The Dawson Route to Manitoba.

The following extracts are taken from a return laid before Parliament, in answer to an address moved for by Mr. Sturton for information in reference to the conveyance of emigrants over the Dawson route to Manitoba during last summer. The total number who were conveyed over the route was 136. The amount paid by each adult was $25 from the head of Lake Superior, a distance of about 400 miles. Mr. Dawson frankly admits that the accommodation given to travellers was not what he could have wished it to be, but the arrangements for the present season are in a much better state, and by the 1st of August 9 steam launches and two large steamers will be on the navigable sections. Barges are being provided for the conveyance of horses and wagons and other heavy freight. When the means of transport now being prepared are in operation, the men will be able to take their horses and heavy implements over the route without difficulty or any great delay. During the past winter comfortable buildings were erected for the accommodation of emigrants at Shekandogan, Keelebourne, and Fort Francis. Material is in readiness for sheds and houses at the Northwest Angle, and between that point and Fort Gary. Mr. Dawson also states that the charge could be very much reduced were a larger number to travel over the route. Were 2000 to travel over the route, the fare could be reduced to $1 per head, and 1000 might be taken for $10 per head.

The Treaty Again.

The Washington Treaty now assumes a more hopeful phase. In the House of Lords on Friday night Earl Greyville read a letter from Schenck, the American Minister, admitting that the supplemental article to the Treaty is amply sufficient to exclude indirect claims, and authorizing a statement to be made, as coming from Washington, that the article is a final settlement of the question of the said claims. At the same time he warned the House that the indirect claims were not yet withdrawn from the American case, but that they would be disposed of by the acceptance of the supplemental article to the Treaty of Washington. In consequence of this information Earl Russell withdrew his motion for an address to the Queen. The matter may now be said to be in a fair way of settlement.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Ottawa, June 6. Hon. Mr. Pope moved the third reading of the bill respecting inventors. Carried. The House went into the Committee on the bill to amend the Immigration Act of 1868.

The Committee reported, and the bill was read a third time and passed. Hon. Mr. Morris moved the second reading of a bill respecting the public lands of the Dominion, and explained the provisions of the bill.

The Canada Pacific Railway Bill was read a third time and passed. Sir John A. Macdonald moved the second reading to readjust the representation in the House of Commons. After the attempt he had made on introducing the bill he did not think further explanation was necessary.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald said it was probable that amendments would be made to the bill, and as it might be more expedient to take the discussion at the time a motion was made to propose a committee to enter into a discussion to that effect.

The House then went into Committee. The bill was reported and concurred in. A number of items in the Supply Bill were then passed.

EDITORIAL NEWS.

The Nova Scotia elections will take place about the middle of July, and in the other Provinces soon after.

Mr. Henry Sandfield Macdonald was on Friday visited upon by a deputation of his late father's friends, and asked to become their representative in Parliament. Mr. Macdonald agreed to accept the nomination.

It is reported that the Dominion elections will come on soon after the prorogation.

Mr. James Cartwright, it is generally understood, has accepted the nomination of the reform party for Kingston, and an active canvass is being made.

A DEPUTATION OF SIR A. T. GALT'S constituents have waited upon him with a request that he would reconsider his determination to retire from public life.

SPEAKING OF THE Redistribution Bill, the Mount Forest Confederate says: "We are of the opinion that a thorough remodelling should have been made, instead of cutting and carving constitencies like Wallington for the purpose of maintaining a partizan like Mr. Drew in the House."

The report of the Parliamentary Committee on Manufacturing Interests was finally adopted by the Committee on Friday. It recommends the continuation and extension of the policy of incidental protection, initiated in 1859.

THIS MORNING'S DESPATCHES

Fearful Storms.

Schenck's Note to Granville.

Note Disapproved of at Washington.

Canton, Ill. June 7.—A fearful storm passed over this vicinity last night, doing great damage to crops, railroads and stock.

Washington, June 8.1 a.m.—Clear and partially cloudy weather prevail on Saturday over the Gulf and South Atlantic States, clear weather and westerly to northerly winds from Tennessee to Lake Erie and the Upper Lakes and extend eastward over the Middle States during the day, and over New England on Saturday night.

A furious storm of wind and rain passed over this city last evening, causing much damage to property, and the loss of several lives.

The second international regatta takes place at Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, on the 19th, 20th and 21st inst.

New York, June 8.—The Herald's Washington special gives the text of Schenck's note to Granville, which was read in the House of Lords on Thursday night. The note concludes as follows:—

"I am now authorized in a telegraphic despatch, received to-day, from Mr. Fish, to say that the Government of the United States regard the new rule contained in the proposed article as the consideration for and to be accepted as a final settlement of the three classes of the indirect claims put forth in the case of the United States to which the Government of Great Britain have objected." The Herald's despatch says this note is not approved of in Washington. The authority of Schenck to communicate to Granville the views of his Government as to the meaning of the supplementary article was not intended to cover any written communication to help the Gladstone ministry in their contest with their opponents in Parliament. He had been already informed that we were dealing with the British Government and not with the parliamentary opposition. The President considers it compromising to the honor of the country to give a written pledge, in advance of what the new treaty means. Our Government insists that the article explain itself. To-day Fish telegraphed Schenck that cautious criticism of the British Cabinet on the Senate's article were exhausting the patience of the Government and country, and were involving the change of the settlement of the question. The new article can be ratified, as presented before the Senate and ratification insisted upon by Great Britain would make ratification impossible. This is to be impressed upon Granville, and he is to understand that this Government recognizes no way of postponing the consideration of the arguments of the two Governments at a future date, on 15th June, except by a treaty to that effect. It is not the satisfaction on the part of the senators and representatives over the proceedings in the House of Lords on Thursday night.

