the evidence of such expressed intention was properly admitted, not necessarily as showing a promise to make the payments, but of his being well disposed to his father; the amount awarded the plaintiff for damages, however, was clearly excessive, and a new trial was ordered unless the parties agreed to a reduction of the damages to $500.

Stephens v. Toronto Railway Company, 11 O.L.R. 19, 5 Can. Ry. Cas. 102 (C.A.).

— Joint and several liability — Cause of death — Measure of damages — Division of damages awarded en bloc to several minors.] —I. When legislative authority is given to do a thing in one of two or more ways, the selection or adoption of the way is subject to the ordinary rules of prudence with respect to liability for the consequences. So, where a company for electrical purposes is empowered by its charter to construct and lay its wires over or under the streets, it cannot arbitrarily do the one thing or the other, and if it lay, over ground, wires charged with so heavy a voltage that, as a matter of ordinary prudence, they should be laid under ground, it will be liable in damages for loss and accidents caused thereby. 2. Where a death is caused by electricity so carried on the wires of the company flowing into a derrick, brought in contact with the wires by another party to whom it belongs, it is a question for the jury to find whether the death is imputable to the joint fault of the company and of the owner of the derrick, or, exclusively, to the sole fault of either of them. There-fore, if the finding is that the company alone is at fault, the Court, whatever may be its own view of the evidence on the point, cannot interfere and will reject a motion by the company for a judgment non obstante veredicto, nor for a new trial, against the ground. 3. In assessing the damages caused by the death of a husband and father to his widow and children, a jury is not restricted to a consideration of the wage-earning capacity of the deceased; they are justified in making a further allowance for any material aid and assistance, apart from money, which the plaintiffs might have expected from him, had he lived. 4. A plaintiff who moves for judgment on a special verdict that one of two defendants is liable, to the exclusion of the other, for the cause of action, cannot at the same time move for a judgment non obstante veredicto, nor for a new trial, against the other defendant. 5. When a block sum has been awarded by the verdict of a jury as damages to several minor children whose individual claims must be different by reason of the difference in their age, the Court will reserve their right to have the amount divided between them accordingly

Dumphy v. Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company, 28 Que. S.C. 18 (C.R.).

— Damages — Misdirection.] — In a case of damages for tort tried before a jury the verdict will not be set aside on the ground or misdirection by the Judge, because he told them they might if they chose allow the full amount of the loss which the plaintiff contended he had sustained, or the amount which, from actuarial tables, would be required to yield an annuity equivalent to and representing the full loss.

— Liability for non-performance of statutory duty—Contributory negligence of fellow-workmen or of mere strangers—Marriage, evidence of.] — Action brought by administratrix of Prosper Daye, killed in explosion in defendants' mine, under C. O. 1898, c. 48. There was evidence of plaintiff's that she was married to Daye in Belgium, was living with him to time of death, and that he was the father of her children, oldest aged 17 years; that he was killed by explosion of gas in defendants' Cammore mine in June, 1900; that ventilation was defective and not as required by s. 39, Rule 1 of C.O. 1898, c. 16; that mine was not inspected as required by Rule 3 of last cited section; that the mine was gaseous; that on morning of the accident there was gas present in explosive quantities for two or three hours prior to the explosion: that the manager knew of the presence of gas; that two fellow workmen of deceased had opened their safety lamps; there was no evidence to rebut presumption of marriage, and no evidence of inspection of the lamps as required by Rule 8 of s. 39 above, or that the explosion arose from any act or default of deceased: — Held (per McGuire, C.J., trial Judge), 1. That the oral evidence of the widow was sufficient proof of marriage according to the general rule that cohabitation and reputation is sufficient evidence of marriage, though in cases of big-amy, divorce and petitions for damages for adultery, stricter proof is required. 2. That, having found the effective and proximate couse of death to be an explosion due to the fault and negligence of defendants and their breach of duty imposed by the Ordinances C.O. 1898, c. 16, they were not relieved if there was contributory negligence on the part of a fellow workman of accused or of a mere stranger. 3. That by reason of Ord. c. 13 of 1900, if negligence was proved there was no reason to inquire whether it was that of a fellow workman. On appeal to Court en banc. Held. 1. That marriage was sufficiently established by Mrs. Daye's evidence; that strict proof was not required; that the fact that the alleged marriage took place in a foreign country did not affect the question, as the lex fori governs questions of proof. 2. That there was sufficient evidence to support the findings of the trial Judge; that the findings were sufficient to render the defendants liable. Appeal dismissed with costs.

