we lost half of the finest Province of this Dominion, and it passed under the control of our American neighbors. In 1846,a vast and fertile country, whose shores are washed by the waters of the Pacific, whose rivers are deep enough to float the united navies of the world, whose limits are large enough to embrace half a dozen European Kingdoms and more than one European monarchy—a territory as fairly belonging to us as does the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—by the stupidity of an Imperial Commissioner, without protest, and almost without objection, passed from the control of Canada to that of the United We know that at a later period in our history, namely, in 1872, with a liberality which passes human comprehension, and with a prodigality that beggars human description, we surrendered almost without a protest the navigation of the St. Lawrence and our canals for the shadowy privilege of navigating the waters of Alaska, a right we possessed fifty years before; and now, Sir, we are asked by gentlemen on the Ministerial benches to commit the crowning folly of our lives. The right hon, gentleman who leads the House stated on a public platform, that when this contract was ratified it would be the crowning act of his long political career, and the Minister of Railways was bold enough to repeat the statement on the floor of Parliament. In my humble judgment, the ratification of this contract will be the crowning folly of that hon gentleman's political career; and, whatever others may do, I shall, at every stage of this discussion, raise my voice and record my vote against these infamous propositions.

Mr. PLUMB. I supposed that after our holidays, after the festivities of Christmas, the period when we come to celebrate that anniversary which announces peace and good will to men, we ought to meet here for this discussion with our hearts a little softened, with the acerbities of party strife and warfare somewhat tempered by what we must have found at home, and I am a little surprised that the first speech made in this House, after we got together, should savor so much of that party bitterness which I had hoped might be somewhat allayed by hon. gentlemen leaving for their homes for the holidays; but, I fear the events of the holidays have not softened the tempers of our hon. friends on the other side of the House. They imagined that they were going home to find that the whole community had caught the infection of their speeches which may have been more or less sincere in this House; but I am afraid my hon. friends were a little mistaken when they got home. From what I can learn there was a determination, formed here by the gentlemen who pull the wires in Ontario, to have a tremendous demonstration made in those constituencies which the hon. gentlemen, temporarily perhaps, control. I saw a list of meetings to be held advertised in the Globe, and I found that in one of the constituencies—that of the hon. member for North Ontario, who has already electrified the audiences there by his eloquence—five meetings were to have been held. those meetings I have not seen any account. They were mainly Grit caucuses. There were meetings held elsewhore. There was one in London. There is nothing easier in the world than to get up in a large town, like London, a meeting of a political party. I am aware that that was largely attended, because the hon, member for West Durham, the leader of the Opposition at present, addressed it with that skill and eloquence for which he is celebrated, and in a manner which he would not venture to attempt in this House where there is some one to answer him. Although the hon, gentleman had a large audience there, it might be said the very next night an overwhelming audience attended to hear the hon. Minister of Railway's reply to him, and my hon, friend was compelled to take that_ method, because, I regret to say, my hon friend from West hours at least, in this House and elsewhere, in discussing the Pacific Railway question, felt that he would not permit anybody else to occupy the attention of the meeting on any one evening and divide it with him, or whether he felt that he would not exactly like to face the Minister of Railways on the same platform, I will not pretend to say. Then came Hamilton. My hon friend there had an audience, and there made an address, and there he failed to fire the popular heart, and I fancy the city of Hamilton stands very much in the same position that it did before he appeared there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He did not "enthuse worth a cent."

Mr. PLUMB. No, not worth a cent. Then there was a meeting in Toronto, at which the hon. Minister of Railways was quite prepared to meet the hon, leader of the Opposition, but again he declined. He said it would be inconvenient to have two gentlemen, both requiring a good deal of time to enunciate their views, occupying the platform on the same evening. My hon friend, the Minister of Railways, may be satisfied with having had the reply, although it was the next evening, and I, for one, am perfectly willing to leave the effect of the speeches of the hon. leader of the Opposition, replied to by the hon. Minister of Railways, to the good sense of the people who heard them, and to the good sense of the people of Ontario who read their reports. There were other meetings. I understand, although I have not the official report, that there was a meeting in Kingston. I believe that the meeting in Kingston was not so satisfactory to the late Finance Minister as to cause him to spend a very merry Christmas, or to come back to this House with any addition to that amiability which characterizes his disposition. Then there was a meeting in North Wentworth, held by the hon. member for that constituency (Mr. Bain), and at this meeting I understand that the hon. gentleman was hoist with his own petard; that while he went to obtain an endorsation of his denunciations of the Government scheme, he found that the people whom he called together to curse it, agreed to bless it altogether. Then, I believe there was a meeting in Muskoka, where the eloquent gentleman who represents that riding (Mr. Cockburn), hoped to receive renewed strength from his constituents, with which to oppose the mea ures of the Government. Unfortunately, the people of Muskoka did not seem to see the question in the same light, and my hon friend will, I have no doubt, feel himself bound, when he comes back, to support the Government measure, because, according to the theory of hon. gentlemen opposite, massmeetings, irresponsible mass-meetings, meetings of reople called together without any reference to their being voters or not, are to govern the action of Parliament. Hon. gentlemen, therefore, who called those mass-meetings for the purpose of hearing a decision as to what their course shall be, must be held to be governed by them. I must say that is not the constitutional theory. We have the power here. It is delegated to us, and we are responsible for our use of that power, and no mass-meeting that may be held, however great the agitation may be, unless we can take cognizance of the condition of those who hold that meeting, unless we know it is the authenticated voice of the people, can have any effect upon the decisions of the Parliament, which has the knowledge of the subject it discusses, which is supposed to understand thoroughly the questions it has before it; and I think it is an entirely new theory that, during a Session of Parliament, members should go back to the country and expect to come here instructed by the kinds of meeting which the hon. gentlemen opposite have got up. But I must say that the whole scheme concocted so diligently, as shown by the circulars sent throughout the country, has had such a result that I do not think my hon. friends opposite have spent a very, merry Christmas.

Sir JOHN A: MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. PLUMB. Well, we may say that it is proper for hon, members to go back to their constitutents, under such circumstances, and to confer with them. I have no doubt that there is a perfect propriety in their doing so, and I would commend to the attention of hon, gentlemen opposite course pursued by the hon, member for Hal-That hon, gentleman called a meeting of his tituents together. His course was endorsed ton. constituents and lauded very much by the leading organ of the Opposition in advance; but it happened that the meeting which was a representative meeting, composed of gentlemen of both parties, failed to instruct the hon. member to propose, in any way, any change in the terms of the contract. They suggested that he might ask for some modification; but when he pressed the question as to whether he should insist on those modifications or vote against the contract, they did not instruct him to insist. I do not know what course will be taken by the hon. member, but I have no doubt that, having the largest liberty allowed him by his constituents, he will feel that in supporting the Government measure he will be sustained by both parties in the district he so ably represents.

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PLUMB. I imagine that there were reasons which moved my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. Cameron) to make the harangue he has made to-day. I do not think it is worth while for any hon, gentleman on this side to follow that hon, gentleman through all his arguments. There are some points he has made to which it may be proper to refer before going into the question more generally, and, as his utterances are fresh in the memory of the House, I will briefly refer to a few of the points he dwelt upon. His principal points were those which are discussed wherever any discussion is held on the subject throughout the country. They had reference to the Syndicate proposed to be created, to the monopoly given them, to the exemptions from taxation and the inordinate land subsidy. The hon. gentleman a little out-Heroded his leader when he stated that the value of the concession, in respect to the exemption of taxes on lands, was equal to $52,000,000. I do not know what basis the hon. gentleman has for his argument; I do not know where he begins, and it is very difficult to meet him on any question in which he does not give his predicate. It may, however, be safely asserted that the exemption from taxation terminates at the end of twenty years. It may be safely stated, also, that there is no expectation that the road which the Company intend to construct, will be finished under ten years; consequently they will be only exempt from taxation for the ten years after their road is constructed. The same statement may apply to the monoply which is given them, and the provision concerning rival lines. monopoly is but for ten years, as a rival company could not take their business from them before the road was built, and I think, therefore, the provision is a reasonable one, one which no company that intended to carry out its contract would consent to have stricken out. The hon, gentleman says that the immunity from taxation upon the roadway is worth $15,000,000. In that he is a little under his leader's figures. His leader says it is worth $27,000,000. I do not know on what basis either of these hon. gentlemen argue; but I can say this, that the Northern Pacific Railway, which is a line very much of the same character as this, which has been largely subsidized by the American Government, and which has privileges, I think, upon the whole, much more extensive than it is intended to give this Company, has this exemption: "The roadway shall be exempt from taxation within the territory of the United States. Now, my hon. friend, a little while ago, attempted to argue that that exemption would cease when these territories became States. I do not think that anything could have a less substantial foundation. I am not, of course, a constitutional authority upon the creation of States, but I think that they must accept all the conditions which the United States Government imposed on territories while they were in the condition of territories. I admit that it is quite improbable for the United States Government to exempt that railway, for instance, through the State of Minnesota. It could not do it, and it did not do it; nor could this Government exempt the corporation which is now to be created from exemption from taxation, through the Province of Manitoba. There is no power to do it, unless the Province of Manitoba were compensated. Now, in regard to the question of taxation, which seems to be the one which has more immediately engaged the attention of my hon, friend from South Huron (Mr. Cameron), I am enabled to make a statement which will be of some importance to the discussion. The question came up in regard to the Northern Pacific, whether the land which had been given to the railway could be legitimately the subject of taxation, and it is thus stated in the Report of the United States Commissioner, relating to taxation and exemption therefrom in 1875:

"Upon the ground that the 'railroad is a public work, established by public authority, intended for public benefit, the use of which is secured to the whole community, and constitutes a public easement,' Chief Justice Shaw founded a decision, rendered in 1842, in the case of the Western railroad corporation, exempting from taxation such land as it had power to take by right of eminent domain."

The roads which were then chartered had the right to enter on the lands of individuals and take those lands—a right which my hon. friend the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) knows very well as the right of Eminent Demain, one which is granted by a general law of the State of New York to any company which may choose to fyle a certificate with the Secretary of State, and deposit, I think, the sum of $1,000 per mile for the number of miles for which they show a profile and map. They could go anywhere in the State of New York and take any man's land upon those simple conditions; and yet we hear hon. gentlemen talk of the enormous privileges we are giving to this Company in granting them the right to build branch lines, to enable them to reach such of their lands as may not be upon the main route of the railway. But we find that the right of Eminent Domain has been exercised in the State of Massachussetts. Chief Justice Shaw says:

"We find that said lands and the structures thereon are reasonably incident to the support of the railroad, or to its proper or convenient use for the carriage of passengers and the transport of commodities. A strip not exceeding five rods in width was at that time all which a railroad corporation was authorized to take without the consent of the owner; and subsequent statutes have confined the exemption within that limit."

Now, in respect to the Great Northern Railway, to which my hon. friend has referred, here is the section of the Act under which that railway was chartered:

"There is hereby granted to the last-named company, its successors and assigns, twenty sections of six bundred and forty acres each of the unappropriated public lands of the State for each mile of railroad which has been and which may hereafter be constructed pursuant to the authority conferred by the said Act of August 5th, A.D. 1870; and the said company, its successors and assigns, shall have the right to locate the said lands as head-right certificates were formerly located, without being under obligation to locate alternate sections for the State. And the said lands, and the certificates issued therefor, are hereby exempted and released from all state, country, town, city, municipal, and other taxes for the period of twenty-five years from the date of the respective certificates issued therefor."

Now, in our case, the moment the certificate issues, the moment the land which we propose to give this Company is occupied, that moment taxation falls upon it. But under the law of the State of Texas:

"The said railroad company, and its successors, and its and their capital stock, rights, franchises, railroads constructed and to be constructed pursuant to the Act of August 5th, A.D. 1876, and this Act, rolling-stock, and all other property which now is or hereafter may be Mr. PLUMB.

owned or possessed by said company, or its successors, in virtue of the said Act of August 5th. A.D. 1870, is hereby exempted and released from all State, county, town, municipal, and other taxes, for a period of twenty-five years from the 5th day of August, A.D. 1875, except county and municipal taxes in such counties, cities and towns as have donated their bonds to aid in the construction of said railroad; but this exception shall not remain in force in favor of any county, city, or town which, having thus donated bonds, shall make default in the payment of either the interest or principal."

Now in respect to the laws of Minnesota it is stated:

The said company shall be for ever exempt from all succeed the territory, or by any county, town, village, ot other municipal authority in the territory or State upon all stock in the 'Minnesota and Pacific Railroad Company,' whether belonging to said company or individuals, and upon all its franchises or estate, real, personal, or mixed, held by said company, and said fand granted by said 'Act of Congress hereby authorized to be conveyed to the said Minnesota and Pacific Railroad Company shall be exempt from all taxation till sold and odiveyed by the said company."

In another General Act of Minnesota there is a clause of this kind:

"Public and railroad lands sold, to be certified for taxation. The Auditor of State shall, on or before the first day of April in each year, obtain from the local land offices in the State, and from the several land-grant railroad companies, lists of lands sold or contracted to be sold during the previous year, and certify them for taxation, together with the various classes of State lands sold during the same year, to the auditors of the various counties in which such lands may be situated. He shall also at the same time obtain lists of lands reverting to the railroad companies each year by reason of the forfeiture of contracts, and certify the same to the respective county auditors for cancellation of taxation."

They even go back after the sale is made, and if the sale falls through, the taxation is cancelled. In the laws of Wisconsin it is enacted that:

"The track, right of way, depot grounds and buildings; machine shops, rolling stock, and all other property necessarily used in operating any railroad in this State, belonging to any railroad company, are hereby, all and singular, declared to be and they shall henceforth remain exempt from taxation for any purpose whatever, and it shall not be lawful to assess or impose taxes upon any property before named."

Now, the evils of subjecting any large corporation to the exactions of municipalities, such as may be created in the North-West, are strikingly exemplified by an authority which, I have no doubt, will be accepted by the Opposition side of the House, an authority which I always quote with pleasure, and which I am almost always able to quote in support of any position which I may take on any of the public questions of the day, and whom I can usually quote against himself. This gentleman says:

"I presume we shall be told that these persons purchasing the land and holding it for speculative purposes in the North-West, will speedily be compelled to relinquish that line of action, through the operation of non-resident taxation. I have no doubt that when township organizations are effected in that country, when thirty or ferty settlers have proceeded to form a township organization and find themselves surrounded in every direction by the lands of speculating non-residents, whose operations are retarding the growth of the country, very likely the lands of the latter will be taxed heavily. Such things have come under my own observation in the United States. I have known cases there where school houses have been built where there was no school population; I have known where roads and bridges were built at a cest to the tax-payers, feur times as great as their actual cost. I have known where rascality has been perpetrated, and onerous taxes inflicted upon non-residents for the purpose of forcing them to sell their lands. Likely such taxation will be resorted to in our own case, but I know, further, that such a state of things is productive of the gravest consequences. It saps the foundation of political morality—I hold it would be very difficult to say how large a proportion of political rascality that prevails in the west originates in that very state of things. The resident land-holders saffer from high taxation, as well as the non-residents, and I think it is a said commentary on the wisdom of the Government that they propose to remedy one evil by introducing another."

That hon, gentleman who so deprecates the placing of any one in the power of municipalities, I have said, is an authority on the other side of the House that will be readily accepted. I hoped to have heard him on this question to day, but he is unfortunately absent. I may, however, in an argument of this kind, produce a statement made by himself, which will probably contradict any utterances he may have made on a public platform since he left the House of Commons. That gentleman is the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). He further says, that the idea of putting a high value upon lands belonging to the Government is atterly absurd. He states that the United States, from 1792 up to a recent date, had only realized from the sale of their lands a sum so insignificant that, if I did not know that he was an adept in figures, and an authority on the other side,—if I did not know that he had furnished the lender of the Opposition with the briefs from which he has given us such volumes of figures,—if I did not know that the late Minister of Finance had expressed publicly his obligations to him for the advantage he derived from the use of his figures, I could scarcely venture to bring forward the authority I now introduce. He says:

"In the United States, it has been a common practice to estimate their public lands as worth a fabulous sum, a value as high as $1,000,000,000 has been placed upon them. Commencing in 1796, I find statistics which gave a very correct idea of the actual money value of the public domain. In the United States, there has been surveyed up to the the 30th June last, 734,501,236 acres, and there remained, of the public domain, sower 700,000,000 acres exclusive of Alaska. The total amount received for lands, sold from 1796 till the 30th June, 1879, was $204,547,812. If we deduct the expense of management, probably not far from 15 per cent., but let us place it at 10 per cent., it gives an average of $2,216,707 annually. New $44,338,120, capitalized in 1796 at 5 per cent., or $55,417,650, capitalized at 4 per cent. would have represented to the United States the value of its public domain up to this time."

The hon. member for North Norfolk states that the whole extent of the lands in the hands of the United States Government, that enormous domain which begins in Ohio and extends beyond the Mississippi, an estate of boundless empire, more fertile than any other part of the world lying between the same parallels—where the greatest varieties of growths take place-produced the enormous sum from 1796 to 1879, which capitalized at 5 per cent. would be $44,338,120, about one-third of the sum which the leader of the Opposition says will be received by the Syndicate for their grant of land. Viewed by the light of common sense, and touched by the touchstone of truth, the argument of excessive land subsidy crumble; away and is not worth a moment's notice. But, Sir, these hon. gentlemen, who spent the whole of their time last year, and the year before, in decrying the resources of Canada, who told us that Canada was so sunk by the policy of the present Government that she could never rise again, and that all the resources she could offer for the building of the Pacific Railway were of no more avail than if she could only offer ten dollars—these hon. gentlemen have taken a sudden turn, a more sudden turn than was taken in 1847 by the editor of the Hamilton Spectator, who said: "It was a pretty sharp curve, but he would take it." These gentlemen with the same assiduity, and I suppose with the same sincerity, are now trying to prove that the resources of Canada are so great that you are giving one hundred or one hundred and fifty millions.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Two hundred millions.

Mr. PLUMB. Or, two hundred millions, just as you like to take it, for the construction of the Pacific Railway. Well, Sir, we are told by an American poet, with perhaps a little more truth than poetry, in regard to certain gentlemen who change their opinious:

"A merciful Providence fashioned us holler,
That we might very easily our principles swaller."

It is a little awkward, I have no doubt, for the hon. gentlemen; but I must say that they take their dose without making very wry faces, and I congratulate them that a mercifal Providence did fashion them "holler," for they have to swallow more, I think, than they expected when they became the followers of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). It reminds me of a cortain Texas railway, which has such curves that the passengers who are going in one direction are astonished to see their friends in another part of the same train going in an opposite direction. They are obliged to follow, providing the train does not link they became of this kind, because the position of gentlemen opposite has been so unfortunate, they have been compelled to oppose, except those who have been on our side at one time, and have gone over. Up to a certain period they may have had a record, but they have been compelled to sink or swim with their unfortunate brethren. Those gentlemen by a certain accident got into power—and it was nothing more than an accident—but they have shown that they have never learned any wisdom since; they imagine they can make an agitation now that may bring them back to it. To use a homely illustration, they occupy a position similar to that get off the track, and I think that in the train of gentlemen who are following the erratic lead of the hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) a good many of them will be snapped off the track by the breaking of the connections or the couplings. These hon, gentlemen, ever since the election of 1878, have been assuming an attitude hostile to every measure of the Government intended for the tenefit of the country. The hon. Minister of Railways, when he laid before to the House the commitments of these gentlemen, exercised, I fear, a little too much of that optimism, which he sometimes shows, when he imagined that these gentle-men would feel themselves bound by their record and would support his measure. I could not believe that any possible proposition which the Government could bring before the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House would meet with their acceptance. No matter what the Government proposed, it was condemned beforehand. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, was in such haste to condemn the scheme that he made a hypothetical attack upon it in the debate on the Address. He spent two or three hours in condemning a contract, the provisions of which he knew nothing. That was the judicial frame of mind in which the hon gentleman came to discuss this question. The gentleman who occupies the seat next to him could hardly be expected to take any other course than the one he has taken. I have already adverted, and in terms of just indignation, to the ted, and in terms of just indignation, to the manner in which that hon, gentleman dared to address this House when he got up to oppose the measure introduced by the Minister of Railways; and I believe I was in accord with every member on both sides of the House, with the exception of the hon gentleman himself. I then said, and said truly, that all we wanted was that the hon. gentleman should go through the country and take the stand he took on that occasion, and we were willing to take the case as it stood, without defending it on our side. The bargain before the House is not, perhaps, one which any hon. gentleman would have made if he sat on one side of a table without another party opposite; this is not the contract which hon, gentlemen would make, perhaps, while sitting quietly in their libraries; but it is a contract which had to deal with actual facts and actual conditions. They owe it to the position taken by the Opposition press throughout the country, they owe it to the studied denunciations which those gentlemen have indulged in ever since they were thrown into Opposition. I can say of them as they say of a party in the United States - when the country sinks that party rises, and when the country rises that party inevitably sinks. It has been misfortune of the gentlemen sitting on the Opposition the benches, and I really sympathise with them in that position, that they have been compelled by the course of events to oppose every measure for the benefit of Canala which has been initiated within the last 20 or 30 years. Look back at the Grand Trunk project, at the scheme of Confederation, at the Intercolonial, look at the acquisition of the North-West, which was due to the far-reaching statesmanship of my right hen, friend, and that would be a monument were there nothing else to insure him the highest honor in the memory of a grateful country. Look at the first Canadia Pacific Railway project, at the National Policy, and now look at the scheme brought down. Every scheme of this kind, because the position of gentlemen opposite has been so unfortunate, they have been compelled to oppose, except those who have been on our side at one time, and have gone over. Up to a certain period they may have had a record, but they have been compelled to sink or swim with their unfortunate brethren. Those gentlemen by a certain accident got into power—and it was nothing more than an accident—but they have shown that they have never learned any wisdom since; they imagine they can make an agitation now that may bring them back to it. To use a of a little pet terrier I once owned. He seized a rat that once came out of a hole, and, with the instinct of his race, watched at the same place for seven years to see if another rat would emerge from it; and I do not know but he may have been watching there ever since. To come to matters that are a little more serious, I think it will be proper and parliamentary, and I think I shall not be at all out of order if I assume that, taking the utterances of the leader of the Opposition, I can, at the same time combine the arguments of the hon. member for North Norfolk, (Mr. Charlton), who is absent, and the hon member for South Ontario (Mr. Glen), who was in his place a few minutes ago, but who is not in his place now, because it has been acknowledged by the foremost members of the Opposition that those gentlemen have furnished them largely with the facts and figures which they have used. We all know that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition is an eminent special pleader. We all know that he speaks from a brief. He has a perfect right to do that, but we have a right to question the sincerity of those arguments which are able to be represented with equal eloquence on one side or the other, according to the nature of the retaining fee. saw, the hon. gentleman last year at variance with the hon. gentleman this year. We saw the hon, gentleman last year making a most eloquent speech in one direction; we see him now with his brief before him making an equally eloquent speech on another side of the question. I do not know, of course, how much is due to the junior counsel who have placed the brief in his hands, but in speaking to him I consider that I am, at the same time, speaking to that zealous young convert (Mr. Glen) who is now in the House for the first time, and who did not honor us with his presence for the first two years, for some inscrutible reason, and to that veteran warrior, Mr. (Charlton) who has made figures for years back, and can make them with equal facility on the one side or the other.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Protection or Freetrade.

Mr. MILLS. The Premier can do that too.

Mr. PLUMB. It reminds me of an anecdote of a distinguished statesman of forty years ago in Canada, who, during the administration of Lord Sydenham, when the union of the two Provinces was agitated, made a most eloquent speech against that union. It was a speech so forcible and convincing that it won for him the highest reputation throughout the Province of Ontario. The next year, Lord Sydenham having died, Sir Charles Bagot succeeded him, and the statesman made a speech on the opening of the Legislature, taking exactly the opposite ground. He made a strong appeal for the union of the Provinces, and after he finished was congratulated by his friends, who said: "It's the finest speech ever heard made in Parliament; we never heard anything more convincing." He replied: "Yes, it was a good speech, but you ought to have heard my speech last year." My hon. friend's position, compared with his position last year, exactly corresponds with the attitude taken by that eloquent gentleman forty years ago, so that history repeats itself. But my hon friend says he is not bound by any utterances he made last year. He has enunciated an entirely new view of political morality. always supposed that the record of party leaders was something that we could refer to when we were discussing great party questions. My hon friend, with one stroke of his sponge, wipes the slate and obliterates his record for ever. Now, I do not think the hon. gentleman will find the public, or even his own party, will acquiesce in that kind of argument. I do not think my hon. friend will be sustained by some portions of his party, for I believe there are some of its members Mr. PLUMB.

who prefer principle to anything like the chance of following that hon, gentleman to any position of success. They prefer to remain true to the principles which have actuated them, for I believe that principle goes before interest with a great many of them. I do not think they would accept that hon. gentleman's position and follow him to its logical consequences. Why, Sir, in the speech which was made in this House on the 15th of last month by the leader of the Opposition, he stated distinctly that he did not consider himself bound by his previous utterances. These are almost the very words he used in this House, and then he proceeded wholly to reverse his position and tactics—to take back everything to which the party had pledged itself-to which the gentlemen sitting behind him had pledged themselves by vote after vote in this House with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway. He claimed that he had a right to ask those gentlemen to follow him in an absolute negation of everything which had been agreed upon by the late leader of the Opposition, who, from the bottom of my soul I pitied. Little reason as I had to do so, still I sympathized with him when I saw him sitting opposite, bound hand and foot, gagged in that chair from which he had frequently given us, at least the utterances of a man who felt he was dealing with great questions in an honorable, straight forward and consistent way; and then I quite understood how it happened that the cabal that had been fomented against that hon gentleman had been carried on. Yes, I quite understand that when that hon gentleman, who, I believe had devoted himself to his party, was so unfortunate as to lose a battle, he was turned upon as the meaner animals turn upon one of their fellows which has been wounded and devour him. I have been told something about the secret history of the caucus when that hon gentleman was summoned without notice—and after an ad misericordiam appeal to his followers which somewhat weakened my sympathy for him, because it robbed his cause of much of the respect which it would otherwise have received—when he was called to the meeting which was to sentence him to political execution, he did not go. I saw him in the lobby of this House while that meeting was going on, and I know one or two of his friends who refused to attend that meeting. But of the rank and file who had been ready as a mechanical majority to follow him any where, who would, in fact, ruin him by their subserviency, there was scarcely a man who was so poor to do him reverence. I believe if there ever was a case where party ingratitude will be visited upon a party, it will be in that case; and I can see the writing on the wall to-night. That hon. gentleman had, so far as his lights were concerned, attempted to carry forward the obligations resting upon the country. That hon, gentleman's policy had been impaired by the half-hearted support of those who ought to have acted with him. In fact, one gentleman belonging to his Government had made an immoral coalition with him by appearing to favor schemes of the Government to which he was in secret antagonism from the beginning. All those difficulties that hon. gentleman had to cope with, and he bore the brunt with a manly fortitude which claims for him the kind of respect which he always gave to an open manly foe, and entitles him, certainly, to the gratitude, at least, of the party that has deserted him in his utmost need. Following the Government which had been overthrown in 1873, he felt himself bound by the same conditions which had bound his predecessors. He attempted, in his own way, to be sure it was not an effective or efficient way, to implement the engagements which had been made when British Columbia was received into the umon, and I may venture to quote here, with a very considerable degree of reverence to so great an authority, the statement which was made by the hon gentleman who now sits on the Opposition side, and which confirms me in the idea that it was considered most important by the leaders of that party, except one, to carry out their engagements. The hon.

gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) said, on the floor of the House, in 1876, as reported in Hansard, page 188:

"When negotiating a loan in England in 1875, the first questions put to him were: What is your policy respecting the Pacific Railway, we know perfectly well that you have been engaged on an insane project, that your resources are inadequate to carry out the engagement you have made with British Columbia."

They took that from the hon, gentleman's speech in 1874, and were quoting him against himself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. PLUMB. They were queting his Budget speech in 1874, against that celebrated circular which the hon. gentleman issued when he went to England to negotiate his first loan, when he ceased to be brazen, and tried to transmute himself into a metal which was not so base. The hon. gentleman further said:

"And it is our duty to tell you that you have two dangers before you. If you say you are going to carry out your engagement no man will believe you or trust you. If, on the other hand, you repudiate them you will sink to the position of the repudiating States of America. And because, he, Mr. Cartwright, was able to say that the Government of Canada while not proposing to do unprobable things, were, however, perpared faithfully and honorably to redeem their obligations, and had imposed an additional tax of $2,000,000 in order to do so, that he had succeeded in this transaction."

And yet hon, gentlemen tell us that the Pacific Railway was to be constructed without imposing additional taxes on the people. Now my hon friend, the leader of the Opposition, has made a most exhaustive speech to the House; it is only one of three or four, because he has had several parliamentary speeches running at the same time. He has found it convenient to make a speech on the general question, and a speech on each several separate but cognate motions to keep himself going. These three or four speeches might have been condensed into one. Like a mitrailleuse, he has been firing forty or fifty shots at a time, and we have heard the grumble and growl of his ordnance very much as the Secretary of Count Bismarck used to hear the growling of that French ordnance, like the noise of a coffee mill, while he was travelling with his chief, within hearing of the din of the battle field of Sedan. My hon, friend fully extended himself in the arguments he brought before the House in reply to the hon. Minister of Railways on the resolutions before us. I spent between six and seven hours of steady reading to get through with that speech. I think it might be boiled down into three or four propositions. They are, chiefly, that the terms are excessive, that the lands are worth a great deal more than ought to be given for the purpose, that the excessive terms granted for the building of the railway across the prairie will injure the construction of the other two ends,—although the hon gentleman tells us, at the same time, that there is an enormous profit in building both those sections at the ends, and I do not believe it is in human nature to give up those sections if there will be a profit in building them. He has a good deal to say about the monopoly given in the building of branch lines and prohibiting rival ones; but after all objections are made, even such wretched objections as the one to the clause that the Government will give the Company four per cent. on any deposit that it will leave in the hands of the Government—the objection being that money may be cheaper some of these days, and the suggestion made that it be deposited instead with some of the banks, perhaps some lean companies-after making all these objections he says that if the Government, at this last moment, would accept the policy of building the Sault Ste. Marie road, connecting with the Northern Pacific at Duluth, through American territory, his chief objections would vanish.

Mr. BLAKE. No; I did not.

Mr. PLUMB. Well, I am glad that the hon gentleman upon reflection does not feel quite satisfied with his position. I see that five or six pages of the report of his speech in the Hansard, are occupied in urging the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie line; his whole argument tended in that direction; he was willing to concede everything that is being granted to this Company, if we would only subsidize a line to the Sault, and give the Northern Pacific Railway of the United States the privilege of taking our people across the line and thus prevent a monopoly! The hon, gentleman says: You can have a very good steam vessel line from Fort William to the Sault, because -and this will astonish some people, I fancy—Lake Superior is open longer than any of the other lakes. The hon. gentleman should know that the harbors on that lake are closed weeks before those on the lower lakes. An hon. knight who sat beside him when he delivered his Toronto speech, could have informed him that the summer traffic in grain from the North-West never will be satisfactory; that the grain of that country is so damp when first harvested, owing to the peculiarity of the climate that it must be transported in the autumn and winter. The hon, gentleman goes on to say that whereas the other Government may have proposed to give 55,000,000 acres of land and \$30,000,-000 of a cash subsidy, we must drop these items out of our consideration, that they amount to nothing; that we propose by this contract to give \$25,000,000 in cash, \$28,000,000 in finished road, which makes \$53,000,000, and 25,000,000 acres of land, which, at \$2, would raise the total to \$103,000,000. Or, says the hon. gentleman, if we take the value of the land at \$3.18 per acre—a valuation which has been evolved from some mysterious source—it will be over \$75,000,000; or, if in round numbers, \$4 per acre, it will come to \$100,000,00). The hon, member for South Huron, (Mr. Cameron) gets still higher. He values the land at \$5 per acre—or, in the aggregate, at \$125,000,000, which with the subsidy and the furnished road would be \$178,000,000. I was about to say that up to the present moment that was the sum total we are to pay, according to the calculations of the hon gentleman opposite; but I am reminded by an hon. member of one element in this mathematical problem which I had entirely overlooked. The capitalized value of the exemption from taxation of the land, says the hon. member, amounts to \$52,000,000, and by that amount must the already enormous aggregate be swelled. Chairman, I told you at the outset that you must familiarize your mind with big figures in listening to the discussion of this question, and especially with its discussion from an Opposition point of view. These hon, gentlemen, if I remember aright, did not arrive at such enormous totals last year when they spoke about the condition of the country. Then they were looking through the reverse end of the telescope, but now they seem to have a magnifying glass of 10,000 horse power -at least when they come to look at the bargain with the Syndicate. Another objection they make—namely, that four per cent. interest is a rate that should not be allowed. I think the hon. member in making that remark was rather severe upon the hon, gentleman next him (Sir Richard Cartwright). When that hon, gentleman was negotiating his loan of £3,000,000 in 1876 he was willing to take  $87\frac{1}{2}$  cents in the dollar. He represented, and the people were led to suppose, that he was only paying four per cent. interest on that loan, but when I produced the tables which are used both in the United States and England in calculating the present value of any stock bearing a particular rate of interest, I showed that he was paying five per cent. The hon. gentleman said that that statement was worthy of the member for Niagara—that it was not worth the paper on which it was written. I have only to say, that, if the hon, gentleman has not found, the people have found, that the rate he was paying was five and not four per cent. I think, Sir, that the arrangement with the Syndicate is, in that respect, a very safe one; and that we will not be asked to make any further allowances to them on that score. If we are, it will only go to show that Canada has attained a measure of prosperity under the present Government which was certainly not to have been expected when hon, gentlemen opposite were in power. The leader of the Opposition commenced his speech with a facetious remark, which was not new, but which was, however, greeted very cordially as an old friend by members on both sides of the House. He said that the speech of the Minister of Railways was one which he had often heard and admired. I have no doubt that that speech was a repetition of facts and figures which are familiar to this House. I have no doubt, but that the sincerity with which the Minister of Railways addressed the House, convinced every body that those were the facts and figures that he had been accustomed to deal with in this House. The hon, gentleman does not take the position that he may make one statement this year and another statement next year, and not be held by the statement made the year before-and the hon. gentleman, having all the facts before him, and being bound by the accuracy with which he was obliged to present a great question of that kind, not being able, as the hon. gentlemen on the other side seem to be, to invert his facts, had necessarily to present them in a form with which the House is familiar. My hon, friend's next position was ably answered by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), in which he spoke of the apotheosis of my right hon. friend the leader of the Government. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe properly said, while my right hon. friends might be looking down upon the passage of the railway trains, it was possible that other hon. gentlemen who were criticising him might only hear the rumbling of those trains passing over their heads, and I thought that was a good retort to the hon, gentleman for his ill-timed facetiousness. He dwelt with great emphasis upon the condition of the Union Pacific Railway as the model upon which the Government is to insist upon the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is perfectly easy to understand that the road as constructed was the road as built. A constructed road is not a road in the process of construction. It is well known that when the Union Pacific Railway was in the process of construction it was often necessary to run it 100 miles in a hasty manner to reach the necessary ballast, and to carry supplies and labor, and its construction was often for a long distance in a condition that would not admit of a large traffic. But in the year the hon. gentleman for South Huron (Mr. Cameron) was talking about, that road was earning \$15,000,000. It would have been impossible for any road carrying a traffic like that to be in unworkable condition; it would have been against the interests of the people who built the road, for it would have been strewn with wrecks. The hon, gentleman knows it is for the interest of a railway company to build the best road it can afford to build, and to have it upon the best alignment, the best grades and curves, and if the road-bed is built, in the first instance, with bad grades and curves, it is a source of loss to the company. If this road has been largely subsidized, that is the best reason in the world why it should be a good one. It is the best reason in the world for those people who have got to compete with lines outside of Canada, for building a good road. There will be no monopoly, it is out of the nature of things that there can be a monopoly if the terms of this contract are fulfilled. Other western railroads largely subsidized in the United States are running through populous districts. This road has got to make its population, and it can only do so by offering easy means of getting in and out of the country. It can make no business until it offers to the population better, or at least as good advantages as the roads that lay to the south. They are all competing for the same business, they all want to populate the country along their lines. Our Syndicate have got to send emigrants into the country, and to take their freight in and bring it out at such rates as will give them the traffic as against \* Mr. PLUMB.

the Northern Pacific and other lines. Those are just as much competing roads as if they all ran through our territory. Those hon, gentlemen urge the argument that this road has got an immunity against competition within our borders for 20 years. They must remember that that immunity only extends for 10 years after the road is to be completed, and what madness it would be for these men to go and build that road while other people might go in and build another road alongside of it if they chose. safeguard is absolutely necessary to the existence of a road; it is absclutely a condition precedent to any company that did not intend to cheat and defraud the country with which they made the contract. It is one of the best evidences of the sincerity of the Syndicate that they have insisted upon such terms. They did not come here intending to trifle with this great undertaking. They knew perfectly well that they had secured to themselves alvantages, and I hope they will be real advantages. Every man in this House should wish these people to make money out of their enterprise; they deserve it, and I do not begrudge one shilling they may make, because I know the Government of this country will profit dollar for dollar by the value of every acre of land by the building of that road, I do not forget that it is asserted by the Globe, and by hon. gentlemen in this House, that there are from 175,000,000 to 200,000,000 acres of land, out of which only a paltry 25,000,000 acres will be given, which will benefit in the same ratio as the lands belonging to the Government. I am confident the public will take the arguments of the hon. gentlemen on the other side at their true worth. But, I repeat, it is the policy of the Company to make the best line. All this talk about the Union Pacific Railway has been simply scandalous upon the part of men who should understand something of the first principles of railway traffic. I can show you a statement by one of the ablest statisticians of the United States, published in one of the first Reviews in England, which shows that the greatest railway monopoly in the United States, which is the New York Central Railway and its connections, not only a monopoly but under the dangerous control of one single man, has brought freight rates down to a point which is almost incredible, simply by the fact that he had vast capital in his hands, and has laid four steel rail tracks, upon which trains can run eastward and westward in a continuous line. The writer says there would be no danger if all the railways in the United States were under the control of one man. He has got his interest to protect, and it must done by improving the road and giving it every possible advantage for cheap working. You cannot keep a railway idle, and the more freight you can put upon it the better is it for the country. It is not a question as to whether you are going to charge high prices for a small business. That is like the old postage system of the United States. When they charged 18 cents for a letter going 150 miles few letters went by mail, but the instant they put postage down to three cents they got enormous revenues. That principle was not discovered until Rowland Hill discovered it in England. It is the interest of all railways to lower freight, that they may secure larger earnings. There is no transhipment, and that is where the saving in long routes is enormous. Heavy freights, such as cereals, will not bear transhipment, and this is where the railway will have great advantage over broken water lines of communication. Mr. Edward Atkinson, the gentleman whom I quote, and who is an authority which will not be questioned by hon. gentlemen opposite who believe in the Cobden Club, says:

"The object of this paper is to prove the vast saving of labor that has been effected in the eastern portion of the United States by the extention of the railway system to the west in procuring bread and meat at less and less cost. * * *

"Before the use of the railway, and even down to a later date,—before the great railway systems of the country were consolidated, and worked at the low rates that now prevail,—it was necessary for the people of New England to work arduously for bread alone. Brown bread made of Indian corn constituted the staple food in many farmers' families; white or wheat bread was a luxury.

Then he goes on to show that the first advantage from the railways was the bringing in of anthracite coal, which enabled farmers to clear their forests; and the next advantage was that the farm lands in the State of New York, which were devoted entirely to wheat culture were, in consequence of the introduction of the wheat from the west, released from that culture and more profitably cultivated for other purposes. That will apply to these provinces by the same rule of reason. He then goes on to say:

" The secret of these changes in the sources of our agricultural supplies "The secret of these changes in the sources of our agricultural supplies is, that the railroad has eliminated distance. A barrel of flour, and a barrel of pork, or its equivalent, constitute the substance of Western farm products needed by each adult in the East. The two barrels are equal to 500 lbs.. or a quarter of the net ton in which our railway traffic is computed. This quantity is now brought from Chicago to Boston, one thousand miles at an average of $1.25; sometimes for less, or at the rate of $5, or $1.50 lbs. or $1.50 lbs. Or $1.50 lbs. or £1 sterling, per ton of 2,000 lbs
"We might therefore state an economic equation in these terms:

"The movement of one year's subsistence of grain and meat for an adult working-man a distance of one thousand miles is equal to $1.25 or 5s., which sum is equal to one day's wages of a common workman, or half the daily wages of a good carpenter or mason.

"Half to one day's wages, one thousand miles, and the movement of one year's subsistence, are synonymous terms. One day's pay places the mechanic of Massachussetts next door to the Western prairies a thousand miles away.

"The same terms of the equation may soon be applied to the distances beyond Chicago towards Minnesota, Dakota, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska because grades are easier, fuel is more abundant, and, as population and traffic increase, two days' work of a common laborer in Massachusetts will soon move a year's subsistence of corn and meat fifteen hundred or two thousand miles from far Dakota and from the plains of Nebraska; one name still designating a Territory, the other the last but one among the States admitted to the Union. At the present time the rates of freight west of Chicago are much higher than between Chicago and the seaboard. seaboard.

"In Dakota, on the Red River of the North, wheat is manufactured in some fields, where each single furrow of the plow is said to take a day to run without once turning; and from these fields the wheat is now brought in millions of bushels, upon which there has been no manual labor, except to direct the machinery, from the time the seed was planted in the field until the bread is cut upon the table of the factory operative in

"On the whole it may be said that the charge for moving wheat from the Red River of the North to Liverpool has varied during the past season from $17 to $22 per ton of two thousand pounds, and that there is reason to expect such improvement that the average rate will be $16 to $20 or 48 cents to 60 cents per bushel."

He then shows that the effect of the opening of railways in the west is constantly to cheapen transportation; and I quote these arguments to show that the railway we have under consideration is to be governed by exactly the same conditions as the railways of the United States. Company cannot raise money on their road unless they have a good road, because there has been too much experience of roads that have been hastily constructed by contractors for the sake of floating their securities, and there would be such a ruinous discount exacted upon such securities that it would destroy the operation in the very beginning. This Company has to compete with other roads in the same business, and that fact, I think, does away effectually with any danger of monopoly. And when their line runs to St. Paul, they are, so far as they are concerned, in a cul-de-sac. They may have a road behind them of a thousand miles, but they have got to find an outlet to the sea-board, and when they get their freight down to St. Paul they must find an eastern connection, and they are not mad enough, for the sake of their Minnesota line, to deprive themselves of that necessity, even if there was any suspicion of want of good faith in the carrying out of the contract. But the lesser is always included in the greater; their own interests are the best guarantee of their bona fide conduct. Everybody knows that it is impossible to guard a great contract like this in any way so effectually as by the self-interest of the parties concerned in it. I am quite satisfied, therefore, that the country will sustain us—first, to examine it the roughly, and to take any instruction which in taking this scheme out of the region of politics; may be useful to us out of it. We can reject any we do and next, in our postulate that these gentlemen are bound by every consideration of self-interest, to carry out the contract in the way agreed upon between them and the Government. When the dust which has been raised in the country has subsided, the country will acknowledge that this contract is a monument of the far-seeing wisdom of the present Administration. I think we can wait with great confidence for the development of events, and these gentlemen who imagined that they were going to create an agitation in the country that would produce a change of Government, will find that we have three very good years in which to prosecute the construction of that railway and to develope the National Policy, and, by that time, the advantages of both will be sufficiently rooted in the hearts of the people to deprive these gentlemen of any chance of reversing either. Mr. Atkinson goes on to say:

"It will also be observed that, while thus profitable to its owners, the New York Central Railroad system, or consolidated line, does the largest amount of work at the least cost, probably carrying ten million tons in 1879; and that it is the controlling factor in the movement of meat tons in 18/9; and that it is the controlling factor in the movement of meat and grain from west to east.

"It follows that the great cheapness that has been attained is not temporary, but permanent; and that increase of traffic, within certain limits not yet found, is marked by decrease of cost.

"From the statistics of 1878, just compiled, it appears that the average charge on all merchandize over the New York Central Railroad and its connections, was only 0.81 cents per ton per mile.

"There is much contention in this country in regard to the railroad corporation as a factor in our own politics, and much complaint is made in respect to alleged monopolies; but it will be observed that the great lines against which this charge is made—to wit, the systems consolidated and designated as the New York Central, the Eric, the Pennsylvania, and the Baltimore and Ohio-may also be named and designated as comprising the specific miles of railroad on which the largest service is done for the community at the least relative cost.

"It would matter not if all these lines were consolidated, even under one man's guidance. The same rule would control him that now controls a constant shatement in the charge, constant improvement in method, and constant reduction in cost of operation. The rule is that it is not the competition of rail with rail that controls or limits the charge that may be made for their use, but the competition of product with product in the great markets of the country and of the world. No man, and no combination of men, can permanently prevent this competition working its just and beneficent results in the wider distribution of the elements of subsistence, in the abundant consumption of which material prosperity consists."

Now, I say that is an answer which is as complete as anything can be to the whole cry about the monopoly of any particular line. The argument there is: that it is product with product, not railway competing with railway, but that the products themselves can only be raised upon such conditions that they can be put upon the railway and shipped, and they would not be raised otherwise. These gentlemen would cut their own throats if they attempted to make charges which would obstruct the products of the North-West and obstruct in any way the traffic over their road. They would be equally insane if they attempted to run a rival line, as proposed by the late Finance Minister, to 480 miles already given them. He suggested that they would build a road, to rival their own, round the south shore of Lake Superior, forgetting, or not remembering, that his hon, leader had just proposed that line as being the great panacea that was going to cure all the ills of the country. We hear a good deal about the condition of railways in the United States The hon. member for South Huron asserted that we ought not really to look so much to the United States. While it was very well, undoubtedly, for him to adduce any argument in respect to the United States system which would bear on his side of the question, he deprecated very much our using any which would strengthen our position in any way; but I think as the United States system is the only one which is analogous to ours, as it is the growth of a condition of things which we hope we shall see in our country, we have a right-in fact, it would be wrong in us not to take that course-to compare that system,

I produce a list of the cost of not like. those roads in the United States, in any system that would compare with ours, showing the amount of the Government subsidies, the amount which those roads have earned, the cost per mile, the rate of earnings and their capital; and that statement, which is in a condensed form, I will now read to the House, for the purpose of showing that any estimates of the cost of building and operating the Canadian Pacific Railway, when compared with that of analogous roads in the United States, will show that the subsidies proposed for it, instead of being out of reason and extravagant beyond all experience, as denounced by hon. gentlemen opposite, mean nothing more than a reasonable allowance to enable the Company to construct and permanently operate that road. The leader of the Opposition estimates the cost of operating that line at $6,000,000; but the Chief Engineer has put it at $8,000,000. Out of that must come at first the limited traffic upon the road. But if I base a calculation upon that amount and capitalize it, I could capitalize it at a much larger sum than either of those gentlemen has arrived at, extravagant as their figures have been for any concessions to the road outside the subsidy. In fact, the road will be without doubt at the outset a very considerable charge upon the resources of the gentlemen constructing it. They must create the traffic on their line and encourage it, and go to a large expense in developing it, and that will add very largely to the cost of operating the line. Hon. gentlemen opposite say those gentlemen are going to build the line with basswood and cotton-wood ties; but that would largely increase the cost, and not only that, but destroy the profits, and ruin it as a profitable means of transportation. The statement which I will now read, is as follows:-

This State gave a very large land grant, capital and bonds, $415,777,140; yet, hon. gentleman declaim very forcibly over a subsidy of $25,000,000 given by the Dominion of Canada. Freight charges are cheaper in that State than in any other, I believe, except over the New York Central. With respect to the railway system of Illinois, I happen to know that when the system was largely developed, the whole of the money for building those roads was furnished by eastern capitalists, and there was not stock enough held in Chicago to form a qualification for the local directors.

A reduction in transportation has being going on for five years in Massachusetts which fairly represents the north-eastern States, a reduction from $3 per ton per mile in 1871 to $2.4 in 1876. Ohio fares average, for western States, $1.82 to $1.12. New York fares average, for middle States, $1.77 to$1.19. There was a net return in 1876 upon the railway capital invested in the United States of three per cent. I think a little familiarity with figures like these will probably teach hon, gentlemen opposite that there is a good deal in the fact and very little in the theory. I have read statements which show that there are investments of over $200,000,000 in railways in one small portion of the western States, which are penetrated by roads in all directions, and that these roads have cost an average of almost $40,000 per mile.

Mr. MILLS. With watered stock.

Mr. PLUMB. The hon. gentleman can probably show how the stock was issued; it will not weaken my argument. These prairie roads have cost on an average $40,000 per mile, and at this moment they are not paying more than 21 to 3 per cent. There have been large fortunes made by a few people; there have been large losses made by the great aggregate of the people who had invested in railways, but the enormous advantages which have accrued to the public have more than compensated for any loss which any private individuals may have sustained. There are such conditions imposed upon railway companies, that they must do the business, and do it at the lowest rates at which they can carry the traffic over the lines. That is a statement which cannot be contradicted by any one whose opinion is of any weight as a railway authority, and it brushes away half the cobwebs which have been thrown in front of this contract to mislead, deceive, and hoodwink the public. The contention has been made that the Government should build the road across the prairies. Hon, gentlemen have suddenly discovered that this is an easy thing to do; that many capitalists are waiting and anxious to take hold of the work now that responsible people have taken hold of it in good faith. They say that it is madness to throw away such vast subsidies on this contract, that the Government should confine themselves entirely to building the prairie sections, for the purpose, so far as I can judge from the arguments of the leader of the Opposition, of feeding the Northern Pacific Railway, and of finally carrying traffic from our own territories into those of the United States. We have had some experience in operating railways of our own. A few figures will show the condition of the Intercolonial Railway while it was in the hands of the hon. gentlemen who are now so anxious again to control the affairs of the country. In 1876 the total cost of that road with equipment was $35,131,134.21; interest at five per cent, $1,756,556.71. In 1877 the cost was $35,682,249, interest $1,784,112.45. The total cost in 1880, with equipment was $38,365,719.60, which, with interest since 1876 amounted to $45,526,827.34. The loss on operating this road for the year ending 30th June, 1877, was $507,228.10, and the interest at five per cent. for three years was $76,084.23. For the year ending 30th June, 1878, the loss in operating was $432,326.78; for the year ending 30th June, 1879, the loss was $716,083.53, and the interest for one nosota, 167 miles, received 368,274 acres. The Illineis year at five per cent. $35,804.74. Up to that time, as will be seen, the coonomies of the hon. gentlemen opposite had been pretty well exhausted, and the extravagant and reckless management of the present Minister of Railways had begun to be exemplified in the working of the Intercolonial. The consequence was that the loss for the year ending 30th June, 1880, was $17,131.23, as against $716,083 for the year before, $432,000 for the year before that, $507,000 for the year before that. Lest there should be any doubt about these figures I will quote from an authority which will not be contradicted by hon, gentlemen opposite, that of a gentleman whose antecedents are well known, and who is not likely to make a statement any more favorable to our party than to the other. In the report of the Auditor-General for 1880, the following figures appear: The earnings of the Intercolonial, Prince Edward Island and Windsor Branch for 1880, were $1,739,137.25; the working expenses, $1,851,489.26, leaving a loss of $112,352.01. Increase of earnings in 1880, $319,181; decrease of expenses in the same year, $382,007.08. gross expense of operating the Dominion Railways exceeded the net earnings in 1879, to the extent of $112,352, and in 1874, under the economical management of the hon. gentleman opposite, they were $513,540, leaving in favor of 1879-80, as against 1873-4, the sum of $101,188.73, which is to be credited to the reckless, extravagant and improvident Government which succeeded the economical administration which preceded it. I have a memorandum here which will throw some light upon the manner in which the Government of the United States have dealt with land grants, and the privileges and immunities which they have given to the roads to which they have extended aid. There is a road called Corpus Christi, Santiago and Red River Road, in the State of Texas, and as that State has been recommended to the notice of the public by an hon. gentleman of the other side, I will begin by stating the great liberality with which that State deals with railway corporations. The State of Texas granted to this road, which is a narrow-guage read, 16 sections of 640 acres each, something over 10,000 acres per mile. The Flint and Pore Marquette Road in Michigan received 3,840 acres, as an incidental grant only, upon 283 miles of local line. It was a mere gratuity, as that is not a through line, having no particular claims upon the public liberality. The Grand Rapids and Indiana Railway received 1,160,000 acres for 446 miles of railway. The Missouri and Pacific Road, for 425 miles, received a State bonus of $2,000,000. The New Orleans and Mobile Railway of 141 miles, received from the State of Louisiana 3,000,000 acres of land, while the Government subscribed $2,500,000 and endorsed second mortgage bonds to the amount of $12,500 a mile, and the city of New Orleans granted in perpetuity the use of the depot grounds worth $1,000,000. Mississippi and Alabama exempted it from all taxes for ever. These are grants to one single road. The Orleans and Baton Rouge and Vicksburg, to the eastern terminus of the Texas Pacific, received 20 sections of lands per mile, with the privilege of selecting it 40 miles on each side of the road. It had a capital of $5,000,000, with bonds of $30,000 per mile. The American Fork Railway from Deer Creek to Utah got a large subsidy from the State, though the grades were 297 feet per mile and the curves 129 feet per mile. There they did not regard grades and curves exactly in the same way as they are regarded by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, who practically know very little about building railways or operating them. The West Wisconsin Railway of 177 miles, received 6,400 acres per mile and was exempted from taxation for 20 years. The Wisconsin Central, 325 miles, received 800,000 acres. The Lake Superior and Mississippi, 169 miles, received 920,000 acres. The St. Paul and Pacific, 207 miles, received 405,000 acres. The Sioux City and St. Paul Railway, 121 miles, received 927,000 acres of land. The Southern Min-

Central, 455 miles, received 2,595,000 acres, and the State gave it on the condition that the railway paid 7 per cent on its net earnings. That was in a centre of a populous State where there was no sort of hazard about getting in population, and the road was prosperous from the beginning, yet it received from the State that large amount of land which had been granted to the State by the United States. The payment of seven per cent. on its net earnings was the price paid the State Legislature for the grant. The Atchison, Santa Fé and Topeka Road, 470 miles, receive! 6,400 acres per mile. The Oregon and California, 200 miles, received 3,500 acres per mile. The Houston and Texas, 505 miles, received 10,240 acres per mile. The Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fé, 45 miles, received 16 sections to the mile, or about 11,000 acres. The Burlington, Missouri and Nebracka, 2.9 miles, received 2,462,208 acres. The St. Joseph and Western, 227 miles, received 599,000 acres. The Mobile and Ohio, 472 miles, received 856 sections per mile. The Texas and Pacific, from Shrieveport to Sandiego, 1515 miles, which is a new road across the Rocky Mountains, received from the United States Government 9,520,000 acres of land, and from Texas 18,000,000 acres. The Missouri, Kansas and Texas, 786 miles, received 6,817,-742 acres. St. Louis and Iron Mountain, 604 miles, received 1,803,948 acres. The International and Great Northern Road, 236 miles of main line and 283 miles of branches, received 5,000,000 acres of land free from taxation for 25 years. The hon, gentleman had a good deal to say about grades and curves of railway. The Denver and Rio Grande road, largely subsidized, has a grade of 369 feet to the mile, and attains an elevation of 9,339 feet above the level of the sea. The United States granted to the Pacific Railways 20,000 acres to the mile, and these railways received financial aid from the United States, including interest, to the extent of $91 637,928. To other than Pacific Railways there have been granted altogether 37,504,087 acres of land up to 1876, and to the Pacific Railway 150,281,766 acres. I think the terms of this contract which are said to be so excessive will compare very favorably with those granted to American railways. Now, any figures made use of by hon. gentlemen opposite are used on the principle of the sliding scale with respect to the value of the lands. We, I think, can safely say that we will accept these figures, or any other figures they name, as the value of our lands; but we must insist that when they state their figures they will allow us to couple with them the statement that, whereas we are giving 25,000,000 acres, they offered to give 55,000,000 acres, that whereas we are giving $25,000,000, they offered $10,500 a mile, or, including the twenty-five year charge as exemplified by the Foster bid, $17,500 a mile; and every gentleman who sat in the House from 1874 to 1878 as supporters of the late Government, accepted these terms. The Government of that day advertised for tenders upon them, and they must have taken a contract and undertaken to build the road upon them if they were offered as the lowest responsible No gentleman who sat on the side of the House from 1874 to 1878, can escape that responsibility. No matter how he may attempt to swallow his principles, the public will not allow him to digest them. I have proved, I believe, that the gentlemen now on the Opposition benches were sincere in their intention to build the railway in accordance with the terms of the agreement with British Columbia. That is shown by the utterances of the late Finance Minister when he attempted to negotiate his loan in England, and when he assured the English public that the country would carry out its engagements, and therefore its credit was not wrecked. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) in 1875, I think about the time the hon. gentleman who is now leader of the Opposition, after having pursued a very erratic course in his support of that hon gentleman, was about to re-enter the Government, made use Mr. PLUMB.

"Last year we took an estimate altogether, as will be seen, of about two and a half millions of dollars. At that time we were quite uncertain what arrangements might be made with British Columbia. We proposed at that time, if satisfactory arrangements could be made with that Province for an extension of time in accordance with the negotiations entered upon, to proceed immediately with the construction of the road from Esquimalt to Nanaimo, and in that case a very large expenditure would have been necessary, as we should have done a very large proportion, including the rails of that portion of the road, within the financial year. These arrangements, however, fell through, and although an ultimate arrangement was reached by which that work will be prosecuted after this, at that time there was nothing to justify us in refusing to make such preparations as might be needed in the event of our coming to some terms with that Province."

What did he do afterwards? He sent rails to the Island, and afterwards, on the eve of the election of 1878, he transferred these rails to the mainland. Why did he do that? Can it be assumed by the gentleman who followed him that he stooped so low as to carry these rails to the mainland in order to influence the election in British Columbia. I believe he was acting in good faith in that matter, and that he intended to carry out his agreement with British Columbia. But the question now before us is one for the future, one that is of pressing importance. We are called here at an unusual period of the year, to consider the greatest and the gravest subject which can be presented in one measure to the people of this Dominion—a question which is to affect their destinies for all time to come-and I am sorry to say that gentlemen opposite have come to the consideration of this question filled with party bitterness and party prejudice, have come here to prejudge the contract upon statements which have been circulated during the last tew months without the slightest knowledge of what the terms of this agreement were to be. What do we suppose has been the knowledge, then, of those assemblages whose opinions have been quoted and are to be quoted; whose petitions are to be presented here, got up by the caucus of the Opposition, in this very House of Parliament, and sent broadcast, exactly as the resolutions that have been made and put in the hands of gentlemen who spontaneously attended those meetings and spontaneously offered those resolutions that had been cut and dried before they went out from the Capital. What do we suppose will be the judgment of those who had already been committed by the blind force of the Opposition in which they are placed, to prejudge this matter? I say we are here for a more solemn object than the discussion of party questions or fomenting of party differences, and I was sorry to find that the leader of the Opposition was the man to give the keynote to the arguments which we are to hear on the other side. Every man who has risen in his place subsequently has repeated his lesson like a parrot which has been taught him by the leader of the Opposition. Every argument has been repeated monotonously. The same statements have been made by the gentlemen on the platform in the harmless agitation in western Ontario. Every one of them has taken up the question not with the fairness which its gravity demands; not in a patriotic spirit. It seems to me, and it must seem to the public at large, that patriotism is sunk in party feeling. I regret to say that that spectacle has been presented to us year after year, for those gentlemen have been forced by the events of 1878 into the humiliating position which they now occupy—a wrecked party carried to its destruction mainly by the very men who are now leading it further and further into the slough of despond; and I can see for it no regeneration, no hope, so long as it clings blindly, obstinately, persistently and blunderingly to the course it has pursued, and which has brought upon it the ruin which it deserves. What is to be the alternative? We are to accept this proposition, which I believe to be a perfectly fair. one; which is, Sir, it is true is not exactly what any man, if he had the power to make a bargain for himself on his own side, without anybody else on the opposite side to interfere with him, would have made; but a bargain which, I believe has been made conscientiously by the leaders of our party in the best interests of the country, and which, I believe, during its discussion and investigation in this House, will commend itself more and more to the calm, unprejudiced judgment of the people of Canada. I say we are either to accept that, or what are we to do? We are to pass a vote of want of confidence in the gentlemen who lead this great majority in the House of Commons, and we are to throw ourselves into the arms of our friends on the opposite side; we are to have a repetition of the blunders which increased, year by year, during 1874, '75, '76, '77 and '78, until the day of regeneration dawned, disastrous blunders from which the country is slowly reviving, and we are to be put back again-we are to reverse the engine-we are to put ourselves back into the power of the master of deficits, we are to put ourselves into the hands of the gentlemen who made railway contracts with parties before they had surveyed a foot of the line so placed under contract, we are to put ourselves back into the hands of men who went to the country and demanded a renewal of the confidence which had been blindly given to them on the ground that they were building the western part of the Pacific Railway for $24,500 per mile, when it was patent on the records of the Public Works Department that it was costing from $37,000 to $40,000 a mile, and badly built at that; we are to put ourselves into the hands of gentle-men who stood by with their arms folded and said that they were flies on the wheel, and Canada must drift on to its destruction because they could not put out their hands to help our struggling industries. Those are the alternatives. On the one hand, we believe that we are doing our duty to our country when we use every possible means in our power to bring about the acceptance of this contract; and I believe for one that I can justify it before my constituents and the people of Ontario. I am prepared to take it up clause by clause to day, and meet on the platform any gentleman of the Opposition who chooses to invite me to meet him, and I do not think there are many of them who will care about doing it. I will defend it clause by clause and line by line in the shape in which it is now presented to the House, and I believe those gentlemen who oppose us are just as much mistaken when they think they have the country with them as they were in 1878, when they walked blindfolded off the precipice and were told the very day before the election they would gain 13 seats in Ontario in which they lost 36 seats. I believe that the gratitude of the people of Ontario is due to the untiring efforts which have been made by my right hon. friend, (Sir John A. Macdonald), from the day of the great statesmanlike act which gave us the North-West Territories at a mere song-for £300,000 sterling, one or two cents per acre—from that day we are indebted to his prescience and forethought for the plan which now comes before us in its maturity and is presented for our acceptance. I believe he is right in saying that he is willing that it should be his monument. I believe the whole people of Canada will respond to him when they come to understand what is the effect of this arrangement which he has made—they will respond to him and sustain him as they responded to and sustained him in 1878. The hon, gentlemen need not flatter themselves that their time is coming. I know perfectly well that when they swapped horses in the middle of the stream, and exchanged a little Scotch Gallowaysomewhat rough-haired and hard-monthed, perhaps, and who occasionally stumbled, but on the whole did his work steady and cheerfully-for an Irish thoroughbred ready to bolt and refuse his first fence, they thought they were going to succeed, but they were mistaken. He is already looking at our mangers and whining for his feed. The corn is in Egypt, but it is not for him, and he will have to wait outside of the barrior for more than the term of this Parliament, and more than the term of another Parliament, for when three years have rolled round, and we shall have seen the effect of this arrangement, and the people will have learned to understand it, and the people on his side will have crushed away the sophistries which the hon. gentleman has raised with an ingenuity that enables him to make the worse appear the better reason; when the echoes that have been made through the country, under his auspices and direction, have died away in the earr of the people—there will be that sober second thought which is often quoted, and which hon. rentlemen talked about the year after the election, and which we have olection seen exemplified in every that taken place for a member of Parliament since—and I should like them to show by the record any reaction; that reaction is yet to take place, and it is to set in in our favor. I believe it has been the misfortune of those gentlemen to stand in an obstructive position, compelled as they have been to stand against this party; it has been their misfortune which has proved their ruin, and it is a misfortune which they cannot escape unless they accept the flag of truce which the hon. Minister of Railways held out, and return at the last moment and vote with us as a solid phalanx for this contract, and show the world the evidence, that they at least on a great question like this can forget party. I trust that as this discussion goes on every objection which has been urged will be met, - objections which have found undoubtedly some response in the minds of our friends, for we do not pretend to be a mechanical majority.

Mr. MILLS. You are, nevertheless.

Mr. PLUMB. We pretend to be men who can think and reason on subjects of this kind, and we intend to think and reason on them. When we give our support to a measure of this kind, we intend to give it intelligently, and I believe that every point in this contract is one which we can justify before the country and to ourselves; and I believe that the hon. gentlemen who suppose there will be any sort of difference on this side of the House in sustaining the policy of my right hon. friend and the gentlemen who sit with him, will reckon without their host. They will find when the result occurs how egregiously they have deceived themselves and failed in attempting to deceive the public.

Mr. MILLS rose to address the House.

Mr. BLAKE suggested that the House should adjourn, as it was now 12 o'clook.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said it would not be doing justice to an hon. member of the position of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to press him at this late hour to proceed with his speech, and therefore he would yield to the suggestion of the leader of the Opposition. At the same time, he must say that this was a matter which required as early action as possible, consistent with a fair and full discussion of the subject, and that if this measure for good or evil is to be law, the sooner it is the law the better. He had given notice to-night that after routine this subject should be continued de die in diem; in the meantime he would at once accede to the proposition that the hon. member for Bothwell should have every opportunity of fully expressing his views on this question.

Mr. MILLS moved the adjournment of the debate.

The Committee rose and reported.

House resumed; and (at 11:35 o'clock, p.m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS FOR PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. DREW moved that the time for presenting petitions for Private Bills having expired, the same be extended to Tuesday, the 15th day of February.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were severally introduced and read the first time:-

Bill (No. 10) to remove doubts as to the true construction of Section 12 of the Northern Railway Act of 1877.—Mr. McCarthy.

Bill (No. 11) to incorporate the Saskatchewan and Peace Rivers Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Beaty.

COURT OF RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. McCARTHY introduced a Bill (No. 12) for constituting a Court of Railway Commissioners for Canada and to amend the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this Bill intended to apply to the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. McCARTHY. If it has the good fortune to pass the House, I suppose it will apply to the railway to be constructed by the Syndicate as well as to all others. The Bill is the same, with a few alterations, that I introduced last Session. I did not, then, bring it to a second reading, because I thought that, considering the importance of the interests to be dealt with, it was prudent to give time to the country to consider the proposed measure. Upon the whole, I think, the Bill was received with considerable favor. I have received many communications urging me to bring the Bill before the House this Session. It proposes to constitute a Court of Railway Commissioners to be appointed by the Governor in Council, and to consist of three gentlemen, one of whom is to be a railway expert, another to be skilled in the law, while the qualifications of the other are not defined. These Commissioners are to have power to deal with all matters relating to traffic arrangements, to difficulties arising between railway companies, between railway companies and individuals or municipalities, and it is intended to transfer to the Commission nearly all the powers which are now possessed by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, It is copied, largely, from the English Statute, which has been in force since 1872, and which, I think, has given satisfaction to all but the railway companies, though doubtless faults have been found with it. I hold here the statement made by Viscount Sandon, lately the Commissioner of the Board of Works, who stated, as a member of the then Government of Lord Beaconsfield, that he believed the law had given satisfaction, and that the Government proposed at an early day, not merely to extend the law, but to confer larger and additional powers upon the Railway Commissioners. He said:

"I ought to remind my noble friend that we have already intimated that the Government attaches great importance to the continuance of the powers of the Railway Commissioners, which they believe to be highly valued by the commercial community of the country."

In the neighboring States this subject has also received much attention. A valuable report was presented to the Assembly of the State of New York, in which the results of evidence taken as to the present system and the want of Mr. MILLS.

matters which this Committee reported as requiring legisla tive interposition were these:

"A proper unit of shipment should be fixed. The practice of sharging more for a short hall than for a long hall should be forbidden; the grafting of enequal or preferential rates should be forbidden; the making of secret rates and the giving of drawbacks and returns to rate purpose should be forbidden; and your Committee are of the opinion that the Legislature may safely go to this extent without infringing the proper distriction and elasticity of management which railroad managers must of management which railroad management which rai

And again:

"It seems to your Committee that the wrongs that exist may be ameliorated, if not corrected, by introducing into the determination of these questions a public element which shall give to the public interest a consideration which this evidence shows it does not now receive; and to that end we recommend a Commission, to be composed of three individuals, with power of investigation and recommendation."

These extracts will show that the bills reported by that Committee, one in favor of a Railway Commission and the other amending the law relating to traffic arrangements, were considered worthy of consideration. About the same time, a similar bill was introduced into Congress and referred to a Committee. I think I may say that the evils that exist in this country, with regard to undue preferences given by railway companies, unfair traffic arrangements and secret bargains, exist still more largely in the United States than here. The House will remember that last year the railway companies were particularly active in petitioning against this Bill, and in writing in opposition to it in the Press. I have read several of these articles, and I do not think the reasons urged against it are entitled to much weight. I do not mean to say that there should be in this Bill anything of a nature to confiscate railway property, but we must remember that railway companies have now become the great highways of commerce. They have taken the place of the ordinary Queen's highway, the old original highway which was under the control of the Crown and the Government; and it is absurd to say that because individuals have constructed those roads, that they are to be beyond and above all legislation, and beyond the control of Parliament. I think we must acknowledge that the rights which have been delegated to railway companies are used, as all such franchises should be used, mainly and chiefly in the public interest; therefore it is that I introduce this Bill. I may say that the matters which I think require legislative interposition may be summarized under the following heads: There is no doubt that in many cases railway companies charge exorbitant rates, and there is no doubt that they do so contrary to the law new on the Statute-book; but there is no power to enforce the law. We have copied into our Railway Act a provision found in the English Act as early as 1845; but in the Act of 1845 they empowered their Court of Common Pleas to carry into force the provisions of the clause which is called the equality clause. We have the equality clause in substance, but we have no means of enforcing it. That is one matter which I think only needs to be stated to induce us to act in regard to this subject. Then as to undue preferences. It is probably within the knowledge of most hon. members that railway companies attempt to injure, if not individuals, yet certain towns and villages, by giving other towns and villages rates which they decline to give to those equally entitled to them. A recent instance of this came under my own observation. A railway company endeavored to stand in the way of a rival enterprise, one for the conveyance of goods by water, and threatened the projectors of the rival enterprise the locality which was to cut into to have the benefit of cheaper rates in the sum-mer, It is not right that it should be in the power of common carriers to discriminate against one tewn, and cut rates in favor of another. The enormous amount of money invested in railway companies may perhaps, be urged as a reason why we should not deal with them in the way I legislation were briefly summarized. Amongst other propose. Let us deal with them in all tenderness. I do not think we should do anything to destroy their interests; but I find by the last report of railway statistics, that of the $360,000,000 or thereabouts invested in railways or railway enterprises, the people of the country, either in the shape of Government, local or municipal aid, have contributed no less than $90,000,000, and I think we should see that that money should not be used to the detriment of the people by whom it is contributed. Railway companies can do as much injury by neglecting to afford proper facilities for the conveyance of freights and by delay as by exacting high rates. At present the public are entirely at their mercy; they can carry what freights they choose, and at what rates they choose, or not at all. The opposition they give to new and rival enterprises is another of the reasons which have induced me to bring this Bill before the House. I ask the House now to allow it to be read the first time. I have no doubt that on its second reading we shall hear from that part of the House who represent the railway interest, and then I shall have something more to say in defence of this

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does the Bill affect the official arbitrators, or say who shall replace them?

Mr. McCARTHY. The Bill does not propose to deal with the official arbitrators at all. It proposes to transfer the power now possessed by the official arbitrators to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Bill read the first time.

THE SUPERANNUATION FUND.

Mr. KEELER enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to appoint a Special Committee to enquire into the state of the Superannuation Fund, the working of the Act, &c., as was proposed last year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the intention of the Government to appoint a Special Committee, as we have a Royal Commission that will shortly conclude its labors on the whole question of Civil Service reform, including the subject of superannuation. The Government must have the report of that Commission before they can say what further action they will take.

WATER POWER ON THE WILLIAMSBURG CANAL.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Lanark) moved for the engineer's report on the cost of increasing the water-power of the Williamsburg Canal.

GRINDING OF WHEAT IN BOND.

Mr. WHELER, in moving for all Orders in Council and departmental regulations for the grinding of wheat in bond in the Dominion of Canada since March 14th, 1879, said he submitted this motion to obtain information on a subject of great importance to farmers and millers throughout Ontario. He wished to obtain reliable returns of all the wheat imported into Canada, during the period mentioned, for milling purposes. It seemed that up to last Session the Orders in Council did not cover the importation of wheat for grinding purposes-that is, any other wheat could be substituted and ground by millers, to cover the bond. An Order was issued requiring that wheat imported should be ground into flour and exported; it was dated 24th April last. He asked the Minister of Customs to explain the mode he adopted to ascertain whether the wheat so imported was converted into flour and exported. He was told that, under the present Order, wheat could be imported and sold contrary to the terms and intentions of the Order in Council, If so, the Order should be amended, as it worked great injustice to our farmers and millers in the if the Order in Council was carried out as it should be. It interior. The millers on the frontier could avail themselves was claimed by hon, gentlemen opposite, in the elections of of this importation of foreign wheat to make profits at the 1878, and even at the last elections, that this duty on wheat expense of their competitors to the rear. The millers in the interior could not avail themselves of the privileges of this Order, as they had to pay freight by the railways into the interior and forward again to the markets. As an illustration, he might say a miller in Port Hope could import wheat, sell it or the flour therefrom at a profit, or export it at a profit; but the miller in Peterborough would have to pay 5 cents a bushel to bring wheat to the mill, and 5 cents to forward it again to the front, to be even with the miller at Port Hope. Therefore the Peterborough miller was excluded entirely from the benefits of this Order in Council. The Order was, then, a wrong one, as it discriminated in favor of the frontier millers. In 1878, when the question of a duty on grain from the United States was being discussed, pending the elections, many of the farmers voted in favor of the candidates advocating the views that this duty would be beneficial; in fact, the support given them was sufficient to elect a large number and change the Government. Immediately after the elections the change was made that placed the present Government in power. They brought down their measure, which was considered by the House; whereupon a large number of the millers along the frontier waited upon the Minister of Customs and obtained this Order, so as to allow them to import grain. These regulations have been changed from time to time, but he did not now claim they were perfect, for he was under the impression that great injustice was being done by the present system. He hoped the Minister of Customs would be in a position to inform the House how he ascertained whether the grain actually imported is ground and exported. He (Mr. Wheler) was informed there was only a certificate given by the importer. He thought the regulation should go further than that; that there should be a bond on the part of the proprietor of the mill as additional security. It was almost impossible for the proprietors of those mills to make a declaration, showing whether it was the actual product of the wheat that was placed in their mills. Under these circumstances, a change should be made so as to make it positive and leave no room for doubt. There were only a few millers along the frontier who availed themselves of the credit for twelve months of the fifteen cents per bushel on the wheat imported. A merchant had to pay the duty in cash before he could obtain his goods; while these millers along the frontier could import their wheat and keep it in their mills for twelve months without paying duty, waiting for the markets to rise. A change should be made that would place all classes of merchants on the same footing. Again, the quantity of wheat imported is computed at the rate of a barrel of flour for every five bushels. My opponent at the last election stated this was the computation. I may be incorrect; if so, I am open to correction.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is incorrect in stating that the Order in Council requires the product of five bushels of wheat per barrel of flour; it requires but four bushels and thirty-five pounds of wheat to the barrel of flour.

Mr. WHELER said it was claimed in his county by his opponent, Mr. Gibbs, that a barrel of flour should be returned for every five bushels of wheat. If that was the case, onethird of the wheat so imported came in free of duty, and took the place of the cheap grains-oats, peas, corn, &c .- of the farmers of this Dominion. This, he thought, was very unfair. Most of the farmers understood a tariff was placed on all kinds of grain coming from the States, so as to enable them to obtain increased prices for their grains. Canadian millers were to-day importing American wheat, who had not done so up to the time this duty was imposed. He could understand what privileges these millers had to induce them to import wheat now, would prevent all kinds of American wheat coming into this Dominion, and the millers would have to purchase their wheat at home. Messrs. Ogilvie, of Goderich, and others, were named as parties who would be large purchasers of Canadian wheat, thus causing markets to be established in every village and town in this Province. Until a short time ago, our farmers were under the impression that no wheat could be imported into Canada without paying the duty. He hoped the Minister of Customs would be in a position to give the House information which would satisfy it that no wheat could be imported for sale on our markets without paying

Mr. BOWELL. I am sure the House, and more purticularly the electors of North Ontario, will be gratified to learn that there is a new convert to the principles of the National Policy. The hon, gentleman could have obtained most of the information he asks for if he had taken the trouble to read the Orders in Council which have been published in the Official Gazette. I have no objection whatever, for the information of the House, to bring these papers down, in order to show what has been done by the Government in respect to the bonding of wheat. When the tariff was introduced, the bonding of wheat, for the purpose of grinding it into flour to be shipped to foreign markets, was accepted, if I recollect aright, by both sides of the House. This was done in order to assist millers in obtaining wheat to manufacture into flour to be sent out of the country, so that they would have all the employment for their mills they formerly had. Then the Order in Council provided that all wheat imported and manufactured into flour would be admitted in bond, and the flour so manufactured, or its equivalent, must be exported. During a portion of that time, wheat being much dearer in the western States than in Canada, no injury arose to the local miller or the farmers of this community; but as soon as the prices fell in the western markets, it was represented to the Government that in the case of American wheat brought into the country and kept, in some cases, for a length of time—in others it was put on the market at once—until the end of the year, when the bond had to be released, either by payment of duty or an affidavit that the product of that wheat or its equivalent had been shipped out of the country -the millers took advantage of this concession to export the product of Canadian wheat instead of the product of the imported wheat. The Order was therefore changed, and it now reads that the product of the wheat which is imported and manufactured into flour must be exported; and the miller who imported the wheat must give an affidavit that the flour exported is its product. But a difficulty has arisen in regard to flour in transitu at Boston or Portland for the Maritime we have found it necessary Provinces, and demand an affidavit from the shipper or the agent in Boston that the flour which has been brought to the port and re-shipped to the Maritime Provinces is the flour received from the mills in Canada. I am not aware of any other means which we can adopt to ascertain the flour is the product of the imported wheat; and if the Order in Council is evaded, it is evaded by making a false affidavit. The hon gentleman complains that the inland miller has not the same advantages which those millers have whose mills are situated near the canals, on the borders of the lakes, or upon the frontier. A little reflection will convince the hon. gentleman that the Government cannot frame an Order in Council so as to overcome the disadvantage at which the inland miller is placed in that respect. The question is one of carrying facilities and not of Customs regulations; and if a man goes to New York or Chicago and buys grain and has it ground at mills on the shores of Lake Huron, he will certainly not have to pay so much freight as, say, the millers in North Ontario. No Government or individual can provide against a dieadvan-Mr. WHELER, wheat should be placed in precisely the same position as the interchant who imports any other goods and places them in bond that he has an advantage over the grocer or the dry goods merchant. The hon member is quite mistaken on that point. The merchant who imports goods and desires to put them in bond, is permitted by law to allow them to remain in bond for two years, and if a particle is not marketable, application may be made to the Groceinment which in almost every case allows the goods to Government, which, in almost every case, allows the goods to remain in bond for a longer period. In the case of wheat, the importer is restricted to twelve months; and it may be a question for consideration whether he should not be restricted to three or six months. Besides this, if a merchant has goods in bond he has a right to export them at any time, on application, without paying the duty, whereas the importer of flour has only twelve months in which to have his bond released. The hon, gentleman says that people are importing wheat now who never imported it before. Well, I have not the slightest doubt that there are a larger number of men doing business in the country to-day than were doing business two or three years ago, and it is to be hoped this will continue to be the case for all time to come. I see no way in which the Government can, or ought to, interfere in a matter of this kind. If millers are extending their trade, and others are engaging in the milling business, who did not do so before, then that fact is simply one of the numerous great advantages of the National Policy.

Mr. WHELER. I referred to one of the oldest millers in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. BOWELL. Very probably that gentleman, like others who formerly did merely a local trade, has made sufficient money to justify him in engaging in a large export business, and is now buying his supplies of grain in the western States. That is one case which no Tariff, no Government—not even the hon, gentleman himself—could regulate. I hope that will continue, and that the older millers will extend their business under this policy, and bring wheat enough from the western States to keep their mills going throughout the year. If they do that, one of the objects of the present Tariff will have been accomplished, and that is one which hon, gentlemen should not find fault with. When the regulations are brought down they will show that when wheat is imported into this country it must be manufactured into flour, and that it must be the product of that wheat which is exported, or the wheat itself. If there is any infraction of these rules, and if American wheat, or flour manufactured from American wheat, is put upon the Canadian market, then the duty must be paid unless the importer makes a false affidavit.

Mr. MILLS. The hon, gentleman says that there are certain things which it is impossible for the Government to accomplish. It is rather singular that at the time of the last elections those hon, gentlemen did not admit any disability of that soit. They contended that any Government who could not correct effects of that kind, regulate prices, and always secure good prices to the farmer, were flies on the whool.

Mr. BOWELL. Annihilate the distance between Chicago and Toronto.

vince the hon, gentleman that the Government cannot frame an Order in Council so as to overcome the disadvantage at which the inland miller is placed in that respect. The question is one of carrying facilities and not of Customs servative patent, by which all these important matters were regulations; and if a man goes to New York or Chicago to be accomplished. It seems this patent machine has and buys grain and has it ground at mills on the shores of broken down. The hon, gentleman admits that he and all Lake Huron, he will certainly not have to pay so much his colleagues are flies on the wheel, that there are freight as, say, the millers in North Ontario. No Government or individual can provide against a disadvantage of that kind. The hon, gentleman also stated, if I understood him aright, that parties importing are unequal to the task. He says the speech of the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Wheler) is the best probable proof that the National Policy is still popular. I do not think that speech is quite consistent with the National Policy. Those hon, gentlemen told the people that the tax imposed upon products coming into Canada was paid by the foreign producer; if that be true this 15 cents a bushel is paid by the people who produce this wheat in the west. Why, then, does the hon, gentleman undertake to relieve the miller from a tax he does not pay? Why does he propose to remit the duty to the party who is not called upon to pay the tax? The hon, gentleman admitted that this National Policy could not be practically applied to this matter, because he provided that, if there was an equivalent of Canadian wheat exported from Canada, the duty should be made up to the Canadian producer; but the capacity of the people of Canada for consuming wheat, like the capacity of some gentlemen for eating dirt, is limited, and their appetite does not increase in proportion to the quantity of wheat imported into the country. There is no doubt a very considerable portion of the wheat imported from the west is for the purpose of being ground into flour, but if that enters into consumption here it displaces a certain quantity of wheat grown in this country, and it takes its place, independently of any Order in Council or any regulation of the Government. Finding, however, that this fraud had been practiced upon the people of the country, the hon. gentleman is disposed to change his Order in Council, and now provides that the same wheat that is ground into flour must be exported from the country. I am glad to see that hon. gentlemen on the other side are no longer stationary, but that they are on the move, because the people of this country are not satisfied with the regulations which have been made; and I do not believe they will succeed in satisfying the country until those obnoxious provisions, which the hon, gentleman and his colleagues have adopted, with regard to taxation of breadstuffs, are entirely expunged from the Statute-book.

Mr. ORTON. The hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has very disingenuously laid down a platform for the Conservative party, which that party never adopted. When that party went to the country they never preten ed they could regulate the price of wheat, and prevent the L. erpool market from having a certain influence on the price of grain in this country; but they did pretend they could give the Canadian market to the Canadian farmers for their wheat and grain. I think we can distinctly prove that the policy of the present Government has resulted, in one respect, as we expected it would. For the first time in the history o Canada the price of Spring wheat rules higher than the price of Fall wheat. All those who have watched the market prices know that the price of Spring wheat has ruled from 10 to 15 cents higher than the price of Fall wheat since last May, when the effect of the National Policy came fairly into force. Why have the farmers of Canada had the benefit of a higher price? Simply because there is a duty placed upon wheat coming into Canada of 15 cents a bushel. We know well that the flour consumed in Canada is made from Spring wheat, and that our millers who desire to keep the home market are obliged to procure Spring wheat, and the result of this policy has been to give completely into their hands the supplying of the people of Canada with flour. When we have not got enough, it is true, we have to import some from the United States, and, doubtless, much has been imported and paid the duty. But the fact that Spring wheat has ruled higher than Fall wheat, is conclusive evidence that our farmers are getting the benefit of the home market.

Mr. KILLAM. I have never yet heard, since 1878, any explanation from the Government which was satisfactory to the House as to the benefit we derived from the duty imposed on grain coming into the country. The last speaker seems to think that in some way the farmers are benefitted by it, but from the Treasury benches we have never heard any logical or commercial reason for imposing the duty. The hon. Minister of Customs has taken the hon. member for North Ontario to task for the remarks he made. I understood he was complaining about the unfairness of the National Policy general y in regard to grain, and that the millers of one section of the country were placed at a disadvantage over the millers in another section. What benefit millers, as a rule, can derive from the grain duties, it is impossible for me, with my limited understanding, to conceive. Before the National Policy came into existence we had a perfect right to import grain from the United States, grind it in this country, and export it to a foreign country without any restriction whatever. Why it is that, when we are endeavoring to induce the people of the United States to carry their grain through this country, the Government, with some notion entirely beyond the comprehension of commercial men, are plucing a restriction in the way of that trade, is a matter I would like to have explained. As a believer in the future of this country, as a believer in the prosperity this country has gained and will gain from the carrying trade of the west, I believe all these restrictions should be removed, and I believe the patriotic party in this country will be the party which will give the freest scope to that and all our other industries.

Mr. BOWELL. Will the hon. gentleman tell the House what restrictions are put on the carrying trade which prevent the carrying of American wheat by the St. Lawrence route.

Mr. KILLAM. I say that the restrictions which the hon. gentleman imposes are sufficient to prevent the grain being ground in bond.

Mr. BOWELL. That is another question.

Mr. KILLAM. I ask the hon, gentleman to show what possible benefit the country can derive from the duty imposed on American wheat. I say the grain duties are entirely without reason. Without benefitting the farmers, they just act as obstacles in the way of trade. I will give an instance. Two vessels carrying grain from the west through the St. Lawrence were damaged in the river, by reason of our climate, or, perhaps, of some fault of ours. What did the Tariff do for these gentlemen who tried to send their grain through Canada? They lost three-fourths of it by natural causes, and this paternal Government, with the sanction of the National Policy, confiscated the remainder. I do not want to be drawn into a discussion on the Tariff at present; but I wish to appeal to hon, gentlemen, while there is time to withdraw these obnoxious grain duties, and allow the products of the west to be sent to Europe without restriction through the Dominion of Canada

Mr. BOWELL. I am not going to discuss the grain duties, but I wish to tell the hon, gentleman that while there was no duty on wheat or corn, there were more restrictions placed upon those engaged in the trade of carrying these grains through the St. Lawrence to the European market than there are today. The necessity of bonding every cargo at Kingston, and then rebonding it again at Montreal before it was put on the ocean steamships, no longer exists. As soon as the gentlemen engaged in that trade brought it under the notice of the department, the department at once relieved them of all those troubles and annoyances by giving them a simple bond extending over the whole year, so that it was not necessary to keep one man at Kingston and another at Montreal. When the hon, gentleman (Mr. Killam) speaks of restrictions interfering with the carrying of western trade by way of the St. Lawrence, I tell him, without desiring to be offensive, that he has not read the regulations, and does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. KRANTZ. Hon, gentlemen opposite are still trying to show that protection to the farmer is a humbug. Being connected with a mill in Ontario, I am in a position to state that we always pay from 3 to 4 cents per bushel more for Canadian wheat than the price at which we can by down American wheat of the same quality. These 3 or 4 cents go into the pockets of the farmers in our neighborhood as an extra profit, which they never would have got but for the duty on wheat. The flour manufactured in bond from American wheat we send to England, and in order to supply our customers in the home market, in our own town and the Lower Provinces, we have to buy Canadian wheat at the increased price, and this increased price benefits the Canadian farmer.

Mr. McLENNAN. The hon. gentleman who spoke last on the Opposition side (Mr. Killam) tried to make out that the traffic of the St. Lawrence had suffered very materially. It would be a great pity if either the farmers or the traffic should suffer by these regulations. It may be very gratifying to the hon, gentleman opposite to know what I am able to communicate from a statement sent me a few days ago from the office of the Montreal Harbor Commissioners, as to the revenues of that port for the year just closed. I am very glad to find that the dues collected thereat, under the Tariff that existed the previous year-and I hope the hon. gentleman will take it all in-are $60,000 in advance of the dues of the year before. The collections reached $265,000 in 1879, and $325,000 in 1880. The increase is upon the ses-going traffic. The local traffic yielded a revenue in 1879 of $55,000, whilst in 1880 but $51,000; so that to the $60,000 in the gross we have to add $4,000, making a total increase of $64,000 upon the through traffic. I have not a comparative statement of the quantity of freight moved, but I venture to say, if the figures were before me, they would show $20,763 as the collections for wheat, and $17,913 for Indian corn, which is a great item of transport by this route from the western States. The quantities have been enormously in excess of anything ever carried before. I do not make this statement to show that Montreal enjoys very great advantages under this Tariff. I believe, on the contrary, there is a great deal to be said as to the difficulties under which that port labors under the existing Tariff, and the embargoes upon the traffic by the St. Lawrence. That is another question; but there is no question about the actual fact that the traffic by the St. Lawrence under these regulations has increased enormously, over 25 per cent., beyond anything that ever existed before, during the last year.

IMPORTATION OF WHEAT IN BOND FOR GRINDING.

Mr. WHELER, in moving for a return showing the names of all parties who have imported wheat for the purpose of grinding in bond, showing the quantity imported by each party, with the dates and ports of entry; also, statement of the quantity of flour exported by each party, and the dates since March 1st, 1889, said he wished to insert the date 21st April instead of 1st March last, and also to add the following words: "The dates of all bonds given and the dates when any were cancelled, and in what manner they were cancelled, whether by the export of wheat or flour, or by the payment of the duty."

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

HOLIDAY ADJOURNMENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said, that as to-morrow was a Statutory holiday, he would move: "That when the House adjourns to-day, it do stand adjourned until Friday next, at 3 p.m."

Motion agreed to.
Mr. Bowner,

BOSTON AS A CANADIAN WINTER PORT.

Mr. RICHEY said the motion he was about to offer was supplementary to that offered by him the other day, and he need not make any further remarks upon it. He moved for all correspondence between the Postmaster General, or any officer in his department, and the owners or agents of the Allan line of steamers, relative to the selection by them of the port of Boston, as their terminal winter port, or in any way connected therewith.

DAMAGED GRAIN.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK, in moving for a return of the quantity and value of all damaged grain or other damaged goods imported into Canada, or grain or other goods damaged when in bond and destroyed or ordered to be re-exported for the non-payment of the full duty on said grain or goods, and specifying the ports at which said grain or goods were so entered, said: The quantity of grain destroyed and re-exported under Customs regulations was considerable, but it generally happened that the separate amounts small until last summer, when the break place in the Lachine Canal and a large quantity was damaged. A difficulty then arose as to what duty should be paid upon it. Although no longer fit to be exported or ground, and consequently unable to come into competition with Canadian wheat, it remained subject to the duty of 15 cents per bushel. The other day, when the ship Boyne was wrecked in the St. Lawrence, between Montreal and Quebec, and 50,000 or 60,000 bushels of grain was rendered useless for exportation, the question came up. The department exacted the full rate, 15 cents per bushel, leaving one-half cent per bushel over for the underwriters. This brought the attention of the Government so vividly to the matter, that the hon. Finance Minister announced the other night the intention of the Government to fix some other scale of duty on damaged grain. Under the present regulations, a serious wrong was done in two ways: in the destroying, wantonly and unnecessarily—as could be seen very frequently at Kingston-of from 100 to 1,000 bushels at a time, when damaged grain was not sufficiently valuable to be sold for the duty and had therefore to be re-exported or sunk in the harbor; whereas, otherwise, it might have been sold for from five to ten cents a bushel, thus causing often $500 worth of grain to be actually thrown into the lake for no purpose whatever. Then there was the more serious objection that, if not allowed to be landed or sold in this country, the shipper must destroy it altogether or give bonds to re-export it, thereby losing his freight; and losses of that kind militated against the St. Lawrence route. He trusted this Session such an alteration would be made in the Customs Act as would meet the difficulty. An ad valorem duty might be levied. If wheat worth a dollar per bushel paid fitteen cents, damaged wheat should not pay over fifteen per cent. of its value.

Mr. McCUAIG. In my own county a very large vessel laden with about 20,000 bushels of wheat was blown on the rocks, and now there are 5,000 bushels of that wheat lying in her hold in consequence of its being worth less than the duty. Some modification of the law should be made to meet a case like this. The Government should draw a distinction between cases in which vessels are driven ashore by a gale of wind, and cases in which, owing, perhaps, to improper construction of the vessels, portions of their carge are damaged. In the former, human skill is of no avail; but in the latter, the damage is due to want of skill, to improper building, to the want of sound, substantial vessels. In the instance I mentioned, the vessel was driven on the rocks opposite Wellington, on the Lake Ontario shore, during a severe gale, and it seems to me to be immoral to allow that property to be destroyed, because of the operation of our Customs laws. I drew the attention of the hon, the Minister of Customs to this case. He referred me to the hon, the Minister of Justice, but both found that the duty on any portion could not be remitted under the law. I hope that some measure will be adopted by the hon. the Minister of Customs to meet cases of this description.

Mr. McCALLUM. It a man ships grain he can get it and the freight insured and the matter then becomes one which affects the underwriters altogether. The hon, member spoke of the Government deciding between grain or goods damaged by want of skill or by the act of God, but I would like to know how the department is to deal with a question of that nature? The Government should bear in mind that wheat in a damaged condition comes into competition with the coarser grains raised by the farmers of Canada, and for that reason an advalarem and not a specific duty should be imposed to do justice in this matter.

Mr. GAULT. I understood from the Finance Minister the other evening that he intended to bring down a measure to rectify the evil of which I then complained. If so I hope the duties already paid to the department will be refunded to the owners or underwriters.

Mr. KILLAM. I am glad that the hon, gentlemen on the other side who have spoken on this question support so heartily the position I have taken with regard to the duties on grain, and I trust their efforts to press upon the Government the absurdity of those imposts will result in their repeal.

Mr. BOWELL. I think the motion goes further than the member for Frontenac desires. The law already provides for the case of damaged goods that pay an ad valorem duty, and no objection is taken to that clause of the law. The only objection which has been raised is, that articles which are imported into the country and become damaged from some cause or other and paying a specific duty, that no reduction is made on account of diminished value. At the present moment I will not argue the propriety or impropriety of levying duties on damaged grain, but I have no objection to the motion if my hon. friend will add the words: "liab'e to specific duty" after words "damaged goods." I wish to say that there have been no regulations issued by the Customs Department affecting this particular branch of the collection of duties. When applications have been made to the department for a reduction of duty, based on the reduction in the estimated value of the grain or other goods, the parties have been told that there was no law to justify such a reduction and that they might destroy the goods or re-export them. They were also told that the Customs Department had no authority over the goods until they were either entered at the Customs or landed on the shore.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

EMIGRATION TO THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved for a statement, so far as the same can be furnished, of the number of persons who have passed from Canada into the United States by way of Sarnia and Windsor, since the 1st of January, 1880, distinguishing, if possible, the number who intended to become settlers in that country; also, statement, so far as possible, of the number of persons who have, within the same period, come into Canada from the United States by way of Windsor and Sarnia; also, distinguishing, if possible, the number who intended to become settlers within the Dominion; together with any correspondence which may have taken place and any reports made upon the subject. He said: It will be in the recollection of the House that there has been a good deal of discussion in relation to the number of persons who have gone from this country by way of Port Huron to become settlers in the United States. The this country by the statements that people are leaving it in statement made by an hon, member of this House at a meeting held in the west, and, I believe, repeated by him on the floor of Parliament, was to the effect that some 94,000 had crossed from this country at Port Huron during the present year to become settlers in the United States. That statement was made on the authority of American statistics, and the member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright), who is the hon. gentleman to whom I refer, alluded to the fact that he had been in correspondence with the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, and had ascertained from him that the method of getting this information was such as to leave no doubt as to its entire reliability. I think every one will feel disposed to congratulate the hon. gentleman upon his zeal in obtaining, from American officials, information by which he could injure the prospects of his own country. That is a duty which eminently befits the hon, member for Centre Huron, and I am sure every one will feel that he is entitled to great consideration for having performed his task. But, I think, if the hon, gentleman had taken the trouble to consider the figures for a moment, he would have seen that it was physically impossible for that number of persons to have crossed at that particular point and become settlers in the United States. The correctness of those figures involves the passage of no less than eight second-class passenger cars filled with people, daily, and I am quite certain that the hon, gentleman could have ascertained, without any trouble, from people in the neighborhood of Sarnia and Port Huron, that there has been no such transit of persons from this country to the United States during the past year. The fact is, Sir, that statements of the kind I have referred to are sometimes so extravagant that they answer themselves—they furnish their own best refutation. I believe that it will be found, on carefully examining the matter, that so far from this large number of persons having passed over to the United States, by way of Port Huron, to become settlers on American soil, the total number of persons who have crossed to Port Huron, for any purpose whatever, has not amounted to the number which we are seriously told by an hon, gentleman, who once occupied the position of Finance Minister, and who should, therefore, have some familiarity with figures and calculations of this kind, represents the aggregate emigration from Canada to the United States for the purpose of settlement in the latter country. I venture to say that when the actual figures are brought down, it will be found that the entire number of persons who crossed over to Port Huron in first and second-class cars, instead of amounting to the 94,000, who, we are asked to believe, crossed over to become settlers in the United States, does not reach 60 per cent of that number; and more than that, that the number of persons of all kinds, who passed from Port Huron to this side, was very nearly as large as the number of persons who went from this country into the United States. It appears to me that either one or other of two things must be true. If these persons who came from the United States into this country were mere transient travellers, the return given of their number must be deducted from the entire number of persons who passed over in the other direction, in order to get at the entire number of settlers. And I am inclined to think that it will be found from our statistics, which must be quite as good as, and are, perhaps, better than the statistics of the Chief of the Washington Bureau of Statistics. who can have no personal knowledge of the matter, that the entire number who, by any possibility, could have gone into the United States, deducting the number who have come here from the number who have gone over during that period, will not even reach 10 per cent. of the number who are alleged to have passed over there and become settlers. It is important that we should get these figures. I know serious injury is done to shoals. The fact is, that the number of 99,000 passing over that point means the practical depopulation of Canada in a comparatively short time. Therefore it is a matter of serious consequence that the actual fact should be obtained. If it is true that that number have passed over, then the fact is one which ought to be a source of serious regret to every well-wisher of this country. But, I think, we shall find that it has not taken place, and I trust the return to the Order I am now moving will show that, by no possibility, could there have been such a number, that in fact the actual number who have gone over to the United States at that point is considerably less than 10 per cent. of the amount stated by the hon. gentleman opposite. Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. It is nothing new to this House to hear the hon. member for Cardwell, whenever any fact is presented disagreeable to himself and his friends, cast doubt on the patriotism of the hon. gentlemen who bring those facts to the notice of the House. Nor does it matter to him one straw whether it be or be not of the least importance to a proper understanding of the question before us, of the least importance to the understanding of the working of a particular policy, whether or not those facts should be presented for the consideration of the people of this country. Now, in the first place, I did not assert that 99,000 people had crossed at Port Huron. I stated that the American statistics show that at all points throughout the United States about 99,000 people had reported themselves and had entered their goods at the Custom Houses with the avowed intention of becoming settlers in the United States. Now, I say that if these facts are true, as the United States authorities report them, they are most significant, and too great importance cannot be attached to them. I say, further, that those who have travelled through the eastern parts of Canada, who know the enormous extent to which the depopulation of many important townships and counties there has proceeded within the last year and a half, will agree that it is becoming the imperative duty of the people and Parliament of this country to consider what is the cause of this emigration and what steps can be taken to prevent it. With regard to emigration taken to prevent it. at Port Huron, that port in the United States returns includes an immense number of places wholly independent of the town known as Port Huron. It includes Fort Gratiot, Algoma, Marine City, Sandbeach, Fort Austin, and several other places. The actual fact of the matter is, that not merely the Grand Trunk Railway, but the Canada Southern, the Great Western, and several others are pouring their passengers into the United States through ports which report to this particular port. Now, it is no object of mine to add one single soul unnecessarily to the number of people who may leave this country. I regret that emigration; I think it is much to be deplored. I remember well when we sat on the other side of the House no words were too strong, no language too pointed, for the hon. gentlemen sitting opposite me now, to employ when they were pointing out the mischief arising from emigration, not one-fourth part as great as that which has recently taken place. I think this subject ought to engage our grave and serious consideration. I am very much afraid that when the true facts come to be known that the statistics to which the American authorities pledge themselves are only too true. Nothing, however, in my opinion can be gained by indulging in idle and senseless recriminations on the subject. It is a thing, as I stated before, to be carefully investigated. I specially observed when this question was raised before, that I thought nothing better could be done than to refer this subject to the attention of the Committee of this House which ought to be engaged in investigating such a subject. I have, however, to say that all these pleas and arguments, all these assertions which have been made from the Treasury benches, as to the incorrectness of the American statistics, have been brought again and again | Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). .

people denied them most emphatically; they state that all those pleas which are put forward are not true; that their habit and practice is to examine each emigrant; that they do not include the great number of people who go into the country without baggage. They state that these people represent themselves as emigrants and get their goods through the Custom-house under the plea that they are intending to become settlers in the United States. If that statement, made by the recognized official of the United States, be untrue, it is a most disgraceful thing and ought to be exposed, and I most sincerely trust it will be exposed. Meantime, I think this ought to go a little further, and that for the purpose of comparison it ought to include returns for the last seven or eight years. I would, therefore, move that it be amended so as to read "From the first of January, 1870."

Mr. WHITE. I have no other objection to an amendment of that kind, except that it will delay the bringing down of this return. We want a specific statement relating to a specific period concerning which statements have been made in this House. It does not comport with the hon. gentleman's professed anxiety to get at the facts by a Committee of this House, that he should ask an amendment to the motion which will prevent by any possibility these returns being brought down during this Session, so that he may be able to go through the country and repeat the statement he has made. It is open to the hon gentleman to put another notice on the paper and get the information he desires. There is no disposition to refuse the amendment, but statements having been made with reference to a specific period, we want to get the return for that period as soon as possible.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I desire to express my own rebuke. of the remarks made by the hon, member for Cardwell. Whatever we have to say on this side of the House we say it because we believe it, and because we believe we are doing our best in the interest of the country. It is no use to insinuate unworthy motives to members on this side of the House, for we will not submit to it. I am not here to obey the behests of the Government, I am not here to throw incense before the noses of Ministers. When we expose a fault it is not because we rejoice at it, but because we want to show things as they really exist. We shall very soon have a complete return, by the American census, of the amount of emigration from Canada to the United States, and I am sure we shall be appalled by the number of Canadians, and especially French Canadians, who have made their homes on the other side of the line. It is a painful thing to see the young blood of the country leaving it to such a large extent, but we must bring the fact before the notice of the Government and see if some cure cannot be found.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. Minister of Agriculture, I think, informed the House at an early period in the Session that the information now asked for by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) was not in his possession. How the hon. gentleman will now be able to make it up is not very easy to see. I would call the attention of the House to the fact that the statistics which are now repudiated so vehemently by the hon, member for Cardwell, are precisely the same statistics which were used by hon. gentlemen opposite when they discussed this question on this side of the House. The returns from Port Huron, which show the emigration from Canada to the United States for the past year to be between 70,000 and 80,000, whether rightly or wrongly, are made up precisely as they were in former years. The number of persons crossing and re-crossing the river is just about the same in one year as in another, and if they were included the statistics would show just the same proportion between different years as they do now. If you look at the statistics of the American statistics, have been brought again and again from Detroit, you will see that the emigration passing from to the attention of the officers of that Government. These Canada at that point is less than 5,000 a year.

Now, it is perfectly obvious that these returns have not been made up by the Custom-house officers at the various points in the manner stated by the Conservative press, and the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. very fact that at Detroit the emigration is under 5,000, while at Fort Huron it is nearly 80,000 shows that the persons referred to by the hon. gentleman have not been included. Now, there is no use in denouncing these facts. The fact cannot be denied that the hon, gentlemen on the Treasury benches, when sitting on this side of the House, assured the country that if they were in power, the emigration, which had reached only 30,000 a year, would cease; and the hon. Minister of Railways, when asked how the Government would deal with that particular matter, said that if the Government could not give such an impetus to industry as to induce people to remain in the country, they were not entitled to sit on the Treasury benches. Well, Sir, these hon. gentlemen have been two years on the Treasury benches; their patent has been for some time in operation; and the result has been that the people have flown from the country as if some pestilence had broken out in their midst. If the hon, gentlemen say that the mode of making up the returns in the United States is imperfect, that the emigration is less than formerly, we say in reply that the mode adopted is the same as formerly, and if you reduce the figures for the last year on some unexplained basis, you will have to reduce them in the same proportion for former years. The fact still remains that the emigration during the last year has been nearly as great as it was during the whole five has been nearly as great as it was during the whole five years of the previous Administration. Now, what has induced the people to leave the country in such increased proportions during the period these hon. gentlemen have been in office? It is because the Government have not fulfilled their promises. It is because the magnificent expectations held out have not been realized, the hopes raised in the minds of the people of this country have been disappointed; and the result has been that the people, disappointed and disgusted, looking for employment and not finding it, looking for better times and not getting them-

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLS. Well, Sir, if the times have somewhat improved, it has been due to the improvement which has taken place in other parts of the world.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would ask, no matter what the cause of it is, how could the people be disgusted for the want of better times, if they were better times?

Mr. MILLS. The better times have been the birth of the last three or four months, and they are due to the improvement in other parts of the world. The hon. gentleman will not say that he has induced the people of Philadelphia to build more and buy our lumber. He will not say that he has improved the trade of Buenos Ayres, and in that way caused an increased demand for lumber from Canada. In what way did the increased demand from abroad arise—to what was this changed condition due? Did the hon. gentleman cause the failure of the wheat crop in Russia, and improve the prices of Canadian wheat? The hon. gentleman says yes, I am told; and we know what value we can put on his testimony for the future, on this question. Now, it is perfectly obvious that the people of the country have not been satisfied, or have believed they could better their condition by going elsewhere, and they have gone in increasing numbers. I am told they have gone from a country of protection to one where protection is much greater. But they have gone to a country where there is Free trade between forty millions, and where no impediment can be placed on trade, where the differences of climate, of productions, and in ordinary procedure are such as to produce a large local trade that will never exist in this country. It is investigating this matter, and the assertions with regard to perfectly obvious that the hon, gentleman cannot improve the position of the Government by any such exhibitions of seeming indignation, as is contained in the motion.

Mr. HESSON. I am very much pleased that the member for Cardwell (Mr. White) has brought this question before the House, more especially on account of the remarks of hon. gentlemen opposite during the early part of the debate on the Canadian Pacific Railway, when the leader of the Opposition stated that, during the past year, 99,000 Canadians had left this country for the United States. I was pained at the cheers that followed that remark from his side, because it made me feel that hon, gentlemen in Opposition, if they credit his assertion, rejoice in the fact that the National Policy had proved a failure, and desired to condemn gentlemen on the Ministerial side, and especially the Finance Minister, for the introduction of that policy. I have been led to look into this question, and, unless hon, gentlemen opposite submit something to show they have a true return of the emigration, then, from what I have ascertained on careful enquiry, no reliable or official return has been issued for 1880; at any rate none such has reached this House or its library.

Several hon. MEMBERS. Yes; returns are in the Library.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. You will find the returns in the abstracts published by the American Govern-

Mr. HESSON. I know of no reports for 1880; but in the American Statesman's Annual, at page 302, is published the statement that, for 1879, the number who left Canada, from all parts, for the United States, reached 31,286; in 1878, it was 29,568. Assuming that the increase for the following years was in the same proportion as that for 1879, the number for 1880 would probably have risen to 35,000 or 36,000 instead of 99,200. It is reasonably complained that the Opposition have not placed proof of their statement before the House, so that it must be received with a great deal of qualification. I trust that when the final and reliable statement is made by the Minister of Agriculture, the hon. gentlemen opposite will not exult if the number of the emigrants from Canada should chance to have been more than stated by some on the Ministerial side, because it would indicate an unpatriotic feeling. We regret there should be any exodus from Canada, or that it should increase. But it has been argued that it has been brought about by the failure of the National Policy; so it would thus appear that men leave Canada for a country where Protection exists to a greater extent. The cheers of the Opposition at the statement of its leader, that in 1880, 99,500 persons quitted Canada for the United States, and 37,799 during the last three months, indicated a want of patriotism truly deplorable. I was particularly grieved when I heard the cheers given that announcement. I especially regret it when made without reliable figures available to the people. I have not been able, in or out of Parliament, to lay my hands on any such figures or statements from the United States authorities; and if hon, gentlemen opposite are in possession of such figures, they should state their authority and not simply go upon surmises.

Mr. POPE and Mr. BLAKE rose together.

Mr. POPE. I had risen once before, and if it were not nearly six o'clock, I would give place to the hon gentleman; but I would be sorry to have the remarks of hon. gentlemen in Opposition, on this question, go to the country unanswered. I said to an hon. gentleman opposite the other day, when he answered me very brusquely, and indeed I thought very importanently, that his figures were all wrong—that not one-third of the Canadians that he supposed had gone to the United States. I was then the Port Huron district, when he said there were only a dozen little ports, he knew from which emigrants set out, besides Port Huron and Sarnia, and if I recollect right he declared that 125,000 Canadians had left for the United States.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. In the fifteen months

Mr. POPE. What are the facts? Including those ports the hon. gentleman refers to, I assert that every man, woman and child that has left by those ports—every ticket sold by the railway-every individual that has passed through those points during the year would not exceed a total of 53,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. During what year?

Mr. POPE. Last year. I tell the hon, gentleman also that he is woefully mistaken—although I am not prepared to-day to produce the proofs, or discuss the amendment proposed—in his assertions on other points of this question. I shall, when I have time, show him that the emigrants from this country and the persons purchasing lands in the west in 1877 and 1878 were more numerous than to-day. Of what are the figures of hon. gentlemen opposite composed? If you examine this return you will see that nine Cartwrights emigrated this last year and nine returned. There was an emigration party with their carpet bags spoken of as going away to the west, of 165 persons described as Canadian emigrants, invited to go west and purchase lands, how many remained away from Canada? Of the Canadians, three, and of the Englishmen, two; the rest all returned to Canada. I will read to the hon. gentlemen opposite some of the returns spoken of. I am sure they will be glad to know that some of the statements on this subject are false, and that our people are not leaving the country as they have been made to believe. It was alleged that 94,000 left Canada for the year ending 30th June last, and that 75,000 of these were Canadians. Now what is the fact? The total number of passengers from all points of Europe, the eastern States and Canada to all points of the west, including Manitoba, was but 53,627, by the Grand Trunk Railway. The figures are as follows:-

(Win Count Mount Pails

In England, in consequence of the statements spread broadcast by these hon. gentlemen. when I held a meeting there, Mr. Pope.

people are all going to the western States; how can you ask our people to go to Canada, when Canadians will not remain in it. Why, the emigration from Canada is 71,000." These were the statements that were hurled at me wherever I went. These were the things I had to meet and confute. I have no doubt hon, gentlemen will dispute the correctness of the figures I have just quoted.

Mr. CASGRAIN. We will verify them.

Mr. POPE (Compton). These figures were made up by the auditors of the Grand Trunk and the Great Western Railway Companies. They cannot be disputed. I place them against the assertions of the hon. gentleman. I place them against any figures that may come from the United States. The hon, gentleman says the United States officials count these emigrants. According to these officials' own evidence, they never count these men. They look into the cars and say here are so many people and they are in a second class car, but there is no one instance of their making a reliable computation. They themselves told me that twenty men could not count these men and know whether they were immigrants or not. exactly The time is too short. And yet we are told by the hon. gentleman that these men look through every car, and there can be no mistake about their returns. I prefer to take the evidence of those gentlemen who could have no interest in giving us false returns, and their returns prove that our country, instead of becoming depopulated, has its population increased through immigration, and so far as people going from Canada to the western States is concerned, an equal number come from those States to Canada. We had heard something about the last quarter ending 30th September. It was stated that at Port Huron, ending 30th September. It was stated that at Fort fluron, during that quarter, 43,957 people emigrated to the west. Well, what are the facts? The facts are that the total west-bound passengers from all eastern points to western points, including Manitoba, was 567 by the Great Western, and total ditto east-bound 573. This is in favor of the east. The total number of west bound passengers and the Great Tourish from all of west-bound passengers, via the Grand Trunk, from all points of Europe, the eastern States and Canada, to western points, including Manitoba—16,699. Total ditto from western points to eastern points, 16,003, making a difference of 600. So that during the three months there has been very little difference between the numbers going east and those going west. It simply proves that the travel to and fro is greater. Were I to seek for a reason why there are a greater number going west and a greater number going east just now than during the administration of the late Government, it is because now the people have money to travel with, whereas such was not previously the fact. I will show you evidence that cannot be refuted, that there is to-day no considerable emigration from Canada to the western States.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker lett the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

EXCHANGE BANK OF CANADA.

Mr. DESJARDINS moved the second reading of the Bill (No. 8) to reduce the capital stock of the Exchange Bank of Canada, and otherwise to amend the Act respecting the said Bank.

Bill read the second time.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

House again resolved itself into Committee on certain proposed resolutions for granting and appropriating twenty-I was told: "But your country is being depopulated, your five millions of dollars and twenty-five millions of acres of land in the North-West Territories, according to the terms of the contract relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway, transmitted to this House by His Excellency the Governor General by his Message dated December 10th.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. the Minister of Railways that the subject of the present contract for the construction of the Pacific Railway is one of the most important that has ever been before the Casadian Parliament. I regret that the country should have so long been kept uninformed upon the subject, and that important information should still be withheld from Parliament. We are, for the first time, face to face with a preposition, to which, if we give our assent, we cannot withdraw without having recourse to revolutionary measures. It is our duty, therefore, to consider dispassionately the scheme which hon. Ministers have been graciously pleased to place before us, to examine its various provisions, and to consider what their effect will be upon the vast country over which they are to operate. I confess I fully appreciate, not only the gravity of the subject, but the peculiar position which those occupy who usually support the Administration. Our whole system of represontative Government is a system of Government by party. It is right and proper, that those who follow should be loyal to those who lead, on all matters of mere procedure. There are great underlying principles, historical and practical, upon which party organization is based, and unless minor differences, not inconsistent with those underlying principles, are compromised in order to secure unity of action, Cabinet Government would be impossible. But there occasionally arises within the ranks of a party, questions which override the allegiance due to its leader. I may recall to mind a few instances of this kind from the history of England. The Tory party were opposed to Catholic emancipation. They regarded the Govern-ment of England as a Protestant Government. They knew the monarch was sworn to uphold Protestant succession. They held this to be a fundamental feature of the Constitution. It lay at the very basis of their party organization, and, if this was conceded, their occupationtheir supposed function—as a party, was gone. The time, however, came when, through the exertions of O'Connell, the Roman Catholic population of Ireland were resolved upon sharing in the political advantages of the Constitution. A Conservative Government, under the Duke of Wellington, saw that they were compelled to choose between Catholic emancipation and civil war. They chose the former. The rank and file of the Tory party had to choose between deserting their principles and deserting their chieftain. The majority, sorrowfully no doubt, gave up their principles and stood by their leader, because they agreed with him that the calamities, which, in their opinion, were likely to arise from the admission of the Roman Catholics, were lesser evils than those which were likely to arise from civil war; but there were some who did not concur in this view, and they refused to follow their leaders in supporting what they had before opposed. In 1846 the Conservative party again reached a point where the road marked out by their principles parted from the one which their leader had determined to take. There was depression in trade, and there was scarcity of food, there was bankruptcy at the top and bread riots at the bottom of the industrial system. The laborers were without employment and without bread. The distressed condition of the country converted Sir Robert Peel to the views of Richard Cobden. He became a Free-trader, but the great majority of his party remained Protectionists. Sir Robert Peel was denounced as a traitor by Sir George Bentinck and by Mr. Disraeli. Sir Robert Peel said, on that occasion:

perhaps leave a name which will sometimes be pronounced with expressions of good will, by those whose lot in this world is to labor. Who, by the sweat of their brow, eat their daily bread, and who may remember me when they renew their strength by food at once abundant and untaxed, which will be the better relished because no longer embittered by any feeling of injustice."

Mr. Disraeli said the doctrine of Free Trade might be all right and Protection all wrong; but that was not the ground upon which Sir Robert Peel had sought and obtained the confidence of the country. He had been trusted, and he was about to betray his trust. No one can blame the Protectionists for not following Sir Robert Peel in his new departure. They recognized him as their chieftain, as the ablest of their party; they made him chief as a means to an end, and that end was to uphold and promote the principles which the party desired to advance. When he took a more enlightened view, and chose to make a new departure, when he could no longer see eye to eye with his party, he had no reason to complain that they declined to follow him. When they were obliged to choose between their sense of personal regard and their sense of public duty, there was no reason for hesitation. I might also refer to a case in the history of Old Canada. The Conservative party here were committed in favor of the connection of Church and State. The Reform party favored their separation and the secularization of the Clergy Reserve Lands; the subject was long in agitation. The Reform party went to the country in 1847, promising, amongst other things, to deal with this question, should they have a majority. They were successful. A Government was formed under Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Lafontaine. A petition was sent to the Colonial Secretary, asking leave to legislate upon the subject, which under the Government of Lord Derby was refused, but under the Government of his successors was conceded. In the meantime the Legislature of Canada had reformed the representation in Parliament. They had provided for increasing the number of representatives from eighty-two to one hundred and thirty. Messrs. Baldwin and Lafontaine retired from public life, and Mr. Hincks and Mr. Morin succeeded. Mr. Hincks proposed to deal with the question of the secularization of the Clergy Reserves. This Lord Elgin—then Governor-General—declined to accede to. He said you have reformed the representation of the people in Parliament. You have admitted by doing so, that they were not adequately represented before. I do not think, on so important a question as the separation of Church and State, you should proceed to act upon the public expression obtained under a confessedly imperfect system of representation. In this view his advisers ultimately concurred; another election was held. The Reform party were divided. The leaders of the Conservative party made the question an open one. They returned to Parliament with a small following. They coalesced with one section of the Reform party. They formed with them an Administration. They agreed to the policy of the defeated Administration because the country had pronounced in its favor, but those of their friends who had declared themselves in favor of the union of Church and State, stood by their convictions. Mr. Hillyard Cameron, Mr. Larwill, Mr. Murney and Mr. Benjamin, voted against the two great measures of the Government. They were not held to be disloyal to the party by remaining true to their own convictions of public duty-by still keeping to the road in which the Tory party had theretofore travelled. Now, I mention there instances of differences between the leaders and the followers of a party for the purpose of illustrating and defining the principle of party allegiance, which must always be subordinate to the personal convictions of public duty. It is possible for the leader of a party to make a mistake, and it would indeed be unfortunate for the country, were the obligations to the "I shall leave a name detested by all monopolists, who from less honorable motives claim a protection by which they largely profit; but I shall have given will warrant. When the hon. member for Lamb ton proposed to build a railway on Vancouver's Island, I did not favor the measure. Looking then, at all the circumstances, and especially at the peculiar position taken up by the Government of British Columbia, I felt it would be a mistake to construct that railway, and I voted against the measure of the hon, member. It certainly was not a pleasure for me to differ from the Government which I usually supported, and to assume the responsibility of opposing a measure which they had submitted to Parliament. In my opinion, and I believe in the opinion of a great majority of the House, the mistake of this measure now before us is immeasurably greater, and I ask hon. gentlemen opposite to consider the objections to it. I ask them to look at the financial obligations it imposes, and the monopoly it creates, and the burdens it entails on the trade of the people of the North-West, and to deal with the question as the public interest requires. It is too plain to require discussion, that a great mistake has been made, and the votes of the supporters of the Government against the Government are required to prevent the mistake bringing disaster upon the country. This is one of the occasions where the public have a right to expect this much at their hands. Hon. gentlemen opposite, of the strongest party feeling, often speak of rising above the trammels of party. This is their opportunity. This is one of those occasions which makes the expression intelligible, when the advice is practicable, when the duty is obvious, when the necessity is urgent. I need not go into the history of this discussion, various propositions have been entertained, various schemes entered upon by gentlemen on the Treasury benches only to be again abandoned. gentlemen went to Europe last summer, there were constant rumors of their success, which we now are pretty sure were without foundation. There is a very general impression abroad amongst financial men in England, that they did not very well know what they wanted. It is rumored that they were now in negotiation with one party, and now with another. That negotiations were begun and suddenly abandoned, and that neither the capitalist nor the agent knew why; disgust and distrust were created instead of confidence. Ministers were said to be mysterious and fussy. Those who were at first attracted by the magnitude of the enterprise, and the expected was ministered as for the content of the content magnitude of Government aid, in time ceased to interest themselves in the subject, because they did not believe the negotiations were intended to be successful. I say such rumors are affoat and such impressions were undoubtedly made. We were kept in the dark with regard to these negotiations upon the plea that it was not very consistent with the dignity of Parliament to disclose them elsewhere than in Parliament, and now that Parliament is in Session we have nothing before us except, in part, the ultimate result of these negotiations. Of the progress of the negotiations we learn nothing from Ministers. We do not know whether they accepted the best or the worst propositions that were made to them. We do not know but what they failed to obtain better and more advantageous terms by some act of folly which they are ashamed to disclose. Ministers who are but a Committee of this House, advisers of the Crown, by the grace of this House, acting in this matter as agents of Parliament, come to those whose agents they are, to those who are in fact their masters, and say, we, your Ministers, your servants, decline to state fully what we did in your behalf. We will state to you only partial results, and we deny you an opportunity of judging whether a thing so bad could have been better. I, for one, deny the right of Ministers to withhold all information upon the subject. The First Minister has told the country of the difficulties in their way, of imaginary lions in their path; but, Sir, is it not strange that those who not very long ago proclaimed to their friends their intention to fight the beasts at Ephesus, give us to understand that, in this case, without having the beasts to fight, they were, nevertheless, his hand in the end less favorable to the country than the Mr. MILLS.

overcome. The First Minister has given us to understand that the fine feelings of the various parties with whom he and his colleagues had communication, are to be respected. I admit that it is well not to needlessly shock the sensibilities of men, but I do not think any question of that sort arises in this case, This was a matter of public business. The men with whom Ministers negotiated knew that they were responsible to this House. They negotiated with that fact in view, and I do not hesitate to say that the reason put forward for keeping this House in ignorance, is an insult to the House. They say, in effect,—We. your agents, have been in communication with capitalists of superfine feeling, who could not give the necessary security. They were very much hurt, and we must suppress the correspondence and save them from further humiliation by exhibiting this correspondence before such clowns as you, our masters of the House of Commons. Ministers went to England to see upon what terms they could let a contract for the construction of a trans-continental railway. They were in communication with several parties. What was the nature of those communications? How far did they proceed? Did they, in any case, reach that point that nothing more was required than security for the undertaking? The impression abroad is they did not. The impression sought to be made by the First Minister is that they did. This is a matter upon which the House has a right to be informed. No Minister has a right to ask the House to take his simple statement in the case. It is not a question upon which the Minister is indifferent, and, therefore, not one about which he should substitute his own affirmation or denial for the papers which are necessary to enable the House to form a correct judgment. Were such a course permitted, it would only be necessary for Ministers, whenever a blunder was made, in order to protect themselves from censure, to substitute a statement of their own for the means of reaching an independent conclusion. Now, I have no hesitation in saying that, if such a course of proceeding is sustained, responsible government is at an end. We know, Sir, that the First Minister made a statement in Montreal, which has not been borne out by the facts. The right hon, gentleman spoke of things that were not, as though they were. By that statement he put himself in the power of the Syndicate. He declared that he had been successful in negotiating a contract, when, up to that time, there had been nothing but a vague proposition. The truth is all too plain, that the English mission was a failure; that whatever propositions the Government made there were rejected by capitalists, and that the dejected Ministers were compelled to fall back upon Mr. Stephens' proposition, which had been made to them before they left Canada. Did the three Ministers who went to England say to every one they met in London, we have a proposal under consideration for the construction of the Pacific Railway more favorable than any yet made to us? Did they consider from the first, Mr. Stephens' proposition became a contract the moment it was accepted, and not simply the basis of negotiations? If they did, it was a folly and a fraud to negotiate with others on a basis less favorable. Why was it done? Why did they carry on negotiations with Mr. Puleston and with others when at the time they had this more favorable proposition before them? In England they failed, and I have no doubt after that failure they were prepared to negotiate with Mr. Stephen and his friends. I have no doubt they informed him so. I have no doubt but those negotiations were to be carried on this side of the Atlantic, where communication with others could not be so easily renewed should any hitch occur; but can it be believed that they spent months in negotiating with persons in England upon a basis less favorable than that contained in the proposition made to the Government before a Minister left Canada? Is not the scheme to which the Minister put original proposal? Is it not plain that we do not know the whole truth and are asked to hurry forward in the dark? I have no doubt when the Minister returned there was no Contract—nothing by which the gentlemen who compose the Syndicare were bound. When the First Minister reached Hochelaga, unfortunately for the country and for his party, his friends met him and drew from him a speech, which has been the source of misfortune to himself, and, if the contract is consummated, of disaster to the country. By that speech the First Minister put himself in the power of the Syndicate. He declared a state of things to exist which, in fact, did not exist, but which to save himself from ridicule he had to make good at whatever cost to the country the Syndicate might impose. I say the First Minister has not in this matter dealt frankly either with Parliament or with the country. It is clear when he spoke at Montreal he did not intend to withhold from the country the terms of the contract. He, perhaps, expected the completion of the negotiation would be a work of but a few hours. It proved to be a work of many days. He was driven into making concession after concession, reluctantly driven, as the length of time which elapsel proves, until his colleagues put his name to a paper which appalled himself. and which he dare not communicate to others. Look at the facts. The First Minister promised to make the terms public-not when Parliament met, but-as soon as he could obtain the sanction of the Governor General. I believe that sanction was not sought. We know the promise was not kept. The information was not given, and why? Was it because it was improper to communicate out of Session the terms of the contract? Why then was the speech in Montreal made? Why was the promise to communicate then given? Had the First Minister forgotten his constitutional catechism? And was it only after he had refurbished his mind that he discovered that he had made a mistake. and ought not to make the communication which he had promised? Not at all. This contract was then kept from the public, because it was much worse than the original proposition, because Ministers dreaded the consequences of this communication, because they knew right well that the public did not expect that they would set their hands to such a document, and they knew that the moment it was communicated it would excite the utmost dissatisfaction. An attempt has, therefore, been made to keep the country in the dark. An attempt is now made to keep Parliament in ignorance of all that it is the right of Parliament to know. It is obvious that the gentlemen on the Treasury benches believe this to be an indefensible engagement. If they did not do so, why this concealment from the country; and why keep the House in ignorance of the negotiations which took place? Ministers, since Parliament have met, have been offering up the prayer in the Critic:

> "Assist us to accomplish all our ends And sanctify whatever means we use To gain them."

Look at the terms of this contract and say whether ever terms more onerous were demanded by a conquerer from a subjugated State. The beans granted is nearly double the cost of the road, and, if the eastern section is abandoned, will pay the company at least four-fold the sum they will be called upon to expend. The restrictions placed upon competition will enable the Company, in addition to ordinary freights, to charge the settlers of the North-West rates, equal to the amount that ordinary tenants pay to reasonable landlords. The exemptions from taxation alone would render a competition impossible, if there were no other impediments in the way. The Government furnish a company with a bonus sufficient not only to build the line contracted for, but to build in addition 3,000 miles of tributary lines for which they are entitled to the same immunities as for the main line. No roads are to be built southward or castward by any other company. No road, in this particular, is to be placed on a footing of equality with them. They are to command the only means of ingress and egress to a territory as large as the half of Europe. Not satisfied with this, no road extending westward of southwestward, built by any other company, is to approach within fifteen miles of the boundary line. I say to Ministers, you propose to furnish the means to build a road and to leave them unrestricted as to the rates they may charge. You propose to give them a large bonus in excess. To exempt all their materials from taxation. To exempt all the railway property in their possession, for all time, from taxation. Not content with conferring all these advantages, you will not allow a direct competing line to be built. Not content still, you will not allow a road running in the opposite direction to come near the border, lest, in a long circuitous way, freights may be sent to escape oppression and extortion. I confess I am astonished to find a proposition so fraught with mischief, so opposed to national justice, submitted to Parliament for its acceptance. Is there any gentlemen on either side of the House, off the Treasury benches, who will say, that a scheme so novel, granting powers so great, imposing restrictions so unusual and so severe, and granting a bonus so large, and so out of all proportion to the work to be performed, ought to be sanctioned by this House, without first having the sanction of the country? I do not hesitate to say that at no time, during the past half century, would any Government, of any party, in the United Kingdom have ventured upon such a course, nor would any Government, of any party, have been sustained had they so ventured. Let me take one illustration of our own day from the Parliamentary history of the United Kingdom. In the Session of 1868, Mr. Maguire submitted to the House of Commons a proposition to disestablish the Irish Church, not with the intention of carrying it through Parliament at the time, but with the determination to make it an issue before the country, and to invite a public verdict upon it. Mr. Disraeli was at that time Prime Minister. He pointed out that the Parliament then sitting had been elected under the auspices of Lord Palmerston, that the question of the discstablishment of the Irish Church was not submitted to the country, and he declared that it would be indecent for the House of Commons to attempt to come to a decision upon so great a question until they could place before the nation the enormous issue at stake. Mr. Disraeli said:

"This is one of the gravest questions which can be brought before the consideration of public men. You are public men, you are men all of great intelligence, and many of you of eminence. You make a Senate that the world speaks of with pride, while it recognizes your attributes, with a consciousness that your conduct elevates the general character of human nature. But remember that you are something more than Senators. You are representatives of a nation, and of an ancient nation, and I deny your moral competence to come to a decision such as that which the hon. member for Birmingham has recommended, and such as the right hon. gentleman the member for South Lancashire, is prepared practically to carry out. I deny your moral competence to do that without an appeal to the nation. I say it is a question upon which the country can alone decide, particularly under the circumstances at which we have now arrived. You cannot come, on a sudden, and without the country being the least informed of your intention. to a decision; that will alter the character of England and her institutions. You cannot come in this off-hand manner to such a decision as that. Why look at what you are doing, you are asked to take a course to-night which will effect a revolution in this country. I am not now talking the limited issue to which the right hon. gentleman conveniently confined himself. I take the broader issue laid down by the great master of this subject, and upon which England and Ireland probably will soon have to pronounce. How have you been introduced to this discussion? The Liberal party have been in power for more than a quarter of a century. Have they prepared the mind of England upon this question? Have their leaders risen from the seats of authority and told the people that the great principles upon which the society, and even the political condition of the country are founded, are erroneous? You and your forefathers and generations before them, and long centuries of men have built up this realm of England. You have acknow of that great and beneficient system under which you were born, and which your forefathers created? Not a syllable of the kind. We have had a great deal of political economy, commercial treaties with France, repeals of restricted laws, efforts made, and successful efforts, to promote the comforts and convenience of the people; but not a word was ever uttered for the last twenty-five years by the party that has enjoyed a monopoly of power in this country to form the mind of the people upon this great issue, upon which they ought not to give a decision in the perfunctory manner they are asked to do to-night. At the last general election the Liberal party had been seven years in power, and not a single word ever issued from the lips of any person in authority—certainly not from the lips of the right hon. gentleman, the member for South Lancashire—that he had a doubt of the wisdom of the cardinal principle upon which our whole social system is founded. You were led by a Prime Minister, who had the advantage which I also enjoy, of being a member of this House, which certainly gave one an advantage in ascertaining puplic opinion, and interpreting the popular currents which ought to influence."

And after further observations Mr. Disraeli concludes this part of his argument by referring to the silence of Lord Palmerston on the subject at the last general elections, and saying:

"I will undertake to say that Lord Palmerston did not intimate to the people of England that a revolution was impending, and that ecclesiastical endowments must be given up. Therefore, I say it would be indecent for the House of Commons to attempt to come to a decision on this great question unless we could place before the nation the enormous issue at stake

The motion upon which these observations were made was withdrawn, but the question of disestablishment was put in issue at the elections. The Government of Mr. Disraeli was beaten. A new Government was formed under Mr. Gladstone, and the question came up again upon a motion of Mr. Gladstoné.

"That the Chairman be directed to move the House, that leave be given to bring in a Bill to put an end to the establishment of the Church in Ireland, and to make provision in respect of the Temporalities thereof."

Upon this motion Mr. Disraeli said:

"I take the fair interpretation of the decision of the country at the general election to be this: that it was the opinion of the country, that the right hon, gentleman should have the opportunity of dealing with the question of the Church in Ireland. I do tunity of dealing with the question of the Church in Ireland. I do not understand that the country pledged itself to support any particular measure. No particular measure was then before it; but it declared and decided, in a manner which could not be mistaken, that the light hon, gentleman should have a fair and full opportunity of dealing with the question of the Church in Ireland. I cannot therefore, take this occasion, which might otherwise have been a most fore, take this occasion, which might otherwise have been a most legitimate one, of preventing the right hon gentleman from placing his policy before the country, and I shall advise none of those whose conduct I can influence to oppose the motion the right hon gentleman has just made. The motion is one which, if it were not for those wise forms of the House, that I shall always be the first to uphold, would be only equivalent to the right hon. gentleman asking leave to introduce his Bill and have it read a first time. I think the right hon gentleman ought to have the opportunity of placing his policy before the country without any unnecessary delay, nor is it expedient that there should be unnecessary delay in Parliament coming to a decision on the subject. That there should be an adequate, and even ampre debate upon it, I hope no one either side of the Honse will for a moment deny; but it does not appear to me that it is at all expedient any time should be lost in leaving the policy of the right hon. gentleman fully announced for the consideration of Parliament. I trust the right hon. gentleman will give ample time to the Honse and the country for the consideration of his measure before he asks for a decision." his measure before he asks for a decision."

Mr. Disraeli asked for at least three weeks delay in order that the House and the country might have full opportunity for considering all the details which must be investigated. In reply, Mr. Gladstone said:

"That nothing can command my confidence more fully than the declaration of the right hon gentleman with respect to the view he takes as to

And eighteen days were allowed to elapse before the Bill was brought up for a second reading. Now, we have here a declaration from Lord Beaconsfield that Parliament ought not to deal with a great question without the public verdict being had upon it; and after such public verdict is had, it ought not to hurry through the particular measure, by which effect is to be given to the popular decision without in April last measured 1,335 miles, but which since then, Mr. MILLS.

hon, gentleman calls such a proceeding plebiscitic. I do not agree with him. This House is an elective body. It is obliged frequently to go to the country. It must be rejuvenated every five years at most. It may come fresh from the people oftener. But whether the general elections are seldom or frequent, it subsists in a popular atmosphere, and is supposed to be subject to those influences and those considerations which impress the popular mind, and upon which its representative character depends. If we make a mistake here the nation suffers the consequences of our folly. It is a sound maxim that power and responsibility should be commensurate with each other, and if in this matter the liberties of the people are curtailed, their burdens increased, and their prosperity injured, they have a right, moral and constitutional, to know what is about to be done, and they are entitled to time, in order that they may be heard. This is something very different from plebiscitic government. It is a representative government in its highest and finest sense. It is legislation based upon and upheld by public opinion. We do not seek to shift the responsibility from our own shoulders. We here take the initiative, but we give them time to consider, time to suggest changes, time to protest, time to approve; and if we believe they are against us we ought not to go forward, for upon them the good or the evil of action or inaction falls. We have two great forces in modern government: public opinion, and military power. Under representative institutions we have chosen the former. Under arbitrary government they are obliged to choose the latter. A distinguished French statesman has said "that you can do almost anything with bayonets, except to sit on them." I would like to know how long there could be a public opinion at once intelligent and strong, upon which Parliament could rely to uphold the law and to make it respected, if the views which have, at times, been put forward by the First Minister and the Minister of Railways, were generally recognized and acted upon? Let us look at some of the provisions of this contract more closely, in order that we may not take a leap in the dark. The Government have built 85 miles of railways from Pembina to Selkirk at a cost of $1,556,900. I take the estimates of Ministers for this year. They will soon have completed 406 miles of railway from Fort William to Selkirk which, in April last, we were told would cost $17,000.000, but which we are now informed will cost $14,705,000. They have also under contract from Kamloops to Emory's Bar 125 miles of railway, which, last year, were estimated at $10,340,000, but this year at $8,431,800; and ninety miles from Emory's Bar to Port Moody, which, last year, were estimated at $3,620,000, and this year at $3,306,300. The total estimate, last year, completion of these sections of the line was $32,715,000. to which we must add $3,119,618, the cost of exploratory and instrumental surveys of the line That is a total sum of $35,834,618 as the estimated cost of these sections in April last. This year the Government have informed us, that they expect to complete these sections for $28,000,000, which, with the surveys, amount to $31,119,618. So that by the terms of the contract the Government are to build 706 miles of railway, which they agree shall become the property of the Company, and which will have cost the country, with the surveys, $31,119,618. Now, I say that is your first cash contribution to the road. You propose to place in the hands of the Company a further cash subsidy of $25,000,000, or in all $56,119,618, that is the sum which in cash must come out of the public treasury. You also agree to make over to the Company, upon conditions which must largely enhance its value, 25,000,000 acres of land. You apply 18,750,000 acres of this land towards the construction of a road which also giving the country a full opportunity to consider the has, some how or other, grown fifteen miles in length. Last details and provisions of the particular measure. The right April, the Minister of Railways informed the House that the first thousand miles of this section would cost $13,000,000, and the remaining 335 miles through the mountains would cost $15,500,000, or in all $28,500,000. Since then it is clear the Government propose to further degrade the character of the road. Upon the Lake Superior section, they have degraded it to the extent of $1,385,000 in the cost of construction. From Kamloops to Emory,$1,663,200, and from Emory to Port Moody, $133,700, or upon 621 miles of road they have effected a reduction by a contraction of the road-bed, by an increase of the grades, and by a shortening of the curves, of $3,181,900. Now, the House will remember that this reduction must have been effected, not over the whole 621 miles, but upon the 300 miles which is under construction, or which is not yet let. Had the plan now adopted by the Government been decided upon at the beginning, it would have effected a reduction by a very much larger sum, perhaps double the sum now given as the difference between the estimates of April last and the estimates of to-day. The Union Pacific, as it was when first constructed, has been taken as a standard for the construction of the middle section. Upon it we know the grades are still very high indeed—in many places eighty feet to the mile, in one ninety feet, and in one stretch of nine and a half miles, one hundred and sixteen feet grade to the mile. It would be difficult to estimate the amount of saving that may be effected upon the construction of this central section by undertaking to compare a line untouched with one upon which a considerable progress was made towards completion. I choose, therefore, to compare the reduced estimates of British Columbia, upon which little has been done, with the cost of the central section to be built by the Company. Government have agreed to complete 215 miles in British Columbia. They have submitted estimates this year to cover cost of construction $1,796,900 less than those they submitted in April last. Now, the same reduction per mile over the 1,335 miles to be built by the Company, would make the cost of building the central section $17,342,551, or, if we take a percentage of the expenditure the cost will be, in round numbers, $24,500,000. For this the Company are to receive $15,000,000 in money and 18,750,000 acres of land. If we take the valuation of the land as fixed by the Minister of the Interior last year, the Company will receive for this section of the railway lands to the value of $59,625,000, or in land and money $74,625,000. The expenditure on the degraded plan of construction will be $24,500,000. Now, what are the Company to receive this excess of $50,125,000 for? According to the statement of the Minister of Public Works, they will have to provide on the Lake Superior section rolling-stock to the value of $745,000, on the British Columbia sections rolling stock to the value of $430,000, and on the Pembina Branch $183,100, making a total of $1,358,100. So far the subject is clear; but what is the tremendous excess for? Is it to cover losses for working the eastern and western sections of the road? Is it to enable the Is it to build a network of railways in the Company to Territory? This have North-West subject must been considered by ministers, and this excess must have been intended for some purpose, which Ministers have not had the frankness to communicate to the House. We have had, ever since this discussion began, a studied attempt on the part of Ministers to depreciate the value of the lands in the North-West Territories. Now, Sir, we are not left in the dark upon this subject, we can form a tolerably accurate conjecture of the sum that picked lands, such only as this Company are obliged to take in the North-West Territories, are likely to bring. When the subject was before the country on Sir Hugh Allan's contract, I took occasion to address an article to the Canadian Monthly, in which I granted to aid in the construction of a road from Cairo to Chicago, and also to Dunleith, 707½ miles of road in all. Up to this time (November, 1872) 2,174,390 acres have been sold from which the company have realized the sum of $25,000,000; and the 415,910 acres unsold are held to be worth $12.50 per acre. The company are likely to realize from the sale of these lands a sum greater than the cost of the railway. Congress granted to the Kansas Pacific Railway 6,000,000 of acres in Kansas and Colorado; within three years 115,625 acres have been sold for $1,675,059 and 3,000,000 more have been mortgaged for $5,500,000. • • Every year the price of land in the districts ceded to railways is enhanced, and, after the settlement of a sparse population has been secured, the railway companies do not make haste to sell, unless their financial circumstances force them to put their lands in the market. There can be no doubt, then, that a bonus of 50,000,000 acres is an immense contribution towards the construction of a railway. Assuming that, of this vast area, but one-fourth is fit for settlement, these 12,500,000 acres at the price for which the school lands of Minnesota sold seven years ago, would bring $87,500,000."

I call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that this statement was made eight years ago. clusions were not based upon vague and uncertain estimates of unoccupied lands in the vicinity of railways, but upon the conclusions which a careful induction of facts afforded Since then experience in the adjoining Republic has not modified the conclusions based upon the observations of an earlier period. Let me invite the attention of the Minister also to some of the returns for the past year; the average price of the lands sold by several of the railway companies price of the lands sold by several of the railway companies of the United States. I will now give, and I will mention first, the sale of lands in Texas, the region, the mention of which has so greatly disturbed Ministers and their supporters during the last two years. The sales of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway averaged, per acre, $2.11; of the Texas Pacific Railway, $2.16; of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway, $3.66; of the Lowe Fulls and State City Southern Railway, $3,66; of the Iowa Falls and Sioux City Railway, $3.36; of the St. Louis and San Francisco, $3.81; of the Winona and St. Peters Railway, $3.90; of the Southern Minnesota Railway, $3.34; of the Burlington and Missouri River Railway, $4.30; of the Still Water and St. Pauls Railway, $4.55; of the St. Pauls and Pacific Branch Railway, $4.29; of the Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railway, $4.79; of the St. Paul and Sioux Railway, $5.26; of the Sioux City and Paul Railway, $5.84; of the St. Paul and Pacific Railway, $6.83; of the Hannibal and St. Josephs Railway, $7. These sales taken together will average upwards of $5 an acre. Now, I may say that none of these railways were privileged to do what the Syndicate, under this agreement, is authorized to do. This Company is authorized to select every alternate section for twenty-four miles on each side of the line. They may reject any section that is unsuited for settlement, they may roam through a space of five hundred miles in width, and a thousand miles, in length, out of which to make their selection for what the railway belt will not furnish. We may state in general terms that the railway belt will extend a thousand miles through the prairie region, one hundred of which are already occupied. The remainder of the forty-eight mile belt, will contain 43,200 square miles, one-ninth of which may be taken to represent the land reserved for schools, and belonging to the Hudson's Bay company, which will leave 38,400 miles. Of this at least twenty per cent. may be considered waste. This will leave 15,360 square miles, or 9,830,400 acres available to the Company; so that they will have 15,169,600 acres to select elsewhere. Does anyone doubt that they will select the most valuable portions of the North-West Territories. If they cannot find lands suitable to their wants south of the Saskatchewan they can go into the Peace River District. The agreement provides that if they select lands where the Indian title has not yet been extinguished, the Government is to extinguish the title. This provision clearly points to that district. What then are these lands worth? Not at this moment when they are inaccessible, but when they are made accessible out of the resources of the nation. Are of land. By an Act of Congress passed in 1850, 2,595,000 acres were they less valuable than the railway lands of the United States? Are they less fertile? Will they yield less to the industry of those who occupy them? Ministers dare not say so. This is not a proposition to a company of capitalists in which we say to them our lands are fertile, but inacessible, take your own money, build a road, make them accessible, and we will give them to you at a merely nominal valuation. It is not the money of the Company, but of the people of Canada, by which the road is to be built. They have received from the public Treasury a sufficient sum to build more than two thousand miles at the Government estimate of cost. The value given to these lands by the construction of the road, is a value which should accrue to the benefit of the public. In 1875, the Minister of Railways said:

"The Committee will remember that when we occupied the Treasury benches we valued the lands of the North-West which were to be appropriated for the Pacific Railway at a minimum price of $2.50 per acre. For the purpose of removing any question, I will assume that those lands shall be valued at $2 per acre, and I may say that if the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway will not result in giving that value to our magnificent land in the North West, so glowingly described by the Premier, then there is no person in the House that will say that it is worth while to make the road at all. When I place the value of these lands at $2 per acre I place it below rather than above the mark."

After some further observations by Dr. Tupper, in the same vein—Mr. Holton asked the hou, gentleman, "Why not make it $5 an acre?" Dr. Tupper replied:

"I could safely make it $5 per acre, provided I have the selection of the land. The whole character of the land rom the eastern limits of Manitoba to Fort Pelly is worth $5 per acre, as well as it is worth one, and will fetch that sum If the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway will not render these lands in the North-West, of which we have more than 100,000,000 of acres of magnificent prairie and wooded lands, worth $2 an acre when the railway is built, they are worth nothing. No person would undertake to say that the lands would not be worth that amount—or why undertake the construction of the line. The hon. member for Chateauguay knows that the Northern Pacific Company's land along the length of the line is sold at from $4 to $10 an acre, $4 being the minimum."

I have stated enough to show the House, that, in taking the valuation put upon the lands by the Minister of the Interior, we are doing what is perfectly fair to the Government. We are taking a valuation less than that put upon them by the Minister of Railways, and a valuation less than that which the sales of the American railway companies will warrant us in fixing, as they receive larger sums for lands which gentlemen on the Treasury benches have declared, again and again, are much inferior to our own. I say the case is wholly different. When the Government have contributed a sufficient sum of money to build the railroad, from the case where a company simply receives a grant of land inaccessible to settlement, and which becomes accessible by a road built in the first instance with money furnished by the company. In such a case, the land derives its value, in a large measure, from the expenditure of the company's capital, but that is not the present case. Here the country furnishes in cash nearly sixty millions of dollars, and it is by the expenditure of this money that the lands are made marketable. If this burden could have been kept from the shoulders of the people, and had the money been furnished by the Company, they might very well have claimed the lands at a nominal valuation; as it is, it is a fraud upon the country to estimate the lands at a lower price than the one which I have mentioned as the value given by the First Minister last year. I know very well that we shall hear again of the area offered by the late Government; but gentlemen who support the Government appear to forget that those lands were to be taken from all along the line from Lake Nipissing to English Harbour; three-fifths of the line stretch through the country east of Manitoba and west of the Rocky Mountains, and are not to be compared to onehalf the quantity of picked lands taken from the fertile belt of the North-West. When the Minister of Railways, in 1875, valued those lands at $5 an acre, and when the First Minister, last year, valued them at little more than $4, their supporters voted they were right on both occasions. It is, no doubt, advantageous to a Minister, however disadvan-Mr. Mills.

tageous it may be to the country, to have supporters so impressionable. "What o'clock is it?" said Louis XIV. to one of his courtiers. "Whatever o'clock your Majesty pleases," was the accommodating reply. The hon member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), is equally versatile in accommodating his views to the necessities of the Government. There can be no doubt that in the caucus, as in the House, the hon. gentleman would stand by his leaders. When they say $5 he says $5; when they say $3 he says $3; and when they say the country is rapidly improving, and is very much better than any of the territories to the south, and is, therefore, now worth $1 an acre, he enthusiastically says $1. The hon. gentleman is a real Polonius. Hamlet says to his courtier:

That's almost in shape of a camel?
POLONIUS.—By the mass, and 'tis like a camel, indeed.
HAMLET.—Methinks it is like a weasel?
POLONIUS.—It is backed like a weasel.
HAMLET.—Or like a whale?
POLONIUS.—Very like a whale.

The Minister of Public Works doclares that there is no monopoly created by this contract. That there is nothing in this arrangement to prevent other railways being constructed, but let me read to the Committee Section 15 of this contract. It is as follows:—

"For twenty years from the date hereof, no line of railways shall be authorized by the Dominion Parliament to be constructed south of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from any point at or near the Canadian Pacific Railway, except such line as shall run south-west, or to the westward of south-west—nor to within fifteen miles of latitude 49—and in the establishment of any new Province in the North-West Territories, provision shall be made for continuing such prohibition, after such establishment, until the expiration of the said period."

If this does not create a monopoly it will fail in the object aimed at by the contracting parties. The trade of the North-West must seek an outlet towards the Atlantic seaboard, and this contract says that there shall be no other outlets than the outlets controlled by this Company. It goes further. If anticipates charges so enormous that the traffic of the country would bear to be carried westward for hundreds of miles until it could cross the border and escape eastward through the territories of the United States, and this contract says this shall not be done, for no road extending to the westward shall approach within fifteen miles of the border. Could any arrangement be more atrocious? Is it not as clear as noon-day, that you propose to place all the avenues of commerce in the hands of this Company, and that they may charge such rates as they please, so long as they do not destroy the trade that you authorize them to plunder. The Minister of Railways has said, that the late Administration went further, for they proposed to authorize any one who pleased to get up a company to build a railway wherever they pleased. Yes, Mr Chairman, we went further, but we went in the opposite direction. I do not say that you can regulate freights perfectly by open competition; but you can do something towards it. What we proposed was what experience has shown to be a safe thing to do. We proposed to leave capitalists who desired to invest money in railways to judge for themselves, as to whether the line they projected would prove a profitable investment or not. We provided that when any number of persons, not less than fifteen, chose to form themselves into a company to construct a line of railway they might sign articles of association, and when they had fifty per cent. of the stock subscribed, and ten per cent. paid into the Finance Minister, they should, upon filing those articles at the office of the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of the Interior, become a railway corporation. They could build roads in any direction they thought prudent, and the Government took power to aid them by moderate bonuses of land, subject to the approval of the House of Commons. This was the very reverse of the policy now proposed. It placed no restriction upon those who wished to open up the country by railway construction. It is in my opinion the most beneficial way that railways as private enterprises can be carried forward. We know at present that charters are sometimes sought for the purpose of blackmailing existing railway lines. We know, that, however much a railway may be needed, if it comes into competition with one already constructed, its promoters have to fight their way inch by inch through Parliament, not without great difficulty and sometimes not without great expense. It is said, that when a railway scheme is fairly launched it finds many friends, engineers, car-builders, builders of locomotives, the proprietors of rolling mills, professional contractors, traders in railway stocks, and contract brokers, all treat it with friendly regard, because all hope to profit by its bounty. Now. where there is afforded the opportunity for free incorporation, very many of these mischiefs are got rid of. A large sum of money must be deposited with the Government before there is any charter. The payment is an evidence of the sincerity of the undertaking. Railway companies are not likely to keep in view other than commercial considerations in the construction of their lines. The best and most direct lines or location is likely to be chosen as a protection against future disaster caused by new competing lines. The mischiefs which experience demonstrates as certain to grow out of railway legislation, are, in this way, altogether avoided, or reduced to the narrowest limits. It was from these considerations that I, as a member of the late Administration, favored the Colonization Railway Bill which we submitted to Parliament. I am aware there is much to be said against, but there is also much to be said in favour of, the Government ownership of railways—so much, that in my opinion, in a great enterprise like this, so largely aided by the public, it would be in the last degree unwise not to reserve to ourselves the power to resume possession upon reasonable terms. If such power were retained, should resumption take place, compensation would have reference to the actual investment of the Company, but, under present arrangement, they would be governed by the absolute value of the road. I say it has generally been conceded that it was desirable to construct a railway by a private company rather than through the agency of the Government. I need not go into a discussion of all the reasons for this view. Amongst others, is the one with reference to political appointments in the management of the road; the pressure brought to bear upon the Government, to fix the tolls at such rates, as would be unremunerative. The difficulty of direct and efficient oversight. But hitherto the Government have not finally disposed of the question; it has, until now, reserved to itself, in case the roads were transferred to a private company, the right of resumption whenever it was thought that the public interest required such a course to be pursued. The question of ownership was thus kept open for future determination, and I think it of the last importance that this should still be done. The public do not stand in the same relation to railways that they do to other private corporations. Railways possess many powers and franchises which belong to the State itself. They can take the property of others and apply it to their own use. They are, in spite of the keenest competition in many sections of country, practical monopolies. If the Government of the country desire to impose a few per cent additional taxation to meet the public exigencies, the people's representatives are required to vote the necessary aid; but railway companies that have large political franchises, amongst which is this right of eminent domain, can exercise their own discretion as to the tax they will impose upon the property entrusted to them for carriage. We know right well that they often charge sums far beyond what is necessary to pay a fair dividend upon the to do a similar service. We know that a real monopoly, capital actually invested. It has been stated that even under a system of unrestricted trade, may exist, by 35 during the past season that railways between Chicago and New York have charged upon the property in transitu $45,000,000 in excess of the sum which would have been yielded by their provious rates upon the same property. In 1844 the subject of the ownership of railways was very fully considered by the Government of Sir Robert Peo, who did not come to any positive conclusion on the subject other than this:—That they provided after the expiration of twenty-one years the Crown might, with the sanction of Parliament, buy up the railways of the United Kingdom, and Parliament has there, down to this time, reserved to the Crown this power. I have already said, that I regard our present system of bringing individual railways to Parliament for charters, as very objectionable. They are resisted by existing lines. They are put to heavy charges in obtaining their charters, and they indemnify themselves at the expense of those who use them. There are few railways, like the one now proposed, which have a monopoly by law. Their monopoly arises from the superior excellence and rapidity of their conveyance. In many respects they supercede the use of the rivers and canals. Their only competitors are other railways. A private railway corporation is a despotic power when it has not active competition. It charges its patrons with the cost of its maintenance, with interest upon the capital invested, with extra expenditure on account of its own extravagance, and with any impositions practised upon it by rival lines. When you are charged exorbitant rates and remonstrate against these charges, you are told that you are not compelled to travel by their line; that the read is private property, and ought to be managed for the benefit of its owners. Now, this would be undoubtedly true if a railway was like an ordinary corporation, but this is not the case. A railroad may compel a private person to part with his lands upon granting him reasonable compensation. It has this power conferred in the public interests, on public grounds: and having extraordinary powers given it, it is subject, in consequence, and rightly subject, to special restrictions. The effect of high rates is a disposition on the part of Parliament to allow of unrestricted competition, and there has been a strong inclination in the public mind to give no consideration to the interest of existing companies. We know that competition at the points where it exists prevents over-charge, but in many places there are no competitors; in many places where competition is possible, there are combinations. No one can doubt but that it is a great waste of capital to build two roads, when one could easily do all the work. A railway in the hands of the Government is a wholly different thing from a railway in the hands of a private corporation, Monopolies by the Government, under a system of popular government, are wholly different in their aims from monopolies by private companies. There are instances of States monopolies that are found compatible with the public interest. The Post Office is a Government monopoly. Does any one believe that the public could be better served, if the Government should withdraw, and the postal service became an ordinary commercial undertaking? The postal arrangement is the very opposite of the commercial system; but few would hold on that account to throwing open the service and leaving it to commercial competition. Monopoly and free trade have each a distinct sphere of action, and when there is important work to be done we must ascertain to which department the work can most conveniently, in the public interest, be assigned. The hon. member who undertakes to prove that it is the undoubted function of the Government to carry newspapers and letters, but that it is no part of their duty to carry coal or wheat, will have some difficulty in establishing his proposition. Monopoly by the State to do a public service is wholly different from monopoly by private parties which the commerce of the country may be burdened by: exorbitant charges. Railways are at but few points touched by rival railways. Every where else their tendency is to become monopolics. Now one great advantage of the Government ownership of railways is, that charges could be made uniform and all parts of the country placed, in this regard, upon a footing of perfect equality. If the railways were public highways, and the different trains running on the same road were run by different corporations, then there might be general competition. At present we know, that, under the existing system, the charges for freight and passengers are uncertain; that they are different in different places; that they are different, at different times, in the same place. It is the interest of the public to have a maximum amount of work done at a minimum cost. The reverse of this is the interest of a private railway corporation. For these reasons I hold that railways do not stand in the same relation to the State as ordinary private corporations. They are as much highways of commerce as the canals, the lakes, the rivers, or the ocean itself. I believe, too. that it is a great mistake to suppose that such a work necessarily possesses more influence for mischief in the hands of the Government than in the hands of private proprietors. I had hoped before this scheme was submitted, if the Government did not choose to adopt the system of free railway corporations, that they would, in a country so favourably situated as the North-West Territories, have had that country carefully examined with a view to laying out commercial lines, and would have provided an organization whose interest it would have been to promote traffic, communication, and the settlement of the country. I have not made these observations in favour of State ownership, to prove that after duly protecting the public interests the roads should not for the present be handed over to private companies to construct and work. But I do so to show you that even on commercial grounds the question as to the ownership of railways is still upon its merits an open question. It is so regarded in England. It was so here until now, and it should have remained so. But there are other than commercial considerations. Great care should be taken here not to create a powerful corporation, which will stand a fair chance of becoming not only the proprietor of the railway, but also the proprietor of the Government. We know right well that the modern tendency of representative government is in the direction of democracy. We know that the effort of the Stuarts to establish feudalism upon this continent wholly failed. The Hudson's Bay Company in the wintry regions of the north lived on, but it degenerated into a great mercantile corporation, and continued its sway over the shores of the Bay for 150 years and over nearly half this continent for nearly fifty years. But wherever feudalism has come in contact with those vital forces which mark the characteristics of modern society, it has gradually given way, The class legislation, the special privileges, the laws of primogeniture, which are necessary to the permanency of feudal institutions, are slowly yielding to the influences of our age. I am not arguing whether this will prove beneficial or otherwise, I am simply stating a fact. I have no doubt with many evils it has brought some compensating advantages; but what of the good, and what of the bad, it would be beside my purpose now to speak. We have now something before us much more objectionable than a privileged class, we have a proposal to create a privileged corporation, upon which the hand of time can make no impression. Notwithstanding the peculiar views put forward by the First Minister, representative government here derives its power and influence from the people, and nothing but the people; and as the Government of the people by the representatives of the people, we on this side of the House of Commons shall do our best to preserve it. But we have now before us a scheme which contains | tion, you take one man's property and give it to another? Mr. MILLS.

within itself, elements dangerous to honest government and to popular liberty. We know that private railway corporations may become new political forces. We know, from the history of the Eric Railroad in the State of New York, and from the history of the Grand Trunk here, that they may make even the Legislature subservient to their interest. We have now before us a scheme of far greater magnitude than either of these: one which will possess powers and franchises greater than those possessed by the Duke of Burgundy or the Earl of Warwick. This corporation may not be a kingmaker, but it is likely to be the proprietor of the Government of Canada. It is given, in effect, authority to make and unmake Ministers. It will compel industry, under the provisions of this contract, to pay to it the tribute that it once was compelled to pay to the sword. I say but what we all know, that great railway corporations are the most dangerous enemies that modern representative government has, and a Government will be wanting in its duty to the people, which does not earnestly set itself to work to provide the necessary checks and guarantees-to mark out clearly the limits within which great corporations like this must act. We know that such corporations are not restrained by public opinion. They are not influenced by many considerations which restrain the actions of men. We know that they have elsewhere tampered with the administration of justice; that they have interfered with the freedom of elections; that they have undermined the authority of Ministers, and there are many other political considerations which make it extremely questionable whether so stupendous a corporation as this will become should be created at all. I do not say this by way of finding fault with the Government for undertaking to construct and work the Pacific Railway by the aid of a private corporation, but with a view of pointing out the evils, both commercial and political, which are likely to arise. I am not only opposed to taking a leap in the dark, but I am still more opposed to taking a leap where the danger is distinctly visible, and where I see not a single guarantee taken to prevent incalculable mischiefs. I see in this contract restraints upon trade. I see enermous burdens imposed upon industry. I see impediments and prohibitions placed in the way of improvement. I see the whole population of the country in matters which vitally concerns its future welfare, made dependent upon one powerful corporation. I see the real seat of Government transported from Ottawa to St. Paul's, while the semblance of authority is allowed to remain here. In this contract the interests of stockholders and bondholders have been duly considered; but the interests of the people who travel, and the general public who will send their merchandise and their farm products over this line of railway, have not been considered, and it is all the more necessary that the Parliament should reserve to itself the power to resume this read upon the payment of a reasonable compensation. The hon. Minister of Public Works was very indignant because it was suggested that the terms of this contract could not endure, and he charged us with holding to the views of Proudhon, "that property is robbery." The hon. gentleman seemed to forget, or, perhaps, I would be more accurate if I were to say, seemed not to have considered that he was at this moment proposing, by the measure under consideration to take what, according to his own estimate, would be eighty millions of the money of the people of this country from the private fortunes of the people—for every dollar of public money is private property before it is appropriated by the State—I say he proposes to take, according to his own view, eighty millions of dollars, and according to mine, much more than that sum, and by an A t of Parliament make it the property of a few gentlemen, some of whom are citizens of foreign States. What name do you give to the Act by which, without any adequate compensa-

Does he not see that, when such an Act is accompanied by oppressive powers and unreasonable franchises, by revelutionary measures come to that men may their own again? The Minister of Public Works refuses to reason now, but I can tell him that what is to-day denied to reason, will at some subsequent period be most assuredly granted to force. We have had many schomes since Confederation for the construction of a transcontinental railway. We have had two from Ministers during the past two years, which boded no good to the North-West, but this is one, which, seems to have been framed upon the maxim of Jack Cade,—"The good old rule, the simple plan, that he should take who has the power, and he should keep who can"—is, if possible, the worst of all. And since we have come to adopt his sentiments in legislation, we must cease calling him Jack, and give to him a more respectful name in the future. The hon. Minister more respectful name in the future. The hon. Minister of Public Works spoke of the leader of the Opposition as a "cunning fox." My hon. friend informed him that these digressions into natural history for illustrations, at once elegant and apposite, did not in the least disturb him. The Minister was welcome to all the pleasure he could derive from such a mode of discussion. The Minister of Public Works seemed quite annoyed to think that the hon. leader of the Opposition did not confess himself hurt by what the Minister had said in so playful a manner. While the Minister of Public Works half apologised for what he obviously considered his graceful and luminous thrusts of wit and sarcasm, he was not by any means pleased to discover that they were not felt. The hon. Minister reminds me very much of an incident that occurred at a religious meeting many years ago among the colored people of Boston. One penitent arose to confess what a dreadful sinner he had been. A friendly neighbor arose immediately after, and, with the utmost candor, confirmed what had been said. The penitent, while quite willing to speak in very strong terms of his own failings was not willing to have them discussed with equal freedom by a friend. He at once dried his tears, laid aside his coat, and invited his neighbor to the common behind the church in order that he might vindicate his piety. The hon. Minister of Public Works, while declaring that no wrong was meant, was very much disappointed to find that The Minister of Railways told us how no wrong was felt. much pleasure it gave him to support this contract. I think the Minister is somewhat mistaken. It may be so long since the Minister has been called upon to act in consonance with his convictions of public duty that he has quite forgotten the sensations of pleasure which spring from such a source and is not very sure what it is like. Lord Beaconsfield has drawn in Endymion a person-St. Barbe-of whom I am reminded by this observation of the Minister of Railways. St. Barbe speaks of having "felt a glow about his heart, which, if it were not indigestion, he thinks must have been gratitude." I am very sure that the Minister's pleasure must have partaken of a similar ambiguity. The hon, member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) spoke of the terms of Union with British Columbia and of the policy of the late Administration. Now let me tell him this: If a mistake by the late Government was made, it was in the direction of doing too much and not in the direction of doing too little. Let me notice one or two facts in reference to those terms of Union, which the patriotic ardor of the hon, member has caused him to overlook. British Columbia, in the first instance, did not ask to have a railway constructed. never was agreed to be undertaken in her interests alone. It was a mutual agreement for a common object, a common benefit. British Columbia was to contribute towards the undertaking a strip of territory forty miles in width along a line of railway from her eastern to her western border. This land was to promote railway construction, to be nearly adequate to build the road west of the mountains. For it British Columbia was to receive a hundred thousand dollars | pression and is incorrect, except so far as he states it.

annually, which was computed to be the difference between British Columbia's large contribution to the railway and the actual value of the lands. Parliament was assured that the lands were worth upwards of $15,000,000; that the annuity to be paid British Columbia when capitalized, represented $2,000,000. leaving more than $12,000,000 leaving more than $13,000,000 $2,000,000, as the contribution of that Province towards the railway. I would like to ask, Was this an honest transaction? Was it a transaction so sacrel, so inviolable that the contemporaneous resolutions of Parliament count for nothing? Let me ask the attention of the Committee to what was said upon this subject at the time by Ministers of the Crown. I assume they spoke from the information which they received from the delegates of British Columbia during the negotiations. I do so because it shows what the moral obligation of the two parties to this great, and, I fear, in some respects disastrous, enterprise is. Sir George E. Cartier, in supporting the resolution for the admission of British Columbia into a Union with Canada, said:

"It was not the intention of the Government to construct the road, but "It was not the intention of the Government to construct the road, but it would be undertaken by companies, to be assisted mainly by land grants. It was not the intention of the Government to burden the exchequer much to obtain this railway. While this clause was under discussion between the delegates and the Government it was proposed by the Dominion that the Colonies should hand over a forty mile strip of land toward the construction of the railway. That would be 24,000 square miles of land, or 50,360,000 acres of land, not merely agricultural, but mineral land. Placing that land at $1 per acre it would be equal to a grant of $50,360,000 toward the construction of the railway. It was proposed to give the company $100,000 per annum, which, placing the interest at five per cent., would be the annual interest on the value of 2,000,000 of acres of land, leaving the remainder to be used by this 2,000,000 of acres of land, leaving the remainder to be used by this Government."

No doubt the 50,000,000 of acres and the $50,000,000 is a reporter's mistake. The quantity of land was estimated at 15,360,000 acres; but, after making this correction, Sir George Cartier led his supporters to believe that British Columbia was contributing means sufficient to construct the road in that Province. The representation by British Columbia delegates, as to the character of these lands, does not rest upon the statement of Sir George Cartier alone. Senator Compbell, who was also a member of the Government, in referring to that part of the arrangement relating to the British Columbia land grant, said:

"In Ontario, it is expected that the alternate sections of twenty miles will be given for the construction of the road, whereas British Columbia gives a continuous grant of 20 miles on each side. Therefore, the quantity of land given by that Colony is two fold that given by Ontario and Manitoba."

And, in reference to the construction of the road, Senator Campbell said:

"The language of these resolutions is not that the Government will build the road themselves, but that Canada will secure the construction

It is too clear to admit of contradiction, that the British Columbia section was to have been constructed mainly by means of the ample contribution of most valuable land, which she placed at the disposal of the Federal Government, for the purpose.

Mr. DECOSMOS. I would like the hon, gentleman to read further in Senator Campbell's speech, and see what more he says on this subject.

Mr. MILLS. I must read what I purposed to read with the view of giving an exact idea of the condition of things upon which, and the statements upon which Parliament relied when it gratified this particular portion of the Union.

Mr. DECOSMOS. If the hon. gentleman would do justice to this House and country by reading the full statement made by Mr. Campbell when he introduced the address in relation to British Columbia, it would be very appropriate. The statement he now puts forward conveys a wrong im-

Mr. MILLS. I must be allowed to put this case in my own way. My hon friend will be allowed an opportunity of putting the case as he sees proper. I have a good deal to say on this subject, and feel it will be all I can do to say it, without making a speech for the hon. gentleman. He will have his opportunity, and will be better able to state his case than myself. Mr. Chapais, then a Minister, relying on the representations of the delogates from British Columbia,

"By the construction of the railway now, the value of the lands will be increased, and by this means they will suffice of themselves to provide for its construction. British Columbia has agreed to grant 15,000,000 of acres of land along the route, and this will be sufficient, or nearly so, for the construction of their part of the road."

Mr. Chapais went on to confirm his view, by reference to the Illinois Central Railroad which had received for the construction of upwards of 700 miles of railway, but 2,595,000 acres of trecless and waterless prairies, for the sale of part of which they had up to that time received $23,723,255, and had still remaining 526,690 acres on hand. Mr. Chapais further said:

"As for the climate and the nature of the soil of British Columbia I can prove that they are most favorable to colonization • • • The same isothermal line passes through Chicago, Cleveland, Harrisburgh and Pennsylvania on this continent and through Southern France, Lombardy and the great wheat growing districts of Southern Russia. These valuable Canadian Territories which, for the want of adequate investigation, have hitherto been regarded as valueless are destined within a reasonable period to perform an important part in the progre2s of agriculture and commerce on this continent."

The British Columbian delegates were at Ottawa at the time these discussions took place; the adequate information afforded by Ministers was derived from them. The disinterested and reliable representations of the delegates of that distant Province were implicitly trusted, and Parliament believed that a country more delightful than the happy Valley of Rasselas, or than the Eden of which Mr. Chuzzlewit went in search, was about to be acquired. Mr. Senator Mitchell, another member of the Government, and a party to the negotiations with British Columbia, said:

"The Government have not gone into this matter without the best information that could be obtained, and they have the assurance from an engineer of standing, which gentleman is very conversant with British Columbia, and is now within hearing, and who himself had made an exploration of the line of railway across our North-West possessions. **

That gentleman further states that 213 miles of the land through which is passes is of good quality, and a considerable portion of it far above the average of settled lands in Canada."

It was with such information as this, and with such assurances as these, that Parliament agreed to the admission of British Columbia into Confederation and to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is apparent to every one that the impression sought to be made was, that the lands to be conveyed by British Columbia to Canada were adequate or very nearly so to build a railroad through that Province. Now we are brought to this conclusion, either, that Ministers were grossly deceived by the misrepresentations of the British Columbia delegates, or that they had conspired with them, by the most unwarrantable misstatements, to mislead Parliament in order to obtain its sanction to the eleventh article in the terms of admission to the Union. In private transactions where one party to a contract relies upon the representations of another, and is deceived, he is not held to his agreement; and there would be no breach of faith, taking the most favorable view of this article for British Columbia, did we say your lands are not what you represented them to be. They are not suitable for colonization. They will not prove a substantial contribution towards the construction of the road. We decline to accept them for such a purpose, and this part of the pact is at an end. I do complain. We know at present that her people not entertain very cordial feelings of friendship the rest of the Dominion. I regret that it is so, but the fact remains. They seem rather to be actuated by that kind of sentiment which was expressed by the indignant creditor who had been forgiven much, but who insisted upon being paid to the utmost farthing. There is no real union between British Columbia and other parts of Canada. Nor is a real union possible in the present condition of things. British Columbia's nearest neighbors are the settlements upon the Pacific coast, and they must continue to be so for many years to come. The time may come when there will be a little trade across the mountains. There will be more, however, flowing westwards towards the Pacific coast than in the opposite direction. The tea, the coffee, the sugar, the dry goods, consumed in the Peace River district, when that country comes to be inhabited, will, if the railway communication is not so planned as to prevent it, will reach that country through British Columbia, and its products will find an outlet on the Pacific coast. They can reach Europe by sea as cheaply as they can reach Montreal by rail. But that district is still uninhabited, and the great plains of the Peace River are likely to remain a lone land for some time beyond the close of this century. It does seem to me, therefore, an act of very great folly to burden ourselves, at present, for a population which will have no existence for two or three generations to come, while the great wants and necessities of the hour are neglected. Hon. gentlemen on the Hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches and their supporters, however, seem wedded this course οf waste and British Columbia is a Province of the Union, and as such should be dealt with. Her wants should be respected. Her interests as an integral part of the Union ought to be fairly considered. If she is as well treated as any other Province; if she has more done for her than she could have done for herself, she has no just cause of complaint. The hon. member for Victoria has frequently reminded us, that the Union is a compact—that the obligation to build a railway is a treaty obligation. But what does the hon, member say as to the quality of the lands, and as to the representation of the delegates? I may also observe that all treaties which are perpetual in form, are not so in fact. Let me ask the hon. member, and those who agree with him, to note how treaties are disregarded when they stand in the way of a nation's interest, embarrass its finances, or give rise to unforeseen dangers? How did France observe the Treaty of Vienna? How has Russia observed the Treaty of Paris, in reference to her naval force in the Black Sea? How has England observed her treaty with the Ameer of Afghanistan, when she wanted a more scientific frontier to the west of India? She asked for a European resident to represent her at Cabul. She was bound by treaty not to ask it—she nevertheless did ask it. She expected a refusal. The Ameer was about to yield to her demand, and the negotiations were broken off to prevent compliance, because the real aim was a change of frontier. So that treaties do not possess that enduring and unchangeable character which some hon gentlemen suppose. In the case of a Federal union the power and the rights retained by each individual member are, no doubt, perpetual. They have not been parted with. As to these each Province remains after the union as distinct an autonomy as before: but as to what is to be done in the future by the Central Parliament and Government is for that Central Parliament or Government to decide. In the case of the union between England and Scotland, many things stipulated for by the Scotch Parliament have been changed by the Parliament of Westminster. Lord Campbell has observed that however inviolable the compact between the two kingdoms may have been, the Parliament of the United Kingdom can do such a purpose, and this part of the pact is at an end. I do anything which before the union could have been done by not admit that British Columbia has anything of which to the Parliament of either. The junior member for Victoria, in 1876, proposed a resolution, in which, among other things, he stated:

"The public faith and honor of Canada were pledged in the most solemn manner to British Columbia to secure the commencement simultaneously within two years from the date of Union the construction of a railway from the Pacific towards the Rocky Mountains, and from such point as might be selected east of the Rocky Mountains towards the Pacific to connect the seaboard of British Columbia with the railway system of Canada; and, further, to secure the completion of such railway within ten years from the date of Union."

The right hon, gentleman, now the First Minister, expressly repudiated the statement of facts in this resolution. He denied that the construction of a railway was to be undertaken on behalf of British Columbia. He said:

"This was not a mere arrangement by which British Columbia agreed to enter Canada. It was a mutual agreement and partnership by which the Dominion and British Columbia joined hands, and became one Dominion. British Columbia was pledged to the rest of the Dominion to the construction of this railway, just as much as the rest of Canada was pledged to British Columbia. It was not merely for the benefit of British Columbia, but for the common benefit. If it had been otherwise no such an agreement could have been made. All parties recognized it as a political expediency for both Colonies. It was in a spirit of perfect equality the compact was entered into. It was not only for the sake of spending money in British Columbia, but for the purpose of rendering what would be merely a Union on paper, one in reality. Therefore it was agreed that the road should be constructed in British Columbia, and also in other parts of Canada at the same time."