It is now ascertained that Capt. Colvocoresses had with him, at the time of his murder at Bridgeport, $80,000 in bonds, which were stolen by the murderers. No certain clue yet to the murderers. A reward of $10,000 has been offered for the stolen securities.

The ruins of Fort Sumter will shortly be removed, and a new fort constructed on the site.

The Duke of Argyll puts the number of "literate and highly educated men" connected with the British press at not less than 5,000.

LOVE AND HONOUR.

A TALE OF THE CLYDE. CHAPTER XXXVI. THE CONSUMMATION OF HAPPINESS—CONCLUSION.

During those November and December days devoted by Hermann and Helen to love's sweetest dalliance, and by the inmates of the Rheinbach Villa generally to preparations for the double marriage at Christmas, the war was progressing with giant strides, and was proving in every quarter favourable to Germany.

The capitulation of Sedan, the fall of Metz and Strasbourg, and the close investiture of Paris, proved that the cause of France had become hopeless and desperate.

Very few outward signs of rejoicing did the Rheinbach Villa present on the day when the double marriage was celebrated.

The economy was performed in a little Lutheran Church perched on a wooded height overlooking the Rhine. It took place at an early hour, for Edwin and Mignon, with Mrs. Allerton, Squire Oakley, and Mr. Weggate, were to leave by steamer in the afternoon on their journey to England.

Our story must end here, and almost without an additional word. It is usual with us at the conclusion of a tale to tell what becomes of the various personages who have moved through its scenes, and interested us by their sayings and doings throughout its course.

Her Von Rheinbach was there, and Madame leaned proudly on his arm. A different man is the Herr to look at now, than when we saw him in the early part of this story.

ling eyes, the warm words of welcome, and the warmer words of affection. In that southern land, of demonstrative habits such a scene produced no surprise; but had a meeting taken place in the same way at Kira or Dumeon, it would instantly have formed an object of universal attention.

"That's right," cried Edwin, as he gazed with joy into his friend's face—"you have obeyed instructions: you have become strong and well."

"How could love and hope fail to make me so?" replied Hermann, as he returned the grasp with an energy and sincerity which added further testimony to the gratifying fact.

And so they went their way arm-in-arm as affection and friendship dictated, up the vine-girt path, to fill the villa with their over-flowing happiness.

Very few outward signs of rejoicing did the Rheinbach Villa present on the day when the double marriage was celebrated. This was an appropriate tribute to the sadness of that Christmas season in the war-worn land. They all felt how much it would be out of place to obtrude mirth and festivity on the tears and sorrows of a mourning people.

Therefore, in quietness and with comparative privacy they conducted the ceremony and its attendant circumstances. Edwin, as an Englishman, had English notions concerning such an occasion, and had an idea that a marriage must be wanting in some of its essential elements if it did not take place amid the ringing of bells and festivity and gaiety.

But he readily comprehended all that out of consideration for German feelings at that time—resolved, however, that the omission would be fully supplied when he and his bride arrived at Allerton Hall, where great preparations were making for their reception.

Letting the house-coming of a rich English landlord and his young wife.

To Hermann and Helen the quietness observed on the occasion was more congenial, and more in accordance with their ideas of the serious and solemn character of the marriage relation.

To them their deep and sacred meaning showed itself more than it did to most, while the peculiar history of their love and betrothal rendered it in their case more than usually significant and suggestive.

It was a very happy day for them, and to their two and tried hearts most real in its blessedness—far too much so to allow them to miss the customary excursions of festivity, their hearts and souls directed in a region transcending their outward things, and in this their native altitude they went to the altar, with a solemn and a trembling joy, which noisy sounds of mirth would rather have disturbed than enhanced.

The economy was performed in a little Lutheran Church perched on a wooded height overlooking the Rhine. It took place at an early hour, for Edwin and Mignon, with Mrs. Allerton, Squire Oakley, and Mr. Weggate, were to leave by steamer in the afternoon on their journey to England.

A very striking and impressive scene it was which the interest of the chaste little edifice presented, as the group surrounded the altar and listened to or took part in the holy service. The wintry sunlight streamed through the stained window, and cast lines and tints of richest coloring on the carpeted floor and on the white marriage robes, while without, the tall and leafless lindens waved silently to and fro in the gentle Christmas air.

Then the deep tones of the organ burst forth on the stillness as the service was ended, and in the union thus proclaimed LOVE AND HONOUR were emphatically united.

Our story must end here, and almost without an additional word. It is usual with us at the conclusion of a tale to tell what becomes of the various personages who have moved through its scenes, and interested us by their sayings and doings throughout its course.

And now she rejoiced in the same silent manner on account of the change which had come out of the furnace so little scorching as themselves, or that while they had emerged into sunshine and brightness, the lives of thousands around them were shrouded in deep and bitter gloom.

Old-wise their joy. If quiet and subdued—as full and satisfying, and the days it elated on towards that day which was to consummate their happiness—the twenty-fourth day of December—the day before Christmas.

On the afternoon of the fifteenth, a little group of seven stood on the landing-place at Natchicht, waiting the arrival of the steamer from Lower Rhine, and all the seven seemed radiant with gladness.

Her Von Rheinbach was there, and Madame leaned proudly on his arm. A different man is the Herr to look at now, than when we saw him in the early part of this story.