Daye v. W. H. McNeill Co., 6 Terr. L.R. 23.

— Damages — Solatium.] — The father of a child killed in an accident on a tramway has no right of action against the company liable therefor except for actual damages proved. He cannot recover sentimental damages or indemnity in solatium doloris.

The Quebec Railway, Light and Power Co. v Poitras, Q.R. 14 K.B. 429.

— New trial — Quantum of damages.] — The Court of Appeal pronounced judgment on the 4th April, 1905, dismissing the defendant's appeal except upon the question of damages. It was held that the damages assessed by the jury were excessive, and a new trial was ordered unless the plaintiff would consent to a reduction. The certificate of this judgment not having issued, the Court on the 2nd June, 1905, reconsidered the matter, and, acting under Rule 786, directed a new trial confined to the question of the amount of damages:-Held, following Watt v. Watt, [1905] A. C. 115, that the Court has no jurisdiction, with the defendants' consent, to make the new trial dependent upon the consent of the plaintiff to reduce the damages.

Hockley v. Grand Trunk Railway Co., 5 Can. Ry. Cas. 122 (C.A. Ont.).

 Quebec Civil Code, Art. 1056
 Construction
 Contract that deceased shall have no claim - "Satisfaction" means real and tangible indemnity.]-The right of action conferred by Art. 1056 of the Civil Code of Quebec on the widow and relatives of a deceased employee whose death has been caused by the fault of his employer is an independent and personal right, and not derived from the deceased or his representatives. Robinson v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co. (1892), A.C. 481, followed:— Held, that the deceased could not be said to have obtained "satisfaction" from the company within the respondent meaning of that article unless he had obtained a real and tangible indemnity for the fault in question. Where the deceased, as a condition of his employment, became a member of an insurance and provident society, a by-law of which provided that in consideration of the respondents' subscription thereto no member thereof or his representatives shall have any claim against the respondents for compensation on account of injury or death from accident; and it appeared from the society's provisions for sick allowance and insurance, that the respondents contributed only to the former, the latter being a scheme for mutual life insurance. Held, that, assuming this by-law to be valid, the deceased had not obtained satisfaction within the meaning of Art. 1056. The insurance money did not proceed from the respondents, and had no relation to its offence, and was equally payable in case of natural death. Reg. v. Grenier (1899), 30 Sup. Ct. Can. 42, overruled. indemnity which the others are to receive, is a bar to a subsequent action brought by one of the latter.

Collins v. City of Saint John, 38 N.B.R.

- Death of person operating calcium light in theatre - Employment by playing company - Agreement between company and owners of theatre - Division of gross receipts.] - A theatrical company agreed to present a certain play at the defendants' theatre on a gate specified, and the defendants agreed to furnish the theatre and all the properties contained in the theatre for the period of the engagement, and also to "furnish electric current for the company's calciums." It was agreed that there should be no other entertainment in the theatre during the engagement, and that the gross receipts should be shared so that 70 per cent. should go to the playing company. The plaintiff's son was employed by the company to operate, and did operate, a calcium light belonging to them; he was under the charge and direction of their electrician; the company's servants had entire and sole control of the stage and its surroundings, including the place where the lamp was operated. The plaintiffs' son was killed by the action of electricity while operating the lamp:-Held, that the effect of sharing the gross receipts was but another mode of paying rent for the premises, and did not indicate that any partnership existed; and the defendants, having no right of control, were not jointly liable with the company, nor in any way liable for the death of the plaintiffs' son.

