The Modern Method of Treating an Old Complaint

Nujol works on an entirely new principle. Without forcing or irritating, it softens the food waste. This enables the many tiny muscles in the walls of the intestines, contracting and expanding in their normal way, to squeeze the food waste along and out of the system. It is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take. Try it.

THE Phantom Lover.

CHAPTER XXVII.

If she had hoped for anything better, it must have been a shock to her to see the bitter disappointment in Micky's face. He stammered out that he had not expected to see her, that he was in a deuce of a hurry; he hoped she would forgive him, but—

"Micky, by all that's wonderful!" said another voice, and there was Marie's father, the good-natured old man who had pretended to agree with his wife when she raved against Micky for the cavalier way in which he had treated his daughter, but who in his heart had indulged in a quiet chuckle, thinking that Micky had been rather clever to escape from the toils at the eleventh hour.

He shook hands with Micky heartily enough; he, at any rate, had no grudge against him. He asked Micky a hundred questions.

"Are you going over, my boy? Come with us. I've got a reserved carriage on the Paris express. Delighted to see you. Marie and I are just off for a little holiday by ourselves."

"He touched his daughter's arm. 'Ask him to join us, my dear.'"

Micky did his best to answer civilly; it was in the deuce of a hurry, he said again; he had got to meet a friend but had missed her in the crowd.

"I came off in the deuce of a hurry," he said. He was chafing bitterly at this enforced delay; each moment was so precious.

Marie touched her father's arm. "We are only keeping Mr. Mellows. Daddy . . ." Something in her voice made Micky's eyes smart. It was hard luck that for the second time he was forced to humiliate her. He stammered out incoherently that he hoped they would forgive him, but he was in such a deuce of a hurry. . . . He went off abruptly.

Everybody was off the train now, and many people were already on the boat. Micky remembered that he had no ticket; he entered into a hot argument with an official, who listened to him sceptically, and took as long as possible to make out the ticket; even when Micky had paid he still looked suspicious.

The gangway was still down; Micky went on board and stood as close to it as he could, scanning the face of each passer.

Ether was not amongst them. "Stand away there—stand away . . ."

Micky was pushed aside, and a couple of brawny seamen hauled the gangway on the harbour. The gap of green water was widening slowly between the pier and the ship's side. Micky felt as if he were being extolled. Supposing she was not on the boat?

He turned away and searched the crowded deck. The boat was full, and most of the people were women, but there was nobody who looked in the very least like Esther.

She would be wearing the fur coat, he was sure—the coat he had given her!

One or two people stared at him curiously. Once he came across Marie and her father on the leeward side of the boat. For decency's sake he had to stop. He made an insane remark on the weather and said he thought they were going to have a smooth crossing.

Marie's brown eyes lifted to his. "You haven't met your friend?" she said quietly.

Micky had a horrible conviction that she had not believed that he had in fact come to meet. He coloured in confusion as he answered—

Stop Any Corn

any minute, in this simple way

You can end any corn when you will. You can stop it any minute by a touch.

Apply Blue-jay—the liquid or the plaster. The pain will cease. In a few days the whole corn will loosen and come out.

This happens to at least 20 million corns a year. It will happen to yours when you say.

The way is modern, gentle, scientific. It is not like the old harsh treatments.

It ends corns—removes them—while you are only keeping them.

It is made by a surgical dressing house which every physician knows.

"No—no," I'm sorry to say I haven't."

She moved away leaving him with her father. The old man slipped a hand through Micky's arm.

"Don't notice her, my boy; women are queer cattle—and I expect she's a little sore with you still."

Micky wished it was possible to jump overboard. He found the old man's friendliness more insufferable than the look of reproach in Marie's eyes. As soon as he could he got away; he went down the companion-way and wandered round despondently.

If Esther were on the boat she must have seen him and was deliberately keeping out of his way; he glanced in at the open door of the ladies' cabin as he passed.

Several pessimistic souls who had already made up their minds to be ill, although the sea was like a millpond, had arranged themselves on the couches, with pillows under their heads; as Micky passed the cabin some one slammed the door smartly in his face.

He went upon deck again and stood looking out to sea, with the wind stinging his face.

It was getting dark rapidly; the lights of Dover twinkled through the greyness. Micky stood and watched till they could no longer be seen. He was chilled to the bone in spite of his warm coat; he turned the collar up round his throat and thrust his hands deeply into his pockets.

His fingers came in contact with the telegrams he had written in the train and forgotten to send. He swore under his breath.

He kept out of the 'Delands' way when they reached Calais; he was first off the boat; he stood in the darkness trembling with excitement.

There were all sorts of people pouring past him—men, women, and children. They all seemed happy and eager—a couple of Frenchmen standing near him chattered incessantly; Micky moistened his dry lips; there was a little nerve throbbing in his temple.

Supposing he never saw her again! His hands clenched deep in his pockets . . . supposing he never met the half-shy glance of her grey eyes—supposing he never heard her voice any more—or her laugh . . .

The sweat broke out on his forehead. For a moment he closed his eyes with a sick feeling of hopelessness, and when he opened them again he saw Esther standing there not half a dozen paces from him.

The glare from a huge arc lamp shone full on her slim figure and golden hair.

She was looking round her as if not knowing where to go.

A wave of such utter relief swept through Micky's very soul that for a moment it almost turned him faint.

She was quite alone, but as Micky watched her he saw a French porter in a blue blouse go up to her and start chattering away, pointing to the small suitcase she carried and gesticulating violently. Esther shook her head—Micky remembered that she knew no French—but the man persisted, and she shook her head again in a frightened sort of way.

Micky covered the distance between them in a couple of strides.

"Esther, my dear," he said, in a queer, choked sort of voice.

She turned with a stifled scream, and a most unwilling relief swept her face.

"Oh, Micky!" she said breathlessly. She put out her hand as if to grip his arm, then drew it away, moving back.

"How did you come here . . . oh, how dare you follow me . . .?" she said passionately.

Micky took her arm very gently. "We found your note," he said. "I had to come . . . June said . . ."

Then suddenly his calmness broke. "Oh, thank God I found you—thank God!" he said hoarsely.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Esther seemed arrested by the emotion in Micky's voice.

She stood looking up at him with wide eyes and parted lips; then suddenly she broke out again—

"I don't know what you mean. I'll never forgive June if she sent you after me. I'm going to Paris. I'm not a child to be followed and looked after like this. . . . Let me go."

Micky released her arm at once. When he spoke his voice was quiet and rather stern.

"Please don't make a scene. I have followed you for your own sake. I know how to begin. She sat there so silently; she seemed to have forgotten his presence altogether.

TWO SISTERS GET HELP

Praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it did for them

Hagerstown, Md.—"I was weak, overworked, and my periods stopped. My body was swollen and I often had pains I had to lie down. I was treated by a physician, but he did not seem to help me at all. My sister had taken your medicine with great results so I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now I am able to work and feel like working. I have been recommending your medicine to my friends and you are welcome to use my testimony. I can never praise your medicine enough for what it has done for me."—RUTH B. CARBAGU, R. R. 1, Hagerstown, Md.

don't; I haven't had anything since breakfast."

He found a table and ordered a meal, but he knew he should not be able to eat a thing.

"I don't want anything to eat," Esther said, she sat sideways in her chair away from the table; there was a pitiable look of strain in her face; she still gripped her suitcase tightly. When Micky asked her to be allowed to put it down for her she turned on him almost fiercely.

"Leave me alone—oh, leave me alone!"

The French garcon eyed them both interestedly. Any one far less keen of perception than he was could have seen there was tragedy of some kind in this pretty, frail-looking girl and the tall man in the big coat.

"You said you were hungry, but you're not eating anything," Esther broke out irritably. "How much longer are you going to make me sit here? I want to catch a train to Paris tonight."

"There are no trains, except slow ones," Micky told her; "the express has gone half an hour ago. I can find you rooms in a hotel close by for the night. . . ."

His eyes met hers across the table, and he broke out, "Esther, for God's sake let me explain things to you. You've all your life before you; to-morrow, if you wish it, I'll go away and never see you again. But I can't let you go now without telling you the truth. I ought to have told you before—it was for your own sake I tried to keep it back . . ."

Her grey eyes searched his face disbelievingly.

"If you've anything to say against Mr. Ashton," she said, "I refuse to listen. I shouldn't believe anything you say for one thing. Why, you don't even know his name—unless June has told you," she added breathlessly.

"June has told me nothing, but I know, all the same I know the first night I ever met you—when I left you and went back to my rooms, he was there waiting for me. . . ."

She had turned, leaning across the table, and her eyes were like fire.

"He was there—who was there?" she asked shrilly.

"Ashton—Raymond Ashton," Micky answered.

There was a tragic silence; then Esther rose to her feet; she stood looking dazedly round her in a helpless sort of way.

Micky called for the bill—without waiting for his change he followed Esther out into the darkness. She offered no resistance when he drew her hand through his arm. He did not know what on earth to do with her; if he took her to an hotel it would mean leaving her, and she would probably go away in the night. They went back to the station, and Micky found a waiting-room with a roaring fire; he dragged one of the uncomfortable wooden benches close to it and made Esther sit down; he closed the door and came back to her.

There was so much he wanted to say, and for the life of his head he did not know how to begin. She sat there so silently; she seemed to have forgotten his presence altogether.

BRACING UP.

I bought a shotgun at the store and I let the family next door. And I was moved to honest tears when thus I ended their careers, for they had never done me wrong, and I had known them well a nd burned in me like a fire when I shot down the aged sire, and plugged a nephew and a niece and gave two aunts eternal peace, and when I burnt the residence it shocked my fine esthetic sense. But I had tried so many ways to break into the picture plays! I chased the managers around and begged them, while they pawed the ground, to give me just a single chance; I knew quite well I would advance. But they looked down with cold disdain and said I gave them all a pain; a creek, they said, was near my home, and there I well might soak my dome. It never had a chance to trot with all the gilded movie lot unless I played some startling game designed to give me widespread fame. But now the offers come my way—I'll draw a hundred plunks a day. As Bill the Butcher, on the screen, I'll teach the young that vice is mean, that children are but dizzy fools who do not go to Sunday schools; a moral tag attached to crime hands out almsom most sublime. And when I think how I'll improve the children, where the movies move, I'm almost glad I took my gun, and slew the Johnstons, one by one.

"If I Were an Insurance Man."

Address Delivered by Rev. Dr. Jones, to the Life Underwriters' Association.

Mr. President and Gentlemen.— I thank you for your kind greeting. I must confess, however, that I was more at home with your Menu than I shall be for the next few minutes in talking to you about insurance, for that is a little bit out of my line. The most I can do is to remind you, perhaps, of some things you already know.

Everybody is interested in Life Insurance. There is the Life Insurance man himself who is always so extraordinarily interested in the sale of his goods. And one can hardly think his earnestness is motivated by any hope of large commissions; rather must it be that he is definitely converted to the supreme importance of his subject. Then, we who have already taken out policies, are concerned as we grow older, and our powers of earning are greater, to increase our investments. Parents are reflecting on the value of insurance for their children in view of their careers; Clergymen, naturally, are interested in seeing their poorer parishioners become insured, because they are more conversant than anybody else with what happens to the widow and orphans when left penniless upon a cold world. And it is a cold world as such unfortunates know. Charity has a warm name but possesses frequently a cold hand. In fact everybody is or ought to be interested in Life Insurance. Its benefits are so evident, its shelter is so providential, its comforts are so easily available, that it makes a great appeal to us all, preaching the Providence of God for his distressed children.