I would commend the views expressed in this quotation to the consideration of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe. I accept them as generally sound, and the constitutional view presented is in exact accord with the opinions of Lord Chancellor Campbell, upon a measure involving exactly the same principle. I would make but one observation further upon this part of the subject: it is frequently said that unless have a railway we have but a Union in name. Now this is a most misleading statement. If a large interprovincial trade was possible, and was only prevented by the want of railway facilities, then a railway would be most desirable, and the bond of union would no doubt be strengthened by such trade. But when there is little or nothing to be done, when little or no trade is likely to spring up across the mountains, when the population is still wanting on both sides, between whom the supposed trade is to be carried on, it does seem to me most preposterous to speak of hastening forward this transmontane railway in order to convert a Union in name into a Union in reality. Hon. gentlemen opposite have spoken of the aid proposed to be given towards the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway by the project of 1872 and under the Act of 1874, and the most unwarranted comparisons have been instituted between this contract and those projects, in favor of the present arrangement. Both in the contract with Sir Hugh Allan and the Act of 1874, the lands were to be taken along the whole line in alternate sections. 550 miles of the present line are west of Jasper House and more than a thousand miles are east of Red River. More than three-fifths of the railway belt were outside of the North-West Territories. A large portion of these three-fifths were waste lands wholly unfit for settlement, and the very best of them of an inferior character. What lands were required beyond the quantity the railway belt afforded were not to be picked lands of the North-West, but lands of average quality; so that I do not hesitate to say that a larger area fit for settlement is to be given to this Syndicate than would have fallen to any company under the Act of 1874 for the construction of the entire line. The most onerous part of this arrangement is not the enormous bonus given, but the impediments put in the way of commerce, the prohibitions on railway construction, and the tremendous and unwarrantable powers given over the whole trade of the country from the great Lakes to the Pacific. Gentlemen opposite seem to have forgotten what amount of capital invested very large, and the cost per mile this North-West country has cost us. We in the first very great. The hon, member seemed never to have heard instance paid the Hudson's Bay Company $1,500,000, and converted a precarious license to trade into a proprietory right to one-twentieth of the country. We paid $1,760,000 to establish communications with the North-West. have extinguished the Indian title to a part of the fertile belt, which, together with the maintenance of the police as an incident, represents a capitalized sum of $18,200,000. have, during land survevs the nine years, cost us about $1,800,000, and represents a capitalized sum of $4,168,000—in all, $25,628,000. We have expended, or are about to expend on railway construction, about $17,250,000. We grant to this Company in cash $25,000,000, so that, without considering the land appropriation, the North-West will have cost us, should this contract be approved of, $67,878,000 in cash. This is to be our expenditure for the present to open up the country for settlement. I do not stop to ask whether it has been wisely or well made. There can be no doubt of its magnitude. It represents $85 a family to every family of the Dominion. But the country is not free, not open to settlement after all this. One twentieth is in the hands of a foreign corporation, and you propose to place at once one third of the best lands in the hands of another company. The expenditure of these $69,878,000 makes these lands worth at least $75,000,000. Instead of opening up the country to settlement, you propose locking it up in the hands of a great and powerful monopoly, at a cost to the country of $143,000,000. The expenditure is immense and the results are as disgraceful as they will be disastrous. For what you propose to give for sixty miles of the eastern section you can complete your connections with the North-West, and bring the grain trade of the northern States down the Valley of the Ottawa. For one-fifth of the land, or one-half of your proposed subsidy in money, you can go to the Rocky Mountains with your road; and beyond this neither duty nor prudence requires us to proceed for many years to come. Here we should rest, and our resources should be directed to give value to the country; to the North and to the South, by encouraging railway construction, and furnishing facilities for settlement. We can do much in this way to husband our resources and to acquire additional strength. A small outlay will do much to secure settlement within the fertile belt. We have spent all on unprofitable undertakings, which a poor country like this should be called upon to bear for many years to come. When that country is fairly filled up we can safely extend our connections. We cannot do it before; and we ought not to attempt it. The hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) defends the perpetual exemption from taxation. He refers to cases in the United States. But the hon member is mistaken, and has perhaps also misled the Minister of Railways. The cases to which the hon. member has referred the House in Wisconsin and Minnesota are cases in which the Governments of those States have adopted a charge in lieu of taxes. They have exempted the railways from taxation because they take a certain percentage from the gross earnings in place of rateable taxesthe fairest way, perhaps, of collecting a tax upon the capital invested in railways. What is done in the case of this railway should be done in the case of every other. A railway is chartered from Winnipeg to the Souris River. It is not exempt from taxation. What chance has it of successful competition with an untaxed road? What chance is there for any company to build a line in the directions permitted when they will be subject to taxation, while the branches of the Company will be exempt? The hon. member for Niagara read a long list of American railways, giving the amount of stock subscribed and the amount of bonds issued, and he adds these two sums together to show the amount of capital invested in railways. He has given us the cost per mile; ascertained in the same way. Of course, he found the

of the manipulation of railway stocks. He never heard of stocks being watered. Let me take a few instances for the information of the hon. member. The Eric Railway of New York, according to the hon, member's arithmetic, has invested in it capital to the amount of $153,000,000, but it was shown before Mr. Hepburn's Committee that a road like the Erie could be built and equipped in the same manner for $40,000,000, just $113,000,000 less than the hon. member would place upon it. It was shown that its stock had been watered to the extent of $70,000,000. The New York Central is a valuable road, but it is very far from representing the value of its stocks in bonds. Its traffic is very great, but instead of allowing the stocks to rise, they have been watered to the extent, at one time, of upwards of $44,000,000. The hon. member refers to the cost per mile of the Union Pacific. He says that it cost $102,700 per mile, and that the total cost of the road was $115,214,588. Has the hon. member never heard of the Congressional enquiry? Never heard of the frauds brought to light? Never heard of the Credit Mobilier? We know that the cost of the road was not half the sum mentioned by the hon, member. The roads of Minnesota have been built at much less than half the cost given. It is not by such an array of wholly inaccurate and wholly irrelevant statistics that this most improvident and most mischievous contract can be defended. The hon, member has referred to the state of feeling in the country. If it be as he has represented, let the Government and their friends consult the country in the most constitutional way, by seeking the confidence of the country at a general election. The hon. member refers to the success of the friends of the Government at recent meetings, and he predicts success for his friends should an election be had. We say, let it be tried. The hon. member had not much to boast of. A single case of measles among his friends would have cost him his election. The hon. member figuratively did a good deal of whistling to keep up the courage of those about him; but he will find it has been done to no purpose. The terms of the contract are too easily understood for the country to be imposed upon. The hon, member, like his leaders, is no doubt anxious to have an end of this disagreeable business, like Macbeth's crime; being resolved upon, they are in a hurry to have done with it; but when it is voted on here, it will not be done with. The consequences cannot be trammeled up by any vote in its favor which this House may give. The mischief will have only been begun when the labor of this House is over, and hon. members will find this to be the case, even though the people should be denied an opportunity of pronouncing upon it—they will remember its authors. I have not one word to say against the gentlemen of the Syndicate. They are able, enterprising and trusty men. What they undertake I believe they will endeavor to do. There are no men into whose hands I would rather see the work fall; but they are acting for themselves. They are seeking to promote their own interests, and for this I do not blame them. To them was not committed the public trust, but to gentlemen opposite. In their hands the public interests have suffered, and every member of this House who sustains them by his vote, who sacrifices the public interests to help Ministers out of their present discreditable position, will find himself a marked man when he again seeks the suffrages of the electors. It is impossible to serve the country and to sustain the Government in this transaction. Either road is open to gentlemen opposite, both cannot be taken. That Ministers have blundered, that the bargain is a very bad one, is the conviction of gentlemen on that side of the House as well as upon this. It is the opinion of the country, and it is not more certain that the winter shall be followed by spring than it is true that those who support this calamity will be driven from public life. Mr. MILLS.

Mr. McCALLUM. It is late, but I will not detain the House long. This is no new question to me. I had the honor of sitting in this House when British Columbia-was admitted, and I was then in favor of this work being constructed and operated, for all time to come, by a company. I may say that I am in favor of it to-day, and I am in favor of having an all-rail route through our own country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I have gone to my people several times since then, and I have tried to explain this question to them. I believe, to-day, that that work can be constructed and operated for all time without adding materially to the indebtedness of this country. I believe we have got land enough in the North-West to build this railroad. There have been at least three schemes before this country. There was the Sir Hugh Allan contract; then there was the offer of the late Government, made to the whole world to tender for building this road; and then there was the policy adopted by the hon gentlemen opposite, of doing it as a Government work. I stand here to-night and feel satisfied that a large majority of the people of this country regret sincerely that Sir Hugh Allan failed to raise the capital necessary to carry on that work. If that had been done, the road would have been built to-day. 1 say to hon. gentlemen opposite that the electors of this country will hold them responsible, so far as they contributed to the defeat of that scheme. In 1874, after the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) had assumed the reins of Government, he announced that he was going to carry on that work as a Government work, and was going to save to this country the profits which the Company would have made out of the contract. Let us see what profits the country derived from the carrying out of this work by the Government so far as it went. We know what the country gained from the Georgian Bay Branch and the water stretches. Sir Hugh Allan offered to build this railway for thirty millions in money and fifty million acres of land. He failed. When my hon, friend from Lambton found, in 1876, that he could not do the work as a Government work, he advertised to the world that he would give $10,000 and 20,000 acres of land per mile for the construction of the whole road, besides guaranteeing the interest on the bonds to be issued. Well, Sir, taking all these different arrangements into consideration, I consider that the contract before the House to night, is the best offer the country has received, even estimating the land at a dollar an acre, and the higher you value the land the better this offer appears. If we value the land at $2 an acre, we make this contract better than the proposition of the hon. member for Lambton, by $32,000,000; if we value them at $3 an acre, we make it better by $55,000,000 : if at $4 an acre, we are $90,000,000 better off. That is a simple way of showing how the matter stands. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) the other day said that it would be a great hardship that the road-bed of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be exempt from taxation, that it would be ruinous to the country and would prevent the settlement of the North-West. Well, Sir, I live in a municipality through which the Grand Trunk Railway runs. We gave that railway a bonus of $20,000, and what taxes do you suppose we collect for the road-bed? Though the road runs through the municipality for eight miles, we get from the company the magnificent sum of $12 a year. I believe the townships in the North-West are six miles square; suppose the railway takes for its road-bed a strip six rods wide, it gets 72 acres, and if you value that at $10 an acre, and put the rate at ten mills on the dollar, you get the magnificent sum of $7.20 a township. I do not think the townships will suffer much from that exemption. I would like to see this Company pay taxes the same as the settlers in the North-West; but if they did not get the privilege of exemption, they would have to get something else, we would have to give them more money; and would we be doing justice to the older Provinces if we taxed them for that purpose? I have listened attentively to the debates on this question, and I consider it most important that we should have a railway through this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The hon, leader of the Opposition said the other night that the Sault Ste. Marie road was the key to a great position. I want it to go forth to the world tonight what position we should be in if that hon, gentleman's policy were carried out. It is not long ago that we had to send troops into the North-West. Who had the key then? Had we the key at that time? No, Sir, Brother Jonathan had the key. Brother Jonathan would have the key of the Sault Ste. Marie line, and that is the reason I am in favor of building the road north of Lake Superior and getting an all-rail route through our own country. Why, suppose at the termination of the Washington Treaty, the United States Government chose to do away with the bonding system, I should like to know how that would affect us. In one year, including the period of the close of navigation, of course, we should have no such settlement as at present, we should suffer more than the whole cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway. This is the most important question ever brought before Parliament. We are laying the foundations of an empire, and should not dread the expenditure of a few dollars. Of course, I differed probably on this question from some of my friends here, and said I wanted delay, and wanted the people of this country to know all about it. I do not now want to go to the country, because the people have already sanctioned the scheme and decided the railway should be built as a Government work, approving also of the Allan contract. Now, I do not think it necessary to again go to the country upon this question. I feel perfectly satisfied the people would say that they are in favor of this scheme, not merely the Conservatives, but the Reformers as well. The member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), the other night, voted for further delay; I voted with him. But on another occasion in dealing with a railway question he went with lightning speed. When I wanted delay, he could not stop. I had the honor of a seat with him in another Legislature when he turned out the Sandfield Macdonald Government with a majority of one. At that time power had been taken to assist railways in the thinly settled districts of Ontario, by appropriating as much as $1,500,000 of the public money to that object. He held that each grant should be submitted to a vote of Parliament, but on turning out the Sandfield Macdonald Government, what did he do? Well, he took $1,900,000 which he did not need, except to control the House-to buy it, I should say, if it was not unparliamentary-certainly to demoralize the whole House by turning a majority of one into a majority of thirty in a few days; but he did not simply demoralize it, but also a member of the out-going Government. He even sent a note across the floor to instruct one of the Ministers thus: "You had better speak now." I want, in recalling these events, to show who was consistent, myself or the member for West Durham, on that occasion. He asks for delay now; he would not give it then. He brought in Orders in Council, appropriating $3,900,000 to aid railways in Ontario, and gave the House four hours to consider them. The House was, time and again, divided against him, until there were only three of us to oppose him at last. So far as that is concerned, I will show you that I speak by the book. An amendment was moved by Mr., (now Judge) Cameron, seconded by Mr. Rykert, as follows:—

of one hundred thousand dollars a year, for twenty years. The Governof one hundred thousand dollars a year, for twenty years. The Government has not given this House sufficient time for the consideration of the Order in Council, to enable it to give an intelligent and just judgment upon the claims of the several enterprises, and that in future Orders in Council, requiring the ratification of this House should be submitted at an earlier period of the Session, and should not be taken into consideration by this House until the same had been before the House for, at least, five years."

Well, the only members who voted for the amendment were Messrs. Cameron, Gifford, Hamilton, Lauder, McCallum, Macdonald (Leeds), Merrick, Richards, and Rykert. The rest were all demoralized; and now I accuse the hon. member for West Durham of having struck a blow at constitutional government, by sanctioning that measure, by not giving the House time enough—they only received four hours—to consider the proposal; and the evidence respecting the railways and the Orders in Council would. together, have made a book larger than the Bible. The House, at his call, voted the money; they were all getting a share. Well, suppose that any or a large portion of the money had been misappropriated. When the members got back to Parliament, who could have been held responsible? Was the Government responsible? No; but the members of the House were responsible. Would those members vote non-confidence in themselves? Certainly not. The member for West Durham was, I know, powerful in getting the Treasurer of Ontario to vote non-confidence in himself by that letter telling him to "Speak now." Of course, I was very anxious the people of this country should be considered in this matter. In fact I would like to consult my constituents. But I think, on the other hand, that if I did not support this present scheme they would say to me-go about your business. I understand a meeting is to be held in Montreal, to-morrow, for which I confess I have not got a ticket of admission yet. This shows certainly a spirit which I should not have expected on the part of the hon. leader of the Liberal Opposition, who is announced to address it Perhaps, considering all my claims for past support, he will have the kindness yet to send me a ticket; I may get one as late as to-morrow morning. My hon, friend from North Nortolk (Mr. Charlton), whom I respect very much, says it is all right, go on. It is all lovely until he goes over to the other side of the House, when he says put on the breaks. To show you his inconsistency, I cannot do better than read what the hon, gentleman said in reference to this subject in 1878. The hon, gentleman very often answers himself. He makes a speech to-day only to contradict what he said previously. On the 28th March, 1878, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) brought in his railway bill, appropriating lands to build railways in the North-West. The hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) then said:

then said:

"He considered this measure, notwithstanding the unmeasured denunciations it had received at the hands of the hon, member for Northumberland, was a statesmanlike measure and embodied a wise colicy. It was essential to the development of the North-West that that country should be furnished with railways. The rivers flowing through that region all flowed to the northward, and thus this region had no natural highways to market as was furnished to the western States by the Mississippi and the Great Lakes; and if railways were essential to the development of the Western States, they were ten-fold more essential to the development of the North-West. It was useless to think of opening up and settling this country without furnishing it with railway facilities. Now, it had been said that the American railways were subsidized to a greater extent than necessary; perhaps that had, in some instances, been the case. Reference had been made to the Illinois Central Railway. At the time the road was projected, nearly the whole interior portion of the State was a wilderness; farmers living fifty miles from Chicago were in the habit of teaming wheat to the market often, when the roads were bad, at a cost of one-half the value of the wheat. The country had a few struggling settlements in the interior, but there was no extent of population. The country would never have been opened and settle as it has been, but for the construction of a system of railways of which the Central was the chief. That railway had populated the vast prairie region in the centre of the State and had contributed in an important degree to make Illinois the. "That while this House is willing to make all just provision for railways, and assents to the said resolution, it feels bound to express the opinion that the said Order in Council, together with nine other Orders in Council, involving an aggregate appropriation of one million and a half of dollars, having only been placed on the Table of this House at its Session yesterday, and the Government to repeat requests, having Orders in Council in favor of, till this House had voted an additional subsidy of four hundred thousand dollars, and a further appropriation of the market often, when the roads were bad, at a cost of one-half the value of the wheat. The country had a few struggling settlements in the interier, but there was no extent of population. The country would never have been opened and settle as it has been, but for the contraction of a system of railways of which the Central was the chief. That railway had populated the vast prairie region in the centre of the State, and had contributed in an important degree to make Illinois the third State in the Americain Union, with a population of over three millions. He recollected paying a visit to Iowa about twenty years ago.

Then, it had but a few miles of railway, and but a sparse population, and a further appropriation for the market often, when the roads were bad, at a cost of one-half the value of the wheat. The country had a few struggling settlements in the interier, but there was no extent of population. The country would never have been opened and settle as it has been, but for the contraction of a system of railways of which the Central was the chief. That railway had populated the vast prairie region in the centre of the State, and had contributed in an important degree to make Illinois the third State in the Americain Union, with a population of over three was no extent of population. The country would never have been opened and settle as it has been, but for the control of a system of railways of which the Central was the chief. chiefly located along the line of the Mississippi; yet by means of a liberal railway policy, by subsidizing several lines crossing the State from east to west, it had suddenly risen into an important State, with a population of nearly, if not quite, 1,500,000. Some of the railways had perhaps been subsidized more than was necessary, perhaps more land had been given than was advisable, but capitalists would not embark their money unless they had a prospect of a fair return, and it was folly to haggle with them about an unimportant difference when important interests were at stake."

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCALLUM. What are hon, gentlemen on the other side doing now if not acting contrary to the policy here defended. He said further:

"The United States Government held the alternate sections, which were reserved within the limits of railway land-grants at double the price of lands outside the limits of railway grants, and more distant for railway communication. These lands were denominated double minimum lands and sold as readily at $2.50 per acre as other land did at $1.25; and the result of railway land grants, so far as land sales were concerned, was that Government had actually received as much for its lands as it would have been likely to have done if the whole area had been sold at the ordinary Government prices. Now, in the North-West, there were untof millions of acres of land. They were told by the hon. member for Northumberland that this was the heritage of Canada, that it had been bought by the people's money; but, in its present shape, of what value was this great wild, lone land to us? The question was how that land should be utilized, and for that purpose the Minister of the Interior had devised a Bill which in its conception was admirable, and which, in his opinion, would, if carried out, attain the object of populating this vast country. The Bill provided that these roads were to receive ten sections to the mile east of a certain point; tweive sections to the mile west of that point; and twenty sections to the mile in the Peace River region. The maximum rate but very slightly exceeded the minimum of the United States railway grants, and they must bear in mind that, if railways were essential to the opening up of Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin, they were far more essential to the opening up of the territory on the apper waters of the Saskatchewan or in the Peace River region; and Government could never properly utilize that country or get any adequate return for the money it had expended without adopting a policy of this kind. They had coumitted themselves to the building of a trunk lire through that country; were they going to do that and make no provision for feeders to bring traffic to that line? This Bill proposed to open up

Well, a ship at anchor is not in a very bad state. Her position is safe. But no sooner was the craft boarded by a crew composed of hon. gentlemen opposite, than she was sent adrift, and was going on the rocks until the people of this country said to her crew: "Get out of this, and make way for more competent men," and now the ship is working to windward again. The hon. member for North Norfolk continued:

"While the population of the United States had increased nearly twenty-five per cent. in the last decade, this country had increased only about twelve per cent during the same period. The energies of this country were arrested until the hon. gentlemen went out of office, and it now devolved upon the present Government to people and develope the country with the utmost celerity. If they were to increase the prosperity of this Dominion, they must increase the number of its inhabitants. In the North-West they had lands which would give sufficient sustenance for fifteen or twenty millions of people; let them get inhabitants for it as soon as possible. If they could pour 10,000 a year into it, those settlers would pay into the coffers of this country, in the shape of customs duties, $250,000 per annum, and the Government would derive a fir greater revenue this way than from the sale of these lands."

Now, Sir, we want to people this country. If we can double the population, we can easily pay the national debt and have, I believe, a margin left after building this railway Mr. McCallum.

If I am not greatly mistaken, the hon, gentleman who leads the Opposition, stated at his Toronto meeting in reply to an interruption, that he would rather like to be a member of the Syndicate himself. I should like to hear from the hon, gentleman whether I am correct in making that statement. Well, silence gives consent; and since unfortunately he cannot have a share in the present Syndicate, I am glad to tell him that there is one Syndicate which he may have the opportunity of joining, I refer to the Sault Ste. Marie Syndicate—one which, I think, will suit him exactly. Here are some resolutions by the Duluth Chamber of Commerce, which, I think, will interest the hon, gentleman. At a special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of Duluth, Minn., held on the 29th day of December, 1880, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

"Whereas, we learn from the reports of debates in the Dominion Parliament, that it is proposed to grant the future control of the Canada Pacific Railroad, and all its connections, to a Syndicate, and thus enable such Syndicate to monopolize the trade and commerce of the North-West, seeking an outlet through Canada; and, whereas, while we feeligreat delicacy in making any suggestions as to the course that should be pursued by the Canadian Government, in the matter of such contract with the Syndicate, we believe that the advantages of the great trans-continental routes should be free and open to all roads, both in Canada and the United States, and that it is contrary to the enlightened spirit of the age that the commercial interests of two great nations should be hampered by boundary lines; and, whereas, the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and other corporations, have already made surveys, and are now building a line of road from the present eastern terminus of the Northern Pacific, along the south shore of Lake Superior, to the Sault Ste. Marie. there to connect with the Canadian system of railways, and pour the immense traffic of the New North-West from the Pacific Ocean to Lake Superior, through Canadian territory and Montreal, to the Atlantic seaboard and European markets; Therefore, Resolved: That we observe with regret that the Canadian Government has contemplated a plan for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, which will, if approved by Parliament, deprive a large portion of the North-West of the benefits which would accrue by the operation of this great trans-continental route as a grand competing line, and we would express our profound conviction that it should be the aim to make a road of the length and character of the Canada Pacific Railway one of international importance, and to invite and secure an active competition over its lines for the Pacific Railroad shall importance, and other companies, to build a line of road down the south shore of Lake Superior to connect with the railway

So it appears that these gentlemen are anxious to wipe out international boundary lines; and, perhaps, there are members of this House who would desire to see these boundary lines obliterated, but I can assure them that I, for one, do not. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) said that by by passing this scheme we would be transferring the seat of Government from Ottawa to St. Paul. I generally attach a good deal of credit to what that hon, gentleman says, but I noticed that he smiled when he made that remark, and it is possible that some hon gentlemen would be gratified if such a change were made. It is said that the ratification of this contract will create a powerful corporation in this country. It undoubtedly will; but the power of this corporation, so far as the political system of the country is concerned, must be entirely in proportion to the manner in which they people they will have to deal with attempt to harass the people of the the If they

in Canada; but if, on the other hand, they give the best possible accommodation to the people in carrying their products to market, if they assist them in building up the country, they will acquire that interest in the welfare of the country which every honest man should have. There are two or three clauses of this contract regarding which I freely admit there may be a difference of opinionespecially the 16th, concerning the exemption from taxation—though they may be all right. They may be right or they may be wrong, but I have every confidence in the Government; and if I do not vote for the contract, what shall I be doing? I shall be aiding to turn the Government out of office and put back the affairs of the country for twenty years. I certainly do not intend to do that. I need not go home and meet my constituents if I did. But speaking of the corporation of the Syndicate, I do know how it would be if the hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) had the management of this contract. I do not wish to indulge in insinuations, but I do say that I have no confidence in him, and I am quite satisfied that the people of this country have They tried him and they found him no confidence in him. wanting. Look at the expense which would be incurred by this country if His Excellency should order a new election, and that in face of the fact that this Government are deeper in the affections of the people than any other Government we ever had in this country—a Government which has redeemed every pledge it ever made with regard to the National Policy; and even in regard to this Pacific Railway, they are now proposing to build the road upon a scheme which is out of the arena of politics. I had every confidence in the manner on which the work upon the railway was progressing, under the direction of the present Minister of Railways. I know how largely the country is indebted to him, in connection with his management of other Government railways - his reduction of the expenses on the Intercolonial for example. I believe that nine-tenths of the people of this country are desirous to hand over this work to a Syndicate and defining the liability, and then we shall know what we have got to pay. There are many advantages in giving it to a Syndicate. I am satisfied it will help us to settle up that country. I know something about this in my locality. The agents of the St. Paul and Minneapolis Railway have even come into my own county and seduced the inhabitants to go and settle in Minnesota. I am satisfied that hereafter the Syndicate will use its influence in sending emigrants to the Canadian North-West. I believe that if not next Parliament the Parliament after that I can shake hands with my hon. friend from North Norfolk and congratulate him upon the success of this enterprise. A good deal has been said about excepting the rails from duty. I do not see that there can be anything said about that, because there is no duty on steel rails now. Does any man in his senses suppose that these men will go into that country and spend millions of money to build a railway on stilts? In the first place, it is true they may, in some instances, lay a cheap track with sharp curves and steep grades for the purpose of transporting earth for grading, but after that it will be to their interest to make it good permanent road, with as low grades and as small curves as possible. It will be to their interest to make a good road just as it is to the interest of a shipbuilder to build a good vessel that will carry as much freight as possible. I ask the people of this country to consider this as a business matter. Suppose a man has $1,700,000; does any one think he would be willing to invest his money in a far off work of this kind unless he had reasonable guarantee of a fair return? Besides that, they will have to wait a long time before they can get any return from this road. These gentlemen are good men enough, no doubt, but they are not patriotic enough to come to Canada and build the railway, unless they can make money out of it. I can tell hon. gentlemen that if they think there is any re-action in the action, and in which measures at once repressive and remedial country on this question, they never wore more mistaken in their lives; they are even more mistaken now than they were in 1878 on the trade question. In conclusion, I may say to my hon, friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake) that if he will be kind enough to send me a ticket I will go to Moutreal and hear him speak on the Syndicate question.

Mr. COURSOL moved the adjournment of the debate.

THE PACIFIC RAILWAY DEBATE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that, from and after this day, the Order of the 21st December, for the consideration of two resolutions for granting certain moneys and lands in aid of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, shall have precedence next after routine proceedings. He said: I have already informed the House of the reasons why these propositions of the Government, if they are adopted at all, should be adopted as soon as possible, and I desire, with the will of the House, that this subject should take precedence of all others after routine proceedings. The House was called specially, at an early date, for the purpose of considering this subject, and the whole question depends very much upon the will of Parliament in respect to it. It is obvious that there should not be one system of immigration prometed by the Government and another system adopted by the Syndicate, if it should be incorporated. It is necessary, therefore, that there should be concerted action by the Government and by this Company on the question of immigration. I believe that the settlement of the North-West will be greatly retarded by delay, and I think that, allowing, of course, full and ample opportunity for the discussion of this subject, that it ought to be discussed to the exclusion of all other matter until it is finally settled, and the policy of the Government either adopted or rejected by Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. I very much regret that the hon. gentleman has thought proper to propose this motion. As I said, when the debate on the Address took place, my opinion is that our first duty in this matter is to give ample time for deliberation and the formation of opinion on this question, as well outside as inside of this House. The forms of this House have been well and wisely chosen, so as to prevent, as a rule, a too hasty decision of the House upon public questions. They provide for intervals, which are to be devoted to other business, and thus to give that time, which I believe, in this case, of all others, is essential for discussion and deliberation in the House, and in the country, before we reach a conclusion. I observe that the Legislature of the United Kingdom has been called, and that the Prime Minister has given notice of a motion similar to that which, the hon. gentleman has given. I quite admit there are circumstances which would justify such a notice, and those circumstances exist in the United Kingdom, one part of which is in a condition which requires immediate are to be brought before the consideration of Parliament, and where society is almost in a state of anarchy. But that is an occasion quite different from this. The hon, gentleman proposes, to-day, to reproduce in this country that condition of things which has given rise to the condition of things in Ireland. Therefore we have got a proposition before us to produce, by immediate pressure, a state of things which it is sought in England to remove by immediate pressure. Of course, I am well aware that the hon. gentleman can carry this motion, to the exclusion of the ordinary rights of a discussion of his own proposals, and to a demand for papers and other information to which the House is entitled. To-day I desire to record, under these circumstances, my protest and dissent. I would therefore submit to the hon. gentlemansince I know the fidelity of his followers in this matter -that, without prejudice to his fell purposes, we should have a little relief, and that it would be a great convenience if a few minutes were allowed each day during which we might, at any rate, ask questions and receive such answers as the hon, gentleman might vouchsafe to us. I am also of opinion that the notice paper should be called at convenient seasons, so that those motions which can be submitted without debate, and to which the Government are willing to accede, should be disposed of from time to time. These proposals are obviously for the convenience of the House, and are not in disaccord with the hon gentleman's views practically, and I hope he will see the propriety of assenting to them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am very glad my bon friend has alluded to the Queen's Speech of which we have received information to-day; for it seems to me if one wanted a support for the motion I have made, one would find it in the precedent which has just The hon, gentleman says been set in England. there are occasions on which such a course is permissable, but this is not one of those occasions. Why, Sir, if there is one question more important in a free country than another it is whether the right of habeas corpus shall be suspended, whether the personal liberty of the subject is to be attacked by the Government of the day; and I take it there will be stronger opposition to the hastening of a decision on that question than the opposition which the hon, gentleman offers to this matter. This is no new matter, Sir. It is one of very great importance I admit; it has engaged the attention of the country since 1872. The grand question whether we are to have a Pacific Railway at all, and whether it is to be built by the Government or by a Syndicate, may probably be considered by the people. But they have considered that question; it has been the burning question for eight years, and we all came here charged with the construction of the Pacific Railway. But the details must be settled by a body of experts such as this House, elected by the people of Canada for this purpose. With respect to the hon. gentleman's suggestion that an opportunity be given for questions, after routine, I shall accede to that, and I would say that the right of no private member is affected by this resolution. It simply provides that this, being a question of the very greatest importance, requiring immediate settlement, should be discussed first. After it is disposed of, Parliament will have every opportunity of discussing and deciding upon every question which is submitted to it for its consideration.

Mr. CASGRAIN suggested that all papers having a direct bearing upon the matter in question should be laid before the House as soon as possible, in order that they might be used in its discussion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government will give every opportunity, not to the delay of this question, but at the conclusion of each sitting, for motions to be made. It can, I think, be arranged with my hon. friend Mr. BLAKE.

across the floor that immediately before adjourning, those motions requiring no discussion can be made.

The motion, smended by the addition of the words, "and the disposal of questions put by members," was carried on division.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

House again resolved itself into Committee on certain proposed resolutions for granting and appropriating twenty-five millions of dollars and twenty-five millions of acres of land in the North-West Territories, according to the terms of the contract relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway transmitted to this House by His Excellency the Governor-General by his Message dated December 10th.

Mr. COURSOL. It will soon be ten years, Mr. Chairman, since the question that now occupies the attention of the House was first brought under the notice of the country. This question has been the object of the researches and reflections of all our most eminent public men; the national mind has, so to speak, concentrated all its energy upon this Pacific Railway scheme, which has been submitted to all sorts of trials, and for the execution of which all sorts of means have been attempted. After ten years of researches and trials of all kinds, we are coming back, for the execution of this undertaking, to the plan drawn up and submitted by Sir George Cartier in 1871, to wit, that this undertaking be executed by means of a Government subsidy and land grant. This return to the original plan, after all the groping about, all the hesitation, all the costly experiments of latter years, shows us how well Sir George and his colleagues, the promoters of this great undertaking, had matured their scheme before submitting it to the public. It shows how thoroughly they were masters of the great idea they had conceived; it shows that in order to arrive at a plan so vast in its details, at a mode of execution so sure and so simple, they must have been animated by broad views of public interest, of national welfare, and that they were not controlled by the narrow ideas of party. The country which has paid the expenses of the experiments of latter years, the public that has gone through all the stages of anxiety, can to-day freely approve of this scheme; the people are satisfied, for justice has been done them. To-day the House and the country at large are obliged to come back to this same measure and will adopt it. The great highway of communication constitutes the question of the hour. We have the example of Europe that is constructing, or will soon begin, a tunnel between Dover and Calais. We have the example of France who, after having given to the world the Suez Canal, is going to cut through the Isthmus of Panama; and we would be unworthy of living in the nineteenth century, as a nation, if we could not follow the example of others. We must, like those nations, take the lead, because we are nearer the spot towards which they have turned their attention. We are going to take the means of succeeding and of constructing a great highway that will rival with the great American lines, and Canada will have her Pacific Railway, for, thank Heaven, there are no longer, as there were formerly, newspapers of the description of the National; there are no more Liberal newspapers like there were then, warring against this great enterprise, and maintaining that, physically and financially, it was impossible. So true is it that our opponents have adopted our plan, and if there were no party spirit to divide us, or if party spirit could for a moment cease, the Opposition itself would join us in ratifying this contract; the Opposition itself would find the means of promoting the Pacific and of completing it, because not one of our opponents has questioned its importance, but on the contrary all have admitted the necessity of building this great highway on Canadian territory. Now, Mr. Chairman, I can understand that fault may be found with certain details of the contract, but at least we have the satisfaction of seeing that the plan proposed in 1871, and which has always been the plan of the Conservative party, is to-day the plan adopted by the whole country. People may make objections to it, they may make war against it from time to time, but it can only be harmless war; they may endeavor to cast discredit on the undertaking; they may call insignificant meetings; they may go to Montreal in order to hold meetings with picked audiences. I understand all that. But we, in our public meetings, have no need of inviting now; and by assuring the construction of the railway to the hearers by sending them tickets; we hold open meetings, we hold public meetings. With us there are no tickets of understood the interests of the country. How could we pro-The discussion which took place yesterday admission. evening in Montreal, contrived as it was so as to allow the leader of the Opposition to make a speech, is not the ordinary way of holding meetings, especially in a country over which waves the British flag. Those who, like the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), are so proud and so jealous of the liberties under the British Crown, should be the first to say that under a Government like ours, under a constitutional Government, there ought to be none of these small things, none of these hole-and-corner meetings with admis-One could understand a man's buying a sion tickets. ticket to hear Sara Bernhardt, but that any one should pay a considerable sum in order to listen to the hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), that astounds me. Next Saturday-notice of it has been given-Saturday next, to-morrow evening, there will be a meeting of the citizens of Montreal, alike favorable and unfavorable to the railway and the contract; all will be admitted, all are invited, and I regret that the hon, member for West Durham does not intend to come to-morrow evening. There will be a car at his disposal if it is needed. We will listen to him with pleasure, but at least he must give our leader, the hon. Minister of Railways, the opportunity of making his voice heard as it has been in the Province of Ontario, and Montreal will, after to-morrow evening, present the spectacle of a free meeting, where every one will hear the reasons that have been urged in favor of the contract, and which have induced the House, and will induce it, to vote for the contract. A great many plans have been tried since 1871. After the motion made by Sir George E. Cartier, after what was said in the House, after the plan had been submit ed to the people, the so-called Pacific Scandal was brought out; a moment of surprise, a moment of weakness, a moment of stupor in our ranks caused the Conservative flag to go into Opposition; but at the present time, those who, a few days ago, desired and hoped to get up a new Pacific Scandal, those who hoped to again take the good faith of the people by surprise, those who thought to intimidate us by threatening us with approaching elections will be greatly deceived. We will vote for the contract, we will render justice to him who first proposed this plan, we will avenge his memory, we will avenge his character, and we will avenge his colleague lately attacked by the hon, member for Centre Huron. The hon, ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Richard J. Cartwright), with an incredible cynicism that bears witness to his spite but not to his courage, insulted, on the very floor of Parliament, that which we respect the most-he came and insulted the character of our leader, he insulted the character, above reproach, of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Langevin); but he cannot prevent us from respecting him, and we do respect him. All the abuse that can fall from the lips of the heretofore Minister of Finance falls to the ground and remains there. With regard to the memory of Sir George Cartier, which has been equally attacked by the hon. member, public opinion has avenged it, and the vote of this House will avenge it, and his name will be inscribed in history as that of one of our greatest patriots and one of the greatest benefactors of his country. But, Mr. Chairman, let us look at the objections that the Opposition seem to make to the scheme. The Opposition is not hostile to the construction of the road. The Opposition desires the Pacific to be built, but what do they say? They say: If you had pushed forward the line to Szult Ste. Marie, and had abandoned the Lake Superior section, we would have been satisfied; we would have nothing more to say. I understand that these gentlemen would like to annex us to the United States immediately; that is their policy. When our friends abandoned that route, it was to build the great national highway which is to reach from the Pacific to the Atlantic; that was our policy then. That is our policy fit in the future by a road built especially in the interests of the United States. I understand that in the interest of Montreal, to which I am heartily attached, and in the interest of the Province of Quebec in general, the building of the Sault Ste. Marie Railway is indisputable, and it will be done. The Province of Ontario cannot get along without it. I wish, and we all wish the Province of Ontario all possible success; the present plan gives her a very large share, and I do not understand how the members from Ontario on the other side of the House can so strongly oppose the construc-tion of the Lake Superior Branch. The country builds 1,200 miles of railway for which they do not give a single acre of land, for which they do not subscribe a single penny in the midst of a population that will become strong and powerful; the whole line passes over their own territory from Lake Nipissing to the boundaries of Manitoba. The first and principal aim, when the question was raised of building the great national highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, was to build on our own territory a road that might truly be called a Canadian road. Well I that is the kind of road we still want to build. There is also another reason, and this reason is that they who, like the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), are proud of being British subjects, and would be proud, as he said, to die in the folds of the glorious flag of old England, they should be glad to see a road necessary to the empire built upon Canadian territory. We, also, have duties to fulfil towards the Mother Country; if we wish to establish a great empire to the north of the United States, we must think of the British Empire. Our road will be of great utility to England. Undoubtedly it is not from this point of view that we must look at the undertaking to judge of its worth, but since we have judged it necessary in our own interest, this consideration of British interests becomes important. In the advent of a war between England and some continental power the necessity of revietualling a fleet in the waters of the Pacific may make itself felt at any moment. and it is sufficient to make the statement that I have just submitted to the House, in order that everybody should admit without hesitation that from this latter point of view our route by the the north is of an uncalculable advantage for Great Britain; and is not the sympathy with which the Liberal English Government seems to surround our great national scheme an indication that this point of view has struck the Gladstone Government? Now, I know that on the other side of the House it is thought that we have not done enough for the Sault Ste. Marie Branch. I readily understand why members of the Opposition often speak of the Sault Ste. Marie Branch, and why they say: If we were in power we would build this branch; if we were in power the road would not cost half so much; if we were in power we would do a great many things. But we know these gentlemen's history. We know that they were once in power during five years that the country found too long, and we know that if they were in power their declarations of friendship for the Province of Quebec would soon cease. Must we remind the members of the Left of what their political friends said during the debate on the Budget at the last session of the Ontario Legislature? They said that the Government of the Dominion or uo other Government should give one penny's worth of help to the North Shore Railway, or to the Province of Quebec. For our part, we are not jealous of the progress made by the Province of Ontario; on the contrary, we desire that the Province of Ontario should profit by the Pacific Railway, for whenever trade is prosperous in one Province the others profit by it. The Province of Quebec has given the example of a boundless and perhaps an exaggerated patriotism in building a line of railway to Hull. This line will connect with the Canada Central, and extend to Pembroke and Lake Nipissing, and thence we will get the trade of Lake Superior. The country to the north of Lake Superior is not known, and those who speak about it do not know it any better than I do. The reports of engineers upon the subject are so vague and so scarce that we know nothing about it, except through travellers, and especially missionaries. We know that there are thousands and thousands of acres of wellwooded lands that, later on, will support an immense population, for it must be borne in mind that this road is not built for fifteen or twenty years, but that for all time to come it will be a means of communication. Now, it is said: But the Government has not even reserved the mining rights; there is, perhaps, gold, or copper, or silver there. According to surveyors, considerable mines will be found on the shores of Lake Superior. These mines will be worked, people will go there, and the transportation of the freight by this road will necessarily be profitable. Later on, we will have a trade in fish and meat. It is to be supposed that there will be cattle dealers, who will bring all kinds of stock from Manitoba, and that this will give a considerable traffic in the future. Now, Mr. Chairman, can we sacrifice the interests of the country by refusing to vote for the contract? The question is an important one for us. I have studied it as well as the means at my disposal would allow me. At first, like many others, I found a great many objections to it; but the more I studied the question, the more the objections disappeared. I am sure that if our leaders, if the delegates who went to England, could have taken a pen or a pencil, drawn up themselves the contract, put in it the terms that they liked and then said to the Syndicate: Sign and accept our conditions—I am sure, I say, that the Government could have obtained better terms. But they were not alone in passing the contract. It was necessary to find a company,-men rich enough, powerful enough, enterprising enough, to undertake so great a work as the building of this road. It has been said that these men would make a fortune. So much the better. Gentlemen on the other side ought not to complain, for the members of the Syndicate are their friends. People do not embark in great enterprises without risking a great deal, and, I must admit it myself, I do not know what will he the result of this undertaking. Time alone can tell. Those who to-day seem to be millionaires, because they are to receive twenty-five millions of acres of land and twentyfive millions in money, may be ruined to-morrow. immigration does not take this direction they will be sufferers and the Dominion will also be a loser. Who can look into the future? We must judge of it by what we have before our eyes, and we are entitled to hope that America, especially North America, will prosper. With regard to the details of the contract, it is said: You have given too much to the Syndicate; you give them a road-bed a hundred feet wide, to the Pacific Ocean, exempt from taxation; you allowed them to have depots without paying anything. But does the contract do anything more than private individuals do in business transactions? In the Province of Quebec, in the Province of Ontario, in the Maritine Provinces, everywhere that railroads are to be found, how were these railways built? They were not built at the expense of the contractors. They were built because the municipalities furnished the means of building them. It was done everywhere, It was done in the Mr. Coursol.

city of Montreal; it was done in the Eastern townships. Everywhere benuses were granted. One has just been granted here in Ottawa. One was granted, not long since, for a railway to Toronte. Well, the Government have lands, they give a part of these lands, and that is quite natural. A private individual who has ten acres of land, knows very well that he will lose a third if he builds. However, he is obliged to make some sacrifice in order to increase the value of his property. The Government does the same thing. By giving a hundred feet in width, the Government increases the value of its own property at the same time it increases the value of the Syndicate's property. It must be observed that if the increase in the value of the lands is considerable for the Syndicate, the increase is necessarily the same for the country. We have a road to build, and it cannot be built without cost and without work. The drainage alone will considerably increase the value of our lands. When the Company has drained their road, and they will have to do it, for no railway can be built without drains, this drainage will increase the value of the land. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is a wise policy for every Canadian Government to endeavor to promote immigration, which must of a necessity take the direction of the West, the North, and the North West in our country, and to have it pass over our own territory as much as possible. It is well known that immigrants go through the United States and that they are stopped there very often, for great promises are made them and they are deceived in every possible manner. Now, when we have our railway, immigrants landing in Montreal, or elsewhere, will be taken directly to our western provinces, where they want to settle, without passing by American lines. Why do the French Cauadians flock in such numbers to the United States? It has been said that it was on account of the National Policy. The National Policy, against which the Liberals have spoken so much for the last three years, and which has merited the confidence of the people, as have those who defended this Policy,—the National Policy has been for the French Canadians a source of wealth that keeps them at home by causing a great number of factories to spring up. The Liberals are a great number of factories to spring up. The Liberals are in the bad habit of over-praising the United States. They speak of that country as enjoying all liberty, and as if Canada were a country under despotic sway. Such is not the case. There was never any despotism in the administration of Canada, whether the Liberal party were in power with the hon. member for Lambton, or whether the Conservatives were in power; and never did either Canadians or immigrants complain that they had in any way been oppressed by the administration. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that we have fortunately left the period of uncertainty. We have done with the regime of the past. Formerly we heard people talk of a road here and a road there. Here a railway was being begun there we had our water stretches, now again it was an all-rail route, and then there was another change; during five years the public was kept in suspense, and this unlucky question of the Pacific Railway was always being discussed. Now the hour of he itation has gone We know where we are. We know what we will have to pay. We know when the contract will be fulfilled, and we know that in ten years from now, those who will then be alive will thank the members of the Right for having supported the contract. In spite of what is said on the other side of the House, I am ready to meet the electors, and I think that all the members on this side of the House are ready to meet them. It is said in Montreal that at a meeting it was proposed to submit the question to the people. It was two Aldermen who pro-posed it. They thought, no doubt, that it was the North Shore Railway that was still at stake. The question was submitted to the people at two different elections. The Province of Quebec, Millions were voted, even by the always followed. The last elections did not turn upon the National Policy alone; we had upon our banner Protection, but we had also Pacific Railway. Now, for these gentlemen to say that the people have not been consulted, to say that the people are not familiar with the question of the Pacific Railway, is to suppose that the electors are very ignorant. The people are better posted on this subject than hon. gentlemen imagine. The people know that the Pacific Railway is a necessity, and they are ready and willing to make sacrifices. The representatives of the people have been sent here for that purpose; they are perfectly free to vote upon this question. I deem it my duty, Mr. Chairman, to conclude by saying that I am convinced that the Government will do all that it is bound to do. I am convinced that the Government will protect the interests of the Province of Quebec, and that later on, when the time comes for speaking of the interests of the Province of Quebec and of the North Shore Railway, the recognized leader of the Province of Quebec, the hon. member for Three Rivers, speaking for the Government, will be at his post, as he always has been. We are satisfied that he will do his duty, and the Province of Quebec has confidence in him. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that later on, when I have heard all the reasons and arguments for and against the contract, another opportunity will be afforded me of expressing my views more at length, but until this opportunity arrives I will be allowed to thank the House for its kind attention.

Mr. CHARLTON. This question is one that should be discussed in an impartial spirit, with a desire, not to advance the interest of one or other political party, but with a desire to secure the best possible scheme for the construction of a railway across the continent. The Reform party has been charged upon the floor of the House and in the Conservative press of the country with having condemned this scheme now before the House before it was made public, with having, in advance, signified their intention to oppose this scheme whatever its character or nature might be. This is not only unfair, but incorrect. The press and the public men of the Reform party only criticised the features of the scheme that the Government saw fit to make public before the meeting of the House of Commons. What the scheme in its entirety was, of course, we knew not; and I think I may say for all the members of the Reform party that they came here disposed to treat this scheme upon its merits. I for one, would have felt pleased if it had been a scheme that commended itself to my support. I would have felt pleased could this matter of arranging for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway have been placed upon a basis such as would have commended itself to my judgment and reason. Such a scheme would, certainly, have been more satisfactory to me than one brought down by the Government which was sure to prove ruinous to the country, and for that reason sure to secure the downfall of the party responsible for it. I would rather have sacrificed the interests of party than the interests of my country in this matter. In treating this question to-day, I shall endeavour to do so temperately. I shall, no doubt, discuss it earnestly, for I have very earnest and decided opinions as to the character of the measure under our consideration. It is a noticeable feature in the discussion of this measure thus far, that the hon gentlemen who have spoken on the Ministerial side of the House attempted to show that the Reform party was committed to a scheme equally as bad as this, and that, if consistent, they would be unable to condemn this scheme. That ground was taken by the hon. Minister of Railways, and by his supporters who followed him. Now, whether the Reform party in the past committed itself to schemes as bad as this one or not, is not pertinent to the question. If the Reform party ever committed itself to bad schemes, that certainly would permit that to be done without increasing taxation. There are fourteen years left for carrying out the contract binding us to construct that road without any regard to the resources of Canada, or how severe the taxation may be which it may involve. That was the next step—a step calculated to shake the confidence of the people of Canada as to the ability of those who occupied the Treasury benches to manage the affairs of the Dominion."

supporting a scheme bad in itself. Their scheme should be judged, not by antecedents as to the conduct of one party or the other, but upon its own merits. If the scheme is good in itself, it should receive the support of every hon. member of the House; if, on the contrary, it is a bad one, it should receive the condemnation of every hon. gentleman. The discussion on the Canada Pacific Railway question necessarily involves, if gone into fully, a brief consideration of the chief points in our past history in reference to it; and I may say that the history of this Canadian Pacific Railway agitation will be considered in future ages, no doubt, a very singular one. We seem to have been possessed with a species of fatuity which determined us to have a trans-continental line, regardless of its cost, of our ability to accomplish its construction, of the prospect of its paying or not, and of the question whether it would prove to be a source of strength to Canada. The Reform party cannot certainly be held convicted of complicity in the treaty with British Columbia. They protested against the objectionable features which admitted British Columbia into Confederation It is in consequence of the features of that agreement that most of the difficulties which from time to time have come upon us have originated. But even the British Columbia Act was accompanied by a provision for limiting the expenditure on the Canadian Pacific Railway within certain bounds. It contained a provision which fixed the scope of requirements of the country. That provision was a resolution moved April 12, 1871, by Sir George Etienne Cartier, seconded by the Hon., now Sir, Leonard Tilley, which reads as follows, as entered in the journals of the House for that year :-

"That the railway referred to in the Address of Her Majesty concerning the agreement made by British Columbia, and adopted by this House, on Saturday, 1st Apil next, should be constructed and worked by private enterprise, and not by the Dominion Government; and that the public aid to be given to secure the undertaking should consist of such liberal grants of land and such subsidy in money, or other aid, not unduly pressing on the industry and resources of the Dominion, as the Parliament of Canada shall hereafter determine."

That principle was equally affirmed in the preamble of the Bill passed in 1872, providing for the construction of this railway. That preamble contains the following language: -

"And that the public aid to be given to secure that undertaking, &c., should consist of such liberal grants in land and such subsidy in money. or other aid, not increasing the present rate of taxation, as the Parliament of Canada should thereafter determine."

The same principle was reaffirmed in the Act passed in 1874, under the administration of the hon, member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie). The language used in the preamble of that Act was as follows:-

"Whereas, the House of Commons of Canada resolved in the Session of the year 1871, that the said railway should be constructed and worked by private enterprise and not by the Dominion Government, and that the public aid to be given to secure its accomplishment should consist of liberal grants of land and such subsidy in money, or other aid, not increasing the then existing rates of taxation, as the Parliament of Canada should thereafter determine."

The same principle was again reaffirmed by this House, in 1876, on the motion of the hon member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross). Upon four distinct occasions the principle was affirmed by the House. In his speech of the 25th February, 1876, the hon. Minister of Railways used the following language: -

I wish that the hon. Minister of Railways had been in the year 1880, as cautious, as fearful as to the consequences that would befall Canada, if a measure calculated to increase taxation were carried, as he seems to have been in 1876. I think, then, we may safely assume that the fixed policy of the House, of this Government, of both the party now in power and the party in opposition, is clearly defined in these resolutions which I have cited, that the requirements of the British Columbia Act were that this road should be proceeded with and constructed as fast as the resources of the country would permit without adding to the taxation of the people. As time passed on, it was inevitable and natural that many modifications of views should take place in regard to this question. The fact that the stipulations of the British Columbia Act in 1871 provided that this road should be commenced in three and completed in ten years from that date proved conclusively that the people of this country were in possession of but a very slight amount of knowledge of the character of the country through which that road was to pass, and as the knowledge of that country increased, all the difficulties to be encountered in the work became more apparent. As the knowledge of the route became greater, it became more and more apparent that the undertaking to which the Government of 1871 had pledged itself could not be carried out. It was found impossible to ascertain in three years what was the most feasible and proper route to be selected; in fact, we are not to-day in possession of the exact absolute knowledge as to the best line for the construction of the road from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean. The idea that we could build that road in ten years was a preposterous one, and with the lapse of time, the realization of the difficulties to be overcome has become more clear and complete. These obstacles being known and appreciated to a certain extent in 1874, it was found impossible to organize a company for the construction of this road. The parties appealed to to undertake the enterprise were aware that the lands in the North-West were unapproachable, and possessed little or no value. Whether a large emigration could be sent into that country or not, was a matter of pure speculation, and the character of the country itself was in dispute, as it was not definitely known whether the climate was such as to admit of the growing of grain. As time has progressed, our knowledge on these points has become more full and more satisfactory. The country has been rendered accessible, the fact that the North-West contains a vast extent of arable land suitable for settlement has become known, and the conditions for the construction of a railway have become much more favorable. The Government of the day should have been alive to these changes. and to the fact that our knowledge as to the character of the North-West Territory has largely increased, that to-day that country has a tangible value to a much greater degree than it had in 1874 or in 1872. If we contrast the condition of that country in 1874 with its condition in 1880, what do we find? In 1874 the country was the centre of a great wilderness. It could be approached by ox carts from St. Paul, making a long and tedious journey. It was practically shut out from the world. It could not reach the markets of the continent. But to-day the Government had expended the money necessary to bring that country, or at least the settled portions of that country, into communication with the outer world. It has completed a line of railway from Selkirk which connects with the railway system in Minnesota, and is completing a line from Thunder Bay to Red River. These facts change altogether the condition of things. The country which, in 1874, had comparatively no commercial value, has, to day, access to the markets of the world, and offers inducements to the population of the world to make it their home. It may be that we have made mistakes in the past. It would be very singular if we had not. Mr. CHARLTON.

our mistakes. It would be absurd to urge that we must in everything be consistent with our past record.

Some hon, MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. (HARLTON. Hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear," but it is only the fool who refuses to learn. If, in 1874, we estimated that the North-West was to a great extent worthless and in 1880 it was proved that this was incorrect, that there is a much greater amount of good land than we then supposed, and that that country is now accessible to the markets of the world, and if in consequence of these changed relations we believe that country has a value which we did not believe it to possess in 1874, we should all agree to rectify mistakes we may have made in the past. If we do not act on that knowledge and rectify those mistakes, we are dishonest; and gentlemen who insist on acting consistently, and require our assent to a measure which is, at all events, as bad as the measure of 1874 or that of 1872, are not acting in accordance with their duty to their country. As the Government party make a strong point on the supposed resemblance between the policy of 1874 and that of 1880, and hold that we are committed to this policy, in consequence of having supported that of 1874, I propose to contrast, briefly, the policy of 1874 with that of 1880, in order to show that the measure now before the House of Commons is infinitely worse, and imposes far greater burdens upon the country, in proportion to the expenditure of money involved, than the policy of 1874. First, I will refer to the land grant. The measure of 1874 provided for the granting of 20,000 acres of land to the mile, to a line of road extending from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean. That proposal contemplated the granting of land through British Columbia, through the fertile belt, and through the Province of Ontario, within a belt of twenty miles on each side of that road from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific. It had been estimated that the grant of land in British Columbia would amount to 13,250,000 acres of that sterile, rocky region. That land certainly would possess but little value. Then from 18,000,000 to 20,000,000 acres would be granted from the section between Lake Nipissing and the fertile belt. That also would be of little value. This amounts to from 31,000,000 to 33,000,000 acres of land, while the total land grant would have been some 54,000,000. Deducting from 31,000,000 to 33,000,000 acres of worthless land from that, you have from 21,000,000 to 23,000,000 acres to be taken from the fortile belt. Under the conditions of selection made in this contract, I contend that the grant of this 25,000,000 possesses as much value as the grant of 54,000,000 which, under the act of 1874, was to be made along the line of the road from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. Hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear," but I say that this can be demonstrated as surely as a mathematical problem. If there was the quantity of land I have stated in British Columbia and between Nipissing and the fertile belt, and if only from 21,000,000 to 23,000,000 acres were left to be taken in the North-West-a great portion in swamps and alkali belts, for they had to take the good with the bad—if these premises are correct, the land grant of 1880, comprising 25,000,000 acres of selected land in the fertile belt is equal to the land grant proposed in 1874, extending from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific, and covering good and bad land alike for the whole distance. Then as to the mode of selection. The measure now under consideration provides that the Company shall take alternate sections with the privilege of rejecting those not fairly fit for settlement, or water stretches and so on. This practically gives the Company power to take such lands as But it would be an act of folly for us to bind ourselves by they choose. They are the judges of the matter. The Act of 1874 provided that the location should be made in alternate blocks of twenty square miles. The result of that would have been that settlements could have a sufficient contiguous population to support a church, to create a village with its blacksmith's shop and its schools, and whatever else civilization required, and in all these respects it was superior to the scheme now under consideration. Counting the Hudson Bay reserves, twenty-two fortieths of the land is withheld from settlement, except by purchase from the Hadson Bay Company or the Spndicate, and eighteen-fortieths which is retained by the Government, is so disposed and arranged that the greatest possible degree of isolation and separation from each other is secured to the settlers on these lands; I hold that the provision made by my hon. friend at the head of the Government in 1874, so far as the arrangement of the blocks of land is concerned, was infinitely better in the interests of the people than the provision made under the contract now under consideration. Then there was another provision, another evidence of the care with which my hon. friend guarded the interests of the people. Under the arrangement of 1874 this land was not to be passed over to the hands of this railway corporation without the Government retaining in its hands any power to check them in their desire to impose upon the people by high prices. The Government retained in its hands two-thirds of the lands, and was to fix the value on them and sell them, and pass over to the Company, not the lands, but the proceeds of the sales. Here was a safeguard imposed, a safeguard which was calculated to secure the rights of the public and to prevent the corporation from charging prices unduly high. Now, Sir, whether the scheme of 1874, which, in the respects in which I have made a contrast, was infinitely preferable to that of 1880, would be an advisable scheme to adopt at the present time, is an unimportant matter. Nevertheless, I propose to contrast the features of these two schemes still further. I think I have shown that the land grant of 1880, under the provisions of selection made, will prove equal in value to the land grant under the scheme of 1874, that land grant being apportioned in alternate blocks from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific ocean. I propose to contrast some of the financial features of these two schemes, as I propose to show that the scheme of 1880, so far as cash subsidy is concerned, is amuch worse scheme for the country than the scheme of 1874. I propose to cite some figures that may, perhaps, prove startling; and I may say, before proceeding to do this, that these figures, carefully compiled, are submitted to the House with the expectation that they will be criticised, and that if they are not accurate then their fallacy will be shown. If these figures were correct, and were stated as affording a comparison between these schemes before an impartial audience, it would not be necessary to say anything more to secure a verdict against this scheme. First of all, it is proper, at this point, to remark that the scheme of 1874 contemplated and provided for a first-class railway, which was to cost $120,000,000. The scheme of 1880 contemplates provides for an inferior railway; a railway with grades and alignments inferior to the road that was provided for by the scheme of 1874.

Now, Sir, taking these two points: the estimates of 1874 for a first-class road, and the estimates of 1880 for a second class railway, as the basis for our calculation, let us see what the result will be. At this point I ask, will any hon. gentle man challenge the fairness of the basis of comparison? Will any hon, gentleman challenge the fact that the road of 1874 was to cost $120,000,000, and that it was to be a superior road? Will any hon, gentleman challenge the assertion that the road of 1880 is estimated to cost $78,000,000; that it is to be a colonization road, a road very much inferior?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes; it will be challenged.

Mr. CHARLTON. My hon. friend from Niagara challenges it.

Mr. PLUMB. No; I said it will be challenged.

Mr. CHARL'FON. My hon. friend from Niagara is not usually in conflict with his colleagues. However, he is in conflict with the Minister of Railways, who called the road a "second class road, a cheap road, a colonization road to be built rapidly and cheaply for present wants."

Mr. MACKENZIE. A tramway.

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, Sir, by this table the lowest possible cost for a first class road from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific, as contemplated by the scheme of 1874, was $120,000,000. The hon Minister of Railways estimated the cost on the same basis of the class selected by the Government in 1830, that is, a second class road, at $78,000,000. Now, the amount to be expended by the Syndicate upon the road is $50,000,000. The amount expended and to be expended by the Government, not including cost of surveys is $28,000.000, the two sums make a total estimate cost of $78,000,000. Now, Sir, taking these as a basis of comparison, these $120,000,000 to be expended by contractors in 1874, and $50,000,000 to be expended by contractors in 1880, what do we find? We find on this basis a bonus of $25,000,000 in 1880, upon an expenditure of $50,000,000 is relatively equal to a cash bonus in 1874, of $60,000,000, on an expenditure of $120,000,000. Does my hon. friend from Niagara challenge these figures?

Mr. PLUMB. They will all be challenged.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon, gentleman says they will all be challenged. These figures are not capable of being challenged. Here is a road which will cost the contractors $50,000,000, which receives $25,000,000 bonus. This is equal to a bonus of $60,000,000, upon a road costing the contractors $120,000,000. I lay the figures before the House, and I challenge any person to controvert them. Then, Sir, this scheme to-day is sub-idized to an extent equal to a cash subsidy of $60,000,000, according to the scheme of Mr. Mackenzie in 1874, and it has a land grant, as I have shown under the terms of selection, equal in value to the land grant of the road in 1874. On this same basis a land grant of 25,000,000 acres, on an outlay of $50,000,000, is equal to a land grant in 1874, of 60,000,000 of acres upon an outlay of $120,000,000. Can any man challenge that? So that this line is subsidized equal to what would have been the case if the line of 1874 had received a cash subsidy of $60,000,000, and a land grant in the fertile North-West of 60,000,000 acres of land upon the same terms of selection as under the scheme of 1880. Now, then, we will make some other comparisons. This is a very rich field for instituting comparisons between the two schemes. It is like the contract itself, the more you turn it over the more new features you see. I shall institute a comparison upon the basis of the entire cost of this line and the line of 1874, as contemplated by the estimates. The entire cost, as per the Minister of Railways' estimate, is $78,000,000 for this line. The cash bonus is $25,000,000; cash bonus and work performed and turned over to the Company as per the Minister of Railways estimate is $28,000,000. That, Sir, is a cash bonus, in cash paid and cash expended, of $53,000,000 for the benefit of the Syndicate. Well, Sir, this is relatively equal, on an expenditure of $78,000,000, the cost of the entire line of road, to a bonus, in 1874, of $81,538,000. or a first-class road costing $120,000,000. Yet we are told that this scheme is justified by that; that if this scheme is objectionable, that scheme was equally so. Now we will make another comparison. The cost of the surveys of this road should be included as properly embraced in the whole cost. Take the cost of the road by the latest estimates at $78,000,000, add the cost of survey, $3,000,000.

total, $81,000,000. We will make an estimate upon that basis, and the corresponding basis of $120,000,000 for the road in 1874. We have the bonus given to the Company in cash of $25,000,000, the money expended on the railway, and to be handed over to the Company, $28,000,000; cost of survey, $3,000,000; total bonus paid to the Company, $56,000,000, which is equal to a bonus to be paid in 1874 upon a road to cost $120,000,000, of $82,963,000. If my hon, friend from Lambton, when at the head of the Government, had proposed to subsidize the road, which his Bill provided for, to the extent of $82,963,000, and 60,000,000 acres of land, selected in the North-West upon the same conditions as are provided for in this contract, the two schemes would have stood upon the same basis, the one as bad as the other, and no worse. But we have reason to believe that the case is even worse than that. We have reason to believe that these portions of the railway, and handed over to the Company, will cost more than the estimated sum of $28,000,000, and if we take the probable cost of those various sections, we will have a larger bonus which the Company receives. We will suppose the Company receives $25,000,000—that is a fixed quantity. Suppose the road from Thunder Bay to Selkirk, unequipped, cost $15,500,000; that the Pembina Branch costs $500,000; that the section from Yale to Kamloops, 127 miles, cost $9,000,000; that the section from the Kamloops to Port Moody costs $3,500,000; include the costs for surveys, $3,100,000, and we have a bonus of $57,600,000 given to a railway, which, upon the estimate, will cost the contractors $82,600,000. We have upon this basis a comparison of the amount given to this Company in cash, which, if the hon, member for Lambton had proposed to give a bonus of $83,680,000 upon his road, would have made the scheme stand exactly upon the same basis. I think it very unnecessary to dwell at greater length upon comparisons between these two schemes. I recapitulate briefly by saying, that upon the basis of actual cash expenditure made by the Syndicate, as compared with the expenditure that was to be made by the company to be organized in 1874, this road is as heavily subsidized as would have been that road if it had received a cash subsidy ot $60,000,000, and a land subsidy of 60,000,000 acres. we take the total cost of the road without surveys and make the comparison, it would have required a subsidy of $82,963,000 to make the line contemplated in 1874 as heavily subsidized as the line now under consideration is. Now, let me call the attention of the House to a difference in effectiveness between a first-class railway, such as was contemplated by the Government in 1874, and a second or third class railway, such as is contemplated by this scheme under consideration. We all know that heavy grades and bad alignment add to the cost of transportation. We all know it is of great advantage to the country to possess a first-class and thoroughly equipped road, because the business of the country can then be done more expeditiously and at smaller cost. I noticed the other day a comparison in the earning capacity of locomotives upon two railway lines in the United States, one wish light grades and good alignment and the other, although otherwise first class, with heavy grades over the Alleghany Mountains. I refer to the New York Central and the Baltimore and Ohio roads. Upon the New York Central a locomotive can earn $57,000 per annum, while a locomotive on the Baltimore and Ohio road earns but $13,000, at the same rates of freight. This illustrates fairly the difference in the effectiveness of a road with low grades and a road with high grades. The hon member for Lambton is well aware that a line such as contemplated, with easy grades, especially from the east, would be much more effective, and serve the purposes of the North-West much better than the line it is now proposed to build. The contrast I have entered into between these two schemes is made, not because it is abso-Mr. CHARLTON.

scheme of 1874 is as relatively a better scheme than the scheme of 1880, as it certainly is, but it is made more for the purpose of vindicating the character and judgment of a gentleman upon whose character and judgment aspersion has been cast in this matter. I trust that in the statement and the figures I have laid before the House, I have succeeded in proving to the satisfaction of every individual man that the scheme of 1874 was a better scheme than the present one, that the scheme of 1874, judged by the present one, was lightly subsidized both in cash and land, and would have been infinitely preferable, as far as the interests of Canada are concerned, to the scheme of 1880.

The building of a railway should be considered as a business transaction. It is unfortunate, as I stated in opening my remarks, that we should bring a matter of this kind into politics, it is unfortunate that we should make a political issue of what should be a business matter. It is unfortunate that the hon, gentlemen on the Treasury benches should bring their supporters into line by the operation of a party caucus to support a measure, which many of them, I am confident, unquestionably condemn, should bring the machinery and the influences that are brought to bear in party exigences to secure the support of members who must, many of them, condemn this measure except for party ties. If we were treating it as a business. matter, if this matter was discussed in the House without it having been made a Government measure, and without the existence of a Government being staked upon it, it would be much better for the interests of this country, present and future. I may say that the hon, gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches are deserving of severe rebuke for their course in this matter; I must say that, in my opinion, this matter should have been left an open question, so that the discussion which this scheme has raised in the House might have its true weight and effect. As it is now, the result of this matter is probably a foregone conclusion. It may be shown, as it will be shown to be a most absurd measure, one inimical to the interests of this country; but no matter how clearly this may be shown, these hon gentlemen have staked their reputation on the result, and they are bound to put it through, no matter whether the consequences may be ruinous to the country or the reverse. Now, my speeches are very often quoted in this House. It is a pastime I do not often indulge in myself. I propose, however, on this occasion to adopt the role of my hon, friend from Niagara (Mr. Plumb), and quote from one of the speeches of the member for North Norfolk. I was looking over it the other day, and it seemed so pertinent to the case, and so clearly expressed my views at the present time that I take the liberty of reading a short extract. In the course of this speech, delivered on the 28th March, 1876, I used the following language:-

"If we were on the threshold of this great enterprise, and were governed by the dictates of reason and by the extent of our ability and our resources, what would be the course we would take with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway? At first, in his opinion, we would build a line of road from Lake Superior to Lake Winnipeg, and there we would pause, as we would have afforded communication from the Winnipeg Basin to the great lakes of America, and would have given the entire valley of the Saskatchewan an outlet to the markets of the world. Then it would be natural for this county to wait until settlement had increased in the country, and its resources had developed, and until further communication was required for the people of the North-West. When that time had arrived, if it were ten, twenty, thirty or fifty years, he would then proceed with the construction of the road to the interior of the continent, and not before. It was a mistake, a fallacy, to suppose would then proceed with the construction of the road to the interior of the continent, and not before. It was a mistake, a fallacy, to suppose that the construction of railway lines made a nation great or added to its wealth or prosperity, unless they were constructed for a legitimate purpose, to afford the population and produce of the country egress and ingress and the means of communication; otherwise that which was invested in a railway was lost until it began to make returns for the investment."

These were the views I held in 1876. These are the views lutely necessary, not because it is necessary to show that the | I hold to-day. I still hold that all that was necessary in the premises was to give that country an outlet as fast as it was settled. In pursuance of that view the late Government made provision for the construction of a road from Lake Superior to Winnipeg, and a line from Winnipeg to Pembina, to connect with the American system of railways. The line to Pembina is already completed; the line to Thunder Bay approaches completion. When these are completed, the next thing to be done, as I intimated in 1876, is to push the line westward as fast as the country settles; it is unnecessary to push it faster. If three hundred miles are needed this year, build them; if that length is found to be sufficient, pause. Afford the settlers all necessary facilities to reach the market; send in more immigrants, and give tnem the facilities they require; but it is useless to go beyond this rate, and to lavish millions of dollars in the canyons of British Columbia where there is no population and where there will be no business. Now, before considering the Syndicate bargain, let us for a moment examine the situation as it is to-day. The situation is briefly this: The Government is providing a road from Lake Superior to Red River. What is the bearing of this road upon the case? It will be a line with easy grades and curves; it will be 406 miles in length; it will terminate at a good harbour on Lake Superior, and it will afford easy access to the Red River country and add largely to the value of the land in that valley. The Government have also provided a road from Selkirk to Pembina, which affords access to St. Paul, to Chicago, to the ports on the Gulf of Mexico, to the Atlantic coast; affords, in short, a connection with the entire system of American railways. The settled portions of the North-West being provided with these two outlets to market, what follows? It follows, as I said a moment ago, that the prairie region should be furnished with transportation facilities as fast as they are required, and I think it follows that the British Columbia section should not now be undertaken. It is unnecessary to spend money in British Columbia in advance of the road reaching that Province from the east. I think it also follows naturally that the eastern section should not be undertaken until the necessity for its construction becomes apparent. If these premises are correct, the British Columbia contract should be set aside, especially as the experience of a few years may dictate a different route through that Province.

Hon. members may not be aware that the Northern Pacific Railway terminates within something like 140 miles of the Canadian Pacific Railway terminus, at Port Moody. They may not be aware that the Northern Pacific Railway, by means of its extension from Duluth eastward, and by means of its connection with the Sault branch, which will inevitably be built some time, will furnish a shorter route from the waters of the Pacific to Montreal, by some seventy miles, than the Canadian Pacific Railway, as located at present. The Northern Pacific Railway is now located to terminate at Tocoma, on the Puget Sound; it will probably be extended to Seatle, about twenty-eight miles nearer the Straits of Fuca. But Tocoma, as a harbor, has decided advantages over Port Moody. From Tocoma, eastward, the railway runs 1,797 miles to Brainard, on the Mississippi River, and the distance from Brainard to Lake Nipissing is about 740 miles, making the distance from the Pacific to Lake Nipissing 2,537 miles, as against 2,600 miles of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the same lake. So that it appears that the Northern Pacific possesses an advantage of 63 miles over our own road in point of accessibility to the sea-ports of Canada, while in the character of its grade and its capacity for doing business it has very decided advantages. I say that it would be an act of folly to construct a line of feasible one. Let us make a comparison with another road railway across this continent, and diverge that line from Jasper southwards to the very point which would give the Northern Pacific an immense advantage over it in competing for business. I think it will be found after millions have been spent in building the road along the valley of the Fraser that a mistake has been made, that the wrong route has been selected, and it may be necessary to divert it to the northward, in order to compete successfully with the American road, which, besides the advantages I have enumerated, possesses a better terminal harbor. If we were to wait until it became necessary to construct the British Columbia section of the road, we would have fuller and better information as to the proper route than we now possess, and I repeat that it would be an act of folly to squander all these millions in advance of the time when the road will be needed.

I propose, to-day, to indulge in somelspeculations or calculations as to possibilities or probabilities in connection with the construction of the railway. The man who has $1,000 in his pocket can reasonably calculate that he can purchase $1,000 worth of property with that sum that he can get something which would sell for more than $ :50. If he did not the transaction might not be considered a very good one in some quarters, though hon gentlemen opposite, who act the part of the unjust steward mentioned in Scripture, might so regard it. I will endeavor to show that we are paying too much for this Railway; and I will deal first with the prairie section. The estimated cost of this road from Solkirk to Jasper, a distance of 1000 miles, was $13,000,000 according to the estimate of the Minister of Railways last year, though the hon. gentleman informed the House that very likely it could be constructed for less—for $10,000,000. I will however take the larger figure. The estimated expenditure upon the Pembina Branch, and what I will designate the Thunder Bay section—that is the section between Thunder Bay to Selkirk, according to the latest estimates is $15,043,000. These estimates contain allowances for miscerlaneous payments $302,000, and engineering work on construction $1,600,000, items which are common to these sections and the section from Kamloops to Port Moody. Dividing these amounts pro rata, the proportion for the Pembina Branch and the Thunder Bay section would be $1,096,000, making the total cost of these two lines, $16,144,000, or, in round numbers, $16,250,000. I wish to ask the hon, the Finance Minister if he supposes that if a company received these 401 miles of railway, costing 164 millions, as a free gift, they could not raise $13,000,000, by way of bonds, on the entire 1,491 miles, costing from $28,000,000 to $31,000,000, to build a portion costing from $10,000,000 to $13,000,000, in five years.

And would not the 1,000 miles to be built westward pass through a section of country that would furnish a paying business from the start. Supposing that a company could do this, the line so built would have upon it a bonded debt of $8,700 per mile. But, supposing they required in addition, a land grant, and that the Government proposed to secure the construction of a line from Selkirk to Jasper, by giving the company a road, costing 161 millions and 2,000,000 acres of land solected in the fertile belt along the line of the railway. Such land could not be considered to be worth less than $4 per acre, or in all $3,000,000. Does the hon. Minister of Finance regard such a project as a feasible one? Its feasibility, I fancy, would depend upon whether such a that is of a similar character to the one with which we have been dealing hypothetically, and that is in actual operation. The St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway, with its branches, is 500 miles long. Its earnings for the year ending June 30th, 1879, were $2,009,940; its running expenses for the same period, $1,003,466, and its net earnings, $1,006,480. For the six December 31st, $1,612,528; its 1879, its months ending expenses $757,888. earnings were leaving its profits for that period $854,640. The net earnings for the year ending June 30th, 1879, represent the interest on $16,774,666 at 6 per cent. I think that when the prairie section was completed to Jasper, when a company having a grant of two million acres of land owned a road 1,491 miles in length, and that a productive line, the company would be able to extend that line further, that a company in possession of a paying line being or to be built would be anxious to secure connection with the Pacific Ocean, and that that line would be continued on to the Pacific Ocean on terms much better than those proposed to-day. As to the probable cost of the British Columbia section, we have the estimates of the Minister of Railways last year before us. He estimated that the cost of the road from Jasper House to Port Moody would be $29,000,000. Suppose this supposititious company has been formed, that Jasper House has been reached, that the company has 1,491 miles in operation, and has received its land grant of 2,000,000 acres, and this extension to the Pacific is to cost $29,000,000, what aid would be required? Do you suppose, Sir, that it would be necessary to give to the company more than the cost of the line of railway in order to secure its construction? I think not. If the Government offered to that company 8,000,000 acres within the fertile belt, it would secure the construction of the line from Jasper to the Pacific, and the result would be that we would have a line from Thunder Bay to the Pacific Ocean costing the Government only 10,000,000 acres of land, which is evidently far less than the cost of the present scheme. If this were done we would have a railway line from Lake Superior to the Pacific with eastern connections as follows:—(1) All water to Montreal or water and rail to Montreal from Fort William; (2) all water or water and rail from Duluth to Montreal; (3) rail from Selkirk to Pembina and thence by the American system of railways to Chicago, New York, or any point in the United States; (4) 1ail by the south shore of Lake Superior by a Sault Ste. Marie connection—rail to Montreal, rail from Montreal to Jasper, rail from Montreal at the end of ten years to the Pacific Ocean, rail by the best route and at the least cost, all for the grant of 10,000,000 acres of land. I believe that by the management of this scheme, in this way, the grant I have spoken of is amply sufficient to secure the construction of the railway.

Now, Sir, as to the line south of Lake Superior, and as to the question whether or not it is necessary to build the eastern section of this line at all. I think that any gentleman who will examine carefully all the circumstances bearing on this question, cannot fail to arrive at the conclusion that a line south of Lake Superior is, for commercial purposes, far preferable to one north of Lake Superior. It runs through a country possessing a milder climate than the region north of Superior. It will have easier grades, and will form a better route to the sea-ports of Canada than the other. At all events it cannot be denied that it is at least equally good with the line north of Lake Superior for commercial purposes. There are other considerations in favor of this line. We have constructed canals at a great Mr. CHARLTON.

Superior will not only give a commercial outlet as good as a line to the north for our own North-West, but it will attract to our own ports and markets a large amount of business outside of the Northwest altogether. If you draw a line from Duluth to San Francisco, you will find that all of the country north of that line is nearer to Montreal than to any other port on tide water.St. Paul is 320 miles nearer to Montreal than to New York, and if the Sault Ste Marie line were built, its connection with Montreal would be secured without delay. The State of Wisconsin, the State of Minnesota, the territories of Dakota, Montana, and Washington would then seek to reach Atlantic ports by the nearest line, which would be the line south of Lake Superior. If, then, this line could be constructed for the grant of land and for a small expenditure of money—if it would give a better outlet than a line to the north of Lake Superior-if it would bring to our own ports the products of a region in the United States that now had a population of 1,200,000 souls, and had capabilities for a population of twenty or thirty millions,—if this road could be constructed years before the line to the north of Lake Superior can be built, surely it was an act of the greatest folly to squander $22,000,000 cr $23,000,000 for a line to the north of Lake Superior, if one can be obtained to the south at an indefinitely less cost. If you draw a line from Duluth to San Francisco, every acre of land north of that line is nearer to Montreal than to any other port upon tide water. The north part of Wisconsin, almost the entire State of Minnesota, a considerable portion of Michigan, the entire territories of Dakota and Montana, and the entire territory of Washington, which seek a seaport on the Atlantic coast, would use this route south of Lake Superior, if the line were constructed. Then, if this line, which can be secured without the expenditure of public money, or by a trivial expenditure of public money, will afford to the Canadian North-West a better outlet than the line north of Lake Superior would, and if, in addition, it would bring to our seaports the trade of the region I have described, having a population of 1,200,000 souls, and a capacity of supporting a population of twenty or thirty millions of souls—if this line secured at this moderate cost, and which can be had years before the line north of Lake Superier can thus be built, and by its construction we can secure all those advantages which I have represented, surely it would be an act of the greatest folly to spend twenty millions in constructing a line north of Lake Superior for the purpose of securing something which can be had for the expenditure of at most $2,400,000 on the Sault Ste. Marie Branch.

As I said before, this is a business matter we are talking about; I am treating it on the basis of a business matter. I wish now to direct attention to the hypothetical statement as to what the condition of the Government would be, and as to what the condition of the Company to be organized would be under certain contingencies. I assume that the line from Sault Ste. Marie to Lake Nipissing can be secured for a subsidy of $1,500,000. We know that the line can be secured for a subsidy of $2,400,000, but taking into consideration the fact that the desire to secure this connection is growing daily, and taking into consideration the fact that the American Northern Pacific road and St. Paul desire this outlet, I think it is reasonable to assume that the construc-tion of this line could be secured by a subsidy of $1,500,000. The line from Selkirk to Jasper secured by a gift of the Thunder Bay and Selkirk division and the Pembina Branch, estimated to have cost up to the present time $16,150,000, and a land subsidy of 2,000,000 acres, as I expense with a view to securing the American trade. We have previously said, are sufficient to secure the construction have been desirous to divert to our own ports as much of of the line from Selkirk to Jasper. The road from Jasper the western trade as possible. This line south of Lake to Port Moody, if that line is maintained, it is assumed could be secured by a subsidy of 8,000,000 acres, the line to be completed by the year 1891. This would cost the Government, if the scheme should be worked, the Thunder Government in land grants, for the prairie section, 2,000,000 acres, and for the British Columbia section 8,000,000 acres; cost to the Government, cash $17,650,000, and 10,000,000 acres of land for a line of railway from Thunder Bay to the Pacific Ocean. Well, Sir, what would be the saving to the Government provided this scheme could be worked, and we will see shortly what would be the position of the company under this scheme? The saving to the Government would be the cash subsidy of the central section, $15,000,000, less grant to Sault Ste Marie Branch, $1,500,000. balance $13,500,000; and the cost of that portion of the road from Kamloops to Port Moody, amounting, according to the estimates laid a short time ago before the House, to $11,850,000, or a total saving of $25,350,000. The saving in land would be the difference between 18,750,000 and 10,000,000 acres, or 8,750,000 acres. Taking the line from Selkirk to Jasper, and estimating the saving upon that without its connection with the Columbia section, the amount would be for the first 900 miles $9,000,000, and for the next 100 miles, included in Sir Charles Tupper's last years estimate - Jasper to Kamloops-$1,330,000 or a saving in cash subsidy appertaining to the line from Selkirk to Jasper, of $10,333,000. The saving in land grant upon this section would be as follows: the proposed land grant to the first portion of 900 miles is 11,250,000 acres, and to the 100 miles, 1,666,000, making for the 1,000 miles 12,916,000 acres. The saving in land grant, if 2.000,000 acres would secure the construction of this line, would be 10,916,000 acres. Now, this is the statement as regards the Government in this hypothetical calculation. Now, Sir, if a company were formed to undertake the construction of the road on these terms, let us see what their condition would be. We have seen what the Government would save provided this scheme was a practical one and could be worked: it would save on the whole line from Selkirk to Port Moody cash to the amount of $25,350,000 and land to the amount of 8,750,000 acres as compared with the present scheme; or would save if only that portion of the line from Selkirk to Jasper were constructed, $10,330,000 in cash and 10,916,000 acres of land as compared with the present scheme. Now let us see what the condition of any company would be that was organized to carry on the work under the conditions stated on this hypothesis. Well, Sir, a company organized to build the prairie section would invest $13,000,000 in building 1,000 miles, and after that was built, their assets would consist of the line from Thunder Bay to Selkirk, and the Pembina Branch, costing $16,150,000, also the cost of the line from Selkirk to Jasper, costing $13,000,000; also 2,000,000 acres of land, valued at $4 an acre, amounting to $8,000,000; total amount of assets, $37.150,000; total investment, $13,000,000; balance outside of investment, $24,150,000; or an excess, in amount of aid received, over the cost of the road, of $11,150,000. that a showing, Mr. Chairman, that ought to be satisfactory? If the company, for an expenditure of thirteen millions of dollars, can show available assets to the extent of $37,150,000, if the company can secure aid, actual aid, to the extent of $24,150,000, for the purpose of enabling them to spend $13,000,000, ought there to be any difficulty in organizing a company under that basis? I assert that there ought not. I assert that it is perfectly feasible to organize a company for the purpose of building the road from Selkirk to Jasper, by giving them the $16,150,000, that the road from Thunder Bay to Selkirk and the Pembina Branch cost; and giving that company, in addition, two Seven years ago they could not have raised a dollar upon millions acres of land worth eight millions of dollars. I believe, Sir, that the prairie section would be a good speculation, even without the land grant. I believe, in fact Bay and Selkirk line and Pembina Branch, costing $16,150,000; subsidy to the Canada Central extension, $16,150,000; a total of $17,656,000. It would cost the and the line from Thunder Bay to Selkirk and the branch line to Pembina, are ample to secure the construction of the line from Selkirk to Jasper, and that the company undertaking it would have $11,150,000 to show as surplus from this grant, in addition to the amount expended in the construction of this road. If this calculation be a correct one, we are offering to pay too much for the construction of this line. Surely, we are going too fast. If this thing can be done, we had better organize a company for building this 1,000 miles first, and then decide what our future course shall be.

We will suppose the company has undertaken the building of a line from Selkirk to the Pacific Ocean, for a grant of ten millions of acres of land. Let us see what their condition would be, and or which side the balance would probably be when the road was completed. Cost of line from Selkirk to Jasper $13,000,000, Jasper to Pacific Ocean $29,000,000, total $42,000,000, to be expended by the company. Their assets would consist of the line from Thunder Bay to Selkirk, and the Pembina Branch valued at $16,150,000; Selkirk to Jasper $13,000,000; Jasper to Port Moody $29,000,000 and 10,000,000 acres of land located in a belt of 24 miles along each side of the railway, worth $4 per acre, $40,000,000; or in all $98,500,000 for an expenditure of $42,000,000. At $4 an acre their aid would exceed their investment by $14,500,000; at $3 per acre, the aid they receive would exceed their investment by $4,500,000, and at $2 an acre their entire line from Thunder Bay to Port Moody would have cost them but $5,500,000 more than the aid they received. I hold that if this statement is correct that that amount of aid is ample. If 10,000,000 acres of land will enable that company after the road is completed to make a statement that they have received $14,500,000 in excess of the total cost of the road, at $4 per acre for this land, the scheme is a feasible one; and that if we are paying more than this, we are paying too much, we are making a pooror bargain than we ought make. I wish, Mr. Chairman, again to advert to the point I made a few minutes ago, that five years hence the scheme for building the British Columbia section can be carried out much easier than it can to-day. I wish to impress upon the House the fact that when the road is constructed and in operation to Jasper, when the whole stretch of country through the prairie region is filling up with population, when the road is doing a large amount of business and paying dividends on its cost, then will be the time to make arrangements for the prosecution of the Pacific Railway further westward. I hold that the construction of the road can be secured in British Columbia eventually on better terms than it can be to-day, that at the expiration of five years an arrangement could be made for the ultimate completion of the road at as early a date as is contemplated in this contract. I hold that in five years an arrangement could be made to finish it by 1891, on terms much better than any that could be made to-day. You recollect, Mr. Chairman, that the Northern Pacific, with a grant of 47,000,000 acres of land, went into bankruptcy in 1873. You recollect that the scheme was considered worthless. As time rolled on, capital accumulated, and capital does accumulate very rapidly-it accumulates four or five times faster than population—as time rolled or capital increased and sought investment, and only a few months ago that bankrupt concern was put upon its feet. On the basis of the land grant they were enabled to make arrangements for money to prosecute their line. Their line will be completed without difficulty by bonds raised upon their land grant and the road that is built.

that security. Our position would, in all probability, be found to be the same with regard to the British Columbia section. If we endeavored to construct it to-day we would pay under this contract very heavily for it; but if we wait for five years our situation will be changed in the same way, and perhaps to the same extent as was that of the Northern Pacific. And with regard to the eastern section, if we wait five years we will find that the land grant will possess more tangible value then than it does now, and that the construction of the road within the time provided for in this contract could be secured on much better terms than it can be to-day with regard to the eastern section. After the expiration of five years, when the section of the line from Selkirk to Jasper was completed and that whole prairie region furnished with an outlet to market, with towns springing up from Red River to the Rocky Mountains. and centres of industries established, if it was found necessary, in the light of the experience we would have acquired, to proceed with the construction of the line north of Lake Superior that could be done at that time to much better. When that time comes the grant of advantage than to-day. 6,250,000 acres of land and $5,000,000 in cash will be ample to secure the construction of the line, and in that way you would save, perhaps not so much as on other sections, but at least $5,000,000 in cash. The value of the land, if fixed at $4. per acre, would be $25.000,000, and this, with the cash grant, would be in round numbers $7,000,000 more than the cost of the road, and at $3 per acre $18,750,000, or with eash subsidy in round numbers $1,000,000 more than the cost of the section. I believe the scheme is perfectly feasible and that the construction of the road can be secured in the manner and upon the terms I have indicated. Let us see, Sir, what the condition of the Company would be if the scheme was carried out as I have foreshadowed. This section, which I assume to be 683 miles to its junction with the Thunder Bay Branch, will cost $33,333 per mile, or a total of $22,766,000 for this the Company receives, by the terms of the contract under consideration, in cash $10,000,000, and 6,-50,000 acres of land at $4, $25,000,000, which, with the cash subsidy would amount to $35,000,000, leaving a surplus, in round numbers over the cost of construction, of $12,000,000; or, at $3 per acre for the land, a surplus of $5,750,000. Now, let us see, Sir, what would be the position of the Company if the construction of the entire line from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific should be proceeded with and completed upon the terms and conditions that the hypothetical scheme I have presented proposes. The cost-of the line would be, from Selkirk to Jasper, $13,000,000; Jasper to Port Moody, $29,000,000; eastern section, $22,766,000; total investment, $64,766,000—and the assets of this great Company would be as follows: -eastern section, $22,775,000; Thunder Bay and Selkirk division and Pembina Branch, $16,150,000; Selkirk to Jasper, $13,000,000; Jasper to Port Moody, $29,000,000; total railway property, $80,926,000 and 10,000,000 acres of land within the twenty-four mile telt, worth $49,000,000; 6,250,000 acres appropriated to the eastern section, which as it would fall outside of the twenty-fourmile belt we will consider worth $3 an acre, $18,7.0,000; cash appropriation in the eastern section, $5,000,000; total assets in land and cash, $79,900,000, besides the road built by the Company, so that the aid granted to the road, including gift of Thunder Bay section and Pembina Branch, would exceed the cost of all the portions constructed by the Company by the sum of $15,134,000. Now, I want to ask if a line from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean, constructed in this manner and upon these terms, ought not to be built without the aid given exceeding its total cost by the sum of $15,134,000? I believe it can; I am certain it can, if the matter is managed on business principles. If it can, it ought to be done, because there are $30,000,000 at stake, and 8,500,000 acres of land. If we place the entire land grant at tions per mile through the region where that road is to run. I $3 per acre, the aid would exceed the cost of the road by would even support a bill granting 20 sections per mile. Mr. CHARLTON.

$5,134,000 This (cride, unbusiness-like scheme, presched by the hon gentlemen on the Treasury benches, requires reconsideration. It is enough to excite the risibility of any business man, and its promoters will some day be ashamed

PRIVATE RILL.

Mr. BEATY moved the second reading of Bill (No. 11) to incorporate the Saskatchewan and Peace River Railway Company of Canada.

Bill read the second time.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

House again resolved itself into Committee on the proposed resolutions granting $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land to aid the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway,

Mr. CHARLTON. When the House rose at six o'clock I had shown that the eastern and British Columbia sections were not likely, when constructed, to pay running expenses. and that it would therefore be folly to construct them. We have already too much money invested in unproductive enterprises, and the work of constructing railways, aided largely by Government money, especially when such railways will not pay running expenses, might as well be dispensed with. I have now arrived at the point of considering the terms of the contract itself. Before, however, entering upon that branch of my subject I will take occasion to refer to some remarks of a personal nature made regarding my own course. The Mail newspaper, the hon. members for Monck (Mr. McCallum), and Niagara (Mr. Plumb), have thought me worth of notice. I should not venture to obtrude this matter upon the attention of the House, had it not been that I have been referred to both upon the floor of the House and in the press. I shall briefly notice the remarks made concerning the position I took in 1878 with regard to the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), for the promotion of railway construction in the North-West. The attempt is unfairly made, I think, both by the speakers and the newspaper referred to, to make it appear that to-day I occupy a position of antagonism to all railway aid; that inasmuch as in 1878, I supported a measure which proposed to grant certain degrees of aid to certain railway companies apon certain conditions and under certain circumstances; and that inasmuch as in the year 1880 I am opposed to a certain scheme laid before this House, therefore I have stultified my record; that while professing to be in favor of Government aid to railways in 1878, I am opposed to any such thing in 1880, and it is thus attempted to place me in a false position. I advocated a measure in 1878, introduced by the hon, member for Bothwell, which proposed to grant aid to railways in the North-West, to the e tent of ten sections of land per mile in certain sections of that country, 12 sections per mile in certain other sections, and 20 sections per mile in the northern and eastern portions of the Peace River Valley. I oppose the measure now under consideration, not because it proposes railway aid, but because, in my opinion, it proposes to grant it far in excess of the requirement of the case. If the Government will bring down a measure proposing to grant the Canadian Pacific Railway the maximum amount of aid which the Bill of the hon, member for Bothwell in 1878 proposed to grant, to wit, 20 sections of land per mile, I will support that Bill to-day. I will be very glad to support a bill granting 10 sec-

But it does not follow that, because I am in favor of granting his speech be gives the length at 350 miles. He, however, a reasonable amount of aid, an aid adequate to the construction of the road it is now sought to promote, that I am bound to advocate a measure such as that under the consideration of this House, a measure granting 12,500 acres of selected land per mile for the road that is to be built or within 300 acres per mile of the amount contemplated in 1878, and in addition to this grant $12,500 in cash per mile for the portion to be constructed by the Company, a measure, which in addition to the grant of land and of cash per mile, grants $31,000,000 in a bulk sum expended already upon 706 miles of railway and the surveys of the whole line. The two measures are entirely different in their The measure I supported in character and their nature. 1878 was reasonable and conceived in the interest of the country. The measure before the House to-day is unreasonable and not conceived in the interest of the country, but in the interest of certain railway speculators. For that reason I oppose this measure, and I claim that an attempt to make it appear that because I was in favor of the measure of 1878 and am opposed to the measure of 1880, therefore I place myself in a false position, is unfair and eminently characteristic of the source from which it emanates. Now, with regard to the first contract. The field, of course, has already been traversed and iteration will be necessary matter if anything this is to be as all the points in connection with this contract have already been largely dwelt upon. It requires a good deal of ingenuity to elicit a single new idea on this subject. Presentments of the same points with variations will have to be considered admissible. I pointed out before, first of all, that, from the earnings of the St. Paul and Manitoba Road we have reasonable grounds for supposing that the railway line from Selkirk westward for the thousand miles would pay more than sufficient to cover running expenses and interest on its cost. I pointed out that if the road from Selkirk to Jasper House were subsidized by a grant of 2,000,000 acres of land, a saving of $.0.33., 00 cash and 10,916,000 acres of land as aid for the portion of construction of that the Pacific Railway would be effected. I showed that if the line from Selkirk to the Pacific Ocean were subsidized to theextent of 10,000,000 acres of land, a saving of $26,850,000, and of 8,750,000 acres of land would be effected. I showed that if the line from Nipissing to the Pacific, with the Sault connection, were subsidized by an additional grant of $5,000,000, and 6,250,000 acres of land, a saving in the construction of the whole line from Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean of $31,850,000 and 8,750,000 acres would be the result. I think we have every reason to believe that if delay were resorted to in the construction of the entire road, if only that portion immediately wanted, the prairie section, were proceeded with, the result which I pointed out, if the hypothetical statements I laid before the House be correct, would be substantially secured. I have dealt pretty largely in figures to-night, and figures are neither poetical nor romantic, although the hon. Minister of Railways, who, I regret, is not in his seat, comes as near making them romantic as any gentleman I have yet heard. I shall now proceed to enquire what would be the pro rata adjustment of the cash bonus of $25,000,000 and the land grant of 25,000,000 acres, with which it is proposed, under this contract, to endow this Syndicate scheme. As stated by the hon. Minister of Railways, last Session, in his speech, which will be found in the Hansard, pages 1,420 and 1,421, Mr. Fleming estimated the cost of the line from Jasper to Kamloops at $15,500,000. I may remark here, there seems to have been a discrepancy in the hon. Let us see how the comparison stands with reference to the gentleman's statements. He gave the cost of this pertion, 335 miles in length, at $43,660 per mile, which would amount to but $14,726,000; and in another part of The actual subsidy, in cash, is $4,666,700; thus, that section gives the block sum at $15,599,000, to which, adding the share of lump allowance, $1,000,090, for contingencies, for the entire British Cotumble section, half of which it would be proper to apply to this section, we obtain, so its estimated, cost $16,000,000. From Selkirk to Jasper, the estimated cost is $13,000,000; and Mr. Fleming estimated the cost of 600 miles of road, north of Lake Superior, at $20,000,000, which would make the cost of the eastern section, from Lake Nipissing to the junction at Thunder Bay, estimated at 683 miles, $22,766,000. These three sections were then estimated to cost $51,766,000, which is somewhat in excess of the estimate given this year. If we take this estimate of the cost of these three sections, and procood to ascertain what the amount of the subsidy in cash is, per dollar, on the estimated cost, we have the pro rata apportionment of subsidy. I find the pro rata apportionment would be each for every estimated dollar cost 48.14 cents, and the appertionment of land per dollar cost 48 14 acres, or within a fraction of one half acre. If I assumed this to be just the cash apportionment, the cash pro rata apportionment would be as follows: for the eastern section. $11,000,000; for the section from Selkirk to Jasper, $6,275,000 from Jasper to Kamloops, $7,250,000; total, $25,000,000; and the pro rata apportionment of land would be as follows: Eastern section, 11,000,000 acres; from Selkirk to Jasper. 6,275,000 acres; from Jasper to Kamloops, 7,725,000 acres, total 25,000,000 acres. This is the pro rata apportionment of cash and land upon those sections of the road, based upon Mr. Fleming's estimate of last year. Let us see the actual apportionment, and judge whether there is any discrepancy between the fair pro rata apportionment and the actual apportionment of cash and land grants to those various sections. I take the statement of last year, which embraced in the prairie section the 1,000 miles from Selkirk to Jasper. 900 miles of those 1,000 receives under this scheme. in cash, $9,000,000, and the balance, 100 miles, which receives a higher rate, is aided to the extent of $1,333,333, making a cash grant for the 1,000 miles from Selkirk to Jasper, of $10,333,300. The section from Jasper to Kamloops, 350 miles, receives aid to the extent of $4,666,700. The eastern section receives cash to the extent of $10,000,000. Now, the actual apportionment of the land is as follows: from Selkirk to Jasper, the first 900 miles, receives 11,250,000 acres; and the remaining 100 miles, 1,666,666 acres; making a total of 12,916,666 acres of land for this section. The section from Jasper to Kamloops, 350 miles, receives 5,833,334 acres; and the eastern section, 6,250,000 acres, making a grand total of 25,000,000 acres. Now, you will perceive there is a serious discrepancy between the actual apportionment and the pro rata and honest apportionment. Let us see what this discrepancy is, and what amount of cash and land is taken from the eastern and applied to the prairie section of 1,000 miles, the most easily constructed, the first to be constructed, and which, when constructed, will pay a dividend over running expenses, if any portion will. The pro rata subsidy in cash of the eastern section is $11,000,000, the actual subsidy is $10,000,000. The surplus taken from this to give to the pruirie section is, therefore, $1,000,000. The pro rata subsidy of the eastern section, in land, is 11,000,000 acres; the actual subsidy, 6,250,000, or 4,750,000 acres taken from the eastern section and given to the prairie section. This land, if worth $4 an acre, represents $19,000,000 in value; thus the eastern section is deprived of this amount for the benefit of the prairie section. If the land is only estimated at $3 an acre, the eastern section is deprived of $14,250,000 in land, and $1,000,000 cash for the benefit of the prairie section.

is denrived of $3,058,300 cash for the benefit of the prairie section. And with reference to the land grant the pro rata amount for the section from Jasper to Kamloops is 7,725,000 acres, the actual grant 5,833,334 acres, the balance taken from where it legitimately belongs and appropriated to the central section being 1,891,866 acres, which at $4 per acre, represents $7,566,660; and this, added to the cash misapplied in the same way amounts to $10,624 964. Or if we calculate the land at $3 per acre, the total amount taken from the Jasper-Kamloops section and applied to the prairie section will be $8,733,298. If we summarize these figures we find that the total amount pro rata taken from the eastern section is $1,000,000; from the Jaspersection $3,058,000, or a total of The total amount of land taken from Kamloops $4,053,000. the eastern section is 4,750,000, which, at $4 per acre, would be worth $19,000,000 or at $3, $14,250,000. The quantity of land taken from the Jasper-Kamloops section for the benefit of the central section is 1,891,666 acres, which at $4 per acre would be $7,566,664, or at $3 per acre, $5,674,998. The total value of the land taken from these two sections for the benefit of the intervening portion of the line would be at, $4 per acre, $26,566,664, or at $3 per acre, $19,924,998. At the low rate of $3 per acre the eastern section is despoiled for the benefit of the prairie section of, in cash and land, $15,250,000; or, at $4 per acre, of $20,000,000. At $3 per acre the Jasper-Kamloops section is despoiled for the benefit of the prairie section of, in cash and land, $8,733,998; or at $4 per acre of $10.624.964. The total amount in cash and land taken from both these sections in excess of its prorata adjustment, would be, if we charge the lands at $4 per acre, $30,624,000, or at $3 per acre, $23,982,000. The excess above the pro rata adjustment taken from these two sections and applied to the third, even at $ 3 per acre for the land, is nearly enough to build the prairie rection twice over; it is more than double the estimate of the Minister of Railways, namely, $10,000,000. I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, what you conceive to be the meaning of this taking from the eastern section $15,250,000, if we value the land at $3 per acre, or $20,000,000 if we value it at $4 per acre, for the purpose of aiding the intervening prairie section. I could explain it on this supposition: that perhaps the Syndicate imagine that the Government will adopt the common-sense course of abandoning the construction of the eastern section; and were they to do that, the Syndicate would be the better off by the $15,250,000, or the $20,000,000, accordingly as you value the lands at $3 or $4. Or, perhaps the Company themselves may build the prairie section, and then rest from their labors, by which they would also be largely the gainers. The sum which the Company would forfeit would be by no means equal to the amount which, as I have shown, is taken from the eastern and applied to the prairie section; and there is the additional fact that they would have the use of the money for four or five years before the work is performed on the sections to which the land and money legitimately apply.

I have another table which is still more suggestive, and I hope I may have the attention of hon gentlemen opposite while I read the figures. They bring out very clearly, I think, the enormous amount of the actual subsidy to the prairie section of 1,000 miles. The actual subsidy is cash upon the first 900 miles, $9.000,000; for the other 100 miles, $1,333,330—total, $10,233,330. Land subsidy for the first 900 miles, 11,250,000 acres, for the next 100 miles, 1,666,666—total land subsidy 12,916,666 acres, the cash value of which would be, at $4 per acre, $51,666,664. This with the cash subsidy would amount to $61,999,994 for a section of the road which has been estimated to cost $13,000,000. Or, if the land be calculated at $3 per acre, the total subsidy would be $49.082.998 to enable the Syndicate to construct a line which is to cost $13,000,000. At $4 per acre the land grapt and the cash grant will amount to four times the cost of the 1,000 miles and $10,000,000 more; and at $3 per acre to three times the cost of that section and $10.000.000 more. At $4 per acre the Company will build their 1,000 miles of road and have a surplus of $49,000,000; at $3 per acre the Company will build their 1,000 miles of road and have a surplus of $36,000,000. Do you think such a bargain as this was ever before made by sane men? The idea of granting to a company four times the cost of a work, the construction of which is to be undertaken, and giving them a little surplus of $10,000,000 besides! Why, I think the terms of this contract are perfectly astounding. We say, then that this prairie section is very munificently subsidized. I think there can be no question that the Syndicate will be With $62,000,000 able to build that prairie section. aid for the purpose of constructing a $13,000,000 railway, I have no doubt that there is financial ability enough in the Syndicate ring to fulfil the task. Let us now enquire whether, after this incredible endowment to the prairie section, the grants for the eastern section and the Jasper-Kamloops section are sufficient for their construction: Having given more than four times what was required for the construction of the prairie section, we may possibly find that there is a deficiency for those sections. The cost of the eastern section, of 683 miles, I estimate at $22,776,000. For this the cash subsidy is $10,000,000 and 6,250,000 acres, which, at $4 per acre, would realize $25,000,000, making a total subsidy of $35,000,000, or an excess of subsidy over the cost of construction of $12,224,000. If we estimate the land grant at $3 an acre, there would still be a surplus of aid granted over the cost of construction, of $5,974,000. With respect to the Jasper-Kamloops section, of 350 miles, which was estimated by the Minister of Railways, last year, to cost $16,000,000, the cash subsidy pertaining to it is $4,666,700, and the land grant 5,833,334 acres, which at $4 an acre, would be equal to $23,533,336, making a total subsidy of $28,000,036, or a surplus, over the cost of construction, of $12,000,000. If we place the land grant at $3 an acre, there would be a surplus, after paying for the construction of the Jasper-Kamloops section, of $6,166,000. So the three sections, in the matter of subsidy, differ not in kind, but in degree. They are all subsidized to a greater extent than is necessary to pay for their construction; but the section which is constructed first is the most largely subsidized, probably to give the Company the use of the larger sum of money, and probably to give them an advantage if the eastern section is abandoned, as it is likely to be, and as it will be if reasonable counsels prevail. In analysing these statements, let us see what the Company receives from the Government. In the first place the Government gives 708 miles of completed railway, costing, with $3,119,000 for surveys, $31,119,000. It gives in cash and lands value at $4 an acre, the cost of constructing 1,000 miles from Selkirk to Jasper, and a surplus of $49,000,000; or, placing a value of $3 on the lands, it gives the cost and a surplus of $36,000,000. It gives in cash and lands, valued at $4 an acre, the cost of constructing 350 miles from Jasper to Kamloops, and a surplus of $12,000,000, or, placing a value on the land of $3 an acre, a surplus of $6,166,000. It gives in cash and lands, valued at $4 an acre, the cost of constructing the eastern section, and a surplus of $12,224,000, or at $3 an acre, a surplus of $5,974,000. At $4 an acre for its land grant, it gives the Syndicate in cash and land the entire cost of the road from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean and $73,224,000. At $3 an acre for its land grant, it gives the entire cost of the road and $48,224,000. The grand practical result for the Company, then, is that they will have 2,708 miles of railway free of cost-worth at cost, including surveys, $81,119,000-and, in addition, money and land, at $4 an acre, to the extent of $73,224,000, or a total of $154,343,000; or, if we place the land at $3 an acre, the Company will have 2,703 miles of completed railway free of cost and money and land to the extent of $48,224,000, or a total of $129,343,000. And all this is secured by the expenditure temporarily of small amounts of capital, which will be recouped to them. The cost to Canada, then, of this road is to be as follows:—Expended upon 708 miles of road, $28,000,000; expended on surveys, $3,119,000; cash bonus, $25,000,000; total cash outlay, $56,119,000; together with 25,000,000 acres of selected lands at $3 an acre, $75,000,000, or, at $4 an acre, $100,000,000. Hon. gentlemen will observe that in these calculations I have not taken into account the matter of interest. It is, under the circumstauces, a comparatively small item, and the balance would probably be in favor of the Syndicate, for this reason, that the Government furnish the money and means faster than they are needed for the first five years-furnish money and land to the extent of $49,000,000 in excess of the wants of the Syndicate in the first five years, and the Syndicate will do well if they offset this advantage in the next five years, by expending money faster than they will receive Government aid. They will not do it. The freedom from taxation and the advance in the value of their lands I take to by other offsets. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) the other day entered into a calculation with reference to the question of interest. I do not think the Syndicate will suffer in interest charges if the Government furnish the funds, at they propose to do, and the Syndicate I presume, will not embark on the building of the unproductive portions of this road, the eastern and western sections, if they are not likely to pay running expenses. Well, Mr, Chairman, here is the financial scheme. I have briefly outlined some of its salient features. It is a very fine scheme, truly! I am sorry we do not see the First Minister in his place to night. I would like to enquire of that right hon. gentleman if he expects to rest his claim to the admiration of posterity on this question. He is a gallant knight. His shield may not be a spotless one, but it is as tough as the brazen studded bull's hide targe of Roderick Dhu. The right hon. gentleman is an old public man, and we are told-I do not know how truly—that he expects to retire from public life with a blaze of glory surrounding him as the result of this Canadian Pacific Syndicate contract. It is said the hon, gentleman anticipates at some future time looking from the sunlit hills beyond the cloudy battlements where night never comes, upon this railway in operation. He anticipates seeing trains moving from Nipissing to the Pacific; he anticipates from that higher sphere looking down upon the work which his genius has created for Canada. I hope it may be a long time before the hon. gentleman is placed upon these serene heights. With all his faults we wish to retain him somewhat longer, and I hope when his time comes to go, there will be no question about his passport to that happy land. When, however, he does reach that region, he will have a clearer view of the field, I trust, and possibly he will be able to fathom and solve the scheme of these railway magnates who have betrayed him into such a foolish and extravagant bargain. Perhaps he will be able to see half a continent handed over to a soulless monopoly and ground down by their exactions. Perhaps he will be able to see a company that, for the expenditure of $50,000,000, has received from that heritage, of which he was the custodian, $130,000,000. Perhaps he will be able to see a Syndicate of six or eight individuals revolling in the possession of perhaps $10,000,000 a piece that they have acquired by this transaction. Perhaps he will be able to see that he has made the most foolish and extravagant bargain that any public man of this century has made with reference to the construction of an important public work. I imagine he will see all these things. I imagine that when that hon gentleman comes to understand the nature of this contract, as I hope he may some day, that he will see he has made a great blunder; that he will see that his hope to go out of public life in a blaze of glory, with his reputation established as a man who brought this great undertaking to a successful accomplishment will be inevitably dashed to the ground. And my hon, friend the Finance Minister, whom I am happy to see in his seat, does he expect to give this to posterity as a specimen of his foresight? I very much fear posterity will class him, as a financier, with the old Irish woman who was selling potatoes at 18 pence that she had bought at 25 pence, and gave as a reason for doing so, that on the margin she had she could only hope to make a living by doing a wholesale business. This is a wholesale business, I think, with a vengeance; but unfortunately the Finance Minister is not the person who loses the margin upon the public lands and the property of this country. Does the Minister of Railways expect that the future will honor his memory and wonder at the amount of knowledge he possessed with regard to railway matters? If he does I apprehend he will find himself mistaken, that the future will pronounce this bargain to be a monstrously foolish one, to be a mistake so grave as to be but one degree removed from a crime.

Mr. Chairman, in these estimates I have estimated the land at $4 per acre, a gentleman near me suggests to place the estimate at $10. I do not say that that estimate would not be much nearer the truth than this is under the conditions in which this land is selected, under the nature of this grant, under these circumstance that the country is to develop these lands in putting a railway through them; and considering the fact that the area of public lands on this continent for settlement is diminishing day by day, that the great tide of emigration to this continent is rapidly absorbing the land, I would not say that that sum, although the remark was made in irony, is not much nearer the truth than the sum I mentioned. But I will give my reasons why I consider $4 an acre a moderate estimate of the value of this land. The Government itself, by their land regulations, have said that these lands are worth $4 an acre. They place the value of the railway lands within the first belt at $5 an acre, in the next belt $4, and in the next at $3. Their own estimate of the lands within twenty-four miles of the railway land is $4 an acre; the provisions of selection say that the lands are worth that. The Company are allowed to go into the fertile belt and select the choicest lands and to reject those not fairly fit for settlement, they themselves being the judges of their fitness. The Company can make a selection of lands which, under the circumstances attending this case, will be cheap at $4 an acre. The exemption from taxation for twenty years is another element in its favor, and is an additional reason why these lands may be fairly considered cheap at $4 an acre. As I stated a few moments ago, the diminishing area of land susceptible of settlement that is offered for sale on the American continent, will speedily prove that these lands are cheap at $4 an acre. The quantity of land fit for settlement west of Dakota is not very considerable, and when Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas are filled up, where is the tide of emigration to go? It may go to Texas, but a great many northern emigrants do not like a warm southern climate. When the lands in these western States and territories are settled, the tide of emigration must, at some time, be turned upon the plains of our North-West, and when that day comes, this problem will be solved and those lands raised rapidly in value. The n there is another reason why these lands may fairly be considered worth the price I have named. They are now accesible, six years ago they were not accessible; they were away in the heart of a wilderness but little known and seldom visited, and with a sparse population. To-day they are accessible, or will be soon, by a railway line partly constructed which it is proposed to run through the very heart of this country. Provisions are made for the running of branches from this main lines the country will be rapidly developed, it is already developed, and I hold that all these reasons warrant me in saying that these lands are worth $4 an acre. I have facts that bear upon this case that tend to strengthen the position I have taken. Take the adjoining State of Minnesota, a State similarly situated to this country, similar to its character to the North-West, a State which is rapidly filling up with population. We find that railway lands in this State are worth more than $4 an acre. I have returns here of five of the principal railway corporations in the State of Minnesota. The Southern Minnesota, which received a land grant, has sold its lands at an average of $7.04 per acre; the St. Paul and Pacific has sold its lands at $6.09 per acre; the Minnesota Central has sold its lands at $6.33 per acre; the St. Paul and Sioux City, at an average of $5.67 per acre; and the Northern Pacific at an average of $5.49. I might multiply quotations as to the sale of American railway lands. I might take the rates in various States but I confine myself to the State of Minnesota which is similar in character to the North-West, which is adjacent to the North-West, and where the circumstances which govern the case will be very similar to those which occur in the North-West. I have shown that the average for railway land in that State is over $6 an acre, and I feel warranted in saying that the Syndicate will get at least as great a price for these lands in a few years. If that estimate of the price of the lands then be true, I think I am justified in saying that their value to-day may fairly be estimated at $4 an acre. I suppose the supporters of the First Minister will not object to his estimate last Session as to the speedy settlement of these lands in the North-West.

I now ask the attention of the House to a contrast the terms accorded under this contract between Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate and the terms received by the largest subsidized lines in the United States, that is the Union and Central Pacific and the Northern Pacific. It will be recollected that in the year 1862, when the charter was granted to the Union and Central Pacific for the construction of a road from the Missouri River to the ocean, the construction of that road was considered to be a matter of imperious necessity. The South was in revolt, fifteen States of the Union had seconded. The North was grappling with a gigantic rebellion. The statesmen of the North felt that it was essential to retain, in the Union, the Pacific slope, which was separated from the Atlantic States and the States of the Mississippi valley by a wide stretch of intervening wilderness. They had no interests in common, and it was plain that the people on the Pacific slope would be likely to secode. It was then determined that at all costs a railway should be built which would bind together the two ends of the continent, and in order to secure the construction of that railway, the North were prepared to give, and did give the most liberal terms. This company was chartered in 1862. The land grant made to them in the first instance, as shown by the Act of 1:62, was ten sections to the mile of alternate lands, or 6,400 acres of laud to the mile. In 1864 the provision as to the land grant was amended, and the grant was doubled, so that the company received twenty alternate sections, or 12,800 acres per mile. This extended along the whole line of the railway, from the Missouri River to Sacramento. It included the Platte valley in Nebraska, the barren territory generally known as the Western Desert in Western Nebraska; the lands of the Rocky Mountain range; and the sterile and worthless country from Salt Lake Mr. CHARLTON.

to the Sierra Nevadas; the land across the Sierra Nevadas. and a small stretch of good land in the Sacramento valley. I assert that this grant of 12,800 acres a mile, which included all kinds of lan I, was not worth half as much as the grant of 12,500 acres a mile to the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate, which are to be selected in the fertile belt, with the privilege granted to the Company of rejecting any lands." not fairly fit for settlement." The Union Pacific also received aid from the Government in the shape of bonds, which were issued at the rate of $16,000 per mile for the easy portion of the road, $48,000 a mile for the difficult portion, and $32,000 a mile for the rest, which amounted to an average of about $26,500 a mile United States bonds, which were handed over to the company in addition to the land grant. This average grant in United States bonds exceeded the cash grant made to the Canadian Pacific Syndicate by $14,000 a mile. But, Sir, at the time this grant was made, and during the years that this expenditure was made, from 1864 to 1869, gold bore an average premium of 52 per cent. This premium was equivalent to a discount of 34 per cent, without counting fractions. Now these bonds for $26,500 per mile, these currency bonds, negotiated and reduced to gold, would amount to $17,400 per mile, and the Union Pacific Company never realised even that in gold purchasing value for these bonds. But allowing that discount, the sum would amount to an excess over the cash grant to be given to the Syndicate of $4,900 a mile. If the Syndicate's land grant is, as I assert it is, worth double the grant of land per mile made to the Union and Central Pacific, then we have an advantage for the Syndicate of 6,250 acres of land per mile, which, at $1 an acre, amounts to $-5,000 per mile, or, at only $2 an acre, to $12,500 a mile. Then the advantage to the Syndicate over the Union Pacific, giving to the latter credit for the $4,900 excess in cash aid, is, if the lands are worth $4 an acre, no less than $20,100 a mile. The advantage to the Syndicate over the Union Pacific Railway Corporation is, if the land is worth $4 per acre, $20,100 per mile; if it is worth $3 per acre, $13,850 per mile, and at $2 per acre, $7,600 per mile. Now, then, this comparison, bear in mind, Mr. Chairman, between the two roads, is based upon the assumption that the United States subsidy of $26,500in bonds per mile was a gift to the road. If that subsidy was a gift; if the land grant to the Syndicate is worth as much again per mile as the one to the Union Pacific; if the Union Pacific realized on these bonds—as it did—the difference between currency and gold, then, Sir, the Union Pacific, as compared with the Canadian Pacific under this scheme, was subsidized to the extent of $20,100 less than the Union Pacific if the land was worth $4 an acre; $13,850 per mile less if worth $3 per acre, and $7,600 less if the value of the land is computed at $2 per acre, upon the assumption that its bonds were a gift to the Company. The bonds, however, were a loan to the Company, and not a gift. The Government first held a first mortgage, as provided by the Act of 1862, chap. 120, sec. 5, for the money advanced to the Company. The Government subsequently waived its right as the first mortgagee, and accepted a second mortgage, which it still holds against the Company. The Government stipulated, as one of the conditions, that the revenue accruing from the carriage of troops and munitions of war should be applied to the liquidation of this debt. It also provided that the Company should pay to the Government 5 per cent. of all its gross earnings upon these bonds. There has been some litigation between the Company and the Government, and the Government has exacted these terms, but I believe they have made the 5 per cent. applicable to the net earnings rather than the gross earnings But the bonds are considered good, and the whole $26,500—the sum which I have assumed for the sake of comparison was a gift to the Company, the Government holds as a lien against the Company-which will be paid in cash. Well, Sir, in addition to this, Congress reserved power to legislate upon the rights of this Company to charge freights. Congress reserved to itself power to alter, amend or repeal this Act, the charter of the Company. No such nower as this is reserved by this contract.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Incorporation Act he will find that there is such power.

Mr. CHARLTON. Do I understand the lion, gentleman to say, that if this contract becomes law, it will be in the power of Parliament to repeal it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Incorporation Act he will find whether such power is retained.

Mr. CHARLTON. I apprehend that there is very little probablity, even if there is a possibility, if this Act becomes law, that it will ever be changed, or that the Government will alter the terms and conditions upon which this contract is being based; and if we were to do so, we have the authority of one of the Ministers of the Crown that the Government would have to pay damages to the Syndicate. We see by this comparison between the contract with the Union Pacific Company and that with the Canadian Pacific Syndicate, that the land granted and received by the Union Pacific did not possess one-half the value per mile of the land granted to the Syndicate; that the Government aid granted to the Union Pacific, though the loan will ultimately be repaid, did not place the Union Pacific upon as favorable a financial basis as this contract does the Canadian Pacific Syndicate by the sum of at least $7,600 per mile. And with reference to the Northern Pacific, Mr. Chairman, this line was chartered in the year 1864, if my memory serves me right, and by the provisions of that charter, land to the extent of twenty sections per mile was granted within the limits of States that the line passed through, to the amount of 12,800 acres per mile, and to the extent of forty sections per mile in the territories, amounting to 25,600 acres per mile. Now, the mode of selection was the same as in the case of the Central Pacific. The lands were located in alternate sections along the entire length of the line without reference to the character of the land. Through the State of Minnesota it received 12,800 acres per mile of mainly good land, though it would have to take swamps and marshy stretches with the rest. Through the eastern portion of the territory of Dakota it would still have good land to extent of 25,600 acres per mile. When ent When entering upon the territory of Montana and through the western portion of Dakota it would enter upon a country nearly worthless for agricultural purposes, and from the eastern boundaries of Montana through the entire territory and through a portion of Washington territory the land continues worthless or poor. The Government in each case, as we find, reserved the mineral lands, a reservation not made in this contract. Well, Sir, taking into consideration the mode of selection and the character of the country from Duluth to Puget Sound along the entire line of the Northern Pacific, I think I am justified in asserting that the land granted to the railroad, averaging 23,500 acres per mile, is scarcely worth as much in all probability as the 12,500 acres per mile granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway, selected by the Company, in the fertile belt, with the privilege of rejecting all lands not fit for settlement; and we may assume that the land grants of the two roads are practically equal in value. If this is the case, what advantage does the Syndicate possess over those American lines with a land grant of 47,000,000 of acres of land? First, the cash subsidy of inasmuch as these companies were endowed with such large $25,000,000, also $31,000,000 expended in roads and grants of the public domain, and in one instance with a loan surveys, making in all $56,000,000, also the advantage of cheaper material. The Northern Pacific Railway must pay $25 per ton duty upon steel rails, and a heavy duty upon all materials for construction. The Canadian Pacific has its rails and material entered duty free, and this, itself, makes a ve y large sum, besides the advantage of $56,000,000 given to the Canadian Pacific. The Northern Pacific Railway, although it did have exemption from taxation within the limits of the territories only had that exemption during the time that the territories continued in a territorial condition. When those territories are admitted as States of the Union that exemption will cease. Under these terms the Canadian Pacific Railway enjoys the same exemption within the territories of Canada, with the stipulation that this exemption shall be continued even when those territories are admitted as Provinces of this Dominion.

Well, Sir, we have seen, with reference to the endowment and the aid granted to this railway company, that practically the aid would amount to a sum sufficient to build the entire railway and leave the company with seventy-three millions of dollars to speculate in other directions. We will see, Sir, whether the kind offices of the Government cease with these enormous grants made to this road, these grants so entirely out of proportion in their extent to the necessities of the road, these grants so much greater, as I have shown, than is hecessary to secure the construction of the entire line, if a common-sense, business-like mode of procedure were adopted. Do they give anything else to this Company? We will find when we come to examine the grant to this favored Benjamin on whose plate five messes are placed, and which has five changes of raiment accorded to it, while its brethron have only one,—we will find that it does receive some other incidental advantages; we will find that, in addition to grants equal to almost double the cost of the road, the Company has other and most important advantages. For instance, we will find that the Government will advance to this Company three-fourths of the cost of steel rails including, I take it, the cost of freight, providing they lay down rails faster than they are required by the terms of this contract. What is the object of this? The object is to enable these favored Benjamins to get on without the use of capital, even temporarily, in the construction of their road. We find they will sell to this Company an amount of steel rails, larger or smaller, purchased at very low rates, which have advanced in value some ten dollars per ton I believe, at cost with interest, thereby giving to them an unjust advantage and depriving the taxpayers of that advantage which should accrue to them by the sale of those articles at their just market value. We find that they will admit material for this Syndicate free of duty, that is probably not because they love the manufacturers less, for whose interest they seem to be so solicitous, but because they love the Syndicate more. When the American Government chartered the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific and the Northern Pacific railways, in return for the concession made to those borporations they stipulated that the manufacturers of that country should derive some advantage; they stipulated that these roads in their construction should use American rails; that all the rails, bolts plates and iron of every kind used in their construction should be of American manufacture. If I am not very much mistaken, this stipulation gave an impetus to the manufacture of railway iron in the United States; that it was, in fact, largely instrumental in laying the foundations of that business which has assumed in that country such large proportions. The Government of that country thought it proper and just.

of the country should receive some indirect advantage by binding the company to use American iron of every description required in the construction of those roads. If my hon, friend the First Minister had been so extremely solicitous about the manufacturers of this Dominion, could be not have introduced a clause of this kind into the contract? Having given grants of land and sums of money enormously out of proportion to the amount required for the construction of the road, surely it would have been an act of simple justice to the country to grant some protection to the manufacturers. He might in conformity with his principles, have compelled the manufacture of steel rails in this country. Here are some 2,000 miles of road to be laid with rails. These might have been manufactured in Canada. He could have fostered that young and struggling industry, and fostered the manufacture of nuts, spikes, bolts and all such articles required in the building of the road. In addition to those advantages the Company have another. We have created for the benefit of these individuals a great land Their lands are exempt from taxation for twenty years from the date of issuing the patent, and they are allowed to issue bonds to the extent of a dollar an acre, thus enabling them to withold these lands from sale until the pioneers settled upon the other portions of the public domain, make them valuable by their exertious and labor. Before recess I referred to the fact that out of every forty sections of land in that country, taking into account the Hudson Bay Company's reserve, only 18 sections will be open for settlement, so that the settlers will be scattered here and there, and the utmost possible isolation will be secured by the policy of the Government. These isolated, scattered settlers in the country must pay for the maintenance of schools and churches, and for the construction of roads, for this railway is exempt from taxation upon its lands, upon its road bed, its capital, its buildings, its docks, its elevators and all its property. These people must bear the enormous burden placed upon their shoulders in order to create this great monopoly, and in addition to helping to create and pay for the property of these men they must furnish them with the protection which law and order give, pay their municipal expenses, their school expenses, and all the expenses appertaining to the government of the country. This Syndicate, to whom Parliament is asked to grant these enormous franchises and exemptions, are free from the contribution of one dollar to the furtherance of those various objects. Great mistakes have already been made in this country. It seems to be the policy of my hon friend to create dukedoms in this country, to sell as large estates as possible. He last year refused the reasonable demand to make settlement the condition of obtaining lands in that country. He has adopted a land policy, which has proved already most defrimental to the interests of the North-West, and he is about to aggravate those evils ten-fold by the policy which he is now introducing. Not only has this Company the privilege of issuing bonds and of being exempt from taxation, but it may issue guarantee stock to the extent of $10,000 per mile, and bonds to the extent of $10,000 per mile. The way is made easy and plain for these gentlemen to raise all the money they require without selling an acre of land. Are we warranted in supposing that they will ultimately sell, or is it possible that these gentlemen will take it into their heads to lease those lands and become lords and proprietors of the soil, to own a vast estate in that country, one-fifth larger than Ireland. Ireland contains 20,000,000 acres of bogs, mountains, lakes and arable land. Its whole area is one-fifth less than this Bill proposes to grant to the Syndicate. In Ireland they have one man who owns 170,000 acres of land; three who own over 100,000 acres; Mr. CHARLTON.

of money from the public treasury, that the manufacturers fourteen who own over 50,000; ninety who own who own over 10,000 over 20,000 acres; 135 acres; 452 who own over 5,000, and matters are bad enough there. How would it be, Mr. Chairman, in the North-West, if one corporation took it into their heads to hold and lease 25,000,000 acres of land; a corporation with no body to shoot at, with no soul to be judged in the future, I hold, Mr. Chairman, we would introduce a very much worse state of things there than exists in Ireland. Scotland contains 6,053,000 acres of land less than this grant to the Syndicate. Its largest estate comprises 1,326,000 acres. It takes twelve men in Scotland to own one-fourth, seventy to own one-half, seventeen hundred to own nine-tenths of that country. Two millions of acres have been depopulated there to make deer parks, so that the patricians might have venison. I should like to ask the Minister of Railways, were he here, whether in his estimate he supposed it probable that the Syndicate would establish buffalo parks on their estate. They might take it into their heads to reserve 2,000,000 acres for that purpose. They could readily do it; they would be wealthy enough to hold it as a park. England and Wales contains 37,000,000 acres. It is not twice as large as the land granted to this Syndicate. In England it takes 66 of the largest landlords to own 1,917,000 acres; 523 to own one-fifth of the whole country; 710 to own one-fourth and 4,500 to own one-half of the whole. Matters are bad enough there, but better than they will be in the North-West if the Syndicate does as it may easily do, retain its land and keep a large tenant population in that country. We were told last year when we urged that the policy of selling the land in large blocks was likely to prove injurious to the country and pointed out that those lands would be held for speculation, and settlers would have to pay high prices for them, that this would all be corrected by local taxation. That is be the safetyvalve. Local taxation is the means relied on to oblige the large landholders to sell their lands. But these hon, gentlemen are not consistent with their professions. They would to-day take from the population of that country the very safeguard which last year they declared to be the one that justified the measures then adopted for selling larger quantities of land. This lever of taxation on railway lands is used very effectually in the western States for the purpose of compelling railway corporations to sell their lands at reasonable prices. In many States the taxes amount to ten or fifteen cents per acre. Under these conditions railway companies do not hold their lands if they can sell them at fair prices; but under this contract a premium is offered to the Syndicate to hold their lands for twenty years, in order that they may benefit by the labors of the pioneer settlers of that country to the advancement of their own fortunes. With reference to this question of taxation, I had intended to go more fully into it, but the ground has already been gone over by other speakers. I may simply point out the fact that the exemption of the lands, the road and capital of this Company from taxation within the territory of the Dominion, will probably amount to $250,000 per year when that country is settled. I arrive at this amount by a calculation of the taxes paid by the various American railway corporations. Another feature of this contract which has not, to my recollection, been referred to, is the fact that it creates, among other monopolies, a telegraph and telephone monopoly in the North-West. It gives to this Company a practical monopoly; it imposes no restriction on it as to what rates should be charged for messages or services coming under this branch. In this respect it is strictly in keeping with its features in other respects. Wherever it is possible to grant a monopoly, it seems a monopoly has been granted. In fact, on looking over this contract, I cannot conceive of any advantage that the Syndicate could have secured that they have not secured, except one. If a provision had been inserted that the Company should be free of all claims for damages in consequence of loss of life, limb or property, then the contract would have been a perfect one, then the very last concession which it was possible for them to ask, or the Government or anybody else, to give, would have been granted. I now proceed to consider the most objectionable feature I could pardon the that this contract contains. Government-though I would have to exercise a great amount of charity to do so—for giving the Company practically $130,000,000, that they might expend out of it $50,000,000; I could pardon the Government, possibly, for having given the Company these exemptions from taxation upon their lands and their capital, the admission of material free of duty, the advanced cost of steel rails on hand-all these things are less objectionable in their character than is that monopoly to which I am about to This contract creates a monopoly in the transportation business of the entire North-West. It provides that the Company may locate branches, at pleasure, to the north or south. This will enable it to forestall any other companies that may desire to locate lines, and, indeed, if any other company should have the foolhardiness to locate a branch line, that line must be a tributary to the Canadian Pacific which can control it in such a way that it will in the end absorb its property at much less than first cost. cheapest way, in fact, in which the Canadian Pacific can acquire branch lines will be to induce incautious individuals to build them, and then put on the screws and force them to sell out at less than cost. This Company may build lines north or south, but no other company to build a branch line to within fifteen miles the American frontier. What is the object of the company to be a south of the company to be a south of the company to be a south of the company may build be a south of the company of What is the object of this? Just south, a great transcontinental line, the Northern Pacific, which will have direct communication with Montreal by a short commercial route, is being constructed and rapidly approaching completion, and this provision is to prevent branch lines connecting with the Northern Pacific and thus causing competition in rates. This contract carefully guards against the settlers of the North-West being allowed that privilege. It carefully hedges in the settlers of that country so that they will be allowed to have no connection with competing lines, but must all be subservient to this one monster corporation that will squeeze the life blood from them. I presume there is not an hon. member of this House who is not familiar with the struggles of towns and cities in various parts of this Dominion, situated on railway lines, for the creation of additional railway facilities, in order to establish competition in rates. This very city of Ottawa is seeking connection with Toronto—not because it has no railway connection with the markets open to it, but because it seeks for competition in the rates charged for business between these two points. Ottawa is seeking for an outlet by American railways without being obliged to pass through Montreal, for the purpose of securing lower rates. The hon member for South Norfolk (Mr. Wallace) is familiar with the fact that he was instrumental in promoting the construction of a line from Port Dover to Woodstock, and on through Stratford, which was built, not because the people of those districts had no railway communication, for they had abundant railway facilities, but they wanted to secure competition in rates. It is a well known fact that all railway lines will discriminate against local points and in favor of through businessthat people at local points who must use such lines are charged exorbitant rates. It is a well known fact that produce can be shipped from Chicago to New York for less than it can be shipped from Rochester to New York; that it can be shipped more cheaply from Buffalo to New York than from points on the New York Central 200 miles east of Buffalo where there is no competition. It is essential to the prosperity of any place that it should enjoy the benefits of competing rates, but this contract prevents, not one particular place but the whole of that broad country, from Thunder Bay to the base of the Rocky Mountains, from the 49th parallel to the North Pole, from enjoying the benefits of competing rates. I say that it is a gross outrage that is sought to be perpetrated upon the inhabitants of that country. Before this particular feature of that contract all the other objectionable features drop into insignificance.

An Hon. MEMBER. Let it drop.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes; and before this matter is disposed of some hon, gentlemen opposite will be sorry they did not drop it as the monkey dropped the hot potato. In the western States when railways were first constructed the rates charged for freight were so enormous that on some occasions farmers transported their grain in waggons for 30 or 10 miles alongside a railway line, because they found that mode of transportation cheaper than the exorbitant rates charged by irresponsible railway monopolies. I have myself seen corn burned as fuel in those western States, because it was cheaper to burn it than to use coal, owing to the enormous rates charged for transporting it from the mines. These evils became so great that finally political differences and party organizations became merged, so far as state politics were concerned, into two parties, tho grangers and the anti-grangers. The grange organization the basis was formed upon the basis that these railway companies should be restricted in their onslaughts upon the rights of the people. Members of the Legislature were elected on their pledge to accept no passes or other favors from these corporations; they were pledged to protect their constituents against the encroachments and unjust demands of these companies. agitation kept the whole of that western country in a ferment for years, and its result was that laws were passed regulating the rates to be charged—fixing them pro rota at so much per ton per mile for freight, and so much per head for passengers. The consequence of that legislation has been that during the last few years these outrageous exactions by railway corporations have in a great measure ceased. But in the contract now before the House it is proposed to place the inhabitants of a region as large as six or seven of those States at the mercy of a corporation, and no power is reserved to these people to regulate their affairs or relieve themselves unjust or extortionate charges. I have here a report to Congress in the year 1875 by a Com-of which Senator Windom was Chairman. made The question of excessive transportation rates was one which attracted the attention of Congress, and the agitation against extortionate charges had become so great that a scheme was set on foot for Congress to build a trunk line across the country, which was to be used by any individual for transporting locomotives and trains, just as a canal is used for the transport of boats. I will read a few extracts from the report of the Committee on the subject of freights:

"The rates for moving freight by rail have been gradually reduced, so that for the last few years the cheapest movement has been by lake from Chicago to Buffalo, and thence by rail to New York, notwithstanding the canal tolls have been reduced one-third, and when the two freight tracks are in ful. operation the New York State canals will have accomplished their mission.

"This demonstrates that a canal of 350 miles, connecting with a river 150 miles in length and both of the most perfect description."

"This demonstrates that a canal of 350 miles, connecting with a river of 150 miles in length, and both of the most perfect description, when not rendered inoperative by ice and without capital indebtedness, except as to what might be called the rolling-stock of the canal, cannot, under the present improvement of railroad freight transportation, compete successfully with the railroad system.

"Having shown that the railroad system has taken the place heretofore occupied by the canal system, it becomes necessary to endeavour to demonstrate to what extent the railroad system can be developed during the next fifty years, or in the future.

the next fifty years, or in the future.

"This brings us immediately to the consideration of this bill, which provides for a system which contemplates the transportation of freight on a double-track railway with steel rails, low grades and straight lines, built in the most substantial manner, with sufficient sidings and abundant storage, terminal and all other facilities, and equipped in the most improved manner for moving freight at a low uniform speed and at a low cost the cost.

"To demonstrate the full working capacity of such a line of railway with all the rolling stock that could be fairly operated, would exceed the bounds of this report, but estimates of some engineers refuse the cost to 2½ mills per ton per mile, while others have estimated the cost as low as 1½ mills per ton per mile on such a railway operated to its full capacity."

I shall, on the basis of this report, make a comparison of the rates mentioned therein with the rates now charged for transporting articles of various kinds from Toronto to Winnipeg. The rate at which first class merchandize is carried, per 100 lbs., from Toronto to St. Paul, is $1.35; and from St. Paul to Winnipeg, $1.75. We find that the transport of lumber from Toronto to St. Paul costs $98 per car, and from St. Paul to Winnipeg, $85; live stock, from Toronto to St. Paul, $125; from St. Paul to Winnipeg, $121; agricultural implements, from Toronto to St. Paul $120; from St. Paul to Winnipeg, $175; iron and coal, from Toronto to St, Paul, $99.60; from St. Paul to Winnipeg, $129.60. Now, according to the rates mentioned in the report of the Committee of Congress, viz., 2½ mills per ton per mile, the charge, per car load of ten tons on merchandize from Toronto to St. Paul, should be $23,10, instead of $98 or $120. The charge from St. Paul to Winnipeg, per car, should be $12.43, instead of $173, for agricultural impliments, or $129 for iron and coal. It, is quite evident, therefore, that the rates charged from Toronto to St. Paul are unduly high, and it is equally evident that the rates charged from St. Paul to Winnipeg are far beyond the limits of reason. And from the charges from Toronto to Winnipeg, where I presume there is competion, hon. gentlemen will readily apprecate the undesirability of placing the whole north-west country at the mercy of a monopoly without leaving them the slightesly chance of guarding their interests by securing competition in rates. This is an evil the magnitude of which I am sure we do not appreciate—an evil which, if we fasten upon the people of this country, will lead them to execrate our memory, and execrate it deservedly. Let us suppose that the great States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska, were placed in the hands of one railway corporation; that one railway corporation by a charter from the United States Government secured the monopoly of the transportation business of all those great States; that by a provision of that charter no lines could be built within 15 miles of the southern boundary of those States, thereby preventing connection with any competing lines to the south; that, in addition to a monopoly of transportation, this company received a monopoly of the telegraphing in all those States; that this company had power to acquire a trunk line to the waters of the Atlantic, that would gather up all the traffic of those States to the exclusion of other lines; that in addition the Government had endowed this company with cash and land to the extent of many millions of dollars; that the land of this company should be exempt from taxation for 20 years, and its road exempt from taxation forever; what do you think would be the result? Would you have a Granger agitation in those States? The result would be simply a revolution. Such conditions could never be imposed upon the people of those States. The people would never submit to them, but would appeal to the first law of nature—the law of force. And we are placing in the hands of the people of the North-west an inducement to appeal to force; and if they resort to violence rather than submit to this contract, they will be justified. And shall we, the members of this Canadian House of Commons, deliberately, pass a measure which can only be rectified by violent proceedings on the part of an aggrieved people? I hope not, ulthough I Mr. CHARLTON.

of discussing this question temperately. I believe I have dong so, and I wish to say, in cold blood, weighing my words well, that this measure is the great railway swindle of the nineteenth century. I was very much amused the other night at a remark made by my hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives). He told us that one desirable feature of this contract was that it would take the Pacific Railway of this contract was that it would take the radiic pattway out of politics. Well, I certainly was amused at the impocute of that hou gentleman. The idea of removing a great corporation, like this from the region of politics. Why, Sir, it is the very thing they will be constantly meddling with. The great railway corporations of the United States have been systematically attempting to rule the legislative assemblies of the different States. It is told of a Dutch member of the Pennsylvania Legislature, who, on one occasion, when a motion was made to adjourn, said, "Well, I suppose we had better adjourn if Tom Scott has no more business for us to do;" and I suppose the time will come when we may be allowed to adjourn if the Syndicate has nothing more for us to do. In the United States immense fortunes have been accumulated by railway specula-tions. There are the fortunes of Wm. H. Vanderbilt, of Jay Gould, of Tom Scott, of Huntington, of Dillon, of Barlow, and many others—not one of them less than five millions, and ranging from that to one hundred and twenty millions of dollars. How have these great fortunes been acquired? How long is it since Cornelius Vanderbilt, the father of Wm. Vanderbilt, was a canal boat owner and a noor man. How was his fortune of $120,000,000 accumulated? The farmers of the west can tell you. It was by charging exorbitant rates, by watering the stock of the New York Central Railway. All these great fortunes have been created at the expense of the public, and they have been used in a manner injurious to the interests of the public. The building up of these great railway magnates is an evil that threatens the best interests of that country, and we, with our eyes open and with the experience of the United States before us, are about to create a class of rail-way magnates for ourselves. We are creating a Syndicate and giving them terms which no railway magnate of the United States ever dreamed of. We are giving them enough to enable each one of them to receive $10,000,000, besides making them a present of the road.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Could not the hon, gentleman extend his catalogue to John Jacob Astor and A. T. Stewart?

Mr. CHARLTON. I am now dealing with railway nen. John Jacob Astor and A. T. Stewart were men. merchants, and, I presume, they accumulated their wealth in more honest ways than that which the hon. gentleman contemplates for his friends of the Syndicate. With reference to the land grants of the United States to its various railway corporations, although no grant in that country has ever been made equal in extent to the grant proposed to this Syndicate, yet it is now acknowledged that in most instances these grants were too high. I have drawn a comparison between the grants made to two different roads and that made to the Pacific Railroad Syndicate. That comparison will clearly show that the Syndicate has a decided advantage in point of terms over either of these roads, and that disparity would be still greater if the comparison was instituted with any of the other roads. These grants, however, whether too great or too small in the past, would be too great at the present time, because the cost of railway construction has materially diminished within the last few years. For various reasons which it is unnecessary for me to explain here, railways are more economically constructed than they were ten or even five years ago. Baltimore, Ohio and Chicago Extension, built between 1872 and 1874, from the western extremity of Baltimore to Ohio, fear we shall. I set out, Mr. Chairman, with the intention through an old settled country where the right of way costs a large sum of money, laid with steel rails paying a duty of $-5 per ton, cost less than $25,000 per mile. It was fully equipped, a first-class road, and could do an enormous business. The Northern Pacific Railway, of which about 1554 miles remained to be constructed, it is estimated will be built at a cost of $25,000 per mile for the difficult mountain portions, and $12,000 per mile for the easy portions of the road, and this in a country where material, owing to the duty upon rails and iron, is much higher than in the North-West. There is another feature of this Syndicate contract to which I wish briefly to allude, and that is the fact that only the terminal points are definitely fixed, that the interests of the North-West are not gnarded with reference to the route that the road shall take. The Company can serve its own purpose and interest in the location of that road, without reference to the interests of the people of the country. The Government should certainly stipulate as to the line it should take, and should provide that the route should be such as would most conduce to the interest of the people of the North-West. There is another feature of interest to me and to many other members of this House; and that is, that the interests of Ontario are not properly guarded by this contract. This line may and probably will obtain control of an extension to tide water; it will obtain a line either to Montreal or Quebec, and having obtained that the Syndicate will naturally seek to throw all the business possible through their own line. If they adopt this course, they must and will discriminate against a road such as the Ontario Junction Road; they must and will discriminate against the interests of the commercial centres of Ontario such as Toronto and Hamilton. This result is inevitable. This Company, with a line extending from either Montreal or Quebec to the Pacific Ocean, will seek to monopolise all the business of that region, and I presume legislation will be all but powerless to remedy this evil. The only way in which it could be done, would be to make the terminus of that road absolute at Lake Nipissing where these various roads will connect, thus giving other roads equal privileges and an equal chance to obtain business. That would be no more than just to Ontario. Whatever burden this measure may involve Ontario must bear the larger portion, and certainly if she is called upon to pay a very large portion of the cost, it is reasonable that she should be placed in a position to reap from the enterprise some of the advantages that will flow from it. I have dealt with some of the leading objections pertaining to this scheme, though I have not gone fully into the minor details.

The last objection I shall allude to will be that pertaining to the increase of debt. We were told the other night, I think by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), that the finances of this country were in such a satisfactory condition that the surplus from year to year would pay the cost to be incurred in the construction of the portions of the line by the Government to hand over to the Syndicate and the additional cash grant of $25,000,000. In contradistinction to that assertion is the statement of the Finance Minister that the net increase of the public debt for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June last, was within a a thousand dollars or so of $9,453,000, and I apprehend that, as long as we continue to advance money either by wav or bonus or by constructing line to hand over to that Company, so long we shall continue to increase our debt. We have various other schemes requiring the aid of public money. We have our system of canals to complete, and we always have enterprises pressing upon the Government for aid, and these demands are of the character that will have to be listened to. We may safely say that whatever may be the amount of aid in cash to be given to this road it will be profit to the Syndicate of from $6,000,000 to $12,224,000, found in the end a substantial addition to the public debt. Our as we may consider the land worth $3 or $4 per acre

net public debt on the 30th of June, 1879, was $117,481,000. To this will be added, according to the statement of the Finance Minister, the increase for the year subsequent, of $9,453,000, making our not public debt on the 30th of June isst $156,934,000. Now, this amount will be increased, if my assumptions are correct, by the amount yet to be expended upon the line from Selkirk to Thunder Bay. What that amount may be I do not know. I assume it will be in round numbers, $5,000,000. It will be increased still further by the sum to be expended on the line from Kamloops to Port Moody; which, according to the latest estimate, will be in round numbers $.2,000,000. It will be increased still further by the cash subsidy to be paid to the Syndicate of $25,000,000, all which will increase our obligations to the figures of $198,734,000, if there have been no accession to that debt from other causes. The debt already is unjuly large, is in excess of the capabilities of this country especially when we take into consideration the fact that the country to the south of us, with whom we must be a competitor for securing immigration, is a more lightly burdened country at present than ourselves. The hon, member for Bothwell referred to the fact that this year, for the first time, the interest charged per head in the United States for the public debt was lighter than in Canada. Such is the case. While we are increasing our public debt, while we increased it last year by nearly $9,500,000, the United States diminished theirs by $63,000,000. While we are likely to increase our debt next year the United States are likely to diminish theirs by the sum of $95,000,000, Why, Sir, this line of conduct cannot be too severely condemned. We never can expect to secure prosperity if we pursue the course we have entered upon. must retrench. We must say that we will not plunge ourselves one dollar deeper into debt than we find ourselves to-day. We should make it a point of our policy that we will-run no more into debt. If we keep on in the course we are pursuing, if we constantly increase our public debt, this country is driving surely and rapidly to financial rnin.

Mr. Chairman, I think I may reasonably claim to have shown in the discussion of this question that changed circumstances in reference to this railway matter call for changed action; that the road of 1880, considering its changed character, is much more heavily sudsidized than the one of 1874; that it is unnecessary to undertake the building of the eastern and the western sections for five years to come at least; that if the Government finish the Thunder Bay division and present it and the Pembina Branch to a company, the company can probably finish 1000 miles westward without further aid, and certainly by the aid of 2,000,000 acres of public land; that at the expiration of five years a grant of 8,000,000 acres of land will probably be ample to secure construction of section west of the Mountains by 1891; that at the expiration of five years a grant of $5,000,000 and 6,250,000 acres of land would secure the construction of the eastern section by 1891; that the saving to the country of these promises are correct would be over $30,000,000 and 8,750,000 acres of land; that until the eastern section was constructed the road would have four practicable outlets to the east, one of which would be superior as a commercial route to the eastern section; that the grant of land at $4 per acre, and the grant of money for the 1,000 miles west of Red River will build it and leave a profit of $50,000,000 in round numbers to the Syndicate; that the grant of land and money to the Jasper-Kamloops section will build it and leave a profit to the Syndicate of over $6,000,000, at three dollars an acre, and of $12,000,000 at four dollars an acre; that the grant of land and money to the eastern section will build it and leave a that the grand outcome will be that the Syndicate will have 2,700 milles of railway clear of cost and from $48.000,000 to $73.000,000 in money and property to boot; that the Union Pacific, with a cash loan of $26,500 per mile and a land grant of 12,800 acres per mile—even if the loan was a gift, was not as liberally subsidized as the Canada Pacific, by over $7,000 per mile, and $31,000,000 cash. while the money advanced is a loan that will be repaid; that the Northern Pacific land grant will not exceed in value per mile, that of the Canada Pacific, which latter has in addition, $12,500 per mile, and material duty free, and $31,000,000 on surveys, and road constructed by the Government and handed over to the Syndicate as a gift; that while the American roads were compelled by charter, to use rails and iron of American manufacture, our manufactures are discriminated against by admission of material and rails duty free; that while the United States Government reserved power to alter, amend, and repeal, no such safeguard is preserved in our case; that the lands of the Company are exempt from taxation for 20 years from the issuing of the patent, thereby throwing the cost of schools, roads, municipal expenses, and the maintenance of peace and order upon the population at large-a provision which never applied to American companies, except the Northern Pacific to a limited extent; that exemption from taxation will be of material service in enabling the Company to withhold their lands from sale if they so desire, and to become lords proprietor of a region one-fifth larger than Ireland with a tenant population possibly of millions; that the road, plant, stations, workshops and buildings, are exempt from taxation in perpetuity in the territory of Keewatin and the North-West, thereby shifting a burden to the shoulders of the people which, judging by the standard of the Union Pacific, will exceed $2:0,000 per annum; that a practical monopoly in the telegraph system of the North-West is created; that a great transportation monopoly is created which virtually hands over to one gigantic corporation's tender mercies the entire North-West; that the use of the power and wealth of great railway magnates, acquired at the expense of the public, is dangerous to the highest degree to public interest; that no safeguards are imposed to secure the construction of the road through the North-West, on the route best calculated to serve the interests of the country; that the interests of the great Province of Ontario are not properly secured, and that the scheme will add nearly $43,000,000 to the public debt, the net amount of which is now nearly $157,000,000, a sum largely in excess of prudent limits. This scheme, whether designedly so or not, is a great crime. Its supporters in the Government may take the attitude of criminal complicity, or of stupidity. If they choose the latter alternative, posterity will accord to each a coat of arms, the central figure, a head with drooping ears and pensive countenance—the head of the meditative donkey. As an act whose disastrous and far-reaching consequences cannot be appreciated fully at this hour, we arraign it before the assembled representatives of the people. As a great crime we arraign it at the bar of public opinion. The question calls imperatively for independent and honest action on the part of the members of this House. If they fail in their duty, if they forget the requirements of their trust, but a few short years will elapse before millions of Canadians will deeply regret its consummation, and the inexcusable stupidity of this House and the gentlemen upon the Treasury benches.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). It seems to me that the Government made one serious mistake, and only one, when they brought down this great measure to this House: they erred in judgment in supposing that this vitally important business transaction now under consideration, would be dealt with in a fair and liberal spirit by hon members on the Opposition benches. Judging from the tone of the Mr. Charlton.

Opposition press throughout the country during the last few months, the Government might have anticipated the sort of treatment they would meet with in this House. They might have known, judging from the unprincipled manner in which gentlemen opposite have dealt with the statements of their opponents, suppressing what is true, suggesting what is untrue, and manipulating figures, what they would have to anticipate in future. I am not surprised, Sir, that they have done so—that they have sought to stimulate the popular passions and snatch a verdict from the country under false pretences. The witty Frenchman, who said that the English people took their pleasure sadly, might have felt the appropriateness of his remark could be have seen how the hon. gentlemen opposite employed themselves during the recess. Instead of enjoying themselves at their own firesides at that particular period of the year which is supposed to be devoted to domestic peace, we found them speeding the fiery cross throughout Ontario. With some of their orators the heather was on fire. We find the gallant Knight of Napanee, like a Cassandra in pantaloons, shrieking "woe! woe!" and prophesying the destruction of the country wherever two or three could be gathered together to listen to his gloomy vaticinations, while his faithful henchman from South Ontario (Mr. Glen), like Mr. Laffamme's scrutineers who manipulated the ballot-boxes—was down in the cellar working the machine, and arranging for a supply of impromptu enthusiasm. Some of the hon, member's letters have got into the papers, and afford amusing proof of how this so-called enthusiasm was aroused. I would draw your attention to the wonderful success obtained in the constituency of South Ontario, by political letter writing. Before we are done with South Ontario, we may anticipate that we will have a complete and polite political letter-writer published in that constituency. It shows the manner in which public opinion is sought to be galvanized, in which the Liberals have sought to obtain those spontaneous outbursts of public indignation for which hon gentlemen opposite seem determined to take out a patent, but, judging from the manner in which they have returned to the House, they do not seem to have succeeded very satisfactorily in their enterprise of enkindling the minds of the people of Ontario. Although we had numerous meetings, although we had my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) and the hon. member for West Middlesex and others harrowing up the feelings of the back townships; although we had the hon. member for Duluth —I beg the hon, gentleman's pardon, I mean West Durham—flying from city to city, pursued by the hon. Minister of Railways as though he were an avenging fury, although we had the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) holding forth in his constituency,—and I am told that one of his auditors reminded him at St. Thomas that the man who mistook a cow for a crow was not the man to criticise a contract; although we had the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Wheler) also stirring up his constituency and grappling with the subject, pretty much as Horace Greeley did with the subject of farming, whose book on that subject it was said should have been styled "what I do not know" instead of "what I do know" about farming—although we had all these and the state of the about farming-although we had all those efforts made to arouse the opposition of the people, yet we find the hon, member for West Durham and his followers returned with angry seowls and lowering brows, frightening the pages and messengers in the corridors, and exhibiting generally that they have not succeeded in persuading the people that the country has been ruined by the right hon. leader of the Government and his colleagues. My hon. friend from North Norfolk, who generally makes a speech and then leaves, was to have made a speech at Windsor during the recess, and it may not be inappropriate to explain to you from that instance the manner in which all these spontaneous country. About a week before Christmas I saw day after day a notice in the Globe that a meeting was to be held in Windsor the 27th of December, and I hastened home in order to be present at it. When I arrived I found that no one knew anything about it. At last I met an old Gritfriend of mine-for I have personal friends even among the Grits -and I said "How about this meeting?" He said "They telegraphed us to try and have a meeting; we did not want a meeting just now," and then they telegraphed us that Mr. Charlton was at our service. I asked: "Why did you not let him come?" "Oh," a friend who was standing by replied, "by the time he came he might have changed his mind." The hon. member for North Norfolk, therefore, instead of playing first violin at Windsor on 27th of December. had to content himself with playing second fiddle in London. Now the question is, these gentlemen having returned from their melancholy mission, are they mad?

Are they bought or are they sold? My humble opinion is that they are sold, and very badly sold at that. They have not succeeded, as far as I can ascertain, in arousing the popular indignation they expected. I have had opportunities during the long journey I took to the extreme west of Ontario, of meeting many men of both political parties and discussing this contract with them. I have not met a man, be he Grit or Tory, that does not wish that the read shall go on. They may make objections to minor points, but there is not a man among them who wishes it to be stopped. When I asked them: "If you had in one balance the road, and in the other any particular clause, would you give up the road rather than retain the clause?" And the invariable answer was "No." Notwithstanding the great efforts of hon, gentlemen opposite, the right hon, the First Minister can rest assured that the heart of the country is with him—I can vouch for at least the western portion of Ontario. I met an old farmer at Chatham station on my way down. He got talking to me very naturally about matters at the Capital. He said: "How is this contract business getting on?" To test the man, an old acquaintance, whom I had always looked upon as a Reformer, I said: I am afraid Sir John is not doing well." "Oh!" he replied, "I do not know. I went to hear Mackenzie at the Music Hall, in Chatham, the Saturday before the last election. I believed he was an honest man and voted for his candidate, but it is all changed now; I would rather trust John A. a little wrong than I would you man Blake, right or wrong." That is the sentiment of the country. As regards the honorable member for North Norfolk, it would be much more agreeable to my feelings had that hon. member retained his seat after he had made his speech. I wished to invite him to Essex, to state to him that if he will come to Essex he will receive a cordial reception as a man, and a respectful hearing as a politician. But I make one condition, and that is that the hon. gentleman will have arrived at a mature opinion on the subject upon which he will address the people, that he will not be in a state of vacillation, because it would not be pleasant to have him come there and settle the people's minds, and then twelve months later change his own, because it takes the people longer than twelve months to change theirs. If he will arrive at a mature opinion on any one subject, we will receive him with open arms, and we will have no tickets. He will get a respectful meeting and no tickets required to admit people to hear him. The honorable member for North Norfolk was at one time a strong Protectionist. He educated me and a number of others in Western Ontario on the subject of Protection; but when the time was ripe and public opinion matured in favor of Protection then the hon. member had changed his mind. He had taken second thoughts on the subject. I can prove, before I sit down, that he is now entering on the third state

Railway. I would remind the hon. gentleman, if he were in his seat, that "It is not true that second thoughts are best, But first and third, which are a riper first. Too ripe! too late! they come too late for use."

I wish to refer to the speech of the hon, member for North Norfolk in London. I quote his words from the Globe, which are as follows: -

"He said he warned them to watch their representativ's in Parliament, for it would pay the Syndicate well to spend a million dollars to secure the passage of this measure through this House."

Of course the hon, gentleman knows his political associates, and can speak for them, but I would ask the hon. member, if he were here, if he said that; and if so, is he prepared in his cooler moments to apologize, because I think he is the last man who ought to attempt to affix a stigma on this House, hailing, as he does, from the land where they elect their President by fraud, whore the judges on the bench are forced to secure their election through the support of the criminal classes on whom they are afterwards to sit in judgment, where every city has its "boss," and every legislature its "lobby," where a long purse is of more weight than an honest heart and a wise head. A man hailing from that land should be the last to refer in the terms he has used to the Parliament of Canada, and in so doing he exhibits an audacity worthy of the fellow countryman of Col. Sellers and the Hon. Bardwell Slote. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Cameron) also the other evening insinuated that possibly even the judges of this country might be open to illegitimate conviction upon subjects of a cognate nature. All I have to say to the hon, gentleman is this: He knows himself best; perhaps it would be better for him never to take a judgeship; should he do so, let him pray "lead us not into temptation." One thing the Christmas recess lacked—a speech from the hon. member for Lambton. But as we are all aware, even had he been disposed to give us one, the hon, gentleman's physical condition would have prevented him; and I am sure that I speak the sentiments of the House and country when I tender him my respectful sympathy, and express the hope that he may be speedily restored to health and vigor.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD and other hon. members on the Ministerial side. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am satisfied that, however we differ from the hon. member for Lumbton, we respect him as an honest and sincere man, incapable of shams. But it is a singular coincidence that when this hon, gentleman was leader of the Government, the member for South Bruce, now the member for West Durham, was also occasionally afflicted with indisposition. At times he could not speak, and at other times he could not vote. You would sometimes see his coat-tails vanishing through the door as if their owner wished to get a breath of fresh air or gaze on the stars by night. Or sometimes the hon. gentleman would be seen wandering in the corridors of the Senate Chamber in close communication with members of that House, urging them to give their hearty support to the measures of their common leader, the member for Lambton; or, possibly, requiring a change of mental occupation, the member for West Durham might be discovered endeavoring to establish a new newspaper in order to take the bread from the mouths of the children of the man who had been his political patron, who had watched over his early political steps and fostered his political ambition—the man to whom he owes all he is politically in the Province of Ontario. In those days the member for West Durham was ill at ease, and gave vent to his feelings by propounding poetical conundrums to rustic audiences that will rank in future historical discussions with of changing his mind on the subject of the Canadian Pacific such mysteries as the sex of the Chevalier D'Eon, the authorship of the letters of Junius, and the identity of the man in the iron mask.

"You ask me why though ill at ease, Within this region I subsist."

This was the riddle which the hon, gentleman propounded. Possibly the solution would be that the hon, member felt that he was then only a mere private soldier in the ranks of the great Reform party, which had nothing to reform; and possibly over-estimating his own merits, he believed he ought to be generalissimo of the forces instead. Whatever the solution may be, he certainly achieved one great reform which entitled him to the position he craved—he cut down the bills of the cabmen of Ottawa having dealings with the Department of Justice. Did he not impress upon his constituents this great reform, and did they not reject him at the first opportunity? Talk to me after that of the gratitude of popular constituencies! In those days, too, the member for West Durham used to "languish for the warmer skies and palms and temples of the south;" and, Sir, considering the arrogance and egotism of the hon gentleman and the autocratic manner in which he rules his subservient followers, I really think that a fat plantation under the old regime where he could have drilled his human chattels to his heart's content, would have been for him a not mappropriate resting place. But, "other times, other manners," and what would have been appropriate to the sunny south in other days and with its peculiar institutions is scarcely suited to the atmosphere of Ontario. I care not who the man may be, or how great-intellectually or socially, the man who, in his native Province, in the city in which he has lived for nearly forty years, declines to meet his opponents on a public platform, even when the meeting is packed in his favour and the applause arranged beforehand, is a political coward, and though he may lead serfs and bigots, is out of harmony with the genius of our people, and cannot mould the minds of Shades of Grattan and Burke and Curran, of Plunket and Tierney, of O'Connell and Shiel, look down upon your degenerate fellow-countryman who fondly imagines that he concentrates in his own magnificent person the quintessence of all your powers; but yet who, in what may be called his native city, under the shadow of the great University of which he was an ornament, and over which he is now the presiding Chancellor, who, within the echoes of the corridors of those courts of law in which his silvery, persuasive tones may be almost any day heard with pleasure and instruction by the listener, and with huge profits to himself, who, under these favoring circumstances and with all these advantages, feared, when challenged, to meet upon the public platform, for the purpose of discussing the great question of the day, a little doctor from a fishing village in Nova Scotia! Turning to the more important subject under discussion, we have before us the contract for building the Canadian Pacific Railway within a limited time and for a specific amount. I do not intend taking up the time of this House in replying to the arguments of those who desire to delay the building of the railway or who advocate its construction only in part. The great majority of the people of the country desire that the road should be built with the least possible delay. They prefer that it should be built by a private company, and they insist that it shall be an all rail route through Canadian territory; and to those general features of the scheme hen, gentlemen opposite have again and again given their assent, as witness their speeches no longer ago than last Session. Mr. Blake, on 30th April, 1880, enunciated these views:

"Of course, it is obviously necessary that these lands are to form a fund for the construction of the railway."

Again the hon. gentleman stated:

"It has been repeatedly explained by my hen. friend the member for Lambton, that his intention was, as soon as the surveys were complete, to submit the whole road to tender on a land and money basis, Mr. PATTERSON (ESSEX).

the contractors taking over as cash on account the works meantime executed by the Government. • • • There was contained in the Act the power of doing the work by means of a company."

In his speech in this House on the 15th of April, 1880, the hop, gentleman who leads the Opposition used these words:

"But, meantime, further progress was made, and to some enquiries the Government answered that it hoped to be able shortly to advertise for tenders for the whole work on a land and money basis, subject to the approval of Parliament. It was the policy of the Government at the earliest moment at which the condition of the surveys would permit to take that step, and so to give a fair trial to the plan, the only plan by which the road could be constructed in any short time without the increase of taxation; and if that trial failed, it was obvious the whole question must be opened afresh for consideration, and that it would be the duty of the Government to consider of a new policy. Well, the advertisement was issued in May, 1878, I believe, for tenders for the whole line upon a land and money basis, and subsequently, I believe in August, for the construction of the middle part of the eastern link, I think in three sections, and also for the line from Yale to Kamloops."

In his speech of April 15th, 1880, Hansard vol. 2, 1441, Mr. Blake declines to accept the estimates of the Minister of Railways in regard to the cost of construction, but insists on adhering to those of the engineer and of Mr. Mackenzie, and computes the whole cost to be $120,000,000, as follows:

Canada Central subsidy$	1,550,000
Surveys	4,000,000
Fort William to Selkirk	18,000,000
Pembina Branch	1,500,000
Red River Bridge	100,000
Selkirk to Edmonton	17,650,000
Fort William to Nipissing	32,000,000

His figures, when added, do not reach the total which the hon. gentleman gives, but it is just possible that he had not the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Glen) or the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) at his elbow to add them up, and at all events a mistake of several hundred thousand dollars is a small matter to a gentleman of his genius. At that time the hon. gentleman made no objection to degrading the line. He said in the same speech:

"If the hon. Minister of Railways can find a plan by which he can construct the foad with inferior curves and grades and in an inferior style to that heretofore contemplated, but reasonably good hewever, and the conversion of which to superior curves and grades and a first-class style can be ultimately secured, when needed, without much added cost, I think it may be a prudent thing to reduce for the present the expense in this way."

He also lays great stress on the fact that, once the road is completed and equipped, it would cost a sum estimated at from $6,750,000 to $8,000,000 a year to run it. At present, the hon. gentleman ignores all that; there is not a word in his speeches of this Session regarding the fact that the Syndicate will be at great expense for the first few years in running the road. The people are not informed of that fact, and I think, therefore, I am justified in saying these hon. gentlemen are trying to mislead the people upon this question. In their speeches these hon, gentlemen are treating the people with the same cynical contempt with which they treated them before their fall in 1878, with regard to their trade policy, and that cynical contempt for the common sense of the common people is fast becoming a characteristic of the hon. member for West Durham and those members who follow him. The hon, gentleman said in his speech last Session:

"All that we can get from the lands in that country, for the next few years, during which we shall be engaged in the construction of the road, as far as Edmonton, will not, I believe, do more than help to eke out that interest."

He alleges that the result of the several calculations made as to the receipts from land were absurdly extravagant. He said further:

"But whatever you may think as to the calculations considered up to this point, I hold it to be clear that the estimates of the cash to be realized from land sales are still more extravagant. • • It will be found that the map which the hon. gentleman brought down last night, and in which he depicted the barren spots as brown, is not at all "brown"

enough with reference to the North-West. It does not, by any means, accurately represent the extent of the bad and inferior land in that country.

The true average, assuming as the Government does, the lands to be taken up according to their relative value and attractiveness, and that the lands will bear the enhanced prices put on them, according to their proximity to the railway, instead of being $3 for these railway lands, is, when you allow for the varying widths of the belts, but $2.12½."

On the 14th December, 1880, the hon gentleman estimated the value of the lands at $4.04, but to the hon gentlemen opposite a period of eight months is a whole lifetime in the matter of consistency. I will now deal for a moment with the hon member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). On the 19th of April, 1880, that hon gentleman said:

"The hon. the Minister of Railways, the other day, in his speech on this subject, referred to the Pacific Railway. He told us that the Union Pacific Railway—I suppose he meant the Union and Central Pacific Railway—passed through 1,000 miles of desert. The Union Pacific is but 1,024 miles long, and passes through the fertile valley of the Platte River, but the Canada Pacific Railway was to pass the same distance through a garden, although this garden has not yet been brought under cultivation. I fear that it will prove but little more productive than the country that the Union and Central Pacific Railway passes through."

Again, the hon. member for North Norfolk says:

But, now, we are going to have a great people there, and there is going to be a great revolution there some morning, if this contract is carried; the lands of the United States are all sold, and if not, they are all held at high prices. I ask you to contrast the hon. gentleman's statement of to-night with the statement made by him last year. Again, the hon. gentleman says:

"What does all this show as to the estimate of increased population? I think it shows conclusively that the calculations made by the hon gentlemen on the Treasury benches are extravagant. What does all this show as to the quantity of arable land? It shows that the estimate made by the hon, the Minister of Railways, that we have 150,000,000 acres of arable land in the North-West, is exceedingly wide of the mark. He is deceiving himself and he is deceiving the country. He is guilty of a great wrong to the country if he involves it in a great expenditure, in the belief that the proceeds of land sales will repay the total outlay. What does it show as to the prospective revenue from lands? It shows that in place of receiving an average of $7,000,000 a year from land sales for the next ten years, he is not likely to realize a net return of one-seventh of that amount."

The hon gentleman in his speech to-night takes different ground. He has had a second thought, and changed his mind; he spoke rashly eight months ago, and before he thought on the subject. From what we know of the hon gentleman, he is not a safe guide for the hon members of this House. Should circumstances compel us to have a Session in the autumn of 1881, he would probably again have changed his mind, and until he has formed his mature and ripe opinion on the subject, I think he had better not trouble this House with his cpinion at all. The hon member for Lambton said in the same debates in April, 1880, page 1553 of the Hansard:

"If the consent of this House is obtained to the Government's proposition upon the faith of its obtaining the entire cost of the road, and a great deal more from the land sales, then hon. menbers will be deceived. I believe it is impossible to obtain the means in this way."

And again:

"It is impossible, after examining the official reports, to avoid coming to the conclusion that something less than one-half the entire area of the land is fertile; and, after deducting from the lands available for sale to settlers, the Hudson's Bay lands, free grants, Indian reserves, school lands, etc., it will be found that the hon, gentleman's calculations, as to the money to be realized from these lands, will be very wide of the mark. " " " " Having thus satisfied myself—indeed, I do not require any additional information to satisfy myself—on this point, that it is impossible for the Government to build the road from the proceeds of the lands of the North-West, I have to consider what is the best course to be pursued. I have always held that whatever revenue is realized from the lands, will be absorbed mainly in settlement and Governmental expenses, and that the money must be contributed by the people of Canada for the building of this Railway; that, therefore, any extravagant expenditure would simply involve us in an amount of debt such as we cannot venture to carry."

The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin), on this occasion, said:

"Now, I quite agree with the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. DeCosmos) that it was not within the competence of this Parliament, after having deliberately adopted that Address, to alter very materially the terms of the agreement by its own action, and, therefore, although that cannot bind us as to anything absolutely impossible, or anything that might seem ruinous to this country, nevertheless, I have always felt that this Dominion was bound to carry out the terms of that agreement, strictly in the letter, and in the spirit, were that possible."

And again, at page 1582 of Hansard, 1880, the hon. gentleman says:

"We were opposed also to the mode in which the Government of that day proposed that the obligations incurred should be fulfilled, because many of us felt that if that company, created by the Government of that day, commenced actual operations, $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land would not be all that we would be compelled to contribute towards that work.

"Capitalists in Europe could not see sufficient security for the vast sums required for this gigantic undertaking. They looked for something substantial, and found nothing but the \(\frac{1}{2}\)30,000,000. They did not attach the value attached by hon. gentlemen opposite to the 50,000,000 acres of land."

That was the occasion when the hon, gentlemen opposite were successful through their intrigues in England and by subsidizing the London press in defeating Sir Hugh Allan's attempt to raise money on his charter in the English market. Again, the hon, member for Gloucester says, referring to his colleague from West Durham (Mr. Blake):

"It may be well to summarize briefly the arguments advanced by that hon, gentleman in support of his resolution. He said in the first place, and I think he proved, that even if the lands in the North-West are as extensive and as fertile as it is alleged, even if as much emigration as hon, gentlemen opposite say they expect will flow into that country, even if the land can be sold in such quantity and for the prices expected—the net proceeds of the sale of those lands will not be sufficient to pay the cost of this railway or anything like it. The hon, member clearly proved that the net proceeds of the land to be sold in that country would be entirely insufficient to pay the cost of this railway."

That is the deliberate enunciation of the views of hon. gentlemen opposite as recorded in the Hansard of 1880. Now to come down again to the hon. gentleman from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). The hon. member told us, by the way, that he was through when he was done. But he is never through. The hon. member reminds me of Tom Moore's epigram on Castlereagh?

"Because it is a clumsy thing of wood,
Which, up and down, its awkward arm doth sway,
And coolly spout and spout and spout away,
In one weak, washy, everlasting flood."

Now, I contrast the utterances of the member for North Norfolk, in his speech made upon the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Bothwell, and his utterances made in his recent excursions in the Province. In his speech on the Bill the hon. gentleman said:

"It was useless to think of opening up and settling this country (the North-West) without furnishing it with railway facilities. Now, it had been said that the merican railways were subsidized to a greater extent than necessary; perhaps that had in some instances been the case; but the Illinois t'entral railway had populated the vast prairie region in the centre of the State, and had contributed in an important degree to make Illinois the third State in the Union."

was playing second fiddle for the hon, member for West Durham? He said:

"The line through the unproductive regions could not be made to pay as a commercial speculation, and he criticised very strongly the policy which had hitherto allowed such large sums to be sunk in public works which did not pay even interest upon the amount invested. He characterized the present bargain as the great railway fraud of the century, and said that if it passed in its present shape it would be so regarded by future generations."

If the hon, member for Lambton had only succeeded in carrying out his scheme and in getting branch lines in accordance with the scheme of the hon. member for Bothwell, the hon, member for North Norfork would have given it his heartiest support. Again, the hon. member said, in 1878:

"They had already lost too much time in developing the resources of Canada. Under the administration of the hon, gentlemen opposite the country had remained like a ship at anchor, without making progress.

The energies of this country were arrested until the hon, gentlemen went out of office, and it now devolved on the present (Mr. Mackenzie's) Government to people and develop the country with the utmost celerity.'

That was in 1878, but in 1880 at London, as reported in his organ the Globe, what did the hon. member say:

"He found fault with the haste with which it was proposed to hurry forward the construction of the whole work, and claimed that by building the line across the prairie in the meantime the settlement of the country could be accomplished more rapidly, and then if it was deemed advisable to construct the line across the Rocky Mountains it could be done by the year 1891, the time fixed for the completion of the road under the present bargain."

So the hon, gentleman who reproached my right hon. friend the leader of the Government for not having urged forward the scheme more rapidly in 1878, for having left the ship at anchor and kept down the expenditure, now, reproaches him for being in too great a hurry to carry out in 1881 what the hon, gentleman was urging forward in 1878. Again, the hon, gentleman said, in 1878:

"The United States had never accounted their public domain a great source of wealth from proceeds of sales: they deemed it of more importance to get settlers on their lands than to gain a paltry sum by the sale of them. He held that the only policy to open up these large tracts of country was a liberal railway policy: and that while it was proper to exercise due caution, it would not be good policy to postpone the building of the lines for the sake of saving a few hundred acres to the mile.

But in 1880 the hon, gentleman said at London:

"He dealt with the present division of subsidies, showing that the eastern and western sections were to be robbed for the benefit of the prairie section, and pointed out the temptation which existed for the syndicate to make all they could out of that section, leaving unbuilt the others on which the subsidy was relatively smaller. Referring to the value of the lands in the North-West, he showed that the railway, when constructed, would make them valuable, and that there being comparatively little cheap land in the United States open for settlement, immigration must soon turn to the Canadian North-West. This would tend to make the land there valuable."

Again, the hon. gentleman said, in 1878—this was a lifetime ago in his case:

"They could not induce capitalists to embark in a speculation of that kind unless they offered liberal terms. * • They were told these railway claims were going to absorb the whole of the North-West. Under no circumstances could they absorb more than half of it, even were parallel lines to run so close to each other that these grants joined, for in that case the Government would still have each alternate section."

But in 1880 the tone is entirely changed. The hon. gentleman, at London, said, as reported by the Globe:

"The price of railway lands in the adjoining States was $6.25 per acre. As the land granted to the Syndicate was to be all good land fit for settlement, and as they were allowed to choose all they possibly could within a belt of 24 miles from the railway, selecting the rest from the fertile belt, it ought to be worth fully as much as the American railway lands per acre. Taking a low estimate, it could not be worth less than

But, last Session, the land was worth only $2.13 per acre, and 80 per cent. of it was to be absorbed in the not within the legislative scope of the Irish Parliament to sale. The hon, gentleman continued: "He warned the vote itself out of existence and that the proposed legislative Mr. Patterson (Essex).

Now, what did the hon. gentleman say in London, when he audience that if this measure passed, it would tend to create the class of railway rings which, in the United States, had made immense fortunes out of the exorbitant tolls charged upon the Western products which they carried to market." After reading those speeches of the hon. gentleman and listening to his speech to-night, I think we, on this side, can cast back on the man who is capable of such inconsistency any stigms or slur he may have attempted to fix on the members of this House in the remarks I quoted. I think I have satisfactorily proven, from the utterances of the leader of the Opposition, as reported in Hansard, that the policy of the present Opposition was to build the road by means of cash and land grants; that he estimated the cost at a much larger sum than that estimated by the hon. Minister of Railways; that his policy was the building of a cheap road, and that he estimated the cost of running such a road, when constructed, at from $6,750,000 to $8,000,000 a year. Now, however, hon. gentlemen opposite ignore the great expenditure which this Syndicate will have to incur in running the road for years, while that country is being settled, and while they are engaged in carrying on that road to the settled district. The hon. leader of the Opposition also stated the average value of the railway lands was only $2.122, and pre-emption lands $1.75 per acre, and that the North-West was an unproductive field for immigration. The -hon, member for North Norfolk laid down the following proposition: That the North-West was as barren a country on the whole as that through which the Union Pacific Railway passed in the United States, that not more than 95,000,000 acres of land, at the outside, could be found in the entire North-West, and that the value of the railway lands was only $2.13 per acre. He also stated that immigration would not be larger, and that but little revenue could be expected from the lands. The hon, member for Lambton said it was impossible to build the road out of the proceeds of the lands, also that after deducting the claims of the Hudson Bay Company, the free grants, Indian reserves and school lands, he was satisfied it was impossible for the Government to build the road from the proceeds of the lands, but that these would be absorbed in the settlement of the country, so that the money must be contributed by the people if the road was to be built at all. Again, the views of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) were that the Dominion was bound by the terms of Confederation to build the road to the Pacific Ocean; that $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres were not sufficient to induce capitalists to undertake the work. The hon, member for St. John (Mr. Burpee) also stated:

> "When we consider the unproductive nature of the public works of the Dominion, and the enormous tax they now are on the Dominion revenue, we may well ask what will be the result of such taxes upon our revenue when the Pacific Railway is built and running from Lake Superior to Winnipeg, and from thence to British Columbia. The expenses of running such a line after it is built will be something enormous.

> Hon. gentlemen opposite now would prefer that the Government should go on and construct the work, and incur this enormous outlay. It is claimed, among the objections to this scheme, that the contract should have been submitted to the people, that there should have been a dissolution of Parliament. I know of nothing in our constitution to warrant such a demand. I do not know of a single case in British history, in which a question of this nature has been submitted to the people. I only know of one precedent, referred to by gentlemen opposite, where a question which should have been submitted, was not submitted to the people. I refer to the union of Great Britain and Ireland, and I consider it the greatest blot on the memory of Pitt that he allowed such an outrage to be perpetrated by his castle hacks upon a free people. But while I contend that it was union should have been submitted to the people, no one will pretend to say that that Parliament was not competent to enter upon any great scheme for the improvement of the internal condition of the country. When the question of Confederation was before the old Parliament of Canada, the late Hon. John Hillyard Cameron and the present Hon. Mr. Justice Matthew Crooks Cameron desired that that question should be submitted to the people, and the only Reformer who supported them was the member for South Wentworth (Mr. Rymal). That question was one which involved a change in our constitutional system and in all our political relations, and it was one which I have always believed should properly have been submitted to the people; but though only one of their number was found supporting such an appeal to the electors on that occasion. and upon a question of constitutional change, they are now found arguing that a matter which is merely a commercial transaction, one which has been before the country for ten years, and during three successive general elections, should be submitted to the vote of the people. And there is this additional fact, that at the moment when only one Reformer was found supporting the little band of Tories who desired that the question of Confederation should be submitted to the vote of the people, the Reformers of the old Province of Upper Canada, now the Province of Ontario, were in a large majority in that House. As an hon member beside me suggests, they were in power then and that made all the difference.