 Claim of damages — Finding of jury set aside — New trial.] — Plaintiff claimed damages under Lord Campbell's Act for the loss of his son who was killed by a fall of stone in defendant's mine. The jury, in answer to a question submitted by the trial Judge, found that the specific act of negligence that caused the injury was the failure of defendant to properly examine the face of the wall from which the rock fell. There was uncontradicted evidence on the part of defendant that several of the officials of the company, before starting work, went carefully over the banks and walls for the purpose of ascertaining whether they were safe: — Held, in view of this evidence, that the finding of the jury was not justified, and that there must be a new trial. Also, that the jury having placed their verdict on this one ground which could not be justified under the evidence, the Court could not give a wider scope to their answer so as to embrace other acts of negligence pointed out, or to rectify the error or misunderstanding of the jury.

- Action by executor or administrator under Lord Campbell's Act (C.O. 1898), c. 48 Letters of administration to an infant -Right to sue — Practice — Next friend — 17regularity.] — "The Ordinance respecting juries" was not brought into force in Alberta by reason of the repeal of the North-West Territories Act by R.S.C. (1996), Schedule "A" (R.S.C. vol. 3, p. 2941). The effect of 6-7 Edw. VII. (Dom.), c. 44, con-sidered. Independently of the effect of the Alberta Act was not to repeal the former North-West Territories Act, but to prevent its remaining in force proprio vigore; and to continue (sec. 16) in force, the law therein contained as a body of law, in the same manner as the common and statute law of England, as it stood on July 15th, 1870, was introduced into the Territories. If an infant sues, without naming a next friend, it is a mere irregularity, and may be waived by an unconditional appearance of the defendant. But quite independently of waiver there must in every case be some stage at which it is too late to take advantage of a mere irregularity. In any case the Judge can deal with it under Rule 538. Letters of administration granted to an infant are not void, but voidable; and semble, until revoked the infant can sue, qua administrator, and need not be represented, when so suing, by a next friend. In an action for negligence, it is not improper to receive evidence as to what may have been done by the defendants subsequently to remedy the defects or dangers complained of, but the jury should be warned that such evidence taken by itself is no evidence of negligence. If there be no other evidence of negligence the case should be withdrawn from the jury. It is within the discretion of the trial Judge to submit special questions to the jury or not; but in either case the jury may render a general verdiet. The words "the Court may give such damages," in C.O. (1898), c. 48, s. 3, means the Judge at trial, or the Judge and the jury, as the case may be.

- Death of young child caused by negligence - Pecuniary loss of parent.] verdict of a jury for $300 damages for the death of the plaintiff's child, aged four years, in an action under the Fatal Accidents Act, was upheld by a Divisonal Court, and by the Court of Appeal (Moss, C.J.O., and Maclaren, J.A., dissenting), where it appeared that the child was healthy, intelligent, and with as good a prospect of prolonged life as any infant of that age could be said to have. The question is for the jury, upon the evidence; pecuniary benefit or advantage need not have been actually derived by the parent previous to the death; the probabilty of the continuance of life and the reasonable expectation that in that event pecuniary benefit or advantage would have been derived are proper subjects for consideration.

- Negligence- Unfenced machinery.] - While B. was carrying a bag out of the defendant's grist mill by an ordinary means of exit he passed near a vertical shaft which was in motion, and in some way his overcoat was caught by the shaft and he was whirled around and instantly killed. Between the shaft and the smutter, where B tried to pass, was a passage of about six feet in width. The shaft, which was unguarded, was three inches in diameter, and had been mended some years before with a chain and some wire to secure a coupling. This increased its diameter by several inches, and there was evidence that a hook on the end of the chain and a piece of the wire were left protruding, though this was contradicted. There was no witness of the accident, and the jury found that there was no negligence on the part of the defendant, and that there was contributory negligence on the part of B.:—Held, that the verdict was such as the jury, reasonably viewing all the evidence, might properly

The provisions of the Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act, C.S. 1903, c. 146, place a workman who has been killed by the negligence of his employer in the same position as a stranger, but give his personal representatives no other or better right than they would have if he was a stranger.