Now let me draw your attention to two or three interesting considerations. This is a day of INDUSTRIAL UNREST. The workman is increasingly and insistently making himself heard. He demands that serious attention be given to his cry. What is wrong? What are the causes of his evident dissatisfaction? There are many, of course. But let us not be deceived in supposing that it is the profits of his employer or the paucity of his daily wage that constitute the chief burden of his dissatisfaction. The trouble goes deeper than is here indicated. It is the uncertainty of the future in respect to his wife and children. When the workman sells his labor he is bartering far more than his energy, experience and skill. He is placing in the labor market not merely the purchasable powers of his individual self, he is also placing there what he represents in his family life. His measure is not his physical and spiritual unit only, but his representative responsibility. The employer, however, does not always take this into consideration. He views the man detached from his home relations. He only are not sufficient to make men worthy citizens. Then, the man with traditions to live up to? Traditions are valuable as a civic asset. But we have known men who possessed the very best of them, and failed in citizenship. Well, Education? It may and it may not. It all depends. Now while I do not wish to discount the value of either idealism or tradition or education in the making of a citizen, for they are all good and sound elements. Yet I can conceive of nothing, other things being equal, that would contribute more solidly to good citizenship than to possess a "stake" in one's country. This may be property, family interests or something else. But to have a "stake" in one's land, to be held to it by something tangible and of merit, surely this has a great bearing on making one realize the responsibilities of one's citizenship.

With these considerations in mind let us try to see the bearing of Life Insurance upon what we have said. In the first place it has a contribution to make toward the settlement of Industrial strife. This is hinted at in your GROUP INSURANCE movement—a most excellent undertaking. If it be uncertainty as to the future welfare of the workman's family; that is, as to what may happen to them after his decease, or upon his being maimed permanently or otherwise, that makes him in part a dissatisfied and discontented man, surely this can be ameliorated to some extent by a protection policy of Life Insurance. And it would hardly be regarded as unreasonable if in consideration of my whole-hearted service to my employer, he in addition to my weekly wage, give me and my family the comfortable and comforting protection that Life Insurance would offer. A generosity of this humane character would I believe, appeal immensely to the workman.

Secondly, reflect on the bearing of Life Insurance on the prolongation of life. I do not undervalue the importance of modern psychology or mental science or sound views of sanitary living in the contribution that each is making towards better physical conditions as regards the health of the people. Nor can I say too much of the value of correct religious teaching in this respect. But it is indisputable that what tends to lessen the worry of life tends to prolong life; and two thirds of the worried faces one meets in a day's walk have the cause of their anxiety in their mental attitude towards the future. They live from "hand to mouth" and no provision is made for the proverbial "rainy day."

And no provision can be made for such a day, for daily the mouth can take care of all the hand provides—and still the workman have his dreaded "rainy day" taken care of by a Life Insurance policy and much of that worry will immediately disappear; and this type of man after all is usually not the man that gives much time to Health Cults to Psychotherapy, to Psychology or even Religion in this out of the way sense. But the practical tangible Life Insurance Policy he has time for and understanding for, and in its presence he would find comfort, ease, peace and security and with these blessings go the lengthening of one's days and the enrichment and invigoration of one's existence.

In the third place, what about Life Insurance and the Education of our children? In a word it is this: If every young man from fifteen to twenty years were to buy insurance to the extent of a thousand dollars or more if possible on the Endowment or semi-endowment plan with the deliberate purpose of providing a fund for the education of his children, should he marry, by the time the policy would have matured the children would be of age to benefit educationally from this wise provision. If your father and my father had adopted this method of providing funds for our education, it is very probable that our careers today would be somewhat different from what they are and it is very true as I am sure we all think, that whatever our position in life may be there are always greater opportunities for the educated man than for the man of limited educational achievements. If I were an insurance man I should develop this thought.

Finally regarding Life Insurance and Citizenship. Where is the connecting link here? I do not think it is difficult to find it, for is not a good life insurance policy a "stake" in one's country—the very kind of "stake" that I referred to a few moments ago as making for good citizenship. A man may not be fortunate enough to own house or land but if his life be insured he has one important reason at least to live his life as a reputable citizen. The very endeavor he has to constantly make to meet his premiums will help in the development of the man as a citizen. For here is a sense of responsibility, here is industry, here is ambition, here is morality. And every man can place this valuable asset in the bank of his good name.

Now, gentlemen, in view of the place of importance I have given to Life Insurance, if I were an insurance man, I would rank my job among the greatest. It would seem to me a first class profession. A few moments ago, one of the Managers present said that "he hoped the day would come when it would be classed with the professions of the lawyer and doctor." Why not? Could it not be seen as being even more ambitious still? Upon the decease of his client the lawyer divides the estate, the insurance man at the same moment creates an estate. Is not the Creator greater than the Divider? The doctor's duty is to heal an ache while the insurance man aims to heal a family of aches—his work goes farther and is more radically remedial. Place your job high—sink it deep down into human needs and lift it—till it reaches the highest summit of human hopes.

Again, if I were an Insurance Man I should emphasize the moral value of my profession. To pay ones premiums on insurance one must work, and to work we owe much of the strength of our moral fibre as a people. The indolent man is the man of crime. It is always true that "Satan still finds mischief for idle hands to do." But he who works and must necessarily work can not easily become a bad man. For human toll is one of nature's great moral forces. And in emphasizing the ethical basis of any insurance advocacy I would not fall to resort to Scripture for here are contained many statements easily applicable to the sale of Life Insurance. For example: "Be not an anxious thought for to-morrow;" "If a man will not provide for his own home he is worse than an infidel;" "Make to yourselves friends of the Mammon of unrighteousness," etc., i.e., be worldly wise. And there are many such holy words that might be learned and applied with telling power by the reverent minded Agent of insurance in bringing to the community his beneficial service. Without doubt Life Insurance has its moral foundations and may be buttressed by ethical precepts and he is a wise man who will walk this way.

Further, if I were an Insurance Man I would press home to the people the domestic phases of the question. What it must mean to the sorrowing widow and orphaned children; to have to face life unsupported by a single material stay is only known to those broken hearts who have had this sad experience. On the other hand to see through the tears of grief the parchment that tells of loving foresight, of reasoned affection, of comfortable provision for daily necessities—surely this is one way in which the Father would "wipe our tears away." But the Life Insurance policy does even more than this. It prevents the breaking up of a home. It keeps it still a home. And in thus stabilizing the home, it surely protects the State. The loss of a home to the State is the weakening of the State to that extent. A nation is not an aggregation of individuals, a mob; but a collection of homes, and in their permanency and safety lies the nation's security. Thus Life Insurance is a National asset of the utmost importance.

One thing more, I should like to remind you of the importance of character in the sale of insurance. The successful insurance man is a man of self-respecting manhood, a man of integrity and honor, of rectitude and reliability. He must be all this. And given such a body of men in any community it would not be very long when instead of the insurance man soliciting business from the people, the people would spontaneously solicit their peculiar kind of service to them and their families. But first of all, and as a foundation to all this there must be dignified character. That is as Kipling says "Keep yourself just so."

"The 'eathen in 'is blindness bows 'em all about, 'E don't obey no orders unless they 'is 'is own; 'E keeps 'is side arms awful; 'e leaves 'em all about. An' then comes up the regiment an' pokes the 'eathen out. All along o' dirtiness, all along o' mess,

All along o' doing things rather more-or-less. All along of abby-nayo, but and hazaar—ho Mind you keep your rifle an' your kit jus' so!"

I have finished. I have not said a thing to you that you do not already know. But I may have brought some things to your remembrance. I hope so, and if so I shall be very glad.

BERLIN, April 21. The German Government has formally asked the President of the United States to mediate in the reparations question. A note embodying the request was forwarded Wednesday by Loving Dressel, United States Commissioner in Berlin, to the State Department in Washington. #### HARDING WILL NOT MEDIATE.

WASHINGTON, April 21. The United States Government refused today an urgent request of the German Government that President Harding mediate the question of reparations between Germany and the Allies and fix the sum Germany is to pay. The United States agreed, however, that if the German government would formulate promptly such proposals regarding reparations "as would present a proper basis for discussion, it would consider bringing the matter to attention of the Allied governments in a manner acceptable to them, in order that negotiations may be speedily resumed."

BUBONIC PLAGUE AT ALEXANDRIA.

ALEXANDRIA, April 21. Bubonic plague has broken out here, an average of thirty-five cases being reported daily. Quarantine has been imposed and vessels are leaving harbor to avoid detention.

MINERS STAND FOR THEIR DEMANDS.

LONDON, April 21. Fears were expressed to-night that there may be a prolonged stoppage of work at the mines. At the conclusion of the meeting of the Miners' Executive to-day, Frank Hodges, Secretary of the Miners' Union, said that district reports all clearly indicated that the men were standing firmly by the principles of a "National Wages Board and National Wages Pool." It is considered not unlikely that to-morrow's conference of the Miners' Delegates will adjourn without reaching any decision. Meantime the Government appears to be standing aside until the parties to the dispute are able to agree on some basis for conference.

When Choosing the Material for a washable Frock for the growing child—

MOTHER naturally thinks of the possibilities of the fabric shrinking in the wash. It is therefore a relief to her to know that the fabric will not shrink or lose its charm if Lux is used for its cleansing.

Durability, charm of colour, quality of texture, the freshness of newness—these are preserved to all good fabrics washed with Lux. A packet of Lux—a bowl of warm water—and dainty hands in a delightfully easy manner.

The beautiful pure Lux flakes are whisked into a creamy, bubbly lather in an instant. Gently squeeze this cleansing foam through and through the soiled texture—then rinse in clean water and hang to dry. Lux cannot harm silk, crepe, or cotton, it coaxes rather than forces the dirt from the clothes.

Packets (two sizes) may be obtained everywhere.

"YES." "And is that correct what is said about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food?"

"Yes, it is absolutely true."

"But why do you recommend it?"

"For two very good reasons. First, because it fully restored my health and strength when I was weak, wornout and very greatly discouraged. I was for years in spite of all the doctors could do for me. I was nervous, irritable, restless and sleepless. Thought sometimes I would go out of my mind from worry and depressed spirits. I need not tell you how well I am now. You can see for yourself. There is the whole story, and all the credit is due to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

Friday, April 22, 1921.

St. George's Day.

"Thou, amongst those saints whom thou dost see, Shall be a saint, and thine own nation's friend"

The Day of St. George, the Patron Saint of England, is going to be celebrated in Newfoundland in future, in common with the festival days of St. Andrew of Scotland, and St. Patrick of Ireland.

The Grand Lodge Session of the Order of United Fishermen closed at midnight, after a most strenuous day, during which all the business introduced was disposed of to the entire satisfaction of delegates and representatives.

"History has told us very little about St. George, the patron saint of England. That he suffered for the Faith near Lydda, in Palestine, probably before the time of Constantine, is the sum of what we find recorded; and even this much is doubted by many."

draw his sword and slew the dragon. Some of the legends make him marry the princess; but all agree that he was martyred under the Emperor Diocletian.