The people have declared upon this question with no nneertain sound, and their expressed desire is that the work should be proceeded with, with the least possible delay. No manipulation of figures and no misrepresentation of facts can alter their opinion on that subject. The results of the meetings which these hon. gentlemen have held throughout the country, the absence of petitions coming to this House in spite of the daily urging of the Globe, the defeat of these hon, gentlemen and their attempts to carry resolutions of non-confidence in the Government, in some of their strongholds, all go to justify us in thinking that the people refuse to be the medium of bringing these hon. gentlemen back to power, and are heartily in accord with the Government in bringing forward this scheme for the railway at the completion of the Among the objections which are possible moment. taken to the contract are the creation of an alleged land monopoly, the exemption from taxation, and the admission of materials free from duty. But if the Government had continued the work as a national enterprise the position would have been the same; and the fact that the exemption is only for twenty years, is the best reply to the cry of a land monopoly. It will be to the interest of the Company to sell their lands, for if they do not bring in settlers the railway will not pay them and they will soon find that thay have entered on a ruinous enterprise. It has been proved by hon. members on this side of the House, that it would pay them better to sell the lands at a low figure, and carry the produce of these lands, than attempt to create the huge monopoly which has been painted in such striking colors by hon, gentlemen opposite. It will be to their interest to sell the lands within the period prescribed, so as to avoid taxation, because as soon as provinces and municipalities are erected in that country, and population begins to flow in, the people will be able, so soon as the limitation period has expired, to make the Syndicate pay for their school-houses, town-halls, roads and other improvements. Hon. gentlemen opposite have alluded to the National Policy in connection with this matter, and it is really touching to the heart to notice how they grieve over any infraction of the solid wall which surrounds that policy. The tears which they mingle on the subject of the admission of materials free of duty are extremely affecting to members on this side of the House. Our memories are very short; we have forgotten the were to fall into the net of the cunning fowler who leads the speeches they made in 1879 and 1880 on the Tariff question, and are deeply touched by their exhibitions of grief over the National Policy. These hon, gentlemen, when they were addressing their meetings in the country, forgot to tell the people that by far the most important material which is to be introduced free of duty is at present untaxed. The members of the Syndicate who, for the most part, are friends and political allies of hon. gentlemen opposite, knowing their inconsistencies wish to bind the country so that in case of such an unfortunate thing occurring as the return of these hon, gentlemen to power they may not be in a position to heap taxes upon them for materials to be used in the construction of the road. Now, as regards the introduction of material free from duty, I am free to confess that, so far as my personal preferences are concerned, I would rather this material were not introduced free of duty; I would rather, so far as my personal preferences are concerned, that the lands were not free of taxation; I would rather that the municipal taxes were not restricted; I would rather that the clause with reference to the tolls for freight were made clearer to my mind. But when I take the matter as a whole, when I have to choose between this scheme and one which would throw Canada back for twenty years, I prefer to take it with all its risks and restrictions than retard the progress of the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite, in addressing the country at meetings and through their organs, with respect to the exemption of material from duty, fail to point to the fact that it is only the original material which is to be introduced free. That will be an inducement to this Company to build a good, solid road-bed, a road of a permanent character, and I think that fact overcomes the objection raised by hon, gentlemen as to the standard of the road. It cannot be that the standard of the road will be an inferior one and that it will at the same time be a loss to the country to introduce the material free of duty. Hon, gentlemen also enlarged upon the freedom of the road-bed and buildings from municipal taxation. They forgot to mention that nearly two-thirds of the Pacific Railway, when built, will run through provinces at present organized, and that no legislation of this House can interfere with the rights of those provinces to pass such municipal laws as they please, whereby the railway running through those provinces can be taxed. There is a doubt in my mind whether the Dominion Parliament can tie up the legislatures of the provinces to be created in dealing with such a subject. But even if it can, I think it was clearly proved by my hon. friend from Monck (Mr. McCallum) the other night how trifling an amount of taxation would be derived by the municipalities from the Pacific Railway running through them. The Great Western Railway runs through a number of townships in the county I represent, and, with the exception of Windsor, where the railway has workshops and a river frontage of a mile, the taxes obtained by the municipalities through which the railway runs, are the merest trifle; and it is a waste of the time of this House, and an imposition upon the intelligence of the country, for hon. gentlemen opposite to raise such a trifling point in connection with this great undertaking. Then, as to the rates, hon. gentlemen opposite fail to tell the people of this country that the rates which are permitted to be levied are five per cent. lower than the general Railway Act permits the railway companies throughout the Dominion of Canada to levy. These little matters are overlooked by them. They present a false picture to the country. They do not look at both sides. They ask for a full, free and fair discusthe knell of but never until doom sion: expect to get я full, can you and fair discussion on any subject in which the party of hon. gentlemen opposite is interested. Last Session an attempt was made to alarm the representatives from the Province of Quebec respecting the route of the proposed road; they

Opposition. But now the people of Ontario are to be alarmed; now the heart of Ontario is to be stirred up, and we are to have justice done to Ontario. The Sault Ste. Marie Branch is the theme of hon, gentlemen opposite. In former days I can remember their real leader, in his organ, denouncing, in that robust Anglo-Saxon which so characterized him, any such project as the Sault Ste. Marie Branch; in those days they looked upon a railway through our own territory as a necessity to our national existence. I believed in an all-rail route then, and the only difference between hon, gentlemen and me is that I believe in it still. The Sault Ste. Marie Branch can afford to take care of itself as a commercial speculation; but even if it could not, and it should be thought desirable on the part of this Government to grant aid to the Sault Ste. Marie Branch, and to the Ontario Pacific Junction Railway, I would heartily approve of the Government doing so, in the interest of the Province of Ontario. But, Sir, I do not believe in the Government being coerced at this time into any development of their policy on that subject. I do not believe that when the Government are in a tight place hon, gentlemen should take advantage of them to extract a promise from their sense of fear which they could never obtain from their sense of justice. Sir, the cry of alarm in the Province of Ontario falls on very indifferent ears. The people of Ontario are not alarmed. They have every confidence in the leader of the Government, and they are satisfied that, so long as Sir John Macdonald is at the helm the Ship of State will ride safely. The security for the building of the road is another subject which seems to have exercised the minds of the hon. gentlemen opposite; but they themselves supply the most suitable answer to themselves on that subject. While, as a matter of fact, the Government have obtained adequate security for the completion of the road, yet even if they had not done so, the fact that these gentlemen object to the existing security and almost in the same breath object to the vast fortunes which are to be accumulated by this Syndicate, is sufficient to show that their objections are worthless. If the undertaking is of such a profitable character as hon, gentlemen opposite have represented, there can be no danger as to the completion of the work by the Syndicate. I only hope that it may be of a profitable character to them; I hope these gentlemen may make large fortunes, and I hope that, in making fortunes for themselves, they may also be of great benefit to the Dominion of Canada. I have read the speeches of hon gentlemen opposite, when in power, in which they have referred to the peaceful sacrifices required by the people—that is, when the Cassandra for Centre Huron wanted to place additional taxation on the people. In those days taxation meant peaceful sacrifices; and when I observe the enormous debts with which European countries are loaded down, I think how grateful the people of the Dominion ought to be, that their burden is so light. The debts of the older countries of the civilized world have been incurred for wars in many cases, for what was called the gratification of honour, or the greed of territorial extension. The debt of Canada has been incurred entirely for works of peace and peaceful development, and the promotion of the best interests of the country. We can point to our great useful public works as assets to balance the debt incurred in their construction. With regard to the price to be paid for this great railway, hon. gentlemen opposite use varying and bewildering figures as to the value of the land. Some put it at $4 and others at $5 an acre. their calculations being almost a puzzle to any one not a calculating machine. As I figure the matter, I see it in this light: We have already incurred, or are about to incur, in the construction of the road as begun by the late Government and carried on by the present, an expenditure of $28,-000,000. We have also to pay to the Syndicate $25,000,000 Mr. PATTERSON (Essex).

addition to that, we have to set apart for the Company, 25,000;-000 acres of land; and we have still left 75.000, 00 acres, set apart by this Parliament for railway purposes, which, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, at $4 an aere; are worth $300,000,000. We have, then, on the other hand, a debt of $53,000,000. Even if we deduct from that large amount the cost of the management and sale of those lands, if those $300,000,000 will not wipe off the debt of $53,000,000, the Finance Minister had better give way to the hon. gentleman from Centre Huron. I think that the scheme will pay, and that not only will the road be built by it, but we shall have our existing debt on Pacific Railway account wiped out; that instead of its being a burden upon the older Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, it will relieve them of their present burlens and of those that may be anticipated. Their people will never have to pay out of their pockets one dollar of the $25,000,000 of subsidy. If, as one hon, gentleman opposite says, the lands are worth $5 an acre, our 75,000,000 acres will yield us $375,000,000. Before we are done with those great Opposition calculations the value of the lands will have been so enhanced that some hon, members will, probably, be seen resigning their seats and begging the Syndicate to take them in on the ground of former political friendship. It strikes me that hon. gentlemen opposite are themselves responsible for the terms with the Syndicate not being better than they really are. I can just fancy the leader of the Government and Minister of Railways discussing them with the Syndicate, and naturally trying to make the best bargain for the country, endeavoring to have their estimate of the value of the lands in the North-West accepted and acted upon. We will then suppose Mr. Stephen or Mr. Angus replying, in striving to get the best terms for the Syndicate: "Sir John, we have always heard of your persuasive tongue, and that you have even been able to humbug Earl Beaconsfield;" "Sir Charles, your opponents credit you with having a very vivid imagination; we cannot accept your estimate at present; look at what Mr. Blake and Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Charlton have said on the subject of the value of the lands." The consequence would be that the Company would ask less land and more money, to insure themselves against any loss from the sale of lands set upon them sale of lands of the modest value tormerly set upon them by the Opposition, and Ministers would be obliged to come to such terms as they believed it was in the interest of the country to accede to. I hold, and shall continue to hold hon, gentlemen opposite responsible for any unfavorable terms, restrictions or minor grievances in connection with this contract. Had they been patriotic men and joined hands with the Minister of Railways and said, "We bolieve your views are correct and that the lands are worth what you have claimed," I honestly believe that for half the money and very little more land we could have got the railway, and possibly those restrictions now complained of by hon, gentlemen opposite would never have existed. When they gave rein to their imagination to make political capital and cried down the value of cur lands and resources, they little thought of the damage they were inflicting upon their country. If they consider the people are idiots or dolts in judging of their conduct and pretensions, they are very much mistaken. There is a degree of intelligence and an amount of general reading now throughout the Provinces which will enable the people to mete out to the hon. gentlemen opposite a fitting doom for their conduct. The hon, member for North Norfolk dares to get up in this House and threaten the right hon. leader of the Government with the consequences to him in the future. That hon, gentleman, in common with other leading gentlemen on that side of the House, are the persons who are responsible if the terms of the contract have not been more favorin money as the road progresses, making in all $53,000,000. In able to Canada. Those hou gentlemen seem to have ignored the expense in connection with the equipment and They ignored the estimate running of the Froad, placed upon it by the leader of the Opposition last Session when he said the running of this road when completed would cost $6,750,000. Now, I think we are justified in saying that we have saved to the people on this point an average of $7,000,000 a year, and what will that amount to capitalized. The hon, gentlemen are fond of calculations and percentages; I have given them some to take home with them and sleep upon to-night. There is one point upon which both sides of this House have been over-sanguine in the past, and that is in connection with populating the North-West. I have not hitherto been very sarguine as to its specdily becoming populated. I think the immigration policy of the Government of this country, no matter which party was in power, has never been a great success. The men employed as agents have generally been political hacks on both sides, and have not done much more than draw their salaries. We have to contend with the fact that we are living under a monarchical form of Government, and that people leaving Europe for America prefer to go to the United States, of which they have heard so much more than of Canada, and whose form of Government offers a stronger contrast to those rigorous Governments they leave behind them. Again, the railway policy of the United States has offered great inducements to immigrants. I think the hon, member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) said last year that they had given away 180,000,000 of acres of land. The companies who owned these lands were all emigration agents of the best class. I therefore believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate will be the best immigration agent we ever had in inducing emigrants to come to this country. And if we do not receive $1 of money from the lands of the North-West to pay for this road, the immigration will be of such an extensive character that the revenue derived from the additional population will pay off all the debt that may be incurred. I have noticed in this discussion numerous slurs cast upon the Minister of Railways by hon. members opposite. For months past that hon, gentleman has been the object of the calumny and slander of the Opposition press. He has been the object of the vile slanders and viler inuendoes which have received the tacit approval of the hon. leader of the Opposition. The hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright), the Cassandra of that party in this House, the other night was guilty of language towards the hon. Minister of Railways which I considered was quite unbecoming from one gentleman to another. He received a merited rebuke from this side; but not one word of remonstrance from his colleagues who sat beside him. I think the hon. Minister of Railways has been a shining mark for the shafts and arrows of his opponents. When I contrast his career with that of those who have assailed him, it strikes me that he is very much their superior. One of the hon, gentlemen who assailed him is the inheritor of a respected name and a professional standing, he might in fact be styled a ward of chancery, who has had all things made easy to him. The other has wealth and position, for which he never toiled. I do not say he could not have acquired them, but as a matter of fact he never did. He also had a herditary claim to an important consti-tuency in this country which he betrayed and which has rejected him. These hon, gentlemen have had advantages which the hon, member for Cumberland (Sir Charles Tupper) never possessed. Life has been to him a much more arduous career than to either of the hon. gentlemen opposite, these amateur Radicals and aristocratic demagogues, Arcades ambo, who are clamoring over the profits of the Syndicate. In my opinion, Sir,-

"The very best thing that the market holds forth,
As a fat speculation for lovers of pelf;
Is to buy them both up at the price they are worth,
And sell each at the price which he puts on himself."

As regards the hon, member for Cumberland, when in calmer hours the history of this railway scheme is onsidered, and when the people come to appreciate the great part he has taken in carrying forward this enterprise in the interest of this country, I am satisfied his services will be valued at their true worth, although they can never be adequately rewarded, and that in connection with them we may indeed apply to the hon, the Minister of Railways the language of the English poet laureate, and illustrate his career by the career of one of whom the laurente sings:

"Who breaks his birth's invidious bar, And grasps the skirts of happy chance, And breasts the blows of circumstance, And grapples with his evil star;

Who makes by force his merit known And lives to clutch the golden keys, To mould a mighty State's decrees, And shape the whisper of the throne;

And moving up from high to higher, lecomes on Fortune's crowning slope The pillar of the people's hope, The centre of the land's desire."

I think that that will be considered a much more fitting tribute to the merit of the hon. member for Cumberland than any which has been bestowed upon him by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon, member for North Norfolk on one or two occasions attempted to cast reflection on the fame of the right hon, the leader of the Government in connection with the passage of this measure. I take issue with the hon, gentleman on this subject. I consider that the people of this country will appreciate the crowning work of the right hon. gentleman's life to be that he has at last accomplished this great scheme, the construction of this great trans-continental railway, that he has been successful in doing what hon. gentlemen opposite utterly failed to do; that he has succeeded in opening up the North-West and giving us an opportunity of adding untold millions to our population. Now, while in other countries we have seen "The Man on Horseback and the Man of Blood and Iron," consolidating empires and enlarging territories, we have in this country during the many years the right hon, gentleman presided over her destinies, not seen one drop of blood shed in promoting her prosperity and adding to her territory. He has continuously promoted the development of this country from the time he took hold of the old Province of Canada when he found it distracted by sectional and religious discord, down to the present day, when he has succeeded in laying the great scheme before this House, which I am sure will meet with the approbation of the country at large. During the whole of his career be can boast what no other statesman in any civilized country can boast—that it has been marked by the absence of bloodshed, by the absence of military rule, and by the peaceful development of the country over which he has presided. Hon, gentlemen opposite generally address an appeal to hon, members on this side before taking their seat, requesting them to think of the interest of the country, to weigh well the course we are pursuing, and to remember this is a matter in which members would be justified in casting aside their party allegiance and voting according to their convictions, Now, I appeal to hon gentlemen opposite, who have followed their leaders blindly through their various policies, not to allow themselves to be driven like cattle, but to act like freemen. Sir, I would fain hope that better counsels would prevail among hon, gentlemen opposite, that in their lucid intervals, for even they, I trust, have fucid intervals, they may recognize the fact that the manufacture of political dynamite is a dangerous amusement, which is apt to prove injurious to those indulging in it. And if they really desire the prosperity of the country, that this end is to be attained not by belittling this and lauding other countries at its expense, but rather by patriotically joining to promote our common interests, and so make this Dominion what it is destined to become, even in spite of them, the great Northern Empire of the new world.

Mr. RINFRET. I cannot allow the discussion that is now going on upon the question of the Pacific Railway to pass without offering a few remarks. At this advanced stage of the debate, when the principal speakers have been heard, when the subject is, so to speak, exhausted, I do not intend to occupy at any great length the attention of this honorable House. This is not the first time, Mr. Chairman, that it is House. This is not the first time, Mr. Chairman, that it is proposed to build the Pacific Railway by means of a Syndicate. Already, in 1871, it was decided that this road should be constructed by grants of land and a monied subsidy. In 1874, when the hon member for Lambton occupied the position of Prime Minister, he followed out, on this point, the policy of his predecessor, and he offered to subsidize any company that would undertake the work. Both the political parties that divide this honorable House have therefore concurred in the same opinion with regard to this important question; and, if I, to-day, oppose the policy of hon. Ministers, it is not because the construction of the Pacific Railway has been entrusted to a Syndicate, but because the contract that the members of the Syndicate seems to have the adoption of this contract would impose burdens upon us entirely incommensurate with the resources of the country. I think, Mr. Chairman, that we would find in this honorable House but few members disposed to accept without murmuring and without restrictions, the conditions that are offered us by the Syndicate; and apprehension on this subject has become so general and so important, that the hon the Minister of Public Works saw fit to plead attenuating circumstances. In fact, he submitted the contract to this honorable House, not as a bargain concluded between two unfettered parties, but rather as a bargain forged upon us by a concourse of circumstances that the Government were unable to control. He spoke, among other things, of the engagements that we have entered into with British Columbia. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that no member of this honorable House will question the obligations that we entered into with British Columbia. When Brittsh Columbia consented to become a part of the Confederation, she laid down as a to become a part of the Confederation, she laid down as a first condition the building of the Pacific Railway. This condition was accepted. But then, as well as now, there were apprehensions with regard to this gigantic undertaking. In order to reassure his followers, perhaps I should rather say, in order that the vote should be favorable to the Government, Sir George E. Cartier was obliged at the same time to have another resolution passed by the Parliament of Canada, promising that the burdens of the country should not be increased for the construction of the Pacific Railway. Thus we have contracted at the same time two distinct obligations; the first, towards British Columbia, to build the Pacific Railway, and the other, towards the Dominion of Canada, not to increase the burden of taxation. These two obligations have been endorsed by all the governments that have succeeded one another since 1871. The hon. member for Lambton recognized the obligations of the Government towards British Columbia, but, on the other hand, he several times had resolutions passed in the House, reaffirming our obligations towards the Dominion not to increase the burden of taxation. At each Session of the present Parliament the hon. Minister of Railways has always endeavored to show that while fulfilling our obligations towards British Columbia he would not increase the public burdens. As is well known, he contended in each of his speeches on this subject that the sale of land in the North-Mr. Patterson (Essex).2

contracting for the building of the Pacific Railway. I beg leave to differ entirely with the hon. Minister on this point, and I think that I can prove, by the estimates made up to this time, that the sale of these lands will not extinguish this debt, but, on the contrary, that it will not be sufficient to pay the interest thereon, so that if we rely only on the sale of the lands in the North-West, the debt contracted for the carrying out of this great undertaking will but increase from year to year. The hon. Minister of Railways has put at $28,000,000 the expenses incurred up to date on the Pacific Railway; he includes in this sum not only the expenses actually incurred on the finished sections, but also on the sections now under contract. If we add to this sum the $25,000,000 granted to the Syndicate, we will have a sum of $53,000,000. To that must be added an expenditure of about $4,000,000 for telegraph lines, surveying, subsidy to the Canada Central, and diverse items about $7,000,000, making a total of about $60,000,000. These sixty millions of dollars will cost yearly, for interest with expenses of administration, about $3,000,000. Let us now see, Mr. Chairman, whether the sale of the lands will be sufficient to extinguish this debt or even to pay the interest thereon. Different estimations of the value of the lands in the North-West have been made. According to the regulations of the Crown Lands Department, brought down last Session, railway lands were valued at an average price of $3.18 per acre, and the lands set apart forced upon the Government contains provisions that ought for pre-emptions and homesteads, at an average price of not to be ratified by the Parliament of Canada; it is because $1.12. These valuations have been entirely changed this year by the hon. Minister of Railways. It being necessary to prove to this House that he was only giving for the building of the road $78,000,000, the hon. Minister was obliged, in order to balance the account, to value the lands granted to the Syndicate at $1 only. According to this valuation, the value of the lands reserved for pre-emptions and homesteads would only be, if the scale established by the Crown Lands Department is observed, 43 cents per acre, or about a third of the value of the railway lands. I do not pretend to say that this is a correct valuation. I will not even take it as a basis for my argument, as I consider it as ridiculously low. The hon, the Railway Minister, in the great speech he made last April before this House, calculated that in ten years we would have a very large immigration in the North-West; he estimated it at over half a million. He was of opinion that these immigrants would purchase twenty-one millions of acres of land. I believe that it has been shown beyond a doubt that these estimates were much too high, and that we could only count upon a much smaller number of immigrants. However, I am willing to suppose for a moment that this estimate is correct, and that twentyone millions of acres of land actually will be sold in the North-West. The lands that will necessarily be the most readily sold, and which will probably be sold the first, will be the lands nearest the railway, the railway lands granted to the Syndicate, and the Crown lands divided into homesteads and pre-emptions, and placed in alternate lots with the lands of the Syndicate. 10,500,000 acres of lands of the Syndicate will be sold, and 10,500,000 acres of the Crown lands divided into homesteads and pre-emptions. This enormous quantity of land, occupying an area larger than all the lands granted in Ontario, would only give the Crown, according to the estimate of $1.00 an acre made by the hon, the Minister of Railways for the lands of the Syndicate, about 43 cents an acre, or in all, during the whole ten years, only about four and a quarter millions. But I said just now, Mr. Chairman, that I would not take this estimate as the basis of my argument, because I consider it ridiculously low. I will take the estimate of the Department of the Interior, which gives an average value of $1.12 to the Crown lands set apart for pre-emptions and homesteads, and I arrive at the sum of about $12,000,000 that we will derive in ten years' speeches on this subject that the sale of land in the North-time from all the sales of our lands in the North-West. West would more than pay the enormous debt that we were The interest on $60,000,000 during the same period of ten years, with the costs of administration, would amount to between $25,000,000 and $30,000,000. If we rely only upon the sale of lands in the North-West to pay this sum, we will have a deficit of not less than $15,000,000, so that the public debt, far from decreasing will, on the contrary, amount, at the end of these ten years, to seventy-five or eighty millions of dollars; in twenty years it will amount to ninety or one hundred millions of dollars, or $25 per head of the population, or about $200 per family. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the Parliament of Canada is iustifiable, in view of the promises made to the country in 1871, and renewed since then several times, in imposing such an enormous debt on the country, and so incommensurate with our resources. It has been maintained that the North-West would help us, later on, to pay these taxes that we are imposing upon ourselves for the settlement of this vast territory. I very much fear, Mr. Chairman, that, for many years to come, the organization of these new territories, and the cost of general administration of the cost of general administration. tion, will be greater than the revenue that we will be able to derive from them, and that for a long time we will not be able to rely upon them for help in the payment of the enormous debt that we are contracting for the construction of the Pacific Railway. I am of the opinion that the Government would have acted patriotically, and that they would have been entitled to the gratitude of the peo-ple if, during the last Session, they had allayed the fears of their own followers, by adopting the suggestions of the hon, member for West Durham. I believe that it would have been good policy to construct the Pacific Railway gradually, and only as far as the North-West would be settled; to have built it only in as much as the sale of the lands would have furnished us with the means of paying the costs of this unhappy undertaking. By the gradual construction of the road, we would have an ac-cumulation of interest for sections of the road that are not of immediate use in the general interest of the country. I voted against the immediate construction of the western section, because I did not believe in its immediate utility. I do not think that the general interests of the country require the building of that section before the North-West is settled. I voted against the immediate construction of that section because we cannot construct it without greatly increasing the burdens of the country. I do not intend to revert to this subject, which was discussed last Session; but I deem it my duty to oppose the eastern section of the road, or the section to the north of Lake Superior, for the same reasons that justified my vote of last Session on the British Columbia section. I, therefore, oppose the immediate construction of the Lake Superior section, because it will entail a large expenditure of money in a country that is not fit for settlement, and because it is not at all required in the general interests of the country. I think that the Government would adopt a better policy were they to subsidize a company for the completion of a branch to Sault Ste. Marie, and put off indefinitely the building of the eastern section of the Pacific Railway. The Sault Ste. Marie Branch would place us in direct communication with the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railway by the lines now in course of construction between Duluth and Sault Ste. Marie, and in direct communication with Winnipeg by the lines now existing between the latter city and Duluth. We have for a number of years, incurred great costs for the construction of canals, in order to put the cities of Canada in communication commercially with the fertile Western States. Today, thanks to the railway to the south of Lako Superior, we would only have to build a few miles of railway, spend two or three millions of dollars, in order to procure, without restriction and without any forcible competition, the trade of a million and a half of souls, occupying one of the most fertile regions of the world. Our unhappy Province of Quebec has been for several years in an alarming financial the uselessness of the eastern section of the Pacific Railway position; we have each year deficits of several hundred thousand dollars. I am of opinion, Mr. Chairman, that our only hope of wiping out these deficits rosts on the revenues of our provincial railway, the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental. The Government can, at a trifling expense, procure for our road, in two or three years from now, a large trade that would give us thousands of dollars, and would help us to pay the debts of our Province, contributing much, at the same time, towards the commercial prosperity of our cities. But it has been stated that the Sault Ste. Marie Branch would be built by the very force of circumstances, and that what we required just now was the section to the north of Lake Superior, in order to procure an outlet for the products of the North-West, and in order that these products should pass through Canada, and not through the States. Mr. Chairman, if the Sault Branch is built, there will be no necessity for building the eastern section of the Pacific Railway, because this section will be entirely useless. As for the trade of the North-West, there is but one point by which it will be able to pass, in a few years hence, and that is Montreal. From what I have said it will be seen that there are three outlets for the North-West, the eastern section of the Pacific Railway, the navigation of Lake Superior, and an uninterrupted line of railway on the south shore of Lake Superior. The products of the North-West will go from Winnipeg by the Pembina Branch to Emerson; will be carried from there to Duluth by the St. Paul and Manitoba and the Northern Pacific, from Duluth to Sault Ste. Marie by railway actually in course of construction between these two points. The distance from Winnipeg to Montreal by these two lines is exactly the same, there being a difference of only 13 miles. The route by navigation on Lake Superior is some hundred miles shorter. The outlet by either of these is several hundred miles shorter than any route by American territory to Boston or New York. The lines to the south of Lake Superior have, over the eastern section of the Pacific, the advantage of being first-class, while the latter is to be, according to the very terms of the contruct, a third-class road. The line to the south of Lake Superior will be much easier to work in winter. To be convinced of that it is only necessary to remember that the line to the north of Lake Superior is two degrees further north than Quebec. Having, moreover, the advantage of passing through the inhabited country, and of having the trade of the most fertile Western States, the South Shore road will have a great quantity of freight, and will be able, for all these reasons, to carry produce and the different articles of commerce at much lower rates. It is quite certain that the castern section will not be able to support this competition. The policy of the Government would be difficult to explain if the hon. Minister of Public Works had not given us the great reason which ranks before all others, and which is a mere sentimental one. The hon. Minister, in a burst of eloquence, stated to this honorable House a few days ago, that: "What we require is an all Canadian railway, passing through Canadian territory." Patriotism has always a place in the affairs of this world, and I cannot refrain from congratulating the hon. Minister upon having retained at his age so much enthusiasm. I would, however, point out to him that commerce knows no nationality. Trade, which has not the patriotism of the hon. Minister, will probably follow the most advantageous route, and this route is unquestionably the Canadian line to the south of Lake Superior and the Sault Ste. Marie Branch. Thus, Mr. Chairman, the prosperity of our Canadian railway, the prosperity of our cities, the general interests of our trade, everything imposes upon the Government the obligation of constructing the Sault Branch. On the other hand, the bad state of our finances, the enormous debt that at the present time weighs upon the people of Canada, and, I might add, until there is a population of a million or two millions between Fort William and Selkirk, all these considerations impose upon the Government the stern duty of delaying the construction of the eastern section of the Pacific Railway. I will not take up the time of the House with the clauses of the contract that have been discussed at length by other hon, members. I will only say that there are some little short clauses of only a few lines that contain millions. The exemption from duty on all materials entering into the construction of the road, has been estimated at some ten millions. The exemption of the Syndicate's lands from all taxation, whether municipal, school, federal or local, can be estimated at half a million a year, making for twenty years some ten millions of dollars in all about twenty millions of dollars that take up but little space in the contract. But there is another clause of great importance, inasmuch as it tends to establish in the North-West a social state of things that has been condemned, in former times, not only by the Liberal party, but also by the Conservative party in this country. The granting of lands to the Syndicate, without any reserve or restriction, will most assuredly establish in the North-West the rule of great landed proprietors. The veterans of our politics, who fought for years for the abolition of the tenure seigneuriale will regret the position in which the Government places the inhabitants of the North-West. Since the abolition of the tenure seigneuriale the Conservative party has always contended with the Liberal party, in the press and on the hustings, for the honor of having delivered the people of the Province of Quebec from this last vestige of feudality. I am surprised to see the same party, the same men who disputed us this honor, entirely abdicate, on this point, the principles they then professed. I am astonished to see them establishing among the settlers of the North-West, who will be British subjects like us, and our fellow-countrymen, a social state of things condemned formerly in Lower Canada by the whole population, without regard to political parties. I am, therefore, opposed to the present contract because it tends to establish in the great North-West of Canada a state of society no wise in harmony with the principles heretofore professed not only by the Liberal party, but also the Conservative party of Canada. I regret that the Government does not yield to public opinion which demands the construction of the Sault Branch as being the means of considerably increasing the prosperity of the country. I am opposed to the Government's contract with the Syndicate because, besides the land grants, it imposes on the country a debt of six y millions of dollars which will not be extinguished by the sale of the lands of the North West, but which, on the contrary, will go on increasing. I think that it is imprudent to impose this new burden on a poor country like ours, whose indebtedness already amounts to over forty dollars per head. I believe that our resources are not sufficient to meet this great increase in the public expenditure. For a great number of years we have had continuous deficits, the deficit of the last fiscal year amounting to $2,000,000. Some of the hon, members on the other side of the House have announced a surplus for the current year. This is good news; but should we rejoice over it when we reflect that this surplus has only been obtained by imposing enormous taxes on the first necessaries of life, on flour, coal, coal oil, which are articles that the farmer and the mechanic must necessarily purchase. These taxes increase the price of living for each farmer's family from $20 to $25 a year. Should we rejoice when these too heavy burdens are driving our fellow-countrymen out of the country; when we see passing before us, like a funeral procession, thousands of families which flock to the American manufactories, there hope for surpluses, so much the better. But do not let us make an abuse of them in order to bury millions of money the 10th of May, 1879:

in the mountains of British Columbia, in the deserts that border Lake Superior. If we have surpluses let us profit by them in order to lighten the burdens of the people. Let us pay our debts, let us out down the taxes, and we will succeed, perhaps, by a wise economy of the public monies, in retaining in the country some of our brethren and friends who are now leaving us.

Mr. GIGAULT. The Committee will allow me to say a few words in answer to the speech of the hon. member for Lotbinière. The principal objections urged by that hon, gentleman against the present contract are that the Sault Ste. Marie's route should have been chosen, and that the resources of the country do not warrant the immediate construction of the Pacific Railway. I beg leave to remind him of the words uttered last Session by the hon, member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain), one of the principal members of the Liberal party in the Province of Quebec, and I might say, one of the leaders of that party. This hon member, speaking of the Sault Ste. Marie, on the 10th May, 1880, made use of the following language:-

"In winter as well as in summer you will have to take the shortest cut, and go by the American railways to Ste. Marie, your railway to that point will be stopped all along the route, the through freight being next to nothing."

As it will have been observed, this hon. member maintained that the through freight would be next to nothing if this route was adopted. Nevertheless, the member for Lotbinière has just pronounced himself in favor of this route, whereas the member for L'Islet maintained, last year, that this would be the means of preventing trade from taking the direction of the Province of Quebec and the other Provinces. That is the extent to which our Liberal representatives are mindful of our interests. This inconsistency does not surprise me in the least. We are accustomed to such inconsistency on the part of Liberal members. More than that, in a manifesto that the member for L'Islet has just addressed to the free and independent electors of his county, he expressly declares himself in favor of the Sault Ste. Marie route. If these electors read the speech made during the last Session by their representative against this same route, they will discover that he entertains rather confused ideas upon the question of the Pacific Railway. The member for North Norfolk (Mr. (harlton) in the course of the speech that he made a few minutes ago, said that he would have been happy to support the Government scheme if it had been favorable to the country; he was prepared, he said, to lay aside party spirit in order to serve the interests of the country; but by making such a desperate onslaught upon the present contract as well as upon the National Policy, the Liberals are working against the interests of their own party and against the interests of the country, and they are making theinselves more and more unpopular. The byelections that we have had show that the people are quito satisfied with the present policy, and that the Opposition by continuing to attack the wholly national and practical measures of the present Government, only increase their unpopularity among the people of Canada. The member for Lotbinière believes that the sale of Crown lands will not meet the cost of construction of the Pacific Railway. In expressing this opinion, he is far from agreeing in the statements made by the member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and several other leading members of the Liberal party. Did not the member for West Durham maintain that our public lands were worth more than four dollars an acre, which would give an immense value to the 100,000,000 of acres of land that the Government has set apart for the construction of the Pacific Railway. Speaking of the scheme of the to lose their health and sometimes their life? If we can Government, and of the efforts he had made to build this road, the member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) said, on

"We signally failed in obtaining one single offer (there was one imperfect offer made) for the construction on those terms, which were the grant of 20,000 acres and $10,000 cash per mile. with a guarantee of 4 per cent. upon such balance as might be represented as necessary.

"No terms—could be more explicit; it would be difficult to mention terms more favorable, and yet the hon. gentleman seems to expect. by his speech, that the colonization scheme, with the 100,000,000 of acres instead of the $0,000,000 of acres and $30,000,000 current money, is somehow or other to succeed in getting this road built."

It will be seen that the hon. member for Lambton maintained that 100,000,000 of acres would not be sufficient to insure the building of the Pacific Railway, and we give a great deal less by the resolutions that are now under consideration. The Syndicate will only receive 25,000,000 acres of land, which, deducted from the 100,000,000 acres set apart for the construction of this road, leave in the hands of Government 75,000,000 acres of land, and these lands, at the rate of $1 an acre, according to the estimate put upon them by the hon, leader of the Opposition, will give the Federal Government $300,000,000, an amount sufficient to build the Pacific Railway and to pay the whole public debt besides. In view of these figures, based upon the calculations of his leaders, how can the member for Lotbinière pretend that the resources of Canada do not warrant the building of our great railway? And it must not be forgetten that an increase in the population of the North-West will give an increase in the revenues derived from customs and excise duties. We are able to say that the debate on the contract now submitted has had at least the advantage of making the Liberal party speak favorably of their own country. last year, the Opposition were ceaseless in their disparagement of Canada and of our credit. They always maintained that our public lands were worth nothing, and that the construction of the Pacific Railway would be the ruin of the country. They even went so far as to say that the keeping up and working of the road would bring us to bankruptcy. If the members of the Opposition wanted to be consistent they would rejoice at seeing a company undertake, not only the building, but also the working of this road. The hon, member for L'Islet should remember that in a speech that he made last year, after having estimated the annual cost of the working of this road at $8,000,000, he added:

"I will assume the largest possible return from its working and yet predict that the Dominion will not be able to maintain it.'

Should not this hon, member, as well as those who applauded him, be the first to congratulate hon. Ministers on having brought down a measure that is going to relieve Canada of the ruinous burthen of making this road? In his eagerness to criticize, the hon. member for L'Islet is disposed to take a different position from that which he took last year. After having predicted that the country would be ruined by the mere working of the road, he now comes and endeavors to make this House and the public believe that the working of this same road will make millionaires of the members of the Syndicate. Did you ever see such flagrant contradiction in so short a space of time? Are we going to deal with this question like children or like serious statesmen having at heart the interests of their country? Let us suppose for a moment that the conditions of the contract are not as favorable as they might have been. Upon whose shoulders are we to throw the responsibility of it? Is it not the fault of those men who have always maintained that our public lands were worthless? Is it not the fault of the men who declared that the working of this road would be the ruin of Canada? In view of such statements made by Canadian members of Parliament, who are supposed to be familiar with the country and our resources, who are supposed to know what the traffic would likely be, it was quite natural for the members of the Syndicate to exact conditions which, in their opinion, would secure them against the bankruptcy foretold by the that our finances will warrant, and which can contribute Opposition. However, I maintain that the terms and contribute towards giving us easy, rapid, and economical means of ditions of the contract are quite acceptable, and even more advantageous than any that the member for Lambton ever thought of obtaining. In order to arrive at that conclusion, we have only to read the speech made by that hon. member, and to which I have alfuded a few moments ago. When we see the hon, member for West Durham get up and say that we have 250,000,000 acres of arable land in the North-West, and when he values our lands in that belt at $4 per acre, we must admit that Canada occupies a very enviable position, and that we are prepared to meet the expenses required for the building of the Pacific Railway. One of the principal objections raised by the Liberal party against the National Policy, when it was adopted, was that our population was not numerous enough to furnish a market for the products of our manufactories. It was asked: "Of what use is it to create a national industry when such a limited number of consumers? we have What will be the result of the policy carried out by the present Government? Will not it have for result the settlement of the North-West and a considerable increase in our population? Will not a large population in the North-West give a new impulse to our credit and to our industries, and will it not create a good home market for the products of our eastern manufactories? This state of things will help to do away with one of the principal objections urged by the Liberals against the Government's fiscal policy, and they ought to rejoice, even had we not entered into an agreement with British Columbia to build the Pacific Railway, our own interests would induce us to build this road, in order to increase our private and public resources. In his manifesto, the member for L'Islet states also that he opposes the present contract:

"Because all the Parliaments elected since Confederation have affirmed in principle that the Pacific Railway should be constructed only inas much as it would not impose additional burdens on the people."

Which political party first imposed new burdens on the people, in order to be able to carry on the construction of the Pacific Railway? Read the correspondence exchanged between the Canadian Government and the British Government, and you will see that the Mackenzie administration declared that they had imposed $2,000,000 of additional taxation, in order to succeed in building this road. And yet they come and tell us now that this undertaking must not be carried out, because in order to do so it would be necessary to impose new burdens on the people. Moreover, the Government scheme will not render any new taxation necessary, and puts us in a far better position than if the Government were obliged to build and work the road themselves. When we look at all these contradictions of the members of the Opposition, we cannot recover from our astonishment, and, at the same time, we see that we ought not to be surprised at the present want of popularity of the Liberal party among the electors of Canada. The electors give their confidence to serious men who have a fixed policy, and when we see the leaders of the Liberal party change their minds, and change their principles from one year to another, without having any fixed policy on the most important public questions, it is quite natural that the electors should have confidence in such a party. For my part, although I represent a county that has always been considered as a Liberal stronghold, I deem it my duty to support the contract that is now submitted, and in so doing I think that I will not only be serving the interests of my constituents, but also the interests of the whole country. I am convinced of the usefulness of railways as a means of communication, and seeing that Canada is a young country whose resources require to be developed, and being persuaded that means of communication are absolutely necessary for the development of the natural resources of the country, I am in favor of any measure communication. I am in favor of the construction of the Pacific Railway, because I expect from it the most satisfactory results. I consider the fiscal and railway policy of the Government quite acceptable. The fiscal policy and the railway policy complete one another. As I said just now, one of the principal objections urged against the National Policy was, that our population was not dense enough; but by favoring the settlement of the North-West, through the construction of this road, we will succeed in obtaining a larger population. There will be greater demand for the products of our industrial establishments, trade will be brisker, and prosperity will go on increasing in our young and well-beloved country.

M. LONGLEY moved the adjournment of the debate.

The Committee rose and reported.

House resumed; and (at 12.05 o'clock, a.m.,) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 10th January, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 13) to incorporate the South Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Schultz.

Bill (No. 15) to incorporate the Metropolitan Fire Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Beaty.

Bill (No. 16) to explain and amend the Act to authorise the transfer of the Windsor Branch of the Nova Scotia Railway to the Western Counties Railway Company.—Mr. Cameron (N. Victoria).

THE ONDERDONK CONTRACT.

Mr. Decosmos enquired, What is the estimated value of the work performed under the railway contract with A. Onderdonk or assigns on the Canadian Pacific Railway, between Emory and Savona Ferry, Kamloops Lake, up to or about December 1st, 1880; and what is the amount of money that was paid to A. Onderdonk or assigns, on account of said work, up to and since December 1st, 1880?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The estimated value of the work performed up to December 31st, 1880, is $408,506; the amount paid is that amount less 10 per cent. retained as drawback.

SUPPLEMENTARY CONTRACTS ON THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether any arrangement has been made between the Syndicate and the Government for the making of any further or supplementary contract in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway; and if so, when the same will be laid on the Table?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No arrangement has been made between the Syndicate and the Government for the making of any further or supplementary contract in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

INTRODUCTION OF PUBLIC BILLS.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, effected, I understood that it was in contem-I desire to make an observation. I understood that the plation to go on adding Province after Province variation in our practice which was agreed to by general until the whole of British North America was united in Mr. GIGAULT.

consent last Session, namely, that Public Bills should be placed on the paper as a separate order, was not to interfere with the rights of members as to the period of the introduction of Public Bills. It was thought that, for the general convenience, it would be better that they should be placed on the paper so that we should know when notice was given, and when they were to come on. Always heretofore, they had come on as part of the motions, and therefore as routine; and I did not understand that by making them a separate line, we were taking them below routine. It seems that that was not a result to change which hon, gentlemen who consented to the new arrangement, contemplated in so concenting, and I submit to the hon, gentleman whether I am correct or not in my interpretation. It would be very inconvenient to the public business that there should be no introduction of Public Bills pending this general order, and as they usually involve no explanation at all, except a very brief one, they might very well be included as part of the routine proceedings.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If that were done, the result would be, or might be, that we would not be able to carry out the Order of the House which was made the other day—that immediately after routine, Government Orders should be brought on. The introduction of every bill, as I understand it, must be on two days' notice, and, therefore, formal introduction of bills, if it is insisted upon, must be brought up on notice of motion, though it is not insisted on. When I made the motion the other day, it was for the express purpose, as the House must have understood, of preventing any possibility of discussion after routine until this matter was disposed of. I think my hon. friend suggested that we might allow questions to be put, but that was the only thing that was to intervene before the discussion of the contract.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not make the suggestion as to bills for the reason I have stated. I think the hon, gentleman is incorrect in speaking of the introduction of bills as a matter coming under Notices of Motion. It always has come under motions, and the only change we made last Session was to give it a place on the paper, indicating, as I understood, when motions of that kind should be made. That was only done last Session, and it still, it seems to me, forms part of routine.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

House again resolved itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions for granting and appropriating twenty-five millions of dollars and twenty-five millions of acres of land in the North-West Territories, according to the terms of the contract relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway transmitted to this House by His Excellency the Governor General by his Message dated December 10th.

Mr. LONGLEY. The resolutions before the House have already been so extensively discussed that there seems to be little necessity for any additional remarks. But as it seems to be an understood thing that this discussion should be continued for some time longer, I propose to exercise my privilege as a member of this House by making a few observations. I do not for a moment flatter myself that I shall be able to cast any additional light on this subject. It seems to me that enough has been said already to fully satisfy every unprejudiced mind, that the proposal before the House is such as should receive the hearty adoption of this Parliament. When the union of the four Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotis was effected, I understood that it was in contamplation to go on adding Province after Province until the whole of British North America was united in one grand Union. In fulfilment of that purpose, shortly after the completion of the smaller union, the whole of Rupert's Land was purchased at a very considerable price-a price a good deal above what many hon. gentlemen in this House have been recently willing to acknowledge that it was worth, but not so low by any means in the estimation of those who but not so low by any means in the estimation of those who took part in framing the union. Still, it was very important to acquire that vast territory. It was important in regard to the extension of our domain. It was more important in view of the fact that we then held in our hands a pledge for the ultimate liquidation of the debt that we had to incur in the way of binding by iron bands the whole of these Provinces together. It is now about ten years since resolutions were introduced into Parliament, having for their object the incorporation of British Columbia into the then existing Union, and coupled with these was another proposition that a railway should be constructed from Lake Nipissing to the shores of the Pacific Ocean. In view of the condition of the country ten years ago, that seemed to be an undertaking calculated to intimidate even those who had the matter in hand. But it would, in my opinion, have been an unimportant object to unite but four Provinces of British North America together unless we anticipated, at no distant day, binding them all together. An indispensable condition of the smaller union was the construction of the Intercolonial Railway. It were vain to unite four Provinces, spread over a very large extent of territory, without providing the means of inter-communication. From the inception, therefore, of the Pacific Railway undertaking, I was in favor of the incorporation of British Columbia into the Union and the construction of the Pacific Railway, great and arduous as was the undertaking; and, to-day, as we stand more directly face to face with the completion of this vast undertaking than ever before, I would venture the opinion, that since the estimate given by the hon. Minister of Railways last Session, had we not a better scheme, we could afford to go on and complete the work as a Government measure. But in the course of events we have been fortunate enough to have received the proposal to the consideration of which we are to address ourselves today in a candid, fair and statesmanlike manner. It is not my purpose to venture many criticisms upon the remarks that have been made in opposition to the present scheme. But I may be permitted to say that I have been perfectly amazed that gentlemen, who must understand this question far better than I do, should have been guilty of so much miscalculation and misrepresentation. First, it was said that there might be exemption of these lands for ever from taxation; then it was said that all the material required in the construction of this railway was to be admitted free; and there were ten, or a dozen, or twenty other statements made which had no foundation in fact. It seems to me that we could scarcely have a better criterion for judging of the grounds of objection to this contract than the necessity of using all these misstatements. Now, I think the main question for us to consider is this: Is the present proposal more advantageous, in a purely financial aspect, than any previous proposal? Most assuredly it is. We know how many different estimates we have had of the cost of this undertaking, and we know what the present propositions involve in the way of cost. Now let me compare them. Almost every member in this House will recollect that the first estimate of the cost of the Pacific Railway was $105,000,000. That estimate was made a little ahead of the Bill of 1873, and that, I presume, was largely, if not wholly, based upon the estimate to which I refer. Under the scheme of 1873, the cost of construction of the Pacific Railway was, in round numbers, to be $85,000,000. Under the Bill of 1874, we were to give a cash subsidy of $48,947,000;

a land subsidy of $55,940,000, making a total of $104,887,000. As I before stated, it seemed to me then, as a member of this Legislature, and one who had thought a little about the matter, that if there were no better scheme we could venture to go on and complete the railway as a Government undertaking. But now we have a better scheme submitted for our consideration; and I say without heritation that, according to the best judgment I have been able to form upon it, it is a better scheme by millions of dollars. cost under the present scheme is $78,000,000. Now, let us institute a comparison. The present scheme is $27,000,000 less than the first estimate, and it is $7,000,000 in round numbers less than the estimated cost in 1873. It is $27,000,000 under the cost of 1874, had the Bill then passed by Parliament gone into operation, or had any one been found willing to undertake the task of building the road. It is even $7,000,000 less than the estimate which the hon. Minister of Railways submitted to us last winter. Let us take the average of these four proposals or estimates, and we shall find that there will be an average saving, taking the whole schemes together, of $17,000,000. But we are told that we are now setting far too low a value on the land, and hence arises the difficulty of calculating the advantages of the present scheme. It is wonderful how lands in the North-West Territories have risen in value in the short space of a single year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Eight months.

Mr. LONGLEY. It is not even three months since you might have found a score of the men who are to-day calculating those lands as worth $3.18 per acre who would have denied that, for any practical purpose, they were worth $1 per acre. Now, let me read the opinion of the then leader of the Opposition in 1879. It has been read a great many times before, but it seems to be necessary to repeat it, and, if possible, rub it in:

"We have found it very difficult indeed in Canada to promote settlement, even when the lands were given away by the Government. It is still more difficult to send settlers to the far-off western territory where they have not only the difficulties of a new country, not less in amount though different in degree, than the settlers of our own wooded districts. They have a long winter, absence of lumber and building material, and difficulties of transportation. We must, therefore, make up our minds that if we are to settle that country, it will only be done at the expense of a large amount of money to aid settlers in going in, and giving them the land free after they get in."

Thus, not only were the lands worthless, but it was going to take a large sum of money to induce settlers to go into that country. In other words, we were throwing away £300,000 sterling for the purchase of Rupert's Land. I do not think it requires wonderful discrimination to ascertain that fact. But I am going to assume that the land is worth $2 per acre. Taking the 25,000,000 acres at that price, we shall find that, according to the scheme of 1873, we were to give not $85,000,000, but $139,400,000; $30,000,000 in cash and 54,700,000 acres of land at $2 an acre, making $109,400,000, or $139,400,000 in 1873. But those gentlemen contend that the land has improved since 1873. Well, that is possible. Some think it took place since. But I am justified in saying that there is a better prospect, at any rate, of a speedier sale now than then. But then, as I have already stated, although now so valuable, it was considered worth nothing at all in 1879. Now, according to the scheme of 1874, we were to give $48,978,000, and reckoning the land then to be given worth $2 an acre, $111,080,000 additional, or $160,827,000. But our friends opposite do not like to have the land reckoned in that way. But if it is worth $2 an acre now, it was worth $2 then; so, by applying the same principle and the same valuation to the land at all those different intervals, we come to a sound conclusion that no fair-minded man will even undertake to controvert. Now, let us apply the same standard of value in another way: now we are giving $25,000,000 cash and 25,000,000 acres, and the road the Government is to complete is to cost $23,000,000. Let us take the two latter first-25,000,000 acres and $28,000,000; let us take 25,000,000 acres at $2 an acre, and we have $103,000,000. Taking the land at $2 an acre we find that even this total would be $2,000,000 below the first estimate ever made of the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, these calculations sum up thus: $2,000,000 less than the first estimate, and $36,400,000 less than the estimate of 1873 upon this basis of calculation; $57,827,700 less than the cost would have been had there been anyone found to take up the scheme of Mr. Mackenzie's Bill of 1874; and taking $85,000,000, the estimated cost of the scheme of last year, we find that the saving, compared with those different schemes, under this mode of computation, would average $27,525,000; that is to say, the present scheme would, averaging the others, effect a saving of between $25,000,000 and $26,000,000. Of course, I think this an extravagant value to put on the land. While disposed to put as high a value on the lands of the North-West as anybody, in my humble judgment we cannot calculate the land to be worth, as a cash payment, more than $1 an acre. It might not be wisdom to sell 25,000,000 acres more of our land in the North-West for $25,000,000; but I am very much inclined to think the majority of the people would say, sell it, by all means, at that price; because if it were sold, the chances would be in favor of its speedy settlement, and that is what is wanted. Nothing is more desirable than to get a few millions of people into the North-West. The moment that is effected, all our difficulties cease, and instead of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the purchase of Rupert's Land serving to tax us more, we should, in that very mode, get very great relief from taxation. It has been said, both in and out of Parliament, that the higher value you set on the land the better—the more we have to hope for in the future. My own opinion is, that we shall do well enough by valuing the land at $1 an acre; and we have a magnificent estate in the North-West, after we shall have paid all our obligations. But there is another consideration. I do not see the leader of the Opposition in his place; perhaps he does not think my remarks worthy of his consideration. But, I think it would puzzle a gentleman, even as astute as he is, to find even a spice of fallacy in the observations I am making. In the Session of 1879, the Government came down with a proposal to dedicate 100,000,000 acres in the North-West for the purpose of procuring, beyond all doubt or controversy, the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Not only were they prepared to give the lands, but all the minerals they contained. thus offering to British capitalists, and capitalists all over the world, the strongest, possible guarantee, not only of their determination to carry the work to a successful completion, but also the best possible guarantee for the liquidation of any debt that might be incurred in connection therewith. Now, I propose to compare the method of calculation of the hon. leader of the Opposition with my own calculation. The work to be constructed by the Government is to cost $28,000,000; the cash subsidy we are to give is $25,000,000, making $53,000,000. Now we add 25,000,000 acres of land, reckoned at $3.18 per acre, which is the average value set upon these lands by the leader of the Opposition. The value at $3.18 would be $79,500,000, which, added to the $53,000,000, will make a total subsidy of $132,500,900. Now we have left out of the 100,000,000 acres dedicated for the special purpose of building this railway, 75,000,000 acres. We still hold these lands as the best card we have to play. The Government have economised in the disposal of the lands. By a subsidy of $33,000,000 and lands worth $79,500,000, ($18,000,000 out of the $28,000,000 having already been expended) they have succeeded in securing a contract which, when endorsed by Parliament, will ensure the construction of the road. Now, the 75,000,000 acres of land which we hold are are giving are worth that much. Everyone will admit that. This Syndicate is to have lands of fair average quality. They are not to run about and take a section here and a section there wherever they please. It seems to me that those who have made statements to the contrary must have known better. If they did not they did not take the trouble to read the contract; or, having read the contract; were not able to properly interpret it. They can take whichever horn of the dilemma they please. The contract says that the Syndicate are to have 640 acres in one block and we are to have 640 acres alongside of them, and so on. They are to have lands in the North-West Territories, but they are only to have a fair average quality of lands.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. LONGLEY. Will the hon. gentlemen tell us the difference? I repeat, and I am in the judgment of the House, that if the 25,000,000 acres which we give the Syndicate as part of the bargain to pay for the work, are worth $3 18 per acre, 75,000,000 that we hold are worth as much, and I shall go on to show that we have even more than that quantity left, and in that way we hold in our hands the strongest possible guarantee, not only for the liquidation of any cost the Government may incur for the building of this road, but for the extinction of our whole debt. Therefore, I, for one, though living remote from this work, down in the east by the sea, and not being supposed to have such a keen interest in regard to the construction of the Pacific Railway as some others, yet, looking further than local interest and circumstances, and looking to the magnificent scheme that was consummated some years ago, viz.: the Union of the British North American possessions under one Government, and having some pride in my country, hope to see some day the railway completed from the Atlantic to the Pacific, as was originally intended; and if Providence favors us, I see no reason why we should not have that scheme carried to fruition and this country take a place among the nations of the earth that might be coveted even by our neighbors who are alongside of us. Now, here is the conclusion of this part of the subject: the lands we hold, saved out of the 100,000,000 acres dedicated for the construction of the Pacific Railway, are worth, according to the calculation of the leader of the Opposition, $238,500,000; deducting from this the amount given in subsidies to the Syndicate, $132,500,000, we save the neat little sum of $106,000,000, according to the hon. gentleman's own basis of calculation. It cannot be gainsaid. I might almost say of the hon. gentleman, as Burns said of Charles Fox:

"Thou first of our orators, first of our wits.
Yet whose parts and acquirements seem mere lucky hits,
With knowledge so vast and with judgment so strong
No man with the half of 'em e'er went far wrong,
With passions so potent and fancies so bright,
No man with the half of 'em e'er went quite right."

And I might even go further. I listened with no little amazement to my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton)—and I listened to him with a great deal of pleasure, because, aside from his peculiar idiosyncracies he is one of the ablest men and most interesting speakers in the House—and while doing so I could not help being reminded of some other lines:

"Good Lord, what is man? For simple as he looks,
Do but seek to develop his hooks and his crooks,
With his depths and his shallows, his good and his evil,
All in all, he's a problem must puzzle the devil."

Government have economised in the disposal of the lands. By a subsidy of $33,000,000 and lands worth $79,500,000, ($18,000,000 out of the $28,000,000 having already been expended) they have succeeded in securing a contract which, when endorsed by Parliament, will ensure the construction of the road. Now, the 75,000,000 acres of land which we hold are worth to us $3.18 per acre, if the 25,000,000 acres which we other day to scan the big map in room No. 49, for I was interested in knowing, as far as I could at least, as accurately as possible, the extent and quality of those lands, and I find, according to that map, that we have in the fertile belt, 176,910,000 acres in one block. Now, this land is represented as being generally of excellent soil, with abundant wood and water, and proved to be admirably adapted to the growth of cereals, especially wheat. If we had no more land than this, we should have a most valuable possession in the North-West, but we have a good deal more than this In another section we find 30,000,000 acres mixed prairie and timber soil, rather light but produces fair crops, and a great deal of excellent grazing land. Then we have 12,000,000 acres of swampy and well timbered land—good grazing ground. Then 49,152,000 acres of open plains—poor soil, pessessing occasional tracts fit for settlement; then 11,760,000 acres of barren land. The various sections foot up a sum total of 279,829,000 acres. Now, supposing we deduct 30,000,000 acres from the total we have left 250,000,000acres of land of a somewhat varying character, a great proportion of it good land, and some of it as good land as lies out of doors. This estimate can scarcely be considered an exaggeration in regard to quantity, seeing that Prof. Macoun tells us that we have 250,000,000 acres of land in the North-West Territories. It seems to me that we have a right to consider land that is good grazing land as well as that which is cultivatable or fit for the plough, as being not, perhaps, so valuable, but as being fairly entitled to be taken into calculation when we undertake to estimate the area of land in the North-West Territories. Suppose that we allow for the Hudson Bay Company 8,000,000 or 9,000,000 acres, and besides this, for land set aside for school purposes and land which we have sold, an amount in all equal to 25,000,000 acres, and adding the grant of 25,000,000 acres to the Syndicate, we would then have left for ourselves 200,000,000 acres to dispose of. This estimate may possibly be too large. So, in order to make the thing sure, let us strike off 50,000,000 instead of 25,000,000 for the purpose I have named. We would still have 150,000,000 acres of land in that country, of fair average quality; and, if these lands are worth only $1 per acre, we have an amount of very great value, one which should make us feel safe, both in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the ultimate liquidation of a very considerable portion of our national debt. If the lands are calculated at $1 per acre, the amount will be $150,000,000; if at $2 per acre, $300,000,000, or if at $3 per acre—for we may throw off the 18 cents—their value will be $450,000,000. I repeat that I do not think that one need estimate the land at very much more than $1 per acre, because, if we expect to settle the country, we must sell the lands at a reasonable rate. is most important that we should have that country settled, first because the settlement will afford the means of traffic and commerce between the different parts of the Dominion, and ultimately relieve us from taxation in the way of increasing our revenue. I do not think that the Syndicate will hold their lands for high prices, and I will give you my reasons. It is fair to estimate that they will have to realize to some extent on these lands, in order to meet the great obligations they have incurred; in the second place, they will want settlers to give traffic for their railway; and in the third place, as they have only siternate square miles along the line of their road, they will be compelled either to sell or allow others to enjoy the benefit of their lands. In my opinion it would be an exquisite pleasure for a man to settle on 640 acres, and have alongside of it a tract of Syndicate land which he was at liberty to crop. As I understand it the moment there is any interference by the Syndicate with the lands, that moment they are liable to taxation, and I would like to know how long the Syndicate, or any body else, I reasoning power when they attempt to mystify them by would allow the settlers to enjoy the benefit of their lands without interference. I am informed that if the Syndicate choose to interfere with, say the cutting of the grass, that moment they would become subject to taxation, as their act would imply ownership.

Mr. BLAKE. Ownership is not the question-it is occupation.

Mr. LONGLEY. That is my opinion at all events, and I do not think the Syndicate would expect to have their land exempted from taxation if they forbade others from using it. Now, let us consider how much per mile we are paying for the construction of the 2,000 miles of railway which the Syndicate have undertaken to build? We are giving them, as I take it, $50,000,000-$25,000,000 in lands, at a dollar an acre, and $25,000,000 in cash. Now, be it remembered that 350 or 400 miles of railway—that is from Jasper Valley to Kamloops-will cost, for construction and equipment, $50,000 per mile. But it is alleged that too much is given for the prairie section—that the Syndicate are going to make millions of dollars out of this section; and, furthermore, it is said that these shrewd men will never think of constructing more than the thousand miles across the prarie, and then they will pull up stakes, having made eight or ten millions of dollars. Assuming that absurdity, and what then? For the 900 miles across the prairie, we are to give a subsidy in cash of $10,000 per mile, and for the 450 miles, $13,333 per mile, making a cash subsidy for the 1,350 miles of $15,900. In land we give for the 900 miles, 12,500 acres per mile, and for the 450 miles, 16,666 acres per mile. So that the whole 1,350 miles, under this arrangement, are to cost us $33,750,000 and no more. Now, assuming that the Syndicate are only going to build the prairie section, they would, in the first place, forfeit the million dollars security; in the next place they would forfeit one-fifth of the land; making altogether, $6,000,000. Deduct that amount from the $33,750,000, and you have $27,850,000. Let us now take the estimate of the hon. Minister of Railways of last Session, and see how much the Syndicate would gain by breaking their bargain. Selkirk to Jasper, according to that estimate, would cost $13,000,000, and the section from Jasper Valley to Kamloops, $15,500,000, making a total of $28,500,000. I have shown that the amount the Syndicate would get for the same work, in the event of their failing to complete their contract, would be $27,750,000, or $750,000 less than the estimated cost of last year. That is just what the Syndicate would lose if they could break their bargain.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. They get the road for nothing.

Mr. LONGLEY. If we built this road as a Government undertaking, would we not be glad to give it to any company that would work it for all time to come?

Mr. BLAKE. The prairie road?

Mr. LONGLEY. The whole of it. Does not the hon. and learned gentleman know very well that we had been losing hundreds of thousands of dollars by operating the Intercolonial Railway until it fell into the hands of the hon. Minister of Railways, who was able to greatly reduce the loss from year to year, until this year we hope he has at least squared the account, and possibly given us a surplus. But what would happen in the event of the misfortune of the present Government going out of power, and the railway being turned over to the tender mercies of the men who mismanaged it before? This House might have to pay three, four, five or six hundred thousand dollars year by year over the receipts of that road; and would we not willingly give away the Intercolonial Railway under such a condition of things? Do these gentlemen suppose men are destitute of such misstatements? Why, there is not an intelligent school boy of fifteen years of age anywhere, who could not see through the flimsy mystifications that these hon. gentlemen throw around this question. It cannot be too often repeated that for $33,750,000 we are to get 2,700 miles of railway, or thereabouts, completed. Why, I am perfectly amazed, I must say, that fair-minded gentlemen should take the course of argument they have taken, even from the beginning of this discussion. These gentlemen want this debate protracted for a week or a month, not for the sake of fairly discussing this question and showing us that we are about to enter into a bad bargain, but for the sake of agitating the country and getting petitions sent in here. I am almost sorry they have not succeeded, because I would like to see them have a few grains of comfort, they have so few. They dropped the National Policy as one would drop a hot potato. And why? Simply because the wheels of trade have been set in motion, largely through the instrumentality of the National Policy; for the same reason numerous factories have been galvanized into life and new ones have been started. The wheels have been set in motion also, in regard to an increase of revenue. and in many other respects. I would ask hon, gentlemen if they are not constrained to say that the country, during the two years of the regime of the National Policy, has increased beyond the calculation of its most sanguine friends? Look at the condition of the revenue. I do not credit all I see in the papers, but I was reading the other day, from a paper I am accustomed to put confidence in, that there would be a surplus of $2,500,000 on the 30th of June next. If this proves to be the case, will it not afford a wide contrast to the condition of the country three years ago? All you can ask of the National Policy is that it should promote the interests of the country and give you all the revenue you want for various purposes, and leave you a handsome surplus. I cannot conceive the people of this country are so lacking in intelligence, that they so little understand their interest as to displace from power the men who have set the wheels of State in motion, and who, when they had control of public affairs, years ago, carried the country on from one degree of success to another until our condition was such as to excite the envy of more favored nations than ourselves. I have been amazed to hear hon, gentlemen talk about increasing the debt of the country by the present proposition. Why? We are going to increase, say these gentlemen, the debt of the country to the extent of $40,000,000! What a terrible thing that is, is it not? But it was nothing when the hon. gentlemen opposite were in power to increase the debt of the country to the extent of $140,000,000. Now, we are simply increasing it, as I said before, by $53,000,000, and $18,000,000 of that have already been expended. But if it be conclusively shown that the present proposals are cheaper by millions of dollars, as I have shown by taking all the schemes together by $17,000,000, then what have those hon. gentlemen to say against the present proposals? I may say a word or two with regard to another branch of the subject. It must be patent to any gentleman who will take the trouble to reflect one moment, that if we carried out the Pacific Railway as a Government undertaking, the Government would not have to pay duty upon a large quantity of materials upon which the Syndicate will have to pay duty. They would pay nothing on the land for ever; but remember that just as soon as the Syndicate's land is sold, that moment it is subject to taxation. The point to which I was about to refer related to another matter. Our friends across the border, every once in a while, are expressing their regret at our temerity and our foolishness, and they are very benevolently pointing out the mistakes we have made. The most recent attempt has come under my notice within a day or two. There is a paper called the American, I think published in Philadelphia, which has been very liberally distributed among the members of this Parlia- wide Dominion. Mr. Longley.

ment. An article in that paper refers to the assembling of the Canadian Parliament on the 9th of December, and mentions, amongst other things, that there is to be a very important measure submitted to Parliament at that timenothing more nor less than making provision for the construction of a Pacific Railway. The paper very kindly proceeds to say how we are obliged to be governed by the European principle, rather than by the American; that we are dragged, against our will, into a fiscal policy which will not admit discrimination as between England and the United States, in favor of the latter; and what folly it is on our part to give to England as good terms as we give to them, &c. It goes on to say, that, after we have built the Intercolonial Railway, at a tremendous cost, we have reached a condition of things, in regard to that railway, that, after having lost hundreds of thousands of dollars in working it, we are now driven to the necessity of allowing it to die of consumption; that it had been allowed to run down to that condition, that scarcely a train passed over it without accident. Now this is not very gratifying to a truly Canadian mind. Well, enough of those gentlemen who are opposing the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who have opposed the National Policy, have all along sung a song marvellously like that which now greets our ears. Now, if there is anything in the world which I think is to be reprehended it is continuous and repeated attempts to belittle and disparage a man's country; and without desiring to bring such charges against hon. gentlemen opposite, truth compels me to think thus, and thinking thus I am inclined to give expression to my thoughts. You have, hon gentlemen, sung a doleful dirge for years past. You sung it here last Session. You said the land in the North-West was, practically, worth nothing, and you have been carping and finding fault with that which is eminently calculated to promote the welfare of your country. Why should we, with as vast an extent of country as the Americans, not develop it as they have developed theirs? We have, in several respects, a manifest advantage over them. Our day is yet to come in regard to the settlement of the fertile lands, and theirs is largely over. What do we find? While our North-West has been continually disparaged, the lands of the United States have been advertised in the very speeches delivered in this House by hon, gentlemen opposite. Is that patriotic? Shall we ever succeed in our opposite. Is that patriotic? Shall we ever succeed in our mission if we go on in that way? I refer with a great deal of pride to the part played by the men with whom for years I have been associated. I look back to 1867, and what do I find? The leading statesmen of all the Provinces projecting a comprehensible of the part of the province of the pro union of all British North America; I find them laying all their plans securely and pursuing their policy steadily, following their designs up and going straight to the mark, and I find universal satisfaction and prosperity pervading the country during their regime. I find them stricken down in 1873, and then an entirely different picture presented itself. Stagnation, retrogression, ruin, bankruptcy, staring us in the face; and I appeal to those hon. gentlemen whether five years more of their rule, such as we had from 1873 to 1878, would not have landed us either in the United States, where I believe half of them would like to go to-day, or in bankruptcy. Now, I desire to apologise to the House for having occupied so much time, and more especially in view of the fact that every argument advanced against the Syndicate bargain has been most satisfactorily answered; and if it had not been for the sake of gratifying myself, more than hon members, by expressing the sentiments I have believed, not for a day or a year, but since the Union, I would not have said a word on this subject, because I was prepared to vote heartly in favor of that which I believe to be a good bargain, and which, if carried out, will redound to the success of every interest within this

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, that we are discussing an exceedingly important question—a question which should be discussed impartially and thoroughly—a question which, I venture to say, is occupying more of the attention of the people of the country than any question submitted to Parliament for many years. I regret that, in the line of argument pursued by hon. gentlemen who are favorable to the terms now before the House, they are unwilling this question should be discussed outside as well as inside of Parliament. I am convinced that the people of this country—although they may have confidence in their representatives in this House, although they may have recently sent their representatives here—in a question of such magnitude, involving, as it does, the cession of a large portion of the domain of this country to a corporation and a large increase of our national indebtedness, have a right to consider that they should be taken into the confidence of those representatives, and have fairly and candidly discussed before them this great question. quite understand how an old time Tory, a Conservative of the old school-

Mr. PLUMB. Hear, hear.

Mr. ROSS. I have no reference to my hon, friend from Niagara. I can understand, I say, how a Conservative of the old school, a fossil Tory, such as my hon friend from Niagara will soon become if he does not soon see the error of his ways, would refuse to consult his constituents-how he, believing in the divine right of every authority to rule and in restraining the rights and minds of the people as much as possible, would assume to himself the right to determine how much of our territory might be ceded and what obligations should be laid on the people entirely irrespective of the people's wishes. But I cannot conceive how a Parliament, such as I trust we have here, and representatives like the present, who appear to desire, and urgently to desire to come into contact with their constituents, should refuse to deliberate with them and ask their advice on a great question like this, in a public way, fully, freely, on every suitable occasion. My hon friend who has just sat down has blamed the Liberal party in former years for singing a doleful dirge. I remember, when that party was sitting on the other side of the House, how the right hon. leader of the Opposition then moved a resolution complaining of the disastrous condition, the depressed condition of this country-setting forth how thousands of our people were being expatriated and so forth. I remember reading a speech made by that right hon, gentleman in the Eastern Townships, representing how he heard a voice from over the clear lakes and emerald fields, saying, "Come over, Sir John, help us." I remember how he went from town to town and village to village, wandering hither and thither in company with the member for Niagara, and how the twain sang a doleful dirge, the burden being extinguished furnaces, silent workshops, paralysed trade, and the general want, ruin and disaster due to the misrule of the Liberal party. I maintain that if a doleful dirge was ever chanted in this country, it was during the years when the present Ministers sat on the Opposition side of the House. We then assured them that, in the natural order of things, when the depression that prevailed, not only in Canada but elsewhere, passed away, better times would come. We assured them that by no legislative machinery could we arrange the trade and commerce either of this country or of the world. Our assurances have been realized as a matter of fact. According to the rate of duties imposed under the tariff of 1878, deficits would have been overcome, and the finances of the country would have been just as buoyant and far less burdensome to the people of the Dominion than they are now. But coming to the question with which we propose to deal more immediately, allow me to say, that from a different standpoint. Let me deal now with a few before pointing out some of the objections which I intend to urge to this contract, it might be well first to consider how far both political parties in this country are agreed in regard to this matter. And, I would say first, I believe both parties are agreed that this road should be built by a private company. It was on this basis that the agreement with British Columbia was first made. It was on this basis that the Bill of 1872 for the construction of the Pacific Railway was passed. We agree with that proposition. We tell bon, gentlemen opposite that so far as the interests of this country can be subserved by the construction of this road by a private company, so far as this can be done consistent with the best interests of the Dominion, we agree to that proposition. This may have been made at one time a matter of political difference; it is not so now. We are both agreed as to that. In the second place, we are agreed that a certain portion of the public domain may be expropriated for the construction of this road. This was agreed to under Sir Hugh Allan's terms in 1872 or 1873. It was embodied in the Act of 1876. The two parties need not differ, then, as to this condition in the bargain now before us. We are also agreed that so far as these terms point to our keeping faith with British Columbia, without endangering the rest of the Dominion, the road may be built according to this contract. I am aware that, according to the terms on which British Columbia was admitted into the Confederation, a ruinous bargain was made—a bargain which should not have been a bargain which the Liberal party strongly opposed— but the bargain once made, and the faith of the Dominion once pledged to those terms, the Liberal party felt, and feel now, that so far as these terms can be carried out without endangering the safety or the financial prosperity of the Dominion they should be complied with. These terms were predicated upon the broad basis that the railway should be constructed without increasing the annual rate of taxation. On these terms we stand now; on these we have stood always, and we say that so far as the Syndicate propose to construct this road, and so far as it is possible to be constructed for the purpose of keeping faith with British Columbia, while at the same time it may not increase the rate of taxation, we are prepared to support it. We are agreed on that matter. These, then, are points upon which we agree, and in these three points you will notice, Mr. Chairman, that every matter which has been made a cause of political difference heretofore is involved. It was a matter of political difference whether it should be built by a subsidy of land. It was a matter of political difference whother British Columbia should be admitted into Confederation on the terms agreed upon. Having these set aside, including every point upon which political differences prevailed in the early history of this scheme, where are we now? We are now considering a scheme which need not involve any political difference whatever. We are discussing a scheme to-day, which, if discussed by a body of commercial men, irrespec-tive of political differences, I venture to say, but one conclusion could be arrived at. Unfortunately for us, Sir, this matter has been brought down by the Government in a form in which their supporters feel that their political allegiance requires them to support it. Unfortunately for us and for this country, I venture to say, that the vast political influence which the Government is capable of wielding is being used, I will not say to compel, but to persuade their supporters in this House that this is a legitimate bargain, and were it not for that political persuasion or political pressure there are many hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House who, if they severed the commercial from the political element which is wrapped up in this bargain, would speedly and readily-aye, as readily as we on this side of the House, reject the whole scheme, throw it to the winds and ask the Government to look at this matter of the general objections which I propose to urge against this scheme. And I would say, in the first place, that the arrangement with the Syndicate, being a matter of private bargain, and not of public tender, is in itself objectionable. I cannot understand, Mr. Chairman, how the Government could violate the general policy of the Public Works Department and, shall I say, the law which is above the Executive. in making arrangements privately, and, shall I say, secretly with a body of men, whereby such a large amount would be added to our indebtedness, and whereby such large liabilities would be incurred. I ask the Minister of Railways, Is it not the policy of his department to call for tenders for every bridge or mile of railway, or for every article required by the Railway Department? Did he not call for tenders for steel rails a short time ago? Has he not called for tenders for the construction of the other sections of the Pacific Railway? Has he not called for tenders for the construction of 127 miles from Yale to Kamloops, and of the 228 miles in the Lake Superior section, and if it was wise and consistent with the rules of the department that he should call for tenders for 200 or for 100 miles of this same railway, how can he depart from that same established policy, and negotiate with a syndicate or a company for the construction of over 1,000 miles of railway without tender or advertisement of any kind whatever? Have we not, in the simple fact that we have his own advertisement calling for tenders for the construction of small sections of this road, all the argument we want, and all the evidence we require, to condemn the Government and the Minister of Railways for letting the remaining portion, extending over 1,000 miles, without public competition, or without public tender? Sir, how do we know that this is the best bargain? How do we know that we may not have, within a few days, even though no tenders were asked for, better propositions?

Mr. ROSS. Hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear." Well, they may "hear, hear," in a few days, something that will not gratify them very much. How do we know, Sir, that, if tenders had been called for, and terms like these published, terms furnishing such exemptions as these contained in the contract, we would not get a company that would build this road for a smaller cash and land subsidy; and every million of dollars saved and every million of acres of land saved would, certainly, on every assumption on which you could use an argument, be of great value to Canada. But hon, gentlemen opposite believed that in their wisdom they could negotiate secretly with a certain number of gentlemen, supposed to be men of means, for the construction of the road on terms that would commend themselves to the country. Whether this burgain was wise or otherwise it was negotiated on a wrong principle. The very fact that it was negotiated on that principle, that it was concealed from the people of this country until Parliament met; the very fact that other men equally as good and perhaps better than the gentlemen composing this Syndicate might be prepared to construct the railway upon more favorable terms-all these facts go to cast suspicion on the scheme we are now considering, and I think hon, gentlemen will admit now that they made a mistake in negotiating privately and not by public tender. Let us look at the Act of 1874. It shows that every section of the road was to be let by tender, and we have besides the advertisement of the leader of the late Government in the public press, calling for tenders for the construction of the whole road. The hon, member for Lambton acted well within the laws laid down by Parliament for his guidance, but hon, gentlemen opposite, forgetting the duty they owe to Parliament, negotiated secretly and privately, and the contract we are considering to-day is the result. I object, in the second place, to the scheme we are now considering, because by this contract a land grant of may be increased by the improvement of the surrounding country and by Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

25,000,000 acres is practically locked up from settlement. Let us consider carefully the impolicy of locking up large tracts of land in any form. The system upon which we are constructing this road is a borrowed system. We have copied it, as we have copied many other things some things of value to us-from the United States. Years ago when the Americans were developing the prairies in the west, it was thought that the cheapest way, the way most conducive to the interests of the country, would be to subsidize roads by small grants of money and somewhat liberal grants of lands; and, acting upon that system, they no doubt developed the prairies of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and some other of the Western States. But what is the experience of the United States in regard to that matter now? That system prevailed from 1862 down to a year or two ago, and the experience of the United States in regard to that system, ought to be of some value to us. How do we get it? Last year, when the Republican Convention met at Chicago, when there were assembled 800 or 900 delegates from all the States and territories of the American Union, it was laid down as the fifth plank in the Republican platform that no grant of the public domain should hereafter be made to any railway or other corporation. Here we have the unanimous testimony of the Republican party to the fact that the policy of appropriating lands for railway purposes has not been found conducive to the public interest, and that hereafter, after an experience of many years, that policy, so far as the United States is concerned, is going to be reversed. Whether or not we should accept their experience or act as they did, is another matter for consideration; but, presuming that we act as they do, what are we going to do? going to expropriate now a tract of land consisting of 25,000,000 acres for railway purposes—a tract of land equal to several of the most prosperous states of the Union—a tract of land equal to the combined States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire and New Jersey—a tract of land, not of mixed quality as is the land in these States, not even of land of average quality, but of land actually fit for settlement. Sir, we may well pause when we are ceding to a company such a large tract of land, to consider the wisest and safest conditions for the people of this country, upon which these lands should be ceded. I have here in my possession the opinion of hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to this very same matter. It will be in the recollection of the House that a few years ago we purchased Rupert's Land. Previous to the purchase of Rupert's Land, a gentleman made application for a certain title to that country for the purpose indicated in a letter which I will read. It is dated Lombard street, London, 18th January, 1866, and is addressed to Sir Edmund Head, Governor, Hudson's Bay Company:

"Sir,—Will you permit me to enquire, on behalf of self and friends, whether the Hudson's Bay Company is at liberty and is willing to dispose of its cultivable territory to a party of Anglo-American capitalists, who would settle and colonize the same on a system similar to that now in operation in the United States, in respect to the organisation of territories and States."

That was signed "Alex. McEwen." It was referred to the Canadian Government, and on the 23rd June, 1866, when Sir John A. Macdonald was a member of the Government, a reply was adopted founded on a minute of the Privy Council. which said:

"Canadian experience has shown that large tracts of land to individual or commercial corporations have operated prejudicially to the best interests of the Province, and retarded rather than promoted its settlement and progress. Companies or individuals purchasing for the purpose of speculation are governed-solely by the one view, of obtaining a profitable return of the money invested in the purchase. All other considerations are set aside. No general or comprehensive system of settlement is or can be established. The best tracts—"

And I ask hon, gentlemen to attend to this:

the labor of the settlers, and the price paid to the company for the lands, instead of being expended in the opening up of roads, and in developing the resources of the country, is divided among a number of non-resident shareholders having no further interest in the prosperity of the country further than as such prosperity contributes to the value of their shares."

Here we have a case exactly in point, in regard to which the opinion of the leader of the Government then was precisely the same as the opinions which are being urged now by the hon, gentlemen on this side of the House; and if we could imagine that he was then speaking of this Syndicate, and not of another to be organized for a somewhat different purpose, and if we apply the language he used to this Syndicate, we could imagine him, on the Opposition side of the House, denouncing this bargain for the very same reasons as hone gentlemen on this side of the House denounced the Syndicate which is now being considered. Perhaps the hon, gentleman will permit me to supplement that with another quotation. The Duke of Newcastle, expressing his opinion on this matter—and this is quoted in Minutes of Council—says:

"In an unsettled colony there is no effectual mode of taxation for purposes of government and improvement, and the whole progress of the colony depends on the liberal and prudent disposal of its land." "It was, therefore, to say the least, a question whether the Company would not be under a direct inducement to use their proprietory rights to thwart the colonizing efforts of the Government. The conclusive objection to the scheme is, that it would reproduce, in a gigantic shape, the inconveniences which, on a far smaller scale, were found intolerable in Canada. It is evident, as a matter of reasoning and notorious as a matter of fact, that the interposition of large blocks of property between tracts or districts of Crown lands must obstruct the opening up of those districts, unless it fortunately happens that the private proprietor is ready to expend money pari prasu with the Government in the construction of roads and other improvements, and to conform his land policy to that of the authorities. It is also clear that colonists of the Anglo-Saxon race look upon the land revenue as legitimately belonging to the community, and that diversion of half or more than half of that revenue to the purpose of increasing the dividends of a private corporation would cause a continual and growing discontent, which could not be allayed by any abstract argument of right, and the full force of which the Government would be expected by the Company to sustain. His Grace cannot consent to make himself responsible for these consequences, and he is therefore obliged to treat as inadmissible any proposal for the proprietory partition of those territories which may be placed under the Government of the Crown."

Then the Minute of Council proceeds:

"If such objections exist to the tenure of large tracts of land by so ancient and responsible a corporation as the Hudson's Bay Company, with large powers of Government and a political as well as a commercial status, with how much greater pressure must they weigh against the transfer of such tracts to a private association of speculation."

This was the opinion of the Privy Council in those days; it was the opinion of the hon. gentleman, who, as leader of the Government, has introduced this Bill, and if he were opposing the Syndicate, now under consideration, and using this language, he would but be doing what we are attempting to do and using precisely the same language as we are using, and as we intend to use, against the bargain which is now being considered. Now, in ceding such a large tract of land, apart from the impolicy of ceding land unless it is very carefully ceded, we have a right to consider the value of the land we are giving. A great many persons, in discussing this question, look upon the land in the North-West as of no value whatever. When we are paying for the construction of this road in lands and money, I think we are perfectly justified in considering the value of the lands as an asset. It is a very difficult matter to arrive at the value of these lands. Various They were valued values have been applied to them. in 1872-73, in the charter granted to Sir Hugh Allan, at $2.50 per acre. Later on, the Government bound itself in the charter, not to sell the lands at a lower price than $2.50 an acre, without the consent of the Company. This value was then put upon these lands in 1872-73, by the hon. gentlemen opposite themselves.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. I think he will find that it was not to be a higher price than $2.50 per acre.

Mr. ROSS. No, not a higher price; therefore, it was worth that much money. But I will read the clause in the charter, which is as follows:—

"That the price at which the alternate blocks of land retained by the Government, shall be sold by the Government, shall be from time to time a 'justed by agreement between the Government and the Company, are riding to the plice that is found to be obtainable for such lands, without obstructing the settlement of the country. But unless the Company shall sell land granted to them at a lower average price or shall otherwise agree, the Government shall, for and during the term of 20 years from the 'ate hereof, place the upset price of such 'alternate blocks at an av rage price of not less than $2.50 an acre."

hope this is satisfactory to my hon. friend. Government in 18 2.73, fixed these lands at the price of $2.50 an acre—the minimum price. I am not prepared to say that those lands were worth that money at that time. We cannot tell what they were worth at that time-we are just taking the statement of the hon. gentlemen opposite themselves. In 1875, when the Foster contract for the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch was under consideration, the Minister of Railways said that these lands were worth $5 an acre, if he had the right of selecting them. Now, I am quite sure that the Minister of Railways is a pretty fair judge of land, but I am not quite sure that this Syndicate is not as good a judge of land as the Minister of Railways, and if he in the North-West could select lands that would be worth $5 an acre, why could not the Syndicate select those that would be worth quite as large a sum of money? So, assuming that they were worth $5—for the Minister of Railways assumed that in 1575—we are to cede to this Syndicate a very valuable heritage indeed, in giving them these 25,000,000 of acres. But we have other means of ascertaining how much these lands are worth. American railway companies have sold their lands, and some of them very recently. In 1870 I find the average sales of railway lands in the United States amounted to $6.54 an acre. Some of the American railway companies sold their lands, averaging much larger amounts. The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Road averaged $14.55; the St. Paul and Sioux City Railway Company averaged $6.55 an acre; the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railway averaged $11.61, and I have other railways that sold their lands at prices, some lower and some higher than those named. Woll, now, what does that prove? It proves this: That we are giving this railway company almost an indefinite sum when we are giving them these lands. We are giving them a roving commission to travel over the whole of the North-west Lethers, will show before I close, between the parallels of 49° and 57°, and if they do not get enough land there, to go into the control of the clause reads. "elsewhere," and to travel over the whole of the North-West Territory, as I the fertile belt, or, as the clause reads, "elsewhere, pick the best lands in order to complete the 25,000,000 of acres. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this is a serious matter indeed. We have in the Province of Ontario with all its wealth and importance, a less area than that under cultivation. The whole of the agricultural prosperity of the Dominion of Canada, to-day as an agricultural country, rests on seventeen millions of acres of cultivated lands, and we are giving to this Company a vast aggrandizement, a commercial supremacy and a commercial power greater than the whole Dominion possesses at this present moment. Sir, this is a serious matter, if we are going to give vast concessions such as the contract we are considering just now will give to this Syndicate, an area of land two and a half times as great as the whole cultivated area of this province. We know something of the manufacturing industries of Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island, and of the important part they play in the political and commercial life of the United States; and by the contract which we are now considering we are to give a railway corporation a greater area of land-cultivable land-than that upon which the commercial and industrial prosperity of these eastern States are based. Is it wise for us to do so? Is it not a seriously and impartially? Is it not a matter calling for the exercise, in the highest degree, of those judicial functions and those judicial responsibilities which are imposed upon us, that, if we concede to the Syndicate, or to any private corporation such a large extent of land as that already referred to, we do so on such conditions, and guarded by such restrictions as will provide for all time to come for the interests of the North-West and the North-West settler and the future development of the country. Sir, I look upon the North-West as the right arm of this Dominion. The other portions of this country are tolerably well occupied now. We have a very small portion of land in Ontario for sale. There is a very small area of good land in Quebec for sale, and with regard to the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island, there is very little cultivable land for sale. Now, the increase of our population requires that so far as agricultural pursuits are concerned, room should be found for our surplus population. Where are these homes to be found? Not in Ontario, because in order to provide homes for young farmers, somebody else must be bought out. Where shall they go? To the United States, to the prairies of Wisconsin, Dakota, or Minnesota? I am sorry to find that too many of our young men go there. We have in the North-West, I trust, a fair climate and fertile soil which will induce our young men to go there; and if we are to occupy, as the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Longley) has said, a commercial or political supremacy on the northern half of this continent, which we ought to occupy, if we are true to ourselves, it behoves us to consider the value of that North-West, to guard carefully its resources, to avoid everything that would impair its prosperity, and to preserve with miserly care, shall I say, the vast interests which are locked up in the lands, to see that no private corporation shall step in between the interests of the settlers and the Government to interfere with its future prosperity. I object, then, to this contract, because by its ratification we will have ceded to the Syndicate such a large area of land without proper restriction. I object to it again because it involves the immediate and unnecessary construction of 1,190 miles of railway. You will notice that by the terms contract we are going to buend, 650 miles, inside of ten build that we are to build from Jasper Valley to Kamloops 450 miles, from Yale to Port Moody 20 --miles. I say this contract involves the immediate construction of that length of road, which is not required in the interest of colonization or settlement. We certainly are not building the Lake Superior end of the road, what is called the eastern section, for the purpose of colonization. We have no evidence that that land is of great value; we know the climate is unfavorable, we know the soil is somewhat barren. True, there may be some valuable timber in that country, but we do not require to build a railway into it for the sake of timber. We have an abundance of timber on existing lines of railway, so that the immediate construc-tion of the eastern end of this route is unnecessary. Hon. gentlemen will not attempt to argue that the section from Jasper to Kamloops is required—that we require to cross the Rocky Mountains just now. We have 1,000 miles of prairie between Winnipeg and the Rocky Mountains; and will even the hon, member for Victoria, B.C. (Sir John A. Macdonald), whose interests in Vancouver and British Columbia are so great, say that we require the immediate construction of the road from Yale to Port Moody? We have navigation from Yale to Port Moody on the Fraser River; we have facilities for bringing down everything in the shape of supplies as far as Yale— Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

matter in regard to which we should pause and consider the Jasper section we do not require, and the Yale and Port Moody sections that we do not require. Is it wise for us to incur those obligations which the construction of this 1,190 miles involve? Is it in our interest to do so? On a contrary principle the American rallways were built; that is to say, just as fast as the interests of colonization required. Whenever a settlement required 60 miles to be built it was built. But here we are constructing miles of railway that are admitted by hon. gentlemen themselves to be unproductive and unnecessary in the interests of trade. Suppose the Grand Trunk or the Great Western had been built 20 or 30 years before it was, what would the effect have been upon the shareholders and upon the country? I admit it may have opened out the country sconer, but what intolerable burdens it would have imposed upon the shareholders, and still greater burdens upon the resources of the country. Prudently, however, and as fast as the settlement of the country required, and pari passe with the settlement of the country, railways have been projected in Canada and the United States, and only on these grounds can a recommendation oxpected to be a commercial success. What are we doing under the present circumstances? We are perpetrating a comparation would perpetrate. We commercial folly that no corporation would perpetrate. are taking the resources of the people of this country and investing them in a way, in which I venture to say, no individual in Canada could be found to invest his We are constructing miles private means. of railway that are not required as a commercial enterprise. We are constructing them, as I will show by and by, for sectional reasons, which, I think, are not properly involved in the consideration of this question. And what will be the consequence of the construction of these 1,190 miles of railway? The consequence will be that it will add to the public debt $40,000,000 inside of ten years. Let us see. The section from Nipissing to Fort William will involve an expenditure of $20,000,000, though it has been variously estimated from $18,000,000 to $22,000,000. From the western limits of 900 miles extending westward beyond Winnipeg to Kamloops, 450 miles, according to Mr. Fleming will cost $16,500,000; from Yale to Port Mooly, 90 miles, $3,500,000; making a total of $40,000,000, which will be added to our burdens by the unnecessary construction of these 1,190 miles of road. Are hon, gentlemen prepared to add this sum to our already heavily taxed country? Our debt at the present moment is nearly $160,000,000. Inside of ten years the people of Canada, with this enormous expenditure added to our debt, will be burdened with at least $200.000.000 of indebtedness. And while burdened with this indebtedness, it will be vain to attempt to compete for commercial and political supremacy with our neighbors themselves. Inside of twenty years the people of the United States will escape free from the burden which that terrible civil war imposed upon them. You can fancy a population of 50,000,000, with no indebtedness, with light taxation, with still boundless ranges of prairie to colonize and settle, with all their industrial and commercial resources, competing with a weak, overburdened little colony to the North, staggering under a very heavy load of taxation, and you can well imagine the consequences. Do the hon, gentlemen rejoice at the prospect? Do the hon, gentlemen anticipate with pleasure the consequences of such a state of affairs? Do they anticipate with pleasure the condition in which Canada will be ten years from to-day with this heavy burden upon her? We hear a great deal of patriotism from hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House. I trust they are patriotic, I trust they have an interest in the welfare of the country; whenever they talk of Canadian interests, they put forward this patriotic plea. But what have we now? Will it be Canada for the everything that any one can wish who enters that Canadians? It may be Canada for the Canadians for a while; far off country; so that we are building the Lake but, staggering under those heavy burdens, with the disconsuperior end of the road that we will not require, tented taxpayer everywhere over the country; with a mighty neighbor lying to the South, competing with us in as far as Winnipeg, and be distributed along the line of railthe markets of the world, comparatively free from taxation, Canada, I venture to say, will be so reduced in her commercial and industrial prosperity by those burdens, that it will be an easy matter for the Americans to assert the Monroe doctrine and destroy for ever our political autonomy. I am not a prophet of evil, and would not wish to prophesy anything but a bright and prosperous future for this country; but I do fear there may be political consequences involved in this large indebtedness which may be disastrous. Can that be avoided? It may be well to consider whether it can be avoided. I have already admitted that we are pledged on certain conditions to keep faith with British Columbia. I agree with hom gentlemen opposite, that it would be in the interest of the country, as quickly as possible to open up and develop the North-West. But is it necessary that we should construct the number of miles of railway I have already referred to for that purpose? I do not see it in that light. I see no necessity for the construction of so many miles of railway for the simple purpose of opening up the North-West. How do we get there now? By American lines of railroad. True there is a disadvantage in this state of things, as rates of freight are sometimes excessive, and we are compelled to travel through a foreign country. But we should not be long under that necessity. The moment the Thunder Bay Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway is constructed that disadvantage will cease, as we shall have water communication in summer with Thunder Bay. We shall have then a short run, about as tar as from here to Sarnia, along the Thunder Bay section to Winnipeg; a run of less than 20 hours will bring us to some central point in our North-West Territory. This advantage we should have entirely independent of the American railways, and through our own wealth and enterprise entirely; and if the Canada Central were extended to Sault Ste. Marie, we should have continuous connection between Montreal and the North-West with a short interruption of about 300 miles on Lake Superior. I hold this route is exceedingly favorable and would not involve a large expenditure. We had lately an offer laid on the Table of the House by Senator Frank Smith, for the construction of the Sault Branch, which hon. gentlemen opposite should, I think, in the interest of the country, well consider. He says:

"This company offers to construct a line of railway under their charter from South-East Bay, Lake Nipissing, to Sault Ste. Marie, for a subsidy of $12,000 in cash per mile, or a subsidy of $4,000 in cash and 4,000 acres of land per mile, such lands to be of the same character and situated in as favorable localities as the lands appropriated for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the North-West. So much of this line as can be made available for the main line of the Canadian Pacific may be used for that paragraphy and in such manner as the Covernor. can be made available for the main line of the Canadian Pacific may be used for that purpose on such terms and in such manner as the Governor in Council may determine. This company will agree, in consideration of such subsidy, to place all connecting railway lines on terms of absolute equality with their line in respect of running powers, rates and traffic facilities of all kinds, and to submit to such conditions as may be imposed by the Governor in Council for the prevention of any preference or discrimination whatever in favor of any one connecting company over another, and further to accept such special rates for the transportation of emigrants and their effects as the Government may fix from time to time with a view to the settlement of the North-West; the line to be commenced within twelve months and completed in three years from this data.

"On the acceptance of this offer ample security will be furnished to the Government for the completion of the railway.

"I have the honor to be,
"Your ob-dient servant, "(Signed,) FRANK SMITH,
"President Sault Ste. Marie Railroad Company."

There, then, we have a distinct offer for the construction of a road at a nominal price, which would not add more than a couple of millions to the indebt edness of our country, by which the railway system of Quebec and Ontario could be placed in direct communication through Canadian soil with the North-West Territory, by which the trade of Montreal could find its way westward to be the country of the Canada of the Canada of the Canada of Central to Lake Nipissing, it had naturally attracted a great deal of attention to the scheme, and the project to carry on that road from Nipissing direct to Sault Ste. Marie had received an additional impetus from the attention which had been given to the question by the railway magnates and persons in the develop-way that may be built from Winnipeg westward, wherever trade might go; and vice versa, the trade of the North-West would come eastward to us, by the same route. By adopting that plan we obviate the necessity of constructing 1,190 miles of railway; we relieve the country of an increase of its indebtedness by $40,000,000, and we secure a route not an all-rail route, I admit, but an easy mode of access to the North-West for between eight and nine months, by which all the trade of this country and that can be exchanged. This, I think, is a reasonable alternative. I think, moreover, it is an alternative to which hon, gentlemen opposite, themselves, are to a certain extent committed. Last Session there was a debate in the Senate on this same question, and I will give the views of a few hon. members of that House, and perhaps those of some hon. gentlemen in this House, in regard to the matter. With respect to the remarks of Senator Ryan, some of which I will read, I may say that, by the scheme we are now considering, the road will not be completed for ten years, and the distance would be shortened 300, not 200 miles. The hon, gentleman said:

"The line of railroad by the north shore of Lake Superior is difficult of construction, and will hardly be built for many years. But, failing the possibility of having that line in operation within a reasonable time, advantage may be taken during the winter months, when the navigation of Lake Superior is not practicable, of a line which is very tikely to be constructed is the United States, on the south shore of Lake Superior, from Sault Sie. Marie to Minneapolis and St. Paul. In this way perior, from Sault Ste. Marie to Minneapolis and St. Paul. In this way we shall get, within two years, an uninterrupted line of railway from Winnipeg to the Canadian seaboard. This, as every one can see, will be of great advantage to the Dominion, and it has also this advantage: that it will shorten the distance of the existing route between Winnipeg and Montreal by 200 miles at a very moderate calculation; while the route from Winnipeg to Liverpool by that line will be shorter by 500 or 600 miles than by way of New York. These are matters which, I think, it is very desirable that we should attend to in this Dominion."

These are the views of Senator Ryan, and although he suggested we should open communication with the North-West by way of the American railway then projected, I do not find he was charged with a lack of patriotism. But we, in this House, when we suggest the making of connections with American lines, and the utilization of existing or projected lines, are charged with being unpatriotic and giving the key of the North-West to our American neighbors, with abandoning our vantage ground by relinquishing the project of a railway wholly on our own soil. Mr. Ryan said, further :

"I think there should be no hesitation about taking active and immediate measures to construct the link which will connect our eastern roads with our United States system of railways south of Lake Superior and, during the months when navigation is open, with our system of water communication on Lake Superior, and with our own railways from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg during that season. I am sure that no one will question the great advantages of obtaining such a route."

enator Miller makes use of these remarks on this subject:

"If we wish to control the trade of the great North-West before the "If we wish to control the trade of the great North-West before the all-rail communication can be made between the eastern Provinces and Winnipeg north of Lake Superior, it must be by the line by Sault Ste. Marie, and I do hope that the bringing of this question before the Senate at the present time may have influence on the Government in determining them to take the course which was foreshadowed in the remarks of the Minister of Railways that have been read to the House. There can be no doubt, if we wish to secure that trade, if we do not wish to see it go into foreign channels, we must build this connecting link, which will have the effect during the navigation months at least, of diverting the trade of Manitoba into the other Provinces of the Dominion."

These are the views of hon. members of the Senate in regard to the immediate construction of the Sault Ste. Marie Branch, and I think the Minister of Railways had a very decided opinion upon that question within a year of the present date. I have here a quotation from a speech he delivered in Montreal. He said on that occasion:

ment of the North-West's rates. They found, on looking at the map, that it was almost an air line running from St. Paul and Minneapolis, the great centres of commerce in the North-West, to the city of Montreal. They found that when wheat could be placed in the harber of Montreal, and by that route sent to Liverpool, so much more cheaply and easily than by the existing routes, that it was not all surprising that attention should have been directed to the project. The more he examined the project, the more satisfied he was that, independent altogether of the great importance to Canadian interests of the construction of a line from St. Paul, or from Duluth, or from both, to Sault Ste. Marie, looking to a connection with ocean traffic at Montreal. Independent of the great additional volume of traffic which Canada might fairly anticipate would flow from that road, he considered that we had a very great interest in establishing communication between Nipissing and the Sault at as early a date as practicable. The development of our great North-West depended to a very large extent upon the ease, cheapness and rapidity with which we could send people into that country, and bring the produce of the west to the seaboard. The fact that the extension of the Canada Central to Nipissing would be accomplished at an early day; the fact that the Government were pushing, with all the energy and vigor that they possessed, the line from Thunder Bay to Red River; the fact that by the extensions of the line from Nipissing to the Sault, it would bring Montreal within sixty hours of Red River, settled the question as to the great importance of carrying out this project at theearliest practicable day."

This was the opinion of the Minister of Railways last year, and when we call his attention and that of the House to the advantage of the early construction of that branch-when we call the attention of the House and country to the early and easy communication which, by this means can be secured with the North-West Territory, forsooth we are charged with a lack of patriotism, with abandoning the key to the position and subordinating the interests of Canada to the interests of the United States. Now, I cannot see what objection there can be to the line I have indicated. Last year the Minister of Railways thought it of the utmost importance; hon. gentlemen in the Senate friendly to the Government were of the same opinion What objection can lie to the project this year, that did not affect it last year? Does it not furnish us with a road almost as straight as the road by the north shore of Lake Superior? If you take the distance from Montreal to Winnipeg, what do you find? That the road on the north of Lake Superior is only thirteen miles longer than that by the southern side, and by way of the American railways, and what are we paying for shortening this distance? We are paying $20,000,000 for the construction of the eastern end of the railway which only brings us thirteen miles nearer Winnipeg than we could get without the expenditure of a single dollar.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Chairman, when the House rose I was discussing the propriety of abandoning for the meantime the construction of the Lake Superior end of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and proceeding with the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie Branch, utilizing the American railways existing or projected on the south side of Lake Superior. I am aware, Sir, that an attempt is now made to show that such a policy would be unpatriotic; that it would be transferring to American roads the traffic which rightly belongs to Canadian roads, and which we should have ourselves. If it is unpatriotic to advocate such a policy as that during the present Session. and in face of the construction of this immense undertaking, what position are hon, gentlemen in who advocated a similar course last year? You will observe by the proceedings of the Senate, some of which I have already quoted, that on the 5th of April the Hon. Mr. Ryan moved for papers in connection with the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie Branch and asked what was the policy of the Government in regard to the matter. In reply • his question, the Hon. Sir Alexander Campbell said:

"All I can say with reference to the subject is, that it is receiving our anxious consideration, and as to the motion which my hon. friend from Victoria has made, we shall be very happy to lay on the Table copies of all the papers to which his address refers."

You will see from this quotation, Mr. Chairman, that the question of construction of the Sault Ste. Marie Branch was last Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

year under the anxious consideration of the Government. I have shown you that the Minister of Railways in his speech delivered in Montreal, spoke very favorably of that scheme. I have shown you that distinguished Senators in their places on the floor of the Senate spoke favorably of the project also. On the 1st of April the Hon. Mr. Trudel, speaking of the question, no doubt at the instigation of the Government, asked:

"Does the Government intend to take effective measures during this Session for ensuring either by a grant, or subsidy or otherwise, the immediate construction of a railway to connect the south-east end of Lake Nipissing with Sault Ste. Marie."

On that question the hon. gentleman made some remarks endeavoring to enforce upon the attention of the Government the proposition to which he was calling their attention. In reply to the inquiry I find that the Hon. Sir Alex. Campbell used the following words:—

"In answer to his question (that is, the question of Hon. W. Trudel), I beg to say that it is the intention of the Government during the present season to examine the route carefully westward from Lake Nipissing, and to aid by subsidy or otherwise, if necessary next Session the construction of a railway to connect the Canada Central Railway terminus at Lake Nipissing with Lake Superior on a line and with the conditions to be fixed by the Government, and the route to be settled in such a manner as substantially to aid in the eventual construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway on the northern shore of Lake Superior."

Sir, that was the policy of the Government last year, deliberately declared by its leader in the Senate. Are we at fault if we declare a similar policy this Session? Are we to be charged with treason to the best interests of the country if we still continue to advocate the policy we advocated last Session, and which was deliberately declared upon the floor of the Senate to be the policy of the Government? I say that it is not in the mouths of the hon. gentlemen opposite to say that this policy is unpatriotic simply because it is advocated by members of the Opposition. It was advocated by themselves; it was declared last year to be their deliberate policy; it is a policy to which we adhere now, and we only wish we could enforce on the attention of the Government the same view of this question as they themselves entertained last year. This was also discussed at some length in this Chamber, and in discussing this question I find the Minister of Railways had something to say on the matter also. He said on the 15th of April, a few days after the motion was made by the leader of the Opposition for abandoning the British Columbia section:

"It is now evident that the attention of the whole of this country is turned to the question of obtaining the shortest line of communication to our great North-West by Sault Ste. Marie. Hon. gentlemen opposite may remind me that one time I entertained serious objection to going to Sault Ste. Marie, but the case is different to-day. " " When I opposed the construction of the line to the Sault, it was at a time when we had no line under construction from Thunder Bay to Red River; but the moment the Government was committed to the building of that line, it was our duty to look for means by which we could make it productive. What are those means? I have satisfied myself that the road, with its easy grade and cheap rate at which it will be able to bring down the products of the North-West cannot possibly have a competitor. " " I believe that with the character of our road, the cheapness with which we can bring the traffic of the North-West across it, there is no road, be it by way of Duluth or St. Paul, that can compete with us. Therefore, I am glad that there is the prospect of seeing either the Canada Central or Pacific Junction carried through to the Sault, bringing our great North-West within sixty hours of Montreal, and Toronto 100 miles nearer, and that within a comparatively brief period."

Sir, these were the views of the hon, the Minister of Railways last year. He was then in favor of the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie Branch. We enunciate those views to-day with a view to save the country from the enormous expenditure—from the immediate expenditure of at least $20,000,000 in the construction of a road by the north shore of Lake Superior. Are we at fault for this course? If we are at fault, in what position were hongentlemen opposite when they advocated a precisely similar course during last Session of Parliament, when they declared it to be the deliberate policy of the Government to aid by subsidy the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie

I have shown to you, Sir, that, including the hich we propose to give the railway, the burden surely we who copy so many things of them—our land Railway. I have shown to you, Sir, that, including the subsidy which we propose to give the railway, the burden would be $65,300,000; that without the subsidy it would be a matter of $40,000,000 which this country is to be called upon to expend unnecessarily, and within ten years, for the completion of this gigantic scheme. I have shown that we did not require, in the interests of colonization and settlement, the eastern section at all; that existing railways or the Thunder Bay Branch, with water communication to the Sault will supply all the present requirements of the trads. I have shown further that the western section, or rather the section from Yale to Fort Moody, is not required even in the interests of British Columbia, because they now have navigation between those ports. I have shown that by the scheme, to which we are calling your attention, we are placed within easy communication with Winnipeg, which is undoubtedly the great objective point of all our efforts. The distance from Montreal to Winnipeg, by the North Shore route, is 1,370 miles; from Montreal to Winnipeg, by way of Duluth, is 1,383 miles-a difference of only 13 miles. I ask you if it is reasonable that we should expend $20,000,000, which must be borrowed, for the trifling advantage of getting, via the North Shore, a line which is only 13 miles longer than a road which can be constructed for us with the expenditure of scarcely a single dollar of Canadian money. We are told that unless we have a Canadian line the immigrants crossing to this country will be inviegled by American agents and decoyed into settling on American lands. The hon. Minister of Agriculture could answer that objection. We know very well that these immigrants arrive at Quebec during the season of navigation, reach Montreal by the St. Lawrence route on the Grand Trunk, thence proceed to Ottawa, whence they go westward by way of the Canada Central and the Sault extension, then to Thunder Bay by water and thence to Winnipeg. There would be therefore little danger of immigrants being decoyed by American land agents to settle in Dakota or Minnesota. We know, further, that when emigrants leave the old country for Canada they start with their destination in view, and are generally ticketed from the old country to the point to which they intend to go. This being the case, what possible danger could there be of their being led aside by American agents? If we are prepared to offer to these emigrants a free home in the North-West, giving them the advantages of settlement in a civilized country, upon the fertile prairies of these territories, without subjecting them to any of the inconveniences which are proposed in this scheme, I venture to say that all the influences of the American land or railway agents could not prevent those who are intelligent from settling in the country where they would be most comfortable. We are told it would be an unpatriotic thing on our part to abandon the North Shore branch and utilize the American railways. We are told that by utilizing the American railways the trade of the country would be made tributary to the South Shore. But, Sir, what was the case in past years? We know that for many years the winter port of the Grand Trunk Railway was at Portland and that that railway passed through a portion of the United States. Who objected to that arrangement, and said it was an unpatriotic thing in sending our produce to the old country to send it through a part of the United States?

And if it is unpatriotic for Canadians to use American railways, to what extent can we esteem the unpatriotic policy of the United States when they use our Canadian railways from day to day and from week to week. Do not the United States contribute a large portion of the freight which is shipped to and from the old country, and passes over the Grand Trunk Railway, the Great Western Railway and the Canada Southern? And if the Americans way and the Canada Southern? And if the Americans Great Western, or the Canada Southern, the settlement of appreciate the advantages of shipping their produce to disputes would have been an easy and inexpensive affair, policy and many other things-would not be committing a very great mistake if we were prepared to transship our produce over American railways in order that it might reach its destination. I have done with the objections which I have been endeavoring to urge against the scheme so far as it involves the construction of 1,190 miles of railway unnecessarily. I proceed to consider another objection. I say that the country expects that any contract that was made for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway would relieve the Government from contract letting, and as we have seen from the reports of the Railway Commissioners, from con-tract jobbing. The present scheme does not at all fulfil that end. The impression in the country when this scheme was first announced was, that the bargain would enable the Government once and forever to wash their hands of all contract letting in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. But the fact is that we have ten years yet in which the Government are to go on completing the works already under construction, and all the evils, many of them to be deplored, connected with the contract letting, so far as the Government is concerned, may prevail and will prevail for that period. But more than that, Sir, we are entering into a partnership with the Syndicate. We are promising to construct 90 miles of road as a new contract, and instead of the Government being relieved, they are, as I said before, entering into a partnership—the Syndicate on the one hand going on with their work to connect with the works constructed and to be constructed, and the Government, on the other hand, undertaking fresh responsibilities and agreeing to continue those they have already incurred. I ask why, when the Government were in secret communication with the Syndiente, they did not so arrange the bargain that the work of construction should be taken out of their hands, at least so far as the Yale and Port Moody section is concerned. We have here the disagreeable and unusual spectacle of a Government entering into partnership with the Syndicate, partly for the running of the road and partly for its construction; and this is really an objection which I think is worthy of the attention of this House. There are besides the objections I have pointed out, some minor ones to which I shall briefly refer. The first one is, that we are accepting the standard of the Union Pacific for this road. I cannot understand why it should have been selected as the standard; and we have no explanation from the Government why it was chosen. Could not the Minister of Railways have found in Canada some road that would furnish a suitable standard-some road in Nova Scotia or New Brunswicksome road in this vast Dominion, in regard to which he sometimes waxes so eloquent. By the time our road is built, the standard selected will be a very ancient one. The Union Pacific was constructed in May, 1869—ours will not be completed until 1891-when the standard agreed upon will be 22 years old; and, besides, how shall we ascertain the standard when that period arrives? It has been clearly shown by hon, gentlemen on this side, that the standard of the Union Pacific, when first constructed, was a very poor one; and then we were told by the Government that the standard by which they hold themselves bound, was the standard of that road in 1873-74. By that time even the road will be 17 years old, and how are we going to ascertain what the standard really was. The Union Pacific is at considerable distance from the Canadian Pacific Railway; how are we going to bring our witnesses into court? You will see what expense the country will have to incur in the settlement of disputes. Had we adopted the standard of the Intercolonial or the but by adopting a standard thousands of miles away from the Canadian Pacific the difficulty and expense of settling disputes are greatly increased. I also notice as a minor objection that the mode of settling disputes under this contract is a somewhat loose one. Clause 3 says:

"And if the Government and the Company should be unable to agree as to whether or not any work done or materials furnished under this contract are in fair conformity with such standard, or as to any other question of fact, excluding questions of law, the subject of disagreement shall be from time to time referred to the determination of three referees, without any regard to their qualifications."

We have another contract drawn by the same Government' which, so far as the settlement of disputes is concerned is far more satisfactory. In the Allan contract was inserted the following provision:—

"Provided always that if the Government and the Company should be unable to agree as to the details of any of the matters in the clause mentioned, the same shall be, from time to time, referred to the determination of three competent engineers, one of whom shall be chosen by the Government, one by the Company, and the third by such two engineers, and the expenses of said references shall be defrayed by the Company."

There are two points here worthy of consideration. In the one case referees are to be named, irrespective of their technical qualification for the work; in the other case the referees were to be competent engineers—men qualified to decide as to whether the road was up to the standard from an engineering point of view. The contract we are considering also allows the referees to determine by whom the expense is to be borne; by the Allan contract the expenses are to be paid by the company. Why such looseness, such vagueness in so important a matter? Millions of money may depend on the decision of these referees. In the United States, when Commissioners were sent out to examine into the work done on the Union Pacific Railway, they reported that five or six million dollars were required to bring the road up to the proper standard; and if these referees are to be entrusted with such important powers, how essential it is that we should see that they are competent. Again, you will notice by clause 5 of the contract a very strange power is conferred on the Company. It says:

"The Company shall pay to the Government the cost, according to the contract of the pertion of railway, 100 miles in length, extending from the city of Winnipeg westward up, to the time at which the work was taken out of the hands of the contractor and the expenses since incurred by the Government in the work of construction, but shall have the right to assume the raid work at any time and complete the same, paying the cost of construction as aforesaid so far as the same shall then have been incurred by the Government."

By this clause, I understand that the moment this contract is ratified, the Company may ask the Government to transfer to them, at cost, the 100 miles west of Winnipeg, now almost completed. What does that mean? It means that the Company shall get from the Government 100 miles of road for at least $860,000. You will notice by the contract that for every mile the Company constructs west of Winnipeg, they receive $10,000 in cash. For taking the first 100 r iles west of Winnipeg from the Government, they receive a clear bonus of $1,000 a mile. But they more. They get at the rate of 12,500 acres of land per mile, that is to say, the moment this contract is ratified the Company will have 100 miles of railway in their possession for which they receive a bonus of $1,000 a mile, and in addition they will receive one and a quarter million acres of land to be selected by them at their sweet will in any part of the North-West Territories. Is that reasonable? The Company do not pay of their own as much money as the Government allows them by $100,000 and gives a million and a quarter acres of land besides. I think this is an outrageous provision, one which the Government should reconsider even at this stage of the proceedings; and if they are going to hand over this hundred miles of road already constructed, they had better make some fresh provisions by which the sum Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

You will notice by section 7 that the Company are given the control of the trade of the North-West. It says:

"The railway constructed under the terms thereof shall be the property of the Company; and pending the completion of the eastern and central sections, the Government shall transfer to the Company the possession and right to work and run the several portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway already constructed or as the same shall be completed."

This means that within 24 hours after the ratification of this contract by Parliament, the Company can ask the Government to transfer to them the control of the Pembina Branch, and that gives them the control of the trade, of the North-West. We know that the St. Paul and Minneapolis Railway Company and this Syndicate are the same thing. They have already their road as far as Emerson, Give them the Pembina Branch to Winnipeg and you give them the control of the only gateway we have to the North-West; and if, as has been shown, their rates on the Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis Railway are extortionate, what will they be when they have control over the whole railway system of the North-West? If the Government held in their own hands the Pembina Branch until the whole road was completed, then they would have some protection. Had the Government held in their hands the Thunder Bay Branch until the other sections were completed, we might even then have some protection, but by clause seven of this eontract so soon as the Thunder Bay section is completed it must be handed over also. Suppose for a moment the Company had the Pembina Branch; they would then have the control of the trade of the North-West by that route, but if the Government kept in its hands the Thunder Bay Branch until the other sections of the road were completed, then for a time they would have a competing line on Canadian soil to compete with this road lying to the west. But the Government have bound themselves that so soon as the Thunder Bay section is completed that must be handed over to the Company also. They have one route by Pembina, they have another route by Thunder Bay, and whichever way we wish to approach the NorthWest we are obliged to travel over one of the roads of which this Company has control and we are at the mercy of the Company. If the Government had had any disposition to protect the interests of the North-West, they could have reserved in their possession control of the Thunder Bay Branch until the eastern section was completed, and they could have reserved the Pembina Branch until the whole road was completed; they could have protected themselves and the country against extortionate rates of freight tolls and passengers, etc. But in neither case have they protected the interests of the people. They have shut up both gateways to the North-West; they have placed the entire trade of the Dominion and the world, in so far as the North-West is concerned, at the mercy of this Syndicate, and whoseever wishes to send his produce into that country must pay such rates as the Company may demand, subject to the provise that these rates shall not exceed 10 per cent. of the proceeds of the running of the road. Now, I object again to the provisions of this contract by which this Company may receive lands for every 20 miles of the road which they may construct without the Company being bound to provide railway facilities. In that respect the contract seems to have been very loosely drawn up. It says:

"Upon the completion of the remainder of the portion of railway to be constructed by the Government, that portion shall also be conveyed to the Company, and the Canadian Paoisic Railway shall become and be thereafter the absolute property of the Company, and the Company shall thereafter and forever efficiently maintain, work and run the Canadian Pacific Railway."

provision, one which the Government should reconsider even at this stage of the proceedings; and if they are going to hand over this hundred miles of road already constructed, they had better make some fresh provisions by which the sum appropriated to this hundred miles is to be better regulated.

Who is to say what the words "efficiently maintain, work and run" mean? We have no explanation of this. There is no standard by which to govern ourselves in this matter. In the Act of 1874 every matter pertaining to the running and construction of the road was under the control of the Governor in Council definitely determined by this Under this contract the terms are vague; we cannot have a vaguer term that that applied to the running of the road. By section B, clause 8, I find the following:

"Upon the construction of any portion of the railway hereby contracted for, not less than 20 miles in length and the completion thereof so as to admit of the running of regular trains thereon, together with such equipment thereof as shall be required for the traffic thereon, the Government shall pay and grant to the Company the money, and land subsidies applicable thereto, according to the division appropriation thereof made, as hereinbefore provided."

In these words there is no obligation to run trains. All the Company has to do is to construct the road so as to "admit" the running of trains; but there is not one word in this contract from beginning to end which compels the Company to run a fixed number of trains—a train a week, a train a month or a train a year. On the other hand the Government is bound hand and foot so that when a 20 mile section of this road is completed they must hand over the land and money subsidies due for that section. So that the Company comes into the possession of that money and land applicable to the construction of a 20 mile section, and the Government has nothing in return, but the simple fact that the road has been constructed so as to "admit" of the running of trains, no obligation at all existing on the part of the Company to run those trains. I object again to another clause which permits the Government to become bankers to the Company. You will observe that by clause 9, section C, it says:

"If at any time the Company shall cause to be delivered on or near the line of said railway at a place satisfactory to the Government, steel rails and fastenings to be used in the construction of the railway, but no advance of the requirements of such construction, the Government, on the requisitions of the Company, shall, upon such terms and conditions as shall be determined by the Government, advance thereon three-fourths of the value thereof at the place of delivery."

I want to know if this Syndicate is to be so supplied with money, and if the whole resources of the country are to be taxed in order that abundant funds may be placed at their disposal. Why, the whole revenue of this country might be applied for the purchase of steel rails for that Company. If at any time the Company should feel that the market was favorable for the purchase of a quantity of steel rails, what are they to do? Invest their own money? Not at all, but they call on the Government to advance 75 per cent. on the cost of these steel rails, and then the Government has to wait to be recouped until a certain subsidy of money is to be appropriated for that part of the road on which steel rails were laid, and without interest. They have here, then, a real advantage conferred upon them by the Government to which I take objection. I object again to the fact that we are giving the Company the road-bed, their stations and so many privileges free. I am aware that in the Act of 1874 the intention of the Government was to give the Company the road bed and the land for the stations, &c., free. But this contract carries with it even more than that Act, in these words:

"In further consideration of the premises the Government shall also grant the Company the land required for the road bed of the railway and for its stations, workshops, and the water frontage of the termini, navigable waters, buildings and all other appartenances required for the efficient construction and working of the railway, in so far as such land shall be vested in the Government."

I would like to ask the Minister of Railways if this will cover all the property they have at Kaministiquia, Yale and Selkirk? Is there any limitation to be placed upon the extent of lands which the Government will feel disposed to give to the railway Company? For aught we can see, so far as this contract is concerned, the Government may hand over the excellent water frontage we have at Kaministiquia, the excellent privileges we have at Selkirk, and the property we have at Yale. It would seem as if the Government were exceedingly anxious to bestow everything in their objection, for this reason, that the Government and a power upon this Syndicate in order to facilitate the working private company are in two very different positions.

of their road and that they may derive the largest profits from their undertaking. I object, in the next place, to the propositions contained in clause 10 by which the material used in the construction of the road is to be admitted into this country free of duty. At London, the Minister of Railways said that the entire material used in the first construction of the road, if taxed at ordinary rates, would not contribute more than $100,000 to the revenue. I am not so sure that the Minister has correctly calculated what the duty is on the material. But why give them such an advantage? When the Union Pacific Railway in the United States was constructed it was stipulated that, in consideration of the Company receiving subsidies in land and money, the Company should equip their road in every point entirely with material of American manufacture, the object being, of course, according to the American system of encouraging native industry. Well, we have our policy to encourage home manufactures. We have heard a good deal of Canada for Canadians. What do we see in this charter? We see that the principle which now generally allowed to be in the interest of this country, namely, reserving Canada for the Canadians, is set aside, and we are going to have, as far as this railway is concerned, Canada for the Syndicate. Whoever may have to pay taxes, this Syndicate is to go scot free. The workman in Toronto is to pay 50 cents duty per ton on his coal, but this Syndicate pays nothing for whatever material they may use for the first construction of the road and branches, steel rails, spikes and fastenings; but the toiling fisherman, for instance, in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick has to pay his extra duty of 50 cents per barrel on flour, and has to submit to all the inconveniences which the tariff of hon, gentlemen opposite impose. He is poor and cannot resent such an injury in such an effective way as to make himself felt at the Capital. But this Syndicate, with their 25,000,000 acres and all the advantages this contract confers, are to be exempted from the duties on such materials as are contained in Section 10, used in the first construction of the road. Is this fair? What does it mean? It means that whether they be exempted from the payment of $100,000 or $1,000,000, that amount must be contributed to the revenue by somebody else, if it is to be kept buoyant. Every dollar of which that Syndicate is relieved is so much added to the burdens of some other consumers. But that policy seems to be objected to by many hon. gentlemen opposite. I noticed in the Mail that, previous to the announcement of the terms of this Syndicate, the following words were written in an editorial:

"In view of the fact that steel rails are being largely imported into the United States, just because the demand exceeds the supply, and the enormous requirements of the Canadian Pacific, it is claimed that the ability of Pictou's iron region to sumply the demand should not be overlooked. An outlay of $2,00,000 in the home manufacture of the nails required for the Canadian Pacific would eventually be the saving of $5,000,000. It is urged that a representation should be made to the Canadian Syndicate of Nova Scotia's iron prospects, and an inspection invited, with a view to their exploration.

It was expected, so the Mail thought, that a great quantity of steel would be required on the Canadian Pacifi. Railway, and that it would lead to the development of the iron mines of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. What must be the astonishment of the editor of the Mail and the people of this country, who were taught to believe the Government would take every pains to foster Canadian manufactures, to find a clause in this bargain exempting from duty such materials as we can conveniently manufacture ourselves? I object, then, to the exemption made in regard to such materials for the benefit of the Company. But we are told: "Oh! if the Government constructed the road itself, it could import its material free of duty." I say that is no answer to the the Western Railway company Supposing Great interviewed the hon, the Minister of Customs when they were importing locomotives or other material for the equipment of their road and said "it is very unfair to charge duty on this material"; the Minister of Customs would naturally ask why?" "Because," the manager would say "when you import material for the Intercolonial Railway you pay no duty yourselves. Why not let us import our material free of duty in the same way." On precisely the same basis should the Syndicate be placed; when they import material for the construction or equipment of their road, let them be placed in precisely the same position as other Railway Companies. We have here a precedent for any number of demands from other Railways which the Government cannot very well refuse to consider. In view of the fact that it is the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite to tax whatever material comes into this country and to foster such manufactures as a tariff is supposed to encourage, I do hold that the hon, gentlemen are not acting consistently with their professions when they place such a clause in the contract. want to notice, as another objection, a small concession, but still an important one: the steel rails purchased by the Government since 1879, are to be handed over to the company at cost price. The clause reads as follows:—

"And will convey to the company, at cost price, with interest, all rails and fastenings bought in or since the year 1879, and other materials for construction in the possession of or purchased by the Government at a valuation; such rails, fastenings, and materials not being required by it for the construction of the said Lake Superior and western sections."

Now, what does that mean? We were told when the hon. the Minister of Railways made the purchase of a large quantity of steel rails at something like $25 a ton, that he made an excellent bargain for the country. We were prepared from this side of the House to give the hon. gentleman credit for having made an excellent bargain. We thought that it was made in the interests of the country, and that at some future time the people would benefit by the advantageous character of that bargain. How does it appear now? We have here the fact stated in the 10th clause of this contract that all the advantages to accrue from the excellent terms made by the Minister of Railways when he purchased these steel rails are to be handed over to the Company, and that the bargain was made, not for Canada but for the Syndicate. The value of that simple concession to the Syndicate is put by some at $790,000. I do not know what it may be; I care not what it may be, but it is on the face of it one of those many concessions which show how completely the Syndicate must have had the Government under its control before it could wring from them day by day and step by step one concession after another until it piled up for itself advantages which, if this contract is ratified by Parliament, will no doubt net to them many millions in future. Then, I take objection to the 11th clause. Instead of the Company selecting lands of average quality, they are to select lands fit for settlement. There is every difference, as hon. gentlemen will perceive, between lands of average quality and what may be lands fit for settlement. Professor Macoun says there are 200,000,000 acres in the fertile belt; of that 80,000,000 are arable, about 80,000,000 more only fit for pasturage, that the balance is swamp, muskeg and sand hills. If the Company were obliged to take the average lands, then all the various characteristics of the land in the North West could be estimated and what was an average quality agreed upon; but the Company have the Government in this position, that when a section of land comes to be inspected, the question is not: Is this land of average quality? but: Is this arable land? Is it fit for settlement? Is it such land as a pioneer would choose to build a house upon and make his home? The effect will be that this upon and make his home? The effect will be that this proposition which will give the Company 14,000,000 acres. Company will have a roving commission through the of the 25,000,000 millions appropriated for them along the Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

North-West, rejecting section after section and appropriating in each case for their own use such lands as will be fit for settlement. The hon. Minister of Railways, at London, said that the Company would be obliged first to take lands in the lertile belt, and then to take their lands in the Peace River District. And then he read to his audience, at London, the 11th clause of this Act which says:

"The grant of land hereby agreed to be made to the Company, shall be so made in alternate sections of 640 acres each, extending back 24 miles deep, on each side of the railway, from Winnipeg to Jasper House, in so far as such lands shall be vested in the Government, the Company receiving the sections bearing uneven numbers. But should any of such sections consist in a material degree of land not fairly fit for settlement, the Company shall not be obliged to receive them as part of such grant, and the consist in a material degree of land not fairly fit for settlement, the Company shall not be obliged to receive them as part of such grant, and the deficiency thereby caused and any further deficiency which may arise from the insufficient quantity of land along the said portion of railway, to complete the said 25,000,000 aeres, or from the prevalence of lakes and water stretches in the sections granted (which lakes and water stretches shall not be computed in the acreage of such sections), shall be made up from other portions to be selected by the Company in the tract know as the fertile belt, that is to say the land lying between parallelis 49 and 57 degrees of north latitude or elswhere at the option of the Company."

Now, the Minister of Railways, in the City of London, said that the company could not go elsewhere—that they must select their lands in the fertile belt. He said:

"Why sir, we are told the Syndicate have the option of picking out the best lands in the North-West. Where did they find that out? It is not in the contract, but the very reverse."

And then he read the 11th clause until he came down to the words "fertile belt," but he failed to read the words "or elsewhere" thus plainly misleading his audience in regard to that very important section of the contract. Does the hon, gentlement mean to say that this company cannot go into any part of the North-West and select such lands as they may require? Why, we have it here, in the contract that if the land is not to be found in the fertile belt they may go into any part of the North-West. They may exhaust the lands in the fertile belt and go elsewhere and get lands that are fit for settlement, and having got those lands, they can take possession of them and hold them for their own use and benefit. Sir, this is, to characterize it in mild terms, a monstrous proposition. It gives the Company such a monopoly of the lands fit for settlement, of such lands as the settler may desire, such lands as would be an inducement to emigrants, as must materially affect the prosperity of that country. And I would like to know, when the Company has selected such lands as are fit for settlement, how much land will be left for the Government. We have had various estimates as to the quantity of that land, but we have had no definite estimate yet submitted to this House, as to the quantity of good land fit for settlement that will remain after the Company have taken their 25,000,000 acres, and strange to say they can not only take these 25,000,000, as far as it goes along the main line, but they get the same privilege along the branch lines, and the privileges conferred along the latter are even more liberal than those are on the main line. Before they can get the land on the main line, they must construct the road, but the land given to them on the branch lines does not involve the construction of those lines; all that it involves is that the Company, if they find that there is an area of land in any part of the country fit for settlement, should sketch that area of land upon a map to indicate where they intend to build a branch line, send that map down to the office of the Minister of Railways and thenceforward that land is pre-empted for the benefit of the Company. Could there be any proposition more absurd? If we expect, and we may expect, to appropriate lands along the line where it involves the opening up of the country and construction of the railway for the benefit of colonization we may, accept that proposition. Surely hon. gentlemen do not ask this House, surely they are not serious in asking this House to accept a branch lines north and south through the fertile belt, through the coal regions, and wherever there may be good land, without imposing on the Company the responsibility of opening up the country by the construction of roads. It is bad enough to give the lands where the construction of the road is required, but it is infinitely worse to pre-empt the land without providing for the construction of the line of railway through those regions. I hope that even yet the Government will see their way to withdraw this clause, the worst of all clauses in this very bad contract. Then, Sir, I object to the mode in which provision is made for the extinguishment of the Indian title. We have already paid largely for the extinguishment of the Indian title in the North-West. If it was in the interest of the Company that we should expend $1,000,000 a year or a sum at once for the extinguishment of those titles north of the Saskatchewan, the Government has no option. When provision was being made for the Union Pacific lands the title had to be extinguished as soon as it might be to the interest of the Government or the company, but in this contract the matter is peremptory—the title shall be extinguished the moment the Company require it. I object to the contract because the location of the road is not more definitely laid down. True, the location of the road is to be subject to the approval of the Governor-in-Council, that is, the Executive; but, Sir, when I view the provisions of this contract, I almost lose confidence in the Governor in Council. After the liberal concessions which the Executive have already made to this Syndicate what guarantee have we that they will not be very liberal with the Company and allow them to deflect the line anyway it suits their interests, however much they may disregard the interests of the country in doing so. Another astonishing provision of the contract is, that this road is to have no competition in the trade of the North-West for 20 years. I do not propose to enlarge upon this objection, because it has been discussed at considerable length, but I simply wish once more to call attention to it, so that the voice of members on this side of the House may be heard and their sentiments known, in the hope that even yet the North-West may be saved from the disastrous consequences which such a monopoly must inflict upon it. Another clause to which I object is the one which provides for the exemption of the property of the Company from taxation forever. The Minister of Railways stated at London, according to the Free Press, that the Union Pacific property did not pay taxes, but I find from Poor's Railway Mannual that in 1877-78 that road paid for general expenses and taxes $505,329. Surely that hon, member could not have weighed his words or could not have considered the responsibility which is attached to all his statements when he made a remark of that description. I find also that the Central Pacific, a road of which we have also heard a good deal in this debate, paid in the same year $378,986.27. The Railways in England and France pay taxes upon their property; but the Company with which we are dealing enjoy special advantages in almost every respect. The hon. Minister also said that, according to the laws of Minnesota, railways were exempt from taxation in that state. In reply to that I shall quote the clause of the law of Minnesota, which deals with that subject:

"All property, whether real or personal, in this state, all moneys, credits, investments in lands, stock, joint stock companies, or otherwise, of persons residing hereis; the property of corporations now existing or hereafter created, and of all bankers, except such as is hereinafter expressly exempted, is subject to taxation; and such moneys, credits, investments in bonds, joint stock companies, or otherwise, or the value thereof, shall be entered in the list of taxable property, for that purpose, in the manner perscribed by this chapter."

And when we turn to the list of exemptions, we find public school houses, grave-yards, county buildings, institutions of a public or charitable character, but there is no exemption of railway stock or properties. Hon. gentlemen say we are copying the railway system of the United States; but we are doing nothing of the kind. The Minister of Railways further said that in the State of Wisconsin, railway property was exempted from taxation. I will quote from the laws of that State:

"It shall be the duty of the railroad companies to pay or cause to be paid to the treasurer of the State, for the use of the State, on or before the tenth day of January in each year, a sum equal to one per centum of the gross earnings of their respective roads so returned, which amount of tax shall take the place and be in full of all the taxes of every name and kind upon said roads, or other property belonging to said companies."

So that, while the property of railway companies may be exempted from direct taxation, these companies have to pay one per cent. of their gross earnings instead of taxation. But this Syndicate is not only exempt from taxation, but there is no provision at all in this contract or charter that the Province or the Dominion shall receive any part of the earnings of the road in lieu of taxes, and I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to mention any leading line of railway in the United States, from Maine to San Francisco, whose property is exempt from taxation. They may find one or two insignificant roads in a small part of the country exempt from it but the universal system with respect to roads of any importance is that they shall either pay taxes or contribute a certain portion of their earnings in-lieu of taxes. I am aware that the charter of the Northern Pacific Railway, provided that that road should be exempt from taxation in the territories of the United States, so long as they remained territories. But here we have the astounding monopoly given to this road that, not only is it exempt through Dominion lands, but that any municipal government that be erected in these territories will not be allowed to exact taxes from station grounds. A similar question came up some years ago in connection with the Hudson's Bay Company, when my hon, friend from Halton (Mr. Macdougall) and Sir Geo. E. Cartier were negotiating for the transfer of Rupert's Land to the Dominion of Canada. One of the claims made by the Mudson's Bay Company was that no taxes should be imposed on any lands belonging to the Company, or on the Company's property or the Company's servants. This demand was made by the Hudson's Bay Company before they were prepared to transfer their interest in the lands of the North-West to the Dominion. But were these demands conceded? The member for Halton, in his report to the Government, says:

"In 1868 these conditions for the surrender of territorial and governing rights over the whole territory remained at £1,000,0.0 as in the first proposition of 1864, with large reservations of land at 'selected' points, specially exempted from taxation, and with full liberty to carry on their trade free from the export and import duties, to which all other subjects of Her Majesty in the country would be exposed. In 1869 these various proposals, which no Secretary of State could possibly entertain, have all been apparently merged in one grand proposition 'to sell out the territory at once for a sum of money,' in cash or bonds, the amount of which is not stated."

The hor, gentleman was mistaken, Sir. He was not then aware that we were going to have a Government in the year of grace, 1880, that could entertain proposals far more extensive and far reaching than the proposals which he believed in the interest of the country should be rejected so far as the Hudson's Bay Company were concerned. He said that no Secretary of State could entertain a proposal to exempt the land of the Hudson's Bay Company from taxation, and yet we have come down to a period in the history of the country, when not only a Secretary of State of Railways, and the whole executive of the country, are prepared to accept a proposal by which a fair greater area than the Hudson's Bay Company proposed to reserve, is exempted from taxation. I know the impartiality of my hon, friend from Halton in matters of this kind, and I know that his past record on such important questions as the purchase of Rupert's land will lead him to consider that the clause to which he refused his assent in that case is repeated in this Syndicate's proposal, and I trust that he and other hon. gentlemen in this House will reject it. We are told, however, that if we build the road ourselves, it will be exempt from taxes. I suppose the cases would not be parallel. In the first case, the road would be exempt from taxes, and would be our own road; in the other, it is exempt, and is the property of a private company. Suppose the Minister of Railways has a farm of 500 acres, and a man comes to him to rent the farm. "Well," asks the Minister, "what rent will you pay?" "Why, I don't pay any rent," replies theman. "No," says the Minister, "but you don't expect me to give you a farm without any rent." That is the case exactly. We own the railway, and it may be exempt, but when we transfer it to a private company, we should no longer exempt it. The analogy does not hold, the argument is futile and is of no value. But the Minister of Railways said in London that the railways in New Brunswick were exempt from taxes. Let me notice a slight defect in his statement. I have in my hand an Act to exempt the property of railways from taxation in the Province of New Brunswick. I am aware that the exemption extends to the railway, the rolling stock and the station ground. But notice the last clause of the Act:

"The exemption provided by this Act shall not extend to actual profits derived from the running of any railway, after deducting expenses."

The Act of the Province of N. B., is a restrictive Act; it is not so wide or general in its application as the one we are considering. If the provision I have quoted applied to the Pacific Railway, the moment the Company had a profit of one or two millions dollars, the road would be liable to taxation; but there is no limit in their case. And here let me remark that this is an invidious distinction. No railway in the Province of Ontario is exempt from taxation. The Canada Southern, the Great Western and the Grand Trunk pay taxes. And why not? They get the advantage of all local improvements, for which the public are taxed, and they, who share the advantages, should not be relieved of the burdens. Suppose this company has its shops and station grounds in a nice little town in the North-West and schools are opened in the town. The workmen employed in the Railway Company at that town can get the advantages of the schools and all other advantages and contribute nothing for them. Here you are building up a specially favored class in the community. What does it mean? It means that the people of the North-West, as far the Railway Company is concerned, must tax themselves extra to the extent from which the Company is relieved, in order to secure such advantages as schools, highways, sidewalks, and other advantages of civilization. Now, I contend these are privileges which this House should not sanction-privileges in the shape of a bonus which if they are to be conceded, their value should be estimated. We are told that this scheme is cheaper that the Mackenzie's scheme of 1874, but if we had a cash value placed upon all these advantages we might then know what we are paying and how much of our property is to be transferred to this Company. There is another grievance to which I must refer, and that is: when a new Province is erected and we come to confer upon it those advantages which it can claim Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

to form a Province in the North-West, and when the people come to find that the railway lands are exempt from taxation, with all the railway property, and that the means for maintaining the municipal institutions in that Province are closed against them, they will say: "If we are going to erect ourselves into a Provincial Government we must obtain a larger subsidy from the Dominion Exchequer, because we have not the advantages of taxation which other Provinces have." For instance, if one-fourth of Ontario or Quebec were exempt from taxation in what position would they be? Evidently, in order to maintain prosperity, they would have to draw freely from the exchequer of this Dominion; and the whole Dominion, from Vancouver's Island to Halifax, would need to be more largely taxed, because of the exemption we are now considering under this contract. I hope the House clearly understands, that when the property and land of American railways were exempted from taxation, in nearly every case there were some other considerations such as I have referred to. Now, I am about to consider another objection, and that is, the lands of this Company are exempted from taxes for twenty years, or until occupied or sold. I am of opinion that the hon. the Minister of Justice, if reported aright to me, in considering the question, did not give that attention to which we would expect him to give to a matter of so much importance. I am told that at Almonte, the other night, the hon. the Minister of Justice stated that the railway property, under the Act of 1874, was also exempted from taxation. I could hardly believe it, but, of course, it must be true. It is quite in keeping with what we have seen in the case of the standard of the road. How many more revelations of that kind may be made before the discussion closes, I cannot say. The hon, the Minister of Railways, in London, said that the moment the Company put their finger upon the land, that moment it would be taxed. I do not know what he means by that. As I understand it, this land is exempted from taxation for twenty years, or until it is sold or occupied, and I cannot understand how placing a finger upon these sections will be proof of occupation. Another objection is that this exemption will retard the settlement of the country. I think the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum) in making a confession to the House the other night, said that he did not like that. I think the hon, member for Essex (Mr. Patterson), also put in a disclaimer in regard to that matter. But it is true nevertheless that, according to this contract, the lands are exempt from taxation for 20 years. You, Sir, will remember a discussion we had last year, on a motion of the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), in which it was proposed that the land to be sold for railway purposes in settlements should be sold on conditions of long credit. We argued that they would be occupied by speculators until such improvements were made in the neighborhood by others as would advance their price. In respect to that objection the right hon. the First Minister said:

scheme of 1874, but if we had a cash value placed upon all those advantages we might then know what we are paying and how much of our property is to be transferred to this Company. There is another grievance to which I must refer, and that is: when a new Province is erected and we come to confer upon it those advantages which it can claim under our Confederation Act, we will be bound to consider the exemption from taxation of the lands and property of this Company. This will mean, then, that the whole Dominion must be taxed in order to provide a larger subsidy for the maintenance of the local institutions of such new provinces or provinces. We pay Manitoba already 80 cents a head and several other perquisites. If we handed over to Manitoba already 80 cents a head and several other perquisites. If we handed over to Manitoba already 80 cents a head and several other perquisites. If we handed over to Manitoba already 80 cents a head and several other perquisites. If we handed over to Manitoba already 80 cents a head exchequer would not need to be so large. When you come

"Municipal institutions have now been introduced into Manitoba. At first they only passed a permissive Bill, but now they have passed a compliance in the oditivities, and these are compelled, in the course of this summer, to adopt a municipal system, which is that of Ontario in principle. Every one of these districts is obliged to establish a municipal system, which is that of Ontario in principle. Every one of these districts is obliged to establish a municipal system with the organisation that obtains in Toronto so that the people who own every second lot, will have a direct interest in insisting upon and in unpassing a non-resident tax upon all peculators. The getmore that, and they are checked by the fact that the actual resident tax of the operation will be the same as it was in the old Province of Upper Canada. I remember the time before the land tax was passed, when every indinhabitant had a large tract of land which he kept for speculation

Mr. MACKENZIE. It was precisely the land speculators that bought up the lands.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But they sold again. Of course the land speculators bought them and paid the rates, and the municipalities got the money and laid it out in roads and bridges, and the improvement of the country; and the new speculators who bought those lands were obliged to selt them or continue to pay taxes, and we all know the consequence was that such things as large land proprietors, which have been pictured to us by the hon. member for North Norfolk, do not exist in Ontario."

Now, Sir, that was the answer the First Minister made to the objection we brought against the sale of railroad lands without the absolute condition of settlement. It is a tolerably good answer. The fact that taxes could be imposed would ultimately compel the speculator to dispose of those lands; otherwise, the taxation from year to year would absorb the profits that would, perhaps, accrue in the increased price of the land. But in what position will this Syndicate be placed? They will have their 25,000,000 acres exempt from taxation, and, as I have shown from the Order in Council of 1866, they will derive the profits of the energy and industry of the settlers. Every man that settles on a section of Government land in the North-West will be a hewer of wood and drawer of water to this great corporation. Every road he makes, every bridge he builds to span a little stream or rivulet will be clear gain to this Syndicate. Every dollar he invests in the improvement of communication between the back parts of the Government lands and the front will benefit the Syndicate. Moreover, if the settlers wish to levy rates to secure the construction of roads or erection of school-houses, instead of levying a single rate which they would do under other circumstances, they will have to levy two rates on their own properties, because the Syndicate property is free. I believe this will be a practical bar to the settlement of the lands in the North West. It is tantamount to telling every man we invite from the other side of the Atlantic that, the moment he settles on our lands in the North-West, instead of contributing of his means for his own advantage and the comfort of his family, every dollar he invests for the benefit of himself and neighbors will be so much to the advantage of the Company that contributes not one dollar itself. This exemption is more monstrous and more burdensome, and will be so found by the settler than, perhaps, any other. How was it in old Canada with the Canadian Company's lands? Those of you who are older than myselfand more familar with the early settlement of the country, know at what disadvantage the settler was placed in having to build his road past the Canadian Company's lot that did pay a certain amount of taxes; and such disadvantages will accrue in a much more painful and serious degree to the settler in the North-West. This provision is worthy of consideration and should be struck out of the contract. But we are some times told by hon. gentlemen that railway lands in the United States do not pay taxes. I have shown that the Union Pacific Railway lands were exempt in the territories, only so long as they so remained. When they were erected into States, each State was permitted to exercise its sovereign right of imposing taxes upon railway lands; and I notice a quotation from the Chicago Railway Age, under date of December 30th, as follows:-

"The Illinois Central Railway is an institution in which this State ought to take great satisfaction. During the six months, ended October 31st, this Company earned on its Illinois lines $2,893,728, of which $202,561 was paid over to the State, being the seven per cent. tax on its receipts."

Thus we have the Illinois Central Railway paying, in about one year, $400,000 into the State treasury in lieu of taxation; and I have a statement which shows that the road, since 1870, has contributed $2,934,654 to that State, and to the State treasury of Iowa, $371,840. If there was a provision in that charter, that the lands of the Syndicate be exempt from taxation, and that, in lieu of it, this railway should pay into the treasury of the Dominion, or into that of the four-thirteenths, so that a national character was given to provinces to be erected in the North-West, a certain proportion of their cash carnings, then there would be some reason in asking the House to consider this proposition. But instead of there being any return to the Dominion, or the future provinces for this exemption, we have, on the contrary, a proposal of this Government to bind the provinces hereafter to be erected so that they may not exercise their sovereign rights in taxing those lands. If the North-West happens to be settled, as I trust it will be, by people of the spirit and independence of the inhabitants of Ontario, I venture to say there may spring up in the North-West a series of troubles and annoyances to the Syndicate, in regard to which the Government may be called to interfere. By this exemption, I fear, we are sowing the seeds of future trouble in regard to the social and political quietude of that vast territory. I object, again, to the provision by which the land is given to the Company in alternate blocks of 640 acres. I think this is not a wise allocation. The Bill of 1874 gave the company large blocks extending from the railway 20 miles backthe same as in the Sir Hugh Allan charter and in some of the United States Railroad Acts. The Canadian Government has an opportunity of considering a better plan than the alternate blocks, by giving the Syndicate a larger area, or blocks of, say, 10 miles square, and reserving for themselves a similar area, by which settlements could be more easily promoted; that is to say, settlements could be in such areas and over such an extent as would enable settlers to assist each other, and obtain all the advantages of our modern civilization. They could have easy local communication with each other, which advantage would be impossible under the present system. I find, besides, that among the other concessions made in this contract all the exertions of this Government in the promotion of immigration and the settlement of the North-West will redound to the advantage of the Company. We employ emigration agencies in the old country, and have an extensive immigration system in Ottawa, the whole machinery costing between $200,000 and $300,000 a year, sometimes more. We suppose that, in maintaining such an immigration bureau, the people of the Dominion will be exclusively benefitted. But, under the present centract, every immigrant brought into the country, and whose expenses are paid by it, may settle on the Company's lands, which he may buy without benefitting the Government of the country. Sir, there should have been some partnership in regard to this matter. There is a partnership in regard to the construction of the road; why not negotiate a partnership in regard to the expenses of immigration? And then I object to another provision in this contract, as explained in section 22, by which the Company is made a close corporation. The capital of the Company is $25,000,000, subscribed stock $5,000,000, $1,000,000 paid into the treasury, and by section 22 no transfer of the stock of the Company can be made by one person to another without the consent of the shareholders. Under the Sir Hugh Allan charter no transfer of the charter could be made for six years without the consent of the Government. The Government had security that the original shareholders of the company would be such men as they might approve. Why, Sir, this is a close corporation that, under the shadow of some ministerial office in of Ottawa, negotiated with Ministers th Ministers this bargain erecting themselves into a close corporation of seven men, provided seven men take up this stock, and no other man can share the profits and emoluments connected with the road, except at the sweet will of the corporation. How different the case was even with the Sir Hugh Allan contract. The stock was divided among different provinces. A national character was given to that contract. Ontario had five-thirteenths of the stock, Quebec four-thirteenths, and Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, British Columbia and Manitoba the other

What is the national character of this? the scheme. It is simply that it is mainly in the hands of American shareholders, to which I am not prepared to offer objection now; but men of means and enterprise, who should have a right to share in any public undertaking out of which a Canadian citizen can make a dollar, are practically debarred by this contract from investing one cent in this undertaking. Why confine it to those few? Why not open the stock books as the stock books of the Union Pacific Railway were opened at the leading cities of the United States, and the citizens of that republic, from San Francisco to New York, permitted to invest? They nationalized the undertaking. We, instead of nationalizing our road, propose to denationalize it. Instead of enlisting the sympathies of thousands in this country if it is to be a profitable undertaking (and I have no doubt it will be) we are confining the profits of it to seven men who subscribed their names to this contract, and no other man can share in those profits without their consent. I object to this proposition, and I say the Government has no right to make this a close corporation in the manner in which it is made. I say again, this contract prevents suitable railway development in the North-West Territories. You will observe the main line will require the construction of 900 miles of railway to be completed in ten years. of ten years, so far as this Company is concerned, all the railway the North-West will have will be 900 miles. The branches, in order to absorb the land, would need to extend 1000 miles more, but there is no obligation on the Company to construct the branches in a given time. They may postpone the construction of the banches until the lands located on this map which I have referred to become so valuable that it might be in their interest to construct them. do we provide? We have a territory there of 250,000,000 acres. The railway accommodation which we provide for it is 900 miles of main line, and we shut out everybody else from constructing branches except in particular directions, and I venture to say that their railway, by locating on a map branch lines, can forestall any person from building a branch line in any conceivable direction. Is this fair? We have in Ontario, 6,484 miles of railway, and we are binding the further settlements of the North-West to accept oneseventh of the railway accommodation that we claim for ourselves. In the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin and Pensylvania, covering an area about equal to the North-West, they have 38,422 miles of railway accommodation. We are confining the North-West to less than one-fortieth of the railway accommodation which is provided by local enterprise and otherwise for those States. Is that fair? We boast of our enterprise in developing that country. We say that it is worthy of us, as a young people, to put forth all our energes to secure the development of the North-West, and yet while making those loud, those vain and vapid boasts, we are binding for twenty years the resources of that country to 900 miles of railway. If you want to develop the North-West, you should allow every facility for the construction of railways. You should not put into the hands of a monopoly power to prevent the construction of such branch lines as the state of settlement might require. Having referred to so many objections to this contract, I want to call attention to a few omissions. Not only has the Government been guilty of sins of commission, but it has also been guilty of sins of omission, and perhaps the sins of omission are almost as serious in some instances as the sins of commission. In the first place, they have omitted to make any provision for inspecting the work which this Syndicate is to lay out in the construction of the road. They have omitted to make any provision for the inspection of the road as constructed. Under the Sir Hugh Allan contract, provision was made for the inspection of all the material to be used in the construction of the road. Under the Act of 1874 the material in the construction

tion Government, and approval of the may Governor in Council. Here we have rewhich the Commissioners peated construction the in the United States reported on the Union Pacific Railway of the United States. There is no guarantee but this road may be constructed in the cheapest and plainest manner possible. But we are told that it would be in the interests of the Company to make a good road as they are going to run it. How do you know the Company are going to run this road? How do you know that after they have completed it in such a way as to admit of the running of trains as the contract requires, and after the lands and subsidies are conveyed to them under this contract, but they will renounce and repudiate the running of the road? How do we know but they will adopt this plan? If, however, the Government see fit to inspect this road as it progresses we have some guarantee at least that the road will be constructed of suitable material. Again, I notice that the Government is exercising no control whatever over the directorate of this road. Under the Union Pacific Railway charter, the directorate consisted of twenty members, five of whom were to be appointed by the United States Government, and on every Committee of the Union Pacific Railway one of the Government Commissioners was to be a member. Under the Sir Hugh Allan charter the subsidies and lands were to be handed over to three trustees, one of whom was to be appointed by the Government. Here we have 25,000,000 acres of land and $25,000,000 handed over to a Company, and yet the Government is to exercise no control over the deliberations of that Company; no representative of the Government is to be on the managing board of that Company, and what appropriations they may make of the land, what dispositions they may make of the money is a matter the Government does not seem to have considered. I see there is no provision for the number and character of the trains to be run on this road—a very serious omission. We are told the road is to be efficiently worked; who is to be the judge of that? Why not make such a provision as in the Act of 1874, that the character of the equipment, the rates to be charged on passengers and freight to be under the direction of the Government? Again, there is no provision made for the survey of lands. Such a provision existed in the Sir Hugh Allan charter of 1872. Again, we find that while, as there was, in the Act of 1874, provision whereby military stores and troops and material required for military purposes, were to be transmitted over the road on special rates, or on rates to be agreed upon between the Government and the Company, in this charter there is no special provision of the kind. Again there is no reservation by the Government of coal or mineral lands. Wherever the Company may find such land all they will have to do will be to locate their line, put in their map, and, presto! the mineral lands are preempted by the Company. Mr. Fleming says in his last report:

"On the North Saskatchewan at Edmondon, and further down the river near Victoria, coal of fair quality is known to exist. Exposures have been observed on this river as far as the Rocky Mountain House, and one seam of 18 to 20 feet is mentioned by Mr. Selwyn of the Geological Survey. Mr. Macoun found coal 150 miles east of Rocky Mountain House on an affluent of Battle River. It is again seen 100 miles south, and has been traced to the Blackfoot crossing on Bow River, where there are seams from three to six feet thick. South of Bow River many fine seams have been found, and near Fort McLeod coal is now regularly worked. Brown nodular iron-stone is reported from various localities in connection with coal and shales, but not as yet in workable quantities."

as the sins of commission. In the first place, they have omitted to make any provision for inspecting the work which this Syndicate is to lay out in the construction of the road. They have omitted to make any provision for the inspection of the road as constructed. Under the Sir Hugh Allan contract, provision was made for the inspection of all the material to be used in the construction of the road. Under the Act of 1874 the material in the construction and equipment of the road was to be subject to the inspection the vork have omitted to make any provision for the sale of the lands within a reasonable time—they may keep them just as long as it suits their interests to do so. In the case of the Union Pacific, the Company was compelled at the end of three years to allow the Government to preempt the lands and sell them the same as any other lands, at the rate of $1...5 per acre; but in the present case the lands may be held not only for 20 years, but unless they are conveyed to the Company by the Crown, they may be held for thirty or forty years, and we have no guarantee that they will not do so. There should have been a provision by which, if the Company held their lands beyond a certain reasonable time, the Government could take possession of them and dispose of them for the purposes of settlement. There is no provision for taking the road off the Company's hands, or for compelling them to keep it in repair. The hon, member for Annapolis (Mr. Longley), while discussing the contract, said that the whole question at issue rested on the simple question: Is this a better plan than the one of 1874? And the hon, gentlemen answered his question in the affirmative. I deny that this plan is better than that of 1874. The Minister of Railways, in his speeches in this House and in the country, says that the scheme of 1874 involved an expenditure of $104,000,000 which he makes up in this way: cash subsidy,$27,970,000; land subsidy,at $1 per acre $55,240,000. And here is where the hon. gentlemen made a mistake. He assumed that as part of the provisions of the plan of 1874, the contracting Company for the construction of that road were to receive 4 per cent on a certain sum to be named by the directors for 25 years. He accepted the sum named by the directors for the Georgian Bay Branch, $7,500 per mile, as a basis. That sum at 4 per cent would yield $300 a year. The Minister of Railways assumed that an annuity of $300 for twenty-five years was equivalent to a cash payment of $7,500; but in that assumption he was quite in error, for an annuity of $300 for twenty-five years is equivalent to only $4,862 of a cash payment, so that the total cash payment would be $13,116,742. The cost under the plan of 1874, instead of being $104,000,000 as stated by the Minister of Railways was only $97,026,742, a slight difference of about $7,000,000. If the hon Minister of Railways cannot calculate better than that he certainly does not evince much ability as an arithmetician, whatever he may be as a railway manager. But that is not all. In the plan of 1874 there is the following provision: -

"In every contract for the construction of the said railway, or of any section or sub-section thereof, the Government of Canada shall reserve the right to purchase, under the authority of Parliament, the said railway, or section, or sub-section thereof, on payment of a sum equal to the actual cost of said railway, section, or sub-section, and 10 per cent. in addition thereto,—the subsidies in land and money granted, or paid by the Government, for the construction of the said railway, being first returned or deducted from the amount to be paid, the lands sold being valued at the full amount the contractors may have received from the sale of such lands as may have sold."

Now, under this Act, if the Government purchased the road from the Company, they were to pay the cost plus ten per cent., deducting the subsidies in land and money. The hon. member for Lambton, in discussing this subject in the House in 1878, said, it was the intention of the Government, if they could make a contract with a company, to deduct from that contract the amount expended on the Thunder Bay Branch. Here are his words:

"It was the intention of the Government, as soon as the surveys were completed and the line located, to invite tenders under the Act of 1874, and under the terms of that Act the money expended upon the 228 miles under contract and to a great extent finished would be deducted from the contractors as part of the $10,000 per mile which the Act provides to be paid as a cash subsidy."

In the Act of 1874 we have it definitely provided that money expended by the Government in the construction of the road was to be deducted from the subsidies in land and money given to the Company. By accurate estimate, $97,000,000 was to be the cost of the road under that Act. Instead of voting $28,000,000, which the Government has expended, or is to expend, on the construction of the sections which they are to give over to the Company, that amount, as explained by Mr. Mackenzie as the intention of the Act of 1874, should be deducted from the whole appropri-proposed, the cost is $78,000,000; under the plan of the Act of 1874 we would have the road for $69,025,742.

Mr. PLUMB. Fifty-five million acres of land were given by the Act of 1874. How do you bring them down to $69,000,000 ?

Mr. ROSS. I have taken the lands at the estimate of a dollar an acre, given by the Minister of Railways. I am aware that if we break down this argument of hon. gentlemen, they have nothing else to lean upon, they do not pretend to have any other support. There is not an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House from first to last, who has stood up to defend this contract on its merits. I challenge any hon, gentleman to stand before any audience in the Dominion of Canada and take up that contract clause by clause and defend it. The hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum) did not like certain clauses, the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Patterson) did not like certain clauses, and, I venture to say, the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches themselves do not like some of the clauses. But these were wrung from them under circumstances of which we have no knowledge, and we have this contract thrust upon us simply because they did not throw the matter open to the wide world and receive tenders above board as they have received for other works. But, Sir, without insisting on the valuation to which I have referred, we find that the Act of 18.4 was exceedingly different from the one we are considering. The Act of 1874 did not exempt the lands from taxes for 20 years. How much is that worth? Let the hon, member for Niagara put a cash valuation on that. The hon, member has been reading the Railway Acts of the United States. He will find that some of the railway lands of the United States were taxed 14c. an acre, and some 11c. an acre, and the hon, gentleman knows that lands in Manitoba held by nonresidents are taxed from 5c. to 6c. an acre. Put that same rate on 25,000,000 acres for 20 years and it will amount to $10,000,000, an enormous sum, which shows the immense gain which this tax is to the Company. It not only relieves them from a regular payment of say $50,000 a year, but enables them to hold their lands in order that they may increase in value. By the Act of 1874 the road-bed and station grounds were not exempt, nor were the privileges connected therewith so extensive as those under this Act. It did not exempt the materials named in this contract from the payment of duty. What is the value of that? We do not know what it is; but we know that one of the members of this Syndicate, Mr. McIntyre, estimated that perquisite at $5,000,000. Under the Mackenzie Act there was no monopoly of trade for 20 years. Will my hon. friend from Niagara put a value on that? These exemptions are cash to the Company, and every one of them is a valuable consideration. Under this contract the lands are to be fit for settlement? Under the Act of 1874 they were to be of average quality, and they were to extend from Nipissing to Vancouver—a very different thing from giving the lands in the fertile belt, or wherever the Company choose to take them. Let us put a valuation on these lands, chosen in the different ways I have mentioned, and let us see the difference. Under the Act of 1874, the Government was to control two-thirds of the lands and to sell them on terms to be agreed upon between the Company and the Government. contract the Company can hold the lands as long as they There is no compulsion to sell the lands, while, under the Act of 1874, they could be compelled to sell their lands. Again, in the Act of 1874, there were provisions as to freights, tolls and charges. Under this contract the Company can charge just as much as they please, so long as the charges do not exceed 10 per cent. of the cost of construction—of the money which we give them with which to construct the road. If it were 10 per cent, on the money they themselves invest, it would be a different matter. ation. Then what would we have? Under the plan now Under the Mackenzie Act of 1874 the Government retained the power of stopping the work when they saw We could purchase the road from the Company by paying 10 per cent of the cost. Here we have a road—it may be worth purchasing or it may not-but once in the hands of the Company there is no provision by which it may be taken out of their hands. They may mismanage it and do whatsoever they please, and we have no relief. Under the Act of 1874 we had that power. Under that Act there were limitations and restrictions on the company which are not contained in this charter. Before I dismiss this point allow me to ask some hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House, before they tell the country that this road under the present scheme is going to cost only $78,000,000, to put a valuation, a fair, honest, reasonable valuation upon the exemption from taxation upon the lands and property of the Company and upon all the other privileges they obtained under the contract, and let us know what this road is going to cost. Let us not be dealing with hypothetical estimates, but let us have an estimate that covers all considerations which the Company receives, and then we will know what the road really does cost. Now, a word or two in regard to some of the dangers incident to the country from this contract. The first danger is the fact that the Company which is to construct this road is interested in another road. While that Company is running a road from Selkirk to Thunder Bay the same Company is running a road in the United States that might be a competing road with us, so that practically its interests in Canada are competing with those in the United States. That means that it will be able to protect its interests in both places. If the same Company is interested in lands in the United States to the value of $20,000,000, and we are giving them lands in our country, what guarantee have we that the Company will not direct the emigrants they bring out to this country upon their American lands rather than upon the Canadian lands, especially since they pay a certain percentage upon their earnings in the United States, I think 3 per cent. in lieu of taxes, and that our land in Canada upon which they pay no taxes for 20 years will be allowed to grow in value with the natural improvement of the country? Here is a serious danger which I think the Government has not considered. We have no guarantee in this contract that the immigration interests of this Dominion will not be made subservient to the settlement of the lands of this Company in the United States. Another danger is that this Company has control of the Pembina Branch, and is at the same time getting control of the Thunder Bay Branch, which will enable them effectually to control the traffic of the North-West. They have control of the two gateways into that country. I have already pointed out that if the Government had reserved control of one branch there would have been some protection, but giving the Company control of both we have no protection whatever. Even if we build the North Shore Branch there is no protection. They are interested in getting as large a dividend as possible from the American sections also. Suppose it would appear that by sending the traffic along by the Canadian section it would increase the profits on that road beyond 10 per cent, they could very easily divert the trade along the American section, and thus effectually dispose of their trade so as to steer clear of that restriction which is the only one placed upon their traffic. Again, I say the large grants to the central section are exceedingly dangerous. I say that the amount of property for the construction of the central branch - I say it on the authority of the Minister of Railways-will suffice to construct that central branch without the Company investing one dollar of their own money. Let me see if I can prove this. Last year the Minister of Railways, in discussing the Pacific Railway, said:

"The 1,000 miles from Selkirk to Jasper Valley, the dividing point just a man being held in bonds for $1,000 of your money by beyond the foot of the Rocky Mountains, including a light equipment the sum of $15 security. What security would that Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

—all that will be required for some years—Mr. Flaming estimates at $13,000,000, that is $3,000,000 more than the average estimate for the 200 miles west of Red River, in order to be entirely safe. We have 100 miles actually under contract, and have received tenders for the other 100 miles, and I do not expect the average cost to exceed that of the 100 miles just let

Mr. BLAKE. What is the amount estimated for the equipment per Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A light equipment is all we shall require

SIT CHARLES TUPPER. A night equipment is an we shall expense for some years.

Mr. BLAKE. Will it be $1,000 or $2,000 per mile?

SIT CHARLES TUPPER. When the traffic demands a heavier equipment there will be means for providing it.

Mr. BLAKE. I only want to know your estimate in dollars.

SIT CHARLES TUPPER. It is $13,000 per mile as against an estimate we should be justified in giving of $10,000 a mile, making $3,000,000 more than the average of the amount probably needed to complete and supply with a fair equipment the 200 miles we have under complete and supply with a fair equipment the 200 miles we have under contract on the prairies.",

There we have the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways that he is going to construct and equip the prairie section of this road for $10,000 a mile, and not simply to construct it, but to equip it with a light equipment. I find in this contract that for the 900 miles of road to be constructed on the prairie section, he is giving this Syndicate the exact amount which he estimates himself it will take to construct and equip the road, and that in cash; so that the Company, on his own showing, can sit down to-morrow, if this contract is ratified, and build 900 miles of that road from Selkirk to somewhere near the foot of the Rocky Mountains, and not invest one dollar of their own money. The hon. Minister furnishes the money; and if he only furnished the money it would be all right, but he does more than that, he gives them 12,500 acres of land per mile. According to his own statement he gives them altogether 11,250,000 acres of land. Is there anything more monstrous than this? Is there anything in the records of this House, since Canada had a Government in 1759, that shows such astounding recklessness on the part of its rulers? If they gave them $5,000 a mile, and then required that they should sell a part of that land and use the money to supply the deficiency, good and well, but he actually gives them just as much money as is necessary to construct and equip the road, and when that is done, when the 900 miles are built, the Syndicate can sit down and demand their pound of flesh, amounting to 11,250,000 acres. And this land the Minister of Railways valued, in 1874, at $5 an acre, and the First Minister, last year, at $4. If the members of the Syndicate can have $7,000,000 dicate can have $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 a piece by simply building 900 miles of road, will they construct the difficult and costly parts? Not at all. Why should they? They are commercial men, they understand their business. They have had a good thing in the St. Paul and Minneapolis Road. They bought it for $7,000,000 and could sell it for $30,000,000. Would they sell it? Not at all. We are giving them an entire monopoly. We are building, with the hard earnings of the people, 900 miles of road for this Syndicate, and are endowing them with 11,250,000 acres. I call the attention of the House to the fact, because I believe it is one of the most serious dangers in the contract. If the appropriation to the central section was a small one -if the appropriation for the eastern section could not be given to the central section, we should then have some guarantee that the eastern section would be completed. But we have no such guarantee. On the contrary, if it were possible to put in a contract a corrupt, unfair and tempting inducement to break through an obligation, it is there; and the Company would be more than human if they did not construct the central section, claim the branches, and then tell the Government: "We do not want any more land, build the eastern section at your sweet pleasure, we have got a good thing as we are." I say again the security for the construction of the road is not sufficient. It amounts to what? About one and a quarter cent in the dollar. Imagine be? The security under the Allan charter was much more effective and substantial. This Company are only bound in $1,000,000 to construct the road. They may construct the central branch, forfeit the $1,000,000, and let the Government construct the rest, and after they have constructed the road they are only bound in $5,000,000 to run it. Supposing they have constructed it; they have got the $25,000,000 cash, the Government holding only $5,000,000 security for the running of the road. The Company may say: If we refuse to run the road we shall lose only $5,000,000; we shall have to pay to the Government only $200,000 a year as a penalty. How will they argue? Like this: "If we run the road—] am calculating on the eastern or Lake Superior end-it will cost us $1,422,950 a year, it costs $2,343 to run a mile of railway in Canada; so 650 miles would cost $1,422,950," Now, supposing the road not to pay would save the difference between that amount and $200,000. That is precisely the position. Is not this an inducement to the Company to complete the road, get possession of the land-for it must absolutely be conveyed to them the moment it is completed-after which the Company may forfeit their $5,000,000 and refuse to run the road. are told we are giving these lands to compensate the Company for running the road till it pays expenses. We ought, then, to take the strongest guarantee possible that it shall do so. But this bond is not worth the paper it is written on; and ten years hence, when the road is completed, and it receives our lands, we shall be in the unhappy position of having parted with our lands and money, and having cast on our hands an expensive and unprofitable railway, to be run at the public expense. If the Government will hastily and unnecessarily construct this eastern section, posterity for whom we are supposed to be legislating will not rotected against the serious consequences of the value of our lands in the North-West, protected be of paying interest upon the debt which will accrue from the building of the road, and also the much more serious obligation of running this unproductive road. There is still another danger—this road may be a big political machine. The Americans have had their attention recently called to the danger of their political welfare from extensive railway combinations. In the Report of Hejburn's Commission in regard to the State of New York, Jay Gould is reported as speaking in the following strain:

"I do not know how much I paid towards helping friendly men. We had four States to look after, and we had to suit our politics to circumstances. In a Democratic district I was a Democrat; in a Republican district I was a Republican; and in a doubtful district I was doubtful; but in every district, and in all times, I have always been an Erie man."

We may have members in the Syndicate who may think it necessary to assist friends in elections. They may be in certain constituencies Conservatives, and in certain others Liberals, in others they may be doubtful; but following the analogy of the United States, in every case they may be Syndicate men, and the interests of the Syndicate will be paramount to the interests of the country. Are we not placing in the hands of these men vast power and endangering the future political equilibrium of the country and its future political safety? What would it matter to a Syndicate like this, of such large means to be liberal—what is to hinder its appropriating $500,000 and charging it to contingencies, to aid its friends in the elections?

Mr. PLUMB interrupted.

Mr. ROSS. Does my hon friend from Niagara (Mr. Plumb) expect a little assistance? Was he asking me to speak for him? If that majority of two is not going to be lost he had better look sharp.

Mr. PLUMB. It cost Mr. Hughes $17,500 to oppose me. Mr. ROSS. I am afraid my hon friend opposite has lost his majority of two already. I had a majority of 48, which was very small.

Mr. PLUMB. You would not have it to-day.

Mr. ROSS. Well, I will risk my 48 if the hon. gentleman will risk his two. I do not think the danger would be as great in my case as in that of my hon, friend. However, allow me to say that it is in the interest of the country to consider this matter at the present moment. If the future prosperity of the country depends upon the integrity and morality of our legislators, it would be well, if we pass this contract, to see that every possible means was adopted to prevent undue influence upon members of Parliament. I would not for a moment suppose that they wou'd be amenable to any unhallowed influence-but we do know that money is a very potent influence in some constituencies. We know from the records of the election courts that it is frequently resorted to, and I see that Mr. Gladstone intends, by legislation in the Imperial Parliament, to limit the expenditure in elections in constituencies in that country according to the size and population of each constituency in order to prevent corrupt practices. We may require legislation here in regard to this particular matter. I trust hon, gentlemen opposite will pause before they finally ask us to ratify this bargain. If I were speaking here to-night as a party man I would tell them this is the best weapon they could place in our hands with which to secure their defeat. I am prepared to pledge my honor and my word for what they are worth that if I had physical endurance to travel from one end of Ontario to the other with this contract in my hand, I venture to say that out of 88 constituencies in the Province, I could carry 60 or 70 without anything else but this contract. I know it, Sir.

Mr. PLUMB. Why do you oppose it then?

Mr. ROSS. I would not be afraid to enter the little borough of Niagara with the two of a majority which my hon, friend has received there. I know that constituency pretty well; I know that there are more than two honest Conservatives in Niagara ready to change their votes, and that is all that would be required—or half that number. If I were speaking as a party man I would say to the Government to ratify that bargain forthwith. "You did well to conceal it from Parliament; you did well to put these exemption clauses there and not to exact any proper security for the construc-tion and running of the road." It is a magnificent weapon: it is a Krupp gun for us. Let us go through the country with that and constituency after constituency would be carried; and seat after seat now filled with smiling faces would be vacant after the election was over, but, Sir, I am not speaking as a party man. I would willingly forego a hundred times all the party advantages which this contract contains if the Government, to-night, or at any time, would stand up in their places and tell Parliament and the country that this contract was no more; and I venture to say, from one end of the Dominion to the other, wherever this contract is understood, wherever intelligent men have considered it irrespective of politics, no more joyful news could be spread throughout this land than the tidings which the telegraph would flash from the Atlantic to the Pacific, that this contract was abandoned and that Canada was emancipated and free from any of the terrible consequences likely to flow from it.

Mr. RYKERT. Mr. Chairman, if the hon, gentleman is so confident of success throughout the country, as regards the scheme, it is wonderful that he did not allow the contract to pass, so that the people would have an opportunity to hear him discuss the question on all its merits. Hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House, who have spoken on this question, have introduced it by stating that they hoped it would be discussed on purely patriotic grounds. Everyone who has spoken has expressed these sentiments, but, before he utfered fifteen words, he showed he was a party man and desirous to place party before country. We are told by certain hon, gentlemen in this House, that it is one of the most important questions ever brought before Parliament, not even excepting the great question of Confederation. It may be so; but hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House have prostituted it as far as they possibly could. I am not going todiscuss the question and say how important it is, because, after much discussion, the universal verdict has been that it is one of the most important subjects ever submitted to Parliament. We have been told, during this debate, by hon gentlemen opposite, particularly the hon member for Bothwell and the hon gentleman who has just taken his seat, that we ought to forget all party considerations on this side of the House and come out as true patriots and support hon. gentlemen on the other side, in opposition to the scheme. The hon. member for Bothwell in his historical record, taking us back to feudal ages, the time of the Stewarts, and bringing us down to the time of Sir Robert Peel, and later to our own time to Sir Allan Macnabb, has told us there were men in Parliament sufficiently patriotic to stand aloof from their party, and abandoning all party considerations, vote in the interests of their country. He told us, further, as an inducement, if we follow his example we will not be read out of our party. He tells us that he was once placed in that same unfortunate position and felt it his duty to withdraw himself from his party and oppose a measure in which his Government was interested; and he told us, as some consolation, that he was net read out of the party. I think the hon, gentlean's memory is at fault. I think I can show him that he was read out of the party and blacklettered by the organ of his party. I venture to say, if he will look at the blackboard in the Globe office, he will find a long list of names, in which his own is included, of Reformers who have been blacklettered. I think I have traced the histories of Hon. Messrs. Mills, Blake, Ross and Paterson on that blackboard; and if I recollect well, they were characterized as men who ought not to receive the confidence of the people, because they had not voted with their party. They were characterized as traitors to their party. The hon, member for Bothwell no doubt saw in the Globe what that organ thought of his vote on the occasion to which he has referred -on the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Bill. On the motion of my hon. friend from South Norfolk the vote was fairly large against the Government, and in that vote there were the names of the gentlemen I have mentioned, and most of the leading Reformers. On March 31st, 1875, I find in the organ the following language:-

"These divisions only proved the hold the Administration has upon the confidence of the country: not because the followers were asked to make any sacrifice in order to support them, but because the temporary defection of certain members met with so small a response from the party generally. It is quite certain the country, generally, will fully sustain the action of the majority.

"Uould any one having regard to all the surrounding circumstances suggest a better mode of settlement? It is easy to criticize or even to pull down, but not so easily to construct; and the defeat of the bill under discussion would simply have destroyed the compact, thrown British Columbia into a ferment, and produced at home and abroad the worst possible impression as to security of bargains made with Canadian Convergence of the canadian House of worst possible impression as to security of bargains made with Canadian Governments and of the national spirit of the Canadian House of Commons. It is for those who voted with Wallace & Co. to justify the course they elected to take. The Government and their supporters need no justification. The action of the minority in the recent division is even less explicable, the majority simply affirming that the road should be commenced forthwith. In three or four mouths at the furthest, the link will have been begun in accordance with that agreement. The majority of the House of Commons took the correct view of the situation, and so will the electors, if they are ever asked to record their decision on the matter.

"There will always be politicians, as there always has been, anxious above all things to keep down national expenditure and to get credit by way of eminence for being careful of public funds. If ever there was an enterprise which justified a liberal expenditure of public funds, it is an erreat Canadian highway across the continent. The necessity for the construction of that line is evident to every one who takes—we shall not say a statesman-like view of what our Dominion is and what it will become, whole, and have told British Columbia to go cut if she liked. It would have been neither for the profit nor the credit of Canada to have followed such a course. It is not a prudent proceeding for any Government to repudiate engagements of its predecessors

"The attempt to catch a majority against the Ministry on the point of the contracts not being submitted to Parliament was equally unworthy and transparently factions"

Such was the opinion of the Globe, and if that is its treatment of its supporters the less attention we pay to the advice of the hon. gentlemen opposite the better. On another occasion the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) became a little obstreperous. He was determined to tear down the Senate, and he moved a resolution in the House of Commons for the purpose of taking steps in that direction. He was told that he had better look out, and that if he dared to face the electors on the subject he would be turned to the right-about face. Here is what The Globe said of him:

"Some of the representatives need be warned against the tendency to constitution-mongering, and those who recklessly manifest such a tendency will some day or other receive such a lesson from the people as will serve them for the rest of their natural lives.

"Providence has not seen fit to give him the tongue of the eloquent, and he is fain therefore to persuade himself that in compensation he has been privileged to be profound.

"Mr. Mills is hard on the members of the Senate. Himself originally a teacher, but meagrely educated, he has managed at last to be an inspector of schools."