The statement of defence admitted the truth of the allegation in the statement of claim that the plaintiff was the administrator of the estate and effects of his deceased wife, but such administration had only been granted in and for the Province of Manitoba, and the defendants applied for and obtained leave to amend their defence by setting up that the plaintiff had not been appointed such administrator by or under the authority of the North-West Territories of Canada wherein the plaintiff's alleged cause of action had arisen and that the plaintiff had no status or right to bring the action and the alleged cause of action was not and never had been vested in him.

LOTTERY.

Agreement to operate lottery - Illegality.] - 1. No action can be maintained for the recovery of money under a contract for the operation of a lottery scheme which would contravene the criminal law. 2. Where in a civil action it appears that the plaintiff entered into a conspiracy with the defendant to commit an unlawful act and that the action is brought to recover money paid in furtherance of such conspiracy, it is the duty of the Court ex mero motu to notice the illegality, although not formally pleaded. 3. Such an illegality cannot be cured by the defendant's pleas or attempted waiver. 4. Where there are two agreements, both of which are in furtherance of the unlawful scheme, the second being in form a contract of loan, but collateral and auxiliary to the first which provides for the opera-tion of the lottery, both agreements are invalid and unenforceable.

— Taxation — Legislative power.] — The date on which a tax, sous forme de permis, imposed on every person or company carrying on the business of a lottery, should be paid is sufficiently indicated when the bylaw declares that this license is a tax that is payable yearly within the delays prescribed by the city charter, that it will expire on the first day of May following the date on which it was granted and will be renewed each year on demand. A tax cannot be called exorbitant when it does not exceed the amount fixed by the charter for the particular class of cases to which it applies. The legislature can authorize the imposition of taxes, sous forme de permis, on persons or companies carrying on the business of lotteries.

The King v. Johnston, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 525.

-Crim. Code, s. 205-Device to evade the law against lotteries.]-Crown case reserved. The accused was convicted in November, 1900, before Richards, J., and a jury, under Crim. Code, s. 205, for having advertised a proposal or scheme for disposing of a horse, buggy and harness by lot, and also for having unlawfully disposed of a number of tickets, lots or cards as a means of or device for disposing of the same property by lot. The modus operandi advertised and practised was that each purchaser of goods to the value of $5 was given a ticket; and, upon a drawing by lot among the holders of such tickets, the winner was to get the horse, buggy and harness if he could shoot a turkey at a distance of fifty yards in fine shot, it being provided that a lady winner could choose a substitute to shoot for her. The case stated that the evidence showed that any person could easily shoot a turkey under the circumstances:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the interposition of the condition as to the shooting was intended as requiring a real contest of skill, or merely a device for covering up a scheme for disposing of the property by lot; that the verdict involved a finding, that it was merely a device, that the evidence justified that finding, and that the conviction should be affirmed.

— Bonds with chances of winning prizes.]

—The accused had made sales of certain securities called "Bon Panama," which had originally been issued in Paris, France, in 1889, by the Panama Canal Company under the authority of the laws of France. These bonds promised the repayment of 400 francs in the year 1988, and carried with them the chances of getting prizes varying in amount from 500,000 francs to 1,000 in amount from 500,000 francs to 1,000 francs given to the holders of the lucky numbers by drawings to take place at frequent intervals during the life of the bonds. The accused, in canvassing purchasers of the bonds, held out as an inducement the chance of winning one of these prizes, and the belief that there was such a chance influenced the purchasers in paying the price which they gave for the bonds: — Held, that the accused was rightly convicted of selling lottery tickets contrary to s. 236 of the Criminal Code.