"The worship of St. George began in the East, where he was known as the Great Martyr. By the Western Church he was comparatively ignored until the time of Godfrey de Bouillon, who found his intercession to be of great value in military matters."

"There was a famous story once current in Rome that on St. George's Day a meditation used to be read out in the chapel of the English College there, divided into three points as follows: Point I. Let us consider that we know very little about St. George. Point II. Let us consider that the little we know is very doubtful. Point III. Let us consider it is quite certain that we shall never know any more about St. George."

Will Not Publish. To-morrow, Saturday, April 23, being the Feast of the Patron Saint of England, and a General Holiday, the Telegram will not be published.

Grand Lodge, S.U.F., Closing Session. The Grand Lodge Session of the Order of United Fishermen closed at midnight, after a most strenuous day, during which all the business introduced was disposed of to the entire satisfaction of delegates and representatives.

At 10:30 o'clock the R.W.G.M. vacated the chair and called upon W. Bro. I. J. Rendell, P.D.M.G. of District No. 2 to conduct the election of officers. Having appointed W. Bro. H. Rowless as Director of Ceremonies, the election was proceeded with, resulting in the choice of Grand Lodge Officers for the ensuing year as follows:

R.W.G.M.—Bro. J. Curnew. R.W.D.G.M.—Bro. C. T. James. R.W.G. Chaplain—Bro. (Rev.) A. Shorter. R.W.G.C.O.—Bro. J. Rendell. R.W.S.O.—Bro. W. Templeman. R.W.M.—Bro. J. S. Reid. R.W.F.—Bro. W. Mulford. R.W.G.S.—Bro. A. E. Whitcomb. R.W.L.O.—Bro. J. J. Coaker.

A hearty vote of thanks was accorded R.W. Bro. Rendell for his conduct of the election, to which suitable replies were made. R.W. Bro. J. C. Phillips, P.G. Secy. took occasion at this stage to thank Grand Lodge for the handsome appreciation of his Secretarial services during nine years of office, which took the form of a silver tea set, presented after the closing of the Bonavista session of Grand Lodge last year.

The R.W.G.M. presided over the installation of the Grand Officers elected, subsequent to which many congratulatory speeches were made by delegates from Ordinary Lodges, appropriate replies being made by the newly invested staff. Harbor Grace was honored by being selected as the place where Grand Lodge will meet next year, 1922.

1923 being the year of Golden Jubilee of the establishment of the Order of United Fishermen, a committee comprising W. Bro. C. T. James, W. T. Lever, J. C. Phillips, G. H. Hester (Convener), E. Laing, W. Templeman, S. Donnyer to be known as the Golden Jubilee Celebration Committee was nominated by the R.W.G.M., with instructions to prepare a report for submission at next session of Grand Lodge. This terminating the proceedings, the usual ceremonies were observed and Grand Lodge closed in due and ample form.

GOD SAVE THE KING. Legislative Council. APRIL 21st. The session opened at 4 o'clock. The Bill entitled "An Act to amend the Women's Trust Fund Act, 1920" was read a third time and passed without amendment.

The report of the Select Committee on the Municipal Bill was deferred. The Council adjourned at 4:30 until 4 o'clock Monday next. Men's Silk Hats, all sizes; far below regular value, $2.50 and $4.75. G. KNOWLING, Ltd. apr21,21

The Actual Proof.

In a leading article of the Telegram of date February 26th, under the caption of "Where the Money Goes," we made the assertion that an employee of a well-known water side premises and already receiving a salary from his employers, is Chief Inspector of Cutlers, and was getting $2,400 a year for his work in that connection.

The following day we published a disclaimer, saying that the gentleman referred to had not received any compensation whatever nor had he sought any. Now for the sequel. Replying to a question asked by Sir Michael Cashin on Wednesday last, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries made a statement that Mr. Michael Power was employed as Supervisor of Cutlers, and was being paid for his services at the rate of $100 a month.

It will thus be seen that our main contention was correct, but at the time the actual proofs were not available, nor would they be now, but for the probing of the Opposition party.

FRIDAY, April 22. For headaches, neuralgia, some forms of rheumatism, and nerve pains generally, Wampole's Cetylols are distinctly valuable. In composition, Cetylols, are identical with Aspirin, and the manufacturers claim that it possesses to the full, the medicinal properties of this well known drug. In addition to this, the tablets are so shaped as to be easily divided into two, to meet cases where it is advisable to give a small dose of the drug to children, and, so to have this advantage over ordinary tablets. Cetylols are put up in convenient "vest pocket" packages at 25 cents each.

That Salt Scandal.

WHO OWES THE MONEY? Since the Report of the Auditor General was tabled in the House of Assembly early in the session, the Opposition party have asked several questions in reference to the salt deal. In probing further into the matter and in reply to a question by Sir Michael Cashin an answer was tabled yesterday which took the form of a communication from the Auditor General which read as follows:—

Auditor General's Office. St. John's, Newfoundland. In reply to Sir Michael Cashin's question I beg leave to state: When, last summer, I applied at the Treasury for information as to the payment of $61,000 from the Surplus Trust for a cargo of salt I was informed that the said cargo was sent down to Port Union and taken delivery of by the F.P.U. Company and the money would be remitted to refund to the Surplus Trust for the amount expended. This information was furnished me orally as there was, so far as I am aware, no Minute of Council authorizing the transaction. I was fully convinced from the information thus received that an outright sale had been made of this salt and in January last, when I wrote my report, I fully believed this to be the case and, acting on that belief, I reported what I considered to be the fact to the Legislature. Up to the time of the writing of my report no repayment had been made to the Treasury on account of this salt. A few days ago the sum of $4,400.00 was paid into the Treasury on account of this salt.

I need hardly say that, had I not fully believed that there was an outright sale, I would not have used the expression "be repaid by the firm to which it was sold." I have never, in any of my reports, made a statement that I did not honestly believe to be correct. I respectfully request that this special report be attached to my report under Section 33 (b) of the Audit Act, or if it is the desire of the House that my reports be printed, then the last mentioned report can be corrected in accordance with the facts.

(Sgd.) F. C. BERTEAU, C. & A. G. This reply, says this morning's Daily News while it explains the Auditor General's position, does not by any means clear up the matter. The Auditor General says the information on which he based his original report was given him orally. Who told him? He says that, so far as he was aware, "there was no Minute of Council authorizing the transaction." Then, under what authority did the Finance Department pay the money? And under what authority was the purchase of salt made? It is not usual to pay out large sums of money such as was involved in this transaction from the Surplus Trust Fund without Minute of Council. How then was payment secured? And how is it that the $4,400 received for salt, which must have been disposed of six or eight months ago, was only paid into the Treasury "a few days ago," evidently after the questions had been asked in the House? And what guarantee is there that all returns have been made? The Auditor General says he has never in his reports made a statement that he did not honestly believe to be correct. The public will believe him; but there is a "nigger" somewhere in this salt deal that has to be discovered, and the Opposition will do well to prosecute their enquiries until he is found. The matter is properly one for enquiry by a Select Committee of the House.

Ellis, Capt. Stuart, Mrs. L. Ash, Miss Nellie Udell, Mrs. C. C. Bruce, Miss D. Bruce, Mrs. M. S. Sullivan, J. G. Keater, J. T. Lewis, Ma. Jim Foy, J. P. Keenan, A. Montgomerie, T. F. Harding, F. C. HEAD CONSTABLE JOHN CRANE. There passed away from earth at 8.30 o'clock last night, the spirit of John Crane, Head Constable in the Terra Nova Constabulary force, after an illness lasting four months. Just before Christmas, 1920, Head Constable Crane came to St. John's from Channel, his headquarters, in charge of a person for admission to a Government institution, but before leaving for home, was seized with an attack of a serious nature, which necessitated his going to hospital, where an operation was performed, which was thought to have been successful, but unfortunately was not so. Skilled attendance and treatment, aided by a robust constitution and a healthy life, availed nothing against the insidious ravages of the disease from which the patient suffered, and the end came not unexpectedly. Head Constable Crane was one of the senior members of the Police force, having done duty at St. John's, Whitbourne, Bay of Islands, Greensand and Channel, coming to the latter station in 1905 as a senior constable, his promotion to Acting Sergeant, Full Sergeant and subsequently Head Constable following in rapid succession. Amiable and of a quiet disposition, it may be said that the late Head Constable Crane made hundreds of friends, but not one enemy. In the discharge of his duty he was the acme of police perfection, courteous and affable, but always the upholder of law and order. The Police force loses in him an officer which cannot be replaced. He was a member of Avalon Lodge A.F. & A.M. E.C., and the obsequies will be carried out under the direction and supervision of the Brethren of the Ancient Craft. Left to mourn are a widow, one son, Wallis, of the Bank of Nova Scotia staff, a daughter, Irene, in the office of Messrs. Soper and Moore, to all of whom the Telegram extends sincere sympathy in this hour of their sudden bereavement.

Personal. Mr. Thos. Hallett who has been in England on business this winter will arrive by the Schem to-morrow. Police Court.

Stole a Motor Car.—A young man was charged with being drunk and also with the larceny of a motor car, the property of Dr. T. Mitchell. It appears that the defendant got into the car and managed to start it up, although the switch key had been removed. He ran the machine about fifty yards down the street and then stopped it, leaving the headlights on. When accosted by a constable he said he was driving for Dr. Mitchell. He was fined $25 or 30 days.

Lost $400.—A native of Finland sailing out of this port, was charged with being drunk. Whilst under the influence of liquor he lost over $400. He was discharged.

Held on Remand.—A man charged with being drunk and with the larceny of money from the Finlander mentioned in a previous case, was remanded until further enquiries could be made.

Discharging Firearms.—A young boy was charged with discharging firearms. He was fined $2 and ordered to give bonds for his future good behaviour, in the amount of $100.

Woman Suffrage.

The following are extracts from a letter to the press written by Mrs. Gosling last June when The Woman's Franchise Bill was postponed for six months:

"No Government can prevent women from ultimately obtaining the franchise. It is inevitable here as in other countries, and it would have been a more gracious attitude on the part of our legislators to have met us half-way with a hearty and generous response to our first appeal for enfranchisement, than to have put forth a transparent device for shelving it. There are always politicians who are willing to advocate a principle so long as they are assured there is no fear of its going any further, and the members who opposed the Bill on Thursday admitted the justice of the claims, declared themselves in sympathy with the principle, and realized that Woman Suffrage is sure to come. They appreciated to the full, and admitted, the war service of our women, yet could bring themselves to turn a deaf ear to the one favor the women of this colony, as a body, have ever asked of their men. They professed themselves willing to support it in six months' time. Why the delay? The Bill was approved and loyally and brilliantly supported. Not one dissentient voice was heard as to the great principle involved. It is difficult to understand the "hoax," unless, those responsible for the postponement are trusting the time or some unforeseen agency will militate against the suffragists, and that before another twelve months the movement will have lapsed into oblivion."

"Women generally would welcome an electoral reform which would introduce a franchise qualification, where no applicant would be barred on the ground of sex alone. That an illiterate youth of tender years, who has no views worth considering, on any subject, and whose mental processes are not sufficiently acute to permit him to form any, should be in a position to legislate for women of education and culture, is to say the least, a highly anomalous condition of things."