I think, then, I have shown you good reasons why I should not, for one, consent to go over with hon, gentlemen opposite and oppose the Government, in whom I have every confidence, in regard to this important matter. It is unfortunate however, that during the course of this debate one gentleman has seen fit to use language totally unfit for the mouth of any member of Parliament. Outside of the House and inside, that hon. gentleman seems to have a mania for abusing the right hon. leader of the Government, whether because he would not recognise him as a great financial genius, or because that hon, gentleman is smarting under some grievance, I cannot say, but such is invariably his course when he has occasion to speak of the leader of this House. In every speech he has made in this and the last Parliament, the hoo, member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) presented us with a rehash of the Pacific Scandal, and charges the right hon. gentleman with all sorts of crimes and misdemeanors; and in the present debate we find him using language which is unbecoming to a member of Parliament, and language which is unworthy of a gentleman. I speak strongly on this subject, because I feel that hon, gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches should not be persistently attacked by the hon. member for Centre Huron in such language as that hon. gentleman too often employs in this House. I say, Sir, that it is an extraordinary thing that a gentleman who has been permitted to wear the Queen's livery, should charge the Minister of Railways with being either grossly ignorant or out of his mind when he brought down this scheme. For the benefit of the hon. member for Centre Huron, I will read an extract from May's Parliamentary Practice, so that he may see in what kind of a position he is placed by the use of such language:

"The use of temperate and decorous language is never more desirable than when a member is canvassing the opinion and conduct of his opponents in debate. The warmth of his own feelings is likely to betray him into hasty and unguarded expressions, which the excitement of his adversaries will exaggerate, and he cannot be too careful in restraining himself within those bounds which Parliament has wisely established. The imputation of bad motives, or motives different from those acknowledged; misrepresenting the language of another, or accusing him in his turn of misre-resentation; charging him with falsehood or deceit; or contemptuous or insulting language of any kind—all these are un; arliamentary, and call for prompt interference."

a statesman-lace view in what our pominton is and what it will become, as according as that railway is constructed or not. It is never to be lost sight of that Canada was solemnly and officially pledged to that bargain. The compact was deliberately and explicitly entered into, though technically the present Government might have repudiated it as a land they appear to think there should be an appeal to the

They forget, however, that upon two occasions electors. already, the question of building the Canadian Pacific Railway has been submitted to the people, and that these hon. gentlemen admitted that it had been fairly and fully placed before the electors. They themselves held that the question having been properly decided, the verdict of the people was irreversible by this House. I shall show that the leader of the Opposition took this ground. It does seem to me a little extraordinary that these hon, gentlemen should be so anxious for an appeal to the country, particularly in view of their own experience for the last few weeks. The hon, member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) says that, if he had an opportunity of going through the country, he could satisfy the electors that the Ministry are not worthy of confidence, that they are prostituting their position and sinking the country into ruin, and that they should be turned out of power at the first opportunity. We have seen these hon, gentlemen before the electors during the last few weeks, and we find that they have not turned the Province upside down. The small number of petitions which are presented to the House in opposition to the scheme, show that the efforts of these hon, gentlemen have been without avail. I know that a meeting were called in my own county for the purpose of getting up petitions to present to this House. I have not seen them yet. If I receive them I shall be glad to present them, but I feel pretty certain that there are very few in my county who are opposed to the scheme. The hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Elake) must be satisfied, after holding his hole-and-corner meetings, that the people are in favor of the bargain. The hon. gentleman has frequently said, and he has placed his views on record, that on all public questions there should be public discussion, and to prove that that is his view, I need only read from the Parliamentary Companion for 1880, his opinions as expressed by himself—for it is generally known that hon, gentlemen are directly responsible for their biographies and opinions as therein recorded. And I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, after that enunciation of his views, why it is that, on every occasion on which he and his friends address the electors, only one side of the question is allowed to be heard -why it is that they pack their meetings with their own supporters. At every meeting which has been held, from Kingston westward, where public discussion has been allowed, the voice of the people has been against these hon. gentlemen, and that is the reason why they are afraid of public discussion. In the Parliamentary Companion the hon. gentleman says that he "thinks political progress essential to political vitality, and advocates the fullest freedom of discussion on all topics affecting the public interest." If I recollect rightly, the hon the Minister of Railways has asked that he be permitted to attend the hon. gentleman's meetings and discuss this question; but I would ask the hon. gentleman if he can point to a meeting held in Ontario where he asked for public discussion. He has never dared to do so on any occasion. I have followed the hon. gentleman pretty closely since 1867, when he was first introduced into public life by the gentleman he has now turned his back upon, and I can find no instance in which he has allowed public discussion on any public question. It seems to me the hon. gentleman and his friends must be satisfied that the country is not fully aroused as to the necessity of opposing this contract. The hon, gentleman tried to induce the electors to believe, by misstatements of the most exaggerated kind, that this Syndicate bargain was one of the greatest outrages presented by any Government to any country. These gentlemen must be satisfied, from what they have seen for the last two weeks, that the people are not so easily aroused by gentlemen against the I who have always gone back on their own record. They had the opportunity before 1878 to educate these words:

the people, especially on the question of Free-trade and Protection; but the people said: We are not going to follow men, whe, in Opposition, advocate certain principles and will not carry them out in office; and I believe whenever they appeal to the people it will be with the same result. I think this is the second instance in which the hon, gentleman has tried to induce the electors of Ontario to believe that some great crime was being committed by the Government. In 1871, when the hon. gentleman was in the Ontario Logislature, and when a motion was made to appropriate $1,500,000 for railways in newly settled portions of the Province, he moved an amendment that the expenditure should be submitted to Parliament. He and his friends went about the country telling the electors that Hon. Sandfield Macdonald had the money in his pocket and was purchasing and prostituting the electors. The result was that the electors returned to l'arliament fewer supporters than the Government had previously, and the hon. gentleman, by his persuasive eloquence, and by some means we could not fathom, induced a prominent member of the Government to foreswear his allegiance and leave the Government. What did the hon. gentleman then do? Instead of saying to Parliament that he would spend the money in the way Parliament indicated, he coolly asked the House to give him $400,000 more. When he was asked the reason for his action, he stated that a million and a half was the amount promised by Hon. Sandfield Macdonald, and when he was asked to point to that promise he could not do so. He was afraid to tell the House what railways he was going to aid until after the money was voted, and after the money was voted he came down and in a very short time hurried his scheme through the House. And what was the result? We found that only one railway had been promised aid; and he himself, after examining all the claims made could only appropriate $1,421,000, so that the $400,000 extra which he then got was not required for railway purposes. The hon. gentleman having had a coup d'état in the Province of Ontario, thinks he can spring one on the Government here. I think this House and the country know, from the hon. gentleman's public actions, that he is not such a leader as they should follow. It is somewhat singufar that the organ of the party now wants the hon, gentleman removed. I cannot tell why. It wants to give him over to the tender mercies of the right hon, leader of the Government, to be made a Chief Justice for some reason or other. Perhaps it wants to take him out of Parliament, where his restless and turbulent spirit has always been injurious to The hon, gentleman, in his public life, has abandoned principles which he himself announced as the true principles of constitutional government. I remember the hon. gentleman, on many occasions in the Ontario Legislature, declaring that no money should be placed in the hands of the Executive without their being responsible to the representatives of the people in Parliament. We find that the bon, gentleman was not always of the same mind when he came to this House. In 1875, on a motion for the approval of an Order in Conneil relating to the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch, a motion was moved in amend. ment by Mr. Masson, seconded by the Minister of Railways.

"That no contract should be entered into with any company for the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch of the Pacific Railway, nor any subsidy granted for the construction of the railway from the eastern terminus of the said Pacific Railway to Douglas or near Douglas, until a thorough and complete instrumental survey shall have been made of the route proposed.'

Although the hon. gentleman had laid down the principle, that no railway should be built until after a thorough survey, yet he voted against that amendment. He also voted against the Nanaimo Railway and in favor of an amendment introduced by the hon the Minister of Railways, in "Provided always that any such contract should have been previously approved of by Parliament."

Now you find him voting one way, and then you find him voting another way. A man who has so many different views is not a safe leader for this House. I have pointed out that his course, as regards the Nanaimo and Esquimalt Railway, did not meet with the favor of the party. That organ thought that he was going to gain popularity, that he was a disturber in political life, and therefore ought not to be encouraged. The hon. gentleman felt so uneasy at the castigation he received on that occasion, that on another occasion, when the question was under discussion, he shirked it, and was seen leaving the House rather suddenly. I find that, on April the 2nd, 1875, a motion was made to lay before the House contracts for a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Mr. Bowell moved an amend-

"This House regrets contracts have been made by the Government for the construction of the lines of telegraph from Lake Superior to Carle Creek, before the locating of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been determined."

Mr. KIRKPATRICK moved the following amendment:—"Contrary to the Statute authorizing the construction of the said telegraph line, and therefore this House does not approve of said contracts."

Messrs. Blake, Moss and Mills ran away.

Mr. PLUMB then rose and said the hon: member for South Bruce had not voted, and asked where was the member for Bothwell.

Mr. PALMER. Yes, and the member for West Toronto.

Voice—"Canada first," has vamosed.

Now, there is a principle which should guide hon gentlemen in reference to contracts in this House, and therefore he knew that the Government of Mr. Mackenzie was acting in direct violation of the Statute. Nevertheless, that hon. gentleman, when called upon to vote, shirked the vote and was seen running out of the House, followed by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and also by the member for West Toronto, the late Chief Justice Moss. Public attention was drawn to the fact, and those hon, gentlemen had to plead ignorance. Now, I think that to plead ignorance in a matter like that, especially by the member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), shows that he is not a safe leader for this country. We have also other references written by the hon. gentleman himself. In a speech made last year, the hon. gentleman said that if certain events had happened he would have been called restive. Well, that is nothing new with the hon. gentleman. Some time ago the hon. gentleman went out to Aurora, and there he made what he called a disturbing speech, and upon that occasion he used this language—and I would ask hon. gentlemen on this side of the House whether, in view of his opinion of matters, he is a safe man to lead us in this House. The Globe of October 6th, 1874, reported the hon. gentleman

"I know that I have made a rather disturbing speech, but I am not afraid of that. As far as I can judge, not much can be done without disturbing something or somebody, and if that is the only objection to be made to the sentiments I have uttered, I am quite ready to meet it. I may be said also to have made an imprudent speech, at least it might be said, if I were one of those who aspire to lead their fellow countrymen. This is the function of Ministers, we know it—and we do not quarrel with it—to say nothing that can be caught hold of—nothing in advance of the popular opinion of the day, to watch the current of that opinion, and when it has gathered strength to crystallize it into Acts of Parliament."

Now, I would like to know if the hon. gentleman can point to a single Act of Parliament that he has ever crystallized, whether he can point to a single Act of Parliament of his own authorship, that can stand the test of constitutional law? When that hon, gentleman led the Ontario Legislature he secured the passage of a memorial asking the Queen to take some action, by means of which the Confederation Act should be so amended as to prevent this Parliament voting extra subsidies to Nova Scotia and other Provinces. I voted against that resolution, feeling that it was an usurpation of the rights of the Dominion. I was one of the celebrated twelve who opposed that measure, and for which I received credit from the Globe. That memorial was sent to the Queen, and the hon. gentleman knows what the result was. Earl Granville told him he had better mind his own business, that Ontario had nothing to do with the action of the Dominion Legislature. Now, knowing that the hon gentleman has spoken many ways on this question, that he has made speeches for and against the railway, depreciating the lands and encouraging emigrants to go to American territories, we are justified in believing that he is not a fit public leader of the House. Some hon, gentlemen doubtless think otherwise, and will follow him, as he can be all things to all men. When I read the speech of the hon. member in answer to the Minister of Railways, not having had the pleasure of hearing him in this House, and having seen the speech made on a former occasion, his celebrated Kansas speech, I kept looking ahead of me to see when the answer was coming to the speech on a former occasion. I kept turning over page after page, but not a word did I find. I think the best answer the Minister of Railways can make is to place the speech of 1880 before the general public as an answer to his speech of this Session. It must be gratifying to the hon, gentleman to know that his efforts on that occasion have been appreciated. It must be satisfactory for him to know that he has become a medium of communication between intending emigrants in Europe and the holders of lands in the United States. He must be flattered when he sees his likeness paraded all over the country as the great emigration agent for the United States. However, that is a matter of taste. Probably the hon. gentleman may be satisfied with that speech, in which he belittled his own country; but I can hardly think, in view of his great reputation for ability and as the recognized chief hair splitter of the age, I am satisfied the House and country will not believe the statements made by the hon. gentleman regarding this great question, especially when they look back to his history in the past and see the course he has pursued. Now, I propose to show the views expressed by gentlemen, both in this House and out of it, upon the importance of building the Pacific Railway. We all know that, years ago, when the first Pacific Railway was projected in the United States, there was a feeling that such a line should be subsidized across the American continent. Early in the history of the country and the history of the Canadian Pacific Railway, leading men in the United States recognised the importance of building a road through Canadian territory. The late Wm. Henry Seward, a gentleman whom no one will accuse of being favorable to Canadian or British interests, whose opinion on public questions was received with the greatest favor, particularly by the hon. member for Bothwell, used the following language on the subject after he had travelled across the continent:-

"The route through British America is, in some respects, preferable to that through our own territory. By the former, the distance from Europe to Asia is some thousand miles shorter than by the latter. Passing close to Lake Superior, traversing the water-shed which divides the streams flowing towards the Acrtic Sea from those which have their exit southward, flowing towards the Acrtic Sea from those which have their exit southward, crossing the Rocky Mountains at an elevation of over 3,000 feet less than at the south pass, the road could be here constructed with comparative cheapness, and would open up a region abounding in valuable timber and other natural products, and admirably suited to the growth of grain and grazing. Having its Atlantic sea-board at Halifax and its Pacific near Vancouver Island, it would undoubtedly draw to it the commerce of Europe, Asia and the United States. Thus British America, from a mere colonial dependency, would assume a controlling rank in the world. To her other nations would be tributary, and in vain would the United States attempt to be her rival, for she never could dispute with her the possession of the Asiatic commerce, nor the nower which that commerce confers." of the Asiatic commerce, nor the power which that commerce confers."

I will not stop here. I propose showing, from the opinions expressed by hon. gentlemen opposite, that they considered the building of the railway to be of paramount importance. The words I am about to quote have been quoted before in Parliament, though probably not during this Session, but nevertheless, they have such strong bearing on the question, that I will venture to repeat them. On the 3rd February, 1871, I find the following expression of opinion in the organ of hon. gentlemen opposite:—

"The success of one Pacific Railway points to others being constructed, and renders them more than ever a necessity. People could do with none, in fact, better than they will allow themselves to believe they can do with one. Accordingly, a 'Northern Pacific' is already in process of construction: another to the south has been projected, and one through British territory is a necessity, if the Dominion is to have anything like a fair chance of fulfilling its destiny and developing its mighty and varied resources. Many objections have already been urged against the road across British territory, and the promoters of that frem Duluth to Puget Sound are specially kind in arguing that such an undertaking would be a sheer waste of money which could otherwise be far more usefully and remuneratively employed. Why not, it is said, use the one already in course of construction, with branch feeders siretching northward to Fort Garry and other points of the North-West, as the necessities of the country require? " A very cursory examination of the country to be traversed by the American road from the head waters of Lake Superior will show how falacious all such arguments are, and how not only the line through British territory may be carried through from strictly commercial considerations, but must be, if British authority is to be maintained on this continent, and our new Dominion made practically, as well as in theory, a great fact. (Apart from all other cousiderations the very fact that the line now under construction is through American territory, would be a stail objection to its being made the great trunk line for the Canadian North-West. These who had the command of it would, in a few years, command the country.) All the intercourse to this social and commercial, of the people of our north-western region would be directly with and through a foreign people and what might at any time become a hostile country By the mere stroke of his pen a foreign ruler might lay an embargo upon the whole intercourse of that part of Ca

The Globe, on July 16th, 1872, said:

"After all the buncombe and clap-trap about taxing the older population of Canada for the benefit of the immigrant in the North-West, we know perfectly well that the immigrants after all are well worth paying for, and that handsomely too, as a national investment. If we could cover the whole North-West with hardy, industrious settlers to-morrow, the problem of Pacific Railway construction could be readily solved. It is not the price per acre, but the labor and capital sunk in the land, the dutiable commodities consumed by the settlers, the addition to the national wealth produced by his exertions, that a wise and prudent statesman would take first into calculation."

There we have the testimony of persons outside this House who thoroughly understand this question. But apart from the Globe, I can call into a court witnesses whose declarations no hon. gentleman opposite will discredit. I refer to the eader and the ex-leader of the Opposition. In his celebrated speech at Aurora, the hon. member for West Durham said:

"In Imy humble opinion the future of Canada, as a distinct state, the representative of British power on this continent, largely depends upon our success in colonizing that region, and what is equally important and perhaps more difficult, is our success in retaining its sympathies, its trade, its commerce afterwards."

The ex-leader of the Opposition also in May, 1874, said:

"I have a firm belief that the vast prairies of the west, with so many acres on alternate sections, will even within my own lifetime be filled with millions of a living population, that the vast mineral resources of British Columbia will be developed, and that its agricultural resources will prove much greater than at present we have reason to think they are. And, Sir, we have, also, reason to hope for traffic upon this road that will make it command success."

I draw attention to this statement because almost every hon. gentleman opposite argues, to-day, that the western end of the line cannot possibly pay. Going further, we find the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) giving his opinion on this subject. He said:

"This large tract of territory in the North-West, belonging to Canada, capable of sustaining 28,000,000, was lying waste; and hone gentlemen opposite must know these lands would, for all time to come, be valueless and useless, except as preserves for the buffalo, unless dissected by railroads."

That was in 1878. I have shown from the testimony of hon, gentlemen themselves, the importance of building this railway. I am now going to show it by the evidence of witnesses whose testimony will not be controverted by hon, gentlemen opposite. In 1872, when the matter was under discussion in Parliament, the hon, leader of the Opposition on May 8th, said, vide Globe:

"Hon. Mr. Blake said he agreed with the remarks of Sir A. T. Galt, that we were bound to prosecute in good faith and with the utmost vigor this railway scheme as proposed by these resolutions. This side of the House entertained last Session the strongest objections to the form of that resolution, because they felt it was an undertaking of very great magnitude and because they felt the House was pledged absolutely to the undertaking, no matter how great its magnitude might be. Such having been the case last Session, and the objections having been overruled, it did not now become the duty of this side of the House to say a single word, no matter how great the difficulties might appear; but it was their duty to give their earnest endeavors to carry out in good faith the obligations we have incurred. He apprehended that it was solely in reference to the mode in which the Government proposed to carry out the undertaking that a difference of opinion could arise."

So we have there the opinion of the leader of the Opposition that that road should be built, and at the earliest possible moment. Then we find the hon gentleman going on further to say:

"I think that it behoves us all, on whichever side of the House we are, to extend to the Government that has to deal with this enormous question the most generous consideration."

The leader of the Liberal party said on April, 30th, 1872:

"The good faith of the country is involved in this matter; and it behoves Parliament to leave to no Ministry the power to trifle with so vast an interest, involving as it does the prosperity of the North-West."

We have also further testimony of this hon, gentleman, the then leader of the Opposition, who was determined that the road should be built at the earliest possible moment. He spoke in 1873 of the propriety of establishing speedy means of communication across the continent. This showed that the hon, gentleman's opinion was that the road should be built at the earliest possible moment. Without this development of the North-West, he thought that emigration to that region could not, on a large scale, take place. Now, this shows that he was always of opinion, as also when leading the Government, that the road should be built at both ends, commencing as well in British Columbia as at Fort Garry. The present hon, leader of the Opposition was so strong in his opinion on this point, so satisfied that the people were committed to this scheme that, in Parliament, in 1875, he pressed strongly the opinion that they had no right to go back on this question—that the country had expressed an opinion upon it and was committed to it. He said in 1875 :

"The broad features of this policy were, as I have said, plainly stated to this country anterior to the late General Election, the verdict of the country was taken upon it, and the result was a decided acceptance of it. It is not reversible by us. We have no mandate to reverse it. Upon the most enlarged consideration of the rights of members of Parliament, I cannot conceive that we could have the right at all to listen to the appeal of the hon, member for Cumberland, and to enter into a consideration whether that policy upon which the country's opinion was asked and taken, and which opinion we were sent here to enforce, should be altogether reversed. I do not consider it would be wise for an instant to consider any such proposition."

And yet that hon, gentleman now is willing to reverse it. He went out of the Government shortly after, becoming a little obstreperous, a little restive, as he said himself, and then he was not quite so much in favor of this policy. He said, further:

"Our fault was, that coming into the Government at a particular time, we had agreed to carry out the policy of a necessary expenditure of public money, for which we were vilified."

I do not know who vilified him for that. He must have been drawing on his imagination; because his opponents always held that the good faith of the country was pledged to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that through Canadian territory. I am sure when hon, gentlemen opposite adopted the scheme of their predecessors, no

hon. gentleman inside or outside of the House, on our side of politics, felt inclined to say one word against their course. On the contrary, the records of Parliament show their scheme was encouraged by hon. gentlemen now on the Ministerial side, who were determined to carry out the great scheme of constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is most extraordinary that, after speaking so much of the necessity of this road, they should have commenced to throw impediments in its way. The very moment they find Ministers in power, opposed to them, prepared to carry out any scheme, they will oppose it, never satisfied unless they themselves were entrusted with the project. The moment the House passed an Act favorable to the construction of the railway by a company, the present and then Opposition commenced to belittle the country, to convince the English public it could not be built. On the 20th February, 1873, after Sir Hugh Allan had received the charter, and was about launching the scheme on the English market, they determined to destroy the credit of the country and defeat Sir Hugh Allan's undertaking. Their organ denounced it as one marked by cool impudence, and connected with political intrigue. That it had no existence except on paper; of which no one knows the beginning, cost or ending; of which no one can tell the ultimate chances of profit or calculate the possible extent of With that language scattered broadcast, English capitalists would not invest a dollar in the railroad. On the 19th April, 1873, came further hostile language, as regards the scheme, addressed to the London Stock Exchange. It was thought that if they could only defeat Sir Hugh Allan, they would probably defeat the Government and attain power. The moment they again stood in Opposition, they began to arouse the country against the scheme once more with the same object. The member for Lambton, in his speech at Glencoe, in July, 1872, gave a certificate of the value of this new territory which has been depicted in such glowing language as one of the greatest national heritages. He then said:

"From the Rocky Mountains to the sea in British Columbia—was exceedingly rough, and from the Lake of the Woods to the head waters of the Ottawa was the roughest country in the world."

Then the member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) deserves some attention in regard to this subject. He always was opposed to this scheme, his chief object being to prevent the Government accomplishing their great undertaking. He said on one occasion:

"The member for Lambton has mot objected to the work itself, but to the mode of its prosecution, &c. We started from Lake Nipissing, and had to build through a perfect wilderness. If there was sufficient trade to maintain the road the case would be different, but there was not."

And then we find another gentleman, distinguished for his financial genius in this House, expressing his opinion on this subject. Mr. Young, of Waterleo, said, on July 3rd, it would take $8,000,000 per annum to pay running expenses, and $4,000,000 to pay interest expenses All this was done to destroy the charter of Sir Hugh Allan. We find further the member for Lambton, in a speech delivered in the County of Monck-and, by the way, I had the pleasure of hearing that speech delivered—said: that 50,000,000 acres of the best land of our country were to be given to a company, and in consequence it was estimated we would not have one acre left in the country. He said that we were to give the whole of the land to Sir Hugh Allan. That was the estimate of the extent and capacity of that great country. Then the hon. gentleman, on a missionary tour in Cornwall, made a speech in which he thought it well to belittle the country and show there was no land there at all. Now, there is an immense number of millions of acres, and it is a wonderful crime that a tenth part of what we have there now should be given to build a railway, although at that time the people given to build a radiway, although at that time the people "Rightly or wrongly, they had agreed with British Columbia to com-were told that the whole of our patrimony was being given mence the construction of this road immediately, and this Bill was Mr. RYKERT.

away and not an acre was left. On Nov. 4th, 1872, in Cornwall, he said: 'He was amazed at Sir John Macdonald stating at London that there were 350,000,000 acres of arable land in the North-West;" and having to make a statement a few days afterwards, he showed "that Col. Palliser estimated the extent of the lands at 41,690,000 acres, or a little less than one-eighth of Sir John Macdonald's estimate; the Government sent Professor Hind there who reported within one square mile of Col. Palliser." But it is a most extraordinary thing that after having belittled the character of the country, and told the people of England that this country could not bear the strain of building the Pacific Railway, after having told the country that the road could not possibly be built for 50,000,000 acres of land and $30,000,000, the hon, gentleman came into office and changed his tune. said then: There is plenty of land in this country, and although I denounced the scheme of my predecessors, I am prepared to acknowledge they are right in giving over 50,000,000 acres of land and $20,000 per mile. prepared to give more than my predecessors, and in addition thereto, I will offer a guarantee of four per cent. on $7,500 per mile for twenty-five years. Now, if it was wrong to give $30,000,000 by the Act of 1872, was it not equally wrong to give $37,000,000 or more by the Ast of 1874? I will only take the capitalization of the hon. member for West Durham, who, I observe, made it convenient just now to leave the House. I have seen him leave other meetings in the same way, and I have heard him stigmatize such conduct as cowardly in South Brant. However, I have no doubt he is ashamed to have the panorama of his past record laid before the country. I have noticed on all public occasions that the hon. gentle-man cannot bear any interruption. The big I and the little "u" stick out so strongly that he cannot bear to hear anyone express views that differ from his own. The hon. member for Lambton, when he came into office, as I said before, propounded a scheme far more extravagant than that of his predecessors. I would like to know how he confined himself to the limit of $7,500 on which he wanted a guarantee. It is true certain tenders were asked for for the Georgian Bay Branch, and that a certain contractor said he would take interest at 4 per cent. on $7,500, but, if I recollect correctly, the other tenders varied from $7,500 to $100,000. The hon. member for West Durham says that the guarantee capitalized was $4,000 in cash per mile; but he was mistaken. He never was very handy at making his calculations, because anyone who knows anything about capitalization will say that interest on $7,500 for 25 years is over $4,000 a mile. As I estimate it, it is about $5,200 per mile. However, I am willing to take the smaller amount of $4,000 a mile. I say a scheme like that foisted upon the public, in view of their declarations against the previous contract, shows they are either political hypocrites or determined to deceive the people in some way or other. When these hon. gentlemen came into office, they were determined to carry out the scheme in its entirety. They over and over again said to Parliament the road must be built, that the good faith of this country was pledged with British Columbia, that this road should be built, no matter what the consequences were, provided always, they said, that it did not increase the present rate of taxation. Now, I shall call their own witnesses into court to prove they were not going to increase the taxation of the country at all. Even supposing we had a gloomy picture presented to us, I am prepared to show out of their own mouths, out of the lips of the great mixer and muddler, as the Globe calls him, at all events, that the road can be built and without increasing the present rate of taxation. Let me first take the member for Lambton. At page 949 of Hansard, 1875, I find the hon, member spoke as follows:-

introduced in accordance with that agreement. He could assent to nothing introduced in accordance with that agreement. He could assent to nothing that would place the Government in such a position as would enable either British Columbia or the Imperial Government to impugn their good faith. • • • He did not propose to do anything but what he believed they could do, and he did not propose to do anything but what he believed to be within the preamble of the Bill of last Session, which was to the effect that the tax of the people, as it was when the original agreement was made, should not be increased."

Now, there is the hon. gentleman's own testimony that he was building that railway through British Columbia, spending $2,000,000 a year, building the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway and the telegraph line, and building The eastern portions of the road, without increasing the existing rate of taxation. I think if there is any meaning in words at all, those must satisfy hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, at all events, that what we propose to expend would not increase the present rate of taxation. Then, Sir, we have the organ of the party stating on March 31st, 1878:

"The expenditure annually of two millions in the Province during the progress of the railway is another item in the new terms, and we are disposed to believe that this will not in practice be found to have imposed any greater burden than can be met by our present rate of taxation."

Now let us see what that great financial genius, the ex-Minister of Finance, said on the subject. In delivering his Budget Speech of 1875, he said:

"My advice is in view of those numerous contingencies which always occur in a country like this, that we ought to consider the natural growth as a fair offset against the inevitable expenditure which must occur in the Dominion."

On pages 19 and 20 of the same speech he made use of the following language:

We have completed the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway, and are therefore free to turn our undivided energies and attention to the task of enlarging and improving our canals and constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have succeeded in making such arrangements with British Columbia as, though involving us in very considerable liabilities, are yet quite within our power to perform, and may add that although many of us thought from the beginning that the demands made upon us by that Province were unreasonable and unduly onerous, we are, nevertheless, prepared to discharge our obligations fairly, provided they can be brought within due bounds, and in accordance with the spirit, if not indeed the true letter, of that contract. I have no doubt, therefore, that, if we persevere in the course I have indicated, in a very short time we shall be in a position of the highest credit.

* That such an enterprise is one which will require our tumost energies. I do not for one moment deny; but although I admit "We have completed the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island utmost energies, I do not for one moment deny; but although I admit utmost energies, I do not for one moment deny; but although I admit this, and admit also that while engaged in its prosecution we must be willing to forego other works of much greater immediate advantage, yet I hold that it is far better we should do so than even seem to fail in meeting the obligations to which I have referred. I believe that every man who has paid any serious attention to the future of Canada knows right well that with us this matter is a struggle for the possibility of carving out a distinct national existence."

Other hon, gentlemen have made the same statement to the House—that the road could be built without increasing the existing rate of taxation. I would like to ask if the rate of taxation was not to be increased by the expenditure of $39,000,000 and the grant of 54,000,000 acres of land which they proposed. Why was it that in August, 1878, they were determined to carry out that Act of Parliament and have the contracts let, and that, if possible, without increasing the existing rate of taxation; and why is it that they now profess to fear an increase in the rate of taxation when the present Government do not propose to give one-half as much? that if these hon. gentlemen will look at the matter in all its bearings, they will say that the scheme of 1874 was one of much greater magnitude than the present one, and if it could be carried out without increasing the rate of taxation there can be no manner of doubt that the present scheme can be carried out without adding to the taxation of the country. I find that the hon. member for West Durham, though he strongly opposed the building of the Esquimalt and Namaimo Branch, was prepared to take $750,000 out of the public treasury and hand it over to the British Columbians for nothing. These facts simply have got a company to take the scheme in hand, and that show that hon, gentlemen opposite are one thing in office and quite another thing out of office. When the Esquimelt and Nanaimo Bill was rejected by Parliament, those hon. gentlemen were determined to build the railway. They advertised for tenders, but they had to admit that the tenders were not a success. On May 10th, 1879, the hon. gentleman used these words:

"The hon gentlemen opposite, and the whole country are aware that we solicited tenders in England for some months upon this ground, before hon gentlemen opposite came into office; also that Mr. Sandferd Fleming, the Chief Engineer, was instructed, while in London, to place himself in communication with contractors and financial men, and also to obtain the assistance of Sir John Rose, who, in many things, had been the active, energotic and patriotic agent of the Dominion, with a view to the carrying out of this scheme. But I am informed that, notwithstanding all our efforts, we signally failed in obtaining one single offer (there was one imperfect offer made) for the construction of the railroad on those terms, which were the grant of 20,000 acres and $10,000 cash per mile, with a guarantee of 4 per cent upon such balance as might be represented as necessary."

So it appears that, at the very close of their governmental career, hon. gentlemen opposite were willing to expend so large an amount of money to carry out the undertaking. But the late Premier had to admit that after all his efforts, he failed to obtain a single offer to build the road. Could any more positive proof be desired of the fact that the late Government were desirous of building the road at an expense enormously greater than that proposed in the present scheme; but the very moment that the present Government spoke of setting aside 100,000,000 acres of land for the purpose of building this railway, these hon. gentlemen ridiculed the idea of the land realising $1 an acre, or that the road could ever be built by the lands of the North-West, and they expressed willingness to sacrifice every acre of land in that territory; they were prepared to sign a document foregoing all our rights then, if it were only possible to have the road built by the proceeds of the land. Although the hon, the Minister of Railways then asked for an appropriation of 100,000,000 acres of land of fair average quality, to be taken from what parts of the country they thought right, not a single objection was raised on the opposite side of the House; and the House and the country stand committed to a scheme which shows that it was intended that it should be built out of the proceeds of the land, and that that land should be appropriated at such points along the line of the railway, as the Government thought proper. Let me read the resolution:

"That all the ungranted land within twenty miles of the Canadian Pacific Railway belonging to the Dominion, be vested in such Commission; and that when the lands along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway are not of fair average quality for settlement, a corresponding quantity of lands of fair average quality shall be appropriated in other parts of the country, to the extent, in all, of 100,000,000 of acres."

That shows that these hon, gentlemen were then prepared to have that road completed even at the cost of 100,000,000 acres of land. The hon, the Minister of Railways seemed to have a presentiment then that he was going to have a Syndicate; but he was ridiculed by hon. gentlemen opposite. They did not suppose any man would be insane enough to offer to build that railway for even $13,000 a mile through the prairie section and $26,000,000. The hon, the Minister of Railways, at page 142d of Haneard of 1880, used this language:

"I have good reason to state that such an offer as that would secure the construction and operation of the whole line from Red River to Kamloops, with the operation and maintenance of all the road to the Pacific, at a cost not exceeding $13,000, or $10,000 per mile from Red River to Kamloops, and 26,000,000 acres of land."

The hon. Minister's prediction has been verified; he has not been proved a false prophet on that occasion at any rate. I only mention the fact to show that these gentlemen thought the Minister of Railways was insane to expect that a Syndicate could be found to build the road for such a consideration; but I am pleased to know that the Government too without the expenditure of so much money or the appropriation of so much land. The hor, member for West Durham on that occasion, when he was acting in the interest of our American cousins and was endeavoring to gain for himself a reputation south of the 49th parallel, ridiculed the idea of there being that much land in the country. On page 1,457 the hon, gentleman said:

"My conclusion is this, that although we may receive, and I hope we will receive, in the time to come, a considerable revenue from our lands in the North-West, yet we cannot, as prudent men, expect that we will early receive such a large amount, or anything approaching it, or anything approaching one-half the amount which the hon. Minister suggested; that we cannot expect that the immediate charge and strain upon the resources of the country, involved in the Ministerial programme, will be early relieved by the receipts from lands. We must look, therefore, to our other resources for the present bearing of that strain, and when these large other resources for the present bearing of that strain, and when these large receipts do come in they will come in only to recoup us for the long years of arrears of interest which will meantime have accrued, and will not do much towards the liquidation of the original cost. These fantastic calculations do not bear investigation. They are based on extravagant speculations in everything tending to increase the receipts, and on erroneous figures besides; they are based on untrustworthy estimates in everything tending to diminish the charge, and on erroneous figures besides; and, on the whole, I declare that no sane business man would incur large liabilities on the chance of meeting them out of such resources."

But, Sir, the utterance of the hon, gentleman's own organ at that time was not in the same strain. In April, 1880, it had an article very strongly in favor of building the railway in the manner proposed by the Minister of Railways, and it came like a thunder-clap upon the House. While the motion for the postponement of the section in British Columbia was before the House, the organ

"It would not indicate extravagant hope to say that 1,000,000 people will be in the North-West Territories by the time that the 1.300 miles already considered have been constructed. But let us say that only 500,000 people are then in the North-West. If they contribute to the Dominion Treasury are then in the North-West. If they contribute to the Dominion Treasury in the same proportion as the people of the other Provinces, they will increase the revenue by $3,000,000 a year. The 1,300 miles of railway we treat of will certainly not cost more than $30,000,000 when completed and equipped. That sum represents an annual payment of interest of $1,200,000, so that no less than $1,800,000 would remain to the good. Part of it would, of course, go in expenses of government and protection for the 500,000 people contributing the whole, but it is easy to complete the Denirium has pathing to lose by enviring the Pacific Politzer.

protection for the 500,000 people contributing the whole, but it is easy to see that the Dominion has nothing to lose by carrying the Pacific Railway to the Rocky Mountains at an early date.

"The Lake Superior section, from the eastern terminus of the main Pacific to Fort William, will be 620 miles long, and when completed it will offer to the traffic of the Canadian, and to a large part of the American North-West, the shortest all-rail route to the sea-board. It is not needed till the prairies have been opened up by the line to the Rocky Mountains. After that has been built it may be safely completed as a commercial road, one that will pay better year by year, and will, ultimately, be a very valuable property.

"We find, then, that no less than 1,920 miles of the proposed Pacific road may be fairly considered as a commercial enterprise. That it is also a national enterprise is a very poor argument against the project. When the road has been carried from the eastern terminus to the Rocky Mountains it is safe to say that the population of the North-West will be great enough to contribute to the Dominion Treasury a larger sum than will pay the interest on the loan for which the older Provinces must first pledge their credit. We have taken no account of the land sales, which must, if well the interest of the loan for which the older Provinces must hist pledge their credit. We have taken no account of the land sales, which must, if well managed, put every year a large and continuelly increasing sum into the hands of the Government. The speed with which the road to the Rockies should be built depends on the immigration we receive, and to make this very rapid nothing is required but a land policy calculated to promote settlement. The present land regulations are contrived to keep many people out of the country."

That is the opinion of the Globe on that question. I think I have shown that the building of this railway is of great national importance and necessity. I think I have shown it satisfactorily, at any rate, to hon. gentlemen opposite, because I have only quoted their own evidence, that the country is bound to build the railway. I have placed before this House the opinion of the leader of the Opposition on this question, and I have shown from his own mouth that the country has been twice committed to this scheme and twice those hon, gentlemen have pronounced in favor of it. have shown that he and his friends were prepared to undertake a much greater scheme in 1878, to which the good faith of the country was pledged. Now, how can the hon. gentleman say that they are not prepared to carry out this under-taking? We have a manifesto issued by those hon. gentlemen cost so far as it has been carried, $47,000, or $48,000 per mile in round Mr. RYKERT.

to which very felicitous allusion was made the other night by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives). He attributed the paternity of the document to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). But in that I think he did not show sufficient discrimination. He did not see in that document, as I have seen, the hand of the chairman of the Opposition caucus, the hon, member for South Wentworth (Mr. Rymal). It was his bantling, but it was nothing but a huge joke perpetrated on the country. The hon. gentleman evidently got his figures from the great mixer and muddler. I could easily occupy many hours in showing the inconsistencies of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and the worthlessness of their arguments against this scheme. The hon, gentleman at that great ticket-of-leave the other night, portrayed West from Durham, meeting at Montreal the evil effects of the policy of this Government since it came into power. He pointed out that the debt of the country had swellen from $77,500,000 in 1871, to $140,000,000. If that hon, gentleman had been desirous of placing all the feats before the public he would have shown placing all the facts before the public he would have shown that the increase of that debt was in part legitimate, and that the illegitimate part of it was brought about by his own Government. But he left the impression that this increase of debt was due to the hon, gentlemen now on the Treasury benches. If he had been fair he would have shown that this increase was chiefly due to necessary obligations. such as paying provincial subsidies and constructing great public works. The hon, gentleman was not fair in stating that the debt had been increased, without showing how. will now refer to the reasons given by the hon, member for Lambton to justify the scheme which he wanted to foist upon the country in 1874. When the hon, gentleman was trying to excuse this scheme to Parliament and the country, "It is the sheerest trifling with the public mind, it is the sheerest trifling with the House, to say that any company would undertake to build the entire road for $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land. The whole thing is a huge farce."

He then and there admitted that the scheme of 1872, which involved an appropriation of 50,000,000 acres of land and $30,000,000, was a justification of his own scheme, and stated that that money would not build the road even at $1 an acre. In order to justify his own extravagant scheme, he said: Look at the Intercolonial Railway; Sir Charles Tupper tells us we can build the Pacific Railway with $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land. How absurd it is, says Mr. Mackenzie. Every person knows it cannot be built for any such money; and he goes on to show that the Intercolonial, with the peculiar advantages of running along a frontier province, with easy access to all kinds of materials for building a railway, would cost $45,000 per mile. He wanted to justify the expenditure of $30,000,000 in building that railway, and yet he says the railway cannot be built for less than $45,000 per mile. The hon, gentleman for Lambton went on further to justify his extravagant expenditure, and cited the Northern Pacific Railway as an evidence of the cost of a road through those regions. It is rather curious that the hon, member for Centre Huron, who is always so careful in his figures, should have stated the other night that that railroad cost $17,000 a mile. It shows how accurate he is in placing figures before the House. But you are well aware that a matter of $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 makes no difference with the hon, gentleman when he is dealing with figures. The hon, member for Centre-Huron wanted us to believe that the Northern Pacific Railway cost something like $17,000 per mile, while the member for Lambton says it cost $47,000 per mile. I purpose to show how these hon-gentlemen opposite justified their extravagant scheme in 1874. The hon. member for Lambton said:

numbers. Well, Sir, that road traverses almost wholly a prairie region easily accessible, and where materials were easily found, and is altogether quite as favorable as the most favorable spot of our territory; with this advantage, that it was much nearer the producers of supplies than any portion of our line, except that on the immediate borders of the lake."

Yet now, hon, gentlemen opposite are prepared to show the road can be built for something like $19,000 a mile. The hon, gentleman caps all by saying:

"But judging from the cost of our own lines of railway we have reason to suppose that it will be impossible to construct this line from end to end at a less price than $40,000 per mile, and it may exceed that by several thousands of dollars."

He was satisfied our road through the prairie section would cost at least $40,000 per mile. Then how did he attempt to justify the guarantee of 4 per cent. for twenty five years on any additional sum the contractors might require? Finding that he had gone far in excess of the scheme of his predecessors in giving that extraordinary addition to the scheme, he had to justify it by showing other countries did the same thing. He travelled all over the American continent, and finally found in South America that the Platte Railway Company had received a guarantee of 6 per cent. on $32,000 per mile for 40 years, and he said the Southern Railway Company received a like guarantee. Let us see what the Syndicate will have to expend over and above their subsidy, taking the estimate of Mr. Blake in the Session of 1880 as a basis of calculation. Mr. Blake estimated the cost of the road (vide Hansard page 1440) as follows:—

Surveys.	4,000,000
Fort William to Selkirk	18,000,000
Pembina Branch	1,500,000
Red River Bridge	100,000
Selkirk to Edmonton	17,650,000
Edmonton to Burrard Inlet	45,000,000
Fort William to Nipissing
	$120,190,00

In order to see how the Syndicate will stand according to this, we have to deduct:

cording to this, we have to deduct:	:
To be built by Syndicate  Deduct Subsidy and Land:		$82,490,000

I estimate the lands to be worth $2 an acre for argument sake, although before I sit down I will satisfy the hon. gentlemen opposite that, by their own admission, the lands cannot possibly realize a dollar an acre. To prove this I will bring into the box the hon. members for Bothwell and West Durham. I am going to take the land at $2 an acre, for the sake of argument. The member for Gloucester seems delighted at that estimate. Take the subsidy, $25,000,000, and 25,000,000 acres at $50,000,000, which makes $75,000,000 for the Syndicate. Deduct that from the cost of the road, according to the member for West Durham—namely, $82,490,000—and you will have to make up $7,490,600, to enable the Syndicate to build the road; railway stock, $2,000 a mile, $5,400,000, or $12,490,000, which they will be out of pocket. But we have to add a little more. Take the testimony of the member for West Durham and see what he says:

and necessary charge which must be added in all cases, the charge for interest during construction. Now, there is this enormous expense to which I have referred; besides this aggregate of I do not know how many million dollars, the interest of which, according to the whole expenses—these I estimated in former years at $8,000,000, but my hon. friend's estimates, will be $6,000,000 a year—we have got to consider the running expenses which he estimates at a gross sum of $6,750,000 a year for the whole line, or $1,500,000 a year from Fort William to the Pacific. Of course against this sum are to be set the receipts, which will be considerable, and will on some sections of the road perhaps meet expenses, but in the early days, and for a long time, the road, as a whole, will, I believe, be run at a loss."

We have also the testimony of the member for Centre Huron, who showed that the Intercolonial fell behind the expenses $750,000, though it runs through a country which some hon, gentlemen described as a good farming country. We have also the evidence of the member for Lambton who, in 1867, speaking on Confederation, said:

"The line through which the Intercolonial runs is as good as any on the Great Western."

So we ought to consider that those gentlemen, besides building the road at the enormous loss of $12,490,000, as shown by the member for West Durham, have to add the running expenses, which will amount, at any rate, probably to $3,000,000 or $4,000,000. The mathematical member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) can tell what, if it costs $750,000 to run 450 miles of Intercolonial, it would cost to run 2,700 miles. The member for Lambton also made an estimate of the cost of the scheme, amounting to $121,500,000, which, at the estimate of $2 an acre for the land, would leave a balance against the Syndicate of $13,800,000, independent of the cost of running the road, which would be large. Let us take a little testimony from the experience of the United States, to which hon, gentlemen opposite were so partial, but which I do not much care to quote. Of 23 railroads built through Kansas, a prairie region, the average cost was $36,000 per mile; the Delaware and Lackawanna cost $81,317 per mile; the Lake Shore and Michigan, $75,000; the Philadelphia and Reading, $116,000; the Boston and Providence $81,000; Central Pacific, $106,780; Northern Pacific, $48,000. The member for Centre Huron was astray in this last amount $30,000 a mile, not a very large error considering the source. Comparing the cost of those different railways and the cost of those in the Dominion, running up to at least $40,000 a mile, we are justified in concluding that the scheme of the Syndicate will cost at least $40,000 a mile. With regard to the value of the lands, I will take the testimony of leading hon, gentlemen opposite, including the member for West Durham, who does not deem it worth while to pay me much attention, unlike in that respect the member for Gloucester, whom I will also notice. At page 541 of Commons Debates, 1875, the hon. member for West Durham used this language:

"It is an entirely absurd calculation to say that these 1,700,000 acres are worth $2 an acre to this country. Even valuing them at $1 would be, in my judgment, an excessive valuation."

At page 1719 of the Commons Debates, 1877, the hon. member for Lambton is reported as saying:

"I do not place the lands at $5 an acre. I wish I could say they were worth $1 an acre."

And yet these gentlemen say that the whole character of the country is changed, the circumstances are changed, and we wish you would take our valuation and drop a veil over our speeches in Parliament. Take our present valuation of $2.50 per acre. The member for Gloucester, who never exaggerates at all, and who is so very careful in giving utterance to any opinion on the floor of this House, remarked, no later than last April:

"Let me say, without intending any depreciation of the North-West, that I do not, for one, believe there is there anything like the amount of fertile land hon. gentlemen on the other side say there is. Even if this were established beyond doubt, it will not deter a single emigrant from settling in the North-West, where, I believe, there is abundant room for millions of people in the fertile lands that really exist; bus, when we come to calculate on the land as a means of paying for the construction of the railway, we ought to know, beyond doubt, whether we have as much land to sell as hon. gentlemen say. At $1.50 per acre, or thereabouts, which will be the average price, according to the calculation made by the hon. member for West Durham, it would take a very great quantity of land merely to pay the increasing interest on the cost of construction. Since the discussion commenced, I have looked very carefully into the pamphlet published in 1870 by Archbishop Taché, with a view of directing public attention to that country as a desirable place for settlement. The general terms of his description are these: Within our boundary, from the dividing line northward and westward, there are not less than 6,000 square miles of land unfit for sattlement to any considerable extent. A large portion northward and westward, there are not less than $,000 square miles of land unfit for settlement to any considerable extent. A large portion of it, he admits, to be slightly covered with what he describes as exceedingly nutritious grass, but usfit for agricultural purposes. All that district is nearly worthless. Of what he calls prairie lands, he says there are only 60,000 square miles all told, a large portion of which is comparatively inferior in quality. More than that, he told us that a large portion must be regarded as uninhabitable to the average settler, and incapable of settlement on a large scale, because of the intensely cold winters, because of the absolute impossibility of obtaining lumber for constructing dwelling-houses, and of obtaining wood for fuel, or in for constructing dwelling-houses, and of obtaining wood for fuel, or in fact any kind of fuel. Large portions of the prairie can, for these reasons, only be used for pasturage purposes. He says that the portions sons, only be used for pasturage purposes. He says that the portions most fit for settlement are those contiguous to the timber belts near the Rocky Mountains in the west, and towards what is now Manitoba in the east. Altogether, it must be concluded there are not more than 25,000,000 acres of land absolutely fit for settlement."

Now, I have no doubt the member for Gloucester was delighted to know, on his entering the House this Session, there were 250,000,000 acres of land of fair average quality in that country; and I have no doubt now, looking at it from a purely patriotic point of view, he will be ready to let the Syndicate have 25,000,000 acres of land when we have over 200.0 0.000 acres left, sufficient to pay off our debt. He was one of those who stated, on the floor of Parliament, that he was prepared to let the whole country go to have a railway built; but now, when only one-tenth of the land is required, he thinks it is a fraud on the country to give it. Now, let us go further and give another portion of the speech of the hon gentleman. He says:

"I think that no man can very well entertain the hope, on the other side of the House—even the most sanguine that we will realize from the sale of lands in that far west country enough money to pay for the construction of the road, even if the cost be reduced to $62,000,000."

How does that accord with the statement he made the other day, that it was a monstrous thing that the country should give away 25,000,000 acres of land worth $75,000,000?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. When was that speech made?

Mr. RYKERT. No later than last April. But circumstances have changed, and I am not surprised that they object to going back to their own records. They say we should be judged by our past utterances, but they should not be judged by theirs. That is the ground they have always taken in the country. The hon, member for North Norfolk has a sort of genius for figures. He is accustomed to going across the line from time to time to make invidious comparisons between the two countries. This is what he said last Session:

"From the estimates, as to the extent of the arable land in that country, given by the hon. member for Lambton, it would appear that the total amount of arable land south of the north line of the Railway Belt really does not exceed seventy millions of acres. I have no doubt this is a very liberal estimate. In addition to that, in the region north of that line, known as the Peace River country, we may have some arable lands. The arable lands of this region would all be contained in a section of country bounded on the south by the north line of the Railway Belt, on the east by a line projected north from the east end of Lesser Slave Lake, on the north by the line of 57° latitude, and on the west by the Rocky Mountains. This region would contain, by a rough estimate, 30,000,000 acres of land. The arable land contained in this region, and all the arable land to the north of it, would not make a total of more than 20,000,000 acres, so that we may safely conclude that the entire canadian North-West does not exceed 90,000,000 acres." It is barely possible that it may reach 95,000,000 acres."

He wanted to show the 100,000,000 acres appropriated by the Minister of Railways had no right to be set apart there, because, in fact, it did not exist. Let me take the hon. gentleman at a later date, December 18th, 1880. I find in a speech made on a missionary tour, on an occasion, by the way, when he would not allow anyone to answer him, he or at least very little left for settlement, and he goes on to

"Referring to the value of the lands in the Worth-West, he showed that the railway when constructed would make them valuable, and that there being comparatively little cheap lands in the United States open for settlement, immigration must seen turn to the Canadian North-West. This would tend to make the land there valuable. The price of railway lands in the adjacent States was $6.25 per acre."

Now, he wanted to show, and wanted the people to understand, that immigration, if properly encouraged into our own territories, would be very large, because there was so little land on the other side of the line. It is extraordinary that, a couple of days before, the organ of the party had different views of the matter. On December 21st, 1880, the Globe said:

"Nor yet is it the interest of the Syndicate, whose members control immense land grants south of the frontier, that great masses of Canadian lands should be placed in the market so long as there are millions of acres of Minnesota and Dakota railway lands for sale."

According to the Globe, there were millions for sale; but, according to the hon, gentleman, they were limited in quantity in the United States, and were held at $6.50 per acre. Why, he did not say; and why did the hon. member for West Middlesex, when telling the House that those lands were sold for $7 per acre, state that it cost the companies over 80 per cent. to bring those lands into the market? They talk about lands being worth $6. 0 to $7 per acre, but I have here a letter from the manager of the Northern Pacific Railway, offering a township near Bismarck at $2.50 per acre, and to take his own bonds in payment. Now, Sir, I say that the lands of the Union-Pacific Railway are selling to day at $2.50 per acre, and if hon. gentlemen opposite wish to speculate in railway lands-and I see the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) who has a keen eye to a speculation, has at last awoke—they have now a splendid opportunity, for they can purchase lands along the line of the Northern Pacific, outside of Bismarck, for $2.50 per acre, and pay for it in bonds worth 66 cents on

Mr. TROW. I saw these lands not long ago, and I would not give  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cents per acre for them.

Mr. RYKERT. I say that these lands are good arable lands.

Mr. MILLS. The hon, gentleman must be careful. He is advertising these American lands.

Mr. RYKEKT. No, I am not. I wish to show how deceitful these hon, gentlemen are, and how reckless are their statements that these American lines are selling lands at $6 and $7 an acre. What these hon, gentlemen ought to do—to use a Yankeeism which would be quite familiar to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills)-is to bamboozle the public rather than to inform them. The hon, member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) said, on the 10th May, 1879;

"I am convinced, and have always been, that in order to make our road a paying one, we must have a large population thrown into the heart of the continent. We have already opened a highway through that country; and by building the Pembiga Branch we have brought the railread almost to the doors of the settlers in the North-West Territories. I do not understand why the hon. gen'leman anticipates a large revenue from the lands to be sold, because it is absolutely necessary, in order to induce settlers to come into the country, we should furnish them with land free of charge."

The hon, member further stated:

"If the hon, gentleman's expectation should be realized of getting $2 per acre for those 100,000,000 acres, I will confess to him that I have been utterly mistaken in my ideas upon this subject."

The hon, gentleman had a different idea in 1880, for he then endeavored to show that, on account of the value of the lands, and from information he had received from English endeavors to show that there is no land in the United States, | capitalists, it was quite impossible that any large settlement could ever take place in that country. On the 16th April, 1880, the hon, member for West Durham said:

"Nor can I agree that the area of land in the United States available for settlement, although it is no doubt being rapidly diminished, is as yet all reduced to such proportions as to force the current of emigration to our North-West.

This remark was made in the course of the hon. gentleman's celebrated Kansas speech, and it would appear that he did not care how far he sacrificed his country so long as he now consider for a moment what were the estimates made by hon. gentlemen opposite, of the cost of the road. And first we will take the estimate of that very careful member, the hon. gentleman from Gloucester (Mr. Anglin). March 30th, according to the report of the Globe newspaper, he used the following language:

"He thought the estimate of $100,000,000 would be found small enough. At any rate the Government kn-w very little about what it would cost. The member for Wentworth had estimated the cost at $200,000,000. The The member for Wentworth had estimated the cost at $200,000,000. The member for Lennox (Mr. Cartwright), who was well known as a careful calculator, had estimated it at $240,000,000. Who could say that the Dominion with its present resources could pay the present debt and assume a debt of $240,000,000. * • • But in addition to that, it would cost at least $2,500,000 to run the railway after it was built. • • The cost of carrying a railway through British Columbia would be appropriately appropriate the resolution of the parameters. money thrown away and a millstone on the neck of the Dominion."

That certainly should rather encourage the Syndicate to take the Yale-Kamloops section. The member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie), in November, 1873, as reported in the Globe, said:

"I may also add that I hope we shall be able to devise means by which this shall be accomplished at a very much less cost than was contemplated by the Company of Sir Hugh Allan. You are, perhaps, not aware that it was contemplated that the expenditure under this scheme would be $180,000,000. That fact is not generally known."

Then we have the member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) saying in May, 1872:

"He believed they were bound to carry out their engagements, but they were not bound to accept any proposals of the Government. He believed there was no sufficient guarantee that the work would be done for the grants asked. The work must be done, but he could not approve of the plan proposed."

The member for Lambton, in his celebrated Glencoe speech of 1872, spoke as follows:-

"That gentleman [A. P. McD nald] saw no difficulty in unlertaking to spend at least 100 millions, and he believed very much more in the construction of the railway. It cost over 200 millions to build the American, which was one-third shorter and had less natural difficulties in the way than ours, except in one portion of it, from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific through British Columbia, was exceedingly rough, and from the Lake of the Woods and Winnipeg River to the head waters of the Ottawa, the country was undoubtedly the roughest on the continent.

The Syndicate will, no doubt, rejoice that they are going to have the roughest piece of road on the continent to build. Then, Sir, we have the grandest estimate of all. We have the great leader of the Opposition making a speech in the County of Welland, which was replied to in a masterly manner by the member for Halton (Mr. Macdeugall), much to the chagrin of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman, who was then "huge on figures," is thus reported in the Globe:

"Mr. Blake then proceeded to criticize the Pacific Railway scheme, which was one of the maddest schemes ever thought of. The cost of equipment, construction and stock of our present railways ranged from $60,000 to $100,000 per mile. The first section of the railway from Ottawa to Fort Garry at this rate would cost 100 millions, the next was intersected by great rivers which would necessitate costly bridging, and the third section from the base of the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific costs was full of mountains and one of the most difficult in the world for coast was full of mountains, and one of the most difficult in the world the construction of a railway. He showed the dangers attendant on the carrying out of the Act passed last Session, the probability that the road would cost 100 millions, the inadequacy of the present grant, and the dangerous power conceded to the Government."

I venture to say that the Syndicate, on reading this testimony, will give up the case, and we shall have an opportunity to inspect the new offer. The little bantling is would it cost to run the road through the unhospitable to come down on Thursday, I believe. It is the result of and unpopulated country through the Rocky Mountains one hon, gentleman connected with it having gone over to the enemy, and it would be possible, probably, in bringing it down, also to bring down the correspondence showing why the late Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario was dignified by his Sovereign with a title, especially, as in 1867, he was called a traitor to his party and a traitor to his country. It will be a little curious, at any rate, to know why Sir William Howland has jumped the fence and boxed the political compass. We have, also, the speech of the hon, member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright), who, in 1874, said in this House:

"In order rightly to understand the real nature and extent of the burden we would be required to take upon ourselves, it must be remembered that the lowest estimate for building the road to the Pacific is something over $100,000,000, and on the supposition that a very much larger time would be given for the construction. I entertain no doubt that if it were incumbent upon us to finish the line through within the time specified (if it were possible), theexpense would be enormously increased, and that a moderate estimate would reach 150,000,000, or 160,000,000 of dollars."

The hon, member for Lambton, in May, 1876, also used this very choice and elegant language to show the electors how utterly absurd it was that so wild and mad a scheme should be carried out:

"He hated shams, and he had no hesitation in saying he never did be-lieve, and did not now believe, that that could be built through any such wilderness, for any such money."

Again he says:

"We know, Sir, that the obligations of the road were not terminated with the conclusion of the construction. Supposing we only take the estimate of Fleming, 100 millions, you have a pretty good appreciation of what it will cost the country in the end."

Notwithstanding that, we find that the Government is prepared to carry out the whole scheme in its entirety, and that at a less cost than the hon. gentleman proposed, and far less than was proposed by themselves in 1872. Now, we have also to consider what will be the cost to run the road. With regard to that I will take the testimony of hon. gentlemen opposite, so as to give the Syndicate some idea of what a jewel they are going to have, and what a luxury they are going to possess after this contract passes the House. The member for Lambton says:

"Supposing we finish the road within seven years as estimated by the Minister of Finance, until at least 3,000,000 of people are drawn ifite that uninhabited country, it is quite impossible to expect the road to pay running expenses. The Minister of Finance estimates these at not less than $8,000,000 per annum, and they have still further to be supplemented by the proportion of money required each year to renew the road. It is known, however, to railway authorities, that in considering the difficulties of climate and with the ordinary traffic, the road will require renewal, that is the renewal of sleepers and rails, every eight or ten years."

They have got that prospect in view in accepting the proposition now before the House. By the time they got the road built they would have to build it over again. The hon. member for West Durham, who is a speculative gentleman in figures, in 1880, said: "The cost of running the Yale-Kamloops branch line will be $150,000." Then we have the member for Centre Huron, who stated in his Budget Speech in 1874:

"The deficiency arising from the working of the Intercolonial and other railways of the Dominion are reputed as likely to amount to the extraordinary sum of 1½ million dollars. I desire to call the special attention of the House to one point which must be clear to every hon, gentleman. These railways run, for the most part, through a country which has been settled for the last fifty or sixty years. I cannot refer, of course, to the fact that these railways entail such an enormous expenditure without its becoming apparent to the House that the cost of the maintenance of a railway nearly 3,000 miles in length, and passing through a country which is almost uninhabited, must be of necessity very much greater. For a very long time, even after actual construction of this railway, an enormous charge must be levied upon this country in order to keep it in full working order and repair; and this fact must be steadily kept in sight in considering the real character of that project."

Now, there was the undoubted testimony of the late Minister of Finance, that it would cost over $1,509,000 a year to run the Intercolonial Railway; then, how much to the sea for a distance of 2,700 miles? So I think that, after all, the Syndicate have not such a bonne bouche, as has been stated by several hon. gentlemen. I am going to quote the hon. member for West Durham again as an authority. It has been stated over and over again that there is great necessity for building the road as rapidly as possible with communication through the American territory, so that the produce from the far west can reach the sea-board. Now I can prove that this Syndicate cannot carry a bushel of wheat over that railway, and say this on the authority of a gentleman who, when he uttered the sentiment, gave weight to every word as befitted one who was destined to become the leader of his party. He quoted the revenue derived from the Union Pacific Railway, and came to the conclusion that no company could carry one bushel of wheat over the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. No; I know what I said. It was not that.

Mr. RYKERT. Then we will go to proof. If the hon. gentleman has forgotten when he said that, I can tell him where to find his speech.

Mr. BLAKE. I know exactly what I said. .

Mr. RYKERT. October 6th, 1874, the hon, gentleman said:

"I am of the opinion that the B.C. section of the railway, even if it turns out to be practicable for an engineering link, will involve an enormous expenditure amounting to 33 millions, and after its completion will involve an enormous charge on the revenue of the country for running expenses, and I doubt much if that section can be kept open after it is built."

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Mr. RYKERT. I am coming to the hon. gentleman shortly. The hon, gentleman from West Durham goes on te say:

"Fertile as is the soil, great as are the resources, glorious as are the prospects with reference to production, it is certain that the distance from the great markets of the world, of the inland portions of that country, will prove one great difficulty to overcome.

"Of course there must be railways at once to connect the sheets of water, and eventually a through line; but I am confident that a bushel of wheat will never go to England over an all-rail route from the Saskatchewan to the sea-board, because it would never pay to send it."

Now, have I not proved out of his own mouth that this great bargain of the Syndicate will not enable them to carry one cent's worth of wheat over the whole line? Then, again, the hon, gentleman was giving us a lecture on freights, and went on to say:

"You have read of the war which is going on between the farmers and the railways in the western States, through the attempt which is being made to cut down freights by legislation. But I do not find that the railways are getting rich. The fact is the war is a war against distance, it is a war against time and space, and that is the war the farmer of the North-West will have to encounter."

Is that not language sufficiently strong to satisfy even the Syndicate who are to be so much enriched? Perhaps I am imprudent in making these quotations as they may frighten the Syndicate to back out of their bargain. But I hope those gentlemen, even though they are Grits, are sufficiently honorable to stand by the contract. The hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said, in 1876, at page 79 of the Hansard: .

"I believe the agreement to build the road 2,700 miles, for 22,000 a mile, should be looked upon as the height of absurdity."

The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) said, in

"Sandford Fleming had estimated that the running expenses of the road would amount to $5,000,000 annually, and its construction cost $100,000,000; the interest on that sum must be added to the running expenses is order to obtain the annual outlay. These facts proved that unless the circumstances of the country changed the railway would be an unproductive work. It was estimated that before the road would pay running expenses it would be necessary to throw a population of 3,000,000 into the country. No reason to anticipate that the population of the Pacific Province would be large within the next fifteen years.

• If the whole of the imports and exports of British Columbia amounting to $4,000,000 were to pass over the road, there would be no encouragement to hope that the road would for a long time pay running expenses.

Again, in 1880, the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) said:

"That road [the British Columbia section] when built cannot pay running expenses, and in the country through which these 125 miles of railroad are to be laid, at a cost of so much money, there are but few tracts of fertile land or land fit for settlement. As has been said, all these lands put together are only about the size of an average county in Ontario."

The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said, in 1880 (vide Hansard, page 1556):

An expenditure of 30 or 40 millions of money among the rocks of British Columbia will make no returns for years to come, and that section ought not to be built until it can be reached from the east."

And again, on December 20th, 1880, according to the Globs report, he said:

"The line through the unproductive regions could not be made to pay as a commercial speculation."

I think I have shown you clearly that so far as the western portion of the road is concerned, the testimeny of hon. gentlemen opposite is that it will never pay running expenses. I will now quote the opinions of hon, gentlemen on the character of the Lake Superior Branch which to-day they say is going to be built so cheaply by the Syndicate, will add to the revenue they are to derive from this bargain. In 1877, the hon member for Lambton said, at page 1629, Hansard, 1871:

"The Government decided it would be a waste of public money at present to prosecute the construction of this railway from the western end of Lake Superior to Lake Nipissing, through a country totally uninhabited, a country so far as we know at most unfit for habitation. I do not say there may not be some tracts of land which may sustain human life in various parts of that rocky wilderness, but I do say that the general characteristics of the country bordering on Lake Superior and advancing very nearly to the border of Lake Huron and Georgian Bay, is unfavorable."

I could also quote from a number of other articles on the subject, but will not weary the House any-longer on that point. I have shown from the evidence of hon. gentlemen opposite that the cost of building the road will be something enormous; that, according to their miserable predictions, the Syndicate should only be too glad to be allowed to withdraw from this bargain, and allow the Government to accept the proposition which we are promised will be made by the bogus concern that hon gentlemen opposite tell us is being formed. The Globe, on December 21st, 1880, makes the following admission:

"It is not the interest of the Syndicate to build the line north of Lake Superior, and it is pretty well known that the construction of this portion of the line was put into the contract against the wishes of the Syndicate."

The Globe thus gives up the whole case in showing that the right hon. leader of the Government was so mindful of our interest that he insisted on the Syndicate building the whole line through Canadian territory. It appears the Syndicate did not relish the idea of taking up that portion of the road which I have shown from the evidence of the Opposition is not the portion that will pay for some time. I have a distinct recollection of a speech made some years ago in the old Ontario Parliament by the hon. member for Lambton, when propounding the idea of extending the Sandfield Macdonald scheme of developing the Northern Territory by building railways through it. In his financial speech of 1872, in that Legislature, I find his view of the character of the Lake Superior and Nipissing country expressed. He said:

"We have felt that it is necessary to open up the back country—that large extent of territory bounded by the Ottawa and the French Rivers, and by Lake Nipissing, though it is not necessary to stop at Nipissing—and lying in the rear of the frontier countries on the lakes. The capabilities of this tract of country, judging from Sir William Logal's estimates, are of a very high description. Twenty or thirty-five per cent. is valuable land, making one-fourth of the whole eminently suitable for settlement, while a large portion of the rest is excellent pasture land, and valuable for other purposes."

I recollect reading shortly afterwards an article in the Globe in which the writer stated that the only settler to be found around Lake Nipissing was an escaped debtor who ran a saw-mill that cut about two logs a day. At that time, I opposed the railway extension through that country, because I considered, from the evidence I had extracted from public documents and from surveyors' reports, that the country was barren and totally unfit for settlement; but from the reports of Mr. Fleming and other engineers, and also from the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite who pretended to know the character of that country, I came to the conclusion that there was a large section of land through it fit for settlement, and which ultimately would produce a revenue for the railway. I think that the testimony given us by the Minister of Finance of the Ontario Government. ought to go far to enable us to form a correct opinion on the subject; at any rate he was not justified in making that statement unless he knew it to be correct. I believe it is known there are tracts of country in that region not only fit for settlement, but good. The member for Lambton, quoting Mr. Fleming, says:

"That it is now established beyond doubt that a favorable and comparatively easy route, considering the line as a whole, has been found from Ottawa to the northerly side of Lake Superior. This result is the more satisfactory as unfavorable impressions have been created regarding the future of the country, many having considered it impracticable for railway construction."

Having been charged by Dr. Tupper with violating the compact as to the building of 1,300 miles, which in his address he stated he would not build. Mr. Mackenzie replied thus:

"He [Tupper] found fault with me for saying that the omission of 1,300 miles from immediate construction would save the country sixty or seventy million dollars, and he hoped I was now prepared to modify that statement with my experience; but I am not prepared to modify that statement."

Then the member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright), in his Budget Speech, in 1878, gives the following testimony on the subject :-

"No doubt a certain portion of this expenditure may be fairly looked upon as productive on the score of bringing back into our coffers some return for the monies expended, and I may add that of all the schemes submitted to this House, I believe that proposed by the Premier, for opening up that fine and considerable tract between French River and the Ottawa Valley is the one which, on the whole, is most likely to add to the paying population of the Province of Ontario."

Mr. Mackenzie was then in favor of following as nearly as possible an air-line from Nipissing to Fort Garry. He is thus reported in the Globe of May 12th, 1874:

"We have reason to believe, that perseverance has already accomplished a good deal in this direction, and that a route will be found free from any very appalling obstacles to the construction of the railway.

"First.—It would be, of course, desirable to follow as nearly as possible, an air-line from Nipissing to Fort Garry; and secondly, it would be incumbent on the engineers to approach, as nearly as possible, to the head of the lake navigation communicating with the St. Lawrence. Every proper is account of with the navigation of the lake navigation of the lake navigation of the lake navigation communicating with the St. Lawrence. one is acquainted with the rugged and uneven character of this country immediately N. and W of Lake Superior. In the rear, however, of the rocky region it is alleged the land is tolerably level and free from serious obstructions to the progress of the railroad."

Again:

"The Canadian Pacific although running so much further north, will have less to fear from the rigors of winter than its competitor for transoceanic traffic in the more southern regions."

They do not want an air-line now, but a line through the United States. Thus we have the member for Lambton testifying that the line from Nipissing to Fort Garry could be easily built, that the region was fit for settlement and calculated to compete strongly with the United States region to the south. It is utterly impossible, then, to conclude that the road should not be built through British territory. not only on account of our pledges to British Columbia, but because we are not prepared to place ourselves at the feet of gentlemen opposite is that it is not going to the Sault. The country will be amazed at these gentlemen stating the Government are dereliet in this respect and unwilling to discharge their obligations to the people—that they are not bound to carry out in good faith their pledges to British Columbia. Why, the opinion of these gentlemen in 1872 was in favor of building an all-rail line, and not one tribu-tary to the United States. When Sir Hugh Allan spoke at Peterborough, in 1872, in reference to the building of the Sault Branch, how was he met by them and their organ. The scheme was pronounced dangerous to the interests of the Dominion and tavorable to the United States, and the day after the speech the Globe asked:

"Is it to be the Great Canadian-Montreal-Carleton Place-Peterboro"-Toronto-Sault-Ste -Marie-American-Pacific Railway?
"This plan of Sir Hugh Allan would seem to mean if anything, that the Act of Parliament and Imperial Guarantee, and all that, are to go for nothing, unless there is a great popular uprising to secure the line through our ewn territory."

The Globe of December 2nd, 1872, commenting on that subject, remarks:

"We quote from the Gazette: 'Fairly stated, the object which Sir Hugh Allan looks forward to, and which he is pledged to assist by his great influence and eminent commercial standing, is to draw down to great influence and eminent commercial standing, is to draw down to the Canadian sea-board and over Canadian lines the trade, not simply of our own north-western country, but the trade as well of the States through which the Northern Pacific Railway passes.' That is to say, the trade of our own North-West, to carry which the Canadian Pacific is mainly to be built, and also the traffic of the States the Northern Pacific passes through, are to be brought to the Sault, and thence by Canadian lines to Montreal. And yet Sir Hugh is all the time the trusted agent for building the Canadian Pacific through Canadian territory."

The Globe, still further commenting on the subject on February 28th. says:

"If this scheme is carried out, our national enterprise, instead of being the successful rival of the American Company, competing for the Asiatic trade, which is now in its infancy, and building up the Dominion as no other undertaking will do, will simply be the Canadian branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad, entirely under its control, and dictated to by it relentlessly.

And again, on the 28th March, the organ thus speaks:

"True, the British Canadian road would be only constructing while True, the british Canadian road would be only constructing while its successful rival was already working; true, the emigrant seeking a home in British territory would be beset at every station by Minnesota land agents and touters of all descriptions; but the Allans would grow richer and the Allan ships be loaded to the water line."

Again, we read in the same organ, the following:—

"Why, the very first piece of road that is to be finished, if the terms of the charter are complied with, is to be a feeder of the Northern Pacific. And this is to be completed, according to the contract, by the end of next year [December 31, 1874] while the Lake Superior route to Fort Garry—after years have been frittered away in which every effort should have been expended to open communication through British territory—is not to be completed till the end of 1876.

The member for Lambton on December 8th, 1874, made certain promises in connection with this route, in which he

"It will be seen therefore, by any one who desires to learn the truth, that the First Minister proposes to carry out ultimately the whole plan for building a great railroad through British territory from ocean to ocean; that he will begin with that portion which is most urgently needed, and will be attended, when finished, with the most direct profitable results; that he does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America that he proposes to do anything towards co-operating with America that he does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America that he does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America that he does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America that he does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America that he does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America that he does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with America the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with the does not propose the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with the does not propose to do anything towards co-operating with the does not propose the does not pr rican lines that his predecessor would not have and properly done."

Now, the last quotation I will give, in reference to that matter from the Globe, is the following:

"There are but few settlers between Lake Superior and Lake Manitoha, but speedy and direct railway communication between the two great systems of inland navigation of British America is a matter of enermous importance, and all will agree that its construction ought to be undertaken at once and carried rapidly forward to completion. It is a necessity for the settlement of the whole north-west country. The means of ingress for settlers is wanted, and also for the egress of whatever supplies the new population can raise."

Then, Sir, a short time afterwards the Globe saw fit to change its tune, and then it indicated that the member for Lambton was about to build the Sault Ster Marie the American people. One objection to this road from hon. Branch and shandoned the other line temporarily.

I think, if anything was wanting to satisfy the general public that the Sault Ste. Marie Branch should I think, if anything the not be built by the Government, it is the evidence I have quoted from what was furnished by the hon, gentleman. I could go on and quote for an hour from their own speeches upon that and subsequent occasions, and as late as 1878, they were determined there should be an all-rail line through the British American Provinces from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and on no account what ever should it be made contributory to the Northern Pacific line. I think I have established beyond all doubt that gentlemen capable of forming any opinion worth hearing, as to the propriety of building the railway, shows con-clusively that a road through Canadian territory exclusively is the only road to be built. Place us at the mercy of the United States and where would we be? Suppose they took it into their heads to do away with the bonding system, where would we be? Of course, after the road is completed from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg during the open season of navigation, our trade would find a channel by that route, but suppose the bonding system were done away with, what would our people in the North-West Territories do during the winter season? I do not propose to place ourselves at the mercy of the Americans, if we can help it. I contend we should carry out, in its entirety, the pledge to British Columbia, and, as I have shown, it can be done without increasing the existing rate of taxation one dollar. It has been stated repeated by there is going to be a grand land monopoly established. What does it amount to? Let us take the evidence furnished by the hon. member for Niagara. I shall not trouble the House with a repetition of it, but we have the united opinion of two of the most distinguished members on that side of the House when the late Government was in power—the hon. members for North Norfolk and Bothwell—that the granting of lands to railway companies was the greatest benefit to a new country. It affords means to develop that country, drawing immigration into it, and developing its vast resources. It is illustrated by the United States, by the success which has attended the granting of large tracts of land to railway companies in converting a wilderness into a populous and prosperous country, studded with towns and villages. That was the opinion of the hon. gentlemen, and I refer them to their own speeches in in 1878, pages 1490-1, and 1484 and 1486, Commons Debates, when they proposed to grant to railway companies $10,000 per mile to all railways built in the North-West Territory in addition to their Act of 1874 which gave $30,000,000 and 54,000,000 acres of land. We come now to consider a very important question, and I was amazed at the remarks made by the hon, member for Centre Huronperhaps I should take that back-I am not amazed at anything coming from the hon. gentleman, especially when he has a question of figures under consideration. The hon. member for North Norfolk very candidly told the House that he was a speculative genius and he did not care about his figures being received by the House; he was satisfied with them himself and believed the country would accept them as correct. Now, I will show to the satisfaction, I believe, of every candid man, that there is nothing in the bugbear of taxation which has been raised and the land monopoly. I should like hon, gentlemen to tell me why all the rail-ways in the United States are so anxious to sell their lands to settlers, speculators or anyone to open up the railway? Why, it is because they have undoubted evidence that every acre of land which is cleared on the line of the railway produced no less than $4.00 a year of revenue for the railway. And why do they make a reduction in prices? You buy 100 acres of land and break it up, and they will return you half the purchase money, simply because the land cultivated will yield $4.00 per acre every year to the railway. That is their idea in selling lands, and it is the best Mr. RYKERT.

answer I can give to those who say the railway company will heard up those lands. Take the scheme of the hon. member for Lambton: It provided for the granting of blocks of land twenty miles square. Those blocks were, of course, detrimental to settlement. But what is proposed now? Only sections of 640 acres are given, so that even though a settler cultivates 640 acres of land, he has not very far to go before he finds another section of 640 acres settled upon. It is not like going through a block of twenty miles. This scheme is of such a character that it is utterly impossible to lock up large blocks of land to the detriment of settlement. Now, on the question of taxation, I am surprised at the fraud attempted to be perpetrated upon this House by certain hon, gentlemen who spoke of the value of this exemption. Almost the last remarks of the hon, member for West Middlesex were, that Mr. Mackenzie's scheme was such a grand one, that he gave lands in alternate blocks along the line all the way from Lake Nipissing to Fort Garry. Where did he get the land? Who owned the land in Ontario? What has the Dominion Government to do with lands about Lake Nipissing? Why, the hon. member for West Durham said he hoped the Government of Ontario would be prepared to give their land along the line, in one of his speeches not long ago, and yet these gentlemen attempt to blind the people by saying the late Government were going to give lands all the way along the line through Ontario. -

Mr. MILLS. Read Sir Hugh Allan's contract.

Mr. RYKERT. I do not care what the Allan contract was; I am stating facts. The Ontario Government has jurisdiction over the lands in this Province. Take the question of taxation. We were challenged by the member for West Middlesex to point to an instance where any railway company had its lands or property exempted from taxation. Finding he was mistaken, and his memory being jogged by the hon. member for North Norfolk, he took that back to a certain extent. He said the Northern Pacific Railway had its lands exempted in the territories, but the moment those territories became States they would be taxed. Where does he find that in the Statute-books? The law granting, in 1864, a charter to the Northern Pacific Railway granted certain rights and privileges to the Company, as far as the Central Government could give them through the territories, but did not say that when those territories became States those rights should cease. Every lawyer knows that they do not. I thought I saw the hon, member for West Durham hang his head about that time. I thought he saw a proposition of law laid down that was hardly tenable; but everyone knows that if the central Government has jurisdiction over a territory, and gives certain rights in it, the mere fact of that territory becoming a State does not deprive people of their rights within its borders. Section two of the charter says that the road-bed shall be 200 feet on each side of the track. We are giving only 100 feet here, and some wiseacre outside of the House said the contract does not limit the extent—that they can take 400 or 500 feet on each side of the railway. The General Railway Act for 1879 provides that the width of the railway must be 100 feet. Here is the section of the Northern Pacific Act:

"The road-bed shall be 200 feet wide on each side of the road, and all necessary grounds for station buildings, workshops, switches and turntables, shall be exempt from taxation within the Tarritories of the United States."

It goes on to say that the indian titles shall be extinguished as far as practicable. But, Sir, I do not wish to justify my case by any such grounds; I desire to let my case stand on its own bottom. I wish to show that while the hon member for Centre Huren said that the franchises of the road would be worth $600,000, these franchises are not worth more than $5,000. I assume, for the sake of argument, that we have a jurisdiction over the 2,700 miles from Nipissing to Port Moody; I assume that the land is assessed for $5 per acre for the whole length of the line, and I believe that most men would say I am insane if I assumed that the property actually would be assessed at that figure for the next 20 vers. The whole Province of Ontario, including the cities, towns and villages is only assessed at $10 per acre; and no less than nine counties of that Province, comprising 5,150,743 acres are only assessed at $5 per acre. I propose to take first the county represented by the hon gentleman who sits behind me (Mr. Haggart); I will take also the County of Bruce, the Counties of Carleton, Frontenac, Hatings, Peterboro', Prescott and Russell, Renfrew and Victoria, and I think that in selecting these counties I am taking a fair average. According to the records of the Ontario Legislature of the Counties of this Province, the whole assessed value of the property comprised in these counties is $5.20 per acre. I will show that the representations of hon. gentlemen opposite on this subject have been if not a fraud, to use the expression of the hon. member for Lambton, a sham, and I think I learned something about the question of taxation while I acted as the Reeve of a township for several years.

Mr. TROW. Take the County of Perth.

Mr. RYKERT. I can show that some of the townships in your county are not assessed for as much as $3 an acre. The member for Wellington told me that one of the best townships in his county was assessed for $17 per acre, but I showed him it was assessed for $8.25 an acre.

Mr. TROW. There are some townships in my county which are assessed for $50 an acre?

Mr. RYKERT. I ought to mention the Township of Grantham, in my own county, a good old Conservative township, which gives 150 of a Tory majority every election, and which would substantiate my figures. From Lake Nipissing to the extreme west of the county which the hon member for West Durham once called a sea of mountains, there are 12 ac es to the mile, which makes 32,400 acres. I allow one quarter of that for sidings and station-houses, making a total of 40,500 acres in the whole distance from the western terminus of the road to the Pacific Ocean. I will suppose that that property is assessed at $5 per acre, which would make $202,500. I will suppose that there are 150 stationhouses, and I believe there will not be that many in our own time or in the time of our children, and we will put them at $1,000 each which will make $150,000. The workshops will not probably be taxed at all, from the fact that Winnipeg, like all progressive places, is willing to forego taxation for the benefit that these shops would be to that city. But I would allow $100,000 for workshops, which would make $452,500 altogether. The average rate of taxation in Ontario is three-fourths of a cent. per acre; but I would just double that amount, and say that the rate would be 11 cents on the dollar. Upon the amount I have mentioned, this would be $6,787.50, as representing the taxation on the whole road-bed, buildings and everything else belonging to the road throughout that territory. But we must bear in mind that a large portion of the road would run through the Province of Ontario, which would enjoy the right of taxation, and without going into the question of how much territory belongs to that Province, I will allow a reduction on that account, which will reduce the total to $5,280 as against the $600,000 which was estimated by the member for South Huron (Mr. Cameron). Now, Sir, they talk about the taxation of the United States railways; I am prepared to show by documentary evidence that their statements on this subject are not correct. They tell us that $400,000 or $500,000 is paid annually in taxes by the Northern Pacific Railway, while Poor's "Railway Manual" for 1880, at page 823, states that the whole taxes of the Northern Pacific Railway amount to $107,292, The Northern Railway Company of Canada, which controls 325 miles of railway, with its valuable water-front, manufactories and vessels and lumber yards in Toronto, its buildings in Hamilton, and its great line of railway extending back to Muskoka and the northern lakes, annually pays, I am informed by letter from the manager, Mr. Cumberland, a total amount of $15,116 in taxes. The taxes paid by the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway, on their 191 miles of railway, is only $4,723. So that exemption from taxation is not such a bugbear as has been represented. I have been amazed at the stretches of imagination of the hon. gentlemen opposite; but when we come to understand that these gentlemen are trying to raise a cry in the country by which they hope to supplant this Government, we cannot wonder how they distort their facts and figures. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Cameron) alleged that a great injustice would be done, by the adoption of this contract, to the military and the mails. Why, this is a matter regulated by the Dominion Statute. The hon. gentleman knew that one of the first clauses of this contract provides that the General Railway Act should be applicable to it; and section 28 of that Act says:

"Her Majesty's mails, Her Majesty's naval or military forces or militia, and all artillery, ammunition, provisions or other stores for their use; and all policemen, constables or others, travelling on Her Majesty's service, should at all times, when required by the Postmaster-General of Canada, the Commander of the Forces, or any person having the superintendence and command of any police force, and with the whole resources of the country if required, be carried on the railway, on such terms and conditions and under such regulations as the Governor in Council may make."

But we are told that the Company can build the centre and leave the eastern section. It seems to me that section 4 of the contract sets that point at rest:

"The work of construction shall be commenced at the eastern extremity of the eastern section not later that the first day of July next, and the work upon the central section shall be commenced by the Company at such point towards the eastern end thereof on the portion of the line now under construction as shall be found convenient, and as shall be approved by the Government, at a date not later than the 1st May next. And the work upon the eastern and central sections, shall be vigorously and constinuously carried on at such rate of annual progress on each section as shall enable the Company to complete and equip the same and each of them, in running order, on or before the first day of May, 1891."

I apprehend, and I think no one will refute my proposition, that if the Company do not advance vigorously and continuously with the work to the satisfaction of the Government, the Government can invoke the machinery of the Court of Chancery, which no one knows better than the hon member for West Durham, to compel them to do what their contract says they shall do.

Mr. BLAKE. Then if I know anything about it, I deny that proposition.

Mr. RYKERT. If he denies that, he will deny anything. If the Court of Queen's Bench will not grant a mandamus, the Court of Chancery will compel the Company to carry out its agreement. The right hon, leader of the Government will compel the railway company to go on and perform the terms of the contract.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Certainly they can.

Mr. RYKERT. And if they will not obey the mandamus of the court the authority of the Court of Chancery can be invoked.

Mr. BLAKE. It is well laid down that a Court of Chancery will not enforce a railway contract.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon, gentleman is mistaken. Under ordinary charters, where there is a permission for a company to luild a railway, the courts will not interfere; but when, as in this case, it is provided that the Company shall build the railway it might be compulsorily enforced.

Mr. RYKERT. Another objection is that the railway is to be the property of the Company. Now, why did not the hon, gentleman state the facts? Sub-section 8 of section 8 of the contract of 1874 is exactly the same as the present contract:

"The property of the railway shall become the property of the Company when built."

Those are the terms of the two charters. The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) said:

4 The Company would surrender the charter as soon as the road was finished, and that they would not finish it."

Section 7 provides:

"And the Company shall thereafter and for ever efficiently maintain, work and run the Canadian Pacific Railway."

Another objection is to the Company having the right of way free through Government lands. I merely point out that the charter of 1874 provides exactly the same as the present:

"The Governor in Council may grant the right of way through the government lands, and also any such lands as may be required for the purpose of constructing or working the railway."

Another charge made by the hon, gentleman for West Durham amazes me, though I suppose he thinks the end justifies the means. He says the Company can charge any tolls they please. He has been pleased to refer to the sections of the Statute. Those sections are so plain that any man who chooses to read them can understand them. Section 9 says:

"No tolls shall be levied or taken until approved by the Governor in Council, or until after two weeks publication in the Canada Gazette, of the by-law establishing such tolls."

Section 10 states:

"Every toll shall be subject to revision from time to time."

Now, the hon gentleman did not read that, as I understand, to the Montreal audience, but he went on to tell them that the clause would be a dead letter as far as the Company are concerned. If the Company fails to fulfil their agreement they will be amenable both to the Courts and to public opinion, and if they violate the statute they can be prosecuted. The hon. gentleman, at Montreal, said: It is true that a law exists permitting the Governor General in Council to regulate tolls when the earnings of the Company amount to 10 per cent., but this law will be a dead letter-a position which amazes me on the part of an eminent lawyer like the hon. gentleman. He claims that the Company can charge whatever tolls they please until they receive 10 per cent., not only upon the capital invested by themselves, but upon that put in by the Government. Now, the hon gentleman knew well that that law did not mean that they should get 10 per cent. upon what was put in by the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. No, I did not.

Mr. RYKERT. Then I think you ought to do so.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know it now.

Mr. RYKERT. Now, it is stated that the Company can roam all over the country and take whatever land they please. Section 11 says:

"If they cannot get sufficient land fairly fit for settlement within 24 miles of the road, the deficiency may be made up between parallels 49 and 57 degrees of north latitude, by a grant therein of similar alternate blocks."

Now, those hon, gentlemen have constantly reiterated that the Company could go all over the country and select their lands in a block, and that in defiance of the Act of Parliament, which says they must select them in similar alternate blocks. If the land alongside the railway is not fairly fit for settlement, and they choose to go outside that territory for other land, wherever they take one section the Government must take another alongside of it.

Mr. ANGLIN. Who has said anything to the contrary?

Mr. RYKERT. I can quote such views from dozens of speeches made by those hon. gentlemen. Mr. Mackenzie's Mr. RYKERT.

Act of 1874 provided that the land should be of fair, average quality, and that when a sufficient quantity could not be found in the immediate vicinity of the railway, then the deficiency should be made up from such other places as the Governor in Council might determine, but not in alternate blocks. Hon. gentlemen must see by this that the present scheme of the Government, as regards the selection of land, is much better and more in the interest of the country. has given a long string of absurd Globeobjections which some people may be innocent chough to believe. It says the Syndicate can abolish all competition by impeding river navigation by any kind of bridges they please. Now look at section 66 of the General Railway Act and you will find a provision there made for that purpose, so that no railway can impede the navigation of any stream. That section says: "No company shall cause any obstruction to impede navigation." Hon. gentlemen then go on and talk about the standard of the Pacific Railway. Now. I am prepared to argue that, according to their charter, they can build no other than a first-class road. "As first constructed" must mean, constructed as received by the Government. Section 7 of the Act of 1864, passed by the United States Congress, says:

"That whenever the said company shall have completed any one section of the 40 consecutive miles of any part of railroad and telegraph line, eastward of the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains, ready for the service contemplated by this Act, supplied with all necessary drains, culverts, viaducts, curvings, sidings, bridges, turnouts, watering places, depots, equipments, furniture and all other appurtenances of a first-class railroad, three Commissioners to be appointed by the President of the United States, to examine the same and report to him in relation thereon, shall proceed to perform their duty and if it shall appear to him that 40 consecutive miles of said railroad and telegraph line have been completed and equipped in all respects as required by this Act, then upon certificate of said Commissioners to that effect, patents shall issue conveying the right and title of said lands to said company, on each side of the road, as far as the same is completed, to the amount aforesaid; and patent shall in like manner issue as each section of not less than 40 consecutive miles of said railroad is completed to the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains; and also as each 20 consecutive miles thereof, west of said eastern base is completed upon like certificate of Commissioners to be appointed. No Commissioner to be appointed until verified under oath of the President of the Company, that the proper number of miles have been completed as the Act directs."

The width of the road is defined by the Act of 1879, so it is utterly impossible to go behind that. I think I have met fairly most of the objections which have been advanced, in and out of the House, with regard to the scheme, and I think the only conclusion that can be drawn is, that the Government, in undertaking this vast enterprise, have had but one view in their minds—to act in the interests of the country and, above all other things, to keep the faith and credit of this country intact. I am not prepared to accept the invitation of hon. gentlemen opposite to join a party which has not done anything towards the advancement of the best interests of the Dominion. I have searched in vain through the records of Parliament, and have yet to learn that the Statute-book contains one single Act of importance in the interests of the country introduced by the leaders of the Opposition. I am not prepared to join a party that continually parades its principles while out of office, and abandons them as soon at they reach the Treasury benches; a party which supported the union of the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and then made a dissolution of that union a plank in their platform; which raised the cry of representation by population when in opposition, and then at the earliest possible moment on entering office abandoned that plank, a party which advocated Confederation, and then so soon as Confederation was accomplished endeavored to obstruct the working of the machinery which the right hon. leader of the Government was endeavoring to put into successful operation; a party which would advocate the union of the several provinces in one harmonious whole, and then, when the Government was considering the claims of the provinces and endeavoring to adjust them equitably, raised the cry of extravagance and corruption; a party which advocates one day the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway through British territory, forming a great national highway from east to west, as necessary to cement in closer union the various provinces of Confederation, and cries out the next day that the scheme is too extravagant a one for us to undertake to carry it out; a party which boasted, over and over again, that it devoted all its efforts towards promoting immigration, and which when it has an opportunity of endorsing the conduct of the Government in endeavoring to fill up our country, endeavors instead to turn the tide of immigration to the western States by belittling the value of our lands; a party which for ten years declared our lands were not worth a dollar an acre and that it was impossible to build the road out of their proceeds, and now when the Government have introduced a scheme by which those lands will build the road, declare they are worth $5 an acre; a party which fell heir to an overflowing treasury and which during five years of power, by its reckless extravagance and abandonment of principle, succeeded in converting surpluses into deficits, and could only stand by with folded arms powerless to arrest the downward progress of the country, until they were hurled from power by a justly indignant people on the 17th September, 1878;—I have, on the contrary, faith in the honor and integrity of my leaders in Parliament, and believe I would be a traitor to the best interests of my country did I not extend to them my hearty support in passing a measure which I believe is fraught with great benefit to the people. Mr. COCKBURN (Muskoka). I deprecate the line of argument adopted by some of the lesser lights on the other side in imparting feelings of rancour in the debate, which ought to receive the dignified attention of members: I will only refer to two gentlemen who, I think, have acted in extremely bad taste. I was rather surprised to hear hon, gentlemen on the Ministerial side encouraging the member for Essex (Mr. Patterson), who was hitherto considered a gentleman of dignity, in the exhibition he made of himself the other evening in indulging in much silly, irrelevant talk, in his assaults upon the Opposition. He took up much time of the House, in reading quotations that had little to do with the question. The charges that members in Opposition are unpatriotic, is the assertion of the Minister of Public Works; and the statements that they did not want the railway, were uncalled for. I believe the hon, members in Opposition are not second to gentlemen on the Ministerial side as to broad views and aspirations in reference to the development of this great country. I have never assumed that all the patriotism and virtues resided in any one party; and I have disliked the rancorous personalities introduced into this discussion. This question is of vital importance to the country, and should be dealt with on its merits. We and our leaders have been misrepresented throughout the country, and even on the other side of the lines and Atlantic. Portions of the speeches of the Opposition have been quoted and others left out, so as to destroy their meaning. Persons who systematically indulge in this garbling and misrepresentation can scarcely be exonerated from the charge of falsehood. We are called factious for maintaining this discussion at such length. I contend we are entitled to the highest thanks of the people for the manner in which the subject has been brought before their attention, and fully and freely discussed. Though a strong party man myself, and willing to make every legitimate effort to put my leader at the head of the Government, I will state, also, that if the Government had made any such good bargain as it pretends, I would cheerfully support its policy. I believe the great mass of the people, including the most rabid Grits, would have been prepared to accept any such arrangement. I could not help admiring the great joy, the ecstacies of the Conservatives over the reported brilliant that ought to be an encouragement to the Government to consuccess of their leader, who was described as a statesman able enough to rule the German Empire. We have heard much of this advantageous contract, but, on being appealed to, the Government withheld the details, despite the clamor of the country. In the light of subsequent events we see very good reason for that course. Ministers knew very well those details would not be satisfactory. So former eulogists of the right hon gentleman's statesmanship are now crestfallen and will not defend the Syndicate. What was the fallen and will not defend the Syndicate. What was the understanding last Session? The First Minister stated he had a scheme whereby the railway would be constructed from the sale of the lands. I have a quotation from his speech, at page 1056 of Hansard, in which he prophesied as to the great number of people we should send to the North-West, and the amount of revenue derivable from them. The Premier said:

"We are told that 50,000 will go in this year, but let us take 25,000 and add 50,000 for the following year, and so on, proportionately every year. We assume, therefore, an increase of 5,000 a year till 1890, and expect in that year 75,000 settlers in our North-West.

Mr. BLAKE. Can you not make it another 10,000?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that is a very moderate estimate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that is a very moderate estimate. On those figures, the estimate on the total cash revenue to be received for the lands, by 1890, is $38,593,000.

Mr. BLAKE. That is up to 1890.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, and including 1890.

Mr. BLAKE. That amount with interest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We expect $38,593,000, including simple interest for the lands sold in that period.

Mr. BLAKE. What proportion is principal and what interest?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot say what will be the total sum received in cash to the end of 1890. But, besides, there will be all the instalments to come in after 1890, accruing yearly, so that the lands sold in 1890 will be one-tenth paid for nine years afterwards—for each year there will be an instalment of one-tenth paid. The actual value in 1890, of the pre-emption, up to that date, unpaid, will be $16,272,000, making in all, $32,712,000. If you add to that total, unpaid, the $38,593,000 that will be paid in 1890, you get a grand total of $71,305,000."

So we are thus expected to realize sixty nine millions of dollars, which would pay for the road according to the estimate of the Minister of Railways. According to the First Minister's estimate the receipts from lands would almost reach that amount. With such a glowing scheme of the right hon. gentleman, many of us were reminded of the school-boy lessons as to Capt. Bobadil's method of defeating an army, which looked very well on paper, but was otherwise not reliable. But the next thing we find, after we are all sent to our homes, is the visit to the old country, and shortly afterwards the alleged great success of the Syndicate is announced. I am free to confess that it did appear as if the Government had covered themselves with glory, as some of them still claim they did, in making such an arrangement, and I should have been glad if it had been as satisfactory as they represented it. We find hon, gentlemen opposite now trying to justify their bargain, by showing that the late Government offered better terms. I do not admit that, but even though it were so, that is not logic. Five or six years ago is not to-day, and the circumstances are quite different. A few years ago railway men were saying: "Let us have a rest." They have had a rest, and they are ready to embark in large enterprises, and it is not surprising that they should be ready to undertake a scheme of this kind. That shows all the more clearly that the Government blundered when they did not invite tenders for building this railway. If they were determined to place it in the hands of a private company they ought to have advertised. There may have been another reason for the haste of the Government to transfer the control of this Pacific Railway from their own hands to those of a private company. It may be that they had no confidence in themselves, and they feared the contract brokers while they held the control of it themselves. There is no quarrel about the principle of letting this work to a private company. We hear hon, gentlemen opposite boasting that the Intercolonial Railway is now earning its running expenses; would be satisfactory to the whole community. I will not repeat theories I have heard as to why the Government, at the eleventh hour, made this contract, but the date of it shows that it could not have been concluded at the time it was announced to the public. The Minister of Railways seemed very strongly in favor of the Sault connection last year; he seems to have thrown it overboard altogether now. I dare say it is a very good card for hon, gentlemen opposite to use to urge military considerations in favor of an all-rail route through our own territory. I agree with them; but there are portions of the eastern section which could very properly he left over until our resources would enable us to build it without burdening the country. I was quite interested in the statement of the Minister of Railways last Session, that we could have railway communication with Lake Superior, and winter navigation from the Sault to Thunder Bay. This extension to the Sault could be built to Goulais Bay all on our own territory, and from information I have from reliable parties, we could depend upon navigation on Lake Superior for nine months of the year, which would be a very great improvement on the present system. On the 15th April last, the Minister of Railways said:

"It is now evident that the attention of the whole of this country is "It is now evident that the attention of the whole of this country is turned to the question of obtaining the shortest line of communication to the great North-West by Sault Ste. Marie. Hon, gentlemen opposite may remind me that at one time I entertained serious objections to going to Sault Ste. Marie, but the case is different to-day. When I opposed the construction of the line to the Sault, it was at a time when we had no line under construction from Thunder Bay to Red River; but the moment the Government was committed to the building of that line, it was our duty to look for means by which we could make it productive. I have satisfied myself that that road, with its easy grade and cheap rate at which it will be able to bring down the products of the North-West, cannot possibly have a competitor."

This hon, gentleman also spoke of the advantages of the navigation of Lake Superior, which was known to be capable of affording open navigation all winter. That was one theory, and in support of it I quote from the speech of the hon. member for Algoma. The hon. member quoted from the Custom-house officer, Mr. Livingstone, and also from Capt. Tretheray, and gave a record for ten years showing that navigation was open. With the exception of two winters, the tug at Silver Islet ran all winter. He estimated that navigation could be kept open at least rine months of the year. Mr. Beaty, of the Sarnia line, informed me a short time ago that he would be quite willing to risk running his propellors there for at least nine months of the year. A railway to the Sault, navigation for nine months thence to Thunder Bay, and railway communication from there to Red River, would practically give us a line through our own territory for nearly the whole year. Aside from this connection with the Sault, it has been demonstrated already, much more ably than I can do it, that the Sault connection would accomplish very great commercial results; that we would commercially several large states in North-West and have a large feeder to our own line by a small expenditure. That would pour into the lap of Montreal a trade which her citizens little dream of now. Therefore I hold that it is a matter well worthy of consideration; in fact the commercial interests of this country demand that this Sault connection be made first, and the Lake Superior section remain a few years longer. I do not think that there are any military considerations which would necessitate any very rapid or rash expenditure in securing its construction at present. It is claimed that the members of the Syndicate are good commercial men. That is granted; at the same time they are very shrewd men. Some of them, I believe, at any rate, have had a great deal of experience across the border in the construction of railways by the aid of land grants. In fact, some of them are thoroughly acquainted with the true inwardness of the way of making large fortunes by building with large land grants. But we railways Mr. Cockburn (Muskoka).

tinue this work themselves, until they could make terms which | no guarantee that these gentlemen, with all their commercial strength and business capacity, are the men we shall have to deal with in future, because the Government are bound to incorporate them by Act of Parliament, and when they are merged into a joint-stock company they will be lost sight of entirely, and may sell out to foreigners or Shylocks who will take the pound of flesh from the people of the North-West. However, they are very worthy men looking out for a very good bargain, and they secured it indeed. They must have been very shrewd men to secure such a good one, even with a Ministry willing to conce le everything. They seem to have had a very clear and comprehensive idea as to what would be suitable to themselves. One objection I have to the contract, among many, is this: the land monopoly. We have had some experience of that in Ontario, Quebec and Prince Edward Island, and other places, and I have had some experience myself and know that it is not at all satisfactory for actual settlers to be compelled to purchase railway lands. I have held for many years that the giving of lands to others than actual settlers is a great mistake, and that it might be fairly urged that in the exceptional case any objections should be waived and a small portion of the lands, the cleared lands, in Manitoba and the North West might be devoted to securing railroads for that country. Years ago we had deputations of settlers for homestead lands, from settlers on Minnesota railway lands, to the Free-grant lands of Ontario, and had our lands in the northern portions of Ontario been more attractive there would have been a large exodus from the American railway lands to Ontario. I have travelled in the State of Wisconsin myself, and have noticed the evil effects of giving I noticed that, in one lands to railway companies. case, a large grant of land was given to build a colonization road, and years afterwards I found that there was not a single settler in that part of the country because the road had fallen into the hands of a land company. I do not wish to be offensive or to indulge in recriminations, but I must say that I think the present Government have badly mismanaged the lands of Manitoba and the North-West, both under their present rule and when they were in office before. We all know the heartburnings that were produced at the very initial stage of the Government's management of these lands, and that if it had not been for the mismanagement of these territories then and since, they would now be settled by a much larger population. There is no doubt that the land terms of the bargain with the Syndicate will, at any rate, be most unsatisfactory to the people. I had a letter from a gentleman the other day, in which he expressed the hope that the Syndicate would not be able to control the mineral lands of the North-West; but the truth is, there is nothing to prevent them; they may go in and take alternate sections of the land, even if they are the most valuable timber and coal lands of the country. They can take up lands enough to make six of the New England States. This is a matter of grave consideration. My opinion is that the people have not realized fully the magnitude of a grant of 25,000,000 acres of good land. We have heard a great deal of late with regard to the feeling of the country on this question. The truth is that the people in the cities have already become considerably excited, and a similar feeling is rapidly spreading over the rural districts. They have become so accustomed to see references to the Pacific Railway, that they did not realize immediately the importance of its present realize immediately the importance of its present aspect. We have had the most positive proof, in the shape of private letters, as well as by the meetings which have been held throughout the country, that not merely the Liberals but a large number of Conservatives are opposed to this bargain. Conservatives with whom I am whom I am acquainted in have Toronto-for I have many friends in this House, and out of it, who are Conservatives, I found only one in Toronto-a certain Bank Manager-who was not opposed to the Syndicate bargain. I found that two Conservatives of my acquaintance were vigorously denouncing the speech delivered by the Minister of Railways in Toronto. There was a very marked contrast between the enthusiasm with which the member for West Durham was received in Montreal and elsewhere, and the reception tendered to the Minister of Railways. The hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) did me the honor the other day, in my absence, of saying that one of the meetings had gone against the member for Muskoka. His compliment to my attainments as a speaker was rather a doubtful one, and my effort to-night is rather justifying what he satirically remarked; however, it was not owing to lack of speaking powers that my Gravenhurst meeting was not a greater success. However, I can cordially return the compliment of the hon. gentleman. It is true I am deficient in a certain commodity which the hon. member for Niagara has in profusion, namely, self-conceit and brass. I happened to be in a constituency last summer, not on a missionary tour, but because I had friends there. This was shortly after the North Ontario election, and I heard the Conservatives complaining of the damage that the member for Niagara had done their cause, and I believe that a telegram was actually sent to the U. E. Club by some young Conservatives in the riding urging that body to recall the hon. member for Niagara. Some gentlemen contrast the experience and cost of this railway with that of the Grand Trunk. The people of this country were novices when the Grand Trunk was built; and that railway cost about three times as much as it should have cost. Times have changed, and the building of railways and their cost are better understood. Now, I hold that we on this side of the House have done the country a great service, and I believe the country has appreciated it. Hon. gentlemen opposite may talk of factions and demagogues, but the people do not speak so. We have the country with us on this question, and I sympathize with the vast majority of hon, members on the other side who have been drawn into their present plight by their leaders. There is something to be admired in party allegiance, but there is a distance in that respect to which it is sometimes dangerous to go, and, in my humble opinion, a great many of my hon. friends on the other side of the House are asked to go to a much greater length than is consistent with safety. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) spent the greater part of this evening in quoting from scrap books, and introducing other matters which are entirely irrelevant, and have nothing whatever to do with the subject before us. The details of this contract have already been very fully discussed, and I do not propose to weary the House with any remarks upon the grave and disastrous effects which some of its provisions are likely to produce. I would point out, however, that for the cost of the sixty miles of road from South Bay to Sturgeon River we could have a road all The Northern Railway has 50 stations, though it is less than the way to the Sault, and that is a line which ought to be 200 miles long, and the Canadian Pacific will have, probably, supported by the Independent members on both sides of the House, as it is supported by the wealthy commercial men of the country. One mistake which, in my opinion, the Government made shortly after their accession to power was to abandon the Georgian Bay Branch, and so disappoint! said: a large number of settlers who went into the country through which it was to run on the expectation that it would soon be constructed. By a return I moved for last year, I find that the Government are likely to have wasted $135,000 by their action with regard to that branch. The Government could yet undo the harm they have done if they would utilize that road, part of which is graded. There is one clause of this contract on which we should have some definite explanation before the House rises. The Minister of Railways stated that the ten per cent of profit which the Company were entitled to have, was on their own expenditure on the road. To me, without the advantages of West during the present year. The right hon, gentleman legal knowledge, the plain reading of the Act is that it is 10 per cent upon all the money expended upon the road, whether by the Company or the Government. In that way they could very well agree to take 10 per cent, and at the same time have a great advantage over ordinary railway companies which are allowed, by the General Act, to have 15 per cent. The first thing we shall know is that the Syndicate will have made St. Paul the railway capital for the whole entire Canadian territory, and poor miserable Canadians will be soon left nowhere, since the Government have attempted to give away their birthright. I have made a calculation of the earnings of the first 100 miles west of Winnipeg, now in operation, which alone will enable the Syndicate to not $6,000,000. Now that one instance is enough to show how the whole matter will terminate. It would be much better for the Government and their friends to own up at once that they have made a very bad bargain, and are going to recede from it. They would be perfectly justified in making another trial to see if they cannot do a little better next time. I think if they were to try another shake of the dice they would come out better next time. I think they have got themselves and friends into a very bad fix. This bargain will establish a railway despotism for the people who may in future inhabit those regions. It must be well known to the hon, gentlemen that the system of constructing railways in the United States, by means of land grants, have been productive of many hardships and troubles. We, however, are not to charge them with a want of astuteness, because it was an experiment on their part; but we ought to take warning by their experience and failure, and by the opinions of the eminent legal gentlemen who have investigated the workings of the American land system. There is no doubt whatever that if the Government go on with this scheme it will create great dissatisfaction, both among their friends and adversaries. It is our duty, in Opposition, to warn the country of its danger. The country has been fairly awakened and strong pressure will be brought to bear upon the representatives to reject this contract. The freemen of Canada will not submit to have their birthright bartered off in this way. With such choice lands as we have in the North-West, there should be no difficulty in raising money enough to build that railway. If this Company do build the Lake Superior section, they are not bound to run even a mixed train over it once a week, or once a month. Poor Canada will be left out in the cold, and St. Paul will be built up by means of Canadian money. The hon, member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) estimates that the land taxation to which this Company would be subjected would amount to about $5,000 or $7,000. I have seen it stated that the Union Pacific pays an annual tax of $250,000. The hon, gentleman estimates that there will only be about 50 stations on the Canadian Pacific Railway, which, I think, is far too low an estimate. The Northern Railway has 50 stations, though it is less than some hundreds of stations. Some other estimates of that hon, gentleman are equally absurd. I will now read an extract from a speech of the right hon, gentleman, the leader of the Government, made on the 5th of April last.

"We are told that 50,000 people will go in this year, but let us put it at 25,000 and add an increase of 5.000 for the following year, and so on, increasing in proportion every year, we will have then, at the end of the years, the first instalments, amounting to $38,593,000, to which add the balance of the instalments, making in all at that date $71,335,000. Deduct from this $2,400,080 for surveys and land offices, and we will realize a net sum of $59,000,000."

Hon, gentleman will remember upon that occasion how suggestive the right hon, gentleman's calculations were of Capt. Bobadil's method of defeating an army. Instead of settling 25,0009 people, I am credibly informed that only about one-third of that number have settled in Manitoba and the Northboasts that he has found one customer who was going to buy 64,000 acres of land at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. How many settlers does he suppose that will bring into the country. On the subject of centralization I have a statement made by a gentleman of high authority on that point. He has travelled in many countries and climes, and is a first rate judge of soil. I refer to the hon. gentleman from South Perth (Mr. Trow). The hon. gentleman then read a lengthy extract from Mr. Trow's speech, containing statistics of the division of lands as held by landowners in Great Britain and Ireland; and concluded by warning the Government of the consequences which would ensue from the introduction of a much more powerful system of centralization in this country, as provided in the contract under discussion.

Mr. HACKETT moved the adjournment of the debate. Committee rose and reported.

House resumed.

Mr. BLAKE called the attention of the Speaker to the fact that the motion put was "that the Committee rise and report progress," and did not ask to sit again, but that in the report made to the Speaker, the Chairman had falsified the statement, by adding the words: "and asked leave to sit again," and acknowledged it by resuming the Chair and putting the motion in that form.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. So long as I have occupied the Chair in this House or in Committee, I have endeavored always to treat both sides with perfect impartiality; and I appeal to both sides whether I have not been successful. This is the first time such a statement was ever made at my expense. It is not the practice for members to make the motion in full. The motion is sometimes put thus: That the committee do adjourn; and sometimes: That the House do adjourn. I, as Chairman, always reported the motions, which is a mere matter of form and perfectly understood in the practice of the House as it was intended to be put, and in this case put it as follows: That the Committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. As to my resuming the chair, I simply turned round while waiting for Mr. Speaker, and by way of banter pretended to put the motion in full. Wherefore I call upon the member for West Durham to withdraw his statement and apologise.

Mr. BLAKE said he was sorry if he had misunderstood the action of the hon. gentleman, and withdrew his statement. He simply called attention to what, he thought, was an irregularity, but after the explanation of the hon. gentleman he accepted his statements frankly, including his explanation of his resumption of the chair, and that he put the motion a second time in a humorous manner. He would simply suggest to the hon. gentleman that when he indulged in any such humorous remarks hereafter, he should wear a less serious countenance. He had no intention of imputing to the hon. gentleman anything like personal dishonor.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said there was nothing in the matter after all; that if the Committee had risen and reported progress without asking leave to sit again, the House would not have received the report, but would have ordered them to sit again at once.

House adjourned (at 3.30 o'clock, a.m.,)

Mr. Cockburn (Muskoka).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 11th January, 1881.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

(Bill No. 18) to incorporate the Saskatchewan and North-Western Railway Company.—(Mr. Boultbec.)

PEMBINA BRANCH RAILWAY.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH enquired, The amount of the gross and net earnings of the Pembina Branch Railway, from the 1st of January, 1880, to December 1st, 1880?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The receipts from the 1st of January, 1880, to the 1st of December, 1880, were $330,045.36, and the working expenses $171,035.41, leaving as the net earnings, $59,009.95.

QUESTION OF PROCEDURE.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to call attention to a question of practice which arose before the House adjourned this morning, as it concerns the practice of this House, and my own duty as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. A member of the Committee moved that the Committee rise and report progress, and upon that motion being carried, I declared to you that the Committee rose, reported progress, and asked leave to sit again, and for that statement I was called to order by the leader of the Opposition. I hold in my hand May's "Parliamentary Practice," wherein he states:

"It is the practice for members who desire an adjournment to move that the 'Chairman do report progress,' in order to put an end to the proceedings of that day,—this motion in Committee being analogous to that frequently made at other times for adjourning the debate. A motion 'that the Chairman do now leave the chair,' when carried, supersedes a question; and when the Speaker resumes the chair, no report whatever is made from the Committee.'

I think that shows that the practice is for a member who desires simply to adjourn the debate to move that the Committee do rise and report progress. That was the motion made this morning, and that is the motion which, when carried, involves the necessary addition to ask leave to sit again. I think, therefore, that I was perfectly correct, and in accordance with parliamentary practice, in making that report.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

House again resolved itself into Committee on certain proposed resolutions for granting and appropriating twenty-five millions of dollars and twenty-five millions of acres of land in the North-West Territories, according to the terms of the contract relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway transmitted to this House by His Excellency the Governor General by his Message dated December 10th.

Mr. HACKETT. I rise to make a few remarks on the important question now before the House. As representatives from the several Provinces have already speken on the question, I think it but right that a voice should be heard from Prince Edward Island. I fully agree in the view that this is one of the most important questions that has ever engaged the attention of this Parliament, and as such it is entitled to full treatment. I feel that I should not be doing justice to myself or my constituents were I to fail to give the reasons which will guide my vote on this question. It is contended by hon. gentlemen opposite that the propositions now before the House by which we are to give the Syndicate for building the Canadian Pacific Railway $25,060,000 in each and 25,000,000 acres of land, together with the road when built, will be ruinous to the country—that it would be equalled in its disastrous effects only by the National Policy. On the contrary, I am of the opinion that these propositions are the most favorable to Canada that have been submitted for the building of this road. As I intend to support these resolutions I think I should briefly give my reasons therefor. The antecedents of this question are well known to the people of this country. When British Columbia was admitted into Confederation, one of the terms of Union was the building of a railway across the continent, connecting the railway system of Canada with the Pacific sea-board. This was not considered altogether necessary in the interests of British Columbia, but it was considered necessary for the purpose of more closely binding together the different parts of this Dominion, and also for the purpose of perpetuating British interests and sovereignty on the northern half of this continent. From the very inception of this undertaking it was considered best in the interests of Canada, and for the purpose of avoiding taxation, that the road should be built by a private company, subsidized by money and land, and be operated as a private enterprise. With this object Parliament, as early as 1872, placed at the disposal of the Government of that day, led by the present leader of the Government, 50,000,000 acres of land and $30,000,000, and authorized them to charter a company. This was done. A company was chartered having at its head a gentleman of high financial standing in Canada. That gentleman proceeded to England for the purpose of getting British capitalists to invest in it. After remaining in that country some time and making fruitless attempts to induce British capitalists to embark in the building of that road he had to return to this country and surrender its charter. About the same time the Government had resigned, and a new administration was formed by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie). That Government endeavored as best they could to carry out the scheme of the preceding Government, and yet, to-day, we find hon gentlemen who composed that Government are opposed to the building of this road, and their emissaries in all parts of the Dominion rai endeavoring to stir up the people against it. The areislation of that Government in 1874 provided that this legiway should be built from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific. The hon, gentleman who formed that Government and his supporters in Parliament, voted to place upon the Statutebook, a law authorizing the Government to offer the capitalists of the world a certain subsidy in cash and land for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and also authorizing them to build the whole of that railway from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific sea-board, including several branches. But, to-day, we find those hongentlemen rising here in this House and saying that this is a mad scheme, that it would rain this country to undertake this work in the way proposed. They say, to day, that we should not build either the Lake Superior or the eastern section or the section across the Rocky Mountains, and that to do so would be a useless expenditure of public money. Now, with regard to the Act of 1874, which provided that offers should be made to any company for the building of the road, that those offers should be $10,000 in cash per mile and 20,000 acres of land per mile, with guaranteed interest of 4 per cent. upon bonds for the amount required. The Government prepared maps and profiles of the country, and after expending a large the lands are worth more than formerly. I am free to amount in surveys, and advertizing for offers in all the leading papers of the world, not one single offer was made. But did they abandon the enterprise? No. While they were negotiating in this way with foreign capitalists they were authorized by the same Act to go on and build the Pacific Railway as a Government work, and we accordingly find them expending large amounts of money in the prosecution of this work. We find them giving contracts from Thunder Bay westward, and from Selkirk eastward, and terminating in the wilderness at each end. We find them building the Pembina Branch and sending steel rails to British Columbia, thus acknowledging the obligation to that Province of building the road, and in fulfilment of the Carnarvon terms to spend $2,000,000 per annum in British Columbia. This was the state of affairs in 1878 when the present Government came into power. They found that the late Government had expended large amounts of money, that they had expended $18,000,000 for the building of the Canada Pacific Railway. They had entered into large contracts and made it necessary for the present Government to expend still larger sums. They went on. They had to contract for the construction of the intermediate link of the road from Thunder Bay to Selkirk, and they had to complete the Pembina Branch, and they had, as contemplated by the Carnarvon terms and to keep faith with British Columbia, to commence the road in that Province. Such was the action of the present Government, and they continued in the same course and endeavored to find a company to build and operate this road according to the expressed policy of Parliament. I am glad to find they have been successful. I heartily supported the Government in 1879, when it asked for 100,000,000 acres in the North-West, for the purpose of building the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was thought only proper that this railway should be built by means of the land in the great North-West, which would be increased in value by its construction. The Government have succeeded in negotiating the contract embodied in the resolutions before us. These resolutions contemplate giving the Syndicate $25,000,000 in cash subsidy, 25,000,000 acres of land, and the portion of railway at present constructed and under contract. I look upon this scheme as largely in the interests of Canada. only does it utilize a large portion of the lands of the North-West, but it will relieve us of the necessity and expense of running the road after it is constructed. But hon. gentlemen opposite say this is not in the interests of Canada; that it is going to increase the taxation of the country; that if ratified, it will be ruinous to Canada. Now, how can we arrive at a conclusion with regard to this contract? How can we say whether it is a good or a bad scheme? Only by comparing it with former schemes for the building of this railway. The hon, gentlemen opposite say the lands have now advanced to a high value. What did they say? Last year, in the House, hon gentlemen would rise and decry that country, saying that the lands were of no practical value, and did not afford a suitable field for settlement, and that if emigrants went in there, they should get the lands free. When the right hon, gentleman made his statement with regard to the value of those lands, he stated it approximately at $3.18 an acre; but the leader of the Opposition scouted the idea, consuring the estimate as an erroneous one, arguing that the real value Now we find the was only $2.10 an acre. has completely changed. That hon, gentle-accepts the statement of the right hon. thing has completely changed. man gentleman, which he then characterized as erroncous, as the basis on which to discuss this question. What are the facts? They say those lands are increasing in value; that a very large expenditure has been made in the North-West, and that intending emigrants are now attracted to that country, and, as a natural consequence, admit that they are attracting a great deal of attention; but all these were very important factors in increasing the value last year—the same agencies were at work; we were then expending money largely, delegates were there from the old country, yet still hon. gentlemen opposite contended that the lands were of no value whatever. With regard to the present scheme, there have been two others for the building of this railway, and we can only arrive at a sound conclusion in relation to it, by comparing it with those others. The value of the land some years ago was reasonably considered $1 an acre. I am quite willing to admit with the Opposition that they have been increasing in value. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, I put that increase at one hundred per cent. which I shall assume in making my estimate with regard to this contract, fixing the value at $2 to-day. I am sincerely of opinion they are worth that figure. What do we find then? Under the Allan scheme which hon. gentlemen opposite denounced, stating we might as well expect to build the road for $10 as by that scheme, the company was to receive a cash subsidy of $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land worth $2 per acre, or a total amount of $130,000,000. We will next take the scheme of 1874, which received the support and approbation of hon. gentlemen opposite, then on the Treasury benches. It proposed to give $10,000 cash per mile for say, 2,700 miles; that would be $27,000,000. Then they give 4 per cent. on a certain amount of the company's bonds, as to what amount it is very difficult to arrive at a conclusion. We know an offer was made of $7,500 a mile and accepted by the late Government, which might be taken as a fair offer. But I am quite willing to reduce that a hundred per cent. again, and to take the interest on the amount for twenty-five years, which would be $10,000,000. Then we have 54,000,000 acres of land worth, say, $108,000,000; that would make a total of $145,000,000. What have we under the present arrangement? We have $25,000,000 cash subsidy and 25,000,000 acres of land, together with the road now under contract, making $103,000,000—an amount about equal to the estimate of the cost made by Mr. Fleming. It will thus be seen that the present arrangement is $27,000,000 better than that of the late Government, which they could get no party to accept. Believing that a fair basis of calculation, and that the land is worth $2 an acre, I contend that this is the best scheme ever submitted to Parliament, and consequently should receive the support of all parties. What is the next objection made to this bargain? That the standard of the road is a low one. It is said the Union Pacific Railway as first constructed is that taken for the Canadian Pacific Railway under this contract. This is correct. But when was the Union Pacific Railway first constructed? Hon. gentlemen opposite say, in 1869 the junction was made with the Central Pacific Railway. I am of a contrary opinion, believing the Union Pacific Railway could only be called first constructed or completed when taken off the hands of the contractors by the United States Government in 1873. I find the present Syndicate are prepared to accept that as the standard, and I think there need be no fears therefore of our road being first-class. Another guarantee of this fact is that it will be worked by themselves, for their own benefit; and it would not be to their interest to construct a flimsy road, as its maintenance of thousands of miles would eat up all their profit. Another objection is that the Syndicate will be allowed to import their materials free of duty. I cannot see why that clause should not be accepted. Hon gentlemen opposite have very suddenly become friends of the National Policy when they say this clause is inconsistent, arguing that in the interest of the manufacturers and iron masters, it is not right to admit those articles free of duty. We know very well what sym-Mr. HACKETT.

they had held the reins of power up to the present, there would not be a manufacturing industry in the country; and when we find they have suddenly become seized with such good feeling towards the manufacturers, we can only conclude their sentiments are not genuine, but simply put forward for effect. Another great cry raised by hon. gentlemen opposite is that a very large area is being given to those contractors, 25,000,000 acres; that the Syndicate will be a vast monopoly which will hold those lands long in the end, introducing landlordism. I have no fear of this result. We know that every alternate section of one square mile is to be held by the Government, so that while the Government holds its land-and we now know there are 170,000,000 acres of arable land, besides the amount given the contractors—there is no danger of the Syndicate being able to charge the emigrants too high a rate for land. But what was done by the hon, gentlemen when they were in power? They offered 54,000,000 acres to a company to build this railway, two-thirds of which were to be held by the Government, the other third being conveyed to the contractors. Those blocks were twenty square miles in extent, much larger than the present. How do the hon gentlemen reconcile the pledges they made when they were in power with the granting of 54,000,000 acres of land to a company, the Government retaining control of two-thirds, and the other third becoming the absolute property of the contractors, to do with them as they chose? There is no difference in principle in the two cases. In the one case, the contractors had absolute control of 18,000,000 acres of land; in the present case, only 7,000,000 more acres are given, and yet these hon. gentlemen exclaim against landlordism and speak of the huge monopoly we are the huge monopoly about to create in the North-West. As I said before, their conduct is utterly inconsistent, and they are acting simply for the sake of effect. It has also been stated by some hon, gentlemen that a state of affairs would prevail in the North-West similar to that which obtained in Prince Edward Island. I think I know something of the state of affairs on the Island, and I say that the conditions are entirely different. In the North-West Territory there is a large area of land, something like 175 or 200 millions of acres, in the possession of the Government, in addition to the land which is to be granted to the Syndicate, and there is no doubt that those who immigrate into that country will settle upon those lands which are most easy of access. Prince Edward Island, on the contrary, is a small Province with a limited quantity of land; when the immigrants arrived their means were generally exhausted, and as there were no free lands, they were obliged to take the lands on lease and they did so, as their descendants did after them. It was in that way that the landlordism of Prince Edward Island was introduced—the area was small and there were no free lands in the Province. I wish to make a remark or two with regard to the effect of the contract upon that Island. There has been a good deal of agitation there against the ratification of the contract. An hon, gentleman who occupied a prominent position in that country—a Dominion Senator from that Province—immediately that these resolutions were laid on the Table, became suddenly possessed of a mania to get up an agitation. With all the enthusiasm of a fanatic, with all the fiery ardor of a Parnell, he rushed into print and issued a manifesto to the people of the Island. That manifesto occupied a prominent place in the Opposition press of Prince Edward Island, and the hon. gentleman hastened away from Ottawa immediately afterwards, and endeavored, with the aid of my colleague in the House, to start up an agitation. of that manifesto is not such the lauguage language we should expect from a statesman or a true Canadian; on pathy those members have for the manufacturers—that if the contrary they are the words of a demagogue and a fanatic. I will quote what is said with reference to the Prince Edward Island Railway:

"But the Railway debt rapidly accumulating beyond the ability of the Island to sustain, compelled your local Government, two years later, to apply for admission to the Dominion, thus staving off the present difficulties by the sacrifice of the independent constitution you had enjoyed for one hundred years."

Here we find that a gentleman, who occupies a seat in the Senate of his country, appealing to the honest feellings and prejudices of the people of the Island, before he himself had any opportunity of fully understanding the provisions of the contract, and he endeavors to stir up an agitation which will prove prejudical to the interests of the Province. But, Sir, this hon, gentleman was the one who headed a delegation to Ottawa, to appeal to the Dominion Government, when the debt of the Island was found to be beyond its resources; he was the first to lay violent hands on the Constitution which we have enjoyed for 100 years. In an insane moment the people of Prince Edward Island placed him at the head of their affairs, but, true to the instincts of his party in the Province and in the Dominion, he forgot in office the pledges he made in Opposition. He not only carried out the policy of his predecessors with regard to the railway, but added to the obligation by building more than they had promised. After incurring a large debt and endeavoring to sell the debentures of the Island in the money markets of America, he was compelled stealthily to go away from the Province in the night and knock for admission at the gates of the Dominion. It was well known to this hon. gentleman that this Dominion Government was pledged to the construction of the railway when application was made to enter the Union, and the hon. gentleman himself was glad to enter the Confederation, for he had his own little railway to get rid of. Three years before Prince Edward Island was admitted into the Union, the Dominion was pledged to the construction of the railway; that obligation was not placed on the shoulders of the people of the Island, by any vote of their representatives here—it was assumed by  $\mathbf{of}$ from the Island, delegation was a member. Taking \$100,000,000 as the cost of the railway, and as the population of the Island is 100,000, or onefortieth of the whole Dominion, the obligation settled upon the people of that Province amounted to \$2,500,000. But the people of the Island lost confidence in the hon. gentleman's delegation, and they sent another delegation to Ottawa who obtained very much better terms. If the terms which he had obtained had been ratified the people of the Island would have been reduced to beggary; but the improved terms were better than the other by \$28,000 a year. What would be the effect of the present arrangement on the people of Prince Edward Island. Admitting that this road costs \$100,000,000, now we pay about \$53,000,000 cash, and a bonus of 25,000,000 acres of land to this Syndicate. The people of Prince Edward Island are relieved to the extent of \$1,250,000 by this arrangement—one-half their liability. Am I to be told that they, who had to construct their own highways, support their own schools, build their own bridges, and support their own churches, have got such an interest in the lands of the North-West that they will object to this arrangement. When I consider that the building of this railway will open up the great North-West, that the circulation of money caused by the large expenditure of foreign capital to be invested in this road for the next ten years will help to build up the interests of the country and largely increase her prosperity, I believe it is in the interests of the whole Dominion, that this contract, which is the best that can possibly be made, should be ratified, and I will have much pleasure in voting for the resolution.

Mr. FLYNN. I do not propose to occupy much of the up to $158,000,000. According to the contract now time of the Committee, but I feel it a duty that I owe to my before the House, the Government agree to hand constituents that I should give my reasons, briefly, for to the Company, when built, parts of the Canadian opposing the contract now under consideration. that a resolution, involving the expenditure of millions of dollars, should be disposed of by a short discussion in this House before the people are allowed time to enquire into its merits, or to learn anything of the nature of the bargain. I regret, also, that an amendment, so reasonable as that moved by the leader of the Opposition, should have been voted down by a large majority in this House. That amendment simply asked that the discussion on this most vital question should be postponed for a short time to give the people time to examine it and give their opi ions on it. We were told by the hon. Minister of Railways, in his opening speech, that this contract was the most favorable one ever submitted to this House. If so, why any hesitation in giving the people time to consider its nature? At the meeting in Montreal the other night he admitted it was only right the people should hear the statements pro and con. on this great question before coming to any decision. Why, then, did he not give the people time to consider it? It is true that in some of the large centres, Montreal, Toronto, London and Halifax, public meetings have been held; but there are other portions of this Dominion equally interested in this question who should have time to consider it. For some time previous to the meeting of Parliament, the public were made aware that $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land would be given for the construction of this work. It has been contended here very justly that this contract should have been submitted for the consideration of the people previous to the meeting of Parliament, in order that the people's representatives might have had time to consult their constituencies, but the Government considered it would be an interference with the dignity of Parliament if they submitted this contract to the people before the House opened. I say they have interfered with that dignity, admitting that principle as correct, by submitting even a portion of the contract. The people were made aware of a certain portion while other features were kept carefully from them. If the contention of the Government is correct, they should have kept back the whole contract; and in giving a portion of it to the public they have themselves interfered with the dignity and infringed on the rights of Parliament. In making public a part of the contract the intention was quite obvious. It was to create the impression that $25,000,-000 and 25,000,000 acres of land was all that would be given for the construction of the road. The contract, however, when laid on the Table of the House, showed that it involved double that amount of money, and had many other objectionable features. A great-deal has been said by hon, gentlemen opposite in defence of this policy. Speeches have been quoted which were made by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House on this question. But the contract has never been defended on its merits. Now, we have nothing to do with considering whether the hon. member for Lambton, in 1874, brought down a proposition which hon, gentlemen opposite now say is worse, but which I contend is infinitely better in every respect than the one we are asked to approve. Even if it were, it is not in the mouths of hon. gentlemen to say that, because the hon. member for Lambton, in 1874, brought down a proposition involving a greater expenditure in the construction of the work, that we, in 1880, under the changed circumstances should be called on to ratify of the country, should be called on to ratify this contract. I do not intend to go into the calculation made here in reference to this contract. We have had a good deal said on that subject, and I would, perhaps, be repeating what has already been stated. It is evident, from the calculations made, that the cost in money, including the surveys when completed, and, according to the value placed on the land, will be from $108,000,000 up to $158,000,000. According to the contract now before the House, the Government agree to hand Pacific Railway: From Lake Superior to Selkirk, 406 miles, costing $16,000,000 when completed; the road from Emerson to Selkirk, 85 miles, which has cost $1,500,000; 125 miles from Kamloops to Yale, under contract, for the sum of $9,169,000. The Government are also to build 90 miles, from Yale to Port Moody, which is estimated to cost $3,500,000. Add to this the cost of surveys, which amounts to over $3,000,000, it will make the amount already spent, and to finish existing contracts, $33,000,000. To this is to be added the $25,000,000 money consideration, which will make a total of $58,000,000 in money. If we place the land at the moderate estimate of $2 an acre, we shall have a total cost of $108,000,000. A good deal has been said in reference to the value of the land. In estimating their value, I think it will be fair and reasonable to take the estimate placed upon them by the Government. What is that estimate? They estimate $5 an acre for the inner belt, $4 for the second, and $3 for the third; or an average of $3.18 an acre. That would give the lands a value of $79,500,000, making the total cost of the road under this contract $137,500,000. What was the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways himself? He said the construction of this railway would give enormous value to the lands in the North-West. A year ago, in discussing this question, he said that the lands were the great plank in their platform in building this railway. I think, then, that we are fair in assuming their value to be $3.18 an acre. Now, the estimate of the Government of the total cost of this railway previous to the submission of this contract, I understood to be $80,000,000. Taking the lands at $2 an acre, we give the Syndicate $28,000,000 more for the railway than it was to cost the Government; and taking them at $3.18, we give them $57,500,000 more. And what do we give them besides? They are to be absolute and complete masters of the road and the North-West. Great as the cost is to be in money and land, enormous as the profits of the Syndicate are to be in this respect, there are other features of this contract more objectionable still. The cost might be, in more objectionable still. some degree, recouped to us by the sale lands; but the other advantages we give to the Syndicate are beyond our control altogether. By the terms of this contract, we, virtually, give them a monopoly of the trade of the North-West for the next 20 years. No other company can build a railway running in a south-easterly direction, or south-westerly, to within 15 miles of the American boundary. All the station grounds, the road-bed and buildings are to be free from taxation, municipal or provincial, for ever, and their lands are to be free for 20 years; yet every immigrant who settles in the country, and increases the value of the land by his labor, has to pay the taxes from which this wealthy corporation is free. It was hoped that the policy of the Government would be to get the North-West country rapidly settled, to lead the oppressed people of the old country to come and make that country their home. But, if this contract is approved of, with that provision in it, you bring the oppressed emigrant from the old country to a tyranny in the North-West more galling than anything he previously experienced. If this contract receives the sanction of this House, the question may suggest itself to the minds of many: "For whom was the North-West territory many: "For whom was the North-West territory purchased by the people of Cauada? For what purpose have we spent large sums year after year, swelling our public debt in order to develop that territory?" If we sanction this contract, we thereby create a huge monopoly, which for a long time to come will retard the prosperity of this Dominion. I have said that the public have been led to believe that the $25,000,000 and the 25,000,000 acres were all we had to give for this railway. But, tesides the sections the Government have already built, they are still to build 90 miles from Yale to Port Moody. If it was desirable that this great work was to be Mr. Flynn. Mr. FLYNN.

done by a company, why not the whole of it? If the building of the road by a company meant its becoming freed from jobbery and corruption, why was not the construction of these 90 miles made part of the contract of the Syndicate? In this connection I may ask, why were not tenders invited for this work? Every portion of the Pacific Railway has hitherto been built by public tender; why was the departure made in this instance? Why did the Government not adopt the usual mode in all public departments of asking for tenders. Had they done so they would have been able to assure this House that the present contract is the best obtainable. The hon, the Minister of Railways cannot assure the House that this is the lowest and best bargain we can get from a company. This contract, if carried into effect, will not promote the best interests of Canada. We have also been told that this bargain will relieve the country from all further responsibility. This is a great mistake. There is no finality about this matter. For the next ten years this House will be called upon from year to year to deal with this question anew. Among other objectionable features of this contract is that which allows the Syndicate to import their rails and other materials free of duty. I ask if this is carrying out the National Policy? Is this the protection to home industry which was promised to the people of this country to import all the materials they require free of duty? We were told that every industry of this country was to be protected, that no Government was worthy the confidence of this House that did not foster and encourage our struggling home industries. I recollect the speech made by the hon. the Minister of Finance on that occasion, in reference to the iron industry, as found on page 421 of the Hansard. He said:

"The next class of articles is metal. The first item is pig iron. In dealing with this question, the Government had to take into consideration the important iron interest of the Dominion. It is quite true that a very large deposit of iron is found in the Province of Nova Scotia. Adjacent to it are immense beds of coal, inexhaustible, and no doubt for the Province of Nova Scotia this interest is a very important one, but it is not confined to Nova Scotia. We find, on examining the geological reports and the reports of the officials who have been charged with the enquiring into the extent of our iron deposits, show us that in every Province of the Dominion there are large deposits of iron. From the west we have had specimens of iron submitted to us of the most valuable character, made by the application of heat from petroleum, which appears to remove some of the difficulties that have been experienced in producing good iron before, inasmuch as it removes the phosphorus and sulphur to remove some of the difficulties that have been experienced in producing good iron before, inasmuch as it removes the phosphorus and sulphur which rendered to a great extent that iron valueless. If this be so, we may reasonably expect that in the western part of our Dominion, in Nova Scotia, in the valley of the Ottawa, in the Provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick, we may, by giving some encouragement to this manufacture, or its production, have these interests springing up all over the Dominion and producing the most beneficial results. We find in every country, no matter what country it is—take England for instance, take France or any other country that has risen to any position of wealth and commercial greatness—and you will find the iron interest is one of the most important interests of that country. I would also instance the United States. It may safely be said that it is the basis of every other industry. It is true we have not developed it to a great extent yet. We have one establishment at present in operation in Nova Scotia, but it will only produce one-fourth of our present consumption. There is no reason why we should not supply the whole of the trade in time."

Now, this was the utterance of the Finance Minister in

Now, this was the utterance of the Finance Minister in reference to that great industry in 1879. A short time afterwards the Minister of Railways in speaking of the Tariff alluded to the iron industry; and I shall quote a few extracts of his speech on that occasion. He said:

upon the minds of members of the Government looking to the prosperity of the country, it is necessary, not that we should adopt a hostile attitude against our neighbors, but that we should pay them the compliment of saying that their policy is so wise and just we are disposed to follow it." Under these circumstances it is not strange that the idea should force itself

Again, the hon. Minister of Railways said:

"The hon member for Centre Huron objected to the iron industry being fostered in the manner proposed. The hon, gentleman objects to coal being fostered in the same way. Does he not know that the history of the world shows that every country that possesses coal and fron has risen to greatness just in proportion as it has developed those industries? This I know, that, in England and Belgium, where coal and wor abound, the progress of these countries is indicated as by a barometer; and has risen just in proportion to the output of the coal and the development of the iron mines."

These were the utterances of the hon, the Finance Minister and the hon. the Minister of Railways, on the occasion alluded to in 1879. Then there is another expression of opinion on this point. A letter appeared in the Pictou Standard, a journal published in the county represented by the Minister of Justice. Looking to the future development of the iron industry in that county, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the writer expresses a belief that the iron mines of Pictou would be able to supply the rails and other materials for the construction of that work. After the appearance of that letter there was an article in the Mail newspaper commenting upon the letter in the Pictou Standard. The following is the article of the Mail :-

"A writer in the Pictou (N.S.) Standard calls attention to the advantages offered by that locality for the iron industry. The quality of the different ores, the nearness of coal and lime, and the facilities of the different ores, the nearness of coal and lime, and the facilities of transit, make the future of mining and manufacturing operations very promising in Hopewell and neighborhood, a few miles from Pictou, where the writer thinks there is the making of a Carron, or a Merthyr Tydvil. Facilities for shipment are being daily increased, and no more eligible haven can be found than Pictou harbor. In view of the fact that steel rails are being largely imported into the United States, just because the demand exceeded the supply, and the enormous requirements of the Canadian Pacific, it is claimed that the ability of Pictou's iron region to supply the demand should not be overlooked. An outlay of two millions in the home manufacture of the rails required for the Canadian Pacific would eventually be the saving of five. It is urged that a representation should be made to the Canadian Syndicate of Nova Scotia's iron prospects, and an inspection invited, with a view to their exploration."

I would now like to ask this House whether the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Railways have fulfilled their promises to foster and encourage the iron industry of this country? The hopes that were held out at that period, that they would foster and encourage all the struggling industries of the country have been destroyed by the present bargain. Now, what do we find in this contract? The friends of this National Policy striking a blow at this great industry, and blasting the hopes of the people of this section interested in it, who were taught to look forward to the construction of this railway, as a great future benefit to the mines. We find, in the charter for the American Union Pacific Railway, it was specially provided that the materials used in constructing that work should be the manufacture of the country, thus carrying out protection in its entirety; but here we have the strong advocates of Protection abandoning it in this particular. I do not stand here the advocate of monopolists or Protection, being a Free trader in the fullest sense. I believe the people of this country should have the right to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market, and that the policy of any Government like ours should be to reduce the cost of living to the lowest possible amount, so that we could make a favorable comparison with other new countries, in efforts to attract emigration. But, while a Free-trader, if we are to have a National Policy, and Railways, in speaking in reference to that very ques- If you put 75 cents a barrel on corn meal the people of these

tion of remission of duties on materials to be imported for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, referred in the most glowing terms to the operation of the National Policy. I am aware that any lengthy discussion of that subject at present would not be relevant; but as that hon, gentleman himself introduced the subject, I think I might be partoned if I, for a few moments, refer to that portion of his speech. He told us that, under the able management of the hon. Minister of Finance, the country had become flourishing and prosperous. Now, I wish I could say that for Nova Scotia. I can assure hon. gentlemen that if I could I would do so with the utmost pleasure; nothing would give me greater gratification; but, on the contrary, one important industry, the importance and value to the Dominion the hon, gentleman knows well, I mean the fishing industry, has never been in a more languishing and depressed condition than in the last two years, particularly the last, not only has the catch been much smaller for years, but the prices obtained have been much less than for the last fifteen years. Meantime the fishermen have felt the effects of the Tariff in having to pay larger prices for everything they have used and consumed. We were also told, in the same speech, that the Finance Minister had changed a deficit into a surplus. If such is the fact, it does not appear from the Public Accounts, that there is a surplus this year. But if true, how has it been accomplished? By putting duties on the prime necessaries of life, coal, flour and meal, by taxes which are unfair because wholly sectional; the duty on coal being 60 cents to the consumer in Ontario, and on flour 50 cents and meat 40 cents to the consumers in the Maritime Provinces. I believe that west of Montreal little, if any, Nova Scotia coal finds its way, thus leaving out Ontario. Thus the people of Ontario have had to pay that tax for the benefit of the coal owners of Nova Scotia, while we pay those duties on meal and flour without benefitting the western people in the slightest. But suppose the coal owners were benefitted by that duty, who are they? A few wealthy capitalists in Halifax, New York, England and elsewhere. Are the great mass of the people of Ontario, 1,600,000, to be taxed for the benefit of those few wealthy capitalists? And, on the other hand, should we, in the Maritime Provinces, 800,000 people, pay those meal and flour duties to the advantage of a few millers in Ontario,—that is under the supposition that it does so? but these duties do not benefit the people of either Province, so that if the hon, gentlemen can boast of a surplus it is by these unfair exactions. We have only the returns of 1879. I find the importations of American coal into the Dominion. Anthracite, 469,532 tons; bituminous, 493,836 tons-in all, 963,368 tons. The duty of 50 cents per ton paid by the people of Ontario and other Provinces would be $481,684. The flour imported into the Maritime Provinces was 315,044 barrels, which, at a duty of 50 cents per barrel, realized $157,000; cornmeal imported, 221,488 barrels; duty, $88,595—total, $245,667, which, with the coal tax added, makes a total of $727,351. If we add 10 cents a ton to the coal tex imposed last Session, it will give an additional amount of $96,336, or a total of $823,587. But I have reason to believe that the imports of coal into this country, and of flour and meal into the Lower Provinces, have been much in excess of those of the fiscal year 1879. Therefore, if I had the trade returns of this year I might show that the total of these duties for the last year would amount to $1,000,000. These taxes are unfair, I repeat, because sectional. No system of taxation could be more unfair and unjust. Canada for the Canadians, why should not the iron industry of Londonderry and of Pictou be encouraged? It is coal tax without benefitting from those on corn meal and in the interest of sections that I claim it to be unfair flour, and those of the Maritime Provinces pay to violate the National Policy. The hon. Minister of these duties without benefitting by the tax on coal.

Provinces will simply have to import it and pay the duty; and, therefore, I say that both the coal tax and the flour tax are sectional and unjustifiable; and it would be no wonder if a Finance Minister could boast of a surplus after imposing his taxation in that way. The Finance Minister of the late Government might have done the same thing if he had chosen to impose on the country a tax at once so burdensome and so unjustifiable. With regard to the contract which is before the House, I must say that, as a Nova Scotian, I desire to see a policy which will encourage immigration to the North-West and promote its growth and development; and I desire to see such a policy in order that our share of the burdens which the construction of the railway imposes on the country may be lessened. It is my belief that that burden can only be lessened by the rapid settlement of the North-West The people of Nova Scotia believed, at the time when the Government made an engagement to build the Canadian Pacific Railway in ten years, that at least half a century should elapse before the completion of that great work was undertaken. The United States had a population of forty millions before they undertook the construction of their trans-continental railway—they postponed it until the circumstances of the country justified its construction, until, in fact, it became a commercial and national necessity. But we, Sir, with a population of scarcely four millions, undertook the construction of this gigantic work, a few years after Confederation. I think it would have been better, if we had turned our attention, for a time, to developing the resources of the older Provinces; this would have been strain enough upon our energies; it would have added to our national debt quite rapidly enough without making so great an addition to it as the construction of this railway will involve. We have been told-and I believe the statement is correct—that our debt has more than doubled in ten years; that it is now about $160,000,000; and we were told by the Finance Minister that over $9,000,000 more had been added_ to our debt within the last year. The people of the Maritime Provinces feel that large sums of money have been squandered in the North-West, as we find that it is difficult to get even the smallest sums to promote the industries and facilitate the commerce of our Provinces. In the ten years which have elapsed since the purchase of the North-West, we have spent over 15,000,000 in that country, including the money paid for its purchase, or deducting that amount, $13,500,000. If we take the $22,000,000 which have been spent on the Canadian Pacific Railway, including surveys, the total expenditure up to this period upon that country amounts to $37,000,000. I ask if it is not reasonable that the people of this Dominion as a whole, and the Maritime Provinces particularly, should feel alarmed at the increase of our debt in that direction, and at our engagements for the construction of the railway. What proportion have the Maritime Provinces to pay? The population of Nova Scotia, according to the last census, was 367,000, and their share would be $6,500,000; that of New Brunswick, with a population of 286,000, would be $5,000,000, and the share of Prince Edward Island, with a population of 94,000, over $2,000,000, or a total for the Maritime Provinces of $13,500,000. Having so much to pay for the benefit of the people of the North-West, it is no wonder that the Maritime Provinces are asking what has been done for them Provinces. Nova Scotia is opposed to any scheme of consince Confederation. It is now nearly 14 years since Confederation, and during that period we have only extended one railway 79 miles eastward from Pictou to the Strait of Canso. The Island of Cape Breton, with its mineral wealth and its inexhaustible fisheries, is yet without a mile of railway. Before I had the honor of a seat in this House, the question of making Louisburg the Atlantic terminus of this trans-continental railway was mentioned in Parliament, and in 1874 a motion was made by the present Lieutenant-Mr. FLYNN.

Governor of Quebec (Mr. Robitaille) for the appointment of a Select Committee, of which I was a member, to enquire into the shortest route to Europe. The report and evidence were very voluminous and were not printed, but I may be permitted to read the following extracts from the report:-

"The Select Committee appointed to enquire as to the best and most direct route for the conveyance of mails and passengers between the Dominion of Canada and Europe, the possibility of navigating the Gulf of St. Lawrence during the winter months, and of finding on the shores of the Dominion a harbor accessible to both in winter and summer, to be the terminus of such shortest route, beg leave to report:

"1st. That there are but three harbors possessing the qualities necessary to commend them to the attention of your hon. House, viz: Halifax, Louisburg, and Paspebiac.

"2nd. That from the evidence given before your Committee, it has been shown that Louisburg is a first-class harbor, having the geographical advantage of being the nearest available harbor of this Dominion to Europe. It is 230 miles nearer to Europe than Paspebiac, and 196 miles nearer to Europe than Halifax, by the direct route. It should also be observed that the approaches to Louisburg are very easy, and that the anchorage is good in the north-east portion of the harbor, which is entirely sheltered from winds, and that the harbor is capable of floating vessels of any size." vessels of any size.'

A road about 90 miles from the Strait of Canso would bring us to Louisburg; if that portion of the road was built it would bring us 230 miles nearer to Europe than Paspebiac, and 196 miles nearer to Europe than Halifax by the direct route. It may be fairly claimed by that portion of the Dominion that while we are spending millions of dollars in the Rocky Mountains, we should provide them with this 90 miles of road that would open up and develop one of the finest and richest portions of the Dominion, the Island of Cape Breton. We have in Bras d'Or Lake a splendid fishery, but owing to the want of facilities for bringing the fish to market, the people are compelled to be idle during the winter months, while, if we had a railroad running to Louisburg, the whole section of the country would be open to them. It is no matter of surprise that the people of eastern Nova Scotia are opposed to the construction of the Pacific Railway in the terms of the contract. We know this road must be built. Unfortunately, it is a part of the terms with British Columbia, but we are only committed to its construction in such a manner as will not increase our burden of taxation. Parliament has solemnly assured the people, three different times, that its construction should not increase the burden of taxation. We believe that the western section should be delayed for some years; that a road through the prairie will give settlers all the facilities they require for bringing their produce to market. Holding these views on this contract, a contract which, I believe, is objectionable in all its features; which, if ratified, must retard the growth and prosperity of the country; which will increase the burden of taxation and bear heavily on all, especially the people of the Maritimo Provinces, who have little to gain by the construction of the Pacific Railway, either in the present or in the remote future-I deem it my duty to oppose it. We were told, at the time of Confederation, that as soon as that fact was accomplished, our chief cities would become the Manchesters and Birminghams of the Dominion; that a tide of prosperity would flow into these Provinces; but I regret to say that the bright future predicted by the advocates of Confederation has never been realized. The reverse is the fact. To-day, discontent and dissatisfaction structing the Canadian Pacific Railway, that would increase the burden of taxation, or build the road faster than the resources of the country will permit. If the people of that Province had time to examine the contract it would receive their almost unanimous disapproval. With this knowledge, I feel it to be my duty to record my vote against that measure which, if adopted, will be fraught with consequences disastrous to the future progress and prosperity of the country.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Sir Charles Tupper, acting for Her Majesty the Queen, on behalf of the Dominion of Canada, has entered into a treaty with certain capitalists for the construction of a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He has placed that instrument upon the Table of the House; he has asked that the Parliament of Canada shall examine it, shall give their opinion as to its merits, and shall, if they approve of it, endorse it, and give to it the authority of an Act of Parliament. In introducing this contract to the notice of the House, he made a speech of considerable length, and of very great strength, if I may be allowed to express my individual judgment with reference to it. He, I consider, said all that can fairly be urged on behalf of that contract. He noticed all the objections that might possibly be raised to its various sections in the most sophistical manner, giving to it the best appearance that was possible to give it. I have listened to the speech, I have read the contract. I think it is the duty of every member of Parliament, when such an important question as this is submitted for their consideration, to examine it with all carefulness, in the spirit in which the hon. Minister of Railways asked us to view it, to look at it from no party standpoint. As an independent member of Parliament, elected by the people to give effect to their wishes, I have endeavored to do that. I am conscious that I am possessed of strong party feelings the same as other gentlemen present. I am not disposed to chide too strongly gentlemen who, forgetting the exhortation of the hon. Minister, treat this question from a purely Remembering my own weakness, party standpoint. remembering the strength of my own attachment to the party that I consider to be right, I view with some charity the course that has been pursued by some hou, gentlemen opposite, who have allowed themselves to indulge in the abuse of members of the party opposed to them under the mistaken impression that they were discussing the contract. Having set myself to the duty of explaining to this House why I am opposed to this contract, it is my bounden duty to furnish this House with strong and sufficient reasons why I have come to that conclusion; and, in order to ascertain the merits of this charter, and to determine the course I was to pursue, I did not think it was necessary, nor will I allow myself now, to indulge in a party discussion, or the saying of things which may be considered witty, or which comprise only the elements of bitterness and coarseness. I do not know that it helped me in the slightest degree to understand the merits of this scheme, that the hon. gentleman took up the time of the House in telling me that the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Blake) and the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) were two aristocratic demagogues. Whether they are or not, is not the question before the House at the present time. I cannot see what pertinence it has or how it will assist us in deciding upon the merits of the contract before us. Nor can I understand how gentlemen can be found giving to the House the names of certain gentlemen who, in days gone by, have been blacklettered by the Globe. I do not know that that has anything to do with this question any more than many other foreign issues which have been introduced, and, for my own part, I do not wish to notice them further. I recognize the question before us of such paramount importance that I think party feelings should be sunk in its consideration; and though provoked as I am by the iniquity of this contract, I will endeavor to rein my tongue and control my thoughts, so that my speech, whether it convinces hon, gentlemen opposite or not, will at any rate win from my opponents the commendation that I have endeavored, whether I fail or not, to view this question from it never amounted to anything. Then we come down to a purely patriotic standpoint. Sir, the Minister of Rail- the point of this contract, and the Minister of Railways ways had a right to ask, when he introduced this himself does not insist upon the comparison, but he relies contract, that it should be considered on its merits upon his case to strengthen the back of his followers in this on both sides of the House. Ministers in this House, charged with the administration of the affairs of this gettingto-be a great Dominion, are worthy of all the support of the strengthening of their hands, that it is possible for this House to give them, and I wish them to understand that I speak the sentiments of my heart when I say that if this contract were what I was led to think from their boastings in the country it was, I should have been glad to have given it my hearty support.

Mr. PLATT. Hear, bear.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. member for East Toronto, I see, can hardly give me credit for that. I am glad the hon, gentleman is, at any rate, concerned enough about the interests of his constituents to listen, and I may say to him, even if I cannot convince him, that I am ondeavoring to speak the truth. Why should he think that I should be opposed to this contract? Is it because the Ministry kept this contract hidden from the public, because they refused to take the people into their confidence, because they have endeavored to smuggle it through Parliament, repressing the expression of popular opinion, that the hon. member for East Toronto was cognizant that I would oppose this contract. Is it because this matter, affecting the people's greatest interests and dealing not only with money by the millions, but with vast quantities of land, the inheritance of this Dominion, was studiously kept by the Ministry to themselves; because they summoned Parliament here at the most inconvenient season of the year, and told us that in eight or ten days we had to decide upon that contract, or we should not go home to spend the holidays with our families? Is it because we asked for papers to enable us to form an intelligent opinion on this subject and these papers were refused? Sir, this concealment of this matter from the public is something the public are looking at; and there is nothing that causes this contract to be viewed with suspicion so much as the fact that they were told that in a matter so greatly affecting their best interests, they were not to be trusted; for the language of the First Minister in the House was that no more imperfect tribunal for the settlement of a great question like this could be found than the people at large. That is the sentiment uttered and carried out by hon. gentlemen opposite. In the speech of the Minister of Railways, which, as I said before, was a variable speech as I considered it, the line of argument he took was this: Speaking for five hours, for three-fourths of that time his speech consisted in reading extracts from the speeches of the hon. members for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) and West Durham (Mr. Blake), and instituting a comparison between the offers, as he termed them, that had been made for the construction of this work in the past, and the offer now submitted to the House. Sir. he came to this conclusion. He thought, and according to his own way of putting it, he did prove, taking his own figures, that it was the best contract. But figures can be put into very strange shapes by a very skilful manipulator, as is the hon. gentleman. Now, I propose to take that hon. gentleman's own figures, but to arrange them somewhat differently, and then ask this House whether my arrangement of them is proper and fair, or not; and if so, to show what a different result they produce from the manner in which they were arranged and presented by the hon. the Minister of Railways. It needs not that I speak at any length of the Allan contract. That is the first contract that was entered into for the construction of this work. Of course we all know the terms of that contract, and we also know that no offer was ever made by capitalists to engage in it, and that House in order to enable them to swallow this contract, by using the argument that the offer he now submits to this House is better than that contract, as he is pleased to term it, though no contract was ever made-better than the terms under which a contract might have been entered into in the least degree whether it is better or worse. The hon. gentlemen are hiding themselves in a fool's paradise, if they think that they can induce the people of this country to take that view of the question. What do the people of this country care what Act Mr. Mackenzie introduced under which no contract was let, under which no offers were made, as hon. gentlemen admit. We are considering a contract that has been made, a bona fide contract that is upon the Table of this House, and that is waiting only for the sarction of this Parliament to become law. The people of this country and their representatives in this House are not so blind that they can be deluded in the way the hon, gentlemen seek to delude them. Even if the terms of the Mackenzie Act gave him power to give contractors large amounts for the construction of this work than the present contract, it would by no means follow that the terms of that contract were more than the terms of this one. It is an insult to the intelligent people of this country for a man to rise in his place in this House, and say that, because a contract now can be carried out for a less sum of money than it could in 1874, that it is therefore a better Act. What reply would an intelligent man make? He would ask what were the conditions of that contract in 1874, and what were the conditions in 1880. You would tell him that the conditions in 1874 were, a wilderness unknown and unexplored, without one foot of railway reaching it, or having been projected; without any com-munication with the rest of the world; a few half-breeds scattered here and there, perhaps a few white settlers that had found their way to the plains; the lands of no value scarcely, or of such value that they were sold for scrip to pre-empt land of the value of 60 cents per acre. Then what are the conditions of that country now? We would tell him that in the cities of Ottawa and Toronto, that in thriving towns on the Grand Trunk or the Great Western, that anywhere throughout the Province of Ontario, or throughout the Provinces of Quebec or Nova Scotia, even, you can put your foot into a Pullman palace car and you do not take your foot out of that car until you are landed in the city of Winnipeg; and when you are landed there you are in a city of 10,000 or 15,000 inhabitants, in which the corner lots are sold not at the town prices of Ontario, but at prices are landed which rival those prevailing in the great metropolis of Toronto; that there are some 100,000 people in that country, with towns springing up all over the land. Yet the hon. Minister of Railways and those who support him ask the House to accept as a basis of comparison between the contract laid on the Table of the House, and the contract that might have been entered into under the Mackenzie Actthey ask you to take precisely the same value for the public lands of that Province, or $1 per acre. I think that if there is anything that would lead hon, gentlemen to think that this was rather a hard contract for the Government to ask them to accept, it is in the fact that they are driven to have recourse to such argument as we have heard, and such a line of argument as has been pursued in considering the lands in the North-West of the same value as they were in 1874, after all the improvement and progress that have since taken place in that region. But while I say it is not pertinent to the question to compare these two contracts, I Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

his own grounds. I propose to take the Act of 1874 and to take the figures of the Minister of Railways himself with reference to that Act, and with reference to the contract now laying upon the Table of the House, and to show, making no distinction between the enhanced value of the land since under the Mackenzie Act of 1874. Now it does not matter 1874, that the contract now before the House is not as good in the interests of this country, as would have been the construction of that road under the terms of the Mackenzie Act of 1874. I propose to take the Minister of Railways on his own calculation. Taking the land at $1 an acre, in both cases, I desire to show, in the figures of the hon, the Minister of Railways himself, that the present contract is better for the contractors than that obtainable under Mr. Mackenzie's Act. I will explain how I will arrive at the figures I will give, and will quote from the speech delivered by that hon. member himself, in introducing these resolutions. We give the length of the Canadian Pacific Railway to be completed as it is now located. I take first, the length of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway as it would have been completed under the Act of the hon, member for Lambton, had the location been the same as that now adopted by the Government, and as it will be when the work is finished. On page 42 of the pamphlet containing the speech of the hon, the Minister of Railways, he gives the eastern section at 550 miles; the contral at 1,530 miles; Kamloops to Port Moody, 217 miles; Thunder Bay to Selkirk, 410; Pembina Branch 85 miles—total, 2,712 miles. I think it is only fair, in estimating what Mr. Mackenzie offered, that we should take the arms length of the read as it is should take the same length of the road as it is covered by that contract, 2,712 miles. What did that hon. gentleman's Act offer for the construction of that road? $10,000 cash per mile, 20,000 acres per mile, and feur per cent. on the amount that was to be asked by the tenderers for any section, or part of a section. The Minister of Railways himself, then, has given us a basis by which we may arrive at what this four per cent. would reach. I think he does not do it unfairly, except in the way he makes his computations. I am not disposed to quarrel with his amount, $7,500 a mile, which he arrived at from the fact that there was a tender of that kind for the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch; and while he admits it was a very difficult part of the road, he asks the House to agree with him that, perhaps, taking the Rocky Mountain section into consideration, and all the rest of the road, it was a fair sample of the total length. Now, four per cent. on $7,500 a mile, in addition to the cash grant of $10,000 a mile, and 20,000 acres of land for 2,712 miles, under the Mackenzie Act, taking the figures of the Minister of Railways, will give $27,120,000, cash: at a dollar per acre, 20,000 acres per mile, would amount to $54,240,000; four per cent. on $7,500 for 25 years, as estimated by the Minister of Railways in his speech, gives $20,340,000 more. In reference to that item the hon. Minister does not calculate this four per cent. in a proper or fair way. He ascertains the amount and adds it up for 25 years, treating it as a fixed charge, and as so much capital expended in the construction of the road. But it was to be only payable for a certain period of years. If it had run all the time, the hon. gentleman would have been nearer the mark, being terminable in 25 years we have an improper calculation. But, in order to-prevent any hair-splitting or quibbling, and to give the hon. Minister of Railways the advantage of everything he claims, I accept his figures, extraordinary though they be, for the purpose of the comparison. What is the total cost to the country of the 2,712 miles under the terms of the Mackenzie Act? $101,700,000. What was the estimated cost of want the Minister of Railways, and those who are inclined to think that he has made a strong case in this matter, to understand that I do not rely in a discussion of this subject, on the fact that there are changed conditions in that he quotes from the speech of the member for country. I propose to meet the Minister of Railways on Lambton with reference to the expenditure on that road, in which he estimated the cost of the sections from Lake Superior or Thunder Bay to the Pacific Ocean at $100,000,000. And then we have the cost of the section from Thunder Bay to Nipissing, as given by the Minister of Railways on page 53, figures which he endorses and enlarges upon, $32,500,000. The total estimated cost of the road in 1874 is thus, $132,500,000, according to the statement of the hon. Minister himself. Taking the total expenditure that would have been incurred under the Mackenzie Act, what would the contractors have had to pay out of their own funds over and above all the grant for the building of the road? $30,800,000. Now we come to the present contract. The estimated cost of the section under it, from Jasper to Kamloops, 335 miles, was stated by the Minister of Railways, according to Hansard of last year, $15,500,000; from Red River to Jasper, 1,000 miles, $13,000,000; eastern section of 650 miles, $20,000,000. or a total cost for all the portions of the road the Syndicate have to build, of $48,500,000. What grant do they get? We are in Committee on a resolution to grant them $25,000,000 in money and 25,000,000 acres of land. Taking the land at $1 an acre, in 1881, the same as in 1874, and what is the grant for those contractors? For that $48,500,000 worth of work, $50,000,000 is given by Parliament with the land at $1 an acre. Or, in other words, under that contract for the total amount of work to be done by the contractors, they get a grant from Parliament over and above every dollar they have to spend of $1,500,000, when, under the MackenzieGovernment, by the figures of the Minister of Railways himself, the Company would have to spend $30,600,000 of their own money in performing the work. This is a comparison fairly made, and yetgentlemen opposite will tell us that the Mackenzie Act offered better inducements to the contractors than the present contract. It has just been mentioned to me, and I am cognizant of the fact, that the road is to be thrown in; but I did not use that as an argument, because I suppose that the parties tendering under the Act of 1874 would also have owned the road, though, of course, there was in that Act a provision for the Government buying back the road, which is lacking in the present measure. But hon, gentlemen will notice that the Minister of Railways is not content with charging against the member for Lambton the cost of the 2,712 miles, which is just the amount of the location under the present contract, but he holds that hon. gentleman responsible for the 85 miles of the Georgian Bay Branch which this Company do not construct at all. But giving the hon, gentleman the benefit of even these 85 miles, and we have a total of 2,797 miles. The cash grant would have been, according to page 41 of the pamphlet of the Minister of Railways, $27,970,000, the land grant at $1 an acre, $55,940,000, and if we add the four per cent. on the basis calculated by the Minister of Railways, the aggregate amount as against the scheme of 1874, foots up to $104,887,500. If we deduct this from $132,500,000, we find that, under this comparison, the contractors would have had to pay out $27,612,500 of their own money, over and above all the grants which the contract gives, while these present contractors get $1,500,000 more than the total expenditure they will have to make. But, Sir, I have another calculation for the hon. Minister of Railways. Upon the evening when that hon, gentleman was delivering his speech, like the rest of us he went home to dinner, and even while he was swallowing his food his active brain was working, which shows how intent he was upon the great task before him, and a task which I am bound to say he discharged in a manner creditable to himself. He was resolved to omit nothing which would tell in his favor, and so when he returned from his dinner, he said that there was still another point to be urged against I ask your attention to this consideration: If we had a that was that by beginning at South-East Bay instead of Callandar Station there was a difference of forty miles more against the scheme of 1874. Now, though I have no right to make such an allowance, I will give the hon, gentleman the advantage even of that point. We will add to the $104,887,500 the $1,500,000, which, according to the Minister's own statement, should be allowed for those 40 miles; and, by so doing, we make the total amount to be charged against the scheme of the hon. member for Lambton, $100,387,500. Deducting this from the total estimated cost, $132,500,000, and, after giving the hon, gentleman every advantage which he can possibly claim for his scheme, and after heaping up against the hon. member for Lambton, every point which can possibly tell against him, we find that the contractors would actually have to pay, under the scheme of 1874, the sum of $26,-112,500of their own money; while, by the contract which has been laid on the Table of the House, it is proposed to give the Syndicate $1,500,000 more than they will actually have to pay out for the work. I think, Sir, that that comparison will bear reflection at any rate. I think, it I might be allowed to say so without egotism, that it is a comparison which is more valuable than the calculation of the hop, the Minister of Railways, because it brings the matter down to actual work and to business principles; and whether or not the hon, gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) was able to make out his case against the hon. member for Lambton, this calculation develops the fact that by the resolutions which are now on the Table of the House, it is proposed to pay the Syndicate, upon the estimates of the hon, the Minister of Railways himself, the sum of $1,500,000 more than they will have to expend upon the work, taking the land at even $1 per acre. There are other points which bear upon the question, of whether the scheme of 1874 would have been more favorable to the country than the present one. I do not wish to occupy the time of the House by repeating arguments which have been used by other hon. gentlemen, but I wish to point out that, as the hon, member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) and the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) showed, by the grant of land which was proposed in the scheme of 1874, 13,000,000 acres were to be given in British Columbia. I have also overlooked the fact that you cannot get an intelligent decision upon the question whether the Act of 1874 or the present scheme is the more favorable until you ascertain what the exemption of the railway property amounts to, what the exemption of the lands from taxation amounts to, what the free admission of material amounts to—I say until you make approximate estimates upon these points, and I believe that is an undertaking beyond the financial ability of this House—you cannot make an entirely satisfactory comparison. And I say, Sir, that it is one of the worst features of this bargain, that we cannot put in figures the untold evils of the perfect monopoly which this Syndicate will have in that North-Western country. But passing from that, let me recall one thing to show in how much better position we would have stood under a contract made under Mr. Mackenzie's Act, than that in which we stand under this contract. In section 10 of the Act of 1874, it is said:

"In every contract for the construction of the said railway or of any section or sub-section thereof, the Government of Canada shall reserve the right to purchase under the authority of Parliament, the said railway or such section or sub-section thereof, on payment of a sum equal to the actual cost of the said railway, section or sub-section, and ten per cent. in addition thereto; the subsidies in land and money granted or paid by the Government for the construction of the said railway being first returned or deducted from the amount to be paid, the lands sold being valued at the full amount the contractors may have received from the sale of such lands as may have been sold."

tion 10 in the Mackenzie A ct of 1874, when these contractors had completed that 900 miles of railway, on the prairie, we would have the right to purchase that portion of the railway on giving ten per cent. over and above the expenditure they had incurred in building it. Under this arrangement, supposing they had not sold their lands at over one dollar an acre, they would have to refund us $7,380,000 for the amount payable to them under this contract would exceed the cost of the road, and ten per cent. additional by this figure. It is the simplest calculation in the world. Turn to section 9 and read the subdivision. What is the total cost of the 900 miles asked for by the hon. Minister of Railways under his estimates of last year? The total estimated cost of that 900 miles is $11,700,000; add ten per cent, $1,170,000, and you obtain a total of $12,870,000 which the Government would have to pay the Company in order to purchase the road. What does the contract give the Company for building these 900 miles? It gives them cash $9,000,000, and land at a dollar an acre, $11,250,000, or a total of $20,250,000; deduct from this the $12,870,00 for which, under section 10 of Mr. Mackenzie's Act, we could buy that road back, and we have $7,380,000 which the Company would have to refund us in hard cash besides giving us the road.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. PATERSON. Mr. Chairman, when the House rose at recess, I was endeavoring to contrast the terms of the Mackenzie Act of 1874 with the contract at present on the Table of the House. The subject is capable of still further illustration and comparison, yet, in order to spare the House and expedite business, I will not spend any further time on that point at present; but I may venture to suggest that the comparisons I have already instituted will show that the terms of the contract now on the Table are not so favorable as the terms of the Mackenzie proposals, although the hon. Minister of Railways, and those who support him, have sought to show the contrary to be the fact. But the point to which I now specially wish to direct your attention is this: That the contention of the Minister of Railways, and the arguments of those who have adopted the position he has taken, have been directed to show that the terms of this contract are better than any terms ever offered to Parliament.

Mr. FARROW. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. member for Huron says, "hear, hear," and it is, therefore, apparent that I have correctly stated their position. The arguments offered from the other side of the House, have proceeded on the assumption that we have only had two propositions before Parliament with respect to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway before the present contract, and that these two propositions were the Allan contract of 1872, and the Mackenzie Act of 1874, which gave power to let contracts for building the road. But that is not the case. I call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite, private members who support the Administration, to this fact: that they think they can shield themselves behind the assertion that this is the best offer that has ever been submitted to Parliament, that it is better than the Allan contract or the Mackenzie proposals, they are taking refuge in a habitation that will not afford them shelter from the coming storm, because I have only to recall to your the coming storm, because I have only to recall to your mentioning. We had another offer, that every non member who has yet spoken in favor of the contract has also carefully abstained from mentioning; and Mr. Paterson (Brant).

it is a strange circumstance that they should do so, for it is not so long ago that their memories should have proved treacherous. They can remember very well back to 1874, and to the days of the Alian contract, but they appear to be unable to remember the events that took place in this Chamber a short time ago, although every hon. gentleman on the other side of the House voted in favor of the proposition then offered. This is a matter which hon. members would do well to enquire into. And let me remind the House that public men are in a great measure bound by their utterances. It is only a right and proper position for a public man to take, standing upon the floor of Parliament and giving utterance to what are his deliberate sentiments and views, that he should be careful that in doing so he has arrived at his conclusions after mature study and calm reflection, so that when he may give that opinion, that, saving and except errors of judgment that are open to all mortals, he may find himself in accord with his views at different periods. There is, however, this fact to be borne in mind, that a man may not utter precisely the same views to-day with regard to certain questions as he did a year or five years ago; and why? Because circumstances may have changed, and, therefore, if there is any disparity in the utterances of the hon, gentleman upon a certain question, all fair-minded men will take into account the changed circumstances, if changed they may be, and see whether the changed circumstances warrant the change of view to which he may have arrived. To illustrate this point, I will suppose that an hon. gentleman should say—as we were told sometimes during the debate on the National Policy when hon, gentlemen were seeking arguments pro and con.—that upon a certain day two years ago, Bank of Montreal stock was quoted on the market at 138. That was a deliberate utterance, and he should be held by it. That same hon, member might, however, rise to-night and say that that stock is worth 179! Should we say that he was inconsistent with himselt? No, Sir; and why? Because circumstances have changed. No fair-minded man in examining the utterances of any public man will say that because what he says to-day is different from what he said previously, the difference being due to an entire change of circumstances, and not to a change of opinion, that that public man is one whose judgment cannot be relied upon. As a public man I am willing to be bound by the utterances that I may make in that respect. If I found I was wrong in any position that I had taken, I would not hesitate to say I was wrong. But public men who arrive at a conclusion and then make statements entirely at variance with that conclusion, the circumstances not having changed, are liable to the imputation that however brilliant their intellects may be their judgment cannot be unswervingly relied upon. I want to make this other point: When a member in this House speaks, he speaks his own individual views, and is held reliable for those views. I find myself a member of a party in this House; we have a leader; I am very proud of that leader. I do not often differ with him. He has got his faults the same as other men; I do not look upon him as perfect; but I think him a very great man. I generally endorse his utterances, but have found, on many an occasion, that I have not been able to arrive at precisely the same conclusion as he. In the main I have been able to agree with him; but, at times, I differ in opinion from his. I am not a sycophant in my support. I am not pledged to his utterances; but, when I applaud his utterances, I feel I am giving my adhesion to the statements he has made, and that I am morally bound as he is bound.

members opposite to the Minister of Railways when he introduced that other scheme of building the Canadian Pacific Railway, which he has taken good care not to intimate to the House as having ever been submitted to it a scheme which he had entirely forgotten about, though it only was introduced a year ago, and which every member who spoke in favor of seems to have entirely forgotten. That offer differed from previous offers. What was that offer? It was a proposition by the Minister of Railways, that the Government should build the Canadian Pacific Railway as a Government work, and pay for it out of the proceeds of the sales of public lands. It is very strange that we have not heard anything about that proposition during this debate from hon. gentleman opposite, and I am bound to say that the hon. the Minister of Railways is bound to explain why that scheme, which was deliberately adopted by the Government, has been abandoned. If they cannot show to this House that this contract, which he asks us to ratify to-day in lieu of that scheme of last year, is better in the interests of Canada, they will stand in a very awkward position in the eyes of the country. I will have to trouble the House with reading extracts from the speeches of the right hon, leader of the Government, and the hon. Minister of Railways, in order to prove the proposition I have laid down, that last year they propounded a scheme to this House by which the Canadian Pacific Railway was to be built as a Government work, that the expenses of its construction was to be paid out of monies to be derived from the sale of public lands, and that it was not to cost this country one cent for its construction. I shall read first the words of the hon. First Minister, which will be found on page 1052 of the Hansard of 1880:

"In the 1874 Bill it is provided that if the Government should find it more expedient to construct the work as a Government work instead of by the intervention of railway companies undertaking the work, they might make it a Government work; and that was the plan on which the work of building the railway from Lake Superior to Red River was undertaken, that is as a Government work. What the policy of the late Government would have been in carrying out the completion of the other portion of the railway we do not know, because we had not at the time they ceased to be a Government, got so far as to have any policy announced on the question; but when we came in, we decided to undertake it as a Government work, because the construction from Lake Superior to Red River was through a difficult country, expensive for surveying, and a very poor country, which would not make any adequate return for the expense; and as it was quite clear that the railway westward from Red River to the Rocky Mountains will run through a rich country, which would render the construction of the road more remunerative, the policy of this Government became a humble imitation of that pursued by the American Government."

Thus the First Minister laid down last year as a distinct proposition, that the Government intended to construct this railway as a Government work. And now I wish to clinch the statement I am making by the views that were entertained by the hon. Minister of Railways on the same point. Speaking in the House last year, he said:

"I have no hesitation in saying that the whole sentiment of the country has changed on this question."

This is the expression of one of these gentlemen who are so clamorous for consistency in the public statements of public men at all times. Listen to the next sentence of the hon. Minister of Railways as he goes down on his knees and makes this confession:

"I am not st all ashamed to say that my own opinions have completely changed in relation to the character of this great work."

What should we expect of a public man who holds a different opinion to-day from what be held before? We should say that the honest course is to come down as the Minister of Railways did, and say that his opinions have changed. He goes on to say:

"I remember well that when the then First Minister brought in his Act in 1874, for the construction of this as a Government work, I felt that we were incurring too great a responsability. I believed, at that time it was an unsafe and unsound policy for the Government of this country to undertake the construction of this great national work from end to end as Government work, and I did not hesitate to express my opinons as freely and as forcibly as I could on the occasion of the passage of that measure. But the whole ecudition of Canada has changed since then. There is not an intelligent man in this country who does not look upon the prospect of the settlement and development of the North-West with entirely different feelings from those then entertained."

An hon, gentleman on the other side, the other night, spoke of the hon, member for West Durham, the hon, member for Centre Huron, the hon, member for Lambton, and a lot of other gentlemen on this side of having changed their views on this question as though it was something discreditable. What will these hon, gentlemen think of the Minister of Railways when he says there is not an intelligent man in the country who has not changed his opinion on this subject? Again, that hon, gentleman says:

"Hon. gentlemen must not forget, as I said before, that the whole aspect of affairs in this country has entirely changed within a brief period; that that which would have been properly regarded as highly imaginative in relation to the development of the Canadian North-West, must now be looked upon with very different eyes indeed."

And yet this same hon, gentleman thought it not beneath him to take up three hours of the time of this House, in order to prove that the circumstances were precisely now in that country, what they were in 1874. Hon. gentlemen opposite, if they try to remember a year back, will remember that they endorsed that policy of the Government with their cheers, which I fancy I can almost hear still. Those cheers bound them; by them they committed themselves to that policy; and this House is in utter ignorance of why the combined Cabinet have abandoned that policy which the House then endorsed. They have not told us. In hon. gentleman was his five hours speech the unablo to remember that. to his recollection, and we demand to know the reason why. Let us see whether it is good and sufficient. If he does not give us any, you and I, having the policy of last Session in our hands, can arrive at a conclusion, and we shall be held responsible to our constituents that we look into this question before we cast our votes for the project now before us. When the hon, gentleman brought down last year's proposition he was armed with statements, prepared by experts and which he adopted himself, of the cost of this work, which, after adding an amount for unforseen expenditures, he stated was within what must be the actual cost. Our course is now clear. Having been told that this is the best offer ever before the House, we have examined it in the light of the Mackenzie Act, of the Allan contract, and we now examine it in the light of the scheme adopted last year. As to the ways and means by which this road was to be constructed as a Government work, the First Minister said, last year:

"So, Mr. Speaker, I can disabuse the mind of the country, or the minds of any of the hon, gentlemen who hear me, of any apprehensions that the construction of the Pacific Railway will be so burdensome as to be oppressive to the people and discouraging to the future development, prosperity and growth of the Dominion."

Then he goes on to tell us what he proposes to do:

"If we are to judge from the reports we have heard, we may rely upon it that 50,000 people will go into that section of the country this year. We know that in the United States, when railways were about to be opened across the prairies in the various states and territories a large influx could always be calculated upon, because there is always an increasing rush towards those lands which are being opened up by the construction of railways. We are told that 50,000 will come in, but let us put the number at 25,000, and I have been informed by everyone— and I have spoken to a great number of persons who have come from the North-West, and who have the best means of judging—that the estimate is ridiculously, absurdly small."

Very well. Then we turn over to page 1056 of the Hansard, where he gives a calculation on which he based his statement. He says:

"Then we calculate that, as 25,000 people would go in this year, we may add each year an increase of 5,000, so that we may expect 30,000 to go in next year. That is a very small percentage, if we look to the results from railway enterprise in the United States. We assume, therefore, an increase of 5,000 a year till 1890, and expect in that year 75,000 settlers in our North-West."

If hon, gentlemen will put figures together they amount to this: that in ten years the First Minister calculated there would be 550,000 souls in that country. Now, then, he goes into a calculation of the value of the lands in the North-West.

"We then take the average price of the whole of the lands extending from the five dollar section, within five miles of the railway to sixty or 100 miles away. The average price of the land sold to the 1,500 purchasers would be $3 an acre, this is greatly under the average."