Application for declaration of lunacy Conflict of evidence — Expert testimony.]— Upon an application under sub-s. 1 of s. 6 and sub-ss. 1 and 5 of s. 7 of the Lunacy Act, 9 Edw. VII. c. 37, for an order declaring F. to be a lunatic, the Court, the evidence being conflicting, directed an issue to try the alleged lunacy. S. 10 of the Evidence Act, 9 Edw. VII. c. 43, applies to the calling and examination of witnesses at a trial; upon an application such as this, any number of affidavits of medical experts might be received. Under sub-s. 2 of s. 7 of the Lunacy Act, it was ordered that the issue should be tried without a jury, unless the alleged lunatic should demand a jury in the manner mentioned in s. 8, and the trial Judge should so order. Costs of the application to be disposed of by the trial Judge.

-Marriage of alleged lunatic-Action to declare marriage void.]-Plaintiff, a retired farmer, over 80 years of age, it was said, went through a form of marriage with defendant, a woman about 30. Catharine McCormick (a daughter of plaintiff's cousin Cerman) brought action, as his next friend, alleging that plaintiff was of unsound mind, and charging defendant and her father, a retired Presbyterian minister of experience as an editor, with conspiracy and forcing an entrance into plaintiff's house, etc., and asked to have said ceremony declared a nullity and void. Defendants moved under Con. Rule 261 to have the action dismissed as frivolous and vexatious. Riddell, J., held (16 O.W.R. 164, 1 O.W.N. 800, 843), that if the plaintiff was non compos mentis the action should not be dismissed, and he ordered a stay of proceedings until further order, on an undertaking that the next friend should take proceedings to have plaintiff declared of unsound mind. The Divisional Court (16 O.W.R. 164; 1 O.W.N. 894), by consent of counsel varied the order of Riddell, J., by directing that the next friend of the plaintiff have liberty to have medical experts examine the plaintiff as to his sanity, and the appellants undertake to facilitate such examination, such examination to take place within one week, and to be upon forty-eight hours' notice to counsel for the appellants. The proceedings under the Lunacy Act, 1909, if any, to be launched by the respondent within four days after the medical examination. The costs of this appeal to be costs in the proposed application for a declaration of lunacy as between appellants and respondent. Sutherland, J. appointed—Consideration.]—The plaintiff, the brother of a lunatic, sold certain property of such lunatic to defendant, taking a promissory note in payment expressed to be payable to plaintiff for the lunatic. The note being dishonoured, plaintiff sued to recover, and the action was dismissed. The plaintiff was then appointed guardian of the estate and brought a new action as guardian, but did not notify the defendant of his appointment or ratify the transactions occurring prior to his appointment: --Held, that if the note when given was not valid, the plaintiff could not, upon being appointed guardian, recover upon it, in any event not unless he had ratified the sale and notified the defendant of such ratification and of his appointment. Death of lunatic - Confirmation of report - Discharge of committee.] - Before the confirmation of the Master's report appointing a committee of the person and estate of a lunatic and propounding a scheme for her maintenance, the lunatic died: - Held, notwithstanding the death, that an order should be made (the executors of the deceased consenting) confirming the report and for the discharge of the committee and the surrender of his bond. - Lunatic wife - Admission to asylum -Removal by wife's relatives - Subsequent alimony action.] — A husband on two occasions procured the release of his wife from the provincial lunatic asylum, where he had obtained her admission as a lunatic. After her second release she grew worse, becoming violent and dangerous, and he again applied for her admission, which was refused, the authorities declining to receive her except as a "warrant patient," whereupon he took proceedings under s. 12 of R.S.O. 1897, c. 317, which resulted in her being committed to gaol as a dangerous lunatic, from whence she was transferred to the asylum. The wife's relatives then applied to the Lieutenant-Governor and obtained her release, and she went to live with them, and claimed alimony in this action:-Held, that an action therefor would not lie.