"Men and women are, or should be, equal units in a community. Alike they must obey the will of the majority and pay the penalty for disobedience. Alike they profit by good government, and suffer by bad. By what possible logic, then, should men alone be admitted to the partnership of government?"

"The question of women voting is primarily a question of right and wrong, and should not be decided on the point of expediency. It is contrary to every principle of justice to force upon one half the human race laws which they have had no share in framing; to levy taxes on them and deny them a voice in the disposal of monies thus raised. The vote is necessary to women for their own economic and social protection, and for the revising of the many laws which are glaringly unjust to them. It is said, in countries where women are enfranchised, that they make very conscientious voters, not easily swayed by expediency nor governed by partisan motives. One would expect this influence on the political life of this country to be distinctly beneficial."

C. L. B. C. "At Home."

The first annual "At Home" of the N. C. O.'s of the C. L. B. Cadets takes place to-night in the C. C. Hall, and from all appearances is going to be a most enjoyable affair. Dancing does not begin until 10 o'clock, so that all those who will be detained by the opening of the shops to-night will be able to get down to the dance in time. The music will be provided by the full Battalion Band of the Brigade and will undoubtedly be of a high order. Supper will be served in their well known style by the Ladies' Auxiliary and refreshments will be on sale during the evening. It is expected that the "At Home" will be a great success.

The Mystery Microbe of Death.

A New Disease That is Puzzling Doctors.

Medical men, no less than ordinary people, are mystified by the appearance of a new "pestilence that walketh in darkness." No one knows where it comes from, and it selects its victims from among those of either sex and any age with absolute impartiality. It may not be as deadly as some other infections, but it is an awesome thing which comes like a whirl of poison gas, swiftly and cunningly robbing its victim first of his five senses, and later, it may be, of his life.

To this strange disease people have unfortunately given the name of "sleeping sickness," just as they applied to every form of nervous ailment engendered by the war the term "shell-shock." It is certainly not that real and infinitely more deadly scourge, the sleeping sickness of Uganda, in the production of which that terror of East Africa, the tsetse fly, is the active agent.

It is an abuse of language to apply the term "sleeping" to one of the prominent symptoms of both of these diseases. Sleeping is an eminently natural, healthy, and recuperative process. Unnatural prolongation of unconsciousness, such as occurs in these diseases, is of the nature of coma, a condition of complete insensibility due to disease or other external causes.

Victims See Double.

In the present epidemic this insensibility is frequently preceded by pains in the head, and fever; the victim sees double (as people do when alcohol has paralyzed their eye muscles) and gradually becomes more and more lethargic. In the early stages the patient may answer questions quite rationally. But later a good deal of shaking is necessary to rouse his attention.

It is obvious that this disease chiefly affects the brain.

That it is really a new disease, and not an old one in new surroundings, or one that has not been hitherto identified and defined, there can be no doubt.

According to some eminent observers the disease originated in Austria two or three years ago, whence it has spread to other countries. While it cannot be said to be epidemic, as influenza was some years ago, it is epidemic in the sense that the disease has spread over large areas. It is, however, not nearly so infectious as influenza.

Caused by Want and Misery.
So far as is known at present, the infection, probably a germ, gains entrance to the brain through the nose or throat. It has nothing whatever to do with the germ of influenza—on the authenticity of which, by the way, the report on the great influenza epidemic of 1918-19, just published by the Ministry of Health, throws very great doubt.

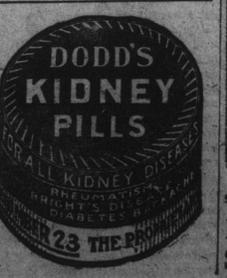

But it is more than probable that the cause of this new disease, like that of the devastating epidemic of influenza in 1918-19, is attributable to poverty.

At the present moment, as a result of the war, there exists in many nations and over wide areas of the world precisely the type of want and misery which makes the most likely forcing-house of virulent germs adapted for wide dispersal. In similar circumstances, typhus, ship-fever, camp-fever, jail-fever, and famine fever were rampant in bygone days. The new germ is the creature of circumstances. History is repeating itself.

"THE PRINCE OF PEACE."

Canonical Sermon preached by Canon A. G. Bayly (St. Augustine) in Cathedral of St. John the Baptist on Sunday, April 17th.

Isaiah ix-6: "The Prince of Peace." This is one of the great titles given by the Prophet to the Virgin-born King of Righteousness who is to establish His rule over all the earth, and whose dominion is to last forever. The Hebrew word for Prince in this text, is translated "Captain" in Joshua's vision before the walls of Jericho. The "Prince of Peace" is the "Captain of the Hosts of the Lord." The same Greek word is applied to our Blessed Lord in the Epistle to the Hebrews, where it is rendered "author" "the author" of our Faith, and the Captain of our Salvation.

There were, during the war and there are now, men who have been tempted by the break down of the morals of warring Christian nations, to give up all faith in Christianity, men who have not been slow to declare that the preaching of the Gospel was all no good—a failure.

The study of history is the best tonic for such drooping spirits. The Bishops at Lambeth remind us that "the ultimate force in the last analysis is not physical, but moral. We all know the common belief that it is the big battalions that have their way. No assertion can be more baseless. The progress of the world has usually been in spite of big battalions, and nothing is ever settled until it is settled right. We look forward to the day when war between nations will be unthinkable, precisely as duels have become unthinkable in civilized society, because public opinion will not tolerate these absurd and horrible ways of settling disputes. Let us not forget the lesson of the last 6 years. The nation that had the best trained army in Europe has been defeated. The nation that was richest in munitions of war has lost, because against her war the moral forces of civilization."

It is clear from the teaching of revealed religion, that peace on earth is God's will for all mankind. It may indeed be that the rulers of the nations, will arrive at this, only after painful experience. But surely as we review the past, the conviction gains upon us that God is working His purposes out, that the realm of the Prince of Peace is indeed here upon earth. And His peace is to be universal not only between nations, but between the various interests in nations which now strive for the mastery one against another. This peace in some form or other, at some time or other is to be the realized effective work of the Prince of Peace—the mountain of the Lord's House shall be established and all nations shall flow into it, and many people shall say, Come ye and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the House of the God of Jacob, and He will teach us of His ways, and we shall walk in His paths, and they shall beat their swords into plough hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

There is no cause for despair. There is no reason for impatience. God gives principles of action, but men are not always ready to accept them as rules of common life. The Gospel of Christ laid down principles which made slavery as an institution impossible. But Great Britain, only about three centuries ago, had a fleet of 200 ships in the slave trade. An English Queen had shares in some of these vessels. One missionary society at least farmed its sugar plantations in the West Indies by slave labor. It was not till 18 centuries had passed that Christians generally recognized the full enormity of the slave trade.

No hope of a lasting peace for the world can be entertained while principles are ignored or as long as the coloured races are denied rights which are common to all others. This may be will prove one of the most difficult problems of the century, because the coloured people have their own problems, e.g. the problem of caste. One great Christian denomination has three churches in one Indian town, because men of different social castes will not worship together.

Wars may be necessary—either for defence, or to preserve national unity or national ideals. The American Civil War was necessary to preserve the union of the States and to free the coloured people. Mistaken treatment of the free coloured people of the United States, or the coloured people of other nations will not make for peace, and may necessitate other costly lessons in blood and treasure in the days to come. We are learning by experience that God's ways are best. The patience of God with His children knows no limit. "One day with Him is as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day." But eventually God and His will shall be all in all to His people and peace shall be on earth. Down the dark future, through long generations, the sounds of war grow fainter and then cease; and like a bell with solemn sweet vibrations I hear the voice of Jesus Christ say "Peace!"

Signs are not wanting that leaders of men are anxious to guide others and to be led themselves by the teaching of Jesus Christ. Previous to the existing League of Nations the most noteworthy was the Holy Alliance of 1815. The Rulers of Russia, Prussia, and Austria declared they "were determined to govern henceforward in accordance with the principles of the Gospel of Christ, and to regard each other as brothers, and their subjects as their children." The treaty was signed by all the Sovereigns of Europe except the Pope, the Sultan of Turkey, and the King of Great Britain. It broke down because it became a sectional alliance, and because it had no defined constitution or machinery.

The present League of Nations is an advance on any previous attempt to secure for all mankind the blessings of international peace. During the actual sessions of the Conference which saw its birth, two minor wars were averted, one between the Poles and Lithuanians, over a boundary dispute, the other between the Finns and Swedes over the possession of the Island of Aland in the Baltic. And best of all a Court of International Justice has been established to settle disputes, and 46 of the nations of the world have signified their willingness to be guided by the decisions of that Court. These are hopeful signs of all that a Universal League of Nations may yet mean for the world at large. It is clear that security for the people of any nation cannot be procured by great armies or fleets, that in another war there will be no non-combatants, that women and children, the aged, the sick, and the dying will be exposed to dangers at home, almost as constant as will face soldiers at the front, and it follows that co-operation and not competition is the only safe as it is the only right principle for the nations as well as for the industries of mankind. National tyranny brings its own punishment whether it be the tyranny of Kings, or armies, or organized finance or the tyranny of organized labour. Tyranny breeds war.

"The Prince of Peace" is "the author and finisher of our Faith." Would to God it were possible for a reunited Christendom to face and help to solve the great and increasing problems of a war-sick world. It was a united Church that influenced the seven Saxon Kingdoms of Britain to become the one Kingdom of England. And doubtless it will be the spirit of a reunited Christian Church that in the end will permeate the kingdoms of the world, so that "the earth will be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." The faith once delivered to the Saints is independent of any interpretations and developments either of Rome, Geneva, or Canterbury—"semper ubique, et ab omnibus" is the accepted formula for Christian belief. It must be remembered of the 500 millions of Christians in the world, only about 60 of all denominations are in the Empire of Britain. We cannot expect, and we do not want the first word or the last word on the question of reunion. It is a sign of the times, a good sign, a hopeful sign, that the Lambeth appeal to all Christian people, both Catholic and Protestant, was followed in August last past by a gathering of the representatives of 80 different religious denominations at Geneva to discuss in a brotherly spirit, the differences of belief and practice, which keep Christian people apart. All the great divisions of Christianity were represented there except Rome, and it is to be hoped that generous men will make it possible to carry on this necessary work, by liberal gifts to cover the expenses entailed in preparatory printing and travelling expenses of delegates to the next Conference, which has the complete reunion of all Christendom in view.

Hitherto the whole expense of two such meetings has been borne by two American Churchmen, father and son. We must aim at the reunion of the whole of Christendom in one visible Body, for the sacred scriptures know nothing of an invisible church. A reunited Christendom could make war impossible. A reunited Christendom would soon accomplish the conversion of the remaining heathen nations of the world and dissolve the Far Eastern peril, which looms bigger every year.

But how is this union to be brought about? And are we to look for the peace of God in His Church on earth? Most certainly! We must aim at it, and work and pray for it. The Head of the Church is the Prince of Peace. "He is the God that maketh men to be of one mind in an house." The most diverse in class, in character, in temper, will meet as one in Him. "The wolf shall dwell with the lamb and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatted together, and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed, their young ones shall lie down together and the lion shall eat straw like the ox." Past experience teaches us that the Reunion of Christendom, by force is impossible. God Himself does not force us to serve Him. Reunion can only be brought about by the Spirit, by the teaching and by the Grace of Christ, the author and finisher of our Faith. He has set up an ensign, and men are gathering to His Presence.