He says this is a very moderate estimate, and on these figures he estimates the total cash revenue to be received for the lands by 1890 at $38,593,000, as the cash sales of the lands in the hands of the Government. And what more does he say:

"The actual value in 1880, of the preemption up to that date, nupsid, will be $16,140,000. The actual value of the railway lands sold up to that date will be $16,272,000, making in all $32,712,000. If you add to that total, unpsid, the $38,593,000 that will be paid in 1890, you get a grand total of $71,305,000."

Now the hon, gentleman knew that in the sale of these lands there would be a good deal of expenditure; there would be offices to be opened and officered, and he went into a calculation of what the office expenses and the cost of surveys would be under that proposition, and he tells us that he estimates it at $2,200,000. He says:

"Deduct from that the estimated cost of surveys for the ten years, Having shown that the estimated cost of surveys for the ten years, $2,000,000, and of the land offices $400,000, and you reduce it by $2,400,600. Having shown that the estimate of the number of settlers, if the land to be taken up, and if the average price is not excessive, we find we shall have $69,000,000 either of money in hand, or money for which we shall have the best security in the world—the land itself."

Now there is the financial basis of that scheme. There was to be by the year 1890 $69,000,000 of money, or mortgages equal in value to money, in the hands of the Government. Well, Sir, I think it would be well when I am at this point to fasten the Minister of Railways as well as the First Minister, to that proposition. The Minister of Railways spoke in reference to the motion to resolve the House into Committee of Supplies when he introduced his Pacific Railway scheme, and he quotes these figures with a reference to the amount of money to be derived from the plan he had developed, and he endorsed these figures as his own, saying it was an authority that might be accepted. The First Minister is particular in taking off every item of expense; the Minister of Railways, not as careful in his utterances, says the amount they would have in hand would be $70,060,000. Now, having shown to the House the financial part of this scheme, we turn to the subject of building this road. I come now to consider what the cost of the work would be constructed by the Government as they asked power to do and as the House gave them power to do. We will have to turn to the Hansard and read the hon. gentleman's own words in reference thereto:

"Before six o'clock, I was about taking up the question of the expenditure that will be required to complete the Canadian Pacific Railway. I will now submit a calculation I believe to be an outside one, or above the probable outlay. This estimate has been prepared by a gentleman who has had the widest and best opportunity of forming a deliberate and dispassionate judgment on the subject—a gentleman whose ability, in my opinion, is only exceeded by his caution—Mr. Sandford Fleming. Engineeric this fact has been prepared by the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway. However, much this chief the Canadian Pacific Railway. in-Chief of the Canadian Pacific Railway. However much this estimate of in-Chief of the Canadian Pacific Railway. However much this estimate of expenditure may be reduced, I am sure it cannot be exceeded. The distance from Lake Superior to Burrard Inlet is 1,956 miles; that is adding twenty miles for the diversion of the line to the south of Lake Manitoba, and deducting three and three-quarter miles for the reduction in the distance between Lake Superior and Red River, and the shortening by the change of route passing north of Edmonton instead of south as before. That total includes the Fort William and Selkirk section of 406 miles as now reduced; and for that I submit an estimate for completion in the manner intended as a first-class road, and with a thorough equipment for the large traffic expected, and including terminal stations. $17,000,000, or $1,000,000 less for the reasons stated than my estimate of last year."

But it will only be necessary, I suppose, for the purposes of comparison, that I should give the estimated cost of the work to be constructed by the Syndicate, and after thus contrasting the offer of the Syndicate with the offer made by the Government last year, and we come to that next: Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

"The 1,000 miles from Selkirk to Jasper Valley, the dividing point just beyond the foot of the Rocky Mountains, including a light equipment—all that will be required for some years—Mr. Fleming estimates at $13,000,000, that is $3.000,000 more than the average estimate for the 200 miles west of Red River, in order to be entirely safe. We have 100 miles actually under contract, and have received tenders for the other 100 miles, and I do not expect the average cost to exceed that of the 100 miles just let

Mr. BLAKE. What is the amount estimated for the equipment per mile?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A light equipment is all we shall require for

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A light equipment is all we shall require for some years.

Mr. BLAKE. Will it be $1,000 or $2,000 per mile?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. When the traffic demands a heavier equipment there will be means for providing it.

Mr. BLAKE. I only want to know your estimate in dollars.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is $13,000 per mile, as against an estimate we should be justified in giving of $10,000 a mile, making $3,000,000 more than the average of the amount probably needed to complete and supply with a fair equipment the 200 miles we have under contract on the prairies."

Now you have $13,000,000 for that part. The hon. gentleman then goes on to lay down the amount for the other section that will have to be constructed by the Syndicate. $15,500,000 is the amount for that portion of the road, from Jasper Valley to Kamloops, and $20,000,000 for the Nipissing section, which was the Syndicate's own estimate, and which the Minister of Railways says, himself, was beyond a proper estimate. I have, in this case, given the outside figures of Mr. Fleming, a man whose ability is only exceeded by his caution, and whose figures the Minister of Railways is sure cannot be exceeded, however much they may be improved upon, and therefore the portion of the road which Syndicate agreed to complete, was, according to the estimates of this gentleman, $15,500,000 from Jasper to Kamloops, and $13,000,000 from Jasper Valley to Selkirk, and $20,000,000 from Thunder Bay to Nipissing. So that if you put these three amounts together you have a total cost of the work of $48,500,000. The House, last year, adopted that proposition. Supporters of the Ministry cheered it to the echo-they gave hon, gentlemen opposite the encouragement and the power to conclude such undertakings. At that time the estimate of the cash that we were to have in hand by keeping the line in our own possession was $69,000,000. Contrast the two schemes and what do you find? This—that by 1890 we were to have those $69,000,000, the proceeds of the sales of public lands, and the entire road completed as it will be by the Syndicate, at a cost of $48,500,000. The scheme of last year would also give us $20,500,000 cash in hand, and that the property of the Dominion. That was the scheme hon. gentlemen opposite voted for last year. Now, Sir, what does the present scheme propose to do? Do they propose to make the Syndicate return you that $20,000,000, or any money? No; but you are to give them $25,000,000 money and 25,000,000 acres of the public lands. Could anything be more monstrous? Could anything more revolting be proposed to a party? To throw over the scheme of last year for one which compels you to throw $50,000,000 of the resources of this country away, in addition to the $20,000,000 they would have received if the statement of the Minister of Railways of last year is correct, is an astounding proposal. I admire the Minister of Railways. I like the way he battles for his side; he is a man in this respect after my own heart, but these figures show he needs rest-that Her Majesty must be apprised by this House, that she should select some other person to represent her in negotiating contracts. I value the hon. gentleman highly, but $50,000,000 is more than even I would venture to give for him-$50,000,000 of the money and lands of this countryit is really a higher price than I think the hon. gentleman himself would set on his services. I may be all wrong, but if so it is by believing what the First Minister and the Minister of Railways said last year. I have given not my figures but theirs. Thus I cannot be wrong or do hon.

gentlemen opposite wrong. To say that those figures are monstrous is to say that the figures and propositions of those hon. Ministers a year ago were monstrous. For their supporters to say that would be to cover yourselves with contumely. Their supporters cheered to the echo those sentiments when delivered. I ask them to tell us why the scheme of last year is thrown over, by which we should have the railway built and owned by us, and $20,000,000 of cash be sides, for one by the Syndicate, which gives the roads to them and $50,000,000 of our resources besides.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What about running it?

Mr. PATERSON. It may be said that one of the good reasons for handing this work over to the Syndicate is, that the country will be relieved of the responsibility and loss incurred in the working of it. There may be omething in that; but I am happy to say that we have the authority of the Minister of Railways as to our probable loss from the working of this railroad, built on the wise and economical principle formerly proposed, of constructing the prairie section first and leaving the eastern section till the necessities of Canada demanded it. You will find what he said in reference to this subject on page 1422 of Hansard for 1880:

"I dare say I will be told by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake): Granted that your figures are correct, assuming that you can build this railway for even less money than you have estimated, you have only encountered the first difficulty; you have then to operate the line, and the cost of that will be so greatly beyond anything you can hope to obtain from it, that you will place an intolerable burden upon the people of this country. I must address myself for a few moments to that question. I will give the information I have just received from the Superintendent of the Pempina Branch:

obtain from it, that you will place an intolerable burden upon the people of this country. I must address myself for a few moments to that question. I will give the information I have just received from the Superintendent of the Pembina Branch:

"The 160 miles we have now opened in the North-West, shows that from the 1st day of March to the 12th day of April we have carried 5,236 passengers, and 1,248 loaded cars, containing $12,460 tons of freight. The gross receipts during that short period were $36,387, and working expenses $15,000, leaving a net profit of $21,387, and this during a more difficult and stormy period than has been known for many years."

That was a wise course for the hon. Minister to pursue. When he wanted to speak authoritatively, he brought down the report of a competent official, in order to determine this question as to whether there would be a loss in working this Canadian Pacific Railway after it was built or not. The hon. Minister further states:

"By July, 1882, we will have about 700 miles of this road in operation; we will have 85 miles from Selkirk to Emerson or St. Vincent. We will have 200 miles in operation west of the Red River, which, with the branch of 16 miles to Winnipeg, will give us some 700 miles in operation, without reference at all to the section in British Columbia. I have every reason to believe that every mile of that road, from the day it is opened, will make an ample return for all the expenditure incurred in its operation. I think it is safe to say that in every succeeding year, as we extend gradually this road towards the Rocky Mountains, it will furnish such an additional volume of traffic from Red River to Thunder Bay, which will become the great entrepot of that country, as will prevent it from burthening the people, and give us fair return for the interest on the money used in its construction."

That is to say, that the Pembina Branch and the Thunder Bay Branch, from the very day they were opened, would not only pay running expenses, but that so soon as a portion of road was opened on the thousand miles to the Rocky Mountains, not only would it pay running expenses and cost of management, but the receipts would afford a good paying interest over and above all these charges. sentiment was cheered to the echo by hon. gentlemen opposite. So that last year we had an offer by which we were to have the road built by 1850; we were to have the road and own it, and $20,000,000 besides, and not a cent was to be lost on account of running expenses. What shall we say then as to the abandonment of such a scheme as that and the proposed adoption of the present scheme? When I announced beforehand that I could not approve of this contract, I was met by the ironical cheers of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I said I would give my reasons for opposing it, and I would like to ask if it would be a reasonable thing for me to assent to such a scheme as the present, after one so favorable had been proposed to us? It might be possible the solicitor of this Syndicate, and said to him; "Now sit that circumstances should change, that something might have happened which would have rendered the utterances of the First Minister or the Minister of Railways somewhat different to-day from what they were last year. know that the circumstances of the North-West changed very considerably between 1874 and 1880, but what change has taken place since last year, which would justify so serious a modification in the proposition of the Government? The lands in the North-West have not become less valuable. for we have the assurance of the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Agriculture that people have ceased flocking to the United States, and are pouring into our North-West Territories. Almost before the utterances of the First Minister and the hon. Minister of Railways had reached the people, we find them starting off, post haste, to England, for the purpose, so they told us, of entering into a contract to build the road. But, Sir, it must scarcely be expected of us that we should hail the return of these hon. gentlemen with delight, when they bring with them a scheme which involves the throwing away of $50,000,000 of the people's money, throwing away the railway itself and $20,000,000 Their views with regard to the prospects of besides. immigration had not become less hopeful, for we find the hon. Minister of Railways saying that they had even greater encouragement than before from the English Government from leading people in England, with reference to emigration into this country. That hon, gentleman, who probably went as the medical adviser of the party, informed us that the Minister of Agriculture had a stroke when he was in England; and after making a diagnosis of the aforesaid stroke, he ascertained that it was a stroke of genius with which the hon, gentleman was affected. We might be inclined to think that to a plain matter of fact gentleman like the Minister of Agriculture a repetition of a stroke of that kind might happen to prove fatal, but we are certainly rejoiced that he managed to survive. But the stroke of genius, we are informed, consisted of the idea of getting representative and leading English farmers to come out to this country at the expense of the Canadian Government to see with their own eyes whether the state ments which had been made with reference to the extent and value of our domain in the North-West were true or not. We have been lead to believe that these gentlemen have come and have seen and have reported and that their report is a favorable one. Why, then, this great change? I cannot say what has produced it, I am at a loss to conceive what has worked out that change. I can only say, after a comparison of these two schemes, that the Ministry who ask their followers to adopt the contract which is now before the House are asking their followers to do something which no Ministry have asked their followers to do since responsible government was instituted in this country. I will go no further upon this point, and I think that I can honestly claim that I have fortified myself on every hand in dealing with this subject. I have used entirely the words and figures of the hon. Minister of Railways himself, in estimating the cost, the earnings and the working expenses of the railway. Having considered all these schemes, I will proceed to just hastily glance at the contract itself, and I will say that monstrous as the idea is of throwing over that plan by which we could construct a road, and taking up instead the plan by which we will pay $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 million acres of land, and lose the railway besides. There are some benefits and advantages conferred in the charter to the Syndicate that in their nuture and consequences are fraught with greater evil in this country than even the enormous expenditure of public money and lands. It seems to me, in going through that contract, there is nothing the Company could ask for that is not in it, and nothing they could ask to have left out that is not left out. If the Government had taken a blank sheet of paper handed it to down and write out whatever terms you want, bearing only in mind that we have an enormous majority in the House of Commons who are very faithful and true to us, and who will . go along way to maintain us in our position," that solicitor could not have put in one provision more in the interests of the Company than he has done. We need not go further down than clause three to see the evidence of the most culpable carelessness on the part of the Ministrr of Justice who ought to have looked into this matter and of the Minister of Railways who probably knows more on this subject than the Minister of Justice himself. Read the standard of construction of this road, on which the Syndicate are to get our money and lands. It is that of the Union Pacific as at first constructed. I do not intend to take up the time of the House in detailing to you what that standard was. That has been already explained to you. That the exception was well taken, is borne out by the fact which, if not stated by the Government, has been stated in in some of their organs, that the Syndicate have been forced to write a letter, stating that they are willing to consent to alteration in the standard, and not consider themselves entitled to the standard of the Union Pacific as at first constructed, but to the standard of some years later. If this objection was not well taken, why did the Syndicate make this amended proposition? Having made it, does the writing of that better, absolve us from the responsibility of adopting the contract with that clause unaltered. Ask any logal gentleman-I am not a legal gentleman-whether a simple statement by one of the members of the Syndicate that they are willing to accept another standard than that in the contract can vitiate that clause in a court of law. In the sixth clause we find the Government are obliged to complete the portions of the road already begun. The 125 miles from Kamloops to Yale, one of the most difficult portions of the line, for which a contract was let, we are to finish according to the contract, and pay for it out of our own money. We are We are complete the work in progress through that very difficult part of the territory between Thunder Bay and Selkirk, and in the seventh section we bind ourselves to hand over the Government section, when completed and paid for with our money, to the Syndicate. What do we do more? The ninety miles from Yale to Port Moody are also to be built by the Government, so that the very finality harped upon by hon, gentlemen who in this contract see a great advantage in the fact that it takes the work out of the hands of a Government, beyond political influences, as urged by the hon. member for Halton in his speech to his constituents, is not provided for. In this connection I do not take up the position that is taken by many hon gentlemen. I do not think it is necessary that the public money should be squandered because there is danger of the hon. the Minister of Railways proving corrupt in the administration of his office. I do not believe it in reference to the hon, the Minister of Railways. I believe if such a charge were proved, he would be driven from his place. hold therefore, that such a contention has no bearing on this subject. If such a monstrous thing might be supposed as that the Minister of Railways would violate his oath of office, proving recreant to the trust confided to him, that agreement with the Syndicate does not relieve us from that danger, because there is still a portion of the road retained by the Government, the contracts for which have to be let by the hon. Minister of Railways, and the progress of which work is to go on during a period of ten years, a period during which the Syndicate have to complete their portion. By the time they have finished their road, we shall have finished 712 miles of the most difficult part, paid out of our own money obtained by swelling the national debt, to meet the interest of which Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Manitoba, Ontario and British Columbia will have to be taxed for all time to this contract you give this Company power to take land Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

come. In clause 10 we find the Government have granted the station grounds, termini on navigable waters, etc., to the Company. That provision wasin the Act of 1874; but under this contract there are greater powers given to this Syndicate in reference to the selection of termini on navigable waters, and the amount of land granted. than were contained in the Act of 1874. As I read the 26th section of the Act of incorporation, not being a legal man, it gives the Syndicate virtual control of all the navigable rivers, of all the lakes, and the Hudson's Bay, and shuts out every other company. They may acquire all the land they want for elevators, storehouses, workshops, wharves and anything they require. They may own a line of steamships, so that they may become not only a great railway monopoly, but a great steamship monopoly, so that they can secure their lands and construct their wharves in such a way that no steamships but their own can touch their wharves unless they pay the tolls wrung from them by this Syndicate of such extraordinary power. Then I have a serious objection ordinary power. Then I have a serious objection to clause 9. No matter at what item we look there rises up before us this thought—that there has been on the part of the Government either carelessness, amounting almost to criminality or ignorance, so great as one could scarcely expect to find in any members of this House. Clause 9 divides the work of the Syndicate into two sections the central and the eastern, and determines the amount of money and land to be given for each section. The central section is again divided into two parts. For 900 miles we give the Syndicate $10,000 a mile, that is $9,000,000, and 12,500 acres of each mile, which, at $1 an acre, would amount to $11,250,000; so that for building these 900 mile we give a total of $20,250,000. Now what is the cost of that 900 miles? Again, I give you the figures of the Minister of Railways fortified by the report of his Chief Engineer. His statement is that these 900 miles can be both constructed and equipped for $13,000 a mile. Although he, himself, thinks it can be constructed and equipped for $10,000 a mile, that would be a total cost of $11,700,000, or $8,550,000 less than we are giving the Syndicate to construct the road, besides giving them the road after it is constructed. The eastern section of 650 miles was estimated last year by the Minister of Railways at $30,000 a mile, or a total of $19,500,000. What do we grant to the Syndicate for that? We give them $10,000 in cash and 6,250,000 acres of land, which, taken at a dollar an acre, makes a total of $16,250,000, or $3,750,000 less than it will cost them. What is the inducement the Government offered to them by these provisions? It is patent to every man. The inducement is for the members of that Syndicate to construct that 900 miles of prairie road to take their $8,500,000 of profit out of it, and, if they sit fit, refuse to construct the eastern section, and then drop out of the concern with their money and their lands in their possession; for their money and their lands are given them as every 20 miles of the road is completed. What will be the penalty upon them if they do that? The Government retain one-fifth of twenty-five million bonds in their possession, which would be equal to a sum of $200,000 per annum. Under clause 10 we find that the Government are to admit free of duty many of the materials used in the construction of this road. It seems that the Ministry in framing this contract took care to put into it every clause that could make it obnoxious to their supporters and a bitter dose for them to swallow. This clause makes them swallow their whole National Policy which has been pro-claimed so long and so vigorously from the housetops. The land may be taken any where in the fertile belt. I pass on. What need to dilate? I know I am harrowing up the feelings of the hon. gentlemen opposite as I put before them the iniquities of this contract. In clause 11, if you adapt any where in the fertile belt, you give power to construct branch lines in the North-West, and to choke off all other branch lines, because all the Syndicate has to do is to select the ground on which they would like to run a branch line, draw a map of that, and fyle it in the Minister of Railway's office and go in and take possession. By clause 12 Government are to extinguish the Indian title. As the hon. member for Bothwell pointed out, this proves that the Comnany intend to go up into the fertile region of the Peace River Valley in order to take a portion of the land. In clause 13 the Company may locate the line where they see fit. It is true it is to be by consent of the Governor in Council, but the Minister of Railways, on whose advice the Governor would act, has told us in his admirable speech, the strongest speech that could be delivered in favor of that contract, that as far as the location of that line was concerned there was no danger in leaving it to the Company themselves. As their interest would be the best to consult, I take it that under that clause the Company can go on and locate that line wherever they please, and the Governol in Council will not say them nay. They may deflect it to the couthward, if they see fit, and take the whole trade of our country down to the American channel, that gentlemen opposite are so afraid of in opposing the construction of the Sault Ste Marie road. In clause 14 the Government grant the land for the road bed, stations, workshops, in undefined quantity. Come to clause 15—and there is a clause that I implore hon. members opposite to reflect upon before they give their adhesion to What does clause 15 of that contract do? Sir, I wish to give nothing stronger in reference to that than the simple reading of the clause itself. I read clause 15, and let every gentleman here take in the import of it and understand what it means:

"For twenty years from the date hereof no line of railway shall be authorized by the Dominion Parliament to be constructed south of the Canadian Pacific Railway, except such line as shall run south-west or to the westward of south-west, nor to within fitteen miles of latitude 49 of the boundary line; and in the establishment of any other new Province in the North-West Territory provision shall be made for continuing such prohibition after such establishment until the expiration of twenty years."

I venture to say that no clause so iniquitous in its nature was ever inserted in any contract given by any Government to any railway company—absolute prohibition for all competing lines in that grand and magnificent territory of ours—and this prohibition, if it becomes a statute will be voted for by a majority of intelligent men, elected and sworn to subserve the interest of that country, as well as of the Dominion at large. Here is a prohibition of all lines running west and south-west; they cannot go nearer the boundary line than fifteen miles; cannot form any communication with any existing line of railway. This is bad enough for the farmers in the North-West, if they have to send their grain 500 miles away westward, when their market is eastward. But that might be borne. If they could do that, and pay the extra freight on 500 miles, and having done that, they could make a connection with an American railroad and have a competing line by which they might get a rate that would relieve them from the grinding rate that will be imposed by this Company. They are bound hand and foot in that contract. It is monstrous. Let the men from Ontario, let the men from Quebec, let the men from the Maritime Provinces look around and see what has been the history of railroads in our own country. In the city which I have the honor to call a part of my constituency, we have the Grand Trunk Railway passing through there—a grand main line—by which we could get on to the Great Western, or any other line, by a circuitous road. But we were eight miles from the main line, and we wanted a branch or competing line. The Grand Trunk was a good company, and a party to a contract wiping out that exemption clause and was doing as well for us as for any other point. giving the Company freedom from taxation for twenty years,

But they were a railroad corporation, and had no competition for eight miles, and we gave them $70,000 of cash bonus for that eight miles of railroad. Why? To get a connecting line and to get rates that would bring it on a par with other companies, to get rates that would give us back the money expended. This clause 15 is a monstrous provision. Suppose that for a period of 20 years from now the farmers of the North-West, if they felt the grinding rates, as they will feel them, imposed by this monopoly, if they were willing to put their hands in their pockets and give one-third of all the money or land they possess, in order to get a competing line that would give them an outlet and relieve them from the tyranny of that contract, they could not get it because Parliament will have stepped in and made it absolutely impossible. Will Parliament adopt that clause? Will intelligent men that must know the results adopt it? Yes, an hon. gentleman says; then I am sorry for my country. I am one of those that have always believed that in that North-West was the future hope of this country. I have never able to believe statements minimizing the amount of land we have in that country, perhaps because I have not wanted to believe it. I am one of those ardent in admiration of that country. I believe and rejoice in the hope that it is written in the possibilities for us to work out for ourselves a grand heritage in this Dominion. I, as a young Canadian, born in the land, have had lofty aspirations with regard to the future of this country, and have looked forward to the time when we should have not simply 4,000,000, but 10,000,000 in our country, with our national pulse beating true and strong-when we should find the name of Canadian honorably known among the nations of the earth. I have looked forward to our opening up that great North-West. I believe there is a magnificent territory there with room for a wealthy and prosperous people. I believe that there will be a market there for the manufactures of the older Provinces, and the fish and other products of the Maritime Provinces. As I think of all this, and the high hopes entertained of that country, I confess that the glowing feelings that were mine, with reference to its future, are having a dark cloud thrown over them in that clause. I see by it deterioration in the value of the lands in the North-West and settlement restricted. see in that clause discontent if not anarchy in the North-West, and I implore the House and Minister of Railways to strike it out even if you keep the others in. I am glad that Toronto has a representative here who is able to cry out: "louder," "louder," though he may not be able to discharge any other functions. Taking clause 16, let me ask the Minister of Railways what he thinks of it. The property and capital of the Company shall be free from taxation. That hon. Minister has stated that this is no more than is conceded to American roads; but it is well known that the American railways do pay large amounts of municipal taxation. There have been given to the Syndicate rights, powers, and privileges not given to American companies, and if that was not enough iniquity to put in the clause, he also provides that the lands of the Company given by this Dominion are to be free from taxation for 20 years. Last year when the First Minister was speaking on the land grants, he alluded to the question of exemption, his remarks being found at page 1038 of the Hansard for 1880. He knew the dangers that accrued from exempting large tracts of lands from taxation. He was cognizant of the evils of exemption in the case of the Canada Company in days gone by, and he told the House that he had given power to the resident settlers to tax the lands of the non-resident, and therefore those non-residents must either pay the taxes or sell out. He thus qualified that clause himself, and yet the same gentleman has since become so that the settler will have an unsettled mile on the east, west, north and south exempt from taxation. He will have to bear the whole burden, build churches and make road improvements, and the hon. Minister of Railways asks Parliament to adopt that clause. A single hon, gentleman says he is willing to support that provision. I hope he stands alone in this House. By the eighteenth clause the Company have power to take and hold all the lands they want for wharves, etc. By clause 19 they can take timber, stones, etc., for the construction of the road—they can take any timber they like. Under clause 26 they can virtually control all water privileges. As to freight rates, what do we find by section 20? That on that railway which, according to the statement of the Minister of Railways, will be run without paying all its running expenses from the day of opening and before long the interest on the money spent on it after all the land and money given that will more than pay every dollar laid out on the road, that the Company are to have the privelege of taking $8,000,000 of profit, at the public expense, over and above the expense of working that road, and out of the farmers of the North-West, before the Government can cut down their rates. Parliament will be powerless to compel them to lower those rates. The Minister of Railways said, that that view of the matter was a misinterpretation, and, in reply to the member for Gloucester, that he would be glad to know that the 10 per cent. was to be on the capital actually expended by the Company—that matters were not so bad as they supposed. The member for West Durham observed that that was not the meaning of the words of the contract, whereupon the Minister of Railways replied, that whatever doubt he might have as to the political principles of that hon, gentleman, he had the utmost reliance for his legal ability, and would defer to his judgment, that the member for West Durham had stated publicly here in the House, that that Act is liable to construction, that the interests the Syndicate are to get from the road is 10 per cent. on the total capital, coming from whatever source it might on the construction of that road. That road is to cost, according to the estimate of the Minister of Railways, from 78,000,000 to 84,000,000, so that there will 8,000,000 of money to be taken under that section, before the Government can step in and do anything to the contrary. I see that the Mail states that there has been a misinterpretation, that there is to be paid only ten per cent. on the $5,000,000, which would be $500,000, which would be paid before the Government could interfere. But here is the quandary in which the Government is placed. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) in whose legal opinion the hon. Minister of Railways has expressed his confidence, says that it will cost ten per cent. on the capital which they put in themselves. Suppose that they put in $5,000,000 to start with and they draw it out again, will the hon. Minister of Railways, who said that that was his idea of what was meant vote for a resolution which declares the interpretation of that clause to be, that the Company shall have only ten per cent. on the $5,000,000. I think it would be worth while to test that question by moving a resolution on that subject; and if we should see fit to do so I cannot very well see how the hon. the Minister of Railways, who has supported that interpretation, or his followers, can vote against it. And if they vote in favor of it we shall have saved to the farmers of the North-West, $7,500,000 by our action in that matter. But I will not much further trespass upon the time of the House. I am sorry that in the latter portion of my remarks I have been obliged, to some extent, to repeat what had been already said on the subject; but this was inevitable. For even hon, gentlemen opposite will admit that if an hon. member thinks it worth while to speak on Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

clauses in the contract. Now, I desire to say a few words in all frankuess and sincerity. I, Sir, am one of those who believe in party lines in the government of a country. I am myself a member of a party, and I suppose I am strong in my political leanings, at least I have been told so, although sometimes I think I am not. Now, I do admire party men. I admire fidelity to the chiefs of any party, and I admire discipline in party ranks. I think it is a grand and a magnificent sight to see a body of intelligent men united hand to hand and shoulder to shoulder, in carrying forward what they believe to be for the weal of the country, or opposing what they consider against their country's interest. I admire the right of such a body of men acting loyally to their chief, and sinking minor differences of opinion for the sake of carrying forward their principles or accomplishing some noble end. As I have said, I admire the loyalty of a party to its chief. I think the right hon, gentleman who leads this House has had in times past expressions of the loyalty of his party, greater, perhaps, than it was ever the privilege of any other political leader to enjoy. He is a gentleman who challenges the loyalty of his party to an extent, and in a manner in which not merely his supporters, but those who are opposed to him may take an honest pride—a loyalty which is begotten not merely by intellectual power, but in part by possession of those qualities admirable the heart, that amiability of disposition which gains not merely the admiration, but the love of his supporters. And it is because I am conscious of the devoted and fervent loyalty to himself, which his followers have so often exhibited,—and I wish he were in his seat that he might hear my words,—I say it is because of their loyalty that I would ask him not to require his supporters to do this one deed which they cannot afford to do. If it were merely that by so doing they themselves would go down with him, that they themselves would lose an election, it would be nothing; there would be something almost chivalrous in their conduct. If it were merely that their children after them might be pointed out as those whose fathers were willing to fasten tetters and shackles upon a people who desired to be free, it would not be so much. But they are asked to do more than that. They are asked not only to sacrifice themselves, but also to place themselves in the position of those whose names posterity will point at as men who knowingly or unknowingly did forge the fetters which were placed on our great North-West. But it is the interests of the whole country which are at stake, and I would appeal to the right hon, gentleman and his supporters, every one of whom took an oath, carefully to guard and defend the interests of Canada, not to do this thing. I would implore him to relieve them from the position in which they are now placed. Sir, we should not have party discipline carried to the extent to which it is carried in the army. We all remember the beautiful lines in which the heroic conduct of those who rushed into the jaws of death at Balaklava has been described:

> "Theirs not to reason why, Theirs not to make reply, Theirs but to do and die, Noble Six Hundred."

and if we should see fit to do so I cannot very well see how the hon. the Minister of Railways, who has supported that interpretation, or his followers, can vote against it. And if they vote in favor of it we shall have saved to the farmers of the North-West, $7,500,000 by our action in that matter. But I will not much further trespass upon the time of the House. I am sorry that in the latter portion of my remarks I have been obliged, to some extent, to repeat what had been already said on the subject; but this was inevitable. For even hon, gentlemen opposite will admit that if an hon, member thinks it worth while to speak on the subject at all he cannot very well avoid going over the future of Canada, and that you must be relieved in this instance from party obligations. I implore hon, gentlemen opposite to take that course; but if they do not choose to do it, I, as an independent member of Parliament, feeling the responsibility that rests upon me, can only say that after giving this matter mature consideration—and I trust that I have convinced hon. members opposite, that I have at least attempted so to consider it—as for me, whatever other men may do, my course is clear, my duty plain, and, to follow that course and discharge that duty, I must refuse my assent to the contract which is now before the House.

Mr. ROYAL. I crave your indulgence for a few moments. Mr. Chairman, to briefly examine the question from another point of view, from the point of view of the interests of the Province of Manitoba and of the North-West Territories, as I understand them, and I will confine myself to the discussion of some objections that have been raised by the last speaker against the details of the policy of the Government—say details, because the principle of the measure has received the most unequivocal assent of all parties, first of the Legislature of Manitoba and then of a mass meeting of the electors of Winnipeg. I will, with the leave of the Committee, read first, the resolution passed in the House of Assembly on the 22nd December:

"Whereas it appears, from a telegram dated 18th December, 1880, addressed by the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, Premier of the Government of Canada, to Thos. Scott, M. P. for Selkirk:

"That the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will have power to build branch lines anywhere; and whereas it is further intended, as appears from thepublication of the terms on which the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate thepublication of the terms on which the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate have agreed to construct, equip, maintain and operate the said Canadian Pacific Railway, to grant the said Company the exclusive right of building and operating branch lines of railway to the International boundary between Canada and the United States; and whereas, it appears further that the said Company have the right of accepting only such alternate sections of land as they may think proper, and it is deemed that the powers intended to be granted to the Company would be detrimental to the best interests of the Province of Manitoba; and while this House is of the opinion that the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be entrusted to a private Company, it views with alarm some of the terms of agreement between the Government and the Syndicate; therefore, be it resolved:

"That for the present the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate should have given to them power to build only the main line of the Canadian have given to them power to build only the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that any other line or branch line shall be built by the Syndicate or other company only after their obtaining power from time to time from the Parliament of Canada to build such line or branch. and that the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway shall not be allowed to approach at any point within fifteen miles of the international boundary line, and that Parliament should not abandon its right of authorizing the construction of railways in any direction by other com-

That the Syndicate shall not have the option of selecting and choosing their own lands, but shall be compelled to take alternate sections or townships for their land grant in aid of the construction of the railway, irrespective of the quality of the same."

Here now is the series of resolutions adopted at the meeting of the 27th December last, held at Winnipeg:

"Whereas an agreement has been entered into by the Government and certain capitalists to build the Canadian Pacific Railway upon certain terms and conditions which have been submitted to Parliament for ratification, and, whereas the people of Manitoba and the North-West are rauncauon, and, whereas the people of manitons and the North-West are deeply interested in this subject and the stipulations entered into, the citizens of Winnipeg, therefore, in mass meeting assembled, do endorse the action of the Dominion Government by entering into a contract with private parties for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and while we believe that it is to the interest of this country and the Dominion to establish railway connections with Ontario and other eastern Provinces through Canadian territory at the earliest possible time, yet we risw with appearaging the powers proposed to be vested in the Counany view with apprehension the powers proposed to be vested in the Company as to the location of branch lines and their power of running their lines to any point on the international boundary, and that it is the opinion of this meeting that no branch line should be run nearer the boundary line than fifteen miles until the eastern section is completed.

"That the unlimited power proposed to be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway to build branch lines of railway from the main line to any point in the Dominion, without the consent or control of Parliament or the Executive, affords an unfair and unjust advantage over other companies to build panies, and will tend to prevent the formation of new companies to build lines connecting with the Canadian Pacific Railway or any portion of the North-West Territories, and will thereby paralyze private enterprise and prove disastrous to the best interests of the country.

"That in the opinion of this meeting a tariff of railway rates cannot be efficiently regulated without the Government retaining the power to grant charters eastward, giving independent outlets to competing lines, and that the Parliament of Canada should not by any agreement with a private company divest itself of its sovereign right to authorise the construction of any railway lines when and where it may consider the interests or necessities of the country require or will be served by them."

There are, of course, many points very incorrectly stated in these resolutions, but I will assume that the objections intended are the following, namely: 1st. The Company should not be vested with the exclusive powers of running branch lines from the trunk to any point on the International boundary; 2nd. The Company should be submitted to the legal interference of Parliament or of the Privy Council in the making of its freight rates so as to protect the farmer and the importer against the monopoly established by the Act; and 3rd. The Company should not have the option of selecting its own lands, but should take them in alternate sections irrespective of the quality of the same. With regard to the question of the monopoly of the construction of branch lines from the main branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, let us examine the two sections of the contract touching this point:

"The Company shall have the right, from time to time, to lay out, construct, equip, maintain and work branch lines of railway from any point or points along their main line of railway, to any point or points within the territory of the Dominion. Provided always that before commencing any branch they shall first deposit a map and plan of such branch in the Department of Railways. And the Government shall grant to the Company the lands required for the road bed of such branches, and for the stations, station grounds, buildings, workshops, yards and other appurtenances requisite for the efficient construction and working of such branches in so far as such lands are vested in the Government. Government.

"For twenty years from the date hereof, no line of railway shall be authorized by the Dominion Parliament to be constructed south of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from any point at or near the Canadian Pacific Railway except such line as shall run south-west, or to the westward of south-west, nor to within fifteen miles of latitude 49. And in the establishment of any new Province in the North-West Territ-ries, provision shall be made for continuing such prohibition after such establishment until the expiration of the said period."

Without speaking of the constitutional issues raised by this last section with regard to Manitoba, I may ask, now, what is the evident intention and the true reason of section 15? Just to prevent the construction of railway lines that would take the freight away from the Canadian Pacific Railway to transfer it to the American lines across the frontier. I can see no other motive. The first and the main object of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway is to afford a Canadian outlet to Canadian freight on Canadian territory; in the second place, such is the physical position of the country, that a line of railway built as is contemplated, shall take, not only the carrying trade of the Canadian territory, but also that of the wheat-growing States to the south of the boundary. It is of the most vital interest-and every one who knows will admit it—to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railways to make their road system a feeder to the Canadian Pacific. And it is held that their own chance to escape the crushing combination of the railway lines east of St. Paul and Chicago—which are fast extending branches north-westward into Dakota—is to gradually divert down to Winnipeg the traffic of the northern and fertile regions of Minnesota, Dakota and Montana. The opportunity afforded by this contract to the keen railway gentlemen from St. Paul has not been lost. In one glance they have taken the whole situation, and in this measure they feel an interest at least equal to ours. Connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway system, their line completes the most powerful and independent rival to the seaboard from the Rocky Mountains that can be met by the railway king monopolists of the United States. This measure converts into a most faithful and interested ally that St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company who up to this day have been building up their fortunes at the expense of Canadian freight and Canadian immigrants. And so it is that these branch lines that are either intended or in construction towards our frontier, instead of containing any longer the menace of a danger to our carrying trade, will and shall become as many important tributaries to the Caradian Railway system. The St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company, like any other company, are guided by no sentimentality in their operations. Business is their instinct, money their object. Therefore, I hold that the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway will give their own system of railway in the north western States of Minnesota and Dakota a degree of lasting prosperity that otherwise it would have been impossible for them to expect or even dream of. In order to form an idea of the importance of the trade that the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba system of railway will pour into the Canadian Pacific Railway channel, we have only to note the fact that the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway has two trunk lines, one of which is running through the best portion of northern and western Minnesota for 217 miles, to Brackenridge on the Red River, where it connects with the steamboats of the Winnipeg and Western Transport Company; thence northerly on the east side of Red River, down the valley 201 miles to St. Vincent on the Canadian boundary line. The other line commences also at St. Paul and runs north-westerly to Barnesville, a distance of 224 miles, where it connects with the first named line. The land grant of the company is 3,000,000 acres, and extends in a belt some 225 miles long by 30 miles wide (15 miles on each side of the line) across the central portion of the State to its western boundary on the Red River, thence north over 200 miles, to the Canadian boundary. The area of Minnesota is 45,000,000 acres, of which 3,500,000 only are under cultivation. The State produces about one-tenth of the entire crop of the United States. In 1878 the crop of oats amounted to over 16,000,000 bushels, corn to 13,000,000 bushels. The population of the State was 775,000 in 1879. Another consideration with reference to the objection of the possibility of the Canadian Pacific Railway becoming only the modest branch and feeder of the St. Paul line, and that is the fact of the diversity of the nationalities of the Syndicate and the small interest owned by the St. Paul gentlemen in proportion to the share of their co-associates. How can it be said that the minority of interest will absorb or could be allowed, in so vast an undertaking, to absorb the majority, when so many millions of money and property are at stake? The supposition is simply untenable. We have seen in what profitable direction lies the private interest of the St. Paul associates in this undertaking, and their interest becomes more intensified as it is united with that of the majority of the whole Syndicate. It has been suggested that the construction of that part of the Canadian Pacific Railway main line, between Nipissing and Thunder Bay, should be postponed, and the Sault Ste. Marie mixed land and water route be adopted and built in the meantime. No, Sir, a proposition so dangerous and so anti-patriotic cannot be entertained. By doing so, you would at once invite the construction of an air-line from Duluth to the Sault, or St. Paul to the Sault, a distance of about 450 miles, and with what consequences to your branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Thunder Bay and Selkirk? Although shorter by 200 miles than the all-rail route, the Canadian mixed rail and water route from Selkirk to Nipissing, vid Fort William, Lake Superior and Sault Ste. Marie could not, even in summer time, compete with advantage with the Sault Ste. Marie and Duluth route, on account of the disadvantage of all sorts, the risks and the uncertainty of lake navigation. Therefore, if you want to ruin forever our Canadian Pacific Eastern Division, build the Sault Ste. Marie route, Therefore, and, instead of considering a bill for the extension

Mr. ROYAL.

Sault Stc. Marie system would, besides, give a most fatal blow to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway system, whose trunks and branches are directed north and north-west, without any connection with the lines running east or south of St. Paul. The Northern Pacific or some other powerful combination would soon absorb that portion of the trans-continental traffic, and become de facto to all intents and purposes of transport a Canadian Pacific Railway. From the above considerations, which in my mind flow from the nature of things, it is safe to conclude that, in justice for the Syndicate, whose primary interest we have seen is to draw from the States of Minnesota, Dakota and Montana all the freight they possibly can to their line, the Company should be vested with the exclusive power to connect with other lines on the international boundary; and that far from discovering in this section any danger for the interest of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. it is one of the best possible guarantees of the prosperity and success of the great national enterprise. Before this contract Canadian interests had at St. Paul a powerful hostile influence to guard against in all her carrying arrangements; by virtue of the contract, that influence is converted into a most beneficial and promising union of interests. Annexation has been, not their way, but our way. The second objection raised in Manitoba against the Government measure now submitted to the Committee is the so-called monopoly given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to regulate their freight rates. What does say the 20th section of the Bill in this respect:

"The limit to the reduction of tolls by the Parliament of Canada. provided for by the eleventh sub-section of the 17th section of the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, respecting tolls, is hereby extended, so that such reduction may be to such an extent that such tolls when reduced shall not produce less than ten per cent. per annum profit on the capital actually expended in the construction of the railway instead of not less than fifteen per cent. per annum profit as provided by the said sub-section; and so also that such reduction shall not be made unless the net income of the Company, ascertained as described in said sub-section, shall have exceeded ten per cent. per annum instead of fifteen per cent. per annum as provided by the said sub-section. And the exercise by the Governor in Council of the power of reducing the tolls of the Company as provided by the tenth sub-section of said section seventeen is hereby limited to the same extent with relation to the profit of the Company, and to its net revenue, as that to which the power of Parliament to reduce tolls is limited by said sub-section eleven as hereby amended."

A great deal has been said of the very high freight rates west and north-west of St. Paul; nothing too much has been said. Grave complaints have been made against the American land companies who were holding back a large proportion of the Canadian immigration; not a word too much has been said. It is, therefore, only too natural that the public sentiment of Manitoba was shocked at the news that the very people of St. Paul, the authors of such freight rates, and of such treatment to Canadian immigrants, were to have a large influence in the building and operating of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Fifty million acres of the best lands were to be their lands; the construction of the branch lines south was to be exclusively in their power; the freight rates were to be fixed by them; the word capitulation has been used. Yes, at first sight it was thought in Manitoba, that the people of the territories of the North-West had been—in a moment of political vertige—handed over to the Americans. Now that the question has been seriously and anxiously gone into and discussed in all its bearings, what is the truth? I have tried to establish that, in virtue of the new and enormous interest created by this contract, the St. Paul, Minnesota and Manitoba Railway system would become a ruin, a total closs, a dead enterprise if it was not to be gradually operated as an immense feeder to the Canadian Pacific Railway system. The interest of the Syndicate appears to me also one of the best guarantees that the Canadian producer or importer of the boundaries of Manitoba, you had better introduce a will be protected against the imposition of any extravagant measure to allow the Province and the North-West Terrifreight rates. The rule "charging all an article will bear, tories to annex themselves to Minnesota and Dakota. The land at the same time stimulating its production," is no doubt the principle followed by railway monopolists; and would be no doubt the principle also adopted by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, if unchecked by law, or by Parliament, or their interest. But Sir, we have not to deal here with a gigantic system of railways already in operation, traversing countries teeming with millions of people, producing millions of tons of agricultural freight, carrying in one year 180 million bushels of wheat. and terminating just where the desert commences. Therefore, the circumstances must alter and do alter the case. The Canadian Pacific Railway will be, during a number of years, a purely colonization railway, and I dare say that some years will elapse before the through traffic with the seaboard acquires any great proportions. The local market in Manitoba will consume a large share of the farmers produce, especially so, if the immigration is what it is believed it will be, and what the best interest of the Company requires it should be. You are afraid of the prospective tariffs of freight; but suppose for a moment that the Company would succeed in establishing rates that would be immigration? Where is the immigrant from England, from France, from Germany that would consent to travel thousands of miles, to become what? The serf-the slave -the producing machine of the Canadian Pacific Railway corporation. In giving such an enormous land grant to the Syndicate, we have made them owners of the soil and created thereby the surest safeguard against any kind of excessive rates. The fact is that an opposition tariff would ruin their interest as land owners, would paralyze trade, and most successfully destroy all their legitimate hopes of profit. In arranging their rates, the progenitors of the Canadian Pacific Railway stand in a position and with interests wholly different from the position and interests of the large railway monopolists of whom we have heard so much. They will have to combine their interests as owners of the soil will, their interests as owners of the railway, and it is only reasonable to expect that these men -the first business men of the age-will strike rates that will serve and develop both classes of these interests. What have been the cause of the deep dissatisfaction and troubles we have witnessed in the war of freights on the other side of the frontier? What has given rise to the powerful association of the Grangers? Why, nothing else—no other cause but the conflict of interest between the railroad owners on the one side, and the farmers, the soil owners, on the other side. In no instance have hon, gentlemen cited one single railway corporation in the United States that had large tracts of land to colonize, who has imposed oppressive freight rates. I say that the example of the railway monopolists applies only to parallel cases; we have not to deal with freight rates between St. Paul, Chicago and New York, but between Battleford and Montreal and Halifax. From the nature of things, from the paramount interest (the guiding star of all corporations) of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I infer that the people of Canada have no cause, either present or remote, to fear the imposition of excessive and production-destructive freight rates. Suppose, however, that notwithstanding the most judicious combination of interests created by this Government measure, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company attempt to go beyond all reason and wisdom and inaugurate an immoderate tariff of charges, where would be the remedy? The Company is, we are told, to be organized with a capital of $25,000,000, by the first of May next, when $1,000,000 is to be deposited and notice of the transfer of the contract to the Company published in the Canada Gazette. They will at once take possession of 85 miles of railway in operation, and the Pembina, or rather the Emerson and Selkirk Branch; in one year from now it is expected that 300 miles at least, west of Winnipeg, will be in operation; and in 1884 it is assumed that 800 or 900 miles of the prairie section together with the Lake Superior section, will be completed; or, in other words, the Company will then have some 1,260 or 1,300 miles of the line in full operation. By the addition of the 418 miles of the St. Paul, Minnesota and Manitoba Railway to the above, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will find themselves in possession of a system of railway that will be far in advance of the requirements of the people and of the trade of that immense country. By that time a tariff of charges will have been fixed; but is the Company to be left alone in fixing such rates? Have they nobody to consult but themselves? No other interest to watch but their own? No other law to obey but their own avidity? However convinced the Government may have been that the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would be the best check against any desire to overcharge, yet we find that part of the contract is surrounded with all sorts of precautions. First, the Company cannot collect one cent of freight without the rates being approved by the Governor in Council; and it is fair to assume that pany would succeed in establishing rates that would be the law gives the Privy Council power to determine the exorbitant. What would be the immediate result upon the duration and the principle of the tariff of charges to be levied. At least, such appears to be the natural interpreta-tion of the Act. In addition to that control, which applies more particularly to the sections of the line as they are operated, the 20th clause of the proposed Bill now under consideration amends the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, (Sect. 17, sub-sect. 11) and reduces from 15 to 10 per cent. per annum forfeit on the capital actually expended in the construction of the railway, the limit beyond which no increase in the freight-rate shall take place without the generate of the Grant rate shall take place without the consent of the Government. Some will say that the words-"capital actually expended" mean whatever sum of money expended in the construction, whether fifty or one hundred millions, and whether it is out of the public subsidy or not. But the opposite view is just as rational if not more so, for how can you reasonably pretend that the sum of money subscribed by the people shall regulate the proportion in which the railway so subscribed shall impose their freight rates upon the citizens. It would sound like paying an interest on one's own gift of money. And I concur in the opinion already expressed, that these words mean the capital expended by the Company in the construction, over and above the public subsidy. The Central Pacific Railway Company are not, therefore, the only judges of what is to be a moderate tariff of freight rates; every one of these steps will be watched by the Government, and the absolute control of the Privy Council is only limited by what appears to me to be equity and justice. But the word monopoly has been pronounced; that word which is always sure, when uttered by elequent lips, in the presence of a meeting of free men, to agitate and to move public opinion. Where is that monopoly to be found in the creation of a corporation whose interest in the soil, in the industry, in the commerce is so deeply concerned, whose success is so intensely and so variously identified with the prosperity of the nation itself? Because an individual is liable to be taxed for school and municipal purposes, you call it a monopoly when you exempt a public institution from such taxation; and I say you are wrong. Railways are so many public institutions in our age; and the best proof that they are such is to be found in the way the best proof that they are such is to be found in the way they are treated by the laws and the government of every country in the world. Everywhere you find railways encouraged by public aid and by exemptions from public charges; the monopoly commences and is possible only when the laws do not provide any check against their avidity. We have such a law; it is the one at present under discussion. Now, Sir, the Canadian Pacific Railway system augmented with the powerful aid of the St. Paul, Minnesota and Manitoba Railway across the American boundary of the North-West, is destined at no distant day to compete with the five or six gigantic trans-continental railway systems of the United States in carrying the immense farm produce of the great American plateau to the seabord. Well, how can such a competition be made possible and successful? Is it not by a lowering of freight rates below those of the rival lines? Therefore, the canadian farmer of the North-West,-far from being crushed and annihilated by the so-called monopoly of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, shall get the benefit of a lower rate of freight than that of his neighbor in Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa. It has been stated, and no doubt with a great deal of sincerity, that this measure is the death blow to private railway enterprise in the North-West territories; that the Canadian Pacific Reilway. Company begins to the contract the Canadian Pacific Reilway. Railway Company having power to build branches in every direction will cover that vast region with a gigantic net of railways, and so on. Where is the evil? Who can complain of too much railway construction in a new and rich country? How can private railway enterprise be more beneficial to my country than that of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company? We all know that no public aid, or exemption, or subsidy is given for the construction of the branch lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway; then I ask, where is the monopoly? This Parliament last year chartered three semi-Pacific lines of railway, running from the Red River to the Rocky Mountains; two more are petitioned for at present, so that if these are granted, we may expect to see the Great Lone Land traversed from east to west and north-westward by no less than six railroads, varying in length from 800 to 1,200 miles and more, not to to say anything of the Navigation Companies on the Saskatchewan, the Assinniboine and the Red River. These railway lines, when constructed, will become naturally so many branches and so many feeders of the Grand Trunk of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and they will consequently and to a large extent, influence the tariff of rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, not only their carrying - trade between terminal points, but also upon the carrying-trade to the Atlantic or to the Pacific seaboard of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Two other railway charters have been granted last year by this Parliament besides those I have just mentioned—I mean the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway and Steamship Company, and Nelson Valley Railway and Transport Company. I had the honor a few days ago to call the attention of the House to the important part that the navigation of the Hudson Bay was, in the minds of many, called at a future day to play in the Canadian carrying system. Well, I find in these two charters a new and a most effective check against any attempt at oppressive through freight rates by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The possibility of an amalgamation between some of the five private lines running from the Red River to the Rocky Mountains and the Peace River and a line of railway terminating 350 miles north of Winnipeg at Port Nelson, on the Hudson's Bay, will be of itself a sufficient warning to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company against any abuse of their se-called monopoly. Again I demand where is the monopoly. This idea of the more than probable future importance of the transatlantic communication by the Hudson's Bay is fast, gaining ground. communication by the Hudson's Bay is fast gaining ground in public opinion; and in connection with this, permit me to read what the London Free Press said only a few weeks ago upon the same subject:

"Railway development in the North-West is not to be confined to the Pacific enterprise though that may be said to engross attention for the present. Another scheme is rapidly maturing which promises to be almost of equal importance as affecting the future of that part of the country. We refer to what is known as the Nelson Valley or Hudson's Bay railway route, which has in recent years been frequently discussed in the Free Press columns. So long as the great territory now opened up remained in the possession of the fur companies, the idea of its arctic character and inaccessibility was industriously circulated in every way.

True, York Factory was annually visited by vessels in the service of these corporations, but the difficulties and dangers of navigation in these latitudes were magnified to such an extent as to forbid any but the most adventurous from making the trial. Since, however, the North-West promises to become the great bread producing region of the world, and schemes of transportation have arisen to national dimensions in importance, the Hudson's Bay route has been examined with greater care, and inquiries have revealed that it is not only feasible, but present features of attractiveness but little dreamt of before. Prof. Bell, of the Geological Survey, has just shown by practical experiment that Hudson Bay Straits are open for navigation, not for two or three months only, as was formerly stated and believed, but during five and a half months in the year, or nearly as long as the St. Lawrence. Last spring he embarkeed in a sailing vessel at York Factory for England, and his arrival in London is just anheunced by cable. The vessel was three weeks windbound in the Straits, during which time act a single iceberg was visible. As a result of this information, surveyors in connection with the Hudson's Bay and Winnipeg Railway Company are to start out at once to survey the proposed line along Nelson Valley, from Winnipeg Lake to Churchill, to connect with ocean navigation there, and thus open up the shortest route between the old and the new world. The distance is about 350 miles. Another section of the road is to connect the southern terminus near Norway House with the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway at the crossing of the Saskatchewan, about 150 miles distant. The entire length of the road will be 500 miles. Last summer an exploratory survey was made, and found to be satisfactory in every way. But few engineering difficulties were found, and the line can be laid without any great outlay. Among the capitalists interested in the project are Hon. Thomas Ryan, chairman of the provisional board of directors; Hon. John

Let us admit for a moment the hypothesis of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, "charging all an article will bear;" let us suppose that the two St. Paul gentlemen of the Syndicate will acquire a complete control over the six or eight other members of the Company, and that the attempt is made to render the whole Canadian North-West tributary to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway; let us suppose that in this combination, the St. Paul gentlemen conclude an alliance offensive and defensive with the Northern Pacific, so as to build up, complete and operate the Sault Ste. Marie route, - do you know how Winnipeg can Just by going north, to the Hudson's Bay, and—with the sanction of this Parliament—by organizing a syndicate that will combine the North-West system of railways with an outlet 85 miles nearer to Liverpool than is the harbor of New York. Under such a combination, Winnipeg, from its geographical resistion would become the great distributing centre for position, would become the great distributing centre for the imports and the exports, and attain a degree of grandeur and prosperity only equal to that of the largest cities of Canada. The Hudson's Bay system of railways would afford the cheapest route of all other lines now struggling to attain the monopoly of the carrying trade between the two hemispheres. And as wheat could be taid down at Liverpool via Winnipeg and Port Nelson, at less cost than by any other route, this difference in the rate of freightsas between this and any other line-would just add that amount to the value of the product of the North-West, save the risks of tedious transportation across half of the continent. Indeed, Sir, such would be the revolution in the carrying trade, that shipments of grain and goods could be made from Winnipeg to Halifax and New York, at lower rates, viá Hudson's Bay, than by any other route. The tide of commerce from the North Western States and the Canadian North-West Territories, heretofore setting south, would hence be in a northerly direction. I now come to the third objection, and it is this: the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should not be permitted to select the best lands; they should take them in alternate sections irrespective of quality; and objection is taken to the 11th section of the contract, which is as follows:—

"The grant of land hereby agreed to be made to the Company, shall be so made in alternate sections of 640 acres each, extending back 24 miles deep, an each side of the railway, from Winnipeg to Jasper House, in so far as much lands shall be wested in the Government, the Company in so far as such tands shall be wested in the Government, the Company receiving the sections bearing uneren numbers. But should any of such sections condist in a material degree of land not fairly fit for settlement, the Company shall not be obliged to receive them as part of such grant, and the deficiency thereby caused and any further deficiency which many arise from the insufficient quantity of land along the said portion of the railway, to complete the said 25,000,000 acres, or from the prevenence of lakes and water stretches in the sections granted (which lakes and water stretches shall not be computed in the acreage of such lakes and water stretches and mater nortions to be selected by the learns and water stretches shall not be computed in the acreage of such sections), shall be made up from other portions to be selected by the Company in the tract known as the fertile belt, that is to say the land lying between parallels 49 and 57 degrees of north latitude or elsewhere at the option of the Company by the grant therein of similar alternate sections extending back 24 miles deep on each side of any branch line or lines of railway to be located by the Company, and to be shown on a map or plan thereof deposited with the Minister of Railways; or of any company, the conditions hereinbefore stated as to lands not fairly fit for settlement to be applicable to such additional grants. And the Company may, with the consent of the Government, select in the North-West Territories any tract or tracts of land not taken up as a means of supplying or partially supplying such deficiency. But such grants shall be made only from lands remaining vested in the Government."

I must say in all candour that I fail to see any unreasonable or objectionable features in this disposition; in fact, I give it my most hearty approval. Every gentleman speaking upon this question has given a cash value to the 25,000,000 acres of land grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway-Company, some in fanciful prices, others being more moderate. I am not going to dispute any of these lengthy and dry calculations, but I will say that, in making this contract the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald has sold in one day 25,000,000 acres of land for $25,000,000 cash. I will say more, for I contend that in selling for cash 25,000,000 acres of land for $25,000,000, the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald has, in the same stroke of genius and luck, managed the disposition of 25,000,000 acres more and insured their colonization. The effect of the grant of 640 acres, by alternate sections, 24 miles deep on each side of the railway, is that, for every section sold and settled by the Company, the Government will be able to sell and settle the next section at the same price and at the same time. The system of immigration and the system of the sale of lands by the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, will have to be uniform and equally active and energetic. This is no unimportant feature in this contract. Besides, it relieves Canada forever of the vacillating and rainous policy of the red tape and incapacity, and sometimes the corruption of some of the officers of the Department of the Interior in their management of the public lands. No doubt the admirable system adopted for the sale of their lands by the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway will be extended to the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a system under which sales have been effected for the first 18 months of the company, ending 1st July, 1880, to the amount of $1,481,069.65, with cash receipts of $596,084.57, and a total of 313,902 acres. The land grant to the company is 3,000,000 acres. An enormous permanent saving will thus be effected in our public service, and a system will be adopted that will give, at last, that security and that satisfaction to the immigrant which have been so utterly wanting up to this day. It is, therefore, of the utmost importance that the 25,000,000 acres of the land grant should be composed of land fairly fit for settlement; for, under the alternate system, it is the only way in which Canada will be enabled to derive the benefit of the activity and energy of the Company in the rapid settlement of the public lands. one, in considering this question, must lose sight of the material fact that wherever the Company goes to select its lands the Dominion Government follow, and that whatever enormous gain is directly attained by Canada which it lownership of the whole line becoming the absolute property would be impossible to secure under any other system. In recently published speech of Mr. Colby, a prominent official of the Wisconsin Railroad, suggestive remarks were made, which, being appropriate to this argument, I shall take the liberty to read. Mr. Colby said:

"In 1852 the sale of lands by the General Government did not bring "In 1852 the sale of lands by the General Government did not bring money enough into the treasury to pay the expenses of the Land Department at Washington, and it became a serious question whether it would not be expedient for the United States to concede to each State the lands within its borders. It was thought best, however, first to try the experiment of giving land grants to capitalists to induce them to build railways into the unpopulated country, and in advance of civilization and business.

They made a grant first to the Illinois Central. In 1853 the first earth was turned in the construction of that road, and before the vacuations of the construction of the constructio the first earth was turned in the construction of the tong, and beyond gear closed the General Government sold 2,800,000 acres of land, and in the State as a land owner. fifteen years retired from the State as a land owner. Since the time that grant was made, the United States Government has patented to railway companies about 41,000,000 acres of land, and as a result has been able to sell other lands to such an extent that it has received into the treasury from this source alone $250,000,000, all of which, after deducting the mere expenses of the Land Department, is clear profit."

Instead of finding fault with the contract for the 11th section, I submit that its provisions are, on the contrary, most judicious and most conducive to the public interest. The Government has effected a cash sale of 25,000,000 acres of land, has absolutely secured the progressive sale of 25,000,000 more, and has thus effectually insured the rapid colonization of 50,000,000 acres of the public domain, upon which not a living soul may be found at present except the roaming and half-starving Indian. I have, now, gone over the main objections raised to the Government project in Manitoba, more especially I have tried to meet them fairly and squarely, and I have based my argument upon an intimate knowledge of facts and things in the North-West, acquired during a residence and a period of most active public life of ten years. These same facts and considerations have gradually, most naturally, come up to the surface of public opinion in Manitoba, when the agitation adroitly created and stimulated by some persons has given way to a second and more sober thought. The whole policy of the Government has been endorsed since, in all its principles and details, by public meetings and the citizens, first at Selkirk, in Lisgar, then at Winnipeg in Selkirk, and at Emerson in Provencher. Yes, Sir, Manitoba and the Canadian North-West give their hearty and most cordial support to the scheme now under consideration. because it is the crowning portion of the splendid edifice of Canadian institutions. The tidings of the truly national and commercial policy of the Government have been gladly received all over the immense tract of country which it is our mission to redeem to christianity and civilization, and Sir, believe me when I, who am from the North-West, and speaking here as a representative of the North-West,-believe me when I say that this policy of the Government shall necessarily give an immense stimulus to the colonization and development of Manitoba, and of the whole vast territory west to the Rocky Mountains. Population will pour along its lines; millions of acres of the finest wheat lands in the world will be brought under cultivation; great cities and towns will spring up along its trunk and lateral lines, and all the miracles of the North-Western growth will be repeated in the transformation within a few years—of the now nearly solitary plains of the Great Lone Land into a new and populous empire, teeming with the products of agricultural industry, and pouring its golden streams of traffic through all the channels, not only of Canadian, but of international and intercontinental commerce.

Mr. ROGERS. After the very exhaustive arguments of hon, members on both sides of the House, it may be difficult to advance much that is new. But the scheme now before price and terms the Company put upon its lands the us for the construction of a portion of the Pacific Railway Dominion Government will do the same. Thus an by a Syndicate and the balance by the Government, the of the Company, involves not only such a large amount of money, but also the progressive development and future political standing of Canada, that I would hardly do my duty to my constituents or myself by giving a silent vote in condemnation of what I conceive to be a most unfortunate and ill-advised scheme. Had I occupied a seat in this House in 1871, when the resolutions was passed for the admission of British Columbia, and making it imperative to reach the Pacific coast within a limited period at any cost, I believe I should have opposed it, as I think a very large majority of this House would now do if they had the opportunity, because it appears to me that that provision has been the basis of much subsequent trouble. In the effort to accomplish so great and costly a work in advance of popular opinion, and before it could be justified by population, or known resources, both great political parties have met with embarrassments. Few people, looking to the future consolidation and permanency of this Dominion, are wanting in the hope of eventually securing a railway to the Pacific Ocean. But as every branch of the business of life and the dreams of future greatness and wealth can only be properly realized in their full fruition by prudence, economy and foresight, the history of all successful countries, as well as the individuals comprising them, teaches the danger of rashness and speculative recklessness in aiming at great achievements. How often do we see farmers and business men bringing ruin on themselves and their families by mortgaging their property for a fine house or other luxury which they might have obtained and enjoyed by gradual thrift and economical management. The Ministers and their supporters who glorify themselves so persistently now for what they have already done in inaugurating so hastily these proposed large expenditures, and creating such enormous liabilities involving taxation and disaster, are not gaining for themselves laurels, or securing for themselves the gratitude of the people whose servants they are. They may tell us a railway from ocean to ocean at any cost is a work of immediate necessity involved in the terms of Confederation, that it will bind together still more closely Canadian interests, and solidify the whole Dominion. I beg to dissent from any such view—I believe the opposite. The development of the good lands in the North-West, and the gradual extension of a railway therein so fast as required for the benefit of settlers, and an ultimate extension of the line to the Pacific when the country becomes able to provide for it, would be the wisest, safest and statesman-like course to pursue. At the time of Confederation the Maritime Provinces were deluded with assurances of leading public men that the taxes would not be increased beyond 15 per cent. on imports, and that less than that was practicable. New Brunswick has already been subject to the payment of a large annual sum as the result of a breach of faith in raising duties on imports beyond the 15 per cent. at the time of Confederation to the present high tariff. The natural channels of trade have been obstructed, and the business of the Province more or less retarded. By the conditions of the contract which the House is asked to accept, the debt of the Dominion will be very largely increased. As New Brunswick contributed about one eleventh part of the revenue, her portion of the debt may be fairly set down at five millions of dollars. Allowing for an increase of population since last census, we will have 50,000 families, with a debt of $100 to each family. Interest at 5 per cent. will be $5 a year tax - or by the per head, $16.66, or 83 cents per year, and this is without providing any sinking fund for the extinction of the debt. This is three cents more than we receive per head from the General Government, This sum, in addition to our local taxes will, I fear, do but little to retard the present exodus of a part of the most desirable portion of our population from the country to the improvement in foreign trade, and the benefits claimed to neighboring Republic. In addition to this large money have been brought about by the National Policy, not Mr. Rogers.

grant of $25,000,000, and 706 miles of road completed, costing about $35,000,000, we are asked to hand over to this Syndicate 25,000,000 acres of selected lands, which are now valued by hon, members opposite at one dollar per acre. The hon. Minister of Railways has failed to take the House into his confidence and tell us why in his estimation the value of these lands has depreciated so much since the Session of 1876. At that time by resolution brought down by himself, and voted for by hon. members opposite, they set apart 100,000,000 acres of land for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and vested the power of sale in commissions specially appointed for that purpose. The hon, the Minister of Railways said at that time, only two years ago :-

"Exception may be taken to the minimum price of $2 an acre, but who is there who will not say, looking to the character of lands in the North-West, that the settler will not prefer to pay $2 an acre for land within 20 miles of a railway that will bring his produce to market than have as a free gift land without railway facilities."

They go on further to say that it is their opinion the selection of the Burrard Inlet is premature. They soon changed their minds in that particular, and adopted that route. I hope they will change their minds if this resolution is carried as quickly and abandon the contract. I have still higher authority. In referring to the sale of these lands two years ago, the right hon. the leader of the Government said:

Government said:

"We are going into the English market; we will tell England: Here, we are going to build a great railway across this continent. It is going to pass through one of the finest countries the sun shines on, and will be the happy home of millions of descendants of Englishmen. Every immigrant that settles there will be an additional strength to England. We offer you a great road, the shortest to be found in the world for your trade, across the continent to China and Japan and all the North Pacific, and tesides that, we offer you the credit of Canada, the consols of Canada. It will be a special and favored stock, and when put into the English market, the capitalists of England will find in all a profitable investment. Canada says: We pledge you our faith for all the money, besides 100,000,000 acres of land, worth $2 an acre, and we pledge you, besides, the road itself. Never was stronger security given. The consols of England are not stronger, or based on a stronger condition than will be the amount that will be required to build that road. We will allow the British Government to choose one Commissioner, we will choose another Commissioner, and those two men shall hold a quasi-judicial position, somewhat like the Auditor-General in England, and the Auditor-General, free from all political exigencies, from the chance of all political change. They shall be charged to faithfully and honestly administer that enormous estate of 100,000,000 acres, to invest it in Dominion securities, not to sell any land under $1$ an acre, except with the joint consent of the two Governments, the Government guaranteeing and the Government horrowing, and hesides all that to to invest it in Dominion securities, not to sell any land under $1$ an acre, except with the joint consent of the two Governments, the Government guaranteeing and the Government borrowing, and, besides all that, to administer the operation of the railway itself. I have faith in the future of the railway. On the extreme east and the extreme west we have a difficult and rugged country, but the main body of that railway passes through a magnificent country, which will be the happy abode of millions. Just consider what a hand, if I may use a simile from the gaming-table, a Minister would be about the Fagland and are rest entire in the saming-table, a consider what a beautiful way to the Fagland and are rest entire in the saming-table, a second and several country in the Just consider what a hand, if I may use a simile from the gaming-table, a Minister would hold, who should go to England and say, not only is the credit of Canada pledged for this road, but 100,00.000 acres of land are set aside for it. not to speak of this great railway itself and all its future earnings, which is to be built by Canada and kept free of incumbrances. * "We can judge of the value of those lands by the average value of the lands in the United States. More good land will be pledged to build the Canadian Pacific Railway than was given to build the Northern, or the Union Pacific, by far. On the one, the average value was $6.50, and, on the other, $4.50, an acre, and those United States lands are selling now at $20, $30, and $40 in favorite places. We are very moderate in our calculations, then, in estimating $2 as the average for the 100,000,000 acres we propose to give, and which will yield $200,000,000 at least."

Section 7 of the resolutions adopted 12th May, 18;9, runs as follows:

"That said Commissioners be authorized to sell from time to time, any portion of such lands, at a price to be fixed by the Governor in Council on their recommendation, at a rate not less than two dollars per acre, and that they be required to invest the proceeds of such sales in Canadian Government securities, to be held exclusively for the purpose of defraying the cost of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway."

By this resolution hon members declare that 100,000,000 acres of land in the North-West are worth, at the lowest limit, two dollars per acre. Now, two years later, with the 100,000,000, but 25,000,000 acres selected from this 100,000,000 are only worth one dollar per acro. The principal justification for giving such a large sum of money and grant of land is that the conditions are better than those offered by the hon, member for Lambton when he was in power. Well, Sir, that is a strange argument for the hon. gentlemen opposite, for they were continually telling the country that the route of the road was not only wrong, (since adopted by themselves) but that any plan of his for building the road was certain ruin to the country. But, Sir, the hon, gentleman never proposed But, Sir, gentleman to give any company absolute control and to erect a land and rail way monopoly in the North-West. By the Act of 1874 the Government retained control of two-thirds of the lands which were offered for one dollar per acre, and the proceeds to go to the company constructing the road. The Government also retained control over any company building the road by the 10th section which read:

"In every contract for the construction of the said railway or any section or sub-section thereof, the Government of Canada shall reserve the right to purchase under the authority of Parliament, the said railway or such section or sub-section thereof on payment of a sum equal to the actual cost of the said railway, section or sub-section and ten per cent in addition thereto; the subsidies in land and money granted or paid by the Government for the construction of the said railway being first returned or deducted from the amount to be paid, the lands being sold being valued at the full amount the contractors may have received from the sale of such as may have been sold."

By this section the Government could at any time, if Parliament thought an injustice was being inflicted upon the people of the North-West, assume control of the road at a small cost beyond the subsidies. By the present scheme the Syndicate will have absolute control of all subsidies, and if at any future time, or commercial reasons, or otherwise, it is desirable that the Government should become possessors of the road, they would have to treat with the Company as with a foreign nation, having by this Act parted with all subsidies, and in fact created a greater power in the North-West than themselves. With these increased burthens and restrictions to the freedom of our people, I fear that they who would loyally turn our great North-West, will be intimidated and seek for themselves homes in the United States. This, Mr. Chairman, I very much regret, for I believe this Dominion, with a healthy climate, a large area of land fit for settlement, an extensive forest -rich in mines and minerals, the development of which is only in its infancy-extensive rivers and inland waters, in addition to having one shore washed by the waters of the Atlantic and the other by the Pacific, offers homes for a large population equally as good as any other country on either continent.

Mr. VALLÉE. The question before the House is one of such importance that I deem it my duty to explain the motives that induce me to support the contract which is now submitted. We have heard the members of the Opposition demand that the question should be submitted immediately to the people in order to have an expression of public opinion upon so important a subject. For some time past the members of the Liberal party have held among their own followers private meetings, from which they were careful to exclude the members of the Conservative party, wishing to reserve to themselves all the time for discussion, and wishing, moreover, to have the opportunity of warping the public mind. In our district, Mr. Chairman, we have had some of these private meetings, we have had some of these meetings of which the Liberal party alone is capable of giving the example. At these meetings, to which the public had been invited, the members of the Conservative party present were not allowed to answer the speeches of the members of the Liberal party. I had myself the pleasure of attending one of these meetings in the district of Quebec, in the eastern division of Quebec, where the young leader of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec enough, by the Liberal leader of the Province of Quebec. I 48 made an hour-and-a-half speech on this question. We have heard the hon. member for East Quebec (Mr. Laurier), in his address to the electors of his division, and we have his speech that he made before this House; but we have not as an official document, we have not as a reliable report, the speech he made before the electors of East Quebec. If we had this speech, we would see that the hon member took before the public a position different from the one he took before this House. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, I believe that the members of the Liberal party do not take before the public at all the same position that they take before this House with respect to the building of the Pacific Railway. If we take the statements of these gentlemen outside of this House we find that they object to the construction of the Pacific Railway, they do not recognize it as a national undertaking, as an enterprise calculated to develop the North-West, and to bring about the prosperity of the country; but before the House they pronounce themselves in favor of the construction of the road. I have myself heard the hon, member for East Quebec, before his electors, make the following statement at the beginning of his speech, and I well remember his words. He said to his electors: "You know, gentlemen, that the Conservative party imposed upon the country the burden of building the Pacific Railway, it is a scheme that will be the ruin of the country, and for which you have already imposed heavy taxes." Such were the words the hon, member for East Quebec uttered in the Jacques Cartier Hall, at St. Roch's, and by referring to his speech before this House, you see at once the difference in the position. There, in a gathering of the faithful, where it was known that no controversy would be allowed, the aim was to terrify public opinion and leave people under the impression that the odium of this enterprise should fall upon the Conservative party. Such was the position taken by the Liberal party before this meeting where the Conservative speakers were excluded. Time had been asked to submit the contract to the country, and complaints had been made that Parliament had been assembled too soon. Complaint was made that Government had kept the contract hidden in order to prevent the public from becoming acquainted with its contents. Well, now, was this contract shown to the public, was it shown to the electors of East Quebec, in order that the people might become aware of its purport? No, Mr. Chairman. Great care was taken not to make known a single clause as it is in the contract now submitted for our consideration. They were satisfied with making comments on the contract, for the greater part false or exaggorated. But, Mr. Chairman, it will be said: How can you establish now the contradiction of the Liberal speakers. We have to-day the means of establishing these contradictions, for these gentlemen have seen fit to publish programmes and petitions which contain statements quite at variance with the policy maintained and supported by them in this House. In the first place, we have two programmes, one anonymous, published by a member who is one of the leaders of the Liberal party, and this programme was thrown before the public after having been adopted in a Liberal caucus, but it was discovered that the anonymous manifesto had had no effect upon the public mind. People looked upon this manifesto with astonishment, but did not in the least understand it, for it only contained exaggerated statements that were not borne out by a single clause of the contract. This manifesto having failed to produce the expected result, the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) saw fit to let off another manifesto. He deemed it his duty to address his electors, and in a document containing twenty-four clauses he has given the reasons why he refuses to vote for the measure now before this House. But there is more, Mr. Chairman; I hold in my hand a petition drawn up, naturally find it in the Electeur, the home organ of the hon. member for East Quebec (Mr. Laurier). It will be seen by this petition that the statements made before this petition are contradicted; and in order convinced of it, Mr. Chairman, and in order to see the exaggerations committed before the people that were to be consulted and from whom an expression of opinion was to be obtained, we have only to read this document. On the floor of this House, we have constantly heard the members of the Liberal party, men who by their studies and experience were in a position to judge of the contract, say: Give us time to discuss it, give us time to study it, for time is required in order to appreciate a contract of such importance. And yet, Mr. Chairman, they asked the electors to judge at once this contract that they have not had time to study, nor even to read, and they come and tell us that public opinion has pronounced against this contract! They come and tell us that public opinion has condemned this contract! But how can it condemn it, when at this very moment the members of the Liberal party in this House hesitate still, and do not know how to interpret it? These exaggerations were first dealt with in regard to the very building of the Pacific Railway; next they were dealt with in regard to the Sault Ste. Marie Branch, and then again with regard to the value of the lands, and lastly, Mr. Chairman, they endeavored to make people believe that the members of the Syndicate were immense capitalists who were going to make a fortune out of the road, and that the Government was going to ruin the country. Now, we see these assertions contradicted by the petition presented to the electors of East Quebec. In this petition it is stated that the persons who have undertaken the construction of the road have not the means of carrying out this gigantic enterprise. Yet, we have heard on the floor of this House the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) and all the Liberals, one after another, say that the members of the Syndicate were financially able to execute the contract that they had entered into, and they go and tell the people that the members of the Syndicate have not the means of carrying out the undertaking. How can one conciliate this opinion with the line of conduct followed by the Opposition in this House? Here it is stated that the members of the Syndicate are going to make an immense fortune, and before the people it is stated that the members of the Syndicate are incapable of building the road; that they have not the means of carrying out the undertaking. Once more, Mr. Chairman, how can they conciliate this statement with the statements made before this House? How can they conciliate this statement with this other statement that we heard this very afternoon, to wit, that the Government is giving the Syndicate a sum of $45,000,000 over and above the cost of the undertaking? Surely, if the Government gives $45,000,000 more than the cost of the road to the members of the Syndicate, they must be able to carry out the undertaking they have contracted for. That shows the bad faith with which this important question was discussed before the public. But there is another fact that I have noticed with regard to the discussion which took place at the Jacques Cartier Hall in the eastern division of Quebec. I was astonished to hear the hon. member who represents that division say that the exemption from taxation granted to the Syndicate would have for result to exempt forever the persons who would become possessors of the lands from paying taxes, and that they would never have any taxes to pay. I heard the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) say to that meeting: "Well, gentlemen, whilst you will be obliged to impose upon yourselves heavy burdens in order to meet the expenses of the country, and to pay interest on the debt contracted for the building of the Pacific Railway, the people there will be exempt from taxation." When I heard that, Mr. Chairman, I said to myself, the hon. member for East Quebec has certainly not read the contract—they caused to be adopted, in the city of Mr. VALLÉE.

read the contract; he is ignorant of what its conditions really are, and I was looking anxiously, the next day, for the report of this speech in the hon. member's newspaper. for it is the custom of this paper, every time the member for East Quebec makes a speech, to publish the next day a verbatim report of it. But this time this paper knew that he had deceived public opinion; it knew that the good faith of the electors had been abused of, and the next day the paper announced that it would not publish the speech, for it was known full well that if the speech had been published word for word, it could easily be picked to pieces. I thought that the hon member for East Quebec or some of his friends would have told me that I had misunderstood his meaning, but I find the same thing in black and white in the petition that is being circulated in the city of Quebec, in which petition it is stated that the Government has exempted from taxation the Company's lands, not only in favor of the Company, but in favor of all those who will settle on these lands; whereas the contract says that as soon as the lands are sold, or have passed into other hands, from that very moment the exemption from taxation ceases; this is in black and white in the contract, but they told the people the contrary in order to excite public indignation. I find in this petition the proof of what I just stated; I find therein the confirmation of the strange statement made by the hon, member at that meeting. Probably he knew that no one would answer him when we heard the hon. member deceiving his hearers in this manner. We sent several citizens to ask for a free discussion. We were taken by surprise, and as an elector of that division I asked to be allowed to speak. But the answer was: This meeting has been called for us, and for our friends; this meeting is for us, in order that we may deceive the people; this meeting is for us, so that the Conservative speakers cannot come and explain the contract; this meeting is for us in order that we may raise prejudices in the public mind, and in order that we may prevent the other side from being heard. Mr. Chairman, those who have followed the Liberal party know their tactics, and we are going to make these tactics known. Here is what we read in this petition: "That these lands will remain exempt from taxation, thus establishing an exemption that will render the neighboring lands, if there are any left, perfectly valueless; and that the Company will be able, by renting these lands, to exempt them during twenty years from paying their part of State burdens." is incredible, Mr. Chairman, to think that such a statement should find its way into a petition sent to His Excellency the Governor General. It is a want of respect due to His Excellency. After having stated a falsehood before a public meeting they come and reiterate it in a public document. I draw attention to this proceeding on the part of the Liberal party who always try to deceive the public. It is stated in this petition that the Company will be able, by renting their lands, to exempt them from State taxes during twenty years. Never, Mr. Chairman, never was such a falsehood uttered before, never before was seen such a colossal monument of error, and they come and tell us on the floor of this House, that the people condemn this contract! On the contrary, when we shall go before the electors of East Quebec and tell them: What your member told you is false; he has deceived you knowingly, because he knows that the contrary is written in the contract; the people will see that their confidence has been abused of, that their good faith has been trifled with. Such, Mr. Chairman, are some of the falsehoods we find in the petition, and there are perhaps some still grosser. But there is still more, Mr. Chairman, just now, in alluding to the question of the Sault Ste. Marie Branch. I said I would again refer to it. With regard to this, Mr. Chairman, there is something still more monstrous. The Liberals, at the meeting just spoken of, caused to be adopted, before the audience had had time to

Quebec, an intelligent city, a resolution that is a monument of falsehood, and at the same time a monument of ridiculousness in the eyes of the Province of Quebec. Here, again, I will show that they deceived the meeting in order to get the resolution passed, for if the truth had been told. the electors would have said to their representative: Sir, what you are doing there is against the interests of the Province of Quebec. Public sentiment is not with the Liberal party in the Province of Quebec in the Dominion of Canada, if we are to judge of it by the results obtained by these gentlemen in their meetings held in Ontario or even in Montreal, where a system of tickets was organized and where the Liberals won the name of Ticket party. In this House the members of the Liberal party declare that the road must be built, and before the public they say the contrary. The hon. member for Quebec East said so at Quebec. But, Mr. Chairman, it is not surprising to see the Liberal party oppose the construction of this railway, and especially that part of the road which insures to the Provinces lying to the east of Lake Superior the direct trade with the North-West The Liberal party, as they have done in the past, raise a hue and cry over this matter. That is their habit. Like owls in the desert, when they see a light on the horizon, they scream out, "woe," they scream out "ruin." the tenure seigneuriale was abolished by the Conservative party, the Liberals were alarmed lest taxes should be imposed on the people. When Confederation was spoken of the Liberal party were heard to say that it would be the ruin of the country; and when the Intercolonial Railway was built the Liberals again raised their voices and said that it would be the ruin of the country. When we increased the size of the Dominion of Canada by bringing into the Union Prince Edward Island, Rupert's Land, British Columbia and the North-West Territories, we heard the Liberal party say that we were loading the people down with taxes, that we were imposing great burdens on the people, that the country was being ruined. And, Mr. Chairman, every time some important question has been mooted we have witnessed the same thing. Every time that the Conservative party have endeavored to do something for the welfare of the people, the Liberal party has cried out that it would be the ruin of the country. And thus it is that the people no longer listen to that party, the people give the Liberals the go-by and refuse them their confidence, saying: We have confidence in the party that has a comprehensive programme, we have confidence in the Conservative party. We have had the proof of it in the general elections of 1878 and in the by-elections that we have had since. Well, Mr. Chairman, if we are to build the Pacific Railway, why say: Let us take our time? Why not build it as soon as possible? There is a principle of economy, it seems to me, that is against proceeding slowly, for if you are too long at a work, the first part deteriorates before the whole is done. If we were going to take fifty or sixty years to build the Pacific Railway we would have during that length of time considerable sums of interest to pay and sections of railway that would give us no profit. The policy of gentlemen on the other side would seem to be to build separate sections of road that would cost considerable sums of money upon which we would have to pay heavy interest, whilst the sections of road would bring no revenue to the country. A bad policy indeed! It has been said: You did not ask for tenders before giving out the contract. It was unnecessary, Mr. Chairman, to ask for tenders, when on the floor of this House hon. gentlemen have disparaged the North-West, saying that the immense regions that we possess beyond Lake Superior were worthless. It was useless to ask for tenders, since the Liberal party had, during months and months, asked for tenders without one being sent in. In order to carry out this undertaking it was then, Mr. Chairman, is the plan the Opposition proposes? The Liberal party has been able, during a certain length of time, to trifle with the public by unceasingly clamoring for reforms, but to-day we are able to show the people what this party has done. What are its antecedents? We know them, and we can make use of them. The Liberal party has not always been successful in its undertakings. It is in vain that the Liberal speakers go wandering about, and pile up mountains of figures; the fact is that the Liberal party has been unable to build the Pacific. They could not find shareholders to form a company. Yet the men who exist to-day existed then, and the gentlemen forming part of the Syndicate were the friends of the Liberal party. Then the Liberals declare that the members of the Syndicate are going to make great profits. I am inclined to think that it is a puff in favor of their friends forming part of the Syndicate; this gratuitous advertisement will greatly help the Syndicate in their operations. The Liberals know that the contract is advantageous for the country, but at the same time they want to profit by their position in order to help along their friends. That is how the position of the Liberal party is to be judged. But, Mr. Chairman, there are two sides to every contract. There is the debtor's and the creditor's side. Since the beginning of the discussion, the Liberal party has examined all the different points of the contract, but they have failed to show anything else but the rather heavy burdens that the contract imposes on the country. They take good care not to speak of the advantages that will accrue to the country from the construction of the Pacific Railway. They have shown us all the objections that can be raised against the bargain, but not a word have they said of the advantages that will result from it. What we have to do, then, is to contrast all the obligations that this contract imposes on us with the advantages that the country will derive from it. Well, what are the obligations imposed upon us by this contract? We know that the Government will hand over the works completed or to be completed, $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land. The lands are valued according to some at $1, according to others at $3 and $4 an acre. In considering this question it must be borne in mind that these lands have no real valve, but only a theoretical value. No doubt they will increase in value, but in an undetermined future. The Liberals will have it that these lands are worth $3 or $4 an acre now. Let us for a moment admit the theory that these lands are worth that. Consequently we give the Syndicate $100,000,000 in the form of a land grant. Well, I accept the principle, and I admit that we are going to give $100,000,000 in lands and besides $53,000,000 in money and works, which forms a total of $153,000,000 as the amount of our obligations. Moreover, we grant the Syndicate certain privileges, exemption from taxation, exemption from duties, and other privileges that have been variously estimated at from $2,000,000 to $20,000,000. Let us say $20,000,000. Certainly that is exaggeration, but I want to follow the principle laid down by the Liberal party. Adding this sum to the $153,000,000, we have a total of $173,000,000 which we give the Syndicate for the building and the working of the Pacific Railway. These lands that have existed for centuries have certainly no commercial value. At the present moment they give us no revenue. This reminds me of an anecdote: A certain Rajah had heard that in his country there was a hidden treasure composed of jewels and diamonds of great value. He found the place where the treasure lay, but unfortunately he had not the means of digging it up. Thus it is with the Dominion of Canada. We have an immense treasure in our lands of the North-West, and heretofore we have not been able to derive any benefit from them. But to-day we are in a position to enter into possession of a part of our inheritance; by giving something that has no value we received in return something necessary to find willing and influential men. But what of incalculable worth, According to the information furnished by surveyors we have 250,000,000 of acres of arable land in the North-West, and after having given 25,000,000 of acres to the Syndicate we will have 225,000,000 of acres left. Supposing that the half of these lands are sold at $4 an acre, we would have a revenue of $336,000,000. And in twenty years from now there will be at least 100,000 families settled in the North-West, and at the rate of five persons per family, we will have a population of 500,000 souls. Consequently, if we give the Syndicate $100,000,000 we receive in return 500,000 persons settled at the Syndicate's expense. Or, in other words, as an immigrant is considered in the United States as being worth $1,000, it would be an increase in our national wealth of $500,000,000. By taking as a basis the very figures of the Liberal party, the result is quite advantageous. But in order that these lands should be worth $100,000,000 they must be sold and occupied, and the Syndicate, by building the road, will enable us also to get profit out of our lands which cannot be done now for want of means of communication. There is a principle of economy that he who gives receives, and it cannot be otherwise. It is true that we give great advantages to the Syndicate, but in return we receive great benefits. In order to well understand the situation, we must strike the balance sheet, contrast our liabilities with our assets in order to see which are the greater. Let us see what we give: In the first place, in money and works, $53,000,000; 25,000,000 of acres of land, estimated at $3 an acre, $75,000,000; exemption foom taxation, and other privileges, estimated at $20,000,000, making a total of $148,000,000. That is the debtor's side. Now let us pass to the credit side. The opening of an immense territory access to 200,000,000 acres of land, of which we sell the half at $3 an acre, $300,000,000; exemption from the keeping up of the road estimated at from $7,000,000 to $8,000,000, according to the estimate of the leader of the Opposition, who declared that no company in the world would undertake to work the Pacific Railway unless the Government would give them, besides the revenues of the road, a bonus of $500,000 yearly. That is also the opinion of Mr. Workman, a business man of Montreal. Therefore, according to this estimate, we find ourselves relieved of an annual sum of $7,000,000 or $5,000,000 for costs of working, and which represents a capital sum of $150,000,000. Moreover, there is that population of 100,000 families who will settle there, thanks to the Syndicate, giving a considerable increase to the public revenue. In a word, this transaction will give us a profit of at least $1,000,000,000. A billion t Certainly these figures are extraordinary, but they are no more extraordinary that the calculations of hon, gentlemen on the other side. I have taken their figures and calculations; but instead of showing only the debtor's side, I have also shown the credit side, and that is but fair. I believe that I have said enough on this point to justify my rate. However, there is something else that has often been repeated. Objection is taken to the contract because it contains a clause preventing the building of branch lines. This clause reads thus:

"For twenty years from the date hereof, no line of railway shall be authorized by the Dominion Parliament to be constructed south of the Canadian Pacific Railway from any point at or near the Canadian Pacific Railway, except such line as shall run south-west or to westward of south-west."

Thus, we have the right to build branch lines in a southwesterly direction from the main line. This clause is in reality a protection for us, because it prevents the building of branch lines between the main line and the railways on American territory, which, without that clause, would benefit thereby to our prejudice. Let us now look at the question of the proposed line by Sault Ste. Marie. I have heard members, principally from the Province of Quebec, lament over the financial position of our Province. It Mr. VALLEE.

vince come here for the purpose of disparaging their own Province, make things look as gloomy as possible, and only show one side of the question. It has been said: "This poor Province of Quebec has a debt of $15,000,000." It is true that we have liabilities; we contracted them for the advancement of the country. Before building the North Shore Railway we had no direct communication with the West. We did not have the advantage of obtaining bonuses from the Government to build our provincial roads; we made our own sacrifices in order to procure an easy means of communication with the North-West. But of what use would all that be to us, if a line were not built to connect our line with the roads of the North-West? With regard to the Sault Ste. Marie Branch, I beg leave to allude to a few statements made by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), in the presence of his electors, on the 29th of December last. He told his electors some awful things with regard to the eastern section of the road to the north of Lake Superior. Here is the resolution that he induced them to pass:

"That it would be more advantageous to build, with the shortest possible delay, the Sault Ste. Marie Branch, which will be of immense commercial advantage to the people of Canada, as constituting the shortest route for the transport of freight and immigrants over Canadian territory, as being the less costly, and as being capable of being built in two years."

That is one of the resolutions that the member for Quebec East took upon himself to submit to a meeting of electors in the city of Quebec. It is a disgrace and an insult to the intelligent electors of Quebec East. He makes them say that the Sault Ste. Marie Branch "constitutes the shortest route for the transport of freight and immigrants through Canadian territory." There are as many misstatements as there are words. This House knows that the Sault Ste. Marie Branch is 120 miles longer than the line of the Pacific Railway; and the member for Quebec East makes his electors say that is the shortest. He makes them say, "over Canadian territory," when he knows himself that by this route the immigrants will be obliged to pass through American territory over a distance of more than 700 miles. I protest against this resolution. Why is the Liberal party opposed to the building of the Lake Superior section, which is to give us the direct trade of the North-West, and which is to benefit all the Eastern Provinces? In this contract with the Syndicate the Government has done us justice. Last year, the hon leader of the Opposition tried to gain our sympathies by showing us the danger that, with the Government scheme, the section to the north of Lake Superior would not be built. He cast sheep's eyes at us in order to draw us towards his party. Well, our own party has avoided this danger and made it disappear. Liberals oppose, through metives of economy, the construction of the section to the north of Lake Superior. Why? This section will cost us $16,000,000, they say; "Let us build the Sault Ste. Marie Branch," they add, "it will only cost us $2,000,000 or $3,000,000, which sum will be given as a bonus to an Ontario company, and then we will have connection with American roads." However, I beg of these hon. gentlemen to observe that there is not, to the north of Lake Superior, any line connecting with the proposed Sault Ste. Marie Branch. Who is going to give us connection, by this route, with the Canadian Pacific? This Sault Ste. Marie Branch was the great cheval de bataille of the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Rinfret) in his speech the other evening. But when did he discover that there was a line to the south of Lake Superior to put us in connection with the Northern Pacific? The hon, member stated that there was a line to the south of Lake Superior extending to Sault Ste. Marie; but this line only exists in his imagination. Where did the hon. member get his information from? How can he say that the line to the south of Lake Superior is preferable to the would appear that the Liberal members of that Pro-one that we propose to build to the north? I will go further and say that not only no line exists to the south of the Lake, but that the construction of a line there is next to impossible. The country to the south of Lake Superior is more mountainous and more inaccessible than the country immediately north of the Lake. I hold this information from competent surveyors. If you want to connect the Pacific Railway with the Sault Ste. Marie Branch, you must start from Duluth and go down towards the Michigan Central, about 127 miles below Lake Superior, and consequently you lengthen the route by 200 miles, in order to connect with the Sault Ste. Marie Branch. Who is going to build this line for us on the south shore of Lake Superior? If we are going to do it ourselves, then the motives of economy no longer exist. If we are not going to do it, it will have to be done by an American company. And on what terms will this American company consent to build this road? What conditions will it impose upon us? Those are questions that are worthy of attention. The line does not exist, and yet this potent fact seems to be unknown to the Liberal party. They come and tell us likewise that we skall have the navigation of Lake Superior, but are they not aware that this navigation is closed by ice from November to May-that is to say, exactly during the period when the immigrants arrive for transportation to the North-West. Hon, gentlemen on the other side accuse the Government of having sold out to an American company, represented by the Syndicate. But what do they want to do themselves? They want to submit us to the tender mercies of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, since it is to that company that we will have to apply in order to have the branch line from Duluth to Sault Ste. Marie. We would have to undergo the caprices and the monopoly of the great American companies: the Northern Pacific, the Minneapolis and the Michigan. That is how the Liberal party intend to protect the interests of the country! Mr. Chairman, it has been stated that connecting lines are required for the Michigan trade. These gentlemen, then, are not aware that we have direct communication by Toronto, and that the western trade is brought right down to Halifax. We have more, we have the Canada Central, the Grand Trunk, which connects with the American railways, we have the Great Western that connects at Sarnia and Detroit with the American lines. Consequently, the reason given by gentlemen on the other side, that it is in order to bring us the trade of these States, falls to the ground, since communication already exists. Thus, Mr. Chairman, for all these reasons we cannot consider the Sault Ste. Marie Branch as a continuation of the Canadian Pacific Railway. There are other important reasons that We want an all Canadian line for we might invoke. Canadian commerce. We want to be able to send the products of the eastern Provinces to the North-West without having to pass over American territory and undergo the delays of having to make connections. It is well known, Mr. Chairman, that when a railway is obliged to make several connections with another railway, one railway will make the others wait, if it has any interest so to do. the Sault Ste. Marie Branch we would be deprived of direct communications. Our railway would be obliged to wait upon the other lines who, when they had too much freight, would say: "Wait till to-morrow, wait till some other day. Thus, we would be at the mercy of strangers. It is against the interests of the Province of Ontario to abandon the section to the north of Lake Superior, because by the building of this section, all the territory in the northern part of that Province will be opened up to settlement. It is against the interest of the Province of Quebec to abandon this eastern section, because it gives us a through line for the western trade. It is against the interests of the Maritime Provinces to oppose this section for the same reasons that hold good for Quebec. Well, then, we must have the section to the north of Lake Superior, because it gives us a through line, other member, for his own sake as well as for the sake of

Our object in building the Pacific Railway is to open up the North-West to settlement and send a large population there. And if our immigrants are obliged to wait upon the good pleasure of the American lines, what will happen? Suppose there are immigrants at Duluth, what will happen? Why the agents of the American companies will come and carry off our immigrants away, and we will be deprived of our immigration into the North-West. That is what would be the result of the Sault Ste. Marie Branch. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the measure now before us, for, in my opinion, I do not think that we are giving too much to the Syndicate, and especially as this company is in earnest we cannot do too much in order to secure the faithful execution of the contract. I am glad that the Government, that the Conservative party have adopted this comprehensive policy, that is the admiration of the country and of neighboring nations. The Conservative party has met the wants of our growing trade and of our national progress. I congratulate my country; I congratulate especially, as it is my duty to do, the Conservative leader in the Province of Quebec; I congratulate his hon, colleagues for having done justice to the Province of Quebec; and I congratulate the Government for insuring the construction of the Lake Superior section of the Pacific Railway. We will submit our policy to the electors, confident that they will ratify it. When we asked the Liberals to discuss the question they refused, for they knew that the people would have condemned them; for the people judge aright, and when a question is fairly presented to them, they know how to appreciate it. I am satisfied that an immense majority of this House will vote for this contract. We have a national destiny to fulfil, and we will fulfil this destiny by ratifying this great scheme that will bring the nations of Europe into our western regions, and will fill up the vast territory that stretches from Lake Superior to the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. LARUE. Mr. Chairman, I think that it is my duty, as the representative of the County of Bellechasse, to say a word upon the question now before the House. I deem it my duty to speak, and that it would not be sufficient to give a silent vote upon the contract submitted for our approval. I consider that in order to give satisfaction to the electors who have sent me here to represent their views, I must say a few words, and explain why I am going to vote against this contract. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, before discussing the contract now submitted, I must begin by answering the lengthy speech of the member for Portneuf (Mr. Vallée). I admit that I hardly know how to go about answering the speech just delivered by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Vallée). I have often had the pleasure of hearing the hon. gentleman on the stump. I have often had the pleasure of hearing him astonish the public by the floods of light that broke forth from every part of his body, electrifying the electors that listened to him. often had the opportunity of hearing the hon. member talk stuff and nonsonse before this House, as well as before the people, and it does not surprise me. Mr. Chairman, we are accustomed to these big, popular speeches of the hon. member; he made several of them in the County of Rimouski, where he came very near being elected, whilst the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Langevin) was beaten by 400 votes. Well, I leave this House to judge of the two men. The hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Vallée), every time he rises in this House makes very witty speeches, spicy speeches, speeches full of arguments, speeches that any the country, would refuse to make on this floor. The honmember has alluded to the public meetings which were held in the Province of Quebec. I can meet him on this same ground, for I was present at the meeting held in Quebec and presided over by the hon. member for Quebec East, and I even spoke on that occasion. However, I must say that I do not intend to follow the hon. member for Portneut from the beginning to the end of his speech, because I believe that the arguments he made use of cannot change the question which is now before the House, and that they are of no interest to the country at large. Mr. Chairman, I was present at the meeting held in Quebec East. The hon. member for Portneuf has stated that we refused discussion in the Province. Truly, it is well for him to come here and say this evening that we refused discussion in the eastern division of Quebec. What happened? It is well known that the hon. member for Quebec East made a two-hours speech. The hon. Mr. Pelletier spoke after him, and then a little message was sent us, saying that Dr. Fiset, of Saint Sauveur, was desirous of addressing the meeting in answer to Mr. Laurier. We took it as a joke, and we simply made answer that the hon. member for Quebec East had enough political worth to deserve that hon. Ministers should come down into his division and discuss this great question. Were we not right, Mr. Chairman, in refusing to allow an answer to be given to the hon. member for Quebec East by a young man without any political post, who is quite honorable, i have no doubt, who is an able doctor and a good fellow, but who certainly did not deserve the honor of answering the hon, member for Quebec East. That is the only reason we did not yield to the request made by Mr. Fiset on that occasion. I can readily understand that he would have been delighted to address such a numerous meeting as the one we had that evening. The hon, member for Portneuf (Mr. Vallée), who has the intention of coming forward in the division of Quebec East, and who never has had the opportunity of addressing a great number of the electors of that division, weuld have been delighted if the hon. member for Quebec East had given him the opportunity of speaking before such a numerous meeting. He did not get opportunity, for we were careful not to give it to him. He did not get this were perfectly well aware that he would make before this meeting the same statements that he has just made before this House, statements that could not originate in a serious mind, and which could only fall from the lips of the hon. member for Portneuf. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Vallée) stated that the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) had taken before the people a position different from the one he had taken in Parliament. I say that it is a falsehood. I say that he took before his electors absolutely the same position that he has taken before this House. I say that he made no misstatement. And, moreover, Mr. Chairman, all the hon. members of this House are well enough acquainted with the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) to know that he does not follow the line of conduct of the hon. member for Portneuf, and that he is not in the habit of uttering falsehoods, whatever may be the audience he is addressing, whether he be speaking to the electors of the country, or before this honorable House. Moreover, I know that the hon. member for Quebec East loves too dearly the population he represents, to allow himself to utter, in the presence of his electors, speeches that were not grounded on the strictest and most scrupulous truth. If the hon, member for Portneuf appeals to popular prejudices, and resorts to falsehoods in the division that he represents, you may be satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that the hon, member for Quebec East can be elected in his division without resorting to such means. I have not the intention of following any longer the hon. member for Portneuf in his wanderings of this evening, and will briefly explain the reasons that oblige me to vote against this contract, We all remember, Mr. Chairman, the famous trip that hon, necessary for disclosing what hon, Ministers had done with Mr. LARUE.

Ministers made to England. All Conservative papers had received the watchword, and, from one end of the country to the other, we were told that hon. Ministers had gone to England to meet the first capitalists of London, Paris, and Berlin, in order to form a Syndicate that should construct the Pacific Railway. We heard from the Premier and his colleagues whilst they were in Europe. During all that time, the Conservative papers of the Province of Quebec, as well as of the other Provinces, made us new promises every day. We were expecting every day the coming of this Messiah that was to build the Pacific Railway without its costing the Dominion of Canada a single penny. At length it was announced that Sir John had brought to a successful termination the great work he had undertaken, and that we were going to have the pleasure of seeing him come back to Canada. He came back with his colleagues, and all along the route he scattered speeches that delighted the population of the Province of Quebec. He said everywhere that the Pacific Railway would be built without its costing the people a single farthing; the Conservative papers repeated with great satisfaction the words that had fallen from the lips of the hon. Prime Minister. We were beginning to be satisfied ourselves, although politically we were the opponents of these gentlemen. We were beginning to rejoice, and I said myself in my county: Appearances are favorable, and it is possible that we are going to be relieved from this heavy burden that we have been dragging about for so many years. We were all taken by surprise, Mr. Chairman; the speeches of the hon. Prime Minister, all that the press had said, all that the Conservative papers had repeated, was to be reduced to nothing on the return of the hon gentlemen. What happened when these hon gentlemen returned to this country? We expected to be immediately made acquainted with this contract that was to be of such benefit to the country; but not at all. Hon. Ministers went to Montreal, where they met the members of the Syndicate, who began setting traps for them, and what happened? Why, the members of the Syndicate succeeded; they put their foot on hon. Ministers' throats and told them: We want your money or your life! Now, Mr. Chairman, do you imagine that hon. Ministers had enough patriotism so sacrifice their lives to save their purse? This is what happened. Hon. Ministers said to the Syndicate: We prefer to save the life of the Government; we prefer to remain in power; we prefer to cast the country's millions to the winds and remain on the Treasury benches. That is what happened, Mr. Chairman. Now, if we had been put in possession of this contract before the opening of the Session, every member of this hon. House would have had an opportunity of going before his electors, and there we could have explained to the people each clause of this contract. We would have asked the electors of every county whether they approved of such clauses. We could have then come back to this House, and, supported by public opinion, we could have rendered a verdict which would have been a popular one. Why was not this contract submitted to the public before the opening of the House? Why was Parliament called together before the usual time? It is very easy to explain: it was because hon. Ministers did not wish this House to be urged by public opinion. If these hon, gentlemen had any patriotism, why did not they allow public opinion to give its commands to this House, instead of forcing the country to obey the will of this House? It is the Conservative party that, at the present time, commands public opinion; the electors of this country were not allowed to give their commands to the Government, and to the members of this House. At length, Mr. Chairman, the opening of Parliament took place. The hon. leaders of the Opposition asked, one after the other, that certain documents, absolutely regard to this contract, should be brought down, but this again was refused them. Ministers were desirous of hurrying on the vote, in order that the members of the Liberal party might not have the time to meet their constituents, and make known to the people what were the clauses of this gigantic contract, as it is called. In spite of all that, hon. Ministers were at last obliged to give us a vacation; during which time public meetings were held in different parts of the country. You know the result, Mr. Chairman. In spite of what the Conservative newspapers have said, we know what took place at Montreal at the meeting held by the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Quebec East. The Conservative papers said that three-fourths of the persons present at this meeting were Conservatives, and that it had been a failure; whereas, Mr. Chairman, this meeting was a success. It has Chairman, been stated that at this meeting a Liberal had proposed an amendment to the resolutions which were passed. The papers have since shown up this man, and I will not speak of him. We were waiting impatiently for the meeting that was to be addressed by the hon. Minister of Railways and the hon. President of the Council. The Conservative papers said that these hon, gentlemen had obtained an immense success that had completely thrown in the shade the meeting held by the leader of the Opposition and the hon, member for Quebec East. Well, we have had information with respect to this meeting, too, and we know that there were not in the hall half as many persons as there were at the meeting held by the leader of the Opposition and the member for Quebec East. We know that the electors present did not lavish on the speakers who addressed the meeting the applause that they expected, although one of them, the hon. President of the Council, is a distinguished and sympathetic speaker. I give all this information, Mr. Chairman, in order to show that as a Liberal member I cannot vote for the contract now before the House. And one of the reasons why I cannot vote for this contract is because I consider that the Government gives too much to the Syndicate that is to build the road. I consider that the grant in money of $25,000,000 is too large. I consider, moreover, that 25,000,000 of acres of land that have been estimated by some at $3 an acre, by others at $4 an acre, and that I value, according to the estimate made by a great many members in this House, and according to the regulations of the Department of the Interior, at $3.18 an acre; $28,000,000 expended for the finished sections and those under contract; $3,120,000 for surveying expenses; and $4,000,000 that is to be expended in telegraph lines; and if we add to that about $10,000,000 for exemption from duties on imported materials required in the construction of the road, making a total of about $150,000,000,-I consider, I say, all these advantages granted to the Company as entirely too large. Another point with which I cannot agree with hon. members on the other side, is the question of securities. The Syndicate, according to the contract that has been submitted to this House, is obliged to deposit as security the sum of $1,000,000 to secure the construction of the road. I look upon such a deposit as perfectly ridiculous; it would have been just as well not to require any such security, for I consider it as deceiving. The Syndicate is, moreover, required to leave in the hands of the Government 5,000,000 of acres of the 25,000,000 of acres to be granted in order to secure the working of the road. Well, in my humble opinion, I believe that this privilege reserved by the Government is perfectly useless. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, the Company will have no difficulty in furnishing such security as that; in my opinion, it is not a security at all. The members of the Syndicate are not obliged to give their own property as security; they are at no expense. The Government has said to the Syndicate: "We will give you 25,000,000 of acres of land, and as security overthrown before this question is solved and justice is for the working of the road, you will leave in our hands rendered to Ireland. The same thing might well happen

5,000,000 of acres of the land." I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that hon. Ministers were serious when they required such security from the Syndicate. Another reason why I am opposed to the present contract is because the Government intends granting a monopoly to the Syndicate. According to the terms of the contract no other railway can be built in order to compete with the Syndicate, so that the Syndicate will be able to exact whatever rates it likes, and the public will be completely at its mercy. The Company will have, moreover, the monopoly of the telegraph and telephone lines, and will be exempt from taxation during 20 years; the Company will pay noither municipal or school taxes; nor will the Syndicate be obliged to contribute towards keeping up the roads, towards building churches and keeping them in repair.

An hon. MEMBER. It is a Protestant Company.

Mr. LARUE. We from Quebec know what are the privileges of landlords, of the great landed proprietors. Those who, like the hon. Minister of Public Works, have experience of the past, and are familiar with the history of the Province of Quebec, know what efforts it required on the part of the people to abolish the tenure seigneuriale in the Province of Quebec. They know that several Governments came into and went out of power before this system that was weighing so heavily on the people of the Province of Quebec could be abolished. We remember all the prerogatives enjoyed by the seigneurs, such as the lord's due on sales (lods et ventes), the right of fifth, thirdage, &c. We know that all these privileges granted to the seigneurs weighed heavily on the people, and that, for years, prominent men in both parties labored in the hope of abolishing this system, and that it was necessary to pay an indemnity to the seigneurs in order to free for ever the censitaires from the burdens that oppressed them. We were only able to succeed by voting a large indemnity to this privileged class. The hon member for Chicoutimi said the other day: "They will do in the west what we did in the east. We were obliged to pay dearly in order to free ourselves from our great landed proprietors, and the people of the west will be able to do the same; they need us to build the road, and it is only fair that they should pay for it. Is that a reason, Mr. Chairman, why we should establish, in the North-West, a monopoly as unjust as it is extravagant? Moreover, we all know what is actually taking place in Ireland; it has already been spoken of in this House, and I beg leave to recall the words made use of by the hon. Minister of Public Works, with respect to Irish immigration into this country:

"The hon, leader of the Opposition says that those are not the real causes of immigration, but that Mr. Parnell and the unhappy state of affairs in Ireland have a great deal more to do with the emigration policy of the English Government than Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Charles Tupper and others."

No one doubts it. If the Irish were satisfied with the condition of their country they would not emigrate. But it is none the less true that they are not satisfied and that they do want to emigrate. If they want to emigrate, is it not better that they should come to Canada, that we should give them lands, and that we should settle them on our territory; is it not better that they should become citizens of the great nation to which we belong rather than they should go to the United States? Does the hon, gentleman know why they want to emigrate? Does he not know that if they no longer wish to remain in Ireland it is because they are subject to great land proprietors, and that they can hardly live on account of the great oppression that weighs them down? The English Parliament has been called together before the usual time in order to settle this great question which agitates not only England, but the whole world, and no doubt several English Governments will be in the North West, and hon, members who support this contract fail to see, no doubt, that they are preparing a state of things similar to that which agitates Ireland to-day. Another question is that of the Sault Ste. Marie. I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that it is one of the great questions that the Conservative party will make use of at the next general elections. We see that the Conservative party treat the Liberals as if they were the enemies of their Province. They say that it is extraordinary and unpardonable that French Canadians should strive to obtain the Sault Ste. Marie Branch. Well, I am not at all surprised to see the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Vallée) speaking against this branch, because, as it has been shown, it would give us communication with the North-West in three years time, instead of ten. The hon, member for Portneuf stated that this branch line would be of no benefit to the Province of Quebec, and that we should proceed with the construction of the to the north of Lake Superior. Yet it has been shown that it is next to impossible to build a railway through that region, and still less possible to work it. It has been shown that a vast portion of this country is good for nothing, that the climate is very bad. It is clear that if we build this section we will only have the trade of some 150,000 or 200,000 inhabitants of the North-West, whereas, with the Sault Ste. Marie Branch, we would be in immediate communication with 1,200,000 inhabitants of the United States. scattered through Minnesota, Dakota, Wisconsin, Montana, Idaho and Michigan. We would at once have the trade of several millions of inhabitants settled in the most fertile country of the world. Against the opinion of the hon. member for Portneuf, I will quote the opinion of one of his leaders, the hon. Minister of Railways. In a long speech that the hon. Minister made at Toronto, he maintained that the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie Branch would be of great advantage to the Eastern Provinces, and especially to the cities of Montreal and Quebec. Here is a part of the speech of the hon. Minister as it appears in the Toronto Mail of the 1st of January:

"He (Mr. Blake) will find that it is our duty as politicians and as Canadians to confine our efforts to the great national work now before us, and, Sir, in a year, what will take place? In a little more than a year, communication by rail will be open to Thunder Bay. Mr. Blake says the completion of this line is ten years off, while you can have the Sault Ste. Marie Branch in three, but will you suffer very much? What is your position during these ten years? You stand here in the position of having your trade and industries nearer to the great North-West than any other portion of this country, and easy means of access by the Thunder Bay line to pour the traffic and business of Toronto and Hamilton, &c., into the heart of the great North-West, and to obtaining a hold on that traffic which, once secured by the enerprising men connected with the industries in Ontario, will not be easily taken out of their grasp."

Is not that a magnificent answer to the speech made by the hon. member for Portneuf? When we shall have the pleasure of meeting our Conservative friends on the hustings in the Province of Quebec, we will quote this speech of the Minister of Railways. It will be the best answer that we will be able to give them, because the hon. Minister declares that it is in the interest of Ontario not to construct now the Sault Ste. Marie Branch, so as not to have trade drawn away from the Province of Ontario to the benefit of Montreal and Quebec. Now, the gentlemen opposite have spoken of patriotism and of union. It would seem that the hon. Minister of Railways and the hon. Minister of Public Works have come to an understanding to appeal to a certain kind of patriotism. It must be admitted that the time is illchosen to appeal to patriotism, and a k us to unite with the Conservative party. We would be delighted to unite with that party if there was any means of coming to an understanding; but it seems to me that in order to do so we would have to shut our eyes on too many misdeeds committed by the Conservative party. The difference between us on this question is too great to allow of a mutual understanding. The hon. Minister of Railways and |. Mr. LARUE.

the hon. Minister of Public Works said that they would be happy to leave to their children the Pacific Railway as an inheritance. They are glad to have taken an active part in the settlement of the North-West by means of this railway. I very much fear that history will not mention their names in the manner they expect; they expected to be praised by their children; they will certainly not be by the children of the settlers of the North-West, who will have to submit to the exactions of the landlords of the North-West, their uncontrolled extortions, and their endless caprices. History, impartial history, will not think and speak like the children of hon. Ministers, but it will tell to them, with great truth: You have had the honor of purchasing the great territory of the North-West, you will also have the shame of having sold it.

Mr. BERGERON moved the adjournment of the debate. House resumed.

Committee reported; and (at 1 o'clock, a. m.,) the House adjourned.

THE SYNDICATE.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether any letter has been written, since the commencement of the Session, by any member of the Syndicate to any-member of the Government, touching the standard of construction for the Canadian Pacific Railway as defined in the contract; and if so, when? and whether such letter will be laid on the Table, and if so, when?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Such a letter was written by three gentlemen belonging to the Syndicate, dated 16th December, 1880, and I now lay it on the Table of the House.

BRIDGE AT BRAUHARNOIS CANAL.

Mr. BERGERON enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to yield to the request of the ratepayers of the town of Salaberry, in the County of Beauharnois, that the bridge crossing the canal at Lock No. 14, be removed to another site?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The application has been referred to the Superintendent for his report thereon, and the department has not yet received the report.

MAINTENANCE OF BEAUHARNOIS CANAL.

Mr. BERGERON enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to place in this year's Estimates an adequate sum for the repairs and maintenance of the Beauharnois Canal?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A sum for the maintenance and repairs of the Beauharnois Canal will be placed in the Estimates.

WHARF AT CHARLO.

Mr. HADDOW enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to proceed during this year with the erection of a wharf at Charlo, in the County of Restigouche, for which a survey was made last year?

Mr. LANGEVIN. I have the honor to inform the hon. gentleman that this matter is receiving the consideration of the Government.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

House again resolved itself into Committee on certain proposed resolutions for granting and appropriating twentyfive millions of dollars and twenty-five millions of acres of land in the North-West Territories, according to the contract relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway transmitted to this House by His Excellency the Governor General by his Message dated December 10th.

Mr. BERGERON. 'I have not, Sir, the intention of trespassing at any length on the attention of the House; I am merely desirous of availing myself of my privilege as a representative of the people, to explain the vote which will probably be taken to-night, and which I shall have to give in the name of my constituents on so important a question. A few days ago, during the Christmas vacation, I was in the county of Berthler, on a political campaign, when I met an hon. member of the Local Legislature, who was telling the people that the Pacific contract would be carried by the vote of the immense majority of slaves of the present Government. I replied to the hon. member that the day of slavish majorities, and for following one's leaders like a flock of sheep, had come to a timely end at 5 p.m. on the 17th day of September, 1878 I am of opinion, Sir, that there should not be any party feeling shown on a question like the present one. We ought to agree and unite in order to accomplish this great national work. When I first learned that the hon. Premier, together with two of his colleagues, had concluded an arrangement with a body of capitalists with the object of constructing that great iron highway, the Pacific Railway, I rejoiced, not only on behalf of my constituents, but for all the population of the Canadian Confederation as well. We are called upon to vote on a most important questionthe Canadian Pacific Railway-and I think I may say without fear of making a mistake, that young politicians of my age, in this House as well as outside of it, came into the political world together with that question. I remember that the first time I had the honor of speaking in public, in 1873, the Liberal speakers spoke of nothing but the famous Pacific Scandal; electors heard nothing else, and I might even say the atmosphere was saturated with it. In those days, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian nation allowed itself to be captivated; the electors drank in the fair promises and the untruthful utterances of the hon. members of the Opposition. The Canadian people are true and honorable, but for the time being they lost faith in their leaders who had made the country what it is to-day. The people said: Here are men who have been in Opposition for a long while; they have made us fine promises, we must give them a chance of redeeming them. Thus did the hon. member for Lambton come into power at the head of a powerful majority and surrounded with a halo of magnificant prestige. If to-day, Sir, there were on the other side of the House, new men as yet unknown in the political world, and who were to say that the contract now submitted to us is not a good one, that the contract before us is injurious to the interests of the nation, we might perhaps believe them. But as their past record is before us, we feel satisfied that the present contract is a better one. Let us examine this contract and see what it amounts to. We gather therefrom that we shall have to pay $78,000,000, i.e. $25,000,000 in money, 25,000,000 acres of land valued at $1 per acre, and the $28,000,000 which the operations carried out by the Government on the Pacific as well as those which remain to be completed will cost us. Of these $25.000.000, we have already $18.000,000 without becoming impoverished, as this year the hon. Minister of Finance will announce that there is a surplus in his budget, which surplus will cause us to forget perhaps the annual deficits in the budgets of the hon. ex-Minister of Finance. We have still to pay $10,000,000 for the works remaining to be completed, and these works are the following: -That section of Lake Superior from Thunder Bay to Selkirk, 400 miles; the western section, from Kamloops to Port Moody, 217 miles, subdivided as follows: from Kamloops to Yale, 127 miles, now under contract, and 90 miles from Yale to Port Moody, which have not yet been begun, but which the Government has undertaken. Now, Sir, what has been the policy of the hon. member for Lambton? He offered the construction of the Pacific Railway to the whole world, and by the Statute of 1874 we find that he was offering to those who were willing to undertake this important work, $10,000 per mile for 2,797 miles, which amounts to $27,970,000; 20,000 acres of land valued at $1 per acre, which brings the amount to $55,940,000; and four per cent. over and above on a sum not determined in the Statute, but the amount of which we subsequently discovered, when the matter of the Georgian Bay Branch came up, when the hon. member for Lambton granted four per cent. on $7,500. It is unnecessary for me to say, Sir, that for a Government, four per cent. on $7,500 is the equivalent of $7,500 per mile, for Government would as soon pay a fixed sum as to pay the interest thereon; this brings the amount to $20,977,500, or a sum total of $104,887,500. If to all this are added the 40 miles from Callendar running southward, which line favored the Province of Ontario to the prejudice of the other Provinces, we have an additional sum of $500,000, say 40 miles at $10,000 per mile, or $400,000, 40 miles at 20,000 acres of land per mile, or $800,000, and $7,500 on those 40 miles, in all $300,000, which, added to the $104,000,000, form a total of $106,387,500. If, Sir, we now wish to draw comparisons, we find that the Mackenzie plan, even if we leave out of the reckoning the 40 miles south of Callendar, represented in figures, in 1874, $104,887,500; that the Cartier plan in 1873 represented $81,700,000, the benefit of which plan was lost to us by the so called Pacific Scandal, which was the cause of so much rejoicing to the Liberal party and of so much evil to the people. The Mackenzie plan was $20,187,500 dearer than that of 1873, and $26,887,500 than that of 1880. If we add the 40 miles south of Callendar, which makes $106,387,500 offered by the bon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) on the markets of the whole world, we find that he offered $21,687,500 more than the amount offered in 1873, and that road. Now, Sir, what has made the greatest im-$28,387,500 more than the amount offered in 1878. Now, pressions on the public mind in the contract now Sir, hon members of the Opposition might reply that they before us, is that the road will essentially belong to the Mr. Bergeron.

repudiate the proposal of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie); that the hon. member was about to make a bad bargain for the country, that they have disapproved of his conduct and put him aside to take another leader. It is not for me, Sir, to say whether these hon. gentlemen have done well or not; they have the right of choosing their leader, it is their look out, but what I have a right to say as a member of this House, is that to say the least, they have shown the blackest ingratitude towards their late leader. In acting thus they have not followed the example given them by the Conservatives, who fell together with their leader in 1873 through the so-called Pacific Scandal, to which I never attached any credence, but which, nevertheless, turned public opinion against us. On that occasion, the present leader of the Government invited the handful of members who followed his fortunes after the elections of 1874, to select another leader, telling them that it would perhaps be the best thing in the interests of the Conservative party, considering the crushing defeat it had just experienced. But the Conservatives at once refused to accept his resignation. They said to Sir John A. Macdonald: "You shall remain our leader as of yore. We do not believe in this Pacific Scandal. We are convinced that you have been calumniated, and you shall remain our leader; if the people have no faith in you, yet we will remain true to you." And they supported him until the time of the general elections in 1878. Then did the people endorse their conduct and return them to power in the wake of their old leader with a triumphant majority. Let us now examine, Sir, if the hon. members of the Opposition have done well in accepting the hon, member for West Durham as their leader. The hon, member has ever, as member as well as Minister, when in the latter capacity he entered the cabinet of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie), approved of the offers made by his leader, as shall be presently shown. The plan of the hon. member for West Durham was also that of building 2,797 miles of road at $10,000 per mile, and at 20,000 acres of land per mile, valued, at the highest, at $1 per acre. The difference between him and the hon. member for Lambton was that, instead of reckoning at $7,000 per mile the four per cent. interest on that amount, he pretended that it was equivalent to $4,000 per mile only, making $11,188,000, which, added to the $33,910,000 about which he fully agreed with the hon. member for Lambton, make a total of $95,-098,000. And if we add the 40 miles going from Callendar southward, to which extension the hon, member for West Durham did not make any opposition, we find that the road would cost, according to the valuation of the hon. gentleman, $96,458,000; according to the Cartier plan, $84,700,000, and according to the Macdonald plan, $78,000,000. Thus the Blake plan exceeded, by $11,758,000, that of 1873, and by $18,458,000, that of 1880. If we deduct the 40 miles south of Callendar-for really these hon, gentlemen so frequently change their opinions, and I think that, in this circumstance, opinions have been as numerous as the members of the Opposition—we find that the Blake plan, or its estimated amount, reached, in figures, $95,098,000; i. e., $10,398,000 more than in 1873, and $17,088,000 more than in 1880. We are, therefore, paying, in 1880, $26,887,500 less than the hon. Mr. Mackenzie was about to pay, but which, luckily, he was not able to pay, on account of the little confidence with which he inspired capitalists. And Liberals may rejoice that the hon. member for West Durham was not their leader, for he would have paid $17,098,000 more than what we are asked to pay to-day, or $18,458,000 more if we take into account the 40 miles south of Callendar, for the hon, gentleman was equally bound to build

Company for all time to come. I find in the Statute of 1874 a clause which likewise gave the road to the Company for all time to come, and that at the oppressive terms I have just mentioned. I find, also, that the Government bound itself in those days to sell, at its own expense, the 20,000 acres of land which it gave per mile, and to hand over the proceeds to the Company; the cost of agencies, surveying, etc., were to be borne by the Government, which is not the case to-day, for we give 24 miles on either side of the road, and we take the other 24 miles in alternate lots. The only work we shall have to do will consist in the division which the Government will have to make out, in order to give the Company its share and to establish what the Government reserves for its own use. Under the Mackenzie plan, had we been desirous of reducing the road, we would have had to pay 10 per cent. over and above the value of the work carried out by the Company, i.e., a profit of 10 per cent., which the Government would have given the Company to recover possession of the road. To-day, we have, by one of the clauses of the contract, the option of recovering possession of the road, whenever we may be so inclined, the amount to be paid to the Company to be determined by arbitrators to be appointed, one by the Government, a second by the Company, and a third by both, or by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. I am anticipating a case where the public interests would require a sort of expropriation. To be plainer still, I will make out another statement and say: 2,897 miles, which remain to be built to complete the construction of the Pacific Railway, and from which I deduct 617 miles already built and remaining to be built by the Government. This leaves 2,180 miles of road, and on deducting $28,000,000, the cost of the 617 miles. there is left $50,000,000 to construct 2,180 miles of road, which makes $22,935.40 per mile according to the present contract, whereas Messrs. Mackenzie and Blake were offering $34,000 per mile for the whole road, and, moreover, bound themselves to carry out the sale of two thirds of the land, and hand over the proceeds to the Company, thus incurring an enormous expenditure, and also bound themselves to pay 10 per cent. over and above the cost of the road, should the case arise that the Government wished to take possession of it. Now, Sir, that the hon. gentlemen of the Opposition see that their original plan was worse than the present one, and that they find themselves beaten in that direction, they seek to recoup themselves on the value of the lands. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) says:

"To-day you value the lands at $1 an acre, when last year, when you wished the Government to build the road, you valued the same lands at $4 and $5 an acre."

This, Sir, depends entirely on the way in which things are looked at. These lands, even when the road will be built, will not be sold immediately; they will not even be sold in ten, nay, in twenty years to come. Taking, therefore, the average value set upon them by one of the hon. members of the Opposition, viz., $3.13 per acre, an acre of land that will be worth $3.13 in twenty years, how much is it worth today? We know that at the end of 20 years, an amount invested at 6 per cent. with compound interest, becomes fourfold. Let us therefore divide $3.13 by two twice, or in other words, let us take the quarter of it, and this will give 781 cents per acre of land. At this rate, we give to the Syndicate $19,562,500, and that, according to the figures supplied by one of the hon. members of the Opposition; now, if thereto be added our monetary subsidy, which amounts to $25,000,000, and the $28,000,000 granted for work completed and to be completed, we find that we are giving the Syndicate $62,562,500. The engineers who have surveyed the line of the railway say that the construction of the road will cost $80,000,000, and even more. The Syndicate will therefore have to supply $17,437,500. Immigration charges are not put at too high a figure, when they are set down as therefore have to supply $17,437,500. Immigration charges endorsed by the whole Liberal party. The hon, member are not put at too high a figure, when they are set down as 100,000 per annum, which would amount to $2,000,000 in figures on 50,000,000 acres of land and that a difference of twenty years. Moreover, the road will have to be kept in repairs and in good order for twenty years; it will possibly have to be renewed; most generally these charges are taken from the receipts of the road, but as there will not be any surplus for some time to come on the Pacific Railway, by calculating what the Syndicate will have to disburse, we reach the amount of $8,000,000. To recapitulate: the Pacific Railway will cost $80,000,000; agency and immigration charges will amount to $2,000,000; incidental expenses and cost of working, $1,000,030; cost of renewal, $8,000,000; unforeseen charges, $2,000,000; we thus reach the sum of $96,000,000. The Company receives really $62,000,000; it will therefore have to find $313,000,000 to pay the difference. This estimate is that of the hon. gentlemen of the Opposition themselves. Let us now glance at what was said a few days ago by the hon, member for West Durham in his last speech. He said that the lands given to the Syndicate are, on an average, worth $4.04 per acre, because they may be selected in a radius of twenty-four miles on either side of the road, as the Syndicate will be allowed to construct branch roads to obtain this result. He said that the grant of 56,740,000 acres of land, which was to have been made according to the statute of 1874 by the hon, member for Lambton, for 20,000 acres per mile on a road of 2,837 miles, is equivalent to that amount, was a different thing, because the lands had to be selected from a more extended radius. Did Mr. Mackenzie not offer $10,000 per mile to any company that would build branch roads through these 56,740,000 acres of land? Then. the lands through which these branch roads were to pass would have had as great a value as those situated on the This I maintain would be the case, and on this assumption I make the following comparative statement: the Mackenzie plan, taking for basis the figures of the hon. member for West Durham, 2,837 miles at $10,000 per mile, give $28,370,000; and 20,000 acres per mile, 56,740,000 acres at $4.01, give $249,929,600; moreover, 4 per cent. on a sum of $7,500 for twenty-five years, equals $4,000 per mile, or $11,348,000 making a total of $269,644,600. Now, as to the cost of the present contract: work done and to be completed, $28,000,000; money grant, $25,000,000; and 25,000,000 acres of land valued at $4.04 an acre, according to the valuation of the hon. member for West Durham, $101,000,000, making altogether the sum of $154,000,000, which the Pacific Railway would cost us according to the data of the hon, leader of the Opposition; this would still be $115,647,600 less than according to the Mackenzie plan. Now, setting the branch lines aside, the actual cost of the road, if we take the figures of the hon. member for West Durham, who, in this case, values the lands at $3.18 an acre, would be $132,500,000. Our 25,000,000 acres of land at $3.18 per zere, give $79,500,000. According to the Mackenzie plan, the main line was about the same as it is to-day, i.e., 2,627 miles; the Pembina Branch, 85 miles; the Georgian Bay Branch, 85 miles, and the 40 miles south of Callendar, making in all 2,837 miles; at $10,000 per mile, we have $28,370,000; 20,000 acres of land per mile are equal to $55,740,000, sub-divided as follows:—1st. 25,000,000 acres of land at $3.18, making an amount of $79,500,000; 2nd. 31,740,000 acres of land at $1.11 per acre—these are the figures of the hon, member for West Durham represent a value of $25,231,400; besides, 4 per cent. on $7,500, equal to $4,000 per mile, gives $11,348,000; or a grand total of $154,449,400. If we subtract from this amount, the price of the present contract, which is $132,500,000-always taking the figures of the hon. leader of the Opposition—we find that the country reaps the benefit of $21,949,400. Thus, the Mackenzie plan would have cost $154,000,000, whereas the present plan costs but $132,000,000, or $22,000,000 less than the plan

$6,000,000 is not so very great after all. But as we are not here to carry on a hustings' discussion, or to play upon words, but as we are ourselves desirous of satisfying ourselves that the vote we are about to record will be a just one, we wish to show that we are taking into consideration the interest of the nation at large, and that is why I give the hon. member for West Durham the benefit of the doubt when he says that 56,740,000 acres of land cannot have the same value, acre for acre, as 50,000,000 acres only. I with therefore estimate 36.740,000 acres of land at $1 an acre only and subtract $3,411,000, and I say that according to the Mackenzie plan, the Pacific could have even so cost us $18,000,000 more than we shall have to pay according to the present contract. Now, I have not included in my statement either interest or the other charges on this contract I am therefore perfectly in the right when I assert that the present contract is a more advantageous one than that proposed by the Opposition in 1874; that it is the best that has ever been submitted to this House, and that we must consequently accept it until a better one is shown us. What has most struck the public is that the road will forever remain the property of the Company. The hon, members of the Opposition, who are deploring the state of the country because we are going to vote this contract, must remember that in the statute of 1874 that it is stipulated that the road will forever become the property of the company, as is stipulated to-day. Moreover the hon. member for Lambton bound himself to sell two-thirds of the lands and pay the charges for transporting the immigrants which the Government was to settle on its lands, as well as the cost of maintaining immigration agents in Europe. I have already said that I valued at $100,000 per acre the expenses incurred by Government under that head. There was a still worse feature in the hon, gentleman's contract. If the Government wished to take possession of the road again, it was illegal to pay, not only the total amount which it had cost the Company, but 10 per cent. over and above, by way of profit, on the amount disbursed by the Company. In the contract before us, it is stipulated that should some difficulty arise between the Company and the Government, if the former could not build the road, or if something unforeseen should occur, we might settle these difficulties by arbitration. It now remains for me to ask of this House if the construction of the Pacific Railway will be an advantageous enterprise for the Canadian Confederation? I do not think there can be two opinions on this subject. The hon, members of the Opposition understand as well as I do the immense advantage there is for Canada in possessing this great iron highway. Moreover, the Dominion has pledged itself to construct this road, and the Government of a country is in honor bound to meet its engagements as well as any private individual. To quote the words of an Ontario newspaper, the principal organ of the Liberal party, when this road will be in working order, there will be a population of 1,000,000 in the North-West. According to the calculation that each individual pays on an average $6 of taxes annually, $6,000,000 will thus find their way into the public coffers. Even if one deducted $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 for the expenses of the government of this territory, there would still remain $4,000,000. Now what is there that remains for us to pay? $35,000,000. Are we in position to pay them? Could we pay them at once? Assuredly, since the Minister of Finance shows in his budget a surplus which makes us forget previous deficits. But we are only obliged to pay by instalments in conjunction with the progress of the work on the road. As soon as each section is completed, the country

Providence. The policy of the Government with regard to opening up the North-West is in strict harmony with the National Policy it has already inaugurated. A large population settled in those regions will give an impetus to the various manufactories in the older Provinces, by giving them an outlet for their productions. It has been said on the other side of the House that we could not consume all the articles manufactured in this country. Well, the population which will emigrate to the North-West will, in that respect, come to the aid of the population of the older Provinces. But what does the Opposition say? These gentlemen think themselves compelled to oppose every good measure, in spite of its excellence. They are in Opposition since so long that one might say that the nation wishes to keep them it statu quo. They complain that the Syndicate is allowed to import free of duty the materials necessary for the construction of this railway, such as steel fish-plates. I do not see that we lose much thereby; besides, these hon. gentlemen seem to forget that were the Government to construct the road, the same thing would take place. Moreover, steel fish-plates enter duty-free into the country. And again, one speaks of the security and of the monopoly, as if these two things could be reconciled together. If the hon. members think that the security is insufficient, they need not fear the monopoly; whereas, if they fear the monopoly, the security must be sufficient. But there does not exist any monopoly, there cannot be any, for it is stipulated that the Government will always be able to settle by arbitration all disputes that might arise with regard to freights and rates. The security is sufficient; $1,000,000 is deposited as such, and 10,000,000 acres of land are held back until the completion of the road. I repeat, that this is sufficient, and over and above the security demanded by the hon. member for Lambton in his contract. What is at present our position? I am here as a perfectly independent member; on the one hand I see that the Government has placed a contract on the Table, and on the other hand, a systematic opposition to it. and I am of opinion that a man must not follow a party in spite of all, but that he must not either fight it in spite of all; we must show our wisdom; we must prove ourselves serious and intelligent men; for if the House refused to vote the contract, and if His Excellency were to call upon the hon. leader of the Opposition to guide the destinies of the country, I ask if we should be in better hands, and I decidedly say not. The country has no faith in the Opposition; it has no confidence in the hon. member for West Durham, and I am of opinion that as no better contract is submitted to us than the one which we are asked to accept, that we should accept it without further delay. I will, therefore, vote for this contract in the name of my constituents, and because I consider it in the interests of my Province as well as of the whole country. This question, it must be admitted, has greatly stirred public opinion; indeed, I think that since the troubles of 1837, no question has so much agitated public opinion as that of the Pacific Railway. It has already caused much trouble to the country, it has been the subject of endless speeches, of numerous elections and of much excitement in the public mind. Tis time to put an end to all this. The country, after having tried several plans for the construction of the Pacific Railway, has come back, I am glad to be able to say, to the old plan of the much lamented Sir George E. Cartier, the blameless and fearless man, the distinguished statesman, the true and sincere patriot, who died on the other side of the Atlantic whilst fulfilling the duties of a statesman, and who now rests at the foot of Montreal's royal mount, close to that city which he loved so well. come back to his plan, and we may exclaim that Cartier's will begin to derive a benefit therefrom. Is it necessary to fellow-countrymen have not forgotten him, for his work has say that the West means prosperity for Canada; that in the survived him in the heart of every Canadian patriot. To day West lies our future; Canada will not be anything until do we remember it more than ever, and we can repeat, at the those vast regions are peopled. A population must be close of this speech, the sublime words he spoke in the divi-found to give to that country the position assigned to it by sion of Montreal East: "To the West! There are to be Mr. Bergeron.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It has been to me, Sir, a matter of deep regret that, from personal indisposition, I have not been able up to this time to take a part in one of the most important, if not the most important discussions which has taken place in Parliament since I have had the honor of a seat here. I have observed, Sir, that during my enforced silence some of my opponents, in the press and at public meetings, have ventured the expression of an opinion that I was afraid to meet the redoubtable warriors on the other side of the House. I think that after twenty Sessions of Parliament, in which I never failed to have the courage of my convictions or to take my full share in public life, it might have been taken for granted that, whatever happened, I should at least not be afraid to meet my opponents in debate. There is one thing, Sir, I admit I am airaid of, and that is, I am always afraid—I have never had the courage—to misrepresent the opinions of my opponents or misquote their speeches. I have listened to this discussion, or at all events to a large portion of it, with extreme interest. T e Minister of Railways has used my name very freely, as has my hon. friend who has just sat down. I counted about sixty-seven times that he used my name and then I gave it up as a bad job. But my name has been so freely used, and the Act I succeeded in passing in 1874 has been so often spoken of, that I felt, however unwilling and unable I might be to address the House, it was quite impossible that I should allow this debate to close without, at all events, a brief review of the position and the share I have taken in it, both as a member for a time the leader the Opposition and At the same time, I feel of the Liberal Government. compelled to say, and I do so without any party feeling, that I have observed in the speeches on this side of the House a close application to the merits of the scheme now before the House, and in those on the other side of the House a very careful avoidance of any discussion on the merits. It is true, Sir, very strong epithets have been sent across the floor from that side. Gentlemen who had no facts to elaborate, no defence to offer upon the merits, were not afraid of throwing rhetorical dead cats across the floor at their opponents. My two hon, friends on my right were classed as "aristocratic demagogues." I have so long faced demagogues of every kind, that I was not afraid of that, but when the hon. gentleman described them as "amative radicals," I felt that I must draw the line somewhere, and that we must part company. I do not know-perhaps the hon, gentleman does not himself know what the phrase means, but I took it to mean something terrible, something worse perhaps than "aristocratic demagogues."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very lovable ones.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Very lovable Radicals. Well, Sir, I admit that there is no one in the House who is more of an authority on the subject than the leader of the House, and I accept his explanation at once. On reading the elaborate and able speech of the Minister of Railways when he carefully left out certain explanations I think he was bound, as a Minister and as one of the leaders of this House, to make in reference to some extraordinary acts of their own, I was reminded of what is said of an English statesman, that:

"Nature designed him in her rage To be the Grafton of his age, But, after using all the sin, Forgot to put the virtues in."

While everything that was telling, from his point of view, against his opponents, was used with the greatest possible industry, and I am bound to say also with the greatest possible unfairness sometimes, there was nothing about his own connection and the connection of his colleagues with certain phases of this matter in the Act of 1872 to which he made the slightest reference. He was good enough at Montreal to characterize the member for West Durham as the great special pleader; but, Sir, a more specious kind of pleading than the hon. gentleman's own speech is not attainable by any person, either at the bar or beyond the bar. However, I have no particular fault to find in one respect with the hon. gentleman. A very large proportion of his speech—I should say a good half of it—was taken up by quotations from my speeches, and I was never before aware how excellent those speeches were until I heard the hon. gentleman deliver them with his fine, sonorous voice, and I think a great deal more of myself since I heard them. It is true the hon, gentleman misconstrued, willingly or unwillingly, both my motives and my speeches, and he was good enough to saddle upon me the responsibility for the entire Pacific Railway scheme from its inception to the present time. He was good enough, at the same time, to blume me entirely if blame there be for the Act of 1874. I will deal with the Act of 1874 later on, but my impression at this moment is that it was brought in and passed exactly as it is now; that the hon, gentleman and his leader and every one on that side of the House gave their hearty acquiescence to that Act in its present snape; that they moved no amendment, stated no objections, but accepted it as the policy of the country at the time; and, therefore, if there is any responsibility at all attaching to it which has any bearing upon the present discussion, which I deny, the hon, gentleman and his friends are as much responsible as we are.

Mr. PLUMB. There were amendments moved.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There were no amendments. There was no amendment to any principle of the Bill or connected with any point involved in this controversy. But the hon. Minister of Railways, a few evenings ago, in the very violent speech which he delivered on an occasion which he esteemed suitable for the purpose, declared with the utmost emphasis, folding his arms and looking round about him like Demosthenes, that he thought he stood in the most impregnable position with regard to certain contracts on the Pacific Railway, because up to this time no one had moved in condemnation of them. Of course, Sir, if he applies that principle of acquittal to himself he will not deny to me the same principle of action. If he feels that he is acquitted from all blame because no motion for condemnation has been made within some months—an omission which he may find rectified some day-how much more may I say that, after seven years have passed, it is rather too late in the day for the hon, gentleman to saddle me with any blame for the Act, chapter fourteen, of 1874 I desire, however, before proceeding to discuss the merits of that Act or the Act which it amended, to refer very briefly to my own position upon the railway matter. I observe that I have been charged in the leading organ of the Opposition, or rather of the Ministerial party,-I am in the habit of calling them the Opposition party because I think that is where they ought to be-

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is whore you would like us to be.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have been charged in their organ with lending my opposition to the scheme of last Session, because I was opposed to the settlement of the North-West Territory. Now, before I entered political life at all, before I had any privilege to speak as a representative of the people, it was my privilege as I felt it to be my duty, to take a very active interest in rescuing that country from the hands of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the party with which I was connected in public life invariably made that a leading plank in their political platform; and now, Sir, I can point out numbers of gentlemen who were willing at that time, as was the leader of the Tory party in Canada, Sir Edmund Head, to make that country appear worthless, and to oppose all our efforts to obtain some settlement, which would be a righteous one; and it was only when Canada became more powerful and her political interests were more properly represented in London, that we obtained such conditions as we did-an unjust settlement, so far as our payment to the Hudson Bay Company was concerned. I therefore felt, as I always did, and as I feel at this moment, the utmost possible interest in every measure which has for its object the opening up and settlement of the great north-western territory. While I do not believe in the extravagant statements of hon. gentlemen opposite, as to the extent and fertility of the soil of that country, I believed and tried to show that there was a very large amount of its territory more or less sterile. I knew there was a prodigious tract of land valuable for settlement by millions of people, which cannot but have a very important influence on continental politics, and upon every branch of human science and enterprise which ministers to the welfare of a nation; and I would be a very unpatriotic individual, did I use any efforts of mine, or apply any influence of mine, towards retarding the settlement of that country, or towards making its settlement onerous to the Dominion at large, and to those who become settlers in that country. Now, Sir, in pursuance of a general policy, which was accepted by the nation at large, I felt, after the Pacific Railway Act was passed in 1872, after the excessive terms granted to British Columbia, that, while I still entertained the same opinion as to the unwisdom of that arrangement, as to the extravagance of the bargain, as to the impossibility of executing the contract so undertaken, yet, I say, I felt bound to give whatever assistance might be in my power as a private member of the House and afterwards as leader for five years of the late Administration. But, Sir, while this was the case, I was bound, at the same time, by other considerations as a public man, which must necessarily weigh invariably with those who have assumed the responsibilities of Government. In the first place, the Act of 1872 enacted, as did the Act of 1874, that the scheme of union with British Columbia, that part of it which involved the building of the railway within the limited time provided that the railway should be executed only if the burdens upon the people were not in excess of the then existing rate of taxation. My hon, friend from Bothwell, a few evenings ago, in discussing the constitutional law applicable to the union of two nations, or, as in this case two Provinces, took as an illustration of the obligations resting upon the superior power, or majority in the united nation, the violation of the terms of Union between England and Scotland in 1707, and proved that constitutional authorities asserted that it was quite competent for the Legislature, which was composed of representatives of both Scotland and England, although the latter should be largely in the majority, to set aside Articles of Union which were considered after the Union to be unwise in their character. Now, while I quite admit that it would be competent for the Dominion Legislature, comprising, as it does, representatives from British Columbia as well as from other Provinces, to make changes that were not contemplated in the terms of Union, that they might to a certain extent, or perhaps to any extent, so far as any constitutional legality is concerned, set aside the conditions of Union between the two Provinces. I felt however that might be, that it would not be fair, in the large majority of this House and in the other House, to violate any of the provisions of that compact which could possibly be observed; and, Sir, whatever faults I may have had as administrator of the Government of Canada, one of them was not the shirking of obligations imposed upon me as a Minister and as a member of this Parliament so far as I was able with the means the nation placed at my command to carry these obligations practically into effect by legislation. I am not at all certain but that on several occasions I went to the very Mr. MACKENZIE.

extreme of what should be done in order to favor the people of British Columbia, and in order to maintain intact our own honor as a people On one occasion, which the hon. gentleman referred to, and some other hon. gentleman referred to, in a manner which I do not intend to notice, it will be remembered that about a dozen members of my own party declined to follow me in the division respecting the Nanaimo and Esquimalt Railway, and it will also be remembered, I hope with some degree of shame on the part of the Conservative members of the then House, that while the two leaders, the hon. member for Victoria, the hon. First Minister, and the Minister of Railways, voted to support the Government on that occasion, every man of their followers—was it by instigation of their leaders except the British Columbia members, voted against the building of the road from Esquimalt to Nanaimo, though every man of them was committed to the building of it, not only as far as Nanaimo, but to the Narrows by Bute Inlet, showing to what extent partizan hostility will be carried by gentlemen who have only the desire to serve party interests, even in connection with a great question like this. The hon, gentleman now at the head of the Government and the Minister of Railways were both well aware of the strong feeling in this House and out of it against even that compensation which I agreed to in my discussion with Lord Carnarvon, and every one of them, when asked privately, would sav "Yes; the Government ought to be supported." In fact, one of those gentlemen made a speech in which he declared that it should be given, and after the measure was passed made another speech saying that I had done right in the matter. But what became of all their followers. Why, Sir, every person knows the extreme docility, to use a very harmless word, of the supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite. If I am not wrong, Mr. Chairman, you yourself showed a remarkable instance of that docility a few evenings ago. You were good enough on that occasion to say that such was your affection for your leader, and such your confidence in his statements, that you were quite willing to accept his word instead of the production of documents of public interest to the discussion. Well, Sir, I have no doubt that there are a very large number of supporters of your views on that side of the House, but I say that if that is the case, in this matter a shake of the hon. gentleman's head, who knows how to shake it scientifically on such occasions, would wheel his supporters into line just as readily in support of my Nanaimo Bill as you did in supporting his refusal to produce parliamentary documents. Now, Sir, in pursuit of my object upon the assumption of office, I had to consider what could be done in this matter, and, with my colleagues assistance, we decided upon sending a mission to British Columbia, to endeavour to obtain their cordial assent to such modification of the terms of Union as we felt might be desirable, the existing ones being wholly impossible. For the first two Sessions, I am pretty sure the Minister of Railways rather supported me in those efforts: and the third and fourth he and his friends found out that they were not under any obligation to keep the terms with British Columbia at all—that it was never intended, although the Order in Council so stated it, to build the road in ten years and commence it simultaneous in two. At all events, when we assumed office some months of the third year had elapsed and the road was not even half surveyed. Only a very small portion of the country had been trodden over by exploring parties, and we were left to fight the battle as we could with British Columbia, and with a general hostile minority in Parliament bent upon embarrassing the Government in endeavoring to give effect to their own policy when they were in office. Now the Minister of Railways, and every one from him down to the member for Beauharnois, in their speeches, have taken shelter under the Mackenzie Act of 1874. They have not attempted to show that this is a good Bill of theirs. except, indeed, the member for Provencher (Mr Royal), He, indeed, boldly asserted, instigated thereto, it is said, by certain threats of what would happen in that country if he and other members of that district ventured, at this moment, to oppose the Government—however that may be I do not know—but such is the current rumor—that this was a good Bill. But the hon. gentleman was so logical as to say this, although the terms of the Act provides a special reserve of 15 miles along the entire boundary of the Dominion, where no hostile company can place a rail, that this was not a monopoly. But he goes further, and says if it is a monopoly it is a blessed one, for which the First Minister ought to be thanked by every person in the Dominion. The Minister of Railways says, no doubt in reference to this, in one of his speeches, like the member for Provencher, that there is no monopoly; but assuming there is, there is a way to evade the monopolists by carrying your wheat down by way of the Nelson River and shipping it among the ice of the Hudson's Bay, round by the coast of Greenland, to England. The hon. gentleman was far too modest; he should have remembered there was another way of escape by the Mackenzie River; and it is said that the Arctic Ocean round Behring's Straits is open for as much as three weeks in the year. Here is a blessed relief to be found in the far north, to which I invite hon. gentleman's attention, then. Who forgets the admirable arrangement made by the gentleman who held the post of High Joint Commissioner for Canada at Washington when he procured for us the free navigation of the Yukon and Porcupine in return for his abandonment of millions' worth of claims we had an account of the Fenian raids. It is true, we had the navigation of those rivers before; but, as the hon. gentleman did not know that, I think he is entitled to credit for having got the privilege again, and we ought to use it diligently as a way of escape from the part of the Peace River district as well as by the Mackenzie River and Hudson's Bay Straits. What was the nature of the attempts hitherto made to obtain the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In the first place there was the famous contract entered into with Sir Hugh Allan, which was something like the present contract in this respect,-that it was a company of capitalists under Sir Hugh Allan, who intended to provide a financial scheme under which contractors would be obtained who would undertake the actual construction of the work, they receiving among themselves the general profits which would come to the managers of the enterprise-not the profits of the actual construction of the railroad. The Minister of Railways sometimes refers to my speech in Sarnia, in November, 1873, where I referred to the Government being able to retain the profits of the undertaking for itself-my allusion being to such profits as would come from the financial arrangements, and not to those properly coming to the constructive company organized by Sir Hugh Allan and his associates. In 1872 they passed a remarkable Act, authorizing the Government to do certain things —the Act respecting the Allan Company; and as soon as I entered office I felt that, at all events, that Act in its then shape should be removed from the Statute-book. I have no doubt but that some hon. gentlemen, and notably the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House, will be surprised to learn that the Act of 1874, under which they all shelter themselves, was not an affair of contracts at all; it was simply a basis for receiving tenders, beyond which the Government of the day could not go; but it was more than that, so far as the money and and grants were concerned, it was a continuation of the Act of the hon. gentlemen opposite passed two years before. It was not our proposal to give held that the first thing required before giving a $30,000,000 and 54,000,000 acres, but that of the present Minister of Railways and his leader, as embodied in the Act of 1872. My Act of 1874 was in mitigation of that Act, to the North-West Territories. At the time that we provide that we should not go so far as it went. Instead of giving 54,000,000 of acres unconditionally into the hands of the Allan, or any other company, we proposed that only one-third of 20,000 acres of land per mile should pass into the hands of the contractors absolutely; that two-thirds of that amount should be dealt with by the Government of the day, and the proceeds of the sales paid over to the company. The Act of 1874, therefore, was a great improvement on that of two years before. Yet there is not one gentleman I have yet heard, on the opposite side, who has referred, for one instant, to the Act of 1872 as that which originated the lands and money proposals which were somewhat changed in the Act of 1874. But there were other conditions in the Act of 1872 of the most extraordinary character. I objected to them at the time as unprecedented in their character. The 14th section of that Act reads as follows:

"The company with which such agreement as aforesaid is made may, with the consent of the Governor in Council, surrender its Act or Acts of incorporation and accept instead thereof a charter, to be granted by the Government, embodying the agreement, so much of this Ast, and such of the provisions of its Act or Acts of incorporation, and of the Railway Act, modified as mentioned in the next following section, as may be agreed upon by the Government and the company, and such charter, being published in the Cana's Gazette, with an Order or Orders in Council relating to it, shall, in so far as it is not consistent with this Act, have force and effect as if it were an Act of the Parliament of Canada."

I doubted then, and I doubt now the constitutional power of this Parliament to delegate to anybody, even to a committee of its members such as the Government is, the power to enact statutes which shall have the force of laws passed by this Chamber. But such, Sir, was the provision, two or three times repeated, of the Act of 1872. It was quite impossible, with our views of legislative and administrative authority, our views of public and political morality, that we could permit any such power to be vested in any Government while we had the power to repeal it. We therefore introduced the Act of 1874 in order to set aside the granting unconditionally of 54,000,000 of acres of land and making such other conditions as are embodied in that Act. Instead of giving $30,000,000 we gave $10,000 per mile (or proposed to give it), and this grant we extend to all portions of the line; and after we had obtained a complete survey of the line, we were to advertise publicly for tenders on the conditions presented in that Act, and submit those tenders to Parliament for ratification and acceptance. After this had been done and Parliament had expressed its will, then we should have not only fulfilled all the conditions of our pledges, but fulfilled the conditions which constitutional laws demanded, and we would have vindicated our position as Reformers by reforming an Act which was so bad in all its features. But, Sir. notwithstanding all the bad features of this Act-bad in the sense of being over favorable to the contractors-Sir Hugh Allan failed when he went to England with his deputation; he failed to find a single responsible individual in the character of a financial contractor who would touch the scheme as it then stood. It may be said, if that was the case when 54,000,000 of acres and $30,000,000 was granted, why are they so ready to enter into an arrangement on the present terms? I will endeavor to Under the Act answer that question presently. 1871 we never gave out any contract except that of Mr. Foster for the Georgian Bay Branch, and we never attempted to do the work until we had the surveys completed, and were able to present a complete profile from end to end of the line. But we took this precaution, and I think the hon. Minister of Railways repeated part of my speeches in reference to this particular matter; we came into office it required from two to three weeks for emigrants to travel, with the waggons or carts which were then in use, from St. Paul—which was at that time the western limit of railway travel—to Winnipeg; and after reaching that point they had to gain further access into the country by such unsatisfactory and comfortless means as were then at their command. we left office, five years afterwards, we had a railway penetrating from the north-western States to the boundary, and from the boundary to Winnipeg; we had 228 miles of the road nearly finished through our own country, and such improvements had been made in public works as would, with the improvement in the navigation, have enabled us in another year or two to turn a large share of travel through our own territory into the prairie region. In 1877 we advertised for tenders, after being able to give as full information as was possible regarding the profile of the road, the features of the country, its geological, agricultural and mineral character, and such other information as might be of interest to those who in England and elsewhere were examining the character of the Great Lone Land. During those whole five years I was subjected, by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, to the bitterest hostility in connection with every step I took in this work. I was met by the most factious opposition on almost every occasion. Even when I asked the consent of the House for power to facilitate the giving out of the contracts and the proceeding with the works between Fort William and the Red River, the permission was given grudgingly, and I think, on one occasion, only after an amendment had been moved. But when hon, gentlemen came into office there was a complete change in their opinions, and I am glad to notice that since his accession to office the hon. Minister of Railways has taken back almost every accusation he ever made against me in connection with every possible subject. In the first place, though the Government of the hon. gentlemen opposite provided in their contract with Sir Hugh Allan, that the Thunder Bay Branch should be finished by December, 1874, when we undertook to construct that branch we were accused of treason to the best interests of the country; we were accused of acting in combination with Yankee railways, to carry traffic out of the country. With regard to that subject I may make the remark, that I would never scruple, as a statesman, to take advantage of crossing a corner of my neighbors' territory, if, by so doing, I could obtain the shortest and best route into my own property. This was the view which was taken by all the statesmen of the United States; for several of the railways crossing Canada at this moment have been built—notably one of them—by United States money. We ourselves, under the guidance of the hon. the First Minister and his former colleagues in a former Government, gave the Grand Trunk Company authority to lease or purchase the road through the State of Maine, from our boundary to Portland, in order to obtain access to the best harbor on the Atlantic. There was no cry then against building that line or against acquiring it. It was only when it became advisable in the interest of party—those party exigencies, which, according to a journalist on the other side of the House, justify making a wrong statement, and not correcting it afterwards-those party exigencies justified hon. gentlemen opposite in opposing the building of the Pembina Branch, although immediately after coming into office they took care to have it perfected as speedily as possible, and it will be for years to come, under their arrangement, the proper and only highway into our own territories in the North West. Well, the hon. gentleman also accused me of improvidence. He made insinuations as to something worse in the purchase I made of 40,000 because we were endeavoring to give effect as far as it could tons of steel rails. He said I purchased them when they were not wanted, and during the very last session of my dom of debate in Parliament. Even where a party has Mr. MACKENZIE.

incumbency as a Minister, we were assailed with statements that these rails were lying in heaps rusting here and there throughout the country. But the hon, gentleman was not six mosths in office when he rushed to England and bought 40,000 tons again, exactly duplicating my order and following precisely my example. He says, that he made a better bargain than I. I deny that. He bought them at a less price, but, relatively to the prices prevailing then, he made no better bargain than I. I obtained them only by the proper method. I might refer, if the hon. the Minister of Railways will pardon me for doing so, to some of his latest feats in connection with railways, out of the North-West. At one time the hon, gentleman and his colleagues sent a corps of surveyors to examine the route from Sault Ste. Marie to Lake Nipissing. They ordered that survey immediately prior to our acceptance of office in 1873. Did they mean that this was to be thrown away, or did they mean, when they sent men to examine that road, that they were to build it, if the report was favorable? I invite an answer to this, before this discussion is closed, because, if they held then what they hold now and proclaim to the public, namely, that it is treason to Canada to build to the Sault Ste. Marie, to connect with the United States roads through Michigan, then were they traitors at that time, or have their views of constitutional morality since changed? That the hon. Minister of Railways announced again that he has completely changed his views; but, if he does, we must remind him that even last Session he was favorable to this project. In 1.79 the hon, gentleman brought a measure into this House, providing for the purchase of the Rivière du Loup Railway from the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and he made it a condition in the purchase, that the company should use the money paid them for the branch, in building a road through part of Michigan; yet, now he and his associates are horror stricken at the idea of our using or proposing to use, in order to save a vast expenditure of money which will be practically thrown away, a road to the Sault Ste. Marie, to connect with a straight line towards our own territory, through Michigan. I am afraid these facts will tell so strongly against the hon. gentleman, that he will have very little to say in support of his various professions at various times; or if he has, I should like to know on what principle he defends the elucidations of his contradictory views in 1872, 1874, 1879, 1880 and 1881, consecutively, and see in what extraordinary mess he will land himself and those who act with him. I remember, also, that the hon. gentleman and his friends—and I do not blame them for it—sent a corps of engineers in 1873 within a month of the time they left office; in fact, they had left office before the engineers had obtained a passage through the Ste Marie River, and I am told as the party in question was, as usual, strictly Conservative, they were in a great hurry to get the steamer to leave the Sault in case they should be recalled by the new Government. This party was sent to examine the country from Fort William westward. The hon, gentleman afterwards accused me of treason to the country because I adopted the line from Thunder Bay westward, instead of going to that beautiful place, Nepigon. The hon. gentleman's newspaper in the first place accused me of being interested in favor of Nepigon when I selected that route, and afterwards accused me of having a special interest in favor of Thunder Bay when we decided to go there. It was impossible to take a step in the execution of Pacific Railway work without being opposed by hon. gentlemen opposite in what I conceive to have been a most unfair, not to say unpatriotic, manner. I admit that our actions as a Government were not to be freed from criticism, originated a project it may be carried out wrongly, and therefore I did not expect any freedom from criticism; but I did expect that in matters that hon gentleman opposite originated we ought not to be saddled unjustly with any odium that might be attached to it, and as little did I claim any credit that might be attached to the various schemes to which I have referred. I observed by the way-and I make the remark simply in passing—that a few months ago the Government were said to have decided that Fort William should not be the terminus on Lake Superior, but I observed in this contract that Fort William is the terminus. How does that happen? Has the Syndicate dietated this as well as other matters? If they have, they have shown their wisdom in a geographical as well as a political point of view. I am glad to see that the hon gentleman changes so rapidly. Why, his changes of views are like the changes in a kaleidoscope; you shake it up in a few months and present another set of figures and forms altogether. I am not altogether blaming the hon, gentleman for changing his views in many respects, because I claim the liberty to change my own views. I do not for one moment blame him, that the reports of his engineers led him to a different conclusion from what he had previously entertained, because I found myself almost every year compelled more or less to change my views from having obtained a better knowledge of the country. I was in haste, Sir, to get the line defined across the continent. I was in haste to do whatever the Dominion might find it in its power to do, not merely to sustain the bargain with British Columbia, but to obtain knowledge of our vast country, and to do everything in my power to facilitate the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, always subject to the one condition, that we should not immerse 4,000,000 of people in debt in order to carry out an impossible bargain. But, Sir, in pursuit of that view, I, on one occasion, approved by Order in Council of the route being carried down the North Fraser to Fort George, believing then that, beyond a doubt, the route either to Bute Inlet or Kamsquat would be selected, the latter by Dean's Channel being far the shortest; but subsequent examinations showed the grades upon it to be so heavy, and those on the southern line to be so favorable, that I abandoned the line from the summit level to Fort George, and selected the Burrard Inlet route at the west. Such were the changes involved in the acquisition of more. knowledge and in consequence of explorations undertaken by the two Governments. Now, Sir, I have shown that the Act of 1874, about which so much has been said on the Ministerial side, was simply one limiting the Executive power. We offered no person the terms the hon. gentleman mentioned in his speech; we passed a public Act to say that it would be upon such terms that tenders would be received. If one tenderer said he would take 10,000 acres in land and $10,000 in money per mile, we would, as a matter of course, accept that tender, if it was the lowest; if another said he would take 15,000 acres in land and $15,000 in money, we would accept that if it was the lowest; subject, of course, in all cases to the approval of Parliament. Now, what are the conditions of the present bargain? The conditions are extraordinary. In the first place, the Government must be aware that under no law have they a right to receive tenders without advertising for them. The only law which can apply to the Government's action is my Act of 1874, and it provides in the 8th section that "the works in any section or sub-section of the said railway shall not be given out to any contractor or contractors except after tenders have been received for the same." Now, in this case the Government had entirely changed their policy. The Statute I have quoted provided $10,000 per mile as the limitation in money and 20,000 acres as the limitation in limitation in money and 20,000 acres as the limitation in land. That was practically the same as was provided in the Minister of Railways says they are worth the Act of 1872, though a little less money and a little less than in 1875. After our having spent nearly hand. The hon, gentleman in his speech made them more, and for that purpose misrepresented the figures, whether wilfully or not I do not know. But hon, gentlemen last year went to England, taking with them the project embraced in the hon. gentleman's resolu-tions. They reported through their newspapers that great success was attending their efforts. They came home, however; and they were not able to report any success to Parliament. Their mission was a palpable, utter fail-ure. Then, Sir, during last recess they went home again, and we found reported in the papers from time to time the wonderful success that was attending them. They came home, and the First Minister announced at Hochelagathough that announcement has been qualified since that he had made a firm contract with parties in England. What right had he to make a firm contract? He might have made a conditional agreement that he would submit to Parliament. But what are the terms generally of this new agreement? What was proposed previously was $30,000,000, or $10,000 a mile. That was the limitation to which Parliament restrained Ministers, and in our advertisement for tenders in 1877, we provided that whoever undertook the contract of building the line should receive as part of the $30,000,000, the amount expended upon those provisional contracts, between Red River and Lake Superior and between Selkirk and Pembina. In this case they undertake a bargain, which, by their own showing, involves an expenditure of $53,000,000. Without having consulted Parliament, without having the slightest authority to do it, they enter into a contract, and have that contract signed, to expend $53,000,000 where Parliament had limited the expenditure to $30,000,000. What justification was there for this, Sir? Why should a contract be made with these parties or any others? If it had been known that the Government had determined to increase the grant from $30,000,000 to $53,000,000, do you suppose that they would be wanting in applications to obtain the contract? Sir, any person possessed of ordinary intelligence and the slightest spark of official knowledge, must have known that it would have been the easiest thing in the world, with such terms as these, to obtain offers, in a greater or less degree, more favorable than the present. But, in addition to increasing the grant by $23,000,000, and, mark you, although we have heard almost everything in connection with this matter denied. no one has denied that they have made a grant of 25,000,000 acres, to be selected where these parties please. I have read—I read six times to-day—the Minister of Railways explanation of this at Montreal, where he accused my hon. friend from West Durham of misrepresentation. I am not able to see the misrepresentation. I read the provision precisely as my hon. friend (Mr. Blake) read it, that they have absolute power anywhere; for the words are: "in the fertile belt or elsewhere." If they draw a general line on the map, and call it a branch railway, upon that general line they may set out the blocks of land. We are told by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) that the fertile belt only extends from the 49th to the 57th degree of latitude. Where does the 57th degree of latitude extend to? The Peace River flows through the Rocky Mountains to the 56th degree, and the 57th degree is 70 miles north of that, and within a very few miles of the northern wheat growing limit on the continent. Some of the rougher grains were grown 150 miles north of that point, but I am not aware of any wheat being grown more than a few miles north. It is said there is some grown 80 miles north of Dunvedin, near the bend of Peace River. We have 25,000,000 acres of select lands given the Syndicate. It is a point of moonshine to put them at the low price named by the $20,000,000 in getting a highway into the and bringing it within three days of the the country Ontario settler-after lessening the expense by two-thirds of getting into the country-how it comes that the land is worth less than before, is a mystery "which no fellow can understand." It may be said, but you put an extravagant value on your side of the House on these lands. I put no value on them at all. I took the hon. gentleman's own value, which he never stated at less than $2 an acro; he said, in his speech in 1875, that the relative difference of taking the lands as they come and selecting them was $3 an acre; that if taken in alternate sections they would be worth $2, but selected lands $5. Oh, yes, if he had the selection himself—well he has got men not less acute than himself—give him the selection, and I as a public man would as soon leave the selection with him as the Syndicate so far as the country is concerned. I believe he would not give them all the best, but see that something was kept for the boy as his friend in Toronto would say. Another feature of this scheme strikes me with some degree of astonishment. Why was all this secrecy observed, no Minister has ventured to state a single reason for it? Was the thing so good that they were afraid of a multitude of offers being made if they published the terms? If that was not the reason why not tell it? Why afraid of Parliament? Why afraid of the people? I cannot believe, I will not believe, that such secrecy could be observed without some motive for it. Motives good as well as bad. If the motive was a righteous one, I promise to give full credit for it. If the motive was not good, it may still not have been malicious; it may simply have been a senseless one. It is one or the other. It is either good, wicked, or stupid. They were bound as every Ministry is bound to give the effect to the desires of Parliament. They had those desires exposed in an Act which they allowed to remain two years on the Statute-book without repealing. They knew Parliament would not readily consent to double the expenditure without at least sufficient reason; and in face of all this knowledge they go to England and make a bargain which proposes the building of the road upon the terms of these resolutions. Now I am anxious to see the road built, but I am not able to discover one redeeming feature in that scheme. I desire to point out not merely what I have said about the extraordinary secrecy observed, but about the extraordinary provisions that could not possibly have been unforseen by the hon. Minister of Railways. I give the hon, gentleman credit for being as acute as most men, and as sharp no doubt in attending to the affairs of his department, if he looks into them as he should. Will he tell me, then, why the first 100 miles of road west of Red River, which he stated last year would be built for $500,000, was not left in the hands of the contractor, or why, if taken out of his hands, the Government did not finish it themselves instead of giving it to the Syndicate and paying them for it this extravagant amount of $10,000 per mile? The money alone paid for this 100 miles is far more than the entire cost of the road, as stated by the Minister of Railways himself; yet he gives 12,500 acres per mile in addition thereto. What was the necessity for this? Is it possible to see any reason for favoring the Syndicate? If there is any other reason I would be glad to have it, for it seems to me the very worst feature of the scheme, as showing the want of talent, sharpness and business capacity—to say nothing worse—which marks this extraordinary contract; and after the hon, gentleman's speech wherein he recapitulated fairly from speeches of my own and others, the opinion that there was a general desire that the road should be in the hands of a company and worked by a company, why was it thought necessary for the Government not merely to finish the hard non-paying sections, which had already been commenced, but to undertake to finish pinety more miles of the hardest kind? Is it possible to conceive for this any other motive than what I have already referred to? Why did the Syndicate not obtain the building of those 90 miles, and why did we not retain the building and saishing off of the 100 miles on the prairie? There are $1 miles built there already, I am told, and trains are running over 60, the rails being laid over 80. This is by far the easiest 100 miles of railroad ever built in Canada or that will ever be built in any country in the world.

Mr. PLUMB. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I will wait till the hon. gentleman talls ma where there is a cheaper or easier road possible.

Mr. PLUMB. I can tell the hon. gentleman that there are depressions in those prairies which compel filling up and differences in grades. The prairies of Michigan and other States have no such difficulties. I can tell them also there are muskegs to be dealt with, though he may not know it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I was a little too well informed in the matter to be corrected by my hon friend opposite. If he says there are extraordinary depressions in those 100 miles, I must say he was not in that region, and has not studied the reports of the engineers. So much, Sir, with regard to the building of the various parts. I could quite understand why the Minister of Railways might desire to finish the section between Fort William and River—as it is so far on, it might, perhaps, be better for the Government to finish it—but I could understand still more readily why the line under contract and barely begun, between Kamloops and Yale, should be given to the Syndicate, they to pay back to the Government what the Government have expended upon it. That would have been a wise and understandable proposition. But instead of that, the Government not merely retain this extremely difficult part, the worst part of the entire line, but they also undertake the building of 90 miles of the next most difficult part to be found, instead of giving it to the Syndicate to build. They declare, in one breath, that it is desirable that the Government should get rid of this work, and entrust its construction and its working to contractors, and at the same time they undertake to build as much themselves as they will be able to accomplish during the entire time the Syndicate are accomplishing their part. What is the use of the Syndicate at all? If the Government are to continue to build entirely, from he beginning. I may say 217 miles of the worst part of the road, what is the use of employing a Syndicate to build the other portions? could build them all at the same time, and if, instead of doing what the hon. gentleman has done, he had brought in a proposition of that kind it might be considered. have remarked, some hon, gentlemen—the member for Provencher—defended the scheme upon its merits. He declared that there was a monopoly, but, if there was a monopoly, it was a good thing, it was a favorable thing for his constituency and for Winnipeg.

Mr. BOYAL. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon gentleman is not ashamed to say "hear, hear."

Mr. ROYAL. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I can only say I do not understand the hon. gentleman's speech, his logic or his position. How it can be good for any country to have no competition in railway carriage passes my comprehension. There is a tract of fifteen miles, a sort of preserve, over which the Syndicate may run their lines in a south-easterly direction, but if any other company gets a charter to build a road, they must cross that and go in a south-westerly direction, but they must always keep fifteen miles from the boundary lamp posts. What is the object of that? I can quite understand that the settlers in the district at the base of the socky Mountains, in the fertile district known to exist road, but they say no settler, settled at the base of the Pacific Railway, on our side, shall have the right to cross those fifteen miles to connect with a road in the United States territory. I am unable to understand why this should be the case. The road is to be built, as I understand it now generally, on the line laid down south of Lake Manitors, passing near Fort Ellice, and by Battleford and Edmonton to the Yellow Head Pass, that being the objective point on the west up to the Rocky Mountains. I am to understand that all the railways which may be built by independent companies on the north of that and which would tend naturally southeasterly, must stop when they come to the fifteen miles, if they are foolish enough to cross the track of the Syndicate's road. That is the proposition. But the Syndicate themselves are able to make connection with United States roads wherever they please. There is no hindrance to them. I am prepared to discuss the principle, that no Canadian road should have any connection with any road in the United States. I am prepared to discuss this phase of know-nothingism, this phase of protectionism, this phase of international stupidity, if it is brought before us in a proper shape. But I am not prepared, because I cannot conceive why it is so, to discuss the question, why a certain body of men should be privileged to make the connection and all others refused. Why is it? There must be a reason. What is the reason? Why has Parliament not been favored with these reasons? Are hon, gentlemen afraid to take Parliament into their confidence, or do they believe that in this Parliament they are able to carry any measure they like, no matter how repugnant it may be to common sense and morality? Do they expect to find every member as pliant as the member for Monck, who is very loud in the corridors, but as pliant as a sucking dove in the House? He thought—he was not sure, but he thoughtsome propositions in this contract might possibly be improved, but he was willing to take it on trust. There is no member in the House for whose sound common sense and good judgment I have greater respect than for that of the member for Monck, and I am sure when he made these qualified admissions, and gave his qualified support to the proposition before us, he must have had before him the extreme danger of allowing such a measure to become law at the expense of the defeat or support of a political party. Then we have the other question of grades. It is now asserted, and a letter has been produced to-day from three members of the Syndicate, to say that the standard of the Union Pacific as first constructed will be given up, and that the real standard now will be the Union Pacific as completed in 1873 or 1874. Still, if that is the case, it is a matter of not the slightest consequence in the argument.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Before recess I was about to allude for a moment to the question of grades, and to the letter which has been put in from certain members of the Syndicate, intimating their willingness to have the condition of the Union Pacific Railway in 1878 substituted for the present words of the contract. It is not a matter, I think, of material consequence, inasmuch as the maximum graties on the Enion Pacific are far in excess of saything that to the House to they, resterated the same idea, that ought to be on the Canadian Pacific Railway. One of the it is a matter of no consequence, although a standard along the base of those mountains, might find they were objects I myself kept steadily in view, and to which the neares a profitable market by going southward to the hon Minister of Railways alluded and gave me credit for, Northern Pacific railroad or some other railway in the was maintaining a grade not exceeding twenty-six feet United States and finding a connection there. The hon to the mile on the line for heavy freights coming eastward gentleman knows that at the present moment the supplies or forty feet going westward. Now, I think it will be an for the Canadian troops, in that quarter, all go that way, exceeding great calamity if the degradation—to use a phrase what dehroment than solves are taking advantage of the line should proposed so far as is gentleman knows that at the present moment the supplies or forty feet going westward. Now, I think it will be an for the Canadian troops, in that quarter, all go that way, exceeding great calamity if the degradation—to use a phrase The Government themselves are taking advantage of the introduced last year—of the line should proceed so far as is proposed in taking the Union Pacific as a standard. The maximum grades of that road, if my information is correct, and I believe it is, are not less than eighty feet to the mile, and that not over a short but over a very considerable distance. An hon friend beside me says it is ninety feet in some places. I am aware that it is botween 80 and 90 feet, and I take it at 80 feet. But at all events, we know this, that with grades of even 70 feet to the mile, an engine will not be able to do half the work it will be able to do on grades not exceeding 26 feet. On the Great Southern road in our own country the maximum grade is under 20 feet, and on that road one of the ordinary powerful engines used for drawing freight is able to take from 40 to 25 loaded cars. I do not speak from hearsny, but from an actual count of cars on the road. That enables the road to carry freight either cheaper or else it pays a great deal more than other roads. The result of heavy grades on the Canadian Pacific will be this: if the Company or Syndicate charged only ordinary rates upon freights, that is the ordinary freight per bushel, they would not be able in that case to earn enough to pay expenses; they must, in order to pay properly, charge double what would be the rates on a road with the grades I have mentioned. And as the Syndicate will, as a matter of course, run the road so as to pay, it follows that although the rates may not seem excessive considering the quantity of grain or the product the cars can carry, they will be excessive considering the quantity they ought to be able to carry, if the grades decided on by the late Government were carried out over the road. The Minister of Railways last Session antiounced it was the intention of the Government to degrade the line. He announced that it was part of the Ministerial policy to make high grades and sharp curves in order to build the road cheaply; but a road is not built cheaply merely because it can be turned out of hand for a certain number of dollars less than was expected at the beginning because it is very soon made up by the difference on the freights charged to the people of the country through which it passes. I look, therefore upon the standard of the Union Pacific Railway as one that is wholly unsuitable, and one that it will be a great calamity to adopt. The hon. Minister of Railways said, in his speech, that the grades between Selkirk and Thunder Bay upon the new pieces of road, the cost of which has been cheapened by some changes, are not affected. I was very glad to hear that; but what about the grades east from Thunder Bay. That road is to be built by the Syndicate under this contract. Are they bound—they are not bound -to have the same grades as are between Selkirk and Thunder Bay, and what is the use of having good grades for 400 miles if you have bad grades for 650 miles eastward of that point? It is evident that portion will cost a great deal more for working than that portion will cost that was designed under the late Government, and is approaching completion under the present Government. In my opinion it will be far better-I give my opinion for what it is worth to expend more money in building a road and have it so constructed that it will carry heavy freight either towards the Atlantic or Pacific at the lowest possible rates charged upon railways. It is said by some hon, gentlemen on the Ministerial side, it is enlarged upon in the press, and members of the Syndicate who have addressed a letter to the Government, which was presented

has been set up, as it is the interest of the contractors to make the road a good one and a satisfactory one for the traffic. Well, it might not be of much interest provided that otherwise the contract were satisfactory. The contract should be so made that it will be in the interest of the Syndicate to make good grades and curves, but unfortunately it is not so. Under the contract as it is, there is an excessive amount allotted to the prairie section, which could be constructed for one-third or one-fourth of the amount given, showing what the intention of the Government is. There is nothing I can see to prevent the Syndicate building the cheapest parts of the road and the parts that will pay best, and I observe they are the parts to be built first, and abandoning other portions of the road; and the Syndicate exists for the purpose of making money. The guarantee given in the form of land bonds in the hands of the Government, is a mere trifle compared with the money that would be saved in the construction of the road, and with the money that is to be made from rates that are afterwards to be charged. It so happened that on no line yet surveyed to the Pacific has there been such an opportunity as we had for obtaining favorable grades from Burrard Inlet all the way to Lake Superior; further than that it is not my purpose to go, because I believe we can obtain communication eastward during the winter season by a line built to Sault Ste. Marie, connecting with the American lines at Emerson, or some point on the boundary, and at Ste. Marie River. In connection with the building of the road, there is no efficient system of inspection provided for. There is nothing to prevent the road being built in almost any style, except one clause, which provides that if any of the material used shall be objected to, the Government may demand an arbitration to decide whether it is right or wrong. So, if there are a few cartloads of bad, mossy earth dumped into an embankment on the north shore of Lake Superior, we have, in the first place, to apply to the contractors to name an arbitrator. If they do not agree to do so, we must apply to the judge of the Superior Court to name one for them, the Government appoint another, and those thus appointed to agree upon a third. These three arbitrators are supposed to go, I presume, in a special chartered steamer, and after they land to get a full equipment to take them across the woods, to the place where the supposed dereliction of duty has taken place. This will take the greater part of the summer, and when they get there they will find that the road has been built for miles on each side. This provision is an absurd and unpractical one, and one cannot help thinking that it was designed by the cunning contriver of this Bill—I do not know whether he is present, but I believe he is not far from the sound of my voice as a very efficient preventative against the Government having any interference in the construction of the road. One of the very bad features of the contract is this—I do not intend to enlarge upon it, but merely to mention it—the relieving of the Company from all taxation upon their lands for twenty years. It will be their interest to retain a very large portion of these lands around which settlers may be clustered, in order to obtain the value necessarily put upon these lands additional to their original value by the labors of the settlers, and there is nothing more obnoxious in principle than having exemptions from taxation prevalent in any country. There has been a considerable agitation in the Province of Ontario, and I am quite sure many gentlemen on the Ministerial side of the House have taken part in that agitation—I know some of them have—to prevent even the present exemptions, which are confined to churches and to buildings of religious orders in the Province of Outario. Those exemptions may have something to justify them, but there is nothing to justify Mr. MACKENZIE.

large a portion of the public money in order to enable them to build the line and hold those lands. I know, Sir, from experience in my own county how this results. One of the townships in my own county was owned entirely by the Canada Company. They sold certain portions of the lands, but I have known blocks of thousands of acres, round which settlers were on almost every lot, and the property kept from sale for many years until it had risen from the price which they paid for it, one shilling per acre, to $10 to $20 per acre. This price was entirely the result of the labors of the settlers, while they only contributed the ordinary pro rata of taxation to the municipal corporation. But there we have a vast amount of lands, six millions of acres in excess of the entire area of Scotland or Ireland, provided with an exemption of taxation, where we expect large numbers of settlers to cluster, and these interests will prevent the settlement of hands in that quarter. The exemption also from customs dues upon all the material required for constructing the road is a most obnoxious one. This is an exemption from taxation to the Dominion Government, the other exemptions are to the Provincial and Municipal Governments of the North-West. In order to have our municipal system uniform, the laws in force in other portions of the country, should be enforced in the North-West also, and in order to have our Customs laws fairly and regularly carried out no corporation should be exempted from their just operation. If the terms to be given to this Syndicate, or to any other syndicate, for the building of the road are not sufficient let us make them more, but let there not be any adding to their income by any such extravagant proposals as to exempt them from taxation. I observe that the Minister of Railways, in one speech of his, said the entire exemption from Customs duties would only amount to a hundred thousand dollars. As I saw no detail of that calculation I am unable to say where it is wrong, but that it is wrong there can be no question or doubt; and if it is not any more than a hundred thousand dollars, he had better write another letter to the Syndicate to send another letter back declining to accept this hundred thousand dollars, and that they submit to the ordinary taxation that other people submit to. My own impression is that with the materials required for bridging, chains, iron, bolts, rails and other materials this exemption cannot be worth less than two or three millions. I do not see how it is possible it can be otherwise. We know the number of steel rails now on hand and the number that will require to be provided. We know the number of miles required to be covered and the number of tons for each mile. We know the number of tons of bolts and nuts for each mile. We have an idea of the duties paid upon the bridge material brought into the country, and any one can sit with a profile and plan of the road and make out the number of bridges, the cost of each bridge, or, taking the Intercolonial Railroad, they can find out the cost of bridging per mile, and so find out what the amount of duty which might be collected would reach. There is no doubt some basis by which we can arrive at the amount. But whatever the amount may be, be it one hundred thousand or five millions, the application of a wrong principle is the same, and must meet with the condemnation of all those who desire to see all classes of Her Majesty's subjects submit to equality in the administration of the laws.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the hongentleman would he tell us how much the duty would amount to on the bridges on the 400 miles from Thunder Bay to Red River, there not being one single pound of iron in his specification. All wooden bridges and yet that is a first-class road.

something to justify them, but there is nothing to justify Mr. MACKENZIE. In considering that road I explained the exemption from taxation of the property of a great repeatedly to the House that my object was to get the read railway company, which has obtained and will obtain so built as cheaply as possible, having regard to the gradge and curves alone, and that the bridges were temporary. But the hon, gentleman cannot pursue a similar line with a Syndicate having to build the entire road. We did not put up iron bridges, but we did not have to pay for them. Does he mean to say that under the present arrangement we are to build the road with wooden bridges?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has again and again declared and took credit for it, and that credit has been accorded to him, that he had provided for a first-class road from Thunder Bay to Red River, and he surely could not ask the Syndicate to provide a better road than the one which he has pronounced first-class.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It appears that the Syndicate are only to build with wooden bridges. I am glad we have that information; this is the first we have heard of it. Yet we are told, in the same breath, that it will be in the interest of the Syndicate to build a thoroughly substantial and good road. I have repeatedly stated that the life of such timber, as we can find it in that country, is not likely to be more than from eight to ten years. I consider that in the bridging of that part that is spoken of, from Selkirk to Fort William, it would be better to use wood in the first place, even if we had to replace it with iron at that distance of time.