The defendant having come of age, but being of unsound mind, and residing abroad with her mother, who had been appointed her guardian by a foreign Court, the mother applied for pay-ment out of the whole fund, having given in the foreign Court specific security for the amount:-Held, as to the half of the fund in which the applicant had a life interest, that it might be paid out to proper trustees appointed to administer and safeguard it, or it might be paid out to the applicant upon substantial security being given. Held, as to the other half, that, being actually in the hands of the Court, it was subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, and should be applied for the support and maintenance of the person of unsound mind, in the discretion of the Court whatever sum should be shown to be necessary for maintenance being paid to the foreign guardian.

- Interdiction - Proceedings to set aside interdiction notwithstanding opposition of curator - Failure of - Right of advocate or notary to costs of proceedings — Arts. 83, 334, C.C.] — Held (affirming the judgment of the Superior Court, Archibald, J., 16 C.S., p. 565), an advocate or notary, acting upon the instructions of an interdict for insanity, and in good faith, believing that the cause of interdiction had ceased, but acting without the consent and con-trary to the instructions of the curator, is not entitled to recover from the curator in his said quality the costs of such proceedings, which were unsuccessful because it was held that the cause of interdiction had not ceased. Semble, a judgment setting aside the interdiction would have a retroactive effect to the date of the cessation of the cause of interdiction, and would necessarily validate an agreement by 'the interdict to pay the costs of the proceedings to obtain the removal of the interdiction. -Care of lunatic - Lunatic's estate Committee's duty as to — Schemes for maintenance — Taxation of costs.] — The rule has for many years been that when the Court intervenes in respect to the property of persons not sui juris, the moneys shall not be left to private investment, but shall be paid into Court and become subject to its general system of administra-tion, by which the interest will be punctually paid and the corpus will always be forthcoming when needed. The general rule to be observed by local officers when it is advisable that the estate should be realized and turned into money, is that the fund so realized shall be paid into Court; and when part of the estate is converted and part kept for the abode of a lunatic or otherwise, the scheme for dealing with the whole shall be reported to the Court that proper directions may be given. In two cases where Local Masters had reported schemes for the maintenance of lunatics and made provision for the moneys of the estates being collected by the respective committees and thereafter for their investment by the committees on securities of different kinds at their discretion, and in one case had taxed the costs and inserted the amount in the report: - Held, that it is imperative that the costs in lunacy matters be taxed by the proper officer in Toronto, as the Local Master has no authority to tax them. -Committee of estate - Moneys advanced on mortgage of lunatic's lands - Accounting.] - By an order made in 1892 the wife of the plaintiff was declared a lunatic, and a reference was directed to appoint a committee, who was to give security and pass accounts at least once a year. The defendants' predecessors were (on consent) appointed committee without security, and a report was made in 1893, which showed the lunatic's estate to consist of a life interest in money in Court and incumbered land, with houses built thereon. The report also showed that the committee had agreed to advance moneys to pay off the mortgages and for purposes of maintenance, which they did, taking an assignment of the mortgages. The lunatic died in 1899; and the plaintiff in 1906 began an action for redemption against the defendants, as successors of the original committee and assignees of the mortgagees. At the same time an appointment was issued in the lunacy matter for the defendants to bring in and pass their accounts before the referee; and the action was referred to him for trial. The committee had not passed their accounts previously. In 1908 the then committee had, without any authority from the Court, expended money in building a stable on the lunatic's land and in other ways. The committee looked upon the estate as hopelessly insolvent, and regarded themselves as mortgagees in possession. On the passing of the accounts the referee disallowed all payments made by the committee other than for taxes, insurance premiums, interest on mortgages, and minor repairs, and also refused to allow them remuneration for their services, and refused them their costs of accounting, and so reported:—Held, by Meredith, C.J.C.P., on appeal, directing a reference back, that the defendants should be allowed for the expenditure upon the stable, if. upon the facts as found, a case should be made which would have been sufficient to have obtained an order permitting the expenditure to be made, had an application been made to the Court for authority to incur it; that the fact that the committee did not pass their accounts annually was not alone sufficient ground for charging them with sums with which they would not otherwise have been chargeable, or for disallowing sums which they would have been otherwise entitled to have allowed to them; and that the order on appeal should not prejudice the right of the defendants to claim that they were not to be chargeable as committee, but as mortgagees in possession. This order was affirmed by a Divisional Court. Semble, per Boyd, C., that, had there been no question to go back to the referee as to allowance for improvements, his ruling as to the costs of accounting should not have been disturbed; the onus was still on the committee to satisfy the referee that costs should be given and other allowances made, and how far given and made, notwithstanding the disregard of the order directing an annual passing of accounts.