Gazing upon His perfect human nature we all acknowledge Him to be our Lord. We confess that often in the past, tyranny and hardness have been substituted for the meekness and gentleness of Christ, and the flock has been scattered. Through want of belief in His perfect human sympathy with all our ills, saintly mediators have been exalted beyond what was right, and their exaltation has been a cause of division and of strife. The assertion of our freedom of access to God has also been a cause of offense, for we have substituted Protestant subjectivity for faith, and made salvation a matter of feeling, rather than of faith, or we have gone to the opposite extreme and tried to change the warm throbbing life of the Gospel of Christ into a cold philosophy. Our present danger is that we should mistake works of mercy done for Christ for personal devotion to Christ. Social service is a necessary part of Christian life, but it is not the whole of it. A sound body, and a comfortable home, will not eradicate the tendency to sin. The best fed, the best housed and best clothed people are not always the most moral. The salvation of man is the elevation of mankind to the fellowship of the Divine life, and in the educational policy of our part of the Church and Kingdom of God we must never forget that "no natural virtue, no quick aspiring intelligence, no splendid and glittering civilization, no refined society can bridge over the chasm, which apart from Christ yawns between God and man."

The Presence of Christ is the right atmosphere in which to discuss the welfare of His children. The nearer separated churches draw to Him in repentance, in faith, in prayer, in Sacraments, the nearer most assuredly do they draw towards each other.

A forced political union will be no union at all. In conclusion, "The Prince of Peace," the author and finisher of the Faith, is also the Captain of our Salvation. The reign of the Prince of Peace in each of us depends upon the loyal disposition of a single soul. In souls so disposed He began His work on earth and in this way it must continue. We may criticize the mistakes of nations, and find fault with the policy of the church, but what of your own and my own personal loyalty to the person and teaching of Christ. Nations are made up of millions of souls drawn hither and thither by associations of race, or class or education. The church, too, is made up of many men with many minds, and is influenced by strong men of limited vision sometimes to deviate from right principles, e.g. as was the case at Corinth, "I am of Paul," "I am of Apollos," "I am of Cephas." But to the free unfettered individual soul comes the challenge to show forth that loyalty to the Capt. of our Salvation which is expected in the nation and in the church. Are you ready to do it? No man ought to underestimate the power of his own influence for evil or for good.

It is said that when a pebble is thrown into the ocean, all the water in the sea is moved, and as we are all members of one another in the living Body of Christ, let us not think that our contribution to the Peace of the Church, or in support of the work of the League of Nations is of no account. It is of the utmost importance that every Christian heart should be a kingdom of God, a kingdom of Truth and Righteousness. There is no peace to the wicked, and while men are corrupt in social, in business, or in public life there can be little hope of a speedy peace either in the church or in the world, just as peace with God is impossible in the corrupt individual soul. So if we are in earnest in our wish for the successful issue of the League of Nations we must do more than pray for its success. We must work for it and for every movement that will foster it, surrendering ourselves as willing instruments to fulfil the will of Jesus Christ, the Captain of our Salvation, the Prince of Peace, for men are all of one blood on all the face of the earth, and potentially members of the one Body of which Christ is the Head.

Here is something which made me realize how particularly well that quality camouflages itself. A neighbor of mine happened to receive a letter from her sister while I was calling. She asked permission to open the letter, read it and then sigh.

Always Something Wrong. "I never saw anyone who could write such depressing letters as Lou," she said. "I don't think I ever got two cheerful letters from her in her life. There's always something wrong." "Does she have an especially hard time to get along?" I asked. "Why, she doesn't have a bed of roses—none of us do," answered her neighbor. "The children are sick sometimes, just as mine are; and she has her financial troubles, just as most of us do; but I don't think her life is especially harder, than a good many people's. I think it's just a habit of pitying herself she has gotten into. And I think it's a perfectly terrible habit. Why, you have no idea how it affects me. My heart sinks when I see her writing on an envelope. It just darkens a day to read a letter from her. I should think she might realize how it affects people to have her always write those depressing letters."

What would you say? Few Justifiable Cases. I would be much inclined to suspect that pity of herself for having a sister so selfish as to unload her troubles on her, had something to do with it. Mind you, I am not justifying the sister. I think the habit of unloading one's troubles into letters which relieve your mind at the expense of the recipient's is one of the most selfish in the world. What I want to make clear is how easy it is to have the habit of self-pity without suspecting it. At the very moment when she was righteously objecting to her sister a habit of self-pity, this woman was pitying herself for having to suffer from it. Something Constructive Necessary. HUMBLENESS. What is there in skill that should lift you from men? What is there in fame that should build up a wall between you and your neighbor, that never again you should welcome him in when he ventures to call? What is there in greatness that you should deny Word of good cheer to the friend who goes by?

Stay down upon earth through the months and the years. For all you possess shall remain yours from now, and when you die, Nor all you have come to shall save you from tears. Nor all of your greatness shall keep you from weep, And statesmen, or painter, or gifted of pen, Must live out their years on this earth among men.

What is there in fortune or fame that should change? The nature God gave at the day of man's birth? Why should success make a great man grow strange? To the neighbors who gladly rejoice at his worth?

Be humble, be gracious, be kind to the end. The humblest of men is worth while as a friend.

"Stop That Cough."

A good many people have thought that a cough didn't amount to much—most excellent people whose friends were sorry to lose them. Now don't make this mistake—a cough is the first step towards serious and often fatal sickness; stop it right there. Our "Phoratorne Cough Cure" in 35c. bottles has proved a marvellous cough stopper.

"The cost of security is insignificant in comparison to the price of neglect." We have saved the lives of hundreds of our fellow-townsmen and will save yours for 35c. if you come to us in time. Our Phoratorne Cough Cure seldom fails to give immediate and permanent relief. A cough, if not stopped in its first stage, often leads to consumption.

House of Assembly.

APRIL 21.
The House met at 3 p.m. Petitions were presented from the district of St. Barbe by Mr. Scammell. Notice of Question was given by Messrs. Bennett, Moore, Fox, Lewis, Sir M. P. Cashin.

Answers to questions on previous Order Papers were tabled. Mr. Bennett asked that his Notice of Motion be deferred until the following day.

The following Bills were read a first time:
"An Act to Amend the War Measures Act."

An Act to Repeal Cap. 18-5 Geo. V., entitled, "The Food Control Act, 1917," and acts in amendment thereof.

The Premier told Sir M. P. Cashin that Mr. J. H. Scammell, M.H.A., was not engaged in Government work during his recent tour. He also tabled an additional report of the Auditor General.

Mr. Fox rose to speak to the Amendment. He also was surprised at the Hon. Minister's explanation of the Fish Regulations. Since that day the Hon. Minister had not come to the House. He heard the Hon. Minister's speech with great surprise at its pitiable weakness. He had merely made an absolute confession of failure and a positive assurance of his own guilt. The only people who were likely to benefit from the Exportation Act were the merchants, not the fishermen. Mr. Coaker had passed that Act because he was one of the biggest exporters in the country. When he said the Act was brought in in the interests of the fishermen then, he was wrong. There were statements in his speech which were untrue and which, moreover, he knew were untrue. Mr. Fox gave instances to prove his statement. Mr. Coaker deliberately disregarded the Codfish Exportation Act, but he did not state why he had done so. He threw this Act overboard and used it for his own purposes and strangled the trade of the country. He was right when he said that the manner in which the regulations were carried out was responsible for present conditions and he (Mr. Coaker) was himself responsible for the way they were carried out. The one thing that struck the reader in Mr. Coaker's speech was how that gentleman's personality was impressed on it. It was a case of "I" did it all. He took unfair advantage of the knowledge he got of other merchant's business to further his own ends. The West Coast, once probably the most prosperous section of the country, was today stricken with poverty, thanks to Coaker's mismanagement of the Fish Regulations. He could not understand how the West Coast members could put up with it. The Ministers who gave the Government guarantee should, instead of being in His Majesty's Executive Council, be in His Majesty's Penitentiary. They assented to this misappropriation of public funds because the Minister of Marine and Fisheries wanted it and he owned them. He (Mr. Fox) did not intend to assist the Government, because he thought it was a menace to the country. He would fight the Government tooth and nail in the country's interests, asking no quarter and giving none. In spite of all the present Administration had done they asked for assistance. The only assistance he would give them would be to help them get out of power. The present motto of the North was "What we have we hold." It used to be "To every man his own." The capital of this Government was in Port Union. When Mr. Coaker said he was going to dominate the country then his (Mr. Fox's) coat was off to fight him. In conclusion Mr. Fox stated that he supported the Amendment and he wished to point out firstly that he would never assent to any man like Mr. Coaker coming in and running the Government, and secondly, that he would never support the Government.

Mr. MacDonnell also spoke to the Amendment. He said that it was recognized by the Opposition that Mr. Coaker, with the backing he had, could put through any legislation he wished. In justice to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries he would say that he had acceded to most of his (Mr. Coaker's) requests concerning the export of fish in his district. But, the regulations should never have been enforced at all. A few days previously in the House, Mr. Coaker had admitted what the Opposition had forecasted a year before, that the regulations were an artificial prop to the trade of the country. The natural law was supply and demand. Mr. Coaker's confession of failure meant that the Government had failed. When a government had reached this stage it should get out. He thought Mr. Coaker's statement was an abdication on the part of the Government. He trusted that the Government had now a thorough realization of the failure of its fish policy. He would like to see the Amendment put so that some regular business could be got on with. He appealed to the Government to get out and let somebody who might have a policy in view take over the reins.

Mr. Moore supported the Amendment. He hoped something would be done for the unemployed. The Hon. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs next addressed the House. He hated to refer to the Fish Regulations, because he thought the people must be fed up with that subject. Sir M. P. Cashin had said he should not occupy an Executive position whilst holding office in the F.P.U. He severed his connection with the F.P.U. in an official capacity when he became Minister of Agriculture and Mines in the National Government. He objected to the imputations made against him that he had read messages passing through the Postal Telegraph department. He wished to clear Mr. Coaker of complicity in the well-known "Escason" affair. He tried to give an explanation of this affair and said that it was decided not to guarantee the Rumanian bonds and that there was no more to be said about it.

Mr. M. P. Cashin—"If I hadn't put my foot down the country would be $1,250,000 out-to-day on it."

The Hon. Minister then went on to speak of the Regulations. He said they were passed by the whole House. Sir John Crosbie stated he was out of the House when the vote was taken. Hon. Mr. Halfyard admitted this. He said that the regulations did not get a fair trial and he claimed that they had saved the fishermen $2 a quintal.

Mr. MacDonnell—"Was not the slump caused by the Regulations killing the demand?"

Hon. Mr. Halfyard continued and speaking of the Labrador guarantee said that this fish came first in order for the guarantee only through an accident (loud laughter.) The Hon. Mr. Coaker went abroad to help out the fish situation, but his plans were frustrated by petty politics. The Regulations were the cause of creating all this trouble. There would be more poverty in the country if there had been no regulations. The Hon. Minister went on with a very halting explanation of the guarantee of Labrador fish. He referred to a speech of Sir M. P. Cashin made some years ago in reply to a statement that there would be a deficit of $300,000.

Sir M. P. Cashin—"That's barely enough for you people to buy fish now."

Hon. Mr. Halfyard said he did not know how the Government was going to be put out.