Mr. PLUMB. I said it was shown by the special committee of investigation in regard to these contracts that the timber could not be found nearer than the head waters of the Mississippi.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do not know what bearing that has upon the point. That is a question of where to find timber, not the question as to bridging at all. It was our intention to put an iron bridge over the Winnipeg, and I presume the Government had carried out that intention. I presume no wooden bridge will be built across the North branch of the Saskatchewan-certainly I never thought of doing that. Now, the evidence accumulates as this discussion goes on, that the character of the road is to be even worse than any one supposed it would be. What are we to pay a high price for if we are to obtain the worst class road? If we were building it ourselves and found it convenient to save money, even for ten or twelve years, I could understand it; but here we are paying what is acknowledged to be a very high price to a body of speculative gentlemen who expect to make a large amount of money by the venture, and we are asked that they should be treated precisely as the Government would treat itself if it was constructing a temporary road through the country. Last year the hon, gentleman avowed that his policy was to build the road, following the contour or profile of the country as nearly as possible, and making rather a colonization road, as his engineer counted, than a first-class railway. I admit something can be said for that. In my opinion that would be a great mistake. I think it would be far cheaper to make a good road at the beginning, even if we made a loss every year and had an efficient track for trade, one that could be coffducted more cheaply than anywhere else. That would be my policy, but I admit there would be something to be said if the Government were building the road, to build it of the cheapest possible construction, even if an engine could only do one-third of the work for a time. That may be the case. I am prepared to discuss that when it comes up and to state my reasons. But now we are in the face of the world at large, and the public of the Dominion, giving a larger amount of money by $30,000,000 to this Syndicate than ever was proposed before, and allowing them, also, to select lands which never was allowed before, in every part or any part of the North-West Territory they choose to go to. The arrangement is so wide there is no hindrance, and yet we are to accept for that the most inferior road in every way that can be described or that is to be found on this offer but the one now before the House, burdened even with continent. We are first permitting them to have grades reaching 90 feet to the mile, and we are to permit them to have sharp curves. In addition to that, we have now, it seems, to permit them to have cheap wooden structures crossing rivers, no matter how large, and besides that all the privileges to which I have adverted—a perfect monopoly of the entire trade of the west—and as the only means of escaping that monopoly, or of avoiding the claws of this spider that is placed over that territory, we are supposed to escape between its claws down to the Hudson Bay if we can, or by the Mackenzie River if we find other ways impossible. Now, why should we do this? Why, if $30,000,000 is to be paid by the Government, should not the public at large be advised of the changed condition, and the new intention of the Government to double the money that was previously offered, and obtain an offer on that bases? What is the reason for hiding it? What is the reason that in that vast territory—comprising, as the hon. gentleman told us last year, 250,000,000 acres of arable lands, containing room for many millions of people-what is the reason that we are asked to give a monopoly of the carrying trade of that country to this corporation? What is the reason that we are, further, to allow them to escape all municipal and provincial taxation in this new country? Previous to the formation of those Provinces, which are now in process of formation, what right have we to anticipate what their legislation shall be for twenty years to come in the matter of taxation? Are we to tell them that certain parties may go into their territory, and we shall enact here, by a special law, that those parties shall not be subject, for twenty years or more, to any taxation at their hands, no matter what the consequences? Are you to advertise this to the world? Are you to expect immigrants to come from the other countries, especially those that have felt the grasp of landlordism upon their throats, to come into a country where everything is placed absolutely at the disposal of this powerful body of Syndicate speculators? Sir, I can only say, that if that is the intention of the Government their Bill could not be better framed; if it is not their intention why does some Minister not speak upon the merits of the case? Why not tell us that this was kept secret for a State purpose not yet revealed? What was the purpose? This House has a right to information. Are we to be asked blindly to sanction a scheme that has never been explained to us? Suppose the hon, gentlemen opposite were to make out the case that they try to make out, that I proposed to somebody some mysterious myth in 1874, more lavish terms than these. If I did so subject me to Parliamentary censure of any kind you like; subject me to expulsion from Parliament if I proposed anything dishonorable or wrong. But does that make you any better, does that make your scheme right if mine was wrong? The fact is, the terms in the Act of 1874 were not mine at all; thou art the man. Before I adopted those terms I declared that the terms in the Act to be found on the Statute-book should not be allowed to any contractors who should undertake that work; that they should be modified, as they were modified, and it stands unrepealed to this day in the Act of 1874. Give us the reason why 15 miles of territory should be set apart as a preserve for this Company, across which no hostile company should dare to plant its rails? What is the reason for all this? There must be some reason, then why not give it to us? It must be the object of the Government-I assume it is their object—to get this work done in the cheapest possible manner. If that is the object why not give us full explanation as to the reason for giving such extravagant terms to this Company. If they had published the bare facts to the world that they propose to give $53,900,000, to assume their own figures, and to allow the parties to select 25,000,000 acres of our best lands, if they published this and found no all the terms I have alluded to, then I could understand the ground upon which Ministers would appear before Parliament and ask its sanction. But these terms were never made known to the public. The press of the country, the universal public voice of the community, demanded it before Parliament met that this should be done. Why was it not done? Was there an object in keeping it back? And if there was, what was that object? Let the hon. Minister be frank, and if they can show me that they tried by open competition, after announcing the terms and the exemptions from taxation by state, province and municipality for such a length of time to come, and forever in some cases; if, after having shown all these conditions to the whole public, they failed to get an offer, then I can understand their coming here. But they have no right to come here. They have taken tenders illegally, and they are now asking the sanction of Parliament to a scheme, so expensive and so scandalous in all its relations to the country and to the Parliament, that I am astonished that the hon. Minister of Railways would venture, bold man as I acknowledge him to be, to defend that scheme by merely reflecting upon another enactment made years ago. In this country the march of events are rapid. Seven years ago, the Act of 1874 was placed upon the Statute book; nine years ago the Act, of which it was only an amendment, was placed in the Statute-book by hon, gentlemen opposite. They failed to get a single offer, or rather, Sir Hugh Allan failed to get a single offer, and the reason was very obvious; the land was thought to be of comparatively small value. But since then, the late Government, with the general concurrence of Parliament, expended a large amount of money in making a way into that country; and to say now that the land is worth what it was in 1872, when they passed the Act giving $30,000,000 and 54,000,000 acres, after our expenditure to reach those lands, I can only say then I pity the intelligence of the men who would give ear to such an extraordinary story, yet that is their sole ground of justification. They say: "Well, it may be bad, but it is the best thing we had; it may be bad, but you offered in 1874, by your amendment to our Act of 1872, to do so and so, and because you did that we are right in doing this thing in this hidden, dark, mysterious way, in order to burst upon Parliament when it met, with the demand that it should be ratified within ten days of the meeting of Parliament." Such are the terms of this proposal. I regret, as I stated when I commenced my speech, that my strength will not permit me to criticize fully in detail the various parts of the scheme which invite criticism, but that has been done to such an extent by hon. gentlemen around me that I feel it would not be fair, either to myself, to you, or the House, which has extended to me so much indulgence, nor to my hon friends opposite, who made an effort to get me an early hearing this afternoon-for which I am much obliged-that I should venture upon the discussion of the matter at a much greater length. But allow me to say before sitting down, that I am glad to find that over the entire country a feeling of repugnance to the terms submitted in this contract by the Government is rapidly growing. I am satisfied, if the hon. member for Niagara is not, as he seemed not to be, with the expression of public opinion which is finding its way to this House, either in the reports of public meetings, the reports of trade associations, or in the petitions to this House, that never within our memory has any question submitted to Parliament within three weeks elicited so much unfavorable opinion as this measure has to the present time.

Mr. PLUMB. You are thankful for small favors.

Mr. MACKENZIE. My how friend will find that the shows I am thankful for are much larger than he thinks. Some hon MEMBERS. O My hon friend's vocation is to depreciate everything he is opposed to, and magnify everything he likes, including the gentleman's honor whatever. Mr. MACKENZIE.

men he serves at present; but he will find there is a public opinion which will make itself felt in this country. If the ground we have taken is wrong, then we will suffer; if the ground the Ministry has taken is wrong, they must bear the consequences. But I venture to say that I never knew a more hearty, vigorous, almost unanimous expression of opinion than that which is finding its way before the public at present. I have at this moment a telegram from! a leading merchant in Montreal, informing me of the proceedings before a large representative gathering of the Corn Exchange in that city this afternoon, where resolutions were carried demanding the prosecution of the road by the Sault Ste. Marie, demanding the giving up of the line north of Lake Superior, and condemning the terms of the contract which gives a monopoly to this particular Company. We know from the public reports that eminent men on both sides of politics are, at this moment, preparing offers to the Government of a much more favorable character than those that are now before it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear." Let us know the fact; let those names be produced if there is such an offer made; let the names be compared, one by one, with those of the men of the present scheme, and I venture to say if you are not satisfied with them, that by announcing your determination to the country to-morrow to receive tenders upon a fair and equitable announcement of the intentions of the Government, we will save many millions by that advertisement. Hon gentlemen must not think to shelter themselves from the wrath of the country behind any alleged wrong doing on my part, or any alleged legislative mistakes on my part. That will not shelter them. They ought not, besides, to attach so much importance to any thing I did. The hon. Minister of Railways on two occasions, apologised to the whole public for having ever said that I possessed any ability. I accepted his retraction and I was glad not to incur any praise from that quarter; but it suits him now to attach sometimes a little importance to a man whom he considers destitute of all ability to meet him in public, and now it seems, from the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, as if there was nothing on earth standing between them and destruction, but Mackenzie and Mackenzie's Act of 1874. Well, they will find there is a public opinion in this country, which will be aroused. I hope that, whatever may be their intentions, and I assume them to be the best for the country, that having heard the discussion which they have heard, and I venture to say that no legislative leaders ever heard a more exhaustive discussion than they have listened tonot from me but from those around me—on the terms of this bargain, and having heard the competent opinion of many leading men of the country, they will not persist in asking this House to proceed with this measure. And if they should, I hope that Conservative gentlemen on that side of the House will bethink themselves of their duty as members of this House more than as supporters of the Government. So far as the fortunes of the Opposition are concerned, nothing could happen them better than that every man opposite should vote such a measure as this through Parliament. But, in a matter of such serious import, party feeling must give way to patriotism, and I tell them frankly I would rather give up the party advantages and have the scheme submitted in such a shape as would command some reasonable amount of support on the Ministerial benches of a frank independent character, not the half and half support given to it by the hon. member for Monck, nor the kind of support given to it by the hon. member for Provencher, who was evidently arranged with after coming to Ottawa. Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I make no allusion against the hon, gentleman's honor whatever.

An hon. MEMBER. How do you explain it?

Mr. MACKENZIE. There are many influences that can be brought to bear upon an hon. member that I know nothing of.

Some hon, MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. ROYAL. I would like the hon. gentleman to state what influences he means.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I believe, Sir, that the hon. gentleman expressed himself as being hostile to the contract. Is that so or is it not?

An hon. MEMBER. That is not the point.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is it true that the hon. gentleman expressed himself in opposition to the contract?

Mr. ROYAL. Never, Sir.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say in his speech that both he and his people were hostile to it.

Mr. ROYAL. I never said so inside the House or out of it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then I was under a misapprehension. I understood that the hon, gentleman said so.

Mr. ROYAL. It is unfortunate that the hon, gentleman misunderstood me so much. I know that the hon, gentleman does not sympathize with my opinions but that is no excuse for his misunderstanding my motives.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The reasons which the hon. gentleman may have urged in support of his opinions I have a right to criticize, and I have a right to critieize his remarks as a public man, but if my remarks implied anything else I withdraw them. I have not the slightest desire to ascribe dishonorable motives to the hon. gentleman. But I was about to say, in conclusion, that I cannot believe that the hon. gentlemen on the Ministerial side of the House, any more than those on this side of the House, can see any grounds which would justify them in passing without any amendment whatever the proposal which has been submitted to the House. But whether they do or not, it will be my duty as a member of this House, acting for myself and on my own behalf though acting with other hon. members around me, to offer every possible opposition that is of a legitimate and parliamentary character, and to take my own way of expressing to the people what I conceive to be the very serious and sad mistakes which are to be committed in the name of the progress of the North-West country, but against the interests of that country and against ourselves for all time to come. The mere pecuniary loss is a serious one—one which it will be difficult for us to bear. It will impose on us an amount of taxation which will be most serious and onerous. But when we come to consider the monopoly which the ratification of the contract will create, the provision respecting rates, the prevision respecting the character of the road to be built, the provisions in connection with almost everything that can be managed in the contract, they are of a character that I look upon them as being much more serious than even the many considerations to which I have alluded. Nothing that can be said by hon. gentleman opposite can remove the impression that this has not been wisely done, and that measures ought to have been taken to obtain better offers if they could be obtained, or at all events of attempting to secure them, before the House and the Government and committed themselves to so iniquitious a measure as this.

Mr. DAWSON. The question flow before the House has been so fully discussed that it may appear as if no new light could be thrown upon it, still, it is a subject in which all the constituencies will look to their representatives for an expression of their opinion; and, as a general rule, it is to be supposed that every member will express, so far as he can, the views of his constitutents; and notwithstanding all that has been said, I believe there are some points connected with this great question which, at least in my opinion, do not appear to have received, so far, the attention which they deserve. The project of having an all-rail route from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in British territory, is, no doubt, a great and a statesman-like one, and most of the hon. members who have preceded me, seem to coincide in this. but there is a wide difference of opinion as to some of the details, and the propriety of our undertaking the whole of so great a work at one and the same time. It has been very eloquently and ably claimed, on the part of the Opposition, that the section running through the Rocky Mountains to British Columbia might be left in abeyance for the present, and that instead of building the eastern section to the north of Lake Superior, we should content ourselves with a line running to Sault Ste. Marie, there to connect with the American system of railways. It is to this eastern section that I shall first invite the attention of hon members. For my part, I am in favor both of a line to the north of Lake Superior and a branch line to Sault Ste. Marie. As the project is now before us, it is proposed to commence the eastern section at Lake Nipissing, on that portion of the line which, for a considerable distance, will be common to both routes; and, in so far from what I have heard in this House, it should meet with the approval of all parties. The Sault Ste: Marie Branch is a line regarding the expediency of building which there can be no doubt. It will pass through a country in general well adapted for settlement, and it would connect with American reilways, and thus be the means of bringing an immense traffic through the country to enrich the cities of Ontario and Quebec. A charter has already been obtained for building this branch line, from the Legislature of Ontario, and the Dominion Government has pledged itself to aid in its construction. I have no doubt that Ontario will see the expediency of aiding it as a colonization road, seeing that it will be wholly within Ontario, as she has aided and is aiding other lines calculated to promote the development and the settlement of the country. She has derived vast revenues from the territory of Algoma, through which this line would pass, and it would be a graceful act, on her part, to assist in the construction of this branch line through a region to which she owes so much, and for which she has, as yet, done so little. But, to leave this subject for the present—and I shall have something more to say about it before concluding—I would remark, in reference to the country to the north of Lake Superior, that a great deal of misconception seems to exist regarding it. I have heard it described in this House as a barren wilderness which could never be regarded as likely to yield traffic for a railway, as a region of rock and swamp, with a climate so unfavorable as to preclude the idea of its ever sustaining a considerable population. But all this has been said merely to point an argument or adorn a tale. It is much to be regretted that people should not inform themselves better before venturing on such sweeping assertions. It would be amosing if the subject were a less serious one, to hear gentlemen who have come from the rock bound coasts of Ireland, or the mountains of Scotland, denouncing a country because of its mountains and rocks. As a general rule in broken countries the valleys are of exceptional richness, and the vast region lying to the north of Lake Superior forms no exception to the general rule. As to climate, it is not so inhospitable as many of the hon. members who have addressed this House have been led to suppose. It is true that the information we are possessed of is somewhat scanty, but we have enough to convince all who are willing to be convinced, that to the north of Lake Superior there are very considerable areas well adapted for agriculture, that wheat grows wherever it has been tried, that barley and oats give abundant returns, and that potatoes and garden vegetables come to perfection very much farther to the north. The general elevation of a country above sea level has a good deal to do with its climate, and the average height of the country at and about the watershed north of Lakes Huron and Superior may be roughly estimated at about from 1,400 to 1,600 feet. The lands in the river valleys are, of course, considerably lower, but it is the general elevation over great areas that determines the climate. In this high region experience has already shown that the climate is not unfavorable to agricultural operations. The employees of the Hudson Bay Company at all their stations grow such cereals and esculents as they raise elsewhere, and the Government of Ontario has laid off several townships at the Pic and Nepigon, where the land is remarkably good and its excellence proved by the abundant crops which it yields; and both these places, it will be observed, are at the extreme northern bend of Lake Superior, close to or beyond the 49th parallel of north latitude. beautiful regions of the North-West are very far to the north of that, and at a very much greater elevation, but it suits some hon, members, in order to strengthen their argument, to depict them as a sort of agricultural paradise. But, admitting that the summers are rather cool immediately to the north of Lake Superior, the railway line touches on another region of which enough has come to light to show that it is capable of sustaining a large population. It passes near Brunswick House, on the waters of the Moose River, and at that place wheat has been successfully grown, but that is not to be wondered at seeing it is in the latitude of Paris. On descending the Moose towards James' Bay the country rapidly decreases in altitude, and for some two hundred miles we have a region spreading out to the east and west at only a moderate elevation above sea level. It is a level country and its general altitude may be from 800 to 1,000 feet less than that immediately to the north of the great lakes, and this of itself would be equivalent to two degrees or more of latitude. This may be supposed to be a mere theory of mine, but I have facts at hand to sustain it. A climatologist in exploring a new country would, as a matter of course, ascertain the temperature of the rivers and lakes at different seasons, and by doing so would be able to form some idea of the average temperature of the air. Lake Superior, as is well known, is an exceedingly cold body of water, its depth being such that it is affected but little by the heat of summer or the cold of winter. Its temperature, in fact, a few feet beneath the surface, is always that at which fresh water has its greatest density, or something under 40 degrees Fahrenheit. This is a very low temperature for the summer months, and the consequence is that the climate of the country on the immediate borders of Lake Superior is considerably colder than the elevated region a little further inland. I was long under the impression that the water of Hudson's Bay, from all that we had heard of that great inland sea, must be at least as cold as that of Lake Superior, but we have now clear evidence to the contrary. Professor Bell, in the official reports of 1877-78, says, in reference to his exploration of the southern sections of Hudson's Bay:

"During our journey up the coast and back, in the months of July, August, and September, we enjoyed very fine weather the most of the time. There was very little rain and only two or three days of fog. The time. There was very little rain and only two or three days of fog. The prevailing winds were from the southward and the temperature was warm and pleasant. The superiority of the weather over that of Lake Superior was a subject of frequent remark among my 'voyageurs' who had been accustomed to that lake all their lives. We saw no ice, with the exception of a little 'bay ice' at the commencement of our journey, which had been driven into the neighborhood of the mouth of Moose River after northerly winds had prevailed for many days. I took the temperature of the sea upwards of twenty times during our voyage, which extended over the greater part of July, August, and September, and found it to average 53° Fah. I also neted the temperature of the rivers which we visited, and found that of the average of five of them to be 61° Fah. We bathed in the salt water almost daily, and found the temperature agreeable."

He then gives a table of temperatures both of the sir andwater, remarking that:

"The Fahrenheit thermometer was used and whenever the sea happened to be calm the instrument was lowered to a depth of three or four feet below the surface.'

The result of these observations was that he found the average temperature of the water to be 53° (Fah.) while in regard to the temperature of the atmosphere and the climate generally, he remarks as follows :-

"The average temperature of the air between the 11th of July and the The average temperature of the air between the 11th of sury and the 21st of September, from the above observations, would appear to be 62½° Fah. which is very nearly the mean temperature of the rivers; while the average for July and August would be 65½°. As most of these observations were taken in the morning or the evening and as the nights were generally warm, owing to the prevalence of southerly winds, this is perhaps not far from the true mean temperature for these months, and it perhaps not are from the true mean temperature for these months, and it is only  $\frac{3}{4}^{\circ}$  above the average of the mean temperatures, for these months, of ten principal stations from Halifax, N.S., to Fort Simpson on the Mackenzie River. On our return to Moose Factory in the end of September, we found that there had been no frost there all summer, and the most tender plants such as melons and cucumbers, beans, balsams, tobacco, the castor-oil bean, &c., growing in the open air, were still quite green and flourishing.'

This does not look at all like the description of a sterile region, either as to climate or soil. Speaking generally of the country, Professor Bell says:

"In my report for 1875, I gave a general account of the soil, &c., in the region between the Great Lakes and James' Bay. Following the cance-route from Michipicoton to Moose Factory, the country is more or less rocky as far as Missinaibi Lake (that is, a lake just beyond the water-shed at the head of the Moose River), yet even in this section the proportion of rock-surface to the whole area may be comparatively small. But after passing the "Swampy Grounds," north of Misssinaibi Lake, the traveller cannot fail to be struck by the abundance and the general fertility of the soil exposed in the banks of the Missinaibi and Moose Rivers all the way to Moose Factory.

"It consists mostly of a brownish, somewhat gravelly loam or earth, resting upon 'till' and sometimes upon stratified clays or the solid rock, which (latter) however is seldom seen, except at the principal rapids and falls.

"But in the central third of the section between Lake Superior and James' Bay, or from the Brunswick to the Long Portage, a light colored clay usually forms the surface. I examined the country for a mile or two back from the river in several places, for the special purpose of ascertaining the nature of the soil, and found it excellent in all cases, but tending to become more swampy in receding from the river in the Devonian region below the Long Portage.

"Samples of the soil were collected in a few places for subsequent examination.

"In traversing such a great extent of almost unbroken wilderness, one is apt to forget the possible value of this vast region for agricultural purposes. But the examples of the farms at New Brunswick House and Moose Factory show, upon a small scale, what might be extended over a great part of the country. I have no doubt that at some future time this territory will support a large population."

But we need not confine ourselves to Professor Bell's reports exclusively, for the Ontario Government has obtained a good deal of valuable information regarding this wide region, and I shall now read a few extracts from a work. prepared under instructions from that Government. In the work to which I refer the portion of the territory north of the Lakes, north too, I should say, of the height of land, is described as follows:-

"The district included within these boundaries is of equal, if not of greater, area than the whole of the rest of Ontario, exclusive of the Lakes Ontario, Superior. Huron and Erie. Omitting those lakes, the Province, within the limits embraced in the proposition of the Dominion, contained about 64,000,006 acres, or 100,000 square miles of territory. From the Quebec boundary line—from Lake Temiscamingue to James' Bay—to the Lake of the Woods, the distance cannot be much less than. 700 miles; while, measured from north to south, the new territory covers a breadth of country varying from over 300 to 100 miles. The Province of Ontario will consequently, in future, possess an area of fully 200,000 square miles. This is 80, 00 square miles greater than the area of the United Kingdom; only 12,000 square miles less than the whole German Empire; only 2,000 square miles less than France; and equal to the combined areas of Holland, Portugal, United Italy, Switzerland and Belgium. The awarded territory, alone, possesses an area greater by 20,000 square miles than the group of countries just named, excepting Italy." "The district included within these boundaries is of equal, if not of

The same authority goes on to supply information as follows: -

"Professor Macoun, in his report to the Dominion Government, after repelling the current opinion that the northern shores of Lake Superior are unfit for settlement on account of the severity of the climate, and remarking that 'the vegetation around Lake Superior is noted for its luxuriance,' thus describes the aspect of the country in the vicinity of the Kaministiquia:—'As the traveller proceeds up the river, roses (Rosa blanta) begin to appear. By the time two miles are passed, black-sh (Frazin's sambucyjolia) shows on the banks, and the undergrowth becomes almost identical with that of the rear of Hastings and Frontenac on the shore of Lake Ontario. A few miles further, and forms peculiar to a dry soil begin to take the place of those seen further down, while the alluvial flats along the river support a most luxuriant growth of just such plants as would be seen on any river bottom in Eastern or Central Canada. Thickets of wild plums (Prunus Americana), three or four different cherries, gooseberries, currants, raspberries and strawberries grow in profusion, interspersed with various species of Viburnum and other caprifolaceous plants. The herbaceous ones were very numerous and luxuriant, and these, including the wild pea (Luthyus venosus et ochrocolencus) and the vetch (Vicia Americana), caused such tangled thickets that was almost an impossibility to force our way through them. Wild hops (Hum·lus Sapulus) climbed up almost every tree. For the whole distance up to Kakabeka Falls there was a constant influx of new species having a westward tendency. Between Kakabeka Falls and "Professor Macoun, in his report to the Dominion Government, after new species having a westward tendency. Between Kakabeka Falls and the mouth of the river I detected 315 species, all of these natives of Hastings except eighteen.' Professor Macoun adds:—'I could see nothing in the flora to lead me to doubt the feasibility of raising all the nothing in the flora to lead me to doubt the feasibility of raising all the cereals.

"The Rev. George (now Professor) Grant, in his popular work, says of the same district: - The flora is much the same as in our eastern Provinces; the soil light, with a surface covering of peaty or sandy loam and a subsoil of clay, fairly fertile and capable of being easily cleared. The vegetation is varied, wild fruits being especially abundant, raspberries, currants, gooseberries, and tomatoes; flowers like the convolvulus, roses, a great profusion of asters, wild kallas, water lilies on the ponds, wild chives on the rocks in the streams, and generally a rich vegetation. It is a good country for emigrants of the farmer class. The road, too, is first rate and the market is near.' 'The Valley of Kaministiquia,' he goes on to say, 'is acknowledged to be a splendid farming country. Timothy grass was growing to the height of four feet on every vacant spot from chance seeds. A bushel and a half of barley, which was all a squatter had sown, was looking as if it could take the prize at an Ontario Exhibition.' Thirty years before Professor Grant's visit, Sir George Simpson had been equally struck with the evidences of fertility of ths region. He says:— 'The River (Kaministiquia) during the day's march passed through forests of elm, oak, pine, birch, &c., being studded with isles not less fertile and lovely than its banks; and many spots reminded us of the rich and quiet scenery of England. The paths of the portages, were spangled with violets, roses, and many other wild flowers, while the currant, the gooseberry, raspberry. plum, cherry, and even the vine, were abundant. All this bounty of nature was, as it were, imbued with life by the cheerful notes of a variety of birds.'

"Proceeding westward with Professor Macoun, we find him referring were abundant. All this bounty of nature was, as it were, imbued with life by the cheerful notes of a variety of birds.'

"Proceeding westward with Professor Macoun, we find him referring in the following terms to the Valley of the Mattawin. At the Mattawin, vegetables of every description were growing luxuriantly, but more especially timothy hay which seems to be peculiarly suited to the region round Thunder Bay. Many of the stalks were four feet in length with heads fully eight inches long. After passing the Mattawin the soil changes to a reddish clay, but there is no change in the vegetation. The flora of the region indicates a moist climate, with a sufficiency of warmth to bring seeds in all cases to perfection."

All this, be it remarked, is in the howling wilderness, the desolate region north of Lake Superior; but we have other evidence of fertility in that country, for settlements have already sprung up along the Kaministiquia, where the people find no difficulty in raising wheat and all other sorts of farm produce in a fertile plateau, over 400 feet above the level of Lake Superior or 1,000 feet above sea level. Still further to the north, on the slope beyond the height of land, we have further extracts adduced as evidence by the Government of Ontario of the fertility and beauty of the country. From these I have culled the following:

"Professor Macoun, speaking of his visit to the district, says:—'The approach to Fort Frances is very beautiful. As we approach the outlet to the lake and enter Rainy River, the right bank appears very much like a gentleman's park, the trees standing far apart and having the rounded tops of those seen in open grounds. Blue Oak (Quercus Princs var. discotor) and Balsam Poplar (Populus balsamijera), with a few aspen, are the principal forest trees. These line the bank, and, for two miles after leaving the lake, we glide down between walls of living green, until we reach the fort, which is beautifully situated on the right bank of Rainy River, immediately below the falls. All sorts of grain can be raised here, as well as all kinds of garden vegetables; little attention is given to agriculture but enough was seen to show that nature would do her part if properly assisted Barley, three feet high, and oats over that, showed that there was nothing in the climate or soil to prevent a luxuriant growth.

The length of the river is about eighty "Professor Macoun, speaking of his visit to the district, says:- The

The right bank, for the whole distance, is covered with a heavy miles. The right bank, for the whole distance, is covered with a heavy growth of forest trees, shrubs, climbing vines and beautiful flowers. The Indians say the timber gets larger as you proceed inland. The forest trees consist of oak, elm, ash, birch basswood balsam, spruce, aspen, balsam, poplar, and white and red pine. The whole flora of this region indicates a climate very like that of Central Canada, and the luxuriance of the vegetation shows that the soil is of the very best quality. Wild peas and vetches were in the greatest profusion; the average height was about six feet, but many specimens were obtained of eight feet and upwards. I and vetches were in the greatest profusion; the average height was about six feet, but many specimens were obtained of eight feet and upwards. I took a stroll inland and found progress almost impossible, owing to the astonishing growth of herbaceous plants. The following plants were observed on Rainy River, and are only an index to the vast profusion of nature's bounties in that region: Lilium Canadense. Lilium Philedelphicum. Vicia Americana. Calystegia spithamea, Calystegia sepium, Aralia hispida. Lobelia Kalmaii, Smilacina stellata. Lathyrus venosus, Lathyrus ochrolencus. Monarda fistulosa Viburnum pubescens, Astragalus Canadensis, Erysimum chieranthoides, Asarum Canadensis and Lopaulthus anistatus.'

"Writing of the Rainy Lake region. Sir George Simpson's description agrees remarkably with that of Mr. Macoun, just quoted. Sir George Simpson says:—'From Fort Frances downwards, a stretch of nearly 100 miles, the river is not interrupted by a single impediment, while yet the current is not strong enough to retard an ascending traveller. Nor are the banks less favorable to agriculture than the waters themselves to navigation, resembling in some measure those of the Thames, near Richmond. From the very brink of the river there rises a gentle slope of green sward, crowned in many places with a plentiful growth of birch, poplar, beech, elm and oak. Is it too much for the eye of philanthropy to discern through the vista of futurity this noble stream connecting, as it does, the fertile shores of two spacious lakes with crowded steamboats on its bosom and populous towns on its borders?''

But taking the region further to the east there is a very easy route to Hudson's Bay, by way of Black River, which enters Lake Superior at its great northern bend just opposite the Slate Islands. By this route the distance is only 175 miles to a point on the Kenogami River whence the navigation is uninterrupted to Hudson's Bay, and of this section the authority from which I have quoted, goes on to say:

"With the exception of a few rocky ridges and knolls in the upper part of the river, the country through which the Kenogami flows to join the Albany River, is uniformly level. Terraces or banks of brown loam and gravelly earth from ten to forty feet in height are to be seen all along the Kenogami and around Pine Lake, sometimes close to, and at o hers a short distance from the banks The soil in the neighborhood of the river is good. The timber is principally spruce, balsam-fir, white cedar, tamarac, white birch and aspen. Some of the larger spruces and tamaracs have been found to measure as much as from four to five feet in girth, at five feet from the ground, but the average diameter of the trees is about eighteen inches."

In another place it is stated:

"If or the whole course of 250 to 270 miles to the sea, the Albany i from twenty to thirty chains in width, from five to twenty feet (averaging about eleven feet) deep, and has a mean velocity of three miles an hour. In the opinion of Mr. Bell, the river would, except in very low water, be navigable by powerful steamers of light draught all the way from its mouth to the Falls. At Martin's Falls is a Hudson Bay post, 'where hay, turnips, and potatoes have, for a long time, been successfully cultivated, and cattle thrive well.' The river is open, as shown by the journal kept at the post for six months in the year."

And the writer goes on to say:

"With one sweep of 270 miles, the distance in which any interruptions to an unimpeded traffic occur, is thus reduced to less than 200 miles between the great inland lakes and the ocean, and there does not appear to be anything in the nature of the country to make such local improvements as may be needed to facilitate travel or the carriage of freight unreasonably expensive.

I shall quote one more passage from this most interesting work, and when my friends on the Opposition side of the House learn the name of the gifted author of the work from which I have quoted so largely, they will, I am sure, attach due importance to all that he has said. It was written for the Ontario Government by Mr. Dymond, a former member of this House, and I may take this opportunity of complimenting him on his great industry, his judicious selections from other authors, and the very pleasing and interesting way in which he has put the whole together. Speaking of the Great Moose River, he says, chiefly on the authority of Professor Bell:

The islands and mainland about the mouth of the river, consist of alluvial earth well suited for cultivation. Farming and garlening have been very successfully carried our at the Hudson Bay posts at Lake Mattagami and Missibini. At Missibini spring wheat has been grown and turned out well. The climate becomes moderate as the slope towards James' Bay is descended, the lower level being a compensation for the increasing latitude. The red and white pine are both found in the neighborhoods of Mattagami and Kenogamissee Lakes, and also at Lake Missinibi, but not further north. Indications of mineral deposits of present themselves at various points on the route, and large deposits of gypsum occur on the Moose, near James' Bay. A specimen of lignite from the main Moose River gave the following analysis:—

	Slow coking.	Fast coking
Fixed Carbon	. 45 82	44.03
Voluble combustible matter		41.39
	Slow coking.	Fast coking
Water	. 11.74	11.74
Ash	. 2.84	2 84
	100 00	160 00
Ratio of voluble to fixed combustible	., 1,16	1.06

The lignite is very similar to some found in the Souris Valley, and also to specimens collected for analysis from the neighborhood of Dirt Hills and Woody Mountain, in the North-West Territory. An analysis of ore from a large deposit on the Moose, at the foot of the Grand Rapid and below the Long Portage, has yielded 52.42 per cent. of metallic iron

I shall not weary the House with further quotations, and I believe I have quoted enough to show that this vast country to the north is not the inhospitable region that some members delight in representing it to be. It has vast areas of agricultural land, a climate favorable to the growth of cereals over a great part of its extent. It has coal fields which may become of commercial value, and, in proximity to the coal fields, are vast beds of iron ore. It has rivers of great magnitude, open for, at least, six months of the year, and some of them navigable for considerable stretches. The Moose is said to be navigable for 90 miles, from the sea inland. Considerable herds of cattle are kept by the Hudson's Bay Company, at Whale River, at Moose River and at the Albany. At the mouth of the latter river there are open flats of vast extent, covered with nutritious grasses, where hay could be made in almost unlimited quantity, and there can be no question as to a very large portion of the whole country being well adapted to the raising of stock. Once this line is completed to the north of Lake Superior, it would be very easy to connect it with the navigable waters leading to James Bay, as the country is, in general, level and well adapted for railway construction. It should not be lost sight of that the trade that may arise from the fisheries of Hudson's Bay may be a matter of importance in the future. This line to the north of Lake Superior will, in fact, have the effect of opening up a new Ontario, and it will be a subject of wonder to future generations how intelligent men in the present could be found to describe it as a howling wilderness. From the extracts I have just read it will be seen that in the very highest and, therefore, the coldest part of the region, near Albittibi Lake, there are forests with trees measuring nine feet in circumference, and it would be unreasonable to suppose that a soil which can sustain trees of such enormous growth would not also grow potatoes, but that is what we must conclude from the eloquent speeches which we have just heard from the other side. It has been said that the Syndicate has made an excellent bargain, and that the members composing that association will, each and all, realize fabulous fortunes. But there is a dark side to this brilliant picture, and I must refer to it, even at the risk of dashing the high hopes, perhaps, of the Syndicate itself. The lands which they are to receive have all at once become of very great value in the eyes of those opposed to the scheme; they are worth, it is said, as much as $4 per acre, but in estimating the value of wild lands as a source of revenue we could to go by than not have a better criterion territorial revenue of the Provinces previous to Confedera-If I am not much mistaken the sums that were realized by the Government of the old Provinces from the sale of agricultural lands, did little more than meet the expenses of management; that is, apart from the revenue collected on timber. The territorial revenues have been Mr. DAWSON.

chiefly, if not entirely, from the woods and forests, and, in Ontario, to a small extent, from the mineral lands. In the lands which the Syndicate are likely to get, there are no extensive forests of commercial value, and their territory can only become remunerative to them by being opened up and rendered accessible by means of expensive highways, whether railways or colonization roads. But it should be remembered that every section of theirs which becomes valuable in this way, will have, beside it, a section of the public lands rendered equally valuable. If, as some members say, they can make their lands worth $4 an acreequal to $100,000,000 for the 25,000,000 which they are to receive—the public lands mixed up with them will also become worth $100,000,000. But I entertain no such glowing anticipations. Years must elapse before the lands will become of considerable value, and in the meantime the cost of developing and opening them up will form a serious drawback to the profits. Besides, we should consider that if they get 25,000,000 acres in the west, they render accessible the very large country to which I have referred in the east, where there are many times 25,000,000 acres; part of it probably as good and all of it far easier of access and much nearer to a market than that which they will have obtained in the west. Great objection has been taken to their lands being exempted from taxation, but it would detract very much from the prospective value of these lands if they were to be at the mercy of local Governments and local municipalities. I have had some experience on a small scale of how that sort of thing works in Western Ontario, and I can tell this House that large land holders have but a poor chance with local municipalities, and we should remember that in Ontario and British Columbia, which cover the greater part of the line, their property will not be exempt from taxation. As to getting in their iron and supplies free of duties it is a matter of dollars and cents, and if they were not allowed this privilege it is to be presumed that they would not have entered into the bargain without an equivalent in some other shape. Attempts have been made to frighten us with the idea that a large and powerful corporation, such as this Syndicate must become, will have at their command such influence as would enable them, if so disposed, to demoralize the electorate; but I think the experience we have of the influence of large corporations in this way is exactly in the opposite direction. Take, for example, the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Who fears them in an election? That Company has able officers, and its affairs are no doubt very well managed; still they must have freights to be able to live as a company, and a cent or two on a bushel cf grain makes all the difference, as regards their popularity among the farmers or traders. There can be no doubt that a large proportion of the voting class are, and always will be, against railroad managers, notwithstanding all the advantages they derive from the railroad. The Grand Trunk Railway Company are held by the farmers and traders of Ontario to have made discriminating charges against them, and the farmers of Western Ontario—far from being under their influence—have sought to punish them by contributing to the building of the Credit Valley Railway, which is destined to have some influence on the fortunes of the Grand Trunk. A cent or two, as I have said, on freight makes all the difference, and a great railway corporation is not likely to sacrifice its interests by carrying farm produce at unremunerative rates in order to obtain popularity with the electorate. Whatever influence the members of the Syndicate may acquire, will depend, as with other people, on their personal popularity. In such a corporation there will naturally be men of all shades of political opinion, and it is not to be supposed that in this free country they would submit to be controlled by any central authority in matters purely political. The Grand Trunk, so far as I know, has not, as a corporation, interfered in politics, and its employees, I fancy, have been left to vote or abstain from voting just as they pleased, and so it will be with the Syndicate. It will not be in a position to exercise overpowering political influence if it tried, and it is not likely to try, for nothing could be more dangerous or detrimental to the interests of a commercial corporation than to permit itself to be turned into a political organiza-tion; and for my part I do not think that we need allow ourselves to be apprehensive on this ground. There is one feature in this arrangement which should commend itself to this House. It is that the Syndicate is to be allowed to locate the line, or, in other words, to select the ground on which it is to run between given points, and this, in view of the errors which have hitherto been committed in location, is a very important matter. The Syndicate will, in its own interest, choose the ground where the railway can be most cheaply constructed and most economically run. It will not be governed by theoretical or whimsical crotchets such as led to the lamentable and costly blunders which have led to the waste of millions between Thunder Bay and Fort Garry. The Chief Engineer of those days had his full fling, uncontrolled by a Board of Commissioners such as there was on the Intercolonial line, and at his own sweet will he chose "governing points," as he called them, and ran the line through rocky regions, such as section 15 and section B, which, under more judicious management, could easily have been avoided. And the worst of it is that between Thunder Bay and Winnipeg there is, by these errors in location, a permanent addition of full 30 miles unnecessarily made in the distance, which will have to be travelled over for all time to come, and this is a very serious matter, in view of the competition which is likely to arise in the future. The true governing points in the Lake Superior section were Thunder Bay and Fort Garry; and they could have been connected in a line almost direct, which would have touched the head of Rainy Lake at Sturgeon Falls and crossed at the narrows of the Lake of the Woods, where there is every facility for bridging, and from which place to Fort Garry the country is as level as could be desired. By adopting this scheme a long stretch of navigable water between Sturgeon Falls and the Narrows could have been made use of as a temporary expedient, pending the construction of the all rail line which would, when completed, have been, as I have said, 30 miles shorter by this route than by the present one. We might thus have had a means of communication through our own country years present one. ago, and many of our people who have since settled in the State of Minnesota, would have been now in Manitoba or the North-West Territories, and the trade of Manitoba would not have been diverted to a foreign country, as it now is. It has been the custom to blame the land regulations for the circumstance of so many of the settlers who set out for Manitoba having stopped by the way; but the true cause is very different, and it will be found in the beauty and fertility of the land which they passed over on the route through Minnesota. For two hundred miles south of the boundary line, in the valley of the Red River, the land is of the richest conceivable description, in fact, precisely the same as that north of the boundary line in the same valley, and our people in passing over it, as they had of necessity to do, were so attracted by it as to be led to remain there. I would be glad to see Canadians in possession of such a land if they had not in occupying it to change their allegiance. We lost them because, through a wild freak on the part of the engineer in locating the line where it now is and where it cannot be used until completed in every part, we had no means of sending them to their destination through our own country. In losing these settlers the country has lost more than the value of many millions of acres of land, and whoever is responsible for allowing a a half crazy engineer to deflect the line from its proper course, is responsible for that. A good deal has been said of the estimates, and the cost of carrying this great undertaking to completion; but we must remember that the estimates we have to go upon are, in great part, the merest guess. Mr. Fleming's estimate, as first given for the Thunder Bay Branch, or what is now known as the Lake Superior section, and as stated by the then First Minister, was about $25,000 per mile; subsequently he issued a report, in which he set the cost of sections 15 and B, at over $80,000 per mile, and the average cost of the whole at nearly double the amount of his first estimate. The late First Minister said, last year, in reference to sections 13, 14 and 15, as will be seen in Hansard, page 1,526:

"I received the approximate quantities from Mr. Fleming in good faith, after the country had been visited by himself, after surveyors had been over it, and if Mr. Fleming led me astray in giving false quantities, there is no epithet too strong to address to him. But until Mr. Fleming says that with his own lips, I will not believe that he could be guitty of such an act of perfidy. Having Mr. Fleming's estimates of the approximate quantities, I proceeded to let the works. The works were let upon those estimates; upon those estimates I based my calculation of the cost of the entire line, and I am prepared, at this moment, upon those estimates to maintain that valuation."

And he remarks further:

"If Mr. Fleming, or any other engineer, now says that he had no intention of setting forth those specific quantities as approximately accurate, I can only say that the department was grossly deceived, and the Minister was grossly deceived."

But every practical man must have known by that time that Mr. Fleming's estimates were the merest guess work, and that his glowing reports were but the romance of figures run wild. I verily believe, that if the First Minister had asked him for an estimate of the cost of a highway to the moon, he would have been too obliging to refuse it, and I suspect that even then he was in the habit of holding rather too frequent converse with that luminary. On both sides Mr. Fleming's estimates are being made use of in the debate now going on, but I think it would be well that hon. members should not forget the character of these estimates. When Mr. Fleming himself saw that they were likely to be acted on he went to England, leaving his chief-assistant to meet the storm which was impending. But if hon. members are to take his estimates in reference to construction they should also take them in regard to running expenses; and, in one of his first productions, Mr. Fleming estimates the annual cost of maintaining and running 2,000 miles of railway at $7,000,000 and in this his guess may not have been so far astray. Applying this rate to the 2,700 miles of railway to be worked by the Syndicate you have an annual outlay of $9,450,000; but, supposing that the Pembina Branch of 85 miles, the Lake Superior section of 406 miles, and the prairie section of 800 miles, will pay running expenses, and perhaps yield a profit on running, or say that one-half of the whole distance will yield a profitwhich is more than hon members on the opposite side of the House will admit-you have an annual outlay of $4,725,000 for maintenance and running expenses on the other half, and what is to reimburse the Syndicate for that outlay? My own opinion is, that the eastern section, to the north of Lake Superior and Lake Huron, will eventually yield a considerable return in freights, both for timber and wheat, and I have heard it said, that the traffic arising from the agricultural sections of the west will soon be so considerable as to require a double track from Winnipeg eastward. I am not quite so sanguine as this, although we have the example of the Grand Trunk Railway struggling for freights from Chicago, and prepared, if it could only obtain all it could take from that place, to leave the Canadian traffic to one side, and run through a country quite as long as the eastern section of the Pacific Railway, without caring much about the auxiliary traffic it might give; but the Grand Trunk has very keen competition at Chicago, while the Syndicate will, in all probability, have the field to themselves in the Canadian North-West,

There is, however, a section which cannot be expected to yield a return sufficient to pay for maintenance and running expenses for a leng time to come. I allude to the Rocky Mountains and British Columbia section. Oh, but it is said we are to have a great traffic from the Pacific Ocean, from Japan, China and India, but we should not forget that the promoters of the Union and Central Pacific after reckoning on a large traffic from these countries, were grievously disappointed. The Suez Canal came into operation about the same time the Union and Central Pacific line was opened, and it soon absorbed the trade of these eastern countries, or I should rather say western countries. as regards us, to such an extent as to throw whole fleets of sailing vessels out of employment, the fleets that in former times used to pass by the Cape of Good Hope. For what may remain of Asiatic trade our railway will have keen competition. The Northern Pacific is likely to be completed as soon as the Canadian Pacific. The Union and Central Pacific must always command its share of traffic. and the Southern Pacific will also have its share; but beyond and above all these there is a project in contemplation which, should it be carried out, will leave but little of Asiatic freight, at least that portion of it which seeks European markets, to any trans-continental railway. The same genius which called the Suez Canal into existence, and linked the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean to the Mediterranean, has in contemplation a feat of almost equal grandeur, and we may yet see the Atlantic linked to the Pacific at Panama. Lesseps has stirred up the continents of Europe and America to the importance of the enterprise, and he is himself yet full of energy and spirit, and is just the man to succeed in what he undertakes, if success be possible. That he will succeed in this Panama Canal scheme I have not, in my own mind, the slightest doubt, and when that canal comes into operation, as it sooner or later will, where will be the Asiatic traffic for American or Canadian trans-continental see the end. We must look at both sides of the question, and if we estimate their probable gains we must also take into account their probable losses. It is an enterprise which will tax their energies, their skill, their time and their resources to the utmost. The whole country through which the line will run is yet, except in one or two comparatively short sections, an unbroken wilderness, and under the most favorable circumstances many years must elapse before the population becomes so numerous as to render the running of a railway over such vast distances in anyway profitable. It is chiefly to their lands that they will have to look for some return for long years to come, and the returns from land, as we all know, are precarious and slow. It has been claimed in the course of this debate, that our Canadian Pacific line would have a powerful rival in a line to be constructed on the south side of Lake Superior. I am sorry that our friends on the Opposition benches should take a view which, if it should come to be entertained generally, might retard the Sault Ste Marie Branch, which they express themselves so anxious to see constructed. A line to the south of Lake Superior would, without doubt, bring traffic to Canadian railways, if once the Sault line were constructed, but it could not prove a formidable rival to our Pacific line, because, for one reason, it would be longer. It would, in fact, be a good deal longer than some hon. members seem to suppose. I do not know what authority the member for North Norfolk has for saying that the country to the south of Lake Superior is less difficult, as regards railway of Lake Superior is less difficult, as regards railway construction, than the north. My information leads me to a different conclusion, and any one at all familiar with the south shore knows that after you get about 160 miles to the its way by any of the various routes suggested to the seavest when the construction of the west which is worth taking into account. Instead of the produce of the Canadian North-West going to Duluth and thence finding its way by any of the various routes suggested to the seavest way by any of the various routes suggested to the seavest which is worth taking into account. Mr. DAWSON, rough and broken. The mountains rise higher than on the north coast, and there are deeper river valleys between them. There is no possibility of getting an air line, and all the calculations as to distance which I have seen are based on air lines. In fact, a good line, or a moderately good one, cannot be found within a less distance than from 50 to 100 miles of the coast. A moderately straight line might be found from St. Paul eastward, by keeping well inland, but not from Duluth, and those who have been making estimates should add, at least 40 or 50 miles to the distances they have set down. Nevertheless, I believe that if the Sault Ste. Marie line were built, the Americans would extend their lines to that place, and it would be the means of bringing in a large traffic to the country, not only by railways, but also by water from Lake Superior. Long after Lake Huron had closed, and it closes early in its upper reaches, we would have water borne freight coming from Duluth and other ports to the Sault. Lake Superior is at this moment practically as open to navigation as it was in mid-summer, and that is a matter of great importance, considering the vast quantities of agricultural produce which, as the States of Minnesota and Dakota fill up with settlement, must pour down on Lake Superior. The Sault Ste. Marie Branch, too, would develop a fine country on Lake Huron. It would give a much needed outlet to the island of Manitoulin with which it could be connected by a short lateral line; and we should not be led to lose sight of such settlements as that by this all-absorbing Pacific line; we have magnificent forests and fine agricultural lands on Lake Huron which would give no small amount of traffic to a railway. But this Sault Ste. Marie Branch is essentially a line which Ontario should build. She does not give an acre of land to the Pacific line, although together with the Canada Central, which has been subsidized by the Dominion Government, it will pass for twelve hundred miles through Ontario, and therefore she may well afford to build this Sault Ste. Marie Branch, and I have not the least doubt railways. Say what we will, the Syndicate is entering on a but that she will eventually provide for it in some way. vast enterprise of which the gentleman composing it cannot It is somewhat strange that in all this discussion, more especially in reference to other lines cutting off the traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it has not occurred to any hon. member that there is another possible line which might cut off traffic in a way that would astonish us. The projected line of railway passes just to the north of Long Lake, from which the Kenogami River flows to the Albany. From a point ninety miles by the course of the river below Long Lake, the navigation of the Kenogami is unbroken for a further distance of about one hundred miles, always following the course of the river, to the Albany; and the Albany is navigable from thence, a distance of 150 miles, to Hudson's Bay. The railway will therefore pass within a distance of ninety miles of a point accessible to vessels from Hudson's Bay. But supposing the Kenogami to be too shallow for large vessels, which it probably is, the railway will pass within 150 miles in a direct course of a point on the Albany accessible to large vessels from the Bay. The country between Long Lake and the Albany, at the mouth of the Kenogami, is reported to be level and well adapted for railways. The distance from Duluth to Thunder Bay is less than 200 miles, from Thunder Bay to the outlet of Long Lake may be about 150 miles, and from the latter place to the navigable waters of the Albany, call the distance 150 miles. We have thus 500 miles from Duluth to a point on the Albany navigable from Hudson's Bay. Now, supposing that Hudson's Bay should turn out to be navigable to vessels with auxiliary steam, for four or five months of the year, as it probably will, we have here an westward of Sault Ste. Marie, the country becomes very board, it is just possible that the States west of St. Paul might seek an ocean port in the shorter distance. I merely suggest this for consideration among other projects, but would be sorry to commit myself to it until something more is known about Hudson's Bay and the practicability of navigating it. To refer once more to the wide region lying between the Great Lakes and Hudson's Bay. I think that our friends on the opposite benches have committed a great mistake in representing it to be such an inhospitable and forbidding wilderness. Have they forgotten the question of the boundaries of Ontario, and that if the general election for which they seem so anxious, were to take place to-morrow, it would be in order for them to represent it as a land of promise. It is easy to conceive the patriotic indignation whice they would seek to excite against the Government for its declining to sanction an award, the merits of which have been so little understood. In order to convince the people of Ontario that they have lost, or are being kept out of something valuable, they would, like the Government of Ontario, have to depict the new territory, not as a region of barren rocks and dreary swamps, but as a land overflowing with milk and honey. They would have to restore the violets and the roses, which Mr. Dymond speaks of, to the portages; they would have, with Professor Grant, to border the streams with walls of living green, and, with Professor Bell, to point to beautiful agricultural lands hundreds of miles in extent, with a climate which permitted the most tender plants to remain green until the last days of September. They would have to lead the people to contemplate vast forests of valuable timber where pine trees nine feet in circumference wave their green tops high in aira hundred feet or more. But this is not all. They would take delight in showing that this valuable territory, rich in minerals, such as coal, iron, copper, gold and silver, was laved by a sea which possessed within itself vast stores of wealth. They could, and I have no doubt would, depict the white whale (the white elephant of the waters) as rolling by thousands at the estuaries of the rivers, and call on their hearers, at the same time, to look at the countless seals, which afford such valuable oil, and at the walrus with its tempting ivory. They would find land and sea possessed of resources; if, by enlarging on them, they could gain a seat or make a point against the existing order of things. But, they evidently have not thought of all this, and—in their desire to frustrate the arrangement with the Syndicatethe role they may have to play in the future has been forgotten.

Mr. WRIGHT. After the exhaustive speeches of gentlemen on both sides of the House-from those who have been described as amative Radicals and aristocratic demagogues, and so on-I shall be permitted to say a few words. In all seriousness I think this subject has been treated in a very exhaustive manner by both sides of the House. The hon. Minister of Railways has delivered a most elaborate and exhaustive argument which I fancy many gentlemen on the Opposition side have found it very difficult to answer. My friend the hon, member for Richmond and Wolfe slso made a most admirable historical résumé, which I think placed the matter in a very clear and comprehensive light. My friend the member for Niagara, with his usual eloquence, devoted a good many hours to the consideration of this most important subject, though I thought myself that at times he was disposed to be slightly casuistical in some of his arguments. My friend from North Norfolk certainly made a most able speech, but as it was said that he had spoken on the other side with the same ability and power, I think it proved conclusively that he at any rate was capable of looking on both sides of the question, and that he followed the advice of the American philosopher Emerson, who says that in the nineteenth century ne sensible man ties himself to a blind the tide of prosperity on which the Government were consistency. The subject has been so fully discussed that do not intend to occupy much time. We all remember, Policy had produced, remembering that we had been when this scheme was originated, that it was the policy of blessed with a magnificent harvest, that our commercial both sides of the House that the railway should be built by a company, aided by liberal subsidies of land and money Well, this vigorous plant which was planted by the right hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, was watered by the hon. Mr. Mackenzie, and was, some of us thought, very much diluted by those magnificent water stretches. Then came the arrangement with Sir Hugh Allan and his congeners; and my impression always has been that, if Sir Hugh Allan and his company had been allowed to carry out that arrangement, it would have been the best possible, and we would have had the Pacific Railway built to-day. But, unbappily, that could not be, owing to a combination of fortuitious circumstances. As we all know the Conservative party sustained a very severe defeat; in fact, as the hon, leader of the Opposition was fund of telling us, they came back from the elections a broken band, a miserable remnant, a corporal's guard. We were like the broken band that gathered round the camp fires of Swedish Charles after dread Pultowa day. We had been hunted like partridges. On the mountains we were treated as though we had been the followers of Cataline. Many of our best and bravest had fallen; but there was no murmur for the dead whose bones lay on many a bleak hill-side and lonely valley, the prey of the juckalls, wolf and carrion crows that always follow on the track of a defeated army. Many of our men had a hunted look as though they still felt the breath of the bloodhounds on their cheeks. But at last, after being hunted from place to place, the Conservative party turned flercely to bay. I think there is nothing finer in history than the manner in which the French and English gentlemen gathered round their wounded leader, and I say it to the honor of the Conservative party, that never in the hour of his highest elevation, when he stood foremost in the councils of his country, did he receive such unfaltering loyalty, such true devotion, as in the hour of his darkness, desolation and despair. But, Sir, we had traitors in our camp then, even as there were traitors under the palm trees of Judea, we had men who thought that, in order to save ourselves, we should allow our leader to be trampled to death under the feet of the horses which were following him. There were men who wished to cast him overboard as the Jonah to the sharks who were clustering around our ship. But, Sir, the party were true to him; and determined to share his fate, we passed through that long dark night of opposition, fighting the good fight and keeping the faith until there were unmistakable signs that day was about to break, and the hour of our deliverance was at hand. Then, Sir, the great battle was fought, and owing to the fidelity of followers, the sympathy of the people, and, above all, to his own matchless skill, dauntless courage, and magnificent statecraft, the victory was won, and he stood once more foremost in the councils of his Sovereign. Contrast the conduct of the Conservatives to their leader with that of the Liberals to theirs; but this is a domestic matter, however, of their own, with which probably we have nothing to do, but when the history of Canada comes to be written, the name of the leader of the late Government will always be remembered with respect and regard, and it will always be considered that he preserved his fealty with great sternness towards the country and its fame. The other day I said to a gentleman connected with the Liberal party, that we of the Conservative party did not treat our leaders as they treated theirs. His answer to me was that sometimes the Liberals disposed of their leaders, but very often the Conservative leaders disposed of their followers. "Well," I said to him. "If they do so, they do it in the interest of the country and the followers are very willing to be disposed of." Well, remembering the history of the last few years, remembering affairs had improved, that our garners were filled to overflowing, it was a matter of astonishment to many that the Ministry should have selected this time to change their policy, and in place of building this road themselves with all the means those gentlemen had in their hands, that they should have delegated to others an authority which, I think, they should have exercised themselves. It struck me as strange that the Minister of Railways should have stated the other night that the Government could by no possibility build the road as well as a company. It struck me strange that a man of his ability, a gentleman whom I have always followed, and whom I trust always to be able to follow, a man of his extraordinary energy and knowledge of details, with that magnificent department in his hands, with the public purse filled to overflowing, that this hon. gentleman and his colleagues could not have done this work as well as a dry goods merchant in Montreal, or a gentleman who had been engaged trapping musk-rats in the North-West. I did believe that those hon. gentlemen did not consider precisely the position which they occupy and the high estimation in which they are held by the country. It appeared to me they were abnegating their high position, giving up to others those rights they should arrogate to themselves. They arrived at this decision, and I think myself it was a very extraordiary decision; but I believe it was a patriotic one, because I believe those hon. gentlemen felt certain that they could not build the road as well as a company. They determined upon crossing the sea and making an arrangement with the plutocrats of Europe for building this road. They took ship and reached the other side safely. I remember seeing a satirical journal alluding to their passage and the pleasant time they had in London. They witnessed the performance of a great artist, and the hon. the Minister of Railways, with that regard for the True, the Good and the Beautiful, which always distinguished him, after admiring the artistic power of the great artist, said: "It is magnificent, but I think she is too thin." "Not so thin," said the hon. Chief of the Government, "as our pretence for being here." It was a good hit, but I think it was not a fair illustration of the case. The hon, leader of the Opposition alluded to the interview between the two political Machiavelli's, as he called them, the author of "Endymion" and the author of the "New Dominion." Now, if that hon gentleman had pursued his usual course of argument he might have made much of that. I cannot conceive a more interesting matter for Canada or the world than the interview which took place between these great men, these two great arch-Conservatives, who would perhaps understand everything that makes the greatness of empires and which makes the weakness of human nature, and they could smile very well over the truth of the proverb that men are governed with very little wisdom. I think that interview would not have told against the Canadian. The Hebrew law-giver might have said: "Look to Cyprus, to Candahar, to Cabul, which we undertook to add to the English dominions." The Canadian would have said: "I have added to Her Majesty's dominions an immense empire with the loss of but one single life." The advantages would all have been in favor of the Canadian, and I think it was a matter which the members on the Ministerial side might have pursued with advantage. But I have no doubt the hon, gentleman received excellent advice from the great leader of the Conservative party in England, who belongs to a great family of a very ancient date—to the Hebrew family. He might have said in his usual mystical manner that the Hebrew race was dominant in the world, and that their business was to make money, either millions or pennies:

"Once this little nation was an Arabian clan, a little nation alone and outlying, amongst the mighty monarchies of ancient times, and a Megatheria of History. The sails of their rare ships might have been Mr. WRIGHT.

seen in Egyptian waters; the camels of their caravans might have treaded through the sands of Baalbec, or wound through the date groves of Damascus; their flag was raised, not ingloriously, in many wara against mighty odds, but it was a small people, and on one dark night the lion of Judea went down before Vespatian's eagles, and in flame, death and struggle, Jerusalem agonized and died. Yes! the Jewish city is lost to the Jewish men, but have they not taken the world in exchange."

My Canadian friend, if you wish to build the Pacific Railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, you must do it through the instrumentality of Hebrews or Scotchmen, or both combined, for those two nations contain the brain and pursepower of the world. Behold, I show you a mystery. the morning of life I visited the cradle of my race, under the shadow of the Pyramids, with the desert sands around us, with the stars above, which had looked upon Cleopatra and her imperial lover. I attempted to solve the Asian mystery. An Arab sheik, who looked like a contemporary of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, gave us the hospitality of his tent; three famous jugglers, Ali, Muley and Hassan came to entertain us. Ali commenced by throwing a flip-flap and jumping down the throat of the second juggler, Muley; Muley then threw a flip-flap and jumped down the throat of the throat of the throat of the throat of the three t the third juggler, Hassan; Hassan concluded the performance by throwing a flip-flap and jumping down his own throat. I bowed my head in admiration and astonishment, and when I lifted up my eyes, the sheik, the tent and the jugglers had disappeared; and the sphinx looked down upon me with a smile, and I knew the problem was solved, and that the mystery was a mystery no longer. My vocation was fixed and I determined to become a politician: Next day I took ship for England and commenced by changing my politics. I had been a Reformer, and I became a Conservative my great opponent, who had been a Conservative, became a Reformer. Like Hamlet and Lacrtes, we had exchanged weapons, and the poisoned rapier remained in my hand. A wise said nineteenth that in the century sensible man confines himself to a blind constituency. I am certain that the Canadian would have received the advice of the Hebrew law-giver with much consideration, but must have felt that the Canadians were not at present in a state of Arcadian simplicity. Perhaps he was told that it was better to come to our own merchant princes, to our own dealer in furs, and get them to build the railway

"In native swords and native ranks The only hope of freedom dwells."

Well, they came back here, and we are trying to carry out this Syndicate. For my part, I must confess that from its first inception to the present time, I did not regard it with much favor. But, when I came to consider its particulars, I regarded it more favorably. I was told, yesterday, by an eminent prelate from the North-West, well acquainted with that country, that, after all, it was the best arrangement that could be made. I have been told, by a practical man of the Liberal party, that, after all, this arrangement was a reasonable and a fair one; but, he added, it tells against the Conservative party. After this, I said to myself, that, under the circumstances, I would be disposed to give the Government a fair support. I must confess that I think the Government expected a great deal from their party. We have followed them through thick and thin, in season and out of season we have been at their service, and I dare say the party will respond to the call which has been made upon them. As I have said, the Conservative party has always been animated by that spirit of patriotism which leads them to make sacrifice for their country. Mourir pour la patrie is really the motto of our party. I wish the same could be said of the party of hon gentlemen opposite. They have no occasion to find fault with the Syndicate scheme; all the fortune, prestige and power to be derived from it enures to their advantage, for I do not know that there is a man on the Syndicate who is a supporter of the Conservative party. Yet they complain that we ware giving this magnificent North-West over to the men of their own race who in the hour of our despest gloom did the best to destroy us. It is a grand exhibition of self abnegation and patriotism on the part of the Ministry, and I think, as the hon. Minister of Railways said, that the legacy of patriotism he will leave his children, and we will leave our children, is one which is not to be despised. I, for my part, regret the action of members of the Opposition who have been engaged-during the slight interval which should have been devoted to festive, religious and other celebrations, in attempting to "Boycott" this excellent Administration. The House will join this excellent Administration. with me in saying that their attempts been signally unsuccessful; perhaps in the distant future, some results may be obtained from them. I am sure we were all delighted to hear the ex-leader of the Opposition deliver himself with such force and energy as he has tonight; I am sure that every one regretted his illness, and rejoiced to see that so much of his prestine energy and ability yet remained to him. I have no hesitation in saying that I extremely regret that the Ministry had felt it necessary to take the course they have taken with regard to the construction of this railway. I have always voted for its construction; I have stood, in season and out of season, by this project for connecting the two oceans, and build up what we believed to be a great British Northern country; but I am free to confess that I would have preferred that the Government would have made haste slowly. At any rate, if they felt themselves bound to give the carrying out of this great project to a Syndicate, I would have preferred they had given it to a Syndicate of a different complexion. I am free, however, to confess, from my knowledge of the men, remembering how scientifically they disposed of the Conservative party, that I have the greatest possible respect for their business ability. I remember distinctly, when I was the chairman of a large meeting of Conservatives in this building, that if we had then obtained the support of one hon gentleman who is not in the Syndicate, but is the power behind the Throne, we would have sustained the Government; remembering distinctly how he disposed of us, I have the most profound respect for his business ability. Certainly, this is the age of rehabilitation. Every great historian, every man of the modern school of history, proceeds to rehabilitate some man who had hitherto been considered a monster. Mr. Froude takes up Henry VIII and makes him out to have been a most admirable statesman; Freeman takes up William the Conqueror, and makes us look at him, not as a brutal savage who ruthlessly destroyed the institutions of the English people, but as a man remarkable for his absence of prejudice; W. W. Storey, in one of the finest poems of the day, published in Blackwood, proceeds to vindicate the character of the man who, I fear has, been very unjustly treated-I allude to Judas Iscariot. He proves that this apostle was the purest patriot of them all; he was the Finance Minister of that day. He had the power of the purse; he thought that he was predestined to perform a great work, from which great results would be obtained. He tells us that the usual interpretation of the documents connected with the dire event is not correct, that Judas did not throw away the thirty pieces of silver and then hang himself, but that he invested the money in a judicious manner, and entered into a Syndicate. Now, I am phesed to see the hon, member for Vancouver in his place. I hope that he is satisfied that this country has at last determined to do justice to British Columbia. We have heard his elequent voice very often raised in this House advocating the cause of his Province with that singular ability which always characterizes his utterances; and I venture to say that if the other members of the House only looked to the interests of their sections with half the ability, energy, zeal, pertinacity and determination which animate the hon, gentleman from British Columbia, a different result would have been obtained, and at any rate, I think a botter bargain would have been made with the Syndicate, and we would not have been placed in our present somewhat awkward position. I trust the hon. gentleman, when he goes home, will be received with that gratitude that almost always awaits public benefactors. Hon. gentlemen who have read Gil Blas will remember the consultation of doctors over the licentiate Sédello. Doctor Saint Grado, whose theory was that unlimited bleeding and hot water were universal panacea for human ills, applying an immense leech to the unhappy licentiate, the ingenious Gil Blas said to the doctor: "Do you think there is any more blood in his veins?" The doctor replies that he thinks there is a little; then, said Gil Blas, let us apply this other leech and finish him. And I would ask the hon. member for Vancouver not to apply that leach just at present. I think the British Columbia members deserve well of their country, and hope they will meet with their reward. We are told in the history of New York, that old Olaf Vancourtland dreamed a dream; he dreamed he sat in the gubernatorial chair of Woutter Van Twyller, who at that time presided over the destinies of the Netherlands; he was perpetually smoking his pipe, drinking Schiedam schnapps, and enjoying the esteem and reverence of his subjects; so I trust it will be with the hon, member for Vancouver, and that when we visit British Columbia, passing over the Pacific Railway, we will see the hon. memner sitting on the verandah of the Government House, smoking the pipe of peace, and having perpetual British beverages, and basking in the esteem and respect of his fellowcountrymen, without being troubled by the disturbing influence of Chinamen. As I have already said our motto is Mourir pour la patrie. We sacrifice everything to the interests of our country; and, while hon, gentlemen on the other side are constantly indulging in lamentations. I am satisfied that whatever may be the result of this contract, in a party sense, the country will be benefitted by it. Those hon, gentlemen are always telling us that the country is being destroyed, that our people are leaving us. I do not believe that our people are leaving us to any considerable extent. I know that in my own county the people at the present moment are exceptionally presperous, and for my part I am prepared to say I believe that the country will prosper no matter under what regime, and that if hon, gentlemen opposite play us out they will take up the scheme and be supported by their own friends. As the hon, member for Lambton said, they would feel bound to carry out the bad bargain made by their predecessors. In the meantime, however, I am satisfied that the country will prosper, and that we are every day improving in our material resources; that we are benefitting by the wonderful change that has come over our commercial affairs. These hon, gentlemen are fond of morbid anatomy; they are constantly looking at dead bodies. Like Phil p III of Spain, who was foud of visiting the tomb of his dead Queen, these hon, gentlemen seem fond of contemplating decay. I would ask them if we are a people who should be ever looking at our country as a dead queen, lying in state with all her jewels upon her, or should we not rather regard her as a blooming and bluehing bride ready to spring into our willing arms. I believe that this country is prospering and will prosper. I believe that her future will be a great one. I agree with Victor Cousin that it is better to be young than old, better to have the future than the past.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Notwithstanding the extent to which this discussion has been protracted, I feel it to be my duty to make a few observations upon the subject before the House. It is undoubtedly a subject of the very greatest importance, a subject whose importance has not been overrated. It is a subject which involves the expenditure of $100,000,000, or one which, had we the population of England, would involve the consideration of $1,000,000,000. But it is not only a question of money; it is a question of concessions made which have no precedent in this country. It is a question of the Legislature for twenty years, a question involving the remission of taxes on property, not less than $50,000,000 or $100,000,000; it is a question involving a gigantic monopoly, a monopoly securing to this Company the whole carrying trade of the North-West for at least twenty years. If these are the considerations involved in this question, then I say it is quite impossible for us to overrate its importance. It has been said that this question is too transcendent in its consequences to be determined as a mere matter of party, but from the course which this discussion is now taking it is evident that it will be determined by mere party and political considerations. I firmly believe that if it were possible for hon. gentlemen opposite to emancipate themselves from their party ties and their party allegiance, not less than 100 men on the other side of the House, if they acted upon their conscientious and patriotic convictions, would cross the floor and vote against this measure. And though I fear it would seem impossible for them to do so, I ask them if it would not be a splendid spectacle to see these hon. gentlemen acting on their convictions and voting for the true interests of the country. The bon. Minister of Railways has spoken of the legacy which he intends to leave to his children, but I think if these hon. gentlemen should choose to act in the patriotic manner I suggested, they would immortalize themselves and leave to their children an infinitely better legacy than that which seems to satisfy the hopes of the Minister of Railways. It is necessary for us in considering this question to carry our mind back for some time. Recollect the pressure that was brought to bear on the party in 1871 in connection with this question. We were told that if we did not adopt the measure which was then before the House, British Columbia would go out of the Union. We were told that time was important and that the matter must be pressed an to early decision. At that time the Government imposed an obligation on this country of which the present contract is the sequel. The followers of the Government yielded to the pressure which was brought to bear upon them and sustained a measure to provide for the construction of the railway over 2,700 miles of unknown country to British Columbia in ten years, notwithstanding the protests which were made from this side of the House against an obligation whose fulfilment has been an embarrassment to this country ever since. change of Government took place, and the member for Lambton has explained the circumstances which surrounded him and he assumed the administration of affairs. He felt embarrassed by the obligation which the previous Government had imposed upon him, but at the same time he felt it was his duty so far as in him lay to maintain the public faith of the country and carry out the obligation which his predecessors had assumed. He introduced the Act of 1874, and that Act seems to be the foundation upon which hon, gentlemen opposite attempt to sustain the following measure. I would like to ask what the Act of 1874 has to do with this measure. At that time British Columbia and the North-West were almost terræ incognitæthere was no civil government established in the North-West, no law or order was maintained there; it was a country utterly alone and inaccesible. There was at that time no railway with 200 or 300 miles of the boundary to connect with the United State system. Indeed, the hon. the Minister of Railways himself acknowledges that the circumstances have changed. There was no communication with Sir Albert J. Smith.

I say there is no justification whatever in the reference to the Act of 1874. Some hon members seem to satisfy themselves that if they can show that the offer made in the Act of 1874 was not more burdensome to the country than the present scheme, that, therefore, they are justified in supporting it. Will that doctrine satisfy the people of the country? Will it justify hon. members with their constituents to say that the Act of 1574, passed before the country was known, seven years ago, is an excuse and justification for making this contract and giving this Syndicate the amount proposed by this scheme? It has been said, too, by members opposite that it has been admitted by all parties that the principle was that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be constructed by a private company, and not by the Government. It is quite true, at the initiation of this measure, in 1871, a resolution of that kind was passed and approved, generally, by both parties. But while the member for Lambton presided over the Government of this country and was anxious to do what was possible, consistently with that overshadowing condition that the taxation should not be increased, this measure of 1874 was passed, and, as he explained, to-night, the Act did not make an offer to any particular set of men, but provided for the construction of the road as fast as the finances of the country would justify, and nothing further. It did not require the whole should be built at once, or put under contract immediately, but authorized its construction by sections. Under the late Government, a portion had been constructed or let as a Government work, and the Pembina Branch finished. A large portion of the line from Thunder Bay to Selkirk was under contract when the Government changed. What was the policy of the incoming Government? It was to construct this as a Government work. Now, I will show, from the speeches of the First Minister himself, and Minister of Public Works, that they have deliberately abandoned their settled policy, which was to construct that road as a Government work, and in no other way. What did they do in 1879? The Minister of Railways submitted his resolutions, and told the House, in a very elaborate and able speech, that he had reason to believe that the British Government were prepared to render substantial aid and assistance to the construction of the railway. I ask hon. members to refer to his series of resolutions, and see whether the Government of the time did not announce, through the Minister of Railways, their policy that this road should be constructed as a Government work. They then took authority to utilize 100,000,000 acres, and told us they believed the British Government would assist them, and also to provide for the establishment of a tribunal consisting of several trustees of this line, a portion of whom were to be appointed by the British Government; and provided that those lands were to be sold at a certain price, the proceeds to be applied in the construction of this great public work. Further, they took power to construct 125 miles of railroad from Kamloops to Yale, and, further, to let contracts on the prairies to an extent not exceeding $1,000,000, without the necessity of submitting them to Parliament. That was their declared policy in 1879. They went to, and returned from England without accomplishing anything whatever, though the Minister of Railways tells us that he had communication with the great leading men of that country which produced a great deal of good, but we failed to discover it yet. Their mission utterly failed. What was the course taken during last Session? In 1880 what do we find—any change of policy? No, it is marvellous -hon, members on the Government side must be blinded by partisan feeling, or they would see that the scheme then submitted and which received their vociferous applause was that the railway from ocean to the country, and it is easier to build three miles of railway ocean-should be built as a public work. Will hon, members there now than it was at that time. Therefore, deny that, or that the First Minister himself, with the responsibility of his position, went into an elaborate calculation to show that this whole road could be built as a public work without costing the people a dollar? His speech proves my statement. In submitting the resolutions with regard to the Canada Pacific Railway, he said:

"What the policy of the late Government would have been we do not know. * * * but when we came into office we decided to under-take it as a public work."

Can any hon. member deny or gainsay that? What does the Minister of Railways himself say on that point?

"I had no hesitation in saying that the whole sentiment of the country is changed on this question. I am not at all ashamed to say my own opinions are changed in relation to the character of this great work. I remember when the First Minister brought in his Act in 1874, for the construction of this as a Government work, I felt we were incurring too great a responsibility. I believed it was unsafe for the Government to undertake the construction of this great work from end to end; but I do not hesitate to express my opinion that the whole condition of Canada has changed since that time." changed since that time

Now, let us deal resonably with the facts and not be blinded with mere political considerations. Have we not shown out of the mouths of both hon. Ministers that the Government policy was to construct this railway as a Government work? Was there a single hon. member, last Session, after those declarations of policy, who had the slightest idea that the Government intended to deal with the Syndicate, a party of speculators, during the recess, for the purpose of constructing this railway? I venture to affirm that not a man in the country anticipated it. We had no intimation that a Government delegation would go to England for this purpose, but supposed the Government were going to act on their declared policy, which their followers so heartly sustained. Now, Sir, I desire to call your attention to the speech of the hon. First Minister delivered last Session, because his utterances have a special significance of their own; and I would ask hon. gentlemen on both sides to see how utterly erroneous were the calculations he then made. He seemed to think that 50,000 people would go into the North-West during the past year. He said:

"I can inform the hon. gentleman from the returns of the hon, the Minister of the Department of Agriculture, that 12,000 are known to have gone in, and, from the best information we have got, as many more went in that could not be counted, who were not under the supervision of that Department; but let us say that 8,000 more went in, and that only makes the 20,000. If we are to judge from the reports we have heard, we may rely upon it that 5',000 people will go into that section of the country this year. We know that in the United States, when railways were about to be opened across the prairies in the varions States and territories, a large influx could always be calculated upon, because there is always a large influx could always be calculated upon, because there is always an increasing rush towards those lands which are being opened up by the construction of railways. We are told that 50,000 will come in, but let us put the number at 25,000, and I have been informed by everyone—and I have spoken to a great number of persons who have come from the North-West and who have the best presons who have come from the I have spoken to a great number of persons who have come from the North-West, and who have the best means of judging—that that estimate

I have spoken to a great number of persons who have come from the North-West, and who have the best means of judging—that that estimate is ridiculously absurdly small.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I suppose it was the same person who informed Lord Beaconsfield who thought it was absurd.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very likely. I would ask the hon member for Lambton, if he does not really believe that number will go in. Mr. MACKENZIE. As the hon. gentleman has asked me a question, I will tell him that I do not believe so, nor do I believe that 20,000 went in last year. I think a large number will go, but not the number he stated Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then the hon. gentleman is the first person that I have heard say that 25,000 was not altogether too small an estimate of the certain rush of emigration going to that country this year. That number, of course, includes the baby as well as the adult; it includes the whole population moving into the country. In ordinary cases the estimate is: the average family numbers five—the head of the family and four others. In the Western States the average is not so large, for obvious reasons; because so many young men go in without family to settle there.

* * We then take the average price of the whole of the lands extending from the $5 section, within five miles of the railway, to sixty or 100 miles away. The average price of the lands sold to the 1,500 purchasers would be $3 an acre—this is greatly under the average. What, then, would be the result?

Mr. BLAKE. Over the whole belt—220 miles?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes. Take $1, $2.50, $4 and $5 per acre, and the average, $3; admit we sell at those terms lands, in 1880, to the value of $1,440,000, of which we shall receive one-tenth the price, or $144,000, we should receive from the fees from the homestead and pre-emption grants $60,000 more, making in sall $204,000 in cash. Then we calculate that, as 25,000 would go in this year, we may add each year an increase of 5,000, so that we may expect 30,000 to go in next year. That is a very small percentage, if we look to the results from railway enterprise in the United States. We assume, herefore, an increase of 5,000 a year till 1890, and expect in that year 75,000 settlers in our North-

5,000 a year till 1890, and expect in that year 75,000 settlers in our North-West.

Mr. BLAKE. Can you not make it another 10,000?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that is a very moderate estimate. On those figures, the estimate of the total cash revenue to be received for the lands, by 1890, is $38,593,000.

Mr. BLKAE. That is up to 1890.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, and including 1890.

Mr. BLAKE. That amount with interest?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We expect $38,593,000, including simple interest for the lands sold in that period.

Mr. BLAKE. What proportion is principal and what interest?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot say. That will be the total sum received in cash to the end of 1890. But, besides, there will be all the instalments to come in after 1890 accruing, yearly, so that the lands sold in 1890 will be one-tenth paid for nine years afterwards—for each year there will be an instalment of one-tenth paid. The actual value in 1890, of the pre-emption, up to that date, unpaid will be $16,440,000. The actual value of the railway lands sold up to that date will be $16,272,000, making in all, $32,712,000. If you add to that total, unpaid, the $38,593,000. Deduct from that the estimated cost of surveys for the ten years, $2,000,000, and of the land officers, $400,000, and you reduce it by $2,400,000 Having shown that the estimate of the number of settlers, if the land be taken up, and if the average price is not excessive, we find we shall have $69,000,000, either of money in hand, or money for which e shall have the best security in the world—the land itself. The whole estimated cost of the railway, including surveys, and construction through the difficult as well as the prairie country, does not exceed, by the most excessive computation, $75,000,000—for the work from Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean. I believe hon. gentlemen opposite will be surprised, yet, to find it built for less than $75,000,000. It will not cost more in the computation, $75,000,000—for the work from Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean. I believe hon gentlemen opposite will be surprised, yet, to find it built for less than $75,000,000. It will not cost more in the most rigid calculation. Some gentlemen and newspapers have said that the Engineer-in-Chief is one of the most extravagant engineers possible. We can, therefore, place some reliance on his calculations. If we finish the road for $75,000.000, and in the first ten years only sell half the lands we estimate, where will be the burden on the people? That would not make a very serious invasion into the very large tracts of land we should have still to sell. As the road progresses, the annual sales of land will more than be sufficient to meet all the possible cost of the railway. In addition to all that, we must remember we shall be pouring into the more than be sufficient to meet all the possible cost of the railway. In addition to all that, we must remember we shall be pouring into that country an enormous population, which, on a prairie soil will rapidly become—not with the painful toil of the people of Ontario and Quebec, who have had to clear the forest—consumers of dutiable goods and contributors to the revenue. We shall be receiving a large revenue from that country altogether independent of the products of the lands. Where, then, is there any danger of this country being over-ridden by taxation or being oppressed? There is none. I believe, under this scheme, we shall settle the country rapidly; that the proceeds of the sales of lands will meet our engagements, as the work progresses, including the claims for interest. I believe that the interest upon the railway expenditure can easily be defrayed without adding further to the taxation of the country."

This seems to be a very clear and lucid statement from the First Minister. He assures his friends on the other side and tells the country, through Parliament, that he will in ten years sell land enough to realize all the money required for the construction of the Canadian Paeific Railway, not only prospective expenditure, but the expenditure that had already taken place, amounting to from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000. Now, then, did the hon. member approve of the scheme? Did hon. members on the other side declare their acquiescence and signify their willingness that this mode of construction should be adopted? They did. How does it lay in their mouth to take other ground and say that this railway should be built through the agency of a company? The Government declared their policy and the hon. members on the other side sanctioned and approved of that policy without a dissenting voice, and cheered vociferously when this policy was announced from time to time. Now, I think I have established sufficiently that the definite policy of the late Government was that this railway should be built by the Government. I have shown that they themselves provided the means by which the railway was to be built, and that money was to be realized out of the land in 10 years to construct this whole railway, and that its construction should put no financial burden upon the people. It must be evident to every one that such was the policy of the Government at the close of last Session. What took these hon, members to England

The country knew nothing about it; they had not been authorized by this House to go; they went to England without the knowledge or authority of Parliament, and I would like to see the Order in Council authorizing that delegation to England. What was the result there? were told that they were enlisting the greatest bankers of the age, that they were successful in their mission—from time to time it was declared in their newspapers that they were succeeding. Did they succeed? What does the result show? They did not succeed. They returned to this country, and what do we find? We find the First Minister, on his return, makes his speech, and I think it may be said it was an unfortunate speech, and one which will cost this country millions of dollars. What did he tell those gentlemen who waited upon him, the members of the Club Cartier who presented him with an address and who seemed to be under the delusion that he had been successful in his mission? He told those gentlemen that he had made a contract in England—a contract firm as he called it—which would relieve the people of this country of the entire cost of the railway. Will any hon. gentleman say he did not say that? Had the right hon, gentleman any warrant for saying that a contract was made in England? It was made in this country, and if it were made in England, why, when information was asked for by this House, was it kept back? Is it not due to the people of this country, when we find a contract made, involving upwards of $100,000,000 of the people's money, that they should know something about it? This contract was made in direct contravention of the law of the land. If there is one principle more than another sacred to the people of this country, it is that contracts for public works should be given to public competition. Do hon, members on that side justify a practice opposite to that principle? This contract was made behind the backs of the people of this country, and it is the privilege of this House to know who it was that those gentlemen corresponded with, who it was they invited tenders from. Are Messrs. McIntyre and Stephen the only favored people of this country, and none others? Why, there are plenty of men throughout this country of equal worth and standing. who would have been glad to tender for a great work like this. I say that hon, gentlemen have trampled under foot the sacred rights of the people and the law of the land. They went to England without authority, and they made this contract without authority. Is it not of the last importance that we should know who were those gentlemen that the Minister of Railways corresponded with in reference to this contract?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has asked me a question; I will answer him by reading from the Toronto Globe, in its article giving the events of the year:

"The event of the Session was the division on the question of letting "The event of the Session was the division on the question of letting the contracts for the Yale-Kamloops section of the Pacific Railway in British Columbia. The Minister of Railways had let these contracts on the eve of the meeting of Parliament, but in view of the unsatisfactory financial condition of the country Mr. Blake moved to have them postponed. The debate which followed was the beginning of an agitation, which culminated at the very close of the year, and the full history f which will have to be written at some future time. The Ministry obtained from Parliament authority to negotiate for the formation of a Company to build the Pacific Railway, and three of their number, including the Premier and Minister of Railways, went on a mission to Ingland to effect that object."

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Is that true? I ask him if there is a word of truth in it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then, I tell the hon. gentleman that while the Government stated there was no possibility, owing to circumstances to which they drew the attention of the House, of proceeding with the work except in the mode in which it had been begun, they obtained from Parliament authority to apply 100,000,000 acres as the means by which they could proceed with the construc-Sir Albert J. Smith.

1880 we had the fullest authority of this Parliament as found on the Statute-book.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Point me to the Statute, if you please.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Act of 1874. The decisions of Parliament in 1871, in 1872, in 1874, in 1878, and in 1879—all of them gave a direct authority to the Government to carry on the construction of the railway in that way.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Does the hon. gentleman know that the Act of 1872 was repealed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Was the Act of 1874 repealed? Has it been repealed yet?

Sir ALBERT. J. SMITH. He says that his authority was the Act of 1872. I say that Act is repealed. Does he mean that he acted on the authority of the Act of 1874? I am dealing with the subject as it was presented to the House during the last Session. I am not going back to the time when this Parliament appropriated 100,000,000 acres for the purpose of constructing the railway, and I say that scheme was projected on the principle that this railway was to be built as a Government work. More than that, these resolutions themselves provide that the Government shall select the land. I ask whether I am not in the judgment of the House, whether I have not proved in these statements I have made concerning the policy of the Government, that the House and the country are entitled to all the information that can be given with reference to these contracts. If you ask this House to sanction the appropriation of $100,000,000 of its property, is it not reasonable that the people should be given all information in connection with the subject, more particularly as there was no authority to let this contract, because we know that tenders for contracts for any public work in the country must be called for, and the House is entitled to be put in possession of every tender and paper in connection with the transaction. Why this concealment? Why should we ask in vain for information, when we are asked to pass upon a great transaction like this, involving one hundred millions of dollars of public property, it is but reasonable we should have some information. The hon. First Minister returned to this country and told these young gentlemen of the Club Cartier that his mission had been entirely successful. That he had made a contract, and that his highest aspiration when he left this life—the advantages. in the life to come are not commensurate with his aspirations here—he hoped that he should have the privilege of looking down upon these gentlemen of the Club Cartier journeying to British Columbia in a railway. Now, if there is any punishment in the life to come for the political sins of this life, I am afraid that my hon. friend will not have the opportunity of looking down, but will be obliged to look up if he wishes to see these gentlemen of the Club Cartier going to British Columbia. I think we can say without hesitation or fear of contradiction, that the mission They made of the Government in England was abortive. no contract there; they consulted, apparently, Mr. Rose as one of the parties who joined the Syndicate, or rather his son, and then returned home without making a contract. I propose to deal with this contract now on its merits, and I may say that though the hon, gentlemen opposite made able speeches it is remarkable how little they treated the merits of the case at all. They abused my hor, friend the leader of the Opposition, and then they showed a wonderful sympathy for the ex-leader of the Opposition-a sympathy for which I do not think he will thank them. It seems to me to be in very bad taste for the hon, gentleman to have. the means by which they could proceed with the construc-tion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The statement made this side. I think the hon, member for Kings will agree by the Toronto Globe is strictly true that both in 1879 and with me that the people in our Province think we ought to have a dissolution. They seem to think that this matter is so gigantic, involves so many startling principles, that it should be referred to the people, particularly as the people have not given any authority to the Government to make that contract. In demonstrating the value of the lands, I see no reason or excuse for hon. members opposite for appealing to speeches made seven years ago by hon. mem. bers on this side as to their value. I am going to quote the speech of the right hon. Premier of last year. I have great confidence in his judgment. I will quote his opinions as to the value of the lands, and I presume he stands now by that opinion. The hon. Minister of Railways has changed his mind several times in this matter and is proud to acknowledge the change, but I do not think the First Minister will deny now that he stated these lands were worth $3 an acre. The hon. Minister for Railways in 1875, told us that if he had the right to select the choice lands of the country those lands were worth $5 an acre; but we must make some allowance for the accustomed exaggerations of the hon. Minister of Railways, and I prefer to adopt the value put upon the lands by the First Minister. He told us last year they were worth $3 an acre. If they were worth $3 an acre, I want to show what has been done by this Government, with this Syndicate. Is it necessary for me to read the estimate given by the Minister of Railways as to the cost of this work. He stated as follows:-

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before six o'clock I was about taking up the question of the expenditure that will be required to complete the Canadian Pacific Railway. I will now submit a calculation I believe to be an outside one, or above the probable outlay. This estimate has been prepared by a gentleman who has had the widest and best opportunity of forming a deliberate and dispassionate judgment on the subject—a gentleman whose ability, in my opinion, is only exceeded by his caution—Mr. Sandford Fleming, Engineer-in-Chief of the Canada Pacific Railway. However much this estimate of expenditure may be reduced, I am sure it cannot be exceeded. The distance from Lake Superior to Burrard Inlet is 1956 miles: that is, adding twenty miles for the diversion of the line to the south of Lake Manitoba, and deducting three and three-quarters miles for the reduction in the distance between Lake Superior and Red River, and the shortening by the change of route passing north of Edmonton and the shortening by the change of route passing north of Edmonton instead of south as before. That total includes the Fort William and Selkirk section of 406 miles as now reduced; and for that I submit an estimate for completion in the manner intended as a first-class road, and with a thorough equipment for the large traffic expected, and including terminal stations, $17, 00,000, or $1,000,000 less for the reasons stated than my estimate of last year. The 1,000 from Selkirk to Jasper Valley, the dividing point just beyond the foot of the Rocky Mountains, including a light equipment—all that will be required for some years—Mr. Fleming estimates at $13,000,000, that is $3,000,000 more than the average estimate for the 200 miles west of Red River, in order to be entirely safe. We have for the 200 miles west of Red River, in order to be entirely safe. We have 100 miles actually under contract, and have received tenders for the other 100 miles, and I do not expect the average cost to exceed that of the 100

Mr. BLAKE: What is the amount estimated for the equipment per mile?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER: A light equipment is all we shall require for some years.

Mr. BLAKE: Will it be $1,000 or $2,000 per mile?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER: When the traffic demands a heavier equip-

Mr. BLAKE: Will it he $1,000 or $2,000 per mile?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER: When the traffic demands a heavier equipment there will be means for providing it.

Mr. BLAKE: I only want to know your estimate in dollars.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER: It is $13,000 per mile, as against an estimate we should be justified in giving of $10,000 a mile, making $3.000,000 more than the average of the amount probably needed to complete and supply with a fair equipment the 200 miles we have under contract on the prairies. From Jasper Valley to Port Moody the distance is 550 miles. From Jasper to Kamloops, in British Columbia, to which the portion now under contract extends. is 335 miles, which can be constructed, I believe, for $40,000 a mile. But Mr. Fleming more cautious, has given an outside estimate of $43,660 a mile. This is much heavier than the prairie district, but is light compared to the section we have let in the canyons of the Fraser. That will give $15,500,000 for the section from Jasper House to Kamloops. From Kamloops to Yale is 125 miles, which Mr. Fleming estimates at $80,000 a mile. or $10,000,000 to complete the road, with a fair equipment for any traffic likely to be required. In my opinion we may set down. instead of 10,000,000, $9,000,000 for that work. From Yale to Port Moody. 90 miles. he estimates at about $38 888 a mile, or $3,508,000. Those 550 miles foot up to $29,000,000, to which, with his usual caution Mr. Fleming adds $1,000,000; this makes, with the $17,000,000 for the road from Fort William to Red River, and $13.000,000 from Red River to Jasper Valley, $30,000,000 from that point to Burrard Inlet, a tetal of $60,000,000. Inlet, a total of $60,000,000.

Works, and of course these statements were in his mind calculation, or any other hon, member; if so, I shall be very when he made the present compact. The estimated cost of the road around the north shore of Lake Superior, which with the $60,000,000 would make $80,000,000. At that time about $15,000,000 were expended. And what do this Government propose to give the Syndicate for building a railway which they estimated would cost $80,000,000. I will take the lands at $3 per acre, a low estimate, for the First Minister valued them at $5, and I will endeavor to We are told that 1,000 miles can be built for $13,000,000, so we will take that amount out. The Syndicate receives in cash $25,000,000; they receive for railway built and to be built, $28,000,000; land, at $3 per acre, $75,000,000, or a total of $128,000,000. surveys which is proper to charge, because the Act of Mr. Mackenzie provided that they should be charged, bring this total up to $131,000,000, an amount representing an actual donation to this company of good value beyond peradventure.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Hear, hear.

Sir ALBERT SMITH. To what particular remark does the hon, gentleman intend to apply his hear, hear. If he thinks I over-value the lands he must blame the hon. gentleman beside him (Sir John Macdonald), because he valued them even higher.

Mr. BLAKE. And he himself valued them at the same

Sir ALBERT SMITH. I believe he did.

Mr. ROCHESTER. Will the hon, gentleman tell us his leader's opinion on the subject.

Sir ALBERT SMITH. The hon. gentleman can himself do that. If he were to look at this question upon its merits rather than through party eyes he would know more of the subject. But I will deduct the $13,000,000 which these hon, gentlemen say was the cost of the first thousand miles. and we will have left $118,000,000 for the thousand miles which the Syndicate have to construct. And this is to be paid for a railway around Lake Superior and one from Jasper House to Kamloops. And how much do they say it would cost to build those two branches? From Fort William to Nipissing, $20,000,000; and from Jasper House to Kamloops, $15,500,0.0; so that they are agreeing to pay $118,000,000 for what they themselves said would cost $35,500,000. These calculations will justify their correctness to any hon. gentleman who chooses to look at this matter as a commercial transaction, and that is how it should be regarded. I am quite cortain that if these hon. gentlemen could emancipate themselves from party ties and look at this matter as one of business, they would not question my figures. And how much will this Syndicate make out of the central section? Now, taking the central section, I will show how unfairly the Government have dealt with the country in respect of it, and how much the Syndicate will make, provided they confine their attention entirely to its construction, which it is perfectly competent for them to do. The Gov. ernment had no security for the construction of that section -no lien on that work; it becomes absolutely the property of the Syndicate; all that the Government have power to do is simply to retain 5,000,000 acres, or one-fifth on the land grant, the 10,500 acres a mile. They have assigned to what they call the Central Section: 900 miles, $10,000 a mile, and 12,500 acres a mile. What will this yield? What is the cost of the work which they give us themselves? 9,000,-090 cash; deduct one-fifth of the land, and you have 10,-000 acres a mile, or 9,000,000 acres altogether, which, at $3.00 an acre, gives $27,000,000, or a total of $36,000,000 in cash. Deducting one-fifth, according to the contract, and taking the estimate of the Minister of Railways, the 900 miles will cost $11,700,000, leaving a clear profit of $24,-This is the deliberate estimate of the Minister of Public 300,000. Will the Minister of Railways contradict that glad to be corrected. I take $3.00 an acre because it is the estimate of that hon. Minister himself. I now propose to criticise to some extent the contract itself, which is a most extraordinary one. We are told that it is important in the interest of the country that every railroad should be built and worked by a company. Why do they not do it? The Government are going on for 10 years to construct sections, and some of the most difficult, and are becoming what was never known before in any country, a railway contractor with a private corporation for the construction of a railway. Is not that a prostitution of the functions of the Government? They have bound themselves not only to complete the sections under construction, but have entered into a new contract with this corporation to build a line from Yale to Port Moody, 90 miles, at $3,500,000. Are they not then really contractors? I think the people of the country will be slarmed at finding the Government, who say they are wrong to build railways, becoming contractors with a private company. Is not this a new doctrine to incorporate in the administration of the affairs of the country? I never heard of the like before. The hon, member for Niagara seems to be such a disturbing element as to render it almost impossible for me to make myself heard on the other side. It is stipulated in this bargain that the Company should pay the Government the cost of the 100 miles of road extending from Winnipeg westward and the other expenses incurred by the Government; and that they shall have the right to assume the said work at any time on paying cost of construction incurred by the Government. Thus the Syndicate have a right to the expenditure by the Government - without paying a dollar of interest they get the road for the bare cost, and also 1,250,000 acres of land, worth $3 an acre, $3,750,000 and all this for nothing. The next section of the contract provides the Government shall build a line from Yale to Port Moody, which is to become the property of the Company. This is an extraordinary obligation to assume for themselves and any Government that may come after them. The hon, member for Niagara certainly be characterised in names I would not like to use here, for his incessant interruptions. He is so thorough and blind a follower of his leader that if his leader told him the moon was made of green cheese he would echo the statement. I am coming to another point, as regards what the contract provides for in respect to those portions of the road which are to be constructed by and handed over to the Government. With regard to those portions of the road already built, and handed over to the Company, there is no forfeiture, there is nothing more than a simple covenant, to secure their running by the Company in the interim, until the rest of the road is completed. The contract provides:

"The railway constructed under the terms hereof shall be the property of the Company: and pending the completion of the eastern and central sections, the Government shall transfer to the Company the possession and right to work and run the several portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway already constructed or as the same shall be completed. And upon the completion of the eastern and central sections, the Government shall convey to the Company, with a suitable number of station buildings and with water service (but without equipment), those portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway constructed or to be constructed by the Government which shall then be completed; and upon completion of the remainder of the portion of railway to be constructed by the Government, that portion shall also be conveyed to the Company, and the Canadian Pacific Railway shall become and be thereafter the absolute property of the Company. And the Company shall thereafter and forever efficiently maintain, work and run the Canadian Pacific Railway."

Now, what I say is this—that woon the completion of the line from Thunder Bay to Selkirk, the Company have the right to the use and possession of that line, and may run it if they choose. They say they will run it; but when we look for the security of the running of this road, we find that the $1,000,000 security does not apply to it;

Sir Albert J. Smith.

"The contractors immediately after the organization of the said Company shall deposit with the Government $1,000,000 in cash or approved securities, as a security for the construction of the railway hereby contracted for."

I find, also, that the bonds for five million scres to be retained by the Government applies entirely to the running of the railway after it is completed:

"The Government shall retain and hold one-fifth of such honds as security for the due performance of the present contract in respect of the maintenance and continuous working of the railway by the Company, as herein agreed, for ten years after the completion thereof."

I would appeal to the Minister of Justice himself whethen the position I take is not sound law and the true interpretation of this contract. When the hon. Minister of Railways was propounding his policy to the House, he anticipated an objection which is now raised. I read from the Hansard of last Session :

"I dure say I will be told by the hon member for West Durham (Mr. Blake): Granted that your figures are correct, assuming that you

"If dare say I will be soul by the hold member for west busham (Mr. Blaske): Granted that your figures are correct, assuming that you have only encountered the first difficulty; you have then to operate the line, and the cost of that will be so greatly beyond anything you each hope to obtain from it, that you will place an intolerable burthen upon the people of this country. I must address myself for a few moments to that question. I will first give the information I have just received from the Superintendent of the Pembina Branch:

"The 160 miles we have now opened in the North-West, shows that from the 1st day of March to the 12th day of April we have carried 5, 236 passengers, and 1,248 loaded cars containing 12,460 tons of freight. The gross receipts during that short period were $36,387, and working expenses $15,000, leaving a net profit of $21,387, and this during a more difficult and stormy period than has been known for many years.

"By July, 1882, we will have about 700 miles of this road in operation; we will have 55 miles from Selkirk to Emerson or St. Vincent. We will have 50 miles from Selkirk to Emerson or St. Vincent. We will have 50 miles from Selkirk to Emerson or St. Vincent. We will have 200 miles to Winnipeg, will give us some 700 miles in operation, without reference at all to the section in British Columbia. I have every reason to believe that every mile of thut road, from the day it is opened, will make an ample return for all the expenditure incurred in its opened, will make an ample return for all the expenditure incurred in its opened, will make an ample return for all the expenditure incurred in its opened, will make an ample return for all the expenditure incurred in its opened, will make an ample return for all the expenditure incurred in its opened. it is affe to say that in every succeeding year, as we extend gradually this road towards the Rocky Mountains, it will furnish such an additional volume of traffic from Red River to Thunder Bay, which will become the great entrepot of that country, as will prevent it from burthening the people, and give us some fair return for the interest on the meney used in its construction."

This is the character of the property we are handing over to this Syndicate. What more? Has it occurred to hon. gentlemen on the other side that this Pembina Branch, which has been in full operation for some time, must be handed over to this Company as soon as this contract is ratified? We have a return showing that during the past year about $60,000 of net revenue has been derived from the running of that road over and above working expenses. Has it been considered that there is a property which is a productive and paying property, and that when the country becomes developed and settled with a thriving population, and the business increases, the revenue, instead of being $60,000, is likely to be $10,000? I do not believe the Minister of Railways himself will dispute that statement. And yet we have handed over this Perabina Branch without any consideration, to this Company, who can in ten years, derive an actual cash profit from it of $10,000,000. Now, that is a clear proposition and cannot be defied. There is no forteiture whatever to the Company if they refuse to run portions of the road that will not pay expenses. They may stop running the road altogether if they choose, and there is no power inherent in the contract to compel them to run it—no power but a Court of Chaucery, if that even is sufficient. Now, all I shall say upon the clause granting 25,000,000 acres of land is, that it is a very extraordinary thing. This provision was not in the Allan contract, it was not in the Mackenzie contract of 1874. Every clause in this contract betrays the work of an able and astute mind. I wonder if my hon, friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott)—I do not blame him in a prefessional sense, he was working for his clients but it seems to me I can see the mind of that hon, gentleman in every olause of this centract. Those hen gentlemen of the Synticate are able and astute men and they got the First Minister into their power. He knew he could not meet Parliament without submitting his schomes, after declaring at Hochelaga that he had completed the contract firm, when, in point of fact, it was not completed. The gentlemen of the Syndicate took in the situation thoroughly; they knew that, to a certain extent, the First Minister was in their power. I was about to say in connection with the 25,000,000 acres that all the lakes and water stretches in that country are to be excluded from the acreage of these 25,000,000. That will not be disputed. I appeal to the hon, member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) to look at this contract and see if all the lakes and rivers do not fall to the Syndicate. How is that? Who started this? Who suggested this claim? It is not in the Allan contract; there is nothing of the kind in the Act of 1874, and why should it be put down here? It shows that the men representing the Syndicate were masters of the situation. Therefore, I say, it is unfair to the country when you allow these men to go in and select the choicest lands, and yet exclude from the acreage all the lakes and water stretches. Then we find that the Government is to give these people the road-bed in full. I will pass on now to another clause:

"The Company shall have the right, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, to lay out and locate the line of railway hereby contracted for as they may see fit, preserving the following terminal points, namely: from Selkirk to the junction of the western section by way of the Yellow Head Pass."

When we come to look at the Acts of 1872 and 1874 we have no such provisions. The Company are authorized to deviate to the extent of five miles from the line of location. It is said to be subject to the approval of the Government, but the result will be that the Company may build a railroad wherever they choose without regard to the terminal points:

"The Company shall have the right, from time to time, to lay out, construct, equip, maintain and work branch lines of railway from any point or points along their main land of railway, to any point or points within the territory of the Dominion. Provided always, that before commencing any branch they shall first deposit a map and plan of such branch in the Department of Railways. And the Government shall grant to the Company the lands required for the road-bad of such branches, and for the stations, station grounds, buildings, workshalls, yards and other appartenances requisite for the efficient construction and working of such branches in so far as such lands are vested in the Government."

Now, Mr. Chairman, have you with all your knowledge of the subject fully comprehended the scope of this clause? Do hon, members on the other side know that this clause authorizes this Company forever to build branch railways in that country without any limitation of time. I dwell strongly on this point because I consider it is a very serious matter. I would prefer to see this contract defeated and the Government remain in power than to see the Government defeated and the contract adopted. It is not much of an object for gentlemen on this side to occupy the benches on the other side of the House. But, Sir, this clause undeniably bears that construction that for one hundred years hence this ( ompany have the right to construct branch railways throughout that entire country-larger than the Province from which I come by one-third—they have the right to contract railways there forever without limitation. I sincerely submit to the House that this part of the contract should be altered and modified. This seems to me to be a terrible power, but here it is, and I invite the attention of the lawyers of this House to that chause, and to say if it is not true that this Company may from time to time forever have power to construct branch lines of railways without coming to Parliament at all for a charter? The next clause reads as follows:

"For 20 years from the date hereof, no line of railway shall be authorized by the Dominion Parliament to be constructed south of the Canadian Pacific Railway from any point at or near the Canadian Pacific Railway, except such line as shall run south-west, or to the westward of south-west, mar to within fiftren miles of Lasitude 49. And in the establishment of any new Province is the North-West Territories, provision shall be made for continuing such prohibition after such establishment until the expiration of the said period."

Now, my hon. friend from Lambton has dealt with this question, but not exhaustively, I think. The Government saled this Parliament to suspend its functions, for 20 years, and to probibit itself during that time from authorizing the construction of any line of railway touching the boundary line of the United States. Now, is that not a terrible contemplation? The hands of Parliament are tied for twenty years, so that we cannot give a charter to any company to go to the boundary line of the United States. The hon member for Niagara ought to think seriously of that. He must feel it is an extraordinary power to give to a company. It is bartering away the legislative power of this country to this Company, which will have the right, whenever and whereever they choose, to build a line to the boundary line of the United States, and no individual nor company will have the right to get a charter to build a similar line. I call your attention to the section which authorises this Company to extend this line by purchase, to buy the Canada Central Railway and the Occidental Railway, which, with all the other branches and the main line, shall then constitute the Pacific Railway, and have all the privileges and advantages which the Pacific Railway has under the terms of this contract. The Syndicate will have the right of exemption from Customs duties? This seems to be an extraordinary provision which we do not find in the Acts of 1872-4. How is it the Government yielded to this, when in Allan's contract there is no such conception? Does it not show that there is some ingenious and actute mind behind all this that make these suggestions, and that has an undue influence on the Government? All the branch lines of railway which this Company are authorized to construct forever shall be exempt from taxation, as well as the main line forever. That is a fair construction of this contract. I call attention to the definition of what constitutes the 'acific Railway. That definition embraces all branches and stations; they all become portions of the Pacific Railway, and consequently are entitled to all the privileges of the railway.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Where do you find that? Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. In the 15th section, which reads as follows:

"The Company may lay out construct, acquire equip, maintain and work a continuous line of railway, of the guage of four feet eight and one-half inches; which railway shall extend from the terminus of the Canada Central Railway near Lake Napissing, known as Callander Station, to Port Moody in the Province of British Columbia; and also, a branch line of railway from some point on the main line of railway to Fort William on Thunder Bay; and also the existing branch line of railway to from Schkirk in the Province of Manitoba to Pembina in the said Province; and also other branches to be located by the Company from time to time as provided by the said contract; the said branches to be of the guage aforesaid; and 'he said main line of railway and the said branch lines of railway, shall be commenced and completed as provided by the said contract; and together with such other branch lines as shall be hereafter constructed by the said Company, and any extension of the said main line of railway that shall hereafter be constructed or acquired by the Company, shall constitute the line of railway hereinafter called the Canadian Pacific Railway."

I say that these branch lines of railway become a portion of the Pacific Railway and share in all its privileges. If this Company should purchase the Canada Central Railway and the Occidental Railway, these two railways when incorporated will become a portion of the Canada Pacific Railway, and thus this Company will have the authority of this Parliament to build branch lines in Ontario and Quebes without referring to Parliament at all. That is a fair legal construction. These extensions and ecquisitions shall become a portion of the Pacific Railway, and the clause gives the Company authority to build branch lines from the Pacific Railway to any part of the Dominion. I have no doubt at all that this was the intention of these contracting parties, or else why is the clause inserted. It seems specially provided for that case:

"As respects the said railway, the seventh-section of "The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879?" relating to powers, and the eighth section thereof, ating to plans and surveys, shall be subject to the following provisions:

"a. The Company shall have the right to take, use and held the beach and land below high water mark, in any stream, lake, navigable water, gulf or sea, in so far as the same shall be vested in the Crown and shall not be required by the Crown, to such extent as shall be required by the Company for its railway and other works, and as shall be exhibited by a map or plan thereof deposited in the office of the Minister of Railways. But the provisions of this sub-section shall not apply to any beach or land lying east of Lake Nipissing, except with the approval of the Governor in

I would ask the First Minister, as a distinguished lawyer, whether it is not clearly indicated that it was the intention of the contracting parties that whenever they should require the central line of railway or the Occidental line they should have the power to take lands, without reference to this Parliament, in any portion of Quebec or Ontario. It says east of Lake Nipissing it was not to be done without the authority of the Government. I think that is plain, because the Government are not building any railway east of Nipissing, unless it was intended these franchises, extensions, and privileges should apply to the whole line of railway; otherwise there is no necessity for that provision. The Minister of Railways, in the long and elaborate speech which he made in opening the discussion, told us that the standard of the Union Pacific, as at first constructed, was the standard provided in the Allan contract. The hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) brought him to book and it was found that the hon, gentleman was in error. The Allan contract was made in 18,3, and the Union Pacific was first constructed in 1869, and between those two dates the road had undergone a vast improvement. My hon, friend from North Victoria (Mr. H. Cameron), who is an able and distinguished lawyer, said, and he appeared to speak for the Government on that occasion, for they vociferously cheered him, that the clause meant the Union Pacific as it was in October, 1874. Then we have a letter from the Syndicate, but I say if the hon, gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Cameron) is correct, the sooner this letter is returned to them the better, for I will show that it comprises the standard to 1873, and that it does not provide the same protection to the country with regard to the character of the road as did the Allan contract. The letter says:

"With reference to the objections that have been raised to the description in the third clause of the Pacific Railway contract of the approximate standard named in that clause, we beg to state that when the contract was framed it was not considered that there was any difference of importance between the time of the original construction of the Union Pacific Railway and the date of the Allan contract. We are therefore, prepared to agree on behalf of the Syndicate, that the description of the standard shall be construed as applying to the Union Pacific Railway as it was in February, 1873."

Now, we were told on the authority of the Government tha it meant the standard of 1874, and that this standard was a good as that provided in the Allan contract. This letter shows how hard it was to draw anything out of these gentlemen of the Syndicate. They now send this letter to heal up the difficulty, but even now they have not gone the whole hog, so to speak; they do not cover the ground of objection at all. The letter goes to say:

"The obligations of the Company will virtually be the same as if that date were substituted in the clause in question for the words "as the same was when first constructed." We have no hesitation in agreeing same was when hist constructed. We have no nestation in agreement to this construction, as it is obvious that our interest will lead us to construct the railway in a substantial manner with steel rail- and efficient equipment, and our reason for desiring that a standard should be named was not in any degree to enable us to construct an inferior railway, but merely to prohibit us from captious or arbitrary criticism."

Now, Sir, what was the standard provided in the contract with Sir Hugh Allan:

"That the railway shall be constructed and equipped according to Sir Albert J. Smith.

it shall be such as may bereafter be agreed upon between the Government and the Company."

Now, hon gentlemen will see how the public interests are protected in that contract; but in the present scheme we have not a word about the locomotives, or the rolling stock, or the tolls, which, as I shall presently show, are in themselves a very serious consideration. The clause in the Allan contract proceeds:

'Provided always that if the Government and the Company should be unable to agree as to the details of any of the matters in this clause mentioned, the same shall be from time to time referred to the determimentioned, the same shall be from time to time referred to the determination of three competent engineers, one of whom shall be chosen by the Government, one by the Company, and a third by such two engineers; and the expenses of said references shall be defrayed by the Company. And in order to establish an approximate standard, whereby such matters may be regulated, the Union Pacific Railway of the United States hereby selected and fixed as such standard, but in a general way only, and not with respect to any minor details in its construction or working which may be found to be objectionable, nor with respect to alignment to grades, which shall be as favorable as the nature of the country will permit of without undue expenditure."

Now, we are told that self-interest will dictate to the Syndicate that they should build a first-class road, but the same principle applied in the contract with Sir Hugh Allan, and why were these provisions imposed in the one case and not in the other. The Minister of Railways says the two contracts were identical in this respect, but the Allan contract says not. This shall not be the standard. The language used is: "In a general way only, and not in respect of any minor details as to the working, nor in respect to the grades, which shall be as favorable as the condition of the country will allow." Why do not these gentlemen, if they want to assimilate that condition with that of the Allan contract, which the Government were under the impression was different from what it is-for the Minister of Railways says that the same standard provided for in the Allan was provided for in the present contract? Another question of some importance is with regard to the ten per cent. The whole country is interested in this matter, and especially the North-West. The centract provides that the Government in Council shall not interfere with the tolls or tariffuntil the Company realize 10 per cent. en the expenditure connected with the construction of the road. What does that apply to? To the capital actually expended, or to the amount received from the Government by the Syndicate in the constructed portions of the road? It is also provided that the limit to the reduction of tolls by the Parliament of Canada, provided for by the Act of 1879, respecting tolls, is hereby extended, so that the reductions shall not secure less than 10 per cent. per annum profit on the capital actually expended in the construction of the railway. I appeal to hon, members whether that does not mean 10 per cent. on the actual cost of the road. The Government have estimated this road will cost $80,000,000 or more. This provision, then, will authorize the Company to derive 10 per cent. profit from the whole amount expended on that road, if they do not spend on it $1, and they most assuredly will not expend one dollar. They thus get some $57,000,000 in cash, besides all the land. On that amount they will receive 10 per cent., the amount expended by the Government. Before the Government can interfere or arrange the tariff, the Company must receive 10 per cent. interest on the $80,000,000, or $8,000,000 a year. It does seem hard that the Government should give $80,000,000 or more to construct the road, hand it over to the Syndicate, and then that Syndicate should realize 10 per cent. on it, when, in point of fact, they never expended on it $1. This is not fancy or fiction, but a fair, legal construction of the language. The Syndicate understand it thoroughly; and the Government have not condescended to give us their own views thereon. I am unable to exert my specifications to be hereafter agreed upon between the Government and the Company, and their materials of, and manner in which the several works forming part thereof shall be constructed, and the mode of working the railway, or any part thereof, including the description and capacity of the locomotive engines and other rolling stock for working feeling in a calm consideration of this question. It appears to me the Government are applying the whip to their supporters. I do not use the phrase in any offensive sense. My hon. friend from Ottawa County (Mr. Wright), who lately spoke, seems to have his mind considerably disturbed by this project, and I believe that other memiers on that side have minds not easy on that subject. If they will come impartially to the consideration of this question and deal with the contract on its merits, I would undertake to say that, if the Government will relinquish this contract, my hon. friends would consent to their remaining in power without any hesitation.

Mr. BLAKE and several other hon, members. Hear, hear.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I would cheerfully see the Government continue in power if thereby this contract could be defcated. We would enter into a compact that the Government should remain in their places if they would relieve the country from this calamity threatened by this contract. I implore hon, members on the Ministerial side to consider this bargain as a commercial transaction, and divest themselves of all party feeling in judging of its character.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Chairman, the question now before the House is too important a one for me to let the vote be taken without giving my share of the arguments that I am bound to urge on behalf of the county that I represent. When the Government brought this measure before the House it did so in such a party manner that we were afraid—at least for my part I was afraid—that this scheme would be passed before we had time to make it known to our constituents. That is why I took the most favorable opportunity that presented itself to request the Government to furnish us at once with the copies of this contract, in order, as far as possible, to be able to send to our counties, and especially to the county that I represent. I am proud to say that I was able to distribute this contract in my county so as to make it known; I wished to particularly draw the attertion of all those who take an active part in public affairs in my county, and for that purpose I deemed it my duty to send a circular to each one of them, in order to make them acquainted with all the objections that we had to this contract. I think that I have fulfilled my duty as a member by thus enabling my electors to become acquainted with what I look upon as enormities in this contract. I am not going, this evening, to repeat the arguments that have been brought forward on this side of the House against the provisions of the contract. Certainly, I have the right to congratulate myself on belonging to a side of this House that has been able to furnish in such detailed manner, in such a plausible manner, and in so peremptory a manner, reasons that would be sufficient, were it not for the very strong party spirit of hon. gentlemen opposite, to cause this contract to be unhesitatingly rejected. The proposal made by the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Sir Albert J. Smith) is a serious one; it was not made lightly. consider the interests of the country are so much at stake at the present moment that we are willing to give up all our pretensions, if the maintenance of the Government depends thereon, provided that we obtain the necessary amendments to this contract. Indeed, when we came here, I speak for myself, and it seems to me that a member speaking from his place should be listened to and believed, I was persuaded for my part that the contract to be submitted to the House would be acceptable to the people. That is what I thought, but I was deceived, like a great many others, by the words which fell from the lips of the Prime Minister. I was deceived, as was the hon. mover of the Address, for he told us the contract would be a favorable one. We believed it, I believed it, and the people velieved it; the electors in my county believed it—the seconder of the Address as well. And what did he say? I think that his Address as well. And what did he say? I think that his words may be looked upon as coming from the Government. "I believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway will yet be built, but that we can build it on the plan proposed, I do not think. Why have we not been furnished with the facts, as to the American Pacific Railway and

He was, what they call in English, the mouthpiece of the Government. What he came and said here on the floor of Parliament, was it a naiveté? But I cannot believe that it was when the speech was written. He said:

"Arrangements have been made that will secure the building of the road according to the stipulations of the treaty. The whole road from east to west will be built equipped and worked by a private company without its costing the Dominion Government a single penny."

Well, Mr. Chairman, that is the assertion made on the floor of this House. Was it in order to deceive the people? Was it in order to deceive us? I say that we were deceived; and I say that the Government has not the right, for the honor of the country, to deceive us; the honor of the country is as much the property of this side of the House as of the other side. The fair name, the reputation of the Government, is as much our property as that of the other side of the House. I heard the hon, member for Portneuf (Mr. Vallée), whom I do not now see in his seat, say that we were made to remain on the Opposition benches. He could not, as far as I am concerned, pay me a more flattering compliment than that, I maintain that the position of members of the Opposition is the most enviable position that can be desired, and for my part I do not wish to abandon it. I do not wish to take up the time of this House at any great length; nevertheless. I have two or three points to submit. On examining the contract now before the House, I asked myself, and I still ask myself, what position I am personally to take; what is my duty at the present moment? Here is the contract that is submitted to us; what alternative have we? The fact is there is no alternative. I wish there was one. I wish I was in a position to say that I was willing to adopt some kind of a contract, in order to place this undertaking in the hands of a Syndicate. But circumstances are entirely changed, we are no longer in the same position we were in five years ago. The position that we are in to-day is that, according to the statement of Ministers, we have constructed nearly half of the road; that is to say, that we have spent $35,000,000, and $78,000,000 are required to complete the road. And to complete it where? To complete it in the most favorable place, in the place that will pay later on. I say that circumstances are completely charged, and that is why I see no necessity of changing the plan the Government had formed last year for building the road. The hon. Minister of Public Works stated that this contract had been passed to prevent the ruin of the country. Therefore, the policy adopted by the Government last year, was unquestionably bringing the country to ruin. On the other hand, what have we with the present contract? We are fulling out of the frying-pan into the fire. Shall we fall into the hands of the Syndicate, or shall we remain in the ruin that the hon. Minister has brought us to? That is the position we are in. Well, now is the time to come to a decision. I would fain make every possible effort to bring myself to accept an acceptable contract; and I say it in all truth, I do not want to conceal what I think, I came here disposed to help the Government in any acceptable scheme. But there is no means of accepting the one now thrown on our hands. The hon, member for Rouville endeavored to throw a parting shot at me, by saying that, last year, I had pronounced against the Sault Ste. Marie Branch. I have enough to answer for the faults that I am really guilty of, without any being invented for me. In quoting my words he should have quoted all I said, in order to have my exact Talleyrand once said: "Give me two words written by any man and I have enough to hang him." I do not think that my hon. friend is as capable a man as Talleyrand was. Here are the very words that I made use its cost per mile for working. They would afford us a fair criterion for a judgment on this subject. I see the Government do not intend to go beyond Thunder Bay to the east. Then I call Thunder Bay a cul de sae. The navigation at that place is stopped for a part of the year. Trade will not go that way in winter, but take its natural course south. The border country is flat, and the natural channel for trade is in the direction of the United States. You cannot prevent it going in that direction. You may bring trade to Thunder Bay in summer, and draw it to the Georgian Bay, by loading and unloading vessels; but in winter, as well as in summer, you will have to take the shortest cut and go by the american railways to Sault Ste. Marie. Your railway to that point will be tapped all along the route, the through freight being next to nothing. The project of a railway from Thunder Bay, north-west of Lake Superior, is as wild as that from Winnipeg to Hudson's Bay. The hon. the Minister of Public Works said that public opinion was with the Government in this matter. I appeal to the Conservatives of Quebec, if the strongest pressure has not been brought to bear on them, to induce them to support the Government at this conjuncture? If they could shirk the vote, if the Government were not depending on them, they would do so."

From these words, which came in incidentaly, because I was opposing the part of the road that was being built to the north of Lake Superior, my hon. friend concluded that I was opposed to the Sault Ste. Marie line. He is entirely mistaken. I am still in favor of that line, and I say that it will be built. I may say to the hon. member for Portnenf (-Mr. Vallée), that if he will only examine the recent maps and plans of railways in the United States, he will see that with thirty additional miles of railway we will join Sault Ste. Marie to the east. By wishing to have this connection only ten years hence, hon, gentlemen seem to calculate that this is a very short space of time, yet ten years are a good deal in a man's life. Ten years hence, a great many heads that I now see around me will have been mowed down by death; so that circumstances in ten years from now will not be at all the same. Moreover, according to an old saying: In ten years from now a great deal of water will have flowed down the river. If the members of the Syndicate have really and seriously the intention of building the road to the north of Lake Superior, they have shown by the contract, on the very face of it, that they have no such intention. And I ask myself now why there are three distinct contracts in this contract. There is, in the first place, the contract of the Government who bind themselves to contsruct the most difficult part of the road. There are, next, two other contracts for the same line divided into two distinct parts, and why? The reason is quite simple, it is in order that if only one part is built, the damages resulting from the non-execution of the other part shall be lessened by so much; so that the Syndicate will get rid of this part of the road, and will only have to pay a comparatively small sum as an indemnity. Now, much have to go the read of the road and the read of the road o been said, and I will only mention the matter in order to refute what has been said with respect to the influence of the Grand Trunk in our districts. Berhaps members who live in the district of Montreal or in the Province of Ontario, do not know the extent of the influence of the Grand Trunk in our district. If they had had to deal with this influence as we have had to do, I am sure that not one of them would wish to grant to another company one-half or one-quarter of the influence that the Grand Trunk has exercised in our On the other hand, what is the influence of the affairs. Grand Trunk compared to the influence of this immense corporation, an influence so great that I heard the Prime Minister say that he would hurry up the discussion, that he wanted to have the vote taken before Christmas, because Mr. Stephens, one of the members of the Syndicate, was in Ireland wishing to get immigrants. I already see the enormous pressure brought to bear by this powerful Company, which is yet only in the embryo state but which is, nevertheless, already as strong as Atlas and bears upon its shoulders the present Government. There is no hiding it, the pressure brought to bear by the Syndicate is already enormous; it is so enormous that the Government has not been able to obtain from the Company a slight concession to help their friends, and to help them in the hour of need. In speaking of this question, I maintain that it has not Mr. Casgrain.

Now, as this contract is going to be adopted, from what I can see, I owe it to myself to make a Now, suggestion to the Government. I see in the execution of this contract an enormous difficulty. I am going to point it out, not so much in order to make an objection against the Government, as in order to allow Ministers to obviate a difficulty that they will find in their way. Probably in three years from now, at the hon. Minister of Railways observed, the prairie section will be completed. We will consequently be obliged to grant the Company 11,250,000 acres of land. To survey these lands and lay them out in alternate sections, it will be necessary, of course, to survey 21,500,000. Now, if we make allowance for bad lands, which must cover at least half the territory—and the argument I am now making is serious, and as a statesman I draw attention to it—we have, consequently, four times 11,250,000, that is to say, 45,000,000 acres of land to survey in three years. How will you be able to strike off, by surveys, in so short a space of time, all the rivers, marshes, sandy lands and lands unfit for settlement? I took the trouble to get information from the Deputy Minister of the Interior upon this point, and I have found that since these lands have been in our possession, we have only been able to survey 12,27:,17, acres, at a cost of $560,576. which makes four cents and a half per acre; consequently we arrive by calculation, at a sum of $2,025,000 that we will have to spend in three years on the railway, merely for surveying the lands that we are obliged to deliver to the Company as fast as the road is built under penalty of paying an indemnity. And what is the indemnity that the Company can exact? These gentlemen are not there in the interest of the country, but in their own interest. These lands are sold beforehand. I can assert that when this contract will have been ratified by the Senate, you will find $10,000,000 on the New York market as a bonus to any company willing to take it. I declare that this contract will be worth to the Syndicate, the day after its ratification, $10,000,000 on the New York market. Now, I desire to draw the attention of the House to another point: I have listened attentively to what has been said on the other side of the House and on this side. and I am at a loss to know what we are paying for this contract now and what we shall be paying for it in ten years from now. There is not a single member on the other side of the House, except the member for Portneuf ( r. Valée), who has given us the price of the contract. We are in the dark. If I had Diogenes' lantern to scrutinize the consciences of hon, gentlemen opposite, I might perhaps find the price of this contract, but I have not got it. The Government keeps the origin of this contract hidden, and deeds done in darkness are not deeds that can be approved of Well, on striking our balance sheet ten years hence, what will be the price of the contract? My hon. friend from Portneuf (Mr. Vallée) has given us a figure, and I fear that he gave it in all sincerity. He gave $148,000,000, estimating the lands at $3 an acre, the price fixed by his friends on the other side of the House. Well, $148,000,000, that is the cost now, but what will it be ten years hence? When you have added the two deposits, the cost of commission; when you have necessarily added contingent expenses, and interest calculated only at five per cent., you arrive at a figure that will exceed $175,000,000. Therefore, I say that we are walking in darkness. Gentlemen on the other side are in the dark as to the sum they are actually granting. The cost is not yet determined. I have endeavored to find it out, but there is only one way of coming at it, the price of this contract. The members of the Syndicate which have made these calculations can alone tell us what is the price of the contract. One word more and I have done. I have observed in this contract that the Government have, so to speak, divested themselves practically of the right of regulating the tariff on the road.

seen exaggerated on this side of the House. On the contrary, the greater the time that elapses, the more the population will grow, the more this enormous privilege will make itself felt. We are creating gigantic discontents. The member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Cimon) admitted candidly that the road was absolutely necessary, and that in order to have it at once he was willing to pay even more if required; and that, if in the future it became necessary to buy off this enormous privilege granted to the Company, we would buy it off. That is not an argument a sensible man would use, Mr. Chairman, to make us purchase what already belongs to us. Now, my hon, friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) was fain to make a sort of funeral oration over Sir George Etienne Cartier, who is a demi-god in his eyes. What makes me allude to this subject is, because he recalled the famous words attored by Sir George some nine years ago. Sir George said what the member for Beauharnois repeated: "All aboard for the West!" And that shows what mortification can be put up with by those who are disposed to put up with anything. It is now nine years since that was said, and have we gone West? No; we are still here. I said last year that the road would not be built on the plan proposed by the Government, and I was not mistaken. The Government have changed their plan; they are now building the road according to a secret plan, a hidden plan, concocted in the strictest privacy, a plan that we are not acquainted with and for which, gentlemen on the other side are going to vote, so as to please the Government. I said, in the second place, that we should have exact data to go upon if we were to build the road; I said those data should be based upon American railways. I was almost a prophet. These gentlemen should be thankful to me for having found out a plan they are now making use of. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to trespass longer on the time of the House. Inow appeal to the good sense of the House. I do not believe that I am able to change the opinion of one single member on the other side, yet it is evident that there is a general feeling of uneasiness among them. If I had a request to make, I would address the Prime Minister, who has a large number of faithful and devoted followers, and I regret that he was not in his place when my friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson), paid him a compliment, that I consider well deserved; and when he made a serious appeal, a patriotic appeal, a warm appeal to his patriotism and to the patroitism of his followers. The contract now submitted contains clauses of such a grave character, that are of such deep interest to the country, that if he will give a little further consideration, if he is not too tightly held in the clutches of the Syndicate; if he can rid himself for a moment from the grasp that is upon him, we will be the happiest men in the world to be able to help him out of the difficulty, to help him to make, with another Syndicate, a bargain preferable to the one now submitted.

M. BLAKE. If I were not to have a subsequent opportunity of addressing this House I would desire to reply to some of the arguments of hon, gentlemen opposite at the present stage of this discussion. Now, however, I only wish to say a word or two on points which I think ought not to be allowed to rest even to the next stage of the debate. First of all, with reference to the point of the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), that this contract was one which could be enforced by specific performance of the Court of Chancery, he appealed to me to sustain that position as one having some knowledge and experience of that Court. I was obliged to say so far as my opinion was concerned, that that position was not in accordance with the law. The Minister of the Interior (Sir John A. Macdonald) differed with me in that view, and seemed to think that while a permissive power did not involve any obligation to build the railway, yet if there was a contract for its construction, it would be enforced in the Court of Chancery.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that. I said that where an Act empowering one railway to be built was permissive, it could not be enforced, but if the Act was compulsory it could be enforced.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the hon gentleman with his usual astuteness sought to cover the error into which the member for Lincoln fell by a statement that did not cover the point at all. But the member for Lincoln said that it could be enforced in the Court of Chancery and appealed to me as a supposed authority with reference to the practice, procedure and jurisdiction of that Court in favor of that position; and the Minister of the Interior says that all he stated was that if the Act was compulsory it can be enforced in the Courts. We all know that legal contracts can be enforced in some Court or other. I will answer the member for Lincoln by simply giving him one of our authorities which I believe to be still recognized as the law, and which expresses the views of this Court on that subject. The opinion is that of Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood, touching a contract for a railway:

"All way:

"I will assume the agreement, the subject of this suit, to be an agreement clearly and distinctly valid within the Statute of Frauds, with every requisite provision, as plainly expressed as if the contract had been fully drawn out; and I will further assume it to be a contract, in the common form, to execute certain works, to be paid for in money instead of shares. Assuming this to be the state of things I can not conceive that there would be in this case anything, except the allegation, to which I will presently advert, of the deception practised on the plaintiffs, to distinguish the case from Ranger vs. the Great Western Company, in which Lord Coltenham observed, that the contract was obviously of a nature over which this Court could not have jurisdiction by way of directing specific performance; and I apprehend that there is not anywhere to be found in the books, an instance appropriating to such a case as I have before me, in which the Court has been asked to exercise its jurisdiction of specific performance, for carrying into effect a contract for the execution of works of very complicated and difficult character, and for the non-completion of which contract a remedy may be had, and as it seems to me, not only an adequate, but the better remedy in damages."

That is the law, and it is quite clear that the Court of Chancery never does undertake a specific execution or interfere with such works as these, for the obvious reason, that it would be quite impossible for the Court to continue for a series of years taking cognizance of and supervising the execution of works of such a complicated and difficult character. I accept the hon. Minister's statement on this point.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I referred altogether to process by writ of mandamus.

Mr. BLAKE. Quite so. The hon member for Lincoln was referring to a procedure in Chancery which induced me to make these remarks. There have been several charges made against me during the course of the debate, one of which was that I was afraid to meet the hon. Minister of Railways. Well, I have been sitting opposite the hon. Minister of Railways in Parliament for some 13 or 1+ years, and conscious as I am of his great powers of oratory and his signal ability, and conscious as I am that I am unequal to him in these particulars, yet, as I have not been called upon to vindicate a course that I did not think was righteous, I must say I never felt any nervousness at the prospect of meeting that hon. gentleman in debate. I have been waiting for about three weeks or a month for him to answer the statements I made in a speech I delivered, but he has not yet done so; when he has I will have an opportunity of answering him. Whatever may be believed in other places I do not think that in this audience it will be believed that the hon. gentleman has any apprehension of meeting me, or that I have any apprehension of meeting him. An observation was made, I think, by the hon. member for Niagara, and other members, that I stated that I was not bound by any opinions I had before expressed; that that was a general statement of my position as a public man; and much argument, and much, I may say, of vituperation has been expended upon me in that view. I cannot hope, from the experience I have had of several years, to get rid of such charges, or to prevent their being circulated in the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite for all time to

But as these statements have been made in this House I take the earliest opportunity to simply read to the House the words I used in the speech which has been interpreted in the way I mention. Three times only I referred to past opinions. On the first occasion I said:

"The hon. gentleman also adverts to some speeches I made. He adverted to a speech I made in 1875, and quoted a portion of it from the Hansord. Well, I am not going to bore the House by reading some of the rest of it. I am very indifferent whether portions of my speeches are quoted without the other parts which are necessary to a proper understanding of them by a Tory land seller or the Minister of Railways, and I leave to those who take sufficient interest in my proceedings to peruse the speeches, and they will, if fairly read, answer the objections made to them. I have nothing to retract in the speech the hon. gentleman quoted. I abide by, as applicable to the then existing state of things, every sentiment expressed in that speech. The hon gentleman himself, in the course of his remarks, adverted to the wholly changed condition of things."

In another part of my speech I adverted to the same topic, but to another speech of mine, when I said:

"It was less than a year ago I spoke that speech, but even, if it had been a whole year ago, I should be disposed to adhere to it. I find nothing in these estimates at all inconsistent with the views I entertain to-day with reference to the gentleman's railway, and if I did find anything inconsistent, if I did believe that I erred in any statement I had made in that speech, I hope that I know enough of my duty to confess my error and act upon my present judgment, whatever that may be. I have not yet been able to find that there was any error in the estimate I then made, or in any other suggestion of the speech."

The last time I referred to the subject I said:

"The hon, gentleman went to work to make contrasts upon proposals' and here again circumstances wholly differ. He talked of the values of lands. He alluded to speeches which had been made by hon, members at various times with reference to the selling values of land in the North-West. He referred to a speech of mine made at the time the Foster ortract was under discussion, in which I expressed my own opinion then as to the value of lands in the North-West to the contractor at that time. What was the condition of things? This was not a contractor, Mr. Chairman, who was about to build a railway through the lands which he was to receive. This was not a contractor who was about to receive lands through which a railway was presently or, as far as he knew at all about to be built. This was a contractor who, at that time, was to receive lands in the North-West where there was no present prosknew at all about to be built. This was a contractor who, at that time, was to receive lands in the North-West where there was no present prospect of there being a railway at all, and it was with reference to that country, at that time, with its then population, with the then estimation as to the fertile area, with the then views of English and foreign people about it, with the then prospects of railway communication, with the circumstances that the contractor was not to be able to utilize and make marketable the lands by building the railway through them, that that opinion was expressed. Sir, I do not hold myself bound, to-day, as to the present condition of things in the North-West by any opinion as to lands expressed at that day, and on the then condition of things in that country."

There, Sir, is my statement as to my general views with reference to my opinions, and the only statement I made as to my not being bound by former opinions—a statement which I cannot make clearer than I made it in the speech to hon. gentlemen who will receive it with no measure of candor or fairness. By that statement I still abide, and it does not justify inferences which were drawn from it or the meaning which was put upon the phrases used. I have one other remark to make. A considerable portion of the time of the House has been occupied by speakers who have ventured upon a repetition to this House of old, stale, exploded slanders with reference to my past career in another Legislature. To a majority of this audience I believe the truth of this matter is known. I believe to a majority of this audience I have had occasion to state what was the truth of these matters in this Chamber on former occasions. I do not intend at this hour, and at this stage of the debate, to ask the House for that measure of justice, for I believe it would be only justice which would be involved in permitting me to make a statement of the facts. To those who know the truth I can confidently appeal for my vindication; to those who do not know the truth, I can refer to the position, however humble it may be, which it has been my fortune to occupy during the course of ten years in the estimation of the people of my Province and the country at large. I do not suppose anything. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move, in amendment will prevent the repetition of these stale, exploded slanders. to the motion, "that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," Mr. BLAKE.

They have become the Tory gospel of envy, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness.

Mr. McCALLUM. I have just to say to the hon. gentleman that I hope he will not consider that I have slandered him, because, so far as I spoke here, I spoke by the book, and I stand here to say that the action of that hon. gentleman in reference to the railway policy of the Province of Ontario has demoralized that Province to this day. Yet he gets up here and says we slandered him. If he means me, why does he not name me? I am here to meet him at any time. The Opposition had a majority of one, but he turned it into his favor, and in a few days he turned that one into a majority of thirty. How did he do that. He bought them all. He bought the silence of a Minister of the Crown when he said, across the floor of the House: "You had better speak now." I know there was a Committee of the House instructed to enquire into that matter, but the hon. gentleman struck his own Committee, by whom he wanted to be tried. I am a living witness of this matter. I will not stand here and be slandered by that hon, gentleman, or by any other man.

The following resolutions were read and carried on division :

1st. That it is expedient to grant and appropriate twenty-five millions of dollars according to the terms of the contract relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway transmitted to this House by His Excellency the Governor-General by his message dated December 10th.

2nd. That it is expedient to grant and appropriate twenty-five millions of acres in the North-West Territories according to the terms of the said contract so transmitted as aforesaid.

The Committee rose.

House resumed; and (at 1:10 o'clock, a.m.,) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 13th January, 1881.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were severally introduced and read the first time:

Bill (No. 22) to incorporate the St. Lawrence Wrecking and Salvage Company of Canada.--(Mr. Robertson, Hamilton.)

Bill (No. 23) to incorporate the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company.—(Mr. Cameron, N. Victoria.)

MAILS IN BEAUCE COUNTY.

Mr. BOLDUC enquired. Whether it is the intention of the Government to grant two daily mails, in the County of Beauce, with a view to promote the development of the gold mines therein?

Mr. LANGEVIN said he could not give any definite answer to the question at present.

EMIGRATION FROM CANADA.

On the order for the further consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. White (Cardwell), for an Order of the House for a statement of the number of persons who have passed from Canada, into the United States, by way of Sarnia and Windsor, since 1st January, 1880, and of persons who have, within the same period, come into Canada from the United States by way of Windsor and Sarnia, &c.; and the motion of Sir Richard J. Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move, in amendment that all the words after "that" be struck out, and the following be substituted: "the Government Orders of the Day be now read." When I moved the resolution, that the House should proceed with the discussion de die in diem, I explained the reason for taking that course, which was, that it was of the very greatest importance that this matter should be disposed of one way or the other, without any delay. We are told it is of very great consequence, that, if the contract is to be affirmed, the contractors should have the earliest opportunity of organizing, and entering into arrangements for getting out ties and getting in supplies, in order to go on at once vigorously, effectively and continuously with the construction of the railway. Therefore, I ously with the construction of the railway. Therefore, I think that the hon. gentleman opposite will not object to our proceeding at once to Government Orders.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman gave notice that he would upon Friday, move that the Order for the resumption of the Government Order for the consideration of the resolutions from the Committee would then be taken up and proceeded with after routine. He now proposes to anticipate that motion by the procedure which has just been adopted, and by a surprise, and without giving any notice of his intention to interrupt that which he proposed to do in a regular, if a somewhat high-handed, course on Friday. It seems to me that this course is highly objectionable. the hon, gentleman had intended to take this particular mode of reaching the Government Orders, the least he could have done would have been to announce that such was his intention. Instead of announcing such intention yesterday, he, I do not say intentionally, but in the result, misled us by omitting to intimate that intention, and by giving notice that he would, to-morrow, move a motion to get the Order, from that day forth, first on the list. So that, not merely was there no intimation of the hon. gentleman's intention to take away this day, but the House was led, by the notice the hon. gentleman placed on the paper yesterday, to presume he had no such intention, but that things were to be left in the natural and ordinary course until, in that course, his motion for Friday was reached, and a discussion of the House taken upon it. I object, most decidedly, to proceeding, under these circumstances, with this Order to day. The hon, gentleman says it is of importance to the contractors that they should get out ties. It is of much more importance to know whether the contractors should have power to enter into the contract. The hon. gentleman says it is important to get immigration, but we know of no plan by which the contracts are to bring in emigrants. We are not told in this contract that the contractors are to deal with immigration. It is a Government plan of immigration, which it is said will be delayed, thwarted, injured and impeded, if the House does not immediately come to a conclusion. The idea that Parliament and the country, through its representatives, because it is important that ties should be got out for the prairie section, and the Nipissing section, should not have reasonable notice of the course of procedure proposed to be adopted, that therefore we are not to be informed what is to be taken up, and placed at a disadvantage with respect to the proceedings of this House by notices being placed on the paper which are not true guides, but false lights as to the intentions of the Government, as to the course they will take, is, to my mind, monstrous. The hon. gentleman should not press this amendment upon us, and he will not make very much progress in the debate if he does press it upon us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The concluding remark of the hon. gentleman precludes the possibility of my withdrawing my motion. The hon. gentleman is evidently in training after the fashion, and, although he does not obstruction to ask for delay in this matter. Sir, I ask any generally draw his inspiration from the Mother Country, he fair-minded man in this House if it is obstruction to demand has evidently determined to follow the obstructionist system an observance of the ordinary rules of the House in we shall put it down in the way in which even such a lover of free debate as Mr. Gladstone puts it down. The notice I gave last night was quite consistent with the motion I make to-day. I ask the hon, gentleman if it was not understood by the whole country, that when I made my former motion it was for the purpose of disposing of this question, for the reasons I gave, and for reasons which were satisfactory to this House, before the general business of the Sossion should be proceeded with. The House was called two months before the time for the special purpose of settling this question. The hon, gentleman has had a month to discuss it. He has discussed it in this House and out of this House; and, Sir, I am amazed and astonished at the course taken by the hon. gentleman, after all his efforts, after all his eloquence, in saying that the country and this House has not had a full opportunity of understanding the whole of the contract, all its merits and all its alleged demerits. Sir, the hon, gentleman said he was deceived and misled by the notice I gave last night. The hon, gentleman never saw it last night.

Mr. BLAKE. I learned it early this morning.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Exactly; this morning. I could not have given that notice until the resolutions were carried in Committee, and I gave notice that from and after Friday this discussion should every day be the first Order of the day. The hon, gentleman must know that we are assembled especially to dispose of this question in one way or the other, and I repudiate the insinuation that there was any attempt to deceive the hon, gentleman. The hon. gentleman was not deceived.

Mr. BLAKE. I was

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon, gentleman knows what we came to this Parliament for; the hon. gentleman knows for what object I put that resolution; and the hon. gentleman cannot by any affected indignation cause a majority of this House to play the game of delay which is evidently the game of hon. gentlemen opposite. We shall not allow that, and if the hon, gentleman chooses to play the role of obstruction, he must take the consequences, and we must take the consequences, and the ties must take the conse-

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the hon, gentleman tell us how we became aware what Parliament was called for?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I know my hon. friend has too much intelligence not to know why we were called in December instead of February.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There was no intimation of any sort. Mr. CASEY. The hon, gentleman talks about affected indignation being expressed by the leader of the Opposition. There must be very little doubt in the mind of any one who heard him that the indignation was not affected, but real. But if there was anything required to convert affected indignation into the keenest kind of indignation, was the speech the hon gentleman has ivered. He tells us we are playing delivered. part of obstruction in this matter, and that it will be put down. There is in that an implied threat what we consider freedom of debate will not be allowed in this-House. He talks about the effect of this measure on the ties. He had better take care that it does not affect some other ties than those which are to be laid on the Pacific Railway. The party ties by which his supporters are attached to him are very strong and very elastic, but any one of these ties may be snapped under too great a strain, and I know that the strain of this matter has from the first been too great for many of his supporters. He says it is obstruction to ask for delay in this matter. Sir, I ask any which prevails in the Mother Country. If that is attempted, transacting public business. These rules were devised especially to protect the minority in this House from the overbearing majority, and it is a duty we owe to ourselves as an Opposition and to those who sent us here, it is a duty we owe to the country at large, to insist on an observance of these rules.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If I have broken any rule in making my motion let the hon. gentleman point it out. I am quite in order.

Mr. CASEY. It is a question in my mind whether such a motion can be made without notice, but even if it can it is a motion to suspend the rules of the House, so that we have a substantial and practical grievance in demanding protection which the rules of the House afford us. The hon. gentleman told us that the country had plenty of time to understand the merits and demerits of this contract. I grant the first proposition because it takes a very short time to understand its merits. Why, a gentleman who was once a colleague of his own, who has occupied such a position in public life as frees him from all party suspicion—I refer to Sir Wm. Pierce Howland-stated that this contract in his opinion had absolutely no merits at all. As to its demerits I contend that the country has not had time to understand them; and that a proper and decent consideration of this question should go on for some time longer. Some new objection hitherto unsuspected is continually cropping up against it. It may be discovered before long that the hon. gentleman was rather premature in saying that this was the best possible bargain that could be made, and L doubt not that it is the expectation of the hon, gentleman that something may come to light to disturb that little dream of his which makes him so anxious to go on with this scheme. He tells us that we knew perfectly well what we were brought here for. We knew that we were brought here to consider some scheme for building the Pacific Railway, but we knew nothing whatever except what leaked out through the newspapers as to the nature of this scheme. When we come, here we find that a great many details, perfectly new in their nature, not parallel to anything ever before presented to this House in any offer. are included in this contract, that the least objectionable parts of it, perhaps, are the lump sums of cash and lands to be paid; that many complicated provisions are in it which require extremely careful consideration; that not only have no tenders been publicly asked for, for the performance of this work, but that the right hon. gentleman and the hon. Minister of Railways, and I believe the hon. Minister of Agriculture, worked the scheme up in secret, Star Chamber consultation-or rather, not Star Chamber, because that would be judicial, at least in form, and this was injudicial in form and injudicious in result. Suppose you had entrusted an agent to make a bargain for you, and that he consulted in private with a contractor, entered into a bargain with that contractor, and refused to tell you what other offers he had had for the performance of the work or whether he tried to obtain any other offer, would you not be induced to suspect something very like collusion between your agent and the contractor. If the agents of the country consulted in a hole and corner manner, from day to day in Ottawa, with the contractors at whose mercy they had placed themselves by their previous injudicious conduct, one cannot help suspecting that there has been something more than is laid before the House in the intercourse between those gentlemen. You cannot help suspecting that the protocol of those consultations, the simple statement of what took place between the parties, would be more interesting than any work of fiction ever given to the public by my hon. friend's great prototype the leader of the Conservative party in England. It would sell better than "Endymion."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I rise to a question of Mr. CASEY.

Mr. CASEY. I am not discussing the merits of the question any further than is necessary to support my contention that we should not go on post haste with the consideration of such an important question as the one submitted to the House. I am quite in order in making as extended reference to the question proposed to be discussed as is required to show it should not now be discussed.

Mr. SPEAKER ruled that the hon: gentleman must confine himself to the reasons for opposing the amendment.

Mr. CASEY. I thank you, Sir, for the impartial manner in which you have sustained the freedom of debate in this House. I have shown sufficient reason that what the hon. gentleman characterizes as a game of delay is really a game that should be played by every patriotic man in this country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASEY, I fully accept responsibility for the words I have uttered. What the hon, gentleman characterizes as a game of delay is the patriotic game. It is the game of insisting upon the fullest ventilation of this contract and of all other alternatives that may now or hereafter be laid before the House before we adopt the contract.

Mr. MILLS. Before the question is put, I wish to make an observation or two on the amendments submitted by the hon leader of the Government. I think there was nothing to justify the hon gentleman in making a threat against hon gentlemen on this side. I think, however, much time may be taken up in discussion of this question. When we look at the time taken up in England in the consideration of great public measures, we will see that we have devoted here, perhaps, more time than the hon, gentleman usually permits to be devoted to measures he submits to Parliament, although not more than the public interest requires. I would ask the hon. gentleman to point out a single measure in England, during the last twenty-five years, that has been carried through Parliament in less than three months. They cannot point to a single one. If the hon, gentleman will look at the Irish Land Bill question, the Separation of the State and the Church in Ireland, and Parliamentary Reform in England, in 1867, he will see that, in every instance, the length of time taken up in the discussion of questions, not more complicated than this, not affecting the public interest so great in extent, more time has been given to their consideration than has been devoted to the consideration of this question. The hon, gentleman is not warranted in holding. out a threat to us, when we ask that the country may have an opportunity of considering this contract from our point of view. It is the constitutional right of the country to be informed with regard to what is transpiring in Parliament. and we know the responsibility will ultimately fall upon them of every legislative measure that is carried. Feeling the responsibility will be theirs, we want to give them an opportunity of making known their opinion on this question. I remember another occasion, when the Pacific Railway question was before Parliament, the hon. gentleman insisted on passing to the Orders of the Day. Well, the proposition to day reminds me of what transpired on that occasion, I may say to the House that in my opinion the reason why the right hon, gentleman is in so much haste, is that there is about to be submitted to the Government propositions much more favorable than these to the extent of $15,0.0,000 or $20,000,000. Now that being the real reason, the hon. gentleman shows a want of moral courage when he seeks to anticipate what is about to be done and commit his supporters to the most unfavorable proposition under consideration. Now, I think this matter ought not to be pressed; I think, it is a duty he owes to the House and country to permit this new proposition to be submitted to Parliament. order. The hon, gentleman is discussing the merits of the He knows right well he did not comply with the Act—question instead of the amendment before the House, did not advertise for public tenders, and that the did not advertise for public tenders, and that the propositions he has and wishes to press accepted upon as are extravagant in their terms—that many who would never think of going into railway enterprise would be willing to undertake the construction of this road on terms much more favorable to the country than those granted the The hon gentleman knows that a better proposition will be made to the Government in a few hours, and he wishes to so commit his followers to the present as to prevent their considering the better one and, at the same time, the interests of the country, in opposition to the interests of the Administration. How would hon, gentlemen on the Ministerial side of the House go to the country and say we do know that a more favorable proposition than the present, by $15,000,000, was submitted to the Government, but we considered the Government worth more than that amount to the country, and we rejected the better proposals. That is the value which the supporters of this Ministerial motion place on the Ministry. We shall see how many Government supporters are prepared to stifle the public interests and prevent the public weal being fully considered in this important matter. What is done to-day cannot be easily re-called. I decline, so far as I am concerned, to permit Parliament to sacrifice the interests of the country in order to uphold a Government blunder. I do not say that the Administration acted corruptly in the matter, but I do say they have made a most unfortunate blunder, and which, if upheld by the House, will inflict upon the country serious mischiefs and disasters which will be felt for half a century. No matter who sits on the Treasury benches, the members of this House, sent here to consider the public interests, have no right to sacrifice them to protect a Government in every eggregious blunder committed.

Mr. ANGLIN. I respectfully submit that the motion of the right hon. gentleman is out of order. On looking at May—taken entirely by surprise as we are—edition of 1855, page 228, we find the law laid down in this way:

"On a day upon which motions have precedence, a motion 'that the Orders of the Day be now read' is also permitted to interrupt the debate upon a question; and, if put by the Speaker, and carried in the affirmative, the House must proceed with the Orders of the Day immediately, and the original question is thus superseded. A motion for reading a particular Order of the Day, however, will not be permitted to interrupt a debate; and, when the House are actually engaged upon the Orders of the Day, a motion for reading the Orders of the Day is not admissible, as the House are already doing that which the motion, if carried, would oblige them to do."

We were actually engaged in debating an Order of the Day, and therefore under this ruling of May, it must be very clear that the motion of the hon, gentleman is not admissible. It is a motion that we pass, not to the Orders in general, but to a particular Order. I think that if the right hon, gentleman looks at the passage he will satisfy himself that he has made a mistake. I trust, Mr. Speaker, you will agree with me, as I understand the member for Cardwell (Mr. White), in this case when the Order was called, moved the adoption of the motion, and to that motion the right hon, gentleman moved his amendment. So the debate had commenced, and we were engaged in a debate on this Order, and therefore, plainly, according to the ruling of May, the motion of the right hon, gentleman is inadmissible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Now that the hon. gentleman has spoken to a question of Order, I am very glad to discuss the matter with him. The hon. gentleman, in the course of his remarks, said, that at all events there must be a motion to bring up the other Orders of the Day, and not any particular motion. He is wrong in both cases. If he had read on a few sentences further he would have found himself answered in both instances. On page 263, May states:

"Sometimes questions have been superseded by amendments by reading the Orders of the Day. On the 10th May, 1852, the Orders of the Day having been postponed until after the motion for assigning the vacant seats of St. Albans and Sudbury, an amendment was made to the question for leave to bring in a bill, by leaving out all the words after 'that,' in order to add the words 'this House do pass to the other Orders of the Day.' And on the 19th May, 1852, on assuming an adjourned debate on the Colonial Bishopric Bill, an amendment was made to the question for the second reading, by leaving out all the words after 'that the,' and adding other Orders of the Day be now read.' A question has also been superseded by an amendment for reading a particular Order of the Day."

That is common sense. If you read the Orders of the Day against any particular motion, it cannot interrupt the debate, but you can move to bring up any one, and that is the formal decision of this authority.

Mr. ANGLIN. The sentences just read by the hon, gentleman are not in the copy of May I hold in my hand. It is clearly an innovation and departure from the old and sounder rule. I never found, during my experience, that those innovations were defensible when fairly considered.

Mr. PLUMB. The hon. members for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and West Elgin (Mr. Casey), not speaking to the point of Order, have urged a delay in the discussion of this important question. These hon, gentlemen think it is very hard that this question should be forced on a minority—to adopt an expression which they are constantly using. Now, I do not think it would be hard to find an answer to their contention out of their own mouths. It will be remembered by those who had the honor to sit in the late Parliament, that on the eighth day of May, 1874, the hon. leader of the Government of that day introduced his Pacific Railway resolutions. They were adopted in Committee and reported on the twelfth day of May—or four days after their introduction. They were forced through this House, at three o'clock in the morning, by a majority who refused to hear a single word from this side of the House, a majority who choked us down in the most brutal manner. In the meantime, the ordinary business of the House had been going on, but they were introduced on the 8th, adopted on the 12th, and forced through the House by means which hon. gentlemen knew too well how to employ against a minority, who were constantly taunted with being a mere baker's dozen—a corporal's guard. That fact is, I think, a sufficient answer to the remarks of the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casev).

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will the hon, gentleman tell us at what period of the Session that was done? Was it not at the end of the Session.

Mr. PLUMB: Yes; but they were not introduced until the end of the Session. Hon. gentlemen had time enough to prepare them.

Mr. COURSOL. I am not at all surprised at the attitude of the hon leader of the Government on this question, for the matter is one of the greatest importance, and it is one which we all expected should be gone on with at once. I am aware though perhaps hon, gentlemen on this side of the House are not all aware, that the present is a system of warfare which the Opposition deliberately decided in caucus If I am to believe the organs of the party which are generally, if not always, to be believed on such matters, the Opposition decided to obstruct the business of the country with regard to this measure in every possible way, and step by step until they had kept up the discussion to such an extent that they themselves would be tired, and the country also. I hold in my hands one of the organs of the Liberal party, which has the honor of having a Senator for one of its directors, and a member of this House for another. Without further remark I will read the extract from the paper.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What paper is it?

Mr. COURSOL. L'Electeur. The extract is as follows:

"The Opposition held a caucus yesterday morning, when the greatest enthusiasm pervaded its doings. It was determined to adopt all Parliamentary means to prevent the passing of the Pacific Bill. The members will speak at each stage of the measure, will propose amendments to all points, will take the opinion of the House on every detail, and when the Government asks the concurrence of the House, they will solemnly proclaim that they have done all they could to save the country from the destruction that threatens it, and will declare that the moment they are in power they will repudiate so unjust a bargain, and will then all leave the House together."

It will be news to you, Mr. Speaker, to learn that after pursuing that course the hon, gentleman expected to lead the House en masse.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to say that that account is wholly inaccurate.

Mr. ROCHESTER. Where do you get your information. Mr. BLAKE. I was there.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may be permitted to mention a few reasons why I object to the adoption of the amendment made by the leader of the Government. The hon, gentleman who last spoke has referred to the importance of this question, and assigns that as a reason why the matter should be immediately acted upon by this House. In the opinion of the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House that is the very reason why the matter should be considered slowly and deliberately, and why it should be fully discussed. Haste in this matter may entail the most disastrous results upon the country, hence the ground we take is the proper and correct one. With reference to the remarks of the last speaker regarding the action of the Reform caucus, I hold that the very fact that our party allowed the resolution to be reported from Committee last night is a sufficient answer to the contention of the hon. gentleman; it shows that there is no factious opposition to the matter; that there has been no endeavor to talk against time. The discussion by members on this side has been, I maintain, pertinent to the question, and it has not been unduly prolonged, I believe the hon. gentlemen who have this measure in charge are afraid of the public opinion which is being created. Do these gentlemen anticipate that 4,000,000 people scattered over this vast country will arrive at a decision on this matter with the same promptitude and celerity as this House of Commons? Why, the people are just beginning to consider this matter, and the hon. gentleman who leads the Government is too good a politician not to understand that matter right well. He is alarmed at the evidence that a great tide of popular indignation is beginning to arise against this measure. It is a feeling of alarm which leads him to endeavor with this indecent haste to force this question on the House of Commons. Every effort has been made to belittle the demonstrations that have been held throughout the country. We are told that these meetings are failures. I know from my own observation, that as regards three of these meetings, that assertion is false, and I have reason to believe that in a great majority of instances these meetings which hon, gentlemen opposite call failures, as being only slimly attended, as not manifesting enthusiasm, on the contrary, were most successful, largly attended and enthusiastic, and that the sentiments expressed were unmistakably hostile to this measure, without reference to party lines. I held two meetings in my own riding, largely attended by Conservatives, and when the resolutions were put there was but one dissenting vote in each case. I have presented petitions to this House that I know were signed by prominent Conservatives. Everything indicate that the Government are afraid of investigation and discussion. What were the conditions under which this House was called together? I say they were most suspicious. Had this important measure been confided to the country? Had the country been permitted to know anything about the most important measure that has ever been introduced to this Parliament? No, Sir, the country was kept in entire ignorance of the provisions of this contract. What was the paltry plea offered for concealing the terms of this contract from the people? Why, from this contract all its objectionable factures, and particuforsooth, it would be an infringement of the dignity of larly the one most distasteful to the public, that with Mr. Coursol.

Who are we assembled here? Are we the Parliament! lords of the people, or are we deputed by the electors to come here and attend to their interests? Are we not instructed by our constituents as to what we shall do; do we not then go back and give them an account of our stewardship, and do we not then receive from them commendation or condemnation for the course we have taken here? The dignity of Parliament requiring hon. gentlemen opposite to conceal this measure from 4,000,000 of people who are directly interested in it, because, forsooth, it might infringe from the dignity of 206 of their servants who are sent here to attend to their interests! Then, was there not something suspicious in the time chosen for the assembling of this House of Commons? Why was it called on the 9th of December instead of early in January? I can imagine those hon, gentlemen carefully calculated all the probabilities of getting this measure through quickly, and they naturally concluded that if they called the Parliament before the holidays the members would be anxious to adjourn and get home before the holidays. It was an unseasonable time to call this Parliament together. We were told in a semi-official manner, when we assembled on the 9th of December, that if we were good boys and allowed this measure to pass we would be allowed to have our Christmas holidays, but that if, on the contrary, we were refractory and impeded the passage of this measure we should not be allowed our holidays. But some of us had made up our minds that we would forego our Christmas holidays rather than allow this iniquitous scheme to be forced through Parliament without full discussion. A good many members on the other side of the House were also anxious to have their holidays, and when the pressure on the leader of the Government became greater than he could bear, he receded from his position. What was the concession? He had heard it was the intention of the Opposition to hold meetings throughout the country during the holidays, and, to prevent this, he proposed an adjournment from the Thursday before Christmas to the Tuesday after; and then, after three days' work, from the Thursday before New Year's to the Tuesday after. That was to break up that week and to prevent the Opposition holding their meetings. We made no objection; but, for some reason, on the following day he came down with a proposition to adjourn from the Thursday before Christmas until the Tuesday after New Year's. We see in all this a desire, on the part of the Government, to hasten, by all possible means, a decision of this question. I regret that the Government are afraid of the discussions. I assert that they know that the terms of this contract are indefensible. The right hon. First Minister knows very well that public opinion forms slowly, and that formation is just beginning to assume proportions that frighten him. I know he is afraid of that public opinion, and that fear moves that hon gentleman to endeavor to force this measure through the House in this unseemly manner. And this measure is covered by a blind-whether creditable or not I cannot say. We find upon a notice paper, this motion:

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On Friday next—That from that day the motion for concurrence in the Resolutions reported from the Committee of the whole House relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway shall have precedence next after Routine Proceedings."

That motion was to be taken into consideration to-morrow. I contend that motion is a blind to cover the designs of the hon, gentleman made manifest by the course he has taken to-day. And I hold there is great pertinence in the fact mentioned by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), that it is a current rumor in the lobbies of this House, and throughout this city, that a new Syndicate is being formed to reference to the monoply of railway transportation. Are we to suppose that those astute gentlemen on the other side of the House are ignorant of all these matters? Are we to suppose that they are ignorant of the fact that the contract under the consideration of this House is to be superseded by one much more favorable to the interests of the country? Why, Sir, these gentlemen act in a manner that will lead the country to say that they are arch-conspirators against the interests of the people, in attempting to hurry this matter through the House with indecent haste, because they know that an offer is about to be made, with the objectionable features of this contract expunged. For these reasons I shall oppose, and I believe every fair-minded and impartial member of this House should oppose, the motion the right hon. gentleman has made.

Mr. CAMERON (N. Victoria). I quite agree with hon. gentlemen opposite that ample time should be allowed for the discussion of this most important question, and that the Government should not adopt any course that would put a stop to or accelerate unduly such discussion. I differ, however, from hon gentlemen opposite in their second proposition, for it seems to me that ample time has been, and will be, allowed for proceeding with the debate in the way the leader of the Government proposes. The country has had ample time to be informed of the provisions of this contract.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CAMERON. I say there is no man in Canada who has not had time to obtain knowledge of the provisions of this contract, and to communicate his opinion to his representative since the 9th of December. The hon, gentleman who has just sat down, has told us that a tide of popular indignation is going to arise. He admits that it has not yet arisen, although they have been trying to sweep up that tide by meetings throughout the country and through their organs. I would like, on that subject, to read a quotation from a Reform newspaper published in my county, which, although strong in its condemnation of this contract, is yet honest and candid enough to express the truth whatever it believes it to be:

"Since Parliament adjourned various meetings have been held throughout Ontario for the purpose of discussing the Syndicate bargain, and of getting up a popular demonstration against the railway policy of the Government. As regards the first object, namely that of discussing the terms, the meetings have been successful, but as regards the second object, that of making a demonstration against the Government measure, the success has been by no means brilliant. The country, as a whole, has not demonstrated worth a cent, and outside of Ontario there has been no demonstration at all. And yet the Reform party is unanimous in condemning the bargain, and all the better informed Conservatives do not hesitate in expressing a doubt as to the mefrits of the Government scheme. Why, then, is there so much hesitation in giving public expression to opinions unfavorable to the project? It is quite inexplicable. We will not even attempt an explanation."

That is from a Reform paper, and serves to confirm the candid statement of the hon. member from Norfolk.

Mr. WHELER. Name the paper.

Mr. CAMERON. The Bobcaygeon Independent, edited by a man-of very great ability and truthfulness. As to the length of time which is necessary for Parliament to consider important railway measures, I may venture to refer what occurred in the Ontario Legislature, and I should like to ask the leader of the Opposition whether greater time was allowed by him and his Government for the Ontario Legislature to consider the batch of resolutions, granting a million and a half in subsidies to different railways, which were passed a year and a half after he assumed power—whether these resolutions were not laid on the Table of the House within a day or two of the end of the Session, and whether they were not rushed through the House without opportunity of discussion and against the protest of the Opposition.

Mr. BOULTBEE. The opposition to this motion arises from the desire, as hon gentlemen opposite say, to have this matter discussed in the country. Now, like the member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), I attended three meetings, and I have the impression that the Opposition do not want the thing discussed in the country. I attended a meeting in Toronto where the leader of the Opposition spoke, and where this matter was to be discussed. I fought my way with considerable difficuly through the Grits who occupied the front seats, and was treated with insult for three or four hours because I presumed to stay near the platform. The meeting was opened by an hon. Senator taking the chair, and to show how fully he wanted this contract discussed, this old, venerable, grey-headed man, who should not be led away by passion, got up and condemned it thoroughly. After he had delivered himself in that shape, I approached him and modestly asked if any one would be allowed to discuss this question. That seemed to be a bombshell to the gentleman on the platform; but finally, I was told that after Mr. Blake had spoken I might be allowed to speak. Well, I waited there for three or four hours under the insults of these gentlemen, who, I think, if the lights were out would have murdered me. After Mr. Blake had sat down, I asked the chairman, "Will you allow me to say something now?" He said, "Well, just wait; we want a resolution put." Then a gentleman, I think Sir Wm. Howland, came forward and moved a resolution so absurd and ridiculous, that how a man like W. P. Howland could make it was explained the next day, when he said he had not read it beforehand. the resolution was put, I asked, "Will you allow me to say something?" "Oh, no," they said, "not till after it is As every resolution was put, I asked to be allowed passed." to say something on the other side, and every time I was refused. They said "You must wait until these resolutions are passed before you discuss them." I put it to every sensible man whether that was fair. Such was the fact, and after that was all done, they said they would allow me a short hearing. I tried for an hour to discuss that question, and was hissed and howled down the whole hour. I did not hear the leader of the Opposition encouraging the crowd, because my back was towards him, but I was told he did smile on the crowd, and rather encourage them. I know he did not do this; he was not a brave enough man, and a courteous enough gentleman to get up and say "This man has waited the whole night to sny a few words; give him a hearing." I saw the chairman, a dozen of times afterwards, go amongst the meeting, encourage the crowd, and apparently ask them to put me under the pump. When I saw that I recollected the remark Sir Francis Hincks made about him some years ago, that he was six feet of hypocrisy. I say to call any such meeting as that a meeting for the purpose of discussion, was a foul falsehood. It was not a meeting for the purpose of discussion: it was emphatically for the purpose announced before the meeting began, of condemnation. I attended another meeting in my own county, at Thorne Hall. I did not intend, at first, being present, as I had many business engagements on hand, but they telegraphed me that Mr. Mackenzie was going te be there and I went up. We began at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, before an audience of respectable farmers, and we discussed the question until 9 o'clock at night, the farmers having refused to adjourn, as they wished to hear the whole thing out. The question of adjournment was raised by the chairman at 6 o'clock, when he found that the meeting was rapidly going against him. He got up and said, "I am going to adjourn this meeting for supper." Several of the farmers present said they did not want supper before hearing the discussion out. The meeting was held in a ball-room connected with the hotel, and while the question of adjournment was being discussed, the door opened to the Grit orators and the chairman retired to supper. The farmers, practical business men, moved another man into the chair, but just as he was would rather take the chair, which he did, and they kept him there until the close of the meeting. That is the way these meetings have been conducted. As to the feeling of the meetings have been conducted. As to the leening of the country, the longer the matter is discussed the better the people are becoming to like it, the more they are satisfied that the men who have taken this thing in hand are as good business men as any to be found in the country. I would like to say one word to the hon member for Norfolk. He said we are here, and we have to go home to our constituents to give an account of what we say and do here. That accounts for what seems to be the somewhat erratic course of my clever friend from North Norfolk. In ordinary circumstances an ordinary man would say that when you had spoken on all sides of a question, and taken different views of it on all occasions, and when you want to speak to your constituents you are likely to get into a tight corner. Not so the hon. member for North Norfolk. He gets into a corner in a school-house with men who are in favor of the National Policy, and showing them a speech of his, he says: "This is what I said; exactly your opinion." And in the schoolhouse he finds the men present are opposed to the National Policy, and he shows them another speech, saying: "I have stated this: I have opposed this Policy." He then goes to some place where the people are in favor of building this railway by means of a bargain like the present, and is able to show them that he spoke in favor of such a scheme as that. A clever man like that can do this thing, but there may be an end to it. Newspapers are getting into circulation. Let me advise the hon member for North Norfolk, if he considers it his duty for the future to go back to explain to his constituents what he says and does here, not to change his mind so often, and announce it publicly every other Session, because it will be attended with marked

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like to make a personal observation. So far as I know, my course in this matter has been perfectly consistent. In 1876, when I made my first public utterances on this question, I advanced the opinion that it was the proper course to take, that the building of the road would be to give the prairie section an outlet to market, and after having done that, to proceed with the construction of the railway from that time forward as the wants of the country might require, without building the expensive portions of the eastern and western sections. In 1878, the next time I made any remarks on the subject, the hon. member for Bothwell introduced a Bill into this House, entitled "The Colonization Railway Scheme." That Bill provided for the granting of certain amounts of lands to railway corporations under certain circumstances; the minimum grant provided was ten sections to the mile, and the maximum twenty sections. I spoke in favor of that Bill, and the reasons I urged in support were precisely those I would urge to-day on the same question. The positions I took in 1876 and 1881 are perfectly consistent with each other. I opposed in 1876 the building of anything more than the prairie section. of the road; I proposed in 1881 proceeding first with building the prairie section of the road. With regard to the position I took in 1878, I would be happy to support a measure to-day to provide for the construction of the prairie section by giving ten sections per mile, and I would be willing to grant for the prairie section even twenty sections per mile, on 12,800 acres selected indiscriminately; but when I rise here to oppose a scheme going into the chair the other chairman came back, said he granting to the Company 12,500 acres of land per mile, would rather take the chair, which he did, and they kept him selected indiscriminately, and the question of granting to the road 12,500 acres per mile, selected, by taking the choicest land of the country, and in addition to that, giving $12,500 in cash per mile, on the portions the Company are to build, and besides giving, practically, $31,000,000 on surveys and work handed over to the Company, I hold that, consistently to my utterances in 1878, does not require me to favor a scheme three times as onerous to the country in its requirements as the scheme of 1878.

> Mr. TROW. I think this is too serious a subject to be treated with such levity as the hon, member for East York (Mr. Boultbee) exhibits, involving, as the scheme does, an expenditure of millions, and the appropriation of a very large tract of country, 700 miles in length by 112 in width. I think this scheme requires some consideration on the part of the Government, that there should be delay to ascertain if any saving can be effected for the benefit of the country. I was astonished at the experiences of the hon. member for East York, among his constituents. I have held meetings in Perth, and have heard of one attended by 700 electors, only one of whom voted against the resolution passed, condemning the scheme of the Government. Only one at the St. Marys meeting, South Perth, stood up to support the Government, and he was the member for North Perth. The meetings in that district have been unanimous in condemnation of this scheme; and I have received resolutions bearing five hundred signatures, from a township in that hon. gentleman's riding, condemning the scheme. I think the Government should delay for a day or two action in this matter. If other parties are prepared to perform this work for a much smaller consideration it is our duty to allow them. We cannot afford to lose or spend millions unnecessarily. It is our duty to advance as settlement advances on the prairie region. I have no objection to a line of railway for a 1,000 miles over the prairies, but object decidedly to the section north of Lake Superior and the western section. The Government have monopolized the time of the House the past two weeks in the consideration of this question, to the neglect of other matters and private business before the House. We should therefore have some delay in the present and allow time for other business.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has referred to the meetings in South Perth, but omitted to explain how they were conducted. I was telegraphed to by the President of the Conservative Association in St. Marys, to attend the meeting to be held there on a certain evening, when addresses were to be delivered by Messrs. Ross, Trow, Ballantyne and others. I asked by telegraph if it was possible for me to get a hearing, in which case I would attend. I waited till the following afternoon for a reply, and none coming, was obliged to take the train for St. Marys. On my way to the meeting I got a telegram from Mr. Sharp, of the Conservative Association of St. Marys, saying that they declined to let a Conservative speak, but saying come. On the train with the hon, member who has just sat down I expressed the hope we would have a free discussion. He replied he would see, but it was in the hands of his friends who had made the arrangements, and he could not say much about it till he reached the place. I arrived at St. Marys. The President of the Conservative Association produced a letter from the President of the Reform Association, expressing the regret that he was unable to make the arrange ment I desired, in consequence of the numbers who were to speak on the Liberal side, and the great distance some of taken by the hon member for East York (Mr. Boultbee) who accused me of inconsistency. If I am not allowed to say that I am not inconsistent, I will take my seat.