 Improvident contract
 Voluntary gift
 Insanity of grantor.
 William Davidson died in 1890, leaving real estate consisting of a homestead and lot "A," all of which he left absolutely to his wife Helen Davidson, and appointed her and the defendant William Ferguson executors. In 1898 James Davidson, son of William and Helen Davidson, being indebted to the de-fendants William Ferguson and Philip Arsenault, became insolvent and assigned to Philip Arsenault. Nearly all the creditors, including William Ferguson and Philip Arsenault, agreed to compromise at ten cents on the dollar, but James Davidson made a secret agreement with William Ferguson and Philip Arsenault that they should be , paid in full. By arrangement between n, William Ferguson and James Davidson. Philip Arsenault, William Ferguson James Davidson purchased the assets from Philip Arsenault as assignee for $1,000.00, and for the securing William Ferguson the balance advanced and balance of his old debt against James Davidson, Helen Davidson in 1899, being then about seventy-six years of age, without any independent advice, executed to William Ferguson a mortgage of lot "A" for $822.90. William Ferguson gave James Davidson a power of attorney to deal with these assets, who in the name of William Ferguson sold and converted them into money to an amount greater than the mortgage. In December, 1899, James Davidson arranged that his mother should sell to Philip Arsenault the said lot "A" for $600, $200 of it to go on Philip Arsenault's old account against James Davidson, and $400 by notes made by Philip Arsenault in favour of William Ferguson. and which the latter took on his account against James Davidson. Both the mortgage and deed were written by James Davidson, and Helen Davidson had no independent advice and had become of feeble intellect. In March, 1900, Helen Davidson made a will leaving all her property to her son James and his family. William Ferguson drew this will, is named in it an executor, and had full knowledge of its contents. In December, 1902, James Davidson being indebted to William Ferguson to the amount of $1,250.97, Helen Davidson, at the request of William Ferguson and James Davidson, gave a mortgage of the home-stead to William Ferguson for $1,250.97 to secure that amount, which was shown by the evidence to be the total sum due from James Davidson to William Ferguson at that time. Helen Davidson lived practically all the time with James Davidson, and he had great influence over her, with fact was well known to both William Ferguson and Philip Arsenault:-Held, that the first mortgage to Ferguson, made in March, 1899, was discharged and must be set aside, as the amount which it had been given to secure had been paid in full. Held, that the conveyance to Arsenault, made in December, 1899, must be set aside, as obtained through undue influence and pressure on the part of James Davidson, and solely for his benefit; and on the ground of the mental weakness of the grantor, and that she had no independent advice; that Arsenault, as he knew the relation which James Davidson occupied with regard to the grantor, and all the circumstances in connection with the transaction, stood in no better position than James Davidson would stand, and was bound by, and responsible for, any acts committed by Davidson, or omitted to be done by him. Held, that the second mortgage to Ferguson, made in December, 1902, must be set aside, as obtained through undue influence and pressure on the part of James Davidson and William Ferguson, and solely for their own benefit; that Ferguson had the same knowledge of all the facts as Arsenault, and was bound in the same way by the acts and omission of James Davidson; that the grantor had no independent advice, and was so deranged mentally as to be incapable of transacting business.