Sir M. P. Cashin—"The public will soon put you out."

Concluding his address Hon. Mr. Halfyard said he could not support the Amendment.

The Hon. Minister of Public Works also addressed the House. The Hon. Minister's speech was a most warlike one and he was evidently looking for trouble. He referred to a statement made by Mr. Fox in the course of his speech on the same afternoon.

Mr. Fox—"I repeat it. It is what he deserves for robbing his country."

Hon. Mr. Jennings—"Nearly 90,000 Northern men sent us here and they will not take advice from Mr. Fox."

Mr. Fox—"They don't own the country."

Hon. Mr. Jennings went on to talk about a lot of things which few could understand.

Mr. Fox—"What about the $50,000 you stole?"

Hon. Mr. Jennings said that statement was incorrect. He also tried to give some advice to the Opposition.

Sir M. P. Cashin—"Your advice is cheap."

The Speaker asked for order. Mr. MacDonnell rose to a point of order and said that a few days previously the Speaker had permitted cross-talking.

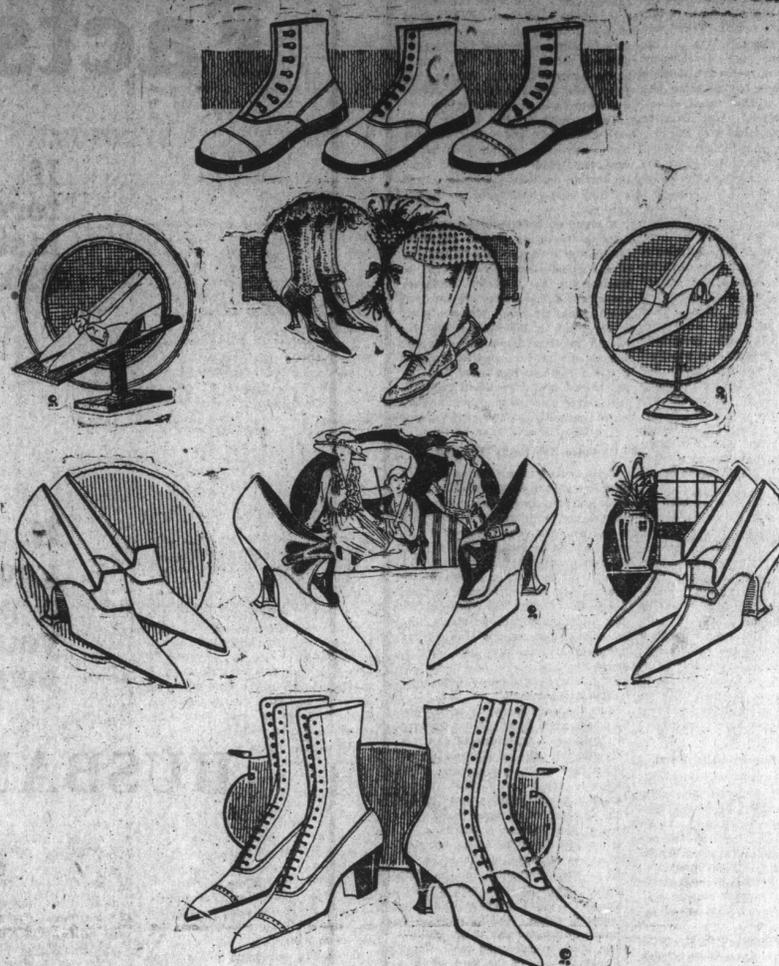

Hon. Mr. Jennings said he would now speak of the so-called infamous fish regulations.

Sir M. P. Cashin—"That is the right name for them."

Hon. Mr. Jennings continued his speech and made a very poor attempt to justify the Fish Regulations and concluded by saying he would not vote for the Amendment.

At 6:30 p.m. Mr. Sanson moved the adjournment of the House until 3 p.m. Monday.

Bagged One Hundred and Ten Elephants.

The story of how Major Pretorius, C.M.G., D.S.O., a Dutch Transvaal expert, who did splendid service against the Germans in East Africa during the war, bagged one hundred and ten elephants in thirteen months, is told by J. P. Collins, a London writer, and reads like a romance.

In 1919, when the development plans for the Sunday River district in South Africa bade fair to bring into Cape Colony a marked influx of settlers, the Provincial Administration found themselves faced with the necessity for doing something to deliver settlers already established from the terrible deprivations of elephant herds in the adjacent Addo Bush, and Sir Frederic de Waal, the Cape Administrator General, consulted Major Pretorius to see what could be done.

The major, who is also a zoologist and an ardent scientist, gave it as his opinion that the interests of science could be met by the establishment of a wide reservation on permanent lines if the majority of these Addo elephants were dealt with summarily first. The only remedy was practical extermination and he was given the commission to kill a hundred or more. He was instructed to pursue his own inclinations to the extent of preserving the remains—ivory for trade, the flesh for biltong, the hides for manufacture, and the skeletons, or a selection of them, for the museums of the world.

This understanding having been established, Major Pretorius chose his carriers and loaders, chief among whom is his wife (herself an intrepid shot), and with his little arsenal supplemented by new elephant rifle, proceeded to set up his camp in a safe but central place. It was here that he was visited not long ago by the only man who has so far been a medium of information as to the major's success and the story, as recounted at length in the Cape Times Annual to hand, makes one of the most picturesque and thrilling contributions that the annals of sport have received for a decade or more.

The Dark Continent at Its Worst.

There is something well-nigh incredible in the idea of an impassable jungle lying between busy and familiar centres like Cape Town and Port Elizabeth, and almost overlooking one of the great highways of ocean traffic.

A modern railway has bisected it and the steady encroachments of farms and settlements have done much to define its boundaries, yet the Addo Bush remains as true a survival of the "Dark Continent" of old as if it were a stretch of Northern Nigeria or a jungle of the Belgian Congo. It consists of an irregular reach of rugged country, packed for the most part with prickly pear and villainous thorn-bush, and enmeshed with creepers that remind one of Darwin's lianas in the trackless twilight forests of South America.

The whole extent measures some three or four hundred square miles, and for a height of ten or twelve feet constitutes a mysterious maze so intricately interwoven that only an axe-team can penetrate it, and in this formidable thicket, which affords no real impediment to the bulk and power of an elephant, man suffers hardships which need not be described.

Major Pretorius admits that all the knowledge gained through arduous years in East Africa and the interior had been but a poor preparation for this new task in a wilderness peculiar to itself.

The major had to lay out his own map, including hills for observation purposes, and the ravines to which the quarry resort in emergencies. Runners were located on the hill-tops to report any observable movements of the three or four herds—numbering some 128 beasts in all—and as time was of the essence of the contract, the ordinary methods of elephant stalking had to be changed.

The Modern Operandi Chosen.

A full-grown elephant with a nine-foot stride—at times, extending a loping pace of a dozen feet or more—can out-nimbly through scrub-covered country and soon leave twenty or thirty miles behind. Now, a thirty-mile tramp of an exhausting kind, such as fell to the hunter day after day, was regarded as waste of time if it yielded only one elephant at the end of it. Besides, frequent poaching or indiscriminate sport has been known in some cases to make this kind of quarry gun-shy, and in this way the difficulties would obviously grow with the duration of the campaign, especially as the game grew less.

The modern operandi chosen, therefore, was calculated to secure the killing of two or three or more beasts at each encounter, and consisted of a careful approach with the loaders at hand, and usually the hunter's wife among them. Then when the nearest point to the herd had been gained without detection, the hunter took the very initiative on which the "rogue" elephant prides himself. He charged at the herd, and found, as he had hoped, that the immediate response was to bring the huge beasts on.

Their trunks uplifted, their huge ears flapping, and their throats trumpeting in a full pitch chorus of rage, the leaders of the herd came thundering on, with the crashing and grinding of the bush to add to the unholy roar.

It needs no heightened language to point out the tenacious of the situation, for to stop a trumpeter in full charge is the grand climax in this kind of tussle. But the herd of elephants charging together seems rather too much climax at once. The smallness of the brain at the back of the elephant's skull is notoriously the reason for the heavy casualties incident to close conflicts like these, and the concentration of a 500-grain bullet on that single point of impact is not assisted, certainly, by the swaying gait the elephant adopts when he runs.

Drive Not Easily Arrested.

What is no less serious, as hunters on this scale are well aware, the drive of a charging animal weighing some tons, is not easily arrested, even with a well-placed shot at the critical moment, and it needs agility as well as an iron nerve to deliver the decisive blow first and then by a leap to deliver oneself from the crash ensuing.

Dense bush delays the all-important shot to an instant uncomfortably near the edge of disaster, and even old and hardened loaders have been known, under the strain of makeshift rations and a long campaign, to drop their weapons and decamp.

Died From Excitement.

A guest was a rare guest, and could only be a sportsman of like mind and experience, but it was during the first day of his visit, and during a hot pursuit, that General Ravenshaw, a veteran sportsman, died from excitement.

Another danger to ward against in this line of sport is a blow from the trunk of a wounded elephant in the second stage of despatch, and the major only escaped from an unexpected lash-out like this by jumping back into a heavy-spiked thornbush which left its marks.

Thorn matters little to an elephant, but may make a deal of difference even to a practised hunter, and a bit of mutual stalking round just such a bush on one occasion was ended by a mad rush of the unwieldy quarry across the intervening obstacle, or rather by timely, double-barrel full in his face, with a third shot through the spine which finished him.

There was another case when a widowed cow had tracked the hunter slyly for some distance and with amazing stealth, so as to bring things to a climax when she saw the hunter down on hands and knees trying to penetrate a particularly ugly bit of bush. It was in such unexpected moments that the major's agility came in handy, and in this instance we learn that the workmanship of the English gunsmith told usefully as well, for the bullet was found to have entered where the trunk joins the head, and after smashing its way through the brain, tore through the shoulder and the heart to find a grave in the great beast's liver.

Out of a total herd of 126 the major polished off 110 animals in thirteen months (broken by two or three needed periods of rest) and when his mission was complete towards the end of last year, he had the satisfaction of enriching several of the South African museums with some admirable skeletons in perfect development.

Thereafter he drew up plans for establishing a permanent reservation or national park such as Canada and the United States have marked off in recent years for the preservation of their bigger species from extinction.

Unsolved Weather Mysteries.

Much as the weather is studied, there are many things connected with it which baffle scientists.

What, for instance, is the precise cause of those cyclonic systems which bring us so much unexpected weather from the Atlantic Ocean?

No one knows, neither is it known why they should move in the uncertain way they do, travelling over these islands sometimes at the rate of thirty or more miles an hour, and at other times pulling up off the west coast of Ireland and then either turning back into the Atlantic or coming over England at a snail's pace. Equally puzzling is why they should sometimes remain quite motionless for days together.

Another mysterious thing is that sudden rush of cool air we experience just before a thunderstorm reaches us. The wax of a lighted candle is not only in the immediate vicinity of the flame, which can be blown out easily. A burning log or a coal fire is well heated throughout, and usually bursts into flame a few moments after it has been extinguished by a gust of wind.