I was proceeding to say, when the question is as between the constraint of the meeting as no doubt all preparations had been made to carry it for the Liberals, who would have petitions ready and resolutions cut and dried. I realised was proceeding to say, when the question is as between the constraint of the constra and resolutions cut and dried. I replied you had better I was proceeding to say, when the question is, as between the go and make a demand at the meeting. The president did Mr. Boulder.

so. Four gentlemen were announced to speak on the Liberal side, the resolution they came to being that the chairman of the meeting, Mr. Harding, should state that it was impossible to grant what the Conservatives required -a fair opportunity of reply. Our friends answered: "We will pay half the expenses of the hall for that privilege." Finally, they kindly offered me an hour, saying Mr. Trow should have the floor first for half an hour; that Mr. Ballantyne would make way for Mr. Hesson; that Mr. Smith, of Toronto, should follow Mr. Trow, then Mr. Hesson would speak for an hour, and Mr. Ross for the rest of the evening. I begged the chairman to allow me to reply to Mr. Ross and I would willingly accept the terms. They refused me that, or to give me the hour and a half I wanted, but would put me in a place where I would have very little to reply to, because the speaker preceding me would not have touched the question on its main point. What was the result? The meeting was called upon to vote upon a resolution prepared beforehand, and though the town is the headquarters of the Grits, with a population of nearly 3,000, the paper bore only 120 signatures. And the petition from an important township containing nearly 400 electors, shows only eighteen names, and I venture to say not one Conservative. and that there are not five Conservatives on all the petitions sent from that district to this House. The meetings turned out, as I predicted, mere party demonstrations, the question being made a mere party question. Though the Liberals declared it one of the utmost importance, they refused their opponents fair play in this discussion. The whole thing has been made an engine of party, with purely party objects in view.

Mr. TROW. I desire to make a personal explanation. I understood the hon, gentleman to say that we treated him unfairly at that meeting. I beg to say that his own statement furnishes sufficient evidence to satisfy any reasonable man.

Some hon. MEMBERS. That is not a personal explana-

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I am sorry for my hon. friend from North Perth. We gave him an opportunity in St. Marys two weeks ago to ventilate his grievances, if he had any, but we found that he had none which he dared to express from a public platform. Now he claims the protection and privileges of this House to ventilate his grievances, and they are very small indeed. We gave him one hour in which to speak, and I really did not know that he was possessed of such exalted ability that he could not in one hour state his views before the public with tolerable clearness. He failed to accept the offer we made him, and though the House has been in session several weeks, and though he has had every opportunity of speaking and clearing away the cobwebs from the minds of hon. members of this House, and of being reported in his own newspapers upon this question, he has never undertaken the task. He has not attempted to answer a single objection which has been urged from this side against the contract before the House—a contract which I was surprised to hear the hon. gentleman say he was obliged to support. In fact, I cannot understand what the hon. gentleman means by saying that he is obliged to support this contract. I thought he was a free and independent member of this House, who was sent here to oppose what was wrong and support what was right, and now he says he is obliged to support this scheme in the interests of his party.

Mr. HESSON. I did not say that.

Mr. ROSS. The hon gentleman said that we were making this a party question, and, in the interests of his own party, he was obliged to give it his support, so that I spoke the truth of him when I made the remark to which he objects. I know the hon gentleman too well—I know his sense of justice and independence toe well—to believe that he would voluntarily take the course he is new following; but, under the lash of the party whip, he has, like other hon. members, consented to allow himself to be dragged at the chariet wheels of his leaders in this particular instance. But I wish to call attention to the course which is being pursued by the majority in this House. Napoleon used to say that. "God was on the side of the strongest battalion;" but surely a majority is not necessarily right, nor is it necessarily omnipotent. I admit that, if the majority in this House, whose intelligence and ability I sincerely respect, choose to press this matter, they can carry their point; but, if I were a member of that majority, under present circumstances, I think I would take an opposite course. There is no necessity for haste. In fact we met earlier than usual for the express purpose of giving this question calm and deliberate consideration. We all know that if we had met at the usual time members would be getting anxious to visit their homes when the Session extended to June, and that therefore the House was called at an earlier season than usual in order to give the matter proper consideration. We met in December for the purpose of calmly and quietly, during the winter months, discussing a question which is a most serious one to the country. We have not yet been four weeks in discussing this question. We met on the ninth of December, and we did not have the contract brought down until Friday night, but it did not reach the country to any extent until Saturday, and then it was only a digest of it which was sent by telegraph. It was not discussed by the press to any extent until the following Saturday, for we all know that in many country places such intelligence is not received until the end of the week, by the Saturday mails. Why, then, not allow the discussion to go on in the usual course? When we were discussing Confederation we all knew how long and how serious was the consideration which the question received in the Convention, and afterwards in Parliament. How carefully each step was taken in order that the country might be fully informed with regard to that important change in our Constitution. Now, Sir, to my mind, this is a more serious question, in some respects, than Confederation was. I believe that it involves questions affect the future which will of our just as seriously as Confederation did, and it therefore behoves the majority in this House, not to allow the country to view with suspicion or doubt the steps they may take in the disposal of this question. Some hon. gentlemen have said that this is a matter which has been before the country for several years. I deny that statement. If the contract now before the House was identical with the Allan contract there would be some ground for such a statement. If it were based on the Mackenzie Act of 1874, there would be some justification for such an excuse, but the two schemes are entirely different. This contract brings to us wholly new provisions—provisions such as were never found in any contract which was ever before this Parliament-provisions such as were never found in any contract in the United States or in any of the States. Such a contract as this never found the light of day since the world was made in this Parliament or in any other Legislature. It is a matter which is wholly new to the people of Canada, and it contains such provisions that every member of Parliament who wishes to discharge his duty to his constituents will, instead of hastening it through the House, endeavor to afford the fullest opportunity for consideration. Indeed, I think it would have been better if we had had an adjournment of the House, and calmly awaited the decision of the country. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) stated that these resolutions were not being hurried through so rapidly as were the railway resolutions of the leader of the Opposition, through the Ontario Assembly, when he was the leader of the Government in that body. But supposing that the member for West Durham did hurry his resolutions through with undue haste-will two negatives prove a positive, will two wrongs make a right? But I deny that the railway resolutions of the hon. gentleman were unduly precipitated. They were short in number, and provided for granting $1,500,000 in aid to railways, and for the purpose of developing the construction of railways in the Province-a small matter in comparison with the present scheme. That is a simple matter compared with giving $21,000,000 to a railway Syndicate; together with a monopoly of trade for twenty years, and an exemption of their lands from taxation. The two cases are not parallel at all. And yet what are the facts? Even in the matter of haste, I find that ample time was given for the consideration of those propositions introduced by the hon. member for West Durham into the Ontario Legislature. All the facts upon which those Orders in Council in Ontario were based were on the Table of the Legislature from thirteen to twenty-four days, before a single vote was taken. For instance, the proposition to give aid in money to the Canada Central Railway was voted on the 29th of February of that year, and the information upon which that Order in Conneil was based was on the Table of the House on the 6th of February, twenty-four days before the vote was taken. In regard to the Midland Railway the information was on the Table of the House on the 7th of February, or twenty-two days before the vote was taken. With regard to the Montreal and Ottawa Railway the information was on the Table twenty-four days before the vote; Toronto, Grey and Bruce, twenty-two days before the vote; Toronto and Muskoka Railway, the information was on the Table the 7th of February; Hamilton and South Western, the information was on the Table thirteen days before the vote; Toronto and Nipissing, sixteen days before the vote. So the information upon matters involving the expenditure merely of a few thousand dollars was in the possession of the Local Legislature of Ontario a longer time than the information upon which we are asked to vote upon a measure of the utmost consequence to the future of the whole country. If the hon, member for Victoria blames the hon. member for West Durham for acting with such undue haste, in what position would some of his own friends be? There are hon. gentleman on the floor of this House to-day who were on the floor of that Local Legislature, and who did not think the member for West Durham was acting with undue haste. I find that when it was proposed to give aid to the railways for which my hon. friend from West Durham was so grossly attacked in this House, that Mr. Boultbee of East York, Mr. Fitzsimmons of Brockville and Mr. McCuaig of Prince Edward county, and Mr. Rykert of Lincoln-four hon, gentlemen having seats on the floor of this Housesupported these resolutions. What does the hon, member for Victoria say to that? That is the first resolution; the next resolution was voted in a similar manner and was supported by the same gentlemen I have named, and the hon, member for Monek voted against it. The third resolution was supported by every hon, gentleman I have named including the hon, menber for Monck-five hon, gentlemen who supported the resolution of the hon. member for West Durham, and who have now seats in this House.

Mr. McCALLUM. Will the hon, gentleman please read the division list.

Mr. ROSS. It was passed unanimously, there was no division on the question at all.

Mr. McCALLUM. For this reason—that the Opposition in that House was demoralized.

Mr. ROSS. Then my hon, friend was demoralized also.

Mr. MoCALLUM. We could not get five members to stand up and ask for a division. Only three members asked for one division. Messrs. McCallum, Ferguson and Richards.

Mr. ROSS. I understood my hon. friend from Monek was one of those determined men who would stand by his princi-Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

ples at all hazards, and yet I have found him since this House met taking back some of his objections to the Syndicate. Now, we will have to regard him as the demoralized member for Monck, who would stand as long as he could get anybody to stand by him, but who became demoralized speedily, and supported the hon. member for West Durham. I do not know but, before this Session closes, he may become demoralized again. I should be glad if he would. I think that is the only time when he is right. We have seen hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House who studiously denounced the hon, member for West Durham for precipitating certain resolutions in the Local Legislature, some of them admitting that they were demoralized and others admitting, by their votes in the Local Legislature, that the hon. member for West Durham was right and they were wrong. What does that prove? It proves that those hongentlemen, perhaps under influences that I cannot comprehend, are prepared to cast their principles to the winds as did the hon member for Monck, and support the hon, leader of the Government in his precipitate action. The course of those hon. gentlemen who sat in the Ontario Legislature, if considered in another light, encourages the Opposition to continue this debate for a few days longer with the hope that the hon. members for East York (Mr. Boultbee) and Monck (Mr. McCallum) may become demoralized and support once more the hon. member for West Durham. Is my hon friend the leader of the Government afraid that unless he rushes this measure through this House, some of his followers may become demoralized? Is he afraid of the new terms which they hear are coming down; afraid that a proposition will be submitted which his supporters will be compelled to support; afraid that the propositions which, perhaps are in the city at the present moment, will be more favorable to the country; afraid that the country will see that the Government made a great mistake when they did not call for tenders which they should have done; afraid that the country will see that, in violating the Public Works Act, in violating every precedent laid down by every previous Ministry and Parliament, they had committed a heinous crime which the country will call them to account for; afraid that their ranks will be broken, and I venture to say that if only five men on the other side had the courage to break the ranks to-day the Ministerial majority would melt away as snow in June? What are they afraid of? Of public sentiment! They tell us that the dignity of Parliament, in the first place, required that Parliament should know nothing of this matter until the House met. Now I understand the dignity of Parliament in a different way; I understand in a debate like this the dignity of Parliament requires deliberation.

Mr. BUNSTER. Will the new Syndicate include the route on Vancouver Island?

Mr. ROSS. I think the hon, gentleman is wanting to be demoralized too. If I could answer that question in the affirmative, he would be demoralized. I was saying the dignity of Parliament required that we should proceed with deliberation. That is the first requisite—that we should proceed with caution; that we should hasten slowly. We know with what care we discussed the Tariff Bill of the bon. Finance Minister. That policy was a great revolution. Now, let us act sincerely and dispassionately. We have plenty of work with which to occupy our time to day. The Notice paper is full of motions. Why not get through with these, and at a later stage take up the discussion of this question? Hon, gentlemen opposite are afraid of the dissatisfaction of the public. Such statements as the one I am about to read, from Sir William Howland, are being circulated. He said, in the city of Toronto, a short time ago:

"He had not been connected with any Government for years, and he claimed that he was free from party prejudice, and capable of judging fairly as to the measures that might be put before the country by either or any Government. On looking at the terms of the present contract, it seemed most extraordinary to him, that though they had men in the Government whom they believed to be possessed of good judgment and business capacity, that the measure itself, taken in all its details, as one in which it could not be conscientiously said there was one single condition made in the public interest."

That is the opinion of an hon. gentleman who was once a colleague of the right hon. gentleman, who was his appointed to office as the Lieutenant-Governor of my own Province. He said further:

"There was not one provision in it that was not made specially to serve the interests of the Syndicate, in direct antagonism to the public interests. It amounted to a perfect monopoly with the North-West. The means being furnished to build the road, it would be a monopoly which it would be difficult to compete with. And not only this, but every other person was precluded from constructing any road which could possibly come in competition with it. If this measure became law, he believed it would be one of the greatest calamities that could befall a people."

It took Sir William Howland a few days to consider this question before he came to that conclusion.

Mr. ORTON. Is he a member of the new Syndicate?

Mr. ROSS. I do not know that he is. I would have no objection to see him a member of the new Syndicate, nor would I object to see the hon. member for Centre-Wellington (Mr. Orton) a member of the new Syndicate. What we want is that any hon. gentleman who has means, capacity and energy, should take hold of this thing, should put his means into it and make it a instead of having affair, national it up in the private office of the hon. Minister of Railways. What we want is that the capitalists of this country having an opportunity to invest means should take an interest in the matter. This opinion of Sir William did not come down until a few days ago. What have we received from Montreal? We have received the opinion of the Corn Exchange adverse to this Syndicate. We would expect that the Corn Exchange in Montreal, the great metropolis, would be able to express their opinion without delay, yet it took them considerable time to do so.

Mr. BUNSTER. The hon. gentleman appears to have considerable information about the new Syndicate, and I, feeling a little interest in it, in case it should intend building the Vancouver Island road, would be glad if he would give us positively the names of the gentlemen who compose it.

Mr. ROSS. I think the Government will be able to lay the documents officially on the Table.

Mr. BUNSTER. The Government have laid a solid document before the House.

Mr. ROSS. Whatever information is not contained in these documents which the Government will lay on the Table, I will be pleased to supply. I was saying that the Corn Exchange in Montreal was only able yesterday to come to a conclusion on the matter. That is the important point to be considered. We have not heard from the different parts of the country. Let us have patience. Let us hear public opinion. Why are hon, gentlemen afraid of public opinion? Is it not public opinion that has made them—that has put them in the position they occupy to-day? I remember, very well, when the right hon. Premier, in 1876, first formulated his Protection resolutions. He began some time in April, 1876, and he cultivated public opinion from day to day to that degree of maturity, until, on the 17th September, 1878, it gave him a favorable verdict. He was over two and one-half years forming public opinion in regard to the National Policy. If we had insisted, as he is insisting, in preventing that free agitation of this question, where would the hon. gentleman be? If you interfere with the free course of public opinion you interfere with the rights of the people, who have to pay for the railway, and consequently you interfere with the liberty which is the inherent right of every British subject. I contend that no greater wrong can be inflicted on the people of this country than to oblige Parliament to decide with undue haste on this important question, before public opinion has an opportunity of expressing itself. I have just read the report of this question; the conclusion they arrived at, by a large majority, is that which I have stated. If they were not able to give an expression of opinion before yesterday, how can we expect the rural constituencies to be able to give an expression all at once. We have not yet heard from British Columbia. We have had scarcely time to receive the papers from that Province.

Mr. BUNSTER. I beg the hon, gentleman's pardon. Let me read the resolution sent from British Colombia to this House expressing the pleasure of British Columbia at this arrangement so far as the railway through that Province is concerned.

Mr. ROSS. I am exceedingly anxious to hear from that Province particularly. We will hear from the hon. gentleman frequently during the Session, but we want to hear from his constituents. We wish to have the expression of opinion of the press of British Columbia. We have had some news by telegraph of the opinions of that press. We are not satisfied that they are favorable to this Syndicate by any means. I think the very reverse is the case. Perhaps the hon, gentleman knows better; but, speaking from memory, I believe that in some instances the press of British Columbia has commented unfavorably on this Syndicate. Why not let us hear from that constituency which is represented by the leader of the Government. gentleman himself heard from Have they instructed him that right hon. the hia constituents? is the best thing we can do in the interests of British Columbia? Have they any guarantee from him, that when the railway reaches Port Moody, it will not extend any further, but it will be built to Vancouver Island, in regard to which the hon. gentleman, who interrupted me, was very solicitous? Let us know the whole matter. Perhaps, we can get a proposition from some of the men of means of British Columbia, that would be more favorable for the construction of the western section of the road. It is exceedingly desirable that all the propositions should be laid on the Table before proceeding with this discussion. I caution hon. gentlemen opposite that the suspicious look which this matter bore through its being concealed from them up to the hour the House met, is only being intensified by the undue haste with which it is being forced through this House. Then the hon. gentleman from his place in the House said that he believed the people of this country were not a good tribunal to judge of the details of an important bargain like this. That is unfavorable impression number three. I did not expect that the leader of the Government would have cast such an imputation upon the intelligence of the people of this country. After the Christmas adjournment the whole time of the House was taken up, and everything else set aside in order that this matter might be pushed forward; and now we have an attempt to take away from private members the day that belonged to them for the same purpose. Here are five points which hon. gentlemen will have to discuss with their constituents, that we will not fail to press upon them when the day of reckoning comes. And we hope it will come soon; it will relieve hon. gentlemen opposite of their agony of suspense, and place them where an indignant public will be glad to place them, on the opposite side of the House. Sir, if hon. gentlemen only realized that their safety consists in being supported by the people, as the Opposition realize it, they would not have so hurriedly precipitated this matter upon the attention of the House and the country. I appeal to them on behalf of the intelligence of this country, on behalf of fair play, on behalf of free discussion, on behalf of the dignity of Parliament itself, that they proceed with deliberateness and caution, in order that we may calmly, and caution, in order that we may calmly, dispassionately and seriously ascertain whether this proposition—prepared in secret, brought forth at a time when the Government had their followers under their hands, away from public influence, and under the whip of party allegiance and party loyalty-is in the interests of the country. If the Conservative party is the great party it is represented to be, if it has, as is claimed, the confidence of the country, are they going to ruin the party by the action they now propose to take? When the hon member for Ottawa (Mr. Wright), last night, said this scheme would be disastrous to the Conservative party, I believe he expressed not only his own sentiments, but those of 125 or 130 Conservative members of this House. Are they going to set themselves above the interests of the country? If not, let them wait patiently and see whether we are not going to get a better offer. Let us see whether we cannot save $10,000,000 to the people of this country. Let us see whether we cannot relieve the North-West Territory from the incubus which would be imposed upon it by this Syndicate. Let us see that the future of that country is not jeopardized by a scheme which hon, gentlemen know themselves is not a good one, but which, under peculiar influences, they are pressing upon this House. If we have a scheme by which the material used in the construction of that road would not be exempt from the payment of duty, would that not be worthy of the approval of the Finance Minister, who was so alarmed about deficits, and who put on a grievous tariff to get rid of them? If we get a scheme, the terms of which will not require such a large area of land, would that not be an advantage to the country? If we get a company that will pay taxes on its lands and property forever, would that not be an advantage to Manitoba? If I could show hon, gentlemen a scheme that would give Manitoba the new privilege of taxing the railway property, we should get their support and would be glad of it. We know right well the objectionable clauses in the Syndicate bargain are, first, the exemption from taxation of its lands; second, the exemption of the railway property; third, the exemption from duty of material used in the construction of the road. If we could present a scheme without any objectionable features in it, I am satisfied there would be such a Penterostal conversion in this House, that if any future individual came to read the Acts of these Apostle railway constructors, he would find a report that 150 Conservatives were converted in a single day. We have an opportunity of presenting such a spectacle, and of calling forth the powers of that sweet bard of Niagara, so well known to his countrymen. If we only give him such a theme as this his name will go down to posterity, not with all the honors of a Tennyson, a Shakespeare, a Milton or a Wordsworth, but with more than all the honors of these names combined.

Mr. PLUMB. I give up to you that chance.

Mr. ROSS. Such a theme would call forth his most melodious hexameters—such a poet, such a theme, and such an opportunity! We have an opportunity of making a new departure in the history of our country. We have had no poet in Canada that you would be disposed to crown with the laurel wreath, but we have an opportunity now of presenting a theme that will draw forth the powers of a genius not known before in this country; and having a bard not known before, and a theme not known before, we should have a poem that posterity will not forget—a wonderful theme, poet and conversion. I press this matter on hon. gentlemen opposite. I know I appeal not in vain. I trust that one or two having been demoralized, now a few Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

I trust that those who have pledged themselves will not advance such excuses for their course as did the man thus described by the poet:

"He vowed and protested, but joined in the plan;
He shared in the plunder but pitied the man."

I trust that the few who squirm a little will find sufficient reason to change their course—to see the folly of their ways and to accept a bargain more in the interest of their own party and decidedly more in the interest of the country.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not propose to reply to the speech to which we have just listened, if even by courtesy it can be characterized as a speech. But what strikes me is this: here is a proposition that we should go on with the discussion of this Syndicate contract, and here are gentlemen opposite speaking, if I can say so without offence, against time in order to prevent that discussion. But what is the proposition before us at this moment? You know, and the country knows, that when the First Minister made the motion in the House, that we should go on, de die in diem, with the discussion of the motion, it was accepted by the other side without serious opposition, almost without opposition at all. Every one understood that we should discuss this great scheme to the exclusion of other matters till Parliament had delivered its judgment. It turns out now that the motion only covered the procedure in Committee of the Whole. We came out of Committee early. when a motion was made for the acceptance of the report. It was out of order to receive it at that time. But the Order of the House was—I admit it was not binding—that it should be proceeded with at the next sitting of the House—that is to-day. If I mistake not, the leader of the Opposition himself suggested these words as the proper words, when some one cried out: "Now.'

Mr. BLAKE. No; I said it could not be received now. Mr. WHITE. Well, I think the hon. gentlemen suggested, at the next meeting.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. WHITE. Well, I may be mistaken, and withdraw my statement, but I so understood the hon. gentleman. But I believe it was the understanding of the House, that we should proceed with the report at the next meeting. order to show how utterly irrelevant a great deal of this discussion has been, I may say that the First Minister put on the paper a motion, that to-morrow he would move that the further proceedings, in regard to this question, should go on de die in diem, till Parliament had finally delivered judgment. It is quite clear that this particular motion made to-day could have no effect, but that if this motion were carried and the other was not made, we should simply have to-day, not to-morrow, to go on, and, therefore, the motion, of which notice was given, was to enable us to proceed continuously, day after day, till Parliament decided the question finally. To-day what is done? Why have we all this indignation from the Opposition side? Simply on account of the motion that we should go on with this discussion to its proper termination, in accordance with the decision arrived at by both parties: that this discussion should not be interrupted by ordinary business, but be carried on to its final stage. I ask you to say candidly whether there has been the slightest disposition to prevent discussion on this question? I can remember during the five years that hon. gentlemen opposite occupied the Treasury benches, and when I had the opportunity of looking down upon them from that gallery that I often wish I had the pleasure of sitting in yet, not seldom seeing a disposition to press questions through, and an unwillingness to hear discussion at all. The minority of more will experience qualms of conscience. We want to that day were invariably in such cases prevented from even give them the opportunity for repentance and conversion. discussing questions by noisy obstruction from the Ministerial side of the House. Do hon, gentlemen remember the scene witnessed when the discussion on Lieut-Governor Letellier's case came up in this House? Not only did the Ministerial party attempt to force a vote on the second day, in the discussion of a great constitutional question, which they all admitted it was, respecting the relations of the different Provinces to the Dominion-not only did they refuse to adjourn, but refused to give an attentive and fair hearing to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. That is simply an illustration of their spirit; many similar cases have occurred. What has been the history of this Canadian Pacific Railway question? We have been in session a month. The people have had an opportunity of reading the discussions in Parliament, of discussing it themselves, and of seeing the arguments in the press; and we know that an anonymous memorandum has been distributed throughout the country, so that there might be no failure on the part of the people to appreciate the terms of this contract. I repeat, no attempt has been made to interfere with freedom of discussion in this matter. Hon. gentlemen opposite have spoken without hindrance from the Ministerial side. Even this afternoon when there was a manifest disposition on the Opposition side to prevent the passage of the motion, there was no desire on this side to obstruct discussion. Let us not attempt to put this matter on a false basis; it is simply a question whether, having discussed this question for a considerable time—not whether we should stop discussion, but whether we should go on with it, till its final decision. It is the gentlemen on the Opposition side who are striving to prevent continuous discussion. If the leader of the House, relying upon his majority, undertook to force a vote when many hon. gentlemen had not spoken, as was done many a time by those gentlemen during the five years they sat on the Ministerial side—if the First Minister proposed to force a vote with undue haste or precipitancy—I could understand the action of hon. gentlemen opposite; could sympathize with them and assist them in claiming their rights. nothing of that kind has taken place at present. simply asked to do that which every man in the House and in Canada, who takes an interest in parliamentary proccedings, believes was determined upon more than a week ago—that is, go on with the discussion of this question, no matter how long it should last, till Parliament finally decided upon it. We have had interjected into this discussion other subjects altogether, including references to public meetings held to discuss this question. Every hon, gentleman on both sides knows that any party as strong as either of those now existing can always get up public meetings, and can always have resolutions passed in accordance with their views upon political questions of interest, and obtain the presentation of petitions, and can always get what may appear to be a large outside public sentiment for or against, but particularly against any measure that may be laid before Parliament. Those expressions of public opinion, hon gentlemen opposite feel in their hearts, have not been anything like the expressions of public opinion, that, in former times, have been given on great questions that have agitated this country. The fact that they have not, the fact that there is no public indignation outside, the fact that public meetings have only been got together with the greatest possible difficulty, and, after being regularly organized at caucuses of the party in this city, is due to this: greatest possible difficulty, and, after being regularly organized at caucuses of the party in this city, is due to this: the exaggerations in which hon, gentlemen have indulged in the discussion of this question. Had they indulged with any degree of moderation, they might have been more successful; but indulging, as they have done, to-day, in an attempt to touch the popular heart with the idea that discussion in Parliament is being prevented—indulging in that kind of discussion they have disgusted the public mind, and many people have come to think that a question which requires

"That while the House is willing to make all just provision for railways, and assents to the said order in Council, together with nine other to deer in Council, involving an aggregate appropriation of one million and a half dollars, having only been placed on the Table of this House take the government, to repeated requests, having orders in Council in favor of, till this House had voted an additional subsidy of four hundred thousand dollars, and a further appropriation of one hundred thousand dollars a year, for twenty years. The Government has not given this House sufficient time for the consideration of the Order in Council, to enable it to give an intelligent and just judgment that kind of attack, must have very great merits in it, or it would not thus be attacked. I sincerely hope this motion will carry, and I have simply ventured—I do not often do it—to speak for the purpose of recalling the attention of the House to the fact that the amendment is not one to stop discussion, but to enable the House to proceed without interruption with the discussion of this question from day to day until Parliament has pronounced its opinion upon it.

Mr. McCALLUM. Hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side of the House, especially the member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), appear to feel very much annoyed on account of the remarks made last night. I never question for a moment, nor do the people of this country question, the eloquence and ability of the hon member for West Lurham (Mr. Blake), but they desire to know whether that ability and that eloquence is to be used in the interests of this country or not. I, of course, having seen his action on a former occasion, undertook in the course of my remarks on this question to show the danger there was to the true interests of Canada, if the people should allow hon. gentlemen to cross to the Ministerial side of the House and assume control of public affairs. The hon, member for West Middlesex undertook to tell the House that I am demoralized. I hurl the assertion back in his teeth. When the hon, gentleman says that I voted for any motion for granting money to railways as proposed by the present member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), he speaks what is not the truth, and, if I may say so, draws a herring across the track in order to destroy the scent. I will again read from the Journals of Ontario for 1871-72, the railway resolutions which I quoted the other night. Before doing so, I may say that the hon, member for West Durham the other night said these were exploded slanders; but I ask the House to examine the records and ascertain whether they are exploded slanders or not. The people of the country know they are not. What are the facts? Why that Ontario to-day is suffering from the demoralization that occurred at that time. The hon, gentleman said the other night that the people of Ontario would remember it with sorrow, for his action on that occasion will have the effect of bringing the Province to direct taxation for Government maintenance. When I voted with the hon, member for West Durham, for delay in considering the Pacific Railway contract, I did not for a moment think they were going to take advantage of it in order to manufacture public opinion; I thought, perhaps hon, gentleman wanted time to go home and consult their constituents, but I did not expect they would go from Dan to Beersheba to manufacture public opinion. The hon, member for West Middlesex says they wanted to hear from Manitoba and British Columbia. Are there not members in this House from those Provinces, hon. gentlemen generally as well qualified to represent ably and honestly the opinions of their respective constituents as is the hon. member for West Middlesex. I am willing that my words to-night should go into the country in direct contradiction to those of that hon gentleman, or of other hon members opposite; and I am satisfied that where I am known they will go as far as the words of any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House. Now, I wish to read to the House the following motion, moved in the Ontario Legislature by Mr. (now Judge) Cameron, seconded by Mr. Rykert, as follows:-

upon the claims of the several enterprises, and that in future Orders in Council, requiring the ratification of this House, should be submitted at an earlier period of the Session, and should not be taken into consideration by this House until the same had been before the House for, at least,

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. McCALLUM. There appears to be a question of veracity between myself and the hon. members for West Middlesex and West Durham. In my remarks in this House the other day on the Pacific Railway question I said, indeed, I warned the people of this country what they might expect if the present leader of the Opposition was called to power. I know the antecedents of that hon, gentleman, and the speeches made by him and his supporters would afford a strong inducement for me to support the contract, no matter what might have been my opinions formerly. It is disagreeable to have a question of veracity raised. I said the other night that the hon. member for West Durham, by his action on the railway question in the Ontario Legislature, had converted a majority of one into a majority of thirty; but I am accused by the hon. member for West Middlesex with having supported that policy myself. I accept the challenge he has thrown out. I tell the hon, gentleman once for all that if he can find my vote recorded in favor of a single railway resolution of the hon. member for West Purham, I will retire from public life. This is a matter of veracity, and I wish to settle it at once and for ever. Mr. Sandfield Macdonald was defeated on the 15th December, 1871. Hon. gentlemen on examining the records will find that the amendment moved against the Government was carried by 37 yeas to 36 nays, and so it was defeated by a majority of one. I have said that $1,500,000 was not sufficient to control that Legislature, or the Province of Ontario for some time to come. That railway management was still controlling the provincial elections, because, no matter where a railway was to be built if the parties support the Government they would receive a grant.

Mr. ROSS. I ask the hon, gentleman if he did not support a vote of want of confidence in the Sandfield Macdonald Government.

Mr. McCALLUM. I did not.

Mr. ROSS. Will the hon. gentleman look at page 25 of the Journal of Ontario for 1871-72, where the following words occur in the Address to His Honor:-

"And we inform Your Excellency that we have no confidence in a Ministry which is attempting to carry out, in reference to the control of the said fund of $1,500,0.0,0 an usurpation fraught with danger to public liberty and constitutional government."

Among the names of members voting in favor of that Address, is that of Mr. McCallum.

Mr. McCALLUM. I will deal with that by-and-bye.

Mr. ROSS. Speak now.

Mr. McCALLUM. I will speak now. On the 21st February the House resolved itself into Committee on the following resolutions:-

"1. That the Legislature having established a scheme for aiding in "I. That the Legislature having established a scheme for aiding in the construction of railways, it is right that the public funds appropriated for the purpose should be adequate to the granting of aid to proper enterprizes so far as that can be accomplished consistently with the retention of such a proportion of the public funds as may be required to do justice to all sections of the country.

12. That towards accomplishing the object of the preceding resolution, it is expedient that the sum of four hundred thousand dollars be set apart from, and out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, established under the Act in aid of railways.

Act in aid of railways.

"3. That towards accomplishing the same object, it is expedient that in further aid of railways, a sum of one hundred thousand dollars yearly, for twenty years, should be set apart from and out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of this Province, and from a fund to be designated and known as the Railway Subsidy Fund.

"4. That no railway company, of which any section is aided from the Railway Fund, shall be entitled to aid from the Railway Subsidy Fund, prespect to such section.

"M. M.C.L.L.I.W.

Mr. McCallum.

"5. That no railway company that does not come within the terms and provisions, and comply with the conditions of the Act in aid of railways, and any Act amending the same, shall be entitled to aid from the Railway Subsidy Fund.

"6. That the provisions in the Act in aid of railways and of any Act amending the same shall, save in so far as they may be consistent with these resolutions, apply to the authorization and payment of any grant out of the Railway Subsidy Fund.

"7. That the sum to be granted to any railway company out of the Railway Subsidy Fund shall not be less than one hundred and twenty dollars, or more than two hundred and forty dollars per mile per annum, for twenty years.

"8. That scrip or certificates may be issued in respect of any grant out of the Railway Subsidy Fund after payment thereof has been duly

I think I have shown by these resolutions that $1,500,000 set aside by the previous Government was not deemed sufficient, but that the Liberal Government wanted $100,000 more, which was voted by the House. To the motion that the Speaker leave the chair and the House take up the railway resolutions, Mr. Rykert moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. McCallum:

"That all the words after 'that' be left out and the following words substituted therefor: 'until it shall be more clearly shown to the House that the Railway Aid Fund, consisting of $1,500,000, is insufficient to meet the requirements of all bona fide railways already undertaken, and which the Lieut.-Governor has by Order in Council declared to be entitled to participate in said fund, it is expedient to grant an additional sum towards the said fund.'"

What do we find? On 22nd February the majority of one was converted into a majority of thirty-five, and so on through the chapter! The resolutions were brought down two or three days before the close of the Session. The hon. member for West Middlesex says that my vote was recorded in their favor. The vote was unanimous. If he will look at the journals he will find that on the vote before that only three members voted against the resolutions. We divided the House until we found it was useless.

You became demoralized.

Mr. McCALLUM. We desired the House to declare that henceforward, when Orders in Council were laid on the Table, they should be long enough in the hands of members to allow them to read and consider them; and we thought that five days at least was not too long for their consideration. I have no doubt the hon. member for West Middlesex will say they were laid on the Table two or three days before. The manuscript might have been laid on the Table for an hour or two, but it was taken away; and only four hours after they were in the hands of members we were asked to vote the money, and we did vote it. I consider that was irresponsible government, and that the hon. gentleman was striking a blow at responsible government when he acted as he did on that occasion. Even if I had doubts about the contract which is before the House, I feel that, by voting against the Government on this occasion, I would be contributing to the ruination of my country, by putting hon, gentlemen opposite in power. Though the hon, leader of the Opposition may be a Cicero in oratory, or a Solomon in making laws, the extent to which he demoralized the Province of Ontario during the short time he was in office there, would prevent me from aiding him in obtaining control of affairs in the Dominion, however much I may admire his abilities. I am not yet prepared to hand this country over to the Americans. One hon, gentleman said that Sault Ste Marie was the key of the position, but I would ask who will hold that key. When we wished to send troops up to the North-West, to quell an insurrection there, the lock at Sault Ste. Marie was closed against us, and the same thing might occur again. I believe in being peaceable with my neighbors, but, at the same time, I like to have a road to my house through my own land. We are now endeavoring to lay the foundations of an empire in this country, and I, for one, do not believe in building a highway through American territory; and a matter of a few hundred thousand dollars is a small matter to give, compared with having a highway through our own territory, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. If I thought there was not more patriotic feeling in this House, than has been expressed by hon gentleman opposite, I would weep for my

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I think the House must have been greatly edified at the lecture which the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) delivered to hon. members on this side. He waxed pathetic and appealed to the majority on this side not to be coerced by what he was pleased to call the lash of the party whip. I dare say the hon, gentleman had a very vivid recollection of the agonies which he, in common with his fellow members who were sitting on this side during the last Parliament, suffered from the infliction of the lash of his own party. I recollect very distinctly that on many occasions these hon, gentlemen winced, and very perceptibly, under the application of the party whip when their leaders were in power. I wish to inform hon gentlemen that, with regard to the question which is now before the House, there is no necessity for coercion on the part of the supporters of the Government, for the more this question is discussed the better does it appear in the eyes of the people of this country, as hon. gentlemen have found in their meetings which they held during the recess. I had the honor and the pleasure of attending a meeting held by my political opponents in one of their strongholds in my own county, for, though I received no invitation, I thought it my duty to attend, and I found that after a full and fair discussion the policy by the Government was sustained by a large majority. I believe that the supporters of the Government in this House, while they are not to be coerced by their leaders, will find as they bring their judgment to bear on this question, that it is not only in the interests of their party but of the country, that this measure should become law. There is one particular point with regard to this question which seems to be the great stumbling block of hon. gontlemen opposite. They realize fully that when parties were pledged to the construction of a line from the shore of Lake Superior to the Pacific by the year 1590, and that it was the duty of the present Administration to endeavor to carry out as faithfully as they could, the terms which had been deliberately entered into with the Imperial Government by the hon, gentleman for Lambton, they tried to escape by declaring that it was inexpedient to construct the road north of Lake Superior, as it would involve to this country a tremendous liability. Now, let us see what liability will be incurred with regard to that portion of the line by the propositions now before the House. So far as I can make out the resolutions the amount required to be expended for that portion of the road will be $10,000,000—or an amount equivalent to an annual taxation upon the people of Canada of $400,000. I would like to ask if it would be a safe or a wise thing for the sake of an annual expenditure of $100,000 to drive the trade of the North-West into American channels, as the honorable gentlemen propose. If that is their proposition, I, for one, cannot agree to it. We expect that the addition to the population of the North-West Territories by the construction of this road will rapidly cover the annual expenditure required for the construction of that portion of line. We find, upon looking at the returns of revenue derived from Customs and Excise duties, that it amounted to over $18,000,000 from a population of 4,000,000. It would require only an addition of 100,000 people to the present population to provide for the annual expenditure that will be incurred by the construction of that portion of the road. It seems to me that it is a most absurd proposition for hon. gentlemen opposite to say that for the purpose of saving the paltry sum of $100,000, which will be more than made up within two years after the road is opened into that country, this portion of the road should not be built. I believe the more this question is discussed, both in Parliament this contract had not been submitted to Parliament, they and out of it, the better it will appear to the people. We have heard eloquent speeches from hon. gentlemen on the other side, and whilst we have been charmed by their eloquence, I, for one, must confess I have not been convinced by their logic. In any case, I think we ought to allow those hon, gentlemen all the opportunity they desire for discussing this question.

Mr. RYAN (Montreal Centre). The hon, gentleman for West Middlesex has alluded to several meetings held throughout the country who have pronounced, as he claims, against the contract submitted by the Government. He has spoken of the Corn Exchange Association of Montreal, but I will remind him that at that meeting, out of 400 active members, there were only 69 present, of whom 42 voted for the motion as proposed and 27 against, giving an anti-Syndicate majority of 15. But the hon. gentlemen for West Middlesex did not refer to a meeting of another body, even more important than the Corn Exchange-I mean the Montreal Board of Trade, which held a meeting on the previous day. He had forgotten to communicate to this House what took place at that meeting. A prominent member of the Board of Trade, is Mr. Henry Lyman, who was chairman of that great meeting held in Montreal a few nights ago by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and where the people were admitted by ticket. At the meeting of the Board of Trade he moved a resolution, taking partial exception in a mild form to the contract with the Syndicate, but the feeling at that meeting was such that Mr. Lyman withdrew his resolution without submitting it to a vote. I have no hesitation an saying that the Board of Trade is a most intelligent body, perhaps even more influential than the Corn Exchange Association, both as regards their wealth and business experience and knowledge of the requirements of that city and of the whole country. Well, what is the nature of that resolution carried in the Corn Exchange Association? It simply affirms that they are in favor of the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie route. If I were to look at this matter from a Montreal standpoint alone, I would say, by all means let us have that route first, because I believe there is a probability that under any circumstances that route will be constructed as a commercial enterprise, without the Government constructing the work, and possibly without the aid of the Government. I believe it will be constructed as a commercial enterprise long before the route north of Lake Superior. But looking at it, not exclusively from a Montreal standpoint. I believe it is in the true interest of Montreal and of the Dominion generally, that the route north of Lake Superior should be constructed also, because it would give us an independent inlet and outlet to the North-West, without going through American territory. I am sure every loyal Canadian looks forward to the day when we shall not be dependent on communication through American territory to reach our great North West. Before proceeding further, I wish to make a remark upon a proposition of the hon. member for North Middlesex, who said it would be well for the House to adjourn. For what? To afford a set of patriotic capitalists belonging to the Grit party, and who, as public rumors state, are willing to step forward and sacrifice themselves upon the altar of their country-to afford these gentlemen an opportunity of putting in a new offer. This, Mr. Speaker, is marvellous. After the hon, member for Lambton, when leader of the late Government, had carried a law through Parliament, authorizing him to accept tenders for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, where were all these Grit capitalists then that they did not step forward and tender? They must be like the famous Rip Van Winkle who slept 20 years, though these gentlemen had been asleep only 6 years, since the Mackenzie Act was passed, and in all human probability, if would have been sleeping still. Much has been said about the propositions contained in the Mackenzie Act. There never was a contract given under those propositions, though advertisements asking for tenders were scattered over this continent and Europe, without receiving a single response.

An hon. MEMBER. People had no confidence in the late Premier,

Mr. RYAN. I will not say that; I must say for myself that I have confidence in him-much more than I have in many of those who are associated with him. I have no hesitation in saying that I look upon him as probably one of the most honest men in that party. He may have made mistakes in the past, but I believe him to be a patriotic man who loves his country well, and that is more than I am prepared to say of many of his colleagues. Let us come now to the Allan contract. That was a contract the Government entered into with a company of which Sir Hugh Allan was president. What has been the result. I will not undertake to occupy the time of this House by discussing whether the contract with Sir Hugh Allan was more favorable to the interests of Canada than the present; but what I have to state is this: that had it not for the unpatriotic course of hon. gentlemen opposite, in 1872 and 1873, Sir Hugh Allan and his associates would have succeeded in forming a syndicate in England. They would have raised the money; that work would have been three-quarters completed to day; we would have had a large population of probably half a million of people in that great North-West, contributing some three millions dollars annually to the revenue of this country, and have been saved from those means of depression which destroyed some of our largest commercial and monetary institutions and reduced to poverty many men who had gained a competency. What has been the result of the unpatriotic course pursued by hon, gentlemen opposite and more particularly by their organ, the Globe newspaper? The country has sustained, commercially and financially, more than double the amount sufficient to build the whole trans-continental railway from ocean to ocean. I am free to admit that the whole depression from 1874 to 1878-9 cannot be fairly attributed to their conduct; but what I do state is, that had it not been for their unpatriotic conduct, Sir Hugh Allan would have succeeded in raising the necessary money in England, and the influx of capital and immigration into the country would have saved us from the terrible depression to which I have alluded. Hon. gentlemen talk about their party being the party of purity and of patriotism; they should rather be termed the party of ruin and decay; everything they touched decayed. In proof of this allow me to refer you to the statistics of receipts of Customs duties in the port of Montreal from 1870 to this year. In 1870 the amount collected was $4,766,410.36; in 1871, it was $5,062,766.97; in 1872, $5,362,100.20; in 1873, $5,025,442.53. These were the years of surpluses. At that time the administration of public affairs was in the hands of men who had brains, who did not acknowledge to the world that they could do nothing to prevent depression, who did not declare they were only flies on the wheel, and under their administration the country prospered. In 1874, before the crisis had time to arrive, the revenue still showed an increase, amounting to $6,122.289.51. Mark the decrease which followed: In 1875 the collections only reached $4,806,110.19; in 1877, they amounted to but $3,956,193.53; and in 1878, the last year of the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, the amount received had decreased to $3,644,385.36. True, that year they had not much time to devote to public administration. They were then devoting their time, especially the hon. Finance Minister, to making provision not to meet the debt which was a second line of communication with the great North-West Mr. RYAN (Montreal).

falling due in London, but to a missionary tour through Canada for the purpose of trying to secure continuance in office for another five years. But the people had a lesson and a sad experience, and the result was that when the 17th September came around those men were sent very quietly to the right about. In 1879, the very first of the administration of the present Government, the collections increased from $3,644,385.36 in 1878, to $4,512,463,31, and in 1880 the collection further increased to $6,349,789.47. The change seemed as if due to a talismanic influence; the season of blight had disappeared-prosperity bloomed in its stead. No better proof could be afforded of the incapacity of the one set of men and the capacity of the other set to govern this country than these figures. You would naturally suppose that intelligent people, men who read and think, would be more or less governed by the feeling surrounding them, would learn something as time passed, but, as far as the Opposition are concerned, they are just as hostile to day as they were a few years ago, to the policy approved by the people. The hon. member for West Middlesex, a few moments ago, referred to the murmuring of members on this side of the House against the National Policy. Well, I think, eloquent as he is, he will have great difficulty in convincing the great mass of the people that they are groaning under the burden, that the days of murmuring and weeping are not past. These gentlemen have been tried in the scale and found wanting. It is true that, when in Opposition for twenty years, they did succeed in educating the young people of the country to believe that they were the party of purity and reform, and when the Government of my right hon. friend resigned, after the midnight attack overwhelming majority. The reason was simply that the people had not had an opportunity of testing the sincerity of the declaration of of January, 1874, they were returned to Parliament by an the hon. gentlemen, and were willing to try Were they true to the professions they made in Opposi-tion? Certainly not. The country had a governmental experience of them for five years, and that experience was a sad one for the people of Canada. The people found them wanting when they appealed to the polls, and hence their appeal to the country now falls on indifferent ears. I stated a few moments ago that they ought to be termed the party of ruin and decay. It is ruin all the time. It was ruin when Confederation was brought about. When this great territory we hear so much about now was purchased for £300,000, it was considered an extortionate price. When the National Policy was brought out two years ago, the farmers were to be ruined by the taxes imposed on them. The artizans were to be ruined by the increased prices they were to pay for fuel, breadstuffs and everything else, and the late Finance Minister told us that in time the manufacturers themselves were to be ruined, so that there was going to be ruin all round. All I can say to that hon. gentlemen, is this—that if he went into any manufacturing district he would find that the people there think differently. He would find that workingmen, instead of working three-fourths time, are working extra time and receiving extra pay, and instead of having to leave Canada and to go to the United States, I am happy to inform the hon, gentleman that many men who had left during the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, are now returning to Canada day by day and obtaining employment at more remunerative wages than they received on the other side. I have before referred to the Sault Ste. Marie road. I believe that road will be constructed as a commercial undertaking. I would be glad if the Government of Canada could see their way to giving assistance for the construction of that road, as I think, commercially speaking. it would be a vast benefit to the Dominion of Canada to have-though I should be exceedingly sorry that the Lake Superior line should be sacrified to it. To one remark of the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) I wish to allude, and I allude to it with pain, and I have no doubt he made statements which in cooler moments he would not have made and which he now regrets himself. When called to order by the hon. Minister of Railways, he said he could not expect very much better from the hon. gentleman because he had the $32,000 man on one side of him and the $10,000 man on the other. By the $32,000 man he referred to the hon. Minister of Public Works. Though he has been charged in the Opposition press over and over again with having received that $32,000 corruptly, the hon. member for Centre Huron knows that a public meeting in the Province of Quebec, the hon. Minister of Public Works, while face to face with the hon, leader of the Government of Quebec, the Hon. Mr. Joly, stated publicly that he was prepared to place vouchers for the expenditure of every dollar of that money in the hands of Mr. Joly, with no conditions beyond this, that if he were not satisfied with the correctness of those vouchers, he was at liberty to make whatever use of them he thought proper, Mr. Joly, however, declined the offer. With regard to the Government, no man in the House or country knows better than the late Finance Minister (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) the great statesmanship professed by the leader of the House, and which has been recognised not only in this country but in Europe. I believe myself, and have heard many competent judges declare, that there was not even in the British House of Commons his superior. Yet, great as is his statesmanship, the great hold he has upon the hearts of the people of Canada, is more due to his purity of character than his talents. No man in or out of the House, save perhaps the member for Centre Huron, ever charged him with an act of corruption for personal advantage. If there is an hon, gentleman in this House capable of upholding the honor of the country in this and other respects, it is the Premier. From the past associations of the member for Centre Huron with the right hon, gentleman he must have known his high character and services to the country. Whilst I have occupied a seat in this House I remember when the late Finance Minister was a great supporter of the right hon. gentleman; but his aspirations having been overlooked when a vacancy occurred in the Finance Department, which showed conclusively the Premier's sound judgment of human nature and his attention to the interests of the country, Sir Francis Hincks having been preferred to the post, his feelings towards his leader suddenly changed, he lapsed into Opposition and became the most bitter of all opponents of the right hon, gentleman. I deeply regret having occasion to express my opinion on the member for Centre Huron, but I should not have risen on this occasion but for the remarks of the member for West Middlesex with reference to the meetings at Montreal. I have listened attentively to the speeches made on both sides of the House, I have tried to form an impartial judgment on the question discussed, but have failed to see the strength of the Opposition arguments. I have heard much of the great ruin and misfortune brought upon the country by the present Government by the increase of taxition and otherwise, and the injury to the North-West by this Syndicate, and the exemption of its land by taxation and otherwise. I can cite a striking instance to the contrary. A municipality adjoining Montreal, St. Henri, has decided to give a cotton company $15,000 with an exemption of taxation for 25 years on condition of its establishing a factory within the limits. That does not look much like ruin brought about by the National Policy mentioned by the member for West Middlesex. I have no fear that the people of the North-West or any part of the country will be ruined by the policy of the present Government. With regard to the question of the exemption of the Syndicate property from taxation, and the statement of the here for some weeks listening to the able speeches which emigrants going into the North-West would be likely to change the rod for the scorpion, I can see no such danger. Every settler gets a freehold of 160 acres for a settlement fee of $10 with the right to pre-empt another 160 acres. Even this Syndicate which is to do so much harm has no further claim upon the land when it sells it. There can be no landlord system like that of England, Ireland and Scotland. I may say, in conclusion, that the contract before the House will receive my hearty support.

Mr. LITTLE. If I have not been edified, I have been amused, at hon speakers opposite assuming to themselves all the independence and patriotism that should exist in this Chamber, from the vacillating leader of the Opposition, the hon, member for West Durham, down to the lowest rung of the ladder, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) whose talk was of donkeys. Sir, a person generally speaks most of that subject, and those companions with which he is most familiar, and with whom he most associates. Mr. Speaker, my constituents, in common with others, take a deep interest in the matter before the House. At the very first inception of the construction of the Pacific Railroad, in 1872, we considered that the terms were hard, based on the condition of British Columbia forming part of the Union with Canada. We imagined that the Empire, the Home Government, since it was relieved of a great responsibility and trouble by the Union of that country with the Dominion, should have engaged largely to construct the railroad, at least through British Columbia territory, and it was only to effect and preserve the Union that we supported the Government on that occasion. Mr. Speaker, every member of the Opposition has denounced the contract, the Grit press through Canada has done the same. Members on this side the House have been appealed to, to divest themselves of party lines and party feeling, but have the Opposition members set us the example? They profess independence, but they do not practice it. What were they sent here for, but to criticise and embarrass the Government? What were we sent for, but to support and to stand by the Government, if we can do to honorably. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that I take exception to one or two clauses or sections in the contract. I think them hard, and would wish them mo lifted-but agreeing as I do in eleven points out twelve with the general principles of the Government, do you think, Mr. Speaker, that I could be a party to cause their downfall and let in the member for West Durham as Premier? Sr I consider that at least would be a national calamity. I think it is a calamity that that vacillating, chameleon-like hon, member should have his residence in Canada; he is far better adapted for the revolutionary atmosphere of Mexico, that changes its Government about once a quarter, and whose land is threatened with a live volcano. Therefore, Sir, viewing the ten long years of sucpense, expense, extravagance, and trouble, recollecting the various doings connected with the Fort St Francis Lock. the Kaministiquia River corruption, the lavish expenditure of millions of our money, I want to have the question settled, so that we can tell exactly what this construction of the great Pacific Railroad will cost. Comparing the pre-ent terms with former ones, I find that the contract before us is better than the Sir Hugh Allan contract of 1873 by $36,000,000; better than the Mackenzie, of 1874, including its branches, by $85.627,500, and better than the parliamentary grant of 1879 by $97,000,000; and seeing there is no other proposition. or terms for the construction of this railroad. I shall support the measure, hoping that some of the objectionable clauses in the contract will be modified.

Mr. BRECKEN. I shall follow the example of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, by addressing myself very briefly on the subject before the House. I have sat have been delivered by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, upon this very important question. There is one feature of the debate which has struck me very forcibly indeed, and I shall refer to it now, however, without any desire of raking up national animosities, or importing anything approaching to bitterness into the discussion. I allude particularly to the able speech of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills)—a speech replete with constitutional law and parliamentary authorities, and one to which I listened with a great deal of interest. The hon. gentleman is foud of authorities; he is very authoritative, and I, for one, do not find fault with that particular feature of his utterances, for I am fond of authorities; they show that the man who cites them is a hard reader. The hon. gentleman is so strong on authorities that I do not think he would venture the statement that two and two make four, without bringing forward an array of authorities to establish his statement. The hon. gentleman read voluminously from the English Hansard, and went back to the days of Daniel O'Connell to show that in a question of such magnitude as the present one, a question so far-reaching in its consequences upon Canada—and I admit its importance, and that once the die is east our decision is irrevocable—it is quite right and proper and patriotic that hon. gentlemen should vote according to the dictates of their conscience, even if by so doing they should not be able to follow the leaders of their party. Then, again, hon. members have cautioned us and expressed the hope that we would not be a mere mechanical majority, that we would not give a blind and unreflecting vote on this question. We are all party men, and there is no use concealing it, and we do bear an allegiance to a leader that the Opposition do not exactly understand. But while that is the case I recognize with the hon, member for Bothwell the heavy responsibility that rests upon every man that casts his vote on this question. I look upon the success of a road between the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans as synonymous with the success of the Dominion. But I ask why those hon, gentlemen assume that they are only in a position to call themselves patriotic, as if they were not bound by any past policy, as if they had nothing to forget and nothing to forgive? This matter has been before the country in some form every year since Confederation, and every elector has had an opportunity of casting his vote upon it. I do not acknowledge that the Opposition have a right to assume that they are free and untrammelled by their past policy on this question, and that they consistently vote against any scheme for building the Canadian Pacific Railway. When the right hon. gentleman the leader of the Government launched his celebrated Allan contract there was not a fire-side in the Dominion of Canada that was not inundated with Reform literature to prove that the hon, gentleman and his Cabinet—and it is significant that the personnel of that Cabinet to-day is very nearly what it was in 1873, making allowances for the vicissitudes of life—that the hon. gentleman and his Cabinet were not only corrupt but incapable of carrying out a work of such magnitude. If the hon, gentlemen opposite wish to prove their liberalism, they have now an admirable opportunity for doing so by forgetting old animosities, and cordially uniting with their adversaries to carry out this great work. Instead of that they have libelled themselves as Liberal—they are daily libelling the title. In 1874, the hon. member for Lambton placed an Act on the Statute-book providing for the construction of this railway by private enterprise. I may observe here that I have a very great respect for that hon, gentleman of whose ability, of whose industry and knowledge of public affairs, I wish I possessed one-twentieth part. When the former Governor General, Lord Dufferin, went to British Columbia, he staked the credit and the reputation of his then Premier that this great work should be carried out. But that Act provided that this work should be done by a Mr. BRECKEN.

private company, and to this mode of building it hon. gentlemen of the Opposition are fully committed. I regard it almost as a matter of congratulation that the right hon. gentleman was defeated in 1873, and that the great Reform party had an opportunity for five years of trying to solve this difficult problem. I am sure I am expressing the sentiments of the hon. member for Lambton, when I say that that burden was almost more than he could bear. We know the mistakes he made; we know the millions of money he spent in explorations and in public works connected with this line; we know that it has been a quagmire for millions of money. I do not mean to charge the hon. member with corruption or incapacity, but it was a consequence that inevitably followed such a work. Now, we have had six or seven years experience, we have had exploration of engineers and information from all sources. Both sides are pledged to this undertaking. We are bound in honor to carry it out. I recollect when I had the honor of speaking for the first time in this House, I made use of the expression "heavy as the responsibility is, better to be bankrupt in purse than bankrupt in reputation," and I adhere to that still. It is true the hon, member for West Durham has been more vacillating on this matter than the hon, member for Lambton. I am tolerably well acquainted with his antecedents in the matter, and I must say that I do not yet exactly understand what his policy is. If the logic of political events placed him at the head of the Government of this Dominion, it is impossible for any one to tell from his own antecedents what he would do in regard to this question. We have had a shower bath of figures from both sides of the House. I have no doubt that this $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres in addition to the $28,000,000 already expended, and to be expended in work under this contract, to be handed over to this Syndicate, are of the most favorable terms that have yet been submitted. One would really think that there were associations, syndicates, and men who were willing and anxious to take up this work. A great deal of time and ingenuity and ability have been expended in making contrasts between the contract now before the House and the terms embodied in the Act of 1874, viz.: $10,000 and 20,000 acres per mile, and the untold sum for which the Government was to guarantee four per cent. for twenty-five years. That Act has been on the Statute-book up to the present day. I believe that advertisements were published in the Canada Gazette in 1878, previous to the elections, asking for tenders under that Act. I am not going to question the motive of the hon, member for Lambton in publishing those advertisements; I am not going to question whether, in doing so, he was actuated by a sincere desire to carry out this work, or whether it was an electioneering dodge. Those advertisements have, Those advertisements have, I believe, been continued in the columns of the Gazette up to last year, and nobody has come forward to make a tender. A great deal has been said about the way in which this contract was let; about the tenders not having been asked for. If this contract had been considered for the first time; if the idea of building a great trans-continental line had originated last summer, there might have been some weight in the objections of the Opposition. But in view of the fate of the Allan contract, and the fact that the Act of 1874 has been on the Statute-book, and the advertisements in the Gazette up to last May, their arguments lose their force. When the right hon. leader of the Government, the Minister of Railways, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture went to England, I have no doubt in my mind that they addressed themselves to the settlement of this matter in a patriotic and anxious spirit; that they opened negotiations and made every effort to arrange a contract. We are told that they did not succeed, There was a reason for their non-success. There was that ingenious, but, I am sorry to say, unpatriotic speech of the hon, member for West Durham last year, which he took six or seven hours this Session to answer. The hon. Minister and his colleagues had to encounter the bad effect of that speech. The hon, member for West Durham, unfortunately for his country, in this instance, is a statesman whose personal integrity stands high, and English statesmen could hardly think that a gentleman occupying the position of the hon. member for West Durham would belittle his country for the purpose of serving his party. I think the hon. Minister of Railways said he had been in communication with a very prominent statesman in England who had read the speech delivered by the hon. Minister last year, and was very much taken with the scheme; but as soon as he saw the speech of the hon, member for West Durham, he did not return to the subject and was never seen by the hon. Minister again. It is, indeed, a misfortune that a gentleman of the high standing and commanding abilities of the hon. member for West Durham should torture his ingenuity to the detriment of his country. There is another feature that strikes me. When the right hon gentleman of the Government made his contract with Sir Hugh Allan, how often was it not repeated that tie Government of the day had entered into that contract in a corrupt partizan spirit, reckless of the interests of the country, and solely with the unpatriotic motive of strengthening their hands. The ex-Minister of Finance, in that very remarkable speech of his the other night, threw out all sorts of insinuations, but advanced no arguments; and here I may say you may answer a man's arguments, but you cannot answer his insinuations nor his fears. The hon, member for Centre Huron said that he had no respect for the Government, but had respect for the members of the Syndicate. Let us be thankful for small favors. Let us be thankful that he does not accuse the hon. leader of the Government and his coadjutors of having entered into this contract with the unpatriotic motive of strengthening their hands. You must look at the surrounding circumstances. If it is true-and I suppose I am not unparliamentary in alluding to it—that the political creed of these wealthy men who form this Syndicate is not in accord with the views of the Government, surely it is an evidence that the Government have been actuated by the patriotic desire of promoting the interests of the country in the course they have taken; for it cannot be conceived that they wished simply to strengthen their hands when after spending anxious months of toil over this work they should have given it into the hands of men who were opposed to them. Some allusion was made to a gentleman who figured in a scene that was not creditable to them in this House. We were twitted that he was behind the scenes in this arrangement. This is but an additional evidence that the right hon. leader of the Government and the hon. Minister of Railways care not who the men are, what their political stripe is, and are ever willing to run the risk of its being used as a political engine against their party hereafter, provided that work is entrusted to competent men. A hue and cry has been made in the Province that I come from, about the monopoly of lands, which is compared with a state of things that formerly existed in Prince Edward Island. There is no analogy between the two cases. In the reign of George III. our Island was laid out in 67 townships, and the land was granted in large tracts to favorites of the Crown. Through the liberality of the Canadian Government a sum of money was granted to buy out those landholders. I admit myself that it would be a great defect in this contract if it was the interest of the Syndicate to hold their lands until the Government sections were settled, but I do not think that such a supposition can be entertained in common sense. I look upon the gentlemen constituting this Syndicate as being actuated by the one besetting sin of every man on the face of the earth, and that is self-interest. We have been told that the alternate blocks of land will not be settled, and that the people will not be able to constitute themselves servative party, but after five years of trial of the opposite municipalities or have schools or churches, or any of the advantages of a civilized community. Why, Sir, when this railway is constructed, these men are bound to run it for ten years. The cost of running it has been estimated by the hon. member for Lambton at $6,000,000, and by Mr. Sanaford Fleming at $8,000,000. Where is the traffic to come from? There is no through traffic; the traffic must be a wayside traffic, and therefore it is the interest of these men to sell their lands and get them settled. Why, Sir, could you imagine a country- being laid out in a mile square, with the blocks alternately and desolate. The Syndicate could not settled withhold their lands from settlement without tying up the Government lands also. The poorest man in the world would not settle in such a country. We have heard so many inconsistent statements from hon, gentlemen that we hardly know what to think. I have made up my mind to one thing, and that is, that this trial is too severe for their patriotism. The speeches made by the hon. gentlemen have shown a great deal of research; we have been told the cost of running all the railroads in the United States; but the whole line of their argument has convinced me that they cannot give this contract the support its merits deserve. 1, myself, coming from one of the Lower Provinces—and if I introduced sectional feeling into the consideration of this question it would be discreditable to me-would have been better satisfied if, in the first instance, we had hastened a little more slowly. We would have been better satisfied if, at the inception of this great scheme, it had been decided to stop at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. But, Sir, the public credit of this country has been pledged to the completion of this great work. Favorable as are the terms of this contract, it necessarily involves the expenditure of a large sum of money. I hope the anticipations of gentlemen who know more about this contract than I do, will be realized, and that the discontented, starving, struggling people of Europe will find a home in the North-West, where their labor will be remunerated, and where they will increase at such a rate that they will divide with us the public debt that now rests on the people of Canada, and thereby lighten our taxation. I think it is a matter of regret to hear hon. gentlemen belittle our country and its resources. What satisfaction can it give them to assert that the population of Canada is going to the United States? Surely things must have come to a crisis to necessitate talk of this kind. This great trans-continental line will necessarily increase our burdens unless public men on both sides strive shoulder to shoulder to induce the populations of Europe to come to this country and fill it up. Then the lands which last year were worthless, and this year are worth $3.18 an acre, will recoup this country for the great work we are now undertaking. Well, if this is to be accomplished, do not let us have the money markets of England, and every leading commercial house filled with the deprecatory speeches of the member for West Durham. Let'us be true to our country, and lay aside political feelings and prejudices and enmities—let us not belittle our resources—but let us do the best we can to induce the tide of immigration into our North-West and make its lands valuable. We hear of land there being worth $4 and $5 an acre. These are railway values What are those lands worth now to the Provinces of Quebec or Ontario? Their value will be created by the railway which will open up great sources of wealth to the Dominion, more beneficial in their results than the gold mines of California to that State. For that reason I intend to support the Bill of the Minister of Railways; and whatever agitation is got up, I have an abiding faith in public opinion and the sober secondthought of the people. We have an evidence to-day of its beneficial operation in the present position of political parties. Only a few years ago public opinion overwhelmned the Conparty, the people have had time to reflect on their course and the merits of the Conservatives returned them to power, in the interest of the country. This gigantic undertaking has been before the country for years, and when the people returned the right hon gentleman to power, they desired, not only changes in political administration, but the completion of this great work. The country knows this great undertaking can be safely entrusted to the present Ministers, who do not mean to steal a march upon the people. They have done the best they could, and if every document asked for were placed on the Table, I do not think it could injure the Government or strengthen the Opposition.

Mr. McCUAIG. I would not, perhaps, have spoken on the present occasion, but for some offensive remarks made with regard to the member for Monck, while a member of the Ontario Legislature and supporter of the late John Sandfield Macdonald. I have heard the member for Lambton pay a high compliment to the hon. gentleman and, on the other hand, the member for West Middlesex charged him with having betrayed his leader. I was a member of that Legislature at the time, and think it only proper that an answer to that charge should be made. For this purpose I shall quote from the Votes and Proceedings of the Ontario Legislature of 1872. The question arose on the motion of the member for Durham (Mr. Blake), in amendment to the answer to the Address, and which was as follows:—

"We are gratified in being assured by you that during no period in the history of Her Majesty's North American possessions can there be found recorded of any one of them a condition of prosperity which can at all approach that now almost everywhere exhibited in this Province; and we receive with pleasure the congratulations of Your Excellency on so favorable an aspect of our country's stride in the path of material advancement. But we feel bound to take the earliest opportunity of informing Your Excellency that we regret the course taken by the Legislative Assembly last session, under the guidance of your present Ministers, in reference to the large powers given to the Executive as to the disposal of the Railway id fund; and to state that, in our opinion, the proposal of the Government to grant aid to any railway, should be submitted to the approval or rejection of the Legislative Assembly, so as not to leave so large a sum as $1,5 0,000 at the disposal of the Executive, without a vote of this House appropriating the same to particular works. And we inform Your Excellency that we have no confidence in a Ministry which is attempting to carry out, in reference to the control of the said Fund of $1.5 0,000, usurpation fraught with danger to public liberty and constitutional government."

There can be but one opinion at this day, of the duty that devolved upon the late John Sandfield Macdonald. He should have resigned office when that resolution was carried; but he thought proper to embrace it in the Address presented to the Lieutenant-Governor at the time, and my hon. friend, the present member for Monck, so far from being censured by the member for West Middlesex for his action, should be commended for his chivalrous feeling in following his leader, and fell valiantly by his side. He did what very few men would have done under similar circumstances. In addition the member for West Middlesex thought proper to refer to a vote given by me during that debate. I opposed the railway grant from the heginning to the end, and moved, on the 23rd of February, seconded by Mr. Giffard:

"That all the words after 'that' be struck out, and the following words substituted therefor: 'until the excess of the debt of Ontario and Qu bec over the *62,500,000, of their joint debt assumed by the Dominion, viz. $10,500,000, has been apportioned between the said Provinces, and the debt of Ontario thus definitely ascertained it is inexpedient for this House to entertain any proposition towards granting $100,000 to the Railway Aid Fund in addition to the $1,500,000 already appropriated by the Railway Aid Act of last Session, or to pledge the credit of the Province to the extent of $140,000 a year, for twenty years, as proposed."

Among other charges preferred against the late John Sandfield Macdonald was this: at the time that his Government appropriated $1,500,000 of the funds of Ontario, for the purpose of opening up railways to the free grant lands
—a very commendable act—his opponents charged him with extravagance, arguing the Province was unable to give that amount. When I found that the leader of the then Government, Mr. Blake, proposed to give $400,000

Mr. Brecken,

additional, making $1,900,000 and $2,000,000 more, viz., $100,000 a year for 20 years, for railway aid, I moved that resolution in condemnation of that policy. That does not justify my hon. friend opposite in saying that I supported the resolution granting the further sum of $400,000 and $100,000 per annum for the following 20 years. Mr. Rykert again moved in amendment, as follows:—

"That all the words after 'that' be struck out, and the following words substituted therefor: 'while this House will cheerfully consent to such further aid in favor of the Railway Fund as may be necessary to keep faith with all bona file enterprises undertaken and carried on in anticipation of receiving aid from such Fund, provided it be shown to this House that upon a careful investigation of the merits of several applicants for aid, it is found insufficient for that purpose, it feels bound to express its dissatisfaction that the public credit of this Prevince should be pledged for the further amount of $2,000,000 for railways, while no appropriation is made for the older counties which have already pledged their credit in the construction of railways, and expended large amounts in the gravel roads and other public improvements."

My name is recorded in favor of that resolution in amendment to the proposal to grant that large amount. As regards my motion, I felt that so long as the question of the debt of Ontario and Quebec, involving the $10,500,000, remained unsettled, as it had since Confederation, we should not adopt the policy of the Government. At Confederation the joint debt was fixed at $62,500,000, which proved at the final adjustment to be $10,500,000 in excess, and of which sum Ontario was to pay nine-sixteenths, and was properly considered in my opinion a debt owing by the Province of Ontario; and then that the assumption of a surplus of four or five millions was an erroneous one, and I believe so to this day. I was aware that Ontario had no sources of revenue except the sale of her timber limits' and the eighty cents per head of our population, which we drew from the Dominion, and that by imposing this obligation upon ourselves and upon our children the Government were doing something which justified me and other members in supporting the amendment. The amendment of Mr. Rykert was, however, lost and the appropriation was carried. The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), has charged me with inconsistency because on the 29th of February I voted for an appropriation to a particular railway. I felt that once the scheme was carried I was perfeetly justified in voting aid to two railway enterprises which I believed to be deserving ones. After these votes I did not support any of the subsequent grants, for the simple reason that I did not know the circumstances of the companies which were applying for money, or the nature of their enterprises, and I felt that if I voted at all I would be voting blindly. I think my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, as well as the member for Lambton, will agree with me, that owing to those resolutions having been brought down and voted upon so quickly, there was ground for the suspicion-I do not say it was done unfairly or for an improper purpose -that there was not sufficient time allowed for a careful examination of the proposed appropriations.

Mr. GILLMOR. I was under the impression that the question before the House was whether we should go on with the motions which are upon the paper, or continue the discussion on the contract before the House in order that the gentlemen of the Syndicate might be able to get out their sleepers and other material. But, instead of discussing the amendment before the House hon, gentlemen have been speaking upon almost everything that could possibly occur to their imaginations, including the reading of the journals of the Ontario Assembly of several years ago; and among other things the contract with Sir Hugh Allan and the Pacific Scandal have been introduced. He is a very bold man who at this time of the day will court a discussion upon that subject. I trust that the Opposition will not introduce that question, it is a story of the past, and its discussion cannot redound very much to the credit of the gentlemen who figured in that transaction. I do not think it speaks very highly for the political morality of any hon, gentleman that he would attempt to endorse that transaction at this day. The people have never condoned that transaction. It was one that astonished the world at the time-not only the Dominion of Canada, but the press and the statesmen of both Great Britain and the United States. I think that, in some respects, the contract with Sir Hugh Allan was very much better than the one before the House, but at its inception there was proof positive that the Government and the contractors had combined to corrupt the constituencies; that was proved to the satisfaction of the people of this country, and, therefore, I say that, if the Opposition feel disposed to let the matter rest, the supporters of the Government should not venture to introduce it into the House. With regard to the present it into the House. With regard to the present contract, I say that it is in almost every respect entirely novel; nobody knew anything about it before it was brought down. Hon. gentlemen opposite pretend to say that the people knew all about it; that no capitalists undertook to tender for the road in past years—that, like Rip Van Winkle, they took a sleep for twenty years. But just as soon as the terms of the contract were known, and its enormous concessions published to the world, they come forward by scores and by hundreds from all over the Dominion. And now we are asked not to delay in order that the Syndicate may get out some sleepers. The hon, member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) says the longer this question is discussed the more the people will favor this contract—they only wanted time and there would be an unanimous consent to the bargain. It appears to me if the people regard this scheme so favorably it should be delayed till the close of the Session. This enterprise has been justly described as the most important that has ever been introduced into this Parliament. If it is so important as that the tax payers of the Dominion who will have to support the costs should have ample time to consider it and instruct their representatives in regard to it. I contend that no time has been given for the people to understand this matter which will involve so much of their money. This contract ought to receive the sanction, not only of the majority of the representatives here but of a distinct majority of the electors of this Dominion. If the hon, gentlemen feel that this is a good contract, and that the people are in favor of it, why not give them more time to consider it. I have not the remotest idea that the hon. gentlemen opposite really believed that the people are in tavor of this contract. It they do think so why did they not make the contract known sooner? It is more generally known, but it takes a long time to make such a large question well known to the electors of this Dominion, and it takes a long time for the people to make known their views to their representatives. Instead of calling Parliament for the 9th December the conditions of the contract should have been made publicly known, and the meeting of Parliament postponed as long as possible, so that the people might have made up their mind on this question. It has been said that the country has pronounced in favor of the Pacific Railway. I deny that. This question has never yet, as a distinct proposition, been submitted to the people at the polls. It is true that Parliament many years ago committed themselves to this undertaking, but the people have never pronounced upon it at the polls. It the absurd compact entered into with British Columbia had been submitted to the people they would surely have pronounced against it. The majority of the electors never would have consented to burden this Dominion with such an enormous undertaking. Every man shrinks from it, every man shirks the responsibility and tries to throw it off on somebody else. My hon, friends opposite talk of the the Mounted Police, the rebellion in the North-West, and they want all the glory for themselves. I do not see what something for the North-West. But now I say we ought to give glory will result to them for having heaped up such an enormous debt in order to carry out an undertaking that is not necessary. They talk of patriotism! Is it necessary to prove our patriotism by undertaking works of such an extravagant character? It may be desirable to have that railway when we are able to build it, but it is folly to mortgage our country and run the risk of losing it in order to have something grand and glorious. In my humble opinion, it was a mistake from the beginning, but it was a mistake fastened on the gentlemen on this side of the House, contrary to their votes and arguments, and contrary to their protestations. There was no remedy left for them, and they have tried to make the best of a bad bargain. If it were possible, I would like to have seen the whole thing repudiated—not that I want to break an obligation, or do anything unjust to any part of this Dominion, but it was an obligation assumed by the Government without authority from the people. Hon. gentlemen talk about millions. The hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) talks in the same way. What is $10,000,000! Only $400,000 a year. What is that? It is a mighty large sum. But we have talked about millions and hundreds of millions; we have run up our debt to hundreds of millions, and we are losing all idea of the extent of these vast sums. Is there any limit to our ability? Is it necessary, in order to be patriotic, loyal and great, to burden ourselves, for all future time, with debt? Patriotism! Whenever hon. gentlemen want to cover up an extravagant bargain and get the people to sanction it, then they resort to the cry of patriotism. If you undertake to build a railway, and go anywhere near the American frontier, then you are not patriotic, then you want to be annexed. The idea has been to go on, build railroads as long and as expensive as possible without any regard to their commercial value. I do not want to carry out this absurd idea. It is not loyalty and patriotism. It is flunkyism, is is toadyism, it is Imperial toadyism, and we are getting it into the Dominion just as fast as we can. I have great respect for British institutions, but I do not think, whether the railroad is built or not, it affects our loyalty and our patriotism. I do not like my country any better, when $200,000,000 in debt, than when it is out of debt. I do not like British institutions any better, when we have a railroad running through our country, or when we have not. This sentimentality, this toadyism, is just what has brought us to the position in which we are. It is my opinion that this great undertaking is a great mistake. I think a great injustice has been done the country in not giving them an opportunity to consider this matter. The Conservative press have shown, if they were not ashamed of the contract, a great reluctance to make it known to the country. In my county there are two papers, both supporting the Government. They have published the hon, the Minister of Railways' great speech, but they have not yet published the contract. All the contracts the people there had were the few that I sent down to them. Why did the Government keep back the contract so long, and now try to rush it through the House? The object is very transparent. They are afraid the people are opposed to it. I am opposed to it, not because I would not like to get rid of this undertaking and get it out of the arena of politics if possible, but we cannot do that under the terms and conditions of this contract. This contract is important to the North-West upon which we have spent so much money. We have invested a great deal of money in the North-West. Taking into account the railways we are now constructing, the amount that this contract compels us to pay, the purchase of the North-West, glory of this achievement, but at the same time they try to all these difficulties, the amount will reach 70 or 80 millions of fix the responsibility for it upon gentlemen on this side of dollars. The people of this country have been taxed and their the House. They want us to take all the responsibility but money has been employed in opening up and trying to do the people time to consider this contract, which, if adopted, will affect the North-West in all the future. I believe that this contract is calculated to retard the progress of the North-West materially, to prevent the North-West from making in future years adequate return to the older Provinces which have so generously contributed their money in order to open up that country. Therefore, I think, we ought to have time to consider the question in reference to the best interests of the North-West. Without wishing to censure too severely the gentlemen on the Government side, I must say that they are only like myself, the representatives of the people, that they have not the power of autocrats, that they are here to express the wishes of the people, and that they should give the people time to look into this matter in order that they may form a mature, fair, candid opinion upon it, and that we may have the benefit of that opinion in discussing and disposing of this great measure. I am a little amused at the compliments which my hon. friends opposite are so ready to heap upon the hon. member for Lambton. During the five years in which he led the Government I did not hear a compliment passed across the House to him, though I presume he had then about as many virtues and as much ability as he has since. I suppose he has grown wiser as he has grown older, but I never knew hon. gentlemen to be so generous with their compliments and so magnanimous in their appreciation as they are since he happens not now to be the leader of the Opposition. No hon. gentleman in this House has a higher opinion of the hon. member for Lambton than I, but I would not insult him with compliments so big that they would choke an ordinary man. I believe that what they say is true. I believe that the hon member for Lambton is what they say he is now. I do not believe that they ever had a bad opinion of him. But with regard to the hon leader of the Opposition, they depreciate him in one breath and exalt him in the next. They have their schemes formed and mature, and they tell us that they are going to succeed in England. They start for England as soon as the House adjournes, and on arriving there they find that an extract from Mr. Blake's speech has got there before them, and that it has more influence than their Acts of Parliament, than their whole delegation, than the High Commissioner, and they come back and employ the time of the country in telling the people that Mr. Blake's speech, by hook or by crook got to England before them, and their mission is a failure. The hon. member for Queen's, (Prince Edward Island), says that the hon. Minister of Railways went to England, that his great speech of last year had got there, that he had a great scheme and was sure to succeed, that he met a gentleman there who was delighted with his speech. and thought his scheme was one that would result in great success; but that shortly after, an extract from Mr. Blake's speech got there, and the man who was so satisfied that my hon friend's arrangement would be successful, changed his mind as soon as he read that speech, and my hon. friend never saw him again, and the scheme resulted in a failure. Well, my hon friend's speeches are so important that they had better get him to make a speech on that side, and stay at home themselves. I think this is a humiliating confession. It is a confession he would not make if it were true. But in all seriousness, I think the Government might, at least give the country as much time as they possibly can afford for the consideration of this important question. I do not think the interests of the Syndicate are equal to the interests of this whole Dominion, and the people who have to find the money and the land ought to have an opportunity to thoroughly understand this matter. Besides, the people now know what the Government were willing to do, which they did not know before, therefore I think the subject ought to be commenced de novo, so that we might see whether the capitalists of this country would not make a better offer. For Mr. GILMOR.

these reasons, it is my opinion that the best interests of this country will be served by delaying this matter.

Mr. ROSS (Dundas). I do not rise for the purpose of prolonging this already long debate, but having in a former parliament taken an active part in this great question, I feel called upon to justify my course and give the reasons for the vote I feel it my duty to record on this occasion. When the Pacific Railway question was brought before this House in 1871, it was proposed to construct it as a Government work. I then considered it so far beyond the financial ability of a young country like this, that I thought it would be acting against the best wishes of those who sent me here to give a vote in favor of that plan. I was then opposed to the work, and now I am strongly in favor of it; and as I desire, while a public man, to be consistent, there must be some reason for this change. I then said to my hon. friends whom I was supporting, that if they would adopt the American system of constructing and running this railway by a private company, they would get my support; and other gentlemen expressed the same view. I also voted against the resolution to bring British Columbia into the Union, and in this my hon. friend from Monck (Mr. McCallum) joined me. A resolution was afterwards introduced by the Government, and accepted by the House, that this work should be performed by a private company, and not by the Dominion Government. But that was not sufficient for the Opposition. The leader of the Quebec Liberal party moved to add the words, "and not otherwise." Though that motion was not carried it bound that party to that policy. We all know that a company (Sir Hugh Allan's) was chartered for the purpose of constructing the railway upon the plan agreed upon by Parliament; but it collapsed. When my hon friend from Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) was called upon, in 1873, to assume the responsibility of carrying on the Government of this country, with the confidence I had in him as a practical man, a man of strong common sense and great ability, I believed he would strictly carry out what he promised when in Opposition. But I was disappointed. After committing himself to carry out this work by a private company and not otherwise, he declared, in a speech delivered by him after he became leader of the Government, that he believed that was all wrong, and that the Government of the country was the proper body to carry on the work, as he would thereby save to the country the profit that would otherwise go into the pockets of contractors. I believe the hon. gentleman made a great mistake by so acting. In this case we had another illustration of punishment always following error. The member for West Durham should guard against political mistakes. He may be called upon to take a different position in 1883. The new Syndicate, foreshadowed, may be more a Syndicate for 1883 than 1881. If the Opposition want power, and also to retain it, they must adhere to the principles they enunciate out of office. We all know the result of the working of this scheme by the Government. I have felt it my duty to say since my election to this House that it would be better, rather than carry out this scheme as a Government work, to let British Columbia go, and remain out of the Union till we were able, financially, probably with English aid, in order to the building up of a great power, to proceed with it—that till then we should stop all extravagant expenditure in the North-West, and avoid heavy claims for interest or principle. I, therefore, thought it honest to say I could not and would not support such a policy. That policy is changed, and I am glad of it. I approve of the plan, because it is more in accordance with the principles first advocated, namely, construction by a private company, with reasonable land grants and money subsidies. I said that I would heartily support such a scheme and company which we now have got. I believe it is our duty as Canadians to complete this great work—the scheme of Confederation—by securing a road wholly through Canadian territory. I am sorry to see we are not more unanimous in the House on the subject. In a sense the bargain may be considered rather extravagant. But has it not been stated in and out of the House that we want that country settled, which we can only have by securing a great inlet and outlet? Is the land very valuable? If so, I am glad we have reached a more hopeful mood and prospect in this connection. We have discovered our ability to construct this road without increasing the burdens of the people, as contemplated by the first scheme. One of the strongest points in favor of the bargain is, that some of the members of the Syndicate are owners of the railway in the United States, lying adjacent to our North-West. Instead of apprehending injury from this state of things, I think it will amount, in a business and commercial sense, to the annexation of so much of the United States to our country. Every interest points to it. It is most important we should have the road, no matter what the cost. If necessary at some time to have another outlet from the North-West, for commercial purposes, commercial considerations will furnish it. We have, however, first to complete what we undertook, honestly and honorably, and let the results follow. I believe the Premier, the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Agriculture have, in this matter, done their duty to the country faithfully, and in a way they considered in the public interest. Whether the bargain looks extravagant or not matters little so long as we have the ability to construct the work without increasing the taxation. The Government are entitled to thanks for their action, and I have assurances from both parties in my constituency that their action is approved of. I, therefore, feel it both a pleasure and duty to support this scheme. I must, however, add my opinion that the omission of the word "forever" from the 16th clause would be an improvement. This would remove much dissatisfaction with the scheme on account of that word. I think the Syndicate ought to voluntarily expunge that word. If the country be as good as I believe it will prove to be, and this railway proves a great success, they ought not to ask a standing or position different from their fellow-citizens, but should consent that taxation for the support of the country should rest equally on every man's shoulders, no matter what his position. I am strongly of the opinion that there should be no exemption from taxation in a country like ours. I think that one man should bear equally with another the burdens of our country, and I think the contract is objectionable in the exemptions which it provides. I do not say I cannot support it, but I only ask what is just and fair, and I think both the contracting parties for the sake of Canada should see that that word is obliterated from the contract.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the First Minister will have seen by this time how factious and obstructive his motion is, and will consent to withdraw it, so that we may proceed with the business of the House, but if he does not consent it will be absolutely necessary to offer another reason or two why his motion should not pass. There are several points upon which I think it is desirable that certain members should be allowed time for consideration. Last night one speaker on this side of the House raised the objection that there really was no resolution or Act of Parliament of this House directing the Ministry to enter into the contract. That, on the contrary, we are flying in the face of an Act of Parliament. The hon. Minister of Railways, in the absence of the First Minister, was asked by what authority he made the bargain. I think that is a question of vital moment at the present time. We want to know whether the document on the Table we are now considering has come before us in a right and legitimate manner. When the Minister of Railways was asked under what Act he consummated the contract, he said under the Act of 1872; but he was told sit.

that that Act was repealed. He then mentioned one or two other Acts, and when he was told that they were in direct conflict with this contract he was unable to say anything more. I think hon members will agree with me that it is an absolute necessity that time enough should be given the Minister of Railways to hunt up the Statute or resolution under which he entered into this contract. The First Minister says that the reason why he asks us to go on with this business, to the exclusion of other business, is that this Company may be in a position to get out their ties. The hon, gentleman has forgotten a remark he made in one of his speeches, but I have not forgotten, because I read the hon. gentleman's speeches, because I like what he says, though I do not always believe it to be true. He told us that he made a bargain in the interest of the country, and that the Syndicate was so persuaded that it was in the interest of the country and not in their own, that they were willing to enter upon the work at once, expend money by the million, and trust to Parliament to ratify the contract. There really is no reason why we should definitely consent to the contract in order to enable the Syndicate to take out a few ties. I could understand why there should be a necessity to go on if, peradventure by our delay, we were endangering the interests of the country. But I have only to remind the First Minister and those of his supporters who may have some misgivings on this point, that we are running no risks whatever; that if the Syndicate should get angry with us and throw up the whole bargain, the country will not be irretrievably ruined, because I have the authority of the First Minister, and the Minister of Railways, speaking only nine months ago in this Chamber, that we could ourselves build and own the road, and have $20,000,000 in pocket beside. The First Minister told us nine months ago that, in ten years, he would have $69,000,000 in the Public Treasury, out of the sale of the lands. The hon, the Minister of Railways said that it would only cost $18,000,000 to build those portions of the railway which the Syndicate is to build, so that we could do all their work and have $20,000,000 cash besides. And, I think the Syndicate have convinced the hon, gentleman, judging by a remark he made, that they were willing to go on and construct the work. What would they lose if they were to throw up the contract? Perhaps it would not be much. Perhaps they are willing to throw it up, because, if we take the estimate of the land, as given by the hon. the First Minister nine months ago, they are only to get $100,000,000 to do the work which would cost $42,000,000. Now, if these gentlemen have only a trifling profit of $52,000,000, really we can quite understand why they should be careless whether or not they should proceed with the work. The matter looks ridiculous. I think the hon, the First Minister should not have proceeded in the way he has proceeded, because he made the initial mistake of keeping back from the Canadian people that he was prepared to receive offers from capitalists for the construction of portions of the railway. I think he will see it to be his duty, instead of still more closely shutting the door, to allow a remedy for the evil he has done. I am not in a position to say if other offers would come in or not. I am simply in the position of the First Minister or any other hon. member who reads the newspapers, and we know that since it was made public that the Government was willing to enter into contracts for the construction of portions of this road capitalists were only too ready to snatch at the opportunity. We know, if public prints are to be believed, that some of the best monied men in this country are ready at a moment's notice to step in with an offer to construct this road with a saving of tens of millions of money to the people of this country, wiping out the exemption and the monopoly clauses.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Have they made a money dopo-

Mr. PATERSON. So we are told. I am reciting what the newspapers tell us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon, the First Minister utters an ironical "hear, hear." They might not be able to do it; but still, there are reports in newspapers that fifteen or twenty excellent names, as far as financial ability is concerned, are upon paper, waiting to build the road, and it certainly behoves the Government not to press this matter forward. It behaves them as custodians of the interests of the Canadian people, as guardians of the country's weal, and of the country's rights to give every opportunity to Canadian capitalists, and other capitalists for that matter, to tender for this work. They cannot constitutionally, they cannot legally, proceed in any other direction. There is an Act in force on the Statute-book that enables the Government to invite tenders for the construction of this work, and it is their duty, and that is the course that should have been pursued, and if they had done so they would have found all the capital required and the work would have gone on.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Would it be legal for the Government to accept the tender of the new Syndicate?

Mr. PATERSON. I suppose it would be quite as legal to accept one as the other. I suppose it would have been perfectly legal to have accepted the tender of the new Syndicate if the Government had done what it was their plain duty to have done, viz.: invited tenders, and the tender of the new Syndicate would have come in as a consequence. But we are at this point—and that is the point we should insist upon —we want authority to enter into that contract. If there is no authority, then Parliament has a perfect right—more than that it is the duty of Parliament—to cast it aside, and we can then proceed in a legal manner to ask for tenders, if we want the work to be constructed in that way. It has been thrown at us that, simply because we object to the motion introduced to-day by the hon. the First Minister, a charge of factiousness will lay against us. I think in a rather heated moment the hon, gentleman made that statement. He would not now insist upon it-he cannot do it. The motion so introduced has been used by many of his followers and supporters to give their views on this question. If we were disposed to be factious in regard to this matter, the Committee need not have risen last night, nor for three months. We are but a miserable body in numbers, miserable in intellect from the point of view of some hon. gentlemen; but, few as we are in numbers, shrivelled as, in their estimation, we are in intellect, the First Minister is cognizant of this fact, that the House, being once in Committee on the resolutions, which gave every hon. member the right to speak on them as often as he pleased. we, though few in numbers, and miserable and shrivelled in intellect though we might be, might have kept the House in Committee for three months. If it had been necessary, we might have kept the House in Committee until the parliamentary life of hon, gentlemen opposite terminated, and they had to go before the people, whose opinion they foared. There is no desire to do that. The hon. First Minister did not contemplate doing any arbitrary act at an early hour this morning. He gave notice of a motion for Monday, that the discussion on the railway question shall proceed, day by day, and a charge of factiousness did not lie against the Opposition. When the arrangement was made with the hon. Minister of Railways, with respect to the resolutions passing through Committee on a certain night, it was done by conference with the leader of the Opposition who, I believe, left his place, in order to expedite business, crossed the House and consulted with the Minister of Railways. It would have only been proper that the same act of courtesy should have been returned by the First Minister when he proposed to make the change and ask the House at once to proceed with present, and that consequently the expression was not worth Mr. KIRKPATRICK.

the railway resolutions. But the hon, gentleman sprung it on the House, and when the member for West Durham, speaking on behalf of private members, who had important business on the paper, endeavored to maintain their rights to have this one day, he was met with the charge of the First Minister, that we shall have to stand the consequences and that some action will be necessary, because we are following the course of the Obstructionists in the Imperial Parliament. No one can believe that. But what we say is this: having got so far in the consideration of this subject, the Opposition giving all the aid they could possibly do, the Government should not press their measure any faster, especially in the light of the revelations made in the public press that if time were given, a short time at that, any number of capitalists would agree to do what the present contractors have agreed to do, and to carry out the work for much less money and a much less land grant, and also without the objectionable clauses in the present contract. We have been told there is no sentiment and feeling in the country against the proposed Syndicate agreement. We have been pointed to meetings held; we have been told that if the leader of the Opposition had met the Minister of Railways on the public platform, the hon, member for West Durham would have been utterly routed and discomfited. It is a difficult matter for some of us to believe that, when we see the leader of the Opposition battling with the Minister of Railways and other Ministers, supported by a vast majority of the members of this House ready to do his bidding and record his wishes, and when we see the hon. member for West Durham not afraid to maintain his views and express opinions adverse to those held by the Minister of Railways-I venture to say if the hon. gentleman with a small following is not afraid to fight the Ministerial body, led by able leaders, none will believe the charge preferred against him, that he is afraid to meet on a public platform any of the hon. gentlemen whom he meets here. I grant that when the hon. member for East York (Mr. Boultbee) says that in the Toronto meeting the leader of the Opposition dared not meet him, there may be some truth in it. But that is not a fair comparison. We can well understand that the leader of the Opposition would shrink from meeting a gentleman of the legal knowledge and the tremendous power of argument possessed by the hon. member for East York; but it does not follow that the leader of the Opposition would not dare to meet the Minister of Railways in fair and open discussion. The Minister of Railways certainly cannot say then any one has been afraid to meet him. We have had meetings in all parts of the country, attended by both Conservatives and Reformers, and what has been the testimony? The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), speaking through the columns of his paper with reference to the Montreal meeting, that has been described as a packed meeting, says that one-half of the meeting, if not more, were Conservatives. Where then was the packing? If there was admission by tickets, it must have been for some reason than to pack it, and yet resolutions carried there. Then we are told by the told by the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Ryan) that the resolutions passed by the Montreal Corn Exchange is entirely devoid of significance. Well, we are hardly able to understand that We have been accustomed in my part of the country to regard the Montreal Corn Exchange as an influential body of men, a body as well versed in mercantile matters, and in political and in national affairs, as it would be possible to select anywhere in this Dominion. We considered that a resolution adopted by these gentlemen should have some weight. But the member for Montreal Centre tells us it was a very small meeting. The resolution, he says, was only carried by a majority of 42 to 27, out of 400 members belonging to that body. The hon gentleman dwelt upon the fact that there were only 15 of a majority out of 67 much. Well, Sir, if the hon. gentleman will enter into a slight calculation he will find that if you can get a majority of 15 out of 67, if the whole 400 had been there in the same proportion the majority would have been 87. If this meeting had been called to discuss the Pacific Railway Syndicate, if the chairman had been in league with the Opposition, then something might have been said. But what was the reason of the gathering of the Corn Exchange. You can read an account of it in the Montreal papers. It was the annual meeting of the Corn Exchange, the meeting that will always bring together the largest number of men; and after they had discussed all other matters pertaining to their interests, they entered upon the consideration of this Syndicate contract. And one of those gentlemen said that he was so much alarmed at the monopoly clause that he could not feel justified if he did not present a resolution condemning that clause, and calling upon the Ministry to have it taken out of the contract. He further stated that the price of wheat to-day in the North-West is worth 15 cents a bushel less than it is in the neighboring State of Dakota; and why? Because our wheat can only get out over the line controlled by the men who compose the Syndicate, and to whom the Government desire to hand over our Canadian North-West. He said that that was a serious state of affairs that no commercial man, that no patriot who cared for his country, could sit still and see it continued. Therefore it was that he moved this resolution:

"That in the opinion of this Association the contract between the Government of Canada and the Pacific Railway Syndicate should not be ratified unless amended in several important particulars, especially in that which gives the right of constructing railroads and the monopoly of the carrying trade of the North-West for 20 years."

Hon. gentlemen tell us that the country is not aroused; that petitions have not come in here to the extent they should have come; that public opinion has not been found responding to the cry of alarm with which that contract has been greeted. Who is it that scorns public opinion? Why should we be condemned because we called meetings in our own counties to ascertain the sentiments of the people? Where are the Conservative members who called their constituents together, in order to ascertain their opinion? Is it anything to the discredit of Reformers that they have taken the opinion of their constituents on this question, or to the credit of Conservatives, that they have not ascertained the opinion of their constituents? I was under the impression that the hon. member for North Renfrew was an exception, and that he was entitled to great credit for boldness, in that he discharged his duty of calling his constituents together in order to ascertain their views. But I was rather surprised and sorry to hear, on his own account, that to him was not due the credit of that meeting, and that his political opponent had called it, and that he only attended it because he was forced to do so in selfdefence. If the public opinion of this country is in tavor of this contract, why was not every Conservative member found seeking to elicit that opinion? Not one petition has been laid on the Table of this House praying the Government to construct this work in the manner in which they propose to do it, but there have been dozens of petitions with thousands of names, that might have been swelled to hundreds of thousands, against the proposed Syndicate contract. I sit beside an astute man, a wise man, who, when he speaks knows whereof he speaks-I refer to the hon, member for the County of Ottawa (Mr. Wright)-what was his plaintive moan in the House last night? That if this contract goes through the Conservative party is doomed, political death is theirs. But they are willing to sacrifice themselves for the sake of the loyalty they bear to their chief. If that hon, gentleman spoke the truth, are we not doing a kindness to gentlemen opposite throat, as it were, and force us to rush through the discussion as rapidly as possible. Well, that system cannot that is coming upon them if they pass this contract? Shall prevail. It may be imposed upon us, but we have the right we be charged with factiousness because we are endeavoring to do that? It does not lie in the mouth of hon, gentlemen opposite to make that charge. All we ask is that there shall be ample time given to Canadian capitalists to tender for the construction of this work. We ought not to appeal in vain to the men who made "Canada for the Canadians" their battle cry in 18.8, when we ask them to cast saide their American-Gorman Syndicate and give to Canadian capitalists an opportunity of constructing this great national highway so that it may be run and maintained in the interests of Canada. The Government however, cast aside the offer of capitalists and are now endeavoring to choke off any possibility of an offer on the part of these members, and forcing us to pass the contract entered into with certain gentlemen whose interest lie in the United States almost exclusively, and who, we have the greatest reason to fear, are seeking as one of the advantages to be derived from getting this contract the means of further enriching their American lines. If the First Minister said what was true that this Syndicate were ready to go on and build this work and take the risk of Parliament ratifying it, why the necessity then of going any faster than required to give ample time to the people of the country to understand this contract? If the worst comes to the worst and you say that if the contract is not ratified at once it cannot be completed. No member need hesitate on that point if what the First Minister said nine months ago was true; and who will say it was not true. If what the hon. Minister of Railways said nine months ago was true, we can, should this contract fall through, go on and construct the road as a Government work, as I have said before, without costing us one cent, but put $20,000,000 into the Treasury, and leave us a railway which will not only be run without loss, but pay interest on the cost of construction. There is no reason for this haste. When we look to the circumstances, when we see that everything is to be gained, and nothing possible to be lost by delay, we must conclude, if the Government force a vote on these resolutions, that they have a sinister purpose in view, and that this work in its nature will not bear light. I would say that this motion is extremly factious, that the Government are retarding the legitimate business of the House, that they are injuring public interest, by precluding the possibility of offers being made, which will save this Company millions of dollars in capital and interest, and I would ask them to withdraw this resolution. I would ask the members of this House to speak out frankly, and claim delay of another day or two, and I have reason to believe every member who takes that course will find his justification and reward in the saving of millions of dollars to this country.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I cannot allow the question now before the House to pass without saying a few words. When the iniquity that is in this contract is discovered, I say that is time enough to judge of it, and I say that it is an illegal act added to the illegal acts committed since the Pacific Railway has been a part of the policy of the present Government. This Pacific Railway has been since the beginning, and will be to the end, an apple of discord. We did not wish, on this side of the House, to recriminate in the least. So far, we have abstained from alluding to what the hon. Minister of Railways called penal subjection. For my part, I do not want to submit to what I consider an abuse of the power and the pressure that the Government is trying to bring to bear upon the Opposition. I hold that we have the right to discuss this question at length. We have discussed it in the most parliamentary manner possible on this side of the Honse; we cannot be accused of having made a single speech to gain time, and now gentlemen on the other side seek to take us by the to oppose it, and, for my part, I will oppose it with all my might to the end. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) has raised a question of law; he asked whether it was legal to admit a new contract, when the Government was already bound, and in asking the question he answered it. I am also going to give my opinion upon this matter. I consider that this contract, if it is placed in the hands of the Government, will be quite as good, if it is approved and ratified, as the one now submitted; one is not more legal than the other, but if one is legal the other must be also. The contract now before the House, being in contravention of a Statute, is absolutely null and void, and the legal consequence is that the present contract will not hold good before the ordinary courts of law. Now, Mr. Speaker, since gentlemen opposite seek to completely invert the order of the business of the House, I say that I am interested in maintaining the Order paper as it now is. I have before the House a Bill to better prevent fraud with respect to expenditure of public moneys. This Bill has a direct bearing on the question now discussed, and will materially affect the contract now before the House, and will have considerable influence on the personnel of the Syndicate. When I have the opportunity of bringing this Bill before the House, I shall explain the different clauses affecting the present contract, and that will prevent the renewal of certain subscriptions to a general

Mr. DESJARDINS. Mr. Speaker, I raise a question of order. The subject that the hon, member for L'Islet is now speaking of does not in any way relate to the motion now made by the hon, leader of the Government.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I shall answer the question of order. The subject I am now speaking of is the question under discussion at the present moment, and it is important that this Bill should pass before the debate on the main motion is continued. We have an interest in its coming in the first place, and the reason I have to give is that we must prevent a great number of abuses that are likely to grow out of the present contract. The Syndicate has powers so enormous that it is not the Government we have before us that governs the country, but the Syndicate that rules the Government; and the reason given by the Prime Minister is that the Syndicate want to get out ties for the road. That is convincing proof that the Government do not enjoy that freedom which they should enjoy to pass this contract. A mere wish on the part of the Syndicate compels them to force the Opposition to remain here, and to sit at undue hours, as it were. I cannot submit without warning my country of what I have before my eyes. This state of things appears to me so extraordinary that I am glad to be able to put on record the declaration that the Government is compelled by the Syndicate to push on this measure. Ministers see in the new contract a sword of Damocles hanging over their heads threatening to prevent them from carrying through the contract they want to carry through. Well, why urge us in this way to adopt this contract, conceived in darkness and hidden in profound obscurity till the last minute, this contract with which the public has been gulled until it was put before this House; of which the seconder of the Address was himself ignorant, so much so that he admitted that it was not at all the one the Government had proposed. There is something rotten in Denmark. I maintain that the Government have not the right thus to cast suspicions on themselves, for our sakes as well as for their friends' sakes. Like the wife of the Roman, they should be above suspicion. I maintain that this condect on the part of the Government is unworthy, and the people of this Dominion will necessarily see in this contract some iniquity, because they will not be able to understand why the Government proceeds the subject. This deed of darkness will have its effect; and of what they want to know. Mr. CASGRAIN.

I can say in all sincerity and in all truth that this is the most unmistakable proof of the weakness of the Government's cause. The hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Valleé), with the skill of a lawyer, has arguments cut and dried; his pockets are full of them; now he takes one from his right hand pocket, now one from the left hand, according to his requirements. He stated that at a meeting held at Quebec by the Liberals, resolutions had been passed by people that were entirely ignorant of the contract, whilst his friends on the other side of the House maintain strenuously that the whole country is acquainted with the contract. In presence of such arguments whom are we to believe? Is it the member for Portneuf of yesterday, or the member for Portneuf of to-day. When we see our opponents thus contradict one another, what are we to conclude?

Mr. LANDRY. Nothing at all.

Mr. CASGRAIN. True enough, nothing at all, as my hon. friend on the other side says. Well, I say that the Government gives no reason whatever for urging the passing of this contract; they only give a mere desire on the part of the contractors to secure railway ties, and I say that this reason is absolutely futile, entirely illusory, and there is no sensible man who would pay any attention to it. But there must be some kind of a reason, and this reason, it is painful for me to mention it, but I am obliged to do so, for it is in the people's mind. My intention is not to wound any one, but I say that the example of the past should be a warning for the future. What has happened with respect to this same Pacific Railway may well happen again. I say that the people, in spite of themselves, and with the best possible intentions, cannot but suspect there is something ill-omened, something sinister in the conduct of the Government since the 9th of December, 1880. I say that it is useless for these gentlemen to try to dispel this cloud from the public mind; they will only be able to do so with great difficulty. They will not redeem themselves, as they did in 1878. I do not say that the same things will be repeated, but that they open the door to legitimate suspicion, and that in the interest of the country, in the interest of our public men, in the interest of the independent and honest men of the country, we have the right to protest; we are justified in asking that the Government should be above suspicion. Gentlemen, why do you not follow the motto of one of your colleagues who is no more: Franc et sans dol. I do not mean to say that he always followed it himself; he committed faults like others, and if hon. gentlemen who interrupt me want to compel me to mention them I will do so. Mr. Speaker, there was in this country a man who had shone, in his day, with great splendor, who was a remarkable political personage. The first part of his career was not as fortunate as the middle part, but perhaps more fortunate than the latter part. Nevertheless, to begin his career he found nothing better to do than to take part in what is called a little revolutionary movement.

Mr. VALLÉE. I call the hon, member to order, for he is entirely outside of the point at issue. The hon, member for the county of L'Islet is referring to a revolutionary movement which took place in this country. . This has no connection whatever with the question before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not see how the hon. member for L'Islet can connect the revolution of 1837 with the question now before the House, and I declare the hon. member out

Mr. CASGRAIN. Sir, I bow to your good judgment, and I will state as a justification for what I was going to say, that hon gentlemen provoked me to say things that are probably not agreeable to these gentlemen, nor agreeable for me, in order to prevent me from speaking. But the opportunity will be afforded me perhaps before this thus in darkness and prevents light from being thrown on | House in Committee of the Whole of giving them a sample-

Mr. LANDRY. Mr. Speaker, in rising to reply to the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain), I must remark that for a long time past people were enquiring what had become of the leader of the Liberal party in the Province of Quebec; for a long time past people were wondering what had become of this star.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to be heard on a question of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, member for L'Islet has the right to be heard on a question of order.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I want to explain why I left my seat. I left it merely to get a glass of water; I had asked a little page to bring me one, and as he delayed, I went and got it myself. No one will say that I left my seat when I only went to get some water.

Mr. LANDRY. The hon. gentleman admits that he left his scat to get some water.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have the right to speak from no matter what part of the House. I have even the right to speak from the gallery if I chose.

Mr. SPEAKER. No. If the hon. member will allow me. I will read the rule:

"Any member wishing to speak, must do so from his seat, and address uncovered, the Speaker."

The hon. member, having left his seat, has lost the floor.

Mr. LANDRY. For some time past, people were anxiously enquiring what had become of the hon member for L'Islet; for some time past, people were anxious to discover what had become of that star, I do not say of the first magnitude, but, at any rate, that star that shone so resplendent in the Liberal heavens. The important questions of the country have been discussed, and the hon. member's lips have remained as silent as the grave. In Quebec, Sir, there has been held one of those mass meetings which the Liberal party conjured up in different parts of the country, and what did the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) do there? He came forward, as he does to-day, as the leader of his party, and this assumption on his part was sufficient to empty the hall of three-fourths of those who had come. Upon seeing the disastrous result of his utterances to the public, the speaker changed his tactics. He closed his lips, but grasped his valiant pen, and—oh wonderful production!—he brought forth that precious manifesto which is a glory that is to eclipse all other glories and illuminate even the bed of the River St. Lawrence. He brings forth this manitesto whilst we thought he was resting, whilst we imagined that he was absorbed by his studies and that, similar to an anchorite, he was praying heaven from the depths of his soul to preserve its people. He brought forth in the sweat of labor, and such a sweat!—that child, that simple sheet that was being distributed, it is true, by thousands throughout the country. Here, Sir, is the child of his patriotic pains; I hold it in my hand. What name shall be given to it? It is not yet known who is the good woman who is to carry it to the baptismal font; it is not yet known who is to be the godfather of this, I won't say scientific, but at any rate natural document. Here, Sir, is the child of his pains. See the joy of that fatherhood which to-day shows itself to the House in a document that cannot be enough appreciated. He speaks to the free and independent electors of the county of L'Islet: "You remember," he says, "the Pacific contract with Sir Hugh Allan"-perhaps they do not remember it, but it is a polite fashion of telling them that they ought to remember it-"well, here is a new contract made by the same Ministers." What says the hon. President of the Council to this; what the hon. Minister of Militia, neither of whom were at that time in the Cabinet; but whom the hon. member includes in the same perfidious accusation? "I at once caused Damocles which he is so fond of invoking, and which he

it to be distributed as much as I could in the county, so that the people might become acquainted with it." Let us admire the paternal solicitude of the hon. member for L'Islet, who circulates thousands of specimens of his child in the county of L'Islet! "And," he goes on to say, "I have caused it to be largely circulated, so that the whole population, not only that of the county of L'Islet, but the whole population should become acquainted with it." It is time to say with the French poet:

"Cieux, écoutez sa voix, Terre prête l'oreille. Ne dis plus, O! L'Islet, que ton membre sommeille, Conservateurs fuyez! P. Casgrain se réveille."

I will not, Sir, take up overything which the hon. member for L'Islet has just said in his speech. He made a pitifully weak speech yesterday, but to-day he seems to have mustered some strength. Whence, must I ask, has he derived this seeming new vigor to-night? Has he returned from a dinner party? Has he met some illustrious person? Whence did he get his stimulus? Has he met on his road the child to which he has just givon birth? Has he derived from his paternal caresses a strength which he had not yesterday? To use his own expression, "there is something more behind." Well, Sir, I cannot help expressing my unbounded admiration for the poignant grief which he brings even into this House. His first words are these: "These men take me by the threat, to stab me in the back." What a picture, Sir, is that of a man who takes his adversary by the throat to stab him in the back! With so lively an imagination, with talents so well known and made such good use of, I must, in all sincerity, admit that the Liberal party did well to call the hon. member for L'Islet to the rescue. When a battle commences, the vanguard commences fire; but there comes a time when the general calls up fresh troops, and these troops break through the enemy's ranks; thus, Sir, did we call the hon. member for L'Islet to the rescue; he came and brandished his dagger, shouldered his musket, he did more, he found adversaries who took him by the throat, whilst at the same time they stabbed him in the back. Another discovery made by the hon. member for L'Islet, is, he pretends that he has on the Orders of the Day a motion, the gentlest, the prettiest, the most paternal of motions, and that had the hon. Premier not brought in a fallacious amendment, he, the member for L'Islet could have exhibited the noble Bill which he also brought forth perhaps previous to the time when he took the opportunity of sending forth his manifesto to his electors. But, Sir, he forgot one thing, and he would not have made such a mistake if he had looked over the various paragraphs entered on the Orders of the Day; he forgot that he was related to his Bill five degrees removed, because his Bill is No. 5 on the Orders of the Day; and even had not the hon. leader of the Government presented his amendment, the hon. member for L'Islet would not have had the chance of bringing forward first the Bill about which he talks so much to-day. And what has he to say about his proposed Bill? He says that he framed it with the sole object of protecting the people against men who extorted considerable sums of money in 1873. He says that he framed it to secure the people against certain subscriptions that were made towards election funds. Sir, the hon, member should be the last to complain of subscriptions made towards election funds. He knows himself that in 1872, when he abandoned a lucrative situation in Quebec and solicited the votes of the electors of L'Islet, he only did so and could only do so because he depended on a certain election fund. I have seen the hon member come on a certain day to oppose me in the county of Montmagny, and the only trace he left of his visit to my county was a promise of corruption, that of offering $30 to an elector to secure his adherence to the Liberal party. And to-day, the hon. member holds over our heads that famous sword of likes to keep suspended over the heads of the Ministry. Last night the hon. member revelled in another figure of speech; it was no longer the sword that was suspended over our heads, but he asked for the lantern of Diogenes to look into our consciences and find there, what ?-those convictions which science lacks. The member for L'Islet adds that the present contract has been conceived in the dark, that it is not desirable to show it in broad daylight. If the hon. member would only remove. I will not say the bandage from his eyes, but the spectacles which he generally puts on, when he wishes to examine something closely, he would see that the contract was not conceived in the dark. But, Sir, had even this contract been conceived in the dark, there would be nothing extraordinary in this conception, and the hon, member for L'Islet should be the first to find that this was the most natural of conceptions, if he considers that he and his party have scattered broadcast the densest darkness; it is probable for that, instead of treating the question seriously, instead of looking at it in its true aspect and of saying why he wishes to register his vote against the measure, he has incidentally attacked the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Vallée), saying with regard to him-I do not remember his expressions exactly, but the subject was about "the arguments he kept in his pocket," and these expressions remind me of the proverb: "the barrel always smells of its contents." After having heard all the speeches of the hon. member for L'Islet, and especially that one of last night and that of to-day, we are still in the dark as to why the hon. gentleman really intends voting against the contract. Really, Sir, I agree with him on that point; I cannot find any, and he has no doubt been unable to give us one, as none existed. If you will, Sir, excuse this somewhat rapid digression, I can explain why the hon member is so prodigal of himself. The hon, member for L'Islet was called upon to speak at that famous meeting held in Quebec, where the Liberal party tried to get the public to condemn the Pacific contract. What did the hon. member say? If the chronicles are consulted, one does not find any of the reasons that the hon. member may have adduced. The other day, L'Electeur, the accredited organ of the Liberal party in Quebec, gave an account of the meeting, and I do not know why, but it did not even mention that the hon, member had spoken. And when the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. LaRue) rose the other day and pronounced in this House the eulogium of the leader of the Liberal party in the Province of Quebec, he committed the same omission, and whilst lauding the talents of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) and those of the hon. Senator Pelletier, he quite forgot the hon. member for With the French poet I enquire: L'Islet.

"Comment en un vil plomb l'or pur s'est-il changé! Quel est dans ce saint lieu ce pontife égorgé?"

It is for that that the hon. member tries to-day to make good the failings of his own friends; and although he emphatically declares that it is not his intention to speak against time, nevertheless his speech amounts to that. Why did the hon. member, since he is so certain of his facts, not take the train for L'Islet, where his free and independent electors are? Why did he not hold a meeting in his own county, when he could with the authority of his words and with the simple eloquence of his hands condemn all these transactions, which, at the very least, he to-day characterizes as malevolent? Why did he not call together those who have confided their interests to him, who elected him and who sent him to the House? Why did he not say there, in public, before his friends as before his foes, that he would vote against the Pacific for such or such reasons? No, Sir; he preferred to Mr. LANDRY.

literary and political genius. Just now, Sir, I did not give you all the qualities of the child of the hon. member for L'Islet. I did not tell you that at its birth it had 24 teeth. Yes, Sir, it has 13 upper and 11 lower teeth. This is perhaps an anomaly, but at any rate it is the fault of the hon. member for L'Islet. If one looks through this document, which he has given to the public, and which, in his humble opinion, is destined to produce a torrent that will sweep away the Conservative Government, there is no doubt that one sees at once that he has forgotten to read the contract before him; and on simply reading the twenty-four reasons that he gives to explain his vote, one finds that he has not the first notion of the subject that he wishes to treat. His twenty-four reasons might have been summed up in one, and the hon. member might simply have said: "I vote against the contract because, in my opinion, I find it ruinous for the country." If he had said that, Sir, and proven it, then the electors of the County of L'Islet would have been proud of their member, and they would have had nothing else to think of but to return him at the next General Election. I have not the intention of going through the whole of that document; I will content myself with quoting one of the reasons:

"2. Because the Government has refused to produce all the other offers, tenders for, or correspondence relating to, the construction of the road."

Well, Sir, the contract which we have before us to-day, is it good or bad? If it is good, why does the hon member for L'Islet not vote for it? If it is bad, I understand that his patriotism and his conscience should make it an imperious duty for him to vote against it. But to conclude that a contract is bad because the Government has refused to produce the other tenders, is an incomprehensible conclusion for any mortal to come to, incomprehensible in the case of any lawyer, and especially incomprehensible in the case of a man who is "the member for L'Islet," and the "leader of the Liberal party in the Province of Quebec." I think, Sir, I have said enough to reduce to nothing the pretensions of the hon, member for L'Islet. At any rate, if I have not said enough, I am afraid the hon. member for L'islet is persuaded that I have said too much.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Not a bit.

Mr. LANDRY. Well then, he is nevertheless convinced, if he is not persuaded, and persuasion soon follows conviction. In closing, the hon member asks his people, for the hon. member sets himself forth as a judge of Israel, as a patriarch of the olden times, he asks his people to petition His Excellency the Governor-General and the two Houses, in order to avoid the consequences of a contract which, when once it has been sanctioned, will be irreparable; and the hon. member signs: "P. B. Casgrain, member-for the county of L'Islet." The date of the birth of this child is not given. The place is known,—'tis Ottawa; the month is known,—'tis January; the year is 1881. But the day remains a profound mystery. The light is still under the bushel.

Mr. MACDONELL (Lanark). When we consider how serious a matter this question is, when we consider for one moment the serious consequences that may result from it, and when we consider how impatient this country is waiting to hear the votes of the people on this motion, the members of this House should uphold the rights of their constituents to have an opportunity of pronouncing their opinion on this question. There has been a taunt thrown against the Opposition that they are obstructionists. I believe that three-fourths of the people have not a correct idea of this contract, which requires legal gentlemen to construe it properly. We have been told that this question has been under sit in the solitude of his study, perhaps in the solitude of his library, perhaps in some other place that I don't know—or, to use his own expressions, he preferred to conceive and bring forth that child of his patriotic labor, and to send to the electors of the county of L'Islet that production of his $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land. We remember the strong opposition that was given to it in this House. The terms of that contract were not vague and indefinite as those embodied in this contract, nor did they contain the exemptions and conditions of this agreement. It simply said that $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land would be given to build this railroad. I can conceive the people understanding that contract, but this contract contains terms and conditions which make it entirely different from the previous one. When the right hon. Premier and the hon. Minister of Rail ways held out to their followers that we were going to have a railroad without costing the country a cent, every lover of his country, irrespective of his politics, rejoiced at that announcement and no one would have given them more hearty support than I. I regret the right hon. gentleman did not tell the people the true meaning of the contract, that the Ministers so far forgot the duty they owed to this country, that they only told the people the most favorable part of this contract, and allowed the people to suppose the rest was just as favorable. What prevented the right hon. Minister telling the people the whole contract and everything connected with it. If he had, the people would have been in a position to judge fairly and squarely its merits. The people of this country and the followers of hon, gentlemen opposite, would then have been in a position to urge their objections to this contract. But. Sir, I regret exceedingly that that course was not taken. being in London two years ago when Earl Beaconsfield came back from Berlin, when the people gave him ovation after ovation; there was no more popular man in England than Earl Beaconsfield at that time. Did he conceal the terms of the treaty he had made on behalf of England? Are we a greater nation than England? Is there anything in this contract of greater importance than the treaty with which Earl Beaconsfield was entrusted. Why, I believe, if these hon, gentlemen dared in any European country to tell the people one part of a contract and not the whole, there would be a revolution. Probably hon, gentlemen have reasons for their course which they have not expressed to us. If their reason is, that it would be compromising to the Syndicate, I believe the people of this country will judge whether that is a valid reason or not. When they tell us that the people know the terms of this contract, I beg to differ from them. When we heard the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) the other night taking a position contrary to that taken by the Legislature of Manitoba, we must consider that the Legislature of Manitoba does not understand this contract.

Mr. ROY-AL. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONELL. Now the hon. gentleman reiterates that statement. I always had the opinion that the members of the Manitoba Legislature were reading and intelligent men, and I believed from my personal acquaintance with gentlemen in that Legislature that they could give a legal interpretation to that contract. But I regret to learn from my hon, friend that they have altogether misconstrued this contract. If the people of Manitoba, who are most directly interested in this contract, do not understand it, what is the inference? The inference is that the people of this country from one end to the other do not understand it. Is that not a sufficient reason why we should delay its consideration for some time longer? Now, let us see what the people of Manitoba think of this contract. They are in political sympathy with hon. gentlemen opposite, and I believe if they could do anything to assist them politically they would be most willing to do it. When we see them doing everything they can to further the interests of hon gentlemen opposite, when we see them sending almost a solid phalanx to support hon. gentlemen opposite, we can judge whether their motive in opposing this contract was patriotic or not. Are Ministers now going to turn their backs on the I believe the people of Manitoba were acting in their own people who placed them in power? I do not believe

Interest in passing the resolutions which they did on the 27th of December, as follows:-

"That the unlimited power proposed to be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway upon the Company as to the location of branch lines and that it is the construction with Ontario and the Company and the North-West are company as the population of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The citizens of Winnipeg, therefore, in mass meeting assembled, do endorse the action of the Dominion Government by entering into a contract with private parties for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and while we believe that it is to the interest of this country and the Dominion to establish railway connection with Ontario and other eastern Provinces through Canadian territory at the earliest possible time, yet we view with apprehension the powers proposed to be vested in the Company as to the location of branch lines and their power of running their lines to any point on the international boundary, and that it is the opinion of this meeting that no branch line should be run nearer the boundary line than fifteen miles until the eastern section is completed.

"That the unlimited power proposed to be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway to build branch lines of railway from the main line to any point in the Dominion, without the consent or control of Parliament or the Canadian and parties advantage over other company and the consent or control of Parliament or the Canadian and control of Parliament or the Can

Pacific Railway to build branch lines of railway from the main line to any point in the Dominion, without the consent or control of Parliament or the Executive, affords an unfair and unjust advantage over other companies, and will tend to prevent the formation of new companies to build lines connecting with the Canadian Pacific Railway or any portion of the North-West Territories, and will thereby paralyze private enterprise and prove disastrous to the best interests of the country.

"That in the opinion of this meeting a tariff of railway rates cannot be efficiently regulated without the Government retaining the power to grant charters eastward, giving independent outlets to competing lines, and charters eastward, giving independent outlets to competing lines, and that the Parliament of Canada should not by any agreement with a private company divest itself of its sovereign right to authorize the construction of any railway lines when and where it may consider the interests or necessities of the country require or will be served by them."

There is no uncertain sound about these resolutions; there is nothing vague about them; and hon, gentlemen can have no doubt about their meaning. The people of the North-West may have misconstrued the contract. I have a letter from one of my former constituents, now residing in Rapid City, stating that it had passed resolutions condemning this contract. Probably the member for Provencher may say its citizens are not intelligent. But the portion from my constituency are an intelligent and reading people. Indeed, I am sorry we have lost so many of them. I regret the hon. gentleman did not take the pains to visit his constituents and learn their sentiments on this question. If the people of this country understand this contract, it is only from a party standpoint. The speech of the Minister of Railways has been circulated among them, but the people, being readers, desire to know both sides of the question without which they cannot form a safe opinion as to the merits of the question. The people ask delay, and why should we not give it to them to enable them to study and understand this contract? As the Canada Central Railway—now part of the Canadian Pacific Railway—passes through my county, I may be said to have an interest in it. This county has given $300,000 to the Canada Central Railway. I consulted the opinions of my constituents on this question, going to the Conservative end of the riding and town that gave a strong majority against me at the last election, and which never gave a Reform majority. If I could take its expression of opinion as a fair index of the sentiment along the route of the Canada Central, I would be satisfied in saying the people of the whole Ottawa valley are strongly against this contract. After a fair and full discussion, the people, by a majority of two to one, pronounced against the contract. There was no uncertain sound about that decision, notwithstanding the taunts from Ministerial members that the political meetings held by the Opposition were not successful. If hon, gentlemen on this side are sincere in their protests against the contract; if we are to believe what the member for Ottawa (Mr. Wright) said the other evening, that it would be the death of the Conservative party, is it not right the Government should take warning, and give some consideration to the popular feeling? Hon. gentlemen opposite a few years ago, felt the popular pulse and tested the popular feeling and we knew the result.

the people ask who are in power, but whether the affairs of the country are economically and honestly carried on. I believe the people will cast party aside in this matter. I regret that hon, gentlemen opposite are truer to their party lines than to their country's interests. I hope party ties may be cast aside, and that hon. gentlemen may vote on this question on its merits simply. If so, I dare say a different contract will be proposed and accepted. We hear a new Syndicate is being formed. If that be so, are we not proceeding with undue haste? If we are likely to get a better offer, are we acting in the public interest to accept the present? I think Ministers should pause to see whether there be any truth in the rumor that a new proposition will be laid on the Table of the House. I do not think they would sacrifice fifteen or twenty millions of the people's money simply to award the present contract. They may say the new contract is a bogus one; but let us investigate the matter, and see whether the parties are competent to execute their offer. Let us advertise for tenders. What is the necessity for this precipitate haste? A year ago hon gentlemen opposite stated they would construct this as a Government work. If they had the ability then, they have it now. I do not believe emigrants are waiting at Quebec or in England just now to be taken to the North-West. If they were, there might be some need of this railway. At present we have more railroads constructed than in 1879. I can, therefore, see no reason why, under present circumstances, this contract should be signed instanter. It is said the Syndicate may require ties and may have to locate the road before they begin their work. These are not sufficient reasons for undue haste. They may also require emigrants to settle along the line, but they are not like y to have any to send forward before June or July next. I suppose June or July is quite sufficient time for it, so I do not see the necessity for such great haste under the circumstances. When we conceive that the Government did not bring this contract down until two or three days after Parliament met, and that they had no direct authority to enter into the contract, I think that delay should be allowed. If the Government do delay, and if they should receive a better offer, every hon member in this House will, I am sure, give them his hearty support in carrying it out. Hon, gentlemen on this side will be quite prepared to sink their party allegiance and do all they can to render this great national work successful. nder this great national work successful.

not believe that the country care very do much which party carries out this great undertaking, so long as it is done cheaply and economically; and, if the Government would only delay a few days until we get this other offer-if another is to be submitted-they will receive the thanks of the country, and many of their misdeeds will be forgiven, and, perhaps, forgotten. For the reasons I have stated I move that the House do now adjourn.

PETITIONS FOR PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. DREW moved that the time for receiving petitions for Private Bills be further extended to 1st February.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman say whether, from enquiries or sources of information, the Committee on Standing Orders are enabled to judge that the proposed extension is necessary, and that there are a large number of petitions to be presented which have not yet been presented.

Mr. DREW. Yes. From the notices there are about sixty petitions which have appeared in the Gazette, and will likely be presented. Those which have yet to come in will probably not be received before the end of January.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (No. 24) respecting the Berlin and Galt Branch of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Kirkpatrick.)

Bill (No. 25) respecting the Ontario and Pacific Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. Williams.)

PROPOSALS BY ANOTHER SYNDICATE.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Government Notices of Motions are called, I desire to enquire whether the Government will at once lay on the Table the proposal for the construction and operation of the Pacific Railway which was received by the hon. Minister of Railways to-day; and whether they would, if they are not prepared at once to lay it on the Table, adjourn the discussion on the motion for concurrence in the resolutions until they do lay it on the Table.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg to say, in reply to the hon. gentleman, that just before this meeting of the House, since two o'clock, I had placed in my hands a paper purporting to be a tender for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have not had time even to read the document up to the present time, and it is quite impossible to say what course will be taken until I have an opportunity of reading it. In the meantime we propose to go on with the discussion as before.

PRECEDENCE OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that from this day the motion for concurrence in the resolutions reported from the Committee of the Whole House relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway shall have precedence every day, next after Routine Proceedings.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker, of course, Sir, this motion is unnecessary for this day because this is a Government day. The Government have the right in the regular order to proceed with the consideration of the question to-day-in fact, I see it stands first in the Orders of the Day—and the motion will only be applicable for future days in its practicable operation. Had it been proposed to deviate from the accustomed procedure of the House to-day I should have opposed any interruption in the regular course, even on the ground of the announcement made by the Minister of Railways above; but of course we must deal with that subject when the Government comes as it will, presently come in the course of the procedure of the House, to the motion for concurrence. With regard to the proposal in its future effect, I have to say, in the first place, that I observe the hon. gentleman, I hope not intentionally, has departed from the slight concession he made to us a while ago. I hope it is not his intention to recall that concession, under which we are enabled to ask questions before the House went into Committee on the railway resolutions. I do not see why we should not be allowed to ask questions before the resolutions are taken up.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not intend to deprive the hon. gentleman of the right to ask questions.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand, then, that the motion will be modified, as was the former one. On receiving that assurance I do not intend to trouble the House with any repetition of the arguments I formerly advanced. I will merely say that in my opinion those arguments, valid then, have been intensified and made much more forcible by subsequent proceedings and by the present position of this business. I do not doubt that the House, whatever it may do at the critical stage at which we shall have to decide on I protest, therefore, against this name, and I draw your the merits of this measure, will be disposed to support the attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of this House, to fore, I will not trouble the House with discussion; but I record by speech, as I did on a former occasion, and for the same reasons, accentuated as they have been by subsequent events, my protest and dissent from this mode of expediting this business.

Motion agreed to on division.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to correct a remark which is attributed to me in the rough draft of the Hansard. I would not have thought it of sufficient importance to direct attention to this trifling matter were it not that it has formed the basis of a jest on the part of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie), and my literary friend from Ottawa County. It was very unkind of my hon. friend from Lambton, in the interests of domestic peace, to have referred to this clerical error on the part of the printers. have not the honor of the acquaintance, in private life, of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), and of the hon, and gallant knight for Centre Huron. have never had an opportunity of examining their phreno-logical development; I have no knowledge of their private life or habits either at the seat of Government or elsewhere, and if I had it would have been most unparliamentary on my part to have called attention to it. I am credited with calling these hon, gentlemen "amative Radicals;" the words I used were "amateur Radicals." What I said in regard to those gentlemen applies more to the hon. member for Centre Huron than to the hon, member for West Durham. The hon, gentlemen may be amative, and it is creditable to them if they are, because unless a man is amative he does not amount to much. However, I do not intend to discuss the subject, but in the interest of domestic peace, publicity having been given to that epithet by the hon. members for Lambten and Ottawa county, I venture to rise in my place and disclaim any intention of applying such epithet to the hon, gentlemen. I think they have sufficient crumpled rose leaves in their political couch without adding anything which might tend in any way to disturb their domestic felicity.

Mr. LANDRY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the House to an article that appeared in a paper this morning, and which reads as follows:

" The bleu leader .- A BCENE.

"Mr. Casgrain spoke in French. The dose proved too much even for so patient a knight as Sir Richard Cartwright, who appeared to sleep soundly, while his leader seemed to enjoy the fun which was general while Mr. Casgrain labored with his oration. Sir Richard woke up during the remarks of the Speaker, calling the hon gentleman's attention to the fact that he was not discussing the motion before the House, but finding the Bleu leader still at it he again leaned forward on his desk, and soon became oblivious to his surroundings—but only for a few minutes, for he soon looked up again, and, taking his hat in hand, left the Chamber, leaving Mr. Casgrain to continue his contributions to the mental delectation of his highly amused audience."

And further on it is stated:

"A certain amount of mischievous satisfaction was displayed on both sides at the sudden collapse of the Bleu leader's harangue."

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that when the hon. member for L'Islet assumed the attitude of leader, it was not as the bleu leader, that is to say, the leader of the Conservative party. I consider the paper is entirely wrong when it represents him under this color. On hearing this article read, the hon, member for L'Islet may well repeat with the poet:

"Vous me donnez des noms qui doivent me surprendre; Messieurs, on ne m'a pas instruit à les entendre. Et les dieux contre moi, dès longtemps indignés, A mes oreilles encor les avaient épargnés."

hon, gentleman in his proposal now before it; and, there-this epithet that does not at all apply to the hon. member for L'Islet. In the interests of the party, of our party especially, I request that this name be not applied to the hon, member for L'Islet, and I hope that the paper which has thus led the public astray will make a rectification. It is known that this paper represents here the Conservative party, and it has probably taken a dislike to the hon. member for L'Islet, and I will add with the poet:

"Sa fureur de sang avide Poursuit partout l'innocent."

But, addressing hon. Ministers and you, Mr. Speaker, I would say:

"Rois, prenez soin de l'absent Contre sa langue homicide.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand the hon. gentleman to be engaged in calling attention to some error in the report. He has no right, however, to make a speech.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member, I understand, protested against the hon, member for L'Islet being called the leader of the Bleu party. He was perfectly right so far, but it was irregular on his part to provoke a discussion.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the first resolution be now read a second time.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). For days past Parliament has been engaged in a discussion on the contract now before the House, the terms of which have not been defended by any members of the Adminstration or their supporters. Since the day the terms of this contract were made known, it has been met with a storm of opposition. Commencing in the Government caucus room, it was re-echoed from the editorial chair of the Ottawa Citizen, and we have since witnessed an uprising against the terms throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion which has no parallel in the history of this country. For the past few days this contract has been submitted to searching criticism at the hands of Parliament and the press of the country, and the enormous concessions proposed to be given in that contract to the Syndicate, have attracted the attention of capitalists in the Dominion. We have the announcement made in this House, this afternoon, that the Government have received a proposal from other gentlemen for the construction of the Pacific Railway. have no information as to the terms of that proposal. We simply depend on the rumors which have been circulated in the corridors of this House and the press during the past few days. One reason given why this contract should be hurried through was, that no matter what monopolies were created, and what the cost was to the country, it was the very best offer that could be obtained. Now, we are asked to concur in the report of the Committee. I think it would be unfair to ask Parliament to proceed with the discussion of this question until we know the terms of the offer-whether they are more favorable to the country than those of the contract. Holding that view, which I believe to be entertained by this House, I bog to move: That in view of the fact that another offer for the construction and working of the Pacific Railway, has been received by the Government, this debate be adjourned in order that the Government may lay the said offer on the Table of the Honse.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know who was "naying" just now. I can hardly conceive that those sounds of uproar and dissent which have greeted the motion of my hon. friend will be re-echoed by the second sober thought] of this assembly. The subject to which our attention arrangement was possible; that if this were not accomis now attracted, is confessedly, as has been stated in every speech of every hon, member who has approached the question, the greatest and most important that has ever Mr. LANDRY.

portance and interest, in its immediate and future consequences, any conceivable question within the pale of practical politics at all. In our immediate condition, its effect upon the finances of the country, upon the development of the country, upon the future of the country, upon the great territories in respect to which we are legislating, it is impossible for the mind to grasp the far-reaching effects of this measure, if it should be adopted. We have heard numerous speeches from many hon. gentlemen, supporters of the Administration, upon this question. I do not at this moment recollect a single speech which was one of unqualified approval. If there be such a one, it has passed from my memory. I am sure I am correct in saving that the very great majority, if not all, of these speeches have been speeches damning the contract with faint praise, and indicating that the terms were objectionable and injurious. We have heard from one and the other side of this House these statements. It has been said by some hon, gentlemen, in the course of these discussions, that the objections first entertained in the country had, upon further review, been disappearing; that it was liked better, that the country which at first might have been alarmed a little was calming down, that the agitation and excitement upon the subject were subsiding. Well, so far as the utterances of hon. gentlemen who, I am sure, in their loyalty and fidelity to their party and their leaders cannot be surpassed, can show, they prove that the statements to which I have referred are not well founded, because the strongest expressions of disapprobation on the floor of this House from supporters of the Administration, have been those which have fallen from them within the last day or two, even in the last stages of the debate. Yesterday and the previous day, we heard these expressions. We heard the hon, member for South Simcoe, who addressed to me certain epithets on which I do not wish to comment, who informed me that it was a great calamity for this country that I happened to be born and to live in it, and proposed to exile me to revolutionary Mexico-even from this Conservative, who assumes that the calamity of my again taking a place in the councils of my country would be so great that he would rather swallow this contract than see a recurrence of that calamity, even he said more than once that it was a hard bargain; a bargain so hard that if it were not a choice of evils between seeing us cross the floor and the contract being adopted, the former, that greater evil, as he conceives it to be, is the only thing that reconciles him to the adoption of the contract. I would say to my hon friend that the way to avert the calamity which he deprecates, is to persuade the Government to withdraw the contract, and that the way to accomplish the calamity which he deprecates is to support the Government in maintaining the contract. I will say to my hon, friend that what he is about to do is to saddle his country with two great calamities, according to his view, instead of one—the calamity of the contract first, and the calamity of a change of Government afterwards. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Wright) took something of the same tone. He told us that the contract was going to be disastrous to the party; that it was a bad business; that the policy of the Government was a mistaken policy, that a retired dry goods merchant and an ex-hunter of musk rats in the North-West were not, in his opinion, more competent to build and work the Canadian Pacific Railroad than the Government; that, in his opinion, the whole thing was a mistake. Other hon, members have pronounced themselves in the same direction, but those who most reconciled themselves to the contract did so on the ground that it was the best thing, after all, that could be done. They persuaded themselves into the belief that no better: plished we would be obliged to spend more money, to give away more lands, to submit to more onerous conditions if more onerous conditions are conceivable—than the conbeen submitted to this Parliament. It surpasses, in im-ditions which are to be found in this fatal paper. And, therefore-although my hon friend from Dundas, with almost tears in his voice, wanted the extraction of that word "forever," which, he said, was unworthy of his country, inconsistent with the genius of our institutions and the freedom of our people, and would have to be removed by some means or the other; and if he did vote for its maintenance in the contract, it was because he believed it would be removed at some future day—he justified himself on the ground that bad as this contract is, yet, in his belief, it is the best thing for Canada yet presented. All of them who have spoken justify themselves in their position on the ground that, bad as this thing is, it yet, in their honest belief, is the best thing they could do for their country in this matter. I could point to no more unfortunate proof of the fatal policy which dictated the agreement to the terms of Union with British Columbia than this common consent on the part of ardent supporters of hon, gentlemen opposite as to their twice condemning this contract, and declaring that it is a bad contract, declaring that it contains clauses which ought to be omitted, and the Government themselves acknowledging that it contains clauses which they would gladly have out of it. The Minister of Public Works stated there were clauses in the contract which he would gladly have seen excluded, pointing out, however, that the Government had to agree to those clauses in order to give the contract at all—that it was the only means they could adopt to accomplish the work. I say that those hon. gentlemen who, with one common consent, not in so earnest terms perhaps, or at so great length, but with a deliberation of purpose and reluctance of heart which gives double weight to their modest words, condemned the contract—condemned by that very condemnation the mad act of stipulating in the way and form in which it was stipulated that this railway · should be built-for upon that basis rests the whole superstructure. Nobody pretends, no man is bold enough to rise and say that this contract would be agreed to or proposed were this country free. But hon, gentlemen say it is bound, and, being bound, in order to meet the obligation and complete the railway, we will agree to these hard terms, which we believe are the best which can be possibly accomplished. Reference is made by the Minister of Railways himself, in support of this view, to the general character for astuteness, for ability, for success in negotiation of the Government and its chief. He said, do you suppose that a man so able, so devoted to the interests of the country, having so much at stake, would not have got the very best bargain possible? Take it on trust—trust us we have got the very best thing for the country. Now, the Government having before them another proposal for the construction of this railway, a copy of which is placed in my hands, and is signed by, I do not hesitate to say, the strongest combination of Canadian capitalists ever witnessed in combination at all, in terms which I am not now about to describe, but which are infinitely better than the terms of this contract, removing many of the objections which have been taken to it, it the is not right that the hon, gentlemen on Treasury benches should propose to their supporters that they should concur in this resolution. A call was made upon the second reading of the resolution being put from the chair, by the cry "carried," "carried," that their party should proceed to pass this resolution without seeing Have you eyes and see not, have you ears the new offer. and hear not? Are you determined to close your eyes and shut your ears? Are you determined that you will not have light? Will you enclose yourselves in an artifical blindness and deafness, so that by that means you may justify the vote you proposed to give a moment ago? Is that the attitude you are about to take before your country and your constituencies? Why, Sir, it cannot be—it cannot be that in a transaction of this tremendous magnitude, weakly defended, as the best that could be done-defended on on both sides of politics; we see it in the meetings which 57

this bad principle by its friends-inspiring but the just contempt of those who sit on the other side of the House that the majority of the House will be found prepared to concur in the resolution to adopt this contract—that it will commit itself to its terms without seeing what the other offer is, and finding out whether it can do better for the country. Sir, I repeat it cannot be. Surely it were better to proceed with the other business with which this Order paper is encumbered—to use the few hours available in the discharge of this business, and let the hon, gentlemen, if they will not now lay the paper on the Table, wait till they are prepared to do so and give to the House that information which shall enable it to decide whether it will concur in this resolution intelligently and with a choice before it which the other offer gives. I do not propose to protract this discussion. I have stated in as plain terms as I could the responsibility which, to my mind will rest upon those hon. members who determined that they will ratify this contract—that they will proceed to vote these resolutions without knowing what alternative is open to them-and with that statement, for my part, I am content to leave the fate of this motion to the House first, but to the country afterwards.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I confess to a feeling of surprise in the first place, and of regret in the second place, that on a motion of so great importance as this, we do not hear, from the hon, gentlemen who are responsible for the conduct of affairs in this House, any answer, any sufficient explanation or justification for pressing this House to a vote upon such a question as this, under the circumstances which are now known to exist. Sir, I have formed an opinion with regard to the propriety of the course which has been proposed by the Government of this country in dealing with this great question—the construction of the ( anadian Pacific Railway. I confess, as an independent member of this House -us a friend to the Administration as individuals, as a friend to it as regards its policy with respect to another matter of great public importance, in my judgment, the Tariff—as one who endeavors, from his own standpoint, and having regard to his own antecedents as a public man, to justify himself to his country for preferring these hon, gentlemen, or rather the leader of these hon gentlemen, with the policy which he propounded, to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, with whom, in former times, there was a nearer accord in political ideas and principles than with hon. gentlemen on this side of the House—I do not, as a Canadian and a public man, regret the course I felt it my duty on that occasion to pursue. I believe it will be admitted-I know it has been admitted by the leader of the Government and some of his colleagues, and many of his supporters—that I rendered them very considerable service in the discussions that took place prior to the last General Election. Now, Sir, I find myself standing before this House and country in this position: I am called upon to justify the vote which I may give, and not only the vote but the use of that influence, shall I call it—it has been so regarded in the past—that I happen to possess with some of my fellow-countrymen who are not usually, but have been on some questions, in accord with hon, gentlemen on this side of the House. I will have to justify myself for precipitating the decision of Parliament upon the greatest question, the most important in its effects upon the future of our country, in my judgment, which has engaged the attention of Parliament or the people of this country since the great question of Confederation itself. Sir, I cannot do so. I see no occasion for precipitancy; and I believe that the hon, gentlemen who are responsible for the conduct of business in this House are not pursuing a course which is likely to be advantageous to themselves or their party. The people of this country are excited. We see evidences of that fact in the public press have been held, and the large audiences which have been assembled at these meetings; we see it in the petitions which have been presented, or are in course of signature and will be presented in the future. I think, Sir, under these circumstances it would have been prudent, it would have been respectful to Parliament, it would have been respectful to the public sentiment of this country, if we had had the whole thing placed before us before we were called upon to decide. I understand that a proposition has been made which it was perfectly competent for any Canadian capitalists to make, according to my view, to this Government and this Parliament, and that it is now in the hands of the Minister of Railways. I do not know the terms of that proposition. We have seen in the newspapers some details with respect to the names of the persons who have made that proposition, and the terms of the offer itself. Certainly, at first view, it is a very much more advantageous offer than the one we are now considering; it is much less, in respect to amount, and it is free from some of the objections which I have felt most strongly and which I expressed—not here, but in the proper place, as I think—before my constituents. And, Sir, I had the advantage, which I believe it would have been proper for other hon. members to enjoy—the advantage of receiving the assent of my constituents, assembled in a great public meeting of both sides of politics, to the acceptance of this offer, if no better could be had, with the amendment of some of the objectionable conditions which it contains. I came back to this House to take that position. I came back to this House, satisfied that under all the circumstances, if that first proposition were established, it would be my duty, as I believed in the importance of this work, to support the placing of the railway in the hands of a commercial company, rather than to disturb, as I think it has done, the ordinary course of the administration of affairs, rather than disturb the executive departments by drawing off the attention of the heads of these departments from those subjects and those matters which properly belong to Government. For these reasons—which I need not elaborate or detail—I came to the conclusion that it would be to the advantage of Canada to transfer the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway to a commercial company, if the terms and conditions were in the public interest. I have no doubt that it will be to our advantage to make that arrangement, and to pay $25,000,000 and assign 25,000,000 acres of land on proper terms as regards the disposal of the lands, and on proper conditions as regards the management of this great work after it is constructed. I am prepared to sustain the Government in that course. But at this stage and with this offer—a better offer as it is said—in the hands of a member of the Government, I cannot, in my position, at all events, consent to ignore such an important fact, and proceed to treat it with contempt by voting for concurrence in the resolutions which are now in your hands; because, Sir, in my view, if we concur in these resolutions, we are precluded from considering any other offer. It would be inconsistent, it would be illogical, it would be contrary to the rules and practice of Parliament to do so. For these reasons—and I will not ask the attention of the House on the general question at the present time—I urge the Government in their own interests and in the interest of their supporters, not to place them in the position in which they will be placed, by forcing concurrence in the resolutions. If this new offer is a mere political arrangement—a dodge, to use a common expression in this House

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has got the right word.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. If it has been got up to have an itself and declared its readiness to proceed with the construction of this railway, by a resolution which still stands are not prepared to deposit money to prove their bona fides; in unrepealed upon the journals of the House, proposing to give if it is got up merely for the purpose of enabling the leader of the Opposition to take advantage of the Government and its supporters, that fact will soon be developed. That fact, if it be a fact, will soon be established; but I for one prefer to vote after it has been established rather than before.

Mr. MACDOUGALL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I was reminded yesterday, by the ebullition we witnessed from the other side of the House, of a story I once heard of a polemical discussion which took place in the city of Glasgow, between two celebrated divines. A person who was known to be deaf and dumb, was found wending his way to the hall where the meeting was to take place. He was asked through the medium of the slate which he carried with him, what could possibly take him to such a place, seeing that he could not hear a word that was spoken. He replied: "Oh, I will find out which is the better cause." He was asked how he would discover that, and he replied: "I will see who gets angry first, and I will know that his cause is the wrong one." I will not discredit the hon. leader of the Opposition by supposing that he really felt the ebullition of temper which we witnessed yesterday at the motion which was made, because I assume that it was entirely feigned. I assume that an hon, gentleman acquainted as he is with parliamentary business, and knowing the position in which that question stood, could not really have felt any great amount of indignation when that motion was made. But I know what has made these hon. gentlemen unhappy, what has brought them back to Parliament in this rather disturbed mental condition. It is that they have failed in their endeavors to excite the public mind outside, as they failed in their attempts upon the floor of Parliament. I say there never was an instance in Canada, or in any Province of Canada, in which so labored an attempt to excite the popular mind on any public question failed in so ludicrons, and to them so disastrous, a manner. And the reason of their failure is just this: that however great their party necessities may be, they have to deal with an intelligent and well informed people. They are not able to spring a midnight attack on the people and bring on suddenly the discussion of a question that was not understood as they did in 1873. They are not able in 1880, or 1881, to reproduce that successful coup de main which they accomplished before the people of this country understood the question thoroughly. What is the reason that the best efforts of these hon, gentlemen, united as they are on this question, have completely failed? There is no great public question that has been so well discussed and that is, to-day, so well understood by the people of Canada, of all classes, as the question of this Canadian Pacific Railway. It may suit hon, gentlemen here to feign an entire ignorance of what every intelligent man of this country knows has been taking place for eight years in Canada; it may suit them to entirely ignore their own position on this question. The memories of some of these hon, gentlemen appear to be short and very defective. The hon, member for Westmoreland (Sir Albert J. Smith), the late hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in his exhibition here, the other night, speaking of the terrible disaster that was to be inflicted on Canada, forgot two or three little things, which I suppose he considered of very small importance. The hon. gentleman forgot that if this terrible disaster had been brought upon the people of this country by the Government of my right hon friend committing this country to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1871—he forgot that, after that great burden was placed upon the people, he deserted the party with which he usually acted, and united himself to this side of the House. The hon, gentleman forgets that in 1872, after this Parliament had committed itself and declared its readiness to proceed with the construction of this railway, by a resolution which still stands unrepealed upon the journals of the House, proposing to give be expended in the construction of this railway-I say the hon, gentleman forgot that, in 1872, the then Government brought down a proposition to vote $30,000,000 in money and 50,000,000 acres of land for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Well, Sir, the hon. member for Bothwell thought there ought to be some restriction. He thought Parliament ought not to place on the Journals of the country a declaration that it was prepared to authorize the Government of the day, whoever they might be, to spend $30,000,000 of money and 50,000,000 acres of land. The hon, member for Bothwell is always ready to scrutinize these matters very closely, when he is looking at them from an Opposition standpoint, but he entertains much broader and more statesmanlike views when he with others has charge of the administration of public affairs. That hon, gentleman seconded this motion moved by the Hon. Mr. Wood, in amendment. The hon. member for Bothwell thought there should be some check, and he recorded his opinion in a constitutional manner by putting a resolution on the Journals. It was moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. Mills:

"That all the words after 'be' to the end of the question be left out, and that it be recommitted to a Committee of the House in order to amend the same so that so large a sum $30,000,000 of money, and so large a quantity of land as 50,000,000 acres, shall not be at the disposal of the Government of the day; and that the said money and land shall only be disposed of by special annual votes of Parliament, from time to time, as shall seem to Parliament right and proper, so that Parliament shall not be divested of its most important conditional functions, namely, control over the public expenditure of the country."

Where was the hon, member for Westmoreland? He voted down the resolution, and in addition went back to his constituents and there, in the face of the whole country, recanted his past political position, and said that he was prepared to abandon the Reform party and support my right hon, friend. He secured his re-election on that declaration, and if there is any force or value in the statement he makes he must wipe out his past record and show that the relative positions he has occupied are consistent. The hon, gentleman wondered very much what authority this Government had. He denied that this Government had any authority. The hon, gentleman had much better have confined himself to the line taken by his hon, and learned leader. He will find no statement made by that hon. gentleman that this Government has exceeded its powers or the authority of Parliament with reference to the contract. The hon, gentleman was induced by hon, gentlemen opposite to leave this side of the House, but they could not get him back until they provided a seat for him in the Cabinet, which was the great object of the hon. gentleman's ambition. I say it is trifling with the intelligence of the people of this country for the hon. gentleman to stand in such a position and to feign this absurd What did the hon, gentleman indignation. When he found himself in the Cabinet, arrived at the goal of his ambition, he came down as a member of the Government, and put on the Statute-book an Act which stands there with all the authority of law to-day. He wants to know where we get the authority to make this contract. Let him look at the Act to which he was a party. Let him look at the Act of 1874, and he will find that his hon leader, true to the opinion he had held for years, and which he did not hesitate to express, that $30,000,000 in money and 50,000,000 acres of land was utterly inadequate to secure the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and he asked his friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to come to his aid in getting an Act put on the Statute-book authorizing any Government while the Statute remained law to secure the construction of the Canadian Pacific by a subsidy of $10,000 a mile in money and 20,000 acres of lard a mile. If you count the number of miles of the road including the branches, you have over 56,000,000 acres of land. The hon, gentleman voted for that when he was sitting on the Treasury benches, and yet, in the year

1881, relegated back by the people of this country to the Opposition benches, the hon, gentleman discovers that this was a frightful undertaking, and that there was no authority for it. Why, what does that Act provide? It provides that any Government while it remains law may contract with any person or co-partnership or company incorporated or hereinafter to be incorporated for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad—that Act authorizes the Government of the day, whoever they may be, while that Act stands as it is to-day, to expend $10,000 cash per mile. 20,000 acres of land per mile, and such further sum in addition as the lowest tenderer might ask, in accordance with the other provisions of the Act. The hon, gentleman may find it convenient to forget all this; his hon, leader may find it convenient to forget all this; but with that law standing on the Statute-book of the country he will not make the people of this country believe this Government had not authority to make the contract. But, what did hon. gentlemen do at a time when the revenue of the country was altogether inadequate to meet the expenditure, at a time when the Finance Minister of that Government was coming down, Session after Session, and asking for $3,000,000 additional taxation, of which he himself stated $2,000,000 was for the purpose of constructing the Canadian Pacific. Those hon, gentlemen came down to the House the same Session and put this Act on the Statute-book. When they came back a little more than a year afterwards they said: "We have not enough with the $3,000,000 we asked for last Session, we must have half a million a year more." Did hon. gentlemen draw back and say we must stop the contract for the Canadian Pacific Railroad? No; they went on and the Finance Minister met the House Session after Session with deficits until the amount of the deficiency between revenue and expenditure was over $7,000,000 during four years. And with that condition of things-

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. No, no.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; had not the hon, gentleman been dismissed by an indignant public from the position he held he would have found himself on the first of July, 1879, with a deficiency of over $3,000,000. And in that position of things, with a deficiency rolling up year by year between revenue and expenditure, what did they do? Instead of saying, "Stop, do not let any more contracts," they went on Session after Session, taking power to let new contracts down to the last hour. The hon, leader of the Government declared it was their intention to build the Canadian Pacific from the shores of Lake Superior to the shores of the Pacific. What more did the Government, of which the hon. member for Westmoreland was a member, under the authority of this Act, and in the face of these enormous and annual deficits? They advertised to the world asking on what terms parties could be found who would come forward and construct the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have heard something about the cost of advertising in my department since. I do not think they can find any occasion in which we spent over $10,000 in three months in my department. I think we will all come to the conclusion that no better result having followed that expenditure, it would have been just as well to have diverted the money to some other purpose. At all events, the fact remains that, down to the end of 1878, hon. gentlemen advertised publicly to know on what terms parties would come forward and construct the whole of this road, from the shores of Lake Superior to the shores of the Pacific. Now, I challenge any gentleman to say, which the hon. leader of the Opposition has not ventured to say, that we have exceeded the powers Parliament has authorized for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. On the contrary, the hon. gentleman says things have all changed, and declares that the 25,000,000 acres of land is worth $3.18.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. You said it was.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not say that it is not, but I am prepared to say that if you will allow me to select 1.700.000 acres of land in the North-West, I will undertake to say it will be worth $5 an acre. The inconsistency alluded to by the hon, gentleman is only a specious and fallacious one, and the statements I have made in the House and out of the House is the opinion I hold to day. If, under a more successful administration of public affairs these lands have increased in value, then I say the hon. gentleman is bound by that declaration to admit that those terms by which this contract was secured are infinitely below any terms ever proposed in this House and within the authority of the Act or Parliament of 1874, and the resolutions of 1872, which received the support of the hon. member for Westmoreland—and that was that Government should have uncontrolled power over $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land. The hon, member for Westmoreland forgets himself when he endeavors to insinuate that we have not only the authority of the Government of which he was a member, in the most specific and decisive manner, to make this contract, but to far exceed the powers assumed by this contract. This Act provides how that contract shall obtain the authority of law.

Mr. ANGLIN. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I see the hon. member for Gloucester brightens up with a "hear, hear." Let me tell that hon, gentleman, and he will be perhaps surprised to learn, if his memory has been as treacherous with reference to the contents of the Act as that of the hon, member for Westmoreland, that there is tenders. word this Act about public in The hon, member for Lambton made his point, not by reading anything from the Canadian Pacific Act, but the Public Works Act, which cannot contravene the Canadian Pacific Act subsequently passed.

Mr. BLAKE. It says after tenders have been obtained. Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon, gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) is mistaken. I had no Public Works Act to read from at that moment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What did you read from?

Mr. MACKENZ'E. I read from the Act you have in your hand.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon, gentleman did not read then that it was necessary to advertise for public

Mr. MACKENZIE. 'Surely the hon, gentleman will not contend that the Act that requires tenders to be called for means private tenders.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will undertake to give several instances in which the hon, gentleman accepted private tenders for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, notwithstanding this Act. The hon. gentleman knows that, again and again, under the authority of this Act, both the former and the present Government accepted private tenders. There is nothing in this Act about public tenders, and if there was, I want to know whether an advertisement published in the papers of England and Canada for six months did not give authority for the granting of a contract to anyone who was willing to construct the railway? The hon, leader of the Opposition goes back four years; but I will not permit him to go back four years to find his opinions on this question. I say he was bound by the statements of his colleague, the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie), who only eight months ago declared that if we had received tenders under that advertisement for the construction of the railway,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

The hon, member for Lambton had put an Act on the Statute-book; providing for constructing it by a company or as a Government work; and Session after Session he acted on this, declaring to the House that his policy and the policy of the country was unchanged, and that so soon as a company could be obtained, the works done by the Government would be handed over to the company, and the whole responsibility of constructing and operating the Canadian Pacific Ruilway would rest upon the company and not on the Government. So that when we came into office, and for six months after the publication of that advertisement, we received no tenders. We were not only obliged to prevent the expenditure already incurred from being wasted, but we were obliged to show to the capitalists of the world the faith and confidence we had in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, Sir, these hon, gentlemen are obliged to admit, first, that we have the authority of the law, and the law put on Statute-book by themselves.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Has this contract been made in accordance with the law? The Statute requires that when a contract is made, it be laid on the Table for one month.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am coming to that directly. Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. If it is laid on the Table for a month, why insist on proceeding with this discussion?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I thank the hon. gentleman for his suggestion. The Act provides that tenders may be Tenders have been received. received.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Then the contract is ratified. Sir CHARLE TUPPER. Yes; so far as the law and the policy of the hon. gentlemen are concerned, it is ratified. The law of the hon. gentlemen has provi ed that no contract shall be let without tenders. Tenders have been made. The parties who receive the contract shall not be allowed to go to work until it has been ratified by Parliament. And what ratification does the Act provide for? It provides that the contract shall lie upon the Table of the House for one month without being disapproved. The hon member for West Durham has made the strongest case which is possible in favor of this contract. He has shown that the 56,000;000 acres of land set apart by the Government of which he was a member, will alone cover every dollar of expenditure, past, present and future.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. They did not take all the best

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon gentleman will find that a very small criticism. The very fact that these hon. gentlemen have based their whole argument relating to the land upon a misetatement of what the contract contains, is the best evidence that they could not challenge the terms of the contract itself. It provides that, instead of having the choice of all the best land in the North-West, the Company shall have their lands in alternate blocks of a mile square along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway through the fertile belt.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Or elsewhere.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon, gentleman had better read the contract again. "Or elsewhere" does not apply to the fertile belt at all. It applies to the outside of the fertile belt. The Company may have their lands within parallels 49 and 57 north latitude, or elsewhere at the option of the Company. That is outside the fertile belt altogether. But where else may they have their lands? They may have them along the branches. How constructed? Constructed with their own money. We want them we would have been justified in accepting them and to carry those branches to the most effectile going on with the work. A good deal has districts in the North-West, because for every been made out of the fact of our having proceeded with the square mile that they get along these branches, the Covern-railway as a Government work. What else could we do? ment own the alternate square mile, Suppose the Syndicate do not build the branches, can they choose the best lands in the North-West? Not an acre. If they do not build the branches, it is provided they shall have their lands on front lines designated by the Governor-in-Council. Is it to be wondered at that hon, gentlemen opposite should resort to the extraordinary process of holding indignation meetings, to which admittance was obtained only by ticket-indignation meetings to which were only admitted men who were prepared to how against this contract? The intelligence of this country is too great, and the memory of the people too vivid, to allow them to be misled by the misconstruction put upon the terms of this contract. The contract was brought down and laid upon the Table of Parliament, and we were in a position to ask not only the hearty acquiescent support of every hon. gentleman supporting this Government, but we were in a position to demand at the hands of hon gentlemen opposite that they should give that hearty, generous support which the slightest regard to their own public character as statesmen compelled them to give us. They stood pledged by their action in this House and out of it for the five years during which they were in office to come forward and say: "We congratulate the Government and the country." What did the hon. member for Lambton say to me eight months ago? Why, he said, you expect out of your great immigration scheme to build this railway with 100,000,000 acres of land; I tell you, you are mistaken, it is a fallacy. He said: "You will find by experience that it will cost the Government just about as much to settle and to administer the lands as they are worth." I have only made reference to the calculation, but I believe that on all the millions of acres which have already been disposed of the Government stand with a profit received of something like 16 cents an acre. The hon, gentleman, knowing what it had cost him to administer these lands, and how hard it was to get the money out of it after they had been opened up by railway communication, told us it was a The hon, member for Middlesex (Mr. Ross) counted on his fingers two or three times the same things, again and again, as if by repetition he could give them importance and weight. He said, first, the Company have the lands free of taxation; second, you give them this exemption for twenty years, or until sold or occupied; third, you give them the road-bed and the right of way, and the railway steck free of taxation, and you give them freedom from duties; you take off something like $100,000 of duties on the materials imported to be used in the construction of this work. But hon, gentlemen opposite forget that when the Government had, not only 25,000,000 acres of land, but all the lands in the North-West at their disposal for the construction of this work, that when Parliament placed at their disposal 100,000,000 acres, all the objection they had was that this land was not sufficient to build the railway. We had then all these exemptions of which the hon. gentlemen opposite complain. We could not only bring in free the bolts, nuts and spikes, but in addition to that, every locomotive, every steam shovel every spade, and everything required in construction could in our hands be brought in free. Did they forget that when we had exemption of duty on everything brought into the country, when we had exemption of our lands forever from taxation, when we had all these particular advantages, as on the Intercolonial Railway, they said: "For God's sake do not ge on." They were startled; they said the country was going to be ruined. If, with all these exemptions and not 25,000,000 but 100,000,000 acres, the construction of the road was going to ruin the country, how will the Syndicate, with but a paltry 25,000,006 acres and $25,000,000, enrich themselves so that they are going to be gigantic millionzires? I refer hon. gentlemen, who say these conditions are unheard of, to the Statute-book of Quebec, where he will and that the property of railways subsidized by Government is free of taxation. Then refer to the laws of New Bruns.

wick, and they will find that the ex-Minister of Customs got a concession of 10,000 acres of land free of taxation by the Government of New Branswick for a number of years.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. For ten years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Very well. If through an open, rich, cultivated country, the hon. gentleman could obtain such a concession as that, what would be ask if he had been making a contract to construct a road through an uninhabited country? He was in the company before, and what would you suppose was the amount of overnation these careful. pose was the amount of exemption these gentle-men wanted, when they asked Parliament to give them a charter for this very work? It was that for fifty years all the property of the company should be exempt from taxation. That stands on the Statute-book to-day. I tell hon, gentlemen opposite, before they can pump up much excitement with all the energy and labor they can exert outside of this House in relation to this question, they have got to answer the question, how $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land would enable a company to build and operate the Canadian Pacific Railway for ever, free from any liability. It was thought a ruinous scheme to the people whereby hon, gentlemen opposite had 100,000,000 acres at their disposal and which they said were worth $3.18 an acreat least a large portion of it; yet the leader of the Opposition so far forgot himself as to come down to Parliament and ask it to be guilty of a gross violation of the faith of this He was a member of the Government that pledged themselves to British Columbia to build its section. and to take two millions out of the treasury therefor; and now he professes to be much startled at the utter ruin of the country supposed to be threatened by this contract. If he had had one inch of ground to stand on a year ago it was that with these 100,000,000 acres Canada was to be ruined forever by the building and working of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and yet, with that as the postulate, what did he do? He came and said: "So disastrous will that be to Canada, your going on with that work, that I ask this Parliament to violate the public faith and go back on the pledges which the Government, of which I was a member, gave to the Imperial Government and the Government of British Columbia, and stop at the foot of the Rocky Mountains." Yet, when we came down and showed the people that for the paltry price mentioned, when we showed we were going to accomplish this great work, insuring all the magnificent results so eloquently painted by the member for Lambton and other hon. members, securing a progress and prosperity that could be attained in no other way for 25,000,000 acres and $25,000,000, hon gentlemen opposite denounced our scheme, but were astonished to find they could produce no excitement, in the country or House, against it. Except in the case of some hon, member who, for some reason of his own, who may be desirous to make common cause with hon, gentlemen opposite—there does not appear a single man on the Ministerial side who is not prepared to sustain the Government on this great question. Sill hon. gentlemen opposite want more time. Time for what? To play the game of obstruction. What did they do before? Those hon, gentlemen, by precisely such a course as the present, killed the Allan contract and prevented Canada from having, as she would have had to-day, the railway well under construction and fast advancing to completion. They think they can return to those tactics. It is too late. We have had eight years of solid discussion on this question. The people in two General Elections declared by overwhelming majorities that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be built, and that $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres was not too great a price for that work. Under these circumstances, I say it is not only a violation of public faith, but of party duty, not to oppose this scheme and policy at the present day. Hon, gentlemen opposite say the question was suddenly sprung on the people. How sprung? We have heard Parliament again and again declare it would be too glad too give much better terms to secure the construction of this work. Surprised are they? Why, the hon, member for Lambton must forget the Speech from the Throne, when he asked: when were we informed that it was for the consideration of the Syndicate bargain that we were called together? We were informed in His Excellency's Speech that the contract, and papers therewith, would be submitted to Parliament for its earnest consideration.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken; his hon, leader said, long before Parliament met we were informed of the calling together of Parliament, and the hon. gentleman now reads from the Speech, what took place after Parliament was called together.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps I mistook the hon. gentleman, if he did not say we were not informed why Parliament was called.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The First Minister stated why it was called.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I accept the hon, gentleman's explanation. The paragraph in the Speech on this subject I will read:

"With this view I have summoned you before the usual period, as no with this view i have summoned you before the usual period, as no action can be taken by the contractors to prosecute the work, and no permanent arrangement for the organization of a systematic emigration from Europe to the North-West Territories, can be satisfactorily made until the policy of Parliament with respect to the railway has been decided."

I ask is not this sufficient reason for urgency in this case, why Parliament should not be asked, in a question not new to the House or country, to sanction delay? Parliament has pronounced upon the case again and again with terms more onerous involved. Is there, then, any hon. gentleman prepared to say that the reasons given in His Excellency's Speech are not valid, intelligent, and intelligible? Do hon. gentlemen not know that while they have been obstructing this measure—which, as statesmen, they were bound, by everything that could bind public men, to give hearty support to-that a great rival line, a favorite, it appears, with hon, gentlemen opposite, the Northern Pacific Ruilroad has forestalled the market and secured it, and is now in the commanding position. What more? Those people not only forestalled the market in floating their bonds and going on vigorously with their work, but entered the field for emigration to their lands. Our hands meanwhile are tied. Hon gentlemen opposite have gone back on their conduct and policy, not being able present the first argument against this scheme until they had turned on themselves. Those gentlemen who occupy the high position of a constitutional Opposition have lowered it down to a mere factious Opposition in order to prevent the Government proceeding with the public business in any way favorable to the public interest. Every one knows that the high hopes that Canada has entertained of bringing the great tide of emigration into the North-West depends on the early period at which these gentlemen of the Syndicate shall be in a position to take the field all over Europe, and adopt that course which alone can make the contract they have undertaken a successful one, by peopling rapidly that great country. These hon, gentlemen say you not only allowed a few paltry articles to come in free—and that is a terrible infringement upon the National Policy-but you exempt the lands from taxation. I referred to one of their own ex-colleagues who only was too glad to stipulate for the same condition in regard to a railway in which he was concerned; and the country wisely gave them the power of exempting the lands until they Sir Charles Tupper.

wherever they choose. Why, Sir, when their Government was in power they were prepared to give 10, or 12, or 20 sections per mile of the finest lands of the North-West to anybody who choose to build branches. The leader of the Opposition says the Syndicate will strike for the best lands in the country; but in the Manitoba Land Bill of the late Administration, brought down by the late Minister of the Interior, the railway companies have power to build their branches in any and every direction, and secure sections of 10, or 12, or 20 miles, according to location, or $10,000 per mile in cash. These gentlemen stand pledged to build every mile of the road, and if they cannot get lands within 24 miles of the railway, they have to build another thousand miles before they can get the 25,000,000 acres. leader of the Opposition, we the only 11,000,000 acres of land between the have western boundary of Manitoba and the foot of the Rocky Mountains. Now, if that is the case, where are the Company to get the other 14,000,000? They must either take it away outside of that region, where the land is not nearly so valuable, or build branches at their own cost and locate the lands alongside. But the present scheme is different from the Allan contract, and from the Act of the last Parliament, in this respect: that we reserve alternate sections along the line of this road to recoup the country for the comparatively insignificant amount which we have to expend on the railway. What did the Government of New Brunswick do in reference to the European and North American Railway? They not only gave the company a charter and aided their road, but gave them the right of way for 200 feet from the centre of the line, and power to build branches to any part of the Province. So far from our policy, with regard to exemption, being at all novel, it is in accordance with the policy and the law of every Province of this Dominion as well as of the United States. I have detained the House longer than I intended, but I thought the time had come when I should make these statements - not so much for the information of my hon, friends, who are perfectly well aware of the factsbut that they might go to the country side by side with the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite, who are endeavoring to create a feeling in the public mind at entire variance with the facts; who are prepared to forget their own pa t record, and what has been customary in parliamentary practice, in order that they may suit the exigencies of their party. I admit that the exigencies of their party are great, but they will find as they found in regard to another great national question in this country—the fiscal policy that they have not an inch of ground to stand upon. They found that they came to a fatal determination when they resolved to nail their colors to the mast of a one-sided Freetrade policy. I admit that they find it necessary to excite the public mind on some new topic, but, as before, they will find themselves mistaken. I have too much faith in the intelligence of this country to believe otherwise. I am satisfied that upon this great question, as upon the other great national question, they will find themselves completely overwhelmed by the antagonism of the intelligent public sentiment of the country. A number of hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House have made themselves merry over the statement of my right hon friend the leader of the Government, that it was necessary that the contractors should be in a position to put men into the woods to get out the ties. I am satisfied my hon, friend the member for Lambton, knowing that the road is to be built from one end, will not say that it is not of vital consequence that the contractors should be in a position to get out the enormous number of ties that will be required, and that they should get to work at them in the coming summer. These other hon. gentlemen have no objection to losing the entire summer. were in a fair position of realizing from them. The hon leader of the Opposition has stated to the House, They say we allow the Company to build branch lines that unless he can defeat what is the settled policy of The hon, leader of the Opposition has stated to the House,

Canada-for it is not the policy of our party alone, but it was the policy of the leader of the late Government-the country will suffer a great national loss. And what course does the hon, gentleman take now? When we had 100,000,000 acres of land placed at our disposal for the purpose of building the road by a vote of this House, he said: "Stop, in Heaven's name, the country is going to ruin; stop at the foot of the Rocky Mountaine." That, Sir, is what we are not going to do. We can get a thousand Syndicates that will build a road from Winnipeg to the foot of the Rocky Mountains at a small charge. But to do that would be to do something which would make the hope of a Canadian Pacific Railway, either from Nipissing to the North-West, or from the foot of the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean, an idle dream. The hon gentleman knows very well that the hope of Canada of obtaining such a road will be an idle dream the moment that the construction of this easily built, and, when built, profitable portion of the line, is handed over to a Syndicate. I can quite understand that a number of the hon. gentleman's friends outside, who are just as intense in their party feelings as his friends inside the House, would like to get a soft thing of that kind -to use a rather slangy expression—but they will never get it from this Government. Our policy—and we have nailed our colors to the mast-is a through line for the Canadian Pacific Railway. But we do not want any Syndicate to have the work on terms which would be ruinous to those engaged in it, and render the undertaking a disastrous failure. The hon. gentleman, by the policy he is now declaring, is carrying obstruction to the very extreme limit of faction. Knowing that an overwhelming majority of this House, representing as they do an overwhelming public sentiment, as again and again recorded, are determined to sustain themselves and pass an arrangement better than the most sanguine man in Canada believed possible six months ago-finding it impossible to shake the allegiance of a single man supporting the Government, the hon gentleman has gone so far as to threaten the Syndicate. He says if the day ever comes when we get into power, we will yet crush you. We will be as regardless of the public faith pledged to you, as we were regardless of our faith pledged to British Columbia. With regard to this great work, I wish to read the speech of the hon. leader of the Government, in proposing the motion to go on with this question, de die in diem. The hon. member for West Durham did not divide the House-

Mr. BLAKE. I dissented,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman did not divide the House, and the statement of my right hon. friend covered the whole case. He said, speaking of the suggestion of the hon. leader of the Opposition, to allow an opportunity to be given for questions to be put to the Government:

"I shall accede to that, and I would say that the right of no private member is affected. It simply provides this: that this being a question of the greatest importance, requiring an immediate settlement, should be discussed first. After it is disposed of, Parliament will have every opportunity of discussing and deciding upon every question which is submitted to it."

So that the hon. gentleman stated frankly to the House, that what he wanted was not merely a suspension of the Orders for that period, but that, until that question was finally disposed of, he asked the House to go on with it, seeing that it was a question upon which so much depends in the interests of the country, and which would place those gentlemen, by the ratification of this contract, in a position at once to take the field, and to make those arrangements involving the enormous expenditure of millions, to be at once expended by them in connection with immigration, and obtaining plant and everything else, for the rapid prosecution of the work. But the hon gentleman says: No; I have got a better scheme. Throw away your national both sides of this House have been pledging themselves to vote for; throw all that away and make a con-nection with the Northern Pacific Railway. That is the policy of the hon, gentleman. I have no objection to any railway connection which the commercial interest of Canada demands, but I say it would be treating the people of this country, as they have no right to be treated, if we were to turn back, after all that has been pledged by hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House, and say that we intend to seek another line of communication with our great North-West; that we intend to leave Canada at the feet of the United States; that we intend to leave Canada and her commercial arrangements all subject to a stroke of the pen in a bureau at Washington. The position I take is, that if the line was to be built by the Sault Ste. Marie—and I was ready and prepared to support the construction of that line —if it was the only means, for the next twenty years, of having communication with the North-West, when we believed we had it in our power to secure the construction of a through line of railway, I opposed it because I wanted a national line. When the time came that, under the management of hon, gentlemen opposite, the conditions of this country became such that we could not hope to grapple with the work for a long time to come, we thought that if we were to be deprived of any railway communication with the North-West, if there was no other means for the next twenty years of filling up that fertile plain with a large and industrious population, we were willing to attempt the Sault Ste. Marie line. But now we have the means in our grasp of constructing a national line on terms such as the most sanguine man in this country did not believe possible a few months ago, and it would be treason to our country not to carry out that national line which is required, even if the Sault Ste Marie line were built to-morrow. If that line were built to-morrow, we would be independent if we had a national through line of our own, and we would not be in a position to have the trade of Canada convulsed and the greatest interest of the country imperilled by being dependent on communication through a foreign country. A year ago the hon, gentleman opposite was prepared to take the estimate of the hon. gentleman for Lambton of the value of the land in the North-West, and holding that estimate of their value, how can that hon. gentleman say that that great fertile country, capable of being made the very heart and soul, as it were, of Canada, is to be left dependent for communication with the older Provinces upon a line through the United States? Did he not hear what the ex-Minister of Finance told him the other night, who got two pages to hold up a map before this House in order to excite the horror and alarm of hon. gentlemen. Why, he says, I have discovered a most frightful thing-it turned out, I believe, to be a mare's nest-I have discovered that it is positively designed that we shall have a line pushed down from Crookston to Devil's Lake, and a connection made from the Canadian Pacific Railway to that! do you suppose was to be the frightful disaster that was to happen to Canada? Why, Sir, instead of Canadian traffic and the Canadian North-West being developed through Canadian channels, it was absolutely going to bring the trade and business of that country through the United States down to Duluth. It so nappened that that was exactly the policy that his hon leader was fighting for. His hon. leader says: "Throw away your national line, I can develop the North-West better through the United States than in any other way." But if that be true, where the horror, where the alarm, where the danger that convulsed the ex-Minister of Finance, and threw him wonderfully off his balance for the nonce? I say that there has not been one argument offered against our scheme, that has not been answered by one of the hon, gentlemen opposite. There line of railways, abandon that which I and every man on has not been, to this hour, a single proposition propounded that is not revolting to the common sense of hon gentlemen and the judgment of the people of this country. And yet we are to have delay while they make a dying though ineffectual struggle, not to kill the Canadian Pacific Railway, but to hold us back until another and a rival line takes possession of the market.

Mr. ANGLIN. After the extraordinary speech to which we have just listened, it is necessary to call the attention of the House to the fact that the question before us is simply this: that a proposition has been placed in the hands of the Government of this country, signed by a large number of the most respec'able, influential and wealthy men of this Dominion, in which they propose to construct this railway from Lake Nipissing, or Callendar Station, to Linkoping and from Selkirk to the Pacific-if that be the desire of Parliament and the country-on terms incomparably better for the cou try than the terms which we are now asked to accept. The hon. Minister of Railways wished to divert the attention of members from the consideration of this most important question. He did not attempt an answer to the plain statement made by the hon member for West Durham. He did not attempt to make the slightest reply to the able and intelligent speech of the hon member for Halton (Mr. Macdougall), who, while he acknowledges that he is bound by party ties to hon gentlemen opposite, that he has been sent here to sustain them in carrying out what is called the National Policy, and that he is in sympathy with them on general matters of policy, yet, Sir, manfully, frankly, and to his infinite credit, declares that he is not prepared, until due time has been given for the consideration of the new offer, to say that the terms we are now asked to approve of should beapproved of. To that speech, Sir, so creditable to that hon. gentleman, so moderate in its tone, and so frank, the only reply vouchsafed was the insulting insinuation hurled at the member for Halton. We do not ask delay for the sake of delay. We believe that the circumstances have been so altered by the submission of this proposal, that it is the duty of every hon. member of this House to demand from the Government that time should be given for consideration. If, as the hon. member for Halton remarked, this is a mere political dodge and not a bond fide proposition, if the men who are said to have signed it, have not signed it, or if, having signed it, they do not intend to fulfil the obligations they have there incurred, all that will soon be known, Let the Government put them to the test; let them demand that this million of money shall be put up, not in mere securities, but in hard cash, and so test their offer. I am not prepared to say that we should accept this offer, but I am prepared to say that this whole country should have time for the consideration of this great question; and this is the only question that now comes before the House. The hon. Minister of Railways has afforded us an opportunity of determining for ourselves the kind of reply he would make. The other day I had the pleasure of spending a day in Montreal with some friends, Conservatives and others, and from them I heard that the speech of the hon. Minister of Railways in Montreal was not an answer to the speech Mr. Blake delivered two days before, but that he proceeded to attack Mr. Blake and to pour torrents of vituperation upon him, until the great majority of the meeting, who were determined to see fair play, compelled him to abandon that line of argument and to make some effort to deal with the very important question for the consideration of which they had been invited to attend that meeting.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Will the hon, gentleman mention the name of one Conservative who made that statement to him?