But that is only the work of a short time thrown off in a fit of enthusiasm for the tiny. What of the man who does this thing with the foolish ardour of incurable devotion? Peter Bales, a scholar of Queen Elizabeth's time, lives in the Harleian Manuscripts at Oxford for having written the Bible in so small a hand that it was enclosed in a walnut. "The nut-holdeth the boon; there are as many leaves in his little book as in the great Bible, and he hath written as much on one of his little leaves as on a great leaf of the Bible."

The British Museum possesses a portrait of Queen Anne not much above the size of a hand, on which appear what seem to be a number of scratches. The scratches when magnified prove to be the entire contents of a book carried in the queen's hand.

One of the legends of antiquity credits a man known to Cicero with having put the Iliad of Homer into a nutshell. When the legend was 1,700 years old Huet, the great French scholar, tested it to amuse his pupil, the French heir.

Where Flame Comes From.

The burning of any substance is due to the heat which turns the substance itself—or a considerable part of it—into gases, which mingle with the oxygen in the air and produce fire.

If any but the most inflammable of substances, this process takes an appreciable time, as will be noted by anyone who tries to light a furnace or even a candle in a hurry.

The flame must be held against the wick of the candle until the wax begins to melt and change into gas. In the case of a fire in the grate, kindling wood or its equivalent must be used to produce the necessary preliminary heat.

Once lighted, the flame will continue to burn until the combustible portion of the process of making the gases which mingle with the oxygen. In blowing upon a small flame we force the gases away from the lighted portion and, unless the latter is hot enough to rekindle the flame, the fire is extinguished.

The Bible in a Nutshell.

Poems and Portraits Inscribed on Seed and Grain.

A man in Philadelphia has carved a spider on one side of a mustard seed and an elephant on the other, and claims the championship of the world for minute inscriptions.

If the records of the past are any guide it is not unlikely in this age of powerful lenses and fine tools that the record might easily be beaten. Long ago a man achieved fame by writing a verse in letters of gold and enclosed it in the rind of a grain of corn.

But that is only the work of a short time thrown off in a fit of enthusiasm for the tiny. What of the man who does this thing with the foolish ardour of incurable devotion? Peter Bales, a scholar of Queen Elizabeth's time, lives in the Harleian Manuscripts at Oxford for having written the Bible in so small a hand that it was enclosed in a walnut. ### Miracle Motor-Gas Tablets.

IS TO 40 PER CENT. SAVE ON YOUR GASOLINE BILL.

Directions for Using. Each of these tablets is sufficient for charging one gallon of Gasoline. MIRACLE MOTOR-GAS renders the Gasoline more combustible—more active—therefore CARBURETOR ADJUSTMENT is necessary. While it will show some results without any adjustment, if you want to get the best results and insure what it will really do, make the following adjustments:

For Carburetor having Needle Valve and air adjustment: Screw down needle valves on carburetor until engine slackens speed and power; then give more air until power and speed return and engine runs smoothly.

For Carburetors having one Gasoline adjustment, reduce the flow of the Gasoline from one-half to one-third.

For Carburetors having high and low speed adjustment, turn down both till car runs smoothly.

For Carburetors having stationary spray nozzles, plug up nozzle with solder and rebore nozzle hole about 4 points smaller and regulate by giving more air.

Thus you see by the use of MIRACLE MOTOR-GAS you feed less gasoline and give more air.

CAUTION—Never interfere with the Carburetor Float or Springs of the Automatic Air Inlet. Simply reduce the flow of Gasoline and use more air.

There is no way of telling just the exact results of MIRACLE MOTOR-GAS in any particular case as it will depend on the condition of your engine, spark plugs and carburetor; but there is a CERTAINTY about the results if you will continue in its use until it has had time to do the work it was intended to do.

For instance, your engine may be heavily carbonized, and spark plugs foul, in which case you are likely to become discouraged unless you remember that every dose of medicine will give some evidence of its presence, if it is going to do you any good.

The first effect may be sluggishness of the engine, and a tendency to choke when on a heavy pull; also it may spit and sputter.

All you have to do is to CUT DOWN THE GASOLINE FEED at the Carburetor. After you have done this, so ahead and when it gets to doing the same thing again, cut it down again. That is what you want.

Just a little at a time, as often as it needs it, until your engine is as clean as when you first bought it. Every time you reduce the feed you are reducing operating expenses, and that is what MIRACLE MOTOR-GAS is for. Now, on the other hand, you may not notice any effect on the running of the engine; if it was clean to start with and the spark plugs in good condition, you will notice very little change in its operation; but after running several miles you will cut your carburetor a little, you will notice a difference.

The fact that it did not make your engine run bad is no sign that it was doing all it should do before. CUT DOWN THE GASOLINE. That is what MIRACLE MOTOR-GAS is for—to reduce the consumption of gas, and at the same time you will experience a stronger running engine. Also, you will find that you can climb hills on high that were impossible before, and at the same time remember you are burning less gasoline. MIRACLE MOTOR-GAS is guaranteed to reduce your gasoline consumption, as well as clean out the engine, but it cannot do this unless you cut a little on the carburetor.

But whatever the seeming results, if you will only follow directions you will get the results claimed, and your engine cleaned and running cooler than ever before. MIRACLE MOTOR-GAS is the one preparation that will not heat the engine.

If the Carburetor adjustment gives you any inconvenience, just spin along to the undersigned where all your troubles cease. The adjustment costs you nothing, $1.25 per package, sufficient for 50 gallons.

TRINITY.

About sixty years ago some fishermen belonging to Trinity were fishing at Northern Labrador. One of the skipper's boys got a hook in the palm of his hand, and not being as careful as he should have been to keep the wound clean and disinfected, blood-poison set in. The hand became swollen and dark in colour, and in a short time it was evident that the dark colour was gradually going up the arm. The only "doctor" on the past was an old Eskimo woman, who was known as "the doctor" in an Eskimo settlement some forty miles farther north.

The skipper of the schooner decided to take the boy to her; so the coast-line skiff was manned by his best rowers, and at daylight they left with the boy for the settlement. When they there they found the old woman and showed her the boy's hand. She ordered him to remove his coat and to roll up his shirt sleeve. Then she produced a knife, that she used as a lance, and before the boy had time to protest, she had slashed the palm of the hand deeply and caused the blood to flow freely. Then she ordered one of the men to catch a hen, and to bring it in. He did so, and with the same knife that she had used on the boy's hand, she cut through the back part of the breast bone of the hen. Then she straightened out the boy's fingers and inserted the whole hand into the hen's body, through the opening she had made. Then she heard the fluttering hen tight over the hand, and in her gruff tone of voice said, "Now, all down for awhile. It was not long before it was noticeable that the black procession up the arm had been arrested, and then, that it was disappearing towards the hand. After it had all disappeared, the hen (now dead) was removed and handed over to the men to bury, with the stern command of the old woman, "bury it deep, so that the dogs can't get at it. If they do it will kill all the dogs in the settlement. The boy's hand was washed, and bound up with such bandages as could be found, and in a week's time the wound had healed and all was well again.

Mr. Granger's tender to provide the windows for St. Paul's Church, being the lowest, has been accepted by the Select Vestry.

The Concert and Tea held in Trinity, in aid of Church repair funds, netted $50.

Long years ago, Robert Mayers, who was an old man when I was a boy, and who was one of the friends of my boyhood days—was "the keeper" of the stable and the "big garden," belonging to Garland in Trinity. The firm, at the time, owned a remarkably black bull, that was kept carefully enclosed in the meadow. Some one, however, left the gate open one day, and by the time it was missed the bull's latitude was known to be "somewhere near God's Cove Pond," and all the men and boys who could be spared from "the room"—headed by Mayers—were sent in to capture him.

Mr. Hepburn, the Agent, decided to take part in the chase, and he followed the crowd at a distance. After an hour's tramp through the woods, he felt tired and sat down to rest. Just then one of the men came along and told him that the bull had been seen near Mr. Hepburn with his very English accent—asked,—"Say, young fellow, have you seen Bob Mayers and the black bull anywhere?" Mayers at the time was only a few yards distant and heard the question asked, without being seen by Mr. Hepburn. A few minutes later, Mayers came along to where Mr. Hepburn was resting, and he said, "Ha! Mayers, I am glad you came along; I saw a young fellow just now, and I asked him if he had seen Mr. Mayers and the black bull." Mayers looked Mr. Hepburn straight in the eye and in his broad West Country dialect said:—"Theeese hidden say Mister Mayers! Theeese did say Bob Mayers, for I yard'ee."

Mr. Nelson W. Pittman left Trinity last week for New York, to resume his work with the Western Union Telegraph Co.

Some extracts from the old Register of Bird Island Cove and Catherine ters of the Church in Trinity, that will be of interest to some people:—"Married, November 6th, 1823, Patrick Christopher and Annie Ryan. Witnesses, Mary Stivey and E. T. Clinch."

"Married, October 12th, 1824 John Skelton and Elizabeth Pittman. Witnesses, Samuel A. Gent, George S. Kelton, Thomas Drawbridge."

"Married, January 18th, 1822, Alexander Bremner and Ann White. Witnesses, James Collis, William Davis Cross, Thomas Bowell."

"Married, December 28th, 1822 James Ivamy of New Bonaventure and Sarah Barnes of English Harbour. Witnesses, Thomas Miller, Ann Miller."

"Married, Feb. 10th, 1825, John Chalk of Bird Island Cove and Catherine Carpenter. Witnesses, Thomas Chalk, David Tremlett."

"Married, August 25th, 1825, John Stinson and Mary Pilley of Scilly Cove. Witnesses, Richard Beckford, Sarah Serll."

"Married, March 4th, 1821, Charles Newhook, New Harbor, and Martha Penney of Carbonar. Witnesses, Elizabeth Ash, S. A. Gent, Thos. L. Pilgrim."

Long years ago when Mr. Hepburn was the Agent here and lived in "the big house," his sister came out from England and spent a year with him. She overheard some one speak of a beaver-house in a pond some distance in the country. She expressed a wish to see it, and her brother made all the arrangements necessary to take her to the pond where the house was then occupied by the beaver. The guide who went with the party gave her every opportunity to examine the house in detail, and she expressed herself as delighted with what she had seen, and she was filled with wonder that an animal of that kind could construct such a house. At the dinner table that evening she could talk of nothing but the beaver-house, and the pleasure it would give her to describe it to her friends in England. "What was it like, Miss Hepburn?" asked one of the gentlemen at the table, who was seeking for information. "Oh dear! oh dear!" she replied, "it was most wonderful! most wonderful! It was like—It was like—It was like—Well! it was like a large rat's hole!"

A hundred years ago, men who had settled here and were in need of help, gave their order for "a good, healthy youngster" to Blade and Kelton of Garland & Co. in the same prosaic manner as they would for a suit of clothes, or a sealing gun; and the order would be attended to as a matter of ordinary business. Such an order was given by Parson Bullock, and in due time the boy came out from Poole to Trinity and entered upon his duties. No doubt he had a Christian name and a surname, but to the people of Trinity he was known as "Mr. Bullock's boy." Like the farmer's boy in song—"he grew up to be a man" in years and size. This, however, did not affect his position. In the place that the public had originally assigned to him. He was still "Mr. Bullock's boy." When he was about thirty or forty years of age, he went to the woods one day and got lost. As he had not returned to duty the next day, old Robert Grant, who was the "town crier" in Trinity, was commissioned to make the loss known to the public. He did so in the good old English way, which was then the custom in Trinity. He sallied forth with his bell, which he swung from right to left, and from left to right; up and down, and down and up, and he went slowly around the harbor (stopping in front of the Church gate, and at Cook's Corner) shouting with might and main:—"Man lost! Man lost! Mr. Bullock's boy. Man lost! Man lost! Mr. Bullock's boy."