Mr. ANGLIN. Mr. Speaker, I stand before this House, pronounce an opinion on this question; and let me known to it for thirteen years, and I make that statement on my personal honor and veracity, and not having the that, in so far as public opinion has been pronounced, Sir Charles Tupper.

liberty to use the name of the gentleman with whom I happened to meet, I am not prepared to violate all the courtesies of private life. The hon. gentleman believes me himself; he knows he believes me; he knows everybody in this Honse believes me; and every one who reads the reports in one or two of the Montreal papers will see that they sustain that statement. It was out of place to discuss a large number of the topics discussed by the hon. Minister of Railways, unless we are to give him the credit of merely striving to occupy the time of the House. While claiming to deal with the question before the House, he chose to launch out into a general discussion, and I therefore feel it my duty to notice cursorily, at any rate, a few of the remarks he made. He began by telling us that the course of this debate reminded him of a story of a controversy between two ministers whose audience was a deaf and dumb man. Did he mean to convey the impression that his audience in this case are deaf and dumb, and that they are willing to do the bidding of the Ministry? This deaf and dumb man was able to observe the result of the controversy by seeing which lost his temper first. We are willing to accept that evidence in this case. While the hon gentleman made an exhibition of temper that perhaps was not real, we certainly have not lost temper. We feel that we are discharging a great public duty in discussing this question fully. The hon, gentleman says we have not now the opportunity of making a midnight attack on the public opinion of this country. Who has made the midnight attack upon the public opinion of this country? Who has endeavored to steal away the public opinion of this country like a thief in the night? Who has sudeavored to create a false impression as to the terms of this contract? Surely not we on this side of the House; for we ourselves had only the slightest idea of what the terms of this contract were before it was laid before the House. Some of us were no doubt suspicious, for we had experience of " the ways that are dark and the tricks that are vain " of gentlemen on the other side of the House. The gentlemen opposite say that the country know all about the contract and that public opinion is now thoroughly informed. Although the hon, gentlemen opposite have done all in their power to misinform the people, yet they now declare the people know all about the question and are now fully prepared to pronounce upon it, and that Parliament should now be fully prepared to deal with it. The people of the country are not even now fully informed of all the monstrous features of the contract. To this day there is scarcely an hon. gentleman who rises on this side of the House to discuss the contract who does not discover in it some new and grave objection. Hon. gentlemen opposite laugh, but they perhaps think we are more astute than we really are. We have endeavored to analyse it and criticise it. But, notwithstanding all that, I assure the hon. Minister of Railways, and all the hon. gentlemen opposite, that even at this moment I am not satisfied that we know thoroughly how objectionable this charter is. We have not succeeded yet in finding a single redeeming feature or a single clause which we can say should commend itself to the public or the majority of hon. members The very fact that, within a few days, so important a body as the Montreal Corn Exchange has expressed an opinion upon the subject, is in itself evidence that the people at large a e not thoroughly acquainted with all its bearings. I, myself, am receiving every day letters from persons to whom I have sent copies of the contract, sometimes with my own com-ments on it, and I find that some of the most intelligent persons in our Province are not properly acquainted with the character of the scheme. So it is not right to say, it is not in accordance with the facts, that the public are thoroughly informed and have had a fair opportunity to pronounce an opinion on this question; and let me it has not been so hostile to the measure as we on this side of the House had reason to expect. Hon gentlemen opposite talk a great deal about our public meetings. They pretend to say that there is something very wrong because they were not allowed to reply at all our meetings. Take for instance, the meeting at Montreal. There the hon member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) addressed a crowded audience and held their attention spell-bound until after one o'clock in the morning in merely describing the outlines of this charter, and the effects it must produce if it were ratified. What time would there have been after that for the hon. Minister of Railways to have addressed the same audience, for we know he is always able to occupy five or six hours if necessary, and we have seen this afternoon even, how the hon. gentleman can occupy a couple of hours without embarrassment, if he were, at Montreal, to have followed the hon. member for West Durham, and made a speech. That hon. gentleman must have replied, and they might thus have continued the game. But I think hon. gentlemen must be satisfied that it would be a matter of impossibility for audiences to remain during all the time that would be thus occupied. Those present at the first meeting in Montreal complained very much indeed of what they suffered from being crowded together for so many hours. Not a soul who was in thought of getting out, all were willing to remain and hear the explanations of the hon. member for West Durham; but human nature can only endure a certain amount of pleasure and pain, and on that occasion the pleasure and pain were combined, because the heat was very great and a large number of people were suffering from being crowded together, and it would therefore have been absurd to expect those people to remain to hear the Minister of Railways. That hon. gentleman called another meeting which was not so largely attended; a great number of persons went to hear him, and a great many went, hoping to hear a satisfactory reply to the statements of the hon, member for West Durham; but even some of the Minister's warmest friends came away disappointed, and we need not wonder, if, on that occasion, the hon, gentleman made such a reply as he did this afternoon in reply to the hon, members for West Durham and

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. ANGLIN. I will not attempt, Mr. Speaker, to follow the hon, the Minister of Railways through the devious course he chose to take this afternoon, nor comment at any very great length upon the statements he chose to make and the charges he chose to prefer against some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, because I do not wish to assist him in distracting the attention of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, or diverting their minds from the consideration of the very serious question upon which we will all have to pronounce by and bye. But so extraordinary a speech as that cannot very well be allowed to pass entirely unnoticed. The hone the Minister of Railways asserted, in the first place, that the public are sufficiently informed on the subject at issue, and yet in the next breath he asserted that we who alone have attempted to convey any information on the subject to the public have deliberately misled them with regard to the terms of the contract; that whatever public indignation and the hon the Minister of Railways has alone spoken of indignation—has been manifested through the country; wherever the people have expressed disapproval of the terms of this contract, they have been moved to such indignation and led to express such disapproval because we have mistated the terms of the contract. Those two declahave mistated the terms of the contract. Those two declarations of the hon. Minister are directly contradictory. If the people were well informed, as he has alleged, we could mation, and it is the duty of hon gentlemen opposite to place themselves in communication with the public, not merely by speeches delivered in this House, but by appearing before their constituents face to face, with this contract in their hands, and so counteract the mischief we have done Such a charge as that, of deliberately misstating the terms of the contract and deliberately seeking to mislead the public on this subject, would be a very serious charge, indeed, if made by any other hon, gentleman, or even when made by the hon. the Minister of Railways, were it sustained by the slightest shadow of evidence or proof. The hon, the Minister of Railways has asserted that we have misrepresented especially that portion of the charter which relates to the selection of lands in the North-West. In his speech this afternoon he asserted that the Syndicate or Company will have no right to select lands anywhere, except in the North-West Territory, beyond the 57° of north latitude. He afterwards admitted that they will have a right of selection, but only where they build branch railroads which will be of rare benefit to the country, and as the Government will there also be entitled to the alternate square mile blocks, the Company would have no such right of selection as was asserted. He went on to argue that the late Government, under the Mills' Bill, provided that branch lines might be built in that country and subsidized out of those very lands; and he asserted that under the provisions of this bargain, the interests of the country were much better protected than they were under the Mills Bill. We are not obliged to discuss the merits or demerits of the Mills' Bill, and it would be a waste of time to pay any particular attention to that part of the hon. gentleman's statement; but I wish to point out, because I have seen it asserted elsewhere with the object of misleading the public, that on this point we are in error, that the contract gives to the Syndicate the right to select all the lands not within the 24 miles, to select where they please, to lay outlines of railway where they please, and obtain possession at once of alternate lots of the 24 miles on each side of the lines so laid out without having built a single mile of any one of the branches. It is not provided in any portion of the charter that before obtaining possession of those additional lands they shall be required to build the branch rail-They are merely required to lay out a line where they please, to fyle a plan in the office of the department here. and thereupon they acquire the right to take possession of the alternate blocks of 24 miles on each side of the line so laid out. I do not believe the Minister of Railways would attempt before an intelligent audience to repeat the allegation he has made in this House, provided that some one was on the platform beside him having in his hand a copy of the charter and able to understand and interpret it intelligently. But the hon, gentlemen says the right of selection is only beyond the 57° of north latitude. There is a provision that if the Company are not satisfied with the character of the lands along the line of railways, if in any of these there is a material portion unfit for settlement, they may go into the North-West Territory and select other lands there with the approval in that case, and in that case only, of the Governor in Council. That is my reading of that section, and I believe it is the common-sense reading, and that no great acumon is needed to understand it. We have not miled the public with respect to that or any section, or any other of the terms of this extraordinary contract. What we have said in the House we have repeated in the country. What we have said face to face with the hon. gentleman and his colleagues in this House we have repeated to the people in different parts of the country, and, so far as we have been able to reach the people, we have convinced the people, and a strong feeling of disapproval of the contract has been manifested. The hon. not have misled them; if we have misled them to the extent wentleman says we did not arouse much enthusiasm. Under alleged, then further time is required by them to obtain infor-

do not ourselves possess much enthusiasm. We are rather sad and dispirited at the contemplation of this act of the Government and the strong probability of the contract being sustained by a large majority in this House. We sought to enlighten the public mind; we sought to convey to the public an accurate idea of what the terms of charter are, and we are satisfied that when the people understand them they will, in all cases where partizan feeling does not interfere, express their disapproval of the And they have done so. Large meetings in scheme. Toronto. Hamilton, London and Montreal, Halifax and Quebec have done so. The Legislature of Manitoba has expressed its disapproval. The corporation of Toronto and the Montreal Corn Exchange have adopted the same course. On the other side what do we find? The Minister of Railways appeared before a sympathetic audience in London, and afterwards delivered addresses in Toronto and Montreal. do not know what the attendance was at Toronto, but I believe the London meeting was as large as that addressed by Mr. Blake; but it was not so in Montreal. With the exception of those meetings and one we have heard of in North Renfrew. we have hardly heard of an instance in which hon, gentlemen opposite have obtained a declaration of public opinion in favor of the contract. They have complained very much of not being allowed to address meetings held by the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House through the country. But it was open to them to call meetings themselves. If they had confidence that the public would approve of the measure, a party commanding so large a majority in this House should have courted an expression of public approval. They should themselves have gone before the people. They should have been the first to submit the contract to the people, and ask the people for their opinion thereon. They should have said: "Here is the bargain, the best ever made, and the best that is possible under the circumstances. Its terms are most advantageous. Accept it, for it is to your interest. We take our stand upon it, and tell you it is a good bargain; that if the road is to be built (and all parties are pledged to build it) this is the best possible mode of doing it. We have done all we could and have not sacrificed your interests, or made the bargain in a corner, but openly and in the light of day. So soon as the negotiations were completed we laid them before the public; we maintained the dignity of Parliament by consulting the dignity and elf respect of the people by laying before them all the facts, and asking them to express their approval in any way they pleased." I think they should have taken some such course as that. Instead of doing so, they carp at the action of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and assert that they endeavored to excite public indignation in regard to the contract, and that their efforts have resulted in lamentable failure. We do not so regard it. We, on the contrary, are quite pleased with the results of our efforts so far. We think we have to-day the moral sympathy of the great majority of the people. A dissolution has been talked of. I do not know that any of us have insisted on a dissolution, but if hon, gentlemen opposite will go to the people, we will gladly accord our support to any motion to that effect. We will gladly meet them before the people of the country, and there in what even they must admit is a constitutional mode, and without any insult to the dignity of Parliament, we will ascertain the wishes of the people. If they choose to relegate us to obscurity, or decide that we shall remain on this side of the House, we shall bow respectfully to that decision, and of course cease our opposition to this extraor-dinary measure. Although we know the people have sometimes been mistaken, we have never lost our confidence in their integrity, honesty and intelligence. We have never shown any fear or apprehension with regard to them. We are of the people and with the people, and by-and-bye, I trust, nay, I am sure, when we appear before them at the polls, I terms. If there is a pessimist among us I do not think he Mr. ANGLIN.

we shall find the people with us. For eight long years, the hon. gentleman says, this question has been before the people; that there is nothing novel in it-nothing extraordinary—nothing of which the people have not already expressed their entire approval. The people have never yet been asked to express their approval or disapproval of the Pacific Railway scheme in a direct way. One Parliament about to expire was asked by the hon. gentleman opposite to enter into that most onerous bargain with British Columbia, and a large majority assisted them in imposing its terms on Canada. The elections occurred soon after, but there was then no time, chance or opportunity of getting rid of those terms.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman deny that his present leader stated in this House that the contract question had been referred to the people and fully considered, and that the people had decided in favor of it, and that we had received no mandate to reverse it—that it was not reversible by us?

Mr. ANGLIN. I do not remember that he uttered such

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can show he did from his speech.

Mr. ANGLIN. It does not matter whether he did or not for the purpose of this argument, and for this good and sufficient reason—that before we had any chance of addressing the people on this subject we were bound, fettered and manucled by the bargain, which had become part of the constitution of the country, had been embodied in a royal proclamation, and become as binding upon us as the British North America Act, under which we meet and make laws here. We could not set aside those terms if we would, and we would not, because we had too high a regard for the faith and honor of Canada. Although we resisted by every means in our power the imposition of those terms, and strove for their modification ineffectually, we recognized, in the majority of both Houses of Parliament, the right to bind the country to even a disadvantageous bargain, and felt it our duty to give effect, so far as the circumstances of the country would permit, to an undertaking of which we still disapproved. When the member for Lambton went before the country, he had a railway policy, it is true, but the people did not, so far as I recollect, pass any decided opinion on the policy of constructing a railway across the continent, which we were bound to do. He did very fully admit and recognise the liability that existed, stating very expressly the mode in which he proposed to fulfil the obligations of the country. That, I admit, did meet with the approval of the people. But the question as to whether the railway should or should not be built within a very short time, was never submitted to the people, for the very good reason that hon. gentlemen oppposite had put it out of the power of any party to reopen that question. This question has not been before the country for eight years or eight weeks even. True, the idea of building a Canadian Pacific Railway has been before it for eight years and various projects have been mooted; but this is entirely, essentially different from any project ever before submitted. It is of such a strange, remarkable character, that until the papers were laid on the Table, not even leading members of the House could form anything like an accurate idea of the scope, purport, and meaning of this contract. When the member for Lambton complained of this lately, the leader of the Government asserted that he and other members knew well why we were to assemble here in Parliament, and asserted or insinuated besides, that the member for Lambton and many on the same side know pretty well what the terms of this bargain were. The member for Lambton denied that on his own part, and we all denied it on our part. Not one of us could form anything like an accurate opinion of its could imagine the terms were so bad as they now appear. We were startled when we found among other things that the Government had undertaken to commence and complete the 90 miles from Yale to Port Moody. We never had the faintest suspicion that the Government had undertaken an obligation of that kind, which is an entirely new proposal. Now, the hon. Minister of Railways quotes the Speech from the Throne to show that the statement of the hon. member for Lambton is an incorrect statement. Well, the Governor General's speech promised us, among other things, that the contract and the papers relating to it would be laid before Parliament. Where are those papers? Not a single paper has been laid on the Table of the House, respecting the contract, save the contract itself and the appendix which is merely the Act of incorporation. We asked for those papers; we asked for all the information on the matter to which Parliament is entitled, and we were told that we were asking something unreasonable, something unprecedented, and, had the hon. Minister of Railways been speaking, he would have added unpatriotic. No British Ministry would dare to submit a question of this kind to the Imperial Parliament without bringing down every scrap of paper relating to it that could be found anywhere, without furnishing all information possible on the subject. We saw with regard to the Washington Treaty how complete was the information we received. We were furnished, not merely with the Treaty itself, but with the protocols. This was done because it was known that the information must be laid before the Imperial Parliament. We saw what took place from day to day, and now when we contrast what is done in this Parliament with what is done in that, we are forced to the conclusion that, if only the Canadian Parliament had been consulted on that question we would have received only the treaty, and would never have learned that free trade in lumber and coal had been offered us and rejected by the leader of this Government. I did not blame the hon gentlemen then, nor do I blame him now, for that refusal, but I state simply that I believe that information would have been suppressed. We have not to-day the information we ought to have. are told that this is the best bargain that it was possible to make; but, Sir, we have a right to see and judge for ourselves; the people have a right to see and judge for themselves, in a matter of this kind. The Ministry is adopting a wrong course, which, relying on-I shall not say as a subservientbut a very faithful body of followers, refuses to give to this Parliament and the people the information to which they are entitled, and insists on forcing upon this country terms and conditions of which the people disapprove on the plea that they are the best that can be obtained. Turning from that point, the hon. Minister made a most extraordinary attack on the hon. member for Westmoreland. The hon. Minister of Railways must always attack somebody or his speeches would be rather spiritless. If he excels in anything, it is in the power of invective and attack, and he made a most wanton attack this afternoon on the hon. member for Westmoreland. That hon, gentleman is quite able to defend himself, and I shall not undertake to defend him; but let me bear testimony to the fact which has come within my own knowledge and observation, and I call upon the hon. Finance Minister to bear testimony to this fact also, that the charge against the hon. member for Westmoreland, that he was ever influenced by a desire to obtain office, is untrue—I was about to say a false and scandalous accusation. I knew that hon gentleman when he sat with me in the Local Legislature, and was a colleague of the hon. Finance Minister. I knew him years afterwards, when he and I were colleagues, and I knew him to be always entirely beyond the reach of any suspicion of hankering after office. He never cared to hold office, and when on one occasion he was induced to lowest estimate, $28,000,000. The hon. Minister of Railways accept office, he resigned within a short time, because he disapproved of the policy of the Government. Afterwards, when he became a member of the Government, in which I was his colleague, we had the greatest possible difficulty in forcing office upon his acceptance. There is no man in forcing office upon his acceptance. in the Province of New Brunswick, and I hold there must be very few in the Province of Nova Scotia, who would believe that there is the slightest foundation for so monstrous and atrocious a charge as that made against the hon. member for Westmoreland. I leave the hon, member to answer, as far as he thinks necessary, the long attack made upon him. Let me say a few words with regard to the Act of 1874, which the hon. Minister of Railways asserts authorized him and his colleagues to go to London to open negotiations for the making of a contract, and finally to make such a contract as that laid on the Table. 20,000,000 acres land per mile, or 50,000,000 in all, and $10,000,000 per mile, or about $27,000,000 cash in all, besides the interest on such other sum as may be agreed, that interest to run for 20 years, are the terms of the Act. Will hon. gentlemen assume that, acre for acre, the 50,000,000 acres of land are as valuable as the 25,000,000 the Syndicate are to get? Any one who knows the character of the country, and who has read the Act of 1874, which reads: "lands along the line of railway of fair average character," will see at once that the 50,000,000 acres so lying are actually of less value than the 25,000,000, of which 11,000,000 are close to the railway and 14,000,000 are to be selected wherever the contractors choose to go into the fertile belt and select it. Taking the land of a fair average quality, along the whole line of railway from the boundary of Ontario to the Pacific Ocean, through the Rocky Mountains and everywhere, the 50,000,000 acres could not be worth as much as the 25,000,000 acres whi h the Syndicate would get under the terms of this contract, 11,000,000 of which are to lie in the fertile belts close to the line of railway and 14,000,000 to be selected where the Syndicate chooses. Will any reasonable man say that lands lying close to the railway are not worth more than lands twenty or twenty-five miles off? The Act of 1874 says lands of "fair average quality," not "fairly fit for settlement." Now, "fair average quality," in the common-sense interpretation of the term, must be held to mean a fair average of the lands of the country through which the road runs. It cannot possibly be held to mean what land the Syndicate pleases to select. But in that respect the contract does not agree with the terms of the Act, and the Act does not authorize the Government to enter into any such arrangements. Under the Act of 1874, the contractors became possessed of these 50,000,000 of acres of land—they did not become absolute owners of it. They were not exempted from local taxation. It was provided that the Government should dispose of twothirds of the land and hand the proceeds over to the company, while only one-third of the lands was at the disposal of the company; the obvious reason for that arrangement being the desire to prevent a land monopoly in the North-West. When the Allan contract was under consideration, one of the strongest objections to it urged by this side of the House was that it tended to the creation of a land monopoly, and when the hon, member for Lambton introduced his Bill he took good care that such a monopoly should be avoided by means of the provision to which I I have referred. The Act of 1874 and the present contract differ in respect to another salient point. In the Act of 1874 it was distinctly provided that from any sum to be paid to the contractors, under the terms of any contract, was to be deducted the whole cost of the surveys and of any portion of the railway constructed as a Government work. Under this contract we give the Syndicate the land, and we give them the absolute ownership of a portion of the road, the building of which will cost the country, at the

has asserted deliberately to-day, as he rashly asserted on a previous occasion, that the making of this contract was authorized and justified by the Act of 1874. I shall not allude further to that Act, but I thought it proper to point out those two or three very remarkable points which show that if the present contract, has any connection with the Act of 1874 it is a violation of that Act. If the contract had been drawn up within the limits provided by that Act it would only have been necessary to lay it on the Table, and within 30 days it would have become ipso facto the law of the country. I do not think it is necessary to follow the hon. gentleman very closely in what he said in regard to the fact, that when the late Government came into office and found a deficit staring them in the face, notwithstanding the surpluses which had been rolling up for a number of years, they found it necessary to impose fresh taxation upon the people, which taxation, if the volume of business had remained as large as in previous years, would have yielded a revenue of $3,000,000. The decrease in the business of the country, though so often and emphatically attributed by the hon, gentlemen to the misgovernment and mismanagement of the late Administration, was regarded by every reasonable man as being due simply to the general depression of business, in which we unavoidably participated. Though we do technically speak of the imposition of so much taxation as being so much of an additional burden cast upon the people, we all know that increase in the rate of taxation does not always produce a corresponding increase of revenue. When the alteration of the Tariff did not yield the estimated increase of revenue, the only resource left to the Government of the day, opposed as they were to increasing the burdens of the people, was to endeavor by strict economy to diminish the expendi-The Minister of Railways has over and over again assorted that we were extravagant, that the controllable expenditure increased to a point far beyond what it should have reached had the Government been economically administered. He has again and again asserted that the deficits of those years amounted to $7,000,000, and though the statement has been repeatedly disproved in the House and out of it, as well as by the press, he could reiterate it again and doubtless he will continue to do so. He seems quite incapable of being persuaded that his statements may be erroneous, no matter how unquestionable the proofs. The hon. gentleman referred to his economy in his own department in the matter of advertising. There is no doubt that economy may be prudently exercised in this matter, and that a great deal has been paid by various Governments in this country for advertising which might have been saved. But there may be such a thing as a falsee conomy; and the offer for the construction of the Canada Pacific Railway. which I understand was placed in the hands of the Government to day, bona fide us I believe it to be, shows that because of his exercising a false economy in neglecting to advertise for offers the country runs the risk of losing $15,000,000. We will have to discuss all these subjects again. We have discussed most of them very frequently, but it is a strange thing to find the hon. gentleman now stating, with regard to land in the North-West, that actual experience has shown that the net products of what ought to have been some of the best land there, are but sixteen cents, an acre. Last year we had a different tale. Then the policy and interests of the Government required that they should enhance the value of those lands as much as possible; at all events represent them to be as valuable as any reasonable person would believe. But now it is their interest and policy to represent that land as having as little value as possible, and when they set down the value of the lands at $1 an acre that they have put the outside value upon them; although in another breath the Minister of Builways tells us that even now, if you gave him the right of selection, he could select 1,700,000 acres of land worth at least 25 an Mr. Anglin.

acre. It has been said that some of the gentlemen who compose the Syndicate are quite as astute as even the hea. the Minister of Railways, quite as good judges of the value of the lands; and if there are but 1,700,000 acres of land worth $5 an acre, there cannot be the slightest deabt that this Syndicate will manage to get possession of every acre, and that will be $8,500,000. Hon. gentlemen attempt to defend the policy of exempting from taxation the materials to be imported for the use of the railway, the steel rails which, under the operation of our present Tariff, would become subject to duty in 1872, the bolts, plates, spikes, &c., amounting in the whole to about $100,000 as the hon. gentleman says. He says that if the Government built the road these things, together with every locomotive, every spade and pick-axe would all be imported free of duty. Now that is an extraordinary declaration from so prominent an advocate of the National Policy. In the first place, were the Government to go on with the work the exemption from duty of these articles would inure to the benefit, not of contractors, but of the people at large. Moreover, it has become the settled policy of the Government-I think it was first settled as the policy of the country by the late Government—that when, in any case, tenders are invited or received for furnishing locomotives, cars and articles of that kind, in order to institute a comparison between the tenders sent from abroad and those submitted by the people of Canada, the amount of the duty on the articles must be added to the tenders of the foreigners in order to ascertain whether they are higher or lower than those of the people of Canada. Under Government control, then, every man in this country capable of producing any one of the articles required upon railroads, whether for construction or equipment, had the protection of the Tariff; but under the contract manufacturers in this country have no such protection. The contractors have the absolute right to import from abroad, free of duty, all the articles named in the contract. Again, with regard to the taxation of land, while the Government had these lands they were exempt from taxation, and any benefit derivable from that exemption would accrue to the people of the Dominion at large, not to a few contractors. When the contractors hold the land, instead of being compelled to proceed to settle the land, as the leader of the Government boasted last year would be the case by the operation of local taxation, they are to be absolutely exempt for 20 years to come, so that if they choose they may hold their lands idle while the Government proceed to settle up the alternate blocks, and thereby add largely to the market value of the lands held by the Company. The hon. Minister asserted that many railroads in the old Provinces are exempt from municipal taxation, and has spoken particularly of a road in which the hon. member for the county of St. John (Mr. Burpee). has a large interest. He say there is no taxation on that road according to a special Statute. He is mistaken. He seems to imagine that the charter was obtained for that road by the active efforts of the member for the county of St. John. I think attempts were made to build some such road as that before the member for the county of St. John took any part in it, and that the charter was already in existence for sometime. Efforts were made by others to get up a company, and finally a company was formed, in which the hon. member for the county of St. John and other gentlemen took an active part. They proceeded to the work of building that road without receiving a single dollar of money from the Province of New Brunswick. They did receive aid in lumber lands, valuable it may be, but still they could not be sold at that time for even $1 an acre. These lands were exempt from taxation for ten years, but the railroad itself was never exempt from taxation. It was provided that the net receipts of the road were to be liable for taxation, precisely as the income of private individuals. But supposing that road were exempt from taxation, supposing the property of lifty.

other roads were exempt, all that would furnish no good reason why the people of Canada should be called upon to exempt from taxation in this vast wilderness a company to whom we are to give money enough to build all the road they require and a vast territory of land beside. I do not care to follow the hon. Minister any further. The question really before the House at the present moment is the motion of the hon member for Shelburne (Mr. Robertson). We are told, and I believe, that a number of Canadian capitalists, as respectable as any in this country, as influential as any in this country, and all known to be above question men of great wealth, have deliberately proposed to undertake the construction of this road upon terms vastly better for the country than those contained in the contract. We now ask that the House should pause until the Government, who admit that they have received such a proposal, bring that proposal down to this House, and until we have time to enquire into all that relates to it. It will not do, Mr. Speaker, to say that this is a mere trick, a mere sham, a mere dodge, for I have heard all of these terms applied to it. The men who came forward and put their names to that document and declared themselves ready to deposit a large amount of money with the Government as security for the carrying out of the work, and as a pledge of their good faith, are not men who could be induced to take part in a political conspiracy even if any such thing had been conceived on this side of the House. For my own part, I heard first of this intention to create a new Syndicate, when I was on my way from St John to Montreal. When I reached Ottawa I found that very little was known on the subject by any one I spoke to except in the way of tumors in the newspapers, to which they attached very little importance indeed. The movement has been spontaneous on the part of those capitalists, some of whom are, I believe, friends, politically, of the gentlemen on the other side of the House. It is a proposal which the country will think deserves most respectful, careful, and attentive consideration on the part of the Government of this country, and the members of this House. The Government of the Dominion should, for their own sake, if they are not thoroughly infatuated, take care that no further suspicion be attached to them by reason of their refusing time for consideration of this proposal. They have, Sir, proceeded throughout this whole business in a way—let me tell them in all frankness and plainly, and I trust not offensively—such as to create the most intense suspicion on the part of the people of this country. Everywhere you turn men ask, why it is that the Government have become parties to such a contract as this, and why it is that they have endeavored to force it on the country in this extraordinary way; and I, for my own part, fail to find any answer. Some hint, let me say, to hon. gentlemen, for I want to be frank with them, at most corrupt motives on their part. I cannot believe that those suspicions are well founded, and yet, I can-not deny that suspicion exists, nor can any reason-able, sensible man deny that there are grounds for suspicion. A few short months ago gentlemen on the other side told us that it was the deliberate policy of the Government to build this road as a Government work. They entered into elaborate calculations to prove to us and the people of this country, that the road could be built as a Government work, and paid for out of the proceeds of the lands in the North-West, leaving a large surplus of money at the end of ten years, or money due, and still leave a vast territory to be disposed of. They then asserted that the policy which they proposed to adopt was a wise and sound policy, whereas they say now that this bargain is the best ever presented to the country, while we say it is the worst. They then told us that the other scheme was the best that could be devised. Scarcely had Parliament been prorogued when we found that three of those hon, gentlemen had gone to London. Before they left the Premier announced in a pic-nic speech that they had received proposals from companies for the construction of this road; that the proposals were of the most favorable character, so favorable that if they were accepted the people would be relieved of all liability and responsibility, and there would be an end to incurring any further debt, an end to any additional taxation. But they did not consider those proposals sufficiently favorable. At all events it was thought desirable to transfer the negotiations to London, where much more could be done, and they went to London; and Mr. Speaker, we heard from time to time from London that they were greatly successful; but about the time they left we had the leading papers of London, almost without exception, some of them serious business papers that never trouble themselves about party, condemning the course of our Ministers in London, one of them describing their course as a mixture of mystery and fuss. course as a mixture of mystery and fuss. They contrived, Mr. Speaker, somehow or other, while in London, to repel every capitalist who approached them, to create suspicions amongst all who had any business with them, and to excite the profound dislike and suspicion of the leading papers of the metropolis, and these are a great power in the world, and particularly in the money world. But when the Premier reached Hochelaga, he announced that he had made a bargain-a contract firm, though he had no power to make such a contract—and that the terms of that contract were such that even Mr. Mackenzie himself would be compelled when they were made known to admit in his place in Parliament that they were infinitely better than he had ever expected or attempted to obtain. Well, Sir, time passed on and it leaked out by and bye that a firm contract was not made, or anything like a contract, but an agreement which had to be completed in this country, and we were all willing to wait until the terms of the contract were finally arranged. It became known that the terms of the contract were settled and we were assured that they would be made known as soon as they were submitted to the Governor in Council and approved But about as soon as the public expected such approval would be given and the terms made known to the country, we found somehow or other that the dignity of Parliament stood in the way of any information being made public. The hon, gentlemen delude themselves greatly if they imagine that the people of this country can be hoodwinked by any plea that the dignity of Parliament stands between them and their right to know the terms that representatives have made on their behalf. dignity of Parliament is not to be preserved, maintained or promoted by secrecy of that kind. The dignity of Parliament, Mr. Speaker, is best maintained by keeping the majority of the members of this House in perfect sympathy with the people of this country in adopting such a policy openly and frankly as the public can approve of. But secrecy is utterly abhorrent to the people of Canada, and, Sir, the very fact that this Government did maintain such profound secrecy with regard to the terms of the contract was in itself sufficient to create, and it did create, suspicion and distrust amongst all classes of the people of this country. While the Government would not let us know all the terms, somehow they contrived to let us know any terms that seemed to be favorable—any that the people would naturally be expected to approve of. They told us as soon as Parliament met that when it became known that an arrangement was made with a company to build this road, a great load of care was raised from the shoulders of all the people, that they were relieved from a feeling that was weighing them down and distressing them, although a few months before the hon. gentlemen told the people that this road could be built without costing them a single dollar. asserted broadcast that it was of the utmost value and importance that a limit should be placed to our expenditure on the railway. I think the Finance Minister was one of those who congratulated the people that at last a limit had been put to the expenditure to which the country was committed. And so one after the other, those gentlemen labored, not to give the public such information as they were entitled to receive, not to let the people know precisely what the terms of the bargain were and await the public decision thereon, but such information, so conveyed and modified as to lull suspicion and create false hopes amongst the people, -to give the people not an accurate but an absolutely erroneous and false idea of what the terms of the bargain were. Now, Sir, on coming down to Parliament, what do we find! Still the same secrecy, the same determination to withhold information. No longer is the dignity of Parliament to be respected, no longer are we to be the omnipotent body that we were represented to be before we met here, because we are denied the information to which we are entitled, which ought to have been laid on the Table of the House without its being asked for. Then look at the time we were called together, just a few days before Christ-mas. If there was necessity for such a hurry, why not have called us together a month or six weeks carlier, so as, at all events, to give to the world at large the appearance of a desire on the part of the Government to have a calm consideration of this important question, instead of calling us a few days before Christmas, and then threatening us with a refusal to allow us to go home during the holidays, if we did not swallow those resolutions without delay. They altered subsequently that determination, because they found their supporters unwilling to go to extreme lengths on that occasion, and an arrangement was made which, though a modification of the first intention, necessarily shut out members from the Maritime Provinces from Parliament for a day or two on the reopening of the House. The course taken by the Government strengthened the feeling of the public that there is something below the surface in this case which will not bear the light, and when they refuse to consider an offer, such as that which is believed to have been submitted to them, they must know how strong public suspicion will grow, and must be prepared to defy public indignation. The public, we are told, are the very worst tribunal to which a question of this kind can possibly be submitted, yet our constitution knows of ro other tribunal of ultimate resort. While hon, gentlemen opposite could humbug the people and mislead them so far as to make them believe that the depression which prevailed was due to want of activity on the part of the Government, they courted and lauded the people. But even then they did not dare to propound to the people this National Policy, which the people are now said to approve. They did not dare to tell the people they were about to tax their sugar 11 cents a pound for the benefit of a few refiners, the woollen goods of the working classes to the extent of 50 or 60 per cent.. the cheaper flannels and blankets 35 to 40 per cent. They did not then, either, take the people into their confidence. When it suits the hon. Minister of Railways he talks of the intelligence of the people, and when he hurls his threats and slanders at hon. gentlemen, he says he is appealing to the intelligence of the public. The Government of which he is a member. never dared to submit to the public their great National Policy. If they had, they would never have reached that side of the House. The refusal of the Government to bring down information asked for, must lead us to the conclusion that they have in their possession better proposals than that which is submitted to us. If we had all the proposals before us, it is more than probable that we would find that there are some probably better than that which is said to be the best. That there are men in Canada prepared to build this road on infinitely better terms than those in the Syndicate contract. We were told in the Hochelaga speech that a great advantage of this contract, was that foreigners men opposite for the reputations and honest convictions of Mr. Anglin.

were included in the Syndicate, that Germans, French and Americans were to unite together in gathering that tide of immigration which we have been long expecting, and which has never yet begun to flow. Only a few years ago a provision was made in the Allan contract to exclude foreigners. Then the Yankee was an abomination; even his money was scarcely to be touched without pollution. Now the very same gentlemen are pleased to tell us that one of the great advantages of this contract is the interest of Americans in this concern. We were told that the Syndicate was composed of great capitalists who had money enough themselves or control of money enough to build five such railways. Well, when the names were published, the people began to wonder where the rich men were. About the richest were Canadians. The mighty English House turned out to be a house of no very enormous resources. We do not know much about the German house or the American house. How far they are committed to this thing, what capital they are to invest in it, we cannot learn from the contract. We know that none of these gentlemen, should the contract be ratified, need spend much money. Now, the Government ought to pause and think if they have any regard for their future reputation. If the Minister of Railways desires to see that rather famous pedestal of his receive its statue at any time - if the Chief Minister really desires that his statue shall not only be erected but receive that crown we have heard of, they should hesitate before they incur such a load of suspicion, lest their names, instead of going down to posterity crowned with glory, will go down reeking with infamy. Suspicion attaches to them to-lay. Let me say to hon gentlemen on the other side—who, after all, must bear the responsibility—that though they may be willing to sacrifice their personal feelings and judgment on the shrine of party—as more than one has sorrowfuly admitted to the House he is compelled to do-now when new circumstances are presented, now when they see the interests of the country are unquestionably at stake; when a boná fide offer, as we believe it is, is made; when millions can be saved to the country and millions of acres of land preserved to it; and all those odious, abominable, detestible monopolies prevented-they should prefer the welfare of their country to the interests of party. None of those monopolies would be created under the offers of this new Company. Its members are Canadians, known to us for their integrity, respectability, wealth and intelligence-men whom to know is to respect and esteem-men incapable of lending themselves to any shabby device. It is the duty of hon, gentlemen opposite to consider seriously their responsibilities and considerations to the country under the present serious circumstances. If we consider the character of the new Company, and that on the other side, the men to whom we are to transfer all those enormous grants and privileges-$25,000,000 cash and 25,000,000 acres of almost fertile lands, immense privileges, exemptions, monopolies beyond estimate as to their value—are, as the hon the Premier described them: Frenchmen, Germans, Yankees and a few Canadians, who have not shown any extraordinary patriotism in their dealing with the North-West—if we reflect on this and consider that if this be the good, bona fide, substantial, honest, true offer, we think it is, we may save all these enormous expenditures and perilous exemptions with which we are threatened, and escape the still more dreadful monopolies which impend over us, I can hardly believe yet, much as I have seen of the flexibility and tractability of the large majority of the House-I will not believe till a vote forces me to the painful, sorrowful, harrowing conviction that those gentlemen can be so untrue to the interests of the country, so regardless of their own reputation and of every honest con-

hon, gentlemen on this side of the House, touches us, I am sure, very deeply. I am quite sure we appreciate at their true value the kind suggestions that have been made on that side of the House, that the course which we are now pursuing, and which hon gentlemen opposite believe we are going to pursue, is certain to inure very seriously to our political disadvantage. If they really believed that, if they were sincere in that conviction, I am quite sure we should hear less of the remonstrances they have addressed to us. What is the position in which we stand on this question at present? The Canadian Pacific Railway.—and I am not going to discuss the question to-night—has been discussed for very nearly 10 years. The public have had abundant opportunities during nearly the whole of that time to take any interest they thought proper in the enterprise, in the way of investing capital in it. Two companies were established in 1872; they were partially united, and a contract given to them on terms certainly that were equally favorable with those which are now given to the Syndicate recently formed. Those gentlemen went to England, but failed to induce capitalists to invest in the enterprise, and were compelled to give it up. What followed? The hon, gentlemen opposite came into office, when the then First Minister, as Minister of Public Works. introduced an Act containing terms which certainly, compared with the terms which are now proposed to be given, and still more with the terms with which we are now favored by the new Syndicate, were exceedingly favorable. Well, what was the result of that proceeding? For upwards of four or five years the capitalists of this country and of the world had the opportunity, if they thought proper, of submitting tenders and of receiving the contract if they could make terms satisfactory to the Government. For nearly a year an advertisement appeared in the papers of this country, Great Britain and the United States, asking for tenders under an Act of Parliament which offered at least 20,000 acres and $10,000 per mile for the construction of this railway, and, in addition, four per cent. interest upon any sum which might be asked by those tendering. During the whole of that time, however, the patriotic gentlemen who have rushed to the rescue of this country in its present distress, were not, apparently, found willing to invest their capital in the great enterprise, and the hon, gentleman from Lambton was compelled to say only last Session, if I remember rightly, that after all he had done, he had come to the conclusion that this enterprise was so serious in the responsibility it involved, and in the expenditure it was going to occasion this country, that it was hopeless to expect to obtain private capital to accomplish the work, and that he believed it to be also beyond the resources of the Dominion. That was the opinion of that hon. gentleman last year. What has occurred since that time? Im mediately after last Session the First Minister, in a speech which he made in one of the townships of Ontario, stated that he had offers submitted to him from a number of parties for the construction of this railway. Surely that was an announcement to the world that he was looking for capitalists to build the Canadian Pacific Railway—that any one who was anxious to invest in this enterprise had an opportunity of doing so. He went to England with two of his colleagues, and we had news on this side from time to time, first that he was succeeding. next that he was failing, and all kinds of suggestions and statements as to the proceedings of that hon. Minister; but no murmur from the enterprising and patriotic capitalists country, and what then occurred? We had in October last an official announcement—it was official as coming from the mouth of a Minister-from the Minister of Railways, that the general terms of the arrangement made, were that 25,000,000 acres and $25,000,000, with the existing sections Are these the gentlemen from whom we are to get the of the Canadian Pacific Railway, were to be given to the Syndicate to construct and operate the railway. Well, where were the patriotic gentlemen at that time? The contract at that time was actually not completed. The Minister of Railways stated it was not. Negotiations were in progress for some of the details in relation to it at that time. The contract was not signed until after that announcement, and yet we have those gentlemen, although they new say, if their offer means anything, that 25,000,000 acres, $25,000,000 and the existing railways, are altogether too much for the this road, and construction of that they are prepared to give us very better offer-to take very much less for much the work, not making a murmur or presenting a statement that they were willing to do better for the country than the first Syndicate. Well, Sir, and what followed that? It is now more than a month since Parliament has been in Session, and the terms laid upon the Table of this House. They have been discussed in all parts of the country; they have been published in all the newspapers everywhere; and what has occurred since that time? Up to last week, as the hen, member who has just sat down told us, these eminent capitalists, these patriotic gentlemen, burning with fervor to rescue this country from the iniquities of a Syndicate, and—may I be allowed to suggest the word from the rule of a party to which they are politically opposed, had not a word to say in relation to the matter-no suggestion, no proposition. They permitted their friends to go through Ontario, holding their meetings from one end to the other, and they gave them no hint that there was a better offer. And it was only when they and hon, gentlemen opposite discovered that all the efforts they made in the country had proved a failure, that these meetings-party meetings as they were-were not enthusiastic meetings-

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWR. GHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE. That wherever they were met, and it was not frequently that they were met, because the hon gentleman who has just said "hear, hear," was very unwilling to be met, except at one meeting where he could not help it, and where he was beaten in a city where he was well known, I say, when there was no chance of arousing public indignation, it was only then that they resolved to call in the aid of a number of capitalists, eminent gentlemen, respectable gentlemen, I have no doubt, but all of one shade of politics however.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. WHITE. Who is the leading man, but Colonel John Walker of election fame, whose record appears in the records of the courts of this country, and from whom a learned judge declared even the whole of the waters of Lake Ontario would not wash away the suspicion of not adhering to the truth, even when restrained by an oath on the Holy Evangelists. He is one of the gentlemen whom we find in close conference with hon, gentlemen opposite. Is he one of those gentlemen who was influenced solely by the desire of promoting the interests of the country, and giving better terms on the construction of this railway? Then, Sir, we have Mr. H. H. Cook, whom we used to see in this House, a gentleman of eminent purity and carefulness in relation to the observance of the law in regard to election matters. We find him here in conference with hon. gentlemen opposite; and, doubtless, he is actuated simply by a desire to advance the interests of the country, and give us better terms than those we have before us. Then we have some gentlemen who have just turned up, that they were prepared to assist those we have before us. Then we have some gentlemen him in that time of distress. Well, he came back to the from Hamilton, gentlemen who obtained from townships in the district, part of which I have the honor to represent, bonuses to give the people competition with the Northern Railway, and when they built that railway they sold it to the Northern and combined the two to oppress the people.

relief from railway monopoly in the north-western territories which hon, gentlemen opposite say has been offered us? Will any one pretend to tell me that they believe sincerely that gentlemen of business capacity, gentlemen of means, would seriously go into an enterprise of this kind, as they admit, on 48 hours notice—an enterprise involving an expenditure of 50 or 60 or 100 millions of dollars—involving untold responsibilities in regard to the working of that railwaythat they would have thought of going into it for a single moment if there was any chance of their offer being accepted? What have we seen and heard to-day? We have been told by the leader of the Opposition that he had been furnished with a copy of this offer. I venture to say it was supplied before it was sent to the Government at all. And yet, we are asked to look upon it as being in any sense whatever a bond fide offer, intended seriously for the purpose of building the railway and not for the defeat of the Administration.

Mr. WHITE. Hon. gentlemen know very well what their "Try it" means. What more do I find? I find in the Globe of this morning, and in the Free Press of this evening—two Opposition organs—an almost exactly similar statement as to the terms of this particular offer, showing that it was furnished to the Opposition press by these gentlemen who pretend that they are acting in good faith with the Government, and have sent in a bond fide offer. To night these gentlemen have sent their contract to the telegraph offices of this city in order that it may be sent wide spread through the country before the Government have had an opportunity of considering what are its terms. The whole affair is simply a discreditable dodge—it is, Sir, as Florence would say in his play of "The Mighty Dollar" a p. u. j.—a put up job. Who does not know in relation to contracts that you can always get, after the contract has been awarded, offers to do it for less. Who does not know that there has never been a contract let, either by the Dominion Government or the Government of the Provinces, either by municipalities or individuals, without persons offering to carry it out for less money if they could only get it, but after it was too late for them to get it? That is the general experience of every one. I am bound to say that it is simply and truly a discreditable proceeding—and I say it, knowing the full responsibility of what I say as a public man responsible to my constituents for what I say in this House, I say that the whole proceeding is one of the most despicable and discreditable tricks ever attempted in this or any other country. We have been asked why tenders were not asked for this contract. It has been rather remarkable to watch the current of thought in connection with this discussion. Latterly we had the hon. member for Westmoreland (Sir A. J. Smith) stating that the Government had no authority to make this contract; we had from other hon. members the suggestion-only latterly, however, only since we had this idea of bringing an cutside element to bear in order to accomplish that which an honest and fair appeal to the people had failed to accomplish—we have had the statement that tenders should have been asked for this contract. But when we look at the speeches of the leader of the Opposition delivered in this House, the speech which he delivered on the Address, the speech which he subsequently defivered on the Canadian Pacific Railway resolutions themselves, there is not a single suggestion that tenders should have been asked or that the Government had no authority to make the Government were doing what they had no right to do ment were bound to go on with the work. He showed that Mr. White (Cardwell).

—if they had attempted to bring down the contract without asking for tenders under the Railway Act. I repeat that this whole proceeding is simply an attempt to do, by means of a discreditable trick, what these hon gentlemen failed to do by honest and fair discussion—that is to excite in the minds of the people some degree of apprehension that too much is being given to the gentlemen with whom the contract has been made for the construction of the railway. But, Sir, they will fail in this as they failed in their other efforts. The people of the country are not fools. The people of Upper Canada and Lower Canada, and of all parts of the Dominion, will remember the old French adage: that when the daughter is married there is no lack of sons in-law. That is precisely the position to-day; and I am satisfied that the people will regard the proceeding with very much the feeling which hon gentlemen in this House regard it—a feeling of humiliation and shame that a political party should have resorted to the dodge which I have alluded to in connection with this matter—a dodge of a political Syndicate to defeat the Administration, not to build the Pacific Railway.

Mr. ORTON. I desire to make a few remarks upon the subject of this contract. I have listened patiently for a number of days to the discussion that has taken place, and one of the facts I have gathered therefrom is that both political parties are thoroughly committed to the construction of this trans-continental railway as rapidly as the resources of the country will permit. It is true we have seen some attempt made by the present leader of the Opposition to desert the position in which his party was placed by the action of the leader of the late Government. We have heard the present leader state on many an occasion, during both the present and preceding Parliaments, that it would be injurious to the country to carry out our obligations to British Columbia. He has endoavored to frighten the people into breaking an engagement with that Province; he has been trying to make the people of this country believe that the taxation that would be the consequence of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway would be ruinous to our country, and that it should not be proceeded with at all. Now, I think, both political parties, notwithstanding the position taken by the present leader of the Opposition, are thoroughly committed to this enterprise. The only question we have to consider on the present occasion is, will the resources of Canada permit the construction of the railway according to the terms of this contract? If we agree that it is within our resources, and that it will not increase the burden of taxation, then both political parties ought, as men true to their country, to unite in forwarding the scheme now before the House. The interest upon the money will probably be the first burden felt by the people. The total amount of bonus given to the Company will be $53,000,000, being the $25,000,000 in cash and $28,000,000 in railway constructed and to be constructed. Now, money can be obtained at the rate of 5 per cent.—and probably much lower—and that would amount to about $3,000,000 a year. Those who recollect the discussion which occured in this House at the time of the Allan contract, will remember that this was the sum the then Government considered would be the annual burden upon the people. Now, it is true, that the hou. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie), when leader of the late Government, felt a great deal of trepidation in undertaking the work and in carrying it outrapidly. At the same time he was always in favor of going on with it, and showed a wisdom in his measures that the present leader of the Opposition would do well to imitate. In the discussion contract. On the contrary, the hon, gentleman said he which took place on the resolutions introduced in 1874, the would have been pleased if he had found, on coming here, member for Lambion stated that the terms of the Union that the details of the scheme had been such that he could with British Columbia could not be done away with Michael With British Columbia could not be done away with Reliable Columbia. have supported them. Why should be have done that if the the consent of both contracting parties, and that the Governhe fait very seriously the responsibility involved in the undertaking. He stated on that occasion:

Well, they desired the gentleman who undertook the responsibility to show them how it was possible to construct a railway 2,500 miles lang, with a population of 4.000,600, passing almost entirely through an unfulnabited country, a greater portion of which is through a country of a very rough character. They have now, to show how it is possible to carry out terms of Union with British Columbia, and, at the same time, not have taxation pressing unduly on the resources of the country. He (Mr. Mackenzie), said, it was impossible to do that. He (Mr. Mackenzie,) believed, that whoever built the road, it would be built with the money furnished by the people of this country."

Now, those were his views in 1874, and ought he not to feel grateful to the Minister of Railways for bringing down a scheme to this House which will insure the building and running of this great railway for ten years, and probably for all time to come, at a sum which will not increase the burdens of the people, and will result in great benefit to our country? I will just read one or two other extracts to show that the hou, member for Lambton felt the difficulty of the undertaking. He said:

"It was useless to expect that this road, for many years to come, could be undertaken as a purely commercial enterprise."

Ought he not, then, to be grateful to the Minister of Railways, who has brought down a scheme which makes it entirely a commercial enterprise? He said again:

"It will be quite evident that if any value is to be attached to the lands of the great North-West, we must have a ready access to those lands, and any step taken with a view to allow the entrance of contracting companies, of the public, and of immigrants into that country in advance of letting the main contract, was a step exceedingly to be desired."

I think the hon. gentleman ought to be flattered at the course pursued by the present Government in carrying out his views here expressed. I recollect that during his time he endeavored to give access to Manitoba by building a line from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg, but he neglected to let 185 miles of the most difficult portion of that road and spent an immense amount of money uselessly on Fort Francis Locks, &c. The present Government have endeavored to carry out his views, and their first act was to let that link of 185 miles so as to complete connection with Winnipeg and open up the land for settlement in the North-West. Another gentleman expressed some trepidation on this matter. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) stated, in 1879:

"Mr. Fleming, some years ago, estimated that the interest of the money required in the construction of the railway for many years to come, and the cost of working the road, would amount to $14,000,000 a year."

Mr. MILLS. If the member will look at Mr. Saudford Fleming's report he will see that that statement is a citation of the report.

Mr. ORTON. The hon, gentleman feared it would involve a cost upon the people of this country annually of $14,000,000. Now, ought he not to feel grateful to this Government for building that road that will not cost this country more than $3,000,000 a year? Another hon. gentleman made some remarks, also, the hon member for South Wentworth, who has assisted most nobly his present leader in depicting the fearful amount of taxation it was going to involve. I recollect when he gave this speech very well. He stated in 1876 that if our Pacific Railway cost us as much as the Union Pacific Railway it would involve an outlay of $300,000,000. He was willing to have it placed at $.00,000,000. He did not think at that time it was possible to build it for $200,000,000. He again states: "If the road were ever completed it would take an annual subsidy of $6,000,000 to run it." Now, the scheme had before this House will construct the road not at $200,000,000 but at $78,000,000, and will not cost this country as annually increased burden of more than $3,000,000, he all the principal points to consider —when we find that they ought to show his gratitude to this Government, and if he is a have made such an excellent bargain in that respect, is it patriotic man he will give them all the aid and countenance he can. I have stated that the annual cost cannot amount to more than $3,000,000. I think I can show that even this will not be paid by the people of this country. In the first place a large amount of money will be spent, and if it is true, as the Minister of Railways states, that it is the intention of this Syndicate to construct the prairie portion as rapidly as possible, they will be obliged to throw into that country a large amount of population in order to carry it out. It will take at least 6,000 people to construct the prairie section in three years. That will involve the expenditure of a large amount of money, and give an immense impetus to the trade of this country. We shall not only have our population largely increased, but have good times. There will be a market for our manufactures and a large market annually increasing in our North-West, and the whole people of this country will derive benefit from it. In addition to that we know that once this country is opened up the population will rapidly increase, and we shall have a large additional population to assist us in raising the revenue, and thereby very materially lessen the burden that we are now laboring under. We have also the fact that in consequence of the construction of the railway our Government will be able to sell their lands; and in reference to this matter I wish to direct the attention of this House to the fact that the Government lands will be the first sought after, simply from the fact that they propose to give a homestead of 1:0 acres for nothing to actual settlers, and every settler will, doubtless, preempt at least 160 acres more at $2.50 per acre, so that the Government will be really in a position to offer greater advantages for a longer time than the railway can, and will be able to sell their lands more rapidly than the Syndicate. The result will be to bring into our Treasury a large additional revenue, and to that extent relieve the people of the older Provinces. Now, Sir, there are other benefits that will be derived by the people of Ontario especially. There is the benefit that will accrue to this Province by the construction of this road through a large portion of its territory. I refer to that portion on the eastern section north of Lake Superior that will open up not only a good country for settlement, but a country rich in timber and mineral wealth, that will be an immense source of revenue at once to the Government of Ontario. They will be able to soll their timber limits and mineral lands, and a great additional advantage will be derived by the people of this Province. The opening up of that territory will be a benefit in many ways. The railway itself will find a great deal of traffic by taking up timber into the treeless prairie district, where timber is scarce and very valuable. The timber on the north shore of Lake Superior, and even on the line of the Canada Central Extension, will find a market there. I have just referred briefly to the contract as a whole. I may state, however, that after having listened carefully and dispassionately and with an ournest determination to try to come to a fair and honest conclusion in the interests of my country, I feel that this is the best scheme that has ever been laid before the Parliament of this country-immensly better than any other scheme we have had laid before this Houseand further, this scheme is actually in existence. The contract is before us to-day, and it is signed and there in a tangible shape so that we know exactly what this road is going to cost us, and we will be able to consider whether we can afford it or not. It is true a great many objections have been made to the details of the contract. Well, Mr. Speaker, we all know that in making a bargain there must be two sides, and is it to be wondered at, that when we find the Government has made such an excellent bargain in the main taking the main features of it which is after any wonder that there should be some objectionable features in the details, objections which I have no doubt the members of the Cabinet felt; but they were obliged to give way, considering them, as I do, to a great degree of minor importance? The exemption from taxation of the Syndicate lands is an objection on which a great deal of stress has been laid. I must confess I have not felt great alarm about that, and more especially when I find by reading the contract over again, and also being assured by the leader of the Government, that the land will be given to the Syndicate on the completion of every twenty miles. They could not hold it free from taxation by refusing to take out the patent from the Crown until they obtained purchasers, but are obliged to take their pay partly in land as the road is constructed. The consequence is, that twenty years is the limit of this exemption from taxation, and I for one, feel that it is only just and right that the people of that country should have some of the burden of building this railway. Within the last ten years, we have added at least a million of dollars for the construction of competing lines in the county of Wellington, and have voluntarily taxed ourselves-

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. ORTON. So as to get the benefit of other lines and of opening up a new country.

Mr. BLAKE. You will not allow the North-West to do that.

Mr. ORTON. I shall come to that by-and-bye. We have been told that this exemption from taxation will cause a monopoly, and that the land will be held an immense length of time without selling; but we know the experience of railways in the United States is not in that direction. We know that the companies who have built those railways are only too anxious to sell their lands, and they make exertions no Government can make. They have agencies in almost every town of Europe, and we well know that in Canada to-day, these companies have agents at every fair village, town and city attracting our own population by the terms they offer to go to the United States. I think it will be to the interest of the Syndicate of our own line also to sell their lands and populate our country. As far as the road-bed is concerned, I think it a very trivial matter and scarcely worthy of consideration. With regard to the exemptions from duties how it did grieve the hon, member for West Durham that the Syndicate should be allowed to bring in what articles they require duty free.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear. Mr. ORTON. It is a terrible thing, indeed, that they should have a little of that free-trade he has been so anxious this country should have. I, for one, feel perfectly satisfied in regard to that clause, because I know from what I have heard and seen every manufacturer in the country who is interested in the matter feels satisfied in that respect by the drawback the Government propose to give manufactures who supply the Pacific Railway with materials now dutiable. The monopoly of the carrying trade in the North-West is a matter, no doubt, of very serious moment and perhaps I cannot speak as enthusiastically in reference to this point as in regard to other provisions of the contract. But I can see some bright points in reference to the matter. Now, the Government have power by this contract, if I read it aright, to regulate the rates so as to virtually take away the chief evil effects that may arise from the powers given to this Syndicate. I have perfect confidence in the Government that they will secure this benefit to the people of Canada. I believe they are anxions and desirous to use their best efforts in the interest of the people and not in the interest of this or any other Syndicate. I believe they feel the responsibility of their position as guardians of the people's interests, all into money and calculating the land at $1 per scre, and I am assured they will not fail to use the powers they have. What are these powers? I Mr. ORTON.

find that the Railwhy Act states that the tariff of tolls is subject to revision by the Governor in Council. Now, that is the power that can be used very largely in the interest of the people of the North-West, and also of the interests of the people of this country. If the Government only secure, as I have no doubt they will, fair reasonable and moderate rates from Winnipeg eastward we need fear no disastrous consequences in this respect. I believe that the lines already chartered in the North-West will offer all the competition that will be required in the next twenty years in the prairie Province, and with fair rates from Winnipeg eastward and from the older Provinces to Winnipeg I do not fear that the monopoly, which it appears on the surface the Syndicate will have, will act injuriously to our people. It has been objected that the high rates will probably benefit the Ontario farmer.. I do not think Ontario farmers desire to get rich at the expense of their brother farmers of the North-West, and therefore I, for one, would not advance such an argument. There is one clause in this Act that I would like to have seen a little plainer, and I think, still, an explanatory clause might be placed at the end of this Act which will set at rest for ever the meaning of the clause. I cannot conceive that an Act, passed by the Parliament of Canada, could, for a moment, be considered to mean the interest on capital given in the shape of bonuses by that very same Government, and I cannot help feeling that the only construction it can bear is: the capital invested by the Syndicate in the construction of the railway; and if that is the case, we need not fear any great monopoly in rates. While referring to rates, there is one point I desire to draw the attention of the Government to, and that is, that they will see that no discrimination is allowed in favor of American freight over Canadian freight. That is the feeling among the people of all the older Provinces, who have long suffered in consequence of discrimination between American and Canadian freights. I hope when they regulate the freights, they will make that provision. Now, if the Government do this which I think they have the power to do, under the General Railway Act, the result will be that if the Syndicate desire to obtain United States traffic over the Canadian Pacific they must bring down their rates so as to compete with American lines; and if the same rates must be given to our people in the North-West, it will virtually give all the benefits of the competition of American railways, while at the same time secure the carrying of all our traffic and what can be got from the United States over our own Pacific line and through our own country. There is another point I think it as well to mention, as I think all objectionable points should be mentioned. I feel the security for the construction and running of the railway could be better, and I hope some plan may be devised by the Government, to which the Syndicate will agree, with the object of having removed the objectionable feature in regard to the prairie section of 900 miles. It appears the cash bonus for this section is $10,000 a mile, and the land bonus 12,500 acres per mile. For the eastern section the cash bonus is 15,384 acres, and $9,615 per mile; calculating the land at $1 per acre, the Syndicate will receive for the eastern section $24,999 per mile. I wish to draw attention to this point. If the Syndicate undertook to build in three years the prairie section, they would be entitled to the amount of money and land I have stated, and they would be obliged, if they carried out the terms of this contract, to have constructed and equipped 145 miles of the eastern section. The amount of money to which they would be entitled for the construction of that portion of the eastern section, would be $1,514,925, and a land bonus, at 9,615 acres per mile, of 2,993,880 acres. The total in land and money for the eastern and prairie section, putting it all into money, and calculating the land at $1 per sere, would be $24,764,805. Now, I cannot help feeling that may be built and equipped at $10,000 per mile. The equipment that would be required for the traffic for the next three years will not be, of course, very large, and I think it is nothing but fair to calculate that $10,000 per mile will build the prairie section; and if the line was deflected further south I believe it could be carried out for much less than where the Government intended to have carried the line. But we will take it at $10,000 per mile for the prairie section, and see what it will cost to build the 195 miles of the eastern section. I have put it down at $25,000 per mile. I fear that may be too low, because when I look back at the remarks of the hon. member for Lambton in regard to work in a section of country very much similar to that on the north shore of Lake Superior, he placed the cost of the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch at $80,000 to $85,000 per mile. I think that was a very large estimate and one altogether out of the way; but I understand there was a proposal to build the portion north of Lake Superior for $20,000 per mile, but I suppose it must be a road much inferior to the one by which the Syndicate are bound in this contract to build. I have put it down at $25,000 a mile, and after deducting one-fifth of land bonus, you have 8,000,000 acres of land, as the subsidy which the Syndicate will receive, over and above the actual cost of construction of the prairie 900 miles and the 195 miles of the eastern section. Deduct $1,000,000, which the Government hold as security, and you have 7,000,000 acres of land that the Syndicate could utilize and alienate if they like. They could sell the land to another Syndicate, or sell it to a company for the construction of a railway alongside of our Pacific road in a foreign country, which road would be inimical to our Canadian Pacific and the national interests of our people of this country did they so desire it. I should have liked to have seen in the contract a clause by which they would be bound, if they sold or bartered the land, to leave the money realized in the hands of the Government to use freely as they considered best, for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I would be perfectly satisfied if those two objections were corrected—first, in regard to the construction of the Railway Act, and, second, in regard to this security. I believe the Government will be able-because I have confidence in the Syndicate, and believe from the character of the men and from the assurances of the Government, and from the fact that large British capitalists, men of honor and wealth, and German and French capitalists are engaged in the project—to have the work faithfully carried out. I do not believe the Syndicate would object to have some such clause as I have suggested inserted, because it would not interfere with their financial operations. I hope the Government will be enabled to have some such understanding with the Syndicate. Now, we come to another matter. What have we to face should this bargain not be ratified by this House? We shall be thrown back in the hands of a party whose declared policy is what? It is to construct this railway to connect with the North-West through a foreign country. If there is one point on which I believe the people of Canada are united, it is that they do desire to see, and see as soon as possible, a railway constructed from ocean to ocean, not through a foreign country, but through their own country. Why is this country populated by so many people from Great Britain and Ireland? Why have they come to live in Canada? They came here because they desired to live under the old flag, and they desire still that this country may long continue to be under that flag. They believe we have here all the liberty and freedom for which their forefathers fought, to a degree not enjoyed in the older portions of the realm. They believe we have a Constitution that will conduce more to the happiness of man than, perhaps, any Constitution under the sun; and we enjoy those benefits further. Still Ministers may have some wise view under the grand old British flag and we desired to keep this in refusing it. At the same time, however, it appears country in the same position. But if the policy of the Opposition is carried out; if the unpatriotic policy enunciated by the leader of the Opposition was carried out, in what position would we be placed? It is well known to-day that in various parts of the British Empire there are troubles; there are also troubles in Europe, and we may be drawn into complications, before many years, with the people of the neighboring republic. In that case in what position would we be if the Opposition policy prevailed? We would have no means of access to the North-West except through a foreign country, and we well remember the difficulties raised by the Washington Government when a request was preferred for the passage of Sir Garnet Wolsley and his force through the American territory. There is not a patriot in this country but would feel it a great calamity if the scheme of the leader of the Opposition was carried out; because the people well know that if was carried out; because the people well know that it connection is established by Sault Ste. Marie, it will shut off the project of getting a railway built through Canadian territory, and by that means obtain direct access to our people in the North-West. Therefore, I say we must face the difficulty. When referring to this subject I may offer a few remarks in respect to the new Syndicate bargain, which I understand is in the hands of the Minister of Railways. Now, it does appear to me that there is something rather fishy about it. The offer of the new Syndicate seems to bear the impress of having been to a large extent inspired by members on the Opposition side of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. ORTON. If the reports we see in the paper can be believed, or if they approach the truth, the offer appears to have been got up in the interests of and for the purpose of serving the present Opposition in this House, without any desire to carry out what I maintain is the desire and wish of every true patriotic Canadian. I will read from the Free Press, the Opposition organ in this city, two or three paragraphs of the supposed new Syndicate

"6. They give the Government the privilege of postponing the construction of the eastern section, in which event they are willing to construct the Sault line, 294 miles long, for a bonus of $12,000.

"7. They give the Government the option of postponing the construction of the western section, from Kamloops to Port Moody, which, under the present contract, is to be completed by the Government and handed over the Sandicate

"8. They give the Government the option of postponing also the construction of the mountain division of the central section, 450 miles."

Now, Sir, is this not the policy of the leader of the Opposition, to break faith with British Columbia, by delaying the British Columbia portion of the railway, to make Canada a dependency of the United States, by putting off the construction of the Canadian Pacific north of Lake Superior, thus failing to carry out the wishes of the people of Canada to have a railway built from ocean to ocean through their own country. The new Syndicate, I presume, is to try and get the Opposition into power at the next election, and aid the Northern Pacific in getting such control of our carrying trade that it will be impossible, during this century, and perhaps for ever, to get the eastern section and the British Columbia sections built, leaving us an easy prey for the people of the neighboring republic. Can any patriotic Canadian vote for such a base and traitorous scheme? Before sitting down I wish to make a few remarks in reference to the motion now in your hands. I do somewhat regret that the Government cannot see their way to yield a little to the Opposition on this occasion, and at any rate postpone this discussion till next Tuesday, so that every member of the House could have a new Syndicate bargain placed in his hands before discussing this subject further. Still Ministers may have some wise view to me that it would be better if Parliament could have time to consider this new scheme. When I look around upon the generous followers Ministers have in this House, who are ready to support them in anything honest and fair for the interest of the country, I think they might, and still hope they will give way to some extent. I do not think they have anything at all to fear; nor do 1 believe their policy is actuated by any fear, but merely by a desire to finish this Syndicate bargain as fast as possible. I believe in all probability their course has been directed by the firm belief that the new Syndicate bargain is simply a hoax; but if so, and I believe so from what I have seen in the papers, I think it would do no harm, and show a little more kindness to the Opposition, to yield to them to some extent. I do not know if it would do any good, however. Perhaps in making these remarks I may be considered saying something that is hardly kindly of my friends on this side of the House, and as regards the leader of the Government. But I think I have some right to be a little candid with him without any fear of being suspected of the least infidelity to my party. It will be remembered that I supported my leader in his dull days of Opposition; I then felt like every follower he had, that he was wrongfully under a cloud and that the time would soon come when the people of Canada would soon look up to their old glorious statesman as Canada's greatest friend-that their gratitude would soon be displayed towards the man who had fought their battles so often and well. Therefore, I think I can claim the right to speak candidly and plainly on some points without any suspicion of my conduct and motives. I remember when I had also something to do with inaugurating that great 'National Policy which has proved so beneficial to the Conservative party, and is to-day acting so beneficially in increasing rapidly the wealth of our country. I remember when it was impossible almost for me to give utterance here to my views and desires in this connection. I remember also, when that Agriculture Committee, the effects of whose action was so powerful in securing the support of the farmers of Ontario and Quebec in the interests of the Conservative party, conducted its careful enquiry; when the farmers became aroused through the instrumentality of that Committee to consider their own interests, and cast in their lot with the manufacturing and other industries in inaugurating a grand National Policy in the interest of the people at large, to be carried out by the present hon. leader of the Government. Therefore, if I have said anything in my remarks that may perhaps be a little in opposition to the views of the Government, I think I can do it without the slightest feeling that I have any desire to act anything but the same old true friend of the Conservative party and in the best interests, as I believe, of the people of Canada. I have always believed that the interests of the people of Canada can be best served through the instrumentality of the Conservative party, and I still have the same opinion.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. If we wanted any evidence as to the justness and fairness of the motion now before us, I think that evidence is supplied by the last speaker. I feel curious to know how that hon, gentleman will vote on this question. I have the opinion, though, he will vote in direct opposition to his speech; but it proves correctly, Mr. Speaker, how reasonable this proposition now before the House is, and we had a right to expect that when the Minister of Railways rose to speak on this question, he would have given us some reason why this motion should not be granted. It seemed to be his duty and fitting for him in his relation to this transaction that he, in a plain proposition like this, should simply ask that time be given to consider a proposal made by a number of gentlemen in this country, well known for their respectability, for their qualify them to construct this great Pacific Railway. which the hon gentleman has referred to Here is what Why not have an opportunity to consider this I said, in 1871, and my attitude to the Government question. The hon, member for Cardwell says that this is a mere political trick. What authority has he for that? He has no right to insult the gentlemen who signed that offer. They are men who could fairly compare with him; men who have a recognized position in this country for character, responsibility and wealth. How dare he stand up in this House and make such an attack as that upon them? Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Railways instead of turning his attention to this question, as was his duty, made a speech which was unworthy of him, or any gentleman occupying his position. He must not suppose he is going to delude the people of this country by the course he is adopting. Instead of offering reasons for this, he has thought fit to make a personal attack upon me, but I am not sorry he has done that. He has done that once or twice behind my back, but I am before him now, and will square accounts with him. He has said that in 1873 I was false to my duty, and to the Government of which I was a member; that I deserted them—that I had been a supporter of that Administration. The hon. gentleman knows very well that that statement is not founded on truth. He knows very well—and it is necessary for me to refer to it—that when I first entered this Parliament I came from my Province having fought the battle of Confederation there. I am not ashamed of the course I took there. I spent a great deal of my time, and went through no less than three elections in connection with that question, and stood firm in my allegiance in what I considered to be my country and my people. I resisted, Sir, that measure, but finally it was carried. I felt it my duty to submit to the decree of the people who had determined in favor of that proposition. I made up my mind to offer no captious opposition to the fair working of that measure, and if it was followed by the great benefits that its promoters said it would be, nobody would rejoice more than myself. When I came to this Parliament I came a free and independent member. I was not allied to any party. I found the political parties mixed and confused. I found gentlemen who had been Liberals favorable to the scheme of Confederation, and parties so mixed that there was nothing for me but to act as an independent member who had opposed Confederation. I gave the Government of the day a fair and reasonable support, so far as I thought they were right. I was not in their confidence; I was not really a follower of that Government; I did not attend their caueuses. I had nothing to do with their confidence in any way but when any question came up before this House, I, as an independent member, being allied to neither party, exercised my own judgment on all those questions and voted according to my convictions. This course I adopted and the hon. gentleman knows it well. Does he not know, in 1871, when the scheme of union with British Columbia was under consideration here I opposed it at every stage?.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon, gentleman need not take the trouble to admit that. In 1871 he was with them, but he was with us in 1872.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I have so little confidence in-I was going to say the hon. gentleman's veracity—that I am not willing to take his statement, because the next hour he will be ready to deny what he admits now. I intend to read a portion of the speech which I made on that occasion in 1871. I was then just as much a supporter of the hon. gentleman's Government as I was in 1872.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I came here in 1867, and my course was perfectly consistent. I supported them when I thought they were right, and voted against them when I thought they were wrong, as in the British Columbia quesfinancial ability, and for every element that is necessary to tion, and as I did in 1872, when I voted for the proposition was precisely the same that it was before then that:

Was the House ready to involve the country in so large an increase of debt? The debt was already $10',000,000, and there were many burdens that would arise from the Intercolonial and other works. The Union Act had provided for the extension of the Court system, and that had only been delayed because of the deficient state of the finances of the Description. The system of the regard of the regard to the named it might be much Dominion: The cost of the railway could not be named, it might be much greater than the amount named, and yet coute que coute the country would stand pledged to complete it. He should oppose the measure, because it would impose burdens on the people that they were not able to bear, and would involve the country in ruin and disaster."

Now, Sir, what was my attitude on that question of union with British Columbia?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, contrast it with your attitude when you voted down the resolution of the hon. member from Bothwell.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I will come to that if the hon. gen tleman will keep quiet. I will convict him of having made false and malicious charges against me. I will refer to that again. Now, in 1872, this scheme for the introduction of British Columbia into this Union was consummated; I did all I could in the way of my voice and influence, in the way of protestation, to prevent the consummation of that insane bargain. The bargain, however, was completed, and the Government had agreed positively, in the most unqualified manner, to build and construct this road from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean in ten years. Why, Sir, anybody looking back now on the experience we have had, knows that that was an act of folly, of insanity; but they are not willing to admit it. They tell us time was of no importance; that it was engrafted in the contract, but still it was of no importance. When this measure was submitted to the House to devote $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land towards the construction of this road, I voted for that proposition, and I will give the reason why. It was supposed then, as I said the other day, that the country was an unknown country. We all supposed, and I had the opinion then, that this railroad would cost $150,000,000 at least.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, bear.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. The resolutions were passed, not with the consent of the Government, for they were driven to it, that that road should be built by the agency of a company and not by the Government. The resolution was introduced simultaneously or shortly after the resolutions for bringing British Columbia into the Union, and at that time seemed to me to be a wise and prudent one, but since that time, we have expended millions and millions of money in organizing a system of Government there and the circumstances of the country have entirely changed. But the hon, member has made a charge against me, which, should he sustain, would render me unworthy to sit in this House. He practically charges me with having sold myself to the late Government for office. The tact that the hon. gentleman made such a charge simply goes to prove his recklessness. There is no public man in Canada who has done so much to degrade public life as that hon. gentleman; it seems to be instinctive in his nature to villify and slander. The hon, gentleman said in my absence, in his own county, on declaration day that I was an office seeker. I had fought the election honorably, and without indulging in personalities towards him or any one else; and I thought, after the battle had been fought and won, and the then Government had been defeated by the voice of the country, that the hon, gentleman might have refrained from the personalities in which he indulged in. Upon the that the hon, gentleman might have refrained from the personalities in which he indulged in. Upon the hustings in his own county he said I was an office seeker; that I had knocked at the door of the Government witness beside him the hof, the Finance Minister, who also knew it I would not have been found where I was. I wish now to seek the hon, gentleman if he said that or not? A few also the him, the Minister of Railways himself." hustings in his own county he said I was an office seeker; that I had knocked at the door of the Government of which he was a member, for office, and that if I had got days afterwards he repeated the statement in my own county. I see that the Finance Minister has left his seat. I should have been glad if he was present, so that I might have appealed to him. Last Session, from my place, I challenged the Finance Minister-who knew me and knew my political antecedents, as I had been associated with him for ten or lifteen years in the Government of New Brunswick—I asked him if he was prepared to justify the hou. member for Cumberland (Sir Charles Tupper) in making the charge he made against me. The Finance Minister intimated, with some reluctance, that he not prepared to sustain the charge. Th Then I said to the Finance Minister, if you knew that the Minister of Railways made this charge against me in my own constituency in my absence, why did you not have the manliness to stand up in behalf of one who was associated with you for many years, and say that the charge was not true. That, Sir, would have been a manly and a generous act to de. Now, let us see what is the ovidence on the point. The hon, Minister of Railways made these charges—I presume he will not deny that he did—but if he does I will produce the evidence. Now, I would ask the hon, gentleman if he ever made me an offer in the Cabinet of which he was a member.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Never, never. That was the trouble—that was what you wanted and could not get.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I made a speech on this subject last Session, I made it in the presence of the Minister of Railways. I said he had made a certain statement, and I asked him, if he denied making it, to say so. Here is what I said:

I said:

"But after his election, he denounced me, though we had been on friendly terms personally, so far as I know, for thirty years. At least I never had any personal altercation with him, and we have been the representatives of adjoining counties for many years, his in Nova Scotia and mise in New Brunswick. I conducted my election honorably, and never indulged in expressions derogatory to him, nor in personalities of any kind. Well, on the day of the declaration in his own county, the hon, the Minister of Bailways made a violent attack on me, and abused me fearfully, representing me as false to the country, as one who had no interest in it, but who seemed desirous of destroying its best interests; and not satisfied with that, when the battle had been fought, and he might have been supposed content he attended a meeting in my county at Moneton, being accompanied by the hon. Finance Minister, and the hon member for King's, N. B., (Mr. Domville), being present at that enthusiastic demonstration; when he thought fit to denounce me, in the heart of my own county. He told my constituents that I was an office-seeker, and always had been; that I had knocked at the door of his Government for office. If that is not true, he can rise and correct me."

Did the hon gentleman rise and correct me?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will rise and correct you presently.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I am not at all alarmed. I think I understand the hon, gentleman. I say that his statement was not true and I ask him if the fact that he kept his seat on that occasion was not an admission that it was not true.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I would ask, Sir, if that is the course which an hon gentleman should take. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker and the members of this House if such conduct can be justified by the House or the country. I say that the very fact that the hon, gentleman did not answer on that occasion is an admission that my statement was true. I said further when I referred to this subject last Session:

"He added, that his Government had refused me office, which had

Now, Sir, I repeat the statement I then made that the hon. member for Cumberland did offer me a seat in the Cabinet in 1873, and pressed me to take it. He knows I declined it. The hon gentleman further offered me the Governorship of Nova Scotia, and he offered me the Governorship of New Brunswick. His first act as a member of that Cabinet was a very kind offer to me of the Governorship of my native Province. Besides, I had another offer from a member of the Government of 1873. I affirm these facts to be true. I have before stated, in my place, these facts in the presence of that hon gentleman without contradiction. Now, then, it does seem to me hard that he should make this attack upon me when there is no evidence whatever in support of it, and when his own colleague, the hon, the Finance Minister himself contradicted and stated distinctly, last Session, that I had never been an office-seeker. The hon, gentleman stated that, in 1872, when I ran my election, I intimated that, but having stated on the hustings that I would support the then Government I would not have been successful.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I never made such a statement.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I understood him to say I made the declaration on the hustings. I have run thirteen elections successfully, and I think I can run another if the hon. gentlemen opposite would be kind enough to give us a chance.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think you could.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I would like to challenge the hon. gentleman. He thought I could not the last time. He exhausted all his resources and they were unavailing. I would like to have the opportunity of running my county again, and I think many more members would like that opportunity. When there is so much difference of opinion in the country, in regard to this Syndicate, it seems to be a fit and proper time to have a dissolution. If we go to the country and are defeated, we will quitely submit and be satisfied, but the Government dare not give us a dissolution; they know that the people are entirely opposed to this Syndicate. The hon, gentleman has failed to answer any of the objections I made, last night, to the present scheme. He has stated that this contract was made in accordance with and under the authority of the Act of 1874. Now, that seems to me to be a reckless statement, unfounded in fact and in law. I challenge the hon. gentleman to put his finger upon a single clause of the Act of 1874 that runs coincidently with any clause of the contract. He stated that the Statute of 1874 authorized a grant of $10,000 a mile, amounting in all to $30,000,000. Does this contract confine the amount to be given to the Syndicate, to $30,000,000? Does the Act of 1874 authorize the Company to go to the North-West Territory and select the choicest lands in that region? Not a word of that kind. The contract of 1874 requires that the land should be taken in Ontario, wherever it may be found along the line of the railway, along north shore of Lake Superior. But what, under the Act of 1874, does the Company do when they cross the boundary of British Columbia? Do they come back to the fertile belt? No; they take the portions of the land in British Columbia, which were worth nothing comparatively, wherever they could find them, and they took a small portion which was allotted in the prairie section precisely as they took it in Ontario and British Columbia. Then with regard to the land and money, is there any authority for that in the Act of 1874? None whatever. It is directly contrary to the law. Where is the provision authorizing the exemption from Customs duty? Where is the provision in the law which exempted the land from taxation? It is not there. The Hugh Allan contract provides for none of these. Where does the Act of 1874 confer upon Sir Albert J. Smith.

Now, is that not a most country whenever they like? terrible power to give to this Company? Without any limitation of time, for 100 or 200 years they shall have the right in the whole of that country, larger than Ontario and Quebec together, forever to construct railway lines and branches to the main line, without reference to this Parliament. Now, do hon, gentlemen really comprehend the enormity of this proposition? Why, the legislative power of this country is tied up. If we feel that they are building branches prejudicial to the interests of this country the arm of this Parliament is paralyzed to stop it. I stated the other night that the revenue derivable from the Pembina Branch would go to these gentlemen at once. Last year I stated it was $50,000, and that has not been denied. I stated that by the increased population of this country the business of that line would so increase that the yearly net revenue would not be less than $100,000 or $150,000. In the course of 10 years that comes to $1,500,000 actual cash paid into the company, besides the revenue derived from the prairie sections. If I understood the Minister of Railways aright, he told us that the first 100 miles westward from Selkirk could be built and equipped for $700,000. Now, let us see what benefit these gentlemen will get from that under this agreement. When this scheme is consummated I understand about 80 mil s of that road will be finished and ready for traffic. These gentlemen will come to the Finance Minister and say, "We want, as we have a right to have under the contract, the possession and the use of this 100 miles of railway, and we want to pay you, as the contract provides we should pay you, the cost of this railway, which is $700,000. Here is the cheque;" and the Finance Minister accepts the cheque. While the hon. Finance Minister accepts the cheque, the gentleman turns to him and says, "Now I have paid you for that road, I want a million dollars from you." How is that? Why, under this contract there are $10,000 a mile for this 100 miles of railway which the Government have built, and they are entitled to a million of money, for which he gets his cheque, puts it into his pocket, and thus has $300,000, besides getting the road. So much with regard to the money. This agent then will say, "I want a grant of one and a quarter millions acres of land." What is that worth? If it is worth $3 an acre, there are $3,750,000 worth of lands, besides $300,000 cash, making $4,800,000 that these gentlemen get in connection with the first hundred miles of the road, and that road built by the Government. And besides these amounts, the Company will own the road. How is it that the hon. gentleman, inasmuch as there is a difference of opinion as to the construction of this clause which provides the ten per cent, has not given us his view of its construction. The clause is as follows:-

"20. The limit to the reduction of tolls by the Parliament of Canada provided for by the eleventh sub-section of the 17th section of the Consolidated Railway Act, '1879, respecting Tolls, is hereby extended, so that such reduction may be to such an extent that such tolls when reduced shall not produce less than ten per cent. per annum profit on the capital actually expended in the construction of the railway, instead of not less than fifteen per cent per annum profit, as provided by the said sub-section; and so also that such reduction shall not be made unless the net income of the Company, ascertained as described in said sub-section, shall have exceeded ten per cent. per annum instead of fifteen per cent. per annum as provided by the said sub-section. And the exercise by the Governorin Council of the power of reducing the tolls of the Company as provided by the tenth sub-section of said section seventeen, is hereby limited to the same extent with relation to the profit of the Company, and to its net revenue, as that to which the power of Parliament to reduce tolls is elimited by said sub-section eleven as hereby amended."

These it say the capital expended that Company in the content is the company of the company in the capital expended that the Company is the content of the company in the capital expended that the Company is the company in the capital expended that the Company is the company in the capital expended that the Company is the capital expended that the company is the capital expended that the capital expended the capital expended that the capital expended the capi to the land and money, is there any authority for that in the Act of 1874? None whatever. It is directly contrary to the law. Where is the provision authorizing the exemption from Customs duty? Where is the provision in the law which exempted the land from taxation? It is not there. The Hugh Allan contract provides for none of these. Where does the Act of 1874 conter upon the company power perpetually to build railways in that work, besides the surveys which cost about $4,000,000; making $57,000,000 in cash; and on that $57,000,000 the Syndicate are entitled to receive ten per cent. They are entitled also to ten per cent on whatever they have to get out of the lands which the hon. Minister of Railways estimates at about $80,000,000. Suppose every cent, as I hold every cent will be given by the Government, they will receive there is no power under this contract which prevents them from receiving—ten per cent. on $50,000,000. or $8,000,000 clear. Is it fair to the people, if $80,000,000 of their money is put into a railroad and that railroad passed over to the corporation, that the Government should have no voice in the adjustment of the tariff, that the Company shall have the power to regulate tolls and tariffs as they choose and receive 10 per cent. on the $80,000,000 expended on the road. I am surprised that the hon. Minister of Railways should not accede to the just and reasonable proposition of which the hon.member for Halton (Mr. McDougall) expressed himself in favor, and which the hon, member who preceded me also practically supported, and allow us time to consider this new proposition further. We want to see what this offer is. If we can save $10,000,000, $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 by delay, surely the hon, gentlemen who would sustain the proposition would be rewarded by the gratitude of the people.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise for the purpose of stating-

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I rise to a point of order. The hon, gentleman has spoken already.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise to make a personal explanation. If I am not to be permitted to make a personal explanation, I will take another means of answering the speech which has just been delivered by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Sir Albert J. Smith.) That hon. gentleman will understand it is not in his power or that of any other hon, member to prevent my taking the opportunity I now desire to take, to make an explanation-

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I rise to a point of order. The hon, gentleman has already spoken. He made a gross personal attack on the hon. member for Westmoreland, to which that hon, gentleman quickly and properly replied. I will not deprive the hon, gentleman of making a purely personal explanation, and if he chooses to confine himself to that, I have no objection to make, but he has no right to proceed to make his other speech.

Mr. PLUMB. I move the adjournment of the debate. Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I have the floor.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I had the floor, and the hongentleman rose to a point of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman cannot possibly have the floor, for he has already spoken.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I had no intention when I rose to deal with any other than the personal question raised between the hon. member for Westmorland and myself. I do not intend to add a single word to the subject under discussion, but I do claim right to deal with the remarks which the the hon. Westmorland made touching for member question under dispute between himself and We listened this afternoon to the elaborate eulogium of the member for Westmoreland (Sir A. J. Smith) from the member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin). Now, I will prove from the mouth of the member for Gloucester everything I have stated with reference to the member for Westmoreland—that while the member for Westmoreland stood on the floor of this House, he was an office-seeker. He wants to know why I did not reply to him a year ago. He-knows very well he was put up to make that statement for the purpose of getting me to make a reply then in order that I will now give the hon, gentleman the opinion of his another hon, gentleman should have an opportunity of coming after me.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. It is not so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was not of sufficient importance to me, however, to warrant my losing the position in the debate that I thought it was necessary I should occupy. I gave no assent, however, to any statement the hon. gentleman made; I could not have done so without exposing myself to what the hon, gentleman has just accused me ofmaking a false statement. I will give him my reason for the opinion that he was an office-seeker, and was influenced by his desire for office in the course he pursued in and out of the House. I can read a speech which proves, in the most conclusive manner, that on the great public questions of the day he was diametrically opposed to the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald in 1871. He had taken the trouble to give the House his opinion that he regarded the scheme of that Government in a certain case as one of the most insune proposals that any Government could commit itself to, and yet one short year after you find him voting down a motion made by an hon. gentleman with whom he was, in 1871, co-operating against the Canadian Pacific Railway, and which was supported by the member for Bothwell, -that it was unwise to place in the uncontrolled hands of the Government $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres. How does the member for Westmoreland reconcile that with his present course? He says he was offered a Governorship. It is true I did intimate to the hon. gentleman that the present Minister of Finance had stated he believed that the member for Westmoreland would be an acceptable Governor to the people of New Brunswick; and reported after having had authority from my colleagues to communicate with him, that it was not a Governorship he wanted but a seat in the Cabinet. I ask him, will he venture to deny, that when I discussed with him the question of his appointment of Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, he said it would be a great deal better for Tilley or Mitchell to take the position?

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Absolutely untrue.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon, gentleman is prepared to deny that, he is prepared to deny anything.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Absolutely untrue.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He was diametrically opposed to the Government of the day on the great fundamental questions of its policy, and in 1872 was standing side by side voting for and sustaining that Government in relation to that very question, on a most vital and important pointthat we should have the power wanted over the land and money appropriated for the railway without being obliged to ask Parliament year by year for authority. I would give the hon, gentleman more facts. He says this was an insane proposition, that it was monstrous to involve this country in such a dreadful liability. Yet, what did he do? He went back to his people, and has not and dare not dony, because the journals of the day will furnish the proof, to ask them to do what? To condemn the Government, as it was going to ruin Canada by that insane policy? No; he asked to be sent back to sustain the Government committed to that very policy.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Not true.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon, gentleman deny that he stated that if he was returned to Parliament, after five years' experience, he believed the interests of the country, and especially in the Maritime Provinces, required that he should support the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald and not the Opposition—that was to support the Government that to-night he declares were committed to an issane, dreadful project, which was going to ruin Camada.

colleague with whom he sat, dos-à-dos, during 1872 in this House, and who has passed this brilliant eulogium upon the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He says of the member for Westmoreland, that he had covered himself with infamy unspeakable for a consideration. A vote was proposed in this House-in fact was proposed against the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald—and the member for Westmoreland, for what reason he has got to explain to the House and country, voted side by side with the right hon. leader of the Government. The member for Westmoreland was then held up to public obloquy and contempt by the member for Gloucester in his paper dated 12th April, 1873, in which he declared that the men who had voted for the motion and question were willing to cover themselves with infamy unspeakable for a consideration. He also wrote that they were prepared to sacrific honor, character, honesty and reputation.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. He said the same of you.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is quite true, but I was not looking for a Governorship.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Is that true?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The member for Gloucester also said: "that men with characters to lose, with reputations to forfeit, will wade through filth so vile to a Governorship." What was the matter with the hon. friend of that gentleman that he would then wade through filth so vile?

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. The Governorship did not come.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was not the Governorship the hon, gentleman wanted. It is quite true when he went to his constituents declaring that he was prepared to turn his back upon his old associates, and unite his political for-tunes with the Government in power, that I said to him that if he preferred to be the Governor of Nova Scotia to the Governor of New Brunswick, I had no doubt the matter could be arranged. That statement is quite true.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. That statement is not true.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In all my communications with the hon, gentleman I went back to my colleagues and said—and they all know the statements I am making to be true—"What Mr. Smith wants is Mr. Mitchell's or Mr. Tilley's place, and not a Governorship," and I say here in the presence of the assembled Parliament that I ascertained beyond doubt from the hon, gentleman and from his own statements, that what he desired was the position held in the Cabinet by Mr. Mitchell or Mr. Tilley, and as the Government felt that either of those gentlemen possessed a greater amount of ability than the hon. gentleman and was more entitled to the position, we could not, in the public interests, ask either of them to make way for the hon. member. Now, Sir, that was the position. He says I have made a false and malicious statement. Why, Sir, if any other member of this House had made that statement I would have asked that the words be taken down, and I will tell him why I did not in his case. I knew that the hon. gentleman put on record his vote in this House that the statement of an hon. gentleman in this House was a "false, scandalous and malicious statement," and I knew him afterwards, as a member of a Government, to present that same man to this House to be elected as its Speaker; so, I say, that false, malicious and scandalous words coming from that hon. gentleman will always be treated as idle wind when they remember that when his interests require him to make such a statement he will make it, and when his interests demand another statement he will state that opposite. I told my colleagues what I believed, and it was this: "Either Mr. Smith will have a seat in the Cabinet or he will intrigue for a seat in another." The hon. gentleman Sir Charles Tupper.

he made to the electors from the hustings that he came as a supporter of Sir John A. Macdonald, but he went over to the other side when they had a seat in the Cabinet to offer

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH: You know you are making a false statement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We had no seat in the Cabinet for the hon. gentleman, and those who had it were in a position to take him out of our hands, and they did it. He says he did not depend on that statement for his election. I do not say he did. I do not say he would not have been elected. He says he had a majority of 7 0. How did he get that? He knows that a petition was fyled against him for having obtained that by scandalous and wholesale bribery. How did he escape that petition? By going into court and showing it was not true?

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I do not rise to call the hon. gentleman to order, but I want to know, will I have an opportunity to reply?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no objection in the world. He escaped that petition, not by going into court, as an honest man would have done, and challenging his accusers to bring the proof, but he escaped it by putting up the defence that the law which his Government had themselves put on the Statute book prevented any appeal to the Supreme Court. That appeal came here, and the court decided that the law was bad, but the decision came too late and thus he escaped, or, in my judgment, he would not otherwise be sitting here to-day.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Your judgment is not worth anything, in my opinion/

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have answered the questions the hon, gentleman asked me, and, in all candor, I am prepared here and everywhere to leave the question as to how far the temptations of office have influenced the hon. gentleman upon the statement he has made of his own action, and the evidence he has furnished to this House here to-night.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. The hon. gentleman, true to the interests of his own nature, has indulged in that which, I say, characterises him, and which has lowered and degraded him below any public man in Canada. Yes, that is his characteristic, and it is known, perhaps not so much in Ontario as in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Whenever anything is said there that is so extravagant that it cannot be believed, it is nothing but "a Tupperism." That is the kind of reputation the hon. gentleman has down in that region, but the hon. gentleman has not denied my statement. I said that he himsell had offered me a seat in the Government. Has he denied that in his place? I said one of his colleagues had offered me a place in the Government also. Has he denied that? He dare not deny it! I throw it back on him! I ask him if he did not, in a hotel in this city of Ottawa, come into my room, first on my arrival here in October, 1873, and press me to take a seat in his Government? He says, when he met me in St. John he had telegraphed me to meet him there, and then says his colleagues were willing that I should have a Governorship, and that my appointment would be acceptable to the people. Will that hon, gentleman dony that he pressed the Governorship of New Brunswick on me, and when I refused to take the Governor-ship of New Brunswick, he then offered me the Gov-ernorship of Nova Scotia, and said be would take the Governorship of New Brunswick himself? Will the hon, gentleman deny that I should like to know? He says that, after our interview in St. John, he referred to his got permission to come back here on a declaration which colleagues, and told them that I would not take a Governor-ship, and that what I wanted was a Cabinet office. If he stated that to his colleagues he said what was not true, for I never made such an intimation. If I wanted a Cabinet an offer. office here, would not I have taken it when it was offered to me? Sir John A. Macdonald, as I said in my former observations, kindly offered me the Governorship of New Brunswick in 1872, and what he says I stated on the hustings is not true. What I did say was this: that I had come here as an Independent member, that I had given the Government my support when I thought they were right, and condemned them when I thought they were wrong. asked to be returned in the same position, but but I was prepared to give the Government credit for having done justice to the Lower Provinces. I said "If you elect me I will go back as an Independent member, and will exercise my own discretion." Does the hon, gentleman suppose that any man endowed with a sense of honor, would undertake to follow him through the dirt and mire of the Pacific Scandal? It is no pleasure to me to refer to that transaction, but the hon. gentleman has involved a full discussion of it. Could any man justify that scandal? The hon. Finance Minister, I see, has returned to his place now. He was conspicuous by his absence when I I ask him, if I ever applied for a positionwas speaking. was I ever an office-seeker in any shape or form?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am not aware that the hon. gentleman made any application to me for an office. I was permitted to place myself in communication with him and offer him a Governorship, which he declined. I know, subsequently, the hon. gentleman who is now Minister of Railways had a communication with him, and reported to his colleagues—I will not say whether it is right or wrong—that the hon. gentleman had declined to him the Governorship of New Brunswick, and said he wanted a seat in the Government. The hon. gentleman says that another member of the Government offered him a seat; if he refers to me, I never, in any communication I had with him, intimated to him that a seat in the Government was at his disposal. That subject was never referred to; it was confined to the Governorship.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. That is very true; but it is a remarkable thing that I never heard this before. It is a wonderful instance of the retentiveness of the hon. gentleman's memory, and it is wonderful how clearly it accords with the recollections of the Minister of Railways. I have only to state that it was not true. I ask the Finance Minister if I did not tell him, during the time that his administration was in power, that I did not want any offers. When I was here supporting his Government, now and then supporting him when he was right, and opposing him when he was wrong, I told him more than once that I did not want any office.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not recollect any conversation on the subject, except our communication with reference to the Governorship.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Does he deny that I was offered a seat in his Government?

Sir LEON  $\Lambda$  RD TILLEY. I dony it. I say that it was not in my knowledge.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Will the Finance Minister say that an offer was made to me by two of his colleagues on two different occasions, and that he did not know it?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I was never aware that an offer was made to him of a seat in the Government, because it was my seat, and I had no intimation that I was to leave, and I had no knowledge that there were any vacancies. I was not aware that my colleagues had any authority to offer any seats.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. The Minister of Railways does not deny that he offered me a seat.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I deny it most positively, and I say besides that I never had such authority to make such an offer.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I will endeavor to revive the hon. gentleman's recollection. Does he recollect being in my bed-room, at the Russell House, in October, 1873, on the day of my arrival in Ottawa.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before that time the hon. gentleman had placed himself in the position of the strongest and fiercest antagonism to the Government of the day. The statement of the hon. gentleman that I offered him a seat in the Cabinet is without a shadow of truth.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH, who was indistinctly heard, was understood to say that when the Minister of Railways was asked why he had not answered his (Sir Albert J. Smith's) question, he replied that he was afraid he was losing his right to speak. The speaker proceeded: Now, that statement was untrue, and I ask the hon. gentleman why he had not the manliness and the justice to rise and say it was untrue, instead of making the excuse that he was afraid he would lose his right to speak. I make the statement solemnly and on my honor as a man that the hon. gentleman, in this city, offered me a seat in his Government, and that another member of his Government offered me a seat in 1873. The hon gentleman has charged me with bribery in my election. I throw that charge back in his face, and I say that no man in the Dominion is so corrupt as he—that he is notorious for his bribery and corruption.

Mr. ANGLIN. I wish to make a personal explanation. When the Minister of Railways read something which he produced as evidence from me against the hon, member for Westmoreland I was at first under the impression that he was quoting from my speeches in this House, for which I was responsible to Parliament, to my constituents, and to the country. On listening further, however, I found that he was quoting an article from a newspaper which created much excitement in this House some years ago, but which, as he read it at first, I am sorry to be obliged to say, he did not read it correctly. As he read it at first it appeared to make a direct charge against a member of this House of being influenced in giving a vote on a very important question by the hope of a Governorship. However, Sir, he happened to read it again, and then he put both nouns in the plural—that several members were influenced by the promise or hope of Governorships. Why the hon, gentleman should have chosen to believe and assert that passage applied solely to the member for Westmoreland it is not for me to say. But there is more than this to be said, that the Hon. Minister of Railways himself once quoted that statement, and pronounced it a foul scandal and a malicious libel. And yet the hon. gentleman quotes it this evening as evidence that this charge against the hon, member for Westmoreland is a truthful charge. If I even permitted, as the Finance Minister was permitted, to repeat what was told me, I might state what another told me in 1879 or 1880, that at a time when, as hon, gentlemen are aware, a member of the Government, sitting in the Senate. made himself obnoxious, and a large number of that body demanded that he should be put out of the Government, and I remember well that on that occasion the present hon. Minister of Finance had an interview with the member for Westmoreland. I was cognizant, personally, of the fact; and immediately afterwards, Sir Albert J. Smith reported to me that the non. Mr. Tilley had proposed to him, by the authority of Sir John A. Macdonald, that Mr. Mitchell should be put out of the Government, and that he should be offered the seat.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I rise to say at once that there is not a word of truth in the statement.

Mr. BOWELL. Does the hon. member for Gloucester deny that the article to which he has referred does not apply to the hon, member for Westmoreland. That was the impression he left on the House. I ask him if the language was not applicable to, and intended for, the hon. member for Westmoreland?

Mr. SPEAKER. I desire to call attention to the irregular character of this discussion. When a personal explana-tion is to be made, a good deal of indulgence is generally allowed to an hon. member, but it is to be expected that in such cases hon members should endeavor to introduce matters which are not pertinent to the debate.

Mr. DESJARDINS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to some remarks suggested by the new stage into which the question now under consideration has entered, on account of certain offers made to the Government for the building of the Pacific Railway; but, before approaching this subject, I cannot refrain from alluding to the lecture on political independence that was read to us a moment ago by the hon, member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin). I have no objection to being told what a member, anxious to fulfil his duty, must do when he is called upon to take part in the settling of such an important question as the present one; but when I receive such a lesson, I like very well to know where it comes from, and whether he who gives has really the right so to do. On hearing the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) recommend us to show ourselves independent of our leaders, and of our political party, I asked myself what had been his line of conduct, some years ago, when a question of vital importance for his constituents was being discussed; when he had been entrusted by a numerous group of the population of New Brunswick with the defence, before this House, of rights that had been trampled under foot by a fanatical majority of the Legislature of his Province. And, Mr. Speaker, if I remember aright, it was not the Conservatives who then hesitated to embarrass the Government they were supporting, in order to defend, with the member for Gloucester, what they considered a right unjustly ignored. However, it happened that the hon, member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) could at length count upon a majority of his friends in the House, and what did he then do? Did he continue the valiant struggle that we had undertaken with him? No, Mr. Speaker; in order not to inconvenience his friends he withdrew from the fight, going up to the mountain top as it were, and leaving the unlucky Conservatives to defend, alone and in spite of him, the interests with the defence of which he was more especially entrusted. It is not therefore for him to come and read us a lecture on political independence. Now, Mr. Speaker, in presence of this new Syndicate, got up in forty-eight hours, by the party now in Opposition, or at least under its auspices, I am more than ever inclined to believe that the Liberal party is only really fruitful when in Opposition. I very well remember the promises made and the fine schemes formed by the Liberal party before they got into power. When they got into power, we were to see, according to their promises, all the questions that were then taking up our attention, settled in the most satisfactory manner; we were to see the questions that divided us, with respect to the North-West, settled according to our wishes; we were to see the serious question of the New Brunswick Schools settled so as to satisfy the ignored rights of our co-religionists. And with regard to this question of the Pacific Railway, what was not promised? I must confess that I was myself guilty for a moment of believing in the good faith of the Liberal Government. But I had soon to undeceive myself, and with respect to the question of the Pacific Railway I was not long in seeing that we had then, as we are asked to do now, left the substance to run after the shadow. Thanks to the regretted, and I am satisfied the new Syndicate would be Liberals we lost the Allan contract, and what did we gain? very sorry were we to take them at their word. Under We have had the dredging of the Kaministiquia harbor; these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think the Government, Mr. Bowell.

we have had the Fort Francis locks; we have had the famous Foster contract. The great national enterprise was so altered and mutilated that it was impossible to recognize it. They began by removing the eastern terminus of the Pacific Railway 350 miles; next, at the risk of destroying the great work of Confederation, they wanted to abandon the construction of the road in British Columbia. And now, when they come to us with a new project, the authors of which it is impossible to look upon as being in earnest, and which, if it were adopted, would have for result to break off the negotiations with the Syndicate whose contract is new under consideration, we will ask ourselves what we would retain if the Government, taking up seriously this new proposal, should release from their engagements the capitalists who have entered into the contract with them. Supposing that the Government were disposed to enter into new negotiations, I maintain that the offer now submitted would not meet the views, at least of the, members from the Province of Quebec, if not of the whole Conservative party. There are in the new contract clauses that are entirely contrary to the policy that we have been supporting since 1872. We do not want, for our part, that any Government should have the option of building or of abandoning the line to the north of Lake Superior. We do not wish that the Government should be authorized at the same time to give up that part of the line that is to be built in British Columbia, because we have always been in favor of the completion of the Confederation, and because we have always wished for a line built entirely upon our own territory. We never thought of being satisfied with the line that is now offered us, nor of substituting the Sault Ste. Marie Branch for any part of the main line. By showing themselves so eager to adopt the new contract, the Opposition are entirely contradicting their former declarations. The leader of the Opposition maintained that the granting of 25,000,000 of acres of land in the North-West would create a system of land tenure that would be fraught with the same inconveniences as those that now exist in Ireland. It was the granting of lands that he looked upon as the greatest objection. Well, if we are to take the draft of the contract as published in Opposition papers, are we not as much exposed to land tenures under the new contract as we can be under the former? Now, mention has been made of the tariffs that might be levied on trade by the first Syndicate, under the control of Government. Well, Mr. Speaker, if, by adopting the Sault Ste. Marie Branch, we should put ourselves under the control of the American lines, who would protect us against the tariffs that they might impose upon our trade? By connecting our lines with the Northern Pacific near Duluth. would not we be exposed to see our lines become a sort of pis aller for the western trade, and would we not be exposed to see our lines receive only that portion of the traffic that the roads going to Chicago and the Ocean ports could not possibly carry? Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that under these circumstances the Government would be justified in saying immediately—and for my part I am disappointed in seeing that they did not say so immediately -that they cannot look upon, as serious, a proposal that comes so late, and that being engaged with one Syndicate in a scheme matured during several months, they cannot abandon it in order to give themselves up to gentlemen who, after having consulted with the Opposition, have, in forty-eight hours' time, made proposals that it is impossible to look upon as honestly and seriously made. Mr. Speaker, it is stated that there are capitalists well up in the social scale who are engaged in this new Syndicate. But we know something about capitalists that dabble in politics. We have often seen these kind of capitalists, carried away by party spirit, take a part in proceedings that they afterwards very sorry were we to take them at their word. Under before asking us to continue this debate, to the prejudice of matters requiring the attention of this House, should declare that they do not intend to consider the new proposals as serious, that the only contract that is before the House, and that is to remain there, is the contract that we have been examining and discussing since the opening of the Session.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, it is not for me to characterize in any way the language just been made use of by the hon, member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins). How-ever, he will allow me to tell him that, in my humble opinion, the Conservative members from the Province of Quebec are now losing a fine opportunity of rendering a service to their country. It is not for me to dictate to anyone in this House the manner in which each one is to fulfil the duty he owes to himself and to his country; it is not for me to appeal to any one with respect to his manner of fulfilling what he believes to be his duty to his country, but on this occasion the interests that are at stake, and which depend upon the determination that we are going to take, are so important that it will not be unseemly on my part if I appeal to the influence that the representatives of the Province of Quebec pretend to exercise, and which I believe they do exercise over the present Government, to prevent Ministers from further persisting in what I believe to be a fatal undertaking. Whatever may be the opinion entertained by each of us upon the relative or intrinsic merit of the contract, it is evident that the situation is no longer to-day what it was yesterday; whatever may be the relative or intrinsic worth of this contract, it is evident that it would be rash to come to an immediate decision upon this contract, because, as I have just stated, the question is no longer what it was yesterday. Heretofore we have only discussed the contract as drawn up by hon. Ministers all that we were asked to do was to ratify that contract, and the only question was whether we would ratify or not the contract that was submitted to us. Now, the aspect of the question is changed; heretofore only one scheme was under discussion, but at the present moment we are certain that there is a second proposal before the Government-at the present moment we are certain that a new company has offered to undertake the building of the Pacific Railway. Without being able to say what are the terms of this contract; without being able to say whether this contract is preferable to the one we have been discussing-from the very moment that we have the assurance that there is another proposal before the Government-is it not our duty to wait till more light is thrown on the question, and to wait until we have the opportunity of knowing which of the two schemes now in the hands of the Government is the more advantageous for the country? I am astonished to hear the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) say that the Government should entirely reject the new offer that is made to them; that they should proceed and arrive immediately at the adoption of the first contract. Is it by so doing that he pretends to serve the interests of his country; does he pretend that by rejecting immediately an offer that he has not seen, or that he has only seen through the press, he would be accomplishing a patriotic act; would be recommend to this House to put aside the light that is about to be thrown on this question and to adopt the present scheme blindly, without stopping to take into consideration the new scheme? It must be evident to every reasonable man, it must be evident to my hon. friend from the county of Hochelaga, that such a proposition cannot be inspired by a feeling of patriotism. I think that he has yielded to party exigencies. I know what the exigencies of party are, I have perhaps yielded to them myself sometimes; but when such an important question as this one presents itself, we should not refuse to take into consideration the new proposal made to the Government. We do not yet know the terms of the new contract, but for my part I think that we should know them. I would not wish to follow the example of the hon, member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) in desiring to reject this contract before having had the opportunity of knowing what it is. The hon, member for Hochelaga is not serious when he makes such a proposal, and he will regret, I am sure, the language he has made use of. He cannot seriously have asked his friends to have the courage to say: "We are ready to support the Government, to declare that they ought to reject this scheme as being an offer not seriously made, and to vote for the first contract." On the contrary, I maintain that before further binding ourselves we ought to know the torms of the new offer. We are now discussing, perhaps, the most important question that has ever come before the country since Confederation; and it is upon such an important question as this that hon, gentlemen would fain precipitate a decision, prevent the House from even taking cognizance of the new offer, and force the Government to accept the first contract, even without making themselves acquainted with the new one. I am not discussing the terms of the second offer; I am not acquainted with them, and I have not the pretension of being acquainted with them; but what I know, and what we all know is, that those who have signed their names at the bottom of this offer appear capable of honoring their signatures, even if their signatures were to be honored at the cost of millions. We also know, or, at least, such is the rumor, that the terms of the new scheme are much more advantageous, and that there is a notable difference between the price of the second contract and that of the first. We are informed that, with regard to the question of money, the sum asked for by the new Syndicate is much less than the sum asked for by the first Syndicate. We also know that, with respect to the land grant—or, at least, so we are told—the new proposal is much more advantageous than the former one. The hon, member for Hochelaga said that we should reject the new offer because it gives the Government the option of building, or of not building, the line to the north of Lake Superior. That might be a reason for rejecting it; but that is not a reason for refusing to look at it. It is, moreover, stated that the offer is not seriously made, that it is a political dodge got up by the Opposition. Mr. Speaker, if the Opposition have organized this scheme they will have still another claim to the gratitude of the country, for whatever may have been the motives that induced these capitalists to make the Government this new offer, these motives are of little consequence, provided that we obtain the result, and the result is that the new company offers more advantageous terms then those we now have before us. It is stated that the offer is not serious. But there is a very simple means of ascertaining that fact, and that is to put these capitalists to the test; they are ready to deposit the money and give all the security the Government may require. There is, therefore, no reason for doubt, and could any better proof that they are serious be obtained? Can it be said that these men are not serious when they offer to deposit a money security which, if I am rightly informed, doubles the security offered by the former capitalists. I go much farther, and do not hesitate to say that if these men were not serious, that if they had merely made the proposal in order to throw dust in the eyes of the Government and of the people, it would be a contemptible act that would deserve the censure of Parliament. When these capitalists placed their offer in the hands of the Government they took the responsibility of their act; and consequently if their offer were not serious, the offer being accepted by the Government, they would deserve to be punished by all the censures that this Parliament can inflict. It is said that it is important that the Syndicate should go to work at once. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, but that there is a great deal of force in that objection; it is important that the Syndicate should set to work, but it is still more important to know which Syndicate is to do the work, and that is just the point at issue. If, on the one hand, we have the interests of the Syndicate to protect, on the other hand we have the interests of the country, and at the present moment we have to decide whether we are going to sacrifice the country to the Syndicate, or the Syndicate to the country. That is the whole question. Once more I say that I regret that the hon, member for Hochelaga, and the representatives from the Province of Quebec; who pretend to have, and who, I believe, do possess considerable influence over the Government, have not applied that influence to delaying the discussion of this question until light had been thrown on the subject. Hon. members from the Province of Quebec are in the habit of boasting of the influence they exercise over the Government. If they would put into this question the same activity and the same energy, or the half of that energy and activity that they put into another question that came before this House, and which was certainly less important for the country than the one now before us, they would make themselves heard and obeyed. The question to which I allude merely involved an abstract principle, whilst now the dearest interests of the whole country are at stake. In the memorable circumstance of which I am speaking, the Conservative members forced the Government to do that which they did not want to do; they forced them to do an unjust thing, although the Government was satisfied that it was unjust. Well, let them apply to the present question, the influence they exercised on that occasion, and I am convinced that they will succeed in inducing the Government to take into consideration the offer that has just been placed in their hands.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, it is precisely in order to protect the interests of the country that the Conservative party, and especially the Conservative party, and especially the Conservative party of the Province of Quebec, will oppose this second Syndicate, since it is so called, which now comes and makes a proposal to the Government. The hon member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) says that, without knowing what this proposal is the conservation of the cons without knowing what this proposal is, we reject it. Does he know anything more about this contract than we do? And yet he is ready to accept it. All in this new Syndicate is magnificent, all in this proposal is splendid, because it comes from friends of the hon. member for Quebec East. But everything that comes from this side of the House is bad. However, the first Syndicate is composed, in a great measure, of friends of the hon. member, so that we have no reason for supporting one more than another. support the contract entered into, and we submitted it to the House, because the proposals that were made to us were considered the best, and were accepted by the Government. And when these proposals were made to the Government, did the Government keep what they were doing a secret? Did they not make known that they were willing to receive proposals from no matter what quarter?

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. leader of the Opposition may say "hear, hear," but that will not prevent the truth from being true. At that time the Prime Minister declared in his speech, that the Government was ready to receive proposals. And where were then the friends of the Opposition? These same men were, however, in the country. The capital of which they boast so much to-day, they had it then. Why did they not come forward and say to the Government. "Here is a proposal, we are ready to build the road on such and such terms." Oh, no! These gentlemen did not stir; they entered into no communication with the Government: They did not come forward. They did not make known to the Government that they were ready to tender for this contract. They kept aloof then, and, to-lay, after the Government Mr. LAURIER, Opposition have discussed it, and, by discussing it from day to day, obtained an adjournment of the House; after the members of the Opposition have gone to the country in order to endeavor to arouse the people against the Government and the proposal, and having failed, what do they do? They say: "how we will find another way of embarrassing the Government." They have friends around them, to whom they say: "Make a proposal to the Government; even if this proposal is not serious, even if you are unable to carry out the construction of the road. Do you think the Government is going to accept it? Make your offer, it will help us to overthrow the Government, it it is possible to do so; at any rate, it will embarrass the Government, and, perhaps, cause the proposal now before the House to re thrown out. That is all we want. We wish to prevent the building of the road to the north of Lake Superior. Make a proposal that can be changed some day, and that will prevent the construction of that part of the road." Provided we, the members of the Opposition, see the triumph of our policy, which is to prevent the building of the railroad on Canadian territory, in order to send the trade to the United States, then, our great policy, not national, but anti-national, will have succeeded. No, Sir, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) must think his fellow-countrymen of the Province of Quebec very ingenuous if he thinks that they are going to adopt this new proposal, which would have for result to deprive us, the inhabitants of the Eastern Provinces, of through communication over our own territory; which would have for result to deprive us of the immigrants arriving from other countries, arriving from the United Kingdom, and who, instead of passing over our territory to go and settle in the North-West, would be induced to pass over the territory of the United States, and to remain there.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. leader of the Opposition says "hear," But it is known that such is his policy, he has made it known to us.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. member for We t Durham (Mr. Blake) says, not at all, pas du tout. It is a pity that he does not apply his French to the defence of the good cause, but such is his policy. He does not want us to have the road to the north of Lake Superior. What he wants is the Sault Ste. Marie Branch. He wants us to communicate with the Nouth-West with our immense territories, upon which we have spent considerable sums in order to open them up to settlement; he wants us to communicate with our North-West by the United States rou'e. Why have these hon, gentlemen such a particular friendship for this road? Why would they draw us away to the United States? Why is it that the word "National Policy" so rankles in their bosom, that they wish absolutely to destroy our nationality, I mean our great Canadian nationality. They want to Americanize us. Sir, I believe that not only the great majority of this House will not consent to such a thing, but, that the great majority of the country will oppose it. We want to maintain our autonomy as a separa'e people from the United States. Sir, the hon member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) has just spoken to us about the new Syndicate, and he said: "This new Syndicate proposes to build the road cheaper than the one you have accepted." The hon. member should have added, that in such a case as this, the question of money is not alone to be taken into consideration. The question of money is not the great question be for us, and since the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) made an appeal to the hon. members from the Province of Quebec, he will allow me to do the same, have received a serious proposal that could be accepted; and to tell them that we must not alone consider whether, after the Government have accepted this proposal and placed it before the House; after hon, members of the of dollars; but we are to consider whether, by the construction of this railway, we are going to secure to our Province and to the Eastern Provinces, through communication with the North-West; we are to consider whether this road is going to benefit the Province of Quebec and the other Eastern Provinces as the Province of Ontario.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANGEVIN. As soon as the hon. leader of the Opposition sees that a point has been made against him he exclaims: "hear, hear." But let him pay attention to the votes that will be given, and he will see that these votes will be in the interest of this country and not in the interest of the United States. The great majority of the House, the immense majority of the House, the whole Conservative party, are in favor of a National Policy, and are not in tavor of a United States policy. What have we to do with the United States? When the United States wish to trade with us they are welcome to de so, but we have to see to our future as a people, and we are not to consider whether by this road we are going to get a hundred dollars, a thousand dollars, or a million of dollars from the United States. The great question is, whether this road is going to be built for the United States or for us. Sir, if in order to save four or five or six millions of dollars we were to sacrifice the advantages of having a road in connection with the roads of Ontario and Quebec, and of building this road entirely on our own territory, we would certainly be guilty, and the electors of the country would blame us, for having so acted. Sir, I did not expect that the hon member for Quebec East, forgetting the interests of his Province, with the defence of which he is especially entrusted by his party, would make such an appeal to his fellow-countrymen of the Prevince of Quebec. It seems to me that, although we are divided on many questions, and although he sits on one side of the House and we on the other, it seems to me that when a question of great public interest comes up for discussion, like the one we are now discussing and which is one of the most important that ever came before Parliament, it seems to me that the hon. gentleman should rise above party considerations and watch the interests of the country. But how does he watch these interests? By appealing to us and saying: "Will we, the people of the Province of Quebec, sacrifice millions in order to have this road built by the first Syndicate, when we can have it built much cheaper?" Sir, he forgets the great question, which is whether the road shall be built on our own territory from one end to the other, or whether it shall be built in fact on American territory. When the proposal of the new Syndicate is brought down, the House will see that this offer is not so rose-tinted as hon. gentlemen on the other side would make us believe. The hon, member for Queffec East (Mr. Laurier) has appealed to the members of the Province of Quebec not to vote concurrence in the resolutions until the proposals of the new Syndicate are before the House. According to that hon, gentleman the proposals of the new Syndicate would be some millions less than the proposals now before the House. The question is not merely one of a few millions of dollars, but it is a great national question. Money saved at the expense of the national interests of this country will be more of a loss than a saving. We have to decide whether this road would have to be built on Canadian territory. If it is to be built only partially on our territory and to benefit the United States to our own prejudice, then it would be better for us to have no railway at all. We do not want our money to go to build up the United States, but we want to use it in securing the trans-continental road which will open up our own territory and afford homes for British subjects who will praise the institutions we have, and defend them against all comers. The large majority of the people of this country desire that the British institutions we have now may be made permanent. They desire that we may be vote. Now, here we are past midnight on Saturday quite independent of the United States. We are friendly to them; they are friendly, I hope, to us; but like other nations we desire to be independent, and to be independent of them we must have railway communications from one end of the country to the other. If, as hon, gentlemen opposite desire, we are to have a railway which will be broken at Sault Ste. Marie, and we are to go through the United States to reach Winnipeg or Pembina, then I say we are dependent on the United States, and all the immigrants coming to us from Europe will be lost to us, as they have been in the past, when they passed through American territory. As an issue we wish to have those immigrants pass through our own territory when they go to settle in the North-West. We wish to have a railway that will be a credit to this country and exclusively benefit Canada. True. we may have a proposal by which three or four millions may be saved at the expense of the Lake Superior section and the British Columbia section. If we accept this new proposal we shall have to set aside the whole past policy of this country. We have made a bargain with British Columbia to build a railway to the Pacific, the faith of the country is pledged to it, and I know this Parliament will not break a pledge made in its name by the Government of Canada. Therefore we must reject this new Syndicate and stand by the old one. Why? Because, by the plan suggested by the Government, that portion of the railway north of Lake Superior is to be built simultaneously and continuously with other sections of the railway. We have there a guarantee that the railway will be built for the benefit of the whole country, and not only for one portion of the country. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Sir Albert J. Smith) said a few moments ago: We have the people on our side; let us go to the country again. That does not appear from the elections that have taken place since 1878. In every case where the seat of a Conservative became vacant it was filled by another Conservative, and three, if not five, seats that belonged to the hon. gentlemen opposite, on becoming vacant, were filled by Conservatives. Hon, gentlemen have boasted of the great meeting held in their favor in Montreal, at which the admission was by ticket. If they were not affaid, why did they not open their doors to both parties alike? When my hon, friend the Minister of Railways held his meeting in Montreal the doors were thrown open to everybody, and my hon, friend was not afraid to meet there his opponents and to tell them our policy, and on that occasion he won golden opinions even from his opponents. The people saw that he was plucky enough to meet his adversaries, and if the hon, leader of the Opposition had wished to be present he would have been accommodated with a seat on the platform, and would have been allowed to speak. Not so, however, with the leader of the Opposition. He wanted to be let alone and have no one to contradict him. He had his own way, but the people have shown that they would not support him.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT I think every hon. gentleman on both sides of the House must have become tolerably well aware by this time that the Government would have done a very wise and sensible thing if they had at once and without deniur conceded the motion of my hon, friend from Shelburne (Mr. Robertson). To what purpose this nine hours of discussion? Simply and solely because the hon. gentlemen saw, to their confusion and dismay, that their followers would not support them if they ventured to go on with the discussion. The hon, gentleman for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) was perfectly right in the admonition which he bestowed on those hon, gentlemen, cautiously and properly as it was done. He gave them to understand, though he had stood by their side in the darkest hour of their adversity, that he was not going to stand peaceably by and see this matter disposed of without at least knowing tolerably well what he was called upon to morning, kept idle and purposeless here discussing all kinds of absurd and irrelevant matter imported into this discussion by the Minister of Railways—not much to his credit and not much to his profit either. I rise here chiefly to discharge a simply act of justice. But first allow me to say, that although I pretend to but little knowledge of the language in which the Minister of Public Works addressed the House, it did strike me, unless my ears deceived me, that he made an appeal to his friends from Quebec not to support this measure, because it was in the interest of Ontario.

Mr. LANDRY. No; no.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Because the Syndicate were likely to further interests of Ontario.

Mr. LANDRY. The hon. gentleman must learn French before he can be so positive.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. My knowledge of French is scarcely so good as I could wish, but I think that that was, in substance, the remarks which the hon. gentleman made in his native tongue, and which he omitted to translate into the tongue of most of us.

Mr. LANDRY. You are wrong.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. We have heard the minions of the hon. gentleman set up to do the dirty work which even the hon. Minister of Railways did not choose to do-set up to state that this new contract was a mean, miserable, political dodge, set up to decry the repute and the character of men as honorable as Canada can show, as wealthy as any of the men who now form the Syndicate to which these hon, gentlemen propose to assign this work. We have not got both proposals before us as we might. We might easily have had that offer laid, at eight o'clock, on the Table; but we happen to know, from the information of some hon, gentlemen who signed that offer themselves, the names of a considerable number of the men whose sig natures are attached to this document. Who are these men whom men like the hon, member for Cardwell dare to attack as having lent their names, credit and character to a mean and paltry political dodge? The first man is Sir William Howland, the old ex-Lieut. Governor of Ontario, a former colleague of hon. gentlemen opposite, and a man whose name is honored from one end of the Province to the other; the next is Mr. A. K. McMaster, of Toronto, the head of one of the largest firms there, and one who is likely to take the highest grade among the merchants of Ontario; H. H. Cook, Toronto; Poleg Howland, Toronto; Wm. Hendrie, Hamilton; John Proctor, Hamilton; John Stuart, Hamilton; A. T. Wood, Hamilton—all men of wealth and influence; my friend Mr. Allan Gilmour, Ottawa, a man of known honor and immense wealth, who would scorn to put his name to any document which he was not prepared fully to implement; James Maclaren, Ottawa—is he a man who is likely to lend himself to a mean, paltry political dodge?-John Walker, London; D. McFie, London; P. S. Stevenson, Montreal; John Carruthers, Kingston; G. A. Cox, Peterboro', one of the best railway men in this Province; A. W. Ross, Winnipeg, a man of large experience and considerable means; P. Larkin, St. Catharines; K. Chisholm, Brampton, a man who received, but a few months ago, a check for $800,000, I believe, for his interest in one single concern; Alexander Gibson, Fredericton; William D. Lovitt & Co., Yarmouth, a firm of the very largest ship-owners, if I mistake not, in the whole Dominion; Barnett & McKay, Renfrew, well known as men of means. I believe that these men, fairly weighed, fairly put to the test, have nothing whatever to fear from comparison even with my excellent friends, Mr. Stevens, Mr. Angus or Mr. Hill, of Minnesota, or Baron Reinach, of Germany or France or wherever he may be, or my worthy young friend, Mr. Charles Rose, the son of Sir John Rose, a very excellent man, but not, I think, one of those great merchant princes who, we were told, Sir Richard J. Cartwright.

were knocking at the doors of the ante-chambers of hon. gentlemen in London. It is a meckery; it is an insult, not to the House, but the intelligence of the community in which we live, that men such as these should be taunted by men like the hon. member for Cardwell, with lending themselves to a mean and paltry political job. I have no right to pledge myself for those men in any way, but I know their resources and determination to implement anything that they may put their hands to, and I will venture to say that, within twenty-four hours, if the hon. Minister of Railways demands security, that security will be forthcoming in an hour, cash on the counter. The hon. Minister of Public Works tried to impress on this House that the proposition of these gen-tlemen is one which contemplates the abandoning of the road through British territories. I am given to understand that those gentlemen are very willing to offer to this Parliament, if this Parliament pleases to accept it, the option of constructing just as much or just as little of this road as it likes; but it is not true that they are not willing to construct the whole for the sum of $3,000,000 less in cash, and 3,000,000 acres less in land, worth at least $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 more. They propose to construct this whole road from Callendar Station to that point to which the present Syndicate are willing to construct it; and they propose to construct it without any of those vile monopoly clauses which disgrace and disfigure the contract under consideration; without asking for any exemption from taxes on the lands they are to get, and on the road-bed and the road they are to acquire, and without remission of duties. That offer, I understand, is now in the possession of the Hon. Minister of Railways. I do say it is monstrous that the common courtesy of 24 hours' delay to enable the House and the country to become informed of the proposition should not be granted without this useless discussion. We are told that this contract cannot be opened up, that the contract has been let and then other people came on with lower bids. Parliament has surely the right, if Parliament sees fit, to accept the better and reject the worse offer. We are told again that these gentlemen had their chance, that advertisements were put forth asking capitalists to come forward and take up the work. There is not the slightest foundation of truth for that assertion. No man, I will venture to say, until that contract was laid on the l'able, ever dreamed that any Government of Canada was going to depart so utterly and fundamentally from the primary conditions on which all these railroads were to be constructed, as to build 706 miles themselves on two, by far the most difficult, portions of the whole road, give them a present to the new company, and grant to that company a monopoly for twenty years of the whole trade of the North-West, to grant exemption from taxation over those lands for 20 years, over the road-bed, rolling-stock and other things. Nobody ever heard or dreamed that the Government of Canada were going to permit such conditions to be inserted, and under these circumstances how can Ministers and their supporters say that this was a contract free to all the world. Had there been the slighest idea or knowledge on the part of the capitalists of Canada, the United States or England, of the terms which those gentlemen were willing. to accept, then indeed their dream would have become a reality, and capitalists from every country would have been knocking at their doors for the privilege of tendering for this railroad. It would be the absurdest thing in the world, and I say this not for the benefit of the gentlemen on the Treasury benches, but for their followers, if they should finally reject so good and praiseworthy an offer without giving their followers an opportunity of knowing what this offer was, or the country an opportunity of pronouncing upon it. I do not pretend to have any very great sympathy with hon. gentlemen opposite, either Ministers or supporters; but I would say this, that never were gallant and.

devoted followers, for that they are, so ruthlessly sacrificed by the bad generalship of their leader. Even, at the twelfth hour, I hope and implore them to take pity on themselves and remember that even when destruction was lowering there were some righteons Lots that escaped from the political Sodom. It is true, if the sacred record be true, they did not escape without demoralization, but still there was a refuge found for them, and I hope and trust that the hon, gentlemen similarly situated on this occasion may ultimately find a similar shelter.

In reply to Mr. White (East Hastings), Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT said: If I recollect right, the vast majority of which the hon. gentleman speaks was not so apparent in his case, and but for a remarkable construction of the law I am afraid the hon. gentleman would not have the pleasure of enjoying his present seat.

Mr. WHITE. You had to go away to another place for a seat.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I went further and fared better, probably. The discussion was begun by the Minister of Public Works, who was pleased to taunt us with representing but a small portion of the people. we represent a great many more people in the country than our numbers in the House would indicate. At the very worst, we represent probably nine-twentieths of the people of Canada, and I think, if a fair vote could be had, we should be found to represent eleven twentieths very soon. Probably if a vote could be had on this question at present, we should obtain quite as large a majority as the hon, gentlemen opposite possess. It is not my intention at this hour to prolong a debate, more carticularly as the Government have practically conceded the point we contended for, in allowing this debate to assume its present range. All we claim is, that they should lay the new proposition on the Table, and let their supporters in the country know whether they are not more favorable than the present bargain. Every possible advantage, every inch of railroad which they can obtain under the present contract, they can secure under the offer now in the hands of the Minister of Railways, and that without those mischievous clauses which, every one of them, from my sage and wise friend the member for Ottawa downwards, know and feel will drag them to destruction unless struck out of this present contract.

Mr. PLUMB. I was quite prepared, at the opening of the debate this afternoon, for the violent tone which has been adopted by hon, gentlemen on the other side. My hon, friend from West Durham commenced with almost a shriek to rally his friends to the agitation and grievance pitch. I must say, they responded with great alacrity. He began the discussion by a series of statements which I think were entirely in accord with those which he has favored the public with upon public platforms and in this House, from the time this discussion commenced. But a surprise has been sprung on the House by the tactics of the hon. gentleman. I do not intend, in speaking of this surprise, to impute any attempt to trifle with this House to the gentlemen who have given it to us, under hints from the Opposition—for I have no doubt whatever that this entire proposition emanates from the Opposition—although I think there are grave grounds for that suspicion. Let us look at this question fairly and dispassionately. An Act was passed in 1872, by the Government which was in power for five years, to receive tenders and make contracts, even without advertising for tenders. The terms of that proposition involved subsidies enormously larger than any found in the contract which has been discussed for several days in this House. Why were no propositions made by those gentlemen who are now so anxious to underbid the gentlemen who first ventured to come forward to make a definite and substantial proposition to this Government? Why did they not find it to their interest to come forward fore us now, we have the names of seven defeated Reform during all those years when they saw the enormous subsidies offered by the late Government? Was it because the late Government had so prostrated the interests of Canada, and so misrepresented its condition, that no one dared to come forward and take the contract? Was it because those gentlemen felt that, with the friends of the leader of the Opposition in power in 187°, it was not safe to come forward and attempt any contract which involved, as the taking as a portion of the subsidy, a part of the public lands? Was it because they had no confidence in the gentlemen opposite that they did not take that contract? would seem so; for the names of the men who appear here are most, if not all of them, the prominent supporters of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and there is certainly something a little suspicious in that. I wish to have it understood that the gentlemen who first came forward and took the initiative in this matter, and whose contract is before us for ratification are entitled to the confidence of the people of Canada. It was known that negotiations were in progress for the construction of the entire line of railway. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Sir R. J. Cartwright) astonished me by saying that there was no opportunity given to other parties to offer for this work; that nobody dreamed of the recklessly extravagant terms which were being given to this Syndicate. A more disingenuous statement was never made in the House. Everybody knows that the organ of hon, gentleman, week after week, anticipated the terms, that stating they were greater than they are, and that the First Minister was unable to make a contract—had utterly Why did not those patriotic gentlemen, who now offer, then come forward-men who are so affixious to save the Government four or five millions, and give it other advantages? Is it not very safe to make an offer now; do not those gentlemen know that the honor of this Government and the Conservative party is pledged to the ratification of this contract? I say the first Syndicate have made an offer in good faith, and have shown by their terms that they intend to fulfil that offer, and that, as compared with the proposition I see sketched in the party organ of the hon. gentlemen opposite, it is a bond fide and superior proposition. The one is a genuine proposition to build a railway from Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean; and the other is a scheme, doubtless very acceptable to hon. gentlemen opposite, to construct a line partly through the United States and to avoid all the most difficult portions of the Canadian route. By the new scheme the Government is at liberty to withdraw from the construction of the worst part of the Canadian line. It is at liberty, it seems, to withdraw from building the line to the north of Lake Superior from the foot of the Rocky Mountains to Kamloops and from Emory's Bar to Port Moody. One can see the ingenious logic of the hon. member for West Durham sticking out, if I may say so, of every proposition. It is a mere echo of the hon. gentleman's speeches. It is evident that it means, if it means anything, that if the new proposal is accepted there will be a pressure brought to bear to abandon the Lake Superior section—the heavy work beyond the prairies and we shall have what the hon, gentleman has so ably advocated on the floor of this House, and at every meeting which he has attended, and which has been echoed by every one of his followers, viz., a line through the United States for the benefit of the Northern Pacific Railway. Now, we hear a great deal about the propriety of taking up and receiving this proposition which has been sent in at the eleventh hour. I do not intend to question the bond fides of the gentlemen who have sent in this proposition. Some of them are gentlemen of wealth and of responsibility. There are names there that I do not think add very much to the strength of the offer. There are men there whose names, I do not think, add anything to the weight of the tender; but in the Syndicate, as it stands be-candidates in the late elections. It is not at all a partizan proposition of course; but it looks very much as if the association will be a powerful factor for the benefit of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake) and his friends when they go again to the polls. It looks as if the hon. gentleman, with that prescience for which he is celebrated, and which has been so admired by his followers, who have so soon changed their allegiance from their old leader to their new one, had originated this astute scheme to make the way easy for him and place him in power at the next election; but I think the hon. gentleman will fail in his device. I repeat, that the gentlemen of the Syndicate, whose contract has been accepted by the Government, which is now before us for ratification with whom I have no personal relations whatever, and only two of whom I ever saw until I came into Parliament, are entitled to every consideration for having embarked on the venture which they have taken; for I can tell this House, and the country through this House, that it is no light matter for these gentlemen to risk their reputations and fortunes in the construction of an immense line of railway through an unpeopled country, where they have got to make their business before they can get their business. I say they are entitled to a fair share of profit on this contract, and I have grave doubts about accepting a lower tender, if it may be called a tender, which has the hazards connected with it. Anybody who looks at the whole condition of this affair will see there are difficulties in every direction. There are four rival lines for the Pacific traffic; the United States is filled with competing lines which have to depend on lands to be sold in order to subsidize them, and every one of them will be a competing line with the line which these gentlemen have undertaken to build. It is perfectly certain that these gentlemen will have to accommodate their business, their rates, and the prices charged for their lands to the active competition of railway lines striving for the same business, running in the same direction, and having the most active agents all over Europe to bring grist to their mill. An important point, which was largely dwelt on last year, in respect to the running of a railway which has to make its business, is the expense of operating it, and that has gone entirely out of the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite. The other day I happened to look at the expenses connected with the Intercolonial. That railway, up to 1878, including 5 per cent. interest on the capital, which is not a very heavy rate, had an annual deficit averaging $1,700,000; and if the hon. member for West Durham, with that facility for figures, which distinguishes him and surprises us, will capitalize that, he may be able to judge that if $1,700,000 was the annual deficit for a railway of 700 miles long, running to objective points already largely populated, and terminaing at the sea-board, the outlet of the trade from Ontario and Quebec, what the expense would be of operating the railway if running through 2,700 miles of new territory, and a new business has got to be built up. The hon, gentleman said that the privilege which the Syndicate possessed, in the shape of exemptions from taxations, would amount to about $27,000,000. and that the other privileges conceded would reach $25,000,000, apart from the subsidy, but he did not tell the House that the Syndicate would be subject, year after year, to the expense of operating a new railway, and if they built a poor line that that expense would be doubled. I will take the hon, gentleman on his own argument I say it is not in the interest of this country to make a cheap countract, but that it is in the interest of Canada to give the gentlemen undertaking the work liberal terms, and then hold them to the letter of their bargain. I do not desire to see, if it were feasible, people coming in, after a sum has been fixed for carrying out this stated. And yet they have persuaded themseives work, and ascertaining how closely they can cut under that they have seriously moved the people of it, placing terms in the offer which virtually make it Canada. Well, I saw something of that delusion in 1878.

no competing contract whatever. I say now, and I believe firmly, with all respect to the gentlemen who submitted this new proposition, that, if their offer was accepted, they have no idea of fulfilling it by the construction of a. road through Canada, from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean. I believe the very mengre sketch of their offer we have got here proves the truth of what I have stated. Now, hon. gentlemen opposite have amused themselves, and perhaps have deceived themselves. They certainly have amused us by telling us what a tremendous agitation is going on through the Dominion upon this question. The hon. gentlemen have, perhaps, in some mysterious way thrown such a glamour over the whole controversy, so they are enabled to see it in its true light. We all know that the hon, gentlemen opposite are utterly wanting in a sense of humor, or they would see the utter absurdity of the statements made by every one of them since the discussion commenced. What is the fact? Why, in Ontario and Quebec alone, there are 578,844 persons qualified to vote and to these you may add at least 120,000 more, for the Maritime and Western Provinces, so that there are 700,000 persons registered at the last election who were qualified to vote for members of Parliament—qualified to have their say in the business of the country. How many of that number, with all the pressure that has been put upon them, have apparently come to the rescue of hon. gentlemen opposite by sending in petitions to Parliament? And though I have noticed that these petitions have been circulated most abundantly in those places most favorable to their party, I find that they succeeded-after weeks of misrepresentation and shricking—getting exactly 6,812, or one seven hundredth part of the voters of Canada, who have up to this time responded to the appeals which have been sent out from the Grit parliamentary caucus. Hon, gentlemen opposite firmly insisted from the beginning that we should be governed by the opinions which are elicited by the kind of meetings which they have held throughout Ontario, but one must infer that that opini n must be the opinion of people qualified to vote and that it must be the opinion of a majority properly ascertained. What do we know about these petitions of the people who have signed them. I have seen specimens of them where the handwriting is suspiciously alike for at least 20 or 30 signatures. Those who have read Mr. Justin McCarthy's History of Our Own Time will remember that he mentioned the fact that many of the petitions that were presented against the Reform' Bill were absurd frauds, and that among the signatures of the petition were those of the Queen and the Duke of Wellington, and that many of the names were repeated over and over again. I am afraid, in respect to these 6,812 petitioners, hon, gentlemen will find that history repeats itself, and that many of the petitions presented to this House are of the character of those which, according to Justin McCarthy, were presented in favor of the Reform in England. I saw a petition, I think it was from the county of Frontenac, and it appeared to me that name after name were in the same handwriting, though I do not say that they were. At all events that is of no consequence. The girt of my argument is that there were only 6,812 signatures out of 700,000 voters—indeed we do not know that they are all voters-that they have attained their majority, or that they have a right to vote even for a pound-keeper—have signed these petitions. I do not wish to say anything derogatory of the sacred right of petition, but I do say that it is unworthy of hon. gentlemen to bring before us the idea that the people of Canada have in any sense endorsed the action of the Opposition. I say that the strongest evidence exists to the contrary from the fact that, notwithstanding all these petitions, they have not succeeded in doing anything more than I have now

I saw it up to the day of the election. Well, I can tell them that when they come to reckon with their host, as they are now reckoning without their host, the same results will occur that occurred then; and I feel that I, for one, having a due sense of the responsibility which I take-a responsibility for which I must answer to my constituents and to the people of Canada—standing here my place, can justify before the public of Canada, the vote which I shall give upon this contract when the time comes to give it. I say that the question of the operation of a railway running into such a country as that which the Pacific Railway must penetrate, is one which has not been fairly touched upon by hon, gentlemen on the other side. I say there has been a disingenuousness in the discussion of the question before the House. Here is what the late Minister of Finance, who has referred to the Syndicate just now in his usual violent and denunciatory language, said in his Budget Speech of 1874:

"I spoke before the recess at some length upon the extraordinary deficiency arising from the working of the Intercolonial Railway and the other railways of the Dominion, chiefly in the Maritime Provinces. The deficiency arising from these sources is likely to amount to the extraordinary sum of about a million and a quarter of dollars. I desire to call the special attention of the House to one point which must be clear to every hone gentleman. These railways run for the most part through a country which has been settled for the last fifty or sixty years. I cannot refer, of course, to the fact that these railroads entail such an enormous expenditure without its becoming apparent to the House that the cost of the maintenance of a railway nearly 3,000 miles in length, and passing through a country which is almost entirely uninhabited, must be, of necessity, very much greater. For a very long line, after the actual constraction of this railway, an enormous charge must be levied upon this country, in order to keep in full working order and repair, and this fact must be kept steadily in sight in considering the real character of that project."

Now, Sir, we are told that we are pressing this matter unduly, that hon, gentlemen have not had time to consider it. If hon, gentlemen had not had time to consider it, how could they go before the public and argue the question? But how was it in 1874? At the very close of that Session, on the 7th of May, resolutions by the Government were brought down authorizing the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway; on the 8th of May they were referred to a Committee of the Whole, and that Committee reported on the 12th of May. There was no discussion of any consequence at those stages, and on the morning of the 21st, at 3 o'clock, those resolutions, involving a far greater outlay than any that is proposed here, involving terms besides which the present arrangement is strikingly economical, were pushed through the House, and we, on the opposite side, were gagged and prevented from expressing our opinion. I remember well the manner in which we were ruthlessly hounded down, and I remember the conduct which characterized the Ministerial side from 1874 to the dissolution of that Parliament, and I look with admiration upon the forbearance of the majority which now hold the place formerly held by the gentlemen now occupying the Opposition benches. There has been no disposition to choke off debate. There is no truth in the complaint on the other hurried, that tion. If there side that they have been unduly it was intended to force the question. If there ever was a minority, however factious and not entitled to consideration, that has been treated fairly and kindly, it is the minority that sits opposite us to-day, and I hurl back that insinuation which has been made more than once that there is a disposition to stifle the debate. The more this question is discussed the better it is for us. The tour of the Minister of Railways was very effectual, and took the sting out of the misrepresentations made by prominent gentlemen on the other side. We are under obligations to ratify the contract entered into by the Government, because we consider it in the best interests of the country, and the hon, gentlemen who appealed to us to-day, with texts of Scripture on their lips had no effect upon gentlemen on this side except to convince them that they ought to stand together as one man, and do nothing even by implica-chance of that factious Opposition ever again taking possession of the country and of mismanaging and ruining it. The disgraceful exhibition we have seen to-night should shock every man who has any respect for parliamentary propriety. The hon, member for Westmoreland (Sir Albert J. Smith) has the faculty of drawing down upon him Session after Session the same kind of discussion that occurred to-night. But when that hon, gentleman was defended by the hon, member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin), I was reminded to say with Shakespeare,

"Get thee glass eyes,
And like a scurvy politician seem
To see the thing thou dost not."

My hon, friend from Westmoreland (Sir A. J. Smith) made a statement to-day that the lands set apart for the subsidy under the Act of 1874 were to come from the Province of Ontario, and that there was a clause in the Act to that effect. I challenge the hon. gentleman to find such a clause; it is not there. Another statement he made was that this Government had no right to make this contract. Well, if they had no right to make this contract, have they any better right to make the contract which is proposed and urged by hon, gentlemen on the other side. If this contract is not legal or within the power of the Government or Parliament to make, because it has not been awarded by tender through public competition, what possible right is there for another association of gentlemen to make a legal offer now, or for Parl ament to accept that offer. I should like a legal opinion from the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) who, I observe, is paying strict attention to what I am saying, and smiling with his usual bland benevolence, which will reconcile that contradiction.

Mr. BLAKE. At this late hour of the night.

Mr. PLUMB. We will wait to hear it, no matter how late the hour is. I fail to find anything in the Act of 1874 to prevent Parl: ament from accepting and ratifying the Syndicate contract. I fail to find in it any necessity for submitting to public competition any contract which they choose to make for the construction of the Pacific Railway, except as a Government work. The clause in that Act relating to this point simply means that it shall not be built by day labor, as the late leader of the Government illegally built the Fort Francis Locks, notoriously a part of the line. The clause in the Act reads thus:

"The works on any section or sub-section of the said railway shall not be given out to any contractor or contractors until after tenders shall have been received for the same."

I contend that the Government have been acting under strict constitutional, Parliamentary and legal authority in everything they have done; and I may add that it was notorious everywhere that they were seeking tenders, and that, according to the Globe, they had failed to get tenders. There was every inducement offered to gentlemen on the other side to come forward and tender for this work. I am astonished that the hon. gentleman who spoke last (Sir R. J. Cartwright) should have said no opportunity was given to any others than the present Syndicate to make a bid. We can take the hon. gentleman's statements for what they are worth. We have heard him in this House so denounce the credit of this country that I am astonished that any outside capitalists ever dared to invest a penny in it, if they believe the hon. gentleman's statements. But our safety was that they did not believe them; and the hon. gentleman failed in his attempt to belittle and decry and destroy the prosperity of the country which it was his solemn duty, as a sworn Minister of the Crown, to protect and promote. And the hon. gentleman, who talks of a reaction, should remember that the county which had been represented for nearly half a century by the hon. gentleman's respected Conservative ancestors, rebuked him and turned him out tion that should cause the country to fear, that there is any and that he had to seek a constituency in Centre Huron which he obtained through the resignation of one of his devoted friends, and had to come back humiliated to this House as the representative of a constituency into which he had been pitchforked by the exigencies of the occasion. I am reluctant to speak of matters personal to myself, but I deem it proper to say that I have been treated, during the debates that have gone on, to a special notice by my hon. friend the member for West Middlesex (Mr. G. W. Ross). That hon, gentleman has taken occasion to taunt me with sitting in this House by a majority of two. He knows perfectly well that four corrupt votes were stricken off the list of my respondent, which were quite sufficient for my purpose, and which gave me the election; and the hon. gentleman knows that the candidate who opposed me in 1878 was sent to my constituency—according to his own statement, which has never been denied-by the late leader of the Government and a lamented member whose name I will not bring in here, both of whom boasted that they would keep me out of Parliament. That gentleman was disqualified for seven years to his own dishonor and the disgrace of those who sent him to contest that election, which, according to his own showing, cost $17,500 of expenditure in the riding, besides the money spent for costs of the suit I brought against him, which I understand were exceptionally heavy. It does not become hon. gentlemen opposite to taunt me with my election, and least of all the hon. member for Middlesex, who was elected by acclamation in 1874, and who had so misrepresented his constituency, that in spite of the enormous advantage he had as a prominent temperance lecturer, was returned only by the skin of his teeth in 1878; and if the voters' lists had been purged as they ought to have been, would have had to give up his seat to Mr. Currie. I believe that the Conservative party will rally as one man in support of the Government measure. I am not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet, but I have said and I believe that this measure will be supported by the united strength of the Conservative party, in this House and out of it, and that every effort of hon. gentlemen on the other side to distract us by means of obstruction, by specious arguments, by such arts as I have tried to expose, by pretending that there is a reaction in the country, when we know to the contrary, will fall perfectly harmless; and the hon. gentleman from West Durham (Mr. Blake) will find that he has about the same success in endeavoring to disintegrate our loyal party that he had when he went into West Toronto last summer and threw the whole weight of his influence and the power of his eloquence into the late election there, and came off second best. I wish to move-

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman, before moving his motion, had resumed his seat. I rise to a point of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise to a question of order. I put it to the hon. gentleman opposite if it has not been invariably the practice for a gentleman who had a resolution to move, to sit down for a moment to prepare it and rise again.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have never seen a gentleman prevented from moving his re-olution for his having for a moment sat down.

Mr. STEPHENSON. I beg to move that this debate be adjourned.

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to a question of order. I think there is a motion in your hands already that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not the same question at all. I do not see why the hon, gentleman should not be allowed to move the adjournment of the debate upon this motion. It has a certain purpose; and, strictly speaking, I think that the motion of the member for Shelburne (Mr. Robertson) is out of order. My opinion is that a motion to adjourn the debate, upon this motion pure and simple, is in order.

Mr. PLUMB,

Mr. MILLS rose amid cries of "Order!" and "Chair!" and said: I beg to call your attention to authorities on the Clerk's table, which state that no amendment can be made; the motion to adjourn should be in regard to time. This proposition is a pure and simple proposition in that respect. The motion of the member for Shelburne does not fix any particular time for the adjournment, and it was only with reference to time that another motion of adjournment can be made in amendment. That is not an amendment in that particular at all; it simply omits certain other matters not relating to time, but refers to no particular question before the House. I submit that that being the case, it is not open to amendment, because it is already, in its simplest form, relating to a question of time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A motion has been made for concurrence. Hon gentlemen opposite, on that, have moved in amendment, and a debate has taken place. Here is an entirely different motion, to adjourn the debate on an amendment which has been moved. It is not to adjourn the original motion. It does not cover the ground that that motion covers. I ask hon gentlemen opposite what would be the position of the House if it was not competent for any debate to be adjourned?

Mr. BLAKE. In what position shall we be, suppose this motion to adjourn is carried?

Mr. SPEAKER: The whole proceedings will appear in the Journals.

Mr. BLAKE. What would be the question before the House?

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn the debate.

Mr. ANGLIN. The question before the House would be whether we should adjourn this debate for a particular reason. It is now moved that we adjourn the debate, the purport of which is to test an amendment that we shall adjourn another debate. It would be one of the most complex and extraordinary records that ever appeared in the Journals of any Legislative Assembly, and would be the most unintelligible.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perfectly simple.

Mr. ANGLIN. I think if you will reflect seriously on what our record will be on our Journals you will find that it will be most absurd and contradictory. There is a record in the Journals of the Old Assembly of 1856 with regard to changing the seat of Government. I cannot how find the particular case, but I remember an amendment was moved that the consideration of the question should be postponed until further information was had, and that was considered fully in order. The motion was taken and the vote was carried.

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to a point of order. I think the Speaker has given his decision.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have no objection to hearing any precedent that might be offered.

Mr. ANGLIN. I understood that Mr. Speaker was in doubt as to the propriety of the original amendment. It is clear to my mind that the amendment to the amendment is out of order, as it is a repetition to the amendment itself.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not take the same ground. The motion of the hon. member for Shelburne says that, in view of the fact, and so on, the debate should be adjourned. It must be taken on the original motion, if the original motion of the resolution be accepted. New, suppose we could not move that the debate be adjourned on the motion, we should have to go on until Monday. There would be a very simple way out of the difficulty if I followed the decision of Mr. Speaker Walbridge upon exactly a similar question. The case is reported as follows:—

"Ir. Dorion moved: 'That the debate on this resolution, involving as it does, fundamental changes in the political institutions and the political relations of this Province, changes which were not in the contemplation of the people at the last general election, ought, in the opinion of this House, to be adjourned for one month, or until such time as the people of this Province shall have an opportunity of constitutionally pronouncing their opinion thereon, by an appeal to them.' The Hon. Geo. E Cartier raised the same point of order that he brought against the former amendment. Whereupon Mr. Speaker said: The practice in such cases appeared to be for the Speaker to eliminate from such motions all that was irregular, and if the hon. member would not consent, why the motion fell to the ground. If the hon. member for Hochelaga would consent, therefore, to his eliminating from the motion all but that which referred to the adjournment, he (Mr. Speaker) would put it to the House. If not he would be obliged to rule it out of order.' The Hon. Mr. Dorion having declined to allow his motion to be altered, it was ruled out of order. The Hon. Geo. E. Cartier's motion was then agreed to and the debate adjourned to be resumed at the next sitting of the House."

So upon the motion to adjourn the debate no preamble ought to be put in, and upon a motion to adjourn the House ne amendment can be put except as to time. A motion to adjourn the debate and a motion to adjourn the House must be always pure and simple. Of course, in this case I will not rule the motion of the hon, gentleman from Shelburue out of order, unless somebody raises the point.

Mr. BLAKE. I think if you were disposed to rule that out of order—although, as I understand, Speaker Walbridge announced the decision at an earlier stage of the proceedings, after nine hours' debate—I suppose it would be proper to adopt the course of Speaker Walbridge and eliminate those objectionable portions, and lot the motion of the hongentleman for Shelburne carry.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I submit that it is too late to take that course. If you decide that that motion is out of order, you have another in your hand for the adjournment of the debate. The moment, therefore, that the motion is declared out of order it falls to the ground necessarily—unless the House should consent to eliminate the objectionable portions—and falling to the ground, then the motion to adjourn the debate is in order.

Mr. BLAKE. The precedent we are about to follow-and I am fond of following precedents that seem to be reasonableis that the Speaker announces to the hon. member who has put in an objectionable preamble, that his preamble is objectionable, and if he will consent to the objectionable part being struck out, the Speaker will put the motion. I suppose the hon, member for Shelburne is not to suffer from the lateness of the stage at which you announce to us that the preamble was objectionable, but that you will give him the same license as if when the motion was first put by him you had made the objections which you now make. Giving him that license, following the precedent—and if the precedent is good it is good to be followed—you will make his motion in order as you would have done if your attention had been called to this circumstance at an earlier stage. It was proper that your attention should be called to the circumstance at any stage, but you are surely to give the hon. member and his motion just that treatment which a precedent requires.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon, gentleman seems to forget the cases are not parallel. When Speaker Walbridge gave the mover of the motion the option of having it declared out of order or submitting it to amendment, no subsequent motion that was in order was in the hands of the Speaker. The present case is not at all parallel, because, before you have decided that that motion is irregular, you have already a regular motion in your hand for the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. BLAKE. But that precedent tells us that it is the Speaker's duty to inform the member that the preamble is out of order, and he may eliminate the objectionable portion with the consent of the House.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If the amendment, which is put in your hands by the hon. member for Shelburne, is irregular, it is out of order, and that amendment cannot be altered without the consent of the House. It has been moved and seconded, and is in the possession of the House him.

and now, after you have for the first time had your attention called to it, you have ruled that it is irregular, and therefore out of order. Therefore it drops out, and the next motion comes before the House.

Mr. BLAKE. The Speaker has not ruled that.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me there can be no arrangement by which the Speaker, and the mover of a motion, may change the motion without the consent of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I shall have to declare the amendment put by the hon. member for Shelburne, out of order. In that case, I shall have to declare the amendment put in my hands in order.

The amendment was carried.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ANGLIN. Before the House adjourns I have a word or two of personal explanation to offer. A very grave attack was made on mysolf by the hon, member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) with regard to my conduct as a member of this House on the famous New Brunswick School question. I wish to say to that hon, gentleman that I am prepared at any moment, before any tribunal, before this House or any Committee of this House, or before any public meeting held here or elsewhere, to go into a defence of my whole conduct on that question from the day it was raised till it was finally disposed of; and to produce evidence, irrefragible and unquestionable, of my entire devotion to the Catholic cause, and the enormous personal and pecuniary sacrifices I made in the course of that contest; and I defy the hon, member for Hochelaga, and any of those who secretly and slyly endeavored to injure my standing in this country, by repeating what I declare to be a slander—I defy them to the proof of any charge they may make against me. There is a point on which I wish to make a correction. In making a statement this afternoon with regard to what I was told occurred between the present Finance Minister and the hon, member for Westmoreland, I inadvertantly said it was in the year 1874-5. It was in the early years of the first Parliament.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have listened very patiently to the debate from the beginning of this Session to the present time. I was very sorry to hear a great portion of the debate which took place to-night. I was not pleased to hear the remarks made by my hon. friend from Hochelaga, because I do not think there is anything to be gained by reviving old issues that have been fought out before. I can make allowances for the hon. member for Gloucester.

Mr. ANGLIN. I want no allowances from you.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I repeat what I said. I can make allowances for the hon, member for Gloucester.

Mr. ANGLIN. And I repeat I want none.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is not because the hon, member wants them I make them, because if I did not wish to make them, he could not compel me to make them. I can make allowances for the hon. member rising in his place to meet what he might consider an attack made by the hon. member for Hochelaga; but I cannot sit still here to-night, after the speech the hon, gentleman has made, which will go to the country, and which gives the lie to statements I made honestly in this House and in the country. I am not prepared to submit to his assertion that he defies the hon. member for Hochelaga or any who sympathize with him, to try to cast a slur on his character. He cannot defy when he cannot maintain the position he took on the New Brunswick School question. I have not the ability nor the skill that that hon. gentleman has; but I have the courage of my own convictions; and in any public assembly in any part of the Dominion, I will maintain what I stated in his constituency, that he proved false to the trust reposed in

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon, gentleman who has just taken his seat did appear before my constituents to make against me serious charges, that I then characterized, though I shall not so now characterize them, as vile and baseless slanders, and I proved them to be so by a letter from the Bishop of St. John, which I produced before my constituents and read to them; and when I turned to see the effect on that hon, gentleman, I found he had sneaked off the platform and took flight from the county.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will leave to the members of this House who know me, to the people of his own constituency who know me but little, but know me sufficiently well to judge that when the hon. gentleman states I sneaked off, he misrepresents me. I am not made of the material that would cause me to sneak off from any man when I believe I am right. The hon. gentleman says he refuted the charge I made. I will be careful in the reference to be made to the letters I produced, but I maintain that, in spite of the hon. gentleman, when he had the courtesy, not to speak of the courage, of refusing me a hearing in the county.

Mr. ANGLIN. It is false.

Mr. COSTIGAN. He tried to prevent me, notwithstanding he was in the county where three-fourths of the people were prepared to support him, but still I got a hearing for which I am entitled to credit, and his own constituents believed that I was right and he was wrong. He never undertook to reply to my accusation in his own constituency, nor to a single argument I produced, because he could not. He stated that day publicly that I was entirely ignored; that he was the gentleman that managed the whole question in this Parliament; that I was only a tool in his hands, and was used by him to settle that question.

Mr. ANGLIN. I did not.

Mr. COSTIGAN. He said that he was the man to whom the Catholics of New Brunswick looked to regulate this question.

Mr. ANGLIN. It is true.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Did I not walk across the floor of the House to him, as a most eloquent and able Catholic member from the Lower Provinces, to move in the matter, and did he not tell me he would not?

Mr. ANGLIN. That is not true.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Although the hon. gentleman was opposed to the Government of that day and I was a supporter, I moved the question myself and he supported the motion so long as it embarrassed the Government; but he refused to support it longer when likely to embarrass the Government of his own friends afterwards.

Mr. ANGLIN. That is not true.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I walked across the House and asked him to move that resolution.

Mr. ANGLIN. Not true.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is true. I had to take the responsibility of moving the resolution, though feeling it would come better from him, and I consulted him across the House while that question was under discussion.

Mr. ANGLIN. That is not true.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon, gentleman uses a very plain way of denying my statements, but he cannot substantiate his assertions, or oppose mine in any other way than by a simple, flat denial. I do not intend to go over the ground of the New Brunswick School question again. I think I stated what I had to state without hurting anybody's feelings, except perhaps those of the hon, gentleman to whom was alluding, and he is not generally so careful about the to-night, I promise all hearers a lings of others that I need to be very careful about his. and discuss this question again,

Mr. Costigan.

That hon, gentleman knows that if it had not been for the school question he would not have been returned for Gloucester a second time, and that he would not have had a seat in the Speaker's chair. If the hon, geutleman does not know that, I can prove it to him.

Mr. ANGLIN. You cannot prove it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That matter has been disposed of, and the hon. gentleman remembers it very well. Hon. members can understand the position I held. I made an honest statement in this House. I believed it was my duty to do so, and I believe that I suffered to a certain extent for doing so. I went to his constituency when he charged me in his paper with having made gross and foul accusations against him.

Mr. ANGLIN. That is not true.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is true, and the hon, gentleman never dared to come into my county and attack me upon my course. It is true that, in his paper, which I am glad to say is not very widely circulated in my constituency, he said that I had misrepresented him and made false statements against him. It is also true that I was accused of making an attack upon him when he was Speaker of the House of Commons, and at a time when his lips were sealed and he could not defend himself.

Mr. ANGLIN. That is true.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I believe that when the question was brought up the propriety of the Speaker defending himself, if he saw fit to do so, was admitted, but I believe the ex-Speaker came to the conclusion by the advice of his friends that he would be more likely to excite sympathy if he made a vain attempt to defend himself.

Mr. ANGLIN. That is not true.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I repeat, from the time I took a seat in the Legislature of my own Province, and that was about the same time that he took his seat up to the present time, whatever my faults may have been I have tried to be consistent, honest and straightforward. I have carried a constituency for twenty years which that hon, gentleman could not carry. I have carried it without money and simply with a desire to serve my people honestly. The accusation which I made against the hon, gentleman, I made in the full belief that I was discharging my duty to myself and to my constituents. I do not allow the hon, gentleman's statement to go unchallenged, because I know that if I did the fact would appear in large letters in his paper. The hon, gentleman challenged those who differed from his course at that time, but he knows that his conduct would call forth the strongest protest from any man who watched his course on the school question.

Mr. ANGLIN. That is not true.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am willing to meet his challenge in a fair way. I am willing to go before his countrymen or any body of independent men in this country. I am willing to give him the benefit of all his eloquence and all the ability and power he is known to possess.

Mr. ANGLIN. You have tried that before.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes, and I got a hearing when he tried to deny me a hearing. I proved my case and was cheered by the men who were to have voted for him.

Mr. ANGLIN was understood to say that he was prepared to meet the hon. member for Victoria on the question.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the hon. member thinks he has gained anything by his challenge, he is very much mistaken, and while I do not want to take up the time of the House to-night, I promise all hearers a rich treat if we ever meet and discuss this question again,

Mr. DESIARDINS. I do not think it is necessary, after the answer given by the hon, member for Victoria, that I should reply to the challenge thrown out by the hon, member for Gloucester. I think all those hon, members present who were in the two last Parliaments will bear witness to the truth I uttered when I said that the hon, member for Gloucester was the last man to teach hon, members with respect to their conduct towards their constituents; and that is the best proof that what I said to sustain my opinion on that matter is amply proved by the story of the six years previous to 1878.

Motion agreed to; and (at 2.15 o'clock, a.m.,) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Monday, 17th January, 1881.

ELECTION PETITION.

Mr. LAURIER moved that the petition of Edmund Ritter, and others, of Sorel, representing that there has been a failure of justice in the matter of the trial of the Election Petition, complaining of an undue Return for the Electoral Division of Richelieu; and praying to be allowed to make proof before the House, be now read.

Mr. MOUSSEAU moved that the debate be adjourned. Motion agreed to.

ANOTHER SYNDICATE OFFER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER laid on the Table a new offer for the construction and operation of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CASGRAIN enquired, Whether copies of the document would be printed in French.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were severally introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 26) to incorporate the Ontario Investment Association.—(Mr. Carling).

Bill (No. 27) to amend the Act 43 Victoria, Chapter 61, to incorporate the Assiniboine Bridge Company.—(Mr. Scott).

Bill (No. 28) to incorporate the South Saskatchewan and Hudson's Bay Railway Company.—(Mr. Boultbee).

Bill (No. 29) respecting Prize Fighting.—(Mr. McDonald Pictou).

Bill (No. 30) to continue in force for a limited time "The better prevention of Crime Act, 1878."—(Mr. McDonald Picton).

ADJOURNMENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD stated that His Excellency the Governor General would hold a levee this evening, and he would therefore move that when the House rises at 6 o'clock it stand adjourned until to-morrow at 3 o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH NEWFOUNDLAND.

Mr. MeISAAC enquired, Whether the Government, since last Session, has re-opened negotiations with the Government of Newfoundland for the purpose of obtaining the free admission of cattle into that Province; and if so, what has been the result?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No negotiations have been opened since last Session with Newfoundland upon this subject.

DREDGING RED RIVER BAR

Mr. SCHULTZ enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to put a sum in the Estimates for the dredging of the bar at the mouth of the Red River?

Mr. LANGEVIN. I shall be obliged to delay the answer to this question until the Estimates come down, because it is not usual to state beforehand what will be the decision of the Government on such matters.

BRIDGING THE OTTAWA RIVER.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew) enquired, Whether the Government has taken any steps towards the construction of a bridge across the Ottawa River at Rapides I es Joachims, for which a sum of $8,000 was voted last Session, and when will the work of building the said bridge be commenced?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The plans are now ready. The specifications will be prepared as soon as the pressure of work on the department is somewhat relieved, and tenders will then be called for.

PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE.

Mr. SCHULTZ, for Mr. RYAN (Marquette), enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to make Portage La Prairie a port of entry?

Mr. BOWELL. The Government has no information before it that would justify it in making Portage La Prairie a port of entry. As soon as the business of that port will justify it, it will be made an outport of Winnipeg.

THE NEW SYNDICATE OFFER.

Mr. BLAKE desired, before the Orders of the Day were called, to ask the Minister of Railways whether he would at once lay on the Table communications which he understood the Minister had received to-day, containing certain vouchers of banks for the payment of $1,300,000 in the name of Sir William P. Howland in connection with the proposal of the new Syndicate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER said he would lay on the Table to-merrow all papers of that kind that might reach him up to the meeting of the House.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Sir Charles. Tupper, for the second reading of the resolutions reported from the Committee of the Whole on the 13th January instant, granting certain moneys and lands for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I had intended, on Friday night, to have made some remarks on the amendment that was then in your hands; but, unfortunately for myself and, perhaps, fortunately for the House, I was too much indisposed to be able to do so, and I was obliged to leave the Chamber. That motion is, however, disposed of; considerable discussion was carried on, but it is still supposed to be en règle, and with your permission and the permission of the House, I shall offer a few remarks, and they will not be long, on the subject to brought up and involved in that resolution and the amendment, and on the discussion which arose upon it. Sir, in the first place, I would like to speak of the position of the Government with respect to this whole question. It is true it has been treated ad nauseam in this House and in the country; but, holding the position that I do, I think it will not be improper, or idle, or a waste of time, if I recall the attention of the House to some of the facts connected with the present condition of this great enterprise, and in doing so, I must offer my most humble and respectful apology to my colleague who sits next me, the hon, the Minister of Railways, because he has again and again gone over the whole ground in a manner which I may envy, but which I cannot hope to emulate. It is known that from the time that British Columbia came into Confederation, and I need not read the Journals of the House to prove the fact, that the declared preference of both sides of the House, of the then Parliament, was in favor of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway by an incorporated company. We commence from that starting point, and if we look through the whole line of the discussion and the whole line of the policy of the two Governments which have had to deal with that question, we will find this thread running through the whole subject, and connecting it in such a manner that it could not, without complete severance of the thread, be altered. It was felt in the country, in the House, and by every thinking man, that if we should be fortunate enough, if Canada should have sufficient credit in the market where capitalists do most congregate, to induce capitalists to come forward and undertake this great work, we would have obtained for the Dominion a great advantage. Our legislation was based upon that idea in 1872. The legislation of the Government that succeeded us was based upon the same principle, that it was advisable, if possible, to avoid all the trouble, responsibility and uncertainty, and all the danger to be apprehended of making a great work like this a political engine; it was thought by all parties that it was of the greatest consequence that all those obstructions to the successful prosecution of the work, to the carrying out of this great object, and connecting this country from sea to sea and making it one in fact as well as in law, should be removed; that it was of the greatest consequence that the work should be expedited; that it should not be carried on as a political work; that it should not be made a matter over which rival parties could or would fight; that it should be undertaken on commercial principles and be built by a body of capitalists like any other railway, with the hope and expectation that the capitalists would get a fair and full return for all their risk, for all their expenditure, and for all their responsibility. The whole country was in favor of that proposition, if it was possible to have it carried out. We tried and we failed, although we made an effort, a strong and almost a successful effort in 1872, to thus build the railway. I will not drag into this discussion, as far as I am concerned, and as far as my remarks are connected with the subject, any references to the political past. Allusions were made to it by those opposed to the Government, especially by those who desired to asperse myself; but, Sir, there is the record, there is the fruit of the appeal to the country, and I am Prime Minister of Canada. But whatever may have been the cause of the failure of Sir Hugh Allan and the first company that was organized for the purpose of building this road, I can see, without reference to any political reason, why that company was defeated. I can only say it was not from any want of the strongest opposition offered to the Government of which I was the head, but it was in consequence of the two things occurring together: the personal object in attacking the Government and the desire to overthrow the scheme. It has been urged in this House, and I say it has been proved, that the present scheme laid before the House for its approval, is a more favorable scheme than that proposed in 1872. Whatever may be the merits of the offers or tenders. whatever may be the merits of the last offer that has just been laid on the Table, I believe no man of candor and common sense and who understands figures, but will see that the proposition which this Government, on its responsibility, entered into with the Syndicate in 1880, is more favorable to the country than the arrangement made with Sir Hugh Allan in 1872. SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD,

And I would ask this House and this country if Canada would not have been a great gainer if we had accepted and carried out that proposition of Sir Hugh Allan in 1872. Nine precious years have been lost since that time which can never be recovered, during the whole of which that road would have been in successful progress of construction; the men engaged in that scheme, if they could have got the ear of the European capitalists, were strong enough to push that road across the country, and at the end of those nine years, instead of there being scarcely the foot-print of the white man outside the Province of Manitoba, there would have been hundreds of thousands of people who have gone from mere despair to the United States, crowding into our own North-West Territories. That country, instead of having but a small settlement in the eastern end of it. would have been the happy home of hundreds of thousands -to use the smallest figure of civilized men, of earnest, active, laboring men, working for themselves and their families, and making that country much sooner than it will be now, a populous and prosperous country. But there is little use in regrets like these. We on this side of the House are not responsible for the delay, we are not responsible for the loss of time, and we appeal confidently to the country, and confidently to posterity. We appeal confidently to every candid man to say if this Dominion of ours of which we are so proud, about the future of which we are so anxious and yet so certain, would not have been infinitely greater in our time, in the time of the oldest of us, if the future of that country would not have been opened out as a great branch of the Dominion if the contract of 1872 had been carried out. Still, Sir, it was not to be; our efforts failed and we feel in those efforts, we were succeeded by a Government strong in numbers, strong in ability, and at the head of it a practical man. The fact of his being a practical man was a matter of boast, and of just boast, among those who rallied around him. He had directed his best energies to the subject. He had at his back a body so strong that no Opposition could effectively thwart him, oppose him, or even to obstruct him. And that hon, gentleman states himself that he was not obstructed, that he was not opposed, that he was not in any way impeded by the Opposition of the day. And he, Sir, took up the same line of policy in essence that we initiated in 1872; and he endeavored honestly and faithfully, I believe, to relieve his Government and relieve himself and his party from the responsibilities of his position, and of the pledges which were made and which he and those who served under him made, and which were obligations which could not without dishonor be broken, which could not be delayed, which could not without disgrace and discredit be postponed. It was admitted that it was a sacred obligation; it was admitted that there was a treaty made with British Columbia, with the people and the Government of British Columbia, and not only was it an agreement and a solemn bargain made between Canada and British Columbia, but it was formally sanctioned by Her Majesty's Government. It was a matter of Colonial policy and Imperial policy in England that the road should be constructed, and the late Government, headed by my hon friend from Lambton-who is absent from his place to-day, and who I fear is absent from the same cause which compelled my absence on Friday night, and I regret his absence very sincerely—I say my hon. friend felt himself bound to that policy. Both the Government of which I was the head and the Government of which he was the head were bound by the original resolutions that were passed at the time that British Columbia came in, were bound to the policy that this road should be built with the aid of money and land, by an incorporated company, if possible, and, some went so far as to say—built in no other way. He was hampered by that obligation, but although 1872. It hampered both Governments, yet inasmuch as it was the c 71438 declared wish of Parliament, and must stand until it was removed by Parliament, that resolution was not an infringement of the original arrangement. The delegates from British Columbia sat here when the motion was carried; they were here assenting to it at the time it became in fact the law of the land, and when they went home there was not a word of objection or reproach from the Legislature and the people of British All they wanted was that the spirit of the Columbia. resolution should be carried out so far as men could carry out honestly and fairly, and straightforwardly, the solemn compact, the obligatory pledge. The treaty not to be broken without dishonor into which we had entered. Both Governments felt themselves bound to make every exertion to build the railway by means of the intervention of a body of capitalists incorporated for that purpose. As we had tried to do so did the succeeding Government, and they advertised in the manner which has been stated and explained, and I need not go through the details again. Advertisements were issued by the hon. member for Lambton, then the head of the Government, calling on the capitalists all over the world to come forward and tender for this work. But the tenders did not come in. Whether it was that Canada had not the credit it now has; whether it was that the Government of the day had not the credit that the present Government of Canada has; whether it was that the circumstances of the money market were unpropitious at the time; whether it was that the country in the North-West was not so well-known then as now, I cannot say. Perhaps all these causes, or some of them, conjoined to prevent success; but at all events the call upon the capitalists of the world by the late Government did not succeed. Sir, as I understand it, that was not a mere offer giving capitalists a certain day to respond, as if you were going to build a house, calling upon them to put in tenders by a particular day at twelve o'clock, and informing them that no offer could be received afterwards. There was, in the first place, an invitation from our Government calling upon capitalists to compete. There was an invitation from the succeeding Government calling upon the capitalists of the world to compete. That was an announcement to the whole world, and when we received, gladly and hopefully received, an offer from parties who, we believe, were in every way able to carry out the enterprise if they undertook it, we felt that we were carrying out the repeatedly expressed wish of Parliament, the desire of every man really on both sides of the House, that the Government should be rid at once and for all from this responsibility. And, Sir, I might allude to a speech I made before going to England, in the spring of 1880, and I do so, because it was a notice to the country. The hon. gentleman, with his legal mind sticking upon legal technicalities, may argue that a speech of mine was not a legal notice; but upon a previous occasion when the hon, member for Lambton was forcing a measure upon the country without notice, he said, indignantly, to this House: "Every man has read my speech at Sarnia. When I went home to be elected as Premier, I gave notice to the whole country of the policy of the Government, and we have not taken the country by surprise.' I will ask the hon. member, if that did not occur, that if what is sauce for one animal of a particular kind is not sauce for another animal of the same kind?

Mr. BLAKE We do not say he is a goose.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a ready answer from an anser. I think my hon, friend will pardon me for the allusion, because he brought it on himself, aithough he be a biped no one will class him among that branch of bipeds. Let me read what I said in the Spring of 1880. "When I tell you that at this moment that there are a number of capitalists offering to build the road, desirous of taking it own fortunes by running it and by the settlement of the land set apart for its construction, etc." I also said that "the Government at this moment have the offer under consideration." That, Sir, went to the country. It was copied and commented upon. It was commented upon by the organ of the hon, gentleman opposite. It was published and commented upon by every political paper in the Dominion of Canada. Notice was freely given what our intention was, and so there was no remonstrance made then as to our want of power in doing so. Nobody spoke against our having the right to do so. We were congratulated upon having this offer made. The whole tene of the Opposition press was pooh-poohing the thing. "You cannot get capitalists to build it. You will not be successful, but we wish you God speed." That was the tone of the Opposition press before we went to England. We might have concluded that contract under the spirit and terms of the Act passed by the previous Administration. I would much like to discuss that matter of law with the hon. gentleman opposite, but it is too large a matter for us to deal with in that way. We felt that this scheme was one that must pledge the fortunes of Canada and the revenues of Canada for a great many years, and that it was due to the people of Canada, to the due to the people Parliament of Canada, and to the Government, that their sense should be obtained before we put it into execution. We did not in that respect follow the example of the Government that preceded us. Some of the branch lines involved the expenditure of very large grants of money and the present leader of the Opposition took strong grounds against the late leader of the Opposition when the hon. member for Lambton declared that a contract had been given and that certain work was to proceed. The hon. member for West Durham asked him-I forget the exact question put, but the answer was that he (Mr. Mackenzie) had nothing more to give and that he acted upon his own

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. He refers to the question I put asking for the authority on which the hon, member for Lambton proposed to build the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Branch.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; that was it. The answer will speak for itself. The hon. gentleman questioned him in regard to the authority to build the portion from Esquimalt to Nanaimo. Mr. Mackenzie answered that he had nothing to ask from Parliament. I ask if that was not the answer he gave.

Mr. BLAKE. No; the answer given to that part of the question was that he had already given notice of the introduction of a Bill to authorize the construction of the railway, which was a different answer to my question. In the same speech I asked the hon. member whether he was going to submit the Carnarvon terms for the approval of the House, and the hon. gentleman said that in that particular he had nothing to ask Parliament.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALI). Well, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Mackenzie told the hon. gentleman that he had nothing to ask Parliament for, and it was after that, after be found he was going to get the sullen opposition of the hon gentlemen, and that Cave of Adullam, which the hon. gentleman had found behind his back, that he whipped Mr. Mackenzie into that statement. I cannot be mistaken. stance is deeply impressed upon my mind. The Government I say had every right to use all their exertions in order to relieve themselves and the country of the obligation of building this road, and the still greater obligation of running it. Let any one consider for a moment what these obligations are, and how they press upon the Government. We see this in the Intercolonial and in every public work. Why, Sir, it is actually impossible, although my hon. friend off the hands of the Government, and also making their has overcome many obstacles with regard to the Intercolonial Railway, for the Government to run that railroad satisfactorily. It is made a political cause of complaint in every way. The men that we put on the railroad from the porter upwards became civil servants. If one of these men is put on from any cause whatever, he is said to be a political hack. If he is removed it is said his removal was on account of his political opinions. If a cow is killed on the road a motion is made in respect to it by the member of the House, who has the owner's vote as support. The responsibility, the expense, the worry and the annoyance of a Government having charge of such a work, are such that for these causes alone it was considered advisable to get rid of the responsibility. We have had enough evidence of that in this House. With respect to the question raised by my hon, friend from South Bruce, I have the answer here. It is:

"We have never asked Parliament for the authority but merely communicate to Parliament this decision, and rely upon the House to support us in accepting the terms made through the intervention or mediation of Lord Carnarvon; and that support I do not doubt will be cheerfully accorded."