By a careful examination of deaths recorded in the Church Registers, past and present; I find that the average life of a hundred people in Trinity a hundred years ago was 41 years; whilst that of the same number of people who died here within the last five years is 48 years.

Every fine day during the last week or two has enabled the men from every part of the Bight to get to Trinity for supplies. All the shops have been well patronized, and the large majority of men have paid cash for their purchases. Money is by no means scarce, but it is more carefully spent than it was last year.

Shakespeare the Mysterious.

William Shakespeare is supposed to have been born on St. George's day, April 23, 1564. Certain it is that he was baptised on the 26th of that month, because it is so entered in the baptismal register of Stratford-on-Avon church as anyone may see. A well-known house in Henley Street, Stratford, is regarded as his birthplace, but there is no absolute certainty about that. He is said to have attended the grammar school of his native town, though there is not a scrap of evidence that he did so. Indeed, every biography of Shakespeare is a compound of guesses, probabilities and likelihoods, arranged at the pleasure of the compiler. What "Shakespeare" followed in his youth is quite unknown. He married at the age of 18, Anne Hathaway, of Stratford, who was 27, but where they were united is not known. In some time between 1585 and 1592 he left Stratford-on-Avon and came by himself to London, where he obtained employment as an actor. In 1593 poems bearing his name as author were published in London and in the following year he was one of a company of actors who performed before Queen Elizabeth. In 1598 he was lodging in Bankside, London, and was evidently prosperous, for he held shares in theatres and had some property in the parish of St. Helen's. In the next year he bought New Place, the largest house in his native town, and soon afterwards retired there with considerable wealth, dying at his residence on April 23, 1616, on his 52nd birthday. The greatness of the plays attributed to him is extolled by literary men of all countries, who unite in praising their unparalleled excellence, and acclaim their author the greatest dramatic writer the world has ever known. This being so, it is very singular that Shakespeare left no books or manuscripts whatever, and that we possess no scrap of his handwriting except six doubtful signatures. His monument in Stratford church, and the inscriptions on his gravestone have both been altered since they were first made, and his numerous portraits all contradict each other. Some people think Lord Bacon wrote the plays and used Shakespeare's name, but this theory only raises a fresh series of difficulties and leaves the problem of their authorship more uncertain than ever.

An Appreciation of Julia Salter Earle.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—Only recently I made the acquaintance of Mrs. Julia Salter Earle. Like so many more I understood her to be an eccentric type of woman. I now know her to be one who is doing one of the grandest works possible for anyone to do. Practically her whole life seems to be devoted to help women and men whose lot in life is wretched and miserable. When you realize that there are in the city today over six hundred factory girls out of employment you can get a faint idea of what her work means. She, with the other members of the Workmen's Committee, were in my office practically all day Monday. During that time there were two applications to Mrs. Earle for relief. One was the case of a woman, about to become a mother, in whose home there was no food or fuel. Can you beat that? In the city of St. John's, in the twentieth century, could you imagine such a state of affairs. Fancy a child being born under these conditions. The other was a similar case as regards food and fuel but the other element was absent. Mrs. Earle got busy, made up a collection and helped to relieve these cases. That is what this lady is doing practically every day of her life. Do you think Florence Nightingale or any of those other grand women have anything on Mrs. Earle? I don't. Do you wonder that the workmen and women of the city worship her and that she is the Lady President of the N.I.W.A. Instead of sneering and laughing at Mrs. Earle these who do so should go down on their knees and thank her, for had it not been for her, it might have been that those in such comfortable circumstances, who sneer and laugh, might have had their homes about their ears, torn down by an enraged community because there is so unequal a distribution of this world's goods. When monuments are being talked about, let those who talk think of Mrs. Julia Salter Earle and do not let it wait until she is dead. Do it now, while her good work is being done. If I were contesting the West End of St. John's I would like to have Mrs. Earle as my colleague and I should win hands down. There are now two members in The Liberal Party. The first is myself; the second is Mrs. Julia Salter Earle. If she wishes to have the leadership I am willing to resign. That woman, in my opinion, is today, the greatest asset Newfoundland has. I trust she will forgive my bringing to the notice of the general public the work which she has so long quietly done, and for which by the ignorant and unthinking, she has been persecuted and laughed at.

Yours sincerely,
GEO. W. B. AYRE.

Miles and Recruits under Lieut. Parlin. Lieut. King carried on with the Brigade school, during the evening No. 1 Recruit squad was examined by the Adjutant, Capt. N. Henry, and quite a number of men were posted. The following are extracts from orders for week ending April 23th:

A special meeting of the Officers Mess to receive the Report of the Kit Committee, was held after parade. Nearly every section of the Report was discussed at length and several innovations were adopted including the Sam Browne belt for officers.

Capt. (Rev.) Fletcher, the Mess President, presided over the meeting. The N.C.O.'s are sparing no efforts to make their dance, which takes place to-night, a big success and it is hoped it will be well supported.

The athletic Association is now getting busy and has a number of projects on hand for the coming season including indoor and outdoor sports and a big wrestling tournament.

Concert to be Repeated.

A concert given by the Shannahan Band last night in the Columbus Hall drew a large audience. As many could not gain admittance the entertainment will be repeated on Saturday night.

The concert consisted of old time songs and recitations, musical selections, popular melodies, step dancing, rollicking choruses. The tableau was a masterpiece, and being of purely local character was very much enjoyed.

FRENCH ARMY CAPTAIN HAD LONG HARD FIGHT.

Montreal Man Says in All His Experience He Never Saw Anything to Equal Tanlac. Wonderful How It Fixed Him Up.

"In all my experience I have never found a medicine that equals Tanlac when it comes to building a man up and making him feel good," said Robert Jaffe, 281 Herby Street, East Montreal, representative of St. Jorges. "I was a French Army Captain in the French Army, and I was wounded seven times and was in the hospital for a long time. It is simply wonderful that a medicine could do what this one has done. For two years I had a long hard fight with indigestion and other troubles but I have won it, thanks to Tanlac. It has given me a splendid appetite and no matter what I eat I never have a sign of indigestion. My nerves are steady now and I sleep all night long without waking once. In the morning I feel refreshed and happy just as I did when I was a sixteen year old boy. I repeat it, Tanlac is wonderful."

Big Title Bout.

TO BE FIGHT IN STATE OF NEW JERSEY.

New York, April 21.—Jack Dempsey, world's heavyweight champion, and Georges Carpentier, heavyweight champion of Europe, who signed articles of agreement last November for a title combat, will settle the question of supremacy on July 2 in a ring pitched on the soil of New Jersey.

Tex Rickard who assumed the burden of promoting the match when Charles E. Cochran of England and William A. Brady of this city withdrew from the enterprise, announced that the contest would be staged in one of three New Jersey towns. He named Jersey City, Newark and Atlantic City as the cities involved, and but he would make public selection a bit later on.

Rickard said his reason for withholding the name of the exact spot where the ring will be pitched was due to the fact that certain important details yet remained to be settled with the boxing authorities of the Skeeter State.

Rickard will inspect sites in all three cities during the next few days and decide on the one which offers the greatest advantage. Whatever located the arena, which will seat at least 50,000 spectators, will be within a short distance of New York and accessible by all means of transportation.

Decision Barred.

Under the New Jersey State boxing laws the bout cannot exceed twelve three minutes rounds and should both boxers be on their feet at the termination of the contest no official decision can be rendered. A referee, yet to be selected, will be in the ring with the principals, but his sole duty will be to see that the rules governing are observed. He will have no authority to indicate the winner, except in case of a foul or a knockout.

The arena which will cost approximately $100,000, will be octagonal. The eight sides will rise to a height of about fifty feet and the completed amphitheatre will seat at least 50,000 spectators. The angle of elevation will be sufficient to bring the head and shoulders of each spectator above those of the person seated in the row in front, providing an unobstructed view of the ring from every section of the arena.

Prices of seats will range from $50 for a ringside chair to $5 for a bleacher coupon along the extreme edge of the structure. Intermediate sections will sell from $10 to $40 per seat, according to location.

Huge Arena.

These seats will be placed upon sale about May 1 in every city in the Eastern, Southern and Central sections of the country. Where special train parties are formed at distant points to come to the scene of the contest it will be possible to purchase transportation, accommodations and seats under one payment, with special rates for large parties.

The amphitheatre will be three times the size of the arena constructed for Rickard at Reno, where he staged the Johnson-Jeffries bout on July 4, 1910, but not quite as large as that built at Toledo for the Dempsey-Willard match. While final plans for the arena have not been completed, it is known that 1,000,000 feet of lumber will enter into its construction and twenty tons of nails and spikes will be needed in the erection of the structure. An elaborate system of fences and wire barricades will prevent congestion at the various entrances and avoid the possibility of holders of cheaper section tickets encroaching upon the ringside.

Dempsey will leave Seattle for this city on Sunday night and will settle down to conditioning for the most important bout of his ring career. Carpentier is now making an exhibition tour of Spain, but will start for America the first of next month and prepare himself for the combat.

Bars Up in New York.

Beyond doubt Rickard decided on New Jersey some time ago, but the action of the New York State Boxing Commission in placing a maximum price of $15 for a seat at a championship precluded the staging of the bout in the Empire State. There is a quiet general belief that Jersey City will be selected, as it is the most accessible to New York patrons of boxing.

While the rendition of a decision on points would have been more satisfactory to spectators than the decisionless brand of boxing seen in Jersey, still there is hardly a doubt that the contest will end before the limit of twelve rounds is reached. Both of the champions are hard hitters, and one or the other is almost sure to get a knockout punch before many rounds have passed.

The very unsatisfactory bout that Dempsey boxed against Knockout Bill Brennan in Madison Square Garden, has had a tendency to raise the Frenchman in the estimation of experts on boxing, and there will be many at the ringside confident that Carpentier will carry the world's title back to Europe with him.

Carpentier has not faced any difficult opponents since he was matched with Dempsey, the Frenchman's affair with Levinsky in Jersey City not being seriously considered.

Dempsey on the other hand has fought Mike and Brennan, two fairly good heavies.

It goes without saying that Dempsey will be the favorite in the betting, although his condition will be closely scrutinized before much money is placed on his chances.

Reports have reached here from the coast, where Dempsey has been filling moving picture and vaudeville engagements, that the champion has not taken the best of care of himself, and his appearance when he faced Brennan in this city strengthened the opinion that physically he has sagged.

On the other hand Carpentier is known to be a careful man and has conserved all his vitality and energy. Unless Dempsey can enter the ring with a fair proportion of the stamina he showed against Willard at Toledo, Carpentier should have an excellent chance to win.

Come and meet Jerrv Houlihan and his Missus at the C. L. B. C. "At Home" on St. George's Eve. You can enjoy yourself to the full because, as Jerry says, there is no fear of having to cull fish in the morning; because, first, there is none to cull, and second, on account of the whole holiday.—apr20,22

Did Christ use the legislature to fill the church and save himself? Did the Apostles? Should we? These are questions that will be answered Sunday night. Come for the song service at 8.15. Seats free.
